Foreword

THE CLOSE OF THE DECADE OF THE 1980s brought with it new hopes and challenges, and, as cold-war tensions eased, the United Nations began to assume a significantly larger international role. The stage was set for the fulfilment of two long-pursued United Nations objectives—the independence of Namibia and the creation of a united, non-racial and democratic society in South Africa. The cease-fire between Iran and Iraq negotiated by the United Nations remained in place, and both sides continued their talks on the full restoration of peace following a long and sanguinary conflict. Efforts towards peace in Cambodia and Central America also seemed capable of finally bearing fruit.

At the same time, many issues remained unresolved and new problems arose which required the attention of the international community, particularly in the area of development. The revitalization of economic growth in developing countries, especially in Africa, continued to be a priority in 1989. Action to protect the environment was high on the agenda, with particular emphasis on climate change, toxic waste and drift-net fishing. The Organization also led the global fight against the spread of HIV/AIDS and continued to promote the world-wide campaign to combat drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking.

Major natural disasters occurred throughout the year, including Hurricane Hugo, which devastated many islands in the Caribbean; heavy floods in Democratic Yemen and Djibouti; earthquakes in Algeria, China and Tajikistan; and relentless drought and desertification in the Sudano-Sahel region and elsewhere. The United Nations provided much-needed relief to address these and other critical emergency situations and to mitigate the suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons world-wide. Operation Lifeline Sudan was launched, setting a historic precedent for complex relief operations.

I was honoured to serve as Secretary-General of the United Nations and to participate in the work chronicled in this volume of the the Yearbook of the United Nations. As the United Nations continues its unrelenting efforts to contribute to the betterment of humanity and to realize the noble objectives of the Charter, I offer my best wishes to the current Secretary-General, Kofi A. Annan, for success in this most important endeavour.

About the 1989 edition of the Yearbook

The 1989 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS is the second of three backlog editions (1988, 1989, 1990) to be published. As the publication of Yearbook volumes had been falling behind over a period of time, it was decided to focus on the production of current volumes, with the backlog editions to be done concurrently through the provision of funds by the publisher. The 1988 edition was published in 1994. The 1990 edition is under preparation. The scope, content and breadth coverage of these volumes have been restructured and redefined to enhance the presentation of the main activities and events of each year. The Department of Public Information of the United Nations is committed to clear the backlog and maintain the publication of the current volumes of the Yearbook on a timely annual schedule. As in previous volumes, this volume has been designed to serve as the most comprehensive reference tool for use by the research community and those interested in the activities of the United Nations and its related organizations.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented, divided into seven major parts: political and security questions, regional questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, administrative and budgetary questions, and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations.

Information includes summaries of major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications. REFERENCES are listed at the end of chapters or sub-chapters, linked to the text by numerical indicators.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, where applicable, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of a substantive nature adopted in 1989 by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, with document symbols of drafts, approved amendments and committee reports; and in most cases a list of sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. Details of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole also follow the text. The texts of resolutions and decisions of a purely procedural nature are not reproduced, but are summarized and their numbers highlighted in bold type.

Major reports. Most 1989 reports of the Secretary-General, along with selected reports from other United Nations sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. Information is also provided on major activities financed outside the United Nations regular budget, wherever available.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topic. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1989 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the United Nations.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The user may locate information in the 1989 edition in a number of ways: by the table of contents, which highlights the broad subjects and subheadings; by the SUBJECT INDEX, which may be used to locate individual topics and specific references to the bodies dealing with each topic; and by the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS, which provides a numerical list of all resolutions and substantive decisions adopted in 1989 by the principal organs, with page numbers for their text. The Yearbook also contains five appendices. APPENDIX I comprises a list of Member States with dates of their admission to the United Nations; APPENDIX II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; APPENDIX III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; APPENDIX IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1989; and APPENDIX V gives the location and addresses of the United Nations Information Centres and Services world wide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References at the end of each article in Parts One to Six of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1989 on the topic, arranged in the order in which they are referred to in the text. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/44/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-fourth session, beginning with A/44/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S/- and A/ES/-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of six of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. The symbol for documents of the seventh Main Committee, the Special Political Committee, is A/SPC/-. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4/-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals: the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1989/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1989 sessions, beginning with E/1989/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/C.1/-, E/C.2/- and E/C.3/- refer to documents of the Council's sessional committees, namely, the First (Economic), Second (Social) and Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committees, respectively; E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/CN.7/-, to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund. Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1989/1); and one for decisions, beginning, since 1983, with 101 (decision 1989/101).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
LOS/PCN/-	Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme
UNITAR/-	United Nations Institute for Training and Research

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia
LC/G,-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

"CONE." in a symbol refers to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information; "L." to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions, Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.89.V.4; E/F/R.89.II.E.8; E.89.IX.3.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, submitted to the General Assembly and dated 12 September 1989. The Assembly took note of it on 17 October (decision 44/404).

I

Fifty years ago this very month, Europe was plunged into a conflict that eventually engulfed other continents and became known as the Second World War. As the event had been preceded by a similar one only a quarter-century earlier, it was a stark revelation of the destructive nature of the international system that prevailed at the time. The havoc it wrought moved all the then sovereign States to join and make a radical new departure in international relations. At the conclusion of the war, they founded the United Nations to give peace a more secure foundation.

How secure the new foundation is or is likely to prove in different contingencies has remained an open question through much of the intervening period.

There is no doubt that peace has gained a meaning and dimension that it lacked before—above all, the dimension of multilateral endeavour. No realistic view of human experience from 1945 to the present can ignore the transformation of the world scene reflected by the presence and working of the United Nations. It is under the auspices of the Organization that an international agenda encompassing all matters of common concern to nations has taken shape and a massive change in international life has been effected and, by and large, peacefully absorbed.

But there remained a gaping void—not an institutional one—at the core of the whole enterprise. Ambiguity corroded the answer to the central question of the strength and durability of world peace. Collective security became a hostage of the cold war. Because of this, no major issue of war or peace could be examined on its merits. Disputes festered; wars were waged by proxy; tensions became chronic. The imagery and rhetoric suggestive of an Armageddon entered the language of political discourse. The effect on the United Nations of the policies generated by this state of relations has been amply noted in previous reports. To put it mildly, it left the United Nations in a waiting position—waiting until common sense and the dynamics of the world situation would induce a return to the way of handling international affairs outlined in its Charter.

It has not been fully two years since we have begun to witness signs of such a return. The two major Power blocs have started an assiduous search for bases of stable peace between them. A growing determination on the part of the permanent members of the Security Council to work together has facilitated purposeful diplomatic effort towards the resolution of some of the long-standing disputes. In regional contexts also, approaches are being made and important initiatives taken to reconcile conflicting positions, or achieve a compromise between them. And there is a heightened awareness of a new generation of problems common to all nations.

The year under review has been largely a year for the consolidation and extension of those trends and efforts. I mentioned the negativities of the earlier phase to emphasize the scope and degree of the transition we are now witnessing. By its nature, this transition could be neither abrupt nor smooth. Problems that should have been solved years ago did not just remain unsolved because of differences between the major Powers: they became more complicated as subsidiary problems were added to them. But now, after years of frustration, they are being seriously addressed. That this means the end of the era of sterile confrontations that began immediately after the Second World War can be a helpful assumption. But though easy to launch, it is the kind of assumption that can float only on a tide of confirmations.

II

During the year, the United Nations has been intensely involved in activities to bring peace to troubled regions of the world. In an increasing number of cases, its role has been, and is being, looked upon as pivotal to the settlement of problems that not too long ago appeared intractable. Indeed, the assistance of the world Organization is being sought as never before in its history. There has been a palpable change stemming from the recognition that, if there are to be lasting solutions to international problems, these must be based on universally accepted principles as laid down in the Charter. I cannot fail to record my deep gratification at this renewal of confidence in multilateralism and its agents. Today, at diverse points of the globe, representatives of the United Nations and its Secretary-General are engaged in the arduous tasks of peace and my own visits to different areas of conflict have vividly impressed on me the great degree of trust and responsibility placed in the Organization. That the expectations should be fulfilled and not defeated is a matter of the utmost importance to peace.

To bring independence to Namibia has been a fundamental objective of the United Nations and, for me personally, an unremitting concern. The year has been one of major advance towards that goal. The establishment of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG) on Namibian soil and the efforts under way to hold free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations constitute one of the most challenging and significant operations ever undertaken by the world Organization. Its success depends on scrupulous observance of all the provisions of the United Nations plan, the cease-fire arrangements and related undertakings. At the time of writing, there are still serious problems to be overcome. However, the multilateral efforts of the Security Council, the concerned parties and the Secretariat have brought us to a stage where, despite the many difficulties, past and present, the implementation of the plan for the independence of the Territory must be considered irreversible.

It bears repeating in this context that UNTAG, the military component of which does not have powers of enforcement, requires the full co-operation of the parties, all of whom must continuously respect their obligations and strictly adhere to the agreements and understandings to which they have committed themselves.

The overwhelming majority of the Namibian refugees who had registered for repatriation have now returned under the auspices of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The voter registration process and the election campaign are now well advanced and special care is being taken to ensure that the elections are completely free and fair and that they take place under the effective supervision and control of the United Nations. A draft electoral law is currently the subject of active discussion in order to remove a number of unsatisfactory features; it will be promulgated only when the United Nations is satisfied with the text. The same is the case with the law relating to the powers of the Constituent Assembly. Other major issues that continue to require the most careful attention include the continuing presence in the South West Africa Police Force of former members of a counter-insurgency unit, who are now being confined to base; the complete dismantling of the command structures of the South West African Territorial Force; the release of any remaining political detainees; the assurance of impartial coverage of the elections by the media; and arrangements in the Territory for the period between the elections and independence. Each of those matters is being actively pursued by my Special Representative and is receiving my close personal attention.

The unique international collaboration that has been forged over the last few years, involving the efforts of many parties, must be maintained until the process of bringing independence to Namibia through free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations is duly accomplished.

In the effort to close a decade of turmoil in the Central American region, the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua have laid down concrete plans for the implementation of the goals of peace and democratization that they set themselves two years ago in the Agreement known as Esquipulas II (A/42/521-%19085, annex). The monitoring of the electoral process in Nicaragua by the United Nations is under way with a view to ensuring its purity and transparency and thus contributing to national reconciliation. A reconnaissance mission is now in the region to prepare the basis for consideration by the Security Council of a proposal for the verification, by military observers deployed throughout the region by the United Nations, of compliance with the commitments that aid incompatible with Esquipulas II to irregular forces and insurrectionist movements shall cease and that the territory of one State shall not be used to attack another. The United Nations will also be undertaking broad responsibilities in all phases of the voluntary demobilization, repatriation or resettlement of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families. That major project may well require a military component and, in due course, the full use of UNHCR as well as other programmes and agencies of the United Nations system.

While the war rages on in El Salvador, accompanied by widespread suffering, it is to be hoped that new political developments will lead towards dialogue and reconciliation in that country as well. The unequivocal appeal from all five Governments issued at the recent summit at Tela, Honduras (see A/44/451-S/20778), must not go unheeded. The deployment of United Nations military observers throughout the region could provide a new opportunity to render assistance in those efforts.

The Security Council, in resolution 637(1989), has now given strong backing to the peace process, which entered into a new phase with the signing of the Esquipulas II Agreement. It has encouraged me to continue to lend my good offices, which I intend to do, and for which I will continue to consult with the Security Council and seek its approval as needed. States from outside the Central American region have an important role to play in assisting the States of the region in their endeavours. A sustained effort is required to ensure that irregular forces and insurrectionist movements in the region co-operate in the implementation of Esquipulas II.

The international community at large, and in particular the major donors to humanitarian and development efforts, have given considerable assistance in the early phases of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 42/1 of 7 October 1987 and 42/201 of 11 December 1987, pursuant to the request of the live Presidents contained in Esquipulas II. The time has now come to buttress the emerging peace by providing the massive support that the region needs to overcome its age-old problems. Similarly, we may well have reached the stage where the plans laid down at the International Conference on Central American Refugees, held at Guatemala City in May 1989, can be put into effect, but these will also require substantial additional support. It is through those efforts in the development and humanitarian fields that the vast number of refugees and displaced persons in this beleaguered region will feel that they have a true stake in peace.

Following a number of encouraging developments that had taken place earlier this year, a conference on Cambodia was convened in Paris last month at the initiative of the Government of France. While the Conference succeeded in working out various elements of a comprehensive settlement, certain substantive political issues stood in the way of the total package needed to bring back to the Khmer people the stable peace that they desperately need after two decades of intense suffering, war and destruction.

I believe that attention should be focused now on preventing a recurrence of lighting, with its readily foreseeable consequences and the uncertainty it implies for all concerned. The follow-up mechanism established by the Paris Conference, under the leadership of the French and the Indonesian Co-Chairmen, offers some hope, however, for the continuation of the diplomatic process and for the reconvening of the Conference. For my part, I intend to continue the efforts I have made in the exercise of my good offices.

In recent months, there have been further constructive developments towards ending the 14-year-old dispute in Western Sahara. Although in August 1988 the parties signified their acceptance, with some remarks and comments, of the peace plan presented to them by the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and myself, practical discussions as to its implementation were required. Following a recent tour of the region, I proposed that a technical commission be established at United Nations Headquarters to work out the details of the implementation of the settlement plan. That proposal was accepted and the first meeting of the commission took place in July. During these meetings, which include representatives of the two parties to the conflict, the Chairman of OAU and the Secretary-General of the United Nations, clarification of the arrangements and modalities for the implementation of the peace plan is being provided by the United Nations. The meetings also allow the two parties to express their concerns on each step of the process. A number of sensitive issues remain, which will require the active involvement on a continuing basis of the Chairman of OAU and myself.

Despite the conclusion at Geneva, on 14 April 1988, of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation relating to Afghanistan and the unanimous adoption of General Assembly resolution 43/20 on 3 November 1988, the suffering of the people of Afghanistan has not yet been brought to an end. The total withdrawal of foreign troops, which took place in February, was a major step towards a peaceful settlement; further progress requires, however, the full implementation of all parts of the Agreements as well as of the Assembly resolution. There has been an escalation in lighting, with massive infusion of war matériel. In the current circumstances, the programme of the United Nations to render humanitarian assistance has, despite every effort, been severely impeded.

The problem relating to Afghanistan cannot be solved except by political means. For this, a consensus is needed at both the international and the national levels. While such a consensus has not yet emerged, efforts are under way to narrow the gulf between the positions taken by the countries neighbouring Afghanistan and other concerned countries. In addition, however, there is a fundamental need for a structure through which the wishes of the various segments of the people of Afghanistan can be validly expressed. In pursuance of the mandate entrusted to me by the General Assembly, I shall persevere in my efforts during the months ahead.

On 20 August 1988, fighting stopped between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, and United Nations military observers took up the challenge of monitoring compliance with the cease-fire, which, one year later, remains in place.

While the heavy toll in human lives has thus come to an end, this has been only the beginning of the implementation of Security Council resolution 598(1987). The other steps called for in that resolution towards the restoration of security and stability in the region have yet to be taken. For over a year, my Personal Representative and I have held several inconclusive rounds of direct talks with the Foreign Ministers of the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, as agreed on 8 August 1988, and presented suggestions to facilitate the fulfilment of the resolution in a manner that would generate mutual confidence. Eight years of sanguinary war have resulted in deep mistrust. The question we, therefore, continue to face is how to secure the implementation of a unanimously adopted and mandatory resolution in such circumstances. Lasting peace in the region depends on a way being found to achieve that objective.

Since my last annual report, the search for a solution to the Cyprus question has been particularly active. For the first time in the 25-year history of the problem, the leaders of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities have personally committed themselves to a sustained effort to achieve an overall settlement. To that end, and in line with my initiative in August 1988, my Special Representative in Cyprus has hosted regular meetings between the two leaders since September 1988. They also met with me at United Nations Headquarters in November 1988 and April and June 1989 in order to review the results achieved and agree on how to proceed. Those discussions have been useful in revealing possible options for resolving the issues that comprise the Cyprus problem. While I do not wish to minimize the difficulties and distrust that remain to be overcome, I believe that we have now reached the critical juncture where an overall settlement that will safeguard the legitimate interests and meet the concerns of both communities seems possible. I shall, in keeping with the mandate of good offices entrusted to me by the Security Council, continue to make every conceivable effort to help the two sides seize the opportunity that could now be within their grasp.

Progress towards resolving the outstanding issues relating to the situation in Korea depends on sustained dialogue between North and South Korea. The conciliatory atmosphere around the world and the urge to settle problems that are the legacies of former conflicts will, I hope, facilitate an amicable solution of differences between the two sides. I remain available to render whatever assistance the two Governments may desire towards this end.

The eradication of the unjust and anachronistic system of apartheid in South Africa has been a prime responsibility and a universally acknowledged goal of the United Nations. The positive turn of events in Namibia and a political climate conducive to the resolution of regional problems should encourage the prospects of fundamental change in South Africa. It is clear that a mere dilution or softening of apartheid will not answer the expectations of the majority of the people of South Africa or of the world as a whole. The United Nations has indicated the steps that the Government of South Africa must take to create an appropriate atmosphere for a national dialogue with the genuine representatives of the majority in order to set in motion a democratic process aimed at shaping the political future of the country. These measures include the release of all political prisoners, the lifting of restrictions on political organizations and individuals, the restoration of freedom of speech and movement and the ending of all other manifestations of the state of emergency.

The General Assembly will devote a special session to this issue in December. I would appeal to the Government of South Africa to frame a positive and credible response to the unequivocal call for the dismantlement of apartheid. The opportunity has arrived for it to chart a courageous new course that will allay all fears about its intent and put an end, once and for all, to the oppression and violence that the system of institutionalized racial discrimination and minority rule inevitably entails.

The situation in the Middle East remains a source of profound and intense concern, not only because of the political principles and issues at stake, but also because of the widespread human suffering caused by the failure to resolve those issues. Hopes for early progress in the peace process, which were encouraged by the diplomatic momentum following the decisions taken by the Palestinian National Council at Algiers in November 1988, and at Geneva a month later, have sadly given way to mistrust and doubt among the parties concerned. Bilateral efforts to promote a dialogue between Israelis and Palestinians have thus far been unsuccessful. My constant attempts to pave the way to an effective negotiating process, which have included repeated contacts at the highest level with the parties directly concerned and with the permanent members of the Security Council, have also until now proved frustratingly inconclusive. Moreover, I am troubled by recent declarations that, in effect, question the applicability of Security Council resolution 242(1967). Since its unanimous adoption, the resolution has been regarded as the corner-stone of any comprehensive settlement to be reached. Unless there is agreement on that point, it is unlikely that real progress will be achieved.

Meanwhile, the situation in the Israeli-occupied territories grows steadily worse, with hundreds of people killed and thousands wounded or detained since the beginning of the intifadah nearly two years ago. The Security Council has repeatedly called on Israel to abide by its obligations under the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and I have voiced my deep concern that, despite the appeals of the international community, widespread violation of human rights persists. However, it is the political aspects of the problem that have to be addressed if an end is to be put to the confrontations that occur almost daily throughout the occupied territories. I would, therefore, remind all concerned of the urgent need for an effective negotiating process based on Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338(1973) and taking fully into account the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including that of self-determination. The longer such a process is delayed, the greater will be the difficulties in initiating it and the more explosive the situation can become.

The world is appalled by the steady disintegration of the institutions of government and society in Lebanon and by the resort to unprecedented violence by all the parties involved in the Lebanese conflict. On 15 August 1989, after an alarming escalation in the military confrontation in and around Beirut, and with the danger of even further involvement of outside parties, I requested the President of the Security Council to convene an urgent meeting of the Council in view of the serious threat to international peace and security. The Council met the same day and expressed its deep concern at the further deterioration of the situation and appealed to all the parties to observe a total and immediate cease-fire. The Council also expressed its full support for the efforts of the Tripartite Committee of the Arab Heads of State and appealed to all to support those efforts likewise. In accordance with the Council's statement, I am pursuing all appropriate contacts in liaison with the Tripartite Committee to ensure the fulfilment of the Council's intent.

I strongly believe that the international community bears a responsibility to ensure that the unity, sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of Lebanon are restored. A Member State of the United Nations deserves no less.

III

With the extraordinary improvement of the international climate during the past three years, there has been a new demand and a new enthusiasm for peace-keeping operations. Four new operations have been set up, and at least three are at present being actively considered. The seeds planted in earlier, less clement years are growing and proliferating. The wide recognition of the value of those operations is reflected in the award to the peace-keeping forces of the Nobel Peace Prize last year. New ideas and new directions for peace-keeping are being discussed, both within and outside the United Nations.

All this is encouraging and promising. It is imperative, however, that we keep the peace-keeping situation under constant scrutiny so that the best use is made of the Organization's capacity and so that we develop this important and valuable activity in a positive and constructive way. There are three main areas that need to be kept under constant review: function, capacity and performance, and support.

As far as function is concerned, we seem to be moving into a number of situations where, although there is a connection with international peace and security, the peace-keeping action is mainly concerned with the situation within the boundaries of a State, instead of taking place on the borders between States or between conflicting parties. Peace-keeping operations are being called on for a wider range of tasks, including the supervision of elections and the monitoring of the implementation of complex agreements.

I believe that it is important to maintain a rigorous analysis of what the United Nations can, and cannot, do, and how it should do it. Here the basic principles on which peace-keeping operations have always been based are a good guide for our actions: a workable mandate; the consistent support of the Security Council; the co-operation of the parties in conflict; the readiness of Member States to make available personnel and resources; a geographically balanced and representative force; an effective and integrated United Nations command; and adequate financial and logistical support.

The method of operation also needs to be kept under constant review. Until now, the use of force by peace-keeping operations has, with one exception, been permitted solely for self-defence in the last resort. We would be wise to stick to that principle. These are not, after all, enforcement operations. But I believe that the new and positive consensus, which for the first time animates the political role of the United Nations, also entitles us to consider how the strength and credibility of peace-keeping forces on the ground can be enhanced. Strength does not necessarily mean using force. Very often it means being strong enough not to use force. Before we embark on too many new and demanding ventures, I should like to see a serious discussion among Member States of the ways in which our soldiers in distant conflict areas can be given the means and the support to command respect and compliance with the decisions of the United Nations to a far greater degree than hitherto. The question of enhancing the credibility and authority of peace-keeping operations needs to be examined here at the United Nations by the Member States, and especially by the members of the Security Council.

Traditionally the personnel of peace-keeping operations have been overwhelmingly military. In Namibia we see a variant of that practice. With the multiplicity of functions now being discussed for peace-keeping, we would do well to consider new combinations of military, police and civilian personnel.

As regards capacity and performance, we have traditionally operated on a shoe-string in peacekeeping. With several new operations impending in different parts of the world, I am very conscious of our need to underpin our peace-keeping capacity here at Headquarters. I believe that Member States can also help-and some have done so already-by reviewing possibilities for earmarking stand-by troops for peace-keeping. I think we should also look at the training situation and see what can be done to enhance the degree of training for peace-keeping in national armies as a measure of readiness for United Nations peace-keeping duties. Rosters of available senior officers and staff officers might also be helpful in the future.

Support is inevitably the key to capacity and performance. The financing of peace-keeping has a long and not very creditable history. Many of the financial problems of the past had to do with political differences which are, I hope, no longer with us. None the less we still face a large and debilitating problem in relation to financing peace-keeping.

The truth is that the expense of peace-keeping is minimal by comparison with the costs-human, financial, military-of the alternative. Peace-keeping costs are infinitesimal by comparison with national military expenditures. And peace-keeping could be an important part of plans to reduce these national expenditures.

The current financial arrangements are not only dangerously limiting during the period in which a complex operation is being mounted; they also put an inequitable financial burden on troop-contributing countries. In addition, they tend to diminish the perception of collective responsibility, which is psychologically essential to peace-keeping operations.

I hope that Member States will address the financial problems of peace-keeping urgently and with imagination. A promising one among many possibilities would seem to be the establishment of a special reserve fund for peace-keeping, supported by all Member States. Such a fund would vastly facilitate the timely launching of operations mandated by the Security Council. Contributions to it, whatever its size, would, incidentally, represent a minuscule percentage of current national military expenditures.

Nowhere has the inadequacy of present arrangements been more evident than in the logistical support of United Nations peace-keeping operations. Here again the new political climate should allow a much freer exchange and more co-operation. In particular, I hope that countries with large and far-ranging military establishments will work together to see what can be done to establish a more reliable and responsive logistical framework for United Nations peace-keeping operations.

These are relatively short-term goals. For the longer term, we need to speculate on where peacekeeping fits into the underlying effort to build the international rule of law and a reliable system for the maintenance of international peace and security. When nations work together for those aims, as they now appear to be doing, the effect of representation and of symbolic presences is vastly increased. Peace-keeping is, and always has been, a dramatic way of representing the international will to peace and conciliation in the conflict areas of the world. If it is backed by an international consensus and sustained by a genuinely international effort, it can become a reliable and extremely important part of our broader effort to build a world at peace.

IV

Efforts to prevent possible conflicts, reduce the risk of war and achieve definitive settlements of disputes, whether long-standing or new, are part and parcel of a credible strategy for peace.

The United Nations needs to demonstrate its capacity to function as guardian of the world's security. Neither any alterations in the structure of the Organization nor in the distribution of competence among its respective organs are needed for that purpose. What is needed is an improvement of existing mechanisms and capabilities in the light of the demands of the unfolding international situation.

The prevention of armed conflicts is a mandate envisaged in the provisions of the Charter relating both to the Security Council and to the responsibilities of the Secretary-General. Article 34 speaks of any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute and Article 99 of any matter which in the Secretary-General's opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security. However, as has been repeatedly observed, it has been the general practice over the years to address a particular situation only after it has clearly taken a turn towards the use of force. Experience has shown that it is far more difficult to stop hostilities after their outbreak than to restrain Governments from heading towards the point of no return.

In order to activate the potential of the Organization for averting wars, the necessity of earlier discussion of situations threatening to explode needs to be clearly recognized. Timely, accurate and unbiased information is a prerequisite for that purpose. At present, the pool of material available to the Secretary-General consists of information provided by government representatives supplemented by the collection and analyses of published reports and comments. This is manifestly insufficient in cases where more than anticipatory diplomacy is required. Even for such measures as the establishment of observation posts or the dispatch of fact-finding teams, not to speak of the appointment of military observer missions in situations where fighting appears imminent, the Secretary-General needs to have at his disposal information that is dependable prima facie, even though it might be subject to further inquiry or verification. Only then can he be in a position to assess whether and when an issue needs to be brought to the attention of the Security Council under Article 99 of the Charter. The invocation of this Article is discretionary and the discretion has to be exercised with a most careful consideration of its possible outcome. There are situations where quiet diplomacy can be more effective in moderating a conflict. In any case, the lack or paucity of objective information can have most deleterious results. But in a setting in which incipient conflicts are under a global watch there will be less likelihood of confusion and, therefore, of indecision on the part of the Security Council in the matter of halting their escalation. Arrangements, for instance, could be made to receive information from space-based and other technical surveillance systems, which would enable the Secretariat to monitor potential conflict situations from a clearly impartial standpoint, but the question is whether the potential of modern technology can be placed in the service of peace.

More importantly, the Security Council could meet periodically to consider the state of international peace and security in different regions. For such meetings sufficiently to guide and influence the necessary supportive diplomacy, it might be helpful to hold them at the level of foreign ministers and, when appropriate, in closed session. That simple expedient could help ensure that the United Nations would not be caught unready by developments threatening the peace. Where international friction appears likely, the Security Council could act on its own or request the Secretary-General to exercise his good offices directly or through a special representative. When appropriate, the Council could also enlist the co-operation of the concerned regional organization in averting a crisis.

It cannot be stressed too often that there is usually a point in an impending crisis at which the potential adversaries are readier to make concessions that subsequently they are apt to regard as surrender. Such points offer opportunities for multilateral diplomacy to be at its best in allaying the fears and suspicions that so often lead to beligerency. If difficulties arise at the first turn, it can use other means of contact and communication between the Governments involved. All this implies a conscious policy decision on the part of Member States to strengthen and use the mediatory capacity of the Organization.

It also implies a resolve to use the leverage that lies with the United Nations, particularly with the Security Council, in the form of the collective influence that it can bring to bear on a situation. The invocation of the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter is an extreme: in the intermediate stages of a party's obduracy against a settlement or against initiating a credible negotiating process to evolve a settlement, the United Nations can mobilize governmental and public opinion and also give salutary warnings of the consequences of a negative stand. Such warnings need not be public; in certain cases, they may be more effective if conveyed in private. However, they will fail to be persuasive if they are not backed, or are not seen to be backed, by the united will of the membership of the United Nations to avert a conflict. While a certain degree of partisanship among Member States on the merits of a dispute is unavoidable, and can even be suggestive of balanced solutions by exposing different viewpoints, there cannot be any division on the primary obligation flowing from the Charter, namely, the prevention of war.

To "settle international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered" is one of the principles set forth in the Charter. The conjunction of peace and justice is less liable to be overlooked by the conduct of multilateral diplomacy than by its alternatives. I am all too conscious how thorny is often the path leading to a just and lasting settlement and how hard is the resistance encountered. But I firmly believe that the United Nations can fulfil its mandate only if it is not daunted by the difficulties involved. By itself, the passage of time rarely brings about solutions to problems. The expectation of disputes ending through sheer attrition is certainly not supported by the experience of the Organization with regard to situations that involve issues of a fundamental nature such as the territorial integrity or political independence of a State or the self-determination of a people.

The United Nations can take credit for recommending the terms of equitable and comprehensive settlement of many disputes of this character that have been brought before it. However, nothing short of concerted or, at the very least, convergent action on the part of Member States, especially the permanent members of the Security Council, designed to bring about the acceptance and implementation of those terms, can suffice to resolve a conflict. Lacking such effort, the mounting of peace-keeping operations or mediation can produce an illusion of calm, beneath which disputes fester and resentments grow, threatening new outbreaks of hostilities. The pain of conflicts needs more than palliatives.

Political and moral suasion, combined with a judicious use of leverage, has been the main basis of multilateral efforts aimed at the settlement of disputes. However, there are categories of disputes that lend themselves to settlement by other means. Article 36 of the Charter requires that "legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court". I warmly welcome recent pronouncements made in that context.

As legal disputes arise in various parts of the world over a wide range of issues, there may be cases where the parties concerned are prepared to seek settlement through the International Court of Justice, but cannot proceed owing to a lack of legal expertise or funds. There may also be cases where the parties are unable to implement a decision of the Court for similar reasons. Considering this, I have established a special voluntary trust fund, which, under certain conditions, will be used to assist developing countries that lack the necessary means for recourse to the Court or for implementing its decisions.

Moreover, there have been, and in all likelihood there will be, many disputes that have a clearly legal component; assuming respect for judicial opinion, a reference to the Court on that aspect of the issue could at least help make the whole dispute more amenable to solution. There are also cases that are arbitrable. International arbitration has been resorted to with benefit to peace in many cases during the existence of the United Nations but its use needs greater encouragement in all situations to which it is applicable.

Progress towards arms limitation and disarmament demands persistence and considerable hard work. Beyond this, as we have seen, it requires the stimulus and guidance that only inspired political leadership can provide. In one area of major importance in this field, all these have been in evidence in the past year. As we survey the entire scene, however, global stability and peace are still in danger. The steps towards arms reduction taken by the two militarily most powerful States and the proposals under consideration between the two major alliances present a marked contrast to the lack of comparable progress elsewhere.

No complacency is reflected in noting the credit side of the balance. It is apparent that, even when all their proposed reductions are achieved, the members of the two military alliances will still have far more weapons than all others together. Nor can the stresses and strains that exist in so many other parts of the world be ignored. But the fact remains that in areas where confrontation has been the norm for so many years, major changes in attitudes and perceptions are taking place and long-standing differences are being reconciled.

In this regard I warmly welcome the proposals that have been put forward concerning conventional arms reductions in Europe. Furthermore, over half the intermediate-range and shorter-range missiles affected by the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles (INF Treaty) have already been removed and physically destroyed. To complement those actions with major reductions in conventional weapons and forces would signify a change of fundamental importance.

With the resumption of the bilateral negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States on the reduction of strategic offensive weapons, the pursuit of a 50 per cent cut in these arms should occupy the centre stage of nuclear disarmament efforts. It is imperative that the momentum established by the agreement and subsequent successful implementation of the INF Treaty should not falter. The world awaits a successful outcome on this issue. A slowing down and reversal of the vertical arms race would be all the more important in view of the forthcoming Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons due to open at Geneva in August 1990.

At the Paris Conference on chemical weapons held in January 1989, 149 States unanimously called for early agreement on a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling, acquisition, transfer and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction. This has intensified the effort being made in the Conference on Disarmament at Geneva to achieve a complete ban on those weapons. The problems still impeding the attainment of this objective, including the question of verification in particular, are complex and difficult but not insurmountable. Considering the horrifying prospect of the spread of these weapons, the present opportunity to agree on a complete ban must be seized. I strongly urge all concerned to demonstrate a concerted will to achieve that goal at an early date.

For several years I have called for action on two particular issues: nuclear tests and conventional weapons. Although no specific agreement has yet evolved on either, some constructive negotiations are now taking place bilaterally and regionally. These are encouraging signs. I remain convinced that significant additional restrictions on nuclear testing beyond the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water of 1963, leading progressively to a complete halt, together with major reductions in nuclear weapons, offer the best way to release the world from the fearful possibility of nuclear war. I hope that the Conference on Disarmament will soon be associated with the bilateral efforts on the nuclear-test-ban issue. These measures, supported by conventional arms reductions such as those now being negotiated at Vienna, would do much to solidify the growing sense of confidence and trust.

The issue of conventional disarmament is beset with many regional and local implications. Even so, if dangers to peace around the globe are to be overcome, one of the essential requirements is that means be found to regulate the transfer of arms. The need for action both within and outside this Organization towards this end becomes ever more pressing. Many developing countries are draining their economies to purchase highly sophisticated weapons. On their side, arms-producing countries are vigorously pursuing weapon sales and transfers to bolster their trade balances. Efforts at the United Nations, with the help of governmental experts, to introduce greater transparency into arms transfers would be a necessary first step in arresting this alarming trend.

Apart from arms transfers, the increasing sophistication of new weapons and their proliferation, due to wider knowledge of the technologies involved, aggravate the already existing difficulties. The spread of knowledge, not only of nuclear weapons, but of chemical weapons and missile technology, introduces another potentially destabilizing factor. It is important to ensure that a qualitative arms race will not follow quantitative disarmament. This presents the challenge of harnessing scientific and technological progress for humanity's benefit rather than for armed confrontations.

A quarter of the resolutions adopted each year by the General Assembly address issues of disarmament. This, of course, indicates the depth and continuity of the Assembly's concern with these issues; it also reflects the consideration that the United Nations should continue to be at the forefront of multilateral efforts in this field. However, the number of resolutions and a reiteration of old positions does not meet the demands of new circumstances. To give an example of the questions that need to be faced now, the United Nations will be convening a conference on conversion of military to civilian industries next year in Moscow. The magnitude and complexity of the issues involved in the multilateral disarmament process demand that we explore all avenues to strengthen the role of the United Nations in this field and make more effective use of its deliberative machinery.

By in-depth study and careful analysis, by providing objective data and stimulating informed discussion, the Secretariat will play its part. It is also ready to undertake a role in multilateral verification of disarmament agreements, a subject on which a group of governmental experts has already been at work. However, the responsibility for action and leadership rests with Member States, particularly in addressing issues of specific relevance to their own regions.

With the new turn in the global situation, the broad objectives of arms limitation and disarmament, which were regarded as utopian, have begun to appear practical and achievable. But it is tangible progress towards these objectives that will lend permanence to the change.

VI

One of the most deplorable phenomena of current international life is the incidence of international terrorism. Calculated as it is to cause panic and disorder and to inspire and manipulate fear for the achievement of political ends, it violates human rights, and also lends a note of dangerous ambiguity to the dividing line between war and peace. It thus impinges directly on relations among States and shows how, thanks to the uncontrolled or indiscriminate supply of sophisticated weapons, organized violence is being increasingly privatized.

The firm and consistent position of the United Nations with regard to the prevention of international terrorism leaves no room for doubt or equivocation. Both the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/61 of 9 December 1985, and the Security Council, in resolution 579(1985), have taken pronounced stands on the question. The resolution of the Council unanimously condemned all acts of hostage-taking and it was recalled on 31 July when the news was received that a senior official serving with the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), had, in all probability, been killed following his abduction months earlier. By its resolution 638(1989), the Security Council reiterated its condemnation of all acts of hostage-taking and abduction and demanded the immediate safe release of all hostages and abducted persons wherever and by whomever they were being held. For my part, I have repeatedly condemned this inhuman practice and, as requested by the Council, I will continue my efforts to seek the release of all hostages and abducted persons. In this connection, I will maintain my contacts with all those who might be in a position to use their influence towards achievement of this objective and the prevention of further acts of hostage-taking and abduction.

The question of defining terrorism and investigating its underlying causes does not diminish the urgency of taking preventive measures. There may be varying perceptions of the threat but no country is guaranteed safety from the danger. It is in the interest of all to deny to the perpetrators of terrorist acts the facilities and instruments they use.

Six specific conventions related to international terrorism have been elaborated since 1969; they have at least curbed terrorist activity in some spheres. The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) has urged its member States to expedite research on means of detecting explosives and on security equipment. The work of ICAO is complemented by Security Council resolution 635(1989), which calls upon all States to share the results of such research and co-operation with a view to devising an international regime for the marking of plastic or sheet explosives for the purpose of detection. Such a regime would contribute significantly to safeguarding civil aviation and other potential targets. The problem is one that the United Nations will need to keep under continuous review until the time when the spill-over of political violence into the international domain will finally have been checked.

To promote and encourage respect for human rights is not only a matter of legitimate international concern; it is also one of the main purposes and principles of the United Nations, as proclaimed by its Charter. Like every other purpose, it demands consistent pursuit, undeflected by considerations of short-term expediency. Like every other principle, it suffers discredit if it is selectively invoked.

Under the International Bill of Human Rights, consisting of the Universal Declaration and the two International Covenants based thereon, the international community has accepted the protection of human rights as a permanent obligation. A number of legal instruments have been adopted under the auspices of the United Nations that define fundamental rights in various contexts. Last December, the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment was added to this corpus (General Assembly resolution 43/173, annex). This year the General Assembly will consider two significant draft instruments: an optional protocol for the abolition of the death penalty and a draft convention on the rights of the child. Intense thought and effort have been devoted over recent years to the question of how to assure the rights of children, whom all societies and cultures look upon as humanity's most cherished and also its most vulnerable resource. This shared concern is reflected in the draft convention.

The elaboration of this considerable body of international law has been one of the main accomplishments of the United Nations in laying the foundation of a universal culture of human rights, transcending the differences among nations on account of ancestral traditions, systems of thought or belief, world-views and levels of social and economic development. The concern has been not only normative or theoretical, however: it has taken practical shape in efforts to secure adherence to the commonly accepted obligations in particular cases brought to the attention of the United Nations. This is done through examination of alleged violations, through public discussion in, and pronouncements by, the Commission on Human Rights and the various Sub-Commissions and, in certain cases, through confidential representations by the Secretary-General. Moreover, under a variety of legal instruments, mechanisms have been established for monitoring the observance of human rights. Currently, priority is being given to strengthening national infrastructures for the observance of human rights by providing advisory services and technical assistance. As greater awareness on the part of individuals is the key to assuring the protection of human rights, the United Nations, within the means available to it, is launching a world public information campaign on human rights.

Despite this effort towards the fulfilment of one of the main conditions of an international order of justice, sombre realities are facing us still. Nothing that has been done can lighten the burden on the human conscience imposed by the frequent, sometimes massive, violations of human rights in different parts of the world. The institutionalized system of racial discrimination in South Africa continues to be a most glaring example; in other areas also, the gross mistreatment of ethnic groups, the systematic practice of torture, the killings of unarmed demonstrators, the disappearances of individuals, summary arrests and executions furnish a most deplorable record. The year under review has brought little relief.

Such acts not only cause moral outrage; they also lead to political consequences injurious to the long-term interests of peace. If anything is writ large on current experience it is the truth that the stability of national and international society can only rest upon a foundation of assured human rights. Issues of human rights provide the deeper tones and shadings to political and social relations within and among nations. Governments, of course, have the right—indeed even the obligation—to maintain civil order and to use proportionate force in their territories against terrorism or other forms of violence. However, it is becoming increasingly plain that no Government can expect immunity from international exposure and criticism if it flouts human rights in trying to overcome political dissidence or ethnic unrest. The damage done to the self-confidence of its people and to its international prestige may be ignored in the short term but it will not be negligible over the long run.

I must pay tribute here to the efforts of non-governmental organizations and concerned individuals throughout the world who are championing the cause of human rights. Sincere efforts untainted by ulterior political considerations are bound to yield beneficial results.

The United Nations has done much to illuminate the interrelationship of peace, justice, freedom and human rights. But it is Governments that must realize this interrelationship in their laws and legal procedures. Far-sightedness on their part is required to help make a reality of what is meant to be a common condition of civilized life.

VIII

It is apparent from the current status of the questions relating to regional conflicts and to arms limitation that much ground is yet to be covered if the world is to move to conditions of lasting peace. Over and above these specific questions, the flux observable at many points of the political landscape is likely to present challenges different from those encountered before. Not only diplomacy but the attitudes of Governments will need to respond to these challenges in such a manner as to reduce disharmony and avert disruptions to peace.

The fact that there is now a fluidity in international relations, in marked contrast to the rigidity of the recent past, argues for greater care in handling the situations that may arise from time to time. In the first place, no change for the better in the political climate of the globe can be regarded as irreversible; to ignore the provisional element in it would be to lapse into complacency. Secondly, a movement away from entrenched positions holds no guarantee by itself that knotty issues will not arise which will need to be unravelled with a deft and high-minded approach. Thirdly, we seem to have reached one of those turning points in the evolution of international life at which personal contacts and greater ease of communication between the leaders of nations can play a larger role than they do in phases which follow a set pattern.

Apart from this aspect of world affairs, which affects diplomacy, especially of the most influential States, there is a ferment in large sections of the global society-and no policy on either the national or the international plane can be viable if it is based on a faulty diagnosis of the various causes of unrest. Whatever shape the turmoil takes, whether it be the assertion of ethnic identities or the demand for a better deal in political or economic terms, or even if it leads to upheavals within States, two requirements seem to be paramount: the stability of international relations must be preserved to the maximum possible extent and the universal standards of respect for human rights must be maintained.

At this critical stage, the mandatory principle of non-intervention by States in one another's internal affairs acquires added importance. Prudence and restraint will need to be fully employed to prevent internal upheavals in any State from becoming the cause of international conflicts. No State can, of course, insulate itself completely from the currents of information and opinion flowing in the world, but ultimately each national society must find its own equilibrium in accordance with its own genius. Considering the web of memories, perceptions, aspirations and cultural values that constitute national life, any forceful pressures from outside to give it a particular form can hold little constructive promise in the long run. More often than not, they provoke a reaction different from the one desired. I am conscious that no precise formula in terms of law or international ethics can be laid down in this context because definition in such matters can prove treacherous. However, the principles of the Charter do provide the necessary guidance.

If political wisdom and caution on all sides were needed at times of crises in the past, and did indeed serve to avert wider conflict, the kinds of situations that can arise in the future will make even greater calls on statesmanship. As myriad forces that shape the future become less and less manageable by Governments acting alone, States will need more and more to co-operate with one another and adopt practices and policies that will support the emergence and the consolidation of the rule of law. Certainly, the rampant violence that at present scars large parts of the world and the menace of terrorism from which no nation is immune cannot be overcome by recourse to methods contrary to international law.

The historic moment we have reached abounds with opportunities. If seized with an open mind, and with no intent to take advantage of any country's difficulties, they can lead us to a fruitful phase of international relations unrecognizable in traditional terms. By the same token, if they are misused, even the older civilities will not hold if the more vulnerable among societies around the world slide into chaos.

IX

The prospects of war or peace, regional or global, will no doubt always be the overarching concern of the international community. However, the state of the world economy and the possibilities it opens for sustainable development and social progress in disadvantaged sections of the globe also have major political implications. So, in an increasing degree, do certain social issues.

I would like to see the United Nations play a key role, as envisaged in the Charter, in promoting social progress and better standards of life for people throughout the world. This role becomes all the more important in the situation we are facing at present. There is an opportunity to extend to the economic and social spheres the same spirit of co-operation as has recently emerged in the political field. Indeed, the progress we have achieved in the global political climate can prove precarious if the economic climate remains adverse for the majority of the world's population.

During the past year there has been an apparent improvement in world economic conditions as world output and international trade in particular showed significant growth. However, the expansion of the world economy has not been even: some areas have enjoyed continuing prosperity while others are persistently plagued by depression and economic disorder. It would be inaccurate and facile to assume that the present lopsided growth patterns are due in all cases to inherent differences in underlying potential or to unsound policies. Nor should we expect these persistent imbalances automatically to correct themselves.

I remain deeply concerned about certain aspects of the current economic situation, particularly the widening economic and technological gap between the developing and the developed countries. The situation of the developing countries is being worsened by the continuing net transfer of resources to the developed countries. In much of the developing world, particularly in Africa and Latin America, most economies continue to stagnate if not regress, while in the industrialized world the central issue is the need to maintain inflation-free growth.

Debt remains a major constraint to the resumption of growth in many developing countries. It is clear that a common understanding on a solution to the problem of the external indebtedness of developing countries must now be reached quickly in the context of their growth and development. A review and strengthening of the current debt strategy is an urgent necessity. While the new thinking on debt in official circles is a welcome development, what is needed is a broad-based approach that includes substantial debt reduction. Every effort must be made to ensure that the measures taken are adequate and timely. Failure to find a just and equitable solution to the debt crisis in the near future can lead to a collapse of social and political structures in many developing countries.

It is encouraging that the major industrialized countries have committed themselves to achieving substantial progress in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations in order to complete it by the end of 1990. These trade negotiations must lead to significant benefits and address the problems of the developing countries. Real progress has also to be made in alleviating the difficulties faced by developing countries that are dependent on commodity exports.

During the past year I have visited a large number of developing countries and I have been deeply impressed by the strenuous efforts they are making, often against formidable odds, for the welfare of their peoples. However, the external economic environment aggravates the difficulties they face in the process of adjustment. I believe that it is now essential to resume a broad-based North-South dialogue on international economic co-operation that takes fully into account the views of all countries. The special session of the General Assembly scheduled for early next year can provide an excellent opportunity for it. I trust that the session as well as the preparatory process for the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade will lend fresh impetus to thinking and action on international co-operation for development.

Discussions are continuing for the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery in the economic and social sectors, including the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council. Although the Council has made progress in enhancing its effectiveness, what is required above all at this juncture is an increased commitment by Member States to utilize and support the Organization in its economic and social activities. Only thus can the full potential of the United Nations in this sphere be realized.

At the present stage of the evolution of global society, the impact of technology has radically altered the means and methods of production and communications and, in the field of health, made rapid strides towards enhancing life expectancy and reducing disease. This has constituted genuine human advance in diverse respects. However, it is ironical that, at the same stage, certain processes are bringing civilization to a crisis. I refer in particular to the deterioration of the natural environment, the explosive growth in the world's population and the emergence of a variety of social trends that are steadily gnawing at the fabric of society.

The United Nations perceived the coming of the environmental crisis years before the phenomenon became a matter of public debate and policy in individual countries. The United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, held at Stockholm in 1972, sought to address the question comprehensively. Now, with the possibilities of disastrous change in climate no longer dismissible, daily signs of an ailing and exhausted Earth are evoking universal concern.

Two trends in the matter of treating the planet's affliction are currently discernible. One of them is reassuring; the other can be cause for apprehension.

The positive trend stems from the increased recognition in all countries, from the most industrialized to the least developed, of the gravity of the problem and the urgent need to deal with it in a practical way. This has been highlighted by pronouncements made and initiatives announced at the highest level of the world's leadership. It represents a most welcome step forward and may well signify the birth of a new kind of loyalty, an Earth-patriotism, a looking at the planet and its atmosphere as an object for protection and not for aggression and pillage.

The cause for apprehension, however, is that Governments may adopt unilateral approaches that will lead to overlapping, duplication and waste of resources. The problem of the environment is sui generis in many respects; agreement about its gravity notwithstanding, different countries may have different perceptions of its implications and, therefore, different priorities. This underscores the need to evolve an integrated response and establish the forms of international co-operation that the situation so clearly demands.

The environmental crisis is manifested in many forms, ranging from the depletion of the ozone layer, the greenhouse effect, global warming, desertification, land degradation and impoverishment of the Earth's biological diversity to the vexatious issue of the transborder disposal of hazardous wastes.

Since the emergence of the crisis, the United Nations has taken a number of steps to promote an understanding of the magnitude of the problem and to find means for arresting the degradation of the natural resources of our planet. The 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, which came into force this year, prescribed the action to address the problem of ozone depletion. The Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal was adopted in March 1989. A joint United Nations Environment Programme/World Meteorological Organization panel is studying the pace and nature of climate change and its likely environmental and economic impact and will report to the Second World Climate Conference in 1990. The United Nations has launched a major study, which will address several key environmental issues, including its link with development. Moreover, United Nations agencies are now pressing vigorously to integrate environment and natural resources protection into development programmes.

Nevertheless, much still remains to be done. It is imperative that Member States frame co-ordinated plans of international action that will ease and gradually resolve the crisis. The responsibility, of course, is shared by all countries; but the industrialized countries have a special obligation to check and mitigate the damage caused to the global environment and to assist the developing countries in achieving environmentally sound and sustainable development. There is also the need to address the question of the environment as a totality and to establish clear and equitable norms for the environmental behaviour of States through international law.

The proposed international conference on environment and development to be held in 1992, 20 years after the Stockholm Conference, will provide an occasion for developing a universal response in order to protect our planet for future generations. An opportunity lies here to redefine the relationship between man and nature and thus give a new turn to civilization.

XI

The current rate of increase in the world's population has most disturbing implications for sustainable development and social progress, especially in countries where larger increments still occur. Accompanying the explosive population growth is the rapid pace of urbanization in developing countries, making heavy demands on their ability to provide employment, housing, infrastructure and related services. One consequence is that the number of people living in absolute poverty, without adequate food or shelter, has increased at an alarming rate.

International efforts, including the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 43/181 of 20 December 1988, will be crucial in meeting the challenge posed by the present population growth rates and the destitution in which people are condemned to live. At a time of vast expansion in the world's total wealth, the hunger and homelessness of millions remain a rebuke to civilization.

XII

Throughout the world the pace of social change has so accelerated that the pressures on individuals and on basic social institutions severely constrain the effective operation of the agencies of civil order. Frequent incidents of lawlessness cause widespread fear and, for the individual, a haunting sense of insecurity. This new generation of problems affects the growth and preservation of civil institutions and the process of development generally. Moreover, since they easily cross the boundaries of States they affect the stability of international relations as well.

The internationalization of certain major social issues can, therefore, no longer be discounted. There is a growing realization that the social crisis affects all countries, even if in varying degrees, and that there is none among them which can regard itself as immune from danger. Essential as it is, therefore, jointly to devise and implement strategies to reduce and gradually to eliminate these new sources of disorder and potential conflict, it is also necessary to acknowledge that their roots lie deep in conditions of imbalance between the different components of society.

In recent years, the United Nations has been the catalyst for the adoption of a corpus of internationally agreed plans of action and guidelines that in fact provide the elements of a global social strategy. This encompasses the guiding principles for developmental social welfare policies and programmes, the strategies adopted at Nairobi for the advancement of women, global documents in the field of youth, disabled persons and aging, the results of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, as well as the recommendations of the United Nations Congresses on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. Thus a set of principles and norms, together with operational guidelines, is at our disposal.

Drug abuse, the incidence of the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) and international crime have reached such proportions that a new sense of urgency is needed to deal with them. Each is of a nature that not even the most resourceful States can solve by themselves; each, therefore, underscores the need for nations to act in concert.

Illicit use and traffic of drugs is now recognized as a social plague afflicting both developed and developing countries. Although efforts to combat this scourge have intensified in recent years, estimates suggest that the monetary value of drug trafficking has recently surpassed that of international trade in oil and is second only to the arms trade. It is a chastening observation that humanity is so deeply mired in the commerce of degradation and death.

The misery caused by drug addiction is immeasurable. Moreover, in a number of countries, the vast profits derived from this illicit production and traffic have the direct effect of making sections of local economies dependent on the trade and thus creating militant constituencies for its continuance. In some cases, administrative and judicial structures are being undermined to the extent of endangering political stability. Financial systems and banking institutions are frequently used to disguise vast sums acquired through drug trade and, in a number of developing countries, underground economies are expanded by its profits. There are also reported cases of collaboration between terrorists and those involved in drug trafficking in subverting civic peace. Indeed, the Government of a Member State has been confronted with an appalling situation: a cartel of drug dealers has openly embarked on armed conflict with it and, through assassinations and other terrorist acts, has tried to intimidate the body politic as a whole.

It is now generally recognized that both the supply of and the demand for drugs should be reduced and action should be taken to break the link between consumers and producers. A major step in this direction was taken in December 1988 with the adoption of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. The onus, of course, falls on Governments concerned to exercise the wide powers that the Convention vests in them and ensure that it is fully implemented. However, international understanding and co-ordination, together with increased resources, are indispensable in bringing this problem under control.

The United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control is working with other United Nations bodies and multilateral organizations to restrict cultivation of drug-producing crops and to stop trade in drugs through appropriate programmes, technical assistance and social measures taken largely at the community level. If decisive action is to be taken in solving the drug problem, it is essential that international support be available whenever and wherever requested. I would, therefore, appeal to all Member States to accede to the Convention and contribute generously to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

A related and tragic social problem is the rapid spread of AIDS, with a clear upward trend in all regions. The World Health Organization (WHO) is leading the global effort on AIDS in collaboration with intergovernmental and other bodies. In over 150 countries, WHO is monitoring and evaluating national AIDS programmes, co-ordinating with relevant United Nations entities in addressing the practical issues involved.

The socio-economic and humanitarian aspects of the AIDS pandemic must also be addressed. In response to General Assembly resolution 43/15 of 27 October 1988, I have sought to ensure a co-ordinated system-wide approach through the establishment of the United Nations inter-agency advisory group on AIDS and focal points have been created in all relevant United Nations entities.

The rising crime rate, particularly in its transnational and organized forms, has also become a threat to global society as a whole. The menace cannot be overcome without full co-operation on a multilateral basis. There is need for Governments to co-ordinate the relevant policies and judicial procedures and co-operate in law enforcement. Preparations are under way for a United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders next year. It is not beyond the combined capacities of Governments to ensure that no corner of the globe will serve as sanctuary for the perpetrators of international crime nor any laxity in vigilance afford them the impunity of which they have been taking advantage so far.

Though there is world-wide concern about the use of narcotics and the incidence of crime, particularly in their international aspects, additional factors cause major social upheavals in many developing countries. The mass migrations due to hunger and natural and man-made disasters tell their own tale of human distress. The quest for global tranquillity will lack balance if the problem of the displacement of an untold number of human beings is not addressed with the sense of urgency it deserves.

XIII

The large number of refugees and displaced persons around the world continues to be a sombre commentary on the present state of affairs. While several important advances have been made in addressing and resolving the problems of refugees, asylum-seekers and related humanitarian categories, other developments are posing difficult new challenges. In seeking to meet those challenges, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) takes the lead in working closely with other United Nations entities such as the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Food Programme (WFP) and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) in order to assure a co-ordinated and timely response.

The world's largest single refugee group is the Afghans, who have yet to be repatriated on a large scale. Such repatriation over the past year has occurred largely in Africa, where large numbers of refugees from several countries have returned home. UNHCR is currently overseeing the organized return of several thousand Namibian refugees. Assistance has also been planned for the repatriation of refugees in South-East Asia and Central America.

More States have acceded to the major international and regional instruments on refugees. However, this further validation of the international humanitarian law of refugees was offset by an increase in unilateral measures by States that has not only worsened the plight of asylum-seekers and refugees, but even poses a threat to the humanitarian institution of asylum.

I have been particularly concerned with the complex emergency situations that have developed in Africa as a result of severe civil conflicts often compounded by other factors. These situations generally exceed the response capacity of any single agency or organization of the United Nations system and require co-ordinated action by several of these entities. Complex emergency situations lead to large-scale internal displacement in addition to the exodus of people to countries that are themselves, in many cases, among the least developed.

In response to requests from affected Governments, I have organized inter-agency missions on several occasions to help assess the scope of humanitarian and rehabilitation needs for their particular situations. The final reports of such missions provide the basis for launching appeals to the international donor community for urgent assistance. During the past year I have, inter alia, appealed to Member States to support emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation programmes for Burundi, Ethiopia, Mauritania, Mozambique, Senegal, Somalia and the Sudan.

Natural disasters are too frequently a cause of human loss, economic and social hardship. In recognition of the importance of international efforts in early warning and disaster relief, the General Assembly has designated the 1990s as an International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. It is hoped that this will enhance the ability of the international community to answer situations of human distress due to causes beyond human control.

XIV

The administrative and financial situation of the Organization differs significantly from previous years. This is because of the impact of administrative reform, the addition of major new peace-keeping responsibilities and the continuing financial crisis.

The programme of administrative reforms initiated in 1986, based on the recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations, has been largely implemented. However, administrative reform is essentially a continuing process. The reforms have unquestionably produced a leaner and, in many ways, a more efficient Secretariat. Staff reductions undertaken since 1986 are now nearing the recommended target of 15 per cent. Unfortunately, in several areas, the capacity of the Secretariat to fulfil its tasks is already under considerable strain. In view of additional responsibilities placed on the Secretariat, it may well be necessary to limit the cuts to the level already attained. Several offices have been restructured in order to provide a more effective response to new demands while also adjusting to continuing constraints on available resources. Management information systems and the introduction of new technologies have yielded benefits in substantive, conference and administrative services.

Despite these changes, other factors have detracted from their potential net benefit. Although the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts envisaged less demand for conference and documentation services owing to the reductions and reforms, such a decrease has not occurred. Few bodies have decided to schedule biennial rather than annual meetings, or to reduce the duration of their sessions. As a result, the calendar of meetings is not significantly different this year from 1986, before the reform process began.

The mounting of 4 new peace-keeping operations in 1988-1989, as against 13 operations over the previous 40 years, and the planning of others have stretched to the limit the human and financial resources of the Organization. The demands on the Secretariat for additional services required a re-examination of programme priorities following on reform. In this context, I wish to mention that the staff as a whole have responded to this challenge with unfailing devotion to the mandate of the Organization. Many staff members have volunteered for service in overseas missions, fully aware of the personal sacrifice or physical hardship involved. Their enthusiasm and dedication to the realization of the goals of the United Nations provide a living testament to the vibrancy of international co-operation and multilateralism. On a recent visit to Namibia, I was deeply moved to see personnel drawn from as many as 109 States serving together under the flag of the United Nations with the single purpose of bringing that country to independence in the manner laid down by the Security Council.

The United Nations is now at the forefront of international efforts in a variety of areas. Demand for additional operations is likely in the coming months; these will entail more expense. At a time when the Organization continues to be short of funds, it is imperative that Governments ensure the regular and timely payment of their dues. However, the present financial position is not reassuring. As at 31 August, outstanding contributions to the regular budget exceeded $688 million, out of which $347 million were owed for the current year and $341 million for earlier years. For peace-keeping operations, the arrears totalled $661 million. All outstanding contributions thus amounted to $1,349 million. Only with a secure financial foundation can the Secretariat respond to requests for assistance with the speed and the resources requisite to a particular situation. It is high time that the United Nations is able to leave its financial worries behind.

In this context, it must also be recognized that the employment of the staff so as to secure the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity is an obligation under the Charter. The erosion of the conditions of service has made it increasingly difficult to comply with this requirement and to attract and retain staff with the necessary qualifications. The International Civil Service Commission has undertaken a comprehensive review of this situation and its findings will be presented to the Assembly.

The security of international civil servants also remains a cause of anxiety. There is an urgent need to ensure that the Organization is able to discharge its responsibilities without having the safety and sometimes the lives of its personnel endangered while serving in the field. I would urge Governments of all Member States to extend to them not only the protection that they need but also the treatment to which they are entitled by virtue of their being servants of all. The terms of service and the security of the staff are, I believe, matters of great importance for the Organization as a whole.

XV

The present report began with a retrospective glance at the different phases of international relations prior to the one ushered in only recently. I believe that the way public attitudes with regard to peace have varied and evolved through all these phases deserves to be borne in mind at this time when we may be witnessing a new turn in international affairs.

At the time the Charter of the United Nations was adopted, there was a sense of a new beginning around the world. For the first time in history, the prospect of the banishment of war from international relations ceased to look utopian. This evoked a kind of enthusiasm that had never been experienced before.

But the optimism was soon dispelled by the discord between the principal architects of the world Organization and the consequent impasse on all major questions of international peace and security. The world did escape another global war but the balance of terror between the major nuclear-weapon Powers provided no reliable insurance against the danger and little comfort to those outside the great-Power equation. There was no shortage of the rhetoric of peace but doubts grew as to whether war was a totally unacceptable option. A fearful, fatalistic sense attended an unending arms race.

This sense of a loss of purpose lasted for decades. Now that it has begun to lighten, there is a return to the earlier hope that had greeted the birth of the world Organization, but a hope tempered by a firmer sense of realities. When people think better of the United Nations and when it succeeds in its efforts, they are more hopeful about peace; the reverse also holds. This is borne out by all indications of opinion around the world. If anything is clear in the present situation, it is that war and the preparations for war have dwindling constituencies, while peace has a growing one.

For the size and strength of the constituency of peace, a great deal of credit is due to non-governmental organizations around the world. Their tireless work in many vital areas has complemented and supported the efforts of the United Nations.

But the noticeable improvement in public perceptions of the Organization intensifies an obligation-the obligation to avert another crisis of confidence. I am certain that, given the necessary support from Member States, the Secretariat of the Organization will respond fully to whatever calls are made upon it. However, its capabilities will be best employed if the Organization as a whole is used more purposefully by its Member States than it was in the recent past. The decision-making process on political matters has vastly improved with the emergence of a collegial spirit among the permanent members of the Security Council and with the daily co-operation between the Council as a whole and the Secretary-General. While this no doubt satisfies a basic condition for successful action, the changing times demand more. Agreement among the major Powers must carry with it the support of a majority of Member States if it is to make the desired impact on the world situation.

We will soon be entering a new decade. This, of course, means little by itself but not many decades can have opened at truly historic points. The present is such a point. There is a ubiquitous desire to turn over a new leaf, to try innovative approaches for the solution of old problems. In diverse regions, there is weariness with wars and there is recognition of their futility. Nor do the postures of hostile competition have the appeal to public opinion that they unfortunately exerted not too long ago. Instead, it is the combat against the causes of conflict, the struggle against economic inequities, and social evils and the degradation of the environment that must evoke all the courage and determination of battle. Obstacles to stable peace and balanced progress are many and the world's political, intellectual and moral imagination will need to be fully employed in overcoming them. The United Nations stands ready as the instrument for the effort.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The United Nations continued in 1989 to safeguard international peace and security. The General Assembly, noting that conflicts and hostilities were giving way to negotiations and co-operation, stressed the need to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council in maintaining international peace and security as well as its preventive role, authority and enforcement capacity (resolution 44/126). The Assembly also reaffirmed its support for the validity and relevance of the Charter of the United Nations and encouraged Member States to implement and strengthen the principles of international peace, security and international co-operation (44/21).

During the year, new peace-keeping operations were established in Namibia and Central America and others were being actively considered. The Assembly adopted the recommendations of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations for strengthening peace-keeping operations and making them more effective (44/49).

The Assembly expressed concern at the persistent tension in parts of the Mediterranean region and urged States to co-operate in reducing tension and promoting peace and security (44/125). It also called on States to promote the objectives established in its 1986 declaration of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic and to refrain from actions that might create or aggravate tension and potential conflict in the region (44/20).

The Assembly expressed concern over attempts by mercenaries to infringe upon the sovereignty and territorial integrity of small States and urged the Secretary-General to monitor the security of those States and to bring such attempts to the attention of the Security Council (44/51).

In other action, the Assembly recognized the important contribution of the 1986 International Year of Peace and supported the efforts of the international community in strengthening the United Nations as an instrument of peace (44/11).

Strengthening of international security

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

In December 1989, the General Assembly reaffirmed the validity of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security⁽¹⁾ and urged States, particularly the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to promote and use effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter.

In February,⁽²⁾ responding to a 1987 Assembly invitation,⁽³⁾ Chile submitted its views on the implementation of the Declaration. In November,⁽⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted the views received from seven Member States in response to a 1988 Assembly request.⁽⁵⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/126 by recorded vote.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security
The General Assembly,

Conscious that the present stage of mankind's development is distinctive for its technological, economic and political changes, making overall progress possible, but at the same time also for its many obstacles, old and new, to the building of a more peaceful, secure, just, equitable, democratic and humane world,

Considering that events of significant bearing on international security are taking place, including a wide-ranging dialogue between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, with their positive effect on world developments and establishment of new trends in international relations,

Noting with satisfaction that conflicts and hostilities are giving way to negotiations, understanding and co-operation in a number of instances,

Mindful that the use of nuclear weapons could lead to the extinction of human life on earth,

Stressing the need for the strengthening of international security through disarmament and restraints on the qualitative and quantitative escalation of the arms race.

Expressing its expectation that the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, of 8 December 1987, would be a precursor to the adoption of further concrete disarmament measures leading to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Emphasizing that the existing sombre contrast between enormous military expenditures and dire poverty underlines the importance of giving concrete shape to the concept of the link between disarmament and development,

Stressing also that disarmament, the relaxation of international tension, respect for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, especially the principles of the sovereign equality of States and the peaceful settlement of disputes and the injunction to refrain from the use or threat of use of force in international relations; respect for the right to self-determination and national independence, economic and social development, the complete eradication of colonialism, apartheid and all other forms of racism and racial discrimination, aggression and occupation; respect for human rights, and the strengthening of international peace and security are closely related to each other,

Expressing its support for all efforts towards a successful resolution of hotbeds of crisis in the world, irrespective of their historical or contemporary causes, ensuring that the solutions are not imposed by outside Powers to the detriment of the interest of the parties directly concerned,

Expressing its conviction that the gradual military disengagement of the great Powers and their military alliances from various parts of the world should be promoted,

Considering that a détente devoid of economic content is unlikely to endure, and that if economic imperatives, particularly the requirements of developing countries, are not accommodated, the resulting strains may very well undermine the current trends towards global peace and harmony,

Considering also that the economic situation in the vast majority of the developing countries has deteriorated dramatically, especially in the least developed ones, and that the fruits of development should benefit the largest segments of population,

Stressing that the present asymmetry in economic and technological development can only be redressed through a balanced development of the entire international community and through efforts aimed at the broadest possible democratization of international relations,

Stressing also the need for structural adjustments in all spheres, in accordance with the development objectives and priorities of the countries concerned, in order to respond to the challenges of advanced technology, especially the technology of tomorrow,

Noting with satisfaction that the important process of decolonization from which a large number of sovereign States have emerged is entering a decisive stage,

Concerned over the growing environmental problems, which pose a threat to the very survival of mankind and testify to the interdependence of interests of all nations,

Stressing further that the promotion of freedom and human rights is one of the basic objectives of the world community,

Deeply concerned that racism and discrimination based on colour, creed, ethnic origin, culture or way of life are still practised,

Strongly emphasizing that apartheid is a particular and repugnant form of institutionalized racism which civilized nations have rightly condemned as a crime against humanity,

Reaffirming that the United Nations is an irreplaceable instrument for regulating international relations and resolving international problems and that its main organs, particularly the Security Council, are responsible for the maintenance and effective promotion of international peace and security,

1. Reaffirms the validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Urges once again all States to abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Emphasizes that, until an enduring and stable peace based on a comprehensive, viable and readily implementable structure of international security is established, peace, the achievement of disarmament and the settlement of disputes by peaceful means continue to be the first and foremost task of the international community;

4. Calls upon all States to refrain from the use or threat of use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation and colonial domination or measures of political and economic coercion which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States, as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

5. Also calls upon all States to seek, through more effective utilization of the means provided for in the Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension, which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

6. Urges all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take immediate steps aimed at promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter, as well as halting effectively the arms race with the aim of achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control, and implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

7. Stresses that there is a need further to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council in discharging its principal responsibility of maintaining international peace and security and to enhance the preventive role, authority and enforcement capacity of the Council in accordance with the Charter;

8. Emphasizes the role that the United Nations has in the maintenance of international peace and security and in economic and social development and progress for the benefit of mankind;

9. Considers that the management of the world economy needs to be more broad-based so as to reflect the interests of all countries and groups of countries and to evolve policies which can be supported by all, as well as that the current economic and social problems and the needs of the future are such that no single nation or group of nations can solve them in isolation;

10. Emphasizes also that there can be no lasting peace and security in the world without the solution of the international economic problems, particularly those of the developing countries, and the ensuring of the sustained growth and development of the world economy;

11. Reaffirms that the total eradication of colonialism and the economic emancipation of all peoples as an indispensable pre-condition for maintaining and strengthening their political independence remain priority tasks;

12. Considers that the protection of the environment has emerged as a major global concern, dramatically emphasizing the growing interdependence of the world, which calls for urgent co-operative measures and a global compact ensuring a sustainable and environmentally sound development;

13. Considers also that respect for and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in their civil, political, economic, social and cultural aspects, on the one hand, and the strengthening of international peace and security, on the other, mutually reinforce each other;

14. Reaffirms also the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

15. Reaffirms further that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity enabling, under the conditions of interdependence, the full development and independence of all States, as well as the attainment of genuine security, peace and co-operation in the world, and stresses its firm belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of these goals;

16. Emphasizes the role that the United Nations has to play in promoting respect for international law as a basis of peace and security;

17. Invites Member States to submit their views on the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the basis of the replies received;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Enhancing international peace and security

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its March/April 1989 meetings,(6) considered working papers submitted by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand and Spain(7) and by Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic,(8) on fact-finding activities by the United Nations in the context of the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Special Committee was of the opinion that States should consider the proposals submitted by Romania(9) on the resort to a commission of good offices, mediation or conciliation within the United Nations as useful guidance when resorting to such measures to settle disputes, and recommended that the General Assembly bring those proposals to the attention of States.

The Assembly, in resolution 44/37, asked the Special Committee to give priority to the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen United Nations fact-finding activities and to examine the Secretary-General's report on the elaboration of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States,(10) In resolution 44/32, the Assembly invited the International Law Commission to continue work on elaborating a draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind.

On 29 September, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the five permanent members of the Security Council met with the Secretary-General to exchange views and review developments on a wide range of international issues. In a statement following their meeting, (11) the Ministers agreed that at the current time of positive change in the international political climate, from confrontation to relaxation and interaction among States, the United Nations had an important role to play. They placed particular emphasis on efforts to resolve current regional conflicts, noted with satisfaction the trend towards dialogue and peaceful settlement of disputes which had developed in recent years and welcomed the active involvement of the United Nations in that process. They commended United Nations peace-keeping operations in preventing and resolving regional disputes and underlined the importance of their effective functioning. The Ministers expressed satisfaction at the improved working relations within the Security Council and with the Secretary-General and expressed their determination to continue to work together and in co-operation with him for the prevention and resolution of international conflicts.

On 3 November,(12) the USSR and the United States jointly requested inclusion in the Assembly's agenda of an item on enhancing international peace, security and international co-operation in all its aspects in accordance with the Charter. They explained that recent developments offered renewed prospects for international co-operation towards common goals and new importance to the further strengthening of the role and effectiveness of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security through respect for its Charter and better international co-operation in resolving international problems of a political, social, cultural or humanitarian character.

Appended to the request was a draft resolution which the two States said reflected a commitment to a renewed relationship in the United Nations based on enhanced consultation and co-operation to implement and strengthen the principles and system of peace, security and international co-operation laid down in the Charter. In that connection, it was particularly relevant to intensify co-operative efforts towards ensuring international peace and security in accordance with the Charter, and to consult and co-operate within the framework of the United Nations, particularly through the Security Council, the General Assembly and the appropriate subsidiary bodies.

On 9 November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided in decision 44/402 A to include the additional item.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/21 without vote.

Enhancing international peace, security and international co-operation in all its aspects in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Desiring to strengthen further the role and effectiveness of the United Nations in maintaining international peace and security for all States on the basis of full and universal respect for the Charter of the United Nations and through better international co-operation in resolving international problems of a political, economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character,

Mindful of the potential of the United Nations to be even more effective in achieving international co-operation,

1. Calls upon all States to intensify their practical efforts towards ensuring international peace and security in all its aspects through co-operative means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms its support for the validity and relevance of the Charter and urges all States to abide by it and, in particular, to respect the principles of sovereign equality, political independence and territorial integrity of States and non-intervention in internal affairs, refrain from the threat or use of force inconsistent with the Charter, settle disputes peacefully, adhere to the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and co-operation among States, and comply in good faith with their obligations assumed in accordance with the Charter;

3. Encourages Member States to consult and co-operate within the framework of the United Nations, the Security Council, the General Assembly and their appropriate subsidiary bodies in order to find multifaceted approaches to implement and strengthen the principles and the system of international peace, security and international co-operation laid down in the Charter.

15 November 1989 Meeting 56 Adopted without vote

43-nation draft (A/44/L.38 & Add.1); agenda item 158.

Sponsors: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, Mongolia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Senegal, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

On 14 November,(14) Argentina, in requesting that it be added to the sponsors of the draft resolution, said that in the new international climate of trust and co-operation, the Assembly was able to take up again ideas and concepts that constituted the foundations of the United Nations, which now had before it reasonable prospects of building a world in which democracy, freedom and human rights would prevail.

The First Committee considered the item on a comprehensive approach to strengthening international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations from 22 to 30 November. It had before it several communications, including a Soviet aide-mémoire on strengthening the preventive functions of the United Nations and related international organizations in an interdependent world.(15)

The Committee reported to the Assembly that it had considered the item jointly with those on strengthening security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region (see below) and review of the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security (see above), but had not taken any action.

On 15 December, by decision 44/433, the Assembly took note of the First Committee's report.

On 4 December, by resolution 44/31, the Assembly had called on Member States to make full use, in accordance with the Charter, of the framework provided by the United Nations for the peaceful settlement of disputes and international problems.

Review of peace-keeping operations

In 1989, two new peace-keeping operations were established: the United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III) and the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (see PART TWO, Chapter II). There were also other potential new missions under active consideration.

The Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations held four meetings between 10 April and 1 June.⁽¹⁾ It had before it a March report with later addenda⁽²⁾ of the Secretary-General, containing replies from 22 Governments to a 1988 General Assembly request⁽³⁾ for their views on United Nations peace-keeping operations. The Committee recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to provide Member States with information on personnel, material and technical requirements for peace-keeping operations; invite them to identify the resources they would, in principle, contribute to those operations and establish a registry of potential contributions based on their replies; and undertake a study of those tasks and services that could be performed by civilian personnel. The Committee also recommended that States exchange experiences and establish national training programmes for military and civilian personnel for the operations and that the Secretary-General prepare the necessary training manuals. It recommended full support of host countries to the operations; the conclusion of status-of-forces agreements; that Member States pay assessed contributions in full and on time; and that voluntary contributions be encouraged.

On 22 May,⁽⁴⁾ Sweden transmitted the 14 April final statement of the Palme Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues containing, among other things, suggestions for improving United Nations peace-keeping capabilities.

In October, the Secretary-General, in a report⁽⁵⁾ on the administrative and budgetary aspects of financing United Nations peace-keeping operations, addressed the issues of the economies of scale, civilian personnel provided by Governments, start-up problems and the feasibility and cost-effectiveness of maintaining a reserve stock of equipment and supply items. He noted the need to maintain a high degree of readiness in the Organization's ability to emplace new peace-keeping operations and proposed measures to cover the financial and physical arrangements for their implementation.

In a December report to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee,⁽⁶⁾ the Secretary-General proposed the establishment within the Secretariat of a Senior Planning and Monitoring Group, which would also review and make recommendations regarding the Secretariat's organizational structure in relation to peace-keeping matters. He also made proposals for financing (see PART FIVE, Chapter I) and backstopping peace-keeping operations, and for providing additional support for the Office for Special Political Affairs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/49 without vote.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A (XX) of 15 December 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967, 2451(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2670(XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2835(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2965(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3091(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3239(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3457(XXX) of 10 December 1975, 31/105 of 15 December 1976, 32/106 of 15 December 1977, 33/114 of 18 December 1978, 34/53 of 23 November 1979, 35/121 of 11 December 1980, 36/37 of 18 November 1981, 37/93 of 10 December 1982, 38/81 of 15 December 1983, 39/97 of 14 December 1984, 40/163 of 16 December 1985, 41/67 of 3 December 1986, 42/161 of 8 December 1987 and 43/59 A of 6 December 1988,

Welcoming the progress made by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations during its session in 1989 and, in particular, the agreement reached on a number of conclusions and recommendations,

Convinced that the United Nations peace-keeping operations are an integral component of enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security,

Taking into account that increasing activities in the field of United Nations peace-keeping require increasing human, financial and material resources for the Organization,

Aware of the extremely difficult financial situation of the United Nations peace-keeping forces and of the heavy burden on the troop contributors, especially those from developing countries,

Emphasizing that the current political atmosphere is propitious for achieving further progress in the work of the Special Committee,

Bearing in mind the fact that constructive exchanges of views on various practical aspects of peace-keeping operations can contribute favourably to the smooth and effective functioning of these operations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide Member States with the relevant information with respect to the requirements for United Nations peace-keeping operations of personnel, material and technical resources and services and, at the same time, to invite Member States, by means of a questionnaire, to identify those personnel, material and technical resources and services which they would be ready, in principle, to contribute to United Nations peace-keeping operations;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of the responses by States to the questionnaire, to establish a registry, indicative in nature, of potential contributions by Member States of personnel, material and technical resources and services, and to invite Member States to bring their responses up to date as necessary;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to undertake a study to identify those tasks and services which could be performed by civilian personnel in peace-keeping operations and to inform the Special Committee of the conclusions of the study as soon as possible, taking into account the study requested by the General Assembly in resolution 43/230 of 21 December 1988;

5. Encourages Member States to exchange the experiences acquired through their participation in peace-keeping operations and encourages Member States and interested organizations to hold, in consultation with the Secretariat, as appropriate, regional and international seminars on peace-keeping operations;

6. Also encourages Member States to establish national training programmes for military and civilian personnel for peace-keeping operations and, in this connection, requests the Secretary-General to prepare training manuals, which Member States might wish to use as guidelines for their national or regional training programmes;

7. Emphasizes the need to ensure a secure and sound financial basis for United Nations peace-keeping operations;

8. Urges all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time and also encourages those States which can do so to make voluntary contributions that are acceptable to the Secretary-General;

9. Urges host countries of any United Nations peace-keeping operation and all directly interested parties to extend all possible support in order to facilitate the deployment and functioning of such operations;

10. Considers that status-of-forces agreements should be concluded between host countries of any United Nations peace-keeping operation and the United Nations and, to this end, urges host countries of any United Nations peace-keeping operation to conclude status-of-forces agreements with the United Nations as soon as possible after the establishment of the operation;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a model status-of-forces agreement between the United Nations and host countries, while maintaining the flexibility needed to encompass different possible operations, and to make the model agreement available to Member States;

12. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General in preparing standard operating procedures, and expresses the hope that this work will be completed as soon as possible and made available to Member States;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to publish an updated version of The Blue Helmets and to include therein a summary of the practice of United Nations peace-keeping operations, in time for the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly and, thereafter, to bring it up to date as necessary;

14. Considers it useful to have further discussions, in the appropriate forums, including the Special Committee, on the possible fields for peace-keeping and on the further development of peace-keeping operations;

15. Urges the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, to continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects with a view to strengthening the role of the United Nations in this field, taking into account the difficult financial situation of peace-keeping operations and the need for maximum cost efficiency;

16. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including in the meetings of its working groups;

17. Invites Member States to submit any further observations and suggestions to the Secretary-General by 1 March 1990 on peace-keeping operations in all their aspects, with particular emphasis on practical proposals to make these operations more effective;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing resources, a compilation of the above-mentioned observations and suggestions and to submit it to the Special Committee during its session in 1990;

19. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects".

Regional aspects of international peace and security

Security and co-operation in the Mediterranean

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(1) the Secretary-General submitted in November 1989 a report(2) on the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region, in which he presented a summary of the debate on the question during the 1988 Assembly session. Also included were the views of 10 Member States submitted in response to his request.

In related developments, the heads of State or Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, at their Ninth Conference (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 4-7 September),(3) reaffirmed their support for the transformation of the Mediterranean into a region of peace, security and co-operation, free from conflict and confrontation. They also expressed the hope that the 1990 meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe on the Mediterranean would contribute to the strengthening of confidence and security in the region. On 19 September,(4) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya drew attention to media reports on the launching by Israel (referred to by the Jamahiriya as the Zionist entity) on 14 September of a medium-range missile capable of carrying nuclear warheads, which fell into the Mediterranean north of the Libyan city of Benghazi. The incident, it said, represented a further escalation of tension in the region, endangered air and sea navigation and economic activity, and nullified efforts to strengthen peace and co-operation and to make the region a zone of peace. On 20 October,⁽⁵⁾ the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya referred to military manoeuvres conducted by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in the western part of the Mediterranean, which it said turned the region into an area of tension and international conflict and which were incompatible with the call to make the Mediterranean a zone of security and co-operation.

On 29 September,⁽⁶⁾ Algeria, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco and Tunisia transmitted to the Secretary-General the texts of the Treaty and Declaration creating the Arab Maghreb Union. Signed on 17 February by those five States, the Treaty aimed, inter alia, at achieving progress and prosperity of their societies and the preservation of peace. It entered into force on 1 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/125 without vote.

Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/102 of 9 December 1981, 37/118 of 16 December 1982, 38/189 of 20 December 1983, 39/153 of 17 December 1984, 40/157 of 16 December 1985, 41/89 of 4 December 1986, 42/90 of 7 December 1987 and 43/84 of 7 December 1988,

Recognizing the importance of promoting peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and of strengthening further the economic, commercial and cultural links in the region,

Reaffirming the primary role of the Mediterranean countries in the promotion of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region,

Expressing concern at the persistent tension in parts of the Mediterranean region and the consequent threat to peace,

Welcoming the favourable developments in the international situation, and expressing hope that these developments will have a positive impact on the Mediterranean region,

Concerned at the continuing military operations and reports of recent activities in the Mediterranean and the danger that they create for peace, security and general equilibrium in the region,

Reaffirming the responsibility of all States to conform in their actions to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as to the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the need to intensify and promote peace and security and to strengthen co-operation in the region, as provided for in the Mediterranean chapter of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975,

Recalling the declarations of successive meetings of non-aligned countries concerning the Mediterranean, as well as official declarations on, and contributions to, peace and security in the Mediterranean region made by individual countries,

Welcoming the efforts realized by the Mediterranean members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to strengthen regional co-operation in various fields among themselves and between them and the European countries,

Recognizing the desire of Mediterranean countries that the needs of their region be taken into account in ongoing and future negotiations relating to international security and disarmament,

Recognizing also the desire of the non-aligned Mediterranean countries to intensify the process of dialogue and consultations with European-Mediterranean and other European countries aimed at strengthening efforts towards the promotion of peace, security and co-operation in the region, thus contributing to the stabilization of the situation in the Mediterranean,

Noting the results of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe and the Concluding Document of the Vienna Follow-up Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, where all the participating States reaffirmed their resolve fully to implement unilaterally, bilaterally and multilaterally all the provisions of the Final Act and of the other documents of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe,

Taking note of the debate on this item during its various sessions and, in particular, of the report of the Secretary-General on this item,

1. Reaffirms:

(a) That the security of the Mediterranean is closely linked with European security and with international peace and security;

(b) That further efforts are necessary for the reduction of tension and of armaments and for the creation of conditions of security and fruitful co-operation in all fields for all countries and peoples of the Mediterranean, on the basis of the principles of sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, security, non-intervention and non-interference, non-violation of international borders, non-use of force or threat of use of force, the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, peaceful settlement of disputes and respect for permanent sovereignty over natural resources;

(c) That just and viable solutions are needed for existing problems and crises in the region on the basis of the provisions of the Charter and of relevant resolutions of the United Nations, the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and the right of peoples under colonial or foreign domination to self-determination and independence;

2. Takes note of the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, and in particular paragraph 25 of the final document on international security and disarmament, which, inter alia, supported the transformation of the Mediterranean region into a region of peace, security and co-operation, free from conflict and confrontation;

3. Expresses satisfaction that important negotiations on confidence- and security-building measures are currently taking place at Vienna aimed at building upon and expanding the militarily significant and politically binding achievements of the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe, which, in relation to the Mediterranean, inter alia, confirmed the intention of the participants in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to develop good-neighbourly relations with all States of the region, with due regard to reciprocity, and in the spirit of the principles contained in the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States, so as to promote confidence and security and make peace prevail in the region, in accordance with the provisions contained in the Mediterranean chapter of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe;

4. Welcomes the agreement reached by the States participating in the Vienna Follow-up Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to convene a meeting on the Mediterranean at Palma de Mallorca in 1990, in order to consider ways and means of further enhancing various aspects of co-operation, including the protection and improvement of Mediterranean ecosystems, with the aim of widening the scope of their co-operation with the non-participating Mediterranean States and contributing to the strengthening of confidence and security in the region;

5. Urges all States to co-operate with the Mediterranean States in the further efforts required to reduce tension and promote peace, security and co-operation in the region in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and with the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Encourages once again efforts to intensify existing forms and to promote new forms of co-operation in various fields, particularly those aimed at reducing tension and strengthening confidence and security in the region;

7. Reaffirms the importance of intensifying and constantly promoting contacts in all fields where common interests exist in order to eliminate gradually, through co-operation, the causes preventing the faster social and economic development of the Mediterranean States, particularly the developing States of the region;

8. Welcomes any further communication to the Secretary-General from all States of proposals, declarations and recommendations on strengthening peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

9. Also welcomes the creation of the Arab Maghreb Union at Marrakesh, Morocco, on 17 February 1989, and greets this event as a factor of peace, stability, security and development in the region;

10. Invites the States members of the relevant regional organizations to lend support and to submit to the Secretary-General concrete ideas and suggestions on their potential contribution to the strengthening of peace and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

11. Renews its invitation to the Secretary-General to give due attention to the question of peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and, if requested to do so, to render advice and assistance to Mediterranean countries in their concerted efforts in promoting peace, security and co-operation in the region;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, on the basis of all replies received and notifications submitted in the implementation of the present resolution and taking into account the debate on this question during its forty-fourth session, a detailed report on the strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region".

South Atlantic zone of peace

In 1986,(7) the General Assembly had declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region between Africa and South America, a zone of peace and co-operation,

In 1988,(8) the Assembly called on States to co-operate in promoting the objectives of the declaration and to refrain from any action inconsistent with those objectives. It requested relevant organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations to assist States of the zone in implementing the declaration. The Secretary-General in October 1989 transmitted replies from nine Governments on its implementation.(9)

The Presidents of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela, at the Third Meeting of the Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Concerted Political Action (Ica, Peru, 11 and 12 October) issued a declaration(10) in which they expressed satisfaction at the imminent resumption of negotiations between Argentina and the United Kingdom, which would promote the objectives of the declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/20 by recorded vote.

Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/11 of 27 October 1986, in which it solemnly declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region situated between Africa and South America, the "Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic",

Recalling also its resolution 42/16 of 10 November 1987, in which it urged States of the region to continue their actions aiming at fulfilling the goals of the declaration, especially through the adoption and implementation of specific programmes for this purpose, and its resolution 43/23 of 14 November 1988, in which it commended initiatives by States of the zone to promote peace and regional co-operation in the South Atlantic,

Reaffirming that the questions of peace and security and those of development are interrelated and inseparable, and considering that co-operation among all States, in particular those of the region, for peace and development is essential to promote the objectives of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic,

Aware of the importance that the States of the zone attach to the preservation of the region's environment and recognizing the threat that pollution from any source poses to the marine and coastal environment, its ecological balance and its resources,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of States of the zone towards fulfilling the goals of the declaration,

1. Takes note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 43/23;

2. Calls upon all States to co-operate in the promotion of the objectives of peace and co-operation established in the declaration of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic and to refrain from any action inconsistent with those objectives, particularly actions which may create or aggravate situations of tension and potential conflict in the region;

3. Welcomes the beginning in April 1989 of the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia and looks forward to receiving Namibia very soon as a member of the community of the States of the zone;

4. Emphasizes the imperative need to preserve the environment of the region and urges all States to take the necessary measures in order to ensure its protection from environmental damage;

5. Urges all States to abstain from transferring to and disposing in the region hazardous, toxic and nuclear wastes;

6. Welcomes the assistance that the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme are extending towards the convening by the States of the zone of two seminars, to be held in the Congo in 1990 and in Uruguay in 1991, devoted to the review of the development and implementation of the legal régime established by the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the implementation of resolution 41/11 under review and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed by Member States;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic".

Protection and security of small States

On 9 August 1989, Maldives requested inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's forty-fourth session of an item on the protection and security of small States.(1) In the accompanying memorandum, Maldives referred to the attempted invasion of its territory by mercenaries in November 1988, with the aim of overthrowing the legitimate Government. It said that small island States were particularly vulnerable to such aggression and their best defence should be found in the Charter and the machinery established thereby. Small States faced a cruel choice of either putting their trust in international machinery, especially the Security Council, or diverting scarce resources to military purposes and engaging in possibly encumbering defence agreements with larger Powers. Maldives proposed a number of measures for strengthening the norms conducive to good order, including giving highest priority to finalizing and adopting the draft convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 44/51 without vote.

Protection and security of small States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to international peace and security,

Recalling the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Conscious that small States may be particularly vulnerable to external threats and acts of interference in their internal affairs and may have special needs consonant with the right to sovereignty and territorial integrity that they share with all nations,

Concerned at the danger that mercenaries can represent for small States,

Recalling with deep concern the various incidents in which groups of mercenaries have attempted to infringe upon the sovereignty and territorial integrity of small States, including the attempted invasion of Maldives in November 1988,

1. Recognizes that small States may be particularly vulnerable to external threats and acts of interference in their internal affairs;

2. Stresses in this regard the significance of the obligation of all States to respect the principle of territorial integrity and the other principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Appeals to the relevant regional and international organizations to provide assistance when requested by small States for the strengthening of their security in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter;

4. Urges the Secretary-General to pay special attention to monitoring the security situation of small States and to consider making use of the provisions of Article 99 of the Charter;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to explore ways and means, within the United Nations and in accordance with the Charter, of preserving the security of small States;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to hold consultations with the members of the Security Council and interested Governments and to submit a report to it at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Protection and security of small States".

Follow-up to International Year of Peace (1986)

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1989⁽²⁾ reported on the achievements of the International Year of Peace (IYP), proclaimed by the Assembly in 1985⁽³⁾ and observed in 1986.⁽⁴⁾ The IYP programme, designed to stimulate action in the promotion of peace, international security and co-operation, strengthen the United Nations as an instrument of peace and focus attention on the basic requirements for peace, encouraged participation at the international, national and grass-roots levels. IYP activities were coordinated by the Peace Studies Unit of the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs and financed from the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Promotion of Peace. As at 31 August 1989, the Fund totalled $22,000 in convertible currencies and $790,000 in non-convertible currencies.

In 1989, the theme for International Day of Peace, "Peace for the Future of the Earth", was highlighted in a television programme produced by the United Nations in collaboration with the International Peace Child Foundation. Among other peace activities were: an international conference (Mt. Abu, India, February 1989) at which the Mt. Abu Declaration of Principles for Co-operation was adopted;⁽⁵⁾ the second meeting of Peace Messenger cities (Warsaw, Poland, September) for the promotion of peace and fostering greater global awareness, which adopted the Warsaw Peace Appeal marking the fiftieth anniversary of the outbreak of the Second World War;⁽⁶⁾ a Conference on Visions of a Peaceful World, organized by the Polish Peace Committee in April, and two international conferences on the role of women in the promotion of peace and the preservation of the environment, hosted by the Soviet Women's Peace Committee; an International Congress on Peace in the Minds of Men, sponsored by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, June/July); and the first International Peace Olympiad organized by Greece in March. In addition, a variety of information materials were prepared and disseminated by the Peace Studies Unit, non-governmental organizations and academic institutions.

Other developments in the promotion of peace included the growing interest in the study and practice of conflict resolution and mediation, through a variety of conferences, courses and seminars; the increased emphasis on peace education in primary and secondary schools; new initiatives in the field of science and technology for peace, including the 1988 General Assembly proclamation(7) of the "International Week of Science and Peace" to be observed each November; the Conference in Search of the True Meaning of Peace (San José, Costa Rica, June),(8) which adopted the Declaration of Human Responsibilities for Peace and Sustainable Development; and increased academic research on aspects of peace-keeping, peacemaking and peace-building. The Secretary-General noted that the United Nations was an important centre and catalyst for the promotion of peace efforts and suggested that Member States and interested organizations should keep it informed of relevant peace initiatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/11 without vote.

Achievements of the International Year of Peace
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 40/3 of 24 October 1985, in the annex to which it solemnly proclaimed 1986 to be the International Year of Peace,

Recalling also its resolution 40/10 of 11 November 1985, in which it took note of the programme of the International Year of Peace,

Recalling further its resolution 42/13 of 28 October 1987, in which it requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the achievements of the International Year of Peace to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session,

Noting that the numerous efforts and activities undertaken by Member States and by non-governmental organizations have inspired a concrete and substantive dialogue among nations, peoples and persons in pursuit of the goal of true peace,

Recognizing that the objectives of the Year helped to strengthen the United Nations as an instrument of peace, stimulating action for the promotion of international peace and security, co-operation and the peaceful settlement of disputes,

Welcoming the positive change in the international political climate from confrontation to co-operation, understanding among States and the pursuit of dialogue,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report on the achievements of the International Year of Peace submitted by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 42/13;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the activities which have taken place since the Proclamation of the International Year of Peace, as documented in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Recognizes the important contribution of the International Year of Peace and supports the efforts made by the international community in carrying out activities designed to strengthen the United Nations as an instrument of peace and to focus attention on the basic elements of peace, such as social and economic development, disarmament, human rights and fundamental freedoms, preparation for life in peace, the ecological balance, protection of the environment and improvement of the quality of life;

4. Commends the initiative taken by the Secretary-General to place greater and greater emphasis each year on the observance, on the third Tuesday of September, of the International Day of Peace, established by the General Assembly in its resolution 36/67 of 30 November 1981, as a reminder that the Assembly meets every year at that time to work for peace;

5. Emphasizes the importance of education for peace, especially at the primary and secondary levels, and expresses satisfaction at its inclusion in many education and teacher-training programmes that have been launched and have received favourable evaluations;

6. Urges all those interested in the promotion and attainment of the goals of the International Year of Peace to support the programmes of the Peace Studies Unit of the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs of the Secretariat by making voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Promotion of Peace;

7. Urges Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the world community to persevere in these efforts, developing initiatives conducive to the objectives of the Year, and to join the United Nations in its noble purpose of ensuring that humanity reaches the threshold of the twenty-first century in the full enjoyment of a stable and lasting peace;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States and interested organizations to inform the Secretariat of their activities and initiatives in pursuit of those ends and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, under an item entitled "Programmes and activities to promote peace in the world", a report on the development of relevant programmes and activities.

Chapter II

Disarmament

During the year, the international community noted some positive developments towards meaningful arms limitation and disarmament, including actual reductions as a result of the 1987 Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles. By the end of 1989, following the entry into force of the Treaty the previous year, on 1 June 1988, some 2,000 of the 2,700 intermediate-range and shorter-range Soviet and United States missiles affected by the Treaty had been eliminated and the verification arrangements were reported to be working well.

The issue of nuclear testing remained prominent on the agendas of United Nations disarmament bodies, and many States continued to press for a comprehensive nuclear-test ban. In April, 41 States parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (the partial test-ban Treaty) requested the depositary States to convene a conference in 1990 to consider a proposal to amend the treaty to convert it into a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty. During the year, preparatory work was begun for the Fourth Review Conference of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, scheduled to be held in 1990.

At its 1989 session, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted 57 resolutions and two decisions on disarmament issues.

The Disarmament Commission (New York, 8-31 May), a deliberative body composed of all United Nations Member States, took on one new agenda item in 1989-consideration of the declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade.

The Conference on Disarmament (Geneva, 7 February-27 April and 13 June-31 August) was asked by the General Assembly to commence negotiations on an international convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons. Efforts to elaborate a global, comprehensive ban on chemical weapons intensified. A large number of proposals and documents dealing with many aspects of a draft convention on chemical weapons were put forward, but divergent views persisted on a number of issues.

Comprehensive approaches to disarmament

UN disarmament bodies and their activities in 1989

The United Nations continued its disarmament efforts in 1989 mainly through the General Assembly and its First Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a subsidiary organ of the Assembly) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multi-lateral negotiating forum at Geneva).

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all United Nations Member States, at its 1989 session (New York, 8-31 May) held eight plenary meetings.⁽¹⁾ It also met on 1 and 7 December to elect its officers and consider its provisional agenda for 1990.

The Commission's 1989 agenda included items on aspects of the arms race, particularly a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament; reduction of military budgets; South Africa's nuclear capability; the role of the United Nations in disarmament; naval armaments and disarmament; and conventional disarmament. A new item on the agenda concerned the declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade.

The Commission established a contact group to deal with negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament; a consultation group on the reduction of military budgets; and working groups to deal with, respectively, South Africa's nuclear capability, the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, conventional disarmament, and declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade. The Chairman of the Commission held substantive and open-ended consultations on naval armaments and disarmament. His report on the topic was incorporated into the Commission's 1989 report.⁽¹⁾ Since it was not possible to conclude consideration of any agenda item during the session, many delegations urged examination of the situation. The Chairman held consultations in an informal working group to consider proposals to improve the Commission's functioning. Proposals made on the subject included streamlining the agenda in order to concentrate on the most promising items; limiting the number of subsidiary bodies; making the duration of the session flexible; encouraging high-level and active participation; establishing procedures to allow the Commission to conclude items within a certain period; rotating the chairmanship of working bodies; and holding extensive consultations year round. The deliberations resulted in a text outlining ways and means to enhance the Commission's functioning (see the annex to resolution 44/119 C below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/119 C without vote.

Report of the Disarmament Commission
The General Assembly,

Having Considered the annual report of the Disarmament Commission,

Emphasizing again the importance of an effective follow-up to the relevant recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Taking into account the relevant sections of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Also taking into account widespread views expressed during the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 H of 11 December 1979, 35/152 F of 12 December 1980, 36/92 B of 9 December 1981, 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, 38/183 E of 20 December 1983, 39/148 R of 17 December 1984, 40/152 F of 16 December 1985, 41/86 E of 4 December 1986, 42/42 G of 30 November 1987 and 43/78 A of 7 December 1988,

1. Takes note of the annual report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Notes that the Disarmament Commission has yet to conclude its consideration of some items on its agenda, but notes also with appreciation the progress achieved on some of these;

3. Recalls the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

4. Stresses the importance for the Disarmament Commission to work on the basis of a relevant agenda of disarmament topics, thereby enabling the Commission to concentrate its efforts and thus optimize its progress on specific subjects in accordance with resolution 37/78 H;

5. Notes also that consultations have been held on the question of ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission in the field of disarmament;

6. Takes note with satisfaction of the results of those consultations on ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission, as annexed to the present resolution;

7. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations, at its 1990 substantive session, on the outstanding items on its agenda, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly as well as the results of its 1989 substantive session;

8. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1990 and to submit a substantive report, containing specific recommendations on the items included in its agenda, to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the annual report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services to that end;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

ANNEX

Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission

1. Mandate

The Disarmament Commission reaffirms its mandate contained in paragraph 118 (a) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament (hereinafter referred to as the "Final Document").

2. Decision-making method

The decision-making method described in paragraph 118 (b) of the Final Document should be maintained.

3. Agenda items

1. The Disarmament Commission could have a general agenda and a working agenda for each substantive session. The working agenda should be agreed at the Commission's organizational session.

2. For each session, the working agenda should be limited to a maximum of four substantive items for in-depth consideration.

3. From 1991, no subject should, in principle, be maintained on the working agenda for more than three consecutive years. At each session, the Commission should review, for possible reconsideration, any subject that had been suspended.

4. If no agreement can be reached on a specific agenda item, the report of the Commission should contain a joint statement or a Chairman's summary of the proceedings to reflect views or positions of different delegations, particularly in the case of those agenda items to be suspended for a period of time.

5. At its 1990 session, the Commission should make every effort to conclude all its agenda items, except the new substantive items.

4. Subsidiary bodies

1. At each annual session, the Disarmament Commission should not establish more than four subsidiary bodies for its substantive agenda items. The allocation of the agenda items to the four subsidiary bodies and the appointment of chairmen for these subsidiary bodies should be decided at the organizational session of the Commission, taking into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution.

2. The chairmanship of subsidiary bodies should, in principle, be rotated each year; however, at its organizational session, the Commission may decide to extend the term of office of any chairman in the interest of effective work and the speedy conclusion of an item.

5. Duration of the substantive session

1. The Disarmament Commission should meet for a period not exceeding four weeks for in-depth deliberations on substantive items.

2. The duration of each substantive session, in accordance with the established practice, should be flexible and could be shortened. In order to utilize efficiently the conference-servicing resources available, the Commission should decide the duration of each substantive session at its organizational session.

6. Organization of work of the session

1. Each session may have a general debate on agenda items in the plenary meetings, not exceeding three days' duration.

2. Except in the case of new items, there should be no general exchange of views in the subsidiary bodies. The general exchange of views on new items should not exceed two meetings.

3. Subsidiary bodies could begin their work in parallel with the general exchange of views in the plenary meetings.

4. No more than two official meetings should be held simultaneously. This restriction, however, would not apply to informal consultations.

5. The meetings of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies should be provided with full meeting services.

6. All the officers of the Commission should be elected at its organizational session.

7. Consultations

The Chairman of the Disarmament Commission should conduct consultations on matters relating to the work of the Commission, in particular on its working agenda, year round, especially during the meetings of the First Committee of the General Assembly.

15 December 1989 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/44/788) without vote, 16 November (meeting 391; 17-nation draft (A/C.1/44/L.8/Rev.1). orally revised: agenda item 66 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 1st Committee 3-25, 30, 39; plenary 81.

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, the 40-member multilateral negotiating body, met twice in 1989 at Geneva (7 February-27 April and 13 June-31 August).(2) During 48 formal plenary meetings and 11 informal meetings, it considered a nuclear-test ban, cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, prevention of nuclear war, chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, radiological weapons and a comprehensive programme of disarmament. (Details of those questions are discussed elsewhere in this chapter.)

The Conference re-established ad hoc committees on chemical weapons, prevention of an arms race in outer space, assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, and radiological weapons. There was no need to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament as its mandate extended up to the General Assembly's forty-fourth (1989) session.

The Conference reaffirmed its 1988 decision(3) that its membership might be increased by not more than four States and that candidates for membership should be nominated, two by the Group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire), one by the Socialist Group and one by the Western Group, so as to maintain a balance in the membership of the Conference, but no action was taken.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/119 D by recorded vote.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, 35/152 J of 12 December 1980, 36/92 F of 9 December 1981, 37/78 G of 9 December 1982, 38/183 I of 20 December 1983, 39/148 N of 17 December 1984, 40/152 M of 16 December 1985, 41/86 M of 4 December 1986, 42/42 L of 30 November 1987 and 43/78 M of 7 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should play the central role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Expressing its regret that the Conference on Disarmament was not able in 1989 either to establish ad hoc committees or to commence negotiations on the nuclear issues on its agenda,

Expressing its expectation that the Conference on Disarmament, in view of the positive current processes in some important fields of disarmament, would be in a position to reach concrete agreements on disarmament issues to which the United Nations has assigned the greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years,

Considering that it is more than ever imperative in the present circumstances to give an additional impetus to negotiations on disarmament at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in the immediate future,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Notes with satisfaction that further progress has been made in the negotiations on the elaboration of a draft convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, and urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further its work with a view to completing negotiations on such a draft convention as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work, to further its mandate more earnestly through substantive negotiations, within the framework of ad hoc committees as the most appropriate mechanism, and to adopt concrete measures on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to provide negotiating mandates to ad hoc committees on all agenda items, in keeping with the fundamental role of the Conference as identified in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

15 December 1989 Meeting 81 138-8-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/44/788) by recorded vote (119-7-10), 15 November (meeting 37); 27-nation draft (A/C.1/44/L.30); agenda item 66 (b). Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts

and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Canada, Denmark, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey.

UN role in disarmament

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1988,(4) the Disarmament Commission continued its consideration of the role of the United Nations in disarmament.(') Working Group II, established to develop recommendations and proposals on the topic, held three meetings between 10 and 26 May. The proposals, contained in 37 papers before the Group, were also considered in informal consultations. At the third meeting, the Group's Chairman submitted a new working paper containing proposals resulting from the consultations but, owing to lack of time, the Group was unable to address the new text. It agreed to annex the Chairman's working paper to the Commission's 1989 report in the belief that it might assist future deliberations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 Q without vote.

Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/151 G of 17 December 1984, 40/94 O of 12 December 1985, 41/59 O of 3 December 1986, 42/38 O of 30 November 1987 and 43/75 R of 7 December 1988,

Bearing in mind that the primary purpose of the United Nations is to maintain international peace and security,

Reaffirming its conviction that genuine and lasting peace can be created only through the effective implementation of the security system provided for in the Charter of the United Nations and the speedy and substantial reduction of arms and armed forces, by international agreement and mutual example, leading ultimately to general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Reaffirming that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has a central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament,

Recognizing the need for the United Nations, in discharging its central role and primary responsibility in the sphere of disarmament, to play a more active role in the field of disarmament in accordance with its primary purpose under the Charter to maintain international peace and security,

Taking into account the part of the report of the Disarmament Commission relating to this question, and noting the progress made in the consideration of the question at the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Bearing in mind the common desire expressed at the third special session devoted to disarmament to strengthen the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and the increased reaffirmation of faith in the United Nations as an indispensable instrument for international peace and security,

1. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its consideration of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament as a matter of priority at its next substantive session, in 1990, with a view to the elaboration of concrete recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, taking into account, inter alia, the views and suggestions of Member States as well as the aforementioned documents on the subject;

2. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to submit its report on the subject, including findings, recommendations and proposals, as appropriate, to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Review of the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament: report of the Disarmament Commission".

UN resolutions on disarmament

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in September 1989 a report with a later addendum, containing the views of four Member States on the implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament.⁽⁶⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 G by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling paragraph 115 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated, inter alia, that the Assembly has been and should remain the main deliberative organ of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and should make every effort to facilitate the implementation of disarmament measures,

Considering that the implementation of the recommendations of the General Assembly in the field of disarmament can play a significant role in the attainment of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Deems it important that all Member States show their resolve to arrive at mutually acceptable, comprehensively verifiable and effective disarmament measures, including through the implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament;

2. Invites all Member States to contribute to the elaboration of draft resolutions in the field of disarmament that will permit, in so far as possible, their adoption without a vote, in order to facilitate their appropriate implementation;

3. Also invites Member States to consider the proposals and ideas contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Invites all Member States that have not yet done so to make available to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions on ways and means to enhance the implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Decides to continue its consideration of the issue of the implementation of General Assembly resolutions in the field of disarmament at its forty-sixth session.

International co-operation for disarmament

By decision 44/432 of 15 December, the General Assembly reaffirmed the importance of strengthening international co-operation in the field of disarmament and called on all States to contribute to increasing the effectiveness of the United Nations in fulfilling its role and responsibility in that area.

Disarmament agreements

Parties and signatories

In October 1989, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on the status of multilateral disarmament agreements,(7) based on information received from the depositaries of those instruments. It listed the parties to and signatories of those agreements as at 31 July 1989.

As at 31 December 1989, the following numbers of States had become parties to the multilateral agreements covered in the Secretary-General's report (listed in chronological order, with the years in which they were initially signed or opened for signature).(8)

(Geneva) Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (1925): 122 parties
The Antarctic Treaty (1959): 39 parties
Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963): 118 parties
Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1967): 91 parties
Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco) (1967): 31 parties
Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (1968): 141 parties
Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (1971): 82 parties
Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1972): 111 parties
Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (1977): 55 parties
Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1979): 7 parties
Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (1981): 32 parties
South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) (1985): 13 parties

Compliance

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/122 without vote.

Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 453/81 A of 7 December 1988, Aware of the profound concern of all Member States for maintaining respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful, in particular, of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements on arms limitation and disarmament so that individual nations and the international community can derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements,

Stressing also that any weakening of confidence in such agreements diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further disarmament and arms limitation efforts and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing in this context, inter alia, the contribution that full compliance with existing agreements can make to progress in the negotiation of arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Believing that compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements by States parties is, therefore, a matter of interest and concern to all members of the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations might play in this regard,

Convinced that resolution of non-compliance questions that have arisen with regard to agreements on arms limitation and disarmament would contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

Welcoming the universal recognition of the importance of the question of compliance in the context of arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of the provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to consider fully the adverse implications of non-compliance with those obligations for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for further progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Also calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of non-compliance questions, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide Member States with assistance that may be necessary in this regard;

5. Welcomes efforts by States parties to develop additional co-operative measures, as appropriate, aimed at increasing confidence in compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements and reducing any possibility of misinterpretation and misunderstanding;

6. Notes in this connection the contribution that verification experiments can make in confirming and perfecting verification procedures in arms limitation and disarmament agreements under negotiation, thereby providing an opportunity, from the time that such agreements enter into force, for enhanced confidence in the effectiveness of verification procedures as a basis for determining compliance;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements".

Second Disarmament Decade (1980s)

In its review and appraisal of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, declared by the General Assembly in 1980,(9) the Assembly, in 1985, had requested the Secretary-General to report annually on the Declaration's implementation.(10)

In an August 1989 report with later addendum, the Secretary-General provided the views and suggestions of five Governments on implementing the Declaration.(11)

Declaration of the 1990s

as the Third Disarmament Decade

The General Assembly in 1988 declared the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade,(12) requesting the Secretary-General to seek views on elements for a declaration and to report to the Disarmament Commission in 1989.

In a May report, with later addenda, the Secretary-General transmitted the views of 11 Member States (one on behalf of the 12 member States of the European Community (EC)) and one specialized agency on the future Declaration.(13)

In May,(1) Working Group IV of the Disarmament Commission stated that it had not completed its work on the Declaration and invited the Assembly to consider further action on the matter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/119 H without vote.

Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, in which it declared the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade,

Recalling also its resolution 34/75 of 11 December 1979, in which it directed the Disarmament Commission to prepare elements of a draft resolution entitled "Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade" for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session for consideration and adoption,

Bearing in mind that the Second Disarmament Decade declared by its resolution 35/46 is coming to an end,

Recalling further its resolution 43/78 L of 7 December 1988, in which it decided to declare the decade of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the United Nations in the attainment of disarmament,

Noting the progress in the disarmament talks between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and its positive impact on the attainment of global peace and security,

Desirous of maintaining the current momentum in the disarmament process,

Convinced that a third disarmament decade will accelerate the disarmament process,

1. Takes note of the work of the Disarmament Commission at its 1989 session on the declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade;

2. Directs the Disarmament Commission, at its 1990 substantive session, to finalize the preparation of elements of a draft resolution to be entitled "Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade" and to submit them to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session for consideration and adoption;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Disarmament Commission in implementing the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade".

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

In 1989, limited progress was made in the Conference on Disarmament towards a comprehensive programme of disarmament, first envisaged in the Final Document of the General Assembly's first special session on disarmament in 1978(14) and considered annually since 1980.

The Conference continued its consideration of a draft programme from 10 to 14 April and from 7 to 11 August 1989. Its Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament held 23 formal meetings between 7 February and 24 August. In addition, it organized contact groups and informal consultations to deal with various sections of the draft in order to concentrate on the unresolved issues, with a view to reaching consensus on them. In its report to the Conference,(2) the Ad Hoc Committee stated that some progress had been made towards harmonizing positions and narrowing areas of disagreement, but that it had not been possible to reconcile differences on a number of issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/119 A by recorded vote.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it declared the decade of the 1970s as a Disarmament Decade and requested, inter alia, the then Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to work out "a comprehensive programme, dealing with all aspects of the problem of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under effective international control, which would provide the Conference with a guideline to chart the course of its further work and its negotiations",

Recalling also its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, by which it adopted the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, which, inter alia, called for the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament with the utmost urgency,

Recalling further its resolution 43/78 K of 7 December 1988, in which it noted the agreement of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament of the Conference on Disarmament to "resume its work at the outset of the 1989 session of the Conference with the firm intention of completing the elaboration of the programme for its submission to the General Assembly, at the latest at its forty-fourth session",

Having examined the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament concerning its work during the 1989 session of the Conference on Disarmament, which is an integral part of the report of the Conference,

Recognizing the efforts of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament and the substantial progress achieved thus far,

Conscious of the need to continue the work on the comprehensive programme of disarmament, building on the texts already agreed to, with a view to resolving the outstanding issues and thus concluding negotiations on it,

Recalling its resolution 43/78 L of 7 December 1988, in which it declared the decade of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade,

Considering that the conclusion of the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament would constitute an important contribution to the success of the Third Disarmament Decade and to the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament,

1. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to consider, at the beginning of its 1991 session, the resumption of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament with the aim of resolving the outstanding issues in order to conclude the elaboration of the programme;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Comprehensive programme of disarmament".

Confidence-building measures

In 1989, agreements of a confidence-building nature were signed between the United States and the USSR.

An agreement between the two parties, signed in Moscow on 12 June, dealt with the prevention of dangerous military activities.⁽¹⁵⁾ It provided for direct communications between the military units of the two sides when they were in the field, in order to prevent any possible misunderstandings, and also covered a number of activities or situations that could give rise to incidents during peacetime. At meetings held in September at Jackson Hole (Wyoming, United States), the United States and the USSR signed an agreement on advance notification of strategic exercises and another on verification and stability measures.⁽¹⁶⁾

Naval armaments and disarmament

In 1989, the Disarmament Commission continued to consider naval armaments and disarmament in a consultation group, which held seven meetings between 10 and 26 May. The group subscribed to the general approach of retaining and consolidating elements and principles that had been accepted earlier and incorporated into the Chairman's paper in 1988.⁽¹⁷⁾

Four working papers were submitted on the item: one by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR, on confidence-building measures at sea and limitation and reduction of naval armaments;⁽¹⁸⁾ two by Sweden, concerning proposals on a multilateral agreement for the prevention of incidents at sea⁽¹⁹⁾ and on a protocol on sea mines;⁽²⁰⁾ and one by Finland, Indonesia and Sweden, on the general topic of naval armaments and disarmament.”)

The Chairman of the Commission prepared a paper containing recommendations that had been agreed on previously, as well as a number of new proposals.⁽²²⁾ However, it was not possible to reach agreement on all elements of the paper and the Group recommended that the topic should be considered again in 1990. The Group's report was incorporated into the Commission's report to the General Assembly.⁽¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 M by recorded vote.

Naval armaments and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 38/188 G of 20 December 1983, in which it requested the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, to carry out a comprehensive study on the naval arms race,

Recalling also its resolution 40/94 F of 12 December 1985, in which it requested the Disarmament Commission to consider the issues contained in the study entitled The Naval Arms Race, both its substantive content and its conclusions, taking into account all other relevant present and future proposals, with a view to facilitating the identification of possible measures in the field of naval arms reductions and disarmament, pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, as well as confidence-building measures in this field,

Recalling further its resolution 43/75 L of 7 December 1988, in which it requested the Disarmament Commission to continue, at its 1989 session, the substantive consideration of the question and to report on its deliberations and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session,

Having examined the report of the Chairman of the Disarmament Commission on the substantive consideration of the question of the naval arms race and disarmament during the 1989 session of the Commission, which met with the approval of all delegations participating in the substantive consultations and which, in their view, could form the basis of further deliberations on the subject,

1. Takes notes with satisfaction of the report of the Chairman of the Disarmament Commission on the substantive consideration of the question of the naval arms race and disarmament;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission to inscribe on the agenda for its 1990 session the item entitled “Naval armaments and disarmament”;

3. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to continue, at its forthcoming session in 1990, the substantive consideration of the question and to report on its deliberations and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled “Naval armaments and disarmament”.

Defensive security concepts and policies

In 1989, an area of growing interest to European States in particular was defensive security concepts and policies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 P by recorded vote.

Defensive security concepts and policies

The General Assembly,

Recalling the principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the obligation to maintain international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General transmitting the study on the relationship between disarmament and international security and the study undertaken by the Group of Governmental Experts to Carry Out a Comprehensive Study of Concepts of Security submitted to the General Assembly in 1981 and 1985, respectively,

Recognizing that since then a number of important developments have taken place in the areas of disarmament and security concepts and that new opportunities have emerged for arms limitation and disarmament, for ending regional conflicts and for developing among States constructive and co-operative relations,

Noting the ongoing international dialogue on matters of security, including the renewed search for common security as well as for common denominators for the security requirements in different regions,

Convinced that in the nuclear age national policies of restraint and co-operative efforts are essential to eliminate eventually the risk of war and global destruction,

Stressing that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Believing that security concepts and policies should be aimed at removing the danger of war and securing peace at progressively lower levels of armaments and armed forces, and welcoming activities by States to implement this goal by negotiated disarmament measures,

Bearing in mind the specific political and security requirements in different regions,

1. Considers the development of an international dialogue on defensive security concepts and policies to be of great importance for promoting the process of achieving disarmament and strengthening international security;

2. Invites Member States to initiate or intensify the dialogue on defensive security concepts and policies at the bilateral, regional or multilateral level and to keep the General Assembly informed about the progress achieved;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled "Defensive security concepts and policies".

Nuclear disarmament

Nuclear arms limitation and disarmament

Disarmament Commission consideration. In 1989, the Disarmament Commission considered various aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, nuclear disarmament, the prevention of nuclear war and conventional disarmament by establishing a contact group within the framework of the Committee of the Whole.(1) The group held 12 meetings between 10 and 26 May, basing its work on the compilation of proposals for recommendations contained in the report of the Commission to the General Assembly at its fifteenth (1988) special session.(2) It also had before it a working paper on negotiations on nuclear disarmament submitted by Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and the USSR.(3) While the group made some progress towards narrowing areas of disagreement on a basic recommendation on nuclear disarmament and another one on conventional disarmament, it was unable to reach a consensus on a complete set of recommendations. Consequently, it recommended that the Commission should continue its efforts with a view to reaching agreement on a complete set of recommendations.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament from 20 February to 3 March and from 19 to 30 June 1989.(4) As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the Group of 21 to establish an ad hoc committee to consider proposals on the subject.(5)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 D without vote.

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/59 F of 3 December 1986, 42/38 H of 30 November 1987 and 43/75 E of 7 December 1988,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war as expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that the most acute and urgent task of the present day is to remove the threat of a world war-a nuclear war,

Recalling and reaffirming the statements and provisions on nuclear disarmament set forth in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and, in particular, provisions that "effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority", contained in paragraph 20, and that "in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility", contained in paragraph 48,

Also recalling that paragraph 55 of the same document states that "Real progress in the field of nuclear disarmament could create an atmosphere conducive to progress in conventional disarmament on a world-wide basis",

Bearing in mind that the ultimate goal of nuclear disarmament is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America agreed in their joint statement issued at Geneva on 21 November 1985 that "a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought" and the common desire they expressed in the same statement calling for early progress in areas where there is common ground, including the principle of a 50 per cent reduction in the nuclear arms of the Soviet Union and the United States appropriately applied,

Noting also that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have conducted intensive negotiations on various issues of disarmament,

Noting further that the Conference on Disarmament has not played its due role in the field of nuclear disarmament,

Believing that the qualitative aspect of the arms race needs to be addressed along with its quantitative aspect,

Bearing in mind that the Governments and peoples of various countries expect that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America will reach agreement on halting the nuclear-arms race and further reducing nuclear weapons,

1. Welcomes the continued implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles;

2. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, further to discharge their special responsibility for nuclear disarmament, to take the lead in halting the nuclear-arms race and to accelerate negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement on the drastic reduction of their nuclear arsenals;

3. Reiterates its belief that bilateral and multilateral efforts for nuclear disarmament should complement and facilitate each other;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

USSR-United States nuclear-arms negotiations

Following the signing in 1987(6) and the entry into force in 1988(7) of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, the two parties sought to negotiate a 50 per cent reduction in their strategic arms. In a joint statement of 23 September 1989, they indicated that they had removed a number of obstacles to the conclusion of an agreement on the subject.(8) In December, Presidents George Bush of the United States and Mikhail S. Gorbachev of the USSR agreed to accelerate the strategic arms reduction negotiations in order to resolve all substantive issues and to conclude a treaty before the end of 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 B by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at their meeting at Geneva in November 1985 the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America committed themselves to the objective of working out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and terminating it on Earth,

Noting the progress reflected in the joint statement issued by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America following their meetings in Washington and Wyoming from 21 to 23 September 1989,

Noting that, since their meetings in Moscow from 29 May to 1 June 1988, bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations have been intensified,

Noting further the importance of the verification procedures contained in the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles as an example of the high standards of verification that are now achievable in arms control agreements, both bilateral and multilateral,

Believing that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility and with full account taken of the security interests of all States, it is possible to achieve far-reaching and effectively verifiable agreements,

Firmly convinced that early agreement in these negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments, would be of crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Convinced that the international community should encourage the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America in their endeavours, taking into account both the importance and the complexity of their negotiations,

1. Welcomes the fact that the provisions of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles are being implemented by the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

2. Calls upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to spare no effort in seeking, in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament, the attainment of all the agreed objectives in the negotiations, that is, the resolution of a complex of questions concerning space and strategic nuclear arms with all these questions considered and resolved in their inter-relationship;

3. Invites the two Governments concerned to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their negotiations, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support for the bilateral negotiations and their successful conclusion.

On the same day, also on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 K by recorded vote.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 A of 7 December 1988,

Recalling also the Declaration and the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a

Stressing that general rapprochement between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America contributes to the relaxation of international tensions and the creation of basic prerequisites for establishing lasting peace,

Encouraged by the positive developments in the field of disarmament brought about by the implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles and by recent agreements between the two sides,

Concerned, however, that the world is still threatened by the massive nuclear arsenals, which are being further refined and added to, and that the only hope for nuclear disarmament lies in discarding the balance of fear and in the nuclear-weapon Powers' embracing the objective of the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

Stressing also the importance of the strengthening of international security through disarmament and the halting of the qualitative and quantitative escalation of the arms race,

Aware of the fact that both the nuclear and the conventional disarmament processes cannot be carried out without a contribution by all States and especially by the major military Powers and their alliances, which have the greatest responsibility in that regard,

Mindful that, while it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to speed up the emerging process and to channel it in a direction that would benefit all, lasting peace and security can only be achieved by pooling the efforts of the international community and with all countries participating and contributing on the basis of equality,

Stressing further that general and complete disarmament under effective international control is by its very nature unattainable unless all countries join in its implementation,

Emphasizing that, since nuclear war threatens the very right to live, the prevention of nuclear war remains the principal task of our times,

Affirming that bilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament should facilitate and complement each other and that progress at the bilateral level should not be used to postpone or impede action at the multilateral level,

1. Welcomes the positive developments in the bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on disarmament issues, as well as the commencement of the implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles;

2. Calls upon the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to exert every effort to achieve the goal they set themselves of a treaty on a 50 per cent reduction in strategic offensive arms as part of the process leading to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons;

3. Also calls upon the two Governments to intensify their efforts to achieve agreements in other areas, in particular the issue of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban as a matter of urgency;

4. Further calls upon the two Governments to reach agreement to ensure that outer space is kept free of all weapons;

5. Invites the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep the General Assembly and the Conference on Disarmament duly informed of progress made in their negotiations.

Nuclear-weapons freeze

Since 182, the General Assembly annually called for a freeze on nuclear weapons, but no action was taken by the nuclear-weapon States. In 1989, the Assembly again considered the issue of a nuclear-arms freeze.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/117 D by recorded vote.

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Convinced that, in this nuclear age, lasting world peace can be based only on the attainment of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the new trends that have led to an improvement in the international security environment,

Convinced also of the urgency further to pursue negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of existing nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute an effective step to prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations take place, and that at the same time it would provide a favourable environment for the conduct of negotiations to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that the undertakings derived from the freeze can be effectively verified,

Welcoming the announcement that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will cease production of highly enriched uranium for nuclear weapons purposes by the end of 1989 and had begun the process of shutting down its reactors producing weapons-grade plutonium,

Noting with deep concern that all nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any collective action in response to the call made in the relevant resolutions on the question of a nuclear-arms freeze,

1. Urges once more both the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to reach agreement on an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any further production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree, through a joint declaration, to a comprehensive nuclear-arms freeze, whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

- (i) A comprehensive test ban on nuclear weapons and on their delivery vehicles;
- (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

(b) It would be subject to appropriate and effective measures and procedures of verification;

3. Requests the nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report, or separate reports, to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its forty-fifth session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Nuclear-arms freeze".

Abstaining: China, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Iceland, Spain.

Prohibition of nuclear weapons

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 H by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, 36/97 G of 9 December 1981, 37/99 E of 13 December 1982, 38/188 E of 20 December 1983, 39/151 H of 17 December 1984, 40/94 G of 12 December 1985, 41/59 L of 3 December 1986, 42/38 L of 30 November 1987 and 43/75 K of 7 December 1988, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified Cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1989 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the programme of work of the Conference for both parts of its 1989 session contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering also that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

Prevention of nuclear war

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the topic of the prevention of nuclear war from 6 to 10 March and from 10 to 14 July 1989.(4) As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the Group of 21 for an ad hoc committee to consider all relevant proposals, including appropriate and practical measures for preventing nuclear war.(9)

Other action. In 1989, the USSR and the United States signed a new accord on the avoidance of accidental war-the Agreement on the Prevention of Dangerous Military Activities.(10) It was aimed at reducing the risk of the outbreak of war, including nuclear war, in particular as a result of misinterpretation, miscalculation or accident.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/119 B by recorded vote.

Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in accordance with paragraph 20 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority and that this commitment was reaffirmed by the Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling also that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document, it is stated that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States, should consider as soon as possible various proposals designed to secure the avoidance of the use of nuclear weapons, the prevention of nuclear war and related objectives, where possible through international agreement, and thereby ensure that the survival of mankind is not endangered,

Recalling further that at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, it was generally recognized that the prevention of nuclear war was of utmost concern and that specific efforts, bilateral, regional or multilateral, should be vigorously pursued and measures should be strengthened to reduce and ultimately eliminate the risk of nuclear war,

Reaffirming that the nuclear-weapon States have the primary responsibility for nuclear disarmament and for undertaking measures aimed at preventing the outbreak of nuclear war, and that in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility,

Stressing that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Welcoming the entry into force and implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles as a first valuable step towards the reduction of nuclear weapons, as well as measures taken by the two States to reduce the risk of nuclear war, including the establishment and operation of nuclear risk reduction centres,

Expressing the hope that further measures will be undertaken to reduce and ultimately eliminate the risk of nuclear war,

Taking note of ideas directed to that end, including the suggestion to consider the establishment of a multilateral nuclear alert centre to reduce the risk of fatal misinterpretation of unintentional nuclear launchings,

Noting that, in its final document on international security and disarmament,² the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, stressed the need for the conclusion of an international agreement prohibiting all use of nuclear weapons,

Welcoming recent progress in the field of disarmament, including the beginning at Vienna of new negotiations on conventional armed forces and on confidence- and security-building measures in Europe,

Emphasizing that, for the sake of international peace and security, military concepts and doctrines must be of a strictly defensive character,

1. Considers that the solemn declarations by two nuclear-weapon States made or reiterated at the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, concerning their respective obligations not to be the first to use nuclear weapons, offer an important avenue to decrease the danger of nuclear war;

2. Expresses the hope that those nuclear-weapon States that have not yet done so will consider making similar declarations with respect to not being the first to use nuclear weapons;

3. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on the item in its agenda concerning prevention of nuclear war and to consider, inter alia, the elaboration of an international instrument of a legally binding character laying down the obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war".

The Assembly adopted resolution 44/119 E on 15 December, also on the recommendation of the First Committee and by recorded vote.

Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Believing that all nations have a vital interest in negotiations on nuclear disarmament because the existence of nuclear weapons jeopardizes the vital security interests of both nuclear and non-nuclear-weapon States alike,

Recalling its resolutions 43/78 E and F of 7 December 1988,

Recalling also that the international community, through the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, has agreed that the nuclear-arms race, far from contributing to the strengthening of the security of all States, increases the danger of the outbreak of a nuclear war,

Welcoming the reaffirmation by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, in its final document on international security and disarmament,^a that nuclear disarmament is a process in which all nations should participate, and its view that the ongoing process of disarmament could be accelerated and its coverage widened through the common endeavour of the entire international community,

Taking into account that all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those with the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility for the fulfilment of the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament,

Convinced that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority and of vital interest to all people of the world,

Encouraged by the continued recognition by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Aware of the fact that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are inextricably linked with the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, and that consequently they should be viewed in their interrelationship as essential elements of a process of general and complete disarmament,

Convinced that all avenues should be explored to ensure that progress is made in these two vital fields, and also convinced of the imperative need to take constructive multilateral action to complement and reinforce the bilateral process under way,

1. Reaffirms that multilateral and bilateral negotiations on nuclear questions should complement and facilitate each other;

2. Believes that efforts should be intensified in order to initiate multilateral negotiations in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

3. Reiterates that, in view of the importance of the matter, it is equally necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish ad hoc committees at the beginning of its 1990 session on both the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war with adequate mandates in order to allow a structured and practical analysis of how the Conference on Disarmament can best contribute to progress on these two urgent matters;

5. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on its consideration of those subjects;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the items entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament" and "Prevention of nuclear war".

On the same date, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/117 C by recorded vote.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the existence and use of nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to the survival of mankind,

Conscious that the ongoing nuclear-arms race increases the danger of the use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced also that nuclear disarmament is the only ultimate guarantee against the use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that a multilateral agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should strengthen international security and help to create the climate for negotiations leading to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1989 session, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 43/76 E of 7 December 1988,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to this Convention,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Convinced that this Convention would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The States Parties to this Convention solemnly undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances.

Article 2

This Convention shall be of unlimited duration.

Article 3

1. This Convention shall be open to all States for signature. Any State that does not sign the Convention before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may accede to it at any time.

2. This Convention shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention shall enter into force on the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-five Governments, including the Governments of the live nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of the Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of the entry into force of this Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. This Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send duly certified copies thereof to the Government of the signatory and acceding States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at _____ on the _____ day of _____ one thousand nine hundred and _____

Climatic effects of nuclear war

As requested by the General Assembly in 1988,(11) the Secretary-General submitted in September 1989 a report, with later addenda,(12) containing the views of 10 Member States on a 1988 expert study on the climatic effects of nuclear war, including nuclear winter.(13)

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

In 1989, it was reported that the USSR and United States negotiators had agreed, in bilateral talks, on the text for the required protocol to the 1976 Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes (peaceful nuclear explosions Treaty), and were moving along well with the protocol to the 1974 Treaty on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests (threshold test-ban Treaty). Because of the complementary nature of the two Treaties, it was generally understood that the two protocols would be governmentally considered as a package. According to a joint statement issued by the two parties in September, they had reached, ad referendum, agreement on the proposed protocol to the peaceful nuclear explosions Treaty and had arrived at certain understandings with regard to the protocol for the threshold test-ban Treaty.⁽⁸⁾ The 1989 negotiations concluded in mid-December with the text of the protocol to the threshold test-ban Treaty yet to be finalized and considerable documentation involved in the two protocols still requiring official approval.

Notes by the Secretary-General. By a January note with later addenda,⁽¹⁴⁾ prepared pursuant to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General provided data on nuclear explosions received from three Member States (Australia, New Zealand, USSR) during the period January 1987 to October 1989. In October,⁽¹⁶⁾ he submitted the annual register for 1989, compiled on the basis of the information provided. It concerned various periods from January 1987 to September 1989 and consolidated information received from the same three States.

Conference on Disarmament consideration. The Conference on Disarmament considered the question of a nuclear-test ban from 20 February to 3 March and from 19 to 30 June 1989.⁽⁴⁾ For the sixth successive year, it was unable to reach consensus on a mandate for a subsidiary body to deal with the question of a nuclear-test ban.

New documents were submitted by the German Democratic Republic⁽¹⁷⁾ and Norway⁽¹⁸⁾ on verification.

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held two sessions at Geneva in 1989 (twenty-seventh session, 6-17 March;⁽¹⁹⁾ twenty-eighth session, 24 July-4 August⁽²⁰⁾) During those sessions the Ad Hoc Group adopted its fifth report to the Conference,⁽²¹⁾ describing initial concepts for a modern international seismic-data exchange system based on the expeditious exchange of wave-form (Level II) and parameter (Level I) data and the processing of such data at international data centres. The Group also continued its discussion of plans for conducting its second technical test (GSETT-2) and decided that phase 2 of GSETT-2 would start in January 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/105 by recorded vote.

Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests, which has been examined for more than thirty years and on which the General Assembly has adopted more than fifty resolutions, is a basic objective of the United Nations in the sphere of disarmament, to the attainment of which it has repeatedly assigned the highest priority,

Stressing that on eight different occasions it has condemned such tests in the strongest terms and that, since 1974, it has stated its conviction that the continuance of nuclear-weapon testing will intensify the arms race, thus increasing the danger of nuclear war,

Recalling that the Secretary-General, addressing a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 12 December 1984, after appealing for a renewed effort towards a comprehensive test-ban treaty, emphasized that no single multilateral agreement could have a greater effect on limiting the further refinement of nuclear weapons and that a comprehensive test-ban treaty is the litmus test of the real willingness to pursue nuclear disarmament,

Taking into account that the three nuclear-weapon States that act as depositaries of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water undertook in article I of that Treaty to conclude a treaty resulting in the permanent banning of all nuclear-test explosions, including all those explosions underground, and that such an undertaking was reiterated in 1968 in the preamble to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, article VI of which further embodies their solemn and legally binding commitment to take effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear-arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Noting that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, in its Final Declaration, adopted on 21 September 1985, called upon the nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty to resume trilateral negotiations in 1985 and upon all the nuclear-weapon States to participate in the urgent negotiation and conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, as a matter of the highest priority, in the Conference on Disarmament,

Recalling the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a which underlined that the immediate suspension of and comprehensive ban on nuclear tests remained one of the highest priorities of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling also that the leaders of the States associated with the Six-Nation Initiative on peace and disarmament affirmed in the Stockholm Declaration, adopted on 21 January 1988, that "Any agreement that leaves room for continued testing would not be acceptable",

Taking note with satisfaction of the continuing progress made in the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on the seismic verification of a comprehensive test ban,

Expressing its concern that, after six years of efforts, the Conference on Disarmament has not yet succeeded in establishing an ad hoc committee on item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban",

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear-weapon testing continues unabated, against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;

3. Reaffirms also its conviction that such a treaty would constitute a contribution of the utmost importance to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race;

4. Urges once more all nuclear-weapon States, in particular the three depositary Powers of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapons Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to expedite negotiations to this end;

5. Appeals to all States members of the Conference on Disarmament to promote the establishment by the Conference at the beginning of its 1990 session of an ad hoc committee with the objective of carrying out the multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions;

6. Recommends to the Conference on Disarmament that such an ad hoc committee should comprise two working groups dealing, respectively, with the following interrelated questions: contents and scope of the treaty, and compliance and verification;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions".

Also on 15 December and on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/107 by recorded vote.

Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Convinced that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Convinced also of the consequent urgent need for an end to the nuclear-arms race and the immediate and verifiable reduction and ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that an end to nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time is an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and their further proliferation and to contribute, along with other concurrent efforts to reduce nuclear arms, to the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing the recent progress made in the negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as reflected in their joint statement of 23 September 1989, towards improved verification arrangements and the ratification of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests, signed on 3 July 1974, and the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, signed on 28 May 1976, and urging both countries to complete that process,

Welcoming the ongoing implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles and the agreement in principle on and further progress made towards an agreement for 50 per cent reductions in their strategic nuclear forces,

Recalling the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a

Recalling also the proposals by the leaders of the Six-Nation Initiative to promote an end to nuclear testing,

Convinced that the most effective way to achieve the discontinuance of all nuclear tests by all States in all environments for all time is through the conclusion, at an early date, of a verifiable, comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty that will attract the adherence of all States,

Reaffirming the particular responsibilities of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,

Taking note of the work being undertaken within the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events in preparation for the next phase of the technical test, to take place in 1990, concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of fundamental importance;

2. Urges, therefore, that the following actions be taken in order that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty may be concluded at an early date:

(a) The Conference on Disarmament should intensify its consideration of item 1 of its agenda, entitled "Nuclear-test ban", and initiate substantive work on all aspects of a nuclear-test-ban treaty at the beginning of its 1990 session;

(b) States members of the Conference on Disarmament, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, and all other States should co-operate in order to facilitate and promote such work;

(c) The nuclear-weapon States, especially those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, should agree promptly to appropriate verifiable and militarily significant interim measures, with a view to realizing a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(d) Those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so should adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

3. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To take immediate steps for the establishment, with the widest possible participation, of an international seismic monitoring network with a view to the further development of its potential to monitor and verify compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(b) To take into account, in this context, the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, including work on the routine exchange and use of wave-form data, and other relevant initiatives or experiments by individual States and groups of States;

(c) To encourage the widest possible participation by States in the technical test that will take place in 1990 concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data;

(d) To initiate detailed investigation of other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on progress made;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

Amendment conference of States parties to the partial test-ban Treaty

By early April 1989,(22) more than one third of the parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (also known as the partial test-ban Treaty)(23) had formally requested the convening of a conference to consider amendments to the Treaty, in accordance with the provisions of article II of the Treaty.(24) The amendments would convert the Treaty into a comprehensive test-ban treaty, one that included underground nuclear tests in addition to those already prohibited.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/106 by recorded vote.

Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water

The General Assembly,

Reiterating its conviction that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is the highest-priority step towards nuclear disarmament,

Recalling its resolution 1910(XVIII) of 27 November 1963, in which it noted with approval the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed on 5 August 1963, and requested the Conference of the Eighteen-Nation Committee on Disarmament" to continue with a sense of urgency its negotiations to achieve the objectives set forth in the preamble to the Treaty,

Convinced that, pending the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, the nuclear-weapon States should suspend all nuclear-test explosions through an agreed moratorium or unilateral moratoria,

Noting that article II of the Treaty provides a procedure for convening a conference of the parties to the Treaty to consider amendments to the Treaty,

Noting also that, in its resolution 42/26 B of 30 November 1987, it recommended that the non-nuclear-weapon States parties to the Treaty formally submit an amendment proposal to the Depositary Governments with a view to convening a conference at the earliest possible date to consider amendments to the Treaty that would convert it into a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty and that, by its resolution 43/63 B of 7 December 1988, it welcomed the submission of such an amendment proposal, ²²The Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Noting further that the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, supported the initiative to convene, as soon as possible in 1990, an amendment conference to convert the Treaty into a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty,”

Considering that more than one third of the parties have requested the convening of a conference to consider such an amendment and that Depositary Governments have announced their intention to comply with their obligations under the Treaty,

Convinced that such a conference will serve to strengthen the Treaty,

1. Recommends that a preparatory committee, open to all parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, should be established to make arrangements for the amendment conference and that the preparatory committee should meet at United Nations Headquarters from 29 May to 1 June 1990, followed by a one-week session of the conference from 4 to 8 June 1990 and a second substantive session from 7 to 18 January 1991;

2. Recommends also that the costs of the amendment conference and its preparatory committee should be shared among the States parties to the Treaty, on the basis of the present scale of assessments of the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and provide such services, including summary records, as may be required for the amendment conference and its preparation;

4. Invites the amendment conference to transmit to the General Assembly the documents it deems appropriate to keep the Assembly duly informed of its ongoing work;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled “Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water”.

France indicated that it did not participate in the vote because it was not a party to the 1963 Treaty. It wished that action to be reflected in the record.

In the Committee, before adopting the text as a whole, separate recorded votes were taken: the phrase “at United Nations Headquarters” in paragraph 1 was retained by 105 to 1, with 22 abstentions, and that paragraph as a whole was approved by 106 to 10, with 13 abstentions. Paragraph 2 was approved by 105 to 9, with 14 abstentions, as was the third preambular paragraph, by 116 to 6, with 10 abstentions.

Strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States

The Conference on Disarmament considered, from 3 to 7 April and from 31 July to 4 August 1989, effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons (also known as negative security assurances).(4) On 7 February,(25) it had re-established an ad hoc committee to negotiate an agreement on such arrangements.

In its conclusions and recommendations,(26) the Ad Hoc Committee stated that agreement on a common formula of assurance could not be reached due to specific difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests. It was generally agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee should be re-established in 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/110 by recorded vote.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned at the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Considering that, until complete nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the general desire to conclude effective international measures to that end at an early date,

Taking note of the unilateral declarations on the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, made by all nuclear-weapon States,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recognizing that effective measures of such security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States would constitute an important contribution to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons,

Aware of the in-depth negotiations on this subject in the Conference on Disarmament during the past ten years,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament,^a submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the annual report of the Conference on its 1989 session,

Welcoming the unanimous support in the Conference on Disarmament for continuing the search for a common approach to the substance of negative security assurances, which could be included in a legally binding instrument,

Recognizing the need for a fresh look at the issue, in particular by the nuclear-weapon States, in order to overcome the difficulties encountered at the negotiations in previous years,

Taking note of the proposals on this subject submitted to the Conference on Disarmament,

1. Reaffirm the urgent need, pending the achievement of complete nuclear disarmament, to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Recommends that the Conference on Disarmament pursue intensive negotiations in its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons at the beginning of its 1990 session, with a view to reaching such an agreement, taking into account the widespread support in the Conference for conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

3. Appeals to all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate willingness and to exercise the flexibility necessary to reach agreement on a common approach to, including the possibility of a common formula in, an international instrument or instruments of a legally binding character to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements on the strengthening of the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Deeply concerned at the continuing escalation of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Also convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned also about the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing also that effective measures to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can constitute a positive contribution to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Recalling its resolutions 3261 G (XXIX) of 9 December 1974 and 31/189 C. of 21 December 1976,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session,

Recalling also its resolutions 33/72 B of 14 December 1978, 34/85 of 11 December 1979, 35/155 of 12 December 1980, 36/95 of 9 December 1981, 37/81 of 9 December 1982, 38/68 of 15 December 1983, 39/58 of 12 December 1984, 40/86 of 12 December 1985, 41/52 of 3 December 1986, 42/32 of 30 November 1987 and 43/69 of 7 December 1988,

Recalling further paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament^a urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^b as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communique of the Eighteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Riyadh from 13 to 16 March 1989, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to work urgently towards an agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,^c

Noting also the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Nuclear non-proliferation

Nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace

In 1989, the international community again discussed the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace in various regions of the world. Debate in the General Assembly focused primarily on the desirability and feasibility of setting up nuclear-weapon-free zones in Africa, the Middle East and South Asia, with the two existing nuclear-free zones, Latin America and the South Pacific, generally acknowledged as valuable measures of regional arms control. As to the establishment of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, despite a 1988 Assembly decision to convene the Conference on the Indian Ocean in 1990,(27) the Assembly in 1989 called for its postponement until 1991 (resolution 44/120).

Africa

Since 1964, when the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa was adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU),(28) the General Assembly had annually called for its implementation. In 1989, the Assembly again adopted two resolutions—one on the implementation of the Declaration and the other on the nuclear capability of South Africa.

Disarmament Commission consideration. The Disarmament Commission continued consideration in 1989 of South Africa's nuclear capability,(1) in response to a 1988 General Assembly request.(29) The Commission established Working Group I, which, at 13 meetings between 10 and 26 May, based its work on the working paper contained in the report of the Commission to the General Assembly at the third special session devoted to disarmament.(2) Nigeria submitted a new working paper in 1989.(30)

Although the Group had reached agreement on a number of points, it was not possible to reach consensus on the remaining text, and it recommended that the Commission continue consideration of the topic in 1990.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October report on the nuclear capability of South Africa,(31) the Secretary-General stated that he had continued to follow nuclear developments in that country. He had been in contact with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and OAU. Annexed to the report was a resolution on South Africa's nuclear capabilities adopted on 29 September 1989 by the IAEA General Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/113 A by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling its resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 31/69 of 10 December 1976, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981, 37/74 A of 9 December 1982, 38/181 A of 20 December 1983, 39/61 A of 12 December 1984, 40/89 A of 12 December 1985, 41/55 A of 3 December 1986, 42/34 A of 30 November 1987 and 43/71 A of 7 December 1988, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.1 on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, as well as of the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Noting the actions taken by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields,

Expressing regret that, despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission, although it considered the question during its substantive session in 1989, failed once again to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

1. Strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

3. Expresses once again its grave alarm at South Africa's possession and continued development of nuclear-weapon capability;

4. Condemns South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime that enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist régime that may enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

6. Demands once again that the racist régime of South Africa refrain from manufacturing, testing, deploying, transporting, storing, using or threatening to use nuclear weapons;

7. Appeals to all States that have the means to do so to monitor South Africa's research on and development and production of nuclear weapons and to publicize any information in that regard;

8. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the modalities and elements for the preparation and implementation of the relevant convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

10. decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

On the same date, on the First Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/113 B, also by recorded vote.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979, 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, 36/86 A of 9 December 1981, 37/74 B of 9 December 1982, 38/181 B of 20 December 1983, 39/61 B of 12 December 1984, 40/89 B of 12 December 1985, 41/55 B of 3 December 1986, 42/34 B of 30 November 1987 and 43/71 B of 7 December 1988,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in paragraph 12 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it noted that the massive accumulation of armaments and the acquisition of armaments technology by racist régimes, as well as their possible acquisition of nuclear weapons, present a challenging and increasingly dangerous obstacle to a world community faced with the urgent need to disarm,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.1 on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

Noting with regret the non-implementation by apartheid South Africa of resolution GC(XXX)/RES/468 adopted on 3 October 1986 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency during its thirtieth regular session,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity,

Expressing regret that, despite the threat that South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, the Disarmament Commission, although it considered the question during its substantive session in 1989, failed once again to reach a consensus on this important item on its agenda,

Alarmed that South Africa's nuclear facilities, particularly those that remain unsafeguarded, enable it to develop and acquire the capability of producing fissionable material for nuclear weapons,

Also alarmed that, by its own public admission at Vienna on 13 August 1988, the apartheid South African régime has now acquired nuclear-weapon capability,

Deeply concerned about recent reports of apartheid South Africa's active military collaboration with Israel in the production of nuclear-tipped medium-range missiles with completed testing facilities and the consequences for the peace and security of African States,

Gravely concerned that South Africa, in flagrant violation of international law and the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, has continued its acts of aggression and subversion against the peoples of the independent States of southern Africa,

Deeply indignant at the persistent policy of hostility by the racist régime of South Africa as demonstrated by its constant encroachment into the territory of neighbouring States, which constitutes an act of aggression against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of those countries,

Expressing its grave disappointment that, despite appeals by the international community, certain Western States and Israel have continued to collaborate with the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and that some of these States have, by a ready recourse to the use of veto, consistently frustrated every effort in the Security Council to deal decisively with the question of South Africa,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the implementation of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Stressing the need to preserve peace and security in Africa by ensuring that the continent is a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability;

2. Condemns the massive buildup of South Africa's military machine, in particular its frenzied acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

3. Also condemns all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist régime of South Africa, in particular the decision by some Member States to grant licences to several corporations in their territories to provide equipment and technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa;

4. Takes note with great concern of recent reports that collaboration between Israel and South Africa has resulted in the development by South Africa of a nuclear-tipped missile;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General, with the assistance of a group of qualified experts, to investigate those reports, bearing in mind their implications for the implementation of the policy of denuclearization of Africa and for the security of African States and, in particular, the front-line and other neighbouring States;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a preliminary report on his investigation to the Disarmament Commission at its substantive session in 1990 and a final report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

7. Reaffirms that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

8. Expresses its full support for the African States faced with the danger of South Africa's nuclear capability;

9. Commends the actions of those Governments that have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields;

10. Demands that South Africa and all other foreign interests put an immediate end to the exploration for and exploitation of uranium resources in Namibia;

11. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime;

12. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider once again as a matter of priority during its substantive session in 1990 South Africa's nuclear capability, taking into account, inter alia, the findings of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on South Africa's nuclear capability;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the modalities and elements for the preparation and implementation of the relevant convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

14. Commends the adoption by the Security Council of resolutions 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and 591(1986) of 28 November 1986 on the question of South Africa, with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and to prohibiting, in particular, all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

15. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the military assistance that apartheid South Africa is receiving from Israel and any other sources in advanced missile technology as well as the supporting technical facilities.

Latin America

The General Assembly again considered in 1989 the item on the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco), concerning the application of the Treaty to territories in the region for which outside States had de jure or de facto responsibility. Three of the four States to which the Protocol was open were already parties to it (Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States). France, the fourth State, had signed the Protocol, but had not ratified it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/104 by recorded vote.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 43/62 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967, 3262(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3473(XXX) of 11 December 1972, 32/76 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/58 of 14 December 1978, 34/71 of 11 December 1979, 35/143 of 12 December 1980, 36/83 of 9 December 1981, 37/71 of 9 December 1982, 38/61 of 15 December 1983, 39/51 of 12 December 1984, 40/79 of 12 December 1985, 41/45 of 3 December 1986, 42/25 of 30 November 1987 and 43/62 of 7 December 1988 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that within the zone of application of that Treaty, to which twenty-three sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories which, in spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the four States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Considering that it is not fair that the peoples of some of those territories are deprived of such benefits without being given the opportunity to express their opinion in this connection,

Recalling that three of the States to which Additional Protocol I is open—the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America—became parties to the Protocol in 1969, 1971 and 1981, respectively,

1. Deplores that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2 March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time already elapsed and the pressing invitations which the General Assembly has addressed to it;

2. Once more urges France not to delay any further such ratification, which has been requested so many times and which appears all the more advisable, since France is the only one of the four States to which the Protocol is open that is not yet party to it;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled “Implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/104 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco)”.

Middle East

In an August 1989 report, with later addenda,(32) submitted in response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(33) the Secretary-General transmitted the views of five Member States on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/108 without vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The general Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75

of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987 and 43/65 of 7 December 1988 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing also the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Emphasizing further the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of the request made by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency to its Director General in resolution GC(XXXIII)/RES/506 "to consult with the States concerned in the Middle East area with a view to applying Agency safeguards to all nuclear installations in the area, keeping in mind the relevant recommendations contained in paragraph 75 of the report attached to document GC(XXXIII)/887 and the situation in the area of the Middle East, and to report on the matter to the Board of Governors and to the General Conference at its thirty-fourth regular session";

4. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

5. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

6. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

7. Extends its thanks to the Secretary-General for his report containing the views of parties concerned regarding the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Requests parties of the region to submit to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions with respect to the measures called for in paragraph 8 of resolution 43/65;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

Israeli nuclear armaments

In an October 1989 report,(34) submitted in response to a 1988 Assembly request,(35) the Secretary-General indicated that he had continued to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities. Apart from the text of a resolution adopted by the IAEA General Conference on 29 September, which was annexed to his report, no other information had been transmitted to him.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/121 by recorded vote.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, the latest of which is resolution 43/80 of 7 December 1988,

Recalling its resolution 43/65 of 7 December 1988, in which, inter alia, it called for placing all nuclear facilities in the region under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981, in which, inter alia, the Council called upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting that only Israel has been specifically called upon by the Security Council to place its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Noting with grave concern Israel's persistent refusal to commit itself not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Taking into consideration resolution GC(XXXIII)/RES/506 of 29 September 1989 adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which the General Conference deprecated Israel's refusal to place all its nuclear installations under the Agency's safeguards and called upon Israel to comply with Security Council resolution 487(1981),

Also taking into consideration the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,⁸ in paragraph 12 of which Israel was condemned for continuing to develop its nuclear military programmes and weapons of mass destruction and for its refusal to implement the resolutions of the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency in this regard,

Deeply alarmed by the information with regard to the continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons by Israel and its testing of their delivery systems in the Mediterranean, thus threatening the peace and security of the region,

Aware of the grave consequences that endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa to develop nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Deeply concerned that the declared Israeli policy of attacking and destroying nuclear facilities devoted to peaceful purposes is a part of its nuclear armament policy,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of Israel's refusal to renounce any possession of nuclear weapons;

2. Reiterates also its condemnation of the co-operation between Israel and South Africa;

3. Expresses its deep concern at Israel's continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and testing of their delivery systems;

4. Requests once more the Security Council to take urgent and effective measures to ensure that Israel complies with Council resolution 487(1981);

5. Demands once more that Israel place all its nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

6. Calls upon all States and organizations that have not yet done so to discontinue co-operating with and giving assistance to Israel in the nuclear field;

7. Reiterates its request to the International Atomic Energy Agency to suspend any co-operation with Israel that could contribute to its nuclear capabilities;

8. Requests also the International Atomic Energy Agency to inform the Secretary-General of any steps Israel may take to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

10. decides include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

The First Committee also approved those paragraphs by recorded votes. Paragraphs 2, 6 and 7 were retained by 88 votes to 20, with 17 abstentions, 78 to 22, with 22 abstentions, and 68 votes to 22, with 31 abstentions, respectively. The sixth and tenth preambular paragraphs were approved by 86 to 20, with 18 abstentions, and 73 to 22, with 24 abstentions, respectively.

South Asia

As requested by the General Assembly in 1988,(36) the Secretary-General transmitted in July 1989 the views of two Governments (China and Maldives) on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.⁽³⁷⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/109 by recorded vote.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985, 41/49 of 3 December 1986, 42/29 of 30 November 1987 and 43/66 of 7 December 1988 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures that can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting with appreciation the declarations issued at the highest level by the Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes, reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Welcoming the recent proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia,

Taking note of the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia, as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to that objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States that have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and to promote consultations among them with a view to exploring the best possibilities of furthering the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

South Pacific

In 1989, the General Assembly commended the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (the Treaty of Rarotonga), which opened for signature in 1985⁽³⁸⁾ and entered into force in 1986,⁽³⁹⁾ for the consideration of all Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/119 F by recorded vote.

South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3477(XXX) of 11 December 1975, in which it endorsed the idea of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the South Pacific and invited the countries concerned to carry forward consultations about ways and means of realizing that objective,

Recalling also article VII of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, which acknowledges the right of any group of States to conclude regional treaties in order to assure the total absence of nuclear weapons in their respective territories,

Bearing in mind paragraph 60 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, which states that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned constitutes an important disarmament measure,

Noting the adoption on 6 August 1985 by the heads of Government of the independent or self-governing members of the South Pacific Forum, meeting at Rarotonga, of the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (also known as the Treaty of Rarotonga), and their adoption on 8 August 1986 of three Protocols to the Treaty,

Noting also that the Treaty entered into force upon the deposit of the eighth instrument of ratification, on 11 December 1986, recognizing that the Treaty reflects the particular circumstances of the South Pacific region,

1. Notes with satisfaction that eleven members of the South Pacific Forum have now ratified the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty and that China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have adhered to Protocols 2 and 3 of the Treaty;

2. Notes also that the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America have stated that none of their practices and activities within the Treaty area are inconsistent with the Treaty or its Protocols;

3. Commends the Treaty and its Protocols for the consideration of all Member States.

1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean held two sessions in 1989 (New York, 10-14 April, 5-19 July)(40) as it continued to study practical measures for achieving the objectives of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace.(41)

In April, the Committee's open-ended Working Group discussed 20 substantive issues and principles submitted by the Chairman of the Group relating to the establishment of the zone of peace. In July, it considered 19 revised substantive issues and principles, also submitted by the Chairman, reflecting further views and observations of the Group's members. Formal and informal Committee exchanges of views took place on the provisional agenda for the United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean, its rules of procedure and structure. The Government of Sri Lanka said it was prepared to hold the Conference from 2 to 13 July 1990, but the General Assembly subsequently deferred it to 1991, requesting the Ad Hoc Committee to meet again in 1990 (see below).

As requested by the Assembly in 1988,(42) the Committee held a special meeting in July 1989 to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean.(43)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the First Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/120 by recorded vote.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468 (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, 35/150 of 12 December 1980, 36/90 of 9 December 1981, 37/96 of 13 December 1982, 38/185 of 20 December 1983, 39/149 of 17 December 1984, 40/153 of 16 December 1985, 41/87 of 4 December 1986, 42/43 of 30 November 1987, 43/79 of 7 December 1988 and other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the establishment of zones of peace in various regions of the world under appropriate conditions, to be clearly defined and determined freely by the States concerned in the zone, taking into account the characteristics of the zone and the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and in conformity with international law, can contribute to strengthening the security of States within such zones and to international peace and security as a whole,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, during its preparatory session in July 1989, commemorated the tenth anniversary of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, which took place on 13 July 1979,

Recalling further paragraph 22 of the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security, as well as to the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and peaceful development of the States of the region,

Convinced that agreement on such action should be facilitated by encouraging developments in international relations that could have beneficial effects on the region,

Also convinced that the continued military presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Considering that the creation of a zone of peace requires co-operation and agreement among the States of the region to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration,

Noting with appreciation the offer made by the Government of Sri Lanka to host the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombi, from 2 to 13 July 1990,

Regretting that it is not possible to hold the Conference in 1990, as scheduled, in spite of the generous offer of the Government of Sri Lanka,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Reaffirms full support for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace;

3. Reiterates and emphasizes its decision to convene the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo, as a necessary step for the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, adopted in 1971;

4. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions, and requests the Committee to intensify its work with regard to the implementation of its mandate;

5. Notes with satisfaction that, in the implementation of the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee, including the preparatory work for the convening of the Conference, as called for in the relevant resolutions recommended by the Committee and adopted by the General Assembly by consensus, considerable progress has been made by the Working Group of the Ad Hoc Committee in its meetings during the sessions of the Committee in 1989 and that the Chairman of the Working Group submitted his report to the Ad Hoc Committee;

6. Urges the Ad Hoc Committee to intensify its discussions on substantive issues and principles, including those identified by the Chairman of the Working Group in his report dated 12 July 1989, with the aim of elaborating elements that might be taken into consideration during the subsequent preparation of a draft final document of the Conference;

7. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold two preparatory sessions during the first half of 1990, the first with a duration of one week and the second with a duration of two weeks, for completion of the remaining preparatory work relating to the Conference on the Indian Ocean to enable the convening of the Conference at Colombo in 1991 in consultation with the host country;

8. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his consultations on the participation in the work of the Committee by States Members of the United Nations which are not members of the Committee, with the aim of resolving this matter at the earliest possible date;

9. Also requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to consult the Secretary-General at the appropriate time on the establishment of a secretariat for the Conference;

10. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a full report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records, in recognition of its preparatory function.

Preparation for the 1990 Review Conference on NPT

Following the entry into force on 5 March 1970 of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT),(44) quinquennial review conferences were held in 1975,(45) 1980(46) and 1985.(47) The Final Declaration of the Third (1985) Review Conference recommended that a fourth conference be convened in 1990.

An open-ended Preparatory Committee of parties to NPT, meeting in New York from 1 to 5 May 1989, decided on a number of organizational matters and agreed that the 1990 Conference would take place at Geneva from 20 August to 14 September. At its second session (Geneva, 11-15 September), the Committee focused on the financing of the Conference, its agenda and background documentation. The third and final session of the Committee was scheduled for April/May 1990.

Prohibition or restriction of other weapons

Chemical and biological weapons

The Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States (Paris, 7-11 January 1989), known as the Paris Conference, in its Final Declaration, reaffirmed the authority of the 1925 Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare and called on the Conference on Disarmament to redouble its efforts to conclude a convention prohibiting chemical weapons.(1) The Conference was proposed by the United States in 1988 to uphold the authority and, in its words, to reverse the serious erosion of the Geneva Protocol.(2)

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. In response to a recommendation of the Paris Conference, the Conference on Disarmament intensified its negotiations on a chemical weapons convention from 20 to 31 March and from 17 to 28 July 1989.(3)

The Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, re-established by the Conference on 16 February,(4) held 26 meetings between 17 February and 18 August. In addition, the Committee Chairman held a number of informal consultations with delegations. The Committee had before it a report on its inter-session work, which contained the rolling text of the draft convention, reflecting the stage that the negotiations had reached by the beginning of the 1989 session of the Conference.(5) It established five working groups to deal with aspects of the convention, as follows: verification; legal and political questions; institutional; technical; and transition. The Committee Chairman undertook intensive consultations on challenge inspections; sanctions; the size, composition and decision-making process of the executive council; and universal adherence to the convention. Progress was achieved in elaborating several draft provisions of the rolling text, including those concerning institutional and technical aspects. The Committee recommended that it hold a resumed session from 16 January to 1 February 1990 and, in preparation for that session, have informal open-ended consultations from 28 November to 14 December 1989. It also recommended that it be re-established at the outset of the 1990 session of the Conference on Disarmament and that a decision on the mandate be taken at the beginning of that session.

New documents were submitted by Australia(6) and Czechoslovakia(7) on their chemical production/consumption and on their facilities relevant to the convention; by Canada, on a workshop concerning IAEA safeguards as a model for verification of a chemical weapons convention;(8) by the Federal Republic of Germany, on the validity of ad hoc on-site verification;(9) by Finland, on standard operating procedures for verification;(10) by France, transmitting the Final Act and Final Declaration of the Paris Conference,(11) and two proposals, one concerning the establishment of a high-level advisory body for the various organs of the convention, to be called the scientific advisory council,(12) and another on protecting the confidentiality of any information in the military, commercial and industrial fields that might be handled in the course of verification arrangement;(13) by Italy, on an international forum on the problems of verification of a chemical weapons convention;(14) by Norway, on headspace gas chromatography, a new approach to verification of alleged chemical weapons use;(15) and by the United Kingdom, on verification of the convention.(16) In addition, a large number of States submitted reports on national trial inspections.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1988,(17) the Secretary-General, in October 1989, transmitted a report of the group of qualified experts to develop further technical guidelines and procedures available to the Secretary-General for the timely and efficient investigation of reports of the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons.(18) The six-member group, appointed by the Secretary-General in 1988,(19) met twice in 1989 (Geneva, 6-17 February and 31 July-11 August) and completed its work on the technical guidelines for investigating possible violations of the Geneva Protocol. The report dealt with principles and other general aspects of investigations, including assessment and decision by the Secretary-General following submission of a report of alleged use; involvement of Member States, consultants, experts and laboratories; activities of the Secretary-General; and technical procedures and other practical aspects of investigations.

In separate addenda,(20) the Secretary-General provided information received from two Member States (Israel and Iran), containing the names of persons those States considered to be qualified experts to investigate reports of the possible use of chemical and biological or toxin weapons, as requested by the Assembly in 1987.(21)

Other action. Sixty-seven delegates from 23 nations in the South-East Asian and South Pacific region attended a seminar convened by the Government of Australia (Canberra, 2-4 August 1989) to increase support in the region for the early conclusion of a chemical weapons convention.(22)

Wishing to build on the Final Declaration of the Paris Conference, Australia convened the Government-Industry Conference against Chemical Weapons, which brought together Governments as well as representatives of the world's chemical industry (Canberra, 18-22 September).(23) At the conclusion of the Conference, the Chairman stated that it had affirmed the commitment of Governments and the world's chemical industry to work together to bring to fruition at the earliest possible date a comprehensive, global chemical weapons convention. Representatives of the chemical industry adopted a statement, by which they declared their support for efforts to conclude the convention.

The United States and the USSR issued a joint statement reaffirming their commitment to pursue aggressively the prohibition of chemical weapons and the destruction of all stockpiles of such weapons.(24) The statement was issued at the conclusion of talks held on 22 and 23 September at Jackson Hole, Wyoming (United States).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/115 A without vote.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity, particularly following recent United Nations reports, of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925,

Welcoming the broad participation in and the positive results of the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States on the prohibition of chemical weapons, held in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989, and noting with satisfaction the resulting additional accession of States to the 1925 Protocol,

Endorsing the Final Declaration of the Paris Conference as an important contribution to the aim of the total elimination of chemical weapons,

Recognizing that the effectiveness of a convention for the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and for their destruction will benefit from the support and co-operation of the chemical industry,

Commending, in that regard, the initiative of the Government of Australia to strengthen and expand the co-operation of the chemical industry with Governments by convening at Canberra from 18 to 22 September 1989 a Government-Industry Conference against Chemical Weapons,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Taking note of the Final Document of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, adopted by consensus on 26 September 1986, and, in particular, of article IX of the Final Declaration of the Conference,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which incorporates, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, and noting that, following the precedents set over the past live years, consultations are continuing during the inter-session period, thus increasing the time devoted to negotiation,

Convinced of the necessity that all efforts be exerted for the continuation and successful conclusion of negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

Emphasizing the importance of the widest possible participation of States in the negotiations on the draft convention in order to ensure universal adherence on its conclusion,

Conscious of the need to share data relevant to the negotiations on a future convention banning all chemical weapons on a global basis and of the fact that the provision of such data would be an important confidence-building measure,

Noting the bilateral and other discussions, including the ongoing exchange of views between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in the framework of the multilateral negotiations, on issues related to the prohibition of chemical weapons,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made at all levels by States to facilitate the earliest conclusion of a convention for the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction and, in particular, the concrete steps designed to promote confidence and to contribute directly to that goal,

1. Notes with satisfaction the work of the Conference on Disarmament during its 1989 session regarding the prohibition of chemical weapons, and, in particular, appreciates the progress in the work of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons on that question and the tangible results recorded in its report;

2. Notes, while regretting that a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been concluded, that there exists an ever-growing will to resolve the pending problems at the earliest possible date;

3. Again urges the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of high priority, to intensify, during its 1990 session, which will be of pivotal importance, the negotiations on such a convention and to reinforce its efforts further by, inter alia, increasing the time that it devotes to such negotiations, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, with a view to the final elaboration of a convention at the earliest possible date, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons for that purpose with the mandate to be agreed upon by the Conference at the beginning of its 1990 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to use the political momentum generated by the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States, held in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989, and the recognition by that conference that a global ban on chemical weapons is of universal concern and interest, to achieve the conclusion at the earliest possible date of such a convention;

5. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the results of its negotiations;

6. Culls upon all States to abide by the commitments undertaken in the Final Declaration of the Paris Conference;

7. Welcomes the renewed declarations of commitment by Governments represented at the Government-Industry Conference against Chemical Weapons to conclude and implement a convention at the earliest possible date, and welcomes also the first collective statement by representatives of the chemical industry of their commitment to co-operate with Governments to that end;

8. Recognizes that constructive proposals were discussed at the Government-Industry Conference against Chemical Weapons that could contribute momentum to the Geneva negotiations and assist in the conclusion and early implementation of such a convention;

9. Recognizes also the importance of declarations made by States on whether or not they possess chemical weapons and of further international exchanges of data in connection with the negotiations on such a convention;

10. Encourages Member States to take further initiatives to promote confidence and openness in the negotiations and to provide further information to facilitate prompt resolution of outstanding issues, thus contributing to an early agreement on, and universal adherence to, such a convention.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 1st Committee 3-25, 31, 41; plenary 81.

Also on 15 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/115 B without vote.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons: measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and to support the conclusion of a chemical weapons convention

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, and those adopted by the Security Council, on the use of chemical weapons,

Recalling also the provisions of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and of other rules and principles of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict,

Welcoming in that regard the reaffirmation in the Final Declaration of the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States, held in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989, of the importance and the continuing validity of the 1925 Protocol,

Recalling further the necessity of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Expressing deep dismay at the use and the risk of use of chemical weapons as long as such weapons remain and are spread,

Acknowledging that prompt and impartial investigation of reports of possible use of chemical and bacteriological weapons 'will further enhance the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the proposals of the group of qualified experts established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 42/37 C of 30 November 1987, concerning technical guidelines and procedures available to the Secretary-General for the timely and efficient investigation of reports of 'the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons,

Noting that, upon conclusion of a chemical weapons convention, these guidelines and procedures should be adapted in the light of the obligations under the convention,

1. Renews its call to all States to observe strictly the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, and condemns vigorously all actions that violate that obligation;

2. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to accede to the 1925 Geneva Protocol;

3. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to pursue as a matter of continuing urgency its negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out promptly investigations in response to reports that may be brought to his attention by any Member State concerning the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons that may constitute a violation of the 1925 Geneva Protocol or other relevant rules of customary international law in order to ascertain the facts of the matter, and to report promptly the results of any such investigation to all Member States;

5. Welcomes, in that regard, the proposals of the group of qualified experts concerning technical guidelines and procedures to guide the Secretary-General in the conduct of timely and efficient investigation of the reports of use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons;

6. Calls upon all States to consider the implementation of those guidelines and procedures for investigation, inter alia, by putting at the disposal of the Secretary-General qualified experts and/or consultants as well as laboratories for analysis;

7. Notes with satisfaction that the Security Council decided to consider immediately, taking into account the investigations of the Secretary-General, appropriate and effective measures in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Urges all States to exercise restraint and to act responsibly in accordance with the need for the early conclusion and entry into force of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons".

Review conferences of the parties to the Convention on biological weapons

Review conferences of the parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction(25) were held in 1980(26) and 1986,(27) and a third conference was scheduled to be held not later than 1991. The Convention opened for signature on 10 April 1972 and entered into force on 26 March 1975.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/115 C without vote.

Implementation of the recommendations of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2826(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Recalling also that the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention was held at Geneva from 8 to 26 September 1986 in order to review the operation of the Convention with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble to and the provisions of the Convention, including the provisions concerning negotiations on chemical weapons, were being realized,

Taking note of the confidence-building measures agreed upon by the Second Review Conference for further strengthening the authority of the Convention and for enhancing confidence among States,

Acknowledging that the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference expressed the need to give further consideration to, inter alia, the implementation of the Convention in all its aspects,

Confirming the common interest in strengthening the authority and the effectiveness of the Convention to promote confidence and co-operation among Member States as well as the necessity to comply with the obligations set forth in the Convention,

1. Notes with appreciation that, in accordance with the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, an Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts from States parties to the Convention was held at Geneva from 31 March to 15 April 1987, which adopted by consensus a report finalizing the modalities for the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration, thus enabling States parties to follow a standardized procedure;

2. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention to provide such information and data to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and not later than 15 April;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the relevant parts of the Final Declaration;

4. Notes that the Second Review Conference decided, in its Final Declaration, that a Third Review Conference should be held at Geneva at the request of a majority of States parties not later than 1991;

5. Recalls in that regard the decision that the Third Review Conference should consider, inter alia, the issues set out in article XII of the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to circulate to the States parties to the Convention not later than four months prior to the convening of the Third Review Conference a report on the implementation of the confidence-building measures agreed upon by the Ad Hoc Meeting of Scientific and Technical Experts from States parties;

7. Welcomes the fact that there are more than one hundred States parties to the Convention, including all the permanent members of the Security Council, and that since the holding of the Second Review Conference four more States have forwarded their instruments of ratification of the Convention, two more States have declared their accession to the Convention and one State has withdrawn its reservations to it;

8. Calls upon all States that have not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so without delay, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention and to the strengthening of international confidence.

New weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

For the first time since 1975, the General Assembly in 1989 did not adopt a resolution on the question of prohibiting the development and manufacture of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons. In addition, the subject attracted little attention in the disarmament bodies, although differences of view concerning the imminence of the emergence of such weapons persisted.

Consideration by the Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons" from 3 to 7 April and from 31 July to 4 August.(3)

The Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons, re-established on 7 February, held six meetings between 20 February and 7 August; informal consultations also took place. It re-established contact group A to consider the prohibition of radiological weapons in the "traditional" sense and contact group B, the prohibition of attacks against nuclear facilities. The reports of the two groups were annexed to the Committee's report.(28) Hungary submitted a paper on suggested scopes for prohibiting radiological weapons,(29) and Peru, a draft convention on the prohibition of attacks against nuclear installations.(30)

The Committee concluded that its work had contributed to clarifying and making more concise the different approaches which continued to exist with regard to both subjects under consideration and recommended that the Conference re-establish it in 1990.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(31) the Secretary-General, in October 1989,(32) drew the attention of Member States to sections of the report of the Conference on Disarmament dealing with new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons.(3)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 A by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/99 C of 13 December 1982, 38/1888 D of 20 December 1983, 39/151 J of 17 December 1984, 40/94 D of 12 December 1985, 41/59 A and I of 3 December 1986, 42/38 F of 30 November 1987 and 43/75 J of 7 December 1988 on, inter alia, the conclusion of an agreement prohibiting military attacks against nuclear facilities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this subject submitted pursuant to resolution 43/75 J,

Gravely concerned that armed attacks against nuclear facilities, though carried out with conventional weapons, could be tantamount to the use of radiological weapons,

Recalling also that Additional Protocol I of 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 prohibits attacks on nuclear electricity-generating stations,

Deeply concerned that the destruction of nuclear facilities by conventional weapons causes the release into the environment of huge amounts of dangerous radioactive material, which results in serious radioactive contamination,

Firmly convinced that the Israeli attack against the safeguarded nuclear facilities in Iraq constitutes an unprecedented danger to international peace and security,

Recalling further resolutions GC(XXVII)/RES/407 and GC(XXVIII)/RES/409, adopted in 1983 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which the Conference urged all member States to support actions in international forums to reach an international agreement that prohibits armed attacks against nuclear installations devoted to peaceful purposes,

1. Reaffirms that armed attacks of any kind against nuclear facilities are tantamount to the use of radiological weapons, owing to the dangerous radioactive forces that such attacks cause to be released;

2. Requests once again the Conference on Disarmament to intensify further its efforts to reach, as early as possible, an agreement prohibiting armed attacks against nuclear facilities;

3. Requests again the International Atomic Energy Agency to provide the Conference on Disarmament with the technical studies that could facilitate the conclusion of such an agreement;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

On the same date and on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 T without vote.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 C of 7 December 1988,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1989 session that deals with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons;

2. Recognizes that in 1989 the Ad Hoc Committee made a further contribution to the clarification and better understanding of different approaches that continue to exist with regard to both of the important matters under consideration;

3. Takes note also of the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons should be re-established at the beginning of its 1990 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its substantive negotiation on the subject with a view to the prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end and drawing upon the annexes to its report as a basis of its future work, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

By decision 44/431 of 15 December, the Assembly took note of the First Committee's report on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons.(33) No proposal was submitted for consideration by the Committee.

Dumping of radioactive wastes

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly request,(34) the Secretary-General, in October 1989, provided information received from the United Nations Environment Programme, the International Maritime Organization, IAEA and OAU on the dumping of radioactive wastes in Africa, including all steps taken or envisaged to monitor, control and put an end to such activities.(35)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 R by recorded vote.

Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind resolution CM/Res.1156(XLVIII) concerning the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa, adopted on 25 May 1988 by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 19 to 23 May 1988,

Bearing in mind also resolution CM/Res.1225(L) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fiftieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 17 to 22 July 1989,^a Welcoming resolution GC(XXXIII)/RES/509 on the dumping of nuclear wastes, adopted on 29 September 1989 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-third regular session,

Considering its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament,^b inter alia, to consider effective methods of control against the use of radiological methods of warfare,

Aware of the potential hazards underlying any use of nuclear wastes which would constitute radiological warfare and its implications for regional and international security and in particular for the security of developing countries,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Aware also of the consideration of the question of dumping of radioactive wastes in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1989 session,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 Q of 7 December 1988, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament to include in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session the developments in the ongoing negotiations on this subject,

Recalling also its resolution 43/75 T of 7 December 1988, in which it requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, "to prepare a report, in consultation with relevant international organizations, on the dumping of radioactive wastes in all its aspects in Africa, including all steps taken or envisaged to monitor, control and put a halt to such activities",

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the dumping of radioactive wastes,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Takes note also of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to the dumping of radioactive wastes;
3. Expresses grave concern regarding any use of nuclear waste that would constitute radiological warfare and have grave implications for the national security of all States;
4. Calls upon all States to take appropriate measures with a view to preventing any dumping of nuclear wastes that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States;
5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue to take into account, in the ongoing negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, the deliberate employment of nuclear wastes to cause destruction, damage or injury by means of radiation produced by the decay of such material;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;
7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to include in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session the developments in the ongoing negotiations on this subject;
8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled "Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes".

^bThe Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Advanced technology

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(36) the Secretary-General, in a September 1989 report with later addenda(37) described action he had taken to follow scientific and technological developments and to evaluate their impact on international security. A consultative meeting was held (New York, 31 May 1989) to assist him in identifying the broad areas of scientific and technological developments which might have potential military applications. He planned to invite qualified consultants to prepare individual assessments covering information technology, biotechnology, materials technology, space technology and nuclear technology. Those assessments would be discussed by a wider group of experts and the outcome included in a report to the Assembly in 1990.

The Secretary-General presented the views and proposals of seven Member States on the establishment of panels at the national level to monitor and evaluate such scientific and technological developments, as well as evaluations of the panels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/118 A by recorded vote.

Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/77 A of 7 December 1988, Noting with concern the potential in technological advances for application to military purposes, which could lead to the emergence of an entirely new class of weapon systems,

Recognizing that such a development will have a negative impact on the security environment and cause a major setback to disarmament efforts,

Stressing, in this context, the importance of preventing this negative impact by effectively addressing this problem and ensuring that scientific and technological developments are harnessed for the common benefit of mankind,

Recognizing also the interests of the international community in the subject and the need to follow closely such developments,

Recognizing further that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Emphasizing that the proposal contained in resolution 43/77 A is without prejudice to research and development efforts being undertaken for peaceful purposes,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on this question,

1. Takes note of the preliminary work undertaken by the Secretary-General to follow future scientific and technological developments, especially those which have potential military applications, and to evaluate their impact on international security;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to conclude this work so that a report can be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

3. Notes that the process of establishing national expert panels by Member States has already begun;

4. Encourages Member States to participate by communicating their views to the Secretary-General, and invites them to establish panels at the national level to monitor and evaluate developments;

5. Decides include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security".

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

On the same date and on a recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/118 B, also by recorded vote.

Science and technology for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Considering that science and technology can profoundly contribute to solving the problems of mankind, especially to promoting its social and economic development,

Noting the interest of the international community in the peaceful uses of scientific and technological achievements,

Recognizing the vast possibilities that scientific and technological progress offers for supporting disarmament negotiations and implementing their results, inter alia, in the fields of verification of compliance with agreements on arms limitation and disarmament as well as conversion of military industry to civilian production,

Welcoming respective activities undertaken so far in this area by States and national and international scientific and technological institutions,

Taking into account that scientifically and technologically more advanced States bear a special responsibility for disseminating information on and promoting the application of science and technology in the field of disarmament,

Considering the need for an intensification and extension of such activities, as well as international co-operation, with a view to using scientific and technological achievements for disarmament-related purposes, inter alia, in the fields of verification of compliance with agreements on arms limitation and disarmament, application of technologies for improved means of verification and conversion of military industry to civilian production,

1. Takes note of national and international activities to use scientific and technological achievements for disarmament-related purposes;

2. Calls upon Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify and extend such activities, to develop international co-operation in this area and to keep the United Nations informed about progress in this field;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled "Science and technology for disarmament".

Conventional weapons

Conventional disarmament

Disarmament Commission consideration. Working Group 111, established by the Disarmament Commission on 8 May 1989 to deal with the question of conventional disarmament, held 13 meetings between 10 and 26 May.(38) Within that general topic, the Commission was called on, pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(39) to take into account arms transfers in all their aspects and possible measures to monitor and regulate them. Working papers on arms transfers were submitted by China(40) and Costa Rica,(41) while a paper on a variety of measures was submitted by Nigeria(42) The Working Group was unable to reach agreement on a complete text and therefore submitted a procedural consensus report to the Commission,(38) proposing that the Commission recommend to the Assembly that it continue its work in 1990.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an August report with later addenda, the Secretary-General presented the views of 11 Member States (one on behalf of EC members) concerning arms transfers and measures to regulate and control them.(43)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 F without vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 D of 7 December 1988,

Taking into account the decisions and recommendations appearing in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, particularly in paragraph 114,

Also taking into account that conventional disarmament is a necessary part of the disarmament process,

Having examined the report of the Disarmament Commission,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the extensive discussion of the question of conventional disarmament during the 1989 session of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Recommends that the report should provide a basis for further deliberations on the subject by the Disarmament Commission;

3. Request the Disarmament Commission to continue at its 1990 session the substantive consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session with a view to facilitating possible measures in the field of conventional arms reduction and disarmament;

4. Also requests the Disarmament Commission for this purpose to include in the agenda for its 1990 session the item entitled "Substantive consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament";

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 44/116 F

15 December 1989 Meeting 81 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/44/785) without vote. 16 November (meeting 38); draft by Denmark (A/C.1/44/L.20/Rev.1); agenda item 63 (d). Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 1st Committee 3-25, 38; plenary 81.

Also on 15 December and on the First Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 C without vote.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war as expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and particularly its paragraph 81, which provides that, together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons should be resolutely pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, and which stresses that States with the largest military arsenals have a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions,

Also recalling that in the same document it is stated, inter alia, that priorities in disarmament negotiations shall be: nuclear weapons; other weapons of mass destruction, including chemical weapons; conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects; and reduction of armed forces, and that it stresses that nothing should preclude States from conducting negotiations on all priority items concurrently,

Further recalling that in the same document it is stated that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority, and that real progress in the field of nuclear disarmament could create an atmosphere conducive to progress in conventional disarmament on a world-wide basis,

Aware of the dangers to world peace and security originating from, and the loss in human life and property caused by, wars and conflicts fought with conventional weapons, as well as of their possible escalation into a nuclear war in regions with a high concentration of conventional and nuclear weapons,

Also aware that with the advance in science and technology, conventional weapons tend to become increasingly lethal and destructive and that conventional armaments consume large amounts of resources,

Believing that resources released through disarmament, including conventional disarmament, can be used for the social and economic development of people of all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Noting that the ongoing conventional disarmament negotiations in Europe have gained increasing importance,

Bearing in mind its resolution 36/97 A of 9 December 1981 and the Study on Conventional Disarmament conducted in accordance with that resolution, as well as its resolutions 44/59 C and 41/59 G of 3 December 1986, 42/38 E and 44/38 G of 30 November 1987 and 43/75 D and 43/75 F of 7 December 1988, and the consideration by the Disarmament Commission at its 1989 session of the question of conventional disarmament,

Bearing in mind also the efforts made to promote conventional disarmament and the related proposals and suggestions, as well as the initiatives taken by various countries in this regard,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the efforts aimed at resolutely pursuing the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament;

2. Believes that the military forces of all countries should not be used other than for the purpose of self-defence;

3. Welcomes the new negotiation on conventional armed forces in Europe;

4. Urges the countries with the largest military arsenals, which bear a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions, and the States members of the two major military alliances to continue their intensive negotiations on conventional armaments, through appropriate forums, with a view to reaching early agreement on the establishment of a stable and secure balance of conventional armaments and forces at lower levels under effective international control in their respective regions, particularly in Europe, which has the largest concentration of arms and forces in the world;

5. Encourages all States, while taking into account the need to protect security and maintain necessary defensive capabilities, to intensify their efforts and take, either on their own or in a regional context, appropriate steps to promote progress in conventional disarmament and enhance peace and security;

6. Requests the Disarmament Commission to consider further, at its 1990 substantive session, issues related to conventional disarmament;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

On the same date and on a recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 N by recorded vote.

International arms transfers

The General Assembly,

Taking note of its resolution 43/75 I of 7 December 1988, Noting the views of Member States submitted to the Secretary-General in the past year on this issue,

Looking forward to the United Nations study on international arms transfers and the report of the study group to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session,

Also noting the substantive deliberations initiated within the Disarmament Commission on matters related to the issue of international arms transfers,

1. Invites all Member States that have not yet done so to make available to the Secretary-General their views and proposals on the matters contained in paragraphs 1 and 2 of resolution 43/75 I;

2. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its deliberation on the matters contained in the above-mentioned resolution during its 1990 session under the item of conventional disarmament;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to make available within the framework of resolution 43/75 I all relevant information on this matter;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "International arms transfers".

Regional approach to conventional disarmament

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly request,(44) the Secretary-General, in October 1989, described activities for regional disarmament taken by the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs (DDA) and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR).⁽⁴⁵⁾ DDA organized seminars on verification, African disarmament and security, the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace, and multilateral confidence-building measures and the prevention of war. UNIDIR published two reports on conventional disarmament in Europe and one on confidence-building measures in Africa, and helped organize a conference on problems and perspectives of conventional disarmament in Europe (Vienna, 23-25 January 1989).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/117 B without vote.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/100 F of 13 December 1982, 38/73 J of 15 December 1983, 39/63 F of 12 December 1984, 40/94 A of 12 December 1985, 41/59 M of 3 December 1986 and 42/39 E of 30 November 1987, relating to regional disarmament,

Reaffirming that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, have the responsibility of halting and reversing the arms race,

Considering that regional disarmament measures enable all States to contribute to the general process of arms reduction and disarmament,

Confirming the importance and potential effectiveness of regional disarmament measures taken at the initiative of the region and with the participation of all the States concerned, in that they can contribute to the realization of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control and therefore to security and stability,

Stressing that any regional disarmament enterprise must take into account the specific conditions characteristic of each region,

Also stressing that it is for the countries themselves of a region to take appropriate initiatives in common and to prepare agreements that will allow the achievement of regional disarmament,

Further stressing that disarmament efforts in a region cannot be isolated either from the disarmament efforts in other regions or from global disarmament efforts both in the nuclear and conventional field,

Taking into account Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations and the decisions and recommendations appearing in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, particularly in paragraph 114,

Aware of those studies which have already been carried out and of the views of States which are of interest for regional disarmament,

1. Express its thanks to the Secretary-General for his report submitted pursuant to resolution 42/39 E;

2. Notes with concern that conflicts continue to threaten regional and global peace and security but that prospects are emerging for the peaceful settlement of certain regional conflicts;

3. Notes with satisfaction the importance of the regional measures that have already been adopted and the regional efforts undertaken in the field of nuclear and conventional disarmament;

4. Welcomes the progress made since its forty-second session with respect to:

(a) The process initiated by the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed by the Central American Presidents at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 at the Esquipulas II summit meeting in order to arrive at a lasting peace in that region and that has resulted in the agreements concluded at Tela, Honduras, on 7 August 1989;"

(b) The resumption, at Vienna, of negotiations in the area of confidence- and security-building measures, as well as the new negotiation on conventional armed forces in Europe, both within the framework of the process of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, which have been characterized by rapid progress since they began in March 1989;

5. Encourages all States to consider and develop, as far as possible, regional solutions in the matter of arms reduction and disarmament;

6. Invites all States and regional institutions associated with regional disarmament efforts to report thereon to the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the United Nations to lend its assistance to States and regional institutions that may request it, with the view to the institution of measures within the framework of an effort for regional disarmament;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly regularly informed of the implementation of resolutions on regional disarmament and of the activities which the Secretariat, in particular the Department for Disarmament Affairs, and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research are conducting in the field of regional disarmament;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Regional disarmament: report of the Secretary-General".

Also on 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 S by recorded vote.

Conventional disarmament on a regional scale

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/944 A of 12 December 1985, 41/59 M of 3 December 1986, 42/38 of 30 November 1987 and 43/75 S of 7 December 1988,

Taking note of the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a

Reiterating the primary responsibility of nuclear-weapon States and militarily significant States for halting and reversing the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race,

Convinced that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority,

Drawing attention to the fact that, together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, negotiations should be carried out on the balanced reduction of armed forces and on conventional disarmament, based on the principle of equal and undiminished security of the parties with a view to promoting or enhancing stability at a lower level of military forces, taking into account the need of all States to protect their security,

Aware that, as a consequence of the continuing military application of scientific and technological developments, conventional weapons have become more lethal and destructive,

Taking into account the fact that conventional weapons consume large amounts of resources, especially in militarily significant States, which could be utilized for the social and economic development of the people of all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Affirming that regional and subregional disarmament processes that take into account the characteristics of each region, as well as the views of all parties concerned, and are implemented in accordance with the principles and norms embodied in the Charter of the United Nations enhance and complement global disarmament efforts,

Noting with satisfaction the positive trend towards the peaceful settlement of various regional and subregional conflicts and the important role played in that regard by the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the initiatives towards arms limitation and disarmament undertaken jointly or unilaterally by some countries at the regional and subregional levels, as well as the systematic implementation of confidence-building measures, limitations of the acquisition of conventional weapons and the reduction of military spending, with a view to achieving equal and undiminished security at a lower level of armaments, as well as to allocating the resources thus released to the social and economic development of the people of all countries, particularly the developing countries;

2. Again expresses firm support for the United Nations system, and for the Secretary-General in particular, in the efforts to find solutions to conflict situations, thereby reaffirming a fundamental role of the United Nations in promoting peace and disarmament, and for the strict observance of the principles and norms embodied in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Urges all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and militarily significant States, to intensify their efforts in the negotiation and implementation, in appropriate forums, of regional and subregional disarmament and arms limitation measures, taking into account their particular responsibility in this matter and the principle of equal and undiminished security for all parties, aimed at enhancing international peace and security;

4. Requests the United Nations, in conformity with its mandate to promote international peace and security, to provide assistance to States that might request it with a view to establishing disarmament measures at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Appeals to all States to facilitate the progress of regional disarmament, refraining from any action, including the use or threat of use of force against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and intervention or interference in internal affairs of States, that might hinder the achievement of this objective;

6. Invites all Member States to convey to the Secretary-General their views on ways and means aimed at strengthening regional and subregional disarmament and arms limitation efforts, taking into account recent developments that have taken place in this sphere;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into consideration the views expressed by Member States in accordance with paragraph 6 above;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament on a regional scale".

Europe

In January 1989, the "Group of 23" (representatives of the 16 members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization-Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States and seven members of the Warsaw Treaty Organization-Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, Romania, USSR), which had met throughout 1988, completed their work on the mandate for the new Negotiation on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE).(46) The first four rounds of the CFE talks took place from 9 to 23 March, 5 May to 14 July, 7 September to 10 October and 10 November to 21 December.

In the area of conventional disarmament, the pace of change in the European region outside the CFE context was manifested by many and substantial unilateral cuts in armed forces and armaments, announced throughout the year by individual Eastern European States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 I without vote.

Confidence- and security-building measures and conventional disarmament in Europe

The General Assembly,

Determined to achieve progress in disarmament,
Recalling its resolution 43/75 P of 7 December 1988,

1. Notes with satisfaction the successful conclusion of the deliberations of the Vienna Follow-up Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe;

2. Welcomes the opening of two negotiations in the framework of the process of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, one on the elaboration of new confidence- and security-building measures and the other on conventional armed forces in Europe;

3. Also welcomes the progress achieved so far in those negotiations, and expresses the hope that they will be successfully concluded at an early date.

On the same date and on the First Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 U, also without vote.

Contribution of confidence- and security-building measures to international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the importance of confidence-building in the bilateral, regional and global context for the peaceful settlement of existing international problems and for the improvement and promotion of international relations based on justice, co-operation and solidarity,

Recognizing that commitment to confidence-building measures could significantly contribute to preparing for further progress in disarmament,

Recalling previous resolutions on the subject of confidence-building, in particular resolution 43/78 H of 7 December 1988,

1. Welcomes the implementation of confidence-building measures as contained in the Final Act of Helsinki and on that basis the positive experience gathered since 1987 with the implementation, by the thirty-five States participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, of the measures agreed at the Stockholm Conference on Confidence- and Security-building Measures and Disarmament in Europe;

2. Expects the ongoing Vienna negotiations on confidence- and security-building measures to build upon and expand the results already achieved at the Stockholm Conference with the aim of elaborating and adopting a new set of mutually complementary confidence- and security-building measures designed to reduce the risk of military confrontation in Europe;

3. Reaffirms its invitation to all States to consider the possible introduction of confidence-building measures in their particular regions and, where possible, on the basis of initiatives of the States of the region concerned, to negotiate on them in keeping with conditions and requirements prevailing in the respective region;

4. Also welcomes the consideration, inter alia, of confidence-building measures in United Nations regional disarmament workshops and in the United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean.

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and its Protocols

As at 31 December 1989,(47) the number of States parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons)(48) increased to 32. During the year, Benin acceded to the Convention and Liechtenstein ratified it. The Convention and Protocols had entered into force in 1983.(49)

The Secretary-General submitted, in response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(50) a report containing information on action taken with respect to the Convention and Protocols between 1 September 1988 and 31 August 1989.(51)

On 15 December, by decision 44/430, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report and decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The Conference on Disarmament considered the item on preventing an arms race in outer space from 6 to 10 March and from 3 to 7 July 1989.⁽³⁾

The Ad Hoc Committee on the topic, re-established by the Conference on 9 March, held 17 meetings between 14 March and 24 August to examine and identify relevant issues.

New documents submitted dealing with the legal aspects of the item included: a survey of relevant international law, by Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Hungary;⁽⁵²⁾ a document on legal problems raised by the militarization of outer space, by Chile,⁽⁵³⁾ and a proposed amendment to the 1967 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, by Peru.⁽⁵⁴⁾ Documents relating to verification were transmitted to the Conference by the German Democratic Republic⁽⁵⁵⁾ and by France.⁽⁵⁶⁾

In its report to the Conference,⁽⁵⁷⁾ the Ad Hoc Committee concluded that there had been continued general recognition of the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space. It noted the significant role that the existing legal régime played in preventing an arms race in that environment and the need to consolidate and reinforce that régime. The Committee acknowledged the importance of strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral. It recommended that it be re-established with an adequate mandate at the beginning of the 1990 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/112 by recorded vote.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space The General Assembly,

Inspired by the great prospects opening up before mankind as a result of man's entry into outer space,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Raffirming also the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes,

Recalling the obligation of all States, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, to refrain from the threat or use of force, including in their space activities,

Recalling also that the States parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies have undertaken, in article III, to carry on activities in the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in the interests of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding,

Reaffirming, in particular, article IV of the above-mentioned Treaty, which stipulates that States parties to the Treaty undertake not to place in orbit around the Earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner,

Reaffirming also paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Noting its resolutions 36/97 C and 36/99 of 9 December 1981,, as well as resolutions 37/83 of 9 December 1982, 37/99 D of 13 December 1982, 38/70 of 15 December 1983,, 39/59 of 12 December 1984, 40/87 of 12 December 1985, 41/53 of 3 December 1986, 42/33 of 30 November 1987 and 43/70 of 7 December 1988 and the relevant paragraphs of the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a

Recognizing the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective,

Gravely concerned at the danger posed to all mankind by an arms race in outer space and, in particular, by developments that could further undermine international peace and security and retard the pursuit of general and complete disarmament,

Encouraged by the widespread interest expressed by Member States in the course of negotiations on and following the adoption of the above-mentioned Treaty in ensuring that the exploration and use of outer space should be for peaceful purposes, and taking note of proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Noting the grave concern expressed by the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at the extension of an arms race into outer space and the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations, in particular the General Assembly, and also to the Committee on Disarmament,^b

Noting also that in 1989 the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment, undertook the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

^bThe Committee on Disarmament was redesignated the conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Convinced that additional measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, and with the existing legal régime concerning the use of outer space,

Emphasizing also the necessity of maintaining the effectiveness of relevant existing treaties, and in this context reaffirming the vital importance of a strict compliance with the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems,

Recognizing that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America could facilitate the multilateral negotiations for the prevention of an arms race in outer space in accordance with paragraph 27 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Noting the importance in this context of bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America that have continued since 1985, including at their summit meetings in Washington and Moscow on a complex of questions concerning space and nuclear arms,

Hopeful that concrete results would emerge from these negotiations as soon as possible,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space,

Taking note of that part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

Welcoming the re-establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space during the 1989 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, to continue to examine and to identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

1. Reaffirms that general and complete disarmament under effective international control warrants that outer space shall be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it shall not become an arena for an arms race;

2. Recognizes, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal régime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, the need to consolidate and reinforce that régime and enhance its effectiveness, and the importance of strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes that further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space should be adopted by the international community;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and to take immediate measures to prevent an arms race in outer space in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation and understanding;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1989 session of the Conference and at the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

8. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1990 session, with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

9. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit aimed at reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

10. Calls upon all States, especially those with major space capabilities, to refrain, in their activities relating to outer space, from actions contrary to the observance of the relevant existing treaties or to the objective of preventing an arms race in outer space;

11. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space, submitted in accordance with resolution 42/33 of 30 November 1987;

12. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of this subject to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this subject by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

On 30 October, three draft resolutions on the prevention of an arms race in outer space were submitted in the First Committee.⁽⁵⁸⁾ At the request of the sponsors, no action was taken on them.

Review Conference on the 1971 Sea-Bed Treaty

The Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof met at Geneva from 19 to 28 September,⁽⁵⁹⁾ with the participation of 53 of the 82 States parties, two signatories and 13 observer States. It adopted a Final Document, which contained the Final Declaration consisting of a preamble and the Conference's article-by-article review of the Treaty. The other two parts of the Final Document dealt with the organization and work of the Conference, and summary records of the plenary meetings.

The Treaty, which was concluded in 1970 and commended to Member States by the General Assembly,⁽⁶⁰⁾ was opened for signature on 11 February 1971 and entered into force on 18 May 1972. The first and second Review Conferences were held in 1977⁽⁶¹⁾ and 1983.⁽⁶²⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/116 O without vote.

Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2660(XXV) of 7 December 1970, in which it commended the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof,

Convinced that the Treaty constitutes a step towards the exclusion of the sea-bed, the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof from the arms race and towards a treaty or treaties on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Recalling also that the States parties to the Treaty met at Geneva from 19 to 28 September 1989 to review the operation of the Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty were being realized,

Noting with satisfaction that the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof concluded that the obligations assumed under article I of the Treaty had been faithfully observed by the States parties,

Noting that in its Final Declaration the Third Review Conference affirmed its belief that universal adherence to the Treaty, particularly by those States possessing nuclear weapons or any other weapons of mass destruction, would enhance international peace and security,

Noting also that the States parties to the Treaty reaffirmed their strong support for and continued dedication to the principles and objectives of the Treaty, as well as their commitment to implement effectively its provisions,

Noting further that all States parties to the Treaty confirmed that they had not emplaced any nuclear weapons or other weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed outside the zone of application of the Treaty as defined by its article II and had no intention to do so,

Recognizing that in the Final Declaration the States parties to the Treaty reaffirmed the commitment undertaken in article V to continue negotiations in good faith concerning further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the positive assessment by the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof of the effectiveness of the Treaty since its entry into force, as reflected in its Final Declaration;

2. Reiterates its expressed hope for the widest possible adherence to the Treaty, and invites all States that have not yet done so, particularly those possessing nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction, to ratify or accede to the Treaty as a significant contribution to international peace and security;

3. Affirms its strong interest in avoiding an arms race in nuclear weapons or any other types of weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof;

4. Calls again upon all States to refrain from any action which might lead to the extension of the arms race to the sea-bed and the ocean floor and the subsoil thereof;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in consultation with the States parties to the Treaty, taking into account existing proposals and any relevant technological developments, to proceed promptly with consideration of further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents of the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly relevant to further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report on its consideration of further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report by 1992, and every three years thereafter until the fourth Review Conference is convened, on technological developments relevant to the Treaty and to the verification of compliance with the Treaty, including dual-purpose technologies for peaceful and specified military ends; in carrying out this task he should draw from official sources and from contributions by States parties to the Treaty and may use the assistance of appropriate expertise;

9. Urges all States parties to the Treaty to assist the Secretary-General accordingly by providing information and drawing his attention to suitable sources;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "Further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the sea-bed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof".

Reduction of military expenditures

The subject of conversion of military resources to civilian purposes gained wider attention during 1989 and was for the first time the focus of a General Assembly resolution (44/116 J).

Eastern European States emphasized the need for negotiations on the reduction of military budgets. Some of them pointed to the steps they had taken to cut military spending and unilaterally to reduce armed forces and armaments. Bulgaria decided to reduce its military budget by 12 per cent;(1) Czechoslovakia planned to reduce its defence expenses for 1989-1990 by 15 per cent;(2) and the German Democratic Republic announced that its national outlay for defence would be cut back by 10 per cent.(3) Poland stated that it had been systematically lowering its national defence expenditure since 1987.(4)

Disarmament Commission consideration. Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly request,(5) the Disarmament Commission continued to consider the reduction of military budgets and to conclude its work on the last outstanding paragraph of the "Principles which should govern further actions of States in the field of freezing and reduction of military budgets".(6) The Commission had before it the text of the principles as elaborated in 1986 and further considered in 1987 and 1988.

A consultation group held six meetings and a series of informal consultations between 10 and 22 May and continued its consideration of paragraph 7 on the basis of the text discussed in 1988,(7) with a view to reaching agreement on that paragraph. As no agreement on the text of paragraph 7 or on the text of the principles as a whole could be reached in the consultation group, the matter was referred to the Commission itself for consideration, which transmitted to the General Assembly the same text of the principles as it had in 1988.(7)

Reports of the Secretary-General. In an August report, with a later addendum,(8) the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on military expenditures in standardized form reported by 22 States. Annexed to the report was the standard reporting instrument consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (such as land, naval and air forces) spent in each resource category (such as personnel, procurement and operations).

In a July report, with later addenda,(9) the Secretary-General submitted information received from nine States (including one on behalf of the 12 States members of EC) on further consolidating the emerging trend towards greater openness in military matters, specifically with regard to the provisions of objective information on such matters.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/114 A by recorded vote.

Reduction of military budgets

The General Assembly,

Desirous of reversing the arms race and military expenditures, which constitute a heavy burden for the economies of all nations and have harmful effects on world peace and security,

Convinced that the reduction of military expenditures as a result of the progress in disarmament negotiations will have favourable consequences on the world economic and financial situation,

Reaffirming that the resources released through the reduction of military expenditures could be reallocated to the economic and social development of all States, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries,

Firmly convinced that the reduction of military expenditures will have a positive impact on the process of strengthening confidence and improving international security and co-operation among States,

Desirous of bringing its contribution to the achievement of these goals,

1. Welcomes the work of the Disarmament Commission on the identification and elaboration of a set of principles that should govern further actions of States in the field of the freezing and reduction of military budgets;

2. Takes note of these principles, as annexed to the present resolution, and decides to bring them to the attention of Member States and of the Conference on Disarmament as useful guidelines for further action in the field of the freezing and reduction of military budgets;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

ANNEX

Principles that should govern further actions of States in the field of the freezing and reduction of military budgets

1. Concerted efforts should be made by all States, in particular by those States with the largest military arsenals and by the appropriate negotiating forums, with the objective of concluding international agreements to freeze and reduce military budgets, including adequate verification measures acceptable to all parties. Such agreements should contribute to genuine reductions of armed forces and armaments of States parties, with the aim of strengthening international peace and security at lower levels of armed forces and armaments. Definite agreements on the freezing and reduction of military expenditures are assuming special importance and should be reached within the shortest period of time in order to contribute to the curbing of the arms race, alleviate international tensions and increase the possibilities of reallocation of resources now being used for military purposes to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

2. All efforts in the field of the freezing and reduction of military expenditures should take into account the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant paragraphs of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly.

3. Pending the conclusion of agreements to freeze and reduce military expenditures, all States, in particular the most heavily armed States, should exercise self-restraint in their military expenditures.

4. The reduction of military expenditures on a mutually, agreed basis should be implemented gradually and in a balanced manner, either on a percentage or on an absolute basis, so as to ensure that no individual State or group of States may obtain advantages over others at any stage, and without prejudice to the right of all States to undiminished security and sovereignty and to undertake the necessary measures of self-defence.

5. While the freezing and reduction of military budgets is the responsibility of all States, to be implemented in stages in accordance with the principle of greatest responsibility, the process should begin with those nuclear-weapon States with the largest military arsenals and the biggest military expenditures, to be followed immediately by other nuclear-weapon States and militarily significant States. This should not prevent other States from initiating negotiations and reaching agreements on the balanced reduction of their respective military budgets at any time during this process.

6. Human and material resources released through the reduction of military expenditures should be devoted to economic and social development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries.

7. Meaningful negotiations on the freezing and reduction of military budgets would require that all parties to such negotiations have accepted and implemented transparency and comparability. The elaboration of agreed methods of measuring and comparing military expenditures between specified periods of time and between countries with different budgeting systems would be required. To this end States should utilize the reporting system adopted by the General Assembly in 1980.

8. Armaments and military activities that would be the subject of physical reductions within the limits provided for in any agreement to reduce military expenditures will be identified by every State party to such agreements.

9. The agreements to freeze and reduce military expenditures should contain adequate and efficient measures of verification, satisfactory to all parties, in order to ensure that their provisions are strictly applied and fulfilled by all States parties. The specific methods of verification or other compliance procedure should be agreed upon in the process of negotiation depending upon the purposes, scope and nature of the agreement.

10. Unilateral measures undertaken by States concerning the freezing and reduction of military expenditures, especially when they are followed by similar measures adopted by other States on the basis of mutual example, could contribute to favourable conditions for the negotiation and conclusion of international agreements to freeze and reduce military expenditures.

11. Confidence-building measures could help to create a political climate conducive to the freezing and reduction of military expenditures. Conversely, the freezing and reduction of military expenditures could contribute to the increase of confidence among States.

12. The United Nations should play a central role in orienting, stimulating and initiating negotiations on freezing and reducing military expenditures, and all Member States should co-operate with the Organization and among themselves, with a view to solving the problems implied by this process.

13. The freezing and reduction of military expenditures may be achieved, as appropriate, on a global, regional or subregional level, with the agreement of all States concerned.

14. The agreements on the freezing and reduction of military budgets should be viewed in a broader perspective, including respect for and implementation of the security system of the United Nations, and be interrelated with other measures of disarmament, within the context of progress towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control. The reduction of military budgets should therefore be complementary to agreements on the limitation of armaments and disarmament and should not be considered as a substitute for such agreements.

15. The adoption of the above principles should be regarded as a means of facilitating meaningful negotiations on concrete agreements on the freezing and reduction of military budgets.

On the same date and on the First Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/114 B, also by recorded vote.

Military budgets

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the encouraging progress achieved in arms limitations and disarmament,

Noting that further progress in disarmament negotiations could also lead to reductions in military expenditures,

Stressing that increased information on military matters is an important prerequisite for achieving agreements on the reduction of armed forces,

Recalling that an international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures has been introduced in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, and that national reports on military expenditures have been received from a number of Member States belonging to different geographic regions and having different budgeting and accounting systems,

Convinced that more transparency and comparability could be reached through broader participation in the standardized system of the United Nations for reporting military expenditures,

1. Considers that transparency requires also agreed methods of measuring and comparing military expenditures between specified periods of time and between countries with different budgeting systems;

2. Accordingly calls upon all States to make use of the reporting system adopted by the General Assembly;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Transparency and reduction of military budgets".

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

On 15 December, the Assembly, again on the recommendation of the First Committee, also adopted resolution 44/116 E by recorded vote.

Objective information on military matters The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 105 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which the Assembly encouraged Member States to ensure a better flow of information with regard to the various aspects of disarmament to avoid dissemination of false and tendentious information concerning armaments and to concentrate on the danger of escalation of the arms race and on the need for general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Taking into account the attention paid to the questions of openness and of ensuring an exchange of objective information in the military field at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Noting with satisfaction that recent agreements in the field of arms limitation and disarmament have provided for qualitatively new standards of openness,

Noting also with satisfaction an increased number of steps and proposals by different States aimed at achieving openness and transparency in military activities,

Believing that the adoption of confidence-building measures to promote openness and transparency would reduce the risk of misperceptions of military capabilities and intentions which could induce military rivalries between States, leading to their undertaking armaments programmes and the acceleration of the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, to heightened international tensions and, ultimately, to conflict,

Believing also that balanced and objective information on all military matters, in particular of nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, would contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements, and thereby help to halt and reverse the arms race,

Recognizing that greater openness and transparency would contribute to enhancing security,

Convinced that greater openness on military activities, inter alia, through the transmittal of relevant information on these activities, including on the levels of military budgets, would contribute to increased confidence among States,

Taking into account the work undertaken in the Disarmament Commission on the reduction of military budgets,

Noting with satisfaction that an increased number of States have provided annual reports on military expenditures in conformity with the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures under the auspices of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 G of 7 December 1988, in which it invited all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on ways and means of further consolidating the emerging trend towards greater openness in military matters, specifically with regard to the provision of objective information on military matters, for consideration by the Disarmament Commission at its 1990 session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on this subject to the third special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

2. Reaffirms its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military capabilities would help to relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States on a global, regional or subregional level and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements;

3. Recommends that those States and global, regional and subregional organizations which have already expressed support for the principle of practical and concrete confidence-building measures of a military nature on a global, regional or subregional level should intensify their efforts with a view to adopting such measures;

4. Recommends that all States, in particular nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, should implement the international system for the standardized reporting of military expenditure, with the aim of achieving a realistic comparison of military budgets, facilitating the availability of objective information on, as well as objective assessment of, military capabilities and contributing to the process of disarmament;

5. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General before 30 April 1990 measures they have adopted towards these ends, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

6. Requests the Disarmament Commission to include in the agenda for its 1990 session an item entitled "Objective information on military matters";

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters".

Disarmament and development

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly request,(10) the Secretary-General described in September 1989(11) activities undertaken by the Secretariat to implement the action programme contained in the Final Document adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development.(12) A high-level intra-secretariat task force was established in 1987 to identify activities to be carried out during the period 1988 to 1990, which included monitoring trends in military spending; facilitating exchanges of experience in conversion from military to civilian production; and promoting collective knowledge of non-military threats to international security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 L without vote.

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly related to the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and actions undertaken in accordance with the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through the appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

Also on 15 December, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/116 J by recorded vote.

Conversion of military resources

The General Assembly,

Conscious that many States wish to convert their military resources to civilian purposes,

Noting that such conversion ought to be carried out gradually following a careful study of the basic aspects and practical details of the reorientation of military production and personnel,

Noting also the importance of the appropriate knowledge and reporting of military expenditure,

Noting further that the efficient conversion of military production may require relevant administrative and legislative measures, as well as appropriate organizational, financial and other mechanisms,

Aware that economic, social, financial and other aspects ought to be taken into account in elaborating a national conversion programme,

Recalling its resolution 43/73 of 7 December 1988 on the reduction of military budgets,

Recalling also that there exist studies on certain aspects of conversion which could be used by the international community,

Desirous of promoting an exchange of experience, within the United Nations framework, on modalities for the conversion of military resources to civilian purposes,

1. Invites Member States to submit to the Secretary-General by 30 April 1991 their views concerning various aspects of the conversion of military resources to civilian purposes;

2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Conversion of military resources to civilian purposes".

Information and studies

World Disarmament Campaign

As in previous years, the World Disarmament Campaign-launched by the General Assembly in 1982 at the start of its second special session devoted to disarmament(')-continued to inform, educate and generate public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations.

The Seventh United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign was convened in New York during Disarmament Week and the Assembly decided to hold an eighth conference in 1990 (resolution 44/117 A).

Financial difficulties persisted, making it necessary again to adjust some projects. Nevertheless, the Campaign carried out a large number of activities.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1989,(2)in his annual report on implementing the Campaign's objectives, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly of activities carried out by the United Nations system, including information materials, special events and publicity programmes. DDA organized a seminar on African disarmament and security (Cairo, Egypt, 20-23 March) and a regional conference (Dagomays, USSR, 12-16 June). The Department of Public Information continued to inform the public of United Nations activities in the disarmament area by providing radio and television coverage, arranging briefings for non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and organizing other events at Headquarters and United Nations information centres around the world.

Financing

The Seventh United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held in New York on 25 October, with 80 delegates participating.(3)

Either during the Conference or at other times during the year, the following pledges were earmarked for the Campaign: Australia ($A 30,000), Austria ($10,000), Bulgaria (50,000 leva), Byelorussian SSR (200,000 roubles for 1990-1993), China ($10,000), Ecuador ($1,000), Finland (50,000 markkaa), Greece ($5,000), Indonesia ($5,000), Kuwait ($5,000), Norway ($6,000), Saudi Arabia ($5,000), Sweden (150,000 kronor), Ukrainian SSR (300,000 roubles for 1990-1993), USSR (500,000 roubles for 1990-1993), Zaire ($1,000); for UNIDIR, Australia ($A 20,000), Bulgaria (65,000 leva), Canada ($Can 10,000), Finland (75,000 markkaa), Nigeria ($10,000), Norway ($49,975), Spain ($10,000 for 1990 and $15,000 for 1991), Sweden ($40,000), USSR (250,000 roubles and $20,000); for the regional centre in Latin America and the Caribbean, Ecuador ($757.), Norway ($10,000), Peru ($5,000), Spain ($5,000 for 1989 and $5,000 for 1990), Uruguay ($1,000); for the seminar on confidence-building measures in the maritime domain (Helsingör, Denmark), Finland (100,000 markkaa), Sweden ($30,000); for the regional centre in Asia, Federal Republic of Germany ($15,000), Nepal ($7,000), Norway ($10,000), Philippines (22,000 pesos); for the regional centre in Africa, Norway ($10,000); for the disarmament training programme for Asia and the Pacific, Norway ($15,000); and New Zealand, an unallocated pledge ($NZ 15,000).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/117 A by recorded vote.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in paragraph 15 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly the first special session devoted to disarmament, it declared that it was essential that not only Governments but also the peoples of the world recognize and understand the dangers in the present situation and stressed the importance of mobilizing world public opinion on behalf of disarmament,

Recalling also its resolution 43/76 C of 7 December 1988,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General of 20 October 1989 on the implementation of the programme of activities of the World Disarmament Campaign by the United Nations system,

Having also examined the part of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 October 1989 dealing with the activities of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters relating to the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the Final Act of the Seventh United Nations Pledging Conference for the Campaign, held on 25 October 1989,

Noting with appreciation the contributions that Member States have already made to the Campaign,

1. Reiterates its commendation of the manner in which, as described in the above-mentioned reports, the World Disarmament Campaign has been geared by the Secretary-General in order to guarantee the widest possible dissemination of information and unimpeded access for all sectors of the public to a broad range of information and opinions on questions of arms limitation and disarmament and the dangers relating to all aspects of the arms race and war, in particular nuclear war";

2. Recalls that, as was also agreed by consensus in the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, it is likewise an essential requisite for the universality of the Campaign that it receive the co-operation and participation of all States;

3. Endorses once more the statement made by the Secretary-General on the occasion of the Third United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign to the effect that such co-operation implies that adequate funds be made available and that consequently the criterion of universality also applies to pledges, since a campaign without world-wide participation and funding will have difficulty in reflecting this principle in its implementation;

4. Urges States that have not yet done so, especially those with the largest military expenditures, to make an initial financial contribution to the Campaign;

5. Decides that at its forty-fifth session there should be an eighth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States that have not yet announced any voluntary contributions will do so, bearing in mind the objectives of the Third Disarmament Decade and the need to ensure its success;

6. Reiterates its recommendation that the voluntary contributions made by Member States to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund should not be earmarked for specific activities inasmuch as it is most desirable that the Secretary-General enjoy full freedom to take the decisions he deems fit within the framework of the Campaign previously approved by the General Assembly and in exercise of the powers vested in him in connection with the Campaign;

7. Notes with appreciation that the Secretary-General has given permanent character to his instructions to the United Nations information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the Campaign and, whenever necessary, to adapt, as far as possible, United Nations information materials to local languages;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report covering both the implementation of the programme of activities of the Campaign by the United Nations system during 1990 and the programme of activities contemplated by the system for 1991;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to assess the achievements and shortcomings of the World Disarmament Campaign so far and to submit a brief report in this regard to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign".

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

In October 1989, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa,⁽⁴⁾ which had been inaugurated in 1986 at Lomé, Togo.⁽⁵⁾ The Centre held a high-level experts' workshop (14-18 August), which focused on the main sources of threats to peace, regional and subregional security in Africa; ways and means of preventing and resolving conflicts in Africa by peaceful means; and the relationship between national, regional and global security, disarmament and development. It continued to disseminate information relating to peace, security and development.

As decided by the Assembly in 1986,⁽⁶⁾ the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean was established on 1 January 1987 and inaugurated at Lima, Peru, on 9 October of that year.⁽⁷⁾ In October 1989,⁽⁸⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the Centre had expanded its contacts with organizations and individuals in the region and had taken steps towards establishing a reference and documentation service on issues of peace, security, disarmament and development. During the year, the Centre provided assistance to NGOs.

Also in October,⁽⁹⁾ the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia, established in 1987,⁽¹⁰⁾ was inaugurated at Kathmandu, Nepal, on 30 January 1989. The initial activities of the Centre focused on the dissemination of information on United Nations activities in the area of arms limitation and disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/117 F by recorded vote.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, 41/60 D of 3 December 1986, 42/39 J of 30 November

1987 and 43/76 D of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, 41/60 J of 3 December 1986, 42/39 K of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 H of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 42/42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 G of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia,

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/100 F of 13 December 1982, 38/73 J of 15 December 1983, 39/63 F of 12 December 1984, 40/94 A of 12 December 1985, 42/59 M of 3 December 1986 and 42/39 E of 30 November 1987 on regional disarmament,

Taking note of the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,^a and noting in particular the importance placed by the heads of State or Government on the activities of the United Nations regional centres in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean

Convinced that the initiatives and activities mutually agreed upon by Member States of the respective regions aimed at fostering mutual confidence and security, as well as the implementation and co-ordination of regional activities under the World Disarmament Campaign, would encourage and facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament in these regions,

Expressing its gratitude to the Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations that have contributed to the trust funds of the three regional centres,

Bearing in mind the need to provide the centres with financial stability so as to facilitate the planning of their activities,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the regional centres in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean, and of the efforts of the Secretary-General in providing the necessary administrative measures to permit the establishment of the three centres,

Convinced that the appointment of a Director to head each of the three regional centres is essential to ensure the continued effective functioning of the centres,

Noting that the responsibilities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia include the Asia-Pacific region,

1. Appeals once again to Member States, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations, to make voluntary contributions in order to strengthen the effective operational activities of the centres;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for all the efforts he has made in favour of the centres, and requests him to continue to provide all the necessary support to their activities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, as soon as practicable, the post of Director at each of the regional centres so as to ensure the effective functioning of the centres;

4. Decides to rename the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia as the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disarmament Week

Disarmament Week, an annual event starting on United Nations Day, 24 October, and aimed at fostering the objectives of disarmament, was observed on 25 October 1989 at United Nations Headquarters at a special meeting of the General Assembly's First Committee, where statements were made by the President of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the First Committee.

In an August report with later addenda,⁽¹¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted information received from 11 Member States, as well as from the United Nations system and international NGOs on their activities to promote the Week's objectives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/119 G without vote.

Disarmament Week

The General Assembly,

Noting that there have been important developments of late in the areas of arms limitation and disarmament efforts which provide a sense of encouragement and hope for a more secure world,

Noting at the same time that, despite the positive developments, the arms race still poses a grave threat to world peace and security,

Stressing the vital importance of eliminating the threat of nuclear and conventional war, ending the nuclear and conventional arms race and bringing about disarmament,

Emphasizing anew the need for and the importance of world public opinion in support of halting and reversing the global arms race in all its aspects,

Taking into account the aspirations of the world public to prevent an arms race in space and to terminate it on Earth,

Noting with satisfaction the broad and active support by Governments and international and national organizations of the decision taken by the General Assembly at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, regarding the proclamation of the week starting 24 October, the day of the foundation of the United Nations, as a week devoted to fostering the objectives of disarmament,

Recalling the recommendations concerning the World Disarmament Campaign contained in annex V to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in particular the recommendation that Disarmament Week should continue to be widely observed,

Noting the support for the further observance of Disarmament Week expressed by Member States at the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Recognizing the significance of the annual observance of Disarmament Week, including by the United Nations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up measures undertaken by States, governmental and non-governmental organizations in holding Disarmament Week;

2. Commends all States, international and national governmental and non-governmental organizations for their active support for and participation in Disarmament Week;

3. Invites all States that so desire, in carrying out appropriate measures at the local level on the occasion of Disarmament Week, to take into account the elements of the model programme for Disarmament Week prepared by the Secretary-General;

4. Invites Governments to continue, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 33/71 D of 14 December 1978, to inform the Secretary-General of activities undertaken to promote the objectives of Disarmament Week;

5. Invites international and national non-governmental organizations to continue to take an active part in Disarmament Week and to inform the Secretary-General of the activities undertaken;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to use the United Nations information organs as widely as possible to promote better understanding among the world public of disarmament problems and the objectives of Disarmament Week;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 33/71 D, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disarmament studies and research

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

Following the Advisory Board's 1988 deliberations concerning its own role,⁽¹²⁾ and taking into account other suggestions for improvements, the Secretary-General decided in early 1989 to make a number of changes in the functioning of the Board. With effect from 1 January 1989, the title of the Board was changed from Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies to Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters. That change was in line with the Board's views and suggestions made by many delegations in order to reflect more accurately the functions set out in the Board's mandate, which remained unchanged.

In its new form (twentieth session, New York, 6-11 July),⁽¹³⁾ the Board discussed the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign and its own activities in its capacity as Board of Trustees of UNIDIR. In addition, it held a discussion on the topic "The changing world-implications for arms limitation and disarmament".

The Board approved UNIDIR's programme of work for 1990 and recommended a subvention of $220,000 from the United Nations regular budget for 1990.

The General Assembly approved the subvention by resolution 44/202 A.

UN Institut for Disarmament Research

In August 1989, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of UNIDIR covering the period from October 1988 to June 1989.⁽¹⁴⁾ In addition to its ongoing research projects, UNIDIR, in co-operation with the Institut française des relations internationales, organized a conference on problems and perspectives of conventional disarmament in Europe (Geneva, 23-25 January).

By resolution 44/201 B, section IV, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, without prejudice to the UNIDIR statute, to intensify his efforts to attract voluntary contributions to the Institute in order to obviate the need for a subvention from the regular budget. It also requested him to review the question of programme support costs and to report annually on the situation of the Institute.

UN disarmament studies programme

In 1989, no new studies were mandated by the General Assembly, nor were any study reports completed for the Secretary-General to transmit to the Assembly. Several studies requested in 1988, however, were under preparation, concerning the role of the United Nations in the field of verification; an update of the 1980 Comprehensive Study on Nuclear Weapons;(15) international arms transfers; the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East; and scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security.

Education and information for disarmament

On 15 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/123 by recorded vote.

Education for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Firmly convinced that the United Nations was established for the purpose of laying the foundations of a new world order whose general lines are set out in Article 2 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Fully aware that a peace based exclusively upon the political and economic arrangements of Governments would not be a peace that could secure the unanimous, lasting and sincere support of the world, and that the peace must be founded, if it is not to fail, upon the intellectual and moral solidarity of mankind,

Fully persuaded that, since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed,

Taking into account the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in particular paragraph 106 thereof, in which the Assembly urged Governments and governmental and non-governmental international organizations to take steps to develop programmes of education for disarmament and peace studies at all levels,

Considering that paragraphs 99, 100 and 101 of the Final Document provide for the mechanisms of a programme to mobilize world public opinion on behalf of disarmament, including the dissemination of supplementary information and publicity as part of its educational work,

Also considering that the World Disarmament Campaign plays an important supplementary role in the educational efforts on behalf of disarmament carried out by Member States within their own educational and cultural development systems, but that it cannot achieve irreversible results until training programmes are carried out at all levels of formal education for the purpose of changing basic attitudes with respect to aggression, violence, armaments and war,

1. Invites Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations to inform the Secretary-General about all the efforts that they have made to respond to the call made in paragraph 106 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report, within available resources, on the current state of education for disarmament, taking into account the reports of Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations and based on information available from other kinds of sources;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General co submit the reports requested in paragraphs 1 and 2 above to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Education and information for disarmament".

Against: None.

Abstaining: France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy,* United Kingdom, United States.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Fellowship, training and advisory services programme

In October 1989,(16) the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, stating that 24 fellows had been selected to participate in 1989. The programme-comprising lectures, seminars and panel discussions, research projects on peace and disarmament, simulation exercises and study visits-began on 3 July at Geneva and ended in New York on 23 November. During the first part of the programme, the fellows followed meetings of the Conference on Disarmament and, during the latter part, the work of the First Committee. In the course of their work, they also made study visits to IAEA headquarters at Vienna and, at the invitation of the States concerned, to offices and institutions in the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, the USSR and the United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December 1989, on the recommendation of the First Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/117 E without vote.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from 20 to 25 as from 1983,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984, 40/151 H of 16 December 1985, 41/60 H of 3 December 1986, 42/39 I of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 F of 7 December 1988,

Noting also with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, has enabled an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and in the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America for inviting the 1989 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Nigeria for serving as host to the United Nations Regional Disarmament Workshop for Africa, which examined African security perceptions and requirements, including related regional issues, and to the Government of Norway for making financial contributions for the Workshop;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of the programme within existing resources;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the programme.

15	December	1989	Meeting	81	Adopted	without	vote

Approved by First Committee (A/44/786) without vote, 9 November (meeting 32); 22-nation draft (A/C.1/44/L.59/Rev.1); agenda item 64 (g).

Sponsors: Algeria, Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Cuba, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Hungary, Indonesia, Liberia, Morocco, Myanmar, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan, Philippines, Sweden, USSR, Venezuela, Zaire.

Chapter III

Peaceful uses of outer space

During 1989, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Sub-Committees continued consideration of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space.

In December, the General Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendations regarding international co-operation in outer space and the initiative of international organizations and bodies to designate 1992 as International Space Year (resolution 44/46).

Science, technology and law

General aspects

The Committee on outer space,⁽¹⁾ in accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽²⁾ continued its consideration, as a matter of priority, of ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes. The Committee, at its thirty-second session (New York, 5-15 June), felt that it had, through its work in the scientific, technical and legal fields, an important role to play in assuring that outer space was maintained for peaceful purposes. It had responsibilities for strengthening the international basis for peaceful co-operation which could cover, among other things, further developments of international space law, including preparation of international agreements governing various practical peaceful applications of the achievements of space science and technology.

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

The Secretary-General, in August,⁽³⁾ reported on the progress made in implementing the recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82).⁽⁴⁾ The report covered the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, inter-agency and regional co-operation, various studies, the United Nations

Programme on Space Applications, technical advisory services, the International Space Information Service and voluntary contributions.

The Working Group was re-established in 1989⁽⁵⁾ by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee with a view to improving the execution of international co-operation activities, particularly those included in the United Nations Programme on Space Applications (see below), and to increase such co-operation and make it more efficient.

The Working Group met in New York between 22 February and 1 March. Since many of the UNISPACE-82 recommendations had still not been fully implemented, the Working Group proposed that the emphasis of the Programme on Space Applications should remain on long-term, project-oriented, on-the-job training in specific application areas of space technology; and that activities recommended in the report of the Expert on Space Applications for 1989⁽⁶⁾ should be carried out (see below). Other recommendations included the following: promotion of better access to higher education in space-related subjects, with the United Nations providing on request experts in preparing national plans of action; participation of international and regional financial and development institutions; regional co-operation through resource sharing, with United Nations assistance in establishing a regional programme if requested; constant review by the Programme on Space Applications of recommendations of regional meetings of experts; greater specialist interaction for promoting wider application of the results of scientific research; encouragement to non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in integrating regional and interregional efforts by means of conferences, publications and other activities; updated Outer Space Affairs Division reports on the resources of States; and provision to developing countries, by countries with relevant capabilities, of assistance in developing low-cost community receivers for communication satellites and low-cost, preferably renewable, power sources to operate them in unelectrified locations; also, continual provision of data by satellite-operating States in a form compatible with current systems, and increase by the Outer Space Affairs Division of the number of fellowships in space technology application for scientists and technicians from developing countries. The Working Group recommended that it be reconvened in 1990.

In addition, the Working Group renewed its 1988 recommendation that the Committee on outer space request all Member States and international organizations with space-related activities to inform the Secretary-General of activities that could be the subject of greater international co-operation.

Five Member States (Bulgaria, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Syrian Arab Republic, USSR) responded to the Secretary-General's request for such information.(7)

The Group's report and recommendation were adopted by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and annexed to its report and endorsed by the Committee on outer space.(1)

One of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82 was that an international space information service be established within the Outer Space Affairs Division of the United Nations. In 1989, the Division issued a revised edition of the directory on education, training, research and fellowship opportunities in space science and technology and its applications⁽⁸⁾ and an addendum to the directory on information systems on space science and technology.(9)

UN Programme on Space Applications

In 1989, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications focused on providing long-range fellowships for in-depth training and technical advisory services to Member States and regional institutions; organizing regional and international workshops, training courses, seminars and expert meetings; provision and development of indigenous capability; and promoting greater co-operation in space science and technology. Programme activities were described in a December report of the United Nations Expert on Space Applications to the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.(6) The Programme received offers to renew the following fellowships: Austria, two one-year fellowships in microwave technology; Brazil, 10 nine-month fellowships for training and research in remote-sensing technology; the German Democratic Republic, three fellowships in basic space sciences, satellite geodesy and remote sensing; the USSR, 15 fellowships in geodesy, cartography and aerial photography and six new fellowships in different fields of space science and technology; and the European Space Agency (ESA), four fellowships for studies in communications engineering, telecommunications, remote-sensing information systems and satellite meteorology.

In 1989, the Programme conducted four training courses, two meetings of experts and one workshop: the United Nations/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/ESA Meeting of Experts on Remote Sensing and

Satellite Meteorology Applications to Marine Resources and Coastal Management, for the benefit of Member States of the Atlantic coast of Africa region (Maspalomas, Canary Islands, Spain, 8-12 May);(10) the United Nations Meeting of Experts on the Development of Remote-Sensing Skills and Knowledge (Dundee, United Kingdom, 26-30 June);(11) the fifth United Nations/FAO/World Meteorological Organization (WMO)/ESA Training Course on the Use of Remote Sensor Systems (visible, infrared and microwave) in Agrometeorological and Hydrological Applications, organized for members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (Canberra, Australia, 15 May-2 June);(12) with a follow-up course on digital image processing (MicroBRIAN) (Brisbane, Australia, 5-16 June); a United Nations International Training Course on the Use of Remote-Sensing Data in Agriculture Management (Moscow, 25 September-6 October);(13) the second International Training Course on Remote-Sensing Applications to Geological Sciences (Potsdam, German Democratic Republic, 5-22 October);(14) the fourteenth United Nations/FAO International Training Course on Applications of Remote Sensing to Land Resources (Rome, Italy, 6-24 November);(15) and a United Nations/Indian Ocean Marine Affairs Co-operation Conference (IOMAC) Workshop on Oceanographic/Marine Space Information Systems (Karachi, Pakistan, 2-6 July).(16)

Publication began in 1989 of a series of papers selected from those presented under the auspices of the Programme, in the language of presentation. The first publication was entitled Seminars of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications. Selected Papers on Remote Sensing Technology.(17)

Programme activities were supported in 1989 with voluntary contributions from Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, France, the German Democratic Republic, Italy, Nigeria, Pakistan, Spain, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The United Nations Expert on Space Applications, in a 1988 report(18) considered by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in 1989, appealed to Member States and international organizations either to provide support for the Programme as a whole or to identify specific activities of the Programme they would like to support and inform the Secretariat accordingly.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(5) expressed concern over the meagre financial resources available to the Expert on Space Applications for carrying out the Programme and appealed to Member States to support the Programme through voluntary contributions, noting that the Programme was a priority activity.

The Committee on outer space(1) expressed appreciation to the Expert for the effective manner in which he had implemented the Programme within the limited funds at his disposal. The General Assembly, by its resolution 44/46 of 8 December, endorsed the Programme for 1990, as proposed to the Committee by the Expert, and urged States to make voluntary contributions to the Programme.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(5) continued to stress the necessity of ensuring continuous and effective consultations and co-ordination in the field of outer space activities among organizations within the United Nations system and the avoidance of duplication of activities. It noted with satisfaction that an Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities was being planned to consider, in particular, participation of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in the implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82. It reaffirmed its view that the United Nations should continue to seek the support of UNDP and that of other international funding organizations in carrying out UNISPACE-82 recommendations, while at the same time noting that UNDP was supporting the 1989 Programme and expressing hope for future support.

The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities (Geneva, 27-29 September),(19) convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), recommended that the 1990 inter-agency meeting consider a number of items, including co-ordination of plans and programmes in the application of space technology and activities of UNISPACE-82, an in-depth review of co-operation in remote-sensing activities and planning for International Space Year 1992. In addition, the meeting approved the programmes subsequently included in an October report(20) of the Secretary-General on the co-ordination of outer space activities in 1990, 1991 and future years. Activities in 1989 included education, training and information dissemination regarding remote sensing, communications, meteorology and aspects of space science and technology.

The Committee on outer space(1) reiterated the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee's call for consultations among United Nations organizations and the avoidance of duplication of work, and endorsed the Sub-Committee's view that the United Nations should continue to seek the support of UNDP and other international funding institutions and that the Secretariat should operate within UNDP funding procedures.

Science and technology aspects

At its twenty-sixth session (New York, 21 February-3 March 1989),(5) the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee paid particular attention to the question of remote sensing as applied to environmental problems, particularly of the developing countries, while continuing its work on nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft, technical aspects of the geostationary orbit, life sciences including space medicine, the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme, planetary exploration and astronomy.

Space technology and environmental problems

The theme of the Sub-Committee's 1989 session, "Space technology as an instrument for combating environmental problems, particularly those of developing countries", addressed problems such as desertification, deforestation, floods, erosion and pest infestation.

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution(2) and at the invitation of the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR), the Sub-Committee, with the participation of the Scientific Committee on Problems of the Environment (SCOPE), organized a symposium (New York, 21 and 22 February) on remote sensing applied to environmental problems, particularly of developing nations. Presentations were made on such matters as ecological control of the environment; tropical deforestation; the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; and the Egyptian, European, Indian and United States experiences.

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(5) reiterated its view that remote sensing from outer space should be carried out, taking into account the urgent need to assist the developing countries, and emphasized the importance of the availability of remote-sensing data and analysed data at reasonable cost and in a timely manner, as well as the need for free access to data from operational meteorological satellites. It noted the continuing programmes of China, France, India, Japan, the USSR and the United States for remote-sensing satellites as well as the planned remote-sensing satellite systems of Brazil, Canada and ESA. Poland said it would establish a United Nations inter-regional remote-sensing training centre for the benefit of developing countries. An expert from the United States made a presentation on remote sensing for disaster mitigation.

The Committee on outer space(1) recognized the importance of continuing international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of remote-sensing systems. It urged all countries and agencies to continue the free distribution of meteorological information. The Committee considered a paper on education and training opportunities in the United States in satellite remote sensing and related space sciences and applications.(21) It endorsed a recommendation by the Sub-Committee that the item be retained on its agenda as a priority item in 1990.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee reconvened the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, which met in New York from 27. February to 2 March.(5)

The Working Group was informed that the Cosmos 1900 satellite, following the loss of radio contact with the ground, had automatically shut down its reactor, separated it, and boosted it into a higher orbit, thereby allowing time for radioactive decay to a safe level prior to re-entry into the atmosphere. The lifetime of the parking orbit of the nuclear power device was about 200 years, and of the thermal element assembly more than 300 years.

The Working Group noted Member States' concern over the growing quantity of space debris and collision possibilities with space objects with nuclear power sources. It recommended that nuclear reactors used in Earth orbit should be stored, after their mission, in a parking orbit until radioactivity had decayed to an acceptable minimum level before re-entering the Earth's atmosphere; that, in view of possible failures in the systems of nuclear power sources or satellites during operations in orbit, there be a reliable operational system to ensure disposal of the reactor; and that, in the case of radioisotope generators, due to the presence of radioactive materials from the beginning of the flight, the containment for the radionuclide materials should be such that the probability of release of radioisotopes would be minimized. The Group considered it important to ensure protection of the environment in the event of the re-entry of a nuclear power source into the atmosphere. In particular, measures should be taken to prevent contamination of the surface of the Earth, and, if radioactive material reached the ground, to protect human health and the environment.

The Group agreed that safety standards for nuclear power sources in space should be formulated in terms of the objectives to be met by designers rather than in terms of technical solutions or choices, since a variety of technical solutions was acceptable. Safety standards needed to distinguish provisions required during normal operation (including all planned situations anticipated to occur perhaps only once during the lifetime of the mission) from provisions under accident conditions.

The Committee on outer space(1) endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that the agenda item be retained as a priority and that the Working Group continue its work at its 1990 session.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(5) continued consideration of the utilization and technical aspects of the geostationary orbit, in which satellites maintain an altitude of about 36,000 kilometres above the equator.

The Committee on outer space(1) endorsed the recommendation of the Sub-Committee that it continue consideration of the item at its next session.

International Space Year (1992)

In accordance with a General Assembly request of 1988,(2) the Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee considered the advisability of declaring 1992 as international space year. The Sub-Committee reviewed working papers submitted by the USSR(22) on its budget and by the United States,(23) outlining possible activities during an international space year. The Committee on outer space took note of the plans of COSPAR and the International Astronautical Federation (IAF) to celebrate 1992 as international space year with a joint world space congress and a major programme on "Mission to Planet Earth", and recommended that the international space year promote international co-operation for the benefit and in the interest of all States, with an emphasis on the needs of developing countries. The Committee considered that activities during the year should be organized through the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and international organizations such as COSPAR, IAF, the International Civil Service Union and the Space Agency Forum for the International Space Year, and that such activities should be undertaken through voluntary contributions by Member States and without any impact on the United Nations regular budget or existing programmes.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly endorse the initiative to designate 1992 as international space year, which the Assembly did in December in adopting the omnibus resolution on outer space matters (see below).

Spin-off benefits of space technology

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(2) the Committee on outer space took up a new item on the current status of spin-off benefits of space technology. It took note of a working paper submitted by the USSR,(24) outlining the Soviet activities regarding spin-off benefits; a working paper of the United States,(25) suggesting ways to enhance the information exchange on such benefits and the convening of a future seminar on spin-offs in the context of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications; "Spinoff 1988", (26) regarding activities of the United States National Aeronautics and Space Administration; and a contribution by FAO on the spin-off benefits in agriculture, forestry, fisheries and in the field of environmental protection. The Committee agreed that spin-offs were yielding substantial benefits in many fields, particularly energy, environmental protection, agriculture, forestry, marine fisheries, geophysical prospecting and medicine, including eye disease detection, heart attack protection, implantable medication systems and magnetic resonance imaging systems for diagnosing diseases. In the field of safety, spin-off applications resulted in the development of fire-resistant fabrics, fire-extinguishing materials and breathing systems for firefighters; industrial spin-offs included precision machine tools, testing and quality-control instruments, optical instruments and techniques, electronics and computer programmes. The Committee noted that the economic importance of these benefits was growing rapidly and in some cases was greater than the cost of the space programmes themselves. It also noted the importance of international co-operation in developing spin-off benefits and ensuring that all countries, in particular developing countries, had access to them.(1)

Other questions

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee(5) heard special presentations by France and the United States on life sciences in space and on terrestrial benefits derived from space research, respectively. The Sub-Committee noted that studies of human physiology under conditions of manned space flight had led to advances in medical knowledge in such areas as blood circulation, heart function and metabolism and that effects of microgravity on the human cardiovascular and nervous systems, as well as on animals and individual cells, had been investigated by astronauts from France, the USSR and the United States. It also took note of efforts to study the feasibility of developing biospheric monitoring and disease prediction systems which would apply remote-sensing technology to malaria and other vector-borne diseases.

The Sub-Committee said progress being made through international co-operation in the planning of the international geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme for the 1990s was of fundamental importance for examining the future habitability of the planet and managing the common natural resources of the Earth and that COSPAR should arrange a special presentation on the programme. In relation to planetary exploration, the Sub-Committee heard special presentations by Czechoslovakia on planetary science, by the United States on the Galileo mission to Jupiter, arriving in 1995, and by the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States on astronomy. Other special presentations included the International Space University (United States); life sciences in outer space (France); and the FY-1 meteorological satellite (China).

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, after noting developments in the space transportation system programmes in China, India, Japan, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States and binational international space transportation system programmes, stressed the importance of international co-operation in providing access to the benefits of such programmes for all countries. Experts from Bulgaria and the USSR made special presentations.

The Committee on outer space(1) endorsed the recommendation of the Sub-Committee to continue consideration of the item on space transportation in 1990.

Regarding the problem of collisions with and other aspects of space debris, the Committee on outer space considered it essential that more attention be paid to this problem by Member States and called for the continuation of national research on the question. It took note of a working paper(27) submitted by Australia, Belgium, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Nigeria and Sweden, which contained a proposal to put the issue of space debris on the agenda of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee at its 1990 session.

The Committee endorsed the decision of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee to continue consideration at its next session of items on the life sciences, including space medicine, progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme, matters relating to planetary exploration, and matters relating to astronomy, noting with satisfaction that special presentations by various experts were made under those items. It further endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that COSPAR and IAF be invited to present reports and that COSPAR arrange a special presentation on progress in the global change programme.

The Committee endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that the new theme at the 1990 Sub-Committee session should be "The use of space technology in terrestrial search and rescue and in disaster relief activities". It further endorsed the recommendation that COSPAR and IAF be invited to arrange a symposium on that theme.

Legal aspects

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-eighth session in New York from 20 March to 7 April.(28) It continued to consider the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space; ways to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit; and the legal aspects of the application of the principle that outer space activities should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries, a new item agreed to in 1988.(29)

Nuclear power sources in outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee's Working Group on the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space considered at its 1989 session a revised working paper(30) and two new working papers(31) presented by Canada. The revised paper proposed 11 principles, of which 3 had been agreed to by the Sub-Committee. The three agreed concerned applicability of international law; notification of re-entry; and assistance to States. The eight still under consideration concerned notification of the presence on board a space object of a nuclear power source; guidelines and criteria for safe use; safety assessment; consultations; responsibility of States; compensation; settlement of disputes; and relation with international treaties. The Sub-Committee also received papers by France(32) and the United Kingdom,(33) and another by Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden and the United Kingdom.(34) The latter paper concerned guidelines and criteria for safe use, incorporating ideas on the same subject put forward in the papers by France and the United Kingdom.

By the end of the session, the Working Group recorded consensus(28) on principles concerning consultations and the settlement of disputes.

The Committee on outer space(1) recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue consideration of the item in 1990.

Geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

Matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit were considered in the Legal Sub-Committee's Working Group, re-established by the Sub-Committee on 20 March 1989. The Working Group continued discussion of issues raised in previous years.(35) In the discussions, the Working Group considered working papers submitted to the Sub-Committee's previous sessions and exchanged views on a "working non-paper" on the geostationary orbit introduced by a number of members of the Group of 77.

The Working Group Chairman stated that the exchange of ideas with regard to the "non-paper" was substantive, useful and constructive, and would constitute a positive platform for future debate.

Benefits from the exploration of outer space

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(2) the Legal Sub-Committee considered the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries. The Assembly had urged the Sub-Committee to pursue the question of the establishment of a working group on this item.

The Sub-Committee reviewed the replies(36) to the Secretary-General's note verbale of 26 September 1988, inviting Member States to submit their views on the priority of subjects under the item and provide information on their national legal frameworks relating to the application of the principle contained in article 1 of the 1967 'Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.(37)

The Sub-Committee adopted a proposal by Austria on the method of work on this item.

The Committee on outer space recommended that the Sub-Committee continue consideration of the item at its 1990 session.(1)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 44/46.

International co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space

Recalling its resolution 43/56 of 6 December 1988,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and of the importance of international co-operation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law and their important role in international co-operation for the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Gravely concerned at the extension of an arms race into outer space,

Recognizing that all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, should contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international co-operation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Aware of the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to the socio-economic advancement of mankind, in particular that of the peoples of developing countries,

Considering that space debris is an issue of concern to all nations,

Noting the progress achieved in the further development of peaceful space exploration and application as well as in various national and co-operative space projects, which contribute to international co-operation in this field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its thirty-second session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States that have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties;

3. Notes that, at its twenty-eighth session, the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, in its working groups, continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in resolution 43/56;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Legal Sub-Committee, at its twenty-ninth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Continue, through its working group, the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear-power sources in outer space;

(b) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union.

(c) Continue its consideration of the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries;

5. Endorses the recommendations of the Legal Sub-Committee on the method of work concerning the agenda item referred to in paragraph 4 (c) above, and notes that the working group will be established in 1990 and convened in 1991 in accordance with paragraph 53 (c) of the report of the Legal Sub-Committee;

6. Calls upon Member States to respond promptly to the requests issued by the Secretary-General in connection with paragraphs 53 (a) and (b) of the report of the Legal Sub-Committee;

7. Notes that, at its twenty-sixth session, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in resolution 43/56;

8. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, at its twenty-seventh session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Consider the following items on a priority basis:

(i) United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system;

(ii) Implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

(iii) Matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including, inter alia, applications for developing countries;

(iv) Use of nuclear-power sources in outer space;

(b) Consider the following items:

(i) Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;

(ii) Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit; examination of its utilization and applications, including, inter alia, in the field of space communications, as well as other questions relating to space communications developments, taking particular account of the needs and interests of developing countries;

(iii) Matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine;

(iv) Progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation should be invited to present reports and arrange a special presentation on this subject; Matters relating to planetary exploration;

(v) Matters relating to astronomy;

(vii) The theme fixed for special attention at the 1990 session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee: "The use of space technology in terrestrial search and rescue and in disaster relief activities"; the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation should be invited to arrange a symposium, with as wide a participation as possible, to be held during the first week of the Sub-Committee's session, after the adjournment of its meetings, to complement discussions within the Sub-Committee;

9. Considers, in the context of paragraph 8 (a) (ii) above, that it is particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations:

(a) All countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space;

(b) Data banks at the national and regional levels should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of co-ordination;

(c) The United Nations should support the creation of adequate training centres at the regional level, linked, whenever possible, to institutions implementing space programmes; necessary funding for the development of such centres should be made available through financial institutions;

(d) The United Nations should organize a fellowship programme through which selected graduates or postgraduates from developing countries should get in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications; it is also desirable to encourage the availability of opportunities for such exposures on other bilateral and multilateral bases outside the United Nations system;

10. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee should reconvene, at its twenty-seventh session, the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, with a view to improving the execution of activities relating to international co-operation, particularly those included within the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, and to proposing concrete steps to increase such co-operation, as well as to make it more efficient;

11. Also endorses the recommendations of the Working Group of the Whole, as endorsed by the Committee and as contained in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 of the report of the Working Group of the Whole;

12. Decides that, during the twenty-seventh session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space shall be reconvened to conduct additional work on the basis of its previous reports and of subsequent reports of the Sub-Committee;

13. Endorses the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1990, as proposed to the Committee by the Expert on Space Applications, and urges all States to make voluntary contributions to the Programme in order to enhance its effectiveness;

14. Emphasizes the urgency and importance of implementing fully the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space as early as possible;

15. Reaffirms its approval of the recommendation of the Conference regarding the establishment and strengthening of regional mechanisms of co-operation and their promotion and creation through the United Nations system;

16. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments that have made or expressed their intention to make contributions towards carrying out the recommendations of the Conference;

17. Invites all Governments to take effective action for the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

18. Requests all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters to co-operate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

20. Endorses the initiative of international scientific organizations and bodies to designate 1992 as International Space Year;

21. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that international co-operation should be promoted through the International Space Year, which should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries, and that, in that context, the training and educational capabilities of the United Nations Programme on Space Applications should be utilized to bring about a meaningful role for the United Nations, through voluntary contributions by Member States and without any impact on the regular budget of the United Nations or the existing programme of work of the Programme;

22. Recommends that more attention should be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

23. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions with space debris and other aspects of space debris, and calls for the continuation of national research on that question;

24. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international co-operation in the exploration and uses of outer space for peaceful purposes;

25. Takes note of the views expressed and documents circulated during the thirty-second session of the Committee and during the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly concerning ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes;

26. Requests the Committee to continue to consider, as a matter of priority, ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

27. Also requests the Committee to continue to consider at its thirty-third session its agenda item entitled "Spin-off benefits of space technology: review of current status";

28. Affirms that the interference that satellite systems to be newly established may cause to systems already registered with the International Telecommunication Union shall not exceed the limits specified in the relevant provision of the Radio Regulations of the Union applicable to space services;

29. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their co-operation with the Committee and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

30. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/44/814) without vote, 17 November (meeting 21); draft by Austria for Working Group on International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (A/SPC/44/L.18); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: SPC 19-21; plenary 78.

In resolution 44/112, the Assembly again called on all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and to take immediate measures to prevent an arms race in outer space. It urged the USSR and the United States to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations aimed at reaching early agreement on the matter and requested the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a priority matter prevention of an arms race in outer space.

Spacecraft launchings

During 1989, eight countries (Australia, Czechoslovakia, France, Japan, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States⁽¹⁾) provided information to the United Nations on the launching of objects into orbit or beyond, in accordance with a 1961 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁾ and article IV of the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space,⁽³⁾ which had entered into force in 1976.

Chapter IV

Other political questions

In 1989, questions related to information, effects of atomic radiation and Antarctica were again on the General Assembly's agenda. United Nations public information policies and activities were assessed and recommendations made (resolution 44/50) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization agreed by consensus upon a new strategy for the development of communication and the free flow of information. As to atomic radiation, the Assembly requested the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation to continue its work on the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources (44/45). On the issue of Antarctica, the Assembly underlined its significance for international peace and security, environment, global climate conditions, economy and scientific research (44/124 B). It appealed again for the exclusion of South Africa from the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties until the system and practices of apartheid were eliminated (44/124 A).

In the ongoing efforts towards finding a solution to the Cyprus question, the Secretary-General, in exercise of his good offices, met with the two leaders of the island communities and presented ideas to assist them in reaching agreement, proposing resumed talks between them for February 1990.

During 1989, the Security Council held a total of 69 meetings and adopted 20 resolutions. The Assembly resumed and concluded its forty-third session and held the major part of its forty-fourth session with 161 items on the agenda. It also held its sixteenth special session, covering apartheid and its destructive consequences in southern Africa.

The Assembly requested strengthened co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States (44/7), and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (44/8). It also invited the Council of Europe to participate in its work in the capacity of observer (44/6).

As there were no new admissions to the United Nations during 1989, its membership remained 159.

Information

The public information activities of the United Nations in 1989 continued to focus on two broad objectives: enhancing the information and communication capabilities of the developing countries and promoting an informed understanding of the work and purpose of the United Nations system among the peoples of the world. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

Information policies and activities were also reviewed at the eleventh session of the General Assembly's Committee on Information (New York, 13-28 April), following an organizational session on 6 March.⁽¹⁾ Recommendations were not annexed to the Committee's report since it was agreed to continue consultations during the Assembly session. The report was considered by the Special Political Committee in November and acted on by the Assembly in December in resolution 44/50. The Assembly, by decisions 44/418 and 44/313 of 8 December, increased the Committee on Information's membership from 73 to 74 and appointed Nepal as additional member.

Mass communication

At its 1989 session, the Committee on Information elaborated on the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order, and examined United Nations public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations and the progress achieved by the United Nations system in the field of information and communication.

Proposed new world information and communication order

The Committee on Information continued to examine the question of the establishment of a new world information and communication order. Delegations generally emphasized the need for consensus, and many of them felt that separating the Committee's mandate to the Department of Public Information from the broader questions would break the deadlock in the Committee and steer it towards a more progressive path.

UNESCO continued its collaborative research into the impact of new communication technologies, supported the preparation of a communication research catalogue in Western Europe, and took part in setting up an information network for Latin America. In March, UNESCO awarded its third IPDC-UNESCO Prize for Rural Communication to two projects: People's Cultural Action of Colombia and National Association of Small Farmers of Cuba.

At its twenty-fifth session (Paris, 17 October-16 November),(2) the General Conference of UNESCO agreed by consensus upon a new strategy for the development of communications and the free flow of information as part of UNESCO's 1990-1995 medium-term plan. Entitled "Communication in the service of humanity", it included: encouragement of the free flow of information at both international and national levels and promotion of wider and better balanced dissemination of information; enhancement of communication capacities of developing countries to increase their participation in the development process, including strengthening the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC), providing training in media and communications fields, and enhancing technological capabilities; and advancement of mutual knowledge and understanding in the world through mass communication. The new strategy unequivocally supported freedom of the press and called on the United Nations to strive for the development of free, independent and pluralistic media in the public and private sectors.

International Programme for the Development of Communication

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(3) the Director-General of UNESCO, in September 1989, submitted to the Assembly a report(4) examining the application of IPDC- a project aimed at helping developing countries to build communication infrastructure-and the social, economic and cultural effects of the accelerated development of communication technologies.

At its tenth session (Paris, 7-13 March), the IPDC Intergovernmental Council concentrated its future actions on a limited number of projects with multiplier effects and decided that a country could obtain financing for only one project at each session, regardless of its stage of implementation, thus reducing the number of approved and financed projects from 55 with an average of $35,000 per project in 1988 to 18 with an average of $88,700 per project. Two of the projects were interregional, 5 regional and 11 national.

African States received allocations of $613,000; Asian and Pacific States $422,000; interregional projects $100,000; and regional projects $461,500.

Among the interregional projects were allocations to the development of the network of the Pool of News Agencies of Non-Aligned Countries, and the regional projects included training for audience research specialists in eight Central African countries, development of the rural press in South-East Asia, and increasing regional television co-production in the Caribbean. Among projects in African States were establishment of community radio stations in Ethiopia; communications training for social change in the Gambia; resource extension and development of professional training for the Mauritanian Broadcasting Service; rehabilitation of Zanzibar television; manpower planning and development for Uganda's Ministry of Information and Broadcasting; and rescuing and safeguarding Sudan's audio-visual heritage. Projects in Asia and the Pacific included development of Bangladesh's film training facilities; mass media training in the Lao People's Democratic Republic; television programme production in Maldives; Nepal's folk music recording project; and a rural radio project in Samoa.

DPI activities

During 1989, DPI, through its radio, visual and publications services and information centres, continued to implement United Nations information activities.

In accordance with a request from the General Assembly regarding implementation of its main 1988 resolution on information,(5) the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1989,(6)

Pursuant to the resolution,(5) the Committee on Information also had before it the following reports pertaining to the work of DPI: assessment of the effectiveness of the UN Chronicle: 1988 survey;(7) a application of modern technologies within DPI;(8) public information activities of the United Nations pertaining to the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine;(9) public information activities pertaining to the policies and practices of apartheid;(10) a progress report on the staff of DPI in posts subject to geographical distribution(11) prepared by the Secretariat; and two reports submitted by the Secretary-General: a review of public information activities in the Secretariat external to DPIL(12) and the implementation of recommendation 37(13) of the Group of High-Level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations concerning a thorough review of DPI's functions, working methods and policies, with a view to consolidating functions and improving the quality of its activities.(14)

The ninth annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries (New York, 12 September-20 October) was held to provide training and briefings on major issues before the United Nations for 17 young journalists. This included an international seminar on sex role stereotyping in the media's portrayal of women and its implications, organized in co-operation with Columbia University, New York. The United Nations Fellowship Programme for Educators-formerly called the Triangular Fellowship Programme-was held to promote education about the United Nations system in teacher education programmes (Dakar, Senegal, 4-13 December). The Department also co-sponsored an all-day symposium and workshop on human rights (19 October) and continued its full coverage of the meetings of all United Nations bodies concerned with this issue.

In July, DPI held a number of regional and national encounters of journalists and experts on the question of Palestine, and issued a booklet entitled The United Nations and the Question of Palestine. It prepared a comprehensive press kit in connection with the Economic Commission for Africa's report on an African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation,(15) and a kit on the Secretary-General's report reviewing the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990(16) The Department also prepared two press kits on the United Nations Transition Assistance Group for Namibia (UNTAG).

Through its internal and external publications, DPI continued to disseminate relevant information on disarmament. It co-published a number of studies on this issue and produced a brochure entitled Disarmament: A Global Concern.

The Department continued to strengthen its ties with the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries by sending daily news dispatches to its members and by participating in the Pool's Fifth General Conference (Luanda, Angola, 1-5 June).

UN information centres

The United Nations information centres (UNICs) continued to assist press and information media in their respective countries and intensified direct and systematic communication exchange with local media, educational institutions and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). United Nations information was regularly disseminated through UNICs for immediate distribution to local radio stations and newspapers. In order to improve co-ordination of field office and Headquarters activities on both programme and administrative issues, DPI continued to organize regional meetings with UNIC directors. It held such a regional meeting for directors in the Americas (Mexico City, February) and conducted a number of staff training programmes and workshops, including a training seminar for information assistants from 13 centres in different regions (New York, June); a workshop for administrative assistants from centres in Europe (Geneva, August); and a training programme for reference assistants from 12 centres in English-speaking African countries (Nairobi, December).

Co-ordination within the UN system

The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) -the inter-agency co-ordinating body for information activities in the United Nations system-did not hold its annual session in 1989. The inter-sessional period was used to prepare a revision of the Committee's terms of reference, in order to make it a more effective and action-oriented body.

Consultations between the Under-Secretary-General for Public Information and information directors of several United Nations specialized agencies and programmes resulted in an issues paper entitled "Enhancing the public image of the United Nations system"(17) which was considered by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) in October.(18) ACC adopted recommendations on improving inter-agency co-ordination in the field of information and a revision of JUNIC's terms of reference aimed at projecting a more coherent image of the United Nations system as a whole and making optimal use of the system's scarce resources.

DPI signed an initial agreement with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) on rationalizing United Nations field representation, intended to strengthen their co-operation in the field, make their relationship more mutually beneficial and reduce potential areas of duplication.

In November, the Special Political Committee(19) considered two reports submitted by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in response to a 1986 General Assembly resolution:(20) "Review of UN public information networks-Reorganization of the Department of Public Information"(21) and "Review of UN public information networks-United Nations information centres", (22) and the related comments of the Secretary-General.(23) The Committee also had before it two non-papers with the Committee on Information's recommendations.(19)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/50 by recorded vote.

Questions relating to information

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on questions relating to information,

Reaffirming the mandate given to the Committee on Information by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/182 of 18 December 1979,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Also taking note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit and the conclusions and recommendations therein concerning the reorganization of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, as well as the comments of the Secretary-General thereon,

Encouraging the Secretary-General to continue necessary action in order to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the Department of Public Information, with particular emphasis on securing a co-ordinated approach to priority issues before the Organization,

Further taking note of the comprehensive report of the Committee on Information, which served as an important basis and stimulated further deliberations,

I

Information in the service of mankind

Urges the full implementation of the following recommendations:

(1) All countries, the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and adhering to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, should co-operate and interact in responding to the call for the establishment of a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process, aimed at eliminating the existing imbalances between developed and developing countries in the field of information and communication, at reducing existing disparities in information flows at the international as well as the national level and at improving the media infrastructure and communication technology in the developing countries in order to increase their participation in the communication process, based on the free flow and wider and better balanced dissemination of information as well as on the meaningful and equal participation of all countries in the field of information and communication, ensuring the diversity of sources of and free access to information and intended to advance the mutual knowledge and understanding of peoples through all means of mass communication as an important contribution towards strengthening international peace and understanding. The central role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in this regard, in line with that organization's strategies, should be reaffirmed;

(2) Fully aware of the important role that the media worldwide can freely play, the mass media should be encouraged to give wider and more objective coverage to the efforts of the international community towards global development and, in particular, the efforts of the developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress;

(3) All countries are urged to assure to journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks; all physical attacks against them should be resolutely condemned;

(4) Aware of the existing imbalances in the international distribution of news, particularly that affecting the developing countries, it is recommended that urgent attention should be given to the elimination of existing inequalities and the reduction of existing disparities in information flows at the international as well as the national level, to the encouragement of the free flow and the promotion of wider and better balanced dissemination of information, without any obstacle to freedom of expression, and to the advancement of mutual knowledge and understanding of peoples through the diversification of sources of information, respecting the interests, aspirations and socio-cultural values of all peoples;

(5) The United Nations system as a whole, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the developed countries should be urged to co-operate in a concerted manner with the developing countries and their media, public and private or other, with a view to strengthening the information and communication infrastructure in the developing countries and promoting their access to advanced communication technology, in accordance with their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by the developing countries, so as to enable them and their media to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and in the light of their social and cultural values, adhering to the principles of freedom of information and freedom of the press. In this regard, support should be provided for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries;

(6) Regional efforts and co-operation among developing countries, as well as co-operation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communication capacities and to develop further the media infrastructure in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information, should be enhanced so as to encourage the free flow of information and promote its wider and better balanced dissemination;

(7) In addition to bilateral co-operation, the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should aim at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and their media, public and private or other, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including in particular:

(a) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;

(b) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public and private or other, by using their national and regional resources, to have the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;

(c) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;

(8) Full support should be provided for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media;

II

United Nations public information policies and activities

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in respect of United Nations public information policies and activities, to implement the following recommendations:

(1) The United Nations system as a whole should co-operate in a concerted manner, through its information services, in promoting a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system in all its endeavours, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, with particular emphasis on the creation of a climate of confidence, the strengthening of multilateralism and the promotion of the development activities in the United Nations system;

(2) Reaffirming the primary role of the General Assembly in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information, the Secretary-General is requested to ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, are strengthened and improved, keeping in view the purposes and principles of the Charter, the priority areas defined by the Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information, so as to ensure an objective and more coherent coverage of, as well as better knowledge about, the United Nations and its work. The Secretary-General should ensure that the Department of Public Information:

(a) Co-operate more regularly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, especially at the working level, with a view to maximizing the contribution of the Department to the efforts of that organization in:

- (i) Encouraging the free flow of information, at the international as well as the national level;
- (ii) Promoting the wider and better balanced dissemination of information, without any obstacle to freedom of expression;
- (iii) Developing all the appropriate means of strengthening communication capacities in the developing countries in order to increase their participation in the communication process;
- (iv) Advancing the mutual knowledge and understanding of peoples through all means of mass communication and, to that end, recommending such international agreements as may be necessary to promote the free flow of ideas by word and image;

(b) Enhance its co-operation with news agencies of and in the developing countries, in particular the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, the Eco-Pool of the News Agencies of Non-Aligned Countries and the Broadcasting Organization of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as with other news agencies and intergovernmental and regional organizations;

(c) Continue to disseminate, in co-ordination with the information services of other relevant agencies, information about United Nations activities pertaining, in particular, to:

- (i) International peace and security;
- (ii) Disarmament;

(iii) Peace-keeping operations;

(iv) Decolonization and the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

(v) The elimination of foreign occupation;

(vi) Human rights;

(vii) The elimination of all forms of racial discrimination;

(viii) The advancement of the status of women and their role in society;

(ix) Problems of economic and social development, as well as international economic co-operation aimed at resolving external debt problems;

(x) The environment;

(xi) The campaign against terrorism in all its forms, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 40/61 of 9 December 1985;

(xii) The international campaign against drug abuse and illicit trafficking, including adequate coverage of the special session of the General Assembly, to be held from 20 to 23 February 1990, to consider the question of international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs, with a view to expanding the scope and increasing the effectiveness of such co-operation;

(d) Do its utmost to disseminate widely and to publicize the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and the tremendous efforts of the African countries towards recovery and development, as well as the positive response by the international community to alleviate the serious economic situation prevailing in Africa;

(e) Strengthen its activities and the dissemination of information on United Nations activities against the policies and practices of apartheid, giving due attention to the unilateral measures and official censorship imposed on the local and international media with regard to all aspects of that issue; provide adequate coverage of the sixteenth special session of the General Assembly on apartheid and its destructive consequences in southern Africa, to be held from 12 to 14 December 1989, and report thereon to the Committee on Information at its twelfth session, in 1990;

(f) Continue to disseminate information about activities of the United Nations directed at a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of international conflicts by exclusively peaceful means;

(g) Continue to cover all United Nations activities pertaining to the situation in the Middle East, and the question of Palestine in particular, and current developments in the region, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions, and report thereon to the Committee on Information at its twelfth session, in 1990;

(h) Continue to disseminate information about Namibia, in particular the current independence process as provided for in Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978; the Department should make adequate plans for the establishment of an information centre in Namibia, in consultation with the government of the new nation immediately after independence;

(i) Ensure the provision of coverage of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, to be held from 23 to 27 April 1990;

(3) The Department of Public Information should continue its efforts in promoting an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations system among the peoples of the world and in strengthening the image of the United Nations system as a whole. The Secretary-General should ensure that the Department:

(a) Continue to maintain consistent editorial independence and accuracy in reporting in all the material it produces, taking necessary measures to ensure that its output contains adequate, objective and impartial information about issues before the Organization, reflecting divergent opinions where they occur;

(b) In the context of the review of its role, performance and methods of work, continue to apply appropriate modern technologies for the collection, production, storage, dissemination and distribution of information materials, including the use of satellite facilities;

(c) Consider expanding the programme of telephone news bulletins that are paid for by its users;

(d) Continue its co-operation with those countries that have expressed readiness to assist the United Nations in resuming short-wave broadcasts through their respective national networks free of charge, and encourage expansion of that type of co-operation with those developed and developing countries having recognized capabilities in this field;

(e) Take adequate measures to resume taped radio programmes, which it has temporarily curtailed, if so requested by broadcasting stations;

(f) Continue its briefing, assistance and orientation programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries focused on issues related to the United Nations;

(g) Identify new forms of co-operation, at the regional and subregional level, for the training of media professionals and for the improvement of the information and communication infrastructure of developing countries;

(h) Co-operate with educational institutions of Member States and with educators and education policy-makers, informing them about United Nations activities;

(i) Ensure adequate daily coverage of United Nations open meetings in the two working languages of the Secretariat, reflecting the views of all delegations with accuracy and objectivity. The Department should also continue to co-operate closely with and provide assistance to members of the United Nations Correspondents Association, taking into account their needs and requirements, especially in the area of press releases, press conferences and briefings, which provide them with basic information for reporting;

(j) Use the official languages of the United Nations adequately in its written and audio-visual materials and make balanced use of the two working languages of the Secretariat;

(k) Ensure timely distribution of its materials to subscribers and to United Nations information centres;

(4) The Department of Public Information should produce and distribute its publications in a timely manner. In particular, the Secretary-General is requested to make further efforts regarding the timely appearance of the United Nations Yearbook. The improvement in format and printing of the United Nations Chronicle is welcome. The Department is encouraged to continue to consider the interests of specific target audiences as it formulates its editorial policies;

(5) The Secretary-General is urged to continue his efforts to secure a sound and stable financial basis for the publications Development Forum and Africa Recovery;

(6) It is recognized that United Nations information centres constitute an important means of disseminating information about the United Nations among the peoples of the world. In this regard, the centres should intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local media, information and educational institutions and non-governmental organizations. The Department should arrange for periodic evaluation of the activities of the centres in this regard. Every effort should be made to establish close coordination with other field offices of the United Nations system, particularly those of the United Nations Development Programme, in order to avoid duplication of work, taking into account the functional autonomy that the United Nations information centres should have. A report should be submitted to the Committee on Information after the first year of the provisional understanding between the Department and the United Nations Development Programme, reached in accordance with recommendation 37 (3) of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations. The Department should provide open and unhindered access by all people to all United Nations information centres and to all materials distributed through the centres. It is also urged to accelerate the process of linking the remaining United Nations information centres that have not been linked with electronic mail;

(7) Stressing the need for co-ordinating the information activities of the United Nations system and recognizing the important role that the Joint United Nations Information Committee plays in that regard, the Department of Public Information is encouraged to continue its active participation in the work of the Committee;

(8) It is recognized that free distribution of materials is necessary in the public information activities of the United Nations. However, as demands increase and whenever it is desirable and possible, the Department of Public Information should actively encourage the sale of its materials;

(9) The Secretary-General is requested to ensure that the reorganization and restructuring of the Department of Public Information strengthen and improve the output of the mandated programmes and activities of the Department, taking into account, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter and of General Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, the need for equitable geographical distribution of posts and especially keeping in mind the levels at which developing countries are underrepresented;

(10) In view of the importance of radio programmes in developing countries, the Secretary-General is requested to enhance the efficiency of and to ensure full programme delivery by all regional radio units, namely, the African, Asian, Caribbean, European, Latin American and Middle Eastern Units and the Anti-Apartheid Programmes Section, including production of radio programmes called for by the General Assembly in resolution 38/82 B of 15 December 1983;

(11) All reports of the Secretary-General, as well as reports by representatives of the Department of Public Information, to the Committee on Information and the General Assembly, in particular those on new programmes or on the expansion of existing programmes, should contain:

(a) Detailed information on the output of the Department on each topic included in its work programme, which forms the basis of its programme budget;

(b) The costs of the activities undertaken on each topic;

(c) Adequate information on target audiences, end-use of the Department's products and analysis of feedback data received by the Department;

(d) A statement detailing the priority level that the Secretary-General has attached to current or future activities of the Department in documents dealing with such activities;

(e) Evaluation by the Department of the effectiveness of its different programmes and activities, with particular reference to the need constantly to review internal programme elements and activities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations relating to the activities of the Department of Public Information in accordance with the budgetary procedures as approved by the General Assembly in its resolutions 41/213, 42/211 of 21 December 1987 and 43/213 of 21 December 1988, and taking into account the priorities set by the Assembly;

3. Supports the Secretary-General in his continuing efforts to restructure and revitalize the Department of Public Information, based on the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 41/213;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its twelfth session, in 1990, on the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the implementation of the recommendations in the present resolution;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

Radiation effects

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation at its thirty-eighth session (Vienna, 8-12 May) continued to review important problems on radiation doses and effects, as requested by the General Assembly in 1988.(1) In its report, presented to the Assembly in 1989,(2) the Committee made proposals for future work, including studies in: doses from natural sources of radiation; doses from man-made sources of radiation in the environment; medical radiation exposures; occupational radiation exposures and trends; effects of radiation exposures on plants and animals in the environment; epidemiological study of radiation effects in human populations; effects on the developing human brain from pre-natal radiation exposures; dose and dose-rate effects on radiation response; mechanisms by which radiation causes cancer; stimulation effects of low doses of radiation; hereditary effects of radiation in human populations; and perception of radiation risks. Concepts and methodologies for comparative assessment of effects, interactions and risks of toxic chemicals and radiation were also kept under consideration.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that its 1988 report to the General Assembly,⁽³⁾ containing the Committee's basic radiation evaluations, had been issued as a United Nations sales publication. The Committee reiterated its earlier request that more adequate support be given to its secretariat.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/45 without vote.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 43/55 of 6 December 1988, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and his environment,

Bearing in mind the decision of the Scientific Committee to submit, as soon as the relevant studies are completed, shorter reports with supporting scientific documents on the specialized topics mentioned by the Committee,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past thirty-four years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the intentions and plans of the Scientific Committee for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Also requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their co-operation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly.

Antarctica

Minerals régime

Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in October 1989 a report reviewing the question of a minerals régime on Antarctica.⁽²⁾ In 1988, the Assembly had expressed its deep regret over the adoption by the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties on 2 June 1988 of a Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities, notwithstanding 1986⁽³⁾ and 1987⁽⁴⁾ Assembly resolutions calling for a moratorium on any such matter until all members of the international community could fully participate in negotiations. On 19 April, in response to the Secretary-General's note verbale on the issue, Australia, on behalf of the States parties to the Antarctic Treaty, emphasized the Parties' continuing belief that consideration of Antarctica by the General Assembly should proceed only on the basis of consensus. The Secretary-General noted further that the General Assembly had reiterated its call to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to all their meetings and reported that he had not been invited. He noted that, on 6 July, France conveyed a press release⁽⁵⁾ of the Preparatory Meeting of the XVth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (Paris, 9-13 May), which prepared a draft agenda for the next Consultative Meeting (Paris, 9-19 October), with items such as human impact on the Antarctic environment, including waste disposal; effects of tourism; protected areas; marine pollution and maritime safety; and the role of Antarctica in global change, including the ozone layer.

Communications. On 13 February, Malaysia transmitted a statement(6) by Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, Ghana, Kenya, Malaysia, Nepal, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Rwanda, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Uganda and Zambia. Following a damaging oil spill from the supply ship Bahia Paraiso, which sank on 1 February off the Antarctic western coast, the countries urged the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to reconsider the ratification of the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities.

The Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Harare, 17-19 May)(7) reaffirmed the conviction that Antarctica should be accessible to all nations and that any exploitation of the Antarctic resources should ensure the maintenance of international peace and security on the continent.

The Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Belgrade, 4-7 September)(8) recognized the interest of mankind as a whole in ensuring the protection and conservation of the Antarctic environment, as well as its dependent and associated ecosystems, and considered the adoption by the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties of a Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resources to be detrimental to efforts at a consensus on the issue of Antarctica in the General Assembly.

The Commonwealth Heads of Government, in a communiqué adopted at their meeting (Kuala Lumpur, 18-24 October),(9) recognized Antarctica's critical impact on the environment and shared the conviction that every effort should be made to protect and conserve that unique territory.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/124 B by roll-call vote.

Question of Antarctica

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983, 39/152 of 17 December 1984, 40/156 A and B of 16 December 1985, 41/88 A and B of 4 December 1986, 42/46 A and B of 30 November 1987 and 43/83 A and B of 7 December 1988,

Racalling also the relevant paragraphs of the Political Declaration adopted by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, and the resolution on Antarctica adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985, as well as the relevant paragraphs of the decision of the Council of Ministers of the League of Arab States meeting at Tunis on 17 and 18 September 1986 and resolution 25/5-P(IS) adopted by the Fifth Islamic Summit Conference of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held at Kuwait from 26 to 29 January 1987, the final document on Antarctica adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989 and the communiqué issued by Commonwealth Heads of Government at Kuala Lumpur on 24 October 1989,

Taking into account the debates on this item held since its thirty-eighth session,

Welcoming the increasing awareness of and interest in Antarctica shown by the international community,

Convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue forever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Reaffirming the principle that the international community is entitled to information covering all aspects of Antarctica and that the United Nations should be made the repository for all such information in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 41/88 A, 42/46 B and 43/83 A,

Conscious of the particular significance of Antarctica to the international community in terms, inter alia, of international peace and security, environment, its effects on global climatic conditions, economy and scientific research,

Conscious also of the interrelationship between Antarctica and the physical, chemical and biological processes that regulate the total Earth system,

Reaffirming that the management and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international co-operation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Affirming the necessity of ensuring, in the interest of all mankind, comprehensive environmental protection and conservation of the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems through negotiations with the full participation of all members of the international community,

Conscious of the environmental degradation that prospecting and mining in and around Antarctica would pose to the Antarctic and global environment and ecosystems,

Convinced of the need to prevent or minimize any impact of human activity resulting from the large number of scientific stations and expeditions in Antarctica on the environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems,

Taking into account all aspects pertaining to all areas covered by the Antarctic Treaty system,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the question of Antarctica,

1. Expresses its regret that, despite the numerous resolutions in which it has called upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to their meetings, including their consultative meetings, the Secretary-General was not invited to the Preparatory Meeting of the XVth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting or to the XVth Consultative Meeting, held in Paris from 9 to 13 May and from 9 to 20 October 1989, respectively;

2. Reiterates its call upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to all meetings of the Treaty parties, including their consultative meetings;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on his evaluations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

4. Expresses the conviction that, in view of the significant impact that Antarctica exerts on the global environment and ecosystems, any régime to be established for the protection and conservation of the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems, in order to be for the benefit of mankind as a whole and in order to gain the universal acceptability necessary to ensure full compliance and enforcement, must be negotiated with the full participation of all members of the international community;

5. Urges all members of the international community to support all efforts to ban prospecting and mining in and around Antarctica and to ensure that all activities are carried out exclusively for the purpose of peaceful scientific investigation and that all such activities ensure the maintenance of international peace and security in Antarctica and the protection of its environment and are for the benefit of all mankind;

6. Expresses its conviction that the establishment, through negotiations with the full participation of all members of the international community, of Antarctica as a nature reserve or a world park would ensure the protection and conservation of its environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems for the benefit of all mankind;

7. Also expresses its conviction, in view of the large number of scientific stations and expeditions, that international scientific research should be enhanced through the establishment of international stations devoted to scientific investigations of global significance, regulated by stringent environmental safeguards, so as to avoid or minimize any adverse impact of human activities on the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems;

8. Urges all States Members of the United Nations to co-operate with the Secretary-General and to continue consultations on all aspects relating to Antarctica;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

General Assembly resolution 44/124 B

15 December 1989 Meeting 81 101-0-8 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/44/819) by roll-call vote (85-0-7), 22 November (meeting 46); 26-nation draft (A/C.1/44/L.69); agenda item 70.

Roll-call vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China, Fiji, Ireland, Luxembourg, Malta, Portugal, Swaziland, Turkey.

During the roll-call vote in plenary the following 44 States announced they were not participating: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Spain, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Viet Nam.

Participation of South Africa

In September,(10) the Secretary-General submitted a report in response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(11) by which the Assembly had viewed with concern the continuing participation of South Africa in meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties and had appealed once again to those Parties to exclude the racist apartheid régime of South Africa from participation in their meetings and invited them to inform the Secretary-General on the relevant actions. In an April 1989 reply(10) to a note verbale of the Secretary-General, Australia, on behalf of the States Parties, recalled an earlier vote on the subject reproduced in a 1987 report of the Secretary-General.(12) That note, Australia stated, continued to reflect the Parties' position.

In its final document, the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Belgrade, 4-7 September)(*) reiterated its regret over the continuing membership of the racist apartheid regime of South Africa as a Consultative Party of the Antarctic Treaty, urging the Consultative Parties to exclude that régime from participation in their meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted resolution 44/124 A by roll-call vote.

Question of Antarctica

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/83 B of 7 December 1988,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Noting with regret that the racist apartheid regime of South Africa, which has been suspended from participation in the General Assembly of the United Nations, has continued to participate in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties,

Recalling the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fiftieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 17 to 22 July 1989,

Recalling also the final document on Antarctica adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,

Recalling further that the Antarctic Treaty is, by its terms, intended to further the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting that the policy of apartheid practised by the racist minority régime of South Africa, which has been universally condemned, constitutes a threat to regional and international peace and security,

1. Views with concern the continuing participation of the apartheid régime of South Africa in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties;

2. Appeals once again to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to take urgent measures to exclude the racist apartheid régime of South Africa from participation in the meetings of the Consultative Parties at the earliest possible date;

3. Invites the States parties to the Antarctic Treaty to inform the Secretary-General of the actions taken regarding the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report in this regard to the General Assembly at its forth-fifth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

Cyprus question

Throughout 1989, the Secretary-General continued his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus, entrusted to him by the Security Council. Following their agreement in August 1988 to meet without any pre-conditions and to attempt to achieve a negotiated settlement of all aspects of the Cyprus problem by 1 June 1989, the leaders of the two sides in Cyprus held direct talks on an ongoing basis with the Secretary-General's Special Representative in Nicosia. In the second round of talks ('January-March 1989), the two leaders agreed to develop, on a non-committal basis, a wide range of options for each of the issues making up the Cyprus problem.(1) On 9 June, the President of the Security Council issued a statement(2) on behalf of the members, urging the parties to redouble their efforts. At the end of June, the Secretary-General met with the two leaders and, on 25 July, the Secretary-General's ideas to assist in achieving an agreement were presented, confidentially, as food for thought. Resumed talks between the two leaders did not, however, prove possible and the Secretary-General's efforts for the remainder of 1989 were concentrated in trying to achieve their resumption, including separate meetings with the two leaders from October to December. The Special Representative then undertook contacts aimed at achieving resumption.(3)

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP)-on 9 June and 14 December-which continued its peace-keeping and humanitarian tasks.

Although the question of Cyprus was included in the agenda of the forty-fourth (1989) General Assembly session (decision 43/464, 18 September 1989), it was not discussed.

Cyprus and Turkey addressed communications to the Secretary-General on various aspects of the situation throughout the year. Those from Turkey forwarded letters from the Turkish Cypriot community signed by Rauf R. Denktas as "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus", or by Ozer Koray as "representative" of that "Republic".

Report of the Secretary-General (May/June). In his report to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus from 1 December 1988 to 31 May 1989,(1) the Secretary-General summarized UNFICYP activities and his good offices mission and reported on the situation regarding maintenance of the status quo.

Cyprus again protested about desecration of churches in the north, the changing of place names in the northern part and expropriation of immovable properties. UNFICYP raised the matters with the Turkish Cypriot authorities.

The Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus continued to discuss reports submitted by the two sides. Additional investigations regarding some of the 169 cases under consideration were carried out in the field, as well as investigations regarding 168 new cases submitted by both sides.

The Secretary-General recommended extension of UNFICYP's mandate for a further six months. He reported that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had agreed, while Turkey, supporting the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, had indicated that the draft resolution (see below) was unacceptable as a basis for extending the stationing of UNFICYP, but that its stance would be explained before the Council,(4)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met on 9 June to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend UNFICYP's mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The Council also extended an invitation to Ozer Koray under rule 39 of its provisional rules of procedure."

On the same day, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 634(1989).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 31 May and 8 June 1989,

Taking note also of the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1989,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1989;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1989;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 634(1989)

9 June 1989 Meeting 2868 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20679).

Mr. Koray repeated previous rejections of similar resolutions by the Turkish Cypriot side since it could not accept any resolution which purported to endorse the Greek Cypriot side as the so-called "Government of the Republic of Cyprus". Turkey supported this position and said it could not consent to renewal of UNFICYP's mandate on that basis.

Report of the Secretary-General (November/December). Reporting to the Security Council on the United Nations operation in Cyprus from 1 June to 4 December 1989,(3) the Secretary-General updated information on UNFICYP activities, his good offices mission and the question of the maintenance of the status quo.

The Secretary-General met the leaders of the two sides on 28 and 29 June and the leaders agreed to resume talks in Nicosia on 26 July. On 25 July, the Special Representative forwarded to both leaders, as "food for thought", the Secretary-General's written summary of the ideas discussed, with the aim of facilitating the preparation of an outline of a comprehensive agreement by September 1989. On 29 July, the Turkish Cypriot side, which had previously expressed its reservations about the process, informed the Special Representative that its participation in the talks as scheduled was impossible because of tensions over the 19 July incident (see below). On various separate occasions, the Secretary-General further met with President Vassiliou (4 October and 29 November) and with Mr. Denktas (11 October and 4 December) and stressed the importance of a commitment to resume the talks on a meaningful basis. President Vassiliou expressed his readiness to resume direct talks, while Mr. Denktas made a number of suggestions for resuming the process, including a joint declaration of intent that would define the new pattern of relationship between the two communities.

⁴Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Following the meetings, the Secretary-General instructed his Special Representative to pursue his contacts at Nicosia in order to prepare for the early continuation of the high-level talks, which the Secretary-General had proposed for two weeks' duration in February 1990 at a venue to be decided.

The Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus underlined in a press statement issued on 25 October that it had to "rely entirely on the files and documents transmitted to it by both sides but, finally, and above all, on the testimony of the witnesses interviewed, on their co-operation, and on their willingness and knowledge to give complete and precise information".

As in his previous report, the Secretary-General, referring to his recommendation that the Council extend UNFICYP's mandate for a further six months, indicated that Cyprus, Greece and the United Kingdom had agreed, while Turkey, supporting the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, indicated that the draft resolution (see below) was unacceptable as a basis for UNFICYP's extension and that its position would be explained before the Council.(5)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

On 14 December, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report and recommendation to extend the UNFICYP mandate. Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited, at their request, to participate without the right to vote. Ozer Koray was also invited to participate under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure."

On the same day, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 646(1989).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 7 and 13 December 1989,

Taking note also of the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1989,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions.

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1990;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1990;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 646(1989)

14 December 1989 Meeting 2898 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21020).

Peace-keeping and humanitarian assistance

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established in 1964 in accordance with a Security Council resolution,(6) continued throughout 1989 to supervise the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces. On 10 April 1989, Major-General Günther G. Greindl of Austria, who had commanded UNFICYP since March 1981, relinquished his command and returned to his national service. On the same date, command was assumed by Major-General Clive Milner of Canada.

In 1989, UNFICYP continued full liaison and co-operation at all levels with the two sides and pursued efforts to improve its freedom of movement in the northern part of the island. Through a system of 146 observation posts, 54 of which were permanently manned, UNFICYP kept under constant surveillance the area between the cease-fire lines, known as the United Nations buffer zone, extending approximately 180 kilometres from the north-west to the south-east coasts and covering about 3 per cent of the island.

Following the December 1988 shooting and killing of a Turkish Cypriot soldier, UNFICYP succeeded in getting both sides to unman their forward military positions and cease patrolling in three sensitive areas in Nicosia, with a view to keeping their troops further apart and thereby reducing the risk of incidents.

In March 1989, considerable tension occurred over the well-publicized plans of a Greek Cypriot women's group to organize a large demonstration with the announced intention of crossing the Turkish forces' cease-fire line. The demonstration, however, passed without serious incident. Altogether 54 demonstrators were arrested by the Turkish Cypriot police and were released to UNFICYP the same day.

A serious situation arose on 19 July, when some 1,000 Greek Cypriot demonstrators, mostly women, forced their way into the United Nations buffer zone. Turkish Cypriot police forced their way into the area and arrested 111 people. On 21 July and succeeding days, Greek Cypriot demonstrators protesting the detention blocked all United Nations traffic through the main entrance to the protected area in Nicosia until 30 July, when the Turkish Cypriot authorities released the last two detainees. The President of the Security Council conveyed to the representatives of all the parties the Council's deep concern at the tense situation created by the 19 July incidents. During the period there were three other occasions, two in July and one in October, when 150 to 250 Greek Cypriots entered the United Nations buffer zone. United Nations Officials conveyed to the authorities of the Government of Cyprus their expectation that the police would take effective measures to prevent demonstrators from entering the United Nations buffer zone. President Vassiliou made a public statement to that effect.

Overflights of the buffer zone continued, with 12 by civilian aircraft from the north and 19 from the south in the period of the Secretary-General's two reports. In addition, National Guard aircraft overflew the buffer zone three times and Turkish forces' aircraft six times. Civilian aircraft of other nationalities accounted for nine further overflights. UNFICYP investigated and protested as appropriate.

UNFICYP continued to assist in organizing the electricity and water supply and mail delivery across the buffer zone, and facilitated meetings of trade unionists, journalists and other groups from the two communities, in addition to joint meetings arranged by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). As part of its efforts to promote a return to normal conditions, UNFICYP facilitated economic and other civilian activities in the areas between and adjacent to the cease-fire lines, in particular farming. The UNFICYP civilian police (UNCIVPOL) maintained close co-operation with the Cyprus police and the Turkish Cypriot police on matters having inter-communal aspects. UNFICYP distributed 604 tons of foodstuffs and other supplies, as well as social welfare and pension benefits among the Greek Cypriots in the north, delivered 331 tons of foodstuffs and other supplies to the Maronites on the two sides of the cease-fire lines, and continued periodic visits to Turkish Cypriots living in the south. UNFICYP continued to provide emergency medical services to members of both communities and to co-operate with UNHCR and UNDP, which, in their turn, increased and broadened their activities in Cyprus.

In 1989, the total strength of UNFICYP remained 2,126, including 2,091 military personnel and 35 civilian police. The countries which contributed their military personnel were Austria (410), Canada (575), Denmark (342), Finland (7), Ireland (8), Sweden (7) and the United Kingdom (742). Civilian police were staffed by Australia(20) and Sweden (15). One member of UNFICYP died as a result of a traffic accident, which was the 147th fatality in the Force since its inception.

UNFICYP financing

The cost to the United Nations of maintaining UNFICYP in 1989 amounted to some $26.9 million, $13.1 million for the first extension and an estimated $13.8 million for the second (June-December 1989 and December 1989-May 1990). In his reports, the Secretary-General emphasized that the United Nations financing of the Force depended entirely on voluntary contributions from Governments; however, despite his letters of 15 March(7) and 20 October(8) to Member States and the United Nations specialized agencies, containing appeals for contributions to UNFICYP, only $8.1 million was contributed by Member States in 1989. As these contributions were insufficient to meet the cost of the Force, the reimbursement claims from the troop-contributing countries had been met only up to June 1980, and the accumulated deficit in the UNFICYP Special Account from the inception of the Force to the end of 1989 was estimated at $174.6 million. In their letters of 22 May(9) and 1 June(10) addressed to the Secretary-General, the Governments of the troop-contributing countries expressed their grave concern at the growing deficit in the UNFICYP Special Account and their disappointment at the further decline in the level of voluntary contributions. The letters also conveyed the Governments' belief that the Security Council would agree to the proposal, formulated in a 1986 report(11) of the Secretary-General, to finance the United Nations share of UNFICYP's cost from assessed contributions rather than from voluntary contributions.

Institutional machinery

Security Council

The Security Council held 69 meetings in 1989 and adopted 20 resolutions. Twenty-six meetings were devoted to the situation in the Middle East and related questions; 11 concerned Namibia; seven related to Afghanistan; six each concerned complaints by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the situation in Panama; four were devoted to the situation in Central America; two each concerned the Iran-Iraq conflict, UNFICYP, terrorist activities and an election to the International Court of Justice; and one (private) related to the Council's annual report to the General Assembly.

Agenda

During 1989, its forty-fourth year, the Security Council considered 22 agenda items. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV). Seven items were included in the agenda for the first time. They concerned: marking of plastic or sheet explosives for the purpose of detection; Central America-efforts towards peace; the question of hostage-taking and abduction; the situation in Panama; and communications from Member States to the President of the Security Council (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States regarding the downing of two Libyan military aircraft; Panama v. United States wherein Panama contested actions of the United States military in Panama while the United States alleged election fraud in Panama; El Salvador v. Sandinista Government of Nicaragua).

On 15 September,(1) the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations, of 14 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security discussed by the Security Council since his previous annual notification. He listed 130 other matters not discussed during the period but of which the Council remained seized, and notified the Assembly of the matter contained in the letter of 3 September 1964 from Malaysia, with which the Council had ceased to deal, pursuant to the request from Indonesia and Malaysia of 15 September 1989.(2) By decision 44/409 of 13 November, the Assembly took note of these matters.

Membership

In 1989, the question of equitable representation on the Security Council and increase in its membership was not considered. Draft resolutions proposing an increase in membership from 15 to 21 had been discussed in 1979(3) and in 1980,(4) but no action had been taken.

On 22 December, by decision 44/460, the Assembly decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session.

Pursuant to rule 15 of the provisional rules of procedure of the Security Council, the Secretary-General, in December,(5) reported to the Council the credentials of Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Romania and Zaire, which had been elected by the General Assembly on 18 October as non-permanent members for a two-year term beginning 1 January 1990. In his opinion, those credentials were in order.

Report for 1988/89

At a private meeting on 17 November, the Security Council unanimously adopted its report covering the period 16 June 1988 to 15 June 1989.(6) The General Assembly took note of the report of the Security Council by decision 44/424 of 11 December.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in three sessions during 1989-to resume and conclude its forty-third (1988) session and the major part of its forty-fourth session, as well as its sixteenth special session.

The first part of the forty-third session had been held from 20 September to 22 December 1988,(7) and resumed in 1989 on 14, 16 and 21 February, on 1 and 7 March, from 18 to 20 April, on 11 July and on 18 September, when it was declared closed. The sixteenth special session on apartheid and its destructive consequences in southern Africa was held from 12 to 14 December. The forty-fourth regular session opened on 19 September 1989 and continued until its suspension on 29 December.

Agenda

The General Assembly resumed its forty-third session in February 1989 to consider seven items retained on that session's agenda by a 1988 decision.(8) On 14 and 21 February, the Assembly, by decision 43/402 B, on the proposals of the Secretary-General,(9) added to the agenda items on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and of the Transition Assistance Group and allocated them to the Fifth Committee. On 11 July, acting on the proposal contained in the Secretary-General's note,(10) the Assembly, by decision 43/402 C, reopened agenda item 36, on policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa.

On 18 September, by decisions 43/464 and 43/465, respectively, the Assembly included the questions of Cyprus and of the consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq in the draft agenda of its forty-fourth session.

Pursuant to decisions 43/462 of 11 July and 44/408 of 13 November, adopted at the Assembly's forty-third and forty-fourth sessions, respectively, the sixteenth special session was held in New York from 12 to 14 December to consider the question of apartheid and its destructive consequences in southern Africa. The session had seven items on its agenda (see APPENDIX IV). On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution S-16/1, the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa.

The forty-fourth session initially had 154 items on its agenda, which was adopted by the Assembly on 22 September; seven others were later added. (For list and allocation of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.) The agenda was adopted by decision 44/402 A. Under the same decision, the Assembly allocated the items to the appropriate Main Committees and plenary. Inclusion of the items and their allocation to the Assembly's Main Committees or plenary meetings had been recommended by the General Committee⁽¹¹⁾ on the basis of the preliminary⁽¹²⁾ and annotated preliminary¹³ list of items, a 154-item provisional agenda⁽¹⁴⁾ and a five-item supplementary list.⁽¹⁵⁾

On 7 December, by decision 44/417, the Assembly deferred consideration of the Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the then current United States administration in April 1986 and included this item in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session.

On 22 December, by decision 44/458, the Assembly included in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations".

Organization of the 1989 session

On 22 September and 8 December, by decision 44/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee,⁽¹¹⁾ adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the forty-fourth (1989) session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; the schedule of meetings; meeting records; the general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply and length of statements; concluding statements; questions related to the programme budget; documentation; resolutions; special conferences; meetings of subsidiary organs; and the closing date of the 1989 session.

Subsidiary organs

By decisions 44/403 A of 19 September and 44/403 B of 22 September, 44/403 C of 4 December and 44/403 D of 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee,⁽¹¹⁾ decided that the following subsidiary organs should be authorized to hold meetings during the session: High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries; Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa; Special Committee against Apartheid; United Nations Council for Namibia; Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East; Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples; and Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund.

Representatives' credentials

At its first meeting on 11 October, the Credentials Committee examined the Secretary-General's memorandum of the previous day, reporting on the status of credentials of representatives to the forty-fourth regular session and to the sixteenth special session, indicating that credentials had been submitted by 125 Member States for the forty-fourth regular session and by 34 Member States for the sixteenth special session. The Legal Counsel informed the Committee on additional credentials received from 11 Member States for the forty-fourth session and four Member States for the sixteenth session.

On 6 December, at its second meeting, the Committee examined the Secretary-General's memorandum from the previous day, concerning the credentials of representatives of Member States other than those which had been already accepted. The memorandum indicated that additional credentials had been submitted by 17 Member States for the forty-fourth session and by 25 Member States for the sixteenth special session. It also indicated that communications on the appointment of representatives had been received from six Member States for the forty-fourth session and 65 Member States for the sixteenth special session. Another 31 Member States had previously empowered their Permanent Representatives to represent them in all organs of the United Nations without limitation as to session.

At each meeting, acting without vote on an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Committee accepted the credentials received. The Committee also recommended two draft resolutions to the Assembly. On 17 October and 11 December, the Assembly, by resolutions 44/5 A and 44/5 B, respectively, approved the first⁽¹⁶⁾ and second⁽¹⁷⁾ reports of the Credentials Committee.

Co-operation with other intergovernmental organizations

League of Arab States

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General reported in September 1989 on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States.⁽²⁾

The report described consultations and exchanges of information which had taken place between the two organizations since 1988 and summarized follow-up action on proposals for co-operation in accordance with their 1983⁽³⁾ and 1988⁽⁴⁾ agreements.

On 6 October, the United Nations and the League of Arab States signed an Agreement of Co-operation, as called for by the Assembly in 1988.⁽¹⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/7 by recorded vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, in particular resolution 43/3 of 17 October 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling also the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional arrangements for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire of the League of Arab States to consolidate and develop the existing ties with the United Nations in all areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to co-operate in every possible way with the United Nations in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to Lebanon and to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Aware of the vital importance for the countries members of the League of Arab States of achieving a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict,

Realizing that the strengthening of international peace and security is directly related, inter alia, to disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Taking with satisfaction of the progress so far achieved with regard to the recommendations adopted at the second joint meeting of the representatives of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the representatives of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, held at Geneva from 29 June to 1 July 1988,

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the work of the United Nations system and to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted by the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 25 to 27 November 1980,

Noting with satisfaction the signing on 6 October 1989 of the Agreement of Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, as called for in paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 43/3,

Also noting with satisfaction the progress so far achieved between the Arab Interior Ministers Council and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator with regard to the holding in 1990, with the participation of the League of Arab States, of the joint seminar on disaster preparedness and prevention in the Arab countries,

Having heard the statement of the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States of 17 October 1989 on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, and having noted the emphasis placed therein on follow-up actions and procedures on the recommendations in the political, social and cultural fields adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis from 28 June to 1 July 1983 and at Geneva from 29 June to 1 July 1988, as well as on the recommendations relating to political matters contained in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him to implement the proposals adopted at the meetings between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations held at Tunis and Geneva and the sectoral meeting on social development in the Arab region, held at Amman from 19 to 21 August 1985;

3. Commends the League of Arab States for its efforts and endeavours and those of its Tripartite High Committee in resolving the crisis in Lebanon;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen co-operation with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for the purpose of implementing United Nations resolutions relating to Lebanon and to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East in order to achieve a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict;

5. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, further to intensify their co-operation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to co-ordinate the follow-up action to facilitate the implementation of the proposals of a multilateral nature adopted at the Tunis meeting in 1983, and to take appropriate action regarding the multilateral proposals adopted at the Amman meeting in 1985, and at the Geneva meeting in 1988, including the following measures:

(a) Promotion of contacts and consultations between the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned;

(b) Setting-up of joint sectoral inter-agency working groups;

8. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the programmes, organizations, and agencies concerned within the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding co-operation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and consultations with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects of a bilateral nature, in order to facilitate their implementation;

(c) To associate whenever possible with organizations and institutions of the League of Arab States in the execution and implementation of development projects in the Arab region;

(d) To inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 May 1990, of the progress of their co-operation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in particular the follow-up action taken on the multilateral and bilateral proposals adopted at the Tunis, Amman and Geneva meetings;

9. Decides that, in order to intensify co-operation and for the purpose of review and appraisal of progress as well as to prepare comprehensive periodic reports, a general meeting between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States should take place once every three years and inter-agency sectoral meetings should be organized annually on areas of priority and wide importance in the development of the Arab States, the time and place to be determined by consultations between the United Nations and the League of Arab States;

10. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States to ensure the continuation of the consultations between the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat and the League of Arab States with a view to considering the possibility of holding a seminar on disarmament matters in the Arab region in 1990 or 1991;

11. Recommends that the United Nations and the other organizations of the United Nations system should utilize Arab expertise to the extent possible in projects undertaken in the Arab region;

12. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to hold periodic consultations, as and when appropriate, between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States on follow-up policies, projects, actions and procedures;

13. Ah requests the Secretary-General to arrange for a joint meeting to be held in 1990 between representatives of the organizations of the United Nations system and of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to review the progress achieved in the implementation of the multilateral proposals, especially those adopted at the Geneva meeting, and to develop a two-year programme of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted in August 1989 a report on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC).⁽⁶⁾

The report described consultations which had taken place between representatives of the two organizations and their representation at meetings since the Secretary-General's 1988 report and summarized the follow-up action on the recommendations of the third United Nations/OIC meeting.⁽⁷⁾

In October, the Secretary-General submitted an addendum to his report,⁽⁸⁾ transmitting conclusions and recommendations of the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations and OIC (Geneva, 13-15 September).

On 18 April,⁽⁹⁾ Saudi Arabia transmitted the final communique of the Eighteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Riyadh, 13-16 March). On 31 October, Saudi Arabia transmitted the communiqué of the Co-ordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 4 October).⁽¹⁰⁾

On 18 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 44/8.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to co-operate more closely in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional co-operation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of co-operation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions,

Noting with satisfaction the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held at Geneva from 13 to 15 September 1989, as called for in General Assembly resolution 43/2 of 17 October 1988,

Noting also the encouraging progress made in the seven priority areas of co-operation as well as in the identification of other areas of co-operation,

Convinced that the strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire of both organizations to strengthen further the existing co-operation by developing specific proposals in the designated priority areas of co-operation,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organizations of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions in the implementation of the proposals adopted at the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the two organizations,

Recalling its resolutions 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983, 39/7 of 8 November 1984, 40/4 of 25 October 1985, 41/3 of 16 October 1986, 42/4 of 15 October 1987 and 43/2 of 17 October 1988,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Approves the conclusions and recommendations of the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations and the organization of the Islamic Conference;

3. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to continue co-operation in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order;

5. Encourages the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to expand their co-operation with the Organization of the Islamic Conference, particularly by negotiating co-operation agreements, and invites them to multiply the contacts and meetings of focal points for co-operation in priority areas of interest to the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

6. Recommends that a meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions should be organized in 1990 to review the progress in the implementation of the plan of action adopted at the co-ordination meeting held between the two organizations in 1989, and that that meeting should be followed by a general meeting in 1991 between representatives of the secretariats of the organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

7. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, especially the lead agencies, to provide increased technical and other forms of assistance to the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions in order to enhance co-operation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

9. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to arrange for the holding of consultations, as and when appropriate, between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the Organization of the Islamic Conference on the implementation of projects and follow-up action;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, to encourage the convening of sectoral meetings between the two organizations on the priority areas of co-operation;

11. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanisms of co-operation between the two organizations;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

Draft by Saudi Arabia (A/44/L.5); agenda item 22.

Observer status for the Council of Europe

By a letter dated 6 July 1989,(11) Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway and Portugal requested inclusion of an item in the General Assembly's agenda on granting observer status to the Council of Europe. On 22 September, the Assembly decided to include the item and to consider it directly in plenary.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 44/6.

Observer status for the Council of Europe in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Wishing to promote co-operation between the United Nations and the Council of Europe,

Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Council of Europe to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer.

Other institutional questions

Composition of UN organs

In 1989, as in every year since 1979, consideration of the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations was deferred, based on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which reported that none of its members had requested to speak on the substance of the item.(1) Acting on the Committee's recommendation, the General Assembly, on 8 December, adopted decision 44/420 by which it included the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session.

Implementation of UN resolutions

On 22 December, by decision 44/458, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item on implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations and decided to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session.

PART TWO

Regional questions

Chapter I

Africa

In 1989, a major goal for Africa remained the elimination of apartheid and a peaceful transformation of South Africa into a united, non-racial and democratic society. The anti-apartheid struggle intensified inside and outside South Africa, and the leadership of the ruling National Party changed following the resignation in August of President P. W. Botha. In September, elections were held for the racially segregated Parliament, again excluding the African majority. However, the new President, F. W. de Klerk, described the election results as a mandate for orderly reform. The African National Congress (ANA) proposed a process of constitutional change through peaceful negotiations, and, on 21 August, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) adopted the Harare Declaration on the conditions necessary for a negotiated solution to the political conflict. Towards the end of the year, President de Klerk undertook a number of liberalization measures and held discussions on the country's political future with the still-imprisoned ANC leader, Nelson Mandela. In December, the Pan Africanist Movement was formed, and the first Conference for a Democratic Future was held, with more than 4,600 delegates attending.

The United Nations during 1989 continued its support for the anti-apartheid struggle. The General Assembly adopted 12 resolutions to strengthen international pressure against South Africa, including intensifying economic and financial sanctions and tightening the oil embargo. The Assembly also called on South Africa to commute the death sentence of Mangena Jeffrey Boesman, as well as those for all political prisoners (resolution 44/1).

In December, the Assembly held its sixteenth special session, at which the question of apartheid was discussed. It adopted the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, which for the first time laid down internationally agreed steps towards a negotiating climate and principles for a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa. It also prescribed a programme of work to achieve that end (resolution S-16/1).

Major advances were made by the United Nations in 1989 towards the independence of Namibia, once the territory of South West Africa administered by South Africa. Agreements signed in 1988 between Angola, Cuba and South Africa resulted in the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola and the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia. The deployment in April in Namibia of the UN Transition Assistance Group led to democratic elections in November-setting the stage for independence in early 1990 (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). During the year, United Nations Angola Verification Mission also became operational.

In other developments, the Security Council considered the downing of two aircraft of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the United States, but adopted no decision due to the negative vote of a permanent member. The Assembly again reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte. Noting the increasing co-operation between OAU and the United Nations, it requested the United Nations to support the efforts of OAU to establish an African economic community and endorsed the convening of a meeting between the secretariats of the two organizations to consider expanding and strengthening co-operation in the economic and social sectors.

South Africa and apartheid

The situation in South Africa remained at an impasse for the greater part of 1989. Despite signing agreements with Angola and Cuba in December 1988(1) to bring about the independence of Namibia, Pretoria undertook no fundamental initiatives to dismantle the apartheid system. In June, it announced its five-year plan for political reform, which failed to fulfil the demands of the black majority for full political rights and maintained the fundamental aspects of white minority rule. The plan also envisaged that municipal representatives elected in 1988 would become political representatives to the National Council, which would devise a new constitution.

Pretoria also undertook further repressive measures to eliminate opposition to its rule. It announced the renewal of the state of emergency for the fourth consecutive year, and in March adopted the Disclosure of Foreign Funding Act designed to control the activities of anti-apartheid organizations. Police violence increased, as did attacks by vigilante groups and death squads, creating growing numbers of internal refugees and displaced persons. The court system became an increasingly important instrument of repression and a draconian press censorship hid from world scrutiny human rights violations, including detentions and forced removal of populations.

Meanwhile, differences within the National Party as to the future direction of South Africa led to the resignation on 14 August of P. W. Botha as leader and the subsequent election of Frederick Willem de Klerk as leader and later President.

On 6 September, elections were held for the three houses of the racially segregated Parliament (Whites, Coloured and Indians), again excluding the African majority, and were widely boycotted by the Indian and Coloured populations. The National Party lost ground to the Conservative Party and the newly formed Democratic Party. However, President de Klerk described the election results as a mandate for the National Party's policy of orderly reform, and spoke of launching a negotiating forum and developing a new constitution without domination of one group over another.

Against this background, internal resistance experienced a resurgence as apartheid opponents undertook a co-ordinated Campaign of Defiance. The Campaign, launched by the Mass Democratic Movement, focused on the defiance of apartheid laws and included several acts of civil disobedience and economic pressure through the successful boycott of white-owned businesses. In May, some 10,000 blacks and whites defied emergency regulations to attend funeral services for the assassinated white democrat, David Webster. Political activity at the community level was also renewed. The trade union movement took a leading role in the political activity, intensifying its campaign against the labour laws and other forms of repression. Religious organizations became even more prominent in the anti-apartheid opposition, calling on Pretoria to create the conditions for a peaceful resolution of the conflict. The continuing crisis in apartheid education initiated renewed student activity, involving the boycott of classes and protests in schools and universities.

There was also a growing involvement of whites in organized opposition to apartheid. The Campaign of Defiance reached a high point in September in a week of protest against the elections for the racially segregated tri-cameral Parliament. It continued in the following months in the homelands and in urban areas. The formation of the Pan Africanist Movement in December further mobilized the forces opposed to the apartheid régime. An extended hunger strike by political detainees drew the attention of the international community to detentions without trial and forced the regime to release hundreds of detainees, including several leaders of anti-apartheid organizations. It also transferred ANC leader Nelson Mandela to a private prison and released Zephania Mothopeng, leader of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC).

Meanwhile, ANC began a process of consultations with the anti-apartheid opposition within and outside the country on the basis of its 1987 Constitutional Guidelines for South Africa as a non-racial, united and democratic society. It proposed a process for constitutional change through peaceful negotiations that would include a cease-fire, the formation of an interim government to oversee the transition to a non-racial political system and negotiations for a new constitution. In July, the then President, P. W. Botha, met with Nelson Mandela. In a statement issued following the meeting, Mr. Mandela reiterated his position that dialogue with the Mass Democratic Movement, and, in particular, with ANC, was the only path to peace in the country. He stressed his desire to contribute to the creation of a climate that would promote peace in South Africa.

On 21 August,⁽²⁾ the OAU Ad Hoc Committee on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa, meeting at Harare, Zimbabwe, adopted a declaration based on the ANC position for constitutional change. The Declaration outlined the conditions necessary for a negotiated solution to the political conflict in South Africa, notably the unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees; the lifting of all bans and restrictions on organizations and individuals; the removal of troops from townships; an end to the state of emergency; repeal of all repressive legislation; and cessation of all political trials and executions.

Also in August, the Mass Democratic Movement, the Black Consciousness Movement, trade unions and religious bodies announced the convening of a Conference for a Democratic Future. Held on 9 and 10 December, the Conference, attended by more than 4,600 delegates representing 2,100 organizations, discussed a programme to intensify, and to bring greater unity to the anti-apartheid struggle. The Conference adopted the OAU Harare Declaration and called for a non-racial constituent assembly, representing all the peoples of South Africa, to draw up a new constitution.

Towards the end of the year, President de Klerk undertook a number of liberalization measures, such as allowing mass demonstrations, releasing several long-term political prisoners, reducing the length of national service from two years to one year, and dismantling the military-controlled National Management System and replacing it by the National Co-ordinating Mechanism under civilian control. He also announced measures that were being considered for improving the climate for constitutional change.

In December, together with several of his cabinet members, he held consultations on the country's political future with the still-imprisoned Mr. Mandela.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 A by recorded vote.

International solidarity with the liberation struggle in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Gravely concerned at the continuing repression of the majority population in South Africa and the continuation of the state of emergency,

Expressing particular concern at the continuing practice of arbitrary detentions and trials, including those of women and children, executions of political prisoners, the ongoing use of vigilante groups and the stifling of the press,

Noting with serious concern the régime's acts of aggression and destabilization against neighbouring independent African States,

1. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people for the total eradication of apartheid and for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic society in which all the people of South Africa, irrespective of race, colour or creed, enjoy the same fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Reaffirms also its full support to the national liberation movements, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, which pursue their noble objective to eliminate apartheid through political, armed and other forms of struggle and have reiterated their preference for reaching their legitimate objectives through peaceful means;

3. Condemns the régime's continuing practice of sentencing to death and executing its opponents and demands that it annul the capital punishment imposed on opponents of apartheid, including the "Uppington Fourteen", and confer prisoner-of-war status on captured freedom fighters in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol I of 1977 thereto;

4. Demands that all political prisoners and detainees, particularly children, be released unconditionally and without subsequent restrictions and that the abhorrent practice of applying repressive measures to children and minors cease immediately;

5. Calls upon Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals to extend all possible assistance to the struggling people of South Africa, their national liberation movements and South African refugees, particularly women and children;

6. Also calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to step up material, financial and other forms of support to the front-line and other neighbouring independent States that are subject to acts of destabilization by South Africa;

7. Appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund set up by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986;

8. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the South African liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity—namely, the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania—to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other appropriate bodies.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 B without vote.

International support for the eradication of apartheid in South Africa through genuine negotiations

The General Assembly,

Condemning once again the policy and practice of apartheid,

Convinced that the continuation of the policy and practice of apartheid will lead to further violence and is detrimental to the vital interests of all the people of South Africa,

Convinced that the system of apartheid cannot be reformed but must be eliminated,

Taking note of the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa, adopted at Harare on 21 August 1989,

1. Reaffirms its support for the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic society in which all the people of South Africa, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy the same fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Fully supports the efforts of the South African people to arrive at a peaceful settlement of the conflict in their country through genuine negotiations;

3. strongly demands:

(a) The lifting of the state of emergency;

(b) The immediate and unconditional release of Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners and detainees;

(c) The lifting of the ban on all individuals and political organizations opposing apartheid and the repeal of restrictions on the press;

(d) The withdrawal of the troops from black townships;

(e) The cessation of all political trials and political executions;

4. Considers that the implementation of the above demands would help create the necessary climate for genuine negotiations and calls upon all parties to take full advantage of opportunities arising therefrom, and further considers that this could also promote an agreement to end apartheid and bring about the cessation of violence;

5. Calls upon all Member States to use concerted and effective measures to ensure the prompt implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote efforts leading to the eradication of apartheid through genuine negotiations.

General Assembly special session on apartheid

In 1988,(3) the General Assembly had decided to convene, prior to its forty-fourth (1989) session, a special session on apartheid its destructive consequences at a date to be determined by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Secretary-General, in June 1989,(4) transmitted the recommendation of the Chairman of the Special Committee that the special session be held in December, to be preceded by the debate on the agenda item entitled "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa". The Secretary-General proposed that the Assembly reopen the debate on that agenda item to enable it to consider the Special Committee's recommendations.

On 11 July, at its resumed forty-third session, the Assembly, by decision 43/402 C, approved the Secretary-General's proposal. By decision 43/462 of the same date, it decided that its sixteenth special session would be held from 12 to 14 December 1989, on the understanding that the debate on "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa" would be held three to four weeks earlier.

On 19 October,(5) the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid submitted organizational proposals for the special session, including the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to hear non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and individuals and to finalize a draft declaration; and that the OAU Chairman and South African national liberation movements recognized by it be allowed to participate.

On 13 November, by decision 44/408, the Assembly approved those proposals. It also requested the bureau of the Special Committee, in cooperation with the front-line States, to consult with interested delegations concerning the preparation of a draft declaration to be submitted to the Ad Hoc Committee for finalization.

On 12 December, the Assembly, at the special session, adopted its agenda (decision S-16/23), established the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole (decision S-16/22) and noted that the credentials of representatives to the session had already been approved by its resolutions 44/5 A and B (decision S/16/21).

The Ad Hoc Committee held five meetings between 12 and 14 December.(6) It considered the draft declaration submitted by the bureau of the Special Committee against Apartheid and heard statements by Member States, the representatives of ANC, PAC and NGOs and individuals. The Ad Hoc Committee recommended to the Assembly a draft resolution, to which was annexed the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, as well as a draft decision. The Assembly, on 14 December, adopted the Declaration and decided to reopen the forty-fourth session's item entitled "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa" to consider a report of the Secretary-General on progress made in implementing the Declaration, which was to be submitted by 1 July 1990 (decision S-16/24).

Prior to the special session, the South African Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a 7 December letter(7) to the Secretary-General, declared that adoption of the draft Declaration, support for which was being canvassed at that time, would be a blatant intervention in the domestic affairs of a Member State. He referred to the policies of the South African Government in the political, social and economic fields, the pursuit of which would be made more difficult by adoption of the Declaration, which would also have a negative effect on and complicate negotiations between the relevant parties in South Africa. He saw the Declaration as an attempt to incorporate as much as possible of the Harare Declaration,⁽²⁾ which incorporated the position of only one (ANC) of the parties likely to participate in future negotiations. The special session, he said, offered the United Nations the opportunity to acknowledge and promote the emerging new realism that was developing in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution S-16/1 without vote.

Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa

The General Assembly

Adopts the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa

We, the States Members of the United Nations,

Assembled at the sixteenth special session of the General Assembly, a special session on apartheid and its destructive consequences in southern Africa, guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in the context of our efforts to establish peace throughout the world by ending all conflicts through negotiations, and desirous of making serious efforts to bring an end to the unacceptable situation prevailing in southern Africa, which is a result of the policies and practices of apartheid, through negotiations based on the principle of justice and peace for all:

Reaffirming our conviction, which history confirms, that where colonial and racial domination or apartheid exist, there can be neither peace nor justice,

Reiterating, accordingly, that while the apartheid system in South Africa persists, the peoples of Africa as a whole cannot achieve the fundamental objectives of justice, human dignity and peace which are both crucial in themselves and fundamental to the stability and development of the continent,

Recognizing that, with regard to southern Africa, the entire world is vitally interested that the processes in which that region is involved, leading to the genuine national independence of Namibia and peace in Angola and Mozambique, should succeed in the shortest possible time, and equally recognizing that the world is deeply concerned that destabilization by South Africa of the countries of the region, whether through direct aggression, sponsorship of surrogates, economic subversion or other means, is unacceptable in all its forms and must not occur,

Also recognizing the reality that permanent peace and stability in southern Africa can only be achieved when the system of apartheid in South Africa has been eradicated and South Africa has been transformed into a united, democratic and non-racial country, and therefore reiterating that all the necessary measures should be adopted now to bring a speedy end to the apartheid system in the interest of all the people of southern Africa, the continent and the world at large,

Believing that, as a result of the legitimate struggle of the South African people for the elimination of apartheid, and of international pressure against that system, as well as global efforts to resolve regional conflicts, possibilities exist for further movement towards the resolution of the problems facing the people of South Africa,

Reaffirming the right of all peoples, including the people of South Africa, to determine their own destiny and to work out for themselves the institutions and the system of government under which they will, by general consent, live and work together to build a harmonious society, and remaining committed to doing everything possible and necessary to assist the people of South Africa, in such ways as they may, through their genuine representatives, determine to achieve this objective,

Making these commitments because we believe that all people are equal and have equal rights to human dignity and respect, regardless of colour, race, sex or creed, that all men and women have the right and duty to participate in their own government, as equal members of society, and that no individual or group of individuals has any right to govern others without their democratic consent, and reiterating that the apartheid system violates all these fundamental and universal principles,

Affirming that apartheid, characterized as a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind, is responsible for the death of countless numbers of people in South Africa, has sought to dehumanize entire peoples and has imposed a brutal war on the region of southern Africa, which has resulted in untold loss of life, destruction of property and massive displacement of innocent men, women and children and which is a scourge and affront to humanity that must be fought and eradicated in its totality,

Therefore we support and continue to support all those in South Africa who pursue this noble objective. We believe this to be our duty, carried out in the interest of all humanity,

While extending this support to those who strive for a non-racial and democratic society in South Africa, a point on which no compromise is possible, we have repeatedly expressed our objective of a solution arrived at by peaceful means; we note that the people of South Africa, and their liberation movements who felt compelled to take up arms, have also upheld their preference for this position for many decades and continue to do so,

Welcoming the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa, adopted at Harare on 21 August 1989, and subsequently endorsed by the Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries at their Ninth Conference, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, as a reaffirmation of readiness to resolve the problems of South Africa through negotiations. The Declaration is consistent with the positions contained in the Lusaka Manifesto of two decades ago, in particular regarding the preference of the African people for peaceful change, and takes into account the changes that have taken place in southern Africa since then. The Declaration constitutes a new challenge to the Pretoria régime to join in the noble efforts to end the apartheid system, an objective to which the United Nations has always been committed,

Noting with appreciation that the Commonwealth Heads of Government, at their meeting held at Kuala Lumpur from 18 to 24 October 1989, noted with satisfaction the strong preference for the path of negotiated and peaceful settlement inherent in the Declaration adopted at Harare on 21 August 1989, and considered what further steps they might take to advance the prospects for negotiations,

Also noting with appreciation that the Third Francophone Conference of Heads of State and Government, held at Dakar from 24 to 26 May 1989, likewise called for negotiations between Pretoria and representatives of the majority of the people with a view to the establishment of a democratic and egalitarian system in South Africa,

Consequently, we shall continue to do everything in our power to increase support for the legitimate struggle of the South African people, including maintaining international pressure against the system of apartheid until that system is ended and South Africa is transformed into a united, democratic and non-racial country, with justice and security for all its citizens,

In keeping with this solemn resolve, and responding directly to the wishes of the majority of the people of South Africa, we publicly pledge ourselves to the positions contained hereunder, convinced that their implementation will lead to a speedy end of the apartheid system and herald the dawn of a new era of peace for all the peoples of Africa, in a continent finally free from racism, white minority rule and colonial domination,

Declare as follows:

1. A conjuncture of circumstances exists, which, if there is a demonstrable readiness on the part of the South African régime to engage in negotiations genuinely and seriously, given the repeated expression of the majority of the people of South Africa of their long-standing preference to arrive at a political settlement, could create the possibility to end apartheid through negotiations.

2. We would therefore encourage the people of South Africa, as part of their legitimate struggle, to join together to negotiate an end to the apartheid system and agree on all the measures that are necessary to transform their country into a non-racial democracy. We support the position held by the majority of the people of South Africa that these objectives, and not the amendment or reform of the apartheid system, should be the goals of the negotiations.

3. We are at one with the people of South Africa that the outcome of such a process should be a new constitutional order determined by them and based on the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We therefore hold the following fundamental principles to be of importance:

(a) South Africa shall become a united, non-racial and democratic State;

(b) All its people shall enjoy common and equal citizenship and nationality, regardless of race, colour, sex or creed;

(c) All its people shall have the right to participate in the government and administration of the country on the basis of universal, equal suffrage, under a non-racial voters' roll, and by secret ballot, in a united and non-fragmented South Africa;

(d) All shall have the right to form and join any political party of their choice, provided that this is not in furtherance of racism;

(e) All shall enjoy universally recognized human rights, freedoms and civil liberties, protected under an entrenched bill of rights;

(f) South Africa shall have a legal system that will guarantee equality of all before the law;

(g) South Africa shall have an independent and non-racial judiciary;

(h) There shall be created an economic order that will promote and advance the well-being of all South Africans;

(i) A democratic South Africa shall respect the rights, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all countries and pursue a policy of peace, friendship and mutually beneficial co-operation with all peoples.

4. We believe that acceptance of these fundamental principles could constitute the basis for an internationally acceptable solution that will enable South Africa to take its rightful place as an equal partner among the world community of nations.

A. Climate for negotiations

5. We believe that it is essential that the necessary climate be created for negotiations. There is an urgent need to respond positively to this universally acclaimed demand and thus create this climate.

6. Accordingly, the present South African régime should, at the least:

(a) Release all political prisoners and detainees unconditionally and refrain from imposing any restrictions on them;

(b) Lift all bans and restrictions on all proscribed and restricted organizations and persons;

(c) Remove all troops from the townships;

(d) End the state of emergency and repeal all legislation, such as the Internal Security Act, designed to circumscribe political activity;

(e) Cease all political trials and political executions.

7. These measures would help create the necessary climate in which free political discussion can take place—an essential condition to ensure that the people themselves participate in the process of remaking their country.

B. Guidelines to the process of negotiations

8. We are of the view that the parties concerned should, in the context of the necessary climate, negotiate the future of their country and its people in good faith and in an atmosphere which, by mutual agreement between the liberation movements and the South African régime, would be free of violence. The process could commence along the following guidelines:

(a) Agreement on the mechanism for the drawing up of a new constitution, based on, among others, the principles enunciated above, and the basis for its adoption;

(b) Agreement on the role to be played by the international community in ensuring a successful transition to a democratic order;

(c) Agreed transitional arrangements and modalities for the process of the drawing up and adoption of a new constitution, and for the transition to a democratic order, including the holding of elections.

C. Programme of action

9. In pursuance of the objectives stated in this Declaration, we hereby decide:

(a) To remain seized of the issue of a political resolution of the South African question;

(b) To step up all-round support for the opponents of apartheid and to campaign internationally in pursuance of this objective;

(c) To use concerted and effective measures, including the full observance by all countries of the mandatory arms embargo, aimed at applying pressure to ensure a speedy end to apartheid;

(d) To ensure that the international community does not relax existing measures aimed at encouraging the South African régime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of this Declaration;

(e) To render all possible assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States to enable them: to rebuild their economies, which have been adversely affected by South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization; to withstand any further such acts; and to continue to support the peoples of Namibia and South Africa;

(f) To extend such assistance to the Governemtn of Angola and Mozambique as they may request in order to secure peace for their peoples, and to encourage and support peace initiatives undertaken by the Governments of Angola and Mozambique aimed at bringing about peace and normalization of life in their countries;

(g) The new South Africa shall, upon adoption of the new constitution, participate fully in relevant organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations.

10. We request the Secretary-General to transmit copies of the present Declaration to the South African Government and the representatives of the oppressed people of South Africa and also request the Secretary-General to prepare a report and submit it to the General Assembly by 1 July 1990 on the progress made in the implementation of the present Declaration.

General aspects

Activities of the Special Committee against Apartheid. The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report covering the period August 1988 to August 1989,(8) reviewed the political developments and economic and social conditions in South Africa, the external relations of South Africa and international action against apartheid. Developments later in the year were described in the Committee's 1990 report.(9)

During the period under review, the Special Committee monitored the situation in South Africa and promoted international campaigns to isolate the apartheid régime, focusing on activities aimed at influencing and mobilizing world opinion. It organized and sponsored seminars and hearings, promoted contacts among opponents of apartheid and assisted the anti-apartheid resistance both inside and outside South Africa. The Special Committee also encouraged and generated support to anti-apartheid forces and to the victims of apartheid, and issued statements and messages against their repression in South Africa. The Committee denounced the régime's decisions to hold elections and to renew the state of emergency, and expressed solidarity with the detainees on hunger strikes in prisons throughout South Africa. It continued to persuade Governments to end their economic, military and other relations with South Africa and expressed appreciation to those States that had taken action in that regard.

In its conclusions, the Special Committee noted that, after a year of continued resistance, it had become clear that the new leadership of Pretoria was facing a formidable domestic and international challenge, while the international community was expecting initiatives for real change in South Africa. However, that new leadership still had not fully understood the imperative for fundamental change towards the eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a democratic and non-racial society. It continued to suppress with savagery any peaceful opposition to its policies. Under the circumstances, the international community had no other option for a peaceful end to apartheid than to step up pressure by adopting comprehensive and mandatory sanctions directed at the vulnerable areas of the South African economy. The liberation struggle and international pressure, facilitated by recent positive developments on the world political scene, had opened new possibilities for a peaceful end to apartheid. Intensified and co-ordinated pressure by the international community could induce Pretoria to take steps conducive to a climate for negotiations.

The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly demand that Pretoria annul capital punishment imposed on the opponents of apartheid, support a political settlement through negotiations and call on South Africa to create the climate necessary for negotiations by lifting the state of emergency, unconditionally releasing Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners and detainees, lifting the ban on individuals and anti-apartheid organizations, withdrawing troops from the black townships and ceasing all political trials and executions.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly urge the Security Council to apply comprehensive and mandatory sanctions and to implement strictly the mandatory arms embargo; and urge States to stop collaborating with South Africa in the military intelligence and technology fields. It also recommended that States, pending the adoption of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, impose embargoes on the supply of oil, petroleum products and technology, investments, loans and credits, computer and communications equipment and other high-technology products having military application; prohibit the import of coal, gold and other minerals, and agricultural products from South Africa; deny landing and port rights to South African air and sea carriers and sever direct transportation links; and induce transnational corporations (TNCs), banks and financial institutions to withdraw effectively from South Africa by ceasing equity investments and cutting off non-equity links. The Committee further proposed that the Assembly urge governmental and private financial institutions not to reschedule South Africa's foreign debt and to end financial support and favourable treatment; and urge Governments and NGOs to ensure the effectiveness of the cultural and sports boycott and extend all possible assistance to the national liberation movements, refugees, particularly women and children, and the front-line States.

Among other recommendations were that the Assembly: authorize the Special Committee to continue to monitor the imposition and implementation of sanctions and their impact on South Africa and to mobilize international action against apartheid request the Secretary-General to co-ordinate United Nations activities and facilitate efforts leading to a peaceful eradication of apartheid; and appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the information media and individuals to co-operate with the Centre against Apartheid and the Department of Public Information in monitoring international action against apartheid and in disseminating information on the situation in South Africa.

International action to eliminate apartheid

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁰⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1989⁽¹¹⁾ submitted replies from 33 Governments to his request for information regarding the Assembly's renewed appeal to consider, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, national legislative or other measures to increase pressure on the South African regime. Such measures included cessation of further investment in and financial loans to South Africa; an end to all promotion of and support for trade with South Africa; prohibition of the sale of krugerrand and all other coins minted in South Africa; cessation of all military, police or intelligence co-operation, in particular the sale of computer equipment; an end to nuclear collaboration; cessation of export and sale of oil to South Africa; and other measures within the economic and commercial fields.

In submitting the report, the Secretary-General suggested that the information he had presented in his four reports since 1986 was sufficient for an ample review of the implementation of Assembly resolutions concerning concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid.

The Special Committee against Apartheid concluded that, although proposals were made to impose further sanctions and to strengthen current measures, Governments and intergovernmental organizations had adopted few significant measures in that regard. The urgent task confronting the international community was how to make sanctions effective by targeting the key areas of the highly vulnerable South African economy. Intensified and co-ordinated pressure by the international community could induce Pretoria to take the steps conducive to a climate for negotiations.

In May, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1989/83, decided to give priority attention to the specific activities of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination that were directed towards the elimination of apartheid, in view of the explosive situation in southern Africa. By decision 1989/136, the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to renew the mandate of its Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa. In resolution 1989/82, it requested the Ad Hoc Working Group to continue to study the situation of trade unions in South Africa, in consultation with the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Special Committee against Apartheid and international and African trade union confederations. The Council, by decision 1989/137, approved a Commission request that its Group of Three, established under the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,⁽¹²⁾ should meet to consider reports of States parties to the Convention.

In June, at the seventy-sixth session of the International Labour Conference, the ILO Committee on Action against Apartheid called on Governments, employers' and workers' organizations and the International Labour Office to promote the implementation of ILO's updated Declaration and Programme of Action concerning Action against Apartheid in South Africa as well as other action intended to end apartheid. It recommended the adoption of sanctions, including financial sanctions, the imposition of a coal embargo and the adoption of legislation to prevent the transport of oil. The Committee supported the establishment of a Group of Three Independent Experts to monitor and evaluate the implementation of sanctions and other measures.

In August, the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers on Southern Africa agreed to secure a more co-ordinated approach to global sanctions.

On 11 September,(13) the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the International Non-Governmental Organizations Seminar on Education against Apartheid (Geneva, 4-6 September). The Seminar recommended the integration of teaching against apartheid into school curricula at all levels, and the expansion and regular production of news about South Africa. It also recommended that education against apartheid should support the international solidarity campaigns aimed at putting pressure on the apartheid régime.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 K by recorded vote.

Concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid

The General Assembly,

Alarmed by the critical situation in South Africa caused by the policy of apartheid and in particular by the extension of the nation-wide state of emergency,

Convinced that the root-cause of the crisis in southern Africa is the policy of apartheid,

Noting with grave concern that in order to perpetuate apartheid in South Africa the authorities there have committed acts of aggression and breaches of the peace,

Recognizing that the policy of bantustanization deprives the majority of the people of their citizenship and makes them foreigners in their own country,

Noting that the so-called reforms in South Africa have had the effect of further entrenching the apartheid system and further dividing the people of South Africa,

Convinced that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of majority rule on the basis of the free and fair exercise of universal adult suffrage can lead to a peaceful and lasting solution in South Africa,

Also convinced that broad-based negotiations involving the genuine representatives of South Africa's majority population should be initiated immediately by the South African authorities with a view to establishing a free, democratic, united and non-racial South Africa,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to take all necessary action for the eradication of apartheid, and, in particular, the need for effective pressure on the South African authorities as a peaceful means of achieving the abolition of apartheid,

Encouraged, in this context, by the growing international consensus, as demonstrated by the adoption of Security Council resolution 569(1985) of 26 July 1985, and the increase in and expansion of national, regional and intergovernmental measures to this end,

Considering sanctions to be the most effective peaceful means available to the international community to increase pressure on the South African authorities,

Convinced of the vital importance of the strict observance of Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by which the Council instituted a mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, and Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 concerning the import of arms, ammunition and military vehicles produced in South Africa, and of the need to make these embargoes fully effective in conformity with Council resolution 591(1986) of 28 November 1986,

Commending the national policies not to sell and export oil to South Africa,

Considering that measures to ensure effective and scrupulous implementation of such embargoes through international co-operation are essential and urgent,

Noting, in this respect, the efforts undertaken by the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Noting with deep concern that, through a combination of military and economic pressures, in violation of international law, the authorities of South Africa have resorted to economic reprisals and aggression against and destabilization of neighbouring States,

Alarmed by the deteriorating situation of millions of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in southern Africa caused by these policies and actions,

Considering that contacts between apartheid South Africa and the front-line and other neighbouring States, necessitated by geography, colonial legacy and other reasons, should not be used by other States as a pretext for legitimizing the apartheid system or justifying attempts to break the international isolation of that system,

Convinced that the existence of apartheid will continue to lead to ever-increasing resistance by the oppressed people, by all possible means, and increased tension and conflict that will have far-reaching consequences for southern Africa and the world,

Also convinced that policies of collaboration with the apartheid régime, instead of respect for the legitimate aspirations of the genuine representatives of the great majority of the people, will encourage its repression and aggression against neighbouring States and its defiance of the United Nations,

Expressing its full support for the legitimate aspiration of African States and peoples and of the Organization of African Unity for the total liberation of the continent of Africa from colonialism and racism,

1. Stornly condemns the policy of apartheid that deprives the majority of the South African population of their dignity, fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Also strongly condemns the South African authorities for the killings, arbitrary mass arrests and the detention of members of mass organizations as well as other individuals who are opposing the apartheid system and the state of emergency, and for the detention of and even the use of violence against children;

3. Condemns the overt and the covert aggressive actions which South Africa has carried out for the destabilization of neighbouring States, as well as those aimed against refugees from South Africa;

4. Demands that the authorities of South Africa:

(a) Release immediately, unconditionally and effectively Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners, detainees and restrictees;

(b) Immediately lift the state of emergency;

(c) Abrogate discriminatory laws and lift bans on all organizations and individuals, as well as end restrictions on and censorship of news media;

(d) Cease all political trials and political executions;

(e) Grant freedom of association and full trade union rights to all workers of South Africa;

(f) Initiate a political dialogue with genuine leaders of the majority population with a view to eradicating apartheid without delay and establishing a representative government;

(g) Eradicate the bantustan structures;

(h) Immediately end the destabilization of front-line and neighbouring States;

5. Urges the Security Council to consider without delay the adoption of effective mandatory sanctions against South Africa;

6. Also urges the Security Council to take steps for the strict implementation of the mandatory arms embargo instituted by it in resolution 418(1977) and of the arms embargo requested in its resolution 558(1984) and, within the context of the relevant resolutions, to secure an end to military and nuclear co-operation with South Africa and the import of military equipment or supplies from South Africa;

7. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so, pending mandatory sanctions by the Security Council, to consider national legislative or other appropriate measures to exert pressure on the apartheid régime of South Africa, such as:

(a) Cessation of further investment in and financial loans to South Africa;

(b) An end to all promotion of and support for trade with South Africa;

(c) Prohibition of the sale of military krugerrand and all other coins minted in South Africa;

(d) Cessation of all forms of military, police or intelligence co-operation with the authorities of South Africa, in particular the sale of computer equipment;

(e) An end to nuclear collaboration with South

(f) Cessation of export and sale of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

(g) Other measures within the economic and commercial fields;

8. Recognizes the pressing need, existing and potential, of South Africa's neighbouring States for economic assistance, as a complement and not as an alternative to sanctions against South Africa, and appeals to all States, organizations and institutions:

(a) To increase assistance to the front-line States and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference in order to increase their economic strength and independence from South Africa;

(b) To increase humanitarian, legal, educational and other such assistance and support to the victims of apartheid, to the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and to all those struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in South Africa;

9. Appeals to all Governments and organizations to take appropriate action for the cessation of all academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the apartheid régime of South Africa, as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid;

10. Commends the States that have already adopted voluntary measures against the apartheid régime of South Africa in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/50 K of 5 December 1988 and invites those which have not yet done so to follow their example;

11. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the total eradication of apartheid and for the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society in which all the people, irrespective of race, colour or creed, enjoy fundamental freedoms and human rights;

12. Pays tribute to and expresses solidarity with organizations and individuals struggling against apartheid and for a non-racial, democratic society in accordance with the principle: of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

In resolution 44/84, the General Assembly appealed to mass media, trade unions, NGOs and individuals to co-ordinate efforts to mobilize international public opinion against the policy of the apartheid régime of South Africa, and to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against it and for encouraging a policy of systematic and genuine divestment from corporations doing business in South Africa.

Relations with South Africa

Economic relations

In an overview of the economic situation in South Africa, the Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report,(8) said that the effects of sanctions, the shortage of investment capital, the lack of foreign financing, the burden of external debt payments and the withdrawal of TNCs continued to put strains on the South African economy. The reduction of its trade surplus in 1988 and its substantial debt-servicing obligations led to the introduction of deflationary measures in its March 1989 budget.

The rate of economic growth declined to 2.1 per cent compared to 3.2 per cent in 1988 and total output contracted by 1.5 per cent in the first quarter of 1989, signalling the beginning of a recessionary phase. Inflation reached 14.7 per cent compared with 12.9 per cent in 1988, while the exchange rate of the South African rand declined by 3.8 per cent in 1989. In the area of trade, imports declined steadily in the second half of 1989, though export performance improved. Overall, the volume of merchandise exports, excluding gold, was 17 per cent higher than in 1988. This led to an improvement in the balance of payments, which reflected an increase in the current account surplus to R 4.1 billion, against R 2.9 billion in 1988. At the end of 1988, South Africa's total foreign debt stood at just under $21.2 billion.

The authorities announced the creation of a R 3 billion Special Trust Fund to address "economic backlogs", particularly concerning housing and education for black South Africans. However, the income inequalities between whites and blacks continued to widen.

Sanctions and boycott

The Special Committee said that the economic sanctions against South Africa had contributed to positive developments in the region, as Pretoria appeared to have felt even their current limited impact. However, they had not so far succeeded in pressing the régime to the point of abandoning its apartheid policies. Loopholes, avoidance measures and increased third-party trading practices had lessened their impact, and the oil and arms embargoes were openly violated.

The Special Committee reported that data compiled by the Independent Expert Study on the Evaluation of the Application and Impact of Sanctions showed that total trade between South Africa and nine major Western States (Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, United States), which had decreased between 1983 and 1985 and in 1987, had increased in value in 1988. Quoting the Monthly Statistics of Foreign Trade of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, it said that the main exporters to South Africa in 1989 were the Federal Republic of Germany ($3.3 billion), Japan ($1.7 billion), the United Kingdom ($1.7 billion) and the United States ($1.7 billion), followed by Belgium-Luxembourg ($732 million) and Italy ($673 million). The Committee observed that as the Nordic countries, the United States and the Commonwealth countries reduced their trade with South Africa, some Far Eastern and Western European States were taking their place. The increase in trade between South Africa and some of its trading partners in recent years underscored the need for new mechanisms to tighten and strengthen trade sanctions. South Africa continued to purchase oil and petroleum products at premium prices and had managed to expand parts of its armaments production and secure markets for them. There was also evidence that the financial community was taking action to lessen the debt-related financial pressures on South Africa.

The Special Committee said that the uneven effectiveness of current government sanctions was due to the lack of co-ordination, enforcement and political will.

To achieve maximum effectiveness, the Committee concluded, sanctions had to be mandatory and comprehensive. Further sanctions should target the main areas of dependence and vulnerability in the South African economy, and they should be adopted in unison, strictly monitored and enforced. A powerful weapon against the régime would be the imposition of a mandatory oil embargo and, short of that, a widening and tightening of the voluntary embargo in effect. The mandatory arms embargo also had to be monitored and enforced more strictly. In addition, all sanctions should apply to South African-controlled firms to prevent them from assisting Pretoria in evading sanctions. The Special Committee proposed that measures be adopted to prevent States from benefiting from the vacuum created by other States that had imposed sanctions.

In June, the International Labour Conference noted that ILO was to constitute a group of three independent experts to monitor and evaluate progress made in relation to the implementation of sanctions.

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General in October 1989⁽¹⁵⁾ transmitted a report of the Centre against Apartheid on restrictive measures affecting externally dependent areas of the South African economy. The report focused on the main areas of external dependence, including external trade, finance and foreign capital flows and services, and examined the scope, implementation and impact of the restrictive measures.

The report stated that restrictive measures against South Africa, affecting both the country's foreign trade and the inflow of foreign capital, had had a discernible impact to the extent that, with the curtailment of foreign investment capital and long-term loans, foreign trade had become particularly important as a provider of foreign exchange for South Africa.

It concluded that while official sanctions had been limited in scope and had not always targeted the main areas of South African dependence on the rest of the world, their cumulative effect had imposed important constraints on the economy.

South Africa had been able to circumvent, albeit at a cost, sanctions on its essential imports, such as oil, petroleum products, capital goods, production material, spare parts and technology and, to a lesser degree, official financial measures. In addition, market pressures played a major role in constraining the South African economy. States had implemented some of the General Assembly recommendations, although in an uneven and unco-ordinated way.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 C by recorded vote.

Comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions and those of the Security Council calling for concerted international action to force the racist régime of South Africa to eradicate apartheid,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, in particular paragraphs 255 to 275, and the report of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports,

Gravely concerned that, in spite of recent developments in South Africa, the system of apartheid remains intact and the régime maintains its repressive domestic practices, its policies of destabilization against neighbouring independent States and its intransigence towards the will of the international community for the prompt elimination of apartheid,

Noting with grave concern that sanctions and other measures recommended by the General Assembly, as well as measures introduced unilaterally by a number of States, lack comprehensiveness, co-ordination and adequate monitoring mechanisms,

Gravely concerned that some Member States and transnational corporations have continued economic relations with South Africa, while others continue to exploit opportunities created by sanctions imposed by other States, thus substantially increasing their trade with that country, as indicated in paragraphs 109, 110, 112 and 265 of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Convinced that the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations remains the most appropriate and effective means to bring about a peaceful end to apartheid,

1. Reaffirms that apartheid is a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security, and that it is a primary responsibility of the United Nations to assist in efforts to eliminate apartheid peacefully without further delay;

2. Calls upon those States that have increased their trade with South Africa and, particularly, the Federal Republic of Germany, which recently emerged as the leading trading partner of South Africa, to sever trade relations with South Africa;

3. Calls upon those Governments that are still opposed to the application of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions to reassess their policies and cease their opposition to the application of such sanctions by the Security Council;

4. Urges the Security Council to consider immediate action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations with a view to applying comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa as long as it continues to disregard the demands of the majority of the people of South Africa and of the international community to eradicate apartheid.

Oil embargo

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(16) the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa, established in 1986,(17) and the Special Committee against Apartheid held hearings on the oil embargo against South Africa. The Panel established for that purpose met in New York on 12 and 13 April 1989. In its report,(18) the Panel stated that the oil embargo was being violated because of a lack of effective co-operation and enforcement measures. In addition, steps taken by States to deal with reported violations were inadequate. The Panel examined existing legislative and enforcement measures, co-operation with the Intergovernmental Group in monitoring violations, and between Governments and other organizations, the role of TNCs and oil traders, the transfer of relevant oil industry technology and issues of financing and insurance. The Panel said that an effective oil embargo would further increase the economic and political pressure on South Africa, but would have to comprise, in addition to the supply, shipping and handling of oil to South Africa, financing and investment in the petroleum industry. It recommended measures for tightening the embargo against South Africa.

The Intergovernmental Group, in an October report,(19) said that certain trends during 1989 suggested that South Africa would face increasing difficulties in evading the oil embargo. These included the return to normal maritime navigation in the Persian Gulf region, thus facilitating the monitoring of oil tankers; improvement in the producer/demand/supply situation; and the reduction of the amount of oil passing through spot markets on which South Africa depended for most of its supply. In addition, the number of independent oil traders which South Africa had used extensively was declining, while increasing quantities of Middle East oil to Europe were being transported through pipelines terminating in Mediterranean ports, thereby reducing the tanker traffic passing the southern tip of Africa.

The Intergovernmental Group concluded that an effective oil embargo against South Africa was feasible, but its implementation would depend on enforcement and co-ordination internationally of measures by oil-producing, shipping and handling States. The Group recommended that the Assembly request the Security Council to invoke Chapter VII of the Charter and impose a mandatory embargo; request States, pending that decision, to expedite legislative or comparable measures to impose an oil embargo, including measures to prevent the transfer of financial resources, technical assistance and energy technology; co-operate with the Intergovernmental Group in detecting, investigating and preventing violations and in taking action against violators; disseminate information on violations and their prevention; make the conveying of petroleum products to South Africa a punishable offence and publicize cases of successful prosecution; and co-operate with local governmental and non-governmental organizations in exposing violators.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 H by recorded vote.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa,

Recalling its resolutions on an oil embargo against South Africa, in particular resolution 43/50 J of 5 December 1988,

Noting that, while oil-exporting States have committed themselves to an oil embargo against South Africa, very few major shipping States have done so,

Concerned that the racist régime of South Africa has been able to circumvent the oil embargoes and comparable measures adopted by States,

Commending action taken by labour unions, student groups and anti-apartheid organizations against companies involved in the violation of the oil embargo against South Africa, and for the enforcement of the embargo,

Convinced that an effective oil embargo against South Africa would complement the arms embargo against the apartheid regime and serve to curtail both its acts of aggression against the front-line States and its repression of the people of South Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa;

2. Notes the intention of the Intergovernmental Group to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, in keeping with paragraph 44 of the 'Group's report;

3. Takes note also of the report of the Panel on the Hearings on the Oil Embargo against South Africa held in New York on 12 and 13 April 1989;

4. Urges the Security Council to take action without further delay to impose a mandatory embargo on the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa as well as on the supply of equipment and technology to, financing of and investment in its oil industry and coal liquefaction projects;

5. Requests all States concerned, pending a decision by the Security Council, to adopt effective measures and/or legislation to broaden the scope of the oil embargo in order to ensure the complete cessation of the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly, and in particular:

(a) To apply strictly the "end users" clause and other conditions concerning restriction on destination to ensure compliance with the embargo;

(b) To compel the companies originally selling or purchasing oil or petroleum products, as appropriate to each nation, to desist from selling, reselling or otherwise transferring oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly;

(c) To establish strict control over the supply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by intermediaries, oil companies and traders by placing responsibility for the fulfilment of the contract on the first buyer or seller of oil and petroleum products who would, therefore, be liable for the actions of these parties;

(d) To prevent access by South Africa to other sources of energy, including the supply of raw materials, technical know-how, financial assistance and transport;

(e) To prohibit all assistance to apartheid South Africa, including the provision of finance, technology, equipment or personnel for the prospecting, development or production of hydrocarbon resources, the construction or operation of oil-from-coal or oil-from-gas plants or the development and operation of plants producing fuel substitutes and additives such as ethanol and methanol;

(f) To prevent South African corporations from maintaining or expanding their holdings in oil companies or properties outside South Africa;

(g) To terminate the transport of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by ships flying their flags, or by ships that are ultimately owned, managed or chartered by their nationals or by companies within their jurisdiction;

(h) To develop a system for registration of ships, registered or owned by their nationals, that have unloaded oil or petroleum products in South Africa in contravention of embargoes imposed, and to discourage such ships from calling at South African ports;

(i) To impose penal action against companies and individuals that have been involved in violating the oil embargo, and to publicize cases of successful prosecutions in conformity with their national laws;

(j) To gather, exchange and disseminate information regarding violations of the oil embargo, including ways and means to prevent such violations, and to take concerted measures against violators;

6. Authorizes the Intergovernmental Group to take action to promote public awareness of the oil embargo against South Africa, including, when necessary, sending missions and participating in relevant conferences and meetings;

7. Requests the Intergovernmental Group to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including proposals for strengthening the mechanism to monitor the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

8. Requests all States to extend their co-operation to the Intergovernmental Group in the implementation of the present resolution, including submission of proposals for strengthening the mechanism to monitor the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Intergovernmental Group with all necessary assistance for the implementation of the present resolution.

In resolution 44/84, the Assembly also called on those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that had not done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regime of South Africa.

Foreign investments and credits

The international banking community was taking action to ease the debt-related financial pressure on South Africa, said the Special Committee against Apartheid. By the end of 1988, some Swiss banks had agreed to "roll over" some of South Africa's short-term debt. In early 1989, South Africa's foreign creditor banks had taken up an option in financing arrangements allowing them to escape from negotiations on South African debts and to cease being a lender to it by 1997. Some banks had also exchanged some $3.5 billion in loans for special exit securities. Thus, in May, the South African Finance Minister announced that over a two-month period $1.1 billion of short-term debt had been converted into long-term debt, enabling the country to make debt repayments of $1.3 billion in 1989.

On 18 October, South Africa concluded a Third Interim Agreement with major creditor banks, covering $8.1 billion, making it possible for the régime to reschedule repayment of its foreign debt obligations over a longer period and providing financial relief in the face of a looming debt crisis. On 26 October, the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee condemned the Third Interim Agreement, which the Committee considered as giving favourable treatment to, and undermining the international economic pressure on, South Africa.

The Special Committee said that with the application of sanctions to new loans to South Africa, trade credits were virtually the only source of new foreign financing available. South Africa acknowledged that there had been an increase in trade credits, which had eased its balance-of-payments constraints. The Committee noted that while some States had banned some types of trade credits to South Africa, the ban was not complete. The United States General Accounting Office calculated that from June 1986 to June 1989, new guaranteed trade-related credits amounted to $1,066 million.

In October, (20) heads of Government of the Commonwealth (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia) decided to develop new forms of financial pressure on South Africa by calling on banks and financial institutions to impose tougher conditions on day-to-day trade financing, specifically by reducing the maximum credit terms to 90 days. They called on relevant Governments to make it harder for South Africa to get trade credits by taking it "off cover" with official government agencies for official trade credit and insurance purposes. They endorsed the establishment of an independent agency to review and report regularly on South Africa's international financial links and to publicize information on financial policies and flows to South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 E by recorded vote.

International financial pressure on the apartheid economy of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Noting that the maintenance of the apartheid economy and the expansion of military and police expenditures substantially depend on the supply of further credits and loans by the international financial community,

Deeply regretting that the participating banks in the Third Interim Agreement with the apartheid régime, in spite of demands by the international community, have recently announced the rescheduling of South Africa's external debt, which was due for repayment in 1990,

Considering that the rescheduling of South Africa's external debt at this particular time represents an attempt to undermine the efforts of the international community to promote a peaceful resolution of the conflict in that country,

Taking note of the Kuala Lumpur Statement on Southern Africa adopted by the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting on 21 October 1989,

1. Deplores the Third Interim Agreement, particularly its terms and timing, which, by providing for the rescheduling over a period of three and a half years of a significant part of South Africa's debt, lessens the financial pressure on the apartheid régime;

2. Strongly urges Governments and private financial institutions to deny new bank loans to South Africa, whether to the public or private sectors;

3. Calls upon those States which continue to maintain trade and financial links with South Africa to restrict the provision of trade credits and cease loan insurance, in particular:

(a) By calling upon all the relevant banks and financial institutions to impose stricter conditions on day-to-day trade financing, specifically through reducing the maximum credit terms to 90 days;

(b) By taking South Africa "off cover" with official government agencies for official trade credit and insurance purposes, thus making its acquisition of trade credits more difficult;

4. Calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to use all appropriate means to induce banks and other financial institutions to give effect to the measures outlined above;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Transnational corporations

Among the documents considered at the April 1989 session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations (21) were reports submitted by the Secretary-General on the follow-up to the recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia; (22) on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia and collaboration of such corporations with the racist minority régime in that area; (23) and on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia in violation of relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations. (24)

In May, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1989/27, urged all TNCs to stop operations in South Africa and all forms of trade and economic links with the racist minority régime, and called on multilateral financial and development institutions to cease any kind of support to or collaboration with South Africa.

(For further details on TNCs, see PART THREE, Chapter V.)

Hearings on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in October the report and recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the second public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia (Geneva, 4-6 September).⁽²⁵⁾ The first public hearings were held in 1985.⁽²⁶⁾ The aim of the hearings was to examine the process of change in South Africa and investigate action which the international community could take to accelerate the abolition of apartheid and contribute to a post-apartheid society. The Panel heard views from Governments, the South African business community, trade union leaders, church organizations and the academic community.

The report examined the current situation in South Africa, the impact of sanctions and the future of South Africa, and made specific recommendations relating to financial, investment and trade sanctions as well as proposals for their monitoring. The Panel called upon the international community to reflect the will of the United Nations in adopting universal, comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, and upon the General Assembly to appoint an independent group to prepare a detailed report on sanctions abuses. Among its specific recommendations was that Governments forbid South Africa from raising money either through gold swaps or the sale of gold in the forward market. The Panel endorsed the demands of anti-apartheid groups, including the freeing of political prisoners, ending the state of emergency, unbanning political organizations, repeal of the Group Areas Act and other legislation, and the beginning of meaningful negotiations, as a precondition for debt rescheduling. It also considered the rescheduling of the Second Interim Agreement in 1990 and the repayment on guaranteed credits in 1990-1991 as opportunities to put additional pressure on South Africa.

The Panel recommended the enactment of disinvestment laws according to the Nordic model; the repeal of double taxation agreements granting tax credits; the adoption of legislation to cover non-equity ties; and ensuring the fair and just treatment of the black work-force affected by disinvestment. The Panel endorsed the recommendations of the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers on Southern Africa (Canberra, Australia, 7-9 August)⁽²⁷⁾ on trade sanctions and demanded that the mandatory arms embargo be strengthened, particularly with regard to "dual-use" items and technology transfer, and that international arms exporters cease the trade of military equipment and "dual-use" items.

It recommended that licensing and franchise agreements and the export of technology should be subject to wider trade sanctions; a complete ban on imports of South African gold; and the establishment by gold-consuming countries of a system for certifying the origin of gold. The Panel urged closer official monitoring of oil flows to ensure that shippers and middlemen were not circumventing sanctions. It called for the mandatory prohibition of the purchase of South African coal and the banning of the export of machine tools and capital equipment to South Africa.

The Panel noted that the absence of a comprehensive monitoring system had reduced the efficacy of sanctions. It recommended that the United Nations organize and co-ordinate monitoring activities and create for that purpose a comprehensive information system on the South African economy and on the impact and efficacy of sanctions. The monitoring system should also standardize reporting procedures on investment and trade links, maintain a register of investment and disinvestment and ensure maximum publicity of the findings. The Panel urged the International Chamber of Commerce to put pressure on its members to increase their participation in sanctions programmes.

In relation to the post-apartheid era, the Panel recommended that the General Assembly request that a comprehensive study be prepared, detailing the scope, responsibilities and likely costs of a comprehensive training and education programme for black South Africans, to be considered by a conference convened by the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 D by recorded vote.

Imposition, co-ordination and strict monitoring of measures against racist South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on sanctions against South Africa, in particular resolution 43/50 D of 5 December 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and of the report of the Secretary-General on restrictive measures affecting externally dependent areas of the South African economy,

Taking note with appreciation of the recommendations made in the report of the Panel of Eminent Persons that held public hearings, at Geneva from 4 to 6 September 1989, on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia,

Convinced that sanctions and other restrictive measures have had a significant impact on recent developments in South Africa and remain a most effective and necessary instrument of pressure in contributing to a political solution to the crisis in that country,

Considering that measures taken by States individually or collectively, while commendable, vary in coverage and degree of enforcement and monitoring and are not always addressed to those areas of the South African economy which are vulnerable to international pressure,

Concerned at the increasing number of States that exploit the trade gaps created by the uneven and uncoordinated imposition of restrictive measures,

Noting with concern that a number of transnational corporations, including banks, continue to provide support to the apartheid economy by maintaining financial and technological and other ties with South Africa,

Commending those States which have already adopted strict measures against the apartheid régime in accordance with United Nations resolutions, as well as non-governmental organizations and individuals, for their contribution to the isolation of the apartheid régime,

1. Urges all States that have not, yet done so, pending the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, to adopt legislative and/or comparable measures to impose effective sanctions against South Africa and, in particular:

(a) To impose embargoes on the supply of all products, in particular computer and communications equipment, technologies, skills and services, including military intelligence, that can be used for the military and nuclear industry of South Africa;

(b) To impose embargoes on the supply of oil and petroleum products and oil technology;

(c) To prohibit the import of coal, gold, other minerals and agricultural products from South Africa;

(d) To induce transnational corporations, banks and financial institutions to withdraw effectively from South Africa by ceasing equity investment and cutting off non-equity links, particularly those involving transfer of high technology and know-how;

(e) To induce banks to cease the provision of new credits and loans;

(f) To consider ending promptly double taxation agreements with South Africa and any form of tax relief in respect of income from investments in that country;

(g) To restrict landing and port rights to South African air and sea carriers and to sever direct air, sea and other transport links with South Africa;

(h) To ensure, through appropriate measures, that their citizens refrain from serving in South Africa's armed forces and other sensitive sectors;

(i) To take appropriate measures to ensure the effectiveness of the sports and cultural boycott of apartheid South Africa;

2. Also urges all States to monitor strictly the implementation of the above measures and adopt, when necessary, legislation providing for penalties on individuals and enterprises violating those measures;

3. Calls upon Governments, intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies of the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and the public at large to take full account of the recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons that held public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa and Namibia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on measures to monitor sanctions undertaken by the United Nations system, governments and non-governmental agencies, taking fully into account reports of existing intergovernmental monitoring mechanisms.

Military and nuclear collaboration

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to monitor the implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa. It collaborated with the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa in organizing consultations on the implementation by the Federal Republic of Germany of the arms embargo against South Africa (Bonn, 27 April). The meeting discussed cases of alleged violations of the arms embargo, particularly the transfer of submarine blueprints to South Africa, and proposed legal and other actions which the Federal Republic could take to make the arms embargo more effective. In response to a communication from the Chairman of the Special Committee, the Federal Republic of Germany said that the investigations into the delivery of submarine blueprints were probes not into a possible infringement of the arms embargo but into a suspected infringement of official secrets regulations. However, in August it was revealed that South Africa was in fact constructing submarines, contrary to official denials, and that a third country was involved in the project. The Special Committee welcomed the withdrawal of the licence granted by the Federal Republic in 1985 for the export to South Africa of high-technology dual-use multi-sensor platforms and related electronic and other equipment.

In other developments, the Special Committee expressed concern over the visit to Chile by the South African Minister of Defence to discuss closer military collaboration between the two countries. That visit, which took place in February and March, revealed the extent of their co-operation, in particular their joint weapons and ammunition production projects. South Africa had assisted Chile in producing the G.5 155-millimetre artillery gun and was involved in the construction of a shipyard at Punta Arenas. Chile explained that the extent of its collaboration was limited to the acquisition of technology from South Africa for manufacturing the gun and that the shipyard was engaged solely in non-military activities. In April, five men were arrested in Paris while handing over to an official accredited to the South African Embassy parts of an anti-aircraft Blowpipe missile stolen from the British army in Northern Ireland. In May, South Africa participated in the International Defence Equipment and Avionics Exhibition held at Ankara, Turkey. In response to a letter from the Chairman of the Special Committee, Turkey stated that South Africa's participation was an "unfortunate incident" owing to an oversight by the private company that had organized the exhibition.

In a December report on activities between 1980 and 1989, (28) the Security Council Committee on the question of South Africa reviewed the implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa, including ways it had been circumvented.

The Special Committee noted several convictions in a number of States for the illegal sale of arms to South Africa, indicating the need for stricter enforcement of the embargo.

In the area of nuclear collaboration, an investigation conducted by the Federal Republic of Germany revealed that one of its domestic companies had delivered nuclear technology to South Africa and another was involved with a Swiss company in supplying nuclear materials as well. The activities of the companies involved were being investigated by the respective Governments and the United States. It was also reported that South Africa had successfully tested a modified version of the Israeli missile Jericho II, which was capable of launching nuclear warheads over a distance of 1,000 kilometres.

The Special Committee concluded that although the arms embargo had had a considerable effect on the South African defence establishment, arms and related matériel continued to reach South Africa. The Committee appealed to States to tighten and to increase their vigilance regarding licensing procedures for the export and re-export of military equipment; to implement fully the provisions of the embargo in their national legislation; and to investigate reported violations. It recommended that Governments close any loopholes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 I by recorded vote.

Military collaboration with South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Security Council on the arms embargo, as well as other resolutions on collaboration with South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Reiterating that the full implementation of an arms embargo against South Africa is an essential element of international action against apartheid,

Taking note of the statement adopted on 18 December 1987 by the Security Council Committee established by Council resolution 421(1977), of 9 December 1977, concerning the question of South Africa, which "noted with alarm and great concern that large quantities of arms and military equipment, including highly sophisticated matériel, were still reaching South Africa directly or via clandestine routes",

Expressing serious concern at the increasing number of violations of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa,

Regretting that some countries surreptitiously continue to deal in arms with South Africa and allow South Africa to participate in international arms exhibitions,

1. Strongly deplores the actions of those States and organisations which directly or indirectly continue to violate the arms embargo and collaborate with South Africa in the military, nuclear, intelligence and technology fields and, in particular, Israel, for providing nuclear technology and two corporations based in the Federal Republic of Germany, for supplying blueprints for the manufacture of submarines and other related military matériel; and calls upon Israel to terminate forthwith such hostile acts and upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany to honour its obligations under Security Council resolution 421(1977) by prosecuting the said corporations;

2. Deplores the actions of Chile, which has become an important outlet for the sale of South Africa's military hardware, and strongly urges it to refrain forthwith from such acts;

3. Urges the Security Council to consider immediate steps to ensure the scrupulous and full implementation of the arms embargo imposed by the Council in resolutions 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 and 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and its effective monitoring;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and to report thereon to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

The two phrases in paragraph 1 referring to the Federal Republic of Germany were retained by a recorded vote of 53 to 45, with 38 abstentions.

In resolution 44/113 A, the Assembly condemned South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration; called on States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist régime; and appealed 10 those States with the capability to do so to monitor South Africa's research on and development and production of nuclear weapons and to publicize any information in that regard.

The Assembly, in resolution 44/84, strongly condemned the collaboration of certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries with South Africa in the nuclear field and called on them and other Governments concerned to refrain from supplying the régime with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other materials, reactors or military equipment.

Israel-South Africa relations

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in the second part of its report,(8) prepared in response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(29) examined recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa. The Special Committee said that media and intelligence reports had revealed collaboration between the two countries in the joint production of armaments. Israel had provided South Africa with military technology for its growing armaments industry and was helping it to expand the military capability of its defence force. Attention was drawn to their reported collaboration in the development and preparation for testing of an intermediate-range ballistic missile capable of carrying nuclear devices. Israel was also assisting South Africa in developing the CAVA twin-engine multi-role combat aircraft, and in converting the old Mirage III into the Cheetah aircraft. Israel was also refurbishing 16 old F-5 aircraft from Chile for delivery to South Africa.

In its report covering the second half of 1989,(9) the Special Committee noted intelligence reports that Israel had received from South Africa permission to use its long-range test site and enriched uranium for its nuclear warheads in exchange for Israeli missile technology. According to the United States Central Intelligence Agency, the first missile flight of the South African-Israeli project took place on 5 July. In response to such reports, the Israeli Prime Minister, on 15 November, said Israel had contractual arrangements with South Africa that it intended to adhere to. On 22 November, the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee issued a statement expressing the Committee's concern over the military and nuclear collaboration between the two countries.

Other reported collaboration included the importation by Israel of coal from South Africa and the use of Israel as a conduit for South African coal going to Western Europe. The Special Committee suggested that Western European Governments and anti-apartheid organizations should maintain vigilance to prevent such circumvention of restrictions on the import of South African coal. It was also reported that the Israeli Kibbutz Ayelet Hashahar was planning to sell a complete automotive tyre factory to South Africa. In February, a delegation from the independent homeland of Bophuthatswana visited Israel to encourage Israeli investment there.

The Special Committee said Israel should abrogate its existing secret agreements and arrangements with South Africa for the supply of weapons and military technology. It recommended that the General Assembly call on Israel to cease its collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military field, and authorize the Committee to continue to monitor the relations between the two countries.

The Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 4-7 September)(30) condemned the increasing co-operation between what it called the racist régimes of South Africa and Israel and called on States to refrain from co-operation with those régimes in the nuclear field.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 F by recorded vote.

Relations between South Africa and Israel The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the relations between South Africa and Israel and, in particular, its resolution 43/50 E of 5 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between South Africa and Israel,

Noting with concern that the military relations between South Africa and Israel, especially in the area of military technology and, in particular, the collaboration in the recent production and testing of nuclear missiles, continue unabated,

Taking note of the relevant provision of the final document on southern Africa adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,

1. Condemns the collaboration of Israel with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields;

2. Reiterates its demand that Israel desist from and terminate forthwith all forms of collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields;

3. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to monitor the relations between South Africa and Israel and keep them under constant review and report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

In resolution 44/113 B, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to investigate reports that collaboration between Israel and South Africa had resulted in the development by South Africa of a nuclear-tipped missile.

Sports and cultural boycott

The Special Committee against Apartheid, on 13 June 1989, released the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa, containing information on such contacts during 1988. Of the 3,404 sportspersons mentioned, 650 participated in sports activities in South Africa, although most were not renowned. The highest numbers came from the United States and the United Kingdom. Between April 1988 and April 1989, 91 sportspersons pledged not to participate in sporting activities in South Africa.

The Special Committee observed that tennis and golf associations still allowed South African individuals and teams to compete in their events. While tennis associations had considered ending contacts with South Africa, no similar action had been forthcoming from the golf associations. The International Cricket Conference agreed to ban any player who participated in cricket events in South Africa after 31 March 1989. However, in a widely criticized move, a group of individual cricketers from the United Kingdom agreed to play in South Africa in 1990 and 1991. Reports about the participation of individual players from Australia, France and the United Kingdom in the century rugby games in South Africa in August 1989 became a matter of concern, especially to the organizers of the Commonwealth Games in Auckland, New Zealand, in 1990.

In May, ANC called on the international community to support current efforts in South Africa to create broad non-racial governing bodies in every major sports discipline in the country.

In August,(27) the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers on Southern Africa reaffirmed their support for the sports boycott of South Africa. It called for rigorous enforcement of the penalties agreed in 1989 by the International Cricket Conference and called on other sporting bodies to develop and apply similar rules and penalty structures.

The Commission against Apartheid in Sports, in a report on its 1989 session (New York, 18-20 October),(31) reported that the 1985 International Convention against Apartheid in Sports,(32) which entered into force on 4 April 1988, had been ratified or acceded to by 43 States and signed by 35.

The Commission consulted with international and national sporting organizations. It urged those international sports federations in which South Africa still maintained membership to expel South Africa and to persuade their affiliated teams and individuals not to engage in sporting activities in South Africa and not to compete abroad with South African sports-persons.

The Commission recognized the progress achieved in the international boycott of apartheid sports, but felt that further action was needed at the national and international levels, particularly with regard to golf, rugby and other sports. It recommended that the International Boxing Federation and the World Boxing Organization be included in the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa and that they terminate any contacts with South Africa.

The Commission recommended that the Assembly urge those States that had not done so to sign and ratify the 1985 Convention; call on States to co-operate with the Commission and the Committee against Apartheid in matters relating to the boycott of apartheid sports; urge States, organizations and individuals to achieve the total isolation of apartheid in sports and terminate any sports contacts with South Africa; and request the Secretary-General to support the Commission, particularly in respect to publicity against apartheid sports.

With respect to the cultural boycott, the Special Committee continued to publish the Register of Entertainers, Actors and Others Who Have Performed in Apartheid South Africa. Between September 1988 and August 1989, the names of 23 artists were deleted from the list. The Special Committee and anti-apartheid groups continued to monitor activities connected with the production of films, in violation of the United Nations cultural boycott, and to persuade individuals and companies involved to cease their collaboration with South Africa. They were particularly concerned with the upsurge of foreign films made in South Africa involving producers from the United States. In May, the ANC made public its redefinition of the cultural boycott, stating that cultural and academic contacts should be permitted only in furtherance of the national democratic struggle or its objectives. The international community gave financial, technical and other forms of assistance to developing cultural alternatives inside South Africa and increased cultural exchanges. The Special Committee established a scholarship fund for young South African artists, as well as a board of international representatives to advise the Committee on the cultural boycott and a cultural resistance desk.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 L by recorded vote.

Support for the work of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the boycott of apartheid in sports and in particular resolution 32/105 M of 14 December 1977 by which it adopted the International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports and resolution 40/64 G of 10 December 1985, the annex to which contains the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports,

Having considered the report of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports and the relevant sections of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports;

2. Calls upon those States that have signed the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports to ratify it and also calls upon other States to accede to it as soon as possible;

3. Commends those Governments, organizations and individual sportsmen and sportswomen that have taken action in accordance with the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa with a view to achieving a total isolation of apartheid in sports;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue issuing the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa;

5. Calls upon those international sports organizations and federations that have not yet expelled South Africa or suspended its membership to do so without further delay;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Commission against Apartheid in Sports with all needed assistance.

The Assembly, in resolution 44/27 K, appealed to Governments and organizations to cease all academic, cultural, scientific and sports relations that would support the apartheid regime of South Africa, as well as relations with individuals, institutions and other bodies endorsing or based on apartheid.

Situation in South Africa

Political prisoners and detainees

The Special Committee against Apartheid estimated that, by January 1989, the number of persons being held in South African prisons for political activities was 804, which did not include the large number of children and youth under 21 years of age serving prison terms. There had been a decrease in the number of detainees, although the period of detention had increased, making detainees, in effect, long-term prisoners. On 25 January, the plight of detainees was underscored by the indefinite hunger strike of 20 detainees at Diepkloof Prison. Their demand for the immediate and unconditional release of all detainees sparked off a wave of hunger-strike protests, as well as solidarity actions in South Africa and around the world. The resulting crisis led to the release of hundreds of detainees by the South African authorities.

Another disturbing aspect of Pretoria's repression was the number of prisoners on death row, which as at June 1989 stood at 88. In May, 14 persons were sentenced to death under the principle of "common purpose" for the murder of a policeman at Upington in 1985. They constituted the largest number of people to be sentenced to death at a single trial for a politically related incident. Their appeal was rejected in July. The increasing number of executions for political offences generated a renewed discussion on the question of the death penalty. By June 1989, 37 persons had been executed at Pretoria Central Prison. Several anti-apartheid organizations both inside and outside South Africa called for a judicial commission to inquire into the death penalty and for a moratorium on all executions pending the report of the commission.

The Special Committee appealed to the international community and, in particular, the media to take appropriate action for the immediate release of journalists arrested for participating in and covering demonstrations on the eve of the September elections, and to step up efforts to save the life of ANC activist Mangena Jeffrey Boesman and all other political prisoners on death row. It demanded the release of all political prisoners and detainees.

On 11 October, the Committee observed the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners. In October, eight long-term political prisoners, including Walter Sisulu, were released. Three more were released in December.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1989/82, had demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all trade unionists imprisoned for exercising their legitimate trade union rights.

Death sentence of South African patriot

On 27 September,(33) the Chairman of the African Group requested the General Assembly to consider urgently a draft resolution entitled "Death sentence of South African patriot". In introducing the draft before the Assembly, he said that the execution of ANC activist Mangena Jeffrey Boesman could only exacerbate the situation in South Africa, thereby leading to increased violence. The Chairman, calling on South African leaders to take decisions that went beyond speeches and to abolish apartheid, said that saving the life of one man could preserve the lives of thousands of others.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 September 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/1 by recorded vote.

Death sentence passed on a South African patriot

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the death sentence passed in October 1988 at Grahamstown, South Africa, on Mangena Jeffrey Boesman, a member of the African National Congress of South Africa,

Gravely concerned about the decision of the South African authorities on 22 September 1989 to refuse executive clemency in respect of the appeal against the death sentence,

Conscious that the carrying out of this death sentence would aggravate the situation in South Africa and thereby deal a severe blow to the prospects for negotiations to end apartheid,

1. Calls upon the South African authorities as a matter of urgency to commute the death sentence imposed on Mangena Jeffrey Boesman;

2. Urges all States and organizations to use their influence and to take urgent measures, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, the resolutions of the Security Council and relevant international instruments to save the life of Mangena Jeffrey Boesman;

3. Also calls upon the South African authorities to commute the death sentences passed on all political prisoners as a means of creating an environment conducive to the peaceful resolution of the situation in South Africa.

Women and children under apartheid

Responding to a 1988 Economic and Social Council request,⁽³⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted in January to the 1989 session of the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII) a report on developments from 1 October 1987 to 30 November 1988 concerning the situation of women under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia and measures of assistance to women in those countries.⁽³⁵⁾ The report stated that the situation of women and children living under apartheid had not changed appreciably except in the political field, where the hardening of the position of the apartheid régime had resulted in massive arrests of children. According to the Special Committee against Apartheid, by July 1988 some 40 per cent of the more than 30,000 persons detained since the imposition of the state of emergency in June 1986 were children 18 years or younger, who were subjected to prolonged incarceration, torture and even death. Information from the Centre against Apartheid indicated that black women in South Africa, particularly their leaders, were subject to police repression and harassment. In the social and economic fields, most women and children continued to live in urban slums or impoverished rural areas, and women suffered from discrimination in employment, education and health. The report also summarized action taken by United Nations organizations and the international community to provide assistance to women and children under apartheid.

A seminar on the special needs of South African and Namibian refugee women and children, organized by the Special Committee in cooperation with the Association of Women's Clubs of Zimbabwe (Harare, 16-18 January), urged the international community to publicize the special situation of women and children in those countries and to provide them with political, economic, legal, humanitarian and other assistance. A mission by a delegation of the Support Group of Eminent Women, in co-ordination with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,⁽³⁶⁾ visited Namibia, Zambia and Zimbabwe in November to assess the needs of South African and Namibian refugee women and children. It made recommendations for action by the United Nations, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and host and donor Governments.

The United Nations Children's Fund issued an updated edition of its 1987 report Children on the front line-The impact of apartheid, destabilization and warfare on children in southern and South Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/33 by recorded vote.

Women and children under apartheid

The Economic and Social Council.

Recalling its resolution 1988/23 of 26 May 1988,

Noting the concern of women throughout the world about the continuing degradation and abuse to which African women and children are subjected daily by the white minority régime of South Africa,

Recalling that this concern was expressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which also contain proposals for various forms of assistance to be rendered to women and children inside South Africa and to those who have become refugees,

Recognizing that the inhuman exploitation and dispossession of the African people by the white minority régime is directly responsible for the appalling conditions in which African women and children live,

Also recognizing that the equality of women cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle for national liberation and self-determination of the people of South Africa against the racist régime of Pretoria,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on new developments concerning the situation of women under apartheid in South Africa and Namibia and measures of assistance to women in South Africa and Namibia,

1. Commends the tenacity and bravery of those women both inside and outside South Africa who have resisted oppression, who have been detained, tortured or killed, and of those whose husbands, children and relatives have been detained, tortured or killed and who, despite this, have remained steadfast in their opposition to the racist regime;

2. Acknowledges the efforts of those Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have campaigned for and applied sanctions against the racist régime;

3. Condemns unequivocally the South African régime for the imposition of the state of emergency, the forcible separation of black families, the detention and imprisonment of women and children and the restrictions on non-violent anti-apartheid democratic organizations and individuals;

4. Urges the South African régime to accord prisoner-of-war status to captured freedom fighters, in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 relating to the protection of victims of international armed conflicts (Protocol I), adopted in 1977, to accord all political prisoners sentenced to death, among whom are women, a fair trial based on international legal standards, and to stop the execution of political prisoners;

5. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees, among whom are an increasing number of women and children;

6. Again calls upon Governments, in view of the deterioration of the situation in South Africa, to impose, as a matter of urgency, comprehensive sanctions in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council and the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

7. Appeals to all countries to support educational, health and social welfare programmes for women and children under apartheid;

8. Also appeals to the international community for increased assistance for women and children refugees in southern Africa;

9. Urges the international community to look into the newly developing situation of refugees and displaced persons, with a view to providing material assistance for them;

10. Urges Member States and United Nations bodies, in consultation with liberation movements, to give effect forthwith to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies that deal with women and children under apartheid, giving particular attention to education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities and to the strengthening of the women's sections of the liberation movements;

11. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to work closely with women in the liberation movements in order to disseminate information and to ensure a proper assessment of the needs and aspirations of the women and children living under apartheid;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session a comprehensive report on the implementation and monitoring of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies in regard to women and children under apartheid.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/33

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 44-2-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/90) by recorded vote (37-2-9), 16 May (meeting 16); draft by Commission on women (E/1989/27); agenda item 10.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Oman, Poland, Rwanda, Saud, Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Portugal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by resolution 44/143, condemned the apartheid racist régime for the increasing detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and requested United Nations bodies and NGOs to intensify the world-wide campaign to monitor those practices.

Aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation

United Nations aid to victims of apartheid was provided through national liberation movements recognized by OAU and directly to individuals for education and training. Legal assistance, relief and education grants were given by the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory South African legislation. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa offered additional educational assistance.

Assistance to national liberation movements

In June 1989,(37) the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) noted that, within the priorities set in the first programme of assistance to national liberation movements, new areas of assistance had been identified and programmes were being formulated. It requested the Administrator to review the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) component of the ongoing programme of assistance to maximize funding that could be transferred to the technical assistance programme in an independent Namibia; to plan and implement an orderly winding down and transfer of projects to Namibia; and to ensure, during the transitional period leading to Namibia's independence, that the use of indicative planning figure (IPF) resources for national liberation movements be governed by the principle of impartiality in accordance with the United Nations plan for implementing Security Council resolution 435(1978).(38)

The Administrator reported(39) that in 1989 the main emphasis of UNDP assistance to national liberation movements continued to be on providing educational and health services. Projects to provide repair and maintenance services were submitted for approval and a project on the involvement of women in development was being formulated. In the light of the forthcoming independence of Namibia, assistance to SWAPO was scaled down, while the transfer of development assistance for SWAPO to technical assistance for Namibia had commenced.

During 1989, 16 projects were operational under IPF funding for national liberation movements. ANC and PAC had three ongoing projects each, SWAPO benefited from seven projects and three projects covered all three national liberation movements. However, SWAPO was no longer eligible to participate in the last three projects after 1 April 1989. Total UNDP commitments under the national liberation movement IPF amounted to $13.4 million. The sectoral distribution of the projects remained the same except for changes in the number of projects and IPF allocations among sectors. Following the winding down of the SWAPO projects, seven projects remained in the education sector, valued at $7 million; two projects in the planning and co-ordination sector, valued at $500,000; two in the health sector with a combined allocation of $3.1 million; and one in the agricultural sector with a budget of $900,000. There were five pipeline projects with ANC and two with PAC, with resources amounting to $2.8 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by resolution 44/27 A, reaffirmed its full support for ANC and PAC. It decided to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable them to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee against Apartheid and other bodies. In resolution 44/27 K, it appealed to States to increase humanitarian, legal, educational and other assistance and support to the liberation movements recognized by OAU.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

In October 1989,(40) the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa had made seven grants totalling $3,650,000 during the preceding 12 months and had extended five grants totalling $1,504,000. It had received contributions totalling $3,473,775. Since its inception in 1965,(41) the Fund's total income was $36,769,314 with grants awarded for legal assistance, relief and education of refugee victims of South Africa and Namibia amounting to $35,521,560, leaving a balance of $1,931,751 as at 31 August 1989. As of that date, pledges of $633,080 were outstanding.

The Committee of Trustees of the Fund continued to encourage direct contributions to voluntary organizations providing assistance to victims of apartheid. It appealed for greater legal, humanitarian and relief assistance to those victims. It also decided to keep under review the situation resulting from the March 1989 Disclosure of Foreign Funding Act, adopted by the South African Parliament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 J without vote.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 43/50 I of 5 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Gravely concerned at the continued nation-wide state of emergency and security regulations which criminalize political dissent and protest,

Alarmed by the continued detentions without trials, forced removals, bannings, restriction orders, political trials, death sentences imposed on opponents of apartheid and harassment of trade unions, church and other organizations and individuals involved in peaceful protest and dissent,

Reaffirming that increased humanitarian and legal assistance by the international community to those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa is more than ever necessary to alleviate their plight and sustain their efforts,

Strongly convinced that increased contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the extensive needs for humanitarian and legal assistance,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination;

3. Appeals for generous and increased contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa;

5. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund for their persistent efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and Namibia, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa.

Assistance for public information

In 1988,(42) the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to expand United Nations anti-apartheid broadcasts to South Africa, as well as the production of audio-visual material, and to provide technical and financial assistance to radio stations of those States broadcasting or willing to broadcast to South Africa. In response to that request, the Secretary-General in November 1989 presented a report on the assessment needs for technical assistance to those radio stations.⁽⁴³⁾ He suggested a phased approach for the implementation of the request, beginning with a programming and technical study to determine the extent of assistance needed. The report outlined the results of that study, which was completed by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU). It recommended financial outlays totalling $9,700,000 in capital costs and $750,000 in annual operating costs for the transmission of broadcasts from Angola, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. The Secretary-General proposed consulting with ITU, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other agencies in respect of those needs. He also proposed to submit a single report in 1990 on the two remaining studies to determine the existing and potential interest in broadcasting United Nations anti-apartheid radio programmes, and the extent of the audience for those programmes in South Africa.

Work programme of the Special Committee

In its 1989 report, (8) the Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the General Assembly authorize it to continue as a focal point in monitoring the situation in South Africa, especially the impact of sanctions, and to continue mobilizing international action against apartheid.

Its main focus was directed at activities having the potential for influencing decision-making and for mobilizing world public opinion. It organized and sponsored seminars and hearings, promoted contacts among opponents of apartheid and assisted the anti-apartheid resistance inside and outside South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 November 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/27 G by recorded vote.

Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

1. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for its work in the discharge of its responsibilities in promoting international action against apartheid;

2. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee and endorses the recommendations contained in paragraph 275 of the report relating to its programme of work;

3. Authorizes the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate and acting as a focal point for the international campaign against apartheid and with the support services of the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, to continue:

(a) To monitor closely the situation in South Africa and the actions of the international community regarding the imposition and implementation of sanctions and other restrictive measures and their impact on apartheid South Africa;

(b) To mobilize international action against apartheid, inter alia, through collection, analysis and dissemination of information, through liaison with non-governmental organizations and relevant individuals and groups able to influence public opinion and decision-making, and through hearings, conferences, consultations, missions, publicity and other relevant activities;

4. Appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to increase their co-operation with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate;

5. Requests all United Nations bodies, organs and agencies to co-operate with the Special Committee and the Centre against Apartheid in their activities in order to ensure consistency and improve co-ordination and the greatest use of available resources in the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

6. Requests Governments and organizations to provide financial and other assistance for the special projects of the Special Committee and to make generous contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid,

7. Appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental organizations, information media, non-governmental organizations and individuals to co-operate with the Centre against Apartheid and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in their activities relating to apartheid and, in particular, in disseminating information on the situation in South Africa in order to mitigate the effects of the restraints on the press in South Africa and to counteract South African propaganda effectively;

8. Decides to make a special allocation of 430,000 United States dollars to the Special Committee for 1990 from the regular budget of the United Nations to cover the cost of special projects to be decided upon by the Committee.

Other States

Angola

Prospects for peace in Angola increased as the 1988 agreements(1) involving Angola, Cuba and South Africa and between Cuba and South Africa went into effect with the start of the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola and the start of operations of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM).

On 16 January, the Security Council, by resolution 628(1989), expressed full support for those agreements and called on all parties to co-operate in their implementation.

The Joint Commission established under the tripartite agreement held an extraordinary meeting from 16 to 18 October at Johannesburg and Pretoria, South Africa.(2) The Commission welcomed the decision of Angola and South Africa to improve the mechanism to register and investigate alleged security breaches of the settlement plan for south-western Africa.

In other developments, on 22 June, Angola and the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA), following the intervention of 18 African heads of State, signed the Gbadolite Agreement, which led to a fragile cease-fire between the two parties.

UNAVEM

In May,(3) the Secretary-General reported on developments relating to UNAVEM, established in 1988(4) to verify the redeployment northwards and the total withdrawal of Cuban troops from the territory of Angola. He said that the Mission, headquartered at Luanda, consisted of 70 military observers drawn from 10 countries and was assisted by 22 international and 15 local staff. By 1 April, it had deployed a number of military teams at the ports and airports to be used by Cuban troops over the 27-month period of their withdrawal. The first withdrawal began on 10 January.

In August,(5) the Secretary-General reported that by 31 July the total departures had reached 15,927, which was consistent with the timetable established. UNAVEM had also verified the withdrawal of Cuban military equipment. The Secretary-General confirmed that, in accordance with the agreement between the two countries, all Cuban troops had been withdrawn north of the adjusted 15th parallel by 1 August.

In a letter dated 16 August,(6) Cuba complained that on 14 August a Cuban lorry was ambushed by UNITA forces and six of its soldiers killed. In denouncing this act, Cuba warned that it might have an adverse effect on compliance with the timetable for the withdrawal of its troops from Angola.

The Secretary-General further reported, in November,(7) that by 31 October total departures recorded since the start of the withdrawal of Cuban troops in January stood at 25,510. It had also been verified that all Cuban troops had, in accordance with the agreement, completed their deployment to locations north of the adjusted 13th parallel by that day. The Secretary-General said that the success of the Mission illustrated what could be achieved by a United Nations peace-keeping operation when it received the full co-operation of the parties concerned.

Financing of UNAVEM

On 31 January,(8) the Secretary-General requested the inclusion of an item on the financing of UNAVEM in the agenda of the resumed forty-third session of the General Assembly. In an addendum to that request,(9) he indicated that, to meet the immediate requirements of the Mission, he sought and had received the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), under the terms of the 1987 Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses⁽¹⁰⁾, enter into commitments with respect to UNAVEM in an amount not exceeding $4.2 million. Cost estimates for UNAVEM for the period 3 January 1989 to 2 August 1991, inclusive of that amount, were $19.4 million gross ($18.8 million net). However, he was seeking an appropriation of $9.2 million gross ($9 million net) for the initial 12-month period from 3 January 1989 to 2 January 1990.

ACABQ(11) recommended approval of $9,103,000 gross ($8,962,000 net) for that period, including the $4.2 million previously committed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (February)

On 16 February 1989, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/231 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission for a period of thirty-one months,

Recognizing that the costs of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Angola Verification Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

Urging all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission in full and on time,

Taking into account the nature and the mandate of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission,

Recognizing that in order to meet the expenditures caused by the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission,

1. Decides to appropriate an amount of 9,193,000 United States dollars, inclusive of the amount of 4.2 million dollars authorized with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, under the terms of General Assembly resolution 42/227 of 21 December 1987, for the operation of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission for an initial period of twelve months, from 3 January 1989 to 2 January 1990, of the mandate period of thirty-one months authorized by the Security Council, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Mission;

2. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion:

(a) An amount of 5,303,438 dollars for the above-mentioned initial period among the States permanent members of the Security Council in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

(b) An amount of 3,646,863 dollars for the above-mentioned initial period among the economically developed Member States that are not permanent members of the Security Council in the proportions determined by the scale of assessment for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

(c) An amount of 238,282 dollars for the above-mentioned initial period among the economically less developed Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

(d) An amount of 4,416 dollars for the above-mentioned initial period to the following of the economically less developed Member States in the proportions determined by the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991: Afghanistan, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Ethiopia, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zimbabwe;

3. Decides that, for the purpose of the present resolution, the term "economically less developed Member States" in paragraph 2 (c) above shall mean all Member States except Australia, Austria, Belgium, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa, Sweden, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Member States referred to in paragraphs 2 (a) and (d) above;

4. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 2 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 231,000 dollars approved for the above-mentioned initial period;

5. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in section II of its resolution 43/230 of 21 December 1988;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Angola Verification Mission is administered with the maximum of efficiency and economy bearing in mind the relevant observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission".

General Assembly resolution 43/231

16 February 1989 Meeting 87 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/43/996) without vote, 16 February (meeting 53); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/43/L.23); agenda item 153. Meeting numbers. GA 43rd session: 5th Committee 52, 53; plenary 87.

In December, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹²⁾ that, of the assessment totalling $9,033,059 apportioned among Member States for the period 3 January 1989 to 2 January 1990, contributions totalling $7,421,587 had been received as at 30 November 1989, with $1,611,472 still outstanding. Savings for the period from 3 January 1989 to 2 January 1990 were projected in the amount of $861,100 gross ($806,100 net). In the light of outstanding assessed contributions, the Secretary-General recommended no action in respect of such savings. For the period 3 January 1990 to 2 August 1991, estimates were revised downward to $9.5 million gross ($9.2 million net), of which $5,826,400 gross ($5,616,450 net) related to the period 3 January 1990 to 2 January 1991, and $3,704,600 gross ($3,564,600 net) to the period 3 January to 2 August 1991.

ACABQ recommended approval of $5,826,400 gross ($5,616,400 net) for the period 3 January 1990 to 2 January 1991.⁽¹³⁾

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/190 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission for a period of thirty-one months,

Recognizing that the costs of the Verification Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Verification Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

Recognizing that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Verification Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963,

Mindful of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee on the requests of some Member States to change their placement in the existing groups "b", "c" and "d" of Member States, on the basis of the criteria set out in General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVII) of 11 December 1973,

1. Concurs with the observations, recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission in full and on time;

3. Decides, taking into account the outstanding assessed contributions due to the Special Account of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, to defer any action on the estimated unencumbered balance of the appropriations as may be called for until its forty-fifth session;

4. Decides also to appropriate an amount of 5,826,400 United States dollars for the operations of the Verification Mission from 3 January 1990 to 2 January 1991, inclusive;

5. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 5,826,400 dollars for the above-mentioned period among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, to be adjusted by the decision to be taken by the Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the composition of groups "a", "b", "c" and "d" of Member States and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

6. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among the Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 210,000 dollars approved for the above-mentioned period;

7. Invites voluntary contributions to the Verification Mission both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure to be established by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Verification Mission is administered with the maximum of efficiency and economy, bearing in mind the relevant observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission" and to request the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

21 December 1989 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/44/890) without vote. 18 December (meeting 58); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/44/L.16); agenda item 135.

Comoros

Comorian island of Mayotte

The question of the Comorian island of Mayotte—one of a group of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—was the subject of further consideration by the General Assembly in 1989. The Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence on 6 July 1975, following a referendum in 1974. France, the former colonial Power, had since continued to administer the island of Mayotte.

Report of the Secretary-General. In an October report to the General Assembly,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General said that he had addressed a note verbale to the Comoros and France, drawing their attention to a 1988 Assembly resolution on the question of the island of Mayotte⁽¹⁵⁾ and inviting them to provide him with any pertinent information for inclusion in his report. A similar communication had been sent to OAU.

France, in its response, reiterated that Mayotte had, since December 1976, been a territorial collectivity of France, which did not close the door to any further developments. France had demonstrated its readiness to seek actively a solution to the problem in keeping with national and international law and its own Constitution, taking into account the will of the populations concerned. Accordingly, it was maintaining a continuing dialogue at the highest level with the Comoros.

In its note verbale to the Secretary-General, the Comoros said that it had always preferred dialogue and concerted action in conformity with the principles of the United Nations Charter and the recommendations of international organizations for negotiations. It had increased its contacts at the highest governmental level with the French authorities.

In May 1989, President Ahmed Abdallah Abderramane discussed the question with the French President during a private visit to France. At the summit meeting of French-speaking countries at Dakar, Senegal, he expressed the hope that the recent détente in international relations might have a favourable impact on the matter. The Comoros said that during 1989 the issue of Mayotte had been discussed at several international forums, all of which expressed support for the Comoros in recovering its territorial integrity. It appealed to the Secretary-General to continue his role as a mediator with a view to bringing the two parties closer together in the search for a fair and equitable settlement.

OAU quoted a resolution adopted by its Council of Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 17-22 July), reaffirming the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte and inviting OAU member States to sensitize French and international public opinion to the question and to convince the French Government to end its illegal occupation of the island. OAU mandated its Ad Hoc Committee of Seven on the question of Mayotte to resume dialogue with the French authorities in order to restore Mayotte to the Federal Islamic Republic of the Comoros.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 October 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/9 by recorded vote.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, 40/62 of 9 December 1985, 41/30 of 3 November 1986, 42/17 of 11 November 1987 and 43/14 of 26 October 1988, in which, inter alia, it affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago, composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June

1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced also that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind also the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

Situation in the Comoros

On 14 December,(16) the Islamic Group requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly of an item entitled "Grave situation in the Comoros". In an explanatory memorandum, it stated that an armed group of mercenaries had assassinated President Ahmed Abdallah Abdere-mane of the Comoros and had disarmed the national armed forces with the intention of seizing control of the country. This constituted a flagrant violation of the United Nations Charter and international law. The international community was being called upon to use its influence to end this brutal interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign State and to enable its legitimate constitutional institutions to function. Appended to the request was a draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly.

During consideration of the request by the General Committee on 15 December, the representative of the Comoros expressed gratitude to those Governments that had helped to oust the mercenaries. He reported that, as of that morning, all mercenary elements had left the Comoros and national sovereignty had been re-established. France indicated its willingness to provide military assistance to the Comoros for an unspecified period.

On the same day, the General Assembly was informed that the General Committee had made no recommendation on the request by the Islamic Group.

Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

On 3 January,(17) the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries issued a communique in which it recalled that threats of aggression and media campaigns had preceded the 15 April 1986(18) aerial and naval attacks by the United States against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and warned that the current campaign might serve as a pretext for launching fresh acts of aggression against that country. It noted the offer of the Jamahiriya to allow international inspection of the pharmaceutical factories alleged to be producing chemical weapons.

On 4 January, (19) the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya requested an immediate meeting of the Security Council in order to halt the aggression by the United States, which, it said, had that morning downed two Libyan reconnaissance aircraft over international waters.

The United States⁽²⁰⁾ on the same day, in a letter to the President of the Security Council, said that it had acted in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter in exercising its inherent right of self-defence by taking defensive action in response to hostile action by Libyan military forces against United States aircraft lawfully operating above international waters of the Mediterranean. It had shot down the two Libyan aircraft in self-defence. The Arab Group,⁽²¹⁾ also on the same day, requested the Council to meet on the issue.

On 5 January,⁽²²⁾ the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries, recalling its communiqué of 3 January, condemned the attack and called on the United States to withdraw its forces from the area.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION

The Security Council held six meetings at the request of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Arab Group between 5 and 11 January.

Meeting numbers. SC 2835-2837, 2839-2841.

At their request, the President of the Security Council, under rule 37^a of the provisional rules of procedure, invited the following States to participate in the discussion without the right to vote: Afghanistan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, German Democratic Republic, India, Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Mongolia, Morocco, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

At the request of Algeria, invitations were extended under rule 39^b to the Acting Permanent Observer⁽²³⁾ and the Permanent Observer⁽²⁴⁾ of the League of Arab States, the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference,⁽²⁵⁾ a representative of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania⁽²⁶⁾ and a representative of the African National Congress of South Africa.⁽²⁷⁾

At his request,⁽²⁸⁾ the Council decided, by 11 votes to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (Canada, France, United Kingdom), that an invitation should be extended to the Alternate Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations. The invitation would confer upon him the same rights of participation as those conferred on a Member State when it was invited to participate under rule 37

During the debate, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said that, prior to the incident, the United States had dispatched a 13-vessel task force from Norfolk, Virginia, to support its Sixth Fleet, which was deployed off the Libyan coast. By shooting down without any justification two unarmed Libyan reconnaissance aircraft on routine patrol near the Libyan coast, the United States action was premeditated and a prelude to large-scale aggression. It called on the Council to condemn the American military aggression, to take all measures to stop it and to call on the United States to withdraw its naval fleet.

The United States said that the aircraft carrier Kennedy was on an easterly transit through the Mediterranean Sea, 170 miles north of the border between the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Egypt. Its naval aircraft were operating on a training mission over international waters, some 70 miles off the Libyan coast, north of Tobruk, when they were aggressively and hostilely challenged by the Libyan Air Force. The American pilots exercised restraint under the circumstances and repeatedly made attempts to avoid the Libyan aircraft which were closing in on them. When the section leader determined that his aircraft was in jeopardy, the United States aircraft fired on the Libyan planes.

The United States also stated that the incident was unrelated to concerns about Libya's chemical-warfare plant and should not be associated with the routine rotation of the United States Sixth Fleet in and out of the Mediterranean.

On 11 January, the Council received a draft resolution,⁽²⁹⁾ sponsored by Algeria, Colombia, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal and Yugoslavia, which would have had the Council deplore the downing of the two Libyan reconnaissance planes by the United States, and call on the United States to suspend military manoeuvres off the Libyan coast and on the parties to refrain from the use of force, to exercise restraint and to resolve their differences by peaceful means. It would also have called on the United States and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to co-operate with the Secretary-General in bringing about a peaceful settlement of their differences.

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Security Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

^bRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

The vote on the draft was 9 votes to 4 (Canada, France, United Kingdom, United States), with 2 abstentions (Brazil, Finland); the draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December 1989, the General Assembly, by decision 44/417, decided to defer consideration of an item on the 1986 Declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU on the aerial and naval military attack against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the United States in April of that year⁽³⁰⁾ and to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session.

Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India

The item on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India was included in the provisional agenda of the General Assembly's 1989 regular session, in accordance with a 1988 Assembly decision.⁽³¹⁾ On 22 September, by decision 44/402 A, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included the item in its agenda and allocated it to the Special Political Committee.

On 19 October, the Chairman informed the Committee that he had held consultations with the delegations concerned, particularly France and Madagascar. In view of the ongoing periodic contacts between the two countries, it was requested that the Committee postpone consideration of the item to the 1990 regular Assembly session.

On 8 December, by decision 44/419, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Committee,⁽³²⁾ included the item in the provisional agenda of its 1990 session.

Relations between Mauritania and Senegal

Senegal, on 19 July,⁽³³⁾ informed the President of the Security Council of the situation existing between it and Mauritania, arising from the murder in April of two Senegalese nationals in Senegalese territory by the Mauritanian National Guard and the taking hostage of 13 Senegalese nationals. At Senegal's request, the President of Mali, as current Chairman of OAU, had been acting as mediator, but no progress had been made in resolving the conflict. In May, Mauritania expelled 26,000 of its nationals belonging to ethnic groups also to be found in Senegal. The deportation intensified in July, creating tension between the two countries. Senegal, considering the situation a threat to peace and security in the West African subregion, was informing the Council so that it could take appropriate action.

Mauritania, in a letter of 24 July to the President of the Security Council,⁽³⁴⁾ refuted Senegal's account of the incident. It said that the incident had occurred on Mauritanian territory between stock-raisers and farmers and was used as a pretext by Senegal to implement a plan against Mauritania and Mauritians living in Senegal. Mauritania rejected the delaying tactics of Senegal in refusing to welcome its nationals repatriated from Mauritania on the pretext that they were Mauritians. It also said that the repatriation of Senegalese living in Mauritania had ceased. Mauritania was therefore drawing the attention of the Security Council to the aggressive designs of Senegal.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Scholarships awarded under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa reached 1,208 in 1988/89 compared with 1,358 in 1987/88, according to the Secretary-General's September 1989 report.⁽¹⁾ The Programme was administered by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Advisory Committee on the Programme and was financed from a Trust Fund made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals. For the 1988/89 period, there were 442 scholarship holders from Namibia and 766 from South Africa. With the independence of Namibia imminent, educational assistance to Namibian students would be provided for a transitional period.

For the period 1 September 1988 to 31 August 1989, a total of $4,238,446 in contributions had been received from 28 countries. In addition, pledges for 1989 amounted to $460,928. The 1989 contributions and pledges totalling $4,699,374 represented an increase over the previous year's total of $4,675,510.

The Secretary-General appealed to States, institutions, organizations and individuals for generous financial and other support to the Programme.

The Advisory Committee decided that the Programme should be evaluated in 1989, in view of the independence of Namibia and the need to outline the Programme's future focus, as well as to assess the needs for educational and training assistance to students from South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/86 without vote.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 43/31 of 22 November 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing an account of the work of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the administration of the Programme for the period from 1 September 1988 to 31 August 1989,

Taking note of the ongoing evaluation of the Programme,

Recognizing the valuable assistance rendered by the Programme to the peoples of South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with satisfaction that educational and technical assistance for southern Africa has become a growing concern of the international community,

Fully recognizing the need to provide continuing educational opportunities and counselling to a greater number of student refugees from South Africa and Namibia in a wide variety of professional, cultural and linguistic disciplines, as well as opportunities for vocational and technical training and for advanced studies at graduate and post-graduate levels in the priority fields of study,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and steady expansion of the Programme is essential in order to meet the ever-increasing demand for educational and training assistance to students from South Africa and Namibia,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for their continuing efforts further to promote generous contributions to the Programme and to enhance co-operation with governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies involved in educational and technical assistance to southern Africa;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all those that have supported the Programme by providing contributions, scholarships or places in their educational institutions;

4. Appeals to all States, institutions, organizations and individuals to offer greater financial and other support to the Programme in order to secure its continuation and steady expansion.

Co-operation between OAU and the UN system

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity intensified during 1989. In an August report,(1) prepared in response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(2) the Secretary-General outlined the nature and extent of that co-operation, as well as United Nations responses to the measures called for by the Assembly.

Co-operation between the two organizations covered four major areas: consultations and exchange of information; co-operation with regard to the situation in southern Africa; co-operation in the field of economic and social development; and co-operation in the field of information and publicity-. The report also spoke of the discussions between the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and OAU in March on the establishment of an OAU observer mission in Namibia, modalities for the repatriation of Namibian refugees and matters relating to the election process in that country. At the Summit Conference of OAU (Addis Ababa, 24-26 July), the United Nations Secretary-General addressed the questions of Namibia, Western Sahara, the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,(3) environment, human rights, the draft convention on the rights of the child, and the problems of African refugees and displaced persons. Consultations also took place between the two organizations on proposals for reactivating the machinery for co-operation between the secretariats of the United Nations system and of OAU and its affiliated organizations. It was decided that further consultations should take place later in 1989, in preparation for a joint meeting in 1990.

Also submitted to the General Assembly were the texts of resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of OAU at its fiftieth ordinary session

(Addis Ababa, 17-22 July).(4) The President of Egypt, Mohamed Hosni Mubarak, in an address to the Assembly, outlined the political and economic problems facing Africa, including the debt problem, and the impact of the region's environmental problems.

In May, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1989/59, acknowledged the efforts made by the Economic Commission for Africa, in co-operation with OAU and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, during the initial phase of the operation of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 44/17.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the enhancement of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and the practical measures taken for their implementation,

Recalling also its resolutions S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, 43/12 of 25 October 1988 and 43/27 of 18 November 1988 on the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fiftieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 17 to 22 July 1989, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-fifth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 24 to 26 July 1989,

Considering the important statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 29 September 1989,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer co-operation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity,

Concerned at the situation in southern Africa arising from the continued domination and oppression of the people of South Africa by the minority racist régime and conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the people of South Africa and to their national liberation movements in their legitimate struggle to eradicate the policies of apartheid,

Reiterating that Security Council resolution 435(1978) of 29 September 1978 must be implemented in its original and definitive form to ensure those conditions in Namibia which will allow the Namibian people to participate freely and without intimidation and harassment in the electoral process under the supervision and control of the United Nations, leading to the early independence of the Territory,

Deeply concerned that the critical economic situation persists in Africa despite the policies of reform being implemented by African countries,

Also concerned that some constraints continue to pose critical obstacles to African economic recovery and development, including those in the external arena, resulting in weak export earnings, severe debt-servicing burdens and limited availability of finance,

Mindful of the efforts under way by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and, in particular, towards the establishment of an African economic community,

Conscious of its responsibilities to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States in southern Africa to help them cope with the situation resulting from the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid régime of South Africa,

Deeply concerned also at the gravity of the situation of the refugees and displaced persons in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help African countries of asylum,

Recognizing the important role that the United Nations information system could play in disseminating information to bring about a greater awareness of the grave situation prevailing in southern Africa as well as the social and economic problems and the needs of African States and their regional and subregional institutions,

Expressing its gratitude for the continued financial and other support extended to Africa by the international community and especially by certain countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and of his efforts to strengthen co-operation;

2. Notes with appreciation the increasing and continued participation of the Organization of African Unity in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

3. Notes those efforts of the Secretary-General which are under way in order to implement General Assembly resolution 43/12 of 1 November 1988, particularly with regard to the establishment of a group of experts to undertake an in-depth assessment of the question of commodities of interest to Africa and the scope for export diversification;

4. Commends the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote multilateral co-operation among African States and to find solutions to African problems of vital importance to the international community;

5. Reaffirms that the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 is the responsibility of the international community as a whole and commends the efforts undertaken by African countries in spite of the effects of the adverse international economic environment;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to ensure closer co-operation and co-ordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in the implementation and monitoring of the Programme of Action;

7. Also calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, notwithstanding the competence of the multilateral financial institutions, to co-operate with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to contribute to the implementation of measures aimed at a lasting solution to Africa's debt and debt-servicing burden, taking into account Africa's common position on its external debt, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its third extraordinary session, held at Addis Ababa on 30 November and 1 December 1987;

8. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, to continue to extend maximum support to Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990;

9. Requests all Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and all other relevant organs of the United Nations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to activate and increase their programme of assistance to African subregional organizations for drought and desertification control such as the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development;

10. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts, on behalf of the international community, to organize and mobilize special programmes of economic assistance for those African States facing grave economic difficulties, the front-line States and other independent States of southern Africa to help them to withstand the effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid régime of South Africa;

11. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and relevant agencies of the United Nations system to extend their support and co-operation to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in the efforts to establish an African economic community, in accordance with resolutions AHG/Res.161 (XXIII) and AHG/Res.179(XXV) adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in July 1987 and July 1989, respectively;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Organization of African Unity informed periodically of the response of the international community to the special programmes of economic assistance and to continue to co-ordinate efforts with all similar programmes initiated by that organization;

13. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the World Food Programme, the World Food Council, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for the assistance so far rendered to the African States in dealing with the emergency situation as well as with the critical economic problems that exist on the African continent;

14. Endorses the agreement reached between the organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity for the convening of a meeting between the secretariats of those organizations, to be held at the headquarters of the Organization of African Unity from 2 to 5 April 1990 in order to discuss ways and means of expanding and strengthening areas of co-operation in the social and economic sectors;

15. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to continue to hold regular consultation;, as and when appropriate, between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Reiterates the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to intensify its efforts to eliminate colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid in southern Africa;

17. Urges the international community to extend full support to the Secretary-General in his effort to ensure that Security Council resolution 435(1978) is implemented in its original and definitive form;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, particularly with regard to the provision of assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa;

19. Also urges the international community to contribute generously to the Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid, established by the Organization of African Unity, and to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund, established by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries;

20. Calls upon the competent organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to continue to ensure the just and equitable representation of Africa at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional and field operations;

21. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations to provide material and economic assistance to African countries of asylum to enable them to withstand the heavy burden imposed on their limited resources and weak infrastructure by the presence in their countries of large numbers of refugees;

22. Calls upon the United Nations organs-in particular the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Special Committee against Apartheid-to continue to associate closely the Organization of African Unity with all their activities 'concerning Africa';

23. Expresses appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity for reactivating the machinery for co-operation of the two organizations and encourages them to further strengthen that machinery;

24. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to invite the representative of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to participate in the meetings of the United Nations Steering Committee and its Inter-Agency Task Force and working groups on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate facilities continue to be made available to faci-

tate continued liaison and consultations on matters of common interest as well as the provision of technical assistance to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity, as required;

26. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations within the United Nations system.

Chapter II

Americas

The United Nations played a pivotal role in 1989 in assisting Central American countries to achieve peace in the region. In February, August and December, the five Central American Presidents (Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua) and Panama agreed on further measures to implement the security undertakings of their 1987 Esquipulas II summit. In July, the Security Council called on the Presidents to continue their efforts to achieve a firm and lasting peace in Central America and expressed support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices (resolution 637(1989)). At the request of the Presidents, the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of American States, set up the International Support and Verification Commission to promote compliance with the agreements reached by the Central American Presidents. The Security Council, on the Secretary-General's recommendation, established the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, for an initial six months, to verify the cessation of aid to irregular forces and insurrectionist movements and the non-use of the territory of one State for attacks on another (resolution 644(1989)). The General Assembly approved funds for its financing (resolution 44/44).

In preparation for national elections in Nicaragua, scheduled for February 1990, the Secretary-General established the United Nations Observer Mission for the Verification of the Electoral Process in Nicaragua. In December, the Assembly deplored the continuation of the trade embargo against Nicaragua (resolution 44/217). The Secretary-General also remained engaged in negotiations between the Government and the opposition party in El Salvador, which reached an agreement on 15 September 1989. In October, the Assembly requested him to continue to support the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve peace (resolution 44/10).

In December, the Council and the Assembly also met to consider the situation resulting from the United States military intervention in Panama. The Assembly deplored the intervention, demanded the withdrawal of United States forces from Panama and called for respect of the 1977 Torrijos-Carter Treaties (resolution 44/240).

Central America

In 1989, Central American countries took initiatives to accelerate the peace process in the region, in accordance with the agreements reached at the 1987 Esquipulas II summit⁽¹⁾ and the commitments made in their 1988 Declaration.⁽²⁾ Most notable was the adoption on 14 February 1989⁽³⁾ of the Joint Declaration of the Central American Presidents at Costa del Sol, El Salvador, by which they agreed, following Nicaragua's undertaking to initiate a process of democratization and national reconciliation and hold elections by 25 February 1990, to draw up within 90 days a joint plan for the voluntary demobilization, repatriation or relocation of members of the Nicaraguan resistance. International observers were to be invited to verify that the electoral process was genuine.

The Presidents, meeting in Honduras from 5 to 7 August 1989,⁽⁴⁾ adopted the Tela Declaration, endorsing that plan, as well as assistance in the voluntary demobilization of all those involved in armed action in the countries of the region. They endorsed a 7 August agreement between Honduras and Nicaragua by which the former would request the Security Council to dispatch to Honduras an international peace-keeping force and Nicaragua, upon the receipt of an official report on the implementation of the joint plan for demobilization, would withdraw the application it had filed against Honduras before the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in 1986,⁽⁵⁾ charging it with border and transborder armed actions. On 14 August 1989,⁽⁶⁾ the Central American countries officially requested the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) to set up an International Support and Verification Commission (CIAV) to implement the demobilization and repatriation plan provided for in the Tela Declaration.

The Central American Presidents, meeting again in December,⁽⁷⁾ reaffirmed in the Declaration of San Isidro de Coronado (Costa Rica) their condemnation of the armed action and terrorism by irregular forces in Central America and reiterated their conviction that the people of the region must reject the use of force and terror to achieve political ends. They expressed their support for the Government of El Salvador, appealed to Frente

Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) to cease hostilities and requested the Secretary-General to ensure resumption of the dialogue between the Government and FMLN. The Presidents called on Nicaragua to contact the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) and CIAV so that the demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance in Honduras could begin. They appealed to Nicaragua and El Salvador to end their estrangement through negotiation and to continue their diplomatic and consular relations.

The necessity to establish a firm and lasting peace in Central America was emphasized by the Secretary-General at the International Conference on Central American Refugees (Guatemala City, 29-31 May) (see PART THREE, Chapter XV). On 15 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 44/139, expressed satisfaction with the adoption by the Conference of the Declaration and Concerted Plan of Action in favour of Central American Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons.

Women and peace in Central America and women, human rights and development in Central America were related items considered by the Economic and Social Council. The Council, in resolution 1989/35, welcomed progress in the peace process and exhorted the Governments of Central America to ensure full participation of women at all levels in the search for peace, pluralism, democracy and overall development. In resolution 1989/39, the Council urged the international community to support greater participation of women in the processes of change and in the bodies involved in negotiations and dialogue.

Report of the Secretary-General (June). Responding to a 1988 General Assembly request,(8) the Secretary-General submitted in June 1989 a report(9) on the situation in Central America. In his continuing efforts to assist the peace process, he had met in New York on 8 February with the Foreign Ministers of the five Central American countries. At their request, he had appointed a technical group of the Secretariat to draft proposals for establishing machinery to verify security commitments. Those proposals, which were considered at a technical meeting held in New York on 14 and 15 March with Central American Governments, provided for the creation of ONUCA, to be deployed in the territories of the five Central American countries. On 31 March,(10) the Ministers requested the Secretary-General to set in motion the verification mechanism. However, on 14 April,(11) the Secretary-General informed the Ministers that, due to the reservation of Honduras subordinating establishment of the mechanism to the effective fulfilment of the February commitment of Central American Presidents to seek negotiated solutions, he was unable to respond to their request; efforts to overcome that obstacle had so far been unsuccessful.

Also in April,(12) he had informed the President of the General Assembly of Nicaragua's request for him to set up a group of observers to verify implementation of the democratization and national reconciliation measures in that country, as well as the genuineness of the electoral process (see below).

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Security Council met in accordance with the understanding reached at prior consultations. The Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 637(1989).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983 and 562(1985) of 10 May 1985 and General Assembly resolutions 38/10 of 11 November 1983, 39/4 of 26 October 1984, 41/37 of 18 November 1986, 42/1 of 7 October 1987 and 43/24 of 15 November 1988, as well as the initiative that the Secretary-General of the United Nations undertook on 18 November 1986 together with the Secretary General of the Organization of American States.

Convinced that the peoples of Central America wish to achieve a peaceful settlement of their conflicts without outside interference, including support for irregular forces, with respect for the principles of self-determination and non-intervention while ensuring full respect for human rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 26 June 1989 submitted in pursuance of Security Council resolutions 530(1983) and 562(1985),

Recognizing the important contribution of the Contadora Group and its Support Group in favour of peace in Central America,

Welcoming the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Presidents of the Republics of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua as the manifestation of the will of the peoples of Central America to achieve peace, democratization, reconciliation, development and justice, in accordance with their decision to meet the historical challenge of forging a peaceful destiny for the region,

Welcoming also the subsequent Joint Declarations issued by the Central American Presidents on 16 January 1988 at Alajuela, Costa Rica and on 14 February 1989 at Costa del Sol, El Salvador.

Aware of the importance which the Central American Presidents attach to the role of international verification as an essential component for the implementation of the above-mentioned instruments, including, in particular, their commitments relating to regional security, especially non-use of territory to support destabilization of neighbouring countries, and democratization, especially free and fair elections, as well as to the voluntary demobilization, repatriation or relocation of irregular forces, as agreed in the Costa del Sol accord of 14 February 1989,

Aware also that the commitments enshrined in the Guatemala agreement form a harmonious and indivisible whole,

Noting with appreciation the efforts undertaken to date by the Secretary-General in support of the Central American peace process, including his assistance in the establishment of appropriate mechanisms to verify compliance with the provisions of the Guatemala agreement and of the Joint Declaration adopted by the Central American Presidents at their meeting held in El Salvador on 14 February 1989, and particularly the Secretary-General's agreement with Nicaragua to deploy a United Nations observer mission to verify the electoral process,

1. Commends the desire for peace expressed by the Central American Presidents in signing on 7 August 1987 at Guatemala City the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" and in the Joint Declarations subsequently signed in pursuance of it;

2. Expresses its firmest support for the Guatemala agreement and the Joint Declarations;

3. Calls upon the Presidents to continue their efforts to achieve a firm and lasting peace in Central America through the faithful implementation of the commitments entered into in the Guatemala agreement and in the expressions of good will contained in the Joint Declaration of 14 February 1989;

4. Appeals to all States, in particular to those which have links with the region and interests in it, to back the political will of the Central American countries to comply with the provisions of the Guatemala agreement and of the Joint Declaration, particularly that regional and extra-regional Governments which either openly or covertly supply aid to irregular forces or insurrectional movements in the area immediately halt such aid, with the exception of the humanitarian aid that contributes to the goals of the Costa del Sol accord;

5. Lends its full support to the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, in consultation with the Security Council, in support of the Central American Governments in their effort to achieve the goals set forth in the Guatemala agreement;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council regularly on the implementation of the present resolution.

Security Council resolution 637(1989)

27 July 1989 Meeting 2871 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20752)

Report of the Secretary-General (October In an October addendum to his June report,(13) the Secretary-General noted that the Central American Presidents, in the Tela Declaration adopted at their August summit,(1) had invited him and the Secretary General of the Organization of American States (OAS) to establish ONUCA and CIAV. The invitation to set up CIAV was reiterated in a letter of 14 August.(6) By a letter of 10 August,(14) Honduras confirmed that it had withdrawn its reservation regarding the establishment of ONUCA. In response, he sent a reconnaissance mission to the region in September, headed by Brigadier Pérciles Ferreira Gomes of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission. He undertook to submit a report to the Security Council based on the mission's recommendations.

The Secretary-General had agreed with the Secretary General of OAS to establish CIAV with effect from 6 September and they had defined its terms of reference. The Security Council approved the steps taken and welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to establish a military unit to ensure the collection and custody of weapons and other military equipment. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) had been requested to assist in the voluntary relocation and protection of members of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families. Further assistance to the returnees would be provided under the United Nations Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

Since the establishment of CIAV, frequent consultations had been held with Central American Governments, the United States and the Nicaraguan resistance on the establishment of the bases for the execution of the joint plan of demobilization.

According to the Secretary-General, the new climate of détente had been strengthened by the agreement reached on 15 September in Mexico City between El Salvador and FMLN to initiate dialogue for a political settlement of the armed conflict in El Salvador. He had accepted the invitation of both parties to attend their next meeting, scheduled for 16 and 17 October at San José, Costa Rica, and on 1 September had appointed Alvaro de Soto as his personal representative for the peace process in Central America.

The Secretary-General concluded that the situation in Central America had considerably improved since his last report, to the point where political solutions to the main conflicts in the region could be envisaged. The electoral process in Nicaragua and the execution of the joint plan provided an opportunity for national reconciliation. The establishment of ONUCA similarly would contribute to creating confidence in the region and should help promote an environment more favourable to dialogue, particularly the one initiated between the Government of El Salvador and FMLN.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 44/10.

The situation in Central America:
threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983, 562(1985) of 10 May 1985 and 637(1989) of

27 July 1989 and its resolutions 38/10 of 11 November 1983, 39/4 of 26 October 1984, 41/37 of 18 November 1986, 42/1 of 7 October 1987 and 43/24 of 15 November 1988, as well as the initiative of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of the Organization of American States of 18 November 1986,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 26 June and 17 October 1989, submitted in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 43/24,

Convinced that the peoples of Central America wish to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and justice, without outside interference, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience, and without sacrificing the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Aware that the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Presidents of the Republics of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, is the outcome of the decision by Central Americans to take up fully the historical challenge of forging a peaceful destiny for Central America,

Aware also of the political will which inspires them to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, establishing commitments to be fulfilled in good faith, through the verifiable performance of actions aimed at achieving peace, democracy, security, co-operation and respect for human rights,

Welcoming the joint declarations adopted by the Central American Presidents at Alajuela, Costa Rica, on 16 January 1988, and at Costa del Sol, El Salvador, on 14 February 1989,

Taking note with special satisfaction of the agreements reached by the Central American Presidents at Tela, Honduras, on 7 August 1989, comprising the Tela Declaration, the Joint Plan for the voluntary demobilization, repatriation or relocation in Nicaragua or third countries of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families, as well as assistance for the demobilization of all those involved in armed actions in the countries of the region when such persons voluntarily request it, and the agreement signed by Honduras and Nicaragua with the moral support of the leaders of Costa Rica, El Salvador and Guatemala,

Noting the action taken by the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of the Organization of American States in support of the agreements of the Central American Presidents, in particular those relating to the establishment and functioning of the International Support and Verification Commission entrusted with the implementation of the Joint Plan for the voluntary demobilization, repatriation or relocation of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families, and of other irregular forces when they request it,

Recognizing the importance of the action taken by the Secretary-General for the establishment of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America at the request of the Governments of the region, with a view to the adoption of the necessary measures for setting in motion the on-site verification machinery in fulfilment of the security commitments emanating from the agreement signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting and subsequent declarations,

Noting the importance attached by the Central American Presidents to the function of international verification of the electoral processes in the region, in accordance with the provisions of the agreement signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, and the declaration adopted at Costa del Sol,

Welcoming the invitation extended through a sovereign decision by the Government of Nicaragua to the Secretary-General to establish, within the context of the Central American peace process, a group of observers to verify each and every stage of the electoral process in Nicaragua, a process that is to culminate in national elections scheduled for 25 February 1990, as well as the positive response of the Secretary-General,

Noting with interest the agreement signed on 15 September 1989 at Mexico City by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to continue the process of dialogue in an effort to reach an understanding through political agreements that would put an end to the armed conflict by political means in the shortest possible time, as well as to encourage the democratization of the country and to reunify Salvadorian society, and the decision of the Secretary-General to accept the invitation extended to him by the above-mentioned parties for the United Nations to participate as a witness in the meeting held at San José from 16 to 18 October 1989,

Recognizing the unfailing determination and the decisive contribution of the Contadora Group and its Support Group in favour of peace in Central America,

Bearing in mind the particular importance which the implementation of its resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988 concerning the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America and other relevant resolutions has for the improvement of the living standards of the Central American people,

1. Commends the desire for peace expressed by the Central American Presidents in signing on 7 August 1987 at Guatemala City the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" and in issuing their subsequent declarations and agreements;

2. Expresses its strongest support for these agreements;

3. Exhorts the Governments to continue their efforts to achieve a firm and lasting peace in Central America and expresses its fervent hopes for the effective implementation of the agreements signed at Tela, Honduras, on 7 August 1989;

4. Appeals to the countries which are outside the region but which have links with it and interests in it to facilitate the implementation of the agreements concluded by the Central American Presidents and to abstain from any action which may impede such implementation;

5. Fully supports the Secretary-General of the United Nations in the performance of the functions which the Central American Presidents, at the Tela summit meeting, entrusted to him as a member of the International Support and Verification Commission, together with the Secretary General of the Organization of American States;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve peace, especially by taking the measures necessary for the establishment and effective functioning of the verification machinery in respect of security, through the United Nations Observer Group in Central America;

7. Supports the agreement of the Secretary-General with the Government of Nicaragua concerning the establishment of the United Nations Observer Mission to verify the electoral process in Nicaragua, contained in the letter dated 6 July 1989 from the Secretary-General to the President of the General Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it periodically during the present session on the progress of the United Nations Observer Mission to verify the electoral process in Nicaragua, which he established as an extraordinary measure related to the maintenance of international peace and security, as well as on the electoral process in Nicaragua, and to submit a final report to it on the results thereof;

9. Urges the international community and international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with the Central American countries for the implementation of the goals and objectives of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 42/231, and as a way of assisting the efforts being made by the countries of the region to achieve peace and development;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a preliminary report to the General Assembly during the first two weeks of December 1989 on progress made in implementing the present resolution and to submit a report thereon to the Assembly at its forth-fifth session;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forth-fifth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives".

Report of the Secretary-General (December). In a December report on the situation in Central America,⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General detailed the continuing consultations by CIAV with the parties to the conflict and its proposals for: the creation of a climate of trust to encourage repatriation; the establishment of direct contact between the Nicaraguan Government and the resistance; a census of the members of the resistance and their families; and a survey mission to assess personnel and equipment requirements for the collection and custody of arms and other military equipment. However, in view of the persisting differences between the Government and the resistance relating to the implementation of the joint plan, CIAV had proposed that the two parties hold direct talks. At the same time, there was a breach of the cease-fire in Nicaragua and the Government announced its decision, with effect from 1 November, not to extend the unilateral declaration of the cease-fire which it had renewed on a monthly basis since March 1988. After various initiatives, meetings between the two sides were held in November under the auspices of CIAV.

On 5 December, the Secretary General and the Secretary General of OAS were obliged to report to the five Central American Presidents that they had been unable to set in motion the joint plan contained in the Tela Declaration. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General noted, preliminary steps had been taken to lay the foundation for implementation of the plan, in conjunction with measures taken by UNHCR, the United Nations Development Programme and specialized agencies.

Based on his proposals, the Security Council on 7 November approved the establishment of ONUCA (see below).

The Secretary-General also reported on the United Nations Observer Mission for the Verification of the Electoral Process in Nicaragua (ONUVEN) and its work (see below). He also followed with concern the deteriorating situation in El Salvador (see below) and considered it urgent that substantive conversations be resumed between the Government and FMLN. He stated that he was prepared to make every effort to contribute to a just and lasting peace in that country.

Responding to the requests made to him by the Central American Presidents at San Isidro de Coronado, in December,⁽⁷⁾ to ensure acceleration of the deployment and functioning of ONUCA and an expansion of its mandate to include verification of any cessation of hostilities and demobilization of irregular forces, as well as reinitiation of the dialogue between the Government of El Salvador and FMLN, the Secretary-General reported that he was taking steps to carry out those tasks.

UN Observer Group in Central America

On 7 November 1989, the Security Council, by resolution 644(1989), established under its authority a United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA) as part of impartial machinery to verify implementation of the security provisions of Esquipulas II and the commitments made by the Central American Governments in subsequent joint declarations (see above). The Group's mandate was for an initial period of six months.

Reports of the Secretary-General In his reports of June,⁽⁹⁾ October⁽¹³⁾ and December ⁽¹⁵⁾ on the Central American situation, the Secretary-General described the steps he had taken to respond to the requests of the five Central American Presidents to establish ONUCA to verify compliance with the security undertakings in respect of the 1987 Esquipulas II Agreements. An October report to the Council⁽¹⁶⁾ reflected the operational concept of ONUCA, taking into account the findings and recommendations of a reconnaissance mission which had visited the region in September.

As requested by the Central American Governments, ONUCA's mandate would be to conduct on-site verification of the cessation of aid to irregular forces and insurrectionist movements and the non-use of the territory of one State for attacks on other States. Its monitoring and investigative functions would be performed by mobile teams of military observers. The Group would be under the command of a Chief Military Observer appointed by the Secretary-General. Headquartered at Tegucigalpa, Honduras, it would have liaison offices in each of the capitals of the five Central American countries and 33 verification centres, as well as a naval unit and an air wing. At full deployment, ONUCA would require a staff of about 260 military observers, 115 air crew and support personnel, 50 crew and support personnel for the naval unit, 14 medical staff, 104 international staff and 82 locally recruited civilians. The Secretary-General recommended that ONUCA be established for an initial six months, at an estimated cost of $41 million to be borne by Member States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 November, the Security Council met in accordance with the understanding reached in prior consultations. On the same date, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 644(1989).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 11 October 1989;

2. Decides to set up immediately, under its authority, a United Nations Observer Group in Central America and requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to this effect, in accordance with his above-mentioned report, bearing in mind the need to continue to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources;

3. Also decides that the United Nations Observer Group in Central America shall be established for a period of six months, unless the Security Council decides otherwise;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments.

Security Council resolution 644(1989)

7 November 1989 Meeting 2890 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20951).

Following the vote, the President, after consultations with Council members, made a statement on their behalf:

"The members of the Security Council reaffirm their full support for the Secretary-General's efforts to assist the Central American Governments in their efforts to achieve the goals set forth in the Guatemala Agreement of 7 August 1987 and in the Joint Declarations subsequently signed in pursuance of it. In any consideration of the renewal of the mandate of ONUCA, they will wish to assure themselves that the presence of the observer group is continuing to contribute actively to the achievement of a firm and lasting peace in Central America."

Composition

On 16 November,(17) the Secretary-General, following consultations with the parties, proposed to the Security Council that the following countries should contribute personnel to ONUCA: (a) military observers: Canada, Colombia, Ireland, Spain and Venezuela; (b) logistics units: Canada, Venezuela and civilian elements from the Federal Republic of Germany. On the same date,(18) he informed the Council of his intention to appoint Major-General Agustín Quesada Gómez of Spain as ONUCA's Chief Military Observer.

The Council agreed to the Secretary-General's proposals on 21 November.(19)

Financing

On 20 November, at the request of the Secretary-General,(20) the General Assembly, by decision 44/402, included an additional item on financing of ONUCA in the agenda of its 1989 session. In a report accompanying his request,(21) the Secretary-General set out ONUCA's financial requirements, including cost estimates totalling $40.8 million gross ($40.2 million net) for the initial six-month period. That figure incorporated commitments of $3,450,000 to meet expenses of an immediate nature.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)(22) recommended approval of an appropriation of $40.8 million gross ($40.2 million net) for ONUCA from 7 November 1989 to 6 May 1990, including the commitments of $3,450,000 to meet initial expenses, and authorization for commitments not to exceed $4,524,100 gross per month for the period beginning 7 May 1990, should the Security Council renew ONUCA's mandate. At the same time, the Advisory Committee emphasized that the Secretary-General should endeavour to maximize savings through efficient use of resources; as uncertainties diminished, he should adjust expenditure estimates in line with the actual situation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 44/44.

Financing of the United Nations Observer
Group in Central America
The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Group in Central America for a period of six months,

Recognizing that the costs of the Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Group with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

Urging all Member States to make every effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Group in full and on time,

Recognizing that in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Group, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of the Group,

Mindful of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee on the requests of some Member States to change their placement in the existing groups "b", "c" and "d" of Member States, on the basis of the criteria set out in General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973,

1. Concurs with the observations, recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides to appropriate an amount of 40.8 million United States dollars, inclusive of the amount of 3,450,000 dollars authorized with the concurrence of the Advisory Committee, under the terms of General Assembly resolution 42/227 of 21 December 1987, for the operation of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America from 7 November 1989 to 6 May 1990, inclusive, and requests the Secretary-General to establish a special account for the Group;

3. Decides also, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 40.8 million dollars for the above-mentioned period among the States Members of the United Nations, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, to be adjusted by the decision to be taken by the Assembly, at its forty-fourth session, on the composition of groups "a" "b" "c" and "d" of Member States and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

4. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among the Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 600,000 dollars approved for the above-mentioned period;

5. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Group at a rate not to exceed 4,524,100 dollars gross (4,389,500 dollars net) per month, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, for the twelve-month period beginning 7 May 1990, should the Security Council decide to renew the mandate of the Group beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 644(1989), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the present resolution;

6. Invites voluntary contributions to the Group both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure to be established by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Group is administered with the maximum of efficiency and economy, bearing in mind the relevant observations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forth-fifth session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America" and in this connection requests the Secretary-General to submit appropriate documentation.

Nicaragua

In February 1989, Nicaragua announced its decision to hold national elections no later than 25 February 1990 and, referring to the Joint Declaration of the five Central American Presidents,(3) requested the Secretary-General to establish a group of observers to verify that the electoral process was genuine.

On 6 June,(23) the Secretary-General reported to the President of the General Assembly that he had sent several missions to Nicaragua in connection with that request, primarily to make contact with Government and electoral authorities as well as opposition parties, and to observe the debate in the National Assembly on the reforms of the electoral laws and those regulating the mass media and to study the new legislation. He had also suggested to the Secretary General of OAS that the two organizations jointly carry out Nicaragua's request with respect to creating a verification machinery. The Secretary General of OAS replied on 22 June that OAS had already begun the observation, but that he attached special importance to an exchange of views and dialogue on the possible form and modalities of collaboration.

On 6 July,(24) the Secretary-General informed the Assembly President of his decision to establish a United Nations Observer Mission to verify the electoral process in Nicaragua, referring to a 1988 Assembly resolution on the situation in Central America(8) as authority for his action. The Secretary-General explained that his decision should not be construed as any kind of value judgement as to the laws in force governing the electoral process. He also proposed that the Mission have unrestricted freedom of movement within all electoral districts, unrestricted access to all polling stations and unimpeded contacts with all political parties.

The Security Council, in resolution 637(1989), noted with appreciation the Secretary-General's agreement with Nicaragua to deploy a United Nations election observer mission to the country.

On 4 August, the President of Nicaragua and the political parties, in the presence of observers from the United Nations, OAS and the Centre for Democracy and in accordance with the February Agreement of Central American Presidents, signed an agreement setting out legal and political conditions for a free and just electoral process.(25)

UN Observer Mission for electoral verification

The United Nations Observer Mission for the Verification of the Electoral Process in Nicaragua (ONUVEN) as established on 25 August. The Secretary-General appointed Elliott Richardson as his Personal Representative to oversee the Mission's activities, Iqbal Riza as Chief of Mission and Horatio Boneo as Deputy Chief.

Under ONUVEN's terms of reference, as agreed between the United Nations and the Government, it was to verify that political parties were equitably represented in the Supreme Electoral Council and its subsidiary bodies, that they enjoyed complete freedom of organization and mobilization and equal access to State television and radio, and that electoral rolls were properly drawn up; inform the Supreme Electoral Council of complaints and irregularities; and report to the Secretary-General.

ONUVEN's first report,(26) which covered the period from 5 July, i.e., the date of the exchange of letters between Nicaragua and the Secretary-General regarding the establishment of the Mission, to 30 September, outlined the steps taken by Nicaragua in preparation for national elections, including amendments to the Constitution introduced by a new Electoral Act and the establishment of the Supreme Electoral Council. The report described the organization of Nicaraguan political parties and coalitions; the initiation of political and electoral activity; and co-operation between the United Nations and OAS. In its conclusion, the report stated that all levels of the electoral authority were put in place and the organization of parties and coalitions almost completed.

The Mission's second report,(27) covering events in October and November, analysed the functioning of the electoral authority; the preparation of the electoral rolls; the organization of political parties; the progress of the electoral campaign; and the use of the mass media.

Summarizing ONUVEN's main observations, the report noted that voter registration had been satisfactorily concluded. However, there was concern that the electoral process would be threatened by the increase in political tension resulting partly from a resumption of military activity and interruption of the cease-fire. In addition, the political debate was surprisingly aggressive and attacks on opponents had reached unacceptable levels. Another source of concern was the persistence in discrediting the electoral authority, predictions of electoral fraud and reiteration of the argument that fraud would be the only possible explanation for any defeat in the election. Also alarming was the violence of the language used in the media and the manipulation of information on both sides.

In his December report on the situation in Central America (see above),(15) the Secretary-General said that, despite interruption of the cease-fire, the electoral process in Nicaragua was proceeding in a generally positive way.

Financing

In December,(28) the Secretary-General reported to the Fifth Committee that commitments for ONUVEN were entered into for 1989 with the concurrence of ACABQ, under the 1987 General Assembly resolution on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the 1988-1989 biennium.(29) Requirements of ONUVEN up to 31 December 1989 amounted to $3,166,700, i.e., $296,500 lower than the initial amount of $3,463,200 authorized by the Advisory Committee in September. For the completion of the Mission during the period 1 January to 30 April 1990, the Secretary-General estimated requirements of $398,300. ACABQ, in December,(30) recommended approval of that additional appropriation.

Other developments

tries,(32) denied having received any request by the United States to keep Nicaraguan insurgent forces in its territory. However, on 29 March(33) and again on 6 April,(34) Nicaragua, by letters to the Secretary-General, said that the bipartisan agreement announced by the United States Administration and Congress on 24 March to continue funding counter-revolutionary forces based in Honduras until February 1990 was an outrage against international law and a disregard for the spirit of the agreements concluded by the five Central American Governments.

On 16 April,(35) Nicaragua called on the United States to halt immediately all aid for irregular forces and insurrectionist movements, except humanitarian aid, and declared its willingness to discuss with the United States mutual security interests and to work towards establishing relations of mutual trust and respect. The United States responded on 21 April“(36) that Nicaragua’s charges were unfounded and that its aid fell clearly within the definition of humanitarian assistance in the Esquipulas II Agreement and was supported by all signatories except Nicaragua.

In May,(37) Nicaragua alleged that the United States was continuing to foment war in Central America and referred to incidents between 1 January and 15 May, in which hundreds of civilians were killed or wounded by counter-revolutionary forces and casualties were sustained by both its forces and the mercenary forces. In June,(38) Nicaragua protested to the United States continued acts of terrorism perpetrated by mercenary forces, citing an 8 June attack on a hydroelectric plant. Also in June, it protested to Honduras,(39) against the continued presence of mercenaries on Honduran territory, in disregard of the Esquipulas Agreements and to the United States(40) for intervening in its internal affairs through the reported backing by representatives of the United States Congress of covert assistance to opposition parties in Nicaragua.

Further attacks on Nicaraguan civilians during the period from 21 to 24 June were brought by Nicaragua to the attention of the United States,(41) and of the Secretary-General for the period from 3 to 11 July,(42) By another letter to the United States,(43) Nicaragua complained that on 21 October counter-revolutionary forces had ambushed two trucks of the Sandinist People’s Army, killing 17 persons and wounding 8 others.

By a communiqué of 1 November,(44) Nicaragua requested a meeting at United Nations Headquarters on 6 and 7 November between Honduras and Nicaragua, CIAV and representatives of the counter-revolutionary forces to agree on the logistical and other technical arrangements for the relocation, repatriation and integration into the political process of persons linked to counter-revolutionary activity. On 2 November,(45) Nicaragua announced its decision not to extend the unilateral cease-fire, in view of increased military activity by the counter-revolutionary forces, which, it charged, threatened the electoral process.

On 12 December 1989, in connection with the Application filed in 1986 by Nicaragua against Honduras before the International Court of Justice (ICJ), relating to alleged border and trans-border armed activities,(5) both countries agreed to set up a bilateral commission to seek an out-of-court settlement to the dispute within six months, to communicate this agreement immediately to ICJ and to request the Court to postpone until 11 June 1990 the setting of the deadline for submission of the Honduran counter-memorial. The two countries also agreed, in the event that no settlement was reached within the specified time, to request ICJ to allow Honduras six months for submitting the counter-memorial (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Compliance with 1986 ICJ Judgment

Responding to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(46) the Secretary-General, in November 1989,(47) reported that there had been no new developments regarding compliance with ICJ’s 1986 Judgment concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States).(48) In its annual report,(49) the Court pointed out that, failing agreement between the parties and at Nicaragua’s request, it was in the process of deciding, in accordance with the 1986 Judgment on the merits of the case, the form and amount of the reparation owed by the United States to Nicaragua for “all injury caused to Nicaragua by certain breaches of obligations under international law committed by the United States”. The Secretary-General noted that the United States had not participated in the proceedings to date, remaining of the view that ICJ was without jurisdiction to entertain the dispute. The Assembly, in resolution 44/43, reiterated once again its urgent call for full and immediate compliance with the Judgment, in conformity with the Charter.

Trade embargo

In response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(50) the Secretary-General, in November 1989,(51) submitted a report containing replies from Côte d’Ivoire, Ecuador, the German Democratic Republic, Nicaragua, Nigeria and the USSR in response to a note verbale of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean requesting information from States on action undertaken in the context of the 1988 resolution deploring the trade embargo against Nicaragua. The replies conveyed the opposition of those countries to the embargo and their appeal for compliance with the relevant Assembly resolutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/217 by recorded vote.

Trade embargo against Nicaragua

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/188 of 17 December 1985, 41/164 of 5 December 1986, 42/176 of 11 December 1987 and 43/185 of 20 December 1988, as well as its resolutions 42/204 of 11 December 1987, 42/231 of 12 May 1988 and 43/210 of 20 December 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the trade embargo against Nicaragua,

1. Deplores the continuation of the trade embargo contrary to its resolutions 40/188, 41/164, 42/176 and 43/185 and to the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986, and once again requests that those measures be immediately revoked;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 82-2-47 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.2) by recorded vote (78-32), 4 December (meeting 481: 8-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.51); agenda item 82 (b)).

Sponsors: Algeria, Democratic Yemen, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 44, 48; plenary 85.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Solomon Islands, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian, Arab Republic, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, Burundi, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Fiji, France, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Niger, Oman, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom, Yemen.

Speaking after the vote in the Committee, the United States said it could not accept that the trade measures it had taken against Nicaragua were inappropriate or illegal; neither international law nor the United Nations Charter prohibited a State from protecting its security through the organization of its bilateral trade relations. The resolution furthermore did not take into account Nicaragua's destabilizing activities in the region nor its repressive domestic policies. In Nicaragua's view, however, the United States had not offered any new arguments to justify the trade embargo which, it believed, would not promote but only hinder democratic change.

El Salvador

In 1989, El Salvador continued to accuse the Frente Farabundo Martí para La Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario (FMLN-FDR)-the Salvadorian opposition movement-of terrorist activities that it said were part of a guerrilla war designed to achieve a violent take-over of power. By a note of 9 June,(52) El Salvador informed the Secretary-General of the assassination that morning of the recently appointed Minister for the Presidency, Dr. José Antonio Rodríguez-Porth which, it charged, was perpetrated by FMLN as part of its irrational use of violence and terror. By a letter of 27 June,(53) El Salvador condemned the assassination of the Director-General of the National Firefighting Corps by FMLN Urban Commandos. Less than a month after the new Government had taken power, it said, FMLN was undermining the process of democratization by increasing violence and terror. By a 23 October communiqué,(54) El Salvador announced measures it had adopted to deal with the repatriation from Honduras of over 13,000 Salvadorian refugees. A Tripartite Commission, comprising El Salvador, Honduras and UNHCR, had established an operational plan for their repatriation, and the National Committee for returnees had prepared a national action plan, which was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 26 September.

The Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, by a communiqué issued on 20 November(55) condemning indiscriminate acts of violence against the civilian population, appealed for an immediate cease-fire and called on the Government of El Salvador and FMLN to resume negotiations. Similar requests were made on 24 November(56) by Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela, members of the Permanent Mechanism for Consultation and Concerted Political Action.

On 27 November,(57) El Salvador requested the convening of the Security Council to consider actions by Nicaragua which it considered breaches of the agreements concluded by the Central American Presidents. Unless those breaches were brought to an end, El Salvador believed that not only would peace in Central America be threatened, but a conflict with incalculable consequences might be unleashed in the region. On 28 November,(58) Nicaragua requested that the scope of the Council meeting be expanded to include consideration of the repercussions of the serious deterioration of the situation in El Salvador on the peace process in Central America. On 29 November, Nicaragua submitted a draft resolution⁽⁵⁹⁾ for consideration by the Council calling for an immediate cease-fire.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council met on 30 November and invited El Salvador and Nicaragua, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.^a

On 8 December, following consultations among the Security Council members, the Council President made a statement on their behalf.⁽⁶⁰⁾

"The members of the Security Council, after hearing statements by the representatives of El Salvador and Nicaragua at the 2896th meeting of the Security Council, on 30 November 1989, express their grave concern over the present situation in Central America, in particular over the numerous acts of violence resulting in loss of lives and sufferings of the civilian population.

"The members of the Council reiterate their firm support for the Esquipulas process of peaceful settlement in Central America and appeal to all States to contribute to the urgent implementation of the agreements reached by the five Central American Presidents. In this regard the members of the Council welcome the announcement by the live Central American Presidents to meet on 10 and 11 December at San José, Costa Rica, in order to discuss, within the framework of the Esquipulas peace process, solutions to the problems confronting them.

"The members of the Council consider that it is primarily the responsibility of the five Central American Presidents to find solutions to the regional problems, in accordance with the Esquipulas Agreements. Therefore, they reiterate their appeal to all States, including those with links to the region and interests in it, to refrain from all actions that could impede the achievement of a real and lasting settlement in Central America through negotiations.

"The members of the Security Council urge all parties concerned to co-operate in the search for peace and a political solution.

"They also express their firm support for the efforts being made by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in the peace process. In particular, they reiterate their full support for the Secretary-General of the United Nations in the exercise of the missions entrusted to him by the General Assembly and the Security Council, as well as for the early deployment of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America."

Meeting numbers SC 2896, 2897.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 44/165 appealed to the Government of El Salvador and FMLN to end the armed conflict and to resume the suspended dialogue in order to end all hostilities within an agreed time-frame. It supported the readiness of the Secretary-General to help bring about an immediate agreement on the cessation of the armed conflict and expressed concern about the persistence of and increase in the alleged activities of the so-called "death squads" operating in El Salvador.

Other questions relating to the Americas

Panama-United States

In 1989, relations between Panama and the United States worsened, with the former accusing the latter of interfering in its internal affairs and violating the 1977 Panama Canal Treaties. In elections held on 7 May, Guillermo Endara was elected President. However, the country continued to be ruled by General Manuel Antonio Noriega, who on 15 December declared a state of war with the United States. In response, the United States on 20 December sent military forces into Panama.

Communication. By a statement issued on 24 April,⁽¹⁾ the President of Panama accused the United States of further meddling in Panama's internal affairs by providing $10 million to opposition groups for use in the election scheduled for 7 May, as well as through further military aggression, electronic warfare and bribery. Panama said it would take steps in international forums to denounce the violations by the United States of the Charters of the United Nations and of OAS.

^aRule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may be invited, as the result of a decision of the Security Council, to participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council when the Security Council considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected, or when a Member brings a matter to the attention of the Council in accordance with Article 35 (1) of the Charter."

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (April)

At the request of Panama,(2) the Security Council met on 28 April to consider what Panama called the grave situation resulting from flagrant intervention in its internal affairs by the United States, the policy of destabilization and coercion pursued by that country and the permanent threat of the use of force against Panama.

The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Panama, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter and rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Addressing the Council, Panama accused the United States of interfering in its affairs, citing reports that the United States had approved a covert plan of operation which included the possible assassination of the Commander-in-Chief of the Panamanian Defence Forces and assistance to an opposition candidate. Panama said it also had to contend with the movement of United States armed units outside their defence sites, violations of its airspace, infiltration by United States intelligence units, overflights of Panamanian military defence installations, acts endangering civilian aviation in Panama, and allowing explosive devices to fall near Panamanian towns or abandoning them outside firing ranges. In addition, the United States had brought to Panama an offensive military team that had never before been part of the forces used to defend the Panama Canal. Panama further accused the United States of attempting to discredit the Panamanian electoral process by making accusations of alleged fraud and prejudicing international public opinion in advance with regard to the results. It charged that the United States planned to destabilize the country as a pretext for military intervention.

The United States replied that it had grave doubts over the fairness and freedom of the coming elections. Panama's crisis was not the result of United States interference, but of the policies of General Manuel Antonio Noriega who had arrogated to himself complete power over civic life and sponsored and countenanced widespread corruption, including drug trafficking and gun-running. The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights of OAS had expressed serious concern about the extensive irregularities in the election process and evidence continued to mount that the military régime was subverting the election through fraud, coercion and intimidation. The United States supported the Panamanian people in restoring genuine civilian democracy and was committed to the Panama Canal Treaties.

The Council President, before adjourning the meeting, said that the timing of the next meeting to continue consideration of the agenda item would be fixed in consultation with Council members.

Meeting number. SC 2861.

Further developments (May-July). On 11 May,(3) the European Community issued a declaration condemning the annulment of the Panamanian elections and the violence which took place during that process, particularly the aggression towards opposition leaders. On the same day,(4) the President of the United States, in announcing his country's support for initiatives by Governments in the hemisphere and in OAS to address the crisis, said he was recalling the United States Ambassador to Panama, reducing the embassy staff and relocating United States government employees and their dependants. He also said that the United States would continue economic sanctions, assert and enforce its rights under the Panama Canal Treaties, and augment its military forces in Panama.

On 18 May,(5) the Secretary General of OAS transmitted to the United Nations Secretary-General the decision of the Twenty-first Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of OAS to entrust to the Foreign Ministers of Ecuador, Guatemala and Trinidad and Tobago the mission of urgently promoting compromise formulas leading to a national agreement which would ensure the early transfer of power in accordance with democratic mechanisms and on the basis of full respect for the sovereign wishes of the Panamanian people. By a communique of 22 May,(6) the Cabinet of Panama said the OAS action was outside the competence of the OAS Charter and incompatible with the United Nations Charter, ran counter to inter-American agreements and affronted Panama's national dignity. Panama welcomed any initiative that could establish the truth about the current crisis, but would never accept any act that interfered in matters of a sovereign nature.

In July,(7) Panama denounced what it called acts of provocation and military intimidation by United States forces, accused the United States(8) of making an incursion into Panamanian territory on 8 July and drew attention to press statements by the Chief of the United States Army Southern Command in Panama to the effect that the United States should impose a military solution.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (August)

On 7 August, (9) Panama requested a reconvening of the Security Council, in view of what it called a dangerous escalation of intimidation, provocation and aggression by the United States against it. The Council met on 11 August to resume its consideration of the situation in Panama. In accordance with its decision taken in April, the President invited Panama to participate in the debate without the right to vote.

Speaking before the Council, Panama said the increased activities of the United States armed forces, in violation of Panama's territorial integrity, had forced it to draw the Council's attention to the need to take specific measures to avert armed conflict. The situation had been worsened by United States measures violating the Panama Canal Treaties and other agreements. In 1977, Panama and the United States had signed treaties guaranteeing Panama full jurisdiction over the whole of its territory and providing the world with a neutral, safe Panama Canal open to ships of all flags. Panama called for military observers to be sent to the area immediately, and for a good offices mission by the Secretary-General, to avert an imminent breach of peace in the region.

The United States replied that it had augmented its military forces in Panama in direct response to the hostile actions of the Noriega régime. It accused Panama of violating the Panama Canal Treaties and wanting to divert attention from the OAS efforts to promote the surrender of power and a transition to legitimate, representative and democratic Government.

The Council took no action at this stage, and the President stated that the Council would reconvene at a later date to continue consideration of the item.

Meeting number. SC 2874

Further developments (August-December). By a Proclamation issued on 31 August,(10) the General Council of State of Panama announced the establishment of a provisional Government and the assignment of Francisco Rodriguez-Poveda as Provisional President and Carlos Ozores Typaldos as Provisional Vice-President.

By a letter to the Secretary-General of 3 November(11) and a communique of 21 November,(12) Panama denounced the military actions by the United States between 30 October and 21 November. On 11 December,(13) the Provisional President informed the Secretary-General of statements made by senior United States officials that, although obliged to do so by the 1977 Panama Canal Treaties, their Government would not appoint the Panamanian national proposed by Panama to fill the post of Administrator of the Canal.

On 20 December,(14) the United States reported to the Security Council that, in accordance with Article 51 of the United Nations Charter, its forces had exercised their inherent right of self-defence by taking action in Panama in response to armed attacks by forces under the direction of Manuel Noriega following his 15 December declaration that a state of war existed with the United States.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (December)

On 20 December, the Security Council, at the request of Nicaragua,(15) resumed consideration of the situation in Panama. Following consultation among Council members, the President invited Nicaragua, at its request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure.

Nicaragua opened the debate charging that the United States, under the pretext of protecting American citizens, had committed an act of aggression by invading Panama and was trying to conceal a new and dramatic manifestation of its interventionist policy of force in Latin America. It had violated the United Nations Charter and international law, posing a threat not only to Latin America, but to international peace and security. The Security Council must condemn this outrage and demand immediate withdrawal of the invading troops.

The United States responded that its action in Panama was, in the light of armed attacks by General Noriega's forces, designed to protect American lives and fulfil its obligation to defend the integrity of the Panama Canal Treaties. An intolerable situation had built up in Panama over the preceding two years, with General Noriega having obstructed the elections of 7 May, while being involved in drug trafficking, endangering United States military personnel and jeopardizing the functioning of the Panama Canal. The United States acted in Panama with the approval of that country's democratically elected leaders; it intended to withdraw its forces as quickly as possible and was eager to work with the Panamanian people to rebuild their economy.

At the resumed meeting on 21 December, the President, with the consent of the Council, invited Cuba, El Salvador, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Peru, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37^a of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. The Council decided by a vote of 14 in favour (Algeria, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia) to none, with 1 abstention (United States), that Panama should participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with rule 37.^a

However, it requested the Secretary-General to report on the credentials of persons requesting participation in the debate as representatives of Panama.

When the Council resumed consideration of the item on 23 December, it considered the Secretary-General's report on the credentials of the representatives of Panama,⁽¹⁶⁾ which indicated that the two requests to represent Panama at the Council meeting had emanated from contending authorities. The Secretary-General said that he was not in a position to formulate an opinion as to the adequacy of the credentials submitted. The Council noted the report and was informed by each of the requestors that they did not maintain their requests.

Following the debate, the Council put to the vote a draft resolution submitted by Algeria, Colombia, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal and Yugoslavia.⁽¹⁷⁾ The resolution would have strongly deplored the United States intervention and demanded immediate withdrawal of United States forces. The text received 10 votes in favour (Algeria, Brazil, China, Colombia, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, Yugoslavia)? 4 against (Canada, France, United Kingdom, United States), with one abstention (Finland), and was not adopted due to the negative vote of three permanent Council members.

Meeting numbers. SC 28-99-2902.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a letter dated 20 December,⁽¹⁸⁾ Cuba and Nicaragua requested the General Assembly to include a priority item entitled "Grave situation in Panama" in the agenda of its 1989 session, to be considered in plenary. In an explanatory memorandum, they said that on 20 December, the United States had invaded Panama, thereby committing a flagrant violation of the Charter and international law. Also appended was a draft resolution for consideration by the Assembly.

On 29 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/240 by recorded vote.

Effects of the military intervention by the United States of America in Panama on the situation in Central America

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the statements made in the General Assembly and the Security Council regarding the invasion of Panama,

Reaffirming the sovereign and inalienable right of Panama to determine freely its social, economic and political system and to develop its international relations without any form of foreign intervention, interference, subversion, coercion or threat,

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations, all Member States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the need to restore conditions which will guarantee the full exercise of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Panamanian people,

Expressing its profound concern at the serious consequences the armed intervention by the United States of America in Panama might have for peace and security in the Central American region,

1. Strongly deplores the intervention in Panama by the armed forces of the United States of America, which constitutes a flagrant violation of international law and of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of States;

2. Demands the immediate cessation of the intervention and the withdrawal from Panama of the armed invasion forces of the United States;

3. Demands also full respect for and strict observance of the letter and spirit of the Torrijos-Carter Treaties;

4. Calls upon all States to uphold and respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Panama;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the developments in Panama and to report to the General Assembly within twenty-four hours after the adoption of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/240

29 December 1989 Meeting 88 75-20-40 (recorded vote)

10-nation draft (A/44/L.63 Add.1); agenda item 34.

Sponsors: Cuba, Ethiopia, Iran. Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mongolia, Nicaragua. United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: plenary 35,86-88.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Barbados, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Myanmar, Nepal, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Romania, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR. United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Dominica, El Salvador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahrain, Brunei Darussalam, Cape Verde,* Central African Republic, Chad, Costa Rica, Egypt, Fiji, Greece, Grenada, Honduras, Iceland, Ireland, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malta, Morocco, Niger, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Somalia, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen, Zaire.

*Subsequently informed the Secretariat that it had intended not to participate in the voting.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said it had acted for legitimate reasons of self-defence and defence of the integrity of the Panama Canal, in full conformity with the United Nations Charter, the Charter of OAS and the Panama Canal Treaties. Its goals had been to safeguard the lives of Americans, to defend democracy in Panama, to combat illicit drug trafficking and to protect the integrity of the Panama Canal Treaties after the many attempts at negotiations had been rejected by General Noriega, whose response to successive diplomatic efforts was increased violence. It urged the Assembly to vote against that draft resolution, which it called flawed and unbalanced, in order to send a signal of support for the democratically elected Endara Government and to send a message of rejection to those who would keep alive any vestige of Noriega's cruel reign.

After the vote, Panama stated that the United States intervention had been provoked by General Noriega's criminal irresponsibilities, had been aimed at his dictatorship and had made possible the restoration of democracy to Panama.

Related developments. On 21 December,(19) Cuba informed the Secretary-General of measures taken by the United States, following its invasion of Panama, against the Cuban Embassy in Panama City. Cuba said it held the United States responsible for anything that might happen to its officials or facilities in its embassy. Nicaragua, on the same date,(20) also reported to the Secretary-General that United States troops had surrounded its embassy in Panama. It condemned the presence of United States troops and demanded their withdrawal.

By a 26 December communication to the President of the Security Council,(21) Cuba said that since the guarantees and assurances given by the United States regarding the safety of its diplomatic representatives had not been matched by the attitude of the military forces surrounding the residence of the Cuban Ambassador, and in view of the gravity of the situation, it was requesting an urgent meeting of the Council to consider the matter and find an immediate solution. On 27 December,(22) Nicaragua transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a letter addressed the previous day to the United States Secretary of State protesting arbitrary acts committed against Nicaraguan citizens and its diplomatic mission and State property in Panama.

On 29 December,(23) following what it called an unlawful and unjustifiable outrage against the residence of its Ambassador in Panama, Nicaragua notified the United States of measures taken in response, such as limiting the number of diplomatic and consular officers at the United States Embassy in Nicaragua to 15, the number of United States Marine Corps personnel there to 9, and administrative, technical and service personnel to 100. It also ordered the expulsion of 20 United States Embassy officials.

Report of the Secretary-General. On 30 December,(24) the Secretary-General, responding to the Assembly's request in its resolution of the previous day to report within 24 hours on developments in Panama, said that while he continued to follow the situation as closely as possible, he did not have at his disposal sources of information other than those publicly available and was therefore not in a position to monitor the developments in such a way as to provide a substantive report.

Chapter III

Asia and the Pacific

The situation in Asia and the Pacific, aggravated by certain long-standing conflicts, remained tense in 1989. The United Nations Command continued to report violations of the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea. Following the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, completed in February, lighting in the country escalated and caused more people to seek refugee status in Pakistan and Iran. Viet Nam's announcement of its complete troop withdrawal from Kampuchea in September was refuted by the opposition parties to the conflict because of the lack of a proper international control mechanism.

In those circumstances, United Nations efforts aimed at restoring peace in the region were concentrated on the implementation of resolutions and agreements concluded in preceding years. The dialogue on national reconciliation in Kampuchea resulted in a basic agreement over the conditions essential for a peaceful settlement of the conflict. The United Nations and non-governmental organizations providing humanitarian aid to the Kampuchean people introduced a number of new relief programmes and began preparatory work for repatriation of the Indo-Chinese refugees.

Throughout the year, the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative, with the assistance of the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan, were unremitting in their efforts to achieve a comprehensive solution of the Afghanistan problem, based on the 1988 Geneva Accords concluded under United Nations auspices. The United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, established in 1988 to monitor the cease-fire between Iran and Iraq and the withdrawal of their troops to internationally recognized boundaries, continued its mission in 1989, and the Security Council twice extended its mandate. In December, the General Assembly approved the Group's financing up to 31 March 1991.

East Asia

Korean question

The annual report of the United Nations Command (UNC) concerning the maintenance in 1988

of the 1953 Armistice Agreement⁽¹⁾ was submitted to the Security Council on 8 May 1989⁽²⁾ by the United States on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to a 1950 Council resolution.⁽³⁾ The report provided background information on UNC and its mission, as well as on the Armistice mechanism and procedures.

The report stated that the Korean People's Army and the Chinese People's Volunteers continued to frustrate the investigative function of the Military Armistice Commission (MAC) by refusing to participate in its joint investigations and to misuse MAC as a propaganda forum for presenting political statements unrelated to the Agreement. Set up to supervise the Agreement's implementation and settle any violations of it through negotiations, MAC held four meetings in 1988 to consider, among other matters, live serious violations. One of them was the bombing of a Korean Air Lines passenger plane on 29 November 1987, allegedly by two terrorists from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), which resulted in the death of all 115 people aboard.⁽⁴⁾ In February 1988,⁽⁵⁾ the Senior Member representing UNC at MAC charged the DPRK with a flagrant violation of the Armistice Agreement and presented evidence to support this charge. He demanded a public apology, severe punishment of those responsible for the incident and compensation to the victims' families.

Other charges of violations included the continued acquisition and deployment by the DPRK of modern and sophisticated weapons from outside Korea; firing across the military demarcation line into UNC's portion of the demilitarized zone (DMZ); introduction of unauthorized weapons; and construction of illegal fortifications in the DMZ.

In 1988, the DPRK reiterated its call for discontinuance of the annual military training exercise "Team Spirit", conducted jointly by the United States and the Republic of Korea. In that regard, UNC pointed out that such exercises were not addressed by the Armistice Agreement and thus could not constitute a violation of it, as the DPRK maintained. On the other hand, UNC noted, the secret exercises routinely held by the DPRK were a cause for genuine concern. In order to demonstrate its good faith, UNC provided on 28 January 1988 a prior notification to the DPRK of "Team Spirit 88" to be conducted in March, with an invitation to observe.

The issue of Korean War remains found in the territory of either side and their return through MAC, as stipulated by the Armistice Agreement, was raised again in 1988. On 2 February, the DPRK officially informed UNC that it had the remains of two UNC soldiers from the United States Army in its possession, but decided later not to return them, citing reasons unrelated to the Agreement.

During 1988, UNC presented a number of proposals to assist in reducing military tensions. The proposals addressed confidence-building measures, such as the restoration of joint observer teams to investigate serious violations, prior notification and observation of training exercises, removal of propaganda signs in the DMZ and establishment of a viable verification system for Armistice compliance in the DMZ and in the joint security area (Panmunjom). The DPRK, however, did not respond positively to most of UNC's initiatives.

South-East Asia

On 7 December 1989, the General Assembly, by decision 44/116, deferred consideration of the item entitled "Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia" and included it in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session.

Kampuchea situation

In 1989, the dialogue and negotiations on Kampuchea gathered unprecedented momentum. At the second Jakarta informal meeting (19-21 February), (1) the four parties to the Kampuchea conflict (National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Cambodia; Khmer People's National Liberation Front; Party of Democratic Kampuchea; People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea) reached a basic agreement on the conditions required for a peaceful settlement, which included the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea under the supervision of an international control mechanism; prevention of the recurrence of genocidal policies and practices; cessation of foreign interference and external arms supplies to the opposing Kampuchean forces; and the holding of free and democratic general elections. Yet the meeting revealed disagreements on internal aspects of the settlement, particularly the establishment of a provisional quadripartite authority of national reconciliation under the leadership of Prince Samdech Norodom Sihanouk,

On 5 April, Viet Nam announced the decision to withdraw all of its troops from Kampuchea by the end of September, (2) and later informed the Secretary-General that the withdrawal had been completed between 21 and 26 September. (3) The Cambodian National Resistance and the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, however, repeatedly denounced Viet Nam's statement as non-credible, given the absence of an international verification mechanism. (4)

The conclusions of the Jakarta meeting were echoed in the 1989 report (5) by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea, established in 1981. (6) Pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution, (7) the Committee continued to seek the implementation of the 1981 Declaration on Kampuchea (6) and, for that purpose, set up a mission which held extensive consultations in July with Association of South-East Asian Nations officials, the competing Kampuchean factions and other parties concerned on the prospects for a comprehensive political solution. It was emphasized that a negotiated settlement leading to the establishment of a sovereign, independent, neutral and non-aligned Kampuchea was in the long-term interests of all parties to the conflict.

Paris Conference on Cambodia

In 1989, following the agreement reached at the second Jakarta informal meeting (1) and at Prince Sihanouk's request, (8) France initiated the International Conference on Cambodia, which held its first session from 30 July to 30 August in Paris. (9) The Conference participants included Australia; Brunei Darussalam; Cambodia, represented by the four parties to the conflict; Canada; China; France; India; Indonesia; Japan; the Lao People's Democratic Republic; Malaysia; the Philippines; Singapore; Thailand; the USSR; the United Kingdom; the United States; Viet Nam; Zimbabwe; and the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

In his address to the Conference, (10) the Secretary-General pointed out, inter alia, that the establishment of a credible international control mechanism, essential for a comprehensive political settlement, was contingent on the adoption of an effective decision-making process and the provision of the necessary human, logistical and financial resources. He suggested that a precise evaluation of such resources could only be made by a fact-finding mission. From 6 to 19 August, following a decision of the Conference, a preliminary mission visited the area to gather on-the-spot technical information. The Conference further elaborated a variety of elements for the framework of the settlement process, established four working committees and suspended the session, to be reconvened in due time.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October, pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution, (7) the Secretary-General reported (11) on the situation in Kampuchea. He stated that, in 1989, he and his Special Representative, Rafeeiddin Ahmed, had maintained regular contacts with the parties and countries concerned, including consultations with the leaders of the Kampuchean factions, which focused on issues related to national reconciliation.

Humanitarian assistance in Kampuchea continued to be provided through the United Nations and voluntary agencies represented in Phnom Penh. The United Nations Children's Fund was engaged in relief efforts for mothers and children; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations supplied agricultural inputs; the World Food Programme provided food assistance; and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and five national Red Cross societies were involved in medical relief work. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), designated by the Secretary-General in July as the lead agency for repatriation in Kampuchea, and the United Nations Border Relief Operation (UNBRO) were responsible for relief assistance in the encampments and evacuation sites along the Thai-Kampuchean border, which had some 309,000 people as at the end of September. According to the estimate, however, some 40,000 more Kampucheans who needed assistance were still living in areas inaccessible to the international community. In preparation for repatriation, UNHCR and UNBRO, with the assistance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation, introduced a variety of vocational and educational training programmes for the potential returnees, notwithstanding the shortfall of some $5 million that, despite an increase in contributions, the relief project faced in 1989.

With the deployment of a new Displaced Persons Protection Unit by Thailand and the retention of live senior police officers from developed countries to assist in training Khmer civilian police, the security and protection of the border population improved. The food situation was expected to show some improvement, though the effects of the 1987 drought were still felt in certain provinces. It was hoped that the food-supply deficit might be reduced to less than 50,000 tons of rice.

Since the beginning of the year, the Secretary-General noted, the process of dialogue and negotiations had gathered unprecedented momentum, culminating in the Paris Conference; it was of utmost importance that that momentum not be lost.

Since the suspension of the Conference, there were two main developments: the reported withdrawal by Viet Nam of its troops from Kampuchea in September and the increased hostilities during the past few weeks. The Secretary-General believed that there could be no military solution and every effort should be made to spare the Kampucheans further bloodshed and suffering. He remained convinced that the only constructive course of action was the early resumption of the negotiating process; he hoped that the consultations conducted to that end would reach fruition in the near future.

The most important outstanding issue was national reconciliation, which had to begin with the definition of viable administrative arrangements for the transitional period leading to the holding of free, fair and internationally supervised elections. At the same time, the Secretary-General said, attention should focus on the modalities of the cease-fire, especially with respect to the disposition of the armed forces of the parties; on the adoption of measures to ensure the non-return to the universally condemned policies and practices of the 1975-1978 period; and on the mandate and modus operandi of an effective international control mechanism for all the elements of a comprehensive political settlement.

The Secretary-General believed that the establishment of a firm basis of negotiations required a genuine spirit of compromise and readiness for mutual concessions; only in that way could the ground be prepared for the conclusion of a comprehensive agreement necessary to establish a durable peace. He appealed to all parties to work towards such an agreement with renewed vigour and a sense of urgency. He himself intended to continue his effort in the exercise of his good offices and do whatever he could to further the negotiating process and steer it towards a successful outcome. In the final analysis, however, such success depended on whether the parties most directly concerned mustered the will to face the challenge of peace and recognized that peace could only be more rewarding than the prolongation of a sterile and fratricidal war.

International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees. Issues related to the Kampuchea conflict were the subject of the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees (Geneva, 13 and 14 June), (12) convened by the Secretary-General. In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 44/138, acted on the results of the Conference. (For details, see PART THREE, Chapter XV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November, the General Assembly, having reviewed the Secretary-General's report, adopted resolution 44/22 by recorded vote.

The situation in Kampuchea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982, 38/3 of 27 October 1983, 39/5 of 30 October 1984, 40/7 of 5 November 1985, 41/6 of 21 October 1986, 43/3 of 14 October 1987 and 43/19 of 3 November 1988,

Recalling also the Declaration on Kampuchea and resolution 1(I) adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 43/19,

Deploping foreign armed intervention and occupation in Kampuchea, the cause of continuing hostilities in that country, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Noting the continued and effective struggle of the Kampuchean people under the leadership of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk to achieve the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1989/156 of 24 May 1989 on the right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation,

Greatly disturbed that the continued lighting and instability in Kampuchea have forced an additional large number of Kampucheans to flee to the Thai-Kampuchean border in search of food and safety,

Recognizing that the assistance extended by the international community has continued to reduce the food shortages and health problems of the Kampuchean people,

Emphasizing that it is the inalienable right of the Kampuchean people who have sought refuge in neighbouring countries to return safely to their homeland,

Emphasizing also that no effective solution to the humanitarian problems can be achieved without a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean conflict,

Seriously concerned about reported demographic changes imposed in Kampuchea as a result of foreign occupation,

Convinced that, to bring about lasting peace in South-East Asia and reduce the threat to international peace and security, there is an urgent need for the international community to find a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem, with effective guarantees, that must include the total withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea under supervision and control of the United Nations and will provide for the creation of an interim administering authority, the promotion of national reconciliation among all Kampucheans under the leadership of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and the non-return to the universally condemned policies and practices of a recent past and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference,

Recognizing that the informal meetings held at Jakarta from 25 to 28 July 1988 and from 19 to 21 February 1989 have made a significant contribution towards achieving a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem,

Recognizing also that the Paris Conference on Cambodia, which met from 30 July to 30 August 1989, made progress in elaborating a wide variety of elements necessary for reaching a comprehensive settlement, although it was not yet possible to achieve a comprehensive political settlement, and that the Conference should be reconvened in due time after consultations by the Co-Presidents with the participants,

Noting the announced withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea, but emphasizing that it has not been verified under supervision and control of the United Nations and is not within the framework of a comprehensive political settlement,

Reiterating its conviction that, after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the South-East Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region,

Reaffirming the need for all States to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, non-recourse to the threat or use of force and peaceful settlement of disputes,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 34/22, 35/6, 36/5, 34/6, 38/3, 39/5, 40/7, 41/6, 42/3 and 43/19 and calls for their full implementation;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea under supervision and control of the United Nations, the creation of an interim administering authority, the promotion of national reconciliation among all Kampucheans under the leadership of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, the non-return to the universally condemned policies and practices of a recent past, the restoration and preservation of the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, the reaffirmation of the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all States to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea, with effective guarantees, are the principal components of any just, lasting and comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem;

3. Emphasizes that the Kampuchean people should be allowed to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination through internationally supervised free, fair and democratic elections;

4. Affirms that any withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea without United Nations supervision, control and verification is not within the framework of a comprehensive political settlement;

5. Calls upon all parties concerned to intensify urgently all efforts towards ensuring that the Kampuchean problem be resolved through a comprehensive political settlement in order to prevent further hostilities and subsequent loss of life and the continued suffering of the Kampuchean people, and to ensure the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea and the non-return to the universally condemned policies and practices of a recent past;

6. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on

Kampuchea on its activities during 1988-1989 and requests that the Committee continue its work;

7. Authorizes the Ad Hoc Committee to convene when necessary and to carry out the tasks entrusted to it in its mandate;

8. Reaffirm its commitment to reconvene the Conference at an appropriate time, in accordance with Conference resolution I(I), and its readiness to support any other conference of an international nature under the auspices of the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consult with and assist the Conference and the Ad Hoc Committee and to provide them on a regular basis with the necessary facilities to carry out their functions;

10. Expresses its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for taking appropriate steps in following the situation closely and requests him to continue to do so and to exercise his good offices in order to contribute to a comprehensive political settlement;

11. Invites the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference on Cambodia to intensify their consultations with a view to reconvening the Conference and its committees at an appropriate time;

12. Expresses its deep appreciation once again to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other humanitarian organizations, national and international, that have rendered relief assistance to the Kampuchean people, and appeals to them to continue to provide emergency assistance to those Kampucheans who are still in need, especially along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in the various encampments in Thailand;

13. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to intensify such efforts as necessary;

14. Urges the States of South-East Asia, once a comprehensive political settlement to the Kampuchean conflict is achieved, to exert renewed efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in South-East Asia;

15. Reiterates the hope that, following a comprehensive political settlement, an intergovernmental committee will be established to consider a programme of assistance to Kampuchea for the reconstruction of its economy and for the economic and social development of all States in the region;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "The situation in Kampuchea".

Western and south-western Asia

Afghanistan situation

On 15 February 1989,(1) the USSR announced the complete withdrawal of its troops from Afghanistan, in compliance with the 1988 Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, (2) concluded under United Nations auspices. Referred to as the Geneva Agreements, they comprised four instruments: a bilateral agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the principles of mutual relations, in particular on non-interference and non-intervention; a declaration on international guarantees; a bilateral agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the voluntary return of refugees; and an agreement on the interrelationships for the settlement of the situation relating to Afghanistan. They were also signed by the USSR and the United States as State guarantors.

The withdrawal, executed in two phases, was monitored by the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan (UNGOMAP), established under the Geneva Agreements. In a 15 February 1989 report, (3) submitted in pursuance of a 1988 Security Council resolution, (4) UNGOMAP expressed satisfaction at the scrupulous manner in which the withdrawal time-frame was observed and reviewed the steps being taken to implement other provisions of the Agreements.

During the initial period of its operation, UNGOMAP encountered a number of difficulties in connection with the arrangements for monitoring the implementation of the non-interference and non-intervention obligations set out in the first instrument of the Geneva Agreements. Some difficulties, particularly those of a logistical character, were resolved, but a large number of complaints of alleged violations continued to be exchanged. UNGOMAP made every effort to investigate all alleged violations and work out with both sides measures to ensure compliance. Two permanent outposts were established in November 1988 on the Pakistan side, at Peshawar and Quetta, to enhance UNGOMAP's capacity to carry out investigations in a more timely manner. UNGOMAP further endeavoured to obtain the parties' agreement, as envisaged in the Agreements, regarding their meetings to consider alleged violations and reports of their investigation. UNGOMAP pointed out to both parties that most of the allegations had not been accompanied by sufficient information to permit a practical and effective investigation. Difficulties had also been encountered owing to the extremely rough terrain, time lapsed from the alleged incidents and security conditions in the area of investigation.

In connection with the agreement regarding the voluntary return of refugees, UNGOMAP reached an understanding with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), shortly before the entry into force of the Agreements, concerning the functions that devolved on each of them in connection with the Agreements' relevant provisions. UNGOMAP stood ready to monitor and inform UNHCR of the conditions of safety which were essential for the return and resettlement of the refugees, a very limited number of whom had returned to Afghanistan.

In a 20 October report,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General stated that he had initiated a series of intensive consultations with various segments of the Afghan people, the two parties and the two guarantors of the Geneva Agreements, as well as with other Governments concerned, to encourage and facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement. On 1 February, 14 April and 3 August, the Secretary-General publicly expressed his grave concern over the escalation in fighting and emphasized the necessity to find a political, not military, solution. His Personal Representative in Afghanistan and Pakistan, Benon Sevan, who replaced Diego Cordovez in that capacity in May, maintained regular contacts with government authorities in the two countries, all Afghan leaders based at Peshawar, Pakistan, and Tehran, Iran, and military commanders of the Afghan opposition groups. That effort required continuous shuttling between Islamabad, Pakistan, and Kabul, Afghanistan.

UNGOMAP, with headquarters units in those two cities, assisted the Secretary-General in his activities, as mandated by the Geneva Agreements. In October, in addition to a small civilian auxiliary staff, UNGOMAP retained 40 military officers from Austria, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal, Poland and Sweden, temporarily detached from other peace-keeping operations. In May, Colonel Heikki Happonen of Finland assumed duties as the Deputy to the Secretary-General's Personal Representative.

By the end of September 1989, UNGOMAP had received over 5,000 complaints from Afghanistan and 1,000 from Pakistan dealing with hostile political activities and propaganda, border crossings and cross-border firings, rocket attacks, acts of sabotage and airspace violations. The Mission submitted 76 reports to the parties; however, in the circumstances, it was practically impossible to investigate all the cases.

In addition to the existing outposts at Peshawar and Quetta, UNGOMAP established three more "permanent presences" in 1989 on the Pakistani side of the border to increase its monitoring capability. At the same time, after the withdrawal of foreign troops, the Mission closed three permanent outposts in Afghanistan.

With regard to the implementation of the agreement on the voluntary return of refugees, differences between Afghanistan and Pakistan had prevented the establishment of the mixed commissions envisaged to co-ordinate and supervise repatriation. The continued fighting caused many Afghans to move from their homes and even to cross the border into Pakistan, seeking refugee status. None the less, UNGOMAP, in co-operation with UNHCR, took a number of measures to help create conditions conducive to repatriation, including the establishment of a comprehensive communication network throughout the operational area and the setting up of the United Nations Logistic Operations to serve international relief and rehabilitation efforts as well as repatriation needs.

Under the guidance of the Secretary-General's Co-ordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan, Sadruddin Aga Khan, a plan of action was developed jointly by United Nations agencies and programmes, notably the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, UNHCR, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization.

Under that plan, several projects were launched either directly by the United Nations or through non-governmental organizations in the field of agriculture, food aid, public health, mother and child health care, emergency aid to vulnerable groups, vocational training, rural reconstruction, economic recovery and rehabilitation. Another important programme initiated in 1989 provided training for Afghan volunteers to clear the land and access roads of mines and unexploded ordnance.

A number of other planned activities, however, such as road repair, shelter, anti-narcotic programmes and human resources development, suffered from lack of financial support. The Secretary-General noted that 70 per cent of the pledges, amounting to almost $1 billion, were in kind, therefore restricting operational flexibility.

For a comprehensive political solution to be achieved, the Secretary-General believed it necessary to secure an international as well as national consensus. While such a consensus had not yet emerged, efforts were under way to narrow the gulf between the positions taken by the neighbouring and other concerned countries. In addition, the Secretary-General felt that there was a fundamental need for a structure through which the wishes of the various segments of the Afghan people could be expressed. He remained confident that, despite their differences and diversity, they would achieve a comprehensive political settlement and he counted on the international community to encourage them in that direction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/15 without vote.

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security",

Recalling its resolution 43/20 of 3 November 1988,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any State,

Reaffirming also the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Gravely concerned at the situation in Afghanistan, which resulted from the violation of principles of the Charter and of the recognized norms of inter-State conduct,

Noting the conclusion at Geneva, on 14 April 1988, of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan and the completion of the withdrawal of foreign troops in accordance with those Agreements,

Aware of the continuing concern of the international community at the sufferings of the Afghan people and the magnitude of the social and economic problems posed to Pakistan and Iran by the presence on their soil of millions of Afghan refugees,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need for a comprehensive political solution of the situation in respect of Afghanistan,

Conscious that a successful final political settlement of the Afghanistan problem would have a favourable impact on the international situation and provide an impetus for the resolution of other acute regional conflicts,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to bring about peace and security,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the status of the process of political settlement,

1. Emphasizes the importance of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, hereinafter referred to as the "Geneva Agreements", concluded at Geneva on 14 April 1988 under United Nations auspices, which constitute an important step towards a comprehensive political solution of the Afghanistan problem;

2. Welcomes the completion on 15 February 1989 of the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan in accordance with the Geneva Agreements;

3. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constant efforts to achieve a political solution of the Afghanistan problem;

4. Calls for the scrupulous respect for and faithful implementation of the Geneva Agreements by all parties concerned, who should fully abide by their letter and spirit;

5. Reiterates that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned and Islamic character of Afghanistan is essential for a peaceful solution of the Afghanistan problem;

6. Reaffirms the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever;

7. Calls upon all parties concerned to work urgently for the achievement of a comprehensive political solution, the cessation of hostilities and the creation of the necessary conditions of peace and normalcy that would enable the Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homeland in safety and honour;

8. Emphasizes the need for an early start of the intra-Afghan dialogue for the establishment of a broad-based government to ensure the broadest support and immediate participation of all segments of the Afghan people;

9. Calls upon all parties concerned to exert every effort to promote a political settlement acceptable to the Afghan people in order to bring to an end the protracted conflict that has prevailed in Afghanistan for the past several years;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage and facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement in Afghanistan in accordance with the provisions of the Geneva Agreements and of the present resolution;

11. Expresses its appreciation for the work of the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan in the implementation of the Geneva Agreements and emphasizes that it should continue to discharge its functions in strict compliance with the Agreements, and requests Afghanistan and Pakistan to provide full assistance to it;

12. Renews its appela to all States and national and international organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance with a view to alleviating the hardship of the Afghan refugees, in co-ordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

13. Calls upon all States to provide adequate financial and material resources to the Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan for the purposes of achieving the speedy repatriation and rehabilitation of the Afghan refugees, as well as for the economic and social reconstruction of the country;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Security Council informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the situation in Afghanistan and on progress achieved in the implementation of the Geneva Agreements and the political settlement relating to Afghanistan;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

General Assembly resolution 44/15

1 November 1989 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/44/L.17); agenda item 32.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/44/679; S-G, A/C.5/44/15.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 5th Committee 20, 22; plenary 43.

Introducing the draft, the President said it was the result of a consensus of the parties; as part of the understanding between those directly concerned, it was agreed that there should be no debate in order to permit the broadest possible support for the text.

Iran-Iraq situation

United Nations efforts towards a peaceful settlement of the hostilities between Iran and Iraq continued to focus during 1989 on the full implementation of Security Council resolution 598(1987).(6) The basic framework for such a settlement, provided by the Council's resolution, particularly included the discontinuance of military activities, observance of a cease-fire and withdrawal of the parties' troops to the internationally recognized boundaries as described in the 1975 Treaty concerning the State Frontier and Neighbourly Relations between Iran and Iraq, and its protocols and annexes. In 1989, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIMOG), set up in 1988(7) to verify, confirm and supervise the implementation of resolution 598(1987). On 18 September 1989, at its resumed forty-third session, the General Assembly, by decision 43/465, included the item entitled "Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq" in the agenda of its forty-fourth (1989) session.

UN Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

Report of the Secretary-General (February) As requested by the Security Council in 1988,(7) the Secretary-General on 2 February 1989 submitted a report(8) covering UNIMOG's activities during its first mandate period, from 9 August 1988 to 2 February 1989. The report provided information on the Group's deployment and structure and described the steps taken to monitor compliance with the cease-fire, which came into effect on 20 August 1988,(9) and to investigate alleged violations of it. As of 20 January 1989, UNIMOG had received 1,960 complaints of such violations; however, only 25 per cent of them had been confirmed by UNIMOG as violations.

One of the most serious incidents was the flooding by Iran of no man's land in the Khusk region starting on 13 September 1988 in order to create a water obstacle between the forward positions of the two armies. UNIMOG requested Iran to stop the flooding, but it was resumed, increasing tension along the cease-fire line and leading to an exchange of artillery, small arms and rocket fire on 11 December 1988 which resulted in the death of two Iranians. The Group's prompt reaction prevented an escalation of artillery fire, but the situation in the area remained tense. Three burning oil wells on the Iranian side of no man's land constituted another source of tension, as the Iraqi authorities refused to co-operate on the measures necessary to extinguish the fire.

The Chief Military Observer (CMO) pursued a number of confidence-building initiatives between the two parties, including the exchange of a small number of prisoners on 4 October 1988, the negotiation of agreement for locust spraying along the cease-fire line, and the exchange of war dead found in no man's land or behind the forward defended localities. By 20 January, Iran and Iraq had exchanged the remains of 1,237 such victims. They also reached an agreement to establish a mixed military working group under the CMO's chairmanship, as proposed by the Secretary-General, and signed memoranda of understanding with ICRC on 14 November 1988 concerning the release and repatriation of sick and wounded prisoners of war. On 5 November, the United Nations and Iraq concluded a preliminary agreement on the status of UNIMOG. A similar agreement with Iran was still being discussed.

At joint meetings of the foreign ministers of the two countries, held at the Secretary-General's initiative, the Secretary-General provided the parties with specific ideas regarding implementation of resolution 598(1987); yet the parties continued to hold divergent views on the constituent elements of the cease-fire and the subjects falling within the resolution's framework. In January 1989, Ambassador Jan Eliasson, appointed on 1 September 1988 as the Secretary-General's Personal Representative on Issues Pertaining to the Implementation of Security Council Resolution 598(1987), visited Tehran and Baghdad for consultations with senior government officials. The report indicated that the exchanges which had taken place during the visit could add momentum to the peace process.

Summing up the conditions essential for further progress towards a peaceful settlement of the Iran-Iraq conflict, the Secretary-General recommended to the Security Council a renewal of UNIIMOG's mandate until 30 September 1989, which he considered essential for further progress, adding that both parties had assured him of their support for UNIIMOG.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 8 February, the Security Council considered the Secretary-General's report and unanimously adopted resolution 631(1989).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 598(1987) of 20 July 1987 and 619(1988) of 9 August 1988.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group of 2 February 1989, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 598(1987);

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for a period of seven months and twenty-two days, that is, until 30 September 1989;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 598(1987).

Security Council resolution 631(1989)

8 February 1989 Meeting 2844 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20449).

Report of the Secretary-General (September). In a report(10) covering the period from 3 February to 22 September 1989, submitted pursuant to the Security Council's February resolution, the Secretary-General noted that, although UNIIMOG continued successfully to carry out its mandate in monitoring the cease-fire lines, the withdrawal of forces had not yet taken place and resolution 598(1987)(6) remained partly unimplemented. By 31 August 1989, UNIIMOG had confirmed 1,435 cease-fire violations, of which 80 per cent were minor, and recorded six localized firing incidents. The flooding of no man's land by Iran continued and extended southwards, and UNIIMOG's efforts to persuade Iraq to allow the burning oil wells to be extinguished were unsuccessful.

The CMO continued to pursue measures aimed at easing tension between the parties. A total of 955 Iranian and 973 Iraqi war dead were repatriated during the period under review, and on several occasions the Group monitored reconstruction activities close to the cease-fire line, to assure the other party that the work had no military purpose. On 28 March, the United Nations and Iran concluded a preliminary agreement on the status of UNIIMOG.

Joint ministerial meetings between Iran and Iraq continued. Meetings were held in New York (10 February) and Geneva (20-23 April), followed by extensive consultations with senior government officials in May and June. At separate meetings with the Secretary-General in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, on 4 and 5 September, both parties agreed that another round of talks would not be fruitful at that stage but favoured the Secretary-General's suggestion that his Personal Representative would visit the area later in 1989, in an effort to further the implementation of resolution 598(1987). The report indicated that Iran and Iraq had repeatedly expressed their commitment to achieving a peaceful settlement, but diverged on the priority of troop withdrawal and other provisions of that resolution.

Emphasizing UNIIMOG's indispensable role in ensuring the maintenance of the cease-fire, the Secretary-General recommended its extension for a period of six months, until 31 March 1990.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (September)

Having reviewed the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council on 29 September 1989 unanimously adopted resolution 642(1989).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 598(1987) of 20 July 1987, 619(1988) of 9 August 1988 and 631(1989) of 8 February 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group of 22 September 1989, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Decides:

(a) To call once again upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 598(1987);

(b) To extend the mandate of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for a further period of six months, that is, until 31 March 1990;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 598(1987).

Security Council resolution 6421(1989)

29 September 1989 Meeting 2885 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20873).

Composition

As of September 1989,(10) UNIMOG, including headquarters staff at Baghdad and Tehran, had a total strength of 408, as compared to 409 in February. That number included 351 military observers (as compared to 350 in February) from 26 countries (Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Malaysia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Peru, Poland, Senegal, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zambia); 17 in the air unit from New Zealand; 36 military police from Ireland; and 4 military medical personnel from Austria. The international staff in the mission area was reduced from 117 in February to 105 in September, while local civilian staff increased from 41 to 93, which was still substantially less than the number of authorized posts.

On 9 September, Brigadier-General T. Källstrom of Sweden assumed duties as Assistant Chief Military Observer (ACMO) on the Iranian side, replacing Brigadier-General J. Kelly of Ireland. Major-General Slavko Jovic of Yugoslavia remained in command of the Group as CMO, and Brigadier V. M. Patil of India continued to be ACMO on the Iraqi side.

Financing

In December 1988,(11) the General Assembly appropriated for UNIMOG $18.3 million gross, in addition to the $35.7 million gross it had appropriated in August 1988(12) for the initial six-month period from 9 August 1988 to 8 February 1989. It also authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for UNIMOG at a rate not to exceed &7,986,000 gross ($7,889,000 net) per month, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), for the 12 months beyond 9 February 1989.

After the Security Council, in February, renewed UNIMOG's mandate for a period of seven months and 22 days, i.e., until 30 September 1989, the Advisory Committee concurred with the request that the Secretary-General enter into commitments for that period in the amount of $61,678,175 gross ($60,929,016 net), to be assessed on Member States.

Following the extension of UNIMOG's mandate for a further six months, from 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1990, the Controller again requested ACABQ's concurrence for the Secretary-General to enter into commitments in an amount not to exceed $34,153,825 gross ($33,738,984 net) for that mandate period.

In a December report, (13) the Secretary-General expressed the view that the authorization given for the period from 1 October 1989 to 8 February 1990 would be sufficient to meet the cost of UNIMOG for the full six months up to 31 March 1990; accordingly, he proposed that the authorization be extended until that date.

As at 31 October 1989, the Secretary-General noted, assessments totalling $114,812,611 net had been apportioned among Member States in respect of UNIMOG for the period from its inception to 30 September 1989. Contributions received for that period amounted to $105,591,613, representing a shortfall of $9,220,998. Assessments totalling $33,866,585 net had been apportioned among Member States for the period from 1 October 1989 to 8 February 1990, against which contributions in the amount of $2,155 had been received as at 31 October 1989. Voluntary contributions since UNIMOG's inception included supplies, services and $11 million cash.

As at 31 October 1989, an unencumbered balance of $18.3 million existed for UNIMOG for the period since its inception until 30 September 1989, resulting mainly from a less than full implementation of the original plan of deployment. The Secretary-General proposed that a maximum amount of $10 million be credited to Member States against future assessments, taking into account the need to provide a reserve of approximately $10 million for six weeks' expenditure pending the receipt of contributions for new mandate periods.

The Advisory Committee agreed(14) with the Secretary-General's proposal that, in the interest of administrative efficiency, the first two mandate periods, comprising 13 months and 23 days, be considered as one accounting or financial period. However, in its understanding, this would be an exception and Member States would continue to be assessed according to mandate periods.

The Committee also agreed to the amount requested for the mandate period from 1 October 1989 to 8 February 1990, noting that the Secretary-General had indicated that the financing authority already granted by the Assembly would be sufficient to finance UNIMOG until 31 March 1990. With regard to estimates for the 12-month period beginning 1 April 1990, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General be authorized to enter into commitments at a rate not to exceed $6,401,333 gross. Member States would be credited $10 million against the assessments for that period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 44/189 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq
Military Observer Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Military Observer Group, the latest of which was resolution 642(1989) of 29 September 1989,

Recalling its resolutions 42/233 of 17 August 1988 and 43/230 of 21 December 1988 on the financing of the Military Observer Group,

Recognizing that the costs of the Military Observer Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations.

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Military Observer Group with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Urging all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Military Observer Group in full and on time,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions in cash and in kind have been made to the Military Observer Group by certain Governments,

Mindful of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee on the requests of some Member States to change their placement in the existing groups "b", "c" and "d" of Member States, on the basis of the criteria set out in General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973,

1. Concur with the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Decides that the authorization provided by its resolution 43/230 for the period from 9 February 1989 to

8 February 1990, inclusive, shall be extended to include the period up to and including 31 March 1990;

3. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 42/233 an amount of 61, 678, 175 United States dollars gross (60, 929, 016 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly and apportioned in accordance with section I, paragraph 4, of its resolution 43/43/230 for the period from 9 February to 30 September 1989, inclusive;

4. Decides further to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 34,153,825 dollars gross (33,738,984 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly and apportioned in accordance with section I, paragraph 4, of its resolution 43/230 for the period from 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1990, inclusive;

5. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group at a rate not to exceed 6,401,333 dollars gross (6,237,333 dollars net) per month for the six-month period from 1 April to 30 September 1990, inclusive, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into, should the Security Council decide to continue the Military Observer Group beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 642(1989);

6. Also authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Military Observer Group at a rate not to exceed 7,068,000 dollars gross (6,904,000 dollars net) per month for the six-month period from 1 October 1990 to 31 March 1991, subject to obtaining the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee for the actual level of commitments to be entered into, should the Security Council decide to continue the Military Observer Group beyond 30 September 1990;

7. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amounts referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the present resolution among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, to be adjusted by the decision to be taken by the Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the composition of groups "a", "b", "c" and "d" of Member States and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

8. Also decides, on an exceptional basis, that the appropriations provided for the first two mandate periods of the Military Observer Group, that is, from 9 August 1988 to 30 September 1989, inclusive, be administered as one financial period;

9. Further decides that the special financial period of the Military Observer Group shall be for twelve months, beginning on 1 October of one year and ending on 30 September of the next, effective from 1 October 1989, subject to the renewal of the mandate of the Military Observer Group by the Security Council;

10. Decides that 10. million dollars of the unencumbered balance in respect of the period from the inception of the Military Observer Group on 9 August 1988 to 30 September 1989 shall be credited to Member States against their assessments in respect of such mandate periods as may be approved by the Security Council for the twelve months subsequent to 31 March 1990;

11. Also decides that the remaining 10,117,762 dollars of the unencumbered balance shall be retained in the Special Account subject to the review to be undertaken by the Advisory Committee as to the level of commitments to be authorized for the Military Observer Group for the mandate period from 1 April to 30 September 1990, taking into account the status of the receipt of assessed contributions for the period from 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1990, inclusive;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the Military Observer Group, acceptable to the Secretary-General, in cash, in convertible or readily usable currencies and in the form of supplies and services;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure that the Military Observer Group is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 44/189

Chapter IV

Middle East

Throughout 1989, the United Nations continued its efforts for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East conflict. The Palestinian uprising in the West Bank and Gaza Strip-known in Arabic as intifadah-intensified, as did Israeli countermeasures. Military confrontation escalated in Lebanon, where the assassination of the newly elected President in November demonstrated the fragility of the reconciliation process.

The question of Palestine was reaffirmed from various sides as the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict and it was stressed that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region would be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Palestinian territory and the other occupied Arab territories. The General Assembly reaffirmed that such a peace could not be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, and called for the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East under UN auspices.

The Security Council met on several occasions to discuss the situation in the Middle East and in the territories occupied by Israel. In July and August, it adopted resolutions by which it expressed its regret over the continuing deportation by Israel of Palestinian civilians and called on Israel to ensure the safe and immediate return of those deported and to desist from deporting others. The Council also issued a number of statements on the situation in Lebanon, expressing grave concern at the deterioration of the situation there and urging all the parties immediately to end the confrontation and support all efforts to find a peaceful solution to the Lebanese crisis.

During the year, the Council twice extended, for periods of six months each, the mandates of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF). The United Nations Truce Supervision Organization continued to assist UNDOF and UNIFIL in their tasks.

The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights), which kept under review the Palestine question, reported continuing serious aggravation of the situation in the occupied territory. The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices) reported that the situation in the occupied territories was marked by a dangerous level of violence and repression, which had constantly escalated since the start of the Palestinian uprising in 1987. Both Committees stressed the need for urgent measures to ensure the safety of the Palestinians and protect their rights.

Economic and social developments in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories were monitored by the Economic and Social Council, which adopted during the year resolutions on Israeli economic practices, assistance to the Palestinian people and the situation of Palestinian women.

Assistance to Palestinians was provided by various UN organizations. Notable among them was the United Nations Relief and Work Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) which continued to deliver education, health and relief services to more than 2.3 million Palestinian refugees in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. As the Palestinian uprising and its consequences produced sudden and unprecedented demands for additional assistance, UNRWA introduced its emergency programme, which included increased medical and relief services.

Middle East situation

The escalation of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, as well as the military confrontation in Lebanon, underlined the urgency for an effective negotiated settlement. While the necessity to convene an international conference on the Middle East as a major political instrument in attaining a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the conflict was widely supported by the international community, negotiations remained at a standstill and no consensus was found on the modalities of setting in motion such a conference (see below, under "Palestine question").

However, the search for a peaceful negotiated solution of the conflict continued throughout the year. The United States, Israel and Egypt launched their own initiatives. To promote a dialogue between the parties, the United States established contact with them and in November presented a five-point proposal as a basis for such dialogue. Israel accepted the proposal, (1) while stressing that any discussion had to start with its own peace initiative of 14 May 1989.(2) Egypt put forward the idea of holding a dialogue in Cairo between an Israeli government delegation and a mandated Palestinian delegation, during which each party would be free to present its position on the settlement process and to discuss the question of elections and any other related matter.(3)

There were also proposals to consider placing the territories occupied by Israel under international supervision to ensure the protection and security of the inhabitants, pending a definitive solution and the establishment of total peace in the region, as suggested by, among others, the Committee on Palestinian rights.(14)

Reports of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1988 request of the General Assembly,(5) the Secretary-General submitted in November 1989 a comprehensive report(6) on the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects. The report addressed such issues as UN peace-keeping activities, the situation in the occupied territories, the Palestine refugee problem, the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East.

The Secretary-General stated that expectations for progress in the Middle East peace process were heightened by a number of dramatic political developments, notably the decision by the United States to begin a dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and other important proposals aimed primarily at launching a dialogue between Israelis and Palestinians. However, he expressed concern over the fact that valuable time was passing and the willingness to negotiate might be eroded by bitterness resulting from events on the ground. The intifadah, in contrast to the nuances of the diplomatic process, gave a direct and unequivocal message of rejection of the Israeli occupation and commitment to the exercise of legitimate Palestinian rights, including self-determination.

The Secretary-General reported that he had endeavoured to launch a process of consultations, initially with the permanent members of the Security Council, and remained in continuous contact with the parties to the conflict to discuss ways of advancing the peace process, including the prospects for an international peace conference on the Middle East.

He reiterated that he was troubled by some declarations that questioned the applicability of Security Council resolution 242(1967), since he believed that any deviation from it imperilled the prospects for a comprehensive settlement and that the Council could make an important contribution to the process by renewing its commitment to that resolution as well as Council resolution 338(1973).(8)

By an October report with later addendum, (9) the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly replies from four Member States to his request for information on steps taken to implement three 1988 Assembly resolutions on the Middle East situation. By those resolutions-dealing with general aspects of the Middle East situation, (5) Israeli policy in the Syrian Arab Golan occupied by Israel since 1967(10) and the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem (11)-the Assembly had called on States to adopt a number of measures concerning their relations with Israel and on the States concerned to abide by the relevant Assembly resolutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/40 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having disclosed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 F of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 38/180 A to D of 19 December 1983, 39/146 A to C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 A to C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 A to C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 A to D of 11 December 1987 and 43/54 A to C of 6 December 1988,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 516(1982) of 1 August 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, 521(1982) of 19 September 1982 and 555(1984) of 12 October 1984 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 27 October 1989, 16 November 1989 and 22 November 1989,

Reaffirming the need for continued collective support for the decisions adopted by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, which were confirmed by subsequent Arab summit conferences, including the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 23 to 26 May 1989, reiterating its previous resolutions on the question of Palestine and its support for the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and considering that the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/58 C and other resolutions related to the question of Palestine, would contribute to the promotion of peace in the region,

Welcoming all efforts contributing towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in accordance with the United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly on the question of Palestine and on the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Reaffirming also all relevant United Nations resolutions which stipulate that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at the continuing Israeli policies involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Stressing once again the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve an early comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirms that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982, 37/86 E of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A to D of 11 December 1984, 40/96 A to D of 12 December 1985, 41/43 A to D of 2 December 1986, 42/66 A to D of 2 December 1987, 43/54 A to C of 6 December 1988, and 43/175 A to C, 43/176 and 43/177 of 15 December 1988;

4. Considers the Arab peace plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, which was confirmed by subsequent Arab summit conferences, including the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 23 to 26 May 1989, as well as relevant efforts and action to implement the Fez plan, as an important contribution towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981; determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it as its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately; and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions and decisions;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory and outside this territory, including expropriation, establishment of settlements, annexation and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel, signed on 30 November 1981, and the continued supply of modern arms and matériel to Israel, augmented by substantial economic aid, including the Agreement on the Establishment of a Free Trade Area between the two Governments, have encouraged Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and have had adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and pose a threat to the security of the region;

11. Calls once more upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic, financial and technological aid, as well as of human resources, aimed at encouraging it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

12. Strongly & condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist régime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail;

13. Reaffirms its call for convening the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of the live permanent members of the Security Council and all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, on an equal footing, and that the Conference should be effective with full authority, in order to achieve a comprehensive and just solution based on the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people in accordance with United Nations resolutions relevant to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East;

14. Endorses the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Security Council, with the participation of the permanent members of the Council, to take the necessary action to convene the Conference;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

UN Truce Supervision Organization

In his November report on the Middle East,(6) the Secretary-General provided information on the activities of three UN peace-keeping operations in the region: two peace-keeping forces-UNDOF and UNIFIL—and one observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO). Apart from assisting UNDOF and UNIFIL, UNTSO maintained two observer groups of its own in Beirut, Lebanon, and in Egypt. The Observer Group in Beirut, set up by the Security Council in 1982 following the occupation of West Beirut by Israeli troops,(12) stood at a reduced strength of 14 observers, some of whom were withdrawn temporarily during hostilities in 1989. The Observer Group in Egypt, established when the second United Nations Emergency Force was withdrawn in 1979,(13) had a total strength of 50 observers. In addition to liaison offices in Cairo and Ismailia, it maintained six observation posts in the Sinai.

On 15 November, the Secretary-General informed the President of the Security Council(14) that total UNTSO strength was at its authorized level of 298 officers, contributed by 10 countries. China and Switzerland had each recently offered five observers. The Council agreed with the proposed change in the composition of UNTSO. (15)

Palestine question

The question of Palestine remained at the core of an intensifying Arab-Israeli conflict which brought with it an escalating uprising against Israeli occupation in the West Bank, Gaza Strip and East Jerusalem. In April, at the request of the Chairman of the Arab Group at the United Nations, the Assembly resumed its consideration of the question and adopted a resolution condemning the latest action of members of the Israeli armed forces in the Palestinian town of Nahalin and requesting the Security Council to consider measures to provide international protection to the Palestinian civilians (see below, under "Territories occupied by Israel"). Under the same agenda item, the Assembly in October adopted a resolution on the intifadah. In December, following its consideration of the 1989 report of the Committee on Palestinian rights,⁽¹⁾ the Assembly adopted three resolutions addressing the Palestine question.

The International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People was observed on 29 November at United Nations Headquarters in New York and at the United Nations Offices at Geneva and Vienna.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 April, the General Assembly adopted resolution 43/233 by recorded vote.

Question of Palestine

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Palestine",

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Gravely concerned at and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Expressing its profound shock at the latest action of members of the Israeli armed forces on 13 April 1989, which resulted in the killing and wounding of Palestinian civilians in the town of Nahalin,

Having considered the statement of the Secretary-General on 13 April 1989 relative to that raid,

Aware that Israel, the occupying Power, has imposed limitations on Palestinian Muslims that restrict their participation in the life of their community and in the observance of their religious rites and obligations,

Taking into account the need to consider means for the impartial protection of the Palestinian civilian population under Israeli occupation,

Considering that the current policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory are bound to have grave consequences for the endeavours to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

Reaffirming once again that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel, including Jerusalem,

1. Condemns those policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied territory, including the right of freedom of worship, and, in particular, the opening of fire by Israeli armed forces, which has resulted in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinian civilians, and specifically the latest action of members of the Israeli armed forces against the defenceless civilians in the Palestinian town of Nahalin;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, abide scrupulously by the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and that it desist immediately from those policies and practices which are in violation of the provisions of the Convention;

3. Requests the Security Council to consider with urgency the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory with a view to considering measures needed to provide international protection to the Palestinian civilians in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Stresses the urgent need to expedite the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations and in conformity with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 43/176 of 15 December 1988;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit periodic reports on developments in the occupied Palestinian territory.

Activities of the Committee on Palestinian rights. As mandated by the General Assembly in 1988,(2) the Committee on Palestinian rights, established in 1975,(3) continued to review the situation relating to the Palestine question in the light of new developments and to promote the exercise by the Palestinian people of its rights.

In November, the Committee submitted to the Assembly its annual report(1) with recommendations. The Committee acknowledged that the year under review had brought about events of momentous significance in the history of the struggle of the Palestinians to regain and exercise their rights. Their continuing uprising, the proclamation of the State of Palestine and the Palestinian peace initiative announced in December 1988 by Yasser Arafat had in the Committee's view created new conditions and opportunities for concerted international action aimed at achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement. The growing deterioration of the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory was, according to the Committee, a matter of utmost concern that imposed a moral duty on the international community to bring about such a settlement expeditiously. The Committee considered it incumbent on the Security Council to take concrete and effective action to secure those goals. It believed that its 1976 recommendations,(4) endorsed by the Assembly,(5) provided a constructive programme for implementing Palestinian rights; it therefore called for urgent positive action on those recommendations by the Security Council and reaffirmed that the recognition, attainment and exercise of the rights of the Palestinians were indispensable conditions in the solution of the Palestine question. The Committee reasserted that the Israeli evacuation of the occupied territories was a conditio sine qua non for the exercise of those rights.

The Committee reaffirmed the international consensus that PLO was the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinians, whose participation on an equal footing was indispensable in any efforts and deliberations aimed at achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting Middle East peace. It considered that the State of Palestine should be accorded its rightful place within the international community and the United Nations. It noted the widespread international support for the Palestinian peace initiative and deeply regretted that Israel so far had failed to respond positively to it and continued to refuse to acknowledge Palestinian national rights; it accordingly urged Israel to reverse its position and join the international consensus.

The Committee considered it imperative for the Security Council to take positive action towards the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East (see below), on the basis of a 1988 General Assembly resolution on the Palestine question,(6) which had the international community's overwhelming support. The Committee reaffirmed the principles for achieving a comprehensive peace contained in that resolution, namely: Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from the other occupied Arab territories; guaranteeing arrangements for the security of all States in the region, including those mentioned in the 1947 resolution on the future Government of Palestine,(7) within secure and internationally recognized boundaries; resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with a 1948 Assembly resolution(8) and subsequent relevant resolutions; dismantling the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories; and guaranteeing freedom of access to Holy Places, religious buildings and sites.

The Committee urged the Secretary-General to do everything in his power to ensure that active consultations were undertaken within the Security Council towards the convening of an international conference; the Committee itself intended to continue to intensify its efforts towards that objective and make it once again the focal point of its work programme in the coming year. Noting that the Secretary-General had reported that his attempts to pave the way to an effective negotiating process had so far proved inconclusive, the Committee recommended that the Assembly call once again on the Council, particularly its permanent members, to consider measures needed to convene such a conference, including the establishment of a preparatory committee, and to consider guarantees for security measures in accordance with the 1988 resolution.(6)

The Committee protested in the strongest terms the intensification of Israeli repression against Palestinians in the occupied territory, including children, particularly the liberal use of live ammunition, random beatings, raids and mass arrests, the increased use of administrative detention, deportations and collective punishment. It condemned the unchecked violence of Israeli settlers and the measures taken by the occupying Power to deprive the Palestinians of their right to education, as well as administrative, economic and other measures to control all aspects of Palestinian life and prevent the development of autonomous socio-economic structures. The Committee welcomed the action by Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other bodies to denounce those measures and welcomed the partial opening of schools as a result of that international pressure. It called on all concerned to redouble their efforts to expose, protest and put an end to those Israeli policies and practices which violated the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention). Given the grave situation created by such policies and practices, the Committee called once again on the Security Council to consider urgently measures to provide international protection to the Palestinians in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem. It also called for international action to alleviate the sufferings of the Palestinians living under occupation, especially women and children.

The Committee reasserted that the United Nations had a historical duty and responsibility to render all assistance necessary to promote the autonomous economic development of the occupied territory in preparation for the attainment of independence; it accordingly reiterated its call on the UN system, as well as on Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, to sustain and increase their economic and social assistance, in close co-operation with PLO.

The Committee noted with satisfaction the increased awareness and mobilization of international public opinion in support of the attainment of Palestinian rights and UN recommendations for a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Palestine question. It believed that its regional seminars and meetings and symposia of NGOs, as well as the journalists' encounters and other informational activities it sponsored, had played a valuable role in that process; it would continue to strive for maximum effectiveness in carrying out that programme and to intensify its efforts in implementation of its mandate.

In order to promote international awareness of the Palestine question and create conditions favourable for implementation of its recommendations, the Committee and, under its guidance, the Division for Palestinian Rights continued to expand co-operation with NGOs. To that end, it held a regional symposium and seminar in Africa (Cairo, Egypt, 18-22 December 1988); a North American regional seminar (New York, 19-20 June); a North American regional NGO symposium (New York, 21-23 June 1989); a regional symposium in Europe (Vienna, 28-29 August); an international NGO meeting (Vienna, 30 August-1 September); and an Asian regional NGO symposium (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 18-21 December). The conclusions, recommendations and declarations of the symposia and seminars were annexed to the Committee's report. The Committee was represented at a number of international conferences and meetings, including an international NGO symposium on the role of foreign assistance in meeting the economic and social development requirements of the Palestinian people (Vienna, 27 August).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the Committee on Palestinian rights, the General Assembly adopted on 6 December resolutions on the question of Palestine. Resolution 44/41 A was adopted by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 181(II) of 29 November 1947, 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3375(XXX) and 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 of 2 December 1977, 33/28 of 7 December 1978, 34/65 A and B of 29 November 1979 and 34/65 C and D of 12 December 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/169 of 15 December 1980, 36/120 of 10 December 1981, ES-7/4 of 28 April 1982, ES-7/5 of 26 June 1982, ES-7/9 of 24 September 1982, 37/86 A of 10 December 1982, 38/58 A of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A of 11 December 1984, 40/96 A of 12 December 1985, 41/43 A of 2 December 1986, 42/66 A of 2 December 1987 and 43/175 A of 15 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;
2. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee contained in paragraphs 110 to 118 of its report and draws the attention of the Security Council to the fact that action on the Committee's recommendations, as repeatedly endorsed by the General Assembly at its thirty-first session and subsequently, is still awaited;
3. Requests the Committee to continue to keep under review the situation relating to the question of Palestine as well as the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights and to report and make suggestions to the General Assembly or the Security Council, as appropriate;
4. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, including representation at conferences and meetings and the sending of delegations, to make such adjustments in its approved programme of seminars and symposia and meetings for non-governmental organizations as it may consider necessary, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session and thereafter;
5. Also requests the Committee to continue to extend its co-operation to non-governmental organizations in their contribution towards heightening international awareness of the facts relating to the question of Palestine and creating a more favourable atmosphere for the full implementation of the Committee's recommendations, and to take the necessary steps to expand its contacts with those organizations;
6. Requests the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established under General Assembly resolution 194(III), as well as other United Nations bodies associated with the question of Palestine, to continue to co-operate fully with the Committee and to make available to it, at its request, the relevant information and documentation which they have at their disposal;

7. Decides to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

Proposed peace conference under UN auspices

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly request,(6) the Secretary General in 1989 continued his efforts with the parties concerned and, in consultation with the Security Council, to facilitate the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. In November, he submitted a progress report(9) setting out the results of the Security Council President's consultations with Council members and statements of concerned parties, as well as his own observations.

The Council President stated that the Council members had noted with appreciation some positive steps and initiatives undertaken in the past year, but remained preoccupied with the continuing lack of progress in achieving peace and the increasingly serious situation in the occupied territories. They reaffirmed their support for an active peace process and invited the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts and consultations with respect to the convening of an international peace conference. Most Council members stressed that the conference should be organized on the basis of a 1988 Assembly resolution on the question of Palestine,⁽⁶⁾ in which the Assembly called for convening the conference under UN auspices, with the participation of all parties, including PLO, on an equal footing. Several Council members said the Council should begin urgent consideration of the Middle East situation with a view to reaching early agreement, in particular on the establishment of a preparatory committee for the conference, while others indicated that the parties directly concerned must reach agreement on the exact form of the conference, which should not prejudice the outcome of negotiations. However, one member could not support the convening of a conference on the basis of the 1988 resolution, since in its view the formula it contained failed to address the centrality of direct negotiations among the parties and purported to determine in advance the outcome of issues which had to be resolved in the course of negotiations. That member considered that the time was not right to convene an international conference.

In statements of concerned parties, submitted in response to a note verbale of the Secretary-General of 21 September, Egypt and Jordan supported the conference's convening and presented suggestions for its terms of reference and other aspects pertaining to it. Israel objected to convening a conference and advocated direct negotiations, stating that PLO could not be considered a partner to peace negotiations. Lebanon agreed in principle to convening a conference, but did not support any linkage of the solution of its own problem with that of the Middle East issue. The Syrian Arab Republic emphasized the need to continue efforts for convening the conference based on UN resolutions, complete Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories and guarantee of the national rights of the Palestinians. PLO stressed that all peace endeavours had to be carried out under UN auspices and on the basis of the principles of the Charter and the 1988 Assembly resolution.

The Secretary-General concluded that sufficient agreement did not exist within the Council or among parties to the conflict, to permit the convening of a peace conference. He was deeply concerned that the opportunities which had emerged in the previous 12 months might slip away, but said he would spare no efforts to carry out the responsibilities entrusted to him in that regard.

In its annual report,⁽¹⁾ the Committee on Palestinian rights reiterated its firm conviction that the proposed conference provided the only comprehensive, practical and overwhelmingly accepted framework for peace in the Middle East. It believed that continuation of the intifadah and the intensification of repressive measures by Israel had created a critical situation making it imperative to advance towards a settlement of the Palestine question. The Committee stressed the urgent need for the Council and the parties directly concerned to take positive action towards convening the conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/42 by recorded vote.

Question of Palestine

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 16 November 1989,

Having heard the statement made on 29 November 1989 by the chairman of the observer delegation of Palestine,

Stressing that achieving a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine, will constitute a significant contribution to international peace and security,

Aware of the overwhelming support for the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East,

Noting with appreciation the endeavours of the Secretary-General to achieve the convening of the Conference,

Preoccupied by the increasingly serious situation in the occupied Palestinian territory as a result of persistent policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, and by the continuing lack of progress in achieving peace in the Middle East,

Aware of the ongoing uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987, aimed at ending Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine;

2. Calls once again for the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, on an equal footing, and the five permanent members of the Security Council, based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people, primarily the right to self-determination;

3. Reaffirms the following principles for the achievement of comprehensive Deace:

(a) The withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from the other occupied Arab territories;

(b) Guaranteeing arrangements for security of all States in the region, including those named in resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947, with secure and internationally recognized boundaries;

(c) Resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with Central Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and subsequent relevant resolutions;

(d) Dismantling the Israeli settlements in the territories occupied since 1967;

(e) Guaranteeing freedom of access to Holy Places, religious buildings and sites;

4. Notes the expressed desire and endeavours to place the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, under the supervision of the United Nations for a limited period, as part of the peace process;

5. Once again invites the Security Council to consider measures needed to convene the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, including the establishment of a preparatory committee, and to consider guarantees for security measures agreed upon by the Conference for all States in the region;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, to facilitate the convening of the Conference, and to submit progress reports on developments in this matter.

Iran announced that it was not participating in the vote.

Speaking before the Assembly, the Observer for Palestine said that PLO accepted a preliminary

Palestinian-Israeli dialogue, provided that each party nominated the members of its own delegation without interference from any other side; that the agenda of the dialogue should be open; that the dialogue should be held under the auspices of the five permanent Security Council members; and that the dialogue should be a preparatory step towards convening the envisaged international conference.

Earlier, the Assembly, in resolution 43/233, stressed the urgent need to expedite the convening of an international conference under UN auspices and in conformity with its 1988 resolution on the question.(6)

Public information activities

In compliance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(10) the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the UN Secretariat continued in 1989, in full co-operation with the Committee on Palestinian rights, its special information programme on the Palestine question. DPI disseminated press releases, publications and audio-visual materials, and organized fact-finding missions and regional and national encounters for journalists. It provided press coverage of all UN meetings relevant to the question, as well as seminars and symposia held by the Committee, focusing increasingly on news items and information concerning the situation in the occupied territories and efforts to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East under UN auspices.

The UN Chronicle reported extensively on the consideration given to the Palestine question by the Assembly and the Security Council. During 1989, DPI issued in Arabic, English, French, German and Spanish two new booklets, on the work of the Committee on Palestinian rights and of the Committee on Israeli practices. DPI also produced a widely circulated poster on the proposed international peace conference.

The Department produced radio features on various aspects of the Palestine question. Extensive radio coverage was given to the North American regional seminar on the question, the Latin American regional journalists' encounter and the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People.

Meetings of the Assembly and Security Council on the question received full television coverage, as did meetings and seminars of the Committee on Palestinian rights. Three editions of the weekly video programme entitled "UN in Action" were devoted to various aspects of the question. A total of 138 video news packages relating to the question were disseminated world wide.

In order to acquaint the media with the facts and developments pertaining to the question, DPI organized a news mission of 13 high-level journalists to the Middle East. From 7 to 23 May; they visited Tunis (Tunisia), Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic), Amman ('Jordan) and Cairo (Egypt). No reply was received to DPI's formal request for the mission to visit Israel and the West Bank. The Department also organized two regional encounters for journalists in Singapore (30 January-1 February) and Kingston, Jamaica (26-28 July). Three series of national expert encounters 'in the form of press conferences were held in London and Berlin (16-19 January); New Delhi (India), Bangkok (Thailand), Sydney and Canberra (Australia), Wellington (New Zealand) and Tokyo (Japan) (24 January-13 February); and Bogotá (Colombia), Quito (Ecuador) and Santiago (Chile) (19-24 July).

UN information centres throughout the world distributed publications on the topic, and organized exhibitions, meetings and other activities to observe the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People on 29 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/41 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,
Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note, in particular, of the information contained in paragraphs 94 to 109 of that report,

Recalling its resolutions 43/175 C, 43/176 and 43/177 of 15 December 1988,

Convinced that the world-wide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent sovereign Palestinian State,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the action taken by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in compliance with General Assembly resolution 43/175 C;

2. Requests the Department of Public Information, in full co-operation and co-ordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue its special information programme on the question of Palestine for the biennium 1990-1991, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America and, in particular:

(a) To disseminate information on all the activities of the United Nations system relating to the question of Palestine, including reports of the work carried out by the relevant United Nations organs;

(b) To continue to issue and update publications on the various aspects of the question of Palestine, including Israeli violations of the human rights of the Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories as reported by the relevant United Nations organs;

(c) To expand its audio-visual material on the question of Palestine, including the production of special series of radio programmes and television broadcasts;

(d) To organize fact-finding news missions to the area for journalists;

(e) To organize regional and national encounters for journalists.

Jerusalem

In October 1989, the Secretary-General reported(11) to the General Assembly on steps he had taken in response to a 1988 resolution(12) regarding the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of a 1980 Security Council resolution.(13) In May 1989, he had sent notes verbales to Member States, but received no replies specific to that question at the time of his report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/40 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987 and 43/54 C of 6 December 1988, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 22 November 1989,

1. Determines that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;
2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980), and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;
3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Assistance to Palestinians

Under their respective mandates, various organizations of the UN system continued in 1989 to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people. An overview of their activities was contained in an October report(14) submitted by the Secretary-General in response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution.(15) The Assembly, by that resolution, had requested the Secretary-General to entrust the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) with supervising the development of the programme of economic and social assistance to the Palestinians, in close co-operation with PLO. In June, UNCHS submitted an interim report(16) outlining steps taken in that regard. It had met with PLO representatives and selected experts to determine the scope of the programme and identified 30 projects. By October, it had received 26 project proposals, which were summarized in an appendix to the Secretary-General's report.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), whose economic and social assistance was primarily for non-refugee Palestinian population in the occupied territory, was implementing in 1989 some 15 projects with a total budget of over $15 million. Its assistance programme included manpower development, industrial development, improvement of water supply systems, sewage disposal and effluent recycling, strengthening of educational and health institutions, assistance to municipalities and establishment of a business development course. UNDP submitted to the Israeli authorities for approval projects to develop women's institutions and the poultry industry. Among contributors to the programme were Canada, Italy, Japan, Tunisia, the United States and the Arab Gulf Fund for United Nations Development Organizations.

In response to additional needs for assistance as a consequence of the intifadah, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) introduced a programme of extraordinary measures and an expanded programme of assistance to improve living conditions in the occupied territory, including additional medical supplies and equipment. UNRWA also continued to provide education, health and relief services to Palestine refugees in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, as well as in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic (see below, under "Palestine refugees").

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) focused its Palestine-related activities on three main areas: monitoring and analysing policies and measures of the Israeli occupation authorities that affected the economy of the occupied Palestinian territory; investigating the impact of such policies on key economic sectors and examining feasible solutions; and developing a data base for the dissemination of information on the economy of the occupied territory. Within the framework of the latter, UNCTAD issued selected statistical tables on the economy of the occupied Palestinian territory (West Bank and Gaza Strip), and data-base extracts of economic issues and related Israeli practices in the occupied Palestinian territory (West Bank and Gaza Strip, 1987-1988), as well as an in-depth study analysing Palestinian external trade under Israeli occupation and examining the potential for its development.

Assistance to Palestinian children and mothers was provided by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), concentrating on six areas: immunization, oral rehydration therapy, training of traditional birth attendants, establishment and operation of four child development centres, training of village health workers and kindergarten teacher training. In co-operation with the Palestinian Red Crescent Society, UNICEF was implementing water and sanitation projects in villages of the Hebron district. Through UNRWA, UNICEF also provided primary health care services for Palestinian refugees in the occupied territory.

Focusing its attention on assistance in the industrial and the livestock resource sectors, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) in 1989 was preparing a survey of the industrial sector in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and produced two pre-feasibility studies: one for a dairy farm project and the other for an animal breeding station project, both in the West Bank.

The technical co-operation programme of the International Labour Organisation was organized around three main subjects: vocational training in general, entrepreneur training and trade union training. Projects dealing with activities for women in the field of co-operatives and activities to help the disabled were also set in motion.

Two projects aimed at enhancing training for the Palestinians and funded by the Near East Co-operative Programme were implemented by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). Under the first, FAO organized three post-graduate training fellowships in agricultural economics and animal production. Under the second, it provided short-term consultancies and audio-visual equipment to assist the Al-Quds Open University in developing its curriculum and programmes relating to land and community development.

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) completed a study on the establishment of a Palestinian industrial development bank, a feasibility study on a canning plant for citrus fruit and, in co-operation with Bir Zeit University, a study to identify industrial priority projects. In October, UNIDO organized in Vienna a seminar on prospects for the Palestinian industrial sector.

The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in February, in co-operation with the World Health Organization (WHO), launched a training course on water supply, sanitation and health for environmental health officers working with the Palestinians. The UNEP Executive Director initiated consultations on the preparation of a report on the environmental situation in the occupied territories, requested by the UNEP Governing Council in May.(17)

The forty-second World Health Assembly, also in May, adopted two resolutions, regarding the request of Palestine for admission as a member of WHO and on the health conditions of the Arab population in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine. A WHO mission visited the occupied territories in July to identify priority health needs with a view to providing intensified assistance to the Palestinians. In consultation with several parties concerned, WHO started preparing a two-year plan of action, with special emphasis on primary health care.

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) supported activities of other UN organizations within the UNDP-financed educational programme. It funded fellowships for post-graduate studies in demography and related topics, and helped finance mother and child health research and training activities at WHO collaborating centres for primary health care research. It allocated funds to examine information on maternal and reproductive health and health care coverage for Palestine refugees, and to draft a plan for an expanded UNRWA mother and child health and feeding programme. It also funded several technical advisory missions by the ESCWA Regional Adviser in Demography and in Population Statistics to the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/96 by vote.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/178 of 20 December 1988,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/54 of 26 July 1988,

Taking into account the intifadah of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory against the Israeli occupation, including its economic and social policies and practices,

Affirming that the Palestinian people cannot develop their national economy as long as the Israeli occupation persists,

Gravely concerned at the serious repercussions, especially for Palestinian children, of Israeli practices, in particular the prolonged blanket closure in the West Bank of Palestinian institutions of learning, including kindergartens, schools operated by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and other schools,

Rejecting Israeli restrictions on external economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Aware of the increasing need to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people,

Noting with regret that a full report on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 43/178 has not been prepared,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the States, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have provided assistance to the Palestinian people;

2. Requests the international community, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to sustain and increase their assistance to the Palestinian people, in close co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization;

3. Requests the United Nations Children's Fund and other appropriate United Nations bodies to address the special needs of Palestinian children suffering from Israeli practices and their repercussions;

4. Calls for the immediate reopening of all Palestinian institutions of learning;

5. Also calls for the immediate lifting of Israeli restrictions and obstacles hindering the implementation of assistance projects by the United Nations Development Programme, other United Nations bodies and others providing economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory;

6. Further calls for the implementation of development projects in the occupied Palestinian territory, including the facilitation by all concerned of the establishment of the cement plant referred to in General Assembly resolution 39/223 of 18 December 1984;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report in full on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 43/178 and the present resolution to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/96

26 July 1989 Meeting 35 48-1

Approved by Third Committee (E/1989/130) by vote (41-1-1), 18 July (meeting 13); 18-nation draft (E/1989/C.3/L.3/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 10.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Egypt, German Democratic Republic, Indonesia, Jordan, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Morocco, Niger, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Zambia.

Speaking in explanation of vote, the United States said it firmly supported assistance to the Palestinians, but did not believe that UN organizations should channel funds destined for them through PLO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 44/235 by recorded vote.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/178 of 20 December 1988,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/96 of 26 July 1989,

Taking into account the intifadah of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory against the Israeli occupation, including Israeli economic and social policies and practices,

Rejecting Israeli restrictions on external economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Aware of the increasing need to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people,

Affirming that the Palestinian people cannot develop their national economy as long as the Israeli occupation persists,

1. Takes note of the report annexed to the note by the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian People;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the States, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have provided assistance to the Palestinian people;

3. Requests the international community, the organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to sustain and increase their assistance to the Palestinian people, in close co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization;

4. Calls for the treatment on a transit basis of Palestinian exports and imports passing through neighbouring ports and points of exit and entry;

5. Also calls for the granting of trade concessions and concrete preferential measures for Palestinian exports on the basis of Palestinian certificates of origin;

6. Further calls for the immediate lifting of Israeli restrictions and obstacles hindering the implementation of assistance projects by the United Nations Development Programme, other United Nations bodies and others providing economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory;

7. Reiterates its call for the implementation of development projects in the occupied Palestinian territory, including the projects mentioned in its resolution 39/223*, of 18 December 1984;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/235

Incidents and disputes involving Arab countries and Israel

Israel and Iraq

By decision 43/463 of 18 September 1989, the General Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its forty-fourth session the item on armed Israeli aggression against Iraqi nuclear installations. The item had been inscribed yearly on the Assembly's agenda since 1981,(1) following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad. No action had been taken on the item by the time the Assembly was suspended in December 1989.

Lebanon

Military confrontation and violence in and around Beirut intensified during 1989, producing some devastating casualties. Security Council members, in a 7 November statement,(2) supported action by the Tripartite High Committee of the League of Arab States for the implementation of a settlement plan for the Lebanese crisis. Council members also welcomed the election of René Moawad as the President of the Lebanese Republic and ratification of the Taif Agreement by the Lebanese Parliament.

In a statement on 22 November,(3) they condemned the assassination of President Moawad, and called for the continued establishment of renovated institutions as part of the process of national reconciliation. In a 27 December statement(4), Council members welcomed the election of Elias Hrawi as the new President of Lebanon and supported his efforts in implementation of the Taif Agreement to deploy Lebanese government forces in order to restore central government authority over all Lebanese territory.

Following the announcement by a group in Lebanon that it had executed Lieutenant-Colonel William Richard Higgins, a United States national who had been serving with UNIFIL when abducted in February 1988,(5) the Secretary-General sent to Lebanon the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs. Unfortunately, he could not obtain definite proof of Colonel Higgins' fate. On 31 July 1989, in a Council statement,(6) members noted reports that Colonel Higgins may have been murdered and, if those reports were true, expressed outrage that such a cruel and criminal act should have been committed against an officer who served the United Nations on a peace-keeping mission. They condemned all acts of hostage-taking and abduction and demanded the safe release of all hostages and abducted persons wherever and by whomever they were being held.

The fate of Alec Collett, a British journalist kidnapped near the Beirut airport in March 1985(7) while on assignment for UNRWA, remained unresolved, no word having been received from his kidnappers since 1986.

Israel and Lebanon

During 1989, the situation between Israel and Lebanon remained tense. Israel Defence Forces (IDF) continued to control parts of southern Lebanon, which Israel declared its "security zone". The boundaries of the Israeli-controlled area were not clearly defined, but determined de facto by the forward positions of IDF and the so-called South Lebanon Army (SLA). IDF and SLA remained targets for attacks by Lebanese groups opposed to the occupation; in retaliation, they often used heavy artillery, tanks and helicopters.

UNIFIL reported a further strengthening of Israeli control over parts of southern Lebanon. The control was exercised through the military activities of IDF and SLA and through "civilian administration offices" that had been opened in a number of towns and villages. There had been also an increase in the number of IDF and SLA positions in the area.

Throughout the year, Lebanon addressed numerous communications to the Secretary-General accusing Israel of ongoing attacks against its territory, causing death and injury to civilians and destruction of property. Lebanon also complained about forcible expulsion of Lebanese from the "security zone", forcible conscription of men into SLA, confiscation of farmland and other acts.

The Security Council met on several occasions to consider developments in Lebanon and specific charges against Israeli actions there. On 31 March, the President of the Council, following consultations, made a statement(8) on behalf of the Council members, expressing their grave concern at the recent deterioration of the situation in Lebanon, which had left many victims among the civilian population and caused considerable material damage.

On 24 April, the Council President made another statement(9) in which the members of the Council once again expressed grave concern over the suffering caused to the civilian population by the worsening situation in Lebanon.

On 31 July, the Council President, in a statement,(10) said that Council members reaffirmed their profound concern over the safety and security of UNIFIL personnel, who were exposed to constant threats and danger.

On 15 August, the Secretary-General addressed a letter(11) to the Council President stating that the crisis which, in his opinion, had escalated to a level unprecedented in 14 years of conflict, posed a serious threat to international peace and security. He therefore requested the President to convene an urgent Council meeting. The Council did so immediately and adopted a statement,(12) by which Council members expressed deep concern over the further deterioration of the situation and profoundly deplored the intensification of shelling and bitter fighting in recent days.

On 20 September, the Council, following consultations among its members and consideration of Lebanon's accusation of new aggressive acts by the Israeli army, resumed its consideration of the situation in Lebanon. On behalf of the Council, the President made another statement(13) strongly urging respect for the appeal by the Tripartite High Committee for an immediate and comprehensive cease-fire.

UNIFIL

Established by the Security Council in 1978(14) following Israel's invasion of Lebanon in March of that year,(15) the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon was entrusted with restoring international peace and security, confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory and re-establishing the Lebanese Government's effective authority in the area. After a second Israeli invasion in June 1982,(16) the Council authorized the Force also to provide protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population.(17)

During 1989, at the request of Lebanon and on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Council twice extended the UNIFIL mandate, in January and July, each time for six months.

Composition

As of July 1989,(18) UNIFIL had a strength of 5,854 military personnel provided by nine countries: Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway and Sweden. By January 1990,(19) its total strength had slightly increased, to 5,876. The Commander of UNIFIL continued to be Lieutenant-General Lars-Eric Wahlgren of Sweden, who had assumed his responsibilities on 1 July 1988.(20) During 1989, UNIFIL was assisted by 65 military observers of UNTSO, 64 of whom maintained five observation posts along the Lebanese side of the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line and also operated four mobile teams in parts of the area of operation, including those under Israeli control. One military observer was attached to UNIFIL headquarters. The strength of the Lebanese army unit serving with UNIFIL during the year decreased from 200 to 128 personnel.

Developments in the UNIFIL area

Report of the Secretary-General (January). In a January 1989 report,(21) the Secretary-General informed the Security Council of developments in the UNIFIL area of operation between 26 July 1988 and 24 January 1989, as well as organizational and financial aspects of the Force.

During the reporting period, three members of the Force, an Irish, a Norwegian and a Swedish soldier, lost their lives in accidents. Seventeen soldiers suffered injuries, 5 as a result of hostile fire, 5 from mine explosions and the others in accidents. Since UNIFIL's establishment, 156 members of the Force had died, 60 from firing and mine or bomb explosions, 68 in accidents and 28 from other causes. Some 230 had been wounded by firing and mine or bomb explosions. On 24 January, one more Irish soldier was wounded when SLA fired towards the Irish position.

The situation in the UNIFIL area of operation remained essentially unchanged. UNIFIL still was not able to extend its area up to the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line, as envisaged in Security Council resolution 425(1978),(22) while IDF and SLA continued to control the "security zone", maintaining 54 positions within the UNIFIL area.

Armed resistance groups continued operations against IDF and SLA using small arms, rocket-propelled grenades, rockets and mortars, as well as mines and roadside bombs. UNIFIL recorded a total of 114 such operations, including 10 of them in January 1989, which indicated a marked intensification of activities in some of the northern parts of the UNIFIL area, especially in the Finnish battalion sector.

IDF and SLA forces, whether in retaliation or unprovoked, often used heavy artillery, tank and mortar shelling and Israeli helicopter gunships. Fire from those forces was close to UNIFIL positions and vehicles, sometimes hitting them. Some 108 unprovoked firings were protested by UNIFIL to the Israeli authorities. Resistance groups also opened fire close to UNIFIL positions; however, warning shots by UNIFIL in most cases stopped that fire. There were some other incidents between UNIFIL and armed elements, mainly due to their passage through UNIFIL checkpoints being denied. A serious incident happened on 15 December 1988, near the village of Jumayjimah, where about 20 armed elements fired at and stopped an Irish armoured personnel carrier. The incident was quickly resolved through negotiations. In an apparently related incident on the following day, five armed elements fired at and overran an Irish battalion checkpoint near Tibnin and kidnapped three soldiers; however, with the assistance of the Amal Movement they were released the next day.

Protection and security of the civilian population continued to be an important part of UNIFIL activities. The Force detonated mines and roadside bombs, as well as unexploded remnants of war, in its area of operation. UNIFIL consistently protested to IDF about forced expulsion of Lebanese civilians from their homes by SLA and forced recruitment of local men to that army.

UNIFIL continued to provide humanitarian assistance, mainly in the medical and health areas and to welfare institutions, using funds provided by the troop-contributing Governments. A large number of civilians were treated at UNIFIL medical centres, including the UNIFIL hospital at Naqoura, where nearly 6,500 Lebanese patients were treated, 561 of them as in-patients.

In his observations, the Secretary-General noted that UNIFIL's ability to carry out the tasks which the Security Council had assigned to it in 1978 was still blocked. Israel continued to refuse to withdraw its forces from Lebanon, and its "security zone" had become a focus of attack, both by those aiming to attack Israel itself and by those with the aim of liberating Lebanese territory from foreign occupation. Attempts by armed elements to infiltrate Israel, which increased substantially during 1988, and retaliatory air and commando raids by Israel, often far to the north of the UNIFIL area of operation, meant that international peace and security were a long way from being restored. The failure to elect a new President of Lebanon and the subsequent existence of two rival Governments in Beirut had prevented UNIFIL from making any progress in helping ensure the return of the Lebanese Government's effective authority in southern Lebanon.

On 19 January 1989,⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General received a request from Lebanon for an extension of UNIFIL's mandate for a further six-month period. Meanwhile, he reported that Israel continued to take the position that its presence in Lebanon was a temporary arrangement necessary for ensuring the security of northern Israel as long as the Lebanese Government was not able to exercise effective authority and prevent its territory from being used to launch attacks against Israel. The Israeli authorities did not consider that UNIFIL, as a peace-keeping force, could assume that responsibility.

Given the negative developments he had reported and UNIFIL's continuing inability to carry out its original mandate, the Secretary-General observed that it was understandable that doubts had been expressed as to whether the Force should maintain its current strength. He presented four points that, he said, the Security Council should take into account when considering Lebanon's request for a mandate extension: the Council's conviction that a solution to the problems of southern Lebanon lay in the full implementation of resolution 425(1978);⁽¹³⁾ the important role the Force played in controlling the level of violence in southern Lebanon; UNIFIL's humanitarian support to the population in the area of its operation; and UNIFIL's role as a symbol of the international community's commitment to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Council renew UNIFIL's mandate for a further six months.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 30 January to consider the Secretary-General's report and, without debate, unanimously adopted resolution 630(1989).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 5011(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 24 and 27 January 1989, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 19 January 1989 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1989;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 630(1989)

30 January 1989 Meeting 2843 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20429).

Report of the Secretary-General (July). In a report(17) on UNIFIL activities and developments in the area of its operation, covering the period from 25 January to 21 July 1989, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the situation remained essentially unchanged, with IDF and SLA continuing to control the "security zone" in southern Lebanon. There had been a notable increase in the number of their positions, from 54 to 64.

UNIFIL recorded 98 operations by resistance groups against IDF and SLA targets with the use of small arms, rocket-propelled grenades, rockets and mortars. Whether in retaliation to those operations or unprovoked, IDF and SLA often used heavy artillery, tanks, mortars and helicopters. During the reporting period, UNIFIL registered 112 unprovoked firings close to its positions. In view of the seriousness of some of those incidents, in May the matter was taken up with the Israeli authorities at a senior level, which resulted in a marked decrease of such firings.

The Secretary-General reported several serious incidents, resulting in the death of three Irish soldiers and injury to a Fijian, an Irish and two Norwegian soldiers. During the period under review, eight UNIFIL members-five Irish, two Norwegians and one Swede-lost their lives from firing, mine or bomb explosions, accidents and natural causes. Fifteen others suffered injuries.

UNIFIL continued to provide protection, security and assistance to the civilian population. Its troops removed in the area of operation mines, roadside bombs and remnants of war. The Secretary-General reported that Ireland had agreed to provide expert teams as part of the Irish contingent to search for, and dispose of, explosive ordnance in the Irish battalion sector. Those teams would also train personnel from the other UNIFIL battalions.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General regretted that, after another difficult mandate period, UNIFIL remained far from being able to implement its mandate of confirming Israeli withdrawal from Lebanese territory, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government to return its effective authority in the area. UNIFIL had again been unable to make progress towards deployment to the international border, while Israel had strengthened its hold on the so-called "security zone" where positions occupied by its own forces and those of SLA had increased by 18.5 per cent during the reporting period.

However, the Secretary-General considered as positive achievements the significant role UNIFIL played in controlling the level of violence in its area and in providing humanitarian assistance. He once again recommended extending the Force's mandate for a further six months, until 31 January 1990, in response to Lebanon's request of 13 July.(22)

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 31 July 1989, again without debate, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, unanimously adopted resolution 639(1989).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 21 July 1989, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 13 July 1989 from the representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1990;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 639(1989)

31 July 1989 Meeting 2873 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20755).

Financing

The Secretary-General reported in December 1989(23) that, as at 30 September, contributions totalling $1,324.4 million had been received for the operation of UNIFIL out of $1,691.7 million apportioned among Member States for the periods from the inception of the Force on 19 March 1978 to 31 January 1990. Of the unpaid balance of $367.3 million, only $138.7 million could be considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $228.6 million, including $19.6 million transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution.(24) As a consequence, UNIFIL was unable to meet its obligations on a current basis, particularly to the troop-contributing countries, which had never been paid on a current and full basis in accordance with established rates. The UNIFIL Suspense Account, set up in 1979(25) to facilitate reimbursement to them for equipment and supplies, had so far not achieved its purpose. The troop-contributing countries had expressed to the Secretary-General their serious concern over that situation.

As at 30 September 1989, voluntary contributions totalling $2.9 million had been received from Governments, of which $1.6 million was contributed by Switzerland. A $3 million contribution made by Japan in 1988 was utilized to defray expenses arising from the acquisition of logistic equipment and supplies that had not been previously budgeted for.

For the mandate periods from 1 February 1989 to 31 January 1990, $142,842,000 gross ($140,574,000 net) had been authorized for UNIFIL by the General Assembly.(26) The costs of UNIFIL for the 12-month period beginning 1 February 1990 were estimated at $12,001,000 gross ($11,806,000 net) per month, based on an average Force strength of 5,850 troops, for a total of $144,012,000 gross ($141,672,000 net). On a net basis, that was $1,098,000 (0.8 per cent) more than the estimate for the previous 12 months.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended(27) that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's estimate for UNIFIL for the one-year period beginning 1 February 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/188 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 639(1989) of 31 July 1989,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 43/229 of 21 December 1988,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by Such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 23 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 43/229,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon by certain Governments,

Concerned that the Secretary-General is continuing to face increasing difficulties in meeting the obligations of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States, resulting from the withholding of contributions by certain Member States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned further that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon,

Mindful of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee on the requests of some Member States to change their placement in the existing groups "b", "c" and "d" of Member States, on the basis of the criteria set out in General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section I, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 an amount of 142,842,000 United States dollars gross (140,574,000 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly and apportioned in paragraph 5 of its resolution 43/229 for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 1 February 1989 to 31 January 1990, inclusive;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon at a rate not to exceed 12,001,000 dollars gross (11,806,000 dollars net) per month for the twelve-month period beginning 1 February 1990, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 639(1989);

3. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amounts referred to in paragraph 2 of the present resolution among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, to be adjusted by the decision to be taken by the Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the composition of groups "a", "b", "c" and "d" of Member States and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

4. Decides also that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of 3,078,849 dollars, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure that the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon shall be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

6. Renews its invitation to Member States and other interested parties to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General and also to make voluntary contributions in cash to the Suspense Account established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/9 D of 17 December 1979.

General Assembly resolution 44/188

21 December 1989 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/44/888) without vote, 18 December (meeting 58); 18-nation draft (A/C.5/44/L.12); agenda item 133 (b).

Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, established by the Security Council in 1974(28) and headquartered in Damascus, continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire in the Golan Heights, as called for by the Agreement on Disengagement between Israeli and Syrian Forces.(29) Its mandate was renewed in May and November 1989, each time for six months.

The issue of the human rights of the population in the occupied territories was continuously monitored by the Committee on Israeli practices and the Commission on Human Rights (see below and PART THREE, Chapter X).

Composition

As of November 1989, UNDOF had a strength of 1,327 military troops (reduced from 1,344 in May) from four countries—Austria, 531; Canada, 227; Finland, 410; and Poland, 159—including four Polish officers deployed to the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan. Seven military observers were assigned to UNDOF from UNTSO. In addition, UNTSO observers assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission assisted UNDOF as needed.

Activities

Reports of the Secretary-General. Before the expiration of the mandate of UNDOF on 31 May and 30 November 1989, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities during the periods from 18 November 1988 to 22 May 1989(30) and from 23 May to 21 November 1989.(31)

In accordance with its mandate(28) and in cooperation with the parties, UNDOF continued to supervise the cease-fire between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic and monitor the area of separation to ensure that there were no military forces within it. It also conducted fortnightly inspections of armament and forces in the area of limitation. UNDOF carried out its duties from static positions and observation posts, which were manned 24 hours a day, and by foot and mobile patrols operating at irregular intervals on predetermined routes by day and night. In addition, temporary outposts were established and patrols were conducted from time to time to perform specific tasks.

The safety of Syrian shepherds grazing their flocks close to and west of the separation area continued to be of concern to UNDOF, and intensified patrolling of new mine-cleared paths helped to prevent incidents. Since mines continued to pose a threat to the Force and the population in the area of separation, UNDOF conducted mine-clearing operations there. During the two reporting periods, the Force cleared 71,930 and 43,790 square metres, respectively. UNDOF also assisted the International Committee of the Red Cross in its humanitarian activities.

The Secretary-General concluded that despite the current quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. Therefore, he considered the presence of UNDOF in the area to be essential and recommended in his two reports, with the agreement of the Syrian Arab Republic and Israel, that the Security Council extend the mandate of the Force for a further six months, until 30 November 1989 and 31 May 1990, respectively.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May and November)

On 30 May 1989, without debate, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 633(1989).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,
Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1989;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 633(1989)

30 May 1989 Meeting 2862 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20656).

On 29 November, again without debate, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 645(1989).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1990;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 645(1989)

29 November 1989 Meeting 2895 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/20996).

Following the adoption of each resolution, the President of the Council made the following statement:(32)

"As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 24: 'Despite the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached.' That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council."

Financing

In October 1989,(33) the Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 September 1989, assessments totalling $879.2 million had been apportioned among Member States for UNDOF since its inception on 31 May 1974(28) to 30 November 1989 and for the second United Nations Emergency Force, established in 1973(34) and liquidated in 1980.(35) Contributions received from 1973 to 1989 amounted to $801 million. Of the unpaid assessed balance of $78.2 million, only $10 million could be considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $68.2 million, including $36 million transferred to a special account in accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution.(24) Therefore, troop-contributing countries had not been reimbursed on time.

In 1988,(36) the Assembly had appropriated $18,114,000 for UNDOF for the period from 1 December 1988 to 31 May 1989 and authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for UNDOF at a rate not to exceed $3,019,000 gross ($2,963,000 net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1989, should the Security Council decide to continue UNDOF beyond 31 May 1989. The Secretary-General estimated the costs of the Force to be $3,368,000 gross ($3,283,000 net) per month from 1 December 1989.

In December,(27) ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's cost estimate for the period from 1 December 1989 to 30 November 1990 not exceeding $40,416,000 gross ($39,396,000 net).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, adopted resolution 44/187 without vote.

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as well as the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 645(1989) of 29 November 1989,

Recalling its resolution 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 43/228 of 21 December 1988,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by such operations, a different procedure from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations is required,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards peace-keeping operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the financing of such operations, as indicated in General Assembly/resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 5 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 33/13 E of 14 December 1978 and subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 43/228,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Forces on a current basis, particularly those due to the Governments of troop-contributing States,

Recognizing that, in consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Concerned that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Forces,

Mindful of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee on the requests of some Member States to change their placement in the existing groups "b", "c" and "d" of Member States, on the basis of the criteria set out in General Assembly resolution 3101(XXVIII) of 11 December 1973,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of 18,114,000 United States dollars gross (17,778,000 dollars net) authorized and apportioned in paragraph 6 of Assembly resolution 43/228 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1989, inclusive;

2. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of 20,208,000 dollars for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1989 to 31 May 1990, inclusive;

3. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 20,208,000 dollars for the above-mentioned period among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, to be adjusted by the decision to be taken by the Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the composition of groups "a", "b", "c" and "d" of Member States and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

4. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the estimated income of 6,500 dollars other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 December 1989 to 31 May 1990, inclusive;

5. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 503,500 dollars approved for the period from 1 December 1989 to 31 May 1990, inclusive;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force at a rate not to exceed 3,368,000 dollars gross (3,283,000 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1990, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 645(1989), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

7. Decides that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of 2,024,706 dollars, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered into the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 33/13 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly;

8. Stresses the need for voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 44/187

21 December 1989 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Territories occupied by Israel

The territories occupied by Israel as a result of armed conflicts in the Middle East comprised the West Bank of the Jordan River, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights in the Syrian Arab Republic. The United Nations continued in 1989 to monitor the situation and take appropriate action on various aspects of it.

In April, the General Assembly, at the request of the Chairman of the Group of Arab States, resumed its consideration of the item on the question of Palestine, and subsequently condemned Israeli policies and practices which violated the human rights of the Palestinians in the occupied territory. In October, the Assembly, in adopting a resolution on the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinians, condemned human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territory, in particular such acts as the opening of fire by the Israeli army and settlers that resulted in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinian civilians, beating, deportation, imposition of restrictive economic measures, demolition of houses and so forth.

After considering reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli practices), the Assembly adopted in December seven resolutions condemning various types of human rights violations in the territories.

In 1989, the Security Council discussed the situation in the occupied Arab territories at meetings held in February, June, July, August and November. In July, the Council adopted a resolution by which it deeply regretted the continuing deportation by Israel of Palestinian civilians and called on Israel to ensure the safe and immediate return of those deported. In August, the Council again deplored the continuing deportation of Palestinian civilians from the occupied territories.

The Committee on the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian rights) monitored the situation in the occupied territory on an ongoing basis, drawing the attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council to Israeli policies and practices there. In its annual report, the Committee protested the intensification of what it called Israeli repression of Palestinians.

The Committee on Israeli practices continued to collect from various sources, including oral testimony and written communications, information on developments in the occupied territories, reviewing that information and assessing the overall human rights situation. On that basis, the Committee concluded in October that the situation in the territories had been marked by a dangerous level of violence and repression, which had constantly escalated since the beginning of the intifadah in December 1987.

The Economic and Social Council in May strongly condemned the continuation of Israel's "iron-fist" policy against Palestinian women and their families in the occupied territories. In July, it adopted a resolution on Israeli economic practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories.

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development reported on economic issues and related Israeli practices in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

In February, the Commission on Human Rights adopted three resolutions related to the occupied territories. In one, it declared that the continued Israeli occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan and Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration there constituted an act of aggression and that the decision was null and void and without international legal validity or effect. In the two other resolutions, the Commission condemned Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territories.

Report of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its annual report,⁽¹⁾ the Committee expressed alarm at the further aggravation of the situation in the occupied territory as a result of intensified Israeli efforts to suppress the Palestinian uprising, including the increasing resort to armed force and settler vigilantism. Use of force resulted in an extensive and unprecedented range of human rights violations. Thousands of Palestinians were the victims of beatings while in the hands of the Israeli army or security personnel, it was reported.

As of 15 September 1989, Palestinians shot to death by the Israeli forces or armed settlers numbered 537. Another 212 had died from beatings, suffocation from tear gas and other actions, the Committee stated. It was, it said, particularly alarmed that a high proportion of victims were children—at least 20 per cent of fatalities were children under the age of 16. That percentage had increased to 46 per cent during August.

The Committee also reported campaigns of mass arrests. As of September 1989, more than 40,000 Palestinians had been in prison at one time or another, only 18,000 of whom had actually been sentenced. Israeli authorities, after removing previously existing judicial safeguards for detainees, increasingly relied on the use of administrative detention without charges or trial. In August, the standard period of administrative detention was doubled from six months to a year. As of September, about 13,600 Palestinians, including children, were reported to be in detention.

Violations of the Palestinians' right to education intensified, with the complete closure of universities, long-term and repeated closure of schools, the use of schools as military outposts and the destruction of school property. It was estimated that some 400,000 primary and secondary school-children were in school for only about five months between the autumn of 1987 and June 1989.

The Committee also was concerned over the health situation in the occupied territory, which it said continued to deteriorate. Sanitary infrastructure, quantity and quality of medical services, and medical equipment and supplies were increasingly insufficient.

Concluding its assessment of the situation, the Committee reiterated its urgent appeal to the Security Council and the international community as a whole to take measures to ensure the safety and protection of the Palestinians, pending the withdrawal of Israeli forces and the achievement of a settlement. The Committee called on all concerned to sustain and increase their assistance to the Palestinians, in close co-operation with PLO.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. In October 1989, the Committee on Israeli practices, established by the General Assembly in 1968,(2) submitted its twenty-first report,(3) covering the period from 26 August 1988 to 25 August 1989; in July, a periodic report(4) covering the period from 26 August 1988 to 31 March 1989 had been provided. While the latter contained mostly factual information about developments affecting the human rights of the civilian population in the occupied territories, the main report also transmitted information on Committee activities and conclusions.

The Committee held a series of meetings in Geneva (3-6 January, 22-23 May, 21-25 August), Damascus (24-27 May), Amman (28 May-1 June) and Cairo (2-7 June) to examine information on developments in the occupied territories, as well as to consider communications addressed to it in connection with its mandate by Governments, organizations and individuals. The Committee worked in close co-operation with the Governments of Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic and with various Palestinian representatives. Israel, as in previous years, did not participate in its work.

The Committee concluded that Israel was continuing its policy of annexation towards the occupied territories, by establishing settlements, expropriating property, transferring Israeli citizens to the occupied territories and encouraging or compelling Palestinians to leave their homeland. There also had been a considerable increase in the number of deportations from the occupied territories, as well as detentions, the Committee stated.

As a consequence of the arrests of tens of thousands of Palestinians since the uprising began, the situation of detainees had further deteriorated, with their being subjected to various forms of ill-treatment, both physical and psychological, a lack of adequate sanitary and medical facilities, nutrition and clothing, and overcrowding of cells.

Freedom of association and freedom of the press were affected by closure of newspapers and detention of journalists. Freedom of education was seriously hampered by prolonged closure of educational institutions. Freedom of movement was affected by arbitrary orders and curfews.

The Committee, in view of the gravity of the situation in the territories, stressed that urgent measures had to be taken in order to ensure an effective protection of the basic rights and freedoms of the civilians. The Committee called again for the full application by Israel of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention, the full co-operation of the Israeli authorities with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to ensure access of ICRC representatives to detainees, and the full support by Member States of UNRWA activities in order to enable that Agency to improve general assistance to refugees.

Report of the Secretary-General. In pursuance of a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(5) the Secretary-General in May requested that Israel inform him of any steps taken or envisaged to implement relevant provisions of that resolution. In October, the Secretary-General reported(6) that, in a note verbale, Israel had categorically rejected all allegations contained in that resolution and in the 1988 report(') of the Committee on Israeli practices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, following consideration of the report of the Committee on Israeli practices and acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/48 A by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and by the principles and provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Aware of the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987 against Israeli occupation, which has received significant attention and sympathy from world public opinion,

Deeply concerned at the alarming situation in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, as well as in the other occupied Arab territories, as a result of the continued occupation by Israel, the occupying Power, and of its persistent policies against the Palestinian people,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1948, as well as of other relevant conventions and regulations,

Taking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of the Palestinian people under the Israeli occupation,

Recalling all its resolutions on the subject, in particular resolutions 32/91 B and C of 13 December 1977, 33/113 C of 18 December 1978, 34/90 A of 12 December 1979, 35/122 C of 11 December 1980, 36/147 C of 16 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 C of 10 December 1982, 38/79 D of 15 December 1983, 39/95 D of 14 December 1984, 40/161 D of 16 December 1985, 41/63 D of 3 December 1986, 42/160 D of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 A of 6 December 1988 and 44/2 of 6 October 1989,

Recalling also the relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989 and 641(1989) of 30 August 1989,

Recalling further the relevant resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights, in particular resolutions 1983/1 of 15 February 1983, 1984/1 of 20 February 1984, 1985/1 A and B and 1985/2 of 19 February 1985, 1986/1 A and B and 1986/2 of 20 February 1986, 1987/1, 1987/2 A and B and 1987/4 of 19 February 1987, 1988/1 A and B and 1988/2 of 15 February 1988 and 1988/3 of 22 February 1988, 1989/1 and 1989/2 of 17 February 1989 and 1989/19 of 6 March 1989, and by other United Nations organs concerned and the specialized agencies,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, which contain, inter alia, self-incriminating public statements made by officials of Israel, the occupying Power,

Having also considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988 and 20 October 1989,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly and for its impartiality;

2. Deplores the continued refusal by Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

3. Demands that Israel allow the Special Committee access to those occupied territories;

4. Reaffirms the fact that occupation itself constitutes a grave violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

5. Condemns the continued and persistent violation by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and other applicable international instruments, and condemns in particular those violations which the Convention designates as "grave breaches" thereof;

6. Declares once more that Israel's grave breaches of that Convention are war crimes and an affront to humanity;

7. Reaffirm, in accordance with the Convention, that the Israeli military occupation of the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories is of a temporary nature, thus giving no right whatsoever to the occupying Power over the territorial integrity of the occupied territories;

8. Strongly condemns the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) Annexation of parts of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

(b) Imposition of Israeli laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

(c) Illegal imposition and levy of taxes and dues;

(d) Establishment of new Israeli settlements and expansion of the existing settlements on private and public Palestinian and other Arab lands, and transfer of an alien population thereto;

(e) Eviction, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Palestinians and other Arabs of those occupied territories and denial of their right to return;

(f) Confiscation and expropriation of private and public Palestinian and other Arab property in those occupied territories and all other transactions for the acquisition of land by the Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals;

(g) Excavation and transformation of the landscape and the historical, cultural and religious sites, especially at Jerusalem;

(h) Pillaging of archaeological and cultural property;

(i) Destruction and demolition of Palestinian and other Arab houses;

(j) Collective punishment, mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of Palestinians and other Arabs;

(k) Torture of Palestinians and other Arabs;

(l) Interference with religious freedoms and practices, as well as family rights and customs;

(m) Interference with the system of education and with the social and economic and health development of the Palestinians and other Arabs in those occupied territories;

(n) Interference with the freedom of movement of individuals within the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

(o) Illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and labour of those occupied territories;

9. Strongly condemns, in particular, the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) Implementation of an "iron-fist" policy against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory;

(b) Escalation of Israeli brutality since the beginning of the uprising (intifadah) 9 December 1987;

(c) Ill-treatment and torture of children and minors under detention and/or imprisonment;

(d) Closure of headquarters and offices of trade unions and social organizations and harassment, including expulsion of their leaders, as well as attacks on hospitals and their personnel;

(e) Interference with the freedom of the press, including censorship, detention or expulsion of journalists, closure and suspension of newspapers and magazines, as well as denial of access to international media;

(f) Killing and wounding of defenceless demonstrators;

(g) Breaking of bones and limbs of thousands of

(h) House and/or town arrests;

(i) Use of toxic gas, which has resulted, inter alia, in the killing of many Palestinians;

10. Condemns the Israeli repression against and closing of the educational institutions in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, particularly the prohibition of Syrian textbooks and the Syrian educational system, the deprivation of Syrian students from pursuing their higher education in Syrian universities, the denial of the right to return to Syrian students receiving their higher education in the Syrian Arab Republic, the forcing of Hebrew on Syrian students, the imposition of courses that promote hatred, prejudice and religious intolerance, and the dismissal of teachers, all in clear violation of the Geneva Convention;

11. Strongly condemns the arming of Israeli settlers in those occupied territories to perpetrate and commit acts of violence against Palestinians and other Arabs, causing deaths and injuries;

12. Requests the Security Council to ensure Israel's respect for and compliance with all the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and to initiate measures to halt Israeli policies and practices in those territories;

13. Urges the Security Council to consider the current situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, taking into account the recommendations contained in the reports of the Secretary-General, and with a view to securing international protection for the defenceless Palestinian people until the withdrawal of Israel, the occupying Power, from the occupied Palestinian territory;

14. Reaffirms that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or legal status of those occupied territories, or any part thereof, including Jerusalem, are null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those occupied territories constitutes a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention and of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

15. Demands that Israel desist forthwith from the policies and practices referred to in paragraphs 8, 9, 10 and 11 above;

16. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to allow the reopening of the Roman Catholic Medical Facility Hospice in Jerusalem in order to continue to provide needed health and medical services to the Palestinians in the city;

17. Also calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced Arab and Palestinian inhabitants to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, in implementation of Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967;

18. Urges international organizations, including the specialized agencies, in particular the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, to continue to examine the educational and health conditions in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

19. Reiterates its call upon all States, in particular those States parties to the Geneva Convention, in accordance with article 1 of that Convention, and upon international organizations, including the specialized agencies, not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel, the occupying Power, in those occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, which might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

20. Requests the Special Committee, pending early termination of Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the welfare and human rights of the peoples of those occupied territories and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

21. Also requests the Special Committee to submit regularly to the Secretary-General periodic reports on the present situation in the occupied Palestinian territory;

22. Further requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of prisoners in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

23. Condemns Israel's refusal to permit persons from the occupied Palestinian territory to appear as witnesses before the Special Committee and to participate in conferences and meetings held outside the occupied Palestinian territory;

24. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to those occupied territories, so that it may investigate the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To circulate regularly and periodically the reports mentioned in paragraph 21 above to the States Members of the United Nations;

(d) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee which are no longer available;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present resolution;

25. Decides to change the name of the Special Committee to: "the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories";

26. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

General Assembly resolution 44/48 A

8 December 1989 Meeting 78 107-2-41 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/44/816) by recorded vote (93-2-31), 22 November (meeting 25); 13-nation draft (A/SPC/44/L.19 & Corr.1); agenda item 77.

Paragraph 6 of the resolution was adopted by the Committee and the Assembly by recorded votes of 75 to 20, with 28 abstentions, and 81 to 21, with 43 abstentions, respectively.

The Palestinian uprising (intifadah)

During 1989, the Palestinian uprising (intifadah) in the occupied territory continued unabated. As the Secretary-General reported,(8) the message of the intifadah was direct and unequivocal, namely, that the Israeli occupation would continue to be rejected, and that the Palestinian people would remain committed to the exercise of their legitimate political rights, including self-determination.

The Committee on Palestinian rights reported(1) in November that it was alarmed by a further aggravation of the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory as a result of the intensification of efforts by Israel to suppress the intifadah. The Committee expressed the view that the continuation of the intifadah and the intensification of repressive measures by Israel had created a critical situation that made it imperative to advance towards a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the question of Palestine.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/2 by recorded vote.

The uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,

Aware of the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987 against Israeli occupation, which has received significant attention and sympathy from world public opinion,

Deeply concerned at the alarming situation in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, as a result of the continued occupation by Israel, the occupying Power, and of its persistent policies and practices against the Palestinian people,

Reaffirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and to the other occupied Arab territories,

Expressing its profound shock at the continued measures by Israel, the occupying Power, including the killing and wounding of Palestinian civilians and the recent action of ransacking the houses of defenceless civilians in the Palestinian town of Beit Sahour,

Stressing the need to promote international protection to the Palestinian civilians in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Recognizing the need for increased support to, aid for and solidarity with the Palestinian people under Israeli occupation,

Having considered the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling its relevant resolutions as well as the relevant Security Council resolutions,

1. Condemns those policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and, in particular, such acts as the opening of fire by the Israeli army and settlers that result in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinian civilians, the beating and breaking of bones, the deportation of Palestinian civilians, the imposition of restrictive economic measures, the demolition of houses, the ransacking of real or personal property belonging individually or collectively to private persons, collective punishment and detentions, and so forth;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, abide scrupulously by the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and desist immediately from those policies and practices which are in violation of the provisions of the Convention;

3. Culls upon all the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention in all circumstances, in conformity with their obligation under article 1 thereof;

4. Strongly deplores the continuing disregard by Israel, the occupying Power, of the relevant decisions of the Security Council;

5. Reaffirms that the occupation by Israel of the Palestinian territory since 1967, including Jerusalem, and of the other Arab territories in no way changes the legal status of those territories;

6. Requests the Security Council to examine with urgency the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory with a view to considering measures needed to provide international protection to the Palestinian civilians in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

7. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and the mass communications media to continue and enhance their support for the Palestinian people;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to examine the present situation in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, by all means available to him and to submit periodic reports thereon, the first such report as soon as possible.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (February, June and November)

The Security Council convened throughout 1989 to consider the situation in the occupied territories. At the request(9) of the Chairman of the Group of Arab States, the Security Council met on 10, 13, 14 and 17 February.

Meeting numbers. SC 2845-2847, 2849, 2850.

The Palestine Observer's request(10) to participate in the meetings was approved by 11 votes to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (Canada, France, United Kingdom). The United States, which requested the vote, took the position that, under the Council's provisional rules of procedure, rule 39^a was the only legal basis on which the Council might grant a hearing to non-governmental entities. It also pointed out that observers did not have the right to speak in the Council on their own request; a request must be made on the observer's behalf by a Member State. The United States concluded that it believed in listening to all points of view, but not if that required violating the rules.

On 17 February, after debate, the Council voted on a draft resolution (11) submitted by Algeria, Colombia, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal and Yugoslavia. By the text, the Council would have strongly deplored the continuing disregard by Israel of the relevant decisions of the Council and would have called on it to abide by the relevant Council resolutions, as well as to comply with its obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention and to desist forthwith from its policies and practices that were in violation of the provisions of the Convention.

The vote was 14 to 1, as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia.

Against: United States.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

At the request (12) of the Chairman of the Arab Group, the Council held further meetings on the situation in the occupied territories on 6, 7, 8 and 9 June.
Meeting numbers. SC 2863-2867.

Approval of the request by the Palestine Observer(13) to participate was by the same vote as in February, after the United States had restated its negative position on such participation (see above).

On 9 June, the Council voted on a draft resolution(14) put forward by the same seven States that had proposed the February text. By the text, the Council would have strongly deplored Israeli policies and practices which violated Palestinian human rights, as well as vigilante attacks against Palestinian towns and villages and desecration of the Holy Koran; called on Israel to comply with its obligation under the fourth Geneva Convention; demanded that Israel desist forthwith from deporting Palestinian civilians from the occupied territory and ensure the safe and immediate return of those already deported; and expressed great concern over the prolonged closure of schools in parts of the occupied territory and called for their reopening.

The vote was 14 to 1, following the same voting pattern as in February. The draft was rejected

^aRule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

In a statement before the vote, the United States stressed that while the draft contained much with which it could agree, the text was unbalanced in making sweeping condemnations of Israeli policies and practices without reference to any of the serious acts of violence by the other side.

Speaking after the vote, the Permanent Observer of Palestine expressed regret that the Council had not succeeded in bringing to fruition the work that had been undertaken for months and years, but he believed that the debate would contribute to the cause of peace.

At the request⁽¹⁵⁾ of the Chairman of the Arab Group, the Council met again on 6 and 7 November to discuss the situation in the occupied territories.

Meeting numbers. SC 2887-2889.

The request for participation by the Palestine Observer⁽¹⁶⁾ was approved by the same vote as earlier, with the United States reiterating its negative position.

On 7 November, the Council voted on a revised draft resolution⁽¹⁷⁾ proposed by the seven States which had sponsored the two earlier drafts (see above). By the text, the Council would have expressed alarm at the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem; strongly deplored Israeli policies and practices violating the human rights of the Palestinian people, in particular the siege of towns, the ransacking of the homes of inhabitants, as had happened at Beit Sahur, and the confiscation of their property and valuables; reaffirmed once again the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention and called once again on Israel to abide by it; demanded that Israel return confiscated property to its owners; and requested the Secretary-General to conduct on-site monitoring of the current situation and to submit periodic reports.

The vote was 14 to 1 (United States); the draft was rejected owing to the negative vote of a permanent member.

After the vote, the United States said that it was engaged in intensive efforts to help launch an Israeli-Palestinian dialogue; repeated recourse to the Security Council with one-sided draft resolutions did not contribute to that process or to a real reduction of confrontation in the occupied territories. The United States also did not agree with the request that the Secretary-General conduct on-site monitoring since that connoted a permanent, ongoing presence on the ground. However, it did support the Secretary-General's efforts and those of his representatives to visit the occupied territories in order to report periodically on the situation there.

Israel stated that the drastic increase in violence was PLO's direct response to the challenge posed by Israel's peace initiative. The violence was intended to intimidate the local population and ensure the complete domination of PLO terror. Israel rejected the charge that it violated international law by collecting taxes in Beit Sahur and said that the taxes levied in the territories were used solely to finance the provision of services to the Palestinian residents.

In a statement after the vote, the Palestine Observer said it was distressing that a concern expressed so overwhelmingly by the Council had been undermined by a permanent member. It was his understanding that the United States was tying the hands of the Secretary-General, preventing him from pursuing his endeavours. By opposing on-site monitoring, it was trying to cover up what Israel was doing. The position taken by the Palestinians, as expressed by the National Council, was a peace initiative supported by the entire international community in a 1988 General Assembly resolution.

Fourth Geneva Convention

In 1989, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X) again reaffirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, applied to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel. Continuing disregard of that main international instrument in humanitarian law that applied to the occupied territories was reported throughout the year by the Committee on Israeli practices.

Report of Committee on Israeli practices. In the opinion of the Committee,⁽³⁾ the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention continued to be disregarded and violated. In violation of its obligation as a State party to the Convention, Israel, the Committee said, pursued a policy of annexation, which had led to establishing settlements, expropriating property, transferring Israeli citizens to the occupied territories and encouraging or compelling Palestinians to leave their homeland. Deportations from the occupied territories also violated article 49 of the Convention. In violation of article 76, detainees had continued to be held in prisons and detention centres.

The Committee once again stressed that urgent measures had to be taken in order to ensure an effective protection of the basic rights and freedoms of the civilians in the occupied territories and it again called for full application by Israel of the relevant Convention provisions.

Report of Secretary-General. In pursuance of a 1988 General Assembly resolution (18) the Secretary-General reported(19) in September 1989 that he had sent a note verbale to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Israel and that, in its reply of 18 August, Israel had stated that, while reserving its position on the de jure applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention, due to the question of the political status of the areas, Israel's official position was to conform with the provisions of the Convention and implement them on a de facto basis in its administration in those areas. That was not an engagement in semantics, it said, but rather a fundamental principle which was the basis of the policy of the Government of Israel.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1989, the General Assembly, having considered the report of the Committee on Israeli practices and on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 44/48 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling also its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979, 35/122 A of 11 December 1980, 36/147 A of 16 December 1981, 37/88 A of 10 December 1982, 38/79 B of 15 December 1983, 39/95 B of 14 December 1984, 40/161 B of 16 December 1985, 41-63 B of 3 December 1986, 42/160 B of 8 December 1987 and 43/58 B of 6 December 1988,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988 and 28 September 1989,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention,

Noting that Israel and the concerned Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to the Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to the Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns once again the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly demands that Israel acknowledge and comply with the provisions of the Convention in the Palestinian and other Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

4. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Paragraph 1 of the resolution was adopted by the Committee by a recorded vote of 124 to 1, with 2 abstentions, and by the Assembly by 146 to 1, with 1 abstention.

Deportation of Palestinians

The Committee on Israeli practices reported(3) a considerable increase in the number of deportations from the occupied territories, carried out in spite of a wave of protests by the international community, including unanimous resolutions by the Security Council, against such illegal practice. According to the Committee, many witnesses stressed the fact that the intended deportees had not been given the opportunity to see the allegations leading to their expulsion.

The Committee on Palestinian rights also reported⁽¹⁾ in November that deportations had increased; 60 Palestinians had been deported during the year.

Detailed reports of deportations were conveyed to the Secretary-General in letters from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon, the Permanent Observer of Palestine and the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights and in reports of the Committee on Israeli practices. On 3 January, the Lebanese Government reaffirmed its complete rejection of illegal deportations across the international boundaries, since they were an encroachment on Lebanon's sovereignty and a flagrant breach of the inviolability of its borders and of its territorial integrity. During 1988, it reported, expulsions and deportations to Lebanon involved 48 Palestinians.⁽²⁰⁾

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September report,⁽²¹⁾ issued in response to a 1988 Assembly resolution,⁽²²⁾ the Secretary-General stated that on 18 August he had received a reply from the Foreign Minister of Israel to his note verbale of 30 May. Israel stated that its position on that resolution had been set out fully previously. The continuing threat which terrorist activity posed to Israel's security accounted for its measures to ensure the maintenance of public order as contemplated by international law. Expulsion orders against individuals had been issued in the most extreme cases and were subject first to the review of an advisory committee and afterwards to Israel's High Court of Justice, Israel said.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July and August)

At the request of the Arab Group,⁽²³⁾ the Security Council convened on 6 July to consider deportations of Palestinians from the occupied territories.

The Palestine Observer's request⁽²⁴⁾ to participate was approved by 11 votes to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (Canada, France, United Kingdom). The United States reiterated its views concerning the request (see above, under "The Palestinian uprising (intifadah)").

Speaking before the Council, Israel said that while facing continuous and escalating violence, owing to deliberate PLO incitement intended to undermine Israel's peace initiative, it had acted with utmost restraint within the confines of local and international law. It had chosen not to use the death penalty expressly contemplated by the fourth Geneva Convention, but had preferred to exercise less severe measures in conformity with article 63 of the Hague regulations, which permitted the expulsion of individuals who posed an immediate and grave threat to security and public order.

The United States expressed opposition to the practice of deportations as a violation of article 49 of the fourth Geneva Convention and agreed with the call on Israel to desist from further deportations (see resolution below). However, the United States did not believe that raising the issue in the Council at the current time, in the form in which it was being presented, would help reduce tension or restore calm.

The Council adopted resolution 636 (1989).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 607(1988) of 5 January 1988 and 608(1988) of 14 January 1988,

Having been apprised that Israel, the occupying Power, has once again, in defiance of those resolutions, deported eight Palestinian civilians on 29 June 1989,

Expressing grave concern over the situation in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular articles 47 and 49 thereof,

1. Deeply regrets the continuing deportation by Israel, the occupying Power, of Palestinian civilians;

2. Calls upon Israel to ensure the safe and immediate return to the occupied Palestinian territories of those deported and to desist forthwith from deporting any other Palestinian civilians;

3. Reaffirm that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian territories, occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and to the other occupied Arab territories;

4. Decides to keep the situation under review.

Security Council resolution 636(1989)

6 July 1989 Meeting 2870 14-0-1

7-nation draft (S/20710).

Sponsors: Algeria, Colombia, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal, Yugoslavia.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Ethiopia, Finland.

France, Malaysia, Nepal, Senegal, USSR, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States.

At the request⁽²⁵⁾ of the Chairman of the Arab Group, the Security Council again took up the question of deportations on 30 August.

The Palestine Observer's request⁽²⁶⁾ to participate was approved by the same vote as in July and the United States again made a statement concerning the request (see above).

Israel stated that the drastic increase in violence in recent months was intended to intimidate the local population and ensure PLO domination. It regarded expulsions as the most severe measure, which was taken only after careful consideration and upon the conclusion that all other means had failed in curbing the violence and preventing grave risks to public safety.

The United States reiterated its position, opposing the deportations in principle, but did not believe that resort to the Council would help address the underlying problems of finding peace or facilitate negotiations between the parties.

The Council adopted resolution 641(1989).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608 (1988) of 14 January 1988 and 636(1989) of 6 July 1989,

Having been apprised that Israel, the occupying Power, has once again, in defiance of those resolutions, deported five Palestinian civilians on 27 August 1989,

Expressing grave concern over the situation in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and in particular articles 47 and 49 thereof,

1. Deplores the continuing deportation by Israel, the occupying Power, of Palestinian civilians;

2. Calls upon Israel to ensure the safe and immediate return to the occupied Palestinian territories of those deported and to desist forthwith from deporting any other Palestinian civilians;

3. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian territories, occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and to the other occupied Arab territories;

4. Decides to keep the situation under review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 44/48 E by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989 and 641(1989) of 30 August 1989,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988 and 28 September 1989,

Alarmed by the continuing deportation of Palestinians from the occupied Palestinian territory by the Israeli authorities,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in particular article 1 and the first paragraph of article 49, which read as follows:

“Article 1

“The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances.”

“Article 49

“Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive ...”,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Strongly deplores the continuing disregard by Israel, the occupying Power, of the relevant decisions of the Security Council and resolutions of the General Assembly;

2. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli authorities in deporting Palestinians and that it facilitate their immediate return;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease forthwith the deportation of Palestinians and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Palestinian detainees

The Committee on Israeli practices reported(3) in October that the administration of justice in the occupied territories had deteriorated considerably. The “quick justice” had continued to characterize court procedures, provoking many protests from lawyers and human rights activists. The situation of detainees, as a consequence of the arrests of many Palestinians since the outbreak of the uprising, had also further deteriorated. The great increase in the number of detainees led the Israeli authorities to convert governmental buildings and even schools into temporary detention centres and use army detention centres for civilians. Detainees were denied humane prison conditions and endured serious physical and psychological hardship.

The Committee heard several witnesses who presented extensive accounts of conditions in detention. Most testimonies denounced the various forms of ill-treatment, such as torture and violence, intimidation, solitary confinement, overcrowding of cells, lack of sanitary facilities, inadequate nutrition, and the denial of the right to receive visits and of access to lawyers. Very harsh conditions were endured by prisoners in the Ansar 3 (Ketziot) detention camp in the Negev desert inside Israel, where detainees were reported to have been shot. Conditions of detention often gave rise to hunger strikes, which sometimes led to the death of hunger strikers seeking to ameliorate their treatment.

Report of the Secretary-General. In compliance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(27) the Secretary-General reported(28) in September 1989 that, in reply to his note verbale to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Israel, he received on 18 August a response in which Israel rejected the resolution in question. It also stated that, in view of the resolution's unconcealed bias, it must be noted that detention and imprisonment in Judea, Samaria and Gaza were legal measures taken against terrorism and violence. It was Israel's duty under international law to maintain public order and security in those areas, a duty carried out with the utmost regard for the protection of human rights in keeping with the provisions of the Geneva Conventions. Israel stated that due process of law was guaranteed also by allowing detainees and prisoners to petition Israel's High Court of Justice. Representatives of ICRC were authorized regularly to visit prisons and detention centres where they could interview in complete privacy any prisoner or detainee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/48 D by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,
Recalling Security Council resolution 605(1987) of 22 December 1987,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/79 A of 15 December 1983, 39/95 A of 14 December 1984, 40/161 A of 16 December 1985, 41/63 A of 3 December 1986, 42/160 A of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 D of 6 December 1988 and 44/2 of 6 October 1989,

Taking note of the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 28 September 1989 and 20 October 1989,

1. Deplores the arbitrary detention or imprisonment by Israel of thousands of Palestinians as a result of their resistance against occupation in order to attain self-determination;

2. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to release all Palestinians and other Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israeli settlements

The Committee on Israeli practices reported in July(4) and October(3) that Israel had continued in 1989 to annex Palestinian territory and establish settlements. In March, Jewish residents of the West Bank established a new settlement 8 kilometres north-west of Ramallah. In April, an inauguration ceremony was held for the new settlement of Tzufim, east of Kalkilya. Two new settlements were established in May-Tzoref, in the Etzion bloc, and Ofarim, south of Beit-Arye, in the Binyamin district. The Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics reported on 7 August that some 6,000 people had settled in the territories over the past year.

According to the Committee, acts of violence and aggression by Israeli settlers against the Palestinian population had increased during the year, in both scope and gravity. Ha'aretz and the Jerusalem Post reported on 31 May that a group of 30 settlers had raided on 29 May the village of Kifl

Harith, where they reportedly carried out a methodical and prolonged rampage, involving arson and vandalism, and shot a 13-year-old girl. The same newspapers reported on 18 April that settlers created vigilante intervention forces.

The Committee also reported cases of settlers' retaliatory actions against the Arab population. On 9 February, following the death of a settler, a group of Jewish settlers raided the village of Haris. On 22 May, hundreds of settlers from Maaleh Adumim carried out a retaliation action in nearby Eizariya after a settler family's car was stoned and its four passengers injured. The settlers set fire to a truck and overturned two others, smashed windows of cars and homes and fired in the air.

The Committee on Palestinian rights in November (1) condemned the unchecked violence of settlers. It also stressed that there had been a dramatic increase in the number of house demolitions in 1989. At least 236 Palestinian homes were destroyed for "security" reasons between December 1987 and August 1989, while another 675 buildings were destroyed on the pretext that they had been built illegally.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September, the Secretary-General reported⁽²⁹⁾ that, in accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution,⁽³⁰⁾ he had sent a note verbale to Israel requesting information on steps it had taken or envisaged taking in implementation of the relevant provisions of that resolution. On 18 August, Israel stated that its position had been set out previously.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/48 C by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979, 35/122 B of 11 December 1980, 36/147 B of 16 December 1981, 37/88 B of 10 December 1982, 38/79 C of 15 December 1983, 39/95 C of 14 December 1984, 40/161 C of 16 December 1985, 41/63 C of 3 December 1986, 42/160 C of 8 December 1987 and 43/58 C of 6 December 1988,

Expressing anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988 and 28 September 1989,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstacle to the efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Golan Heights

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. The October 1989 report(3) of the Committee on Israeli practices contained information on the situation in the occupied Syrian Golan, submitted by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic. Israel was accused of imposing its laws, administration, religion and collective economic punishment by closing the market for apple production, a main source of local income.

On the basis of some newspaper reports, the Committee cited several cases of arrests of Arabs for participating in demonstrations, distributing anti-Israel leaflets and burning an Israeli flag. In May, Israeli police were said to have used rubber bullets and tear-gas to disperse hundreds of demonstrators in Mas'ada. Over 40 villagers were detained.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1988 resolution of the General Assembly(31) calling on Member States not to recognize Israel's imposition of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, the Secretary-General reported(32) in October that five States had expressed support for the provisions of that resolution. Israel's position remained as first expressed in 1981,(33) namely, that it could not be expected to maintain indefinitely a military administration merely to accommodate the Syrian Arab Republic's interest in persistent conflict and that its legislation did not diminish the local population's rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/40 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 November 1989,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 A of 16 December 1982, 38/180 A of 19 December 1983, 39/146 B of 14 December 1984, 40/168 B of 16 December 1985, 41/162 B of 4 December 1986, 42/209 C of 11 December 1987 and 43/54 B of 6 December 1988,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting also that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/1, 37/123 A, 38/180 A, 39/146 B, 40/168 B, 41/162 B, 42/209 C and 43/54 B;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and of the other occupied Arab territories to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Arab Golan are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan since 1967 and its annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplores the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplores any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages it to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls once more upon all Member States to apply the following measures:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

To sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with Israel;

14. Reiterates its call to all Member States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields;

15. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

16. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/48 F by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983, 39/95 F of 14 December 1984, 40/161 F of 16 December 1985, 41/63 F of 3 December 1986, 42/160 F of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 F of 6 December 1988 and 44/2 of 6 October 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 20 October 1989,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan was null and void without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan are null and void and constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts to impose forcibly Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognise any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Measures regarding educational institutions

Report of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its November report,(1) the Committee on Palestinian rights expressed concern over the intensification during the second year of the uprising of violations of the Palestinians' right to education. According to the Committee, measures taken by Israel included the complete closure of universities and long-term and repeated closure of schools, prohibition of home study and compensation classes in alternative locations, the use of schools as military outposts, destruction of school property, and military raids on schools and alternative classes.

Arrests, deportations and administrative detention were used against faculty, administrators and students. The Committee noted with great concern the assessment by educators that the imposition of those measures penalized current and future generations of Palestinians and would create serious dysfunctions in the educational system which would be extremely difficult to compensate at a later stage. The Committee also welcomed the partial opening of schools as a result of international pressure.

Report of the Committee on Israeli practices. The Committee on Israeli practices also reported on freedom of education for Palestinians in the occupied territories. In its October report,(3) it concluded that freedom of education had been seriously hampered by the prolonged closure of educational institutions, including all universities, schools and even kindergartens. The efforts by the Palestinians to provide children with some kind of "popular teaching" in order to compensate for the lack of public education were also jeopardized by the Israeli authorities.

According to a number of testimonies obtained by the Committee, teachers and students experienced various forms of harassment, including detention, raiding of schools, deportation or expulsion.

The Committee reported that on 12 July the Israeli Defence Minister and the army Chief of Staff had ordered the beginning of preparations to reopen schools in the West Bank, which had been closed since the beginning of the uprising. On 22 July, some 183,000 elementary school pupils and 10,700 pre-matriculation class students returned to school, while universities and several colleges remained closed. In August, after a six-month closure, some 69,000 junior high school pupils returned to classes at 324 schools in the West Bank.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September, the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly(34) that no reply had been received from Israel to his 30 May request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged taking in implementation of a 1988 Assembly demand(35) that it rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain from hindering the effective operation of universities, schools and other educational institutions.

However, in a letter of 17 July(36) to the Secretary-General, Israel stated that since 1967 it had contributed to the development of the educational system of the occupied territories. The number of pupils, teachers and classrooms had more than doubled. Many new institutes of learning were established with the assistance of the Israeli authorities, including live universities. However, since December 1987, the schools had frequently been exploited as centres for organizing and launching violent activity. Israel said it had had no choice, therefore, but to close the schools in Judea and Samaria, while in the Gaza District, where the schools had not succumbed to the violence, they remained open. Israel also informed about its decision to gradually reopen schools in Judea and Samaria.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/48 G by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned at the continued and intensified harassment by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Recalling Security Council resolution 605(1987) of 22 December 1987,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/79 G of 15 December 1983, 39/95 G of 14 December 1984, 40/161 G of 16 December 1985, 41/63 G of 3 December 1986, 42/160 G of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 G of 6 December 1988 and 44/2 of 6 October 1989,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988 and 28 September 1989,

Taking note also of the relevant decisions adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization concerning the educational and cultural situation in the occupied Palestinian territory,

1. Reaffirms the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory, especially the opening of fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Also condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities, schools and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory, in large numbers and for prolonged periods, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in flagrant contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities, schools and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and social conditions of Palestinians

According to a report of the UNCTAD secretariat,⁽³⁷⁾ the first two decades of Israeli occupation of the Palestinian territory had been characterized by drastic changes in the structure and performance of the Palestinian economy. There had been a decline in the share of agriculture, industrial stagnation, chronic trade and payments deficits, growing unemployment and massive labour migration, and financial disarray and insecurity. Since the beginning of the uprising in 1987, the Palestinians had activated a new and independent economic policy aimed at boosting self-reliance in agricultural and industrial production, investment and marketing, restructuring the domestic productive base and disengaging from dependence on the Israeli economy.

In response, the Israeli authorities introduced some measures in order to contain Palestinian initiatives. They included demolition of houses, expropriation of land and increase in Israeli settlements, uprooting of orchards, destruction of crops, bans on fishing off the Gaza coast, restriction on the movement of Palestinian workers, and increased administrative control over Palestinian domestic trade and exports. All those measures had increased the already severe pressure on the Palestinian economy. As a result, Palestinian economic performance in 1989 maintained its downward trend.

Per capita gross national product in the occupied territory was estimated at no more than $1,300, or 25 per cent below the level in 1987. At the same time, the cost-of-living index rose by over 20 per cent. There appeared alarming signs of growing poverty in remote areas.

The international response to the growing crisis in the Palestinian economy considerably supported the population in the occupied territory. Contributions from some Arab States and regional organizations for emergency relief, provision of transit facilities and direct access to regional markets helped to ease the crisis. The United Nations and a number of its specialized agencies had intensified their assistance to the Palestinian people.

In accordance with a 1987 General Assembly resolution,(38) the Secretary-General entrusted the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) with the preparation of an in-depth study on future infrastructure needs of the Palestinians in the occupied territory. In October 1989, Habitat submitted its first study(39) focusing on transport infrastructure. It was stated that the transportation sector in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, like other economic sectors, was unable to develop to a level that would have enabled it to provide effective transport services for those regions. At the same time, Israel had developed a transportation network aimed at enhancing Jewish settlement activities by providing relatively higher quality roads to link settlements with each other and with the metropolitan Israeli road network. That situation hindered the evolution of a national Palestinian transportation system, the report stated.

Report of the Committee on Palestinian rights. In its November report,(1) the Committee on Palestinian rights condemned administrative, economic and other measures taken by Israel to control all aspects of Palestinian life and to prevent the development of autonomous socio-economic structures. The Committee stressed that Israeli policies had resulted in a lack of basic sanitary infrastructure and health services and led to a substantial deterioration in the standard of living of the Palestinians in general.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/174 by recorded vote.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, and the relevant recommendations for national action adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,

Recalling also its resolution 42/190 of 11 December 1987,

Taking into account the intifadah of the Palestinian people against the Israeli occupation, including its economic and social policies and practices,

Gravely alarmed by the continuation of the Israeli settlement policies in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, which have been declared null and void and a major obstacle to peace,

Taking into account the need of the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for extra funds to prepare the comprehensive study on the economy of the occupied Palestinian territory requested by the Trade and Development Board in its resolution 239(XXIII) of 9 October 1981,

1. Takes note of the study annexed to the note by the Secretary-General concerning the infrastructure needs of the Palestinian people;

2. Culls for the immediate cessation of the Israeli practices against the Palestinian people, particularly in the economic and social fields;

3. Expresses its alarm at the deterioration, as a result of the Israeli occupation, in the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, occupied since 1967;

4. Affirms that the Israeli occupation is contradictory to the basic requirements for the social and economic development of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory;

5. Rejects the Israeli plans and actions intended to change the demographic composition of the occupied Palestinian territory, in particular the increase and expansion of the Israeli settlements;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development from the United Nations regular budget the extra funds needed to prepare the comprehensive study on the economy of the occupied Palestinian territory;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Finance and trade

In response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council resolution, (40) the Secretary-General submitted a survey by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia on the Israeli financial and trade practices in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, (41) which was subject to the same discriminatory financial policy and practices as the occupied Palestinian territory. After the occupation, the only local bank was forced to close and Syrian currency was replaced by that of Israel. Existing Israeli banks, which did not offer a full range of services, mostly facilitated trade between the inhabitants of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory. Their credit policies hampered the emergence of a strong local production base. The informal monetary sector in Syrian villages was much less developed than in the occupied Palestinian territory. There was no access to external funding sources and, in contrast to the occupied Palestinian territory, no foreign agencies or NGOs were operating there.

The survey stressed that internal trade had flourished as a result of a marked rise in per capita income and a conversion to a market-oriented economy. External trade, especially export of agricultural products (mostly apples) to Israel, was under strict Israeli control. Since the occupation, there had been no trade relations between the Syrian Arab Republic and the occupied Syrian Arab Golan.

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1988 Economic and Social Council resolution, (40) requesting the Secretary-General to speed up preparation of a report on the trade practices of the Israeli authorities in the occupied Palestinian territories, the Secretary-General submitted in May 1989(42) the main findings and recommendations of an UNCTAD in-depth study on the external trade of the territories, carried out in 1988.(43) The study examined the role of trade and services in promoting Palestinian economic development; the performance of the external trade sector; major factors affecting the external trade of the territories, including policies, practices and structural limitations; the potentials for expansion and diversification of external trade in the territories; and requisite policies and measures for the long-term development of the Palestinian external trade sector.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1989, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/86 by roll-call vote.

Israeli economic practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly decision 40/432 of 17 December 1985, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/65 of 28 July 1988 and General Assembly decision 43/430 of 20 December 1988,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on Israeli trade practices in the occupied Palestinian territories and on Israeli financial and trade practices in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan,

Taking into account the fact that land and water are basic national resources in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories,

1. Takes note with concern of the reports of the Secretary-General on Israeli trade practices in the occupied Palestinian territories and on Israeli financial and trade practices in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, prepared in pursuance of General Assembly decisions 40/432 and 43/430 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/65;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on Israeli land and water policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories and to submit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Palestinian women

In response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council resolution, (44) the Secretary-General submitted in February 1989 to the Commission on the Status of Women a report on the situation of Palestinian women.(45) Following consideration of the report, the Council on 24 May adopted resolution 1989/34 condemning the continuation of the "iron-fist" policy practised by Israel against Palestinian women and their families in the occupied territories and requesting the Commission to monitor implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women(46) concerning assistance to Palestinian women and children inside and outside the occupied territories. The Council reaffirmed that Palestinian women, as an integral part of a nation whose people were prevented from exercising their basic human and political rights, could not fully participate in the attainment of the objectives of equality, development and peace without the realization of their inalienable rights to return to their homes, to self-determination and to establish an independent State. The Secretary-General was requested to send a mission composed of experts on the status of women to investigate the condition of Palestinian women and children, in the light of the drastic deteriorating situation in the territories.

Palestine refugees

The year 1989 marked the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA),⁽¹⁾ anniversary which the UNRWA Commissioner-General said provided a stark reminder to the international community of the failure to resolve one of the most unsettling political and humanitarian issues.⁽²⁾

More than 2.3 million refugees were registered with UNRWA as at 30 June 1989 in five areas of the Middle East: in and outside camps in the Israeli-occupied West Bank (398,391) and Gaza Strip (469,385); Jordan (899,811); Lebanon (294,272); and the Syrian Arab Republic (272,778). Overall, about a third of the total were in 61 camps. An estimated further 52,000 persons, not registered refugees, also lived in camps, about 37,000 being people displaced as a result of the 1967 hostilities.

In 1989, the General Assembly addressed the work of UNRWA and the situation of Palestine refugees in 11 resolutions, dealing with: assistance to Palestine refugees (44/47 A) and displaced persons (44/47 C); the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA (44/47 B); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (44/47 D); a proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees (44/47 J); Palestine refugees in Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 (44/47 E); resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees (44/47 F); refugee protection (44/47 I); revenues from refugee properties (44/47 H); return of population and refugees displaced since 1967 (44/47 G); and protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions and safeguarding UNRWA facilities in the occupied territories (44/47 K).

Work of UNRWA

As at 30 June 1989,⁽²⁾ Palestine refugees numbering 2,334,637 were registered with UNRWA in its live areas of operation. The Agency was providing educational, health and relief services, as well as undertaking emergency measures in response to the intifadah and continuing upheavals in Lebanon, where major clashes had erupted again beginning in February 1989. The UNRWA Commissioner-General reported on the A Agency's work-from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,⁽²⁾ and from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990.⁽³⁾ He stated that with the continuing Palestinian uprising in the occupied territories, while contacts and co-operation at the higher official levels remained normal, there was heightened tension on the ground. Agency premises were violated and used as observation posts and interrogation or detention centres. There was deliberate large-scale destruction of Agency property and increased interference with the freedom of movement of staff. Local staff were arrested and detained without charge and many complained of maltreatment by the authorities, while physical harassment, and even detention, of international staff during the performance of official duties increased. In Lebanon, it was remarkable that services to Palestine refugees had continued in spite of the chaotic situation and dangers involved.

UNRWA's educational programme included nine grades of general education, vocational and technical training, in-service teacher training and some higher education for Palestine refugees. The curricula followed those prescribed in the respective host countries. During the 1988/89 academic year, 351,100 refugee children were enrolled through six years of elementary education and three years of secondary education in 628 elementary and preparatory schools. However, 90 of 98 schools in the West Bank, with a pupil population of more than 39,000, had been closed by Israeli military order, disrupting and shortening the school year, until permitted to reopen in July. Pupils witnessed scenes of violence, a pervasive presence of security forces, intrusion of soldiers into school compounds and classrooms, involving at times the firing of ammunition, rubber bullets and tear-gas, and detention of students and teachers.

During the 1988/89 academic year, UNRWA provided places for 4,100 vocational trainees and 850 teacher trainees in eight training centres, but those places were reduced to 3,160 and 300, respectively, owing to the closure of the three centres in the West Bank by order of Israeli authorities. Total expenditure for education in 1989 was $108.8 million.

The UNRWA health programme was community-based, with 100 centres providing sanitation services, curative and preventive medical services and maternal and child health services. Events in the occupied territories created a high demand for emergency and casualty care, reflected in health programme expenditures of $45.7 million, as against $38.4 million in 1988.

Under the relief services programme, the major goal was assistance to destitute refugee families. The special hardship case programme, providing food, blankets, clothing and shelter, in 1989 serviced 146,800 beneficiaries from more than 33,000 families. Special hardship cases comprised families with no males between the ages of 18 and 55 in the household, or with one medically incapable of earning a living. The cost in 1989 of the relief services programme was $23.1 million.

Lebanon. UNRWA work was affected by widespread and serious hostilities in east and west Beirut, beginning in February 1989, and by parallel random violence, kidnapping and strikes throughout the country. There was consequent displacement of several thousand Palestinians and the killing of at least 40 registered refugees during 1989. Nevertheless, refugee camps were not generally physically affected. However, in April, shelling of west Beirut caused heavy damage to offices and vehicles at the Agency's central warehouse compound, and essential field staff and operations were moved from Beirut to Saida. Given the prevailing circumstances, UNRWA continued to extend emergency assistance, as well as most of its regular programmes, including education, to the entire Palestinian community, not merely to registered refugees, and to participate actively with other United Nations agencies in providing assistance to the Lebanese population in general.

West Bank and Gaza Strip. The intifadah and the Israeli response thereto continued to affect virtually all UNRWA operations. Between 1 July 1988 and 30 June 1989, 107 Palestinian refugees were killed in Gaza and 196 in the West Bank. It was reported that since the beginning of the intifadah more than 30,000 Palestinians had sought medical attention for injuries, and that the Agency's health services were stretched to the limit. Individuals were arrested or detained without charge or trial in substantial numbers, it was reported, and there had been indiscriminate beatings and curfews severely affecting the mobility of people and their capacity to work. While schools had reopened in July 1989, selective closure orders, as well as strikes, continued severely to disrupt school life. Palestinians in the occupied territories continued to be a major concern of the Agency. Schools were again closed in November 1989 on the West Bank.

Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. The deterioration of the Jordanian and Syrian economies caused difficulties for refugees, with the price of basic commodities rising. At the same time, economic retrenchment in the Persian Gulf States meant fewer opportunities for employment. Palestinians returned in increasing numbers to their families, with resulting loss of income. Growing demands on UNRWA health and welfare services were related to those economic hardships. In early December, demonstrations to support the intifadah took place in some refugee camps in Jordan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 A by recorded vote.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/57 A of 6 December 1988 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the Agency should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1990;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-

General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the Agency is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

8. Decides to extend the mandate of the Agency until 30 June 1993, without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III).

UNRWA financing

Agency income for its General Fund and ongoing activities amounted to $210.9 million in 1989.(3) To maintain regular programmes at planned levels, UNRWA spent $201.8 million. That fully expended its net income, after reallocating $7.7 million to partially fund emergency-related programmes in Lebanon and the occupied territory, and $1.4 million to project funds, mainly for urgent school construction in Jordan. Thus, the UNRWA working capital reserve-$28.9 million-was not increased in 1989.

According to financial report and statements for the year ended 31 December 1989,(4) the UNRWA 1989 expenditures amounted to $265 million, of which $222.2 million was for the General Fund. Project funds were $20.4 million for ongoing activities and $5.9 million for capital and special projects, leaving $228.1 million for the regular budget.

Extraordinary emergency expenditures included the Lebanon Emergency Fund of $10.9 million. The Extraordinary Measures in the Occupied Territories Fund had a budget of $23.5 million, used to alleviate the hardship of the Palestine refugees owing to civil unrest. Another fund-the Expanded Programme of Assistance-was used to improve the infrastructure in terms of better housing and new or expanded sewage systems, and to provide UNRWA with better facilities to run its education, health and relief programmes in the territories. Some $2.5 million was expended on that programme in 1989.

On 19 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 44/183, accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNRWA for the year ended 31 December 1988,(5) together with the report of the Board of Auditors, and requested the Commissioner-General to report in 1990 on steps taken to implement the Board's recommendations.

Working Group on UNRWA financing

In a report(6) on its meetings of 11 September and 10 October 1989, the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA stated that, at the beginning of 1989, it had been apparent that the fall in the value of one of the major local currencies would significantly reduce the dollar cost of budgeted expenditure. The Commissioner-General therefore had taken the decision to reduce the 1989 budget by $6 million, from $233 million to $227 million. The salaries of the area staff, however, had to be increased in several fields of operation to compensate the staff for the loss of purchasing power, thereby reducing the dollar value of exchange-rate savings.

Although it appeared that UNRWA would be able to meet its expenses for the remainder of 1989, there was cause for serious concern for 1990-an increase of 5 per cent in budgeted expenditure for the regular programme was anticipated. That figure had been used for planning purposes and in discussions with donors as the minimum increase in contributions needed to meet Agency requirements for its regular programme in 1990. In addition, funding would be required to maintain emergency-related programmes in Lebanon, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. At the end of 1989, the balances remaining in those funds could be quite small and, at the most, would last only a month or so. If the programmes were to be maintained at 1989 levels, contributions of between $25 million and $30 million would be required over and above the increased contributions that would be needed to finance the regular programme.

The Working Group was pleased to note that UNRWA had received sufficient funding to deliver the essential parts of its regular and emergency-related programmes in 1988 and expected to do so again in 1989. It expressed its appreciation to donors, especially to those which had increased their contributions, for making those results possible. It noted, however, that in both years the construction budget had been underfunded and that much-needed construction work would therefore have to be postponed again.

The Working Group shared the Commissioner-General's concern about the financial outlook for 1990. In that connection, it noted that the favourable financial outcome in 1988, as well as the satisfactory projection for 1989, was attributable not so much to increased contributions as to reductions in costs owing to favourable movements in exchange rates against the dollar. As the Working Group had pointed out earlier, exchange-rate fluctuations could easily reverse their current trends and unfavourably affect the Agency's finances. It was therefore necessary to continue to stimulate higher contributions not only from traditional donors, but perhaps more importantly from new ones. The Working Group commended the Agency for its efforts in those directions and the Commissioner-General for his efforts, including a rigorous schedule of personal fund-raising visits, to attract an increased level of contributions. It noted that the Commissioner-General continued to envisage an annual growth of 5 per cent in expenditures in order to maintain the regular programme at its current level.

The Working Group was particularly concerned about future funding for the emergency-related programmes, which were in operation in three of its five fields.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 B without vote.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2964(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3090(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3330(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 D (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 C of 23 November 1976, 32/90 D of 13 December 1977, 33/112 D of 18 December 1978, 34/52 D of 23 November 1979, 35/13 D of 3 November 1980, 36/145 E of 16 December 1981, 37/120 A of 16 December 1982, 38/83 B of 15 December 1983, 39/99 B of 14 December 1984, 40/165 B of 16 December 1985, 41/69 B of 3 December 1986, 42/69 B of 2 December 1987 and 43/57 B of 6 December 1988,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, whereby it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and adopted the recommendations contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,

Deeply concerned at the critical financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of the necessary Agency services to the Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Protection of Palestinian students and UNRWA staff and premises

During the 1988/89 reporting period, there was a substantial increase in the number of staff arrested and detained without charge or trial in the occupied territory as compared with previous years. Israeli occupation authorities also deported a staff member from the Gaza Strip. In Lebanon, however, the total number of staff kidnapped or detained decreased.

Since UNRWA remained unable to obtain adequate, timely information on the reasons for the arrests and detentions, it was unable to ascertain whether the staff members' official functions had been involved or whether their rights and duties flowing from the Charter, the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations(7) and UNRWA Staff Regulations and Rules had been duly respected.

The treatment of staff in detention continued to be cause for concern, with many staff members complaining of beatings and other forms of brutality. The Commissioner-General said that in addition Agency staff, including international staff, had been subjected to physical abuse and, at times, undisciplined behaviour by Israeli soldiers in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Difficulties continued regarding movement of staff into and out of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, with entry permits sometimes refused. Only a small proportion of staff were issued curfew permits. As a result Agency operations were impeded.

According to the Commissioner-General, between September 1988 and June 1989 two students were killed inside Agency schools, 376 were injured by live rounds and rubber bullets and 76 were detained, while outside the schools 11 were killed, 3,655 injured and 657 detained.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 K by recorded vote.

Protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions and safeguarding of the security of the facilities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in the occupied Palestinian territory
The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 605(1987) of 22 December 1987,

Recalling its resolutions 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/57 I of 6 December 1988 and 44/2 of 6 October 1989,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, submitted in accordance with Security Council resolution 605(1987),

Having considered the statement of the Secretary-General of 19 October 1989 on the incidents in which Israeli soldiers broke into the premises of installations of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,

Taking note, in particular, of paragraph 104 of that report, in which it is stated that, in the occupied Gaza Strip "between September 1988 and June 1989, two students were killed inside Agency schools, 376 were injured by live rounds and rubber bullets and 76 were detained. Outside the schools, 11 were killed, 3,655 injured and 657 detained",

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Condemns the repeated Israeli raids on the premises and installations of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, and calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to refrain from such raids;

2. Also condemns, in particular, Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory, especially the opening of fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Deplores the policy and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which have led to the prolonged closure of educational institutions, a large number of which are operated by the Agency, and the repeated disruption of medical services;

4. Culls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to open immediately all closed educational institutions and to refrain from closing them thereafter;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Compensation claims

In 1989, UNRWA reported that no progress had been made with regard to claims against the Governments of: Israel (for loss of and damage to UNRWA property during the 1967 hostilities, Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982 and its military action before then); Jordan (arising from the 1967 hostilities and the disturbances in 1970 and 1971); and the Syrian Arab Republic (relating mainly to the levy of certain taxes from which UNRWA believed it was exempt under existing agreements). Those claims had been reported in 1986.(8)

In resolution 44/47 I, the General Assembly called anew on Israel to compensate UNRWA for damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion.

Israel had informed UNRWA in July 1988(9) that, because of temporary budgetary constraints, it was withholding payment of clearance, warehousing and transport charges payable to the Agency under the 1967 provisional agreement concerning assistance to Palestine refugees. Israel had not reverted to payments in 1989, which stood at more than $3 million.(3)

Other aspects

Humanitarian assistance to displaced and other persons

During 1989, in addition to providing relief in the form of basic food commodities, blankets, clothing, shelter repair and cash grants, UNRWA continued to provide a small measure of humanitarian assistance to persons who had been displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities, but who were not registered with UNRWA as refugees.

The Agency remained concerned about the future of the Palestine refugees who had been stranded at Canada Camp on the Egyptian side of the international border, at Rafah, when Israel withdrew from the Sinai in April 1982. Under an agreement between Israel and Egypt, they were to return to the Gaza Strip where they would be reunited with their families. In August 1989, a group of 20 families were accommodated at Rafah, Gaza, and UNRWA was assisting them with rations for a six-month initial period. The agreement between the Israeli and Egyptian authorities for the other families, who numbered over 800, was that they should return to the Tel el-Sultan housing project in a phased transfer. The compensation provided by the Egyptian Government to each family for the housing they would leave behind was, however, a fraction of the cost of a simple house of sufficient size to accommodate the household, and few families were able to accumulate savings with which to supplement the compensation. By the end of 1989, only a small number of heads of family had begun to build their new homes, which had to be completed before families were permitted to return. Consequently, plans were postponed under which UNDP was to have constructed a centre in Tel el-Sultan to provide shops and workshops for the returnees to rent. Meanwhile, UNRWA continued to provide food rations to some 4,000 refugees in Canada Camp who were mostly unemployed- and living in poverty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, adopted resolution 44/47 C without vote.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/57 C of 6 December 1988 and all its previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 43/57 C and all its previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Repatriation of refugees

In September 1989, the Secretary-General reported(10) on compliance with the General Assembly's 1988 call(11) on Israel to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced persons to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and to desist from measures obstructing their return. By a note verbale of 28 June, Israel stated that its position had been detailed fully in successive replies to the Secretary-General in previous years, most recently in 1988.(12) It continued to make every effort to review individual cases of resettlement, based on their merits, and, as a result, some 75,600 persons had returned to the administered territories.

UNRWA had not been involved in arrangements for the return of either refugees or displaced persons who were not registered. Agency information was based on requests made by returning registered refugees who wanted a transfer of their benefit entitlements and correction of their records; thus it would not necessarily be aware of the return of any registered refugees who had not requested services. As far as was known to UNRWA, between 1 July 1988 and 30 June 1989, 172 registered refugees had returned to the West Bank and 21 to the Gaza Strip. The number of displaced registered refugees who were known to UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 was about 11,500. Those records, however, might be incomplete, it was reported.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 G by recorded vote.

Return of population and refugees displaced since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237/(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2452 A (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 B (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 D (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 E (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C and D (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 D of 23 November 1976, 32/90 E of 13 December 1977, 33/112 F of 18 December 1978, 34/52 E of 23 November 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/13 E of 3 November 1980, 36/146 B of 16 December 1981, 37/120 G of 16 December 1982, 38/83 G of 15 December 1983, 39/99 G of 14 December 1984, 40/165 G of 16 December 1985, 41/69 G of 3 December 1986, 42/69 G of 2 December 1987 and 43/57 G of 6 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989, and the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right to return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and is inadmissible;

2. Considers any and all agreements embodying any restriction on, or condition for, the return of the displaced inhabitants as null and void;

3. Strongly deplores the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

4. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants;

(b) To desist from all measures that obstruct the return of the displaced inhabitants, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-fifth session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 4 above.

Food aid

The Secretary-General reported(13) in September 1989, pursuant to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(14) that UNRWA had continued to distribute rations to the most needy sector of the refugee population, known as special hardship cases; those cases numbered 137,963 in December 1988. In Lebanon, a one-time emergency distribution of food was made in 1988 to some 220,000 refugees and, in the West Bank, approximately 680,000 food packages were distributed. Food commodities were also distributed on three occasions to refugee families through some 90,000 schoolchildren in the Gaza Strip. Food would continue to be distributed, as long as the emergency need remained and supplies were available. However, owing to continuing financial constraints and lack of donations, it had not been possible to resume the general ration distribution to all refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 F by recorded vote.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 37/120 F of 16 December 1982, 38/83 F of 15 December 1983, 39/99 F of 14 December 1984, 40/165 F of 16 December 1985, 41/69 F of 3 December 1986, 42/69 F of 2 December 1987, 43/57 F of 6 December 1988 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989, and the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned at the interruption by the Agency, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields,

1. Regrets that its resolutions 37/120 F, 38/83 F, 39/99 F, 40/165 F, 41/69 F 42/69 F and 43/57 F have not been implemented;

2. Calls once again upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to 10 Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Education and training services

Schools and teacher training

The UNWRA education programme continued to provide nine grades of general education, vocational and technical training, pre-service and in-service teacher training and scholarships for higher education for Palestine refugees. The programme operated with technical assistance from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

In 1989, expenditures for the education programme amounted to $108.8 million: $32.8 million in Jordan; $30.7 million in the Gaza Strip; $17.5 million in the Syrian Arab Republic; $16.6 million in the West Bank; $8.8 million in Lebanon; and $2.4 million at UNRWA headquarters in Vienna.

As at 15 October, 357,706 pupils, some 6,570 more than the previous year, were enrolled in UNRWA schools, as follows: 133,808 in Jordan; 95,597, Gaza Strip; 55,546, Syrian Arab Republic; 39,456, West Bank; and 33,299, Lebanon. In addition, 115,300 refugee pupils attended government and private schools.

During the 1988/89 academic year, UNRWA provided places for 4,108 vocational trainees and 850 teacher trainees at eight centres.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

In August, the Secretary-General submitted a report,⁽¹⁵⁾ as requested by the General Assembly in 1988,⁽¹⁶⁾ on the establishment of a university for Palestine refugees in Jerusalem. The proposed "Al-Quds" University, first considered by the Assembly in 1980,⁽¹⁷⁾ had since been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General with regard to measures taken towards its establishment, including a functional feasibility study. The Secretary-General was assisted by the Rector of the United Nations University, who provided a highly qualified expert.

On 15 May 1989, the Secretary-General requested Israel to facilitate the expert's visit. On 6 July, Israel replied that its position remained unchanged; it had consistently voted against the resolution calling for the establishment of the University, whose sponsors, it said, sought to exploit higher education in order to politicize issues totally extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Therefore, Israel was unable to assist in taking the matter further.

The Secretary-General reported that, in view of Israel's position, the feasibility study could not be completed as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 J by recorded vote.

University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 G of 16 December 1981, 37/120 C of 16 December 1982, 38/83 K of 15 December 1983, 39/99 K of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D and K of 16 December 1985, 41/69 K of 3 December 1986,

42/69 K of 2 December 1987 and 43/57 J of 6 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,

1. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to co-operate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Scholarships

The Secretary-General reported in September(18) on responses to the General Assembly's 1988 appeal(19) for augmentation of special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

The 1989 activities of responding States and institutions included 25 scholarships awarded by the Federal Republic of Germany to Palestine refugee graduates of UNRWA vocational training centres, and provision by Japan of 15 fellowships to UNRWA vocational training instructors. UNESCO, IMO, FAO, UPU and WHO provided fellowships and scholarships within their areas of competence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 D by recorded vote.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, 36/146 H of 16 December 1981, 37/120 D of 16 December 1982, 38/83 D of 15 December 1983, 39/99 D of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D of 16 December 1985, 41/69 D of 3 December 1986, 42/69 D of 2 December 1987 and 43/57 D of 6 December 1988,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestine refugees have, for the last four decades, lost their homes, lands and means of livelihood,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,

1 Urges all States to respond to the appeal contained in General Assembly resolution 32/90 F of 13 December 1977 and reiterated in subsequent relevant resolutions in a manner commensurate with the needs of Palestine refugees for higher education, including vocational training;

2. Strongly appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations that responded favourably to General Assembly resolutions 41/9 D, 42/69 D and 43/57 D;

4. Invites the relevant specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue, within their respective spheres of competence, to extend assistance for higher education to Palestine refugee students;

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees;

6. Also appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

7. Requests the Agency to act as the recipient and trustee for the special allocations for grants and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestine refugee candidates;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Property rights

Report of Secretary-General. In August, the Secretary-General reported(20) on responses to his request for information on steps taken to implement the 1988 General Assembly resolution(21) concerning revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties.

In its 28 June reply, Israel reiterated its position, as set out previously in statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1988 report of the Secretary-General,(22) that there was no legal basis for taking the steps proposed, as property rights within the borders of a sovereign State were subjected exclusively to the domestic laws of that State. The right of States to regulate and dispose of property within their territory and the income derived from that property was a generally accepted principle, Israel stated. Significantly, the resolution's sponsors had made no suggestion regarding confiscated property in Arab countries of some 800,000 Jewish refugees as a result of the 1948 war, estimated to be worth billions of dollars. Israel stressed that there could be no difference in law, justice or equity between the claims of Arab and of Jewish property owners.

No reply had been received from any other Member State regarding implementation of the resolution, the Secretary-General reported.

Report of Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its report(23) covering the period from 1 September 1988 to 31 August 1989, stated that events that had occurred in the area since the preceding reporting period had further complicated an already very complex situation. As far as the Commission was concerned, the circumstances that had limited its possibilities of action remained essentially unchanged. Nevertheless, it continued to hope that the situation would improve towards the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, thus enabling it to carry forward its work in accordance with its mandate as defined by the Assembly in 1948.(24)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 H by recorded vote.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/13 A to F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981, 37/120 H of 16 December 1982, 38/83 H of 15 December 1983, 39/99 H of 14 December 1984, 40/165 H of 16 December 1985, 41/69 H of 3 December 1986, 42/69 H of 2 December 1987, 43/57 H of 6 December 1988 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, covering the period from 1 September 1988 to 31 August 1989,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her private property,

Considering that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners;

2. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Calls upon the Governments of all the other Member States concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel which would assist the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Deplores Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the implementation of the resolutions on the question;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution,

Refugee protection

The Secretary-General reported⁽²⁵⁾ in September on implementation of a 1988 Assembly resolution⁽²⁶⁾ holding Israel responsible for the security of the 'Palestine refugees in the occupied territories and calling on it to compensate UNRWA for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

The report reproduced Israel's reply of 28 June 1989 to the Secretary-General's request for information on any steps taken or envisaged to comply with the resolution. Israel stated it had fully set forth its position on the subject in statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1988 report of the Secretary-General.⁽²⁷⁾ The adoption of the resolution, Israel maintained, was hypocritical, anachronistic and out of place. Despite its withdrawal from Lebanon in 1985, Israel was still being blamed for the "suffering" of Palestinians in Lebanon and, not surprisingly, for Arab persecution of Palestinian refugees. In recent years, thousands of Palestinians had been killed and wounded in Lebanese refugee camps in vicious lighting totally unconnected with Israel; likewise, Palestinian refugee camps in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic were the scene of considerable human misery. The selective and distorted presentation of the Palestinian refugees' situation in Arab countries, Israel said, clearly illustrated the resolution's double standards and its disregard for the refugees' general welfare. Israel emphasized that, in keeping with international law, it alone was competent to ensure full protection to all the inhabitants of Judea, Samara and the Gaza District.

The Secretary-General cited the UNRWA Commissioner-General's report for the period 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,⁽²⁾ stating that efforts had continued to ensure that everything feasible was being done to contribute to the refugees' safety and security. There had been no progress on UNRWA's claim against the Government of Israel regarding damage to its property and facilities resulting from the 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 I by recorded vote.

Protection of Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982 and 523(1982) of 18 October 1982,

Also recalling in particular, recent Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989 and 641(1989) of 30 August 1989,

Further recalling its resolutions ES-7/5 of 26 June 1982, ES-7/6 and ES-7/8 of 19 August 1982, ES-7/9 of 24 September 1982, 37/120 J of 16 December 1982, 38/83 I of 15 December 1983, 39/99 I of 14 December 1984, 40/165 I of 16 December 1985, 41/69 I of 3 December 1986, 42/69 I of 2 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988 and 43/57 I of 6 December 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, submitted in accordance with Security Council resolution 605(1987),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989,

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Taking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of the Palestinian civilian population under Israeli occupation,

Referring to the humanitarian principles of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to the obligations arising from the regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907,

Deeply concerned at the marked deterioration in the security situation experienced by the Palestine refugees as stated by the Commissioner-General in his report,

Deeply distressed at the suffering of the Palestinian and Lebanese population which has resulted from continuing Israeli acts of aggression against Lebanon and other hostile acts,

Deeply distressed also at the continuing tragic, difficult and uncertain situation of the civilian population in and around the Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon,

Reaffirming its support for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon, within its internationally recognized boundaries,

1. Holds Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon it to fulfil its obligations as the occupying Power in this regard, in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

2. Calls upon all the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention in all circumstances in conformity with their obligation under article 1 thereof;

3. Urges the Security Council to consider the current situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, taking into account the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to continue his efforts in support of the upholding of the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees in all the territories under Israeli occupation in 1967 and thereafter;

5. Calls once again upon Israel, the occupying Power, to release forthwith all arbitrarily detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

6. Welcomes the provision by the Commissioner-General, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, to provide housing to the Palestine refugees whose houses were demolished or razed;

7. Calls once again upon Israel to compensate the Agency for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-fifth session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Removal and resettlement of refugees

The Secretary-General reported(28) in October that, in response to his request for information on steps taken to implement a 1988 General Assembly resolution(29) calling on Israel to refrain from resettling Palestine refugees in the occupied territories and from destroying their shelters, Israel replied on 28 June 1989 that its position had been set out in annual statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1988 report of the Secretary-General.(30) It called the resolution unbalanced and distorted, intentionally ignoring improved living conditions in the Gaza District since 1967. There had been, Israel said, a considerable increase of pupils attending school, a significant drop in illiteracy, extensive development of medical care, and improvement of environmental services, including water supply, sewerage and refuse disposal. Community development projects initiated by Israel had enabled 15,000 families-about 120,000 persons-to leave the refugee camps voluntarily and relocate to nearby residential areas. Israel was determined to pursue the humanitarian task of improving refugee living conditions and welcomed all international assistance to that end.

The Secretary-General, basing his comments on reports from the Commissioner-General, said that in the Gaza Strip, as well as the West Bank, refugee shelters had been demolished and sealed on punitive grounds by the Israeli authorities. With regard to families affected by demolitions as far back as 1971, including those categorized as living in hardship conditions, repeated assurances had been made that they would be housed. The Israeli authorities had assured UNRWA that a solution had been developed and would be implemented as soon as possible.

UNRWA objected also to the Israeli practice of requiring refugee families to demolish their shelters as a pre-condition for moving to new housing, because of practical complications in the case of extended families who shared the same shelter where only one family wished to move, and because of overcrowded conditions and an urgent need for accommodation for refugee families.

The Secretary-General regretted not being able to comply with the Assembly's requests⁽²⁹⁾ to resume issuing identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied Palestinian territory, irrespective of whether or not they were recipients of Agency rations and services. For almost 40 years, all registered refugee families had had Agency registration cards, but they were not identification cards as such. The Commissioner-General did not have the means to issue such cards. He would review the situation regarding possible appropriate documentation for individual family members.

According to available information, Israeli authorities had to date allocated approximately 3,914 plots of land in the Gaza Strip for housing projects. A total of 2,605 plots had been built on by 3,714 refugee families, comprising 22,946 persons. Buildings on 236 plots were under construction, 936 plots were vacant and 137 had been built on by non-refugee families. In addition, 3,034 families, consisting of 18,823 persons, had moved into 2,666 completed housing units, consisting of 5,893 rooms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/47 E by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979, 35/13 F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 A of 16 December 1981, 37/120 E and I of 16 December 1982, 38/83 E and J of 15 December 1983, 39/99 E and J of 14 December 1984, 40/165 E and J of 16 December 1985, 41/69 E and J of 3 December 1986,

42/69 E and J of 2 December 1987 and 43/57 E of 6 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989 and the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 away from their homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of Israel's obligation under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Strongly reiterates its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and accordingly to extend all the services of the Agency to those refugees;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commissioner-General, to resume issuing identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied Palestinian territory, irrespective of whether or not they are recipients of rations and services of the Agency;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-fifth session, on the implementation of the present resolution and in particular on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

The five United Nations regional commissions continued to promote economic and social development in their respective regions during 1989. Four commissions held their regular sessions in March and April—the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA). The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in a regular session, but its Committees of the Whole and of High-Level Government Experts held biennial meetings in March.

In December, the General Assembly proclaimed 1991-2000 as the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and invited international financial and development bodies to consider the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation, which had been adopted by ECA as a basis for dialogue and consultation. The Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions on the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning, interregional co-operation for facilitation of international trade, and the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar. The General Assembly adopted texts on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System and between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. ESCAP worked on a strategy for regional social development towards the year 2000 and beyond. ECE addressed ongoing economic reforms in centrally planned economy nations, and adopted a Charter on Ground-Water Management. ESCWA and ECLAC sought ways to contribute to the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, and continued work to improve regional economic performance.

Regional co-operation

The Executive Secretaries of the live regional commissions, under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, met twice in 1989

(New York, 18 January; Santiago, Chile, 27 and 28 April). In April, they reviewed activities in mutual priority areas, including debt, human resource development, the role of the commissions in reconstruction and development of war-ravaged countries, and economic reforms in centrally planned economies. Also discussed were preparations for a General Assembly special session on international economic co-operation, especially revitalization of economic growth and development in developing countries, and the new International Development Strategy for the fourth United Nations Development Decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I). The importance of the commissions' participation in those preparatory processes was stressed.

The Executive Secretaries reviewed progress in improving links between the commissions and the Economic and Social Council, and reaffirmed the role and potential of the regional commissions in UN operational activities.

In June, the Secretary-General reported on regional co-operation,⁽¹⁾ describing commission progress achieved in promoting interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, and reviewing their co-operation in international trade facilitation (see below) as well as progress in promoting interregional economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council noted the Secretary-General's report (decision 1989/191) and documents on international economic and social policy (decision 1989/182), including the summaries of: the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1987-1988;⁽²⁾ the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1988;⁽³⁾ the economic survey of Europe in 1988-1989;⁽⁴⁾ the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1988;⁽⁵⁾ the survey of economic and social developments in the Economic and Social Council for Western Asia (ESCWA) region during the Third United Nations Development Decade.⁽⁶⁾

On 22 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 44/226, requested regional commissions to contribute to preventing illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes by continuous monitoring and regional assessments of such traffic and its environmental and health implications, through interaction among themselves and in co-operation with UNEP and other relevant UN bodies (see also PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

Trade facilitation

On 10 February, the Economic and Social Council, acting on joint recommendations made by the commission Executive Secretaries pursuant to a 1982 decision,⁽⁷⁾ decided to consider in 1989 interregional co-operation in international trade facilitation (decision 1989/101).

In April, the Executive Secretaries formulated proposals for co-operation between the commissions to establish a trade facilitation network and trade facilitation activities in the regions and promote the UN Rules for Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (UN/EDIFACT), being developed by ECE (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/118 without vote.

Interregional co-operation for facilitation of international trade

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1982/174 of 30 July 1982, in which it requested the executive secretaries of the regional commissions to submit recommendations concerning a subject for interregional co-operation of common interest to all regions, and noting ongoing activities undertaken by the regional commissions within this framework,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on regional co-operation, in particular section IV thereof,

Conscious of the global importance of trade facilitation and of the work carried out by the regional commissions to reduce, simplify and harmonize formalities, procedures and documentation for the development of international trade, and of the technical co-operation activities carried out by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to promote and implement such measures pursuant to the decision adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 31 July 1969,

Noting that the Rules for Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (EDIFACT) being developed and maintained within the Economic Commission for Europe allow for the progressive replacement of trade documents by electronic messages,

Recalling in the light of Economic Commission for Europe decision L(44) of 21 April 1989, that consideration should be given to augmenting the existing facilities in the Commission for the development and the maintenance of EDIFACT, given the central importance of these facilities for the use of EDIFACT by all countries concerned,

Recognizing that the introduction of trade facilitation measures leading to simpler, faster and more economical documentary procedures might require the modification of trade-related practices,

Noting that the introduction of electronic data interchange is contingent upon the availability of appropriate data-processing equipment and telecommunications facilities, as well as relevant business management techniques, which have still to be established in many countries, particularly developing countries,

1. Invites the regional commissions to formulate, jointly with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within existing resources, a draft proposal for interregional co-operation based on projects detailing technical and resource requirements, duly taking into account the national laws and regulations and the needs and concerns of the various regions, especially those of the developing countries, in the area of trade facilitation, and in particular the phased application of EDIFACT, wherever appropriate, and to submit the draft proposal for approval to the Council at its second regular session of 1990;

2. Requests the regional commissions to consult with funding organizations, notably the United Nations Development Programme, concerning the financial resources available for possible execution of the draft proposal after approval by the Council at its second regular session of 1990;

3. Recommends to the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Europe that, in examining closely the resources required for maintenance and development activity now under way, consideration be given to the issue of what resources, from within existing resources of the Commission, might be made available to support this activity.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/118

28 July 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/142) without vote. 20 July (meeting 24); 16-nation draft (E/1989/C.1/L.), based on recommendation in report of Secretary-General (E/1989/96) and orally revised; agenda item 6.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its twenty-fourth session (fifteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers) at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 6 to 10 April.⁽¹⁾

Major agenda items dealt with the search for an African Alternative to Structural Adjustment Programmes; review and appraisal of progress made in the implementation of the UN Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD)⁽²⁾ and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery: 1986-1990 (APPER), as well as the report and recommendations of the tenth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole⁽³⁾ (Addis Ababa, 27 March-3 April), which dealt with a whole range of specific issues, from food, agriculture, environment, industrial development, transport and communications to social development, population and operational activities.

The Conference of Ministers of the Commission adopted resolutions covering the UN Trust Fund for African Development, prevention of crime, the current African economic situation, meteorology and development, information systems for development, the light against locusts, industrial development, creation of an African Economic Association, establishment of the African Monetary Fund, integration of women in development, popular participation in Africa's recovery, resource mobilization for operational activities, and programme questions.

Six resolutions were proposed for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. They dealt with: proclamation of a second Industrial Development Decade for Africa; strengthening of Multinational Programming and Operations Centres (MULPOCS); measures for strengthening ECA's special programme for least developed, land-locked and island countries; the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning; a proposed programme of work and priorities for the biennium 1990-1991; and the African Alternative Framework for Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-economic Recovery and Transformation. (See below, under specific headings.)

ECA subsidiary bodies meeting in 1989 included the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (Addis Ababa, 13-17 February); the Conference of African Ministers of Finance on the African Framework for Structural Adjustment Programmes (Blantyre, Malawi, 6-8 March), which adopted the Blantyre Statement on the Alternative Framework for Structural Adjustment Programmes; the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts of African Least Developed Countries (Addis Ababa, 22-25 March); the Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries (Addis Ababa, 4-5 April), which adopted a declaration to the second United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries for acceleration of the development process; the Conference of African Ministers of Industry (Harare, Zimbabwe, 29-31 May); the Conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 27-28 October); the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development (Addis Ababa, 6-9 November); the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning (Tangier, Morocco, 15-16 November); the Conference of African Ministers of Trade (Addis Ababa, 17-18 November) and the Conference of African Ministers of Tourism (Addis Ababa, 20-25 November). These and other developments were reflected in the biennial report of the Executive Secretary for 1988-89.(4)

Economic and social trends

The ECA summary of the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa 1988-1989(5) indicated that after crises in the 1980s, including prolonged and widespread droughts, economic performance had improved modestly in 1988 and 1989. Nevertheless, the economic situation remained extremely fragile and highly susceptible to exogenous factors and domestic structural limitations. Structural rigidities, notably fragmentation, narrowness and backwardness of the production base and infrastructure, as well as continued external resource constraints, dampened recovery. Inadequate findings for policy reforms and escalating debt service obligations negatively affected the region's development efforts. Coffee and cocoa prices fell to a 14-year low, with devastating effects on the economies of a number of countries, notably Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda.

The gross domestic product (GDP) at factor cost grew by 2.9 per cent, up from 2.4 per cent in 1988 and 0.4 per cent in 1987. A major factor in the modest recovery was two years of good weather for agriculture, reinforced by the favourable impact of domestic policy reforms. The agricultural output rise of 3.1 per cent, up from 2.8 per cent in 1988, together with improving food supply, helped boost the allied sectors; notably agro-based industries, trade and transport. Further growth impetus came from the mining sector and higher export earnings.

Growth in manufacturing output rose from 2.6 per cent in 1987 and 4.5 per cent in 1988 to 4.9 per cent in 1989, despite intensified protectionism in many developed countries and increasingly discriminatory technological policies seriously eroding African manufacturing export competitiveness.

Cereal output was estimated at 77.9 million tons in 1989-15.4 per cent higher than in 1987, but 2.6 per cent lower than the 1988 bumper crop, partly due to locust infestation of the eastern Sahelian zone. An increasing number of countries held food grain surpluses for export in 1989, totalling 1.2 million tons. However, the food grain import requirements of Africa's food-deficit countries were estimated to have risen by about 3.8 per cent, to reach 18.4 million tons. Except for cocoa and tobacco, production of major industrial crops increased in 1989. Producer prices, however, fell.

The bleak social situation persisted, with families facing growing financial and food insecurity and inaccessibility to basic goods, including decent housing and minimal medical care. The number of refugees swelled to 6 million, mostly women and children, following frequent natural and man-made disasters, civil conflicts and war; the disabled were estimated at 10 per cent of the population. The African population growth rate increased much more rapidly than elsewhere, with a high percentage of persons—45 per cent—under 15 years old, compared to 22 per cent in developed regions.

The subregions encompassing East and southern Africa and West Africa showed rates of growth around 3 per cent—generally better than 1988. Performance in Central and North Africa continued to be weak, with GDP growing at 1.6 per cent and 2.8 per cent respectively, well below the rates of population growth. Growth in African least developed countries (LDCs) was generally higher than in other economic groupings, although they remained structurally and economically the weakest. The number of countries experiencing negative growth rates sharply declined from 15 in 1987 to four in 1989. However, only Botswana and Mauritius were able to record consistently high rates of growth over this period.

The slow growth in investment spending during the 1980s resulted in a precipitous erosion of capital stock and the rundown of physical and infrastructure facilities. The 1989 current account deficit stagnated at a high $13.8 billion. External debt rose by about 2.9 per cent to $256.9 billion.

Intensified efforts at policy reforms gave increased priority to the agricultural sector. Several countries, including Egypt, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Nigeria, Senegal and Uganda, achieved the 20 to 25 per cent ratio in total investment allocation recommended by APPER to upgrade production techniques and agricultural infrastructure. A number of initiatives to strengthen the agricultural sector and improve food security were launched at the subregional level.

In a 7 April resolution,(6) the Conference of Ministers requested the Executive Secretary to continue preparing the annual survey of African economic and social conditions and to present annually the economic report on Africa as a summary preview of the survey to ECA. Member States were urged to respond promptly to requests for information on their economic conditions. In another resolution,(7) the Ministers expressed deep concern that the World Bank/UNDP report on Africa's adjustment and growth in the 1980s was, in many respects, at variance with the mid-term review of UNPAAERD and with the reality of the African economic situation. They called on the Executive Secretary to publish, for an objective evaluation of the continent's economic situation, the technical and statistical variances contained in the report.

Activities in 1989

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

In his biennial report for 1988-1989,(4) the Executive Secretary reviewed activities aimed at initiating actions at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to implement a process of sustained socio-economic growth and development in African countries.(8) Legislative organs of all the MULPOCS met during 1989. They were based at Tangier; Niamey, Niger; Gisenyi, Rwanda; Lusaka, Zambia; and Yaoundé, Cameroon.

In response to a 1988 General Assembly resolution,(9) ECA prepared the commission's contribution to the preparation of the International Development Strategy for the fourth United Nations Development Decade. Noting the disappointing development experience during the third United Nations Decade, the contribution particularly emphasized the necessity of an equitable and just international economic order regarding commodity issues, resource flows and transfer of technology.

Alternative framework to structural adjustment programmes

The ECA secretariat promoted the search for an alternative to existing policy frameworks, particularly those associated with conventional structural adjustment programmes, to make them more coherent and consistent with Africa's real development priorities and objectives as stipulated in regionally agreed development strategies.

In May, Ethiopia transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation (AAF-SAP),(10) adopted by the Conference of Ministers in April, and endorsed a Joint Statement by African Ministers of Economic Planning and Development and Ministers of Finance, declaring that AAF-SAP should constitute a basis for constructive dialogue between African countries and their development partners in implementing and financing country programmes. The alternative framework gave a structural analysis of the political economy of Africa, asserting that policy reform aimed merely at improvements in financial balances and price structures were unlikely to succeed. It reiterated the development objectives of APPER and UNPAAERD, within the contemporary imperatives of recovery with transformation, concluding that stabilization and structural adjustment programmes in Africa were inadequate to address the region's real causes of economic, financial and social problems. The proposed alternative framework was based on three sets of macro-entities: operative forces, available resources and needs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July 1989, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/116 without vote.

African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/27 of 18 November 1988, in particular paragraph 55(c) of the annex, in which the Assembly recommended that African countries increase their efforts in the search for a viable conceptual and practical framework for economic structural adjustment programmes in keeping with long-term development objectives and strategies at the national, subregional and regional levels,

Convinced of the urgent need for African economics to bring about structural transformation and sustained growth and development,

1.. Takes note with interest of the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery, and Transformation, adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa in resolution 676(XXIV) of 7 April 1989, and the joint statement on Africa's long-term development adopted by the meeting of agencies concerned with Africa's economic and social progress held at Washington, D.C., on 10 May 1989;

2. Requests the General Assembly to consider taking action on the Framework, as appropriate;

3. Calls upon the international Community, especially development countries and multilateral institutions, to consider requests to provide support to the country programmes prepared by African countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/116
28 July 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/142) without vote, 21 July (meeting 25); draft by Ethiopia for ECA Conference of Ministers (E/1989/C.1/L.5), orally revised: agenda item 6.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 44/411 of 17 November, the General Assembly, acting on the question of AAF-SAP, decided that activities supporting UNPAAERD(2) should be continued pending its final review and appraisal by the Assembly at the forty-sixth (1991) session, in accordance with its 1988 RESOLUTION(11)

On the same date, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/24 by recorded vote.

African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Recalling also its resolution 43/27 of 18 November 1988 and, in particular, paragraph 55(c) of the annex to that resolution, in which African countries were urged to increase their efforts in the search for a viable conceptual and practical framework for economic structural adjustment programmes in keeping with the long-term development objectives and strategies at the national, subregional and regional levels,

Taking note of the final document on the critical economic situation in Africa adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, as well as paragraph 12 of section II of the Caracas Declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the member countries of the Group of Seventy-seven, adopted at the special ministerial meeting of the Group, held at Caracas from 21 to 23 June 1989,

Recalling resolution CM/RES.1222(L) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fiftieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 17 to 22 July 1989,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/116 of 28 July 1989,

1. Takes note with interest of the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation;

2. Invites the international community, including the multilateral financial and development institutions, to consider the African Alternative Framework as a basis for constructive dialogue and fruitful consultation.

General Assembly resolution 44/24

17 November 1989 Meeting 60 137-1-0 (recorded vote)

Draft by Lesotho (A/44/L.20/Rev.1): agenda item 155.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

African institute for Economic Development and Planning

The African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP) faced a critical financial crisis in 1989 with the decline in contributions from member States and UNDP's decision to withdraw its assistance for the Institute's training activities and the funding of its core staff by the end of the year. The IDEP Governing Council, at its thirty-first session (Addis Ababa, 20-22 March), adopted a special memorandum, noting that the non-payment of contributions and the withdrawal of UNDP's assistance would provoke an imminent collapse of the Institute. The Governing Council appointed a sub-committee to review IDEP's structure and management and make recommendations for restructuring. In a 7 April resolution,(12) the ECA Conference of Ministers urged the UNDP Administrator to reconsider the decision, and appealed to the General Assembly to approve the incorporation of four core posts at the Institute in the UN regular budget.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/117 without vote.

African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1985/62 of 26 July 1985,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning, the services it has rendered to African Governments and the increasing and continued interest of Member States in its activities,

Considering the critical financial crisis facing the Institute, the decline in the contributions of member States and the decision of the United Nations Development Programme to withdraw its assistance for training at the Institute and funding of its core staff at the end of 1989,

Noting with satisfaction that the Governing Council of the Institute has appointed a sub-committee to review the structure and management of the Institute and make recommendations on its restructuring,

Expressing appreciation for the support that the United Nations Development Programme has so far given the Institute,

1. Urges the Governing Council of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning to expedite the work of restructuring and rationalizing the activities and means of the Institute in order to establish, as early as possible, a renewed and financially viable Institute for the benefit of African development;

2. Invites the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to reconsider, in the light of the progress made in the restructuring process, the decision to cease the funding of the Institute after December 1989 and to provide support, as appropriate;

3. Earnestly urges African Governments to pay their contributions in a regular and timely manner and make plans to pay gradually their accumulated arrears.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/117
28 July 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/142) without vote. 21 July (meeting 25); draft by Ethiopia for ECA Conference of Ministers (E/1989/C.1/L.6), based on recommendation in report of Secretary-General (E/1989/96) and orally revised; agenda item 6.

Financial implications. S-G, E/1989/C.1/L.11.

Least developed countries

The ECA secretariat continued to implement the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and participated in country round tables on Burundi, Lesotho and Sao Tome and Principe.

The ninth meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African LDCs (Addis Ababa, 4 and 5 April) prepared for the second UN conference on LDCs,⁽¹³⁾ to be held in 1990, drawing up a declaration reviewing the implementation of SNPA and containing proposals on policies and measures for the 1990s.

Food and agriculture

During 1989, ECA, in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), continued to carry out substantive agricultural activities. To build national capabilities in agricultural development policy, planning and programming, field missions were undertaken in the eastern, southern, West African and Central African subregions. Reports submitted to member countries suggested measures for harmonizing national food plans and policies. The reports highlighted problems of institutional inadequacies, limitations on grass-roots participation in planning and policy-making, unrealistic planning and policy objectives due to lack of data, and scarcity of funds. ECA assisted member countries in developing systems for collection, synthesis, analysis, processing and storage of agricultural data, and, in particular, improved the agricultural data base.

ECA activities to strengthen co-operation and trade in food and agricultural products aimed to improve institutions and increase food crop and livestock production. ECA reports were prepared on the importance of sub-regional co-operation in the area of cereals and tubers; non-conventional food sources; strategic food commodities; women's land rights; and multinational co-operation in fishery development.

Activities in agricultural marketing services concentrated in the areas of credit institutions, price policies, and training and manpower.

ECA continued to assist member countries to formulate policies aimed at efficient organization and distribution of agricultural inputs to small farmers, and to harmonize pricing policies on staple food crops to stimulate interregional trade.

Population

Population policies and development planning, demographic analysis in the context of economic and social development planning, and regional training and research continued to be concerns of the ECA population programme in 1989. Provision of advisory services to member States was also emphasized.

ECA studied the implications of demographic patterns for implementing APPER and UNPAAERD. Reports were completed for the sixth Joint Conference of Planners, Statisticians and Demographers on: age-sex data evaluation of recent African censuses; national experiences in implementing population policies in ECA member States in relation to the Kilimanjaor Programme of Action; fertility influences of the relative roles of maternal and child health care and family planning programmes, proximate determinants and socio-economic correlates; methodological and technological innovations in demographic data collection, processing and analysis; and the biennial report on activities of the population information network for Africa (POPIN-Africa).

Other studies concerned the impact of maternal and child health and family planning programmes on fertility, infant and childhood mortality and maternal health; the effect of nuptiality variables on fertility in selected African countries; a comparison of infant and childhood mortality and its relationship to fertility, cultural factors and socio-economic development in selected African countries; patterns, causes and consequences of urbanization in Africa; and status and prospects of population policies in ECA member countries.

Assistance continued for the Regional Institute for Population Studies (RIPS) in Ghana, the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques (IFORD) in Cameroon and the Sahel Institute in Mali.

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/94 requesting the UN system to give priority to population needs and problems in Africa in accordance with UN-PAAERD. The Secretary-General was asked to ensure continued fund availability for technical co-operation in the population field, particularly with the UN-supported Cairo Demographic Centre, RIPS, IFORD and other UN demographic centres and programmes serving African countries.

Natural resources and energy

ECA continued technical and administrative assistance to member States, as well as to the Central African Mineral Resources Development Centre (CAMRDC) and the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre (ESAMRDC), located respectively at Brazzaville, Congo, and Dodoma, United Republic of Tanzania. An evaluation was made of CAMRDC, and advice was provided to ESAMRDC on the development of infrastructural facilities, comprising a mineral dressing laboratory, a rock and soil mechanics laboratory, an industrial minerals laboratory and a library and documentation unit. To increase knowledge of continental mineral potentials, studies were made of copper and bauxite/alumina/aluminium and on iron ore production and its future in West Africa. A study on the exploitation of the mineral, trona, in Chad continued.

In promoting river and lake basin development and as part of the continuing co-operation between ECA and UNDP, a ministerial meeting was held at Addis Ababa on 10 January. The second meeting of the Committee on River and Lake Basins took place at Harare on 27 and 28 April. ECA also advised Lesotho on its highlands water project. A fact-finding mission visited eight Nile riparian countries in May and June to help develop the river basin's resources with UNDP assisting.

Energy activities were aimed at assisting ECA members develop indigenous resources and integrate energy policies into their overall socio-economic development and economic growth policies. Missions were sent to Burundi, Rwanda, Sudan, Uganda, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe. A study was made of inter-connecting the electrical grids of neighbouring States of the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries.

A meeting of plenipotentiaries took place (Addis Ababa, 22-25 May) on the establishment of the African Nuclear Energy Commission.

Science and technology

ECA continued to strive to increase the awareness of member States regarding the applications of science and technology in socio-economic development, seeking to strengthen policies and institutions, develop and mobilize endogenous manpower and achieve greater collaboration in regional and interregional projects. It also organized the sixth meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development (Addis Ababa, 6-9 November).

Support was given to the planning and servicing of the second meeting (25-26 January) of the North African subregional Working Group of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development; participation in a round table (Nairobi, Kenya, 1-3 February) on invention licensing and commercialization options for research; and a symposium (Arusha, 27 February-3 March) on technological development and transfer for rural development, held in collaboration with the African Regional Centre for Technology (ARCT).

The ECA, in collaboration with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), helped organize the sixth meeting (Addis Ababa, 6-9 November) of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development, which reviewed, among other things, the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development⁽¹⁴⁾ and made recommendations for the coming decade. An ECA-supported training workshop was held (Oshodi, Nigeria, 24-28 July) on developing capabilities in handling scientific and technological information.

Environment

Development of environmental capabilities, including the conservation of resources and pollution control, was the focus of ECA effort in this area. Combating drought and controlling desertification were considered priority areas to help alleviate Africa's social and economic crises. Several subregional intergovernmental organizations addressed those issues, including the Permanent Inter-State Committee for Combating Drought in the Sahel (CILSS), the Inter-governmental Authority on Drought and Development in the Horn of Africa, the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC), and the Ministerial Conference on Desertification and the Arid Lands Committee of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment.

At the fifth meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (Addis Ababa, 13-17 February),⁽⁴⁾ two reports were presented: on the development of suitable measures for combating desertification, and on modalities for incorporating the Cairo Programme of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment into ongoing programmes of ECA member States. Another report on the management of environmental degradation, particularly drought and desertification aspects, in the implementation of APPER was presented in April to the ECA Conference of Ministers.

The UNDP Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond⁽¹⁵⁾ and the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development⁽¹⁶⁾ generated ECA action on environmental management for sustainable development, including preparations for a ministerial-level regional conference on environmental and sustainable development in Africa, scheduled for Kampala in June.

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/103, by which it urgently appealed to the international community, particularly donor countries, to support efforts towards a joint policy to combat desertification by the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development and the Ministerial Conference. The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office was urged to assist Sudano-Sahelian countries to prepare for the UN Conference on Environment and Development. The Secretary-General was requested to place greater emphasis in the World Economic Survey on the situation of countries stricken by desertification and drought.

Transport, communications and tourism

ECA continued to support advisory services, studies, technical publications and professional meetings on transport, communications and tourism. The Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning⁽¹⁷⁾ met in Tangier from 15 to 16 November. Recommendations were made to help open up land-locked countries.

Guidelines for evaluating international practices in road transport were prepared. Attention was given to promoting an African industry to manufacture transport equipment and spare parts in order to reduce imports. Advisory services in general and multimodal transport were rendered to Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire to determine capacity to "containerize" exports or imports through the ports of Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania, and Mombasa, Kenya.

In shipping, the ECA assessed Africa's capabilities for a shipbuilding and repair industry and identified existing bottle-necks hampering the smooth flow of African maritime trade. Work continued towards convening a ministerial conference on maritime transport for eastern and southern Africa. Regarding inland water transport, the major activities included identification of transport facilitation problems, ways to ease Africa's international traffic flow, and a study of activities to ensure the safety of navigation on Lakes Kivu and Tanganyika.

ECA spearheaded preparations for an African policy to deal with changes in the air transport environment, stemming from deregulation in the United States, liberalization in Europe, noise restrictions, and introduction of a computerized reservation system. The first Inter-agency Coordinating Committee meeting of the second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade for Africa was held in Addis Ababa on 16 and 17 March. The ECA also organized a meeting of the five ministers responsible for co-ordinating the implementation at the subregional level of the Yamoussoukro Declaration, adopted in 1988 by the Special Conference of African Ministers of Civil Aviation⁽¹⁸⁾ and conducted studies on the western, eastern and southern African subregions.

In the area of communications, ECA conducted studies, organized seminars, provided technical assistance to member States, and issued technical publications. A report on the telecommunications development process and policy in Africa was presented to meetings of the Councils of Ministers of the MULPOCs.

The Conference of African Ministers of Tourism⁽⁴⁾ (Addis Ababa, 20-25 November) set up mechanisms for co-operation between African intergovernmental organizations, as well as with institutions outside Africa. ECA organized in Paris on 25 August the first meeting on preparations for African Tourism Year in 1991. The General Assembly of the World Tourism Organization (WTO) (Paris, 28 August-2 September) adopted the WTO Commission for Africa programme.

Missions were undertaken to the Preferential Trade Area of Eastern and Southern African States, SADCC, the Organization for the Development of the Senegal River, the African Development Bank, West Africa and southern Africa. An inter-agency committee for tourism development in Africa was established in November 1989.

Transport and Communications Decade

The twelfth meeting of the Inter-Agency Coordinating Committee (Addis Ababa, 14-17 March) formally began preparations for the Second Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1991-2000).(19) Following a further meeting in June, a draft policy document was prepared containing proposed global and sectoral objectives and strategies.

By decision 44/455 on 22 December, the General Assembly noted the Secretary-General's progress report(20) on the Second Decade.

An evaluation of the first Transport and Communications Decade (1978-1988) showed that ten years was hardly sufficient to complete so gigantic a task as was envisaged during the Decade, the Secretary-General reported.

Europe-Africa Link

In April, the Secretary-General reported(21) on the Europe/Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1987.(22) He reviewed recent studies on reconnaissance of the physical structure (geodesy, cartography, bathymetry, seismic reflection, refraction, physical oceanography, meteorology, geology and geotechnics), as well as engineering, economic and financial and legal aspects. The economic studies dealt with the analysis of the flow of transport through the Strait of Gibraltar and the benefits that the fixed link across the Strait would offer regarding terms of trade. Work carried out under the Governments of Morocco and Spain in 1987 and 1988 confirmed the seriousness with which the two countries regarded the fixed link. As in the past, the ECA and ECE secretariats wanted the Economic and Social Council to underscore the project's international nature and encourage the United Nations to participate more actively in its related studies. It was also hoped that the project's financing would also reflect its international character.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July 1989, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/119 without vote.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983, 1984/75 of 27 July 1984, 1985/70 of 26 July 1985 and 1987/69 of 8 July 1987,

Having considered the conclusions contained in the interim report prepared in compliance with Council resolution 1987/69 by the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe on the progress being made in the studies relating to the project for a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Bearing in mind the new dynamism being brought to the region owing, in particular, to the proclamation of the Maghreb Arab Union and to the greatly expanding land transport infrastructure leading to the Strait of Gibraltar,

Noting the resolution adopted on 1 February 1989 by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe regarding measures to encourage the construction of a major traffic artery in south-western Europe and to study thoroughly the possibility of a permanent link between Europe and Africa across the Strait of Gibraltar,

Also noting the resolution adopted by the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning at its sixth meeting, held at Kinshasa in March 1988, concerning the establishment of an entity for the development of transport in the North Africa region,

Aware that the studies on the permanent link have contributed to other regional projects, such as the connection of the electricity grids of Morocco and Spain and the Maghreb-Europe gas pipeline,

Welcoming the co-operation between the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Governments of Morocco and Spain and the Transport Study Centre for the Western Mediterranean,

Conscious of the importance of the project for the development of transport in the region, the consolidation of North-South relations and the promotion of scientific and technological research at the international level,

1. Invites interested Governments and the enterprises and institutions concerned, as well as other competent organizations, to participate in the international symposium on the permanent link to be held at Marrakesh from 16 to 18 May 1990 with a view to the implementation of the project;

2. Also invites the countries concerned to co-operate with the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe in accelerating the creation of transport networks leading to the Strait of Gibraltar and in harmonizing transport regulations with a view to facilitating the transport of goods and merchandise between the two areas;

3. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe:

(a) To submit, at the Marrakesh symposium, a global evaluation of the studies and work relating to the project based on the reports of the Executive Secretaries transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council;

(b) To allocate as far as possible the resources necessary for the evaluation of the studies and work relating to the project and of the results and recommendations of the Marrakesh symposium;

(c) To submit an interim report on the project to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/119
 28 July 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote
 Approved by First Committee (E/1989/142) without vote, 20 July (meeting 24); 2-nation draft (E/1989/C.1/L.3); agenda item 6.
 Sponsors: Morocco, Spain.

Trade and finance

During 1989, ECA carried out activities under subprogrammes for domestic, intra-African and non-African trade; international financial and monetary policies; and activities of transnational corporations.

The Conference of African Ministers of Trade, at their tenth meeting (Addis Ababa, 13-18 November),⁽⁴⁾ postponed adoption of the draft of "The Addis Ababa Strategies for Revitalizing Africa's Trade Recovery and Growth in the 1990s"⁽²³⁾ to the first half of 1990 to allow more consideration at the national level. The Strategies aim to make operational the trade-related measures contained in the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa⁽²⁴⁾ with a view to restructuring and expanding Africa's trade in the next decade.

The Ministerial Conference reviewed a report on the Intra-African trade situation, its problems and prospects. Publications in 1989 included a manual on standardization of intra-African trade documentation and procedures, a volume of the African Trade Bulletin, and the African Trade Directory 1989. A second regional symposium was organized in Port Louis, Mauritius, in October involving the African State Trading Organizations, the International Association of State Trading Organizations, and the Mauritius State Trading Corporation.

Reports were issued on trade with non-African countries, including trends in interregional trade between Africa and other developing countries; implementation of the Global System of Trade Preferences among developing countries; recent developments in the situation of trade relations between Africa and China; and implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities.

Domestic trade reports were submitted on alternative patterns of domestic trade structures and mechanisms for the establishment of more rational distribution channels and on mechanisms of integrating women in trade and commerce. A technical publication concerned consumer goods and marketing channels to promote domestic production and trade in African countries.

Regarding international monetary and financial policies, the third session of the Conference of African Ministers of Finance was held in Blantyre from 6 to 8 March.⁽⁴⁾ Participants discussed resource management including external debt, reviewed the establishment of the African Monetary Fund, and adopted the Blantyre Statement of African Ministers of Finance on the Alternative Framework for Structural Adjustment Programmes.⁽²⁵⁾

In April, the ECA Conference of Ministers adopted a resolution on the establishment of the African Monetary Fund,⁽²⁶⁾ regretting the considerable delay in establishing the Fund and deciding to reactivate and expand the ad hoc Committee of Ministers, known as the Committee of Libreville, which was to examine all outstanding issues and take all necessary measures to speedily establish the Fund. The first meeting of the Enlarged Ministerial Committee of Libreville (Addis Ababa, 11-12 April) decided to hold an ad hoc meeting of experts (Addis Ababa, 27 November-1 December) to review the revised study on the Fund.

A meeting in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, of representatives of OAU, ECA and the African Development Bank was held to seek agreement on modalities for implementing decisions on the African common position on Africa's external debt crisis. Its results were reviewed at an international seminar on the African common position held in Cairo from 28 to 30 August.

Industrial development

The General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, in 1989 proclaimed (resolution 44/237) the period 1991-2000 as the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see below). Implementation of the programme for the first Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) and UNPAAERD continued to be undertaken under ECA programmes of policy development, planning and institution building; development of basis industries; development of agro- and forest-based industries; and development of small-scale industries.

The ECA jointly organized the ninth meeting (Harare, 29-31 May) of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry, in co-operation with the Government of Zimbabwe and OAU, to review progress made towards African industrialization. Documents under review included eight progress reports by the secretariats of ECA, OAU and the UN Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO); and a progress report on promotion of the African Industrial Development Fund. Other reports concerned measures to strengthen the African Regional Centre for Engineering Design and Manufacturing (ARCEDEM); programmes and activities in the context of UNPAAERD; implementation of UNPAAERD regarding food processing industries; pulp and paper industries and projects in Africa; and prospects for the rationalization and development of pulp and paper industry in Africa.

Ten annual reports on implementation of IDDA projects in the chemical, engineering, metal and agro-based industries were presented to MULPOC meetings during the first quarter of 1989. The ninth meeting of the OAU, ECA and UNIDO secretariats on implementation of the programme for IDDA within the framework of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action was held in Addis Ababa from 8 to 10 February.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July 1989, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/115 without vote.

Proclamation of a second industrial development decade for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/70 of 8 July 1987, in which it recommended that, after appropriate evaluation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, the proclamation of a second decade should be considered in order to accelerate further the industrialization of Africa,

Noting resolution CM/RES.1188(XLIX) of the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, in which the Council of Ministers urged the Industrial Development Board of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to adopt an appropriate decision with a view to the proclamation by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session of a second industrial development for Africa,

Noting also Industrial Development Board decision IDB.5/Dec. 7 of 6 July 1989, in which the Board recommended that the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization request the General Assembly to proclaim, at its forty-fourth session, a second industrial development decade for Africa,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/84 of 24 May 1989 on guidelines for international decades in economic and social fields,

Noting that an independent evaluation of the implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa has been completed by a team of experts,

Taking note of resolution 656(XXIV) of 7 April 1989 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Noting that the Conference of Ministers invited the Conference of African Ministers of Industry at its ninth meeting to examine the report on the evaluation of the implementation of the Decade and present its views on the modalities of launching a second decade for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Economic and Social Council and the Industrial Development Board,

Having heard the statement made by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa on 10 July 1989,

1. Recommends that the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session consider proclaiming the period 1991-2000 the second industrial development decade for Africa;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session proposals, with cost estimates, for the preparation of the programme for the second industrial development decade for Africa, taking into account resolution 2(IX) of 31 May 1989 of the Conference of African Ministers of Industry.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/115

28 July 1989 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/142) without vote, 20 July (meeting 24); draft by Ethiopia for ECA Conference of Ministers (E/1989/C.1/L.4), based on recommendation in report of Secretary-General (E/1989/96) and orally revised: agenda item 6.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/115, on 29 November the Secretary-General submitted a report(27) of cost estimates for the preparation of the programme for the second industrial development decade for Africa to the General Assembly, including a timetable for the preparatory phase and detailed activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/237 without vote.

Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/66 B of 5 December 1980 on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/70 of 8 July 1987, in which the Council recommended that, after appropriate evaluation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, the proclamation of a second decade should be considered in order to accelerate further the industrialization of Africa,

Recalling also resolution AHG/Res.180(XXV), adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-fifth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 24 to 26 July 1989, on the proclamation of a second industrial development decade for Africa and on an Africa industrialization day,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/115 of 28 July 1989 on the proclamation of a second industrial development decade for Africa,

Welcoming Industrial Development Board decision IDB.5/Dec.7 of 6 July 1989 on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, in which the Board recommended that the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization should request the General Assembly to proclaim a second industrial development decade for Africa,

Welcoming also resolution GC.3/10 of 23 November 1989 of the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization on the second industrial development decade for Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the preparation for the second industrial development decade for Africa (1991-2000), containing proposals for the preparation of the programme for the second decade,

1. Proclaims the period 1991-2000 the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

2. Also proclaims 20 November Africa Industrialization Day, for the purpose of mobilizing the commitment of the international community to the industrialization of Africa;

3. Endorses the proposals of the Secretary-General, as contained in his report, on the participation of the United Nations, through the Economic Commission for Africa, in the preparation of the programme for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, the relevant subregional and regional economic groupings in Africa and the United Nations bodies concerned, to make the necessary preparations for the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on those preparations.

General Assembly resolution 44/237

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/832/Add.1) without vote, 11 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.74), based on informal consultations on draft by Kenya for African States (A/C.2/44/LK.46); agenda item 12.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/44/885; S-G. A/C.2/44/L.77, A/C.5/44/49.

Meeting Numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 15-17, 19, 20, 25, 29, 31, 34, 41, 44, 46, 48, 49; 5th Committee 53, 57, 58; plenary 85.

Public administration and finance

During 1989, ECA assisted member States in developing and implementing programmes in public administration and management and in development of budgetary and taxation systems.

The ECA secretariat advised the African Centre for Applied Research and Training in Social Development in Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, on changes in its organization structure; collaborated with the Government of Uganda in reviewing problems of decentralization and in developing training programmes for staff of decentralized units of government; and assisted the Ministry of Local Government in the Gambia in reorganizing its local government structures. It assisted the Management Services and Training Department of the Federal Civil Service Commission in Nigeria to organize a national conference on human resources development and utilization policy. ECA also organized a series of training programmes and issued a number of technical documents on public administration and management as well as on development of budgetary and taxation systems.

Social development

ECA social development subprogrammes covered integrated rural development; youth and social welfare; and integration of women in development. The fifth Conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs and its Intergovernmental Expert Group both met at Arusha from 23 to 28 October(4). Two working documents covered social development activities between April 1985 and

September 1989 and summarized social trends and major social development problems in Africa. A report on the impact of rural youth employment programmes on rural development was presented, as was a report on juvenile delinquency, crime and justice in the light of socio-economic conditions in Africa.(23)

The Conference of Ministers adopted a resolution on strengthening the capabilities of subregional and regional structures for the integration of women in development.(28) The inaugural meeting of the Governing Council of the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI) was held in Kampala, Uganda, on 14 and 15 June.

The tenth meeting (Addis Ababa, 23-25 March) of the Africa Regional Co-ordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development reviewed regional perspectives for the advancement of women. The fourth Regional Conference on the Integration of Women in Development (Abuja, Nigeria, 6-10 November) resulted in publication of "The Abuja Declaration on Participatory Development: the Role of Women in Africa in the 1990s", a document highlighting the extent to which the 1984 Arusha strategies for women(29) had been implemented.

Information

The Regional Technical Committee for the Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS), at its fourth meeting (Addis Ababa, 23-25 March),(30) considered issues related to user needs and to harmonization and standardization of documentation and information systems at ECA-sponsored regional and subregional institutions. It discussed the proposed establishment of the Eastern and Southern African Documentation and Information System (ESADIS) at Lusaka and the Central African Documentation and Information System (CADIS) at Kinshasa, Zaire, and decided to change the System's title to the Pan-African Development Information System.

In a 7 April resolution,(31) the Conference of Ministers endorsed the Committee's recommendations, called for financial support to PADIS and requested the Executive Secretary to develop a subprogramme on development information systems in Africa in the ECA medium-term plan for 1992-1997, including development and maintenance of data bases and a network promoting the exchange of information among member States for balanced and self-reliant African development.

PADIS activities included delivery of training, advisory services and other forms of technical co-operation for ECA member States on information management and development; data base development and network building; provision of user services; studies and publications; and servicing of legislative and other meetings including expert groups.

Administrative questions

On 7 April 1989, the ECA Conference of Ministers endorsed a proposed programme of work and priorities for the biennium 1990-1991(32) including additions emanating from the MULPOC meetings and the Conference of Ministers.

In a resolution on a draft medium-term plan,(33) the Conference decided to establish an open-ended ad hoc committee empowered to examine the Executive Secretary's draft proposals and to make recommendations to the Secretary-General on the Commission's behalf.

The Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1989/184, accepting the offer of the Government of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to host the twenty-fifth session of ECA and the sixteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers in 1990 in Tripoli.

The General Assembly endorsed the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination recommendations(34) on ECA, asking the Secretary-General to prepare for the forty-fifth Assembly a plan to reduce the current high vacancy rate in the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/201 B, section VIII, without vote.

Section 13. Economic Commission for Africa [The General Assembly]

1. Endorses the recommendations contained in Paragraphs 181 to 183 of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and requests the Secretary-General to review the adequacy of resources for the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, and to intensify his efforts to reduce the currently high vacancy rate in the Economic Commission for Africa, including the preparation of a specific plan to that end, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to review the translation and interpretation services for all official languages in the Economic Commission for Africa, including the question of the retention of trained personnel and the possibility of restoration of the Training Centre, and to report on the results of this review to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

3. Decides that the post proposed by the Secretary-General for a Chief, Office Automation, in the Economic Commission for Africa should be an established post in the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991, and that the post of evaluation officer should be restored on a non-recurrent basis, subject to renewal;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to review the question of the resources for the evaluation function in the regional commissions, prior to the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

General Assembly resolution 44/201 B, section VIII

21 December 1989 Meeting 84 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/44/905) without vote, 19 December (meeting 591: draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/44/L.25); agenda item 123. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 5th Committee 11-18, 27, 28, 59; plenary 84.

Co-operation with SADCC

In an August 1989 report on co-operation between the United Nations and SADCC,(35) requested by a 1987 General Assembly resolution,(36) the Secretary-General reported a remarkable increase in activities in all SADCC project sectors except manpower development, with overall total project costs of nearly $7.2 million as at August 1988, representing an increase of almost 13 per cent. However, the gap in funding for those costs was still very substantial-about 50 per cent.

At the 1989 SADCC Annual Consultative Conference (Luanda, Angola, February), discussions concentrated on reviewing the guidelines on organization governing the relations between SADCC and the UN system. It was agreed that the role of women in the SADCC Programme of Action should be enhanced and that while efforts should continue to expand emergency assistance to frontline States, such fundraising should not adversely affect contributions to the SADCC Programme of Action that addressed the long-term development needs of member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/221 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/248 of 21 December 1982, 38/160 of 19 December 1983, 39/215 of 18 December 1984, 40/195 of 17 December 1985 and 42/181 of 11 December 1987, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to promote co-operation between the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and urged intensification of contacts in order to accelerate the achievement of the objectives of the Lusaka Declaration of 1 April 1980, by which the Conference was established,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Conference,

Recalling the significant progress made by the Conference in formulating concrete development programmes and in implementing them under its Programme of Action,

Reaffirming its recognition that successful implementation of these development programmes can be achieved only if the Conference has adequate resources at its disposal,

Concerned that the gap that still exists between the needs and the resources available to the Conference continues to widen,

Deeply concerned about the critical economic and security situation in southern Africa and the particularly difficult environment for regional co-operation caused by acts of destabilization committed by South Africa,

Reaffirming that increased self-reliance by States members of the Conference would contribute to the struggle against the apartheid policies of South Africa,

Noting the progress made by some organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in working out mechanisms for formulating and executing co-operation programmes with the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, which describes the progress made in the implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly dealing with co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference;

2. Commends the Member States and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have extended concrete assistance to the Conference and expresses appreciation to those which have established contacts and relationships with it;

3. Calls upon the Member States and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have not yet established contact and relationships with the Conference to explore the possibility of doing so;

4. Commends the Conference for the considerable achievements it has made since its founding in implementing projects covering all the major sectors of co-operation, in spite of difficulties due to destabilization policies of the South African régime and its acts of aggression against the States members of the Conference;

5. Renews its appeal to the international community to increase substantially its financial, technical and material support to the Conference in order to enable it to implement fully its expanding programmes;

6. Appeals to the specialized agencies and other organs and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to co-operate fully in the development programmes of the Conference;

7. Welcomes the impending independence of Namibia, which will bring additional possibilities for expanded economic co-operation in southern Africa;

8. Also welcomes the ongoing peace initiatives by the Governments of Angola and Mozambique to end violence in these two Member States, and urges the international community to assist in the reconstruction of their economies;

9. Invites the donor community and other co-operating partners to participate at a high level in the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference Annual Consultative Conference, to be held at Lusaka from 31 January to 2 February 1990;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, to continue to intensify contacts aimed at promoting and harmonizing co-operation between the United Nations and the Conference;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/221

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.6) without vote, 11 December (meeting 49); 28-nation draft (A/C.2/44L.56), orally revised: agenda item 82 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 43, 44, 46, 49; plenary 85.

Asia and the Pacific

The forty-fifth session of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), meeting in Bangkok, Thailand, from 27 March to 5 April, had as its theme, "Restructuring the developing economies of Asia and the Pacific in the 1990s". Five resolutions were adopted.(1)

A resolution on regional social development strategy towards the year 2000 and beyond(2) urged the ESCAP Executive Secretary to incorporate the themes of distributive justice, poverty eradication and popular participation in the strategy. Careful consideration was asked for the topics of the family in development and of drug abuse in implementation of the 1988 Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the ESCAP region.(3) The Commission also requested its Executive Secretary to pursue, within existing resources, establishment of a depository centre for UN human rights materials(4) and welcomed designation of the ESCAP Social Development Division as a regional focal point on human rights. In another resolution, on regional support for International Literacy Year,(5) all members and associate members were urged to participate actively in the World Conference on Education for All-Meeting Basic Learning Needs, planned for Bangkok in 1990.

Regarding an integrated programme on rural development,(6) ESCAP stressed the need to allocate resources for rural poverty alleviation. Members and associates were invited to accord priority also to natural disaster reduction and mitigation in their national development plans.(7)

In a message to ESCAP, the UN Secretary-General declared that improved growth performance of the industrial nations during 1988 had helped to stimulate the general economic recovery and improve the performance of most developing countries of the Asian and Pacific region. But, for many, the debt burden continued to impede development efforts and a number of countries, particularly the least developed and Pacific island countries, had not registered significant economic growth, continuing to require special support measures and assistance. He considered the Commission's discussion on restructuring the developing ESCAP economies in the 1990s most timely; implementation of the Jakarta Plan of Action and the Tokyo Programme on Technology for Development in Asia and the Pacific(8) was of particular significance, he added.

In a policy statement, the ESCAP Executive Secretary said that while the region's average growth had increased to 8 per cent in 1988, there had been insufficient recognition of the growth disparity between the dynamic and the less resilient developing member countries, causing exaggeration of overall regional progress. Although he was optimistic about the region's future, absolute poverty still affected 600 million people, and about 85 per cent of the developing region's population had very low average per capita incomes. Although the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries had been adopted as an international rescue effort, the extremely low living conditions in most member least developed countries had sunk even lower during the disappointing decade. With the threatened collapse of the Uruguay Round(9) of multilateral trade negotiations because of disputes between the industrial nations, developing member countries, especially those more export-oriented, should consider asserting their economic rights and responsibilities more forcefully. At the same time, the region should look more to itself for sources of growth. He pointed to the potential benefits of growing regional complementarities and interdependence to augment export earnings and fuel growth impulses. It was advisable, however, to supplement existing regional credit and marketing mechanisms.

Economic and social trends

Although the regional growth of developing economies was notably less dependent upon the growth of industrial countries at the end of the 1980s, the slow-down of the world economy in 1989 considerably affected the overall growth rate, which had fallen to 6.1 per cent in 1989, compared with 9.2 per cent in 1988, it was reported in the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1989(10) and a later summary.(11) This was largely explained, it went on, by the weakening of the stimulus that developing economies of the region had received in the second half of the 1980s: the previously declining United States dollar strengthened in 1989, international interest rates rose instead of falling, and oil prices firmed up.

Deceleration of growth rates was more marked in the economies of East and South Asia than in those of South-East Asia, where growth rates remained close to the high rates of the previous two years. China and the newly industrializing economies of East Asia sharply decelerated in 1989 from double-digit growth rates in previous years, with China's rate standing at 6.5 per cent compared to 11.4 per cent in 1988. Hong Kong's economy, the growth rate of which had already in 1988 fallen to 7.4 per cent from 13.8 per cent in 1987, further decelerated in 1989 to 5 per cent. The growth rate of the Republic of Korea decelerated to 6.5 per cent from 11.3 per cent in 1988.

In South-East Asia, Indonesia's growth performance improved from 5.7 per cent in 1988 to 6.2 per cent in 1989, as a result of the continued successful economic diversification to reduce oil and gas dependency. Malaysia sustained a rate close to the 7.8 per cent of 1988. In Thailand, rapid growth in manufacturing exports and an investment boom supported by large foreign direct investment inflows were major factors in its being one of the region's fastest growing economies in 1989, although the growth rate was expected to be about 1 per cent below the 11 per cent growth of 1988. The economies of the Philippines and Singapore decelerated somewhat in 1989, the former's growth rate falling to 5.7 per cent from 6.3 per cent in 1988. Viet Nam's economy improved considerably in 1988, with national income growing at 5.9 per cent compared to 2.1 per cent in 1987, an apparent response to the Government's recent liberalization policies.

In South Asia, India's rate of economic growth declined to an estimated 4.5 per cent from 10.6 per cent in 1988. Pakistan's growth decelerated to 5.1 per cent from 6.2 per cent in 1988. It had had an average rate of 6.8 per cent between 1985 and 1988 as a result of efforts to contain high fiscal and balance-of-payments deficits. In Sri Lanka, continued political problems, a decline in foreign assistance and worsening terms of foreign trade had resulted in the slowed growth since 1987, but in 1989 a 3.21 per cent expansion was expected, compared with 2.7 per cent the year before.

Among the region's least developed countries, Afghanistan's gross domestic product (GDP) declined 6.8 per cent in 1988 owing to sharp falls in agricultural and industrial production. In Bangladesh, the real GDP growth rate declined from a 4.3 per cent average in 1986-1987 to 2.6 per cent in 1988 and an estimated 2.4 per cent in 1989 due to devastating floods in 1987 and 1988.

Bhutan and Maldives were the two least developed countries which had achieved relatively high rates of growth in recent years, the former at an 8.7 per cent compound rate of real economic growth between 1980 and 1987. Spurred by significant growth in fishery and tourism, the Maldives GDP grew 13.9 per cent in 1987, moderating to 8.7 per cent in 1988. Myanmar's GDP grew 3.2 per cent in 1988, improving on 2.3 per cent in 1987. Nepal suffered a deceleration in GDP growth to 1.5 per cent in 1989, compared with 9.7 per cent in 1988.

Many South Pacific economies performed well in 1989, with Fiji anticipating a double-digit growth rate. However, Papua New Guinea, the largest island country of the region, stagnated after its mineral production was disrupted by closure of its largest mining complex in Bougainville. The Solomon Islands achieved a 5 per cent growth rate in 1988, reversing a weather-related decline of 3 per cent in 1987.

Agriculture remained the prime sector in most of the region's developing economies. The sharp drop in agricultural growth to around 2.8 per cent in 1989 from about 7.3 per cent in 1988 was due to weather-related uncertainties, price changes in the world market and policy-induced changes, and was a major factor in moderating overall economic growth.

The region's industrial progress was significant by the end of the 1980s, with many countries attempting, through restructuring and policy reforms, to consolidate and sustain their momentum. There was considerable diversity, however, in industrial growth rates. China exercised government restraints to bring its industrial growth rate down to around 10 per cent in 1989 from 2.07 per cent in 1988, in order to maintain price stability and consolidate growth. In the Republic of Korea, from an annual rate of 16.8 per cent during 1985-89, manufacturing output growth fell drastically in 1989 due to frequent work stoppages, rapid wage increases and appreciation of the currency. The least developed countries of the region, with their narrow industrial base, remained weak. Manufacturing contributed only 8 per cent to the GDP of Bangladesh and grew at an average 4 per cent during the 1980s. Nepal's industry, mainly light manufacturing, had stagnated since 1988.

Foreign trade in the region's developing economies slowed after two years of rapid growth, with, as in 1988, many countries' imports increasing faster than exports. In those countries, this widened the trade deficit; though in a few countries, such as the Republic of Korea, it reduced the surplus. The least developed and small island economies continued to face relatively large deficits in their trade and payment balances, although in some cases improvements had been achieved in 1988 largely through moderate import growth.

Administrative controls on production, trade and investment activities were being liberalized in many of the region's developing countries. Fiscal and monetary policies and measures tended to assume greater importance in economic management and stabilization as well as in developmental functions of resource mobilization, investment stimulation and resource allocation. Their role remained important in serving social objectives, such as greater distributional equity.

Total government expenditure as a proportion of GDP varied widely, the survey said, from 12 per cent in Hong Kong to 34 per cent in Sri Lanka. No major changes had occurred in recent years in government shares of GDP. Revenue shares were generally lower than expenditure shares, although in some cases the share of expenditures had tended to decline, reflecting policies intended to limit the Government's role in the economy and reduce budgetary deficits. Many economies made successful efforts in the 1980s to attain fiscal system adjustment through public expenditure rationalization and tax structure reform.

Least developed and island economies

The least developed and Pacific islands countries shared several basic common denominators of underdevelopment, setting them apart from the mainstream of the development process in the ESCAP developing region. Those included: low per capita income; the predominant share of subsistence activities and limited contribution of industrial output to GDP or net material product (NMP); high unemployment or disguised unemployment; and generally poor indicators of life quality (infant mortality, adult literacy, nutritional levels, health care, access to safe water, housing standards, among others). Historical factors and significant inflows of capital and remittances largely accounted for improved performance of some Pacific island countries.

A combination of highly difficult development conditions and constraints impacted adversely on the pace and patterns of economic growth and structural transformation. With few exceptions other than Bhutan and Maldives, the increase in aggregate production and income was very slow relative to consumption and investment needs, particularly in the larger economies of the Asian least developed and the Pacific island subregions.

Average growth rates in GDP/NMP, ranging mostly from 2 per cent to 6 per cent annually during the 1970s and the 1980s, were inadequate to produce noticeable improvement in local living standards. Economic growth in the Pacific islands slowed considerably in the 1980s, causing a deterioration or stagnation in personal income over a large part of the subregion.

The Commission reviewed implementation of the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,(12) noting that most of them had launched extensive development programmes. However, lack of resources hindered them from achieving their goals, and it was considered urgent that an appropriate action programme for the 1990s be formulated.

Social development

The urbanization process and its problems brought sharply into focus many of the region's pressing social issues. Pushed by rural poverty and pulled by urban opportunities and amenities, urban populations were experiencing a projected threefold increase over 40 years—from 360 million in 1960 to more than 1.2 billion by 2000. A large portion of all city dwellers were concentrated in a small number of large-sized cities, with Bangkok, Bombay, Calcutta, Dhaka, Jakarta, Karachi, Madras, Manila, New Delhi, Seoul and Shanghai developing into "mega-cities". Most had more than 5 million people by 1980, and were expected to contain between 10 and 16 million by the turn of the century.

Health and nutrition improvements had resulted in most countries meeting the average minimum calorie requirement, lowering infant mortality rates, increasing life expectancy and improving health services. But prevailing standards were still far below those in some other regions.

An expert group meeting and a meeting of senior officials on human resources development in the region were held in Bangkok in January.

ESCAP activities in 1989

ESCAP continued activities in a wide variety of areas, including food and agriculture, the environment, human settlements, trade and finance, technology, shipping, transport and communications, population and natural disasters.

Three Committees held their first sessions, all in Bangkok: the Committee on Development Planning and Statistics (24-28 July); the Committee on Industry, Technology and Human Settlements (11-15 September); and the Committee on Agriculture, Rural Development and the Environment (13-17 November). The Committee on Natural Resources also met, in its fifteenth session, at Bangkok (9-13 October).

Agriculture and rural development

Commission activities focused on improvement of agricultural policies, planning and information systems; increasing production and improving supply, distribution, marketing and use of critical farm inputs through the services of the Fertilizer Advisory, Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific and the agricultural requisites scheme for Asia and the Pacific; and integrated rural development, with emphasis on the alleviation of poverty. The Commission adopted a resolution(6) on an integrated programme on rural development, asking for a report in 1991 on strengthening and implementing an inter-agency co-ordinated plan of action and for the holding of periodic consultations with member countries to assess their needs for their poverty alleviation programmes for disadvantaged groups.

Meetings, training courses and seminars were held, covering such subjects as: fertilizer use in Viet Nam's southern region; integrated rural development; port handling of mineral fertilizers; chemical fertilizers import management; satellite crop monitoring; the impact of international agricultural price stability on primary producers; South Pacific fertilizer sector development; and socio-economic constraints on rural area use of new and renewable energy technologies.

Environment

Work continued on ways to achieve environmentally sound and sustainable development. In accord with a 1988 Commission resolution,(13) workshops, seminars and meetings took place on: soil conservation and soil salinity control; strengthening a regional network of research and training centres on desertification control in Asia and the Pacific; environment integration into development; "greening" the development process; strengthening the conservation and management of critical ecosystems; environmentally sound and sustainable development in Asia; and desertification control.

Human settlements

ESCAP's programme for human settlements concentrated in three major areas: integrated settlements policies and planning; development of shelter, infrastructure and land; and stimulation of institutional capabilities and public participation. Priority was accorded to technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) activities in settlement planning and development; strengthening institutional capabilities through technical co-operation; and promotion of public participation in human settlements financing and development. Encouragement and assistance were given for the formulation of shelter strategies towards the year 2000, as requested by the Commission in 1988.(13)

Training courses, meetings and workshops were organized in: appropriate building materials and construction technology; management of human settlements; housing development and management; development building components industries through application of updated modular co-ordination rules; innovative community-based housing finance and credit systems for low-income households; urban transport in Asia; housing and settlement improvement; local housing programmes focusing on partnership between city authorities and people; low-income housing policy and appropriate technology; and women's initiatives for participatory development.

International trade

Activities in the area of international trade centred on its expansion, promotion and development, development of commodities of regional interest, and promotion of subregional, regional and interregional trade co-operation. Technical and training assistance in trade facilitation was extended to developing countries in collaboration with UNCTAD and the Customs Co-operation Council. Special assistance to Pacific island countries in trade facilitation was provided partly through publication of the Pacific Harmonized Customs Tariff Schedule. Emphasis continued on effective utilization of trade information for trade expansion through a programme of activities drawn up for the development of the Regional Trade Information Network (TISNET). Highly sought-after publications, including trade information guides and a series of country specific traders' manuals, were produced.

Other activities included meetings, workshops and seminars, such as those on: sericulture; trade promotion with Eastern European socialist countries; small and medium enterprise exports; and one for women executives on export marketing. The fourth session of the Intergovernmental Consultative Forum of Developing Tropical Timber Producing/Exporting Countries was held in Manila, Philippines, in October.

Technology for development

Some ESCAP activities in 1989 were aimed at strengthening and establishing an institutional infrastructure for science and technology, strengthening the technological capabilities of members and associates, and monitoring major breakthroughs in science and technology. Those included a TCDC exchange of study visits between China and Thailand (March, April and May) on planning, development and evaluation of policies in science and technological development; a workshop in Minsk, USSR, in May-June on advanced materials technology and development; and an ad hoc expert group meeting in Bangkok in September on integration of women into technological development. The Governing Board of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) held its fourth session in Bangkok in November. The Governing Body of the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery held its twelfth session in Khatmandu, Nepal, in December. Other seminars, meetings and workshops dealt with electrical conservation in commercial and domestic sub-sectors and with technological rehabilitation of small foundry industries.

The Commission expressed general satisfaction with the progress of implementation of the Tokyo Programme on Technology for Development in Asia and the Pacific, noting the heightened awareness among policy planners and decision makers of development based on science and technology. It commended the contribution of APCTT to implementing the Tokyo Programme and the financial support provided by UNDP.

Transnational corporations

A seminar on transnational corporations from developing Asian countries was held in Bangkok in February. An expert group meeting on environmental management of transnational corporations in pollution-intensive industries in the ESCAP region met, also in Bangkok, in May. Several publications were completed by the ESCAP/UNCTC Joint Unit on Transnational Corporations, including the Asia-Pacific TNC Review 1989 and The Socio-economic Impact of Transnational Corporations in the Fast Food Industry. The Joint Unit completed its research project on environmental management in pollution-intensive industries.

Shipping, transport and communications

National efforts towards an integrated approach to medium- and long-term planning of the transport and communications sector were supported by ESCAP in 1989. The subjects of meetings, seminars and workshops included: demonstration of cost-effective railway signalling and telecommunication system; integrated transport planning; modern methods of telecommunication planning; transport energy conservation and substitution; computerized wagon control systems; and how to speed up metre gauge lines in developing countries. An Asian and Pacific Railway Co-operation Group Meeting met in New Delhi, India, in November. The sixth session of the Intergovernmental Railway Group Meeting took place in Bangkok in November and December.

Training courses dealt with identifying railway derailment causes in China; optimal standards for design, construction and maintenance of rural roads in humid areas; and optimal standards for design, construction and maintenance of rural roads in arid and semi-arid areas.

Population

The Commission sought greater awareness concerning population aging, through generating primary data in four countries in the region and developing policy and programme recommendations on aging. Investigations were launched on inter-relationships between urbanization, economic structure and the role of migrant workers, particularly women. An analytical study was begun on implications of changes in the demographic situation for the various aspects of human resources development.

The topics covered by some ESCAP-sponsored meetings, seminars and workshops included: interaction between clients and grassroots family-planning workers; accessibility of contraceptive methods; consequences of population changes in Asia; urbanization and socio-economic development in the region; data communications and microcomputers for population programme managers and policy makers; and family planning service statistics analysis and interpretation using microcomputers. Fellowships assisted countries with limited or no training facilities to develop a cadre of manpower trained in demography.

Statistics

Significant progress was made towards strengthening national statistical capabilities. ESCAP activities in that area included seminars and training courses on: employment and unemployment statistics; social statistics and indicators for children and women; sampling and household survey methodology; computer-assisted coding; transport statistics; projections for social and economic planning; and managing national statistics services in the 1990s.

Natural disasters

The Commission, in the context of the designation of the 1990's as the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,(14) adopted a resolution(7) urging Governments to designate appropriate mechanisms to implement, co-ordinate and monitor activities related to reduction of natural disasters such as cyclones, typhoons, floods, droughts, locust infestations, tsunamis, earthquakes, landslides and volcanic eruptions. The Executive Secretary of ESCAP was to set up appropriate arrangements to ensure that the intersectoral character of natural disaster reduction was reflected in all relevant programme activities. Preparation of a practical and intersectoral programme of action for the Decade at the country level was requested, as was a report to the Commission at its forty-sixth session in 1990.

Organizational questions

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1989/183, decided that the Commission's forty-sixth session should be held at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia in 1990.

Europe

The forty-fourth session of the Economic Commission for Europe (Geneva, 11-21 April 1989)(1989)(1) took place as the nations of eastern Europe and the Soviet Union moved at varying speeds towards pluralistic forms of governance and decentralized market economies. The ongoing economic reform process in many centrally planned economies accelerated dramatically in 1989, together with political change, creating new opportunities for enhanced East-West regional economic co-operation. The integration processes under way in Europe and North America at regional and sub-regional levels also promised improved economic relationships in the 1990s.

During the session, some ECE members expressed concern that integration processes, such as movement towards a single market within the European Community and free trade in North America, could divert trade away from current external trading partners. Problems persisted in such areas as protectionism in world trade, barriers to trade in advanced technology products, indebtedness, and imbalance in current accounts of the major industrial countries.

Environmental issues were considered to be increasingly important. More than ever, international co-operation was seen as essential to avert and repair environmental damage and to effectively confront global problems resulting from climate change, ozone depletion, nuclear and industrial accidents, and disposal of hazardous waste. The adoption(2) by ECE of the Charter on Ground-Water Management(3) was considered noteworthy.

In April, the Commission adopted one resolution, on its work as a whole and its future activities, again calling on member Governments to take full advantage of the Commission's potential as an instrument for dialogue, for strengthening economic relations and for multilateral regional co-operation.(4) In a decision brought to the Economic and Social Council's attention, the Commission recommended that electronic data interchange be used to facilitate international trade through world-wide application of UN/EDIFACT.(5)

Among other decisions adopted were those on: climate change;(6) statistics;(7) energy co-operation;(8); earthquake prediction;(9) Report of the World Commission on Environment and Development;(10) follow-up of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women;(11) environmental protection and water resources co-operation;(12) air pollution;(13) evolution in dimensions of loading units;(14) transport co-operation;(15) economic co-operation in the Mediterranean in the light of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe;(16) standardization and related activities;(17) engineering industries and automation;(18) and analysis of economic growth conditions: medium- and long-term economic prospects and issues.(19)

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic survey of Europe, 1989-1990,(20) economic performance of ECA market economies remained quite favourable, although average expansion tended to be moderate. In centrally planned economies, economic activity substantially slowed, turning to recession in several countries. While political change was often quite rapid, economic adjustment was generally slower and the economic performance of Eastern European countries worsened in 1989. Aggregate growth for the five reporting Eastern European countries was only half of 1 per cent. Apart from Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic, output in Eastern Europe fell or stagnated, contracting in absolute terms in at least two countries. In the Soviet Union, output rose by less than 2.5 per cent, down from 4.5 per cent in 1988.

Eastern European economic problems were partly responsible for, and compounded by, social unrest, ranging from strikes to large-scale emigration. Policy-makers were preoccupied with restoring social stability and implementing economic stabilization programmes, which were expected to impose heavy burdens on the population for the immediate future. However, with an emerging social consensus, formal economic stabilization programmes were being put in place. For the first time, Western market economy countries stated their willingness to support the reform process.

Output growth slowed in North America and remained broadly unchanged in Western Europe. Total output in market economies averaged a growth rate of 3.5 per cent, compared with more than 4 per cent in 1988. Business investment continued to be the major driving force of domestic demand, but private consumption remained strong. Domestic demand stimulated international trade, making for considerable export and import growth. Western Europe's employment growth was about 1 per cent; unemployment fell from 8.5 per cent in 1988 to a still high 8 per cent. The employment rate in the United States grew by 2 per cent and, despite an economic slow-down, unemployment fell to 5 per cent, the lowest rate since 1973. Consumer prices rose somewhat faster than in 1988, although the average increase in 1989 of 4.5 per cent concealed a stabilization, or even deceleration, in the second half of the year, helped by the easing of non-oil commodity prices and a restrictive monetary policy.

East-West trade showed a decrease in exports for Eastern Europe and an increase in imports. In some countries, notably Czechoslovakia and Hungary, trade regime changes appeared to favour export growth. Overall, exports slowed by some 3 per cent in the first nine months of 1989 and were expected to be lower still as political events affected the supply of exportables. Imports from the West rose by 13 per cent in the first nine months of 1989, mainly reflecting trade liberalization in Hungary and Poland. Import growth appeared to slow towards year's end, reflecting efforts to improve current accounts or hold down the growth of foreign debt, which rose by an aggregate net of $1.5 billion in 1989.

In the Soviet Union, export growth slowed substantially, in part due to supply difficulties regarding fuels and transport. Terms of trade with the West improved, owing to higher world fuel prices. There was nonetheless a reported sharp widening in the Soviet trade deficit with the West-from some $3 billion in 1988 to $6.5 billion. The current account deficit continued to worsen, increasing from $26.5 billion to $36.5 billion, in nominal terms.

The ECE secretariat examined the question of whether a new "Marshall Plan"-the United States aid programme to assist war-ravaged Europe after the Second World War-would be appropriate now to assist Eastern Europe. Despite some similarities in problems facing post-war Western Europe and those of Eastern Europe in 1989, the differences in the basic economic structure of the two economic systems, particularly their capacity to absorb foreign financial aid, were seen as being so wide that it was concluded that a programme patterned after the Marshall Plan would be inappropriate at present. In fact, whereas Marshall Plan aid had consisted mostly of grant aid, with a relatively small proportion of technical assistance, that proportion might more usefully be reversed with regard to Eastern European countries, given the nature of their structural problems—a lack of institutional infrastructure appropriate to a market economy. Also, the time required for Eastern programmes was seen as having to be much longer than the estimated four years for which Marshall aid was originally committed.

A proposal was also made to create, similar to the Marshall Plan, a Central European Payments Union to promote mutual convertibility and thus facilitate the transition of Eastern European countries to a system of free trade and multilateral settlements. Close monitoring and review of both the Western programmes and the Eastern reform process were considered especially important given the prevailing uncertainties.

Activities in 1989

Regional economic co-operation

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (twenty-fifth session, Geneva, 13-17 February)(21) exchanged information on medium- and long-term economic development in the ECE region. The Executive Secretary of ECE, addressing the meeting, underlined three complex issues: reforms in the USSR and most centrally planned economies; integration processes in countries of Western Europe, North America and the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance; and co-ordination of national economic policies. Generally agreed were the necessity of structural adjustments in market economies and, in centrally planned economies, reforms to modernize planning and management systems. The Senior Economic Advisers agreed that the secretariat's work on a data base and macro-economic models should be continued as a long-term effort. Special attention was given to analysis of growth conditions for 1991-1995.

Co-operation among Mediterranean countries

By an April decision,(16) the Executive Secretary was asked to continue co-operation with the Executive Secretaries of ECA and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) and other relevant UN bodies and to pursue contacts with non-ECE Mediterranean countries on subjects of common interest within ECE's competence. Non-ECE Mediterranean countries participated in ECE meetings on agriculture, electric power, gas, steel, timber, trade and transport. The Executive Secretary was to report on possible co-operation in environmental protection.

International trade

The Committee on the Development of Trade (thirty-eighth session, Geneva, 4-8 December)(22) continued to review recent and prospective trends, policies and problems affecting interregional and intraregional trade, particularly in the context of economic and political changes taking place in many countries of the region. It examined East-West trade in services, analysing developments and prospective trends, and requested information on efforts required by ECE member countries to extend and improve the existing data base on East-West service transactions. In a decision on statistics,(7) the Committee suggested a joint meeting of experts with the Conference of European Statisticians to discuss East-West trade statistics disparities and to suggest means to improve international comparability. On compensation trade, the Committee decided to convene a special meeting of experts in 1990, on both governmental and non-governmental levels, to consider countertrade effects on small- and medium-sized enterprises.

A seminar on industrial equipment leasing in East-West trade was held in September, which issued a report on development of market information and techniques and improved business contacts.(23)

Taking into consideration the successful Meeting of Experts on East-West Joint Ventures held in Genoa, Italy, in March, the Committee asked for an ECE study on conditions for promoting foreign direct investment, including special economic zones, joint ventures and other forms of industrial co-operation in the region.

The Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry met in June and November and had before it drafts for a guide on legal aspects of new forms of industrial co-operation. It approved portions concerning international counterpurchase contracts; considered a draft text dealing with international buyback contracts; and decided that its next topic would be "legal aspects of financing the new and developing forms of East-West trade".

The Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures met in March and September and adopted, for trial use, a number of UN/EDIFACT messages related to customs operations. The Working Party planned to continue to develop standard messages, to update its recommendations whenever necessary, and to promote practical implementation world wide. (See above, Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/118).

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee held its fiftieth regular session (Geneva, 30 January-3 February)(24) and a special fifty-first session (2-10 October).(25) During its regular session it discussed measures to simplify international transport and increase efficiency. Analysis of traffic flows on traffic corridors aimed at establishing an intermodal approach to transport within an international context was considered in light of economic and political developments in Eastern Europe. The application and possible undating of all international instruments prepared under the Committee's auspices was examined. The body endorsed the decision to organize the first "ECE Road Safety Week" in 1990 as an effort to reduce traffic accidents. It entrusted subordinate bodies with questions concerning environmental problems.(24)

Given the constant increase in transport of dangerous goods, the Committee decided to devote a special session to discussion of a draft convention on civil liability for damage caused during carriage of dangerous goods by road, rail and inland navigation vessels,(26) as a basis for adequate and rapid compensation to victims of damage caused during the transport of such goods internationally.

Industry

The twenty-second session of the Chemical Industry Committee (Geneva, 4-6 October)(27) completed its study on membrane technology in the chemical industry.(28) It endorsed reports from meetings on aromatic hydrocarbons, olefins, the periodic survey, the rational use of water in the chemical industry, and substitutes for tripolyphosphate in detergents. Two new studies were authorized: on engineering plastics and on recycling of plastics in ECE member countries. Seminars were held on the use of electrical energy in the chemical industry and on the role of the chemical industry in environmental protection.

The Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation (ninth session, Geneva, 20-23 February)(29) endorsed reports on food-processing machinery, including packaging techniques; statistics concerning engineering industries and automation; and new means for air protection in engineering industries. Information from a seminar on computer-integrated manufacturing was considered. In April, the Commission approved the Committee's work programme for 1989-1993,(18) authorizing continued work in low-waste processing, the rehabilitation of engineering, and new materials and their application in engineering industries.

The fifty-seventh session of the Steel Committee (Geneva, 25-27 October)(30) reviewed reports on short- and medium-term trends in the steel market and relevant industry statistical data. It discussed and endorsed the reports of meetings on the steel market and steel statistics, technical and economic aspects of coated steel products manufacture and application, recuperation and economic utilization of iron and steel industry by-products, and iron and steel industry importance for the economic activities of member countries. Work continued on the Annual Bulletin of European Steel Statistics and the Bulletin of Statistics of World Steel Trade. A seminar was held on economic and technical aspects of iron and steel industry modernization in Poland in May. The Committee, in adopting its 1990-1994 work programme, was to continue work on seminars on technical and economic aspects of coated steel product manufacture and application and on users' metallurgical requirements in the welding of steel products, as well as a study on steel product quality and maximum utilization of scrap.

Energy resources

Following a decision taken by the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy at their sixth (1988) session,(31) a Preparatory Meeting for the Study on the Interrelationship between Environmental and Energy Policies took place in May 1989.(32) The Symposium on the Optimum Use of Primary Resources in Meeting Final Heat Demand was held in June in Prague. A Preparatory Meeting for a Symposium on Energy Efficiency Measures in Industry was held in November.

The Coal Committee held its eighty-fifth session from 30 October to 2 November,(33) focusing on the region's general energy problems. Work commenced on a uniform code of practices for draught survey techniques and equipment specifications for determining the weight of bulk coal carriers. The meeting also reviewed the recommendations of a symposium on forecasting and prevention of rockbursts and sudden outbursts of coal, rock and gas.

The forty-seventh session of the Committee on Electric Power (Geneva, 6-9 February)(34) examined problems of planning and operating large power systems, the relationship between electricity and the environment, implications of climatic change, and East-West and Balkan electric power interconnections. A seminar on new developments in geothermal energy was held in May in Turkey. Preparations continued for a 1990 seminar in Iassi-Moldavia, Romania, on the rational use of electricity.

The thirty-fifth session of the Committee on Gas (Geneva, 16-19 January)(35) examined general energy problems in the region, as well as medium- and long-term prospects, and reviewed expert-level work on gas statistics, resources, production, use and distribution. A symposium on current developments and trends in underground storage of natural gas and liquid petroleum gas was held in Paris (29 May-2 June). Preparations were made for a symposium on the use of computers in the gas industry. Plans were made for a symposium, in co-operation with ESCWA and ECA, on long-term prospects of gas market developments in the respective regions and another on use of isotopes in natural gas prospecting.

Water

In April, ECE adopted the Charter on Ground-Water Management(2) on the recommendation of the Senior Advisers. The Charter underlined that ground water should be recognized as a commodity with economic and ecological value. Governments were called on to formulate and implement long-term policies to protect ground water as a natural resource by preventing pollution and over-use both at national and international levels. Ground-water policies should co-ordinate legal, administrative, regulatory and economic instruments with the best available technologies and education, and public information should be made available to increase awareness of inherent ground-water problems and strengthen international co-operation, the Charter stated.

The ECE Senior Advisers also continued work on a code of conduct on accidental pollution of transboundary inland waters and formulated recommendations on waste-water treatment, liability in case of accidental pollution and an ecosystems approach to water management. They analyzed current and future prospects for water resources utilization and pollution control in the region, and established a task force on the application of environmental impact assessment principles to policies, plans and programmes, producing a final report with draft recommendations.

The Advisers endorsed recommendations to ECE Governments on dam safety, with an emphasis on small dams,(36) and held a joint symposium, with the Committee on Agricultural Problems, on improving irrigation practices to preserve and protect water resources and increase crop yields.

Agriculture and timber

The fortieth session of the Committee on Agricultural Problems (Geneva, 6-10 March)(37) reviewed reports on trade and commodities; European trade in agricultural products; and the market situation for grains, livestock and meat, dairy products and eggs. It adopted its 1989-1993 work programme, relaunching work on agriculture output and inputs allowing for common presentation of country data irrespective of socio-economic differences. Meetings were held to consider standardization of porcine and bovine meat, new and non-conventional feeds in ruminant nutrition, and improved irrigation practices to preserve and protect water resources and increase crop yields. A technical draft report was prepared on modern possibilities of genetic engineering for the selection of agriculture plants.

The forty-seventh session of the Timber Committee (Geneva, 9-13 October)(38) completed studies on long-term developments in the USSR and in North America. Preparations were going ahead for the fifth in the same series of studies, on European timber trends and prospects to the year 2000 and beyond. The 1990-1994 work programme was approved. A study, sponsored by the Committee and the International Tropical Timber Organization (ITTO), was published on European trade and markets for tropical hardwoods.

Seminars were held in Finland on training professional forest workers; in Belgium on soil impact of forest operations mechanization; and in Turkey on mechanization of mountain-terrain harvesting operations. A joint FAO/ECE Working Party on Forest Economics and Statistics held its biennial meeting in December, completing preparations for the temperate-zone part of the Global Forest Resource Assessment 1990, with FAO dealing with tropical-zone issues.

Science and technology

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology held their seventeenth session in Geneva (18-22 September).(39) They exchanged views on the transition from an industrial and technological society to one that was scientific and informational. Consideration was given to possible directions of international scientific and technological co-operation in the region, including promoting contacts among young scientists; ways and means to increase innovation work of small- and medium-sized enterprises; and follow-up action to the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development.

The Senior Advisers continued collecting information for the inventory of existing safety guidelines in biotechnology. They reviewed the results of seminars on evaluation in the management of research and development and on earthquake prediction and initiated follow-up action. Preparations began for a seminar on the role of long-term forecasting in the formulation of science and technology policies, to be held in Prague in April 1990.

Environment

The Senior Advisers to UN/ECE Governments on Environmental and Water Problems, at their second session (Geneva, 28 February-3 March)(40) made progress on a regional agreement on environmental impact assessment in a transboundary context. Consultations of experts on flora, fauna and their habitats were held in La Laguna, Spain, in January and Troya, Portugal, in October/November. The group drafted a European Red List of Threatened Animals and Plants for consideration by the Senior Advisers. A seminar on the economic implications of low-waste technology (The Hague, Netherlands, October) prepared draft recommendations, focusing on legal, administrative and economic instruments to promote the development and application of such technology, its benefits for industry and society, and problems encountered in its implementation. Work continued on evaluating the cost-effectiveness of energy- and resource-saving technologies and on recovery, recycling and reutilization of industrial wastes. The Working Party on Low- and Non-waste Technology recommended elaboration of a regional strategy on integrated waste management.

Transboundary air pollution

Under the Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution (seventh session, Geneva, 21-24 November),(41) two new subsidiary bodies began work in 1989: the Working Group on Abatement Strategies, to develop internationally agreed target loads; and the Working Group on Volatile Organic Compounds, to develop a draft protocol to control emissions of such compounds. Three new task forces were established on the exchange of technology, mapping of critical levels and loads, and emissions of heavy metals.

International co-operative programmes were developed on air pollution effects on freshwaters, forests, materials, agriculture and terrestrial ecosystems. The Executive Body began arrangements for revision of existing, or preparations of new, protocols to its Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution for further reduction of sulphur emissions after 1993. It also considered measures to promote an exchange of technology, information and experts to effectively reduce air pollutant emissions.

In April, ECE(13) appealed to member Governments to intensify efforts to protect and improve the environment, giving high priority to air pollutant control and reduction, such as sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions.

Human settlements

The fiftieth session of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (Geneva, 12-15 September)(42) discussed how to adapt experiences derived from ECE activities to assist developing countries in implementing the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000. A seminar on the effectiveness of settlement planning (London, October) adopted conclusions on government policy, recommending that the Committee pursue further work on human settlements aspects of sustainable development. Plans were made for a seminar on comprehensive policies for renewal and modernization of settlements, to be held in the USSR in May 1991, and for a symposium on international tourism, to be held in the early 1990s. Studies on rent policy and research were completed, as were the final chapters of the Compendium of Model Provisions for Building Regulations. The Committee considered a draft action-plan on promotion of international trade in construction products, including a draft framework agreement uniform rules for approval and certification of construction products. A second joint meeting on human settlements statistics, held in March in co-operation with the Conference of European Statisticians, stressed the importance of developing statistics on modernization, land-use, housing distribution and quality aspects.

Statistics

The thirty-seventh plenary session of the Conference of European Statisticians (Geneva, 12-16 June)(43) discussed co-ordination of the statistical activities of European intergovernmental organizations and regional statistical co-operation, and continued to provide methodological assistance to member countries on economic, social, demographic, energy and environmental statistics. It endorsed the importance of developing international standards for electronic data interchange of statistical information within the framework of UN/EDIFACT. General agreement was reached on enhancing the informative role of statistics through comprehensive analysis and interpretation of data. Substantive discussions were also held on the use of micro-computers in statistical services. Work in economic statistics continued to focus on revising and integrating the two systems of national accounting and comparing macro-economic data and purchasing power parities. Increased attention was given to new areas, such as statistics of services, and subjects on which international guidelines had not yet been found to work, such as income distribution statistics.

Standardization

In April,(44) ECE decided that in the first half of 1990 it would convene the eleventh Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for Standardization Policies. The Experts on Standardization Policies met in Geneva in May and agreed on preparatory work to be done. Co-ordinators and rapporteurs met (September, Washington, D.C.) to advance that work and to visit standards bodies. Preparations commenced for a one-day seminar on international standards for environmental protection, to be held around the eleventh Meeting.

Women

In April,(11) the Commission noted the Executive Secretary's report(45) on the Commission's contribution to follow-up of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the UN Decade for Women and asked for a further report.

In November, the Conference of European Statisticians convened a Joint Meeting with the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on statistics of women.(46)

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) Committee of the Whole held its twentieth session(1) in New York on 30 and 31 March. The Committee of High-Level Government Experts also took place in New York from 27 to 29 March and again from 22 to 24 May. Its biennial report covered the period 28 April 1988-11 May 1990.(2) Both Committee agendas focused on two substantive items: preparations for the new fourth International Development Decade, and economic evolution of the region since 1987. The region's economy in 1988 saw a prolongation of the decade's economic stagnation, with the debt crisis a prime cause.

The Committee of the Whole adopted resolutions on preparing an international development strategy for the fourth UN Development Decade and on support to Nicaragua for reconstruction following Hurricane Joan.

Economic trends

As the 1980s drew to a close, most countries of Latin America and the Caribbean continued to struggle with inflation and stabilization efforts, despite favourable results in boosting exports, according to a summary(3) of the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1989.(4) Stagnation and high inflation resulted largely from transfer of resources abroad, through debt servicing in 1989 amounting to $26 billion. After eight years of attempting to attain adjustment, stabilization, growth and production restructuring, most countries swayed under the burden of external debt and, with little access to fresh external finance, continued to display a complex syndrome of structural imbalance, fiscal deficit and low levels of investment, frequently accompanied by high inflation and serious deterioration in real wages.

The average GDP did increase by 1.1 per cent in 1989, a little more than the year before, but still less than population growth. Thus the average per capita product declined for the second year running, falling to 1977-1978 levels. Overall, the average per capita product was 8 per cent lower than it had been in 1980, and total investment had plummeted, the huge social costs of which were considered at least partly the reason for serious outbreaks of violence in 1989 in some countries.

Significant per capita growth-more than 2 per cent-was registered only in Barbados, Costa Rica, Paraguay and, most of all, Chile, where the per capita product rose by almost 7 per cent. The slight improvement in the region's average product came principally from a modest 3 per cent growth rate in Brazil and Mexico, the economies of which accounted for almost two thirds of the economy of the region.

Average regional inflation surged for the third successive year, for the first time reaching almost 1,000 per cent. New records were set in Argentina (5,000 per cent), Peru and Brazil. Ecuador, Uruguay and Venezuela ranged between 50 and 100 per cent. Some countries contained inflation rates; in others, there were significant reductions. Nicaragua's rate of 30,000 per cent in 1988 was brought down to 3,500 per cent after a drastic stabilization programme. Mexico experienced the most striking progress, due to severe controls of the fiscal sector and price/wage reconciliation policies; its rate went down, from 52 per cent in 1988 to less than 20 per cent a year later. Overall, there was a marked decline in the number of countries still immune to inflation, especially in Central America. Only Barbados, Haiti and Panama remained free of significant inflation problems, registering price increases of less than 10 per cent a year. The main inflationary pressure was the inability of fiscal systems to discharge essential functions while maintaining external debt payments. Cases of extraordinarily high inflation stemmed from the inability to control the public deficit, sometimes combined with a growing financial burden of high real interest rates on domestic debt, uncertain future economic trends, and runs on foreign exchange.

There was a generally modest increase in export value and contraction in imports. Yet, despite a considerable surplus, the number of countries in arrears with external debt service increased, along with the number of them obliged to give up fully servicing external debts, including, for the first time together, three of the four biggest debtors—Argentina, Brazil and Venezuela. Only 5 of 19 countries for which up-to-date information was available had fully serviced their debt on time.

Although the value of exports rose by 9 per cent, that rate was significantly down from 1987 and 1988. Due to international interest-rate increases, regional interest and profits payments increased by nearly $4 billion. Oil countries' export growth—$5.4 billion—was considered sufficient, not only to cover their $1.7 billion increase in factor service payments but also to leave a substantial surplus (equivalent to 10 per cent of imports), to be used for import increase or augmenting international reserves. In non-oil-exporting countries, however, the $2.5 billion interest increase on debt wiped out most of the modest export growth.

General labour market trends in 1989 were similar to 1988, the Economic Survey reported. Severe recession in several countries led to increased underemployment. Rates of urban unemployment rose considerably in Argentina, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru and Venezuela. In Chile, Costa Rica, and Guatemala, whose economies experienced steady growth or became over-heated through an excessive expansion of demand, that rate fell notably. Unemployment tended to decrease even in countries which had slow or near zero growth rates, such as Brazil, Colombia, Honduras, Mexico and Uruguay. A continued rise in already high rates of open unemployment was seen only in Bolivia and Ecuador.

Activities in 1989

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

The Committee as a Whole of ECLAC reviewed documents on preparations for a new international development strategy(5) and recent economic trends in Latin America and the Caribbean.(6) These were considered together to lay a foundation for a regional position. The Committee decided to ask the ECLAC secretariat to follow carefully the strategy's entire preparatory process, in close consultation with Governments of member States. The Committee of High-level Experts wanted continued discussions on a common position. A working group was set up to discuss a document(7) adopted by the Experts: "Basic guidelines of the Latin American and Caribbean countries for the process of formulation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade".

The eighth meeting(8) of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Development (ILPES) Regional Council for Planning (Montevideo, Uruguay, 9 May) adopted a report on its 1988 activities and its 1989 draft work programme. The Institute continued work in public policy planning and co-ordination in the economic and social fields, including advisory assistance, training and applied research.

The Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee (CDCC) held its technical meeting 4-6 December and the twelfth session of its ministerial meeting on 7-8 December in Curaçao, Netherlands Antilles.(9) Resolutions were adopted on co-operation between CDCC and regional and international organizations and specialized agencies, establishing a working group on non-independent Caribbean countries, support of the removal of language barriers, and co-ordination between CDCC and the secretariat of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) in relation to non-CARICOM member countries.

In the biennial period, seven technical reports were published on such topics as an accounting framework for evaluating fiscal policy in Latin America, fiscal policy in the 1980s, the measurement and breakdown of the public deficit in Latin America and the results of four national case-studies. National seminars were held to discuss the results of the case-studies, and a regional meeting on methodologies for measuring the public deficit and evaluating fiscal policy also took place. Regarding stabilization, adjustment and external debt, ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico made progress in modernizing debt recording in the Central American countries. ECLAC provided technical assistance to ministers responsible for following up the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America. In co-ordination with the secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration, the Central American Research Institute for Industry and UNDP, work continued on drafting a document on assessing Central American industrial reconversion needs.

The Commission continued monitoring international economic trends, especially economic changes in the industrialized countries, to ascertain effects on regional development. ECLAC jointly organized a high-level seminar (Santiago, Chile, 4-6 April) with the Deutsche Gesellschaft für Technische Zusammenarbeit (German Agency for Technical Co-operation) and the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank on adjustment with growth and on public finances in Latin America. Meetings and seminars were held on obstacles to the anti-poverty strategy in Central America; trade policy; and adjustment policies and integration in Central America.

Industrial, scientific and technological development

The main industrial development activities of ECLAC continued to focus on industrial restructuring at the international level and in Latin America, support for small and medium-scale industry, and the capital goods industry. A high-level meeting was held (Santiago, Chile, 26-27 January) in preparation for an ECLAC/UNDP project on designing policies to strengthen the capacity for technological innovation and increase the international competitiveness of Latin American industry. Seminars were held on industrial restructuring and international competitiveness using Italy as one example.

As for science and technology, ECLAC activities focused on technological development and challenges related to the current world-wide revolution in the field. Case-studies were carried out on technological innovation and international competitiveness in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica and Mexico. A methodological approach was developed to study links between international trade and technology transfer. An interregional meeting (Feldafing, Federal Republic of Germany, 22-26 February) on international co-operation in science and technology for development and a regional meeting (San Jose, Costa Rica, 8-14 April) on the progress of science and technology for regional development were organized by the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development.

International trade and development finance

The International Trade and Development Division focused on three main areas: Latin America and the proposed new international economic order; economic relations between Latin America and other regions; and economic integration and co-operation.

In a follow-up to the multilateral trade negotiations within the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), known as the Uruguay Round, reports identifying the strategic interest pursued by Latin American countries were prepared and analyzed in collaboration with UNCTAD. The growing role of commodity exchanges, especially futures markets, in the pricing of commodities were considered in special studies of the London Metal Exchange, the Chicago grain market and the New York tropical commodities market. The impact of the latest forms of technological progress on market prospects for some commodities and on global examination of the current status of Latin America's export commodities were considered.

Meetings took place on financial and monetary co-operation in connection with regional trade; the status and prospects of commodities exported by Latin America; and technological options and development opportunities regarding regional aluminium and tin industries. A fourth meeting of Officials Responsible for the External Trade of the Member Countries of the Latin American Integration Association (ALADI) took place in Santiago on 11-12 September.

Natural resources and energy

Promotion and support of regional co-operation in water resources management, development and conservation of high-altitude river basins, co-operation in mineral exploitation and assistance in elaborating national policies concerning the oceans were the focus of the work of the Natural Resources and Energy Division. Other areas of concern were: energy forecasting, energy prices and their impact on world energy markets, and updating the ECLAC energy data bank.

Training courses and meetings were held on training in the management of water resource projects and systems; water resources management; international drinking water supply and sanitation; the mining/metallurgical sector in regional development; economic benefits of meteorological services; and electrical interconnections.

The Joint Meeting of the River Lempa Executive Commission/Electrical Interconnection System for Central America was held in San Salvador.

Transport

During 1989, three major projects were carried out in the area of transport on: regional economic co-operation in establishing interior cargo terminals; technical co-operation among Latin American countries on export transport, distribution, marketing, and competitiveness; and impact of subsidies and differing control and organization on urban public transport systems.

Other meetings and seminars dealt with: containerization on the South American east coast and its role in export stimulation; the chain of distribution and the competitiveness of Latin American exports regarding Chilean fruit; and the quality of regional urban collective transport.

Social development

Major studies during the year from the ECLAC Social Development Division concerned: a broad policy outline of regional human resources development; positions of different social and institutional agents regarding incorporation of new production technologies, based on field work in Argentina, Bolivia, Chile and Ecuador; principal institutional problems regarding social policy with special reference to health problems, based on national experiences of Argentina, Brazil and Peru; existing problems and potentialities in implementing social policies at the local level within the framework of decentralization, based on work done in Colombia, Costa Rica and Guatemala; living conditions and prospects for youth and the elderly; and the deterioration of social conditions as a result of the current economic crisis and prospects for future social trends resulting from the region's new structural conditions.

A seminar was held in Santiago (29-31 May) on the experience of Sweden and Latin America regarding development, democracy and equity, in collaboration with the International Centre of the Swedish Workers' Movement.

Population

Work of the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), complementing that of ECLAC, aimed at furthering regional economic and social development through a work programme addressing problems relating specifically to population and development. Seminars were held on infant mortality in Costa Rica; demographic effects of development projects; and the elderly.

Integration of women

The Presiding Officers elected at the fourth Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean held their ninth meeting (Panajachel, Guatemala, 26-27 September). They considered: substantive documents prepared since the fourth Regional Conference, the next regular Regional Conference, and guidelines for the preparatory meeting for the 1995 World Conference on Women.

Environment

Activities carried out by the Joint ECLAC/UNEP Development and Environment Unit aimed at strengthening the environmental dimension in ECLAC's work and at promoting regional action regarding strategies and policies for environmentally sustainable development.

Seminars were held on: priorities for sustainable regional environmental development; environmental impact assessment as an instrument of environmental management; the sustainable development strategy for southern Honduras; pollution from the Esmeraldas State Refinery in Ecuador in the Esmeraldas and Teane Rivers; rehabilitation of terraces and other traditional technologies; methods used in constructing the Magallanes natural heritage accounts; and natural heritage inventories and accounts in the state of Morelos, Mexico.

Human settlements

The human settlements programme, carried out jointly by ECLAC and the UN Centre for Human Settlements, strengthened research and development activities, especially regarding functioning of metropolitan centres, strengthening of local government capacity to manage human settlements and housing policy formulation within national development strategies. The unit also did preliminary work on the role of non-governmental and community organizations in managing the habitat.

A seminar on medium-sized cities was held in Santiago (15-16 June), organized by "SUR Profesionales," an NGO, ECLAC and the Latin American Council for the Social Sciences.

Food and agriculture

Significant progress was made in collaboration with FAO on a study on potentials for agricultural and rural development in Latin America and the Caribbean and also in improving methodologies used to process quantitative information for prospective agricultural analysis.

The seventh Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean was held in Montevideo from 8 to 10 May. The Ministers of Agriculture of the Countries of the Andean Group met in Lima in August/September. Other ECLAC-sponsored meetings dealt with: trade and macroeconomic policies and their impact on agriculture in the structural adjustment context; regional agroindustrial development policies; and regional agricultural and rural development.

Statistics and economic projections

Development of the ECLAC statistics programme for the biennium focused on: expansion of data banks; technical co-operation; and dissemination of information, technological innovations and international standards.

The Directors of Statistics of the Americas held a meeting in Santiago from 26 to 29 September. Four seminars were held on: field personnel training for on-site activities; economic censuses and registers of establishments; data bases and computerized data transmission; and statistics of international trade in services.

Transnational corporations

The joint ECLAC/Centre on Transnational Corporations (TNCs) unit focused on two areas: identifying the contribution and impact of TNCs on regional development, and studies of particular issues in individual countries and sectors. A report was issued on the performance of transnational banks and the international external debt crisis. Elaboration of a regional directory of foreign investment continued. In 1989, the joint unit participated in the fifteenth session (New York, 5-14 April) of the Commission on TNCs..

Co-operation between the UN and the Latin American Economic System

In compliance with a 1988 Assembly resolution(10), the Secretary-General reported(11) in October that since the 1975 establishment of the Latin American Economic System (SELA), considerable co-operation had taken place between it and the United Nations, particularly with ECLAC, but also with other UN organizations, agencies and programmes.

Co-operation was highly diversified, he said, and a natural, close and fruitful co-operation had continued to develop between ECLAC and SELA. In many cases, the co-operation had become more permanent through various agreements and conventions. Some UN entities that were not carrying out activities with SELA had expressed their desire to explore joint activities. ECLAC participated in the third informal meeting of organizations working in areas related to services (Caracas, 19 May). Joint ECLAC/SELA meetings were planned on five service sectors: telecommunications, financial services, air transport, construction and engineering, and audiovisual materials, in order to define regional interests more clearly with regard to the trade of those services within the Uruguay Rounds and in the regional and subregional context.

The Latin American Council, at its 15th meeting (Cartagena, 25 July-1 August), adopted a resolution on co-operation between the Latin American economic system and the United Nations, giving high priority to the development of close co-operation with ECLAC in promoting a truly regional system of co-operation. It also expressed the need to deepen co-operation with UNDP and noted with satisfaction the relations of co-operation with UNESCO, UNICEF, UNCTAD, UNIDO and WIPO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October 1989, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/4 without vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/5 of 17 October 1988 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Taking into account decision 289 of 1 August 1989 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, adopted at the fifteenth regular session of the Latin American Council,

Considering that the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean has developed close ties of co-operation with the Latin American Economic System and that efforts have been successfully made to co-ordinate their activities,

Bearing in mind that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System has carried out various programmes with the support of the United Nations Development Programme in areas that are considered of priority for the economic development of the region,

Considering also that the Latin American Economic System is developing joint activities with the specialized agencies and other bodies and programmes of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the International Telecommunication Union,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses satisfaction with decision 289 of the Latin American Council of the Latin American Economic System;
3. Urges the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to broaden and deepen its co-ordination and mutual support activities with the Latin American Economic System;
4. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen and broaden its support to the programmes that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System is carrying out;
5. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their support for and co-operation with the activities of the Latin American Economic System;
6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to promote, in close collaboration with the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System, the holding of a meeting in 1990 between their respective secretariats, with the aim of identifying those areas in which it will be possible to broaden co-operation between the United Nations system and the Latin American Economic System;
7. Requests both the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System to initiate consultations for the purpose of drafting an agreement of co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/4

17 October 1989 Meeting 32 Adopted without vote

26-nation draft (A/44/L.8); agenda item 24.

Special plan of economic co-operation for Central America

In pursuance of May and December 1988 Assembly resolutions,(12) the Secretary-General reported(13) in October on the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, which the Assembly had decided to review and evaluate in 1989. The Secretary-General recalled that the Special Plan had been launched in September 1988 when the Vice-Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua had approved a mechanism for implementation. By August, 21 projects totalling some $11,224,000 had been approved or were in final stages of approval.

The first meeting of Central American governments with co-operating Governments and institutions was held from 4 to 6 July in Geneva, providing the opportunity for a collective dialogue on priorities. It was attended by 27 Governments, 29 UN organizations and 15 subregional Central American integration organizations, as well as representatives of the European Economic Community, the Organization of American States and the Inter-American Development Bank.

The Secretary-General stated that forecasts suggested that economic recovery for the subregion could not regain the levels of economic welfare of the 1970's before the end of the century. However, broad-based sustainable economic development would be possible provided, among other things, that the international community strongly supported the reconstruction efforts and that lasting peace and democratization was achieved.

He said that the Special Plan provided a framework and established priorities for international development co-operation for the subregion as a whole. A Programme in Favour of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Returnees became operative with a $115 million contribution from Italy. Some 136,500 people in the five Central American countries and Belize would benefit directly and nearly half a million indirectly. UNDP was primarily responsible for the Programme's implementation. The International Conference on Central American Refugees(14) was held in Guatemala City (29-31 May), which, the Secretary-General stated, successfully made the international community realize that displaced persons required just as much assistance, including international support, as refugees.

The Central American Governments and the World Food Programme (WFP) assessed immediate food needs at some $104 million.(17) In energy, international co-operation was urgently required in maintaining hydroelectric plants and an electrical interconnection. By 1989 the subregion's external debt had risen to $19 billion, with debt servicing equivalent to nearly half of all export earnings. UNDP had financed a project to establish a computerized information system for debt monitoring and follow-up in each Central American country. A draft proposal to restructure the Central American Monetary Stabilization Fund under a UNDP project was finalized in June. Other UNDP projects under way included an industrial reconversion assessment; creation of a portfolio of organizational development projects available for investment; formulation of telecommunication projects with the International Telecommunication Union; and strengthening the Central American Bank for Economic Integration. UNCTAD was executing a project to automate customs clearance procedures. UNICEF was considering a pilot project to treat children affected by violence in the region. UNIDO was executing a project to market handicrafts. Work also continued in the areas of nutrition, drinking water and sanitation. In January, a technical assistance project for the agricultural development of Central America was initiated with a $4.4 million budget, executed by the World Bank and financed by UNDP, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the Government of Japan.

By resolution 44/182 of 19 December, the General Assembly emphasized the urgent need to provide the Central American countries with financial resources.

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia held its fifteenth session at the ministerial level at Baghdad, Iraq, on 17 and 18 May.(1) It was preceded by meetings of the Technical Committee's sixth session (13-15 May).(2)

The ESCWA Executive Secretary reported(3) economic growth, after years of recession, assisted by oil revenue improvements and recovery in other economic sectors, particularly industry, construction and services. Despite the cease-fire between Iran and Iraq, which had had a positive effect on ESCWA activities and programmes, there remained a number of potential flashpoints in Western Asia constituting possible impediments to development. Two events occurred in the region which were considered promising: establishment of the Arab Co-operation Council comprising Egypt, Iraq, Jordan and Yemen, with 27 agreements regulating all aspects of co-operation and co-ordination; and the final stages of unification of the Yemen Arab Republic and Democratic Yemen, giving new impetus to economic and social development to those two LDCs.

ESCWA adopted 14 resolutions, including those on: environment and regional development;(4) financial assistance to existing industries;(5) regional co-operation in peaceful nuclear energy uses;(6) projects for regional and sub-regional co-operation on new and renewable energy sources;(7) the regional household survey project;@ the Transport and Communications Decade in Western Asia (1985-1994);(9) economic and social conditions of the Palestinian Arab people;(10) strengthening the Commission's role and performance;(11) international assistance to flood-stricken areas of Democratic Yemen;(12) and international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.(13)

To strengthen ESCWA's role and performance,(11) the Commission created an advisory body, composed of the heads of Commission members' diplomatic missions in Iraq and a representative of the Iraqi Ministry of Foreign Affairs, to assist the Executive Secretary in studying problems connected with the Commission's work. The first meeting took place on 2 October, and the body was to meet normally every four months.

Economic and social trends

Overall economic performance improved in 1989 according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region in 1989.(14) The regional GDP grew by 3.4 per cent, following several years of economic slow-down; however, per capita, there was virtually no increase, given the region's 3 per cent population growth rate.

Economic growth reflected strong international oil demand accompanied by a production decline of countries not members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), particularly the United States and Soviet Union. The ESCWA region increased its output 7.2 per cent while at the same time benefiting from an approximate 17.7 per cent rise in the average price of its crude oil. Higher revenues of regional oil-exporting countries then had a spillover effect favouring non-oil countries.

In the countries of the Gulf Co-operation Council (CCC) subregion (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates), after several years of stagnation or decline, higher oil revenues and adjustment policies contributed to a 3.52 per cent GDP growth rate in 1989. In other countries, economic growth was constrained by persistent balance-of-trade deficits and heavy debt-servicing burdens.

Most economic sectors performed better in 1989 than the previous year, except for agriculture, which after exceptional growth in 1988 (4.8 per cent), declined by 2.3 per cent in 1989. Manufacturing performed well in most countries due to diversification. Particular successes included the petrochemical industry in Saudi Arabia; the aluminium industry in Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates; and the textile and leather products and aluminium industries in Egypt. Light industry performed well in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, in part because of national currency depreciation; import restrictions in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic also had their effect. Improvement continued in the service sector, particularly banking and tourism, and in international trade, which increased by 2.1 per cent in nominal terms in 1989, after a 1988 decline of 17 per cent. Inflationary pressures intensified in the more diversified economies in 1989, conservative estimates indicating rates exceeding 20 per cent in Egypt, Iraq, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. In GCC countries, inflation remained more modest, with the highest rates estimated at 6 per cent in the United Arab Emirates and 3.5 per cent in Kuwait. Rates in other GCC countries ranged between 0.9 per cent and 3 per cent.

Unemployment problems were such that the labour-sending countries of Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen faced declining remittances due to repatriation of their nationals, as well as difficulties regarding housing, infrastructure, education, health facilities and balance of payments.

External debt continued to hamper economic growth and development, with the major indebted countries-Egypt, Iraq, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic-estimated to have collective external debts exceeding $150 million.

Though health conditions in the ESCWA region had improved because of systematic national health programmes, it was noted that patient-doctor ratios and infant mortality rates varied widely. Access to medical services was often very limited for some populations, particularly in rural areas. The regional literacy rate had reached 50 per cent and the gross enrolment rate in primary education was nearly 85 per cent, with close to 100 per cent in Bahrain, Iraq, Jordan, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and West Bank and Gaza. The figure in other ESCWA countries was significantly lower, mainly because of the low enrolment of girls. There was urgent need to promote adult education, as illiteracy was high among the elderly, particularly elderly women.

Overall, economic progress was seen as being closely linked to resolving the debt problem; reaching a permanent settlement in the Iran-Iraq conflict; breaking the deadlock with respect to the Palestinian issue; and ending the conflict in Lebanon. If those objectives were achieved, defence expenditures, among the highest in the world per capita, should fall, and badly needed resources could be channelled to economic development and growth.

Activities in 1989

Transport and communications

The transport and communications programme for the 1988-1989 biennium focused on project appraisal methods in the transport sector and development of multimodal transport, as well as development strategy formulation and policies in the maritime transport sector and studies on road construction techniques and on container traffic in Western Asia. Many of those activities pertained as well to the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994).(15)

A report on transport policy and planning, prepared after an ad hoc expert group meeting on the subject held in May, was reviewed by the Commission.(16) Another report, as well as a technical publication, were completed on multimodal transport, as was a study on regional road construction techniques(17) and on regional strategies and policies for the development of maritime transport.(18)

Energy

Under the energy programme, several reports and surveys were published in 1989. A survey and assessment of energy-related activities in the region covered the electricity sector,(19) including a comprehensive review of progress in national grid expansion and improvement and regional co-operation for electricity grids interconnection.

A meeting on the impact of changing oil market conditions on regional energy policies was held in Amman, Jordan, from 20 to 23 November. The entire region still depended heavily on oil, whether as the major energy source or the greatest material wealth source, and a technical publication on the subject(20) was completed.

A report was prepared on progress in the promotion of regional and international co-operation in peaceful nuclear energy use and on such activities at the national and regional levels. A major component of the energy programme was completion of a report on latest technologies in new and renewable energy.(21)

Food and agriculture

Two issues of the recurrent publication Agriculture and Development in Western Asia (nos. 11 & 12) presented an assessment of recent regional agricultural development, analysing some emerging trends and tackling some critical agricultural problems at national and regional levels. Two training workshops, one regional and one national, were held on economics of resource conservation, combating desertification and land use planning. A report was made on training in agricultural planning and project analysis(22)

Population

The ESCWA population programme produced and disseminated reliable data on a large number of demographic and related socio-economic variables necessary for development planning and policy-making that resulted in the publication of Demographic and Related Socio-Economic Data Sheets of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, issue no. 6, and two studies: one on infant mortality patterns and trends in Bahrain, Egypt, Jordan, Kuwait, the Syrian Arab Republic and the United Arab Emirates; the other on socio-economic differentials of child mortality in Jordan. The Population Bulletin of ESCWA and the Trilingual Demographic Dictionary were published. An advanced training workshop for member States on organizing and administering population and housing censuses was organized, and a fully computerized labour data base was established.

A seminar in Amman from 4 to 9 December was jointly organized with the International Labour Organisation, the Arab Labour Organization and the University of Jordan, entitled "Demographic and socio-economic implications of international migration in the Arab world with special reference to return migration." Four technical studies were launched, one on working women in Western Asia and the others on international migration.

Industry

The establishment of GCC in the early 1980s, and what it accomplished to integrate the economies of its members and co-ordinate their policies, and the setting up of the Arab Co-operation Council (ACC) and the Union of the Arab Maghreb towards the end of the 1980s, in both of which the economic dimension was fundamental, were steps which furthered Arab economic integration, strengthened Arab development efforts and put the region in a better position to deal with global economic blocs, the Executive Secretary stated in his report to the Commission.(3)

One of the technical publications issued in the "Industrial Development Series", on the role of regional co-operation, recommended adjustment measures to strengthen industrial co-ordination at the level of the GCC countries and proposed co-operation through ACC. Another technical publication(23) dealt with a resource-based programme of industrial development for the least developed countries of the ESCWA region-Yemen and Democratic Yemen-identifying industrial projects viable for joint implementation.

A report was made on assistance to existing industries in ESCWA countries.(24) Other publications concerned: selected agro-food industries in the ESCWA region;(25) identification of development issues related to genetic engineering and biotechnology;(26) and requirements for an expandable computerized Arabic dictionary.

Science and technology

Technical publications included those on the end-of-decade review(27) of the implementation of the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development;(28) promotion of regional co-operation in science and technology; and the role and impact of public enterprises in acquisition, adaptation and utilization of technology in selected ESCWA countries.(29)

In a meeting on specialized financial institutions and development of endogenous scientific and technological capabilities, held in 1989, a distinction was made for the first time between the requirements of industrial development and the requirements of industrial technological development. A number of areas were identified for scientific co-operation together with concrete proposals and plans of action. A thorough micro-analysis of technical changes and their causes in the public sector was conducted.

Development issues

A technical publication was prepared on the region's medium-term development prospects, analyzing economic performance since 1970, especially developments in the oil sector and development strategies and adjustment policies adopted by member countries.

A comprehensive review and analysis of national, regional and subregional performance was issued in the Survey of Economic and Social Developments in the ESCWA Region, the 1989 issue of which covered the entire decade. Special assessment was made of the prospects of Democratic Yemen and Yemen and obstacles impeding their efforts to promote development and economic transformation.

Two studies(30) were completed on review and assessment of the implementation of the 1981 Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries.(31)

Social development

A major contribution of ESCWA's social welfare and development subprogramme was organization of the Conference on the Capabilities and Needs of Disabled Persons in the ESCWA Region, held in November in Amman, with the co-operation of the Ministry of Social Development, Jordan, the UN Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the regional bureau of the Middle East Committee of the Welfare of the Blind, OPEC and the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations.

Regional social statistics and indicators were developed, as were two studies on social aspects of rural development and on co-operative movements.(32) A technical publication was issued on the employment of women in the informal sector.(33) The 1989 issue of a directory of Arab professional women active in technical co-operation among developing countries was postponed to the 1990-1991 biennium. Proceedings of an expert group meeting on socio-cultural changes among women were issued, along with two reports(34) on support to technical projects for the development of women, through skills, identification of women's needs, and participation of women in industry.

Human settlements

The ESCWA human settlements programme was integrated into the social development and population programmes. A technical publication was issued on alternative approaches to city management, with special reference to human settlements,(35) as well as a report on assessment of alternative building materials and architectural design and a technical publication on proceedings of an expert group meeting on appropriate building materials.

International trade

Technical publications were issued on: external trade and payments situation of countries of Western Asia; new export products from Western Asia;(36) analysis of problems and policies affecting export performance; and terms of trade index numbers.

Statistics

The third meeting of Heads of Central Statistical Organizations in the ESCWA region was convened in 1989. The statistics programme undertook a number of joint activities with regional Arab organizations, including the League of Arab States, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development and the Arab Institute for Training and Research in Statistics. Training activities were carried out in a workshop on management and administration of population and housing censuses held in Amman in June. Publications included two issues of the Statistical Abstract of the Region of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, the External Trade Bulletin of the ESCWA region and the second issue of the United Arab Statistical Abstract (April 1989).

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

By a note(37) of 26 April, the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on ESCWA to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, with comments in a separate addendum on 24 May.(38)

By a note of 3 April, the Secretary-General transmitted a report(39) of the JIU to the Economic and Social Council and the governing bodies of UNDP and the UN Environment Programme on the contribution of the UN system to the preservation and management of cultural and natural heritage in Western Asia. On 14 November,(40) in a separate addendum, he transmitted the comments of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the report.

By decision 1989/182, on 28 July, the Economic and Social Council noted a summary(41) of the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region during the Third United Nations Development Decade.(42)

By decision 44/423 of 8 December, and by resolution 44/201 A, section I, of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the JIU report on ESCWA and the Secretary-General's comments.

ESCWA work programme

The Commission adopted three resolutions concerning its work programme. On the basis of recommendations of its Technical Committee, the Commission modified its work and priorities for the biennium 1988-1989.(43) It approved, in principle, the draft medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, having considered the need to pay more attention to the two least developed countries in the region,(44) and it adopted a programme of work and priorities for the biennium 1990-1991.(45)

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic co-operation

As the 1980s drew to a close, epoch-making political changes occurred that had far-reaching implications for the world economy. Economic growth decelerated in all major groups of economies in 1989, but unevenly; differences in growth rates were particularly large among developing countries. Per capita output increased rapidly in Asia, but in Africa and Latin America the average level of income continued to fall as it had throughout the decade.

In March, the General Assembly decided to convene in 1990 a special session devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development in the developing countries (decision 43/460). It established a preparatory committee, which held an organizational session in March and its first session in May/June.

In the Ad Hoc Committee established for the purpose in 1988, preparations continued for an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade (1991-2000). In December, the Assembly (resolution 44/169) recommended an outline to the Committee as the basis for the new strategy.

Preparations were also under way for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDCs), to be held in 1990. No new countries were added to the list of officially designated LDCs, which remained at 42.

Following consideration of a report on the problems of land-locked developing countries, the Assembly adopted a December resolution (44/214), in which it urged the international community to provide land-locked and transit developing countries with financial and technical assistance for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and transit infrastructures and facilities, including alternative routes.

In other action concerning economic development issues, the Assembly considered implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and called on all States to take concrete steps to implement the Charter fully (44/170). With regard to international co-operation for economic security, it emphasized that a universal, constructive and comprehensive dialogue aimed at revitalizing economic growth and development was essential if effective and co-operative approaches to international economic issues were to be found (44/231). As to economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries, the Assembly called on the international community to adopt measures to eliminate the use of coercive measures against developing countries, which had been increasing and had taken new forms (44/215).

International economic relations

Development and economic co-operation

During 1989, various aspects of development and economic co-operation were discussed in United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Development Planning (CDP).

CDP activities. At its twenty-fifth session (New York, 9-12 May),⁽¹⁾ CDP analysed the economic performance of the world's regions in the 1980s and discussed development challenges for the 1990s. It observed that, during the 1980s, some countries, especially in Asia, grew rapidly; others in the developed and socialist world grew more slowly; while many developing countries, especially in Africa and Latin America, suffered severe losses in real per capita income. In general terms, it appeared that successful countries gave priority to human development, maintained a high rate of investment and financed that investment largely through domestic savings.

Economic and Social Council general discussion. At its July 1989 session,⁽²⁾ the Economic and Social Council held a general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments. It focused, as decided on 5 May (decision 1989/105), on structural changes and imbalances in the world economy and their impact on international economic co-operation, particularly with the developing countries.

It also discussed: international trade and the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations; multilateralism and the management of independence; human rights and popular participation; environment and development; new initiatives to strengthen the global economic dialogue; the international development strategy for the 1990s; human resources development; operational activities; and the role of the United Nations and prospects for revitalizing the Council.

The Council had before it the World Economic Survey 1989,(3) which discussed the state of the world economy and global economic trends and prospects. It also addressed questions of international trade, finance and debt (see PART THREE, Chapter IV), the international energy situation, economic reform and integration of centrally planned economies, interest rates in the 1980s and economic adjustment and the net transfer of resources from developing countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/110 without vote.

International economic co-operation towards common approaches to development

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account the need for shared responsibility for the sound development of the world economy,

Considering the growing trend towards a new international consensus on growth and development through revived multilateral dialogue aimed at enhancing economic co-operation in recognition of growing global interdependence and in conformity with the interests of the international community,

Convinced that efforts to secure a more supportive economic environment conducive to sustained growth and development, in particular in the developing countries, are essential,

Conscious of the role of the United Nations in promoting continued co-operative efforts towards the revitalization of development within a multilateral framework involving all States and in stimulating common approaches to international economic issues, as exemplified by the results of the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Expecting that such approaches will be generated when the General Assembly, at its special session in 1990, establishes guidelines for international economic relations in the 1990s and beyond,

1. Notes with deep concern that external indebtedness and persistent poverty continue to affect the majority of the developing countries;

2. Also notes that in certain developing countries the economic situation has been exacerbated, inter alia, by natural disasters affecting hundreds of millions of people and that in other developing countries encouraging rates of economic growth have been achieved;

3. Appeals to Governments to continue to utilize the United Nations system to strengthen further the spirit of solidarity necessary for the resolution of key development problems;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep these matters under review and to report, as appropriate, to the General Assembly on the progress achieved.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/110

28 July 1988 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1989/L.43), based on informal consultations on draft by Poland (E/1989/L.33); agenda item 2.

Meeting numbers. ESC 32, 35, 37.

Also on 28 July, the Council adopted resolution 1989/111 without vote.

Strengthening multilateral co-operation in international economic affairs

The Economic and Social Council,

Firmly rejecting trends towards unilateralism and discrimination in world economic affairs,

Seriously concerned at the effect of such trends on the multilateral trading system based on the principles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, in particular the fundamental principle of non-discrimination, and on the achievement of the objectives of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations,

Concerned at the persistence of structural imbalances in the world economy and stressing the need to reduce them so as to provide an international economic environment more supportive of renewed and sustained growth and development,

Bearing in mind the co-ordinating functions of the Economic and Social Council in relation to all the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with Articles 62 and 63 of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Acknowledges the need to continue to strengthen multilateralism as the foundation for international economic co-operation in order to create a supportive international economic environment for sustained growth and development world wide;

2. Affirms the need for in-depth discussion, in the appropriate international institutions, of questions relating to the co-ordination of macro-economic policies;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the Preparatory Committee of the Whole for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to International Economic Co-operation, in Particular to the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, a comprehensive analysis of ways and means of strengthening multilateral co-operation in international economic relations, including the role of the United Nations, taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed at the second regular session of 1989 of the Economic and Social Council on changes and imbalances in the world economy and their impact on international economic co-operation, and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1990 in the light of the outcome of the special session of the General Assembly.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/111

28 July 1988 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1989/L.44), based on informal consultations on draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (E/1989/L.30); agenda item 2.

Meeting numbers. ESC 32, 35, 37.

By decision 1989/182 of 28 July, the Council took note of a number of documents considered by it in connection with its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including the World Economic Survey 1989.(3)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second (Economic and Financial) Committee devoted a major part of its work during the General Assembly's 1989 regular session to development and international economic co-operation, making recommendations on a number of topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 82). A list of pertinent documents was included in part I of the Committee's report on that item,⁽⁴⁾ which the Assembly took note of on 19 December by decision 44/436.

By decision 44/459 of 22 December, the Assembly decided to include in its 1990 agenda an item on launching global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development.

Preparations for special session (1990)

As decided in 1988,⁽⁵⁾ the General Assembly's Second Committee reconvened on 27 February and 2 March 1989 to consider convening a special session of the Assembly in 1990 devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development in the developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In March, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 43/460 by recorded vote.

Special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, to be held in 1990

At its 90th plenary meeting, on 7 March 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided to convene from 23 to 27 April 1990, on the basis of the provisions set out in the annex to the present decision, a special session devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, and to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session an item entitled "Preparations for the special session of the General Assembly in 1990".

ANNEX

Special session of the General Assembly to be held in 1990

I. Purpose

1. In a rapidly changing and increasingly interdependent world, it is in the common interest of all members of the international community to take stock of the significance of the transformation of the world economy, to consider in greater depth ways and means of meeting the challenges and opportunities ahead, particularly those of the developing countries, and to provide more effective means of multilateral co-operation in the economic field. Concerted efforts will benefit all countries and will help ensure sustained growth in the world economy and particularly the recovery and restoration of economic growth and development in developing countries. A special session of the General Assembly is the appropriate forum for this purpose.

II. Focus

2. With a view to attaining the above-stated purpose, the special session will be a forum for dialogue, discussion and deliberation, focusing on enhanced international and regional economic co-operation, improved policy co-ordination and the formulation of policy recommendations. The General Assembly will review problems facing the world economy, consider the pressing priority issues in international economic relations, including the need for recovery and revitalization of growth and development in developing countries, and address those problems and issues taking into account their interrelationships. In this regard, the respective spheres of competence of the specialized institutions are recognized.

III. Linkage

3. The nature and importance of the issues merit a special session with the full and highest possible level of participation of all delegations. The session will be able to provide appropriate policy guidance and recommendations for the activities of the international community and the relevant bodies within the United Nations system. It could also provide useful guidelines for an international development strategy for the 1990s, as well as for other relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action for development.

IV. Outcome

4. The outcome should be a document reflecting a common understanding on appropriate policy guidance and recommendations and providing more effective means of multilateral co-operation in the economic field. The final document should be based on constructive dialogue, embody new approaches and reflect a new spirit in international co-operation. It should also help to generate and sharpen public awareness.

V. Preparations

5. The special session shall take place at United Nations Headquarters, from 23 to 27 April 1990.

6. The President of the General Assembly is invited to participate actively in the preparations for the session.

7. An intergovernmental preparatory committee of the whole shall be established to make the necessary preparations for the special session. The preparatory committee shall prepare the provisional agenda and submit a draft final document to the General Assembly at the special session.

8. In the light of paragraphs 1 to 4 above, the Secretary-General shall submit to the preparatory committee a comprehensive report on the state of international economic co-operation, in particular on effective ways and means of revitalizing the economic growth and development of the developing countries. The Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the General Assembly, is requested to carry out appropriate high-level consultations, including consultations with eminent personalities, in the preparation of his report, in order to contribute to the success of the special session.

9. The preparatory committee shall hold an organizational session in early March 1989 to elect its Bureau. The preparatory committee shall hold a brief session in June 1989 to consider the preliminary outline of the report of the Secretary-General and shall also hold two other sessions of one week each, as and when required.

10. The Chairman of the preparatory committee shall report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 on the work of the committee. The preparatory committee shall report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the progress of work.

11. In the light of paragraph 3 above, it is stressed that the preparatory process for the special session and for the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, as well as for other plans and programmes of the United Nations in the field of development and international economic co-operation, should be complementary and mutually supportive.

General Assembly decision 43/460

123-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/43/915/Add.9) by recorded vote (97-1), 2 March (meeting 52); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/43/L.86), based on informal consultations on draft by Tunisia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/43/L.39), orally revised; agenda item 82.

Financial implications. S-G, A/C.2/43/L.87.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Work of the preparatory committee. The Preparatory Committee of the Whole for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to International Economic Co-operation, in particular to the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, to take place in 1990, held its organizational and first sessions in 1989, both in New York. (6) The organizational session (13 and 16 March) considered the Committee's programme of work.

The first session (31 May-2 June) had before it the preliminary outline of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the state of international economic co-operation, in particular on effective ways and means of revitalizing the economic growth and development of the developing countries. (7) The final report was to be presented to the Assembly's special session.

The outline considered the status of the world economy and its prospects, and indicated measures that could revitalize economic growth, especially in the developing countries, by addressing the need to strengthen international economic cooperation; reinstate the development objective; overcome the debt crisis; enhance financial flows to developing countries; stabilize the international monetary system; open markets and strengthen the global trading system and commodity earnings; encourage regional and subregional co-operation among developing countries, particularly in Africa; assure sustained development without compromising the global environment; and use the United Nations system to co-ordinate development activities so that short-term exigencies could be seen in the perspective of longer-term economic and social goals.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/166, took note of an oral report on the Preparatory Committee's work, made by its Chairman.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted decision 44/444 without vote.

Preparations for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries

At its 85th plenary meeting, on 22 December 1989, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, decided:

(a) To take note with appreciation of the report of the Preparatory Committee of the Whole for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to International Economic Co-operation, in particular to the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries and of the views expressed by delegations on the preliminary outline of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General submitted to the Preparatory Committee at its first session;

(b) To take note also of the statement made by the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee before the Second Committee on 24 November 1989;

(c) To request the Preparatory Committee to continue its work on the basis of General Assembly decision 43/460 of 7 March 1989;

(d) To recommend that the Preparatory Committee bear in mind, in its preparations for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, the views expressed by delegations at the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

(e) To recommend to the Preparatory Committee that it consider at its second substantive session the following outline:

- (i) Main developments in the 1980s and the challenges of the 1990s and an assessment of obstacles and impediments to growth and development;
- (ii) The reactivation of economic growth and development in developing countries;

(iii) Strengthening and enhancing international economic co-operation and multilateralism in international economic relations;

(f) To transmit the text of the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee, annexed to the present decision, to the Preparatory Committee for consideration at its second substantive session.

ANNEX

1. The purpose of the present text—while recalling General Assembly decision 43/460 of 7 March 1989—is to provide further impetus and guidance to the work of the Preparatory Committee of the Whole for the Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to International Economic Co-operation, in particular to the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries and to facilitate an agreement on common approaches, efforts and actions to ensure, through international economic co-operation, sustained growth in the world economy, in particular, the revitalization of economic growth and development in the developing countries. The reactivation of economic growth and development in developing countries must be at the top of the international economic agenda.

2. International economic co-operation, in particular the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, could be greatly facilitated by the ongoing relaxation of political tensions. This relaxation should facilitate political commitment towards durable growth and development and agreement on ways and means of stimulating the world economy and of revitalizing international economic co-operation, in particular the growth and development of the developing countries, through, inter alia, the strengthening of the effectiveness of the United Nations.

3. The main developments in the 1980s are characterized by growing interdependence among nations and by different situations or conditions that exist among countries. Deep and rapid transformations in the global economy and in international economic relations are leading to changes in perceptions and policies. Special attention should be given to an assessment of developments and changes in the world economy in the 1980s and to the obstacles impeding growth and development in the developing countries.

4. The special session should bring to the attention of the international community the challenges of the 1990s. It should endeavour to reach agreement on addressing adequately the pressing interrelated problems and issues facing the world, in particular those affecting developing countries. Unless those problems and issues are solved, in particular those pressing interrelated problems that include problems arising from the excessive external indebtedness of developing countries, the prospects are ominous and we might witness an era of economic decline, social and political upheaval, and turmoil.

5. With the increased interdependence in the world, the interaction of national and international policies has become more important in bringing about a more stable and favourable international economic environment, in particular one that is supportive of growth and development of developing countries. Rapidly changing external circumstances require the strengthening of the capacity of national economies in order to render them more responsive to growth impulses and emerging opportunities for modernization, taking into account that the more significant a country is in terms of economic weight, the greater the impact of its policies on the international economic environment.

6. The special session should focus on the reactivation of economic growth and development of the developing countries. In this context, it is necessary to overcome the external debt crisis, provide adequate financial flows to developing countries, strengthen the international trading system, enlarge market access for exports of developing countries, address the problems faced by developing countries in the area of commodities, promote regional economic co-operation and integration, and facilitate the creation, transfer and absorption of new and emerging technologies. The attainment of such goals should enable developing countries to achieve the central objective of sustained, durable and equitable growth and development, with a new perspective that should contribute, through, inter alia, human resources development, to the expansion and modernization of their economies, in order to improve the living standards of their populations and effectively eradicate poverty. Attention should be paid to national efforts in all countries and to international co-operation in the 1990s.

7. Recalling Assembly decision 43/460, the special session should also focus on enhanced international and regional economic co-operation and improved policy co-ordination. Common approaches should be sought to ensure that the international monetary and financial system is stable and more supportive of global growth and development, particularly growth and development of developing countries, and to integrate better all countries in the world economy and the international trading system, taking into account existing asymmetries, the special and differential treatment accorded to developing countries and the ongoing process of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations.

8. Sustained and sustainable development and the protection and enhancement of the global environment are also recognized as a common concern and should be addressed. In-depth consideration should be given to this concern in the framework of the preparations for a United Nations conference on environment and development, noting that the largest part of the current emission of pollutants into the environment, including toxic and hazardous wastes, originates in developed countries and, therefore, recognizing that those countries have the main responsibility for combating such pollution.

9. In addressing its objectives, the special session should pay due attention to the human resources dimension. It should stress the importance of international co-operation in supporting and strengthening the development of human resources in developing countries, the inextricable link between education, acquisition of skills and technical training, and economic growth and sustained development. There is also a need for human resources development strategies to include all members of society and to encompass supportive measures in such vital and related areas as health, nutrition, employment and population.

10. The special session should consider appropriate guidance for strengthening and enhancing international economic co-operation and multilateralism in international economic relations, including co-ordination of macro-economic policies and the compatibility of those policies with the objectives of development, as well as strengthening the unique role of the United Nations system as a universal forum for economic dialogue and co-operation.

11. The special session should complement and be supportive of the international development strategy for the 1990s, as well as other relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action for development, and should give an impetus to the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

General Assembly decision 44/444

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/859) without vote. 15 December (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.85), based on informal consultations on draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.70); agenda item 83.

Preparations for a strategy for the fourth UN development decade

Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole. The Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000), established by the General Assembly in 1988,(8) held its organizational, first and second sessions during 1989, all in New York.(9) At the organizational session (15-17 March), the Committee elected its officers, adopted its agenda and made arrangements for future sessions.

At its first session (5-9 June), the Committee had before it the Secretary-General's May report on the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.(10) The report summarized action taken by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and CDP (see below), discussed some recent developments that would affect an assessment of the problems of the world economy in the 1990s drew attention to a 1988 report on socio-economic perspectives for the 1990s(11) and analysed some discussions about the content and thrust of a new strategy that had taken place in the United Nations system.

The report concluded that, in order to address the problems of future international co-operation, the strategy should: reflect and respond to rapid changes in international economic realities; aim at accelerating socio-economic progress on a wide front and seek to ensure that present obstacles to development were removed; promote resolution of the debt problems of developing countries, enhance their access to markets and increase financial flows for development; emphasize human resources development and recognize that children and the young were the agents of development, that half of the people of the world were women, and that education, health, employment and food security were the cornerstones of development; and respond forcefully to signs of environmental disstress of all kinds. Annexed to the report was the proposed summary outline of a strategy.

Also before the first session was a note by the Secretariat(12) transmitting an extract of the proceedings of the Trade and Development Board (TDB) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) covering the Board's discussion of preparations for the strategy (see below).

On 7 July, the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee reported to the Economic and Social Council on the Committee's work. The Council took note of that report by decision 1989/169 of 26 July.

At its second session (11-15 September), the Committee had before it a note by the Secretariat(13) suggesting, in the light of discussions at the first session, a possible structure for a new strategy that could cover the subject in five main sections. Those were, in sum, perspectives: the experience of the 1980s, salient and novel features of the world economy and prospects for the 1990s; main purpose and goals which Governments wished to articulate in a strategy; international and national policies called for to reach the agreed goals and identification of issues on which consensus seemed necessary for a strategy to be meaningful; the role of targets and indicators in the formulation, implementation and monitoring of the strategy; and the role of the United Nations system in the strategy's implementation.

The Committee also had before it position papers by a number of countries and groups of countries.

ACC action. In accordance with a 1988 ACC decision,(14) the ACC Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives (seventeenth session, Geneva, 28-31 March)(15) continued the process of inter-agency consultation on the preparation of a new international development strategy. The Task Force noted discussions on the new strategy that had been held throughout the United Nations system since its 1988 meeting(14) and considered the report of its Technical Working Group (Geneva, 24-26 January), which had discussed economic and social indicators in a new strategy.

At its first regular session of 1989 (Geneva, 19-21 April),(16) ACC decided to transmit to the Economic and Social Council the Task Force's report on its March session. By decision 1989/168 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Task Force's report, which was circulated in a note by the Secretary-General.(17)

At its eighteenth session (New York, 18-20 September),(18) the Task Force continued its review of the state of preparations for the strategy, noting that progress had been made towards an agreed structure within which the substantive themes of primary concern to various groups of countries could be accommodated.

UNCTAD action. In accordance with agreed conclusions adopted on 22 March,(19) the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) included the question of UNCTAD's contribution to the preparations for the international development strategy in its agenda. Also pursuant to that decision, the UNCTAD Secretary-General held special consultations on 16 May to consider the question.

On 31 October,(20) TDB decided to transmit to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy a report by the UNCTAD secretariat on UNCTAD's contribution. It also decided that, under the chairmanship of the UNCTAD Secretary-General, consultations would take place in 1990 to decide on subsequent action to contribute to the preparatory process of the strategy.

CDP action. CDP discussed key elements of an international development strategy for the 1990s at its May 1989 session(1) and concluded that they were: accelerated economic growth, greater concern for human development, an absolute reduction in the number of people suffering from severe poverty and deprivation, and restraining the deterioration in the physical environment. Those four elements were not separate issues but strands of a coherent approach to development policy in the next decade.

UNDP action. On 30 June,(21) the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Governing Council requested the Administrator to make a presentation to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy as his contribution to the preparation of the strategy, bearing in mind the views expressed during the Council's session on UNDP's role in the 1990s (see next chapter).

CPC/ACC Joint Meetings. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and ACC held Joint Meetings in New York from 16 to 18 October.(22) Following discussions on the preparation of the international development strategy, the Joint Meetings stated that ACC should assess the experience gained in strengthening co-ordination within the United Nations system relating to implementation of the Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) with a view to identifying measures for enhanced co-ordination and co-operation during the 1990s, and should present suggestions and recommendations to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole. The executive heads of United Nations organizations and agencies should bring to the attention of their governing bodies the relevant parts of the new strategy with a view to adopting policies and programmes to facilitate its implementation. It was reaffirmed that Member States had the overall responsibility for the elaboration of the new international development strategy; United Nations organs, organizations and bodies would provide inputs in order to contribute to intergovernmental deliberations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee and based on a draft by the Commission for Social Development,(23) the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/55.

The social dimension of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/182 of 20 December 1988 on the preparation of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

Reaffirming the fundamental importance of social goals in the development process,

Recognizing that social and economic policy measures are complementary in the achievement of development objectives,

Recognizing also the importance for all countries of increasing and strengthening national and international, as well as public and private, co-operation in both the social and economic spheres,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, established by the General Assembly in its resolution 43/182, will submit a progress report to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session, with a view to finalizing the strategy in time for its adoption in 1990,

1. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole, in preparing the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, take into consideration the proposals of the Commission for Social Development contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Decides that the Commission for Social Development should consider the implementation of social components of the strategy at its thirty-second session.

ANNEX

Proposals of the Commission for Social Development on the social dimension of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade

The Commission for Social Development proposes that the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade should:

(a) Emphasize the interaction of social and economic policies, in particular the idea that social policies and programmes should be linked to both short-term and long-term economic development efforts;

(b) Emphasize the need to improve the social situation, in particular of developing countries, highlighting poverty in all its forms as an issue requiring urgent action by all;

(c) Be action-oriented and promote international action to create an appropriate global environment for social development;

(d) Take into account the roles of both the public and private sectors;

(e) Support the advancement of women as a global concern;

(f) Promote the social integration of all segments of society and specific population groups;

(g) Propose measures to strengthen the capacity of countries, particularly developing countries, for co-ordinating social policy.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/55

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25); agenda item 11.

In other action, the Council, in resolution 1989/90 of 26 July, recommended that the General Assembly give due weight to the role of population and the importance of population policies and activities and integrate them into the goals and objectives of the strategy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/169 without vote.

Preparation of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/193 of 11 December 1987 and 43/182 of 20 December 1988,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade;

2. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee adopt the outline contained in the annex to the present resolution as the basis for the elaboration of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.

ANNEX

Outline for the elaboration of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade

I. Preamble

Review of the 1980s and prospects for the 1990s, with a view to adopting a flexible economic framework for growth and development for the 1990s, taking into account the results of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries.

II. Goals and objectives

To promote the development of developing countries in the context of the strengthening of global development.

III. Policies and measures

The strategy should focus on national efforts in all countries and on international co-operation for the 1990s.

The strategy should address, inter alia:

(a) Reactivation and acceleration of broad durable economic growth and development, including:

(i) External debt;

(ii) International trade and commodities;

(iii) Technology;

(iv) Industrial policies; food and agricultural policies;

(v) Economic policy frameworks;

(b) Priority aspects of development:

(i) Eradication of poverty and hunger;

(ii) Human resources and institutional development;

(iii) Population;

(iv) Environment;

(v) Food and agriculture;

(c) The need to take account of different requirements, situations and problems, including those of the least developed countries;

(d) Development financing.

IV. Role of United Nations organs

V. Review and appraisal

General Assembly resolution 44/169

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.1) without vote, 15 November (meeting 34); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.11); agenda item 82 (a).

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States

In response to a 1985 General Assembly request,(24) the Secretary-General submitted a May report, with later addenda,(25) on the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, adopted by the Assembly in 1974.(26) The report concluded that, although the Charter remained unimplemented, there were grounds for cautious optimism. The easing of international tensions had created a climate in which further progress could be foreseen; specifically, there had been a renewal of interest in multilateral approaches and a recognition of the usefulness and indispensability of the United Nations. The Charter's true significance lay not so much in its precise formulations as in its intent and its overall conception of the movement of history and, from that perspective, the Charter could be seen to have been remarkably prescient. In the emerging complex and interdependent world of the future, new levels of global co-operation would be required to safeguard the security of the planet. The design and management of the regimes and institutions that would be devised for managing interdependence had to involve the participation of the developing world. The Charter clearly foresaw the need for those elements, and its principles and goals would remain a source of inspiration as future challenges were confronted.

The Secretary-General provided summaries of replies from nine Member States to a questionnaire distributed by the Secretary-General in response to a 1986 Assembly request.(27)

In decision 1989/182 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/170 by recorded vote.

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, which laid the foundations of the new international economic order,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Deeply concerned that, since the adoption of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, the economic situation of the developing countries has continuously worsened and the economic, social, scientific and technological disparities between the developed and the developing countries have continued to widen,

Emphasizing that the aggravation of global economic problems, which affect in particular the developing countries, necessitates more concerted international action in order to facilitate the establishment of just and equitable economic relations and the promotion of international social justice,

1. Calls upon all States to take concrete steps and measures to implement fully the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, thus contributing to the effective restructuring of the international economic system and to the reactivation of the economic growth and development of the developing countries;

2. Reaffirms the right of every country to adopt without external interference the economic and social system that it deems most appropriate for its own development.

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session an analytical report on the progress achieved in compliance with the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and its impact on the solution of the main economic problems confronting the developing countries and the reactivation of their economic growth and development.

General Assembly resolution 44/170

19 December 1989 Meeting 83 131-1-23 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.3) by recorded vote (103-0-23), 3 November (meeting 30); draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.9); agenda item 82 (c).

International co-operation for economic security

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(28) the Secretary-General submitted an April 1989 report on international economic security.(29) He analysed responses received from eminent persons from all regions, as requested by the Assembly, covering the concept of international economic security, policies to maintain and enhance it, and the role of the United Nations. The Secretary-General stated that the objective of international economic security was to ensure that a global normative and institutional framework was in place within which the goal of security for all could be achieved by enhancing the stability, predictability and reliability of international economic relations. Areas in which the United Nations could make positive contributions to enhanced economic security included: debt reduction; a successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations; environmental protection; and increased food production levels. Another area was in the early identification, analysis and monitoring of world economic and social developments.

By decision 1989/182 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/231 without vote.

Report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 42/165

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/165 of 11 December 1987, as adopted, on international economic security,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question,

Emphasizing the role of the United Nations and the interest of its Member States in strengthening international co-operation for ensuring sustained development, particularly in the developing countries, and balanced growth in the world economy,

1. Notes with appreciation the work undertaken by the Secretary-General on the subject;

2. Recognizes that the discussions that have taken place on the subject have contributed to a growing common understanding of economic interdependence and have played a useful role in the continuing efforts to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of activities of the United Nations in the economic field and strengthen multilateral co-operation in international economic affairs to the benefit of all countries, especially developing countries;

3. Emphasizes that a universal, constructive and comprehensive dialogue aimed at revitalizing economic growth and development, in particular the development of developing countries, is essential if effective and co-operative approaches to international economic issues are to be found;

4. Invites the concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with their respective mandates, to consider in their current activities the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take the present resolution into account when preparing his report for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries.

General Assembly resolution 44/231

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/832) by consensus, 15 November (meeting 34); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.39), based on informal consultations on draft by USSR (A/C.2/44/L.14); agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 15-17, 19, 20, 25, 34; plenary 85.

Eradication of poverty

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,(30) the Secretary-General submitted a September report on international co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries.(31) The report described the extent and intensity of poverty in those countries. The poor constituted close to half of the population of the developing countries as a whole (not including China). It also discussed the impact of the economic crisis of the 1980s on poverty, the capacity of the poor to cope, and international co-operation to facilitate poverty eradication.

The report examined three programme areas that had been used in poverty reduction: development of small enterprises; investment in urban infrastructure; and integrated rural development. It also set out policy and operational considerations with regard to earnings enhancement, security enhancement, poverty targeting and institutional aspects.

The report concluded that the economic crisis of the 1980s had had a generally adverse impact on poverty in Africa and brought to a halt the amelioration of the conditions of the poor achieved in Latin America during previous years. International co-operation was essential if progress was to be made towards achieving the goal of eradicating poverty on an urgent, lasting and comprehensive basis.

A variety of approaches-ranging from short-run welfare measures to long-term human capital formation, and from small-scale, targeted activities to macro-economic policies-could contribute to poverty eradication in important ways. The formulation and implementation of policies that aimed to increase the earnings capacity of the poor and make them less vulnerable to future crises remained a major and urgent challenge to policy makers and multilateral agencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/212 without vote.

International co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 43/195 of 20 December 1988 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/47 of 27 May 1988, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/10 of 2 March 1989 concerning extreme poverty,

Realizing that insufficient attention has been paid to the human phenomenon of extreme poverty in developing countries, which frequently eludes international and intergovernmental action and current statistical analysis,

Realizing also that poverty, while not a new human phenomenon, has increased sharply, reaching alarming proportions in developing countries, threatening the very socio-political fabric of those countries and undermining peace and harmony,

Deeply concerned that more than one billion people throughout the world, mostly in developing countries, are still living in abject poverty and misery, with hunger, malnutrition, disease, illiteracy and the prospect of premature death as an integral part of their lives,

Deeply concerned also about the sharp decline in living standards, income and employment levels, and health, nutritional and educational standards that has aggravated widespread poverty in both the urban and rural areas of most developing countries,

Noting that the eradication of poverty in developing countries is one of the most important development objectives shared by both developing and developed countries and that it requires national and international action,

Noting also that the eradication of poverty, as a national objective, has merited the highest priority in domestic policies and national development efforts of developing countries and that specific programmes are needed to solve this problem,

Aware that the difficult economic situation of developing countries, exacerbated by specific aspects of international economic conditions which have adverse consequences, has hindered the development process in those countries and their capacity to undertake social and economic programmes for the eradication of poverty,

Aware also that the eradication of poverty is made more difficult by a range of factors in the international economic environment which impede growth and development in developing countries, inter alia, the worsening in the terms of trade, the persistence of protectionism, a sharp decline in financial and capital flows, high real interest rates, depressed prices for many commodities and the heavy burden of external debt,

Stressing that in developing countries there is a strong relationship between poverty, development and the environment and that concerted action is required, at all levels, to ensure comprehensive and effective solutions aimed at the eradication of poverty,

Emphasizing that the very large number of people living in poverty in developing countries is a challenge to the international community and, at the same time, a potential resource which, through new and imaginative approaches to the eradication of poverty in developing countries, could be integrated into the development process and become an engine for growth and development in those countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the subject;

2. Recognizes that a supportive international economic environment, together with a growth-oriented development approach, is crucial to the success of efforts of developing countries to eradicate poverty;

3. Calls upon the international community to intensify, on a priority basis, its development of action-oriented programmes with short-term, medium-term and long-term approaches for the eradication of poverty in support of the efforts of the developing countries themselves;

4. Invites the international community to adopt specific measures designed to increase financial flows to developing countries, including official development assistance, in order to strengthen the efforts of those countries to eradicate poverty;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to co-ordinate urgent appropriate actions for the formulation, in co-operation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other multilateral bodies, of improved and enhanced action-oriented technical co-operation programmes for the eradication of poverty within the framework of the organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with the policies, priorities and strategies of those countries;

6. Invites Governments to include in the preparations for the proposed United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in 1992, and in the conference itself, the vital issue of the eradication of poverty, integrated with relevant environmental issues and with a view to strengthening international co-operation in environment and development;

7. Requests the Committee for Development Planning, taking into account the fact that the question of the eradication of poverty has been included as one of the priority aspects of development in the recommended outline for the elaboration of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade, to submit to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, at its session to be held from 4 to 15 June 1990, in the light of the present resolution, concrete proposals for action for the eradication of poverty in developing countries;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the regional commissions, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a progress report and at its forty-sixth session a comprehensive report containing, inter alia:

(a) An analysis of the diversified impact of adverse international economic conditions on the intensification of poverty in developing countries;

(b) A summary of the experience of developing countries concerning the eradication of poverty;

(c) Specific recommendations for effective policy measures for the urgent and permanent eradication of poverty, in accordance with the present resolution;

(d) An account of the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth and forty-sixth sessions an item entitled "International co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries".

General Assembly resolution 44/212

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.11) without vote, 15 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairmen (A/C.2/44/L.84), based on informal consultations on draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.48); agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 44, 46, 49, 50; plenary 85.

Rural development

The ACC Task Force on Rural Development (seventeenth meeting, Vienna, 31 May-2 June)(32) considered a progress report by the lead agency in rural development, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), which included an overview of activities in certain areas of rural development undertaken by members of the Task Force during 1988. Also discussed were: people's participation in rural development; monitoring and evaluation; co-ordination and collaboration on rural development and agrarian reform activities and programmes proposed for the 1988-1989 biennium; the evaluation of United Nations rural development activities in three African least developed countries (LDCs) being carried out by the Joint Inspection Unit; implementation for rural women of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII); the impact of national macro-economic policies on the rural poor; and the Task Force's programme of work and timeframe for 1989/90.

Coercive economic measures

In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,(33) the Secretary-General submitted an October report(34) summarizing the views of 14 Governments and 8 organizations of the United Nations system on coercive economic measures against developing countries.

Attached to the report were the views of a group of experts, which met at Geneva from 1 to 3 May, to consider effective approaches to the elimination of the use of coercive measures against developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/215 by recorded vote.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Reaffirming article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which declares that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing international trade and trade policies for development contained in its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 152(VI) of 2 July 1983 on rejection of coercive economic measures, and the principles and rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and paragraph 7 (iii) of the Ministerial Declaration adopted on 29 November 1982 by the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement at their thirty-eighth session,

Reaffirming its resolutions 38/197 of 20 December 1983, 39/210 of 18 December 1984, 40/185 of 17 December 1985, 41/165 of 5 December 1986 and 42/173 of 11 December 1987, and considering that further work needs to be undertaken in order to implement them,

Gravely concerned that the use of coercive measures adversely affects the economies and development efforts of developing countries and that, in some cases, those measures have worsened, creating a negative impact on international economic co-operation,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries;

2. Calls upon the international community to adopt urgent and effective measures in order to eliminate the use of coercive measures against developing countries, which have been increasing and have taken new forms;

3. Deplores the fact that some developed countries continue to apply and, in some cases, have increased the scope and magnitude of economic measures that have the purpose of exerting, directly or indirectly, coercion on the sovereign decisions of developing countries subject to those measures;

4. Calls upon the developed countries to refrain from exercising political coercion through the application of economic instruments with the purpose of inducing changes in the economic or social systems, as well as in the domestic or foreign policies, of other countries;

5. Reaffirms that developed countries should refrain from threatening or applying trade and financial restrictions, blockades, embargoes and other economic sanctions, incompatible with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and in violation of undertakings contracted multilaterally and bilaterally, against developing countries as a form of political and economic coercion that affects their political, economic and social development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to designate an identifiable unit within the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to collect pertinent information on economic measures taken by developed countries as a means of coercion against developing countries, which unit should receive and assess such information and produce a periodic report with recommendations for consideration by the General Assembly;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

During 1989, the United Nations continued to promote economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC), mainly through UNCTAD. Technical co-operation among developing countries received the support of UNDP (see next chapter).

The first session of the Meeting of Heads of Secretariats of Economic Co-operation and Integration Groupings of Developing Countries was held at Geneva from 15 to 17 March.⁽³⁵⁾ The meeting discussed strengthening the link between national economic development planning and the subregional/regional economic integration process; debt problems and structural adjustment policies of developing countries and their relation to economic integration; and measures needed to revitalize integration schemes of developing countries and strengthen co-operation between different schemes. The meeting adopted a series of measures and actions for revitalizing the integration process among developing countries in the following areas: the link between national policies and integration objectives; strengthening of payment and financial underpinnings of the integration process; co-operation among integration groupings at the regional and international levels; expanding the role of enterprises (public and private) in the integration process; production co-operation; and services.

The UNCTAD Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries held its fifth session at Geneva from 1 to 12 June.⁽³⁶⁾ In a 12 June resolution,⁽³⁷⁾ the Committee stressed the need for developing countries to strengthen their national efforts to promote ECDC and noted that, given the magnitude of macro-economic problems, a more supportive and stable external environment was needed to enhance the abilities of developing countries to achieve the objectives of ECDC. It called on the UNCTAD Secretary-General to implement further measures to support ECDC, including in the following areas: a project for UNDP financing aimed at promoting co-operation among economic integration groupings of developing countries to follow up on the recommendations of the Meeting of Heads of Secretariats; the support of activities promoting increased investment flows and transfer of technology between enterprises of developing countries; dissemination of information on investment laws and regulations of developing countries; support of existing subregional and regional business information promotion centres and establishment of new computer-based regional and interregional investment information and promotion activities; and assistance to developing countries in monetary and financial co-operation among developing countries as an integral activity for effective trade expansion and promotion.

The Committee underlined the need to further promote co-ordination between work in ECDC and other UNCTAD activities and stressed the importance of technical assistance in ECDC. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to continue efforts to raise additional extrabudgetary resources for ECDC activities and to give particular attention to support for African countries.

In resolution 1989/21 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council affirmed the need to enlarge the role of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations in promoting new forms of ECDC.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1989⁽¹⁾ stated that the output of the world economy grew by some 4.3 per cent in 1988 and world trade increased by 8.3 per cent, the highest growth rate since the early 1970s. That rapid expansion was likely to give way to more moderate increases in world output and trade in 1989 as measures had been taken to contain inflationary pressures in the industrialized countries in late 1988 and early 1989, and more cautious attitudes on the part of investors and consumers in the big industrial countries were slowing the growth of aggregate demand.

As was the case throughout the 1980s, the fastest growing economies were in Asia, where a great many countries, including China and India, showed per capita growth rates considerably higher than those in the old industrialized countries.

However, in much of Africa and Latin America, per capita income was declining instead of growing and the gap between the poorest countries and the richest was widening. The most probable short-term scenario for 1989 and 1990 was one of a modest slow-down in output and a gradual deceleration of inflation in major industrial countries. However, there was a risk that a sudden change in expectations in international financial markets could put an even heavier burden on monetary policy to counteract destabilizing price or exchange rate movements, which could make for an abrupt contraction.

In response to a 1988 Economic and Social Council request,(2) the Survey devoted a separate section to the socio-economic attainment of women. In response to another 1988 Council request,(3) a separate section discussed the early identification, analysis and monitoring of world economic developments. A further section presented selected demographic indications in tabular form.

In a note giving an update date of the world economy at the end of 1989(4) the Secretary-General said that world production and trade continued to expand in 1989, but more slowly than in 1988. Preliminary estimates indicated that world output increased by some 3 per cent and international trade grew by around 6.5 per cent. The developed market economies continued to grow in 1989, the seventh year of uninterrupted expansion. However, the rate of growth slowed to just over 3 per cent from 4.2 per cent in 1988. Among the large economies, the sharpest slow-down was in Canada and the United States. Estimated growth in the United States was around 2.7 per cent for 1989, or less than two thirds of the 4.4 per cent growth in 1988. Canada's deceleration was similar. Most other major economies grew almost as fast as in 1988 or even faster.

South and East Asia continued to be the most rapidly expanding region in the world, but even that region did not maintain the rapid pace of the previous year. Several export-oriented economies were adversely affected by the deceleration in some of the developed market economies and China and, in some cases, by earlier revaluations of their currencies and increasing unit labour costs. In some of those countries, the deterioration in export prospects was being offset by a boom in private domestic consumption brought about by several years of steady growth.

In Latin America, output increased modestly after a decrease in 1988. The improvement was due almost entirely to a turn-around in Brazil, although Mexico also improved its growth performance. The rate of growth of the other countries in the region was less than in 1988, and growth in the region as a whole was insufficient to avoid a fall in per capita output for the second consecutive year.

Growth in Africa in 1989 was estimated to have been only slightly higher than in 1988, meaning a further decline in per capita output. Regional wars and civil unrest continued to be a major impediment to economic and social progress in several countries.

In 1989, oil prices were some 20 per cent higher than in 1988, and the energy-exporting countries of West Asia benefited accordingly. Nevertheless, those economies were still adjusting to the lower oil prices that had prevailed since 1986. That adjustment also had a major influence on neighbouring countries through three main channels: a decrease in energy-exporting countries' imports from them; a collapse in workers' remittances; and a reduction in development assistance flows.

China's growth slowed to about 5 per cent in 1989, one of its lowest levels in the 1980s. Industrial output increased by about 7 per cent, compared with almost 18 per cent in 1988, and agricultural output probably increased by some 4 per cent. The economy, which had been expanding rapidly in the 1980s, grew by 11 per cent in 1988. Such growth was becoming unsustainable, with serious imbalances developing. The rate of inflation rose to an unprecedented 25 per cent in the first half of 1989, and the economic slow-down that took place was mainly due to contractionary measures taken.

With regard to Eastern Europe and the USSR, it was noted that, due to political upheavals and political and economic reforms, output grew by only 2.5 per cent in 1989, a modest rate even in comparison with the average rate of the 1980s. The growth of industrial production slowed considerably, especially in Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Poland and the USSR, and agricultural production in most of Eastern Europe probably increased by only about 2 per cent.

The Trade and Development Report, 1989(5) stated that the division of the world economy into high-growth and low-growth areas could not be explained primarily by differences in growth potential or in the quality of policy-making. Depression, disorder and debt formed a vicious and tenacious circle. Breaking out of the circle would require a new level of solidarity within and among countries. There was a need for consensus on how best to share the burdens and fruits of adjustment and for foreign creditors to lift the weight of debt from developing nations.

The Report devoted a section to the least developed countries (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/113 without vote.

Relationship between economic and social factors in development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/179 of 17 December 1985 on patterns of consumption,

Having considered the World Economic Survey, 1989 and the views expressed during the general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, at its second regular session of 1989,

Concerned at the worsening economic situation of many developing countries, which includes a significant decline in living conditions, the persistence and increase of widespread poverty in a large number of countries and the decrease of the main economic and social indicators in those countries,

Aware of the close relationship between economic and social factors in the development process, and convinced of the need for an integrated approach to development,

1. Decides that at its organizational session for 1990 the Council shall recommend the modalities by which it will address the relationship between economic and social factors in the growth and development process, taking into account the balanced treatment that should be given to those factors;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, drawing upon the expertise of the competent organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to include in the World Economic Survey a separate chapter containing an in-depth review of the relationship between economic and social factors and an analysis of the impact of the world economic situation, including external indebtedness and other important problems in the areas of trade, finance and income, on the social situation of the developing countries.

On 26 July, the Council adopted resolution 1989/85 without vote.

Role of the United Nations in the early identification, analysis and monitoring of world economic developments

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988/75 of 29 July 1988,

Emphasizing the role of the United Nations and the common interest in strengthening international co-operation in the economic and social fields for the purpose of ensuring balanced and sustained growth and development of the world economy,

Acknowledging the importance of short-term macro-economic forecasting and of longer-term projections of world socio-economic development,

Acknowledging also that the early identification of macro-economic disturbances is an important element in averting their potentially negative effects at both the national and the international level,

Recognizing that each country must be able to provide and obtain timely information on developments, trends and processes affecting all countries,

Recognizing the special requirements of developing countries which may have deficiencies in their infrastructures for gathering and analysing socio-economic information on global trends and emerging problems affecting the development process,

Noting that, in view of the world-wide repercussions that sudden economic shocks can have, the international system's capacity for early identification of potential trouble-spots should be improved,

1. Highly commends the Secretary-General for the survey of the mechanisms and means currently available within the United Nations system for early identification, analysis and monitoring of world economic developments;

2. Acknowledges that for the early identification of emerging problems the United Nations should aim at improving its analytical and forecasting activities on a co-ordinated basis and should:

(a) Strengthen information links within the United Nations;

(b) Improve existing mechanisms and means of providing socio-economic data available in the United Nations in a comprehensive and readily accessible form for the use of policy makers and others;

(c) Further develop links and increase the flow of information between the United Nations and national research and information centres, wherever feasible;

(d) Expand the analysis of options and possible actions that might be taken in connection with emerging problems in the world economy, with a view to encouraging Member States to improve their own analytical work and forecasting activities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to present to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990 proposals that could be implemented within existing resources to improve the work of the United Nations on the early identification, analysis and monitoring of emerging problems in the world economy in accordance with the present resolution.

Development planning and public administration

Development planning

At its twenty-fifth session (New York, 9-12 May),⁽¹⁾ the Committee for Development Planning discussed the world economy in the 1980s, elements of a strategy for the 1990s (see above) and water (see PART THREE, Chapter VI). The Committee also discussed the question of identification of the least developed among the developing countries (see below).

In the 1980s, CDP noted, some countries, especially in Asia, grew rapidly, while many developing countries, especially in Africa and Latin America, suffered severe losses in real per capita income. It appeared that successful countries gave priority to human development, including the creation of a well-trained and educated labour force, maintained a high rate of investment, often through trade policies oriented towards greater openness, and financed that investment largely through domestic savings.

While performance records diverged in the 1980s, policy attitudes appeared to converge. There was a new political openness characterized by reduced ideological conflict and the prospect of reduced expenditure in armaments in both the industrialized countries and the third world. In many countries, a better understanding of difficult economic realities had contributed to a new pragmatism in economic policy thinking and formulation.

Those changes in circumstances and policy choices created a potentially unprecedented opportunity for accelerating growth to benefit the low-growth countries and reduce disparities in performance. CDP believed that that opportunity called for an international development strategy for the 1990s, emphasizing accelerated economic growth through increased levels and efficiency of domestic investment, with special emphasis on human resource development, and encouraging a more supportive international economic environment. Such a policy would seek both to preserve trading opportunities for small countries and provide adequate debt relief for countries implementing policy reform.

In decision 1989/182 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report on CDP's twenty-fifth session.⁽¹⁾

Technical co-operation

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCO) executed 168 projects in development issues and policies in 1989 with delivery of $37.1 million, compared with $33.2 million in 1988.⁽²⁾

The importance of development planning was highlighted as developing countries sought to maximize benefits from resources available to them and to mitigate the social costs of economic difficulties, structural adjustment and retrenchment of government budgets and services. DTCO, therefore, strengthened its expertise in directly applicable areas of planning such as public-sector investment programming and international technical and financial assistance co-ordination, including development of computerized information systems to improve monitoring and management of those areas and strengthened linkages between financial and overall macro-economic planning and management.

Public administration

The Ninth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance (New York, 14-23 March)⁽³⁾ reviewed major current issues facing public administration and finance systems in developing countries and identified a number of policy and programme actions to be undertaken at the national level to improve the effectiveness of public-sector management in the national development process. Its recommendations addressed: policy analysis and development of policy alternatives; human resources development and management development; management of public money; issues in government financial management; public enterprises; and development and management of government information systems. The Meeting also recommended several specific activities to be undertaken at the international level, particularly under the United Nations central programme in public administration and finance.

With regard to the 1991-1997 medium-term plan of the United Nations programme in public administration and finance, the Meeting suggested two additional subprogramme areas: ethics in public services and the relationship between citizens and administration. It stressed the need for UNDP to mobilize adequate funds for the Special Action Programme in Public Administration and Management for Africa (SAPAM) and recommended that SAPAM receive assistance from UNDP's new Management Development Programme.

The Meeting noted that the Declaration on Local Self-Government, considered by it in 1987,⁽⁴⁾ stressed the importance of local government in national development. It was not possible to carry out a comprehensive review of the Declaration since only 11 Governments had submitted comments to the Secretary-General on it. The Meeting recommended that the Secretary-General request Governments that had not done so to submit comments as soon as possible.

In a 19 April report,⁽⁵⁾ the Secretary-General commented on the Ninth Meeting's recommendations, noting that they were sound and reflected the interests and pressing needs of developing countries in public administration and finance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted decision 1989/114 without vote.

Tenth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance

At its 12th plenary meeting, on 22 May 1989, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of the report of the Ninth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance, held at New York from 14 to 23 March 1989, and the report of the Secretary-General thereon, decided:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to convene the Tenth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance in 1991; the Meeting should review the programme of work in public administration and finance, especially in the context of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, the progress made in the Special Action Programme in Public Administration and Management for Africa and the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations in public administration and finance, in particular the development of specific programmes and proposals for technical co-operation among developing countries;

(6) That the Meeting should also focus on current issues in public administration and finance with a view to providing timely technical advice to developing countries and should accord special attention, inter alia:

- (i) To assisting Governments, as requested, in strengthening policy formulation processes by improving, in particular, government budgeting and accounting systems;
- (ii) To developing ways of identifying specific needs for training programmes for promoting human resources development in the public sector.

Economic and Social Council decision 1989/114

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/84) without vote, 16 May (meeting 6); draft by Lesotho and China (E/1989/C.1/L.1), orally revised; agenda item 5.

Technical co-operation

During 1989, DTCO implemented 119 projects in public administration and finance, with a delivery of $50.8 million, compared with an $18.6 million delivery in 1988.(2) Interregional advisers undertook 47 missions in tax administration and resource mobilization; management development and training; government budgeting and financial management, including accounting and auditing; public enterprise; and administrative reform.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated LDCs were considered in several United Nations forums during 1989. No new countries were added to the list, which stood at 42: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen.

In a section devoted to LCDs, the UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1989(1) stated that LDCs were characterized by low levels of income, literacy and industrialization. Their per capita income in 1986 was only a quarter of that in other developing countries, adult literacy rates were only half, and the share of manufacturing in total gross domestic product (GDP) was less than half.

In addition to discussing the economic, infrastructural and social, gender-related, geographical and environmental differences of LDCs, the Report also discussed structural adjustment programmes and the experience of eight individual LDCs with adjustment.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1989/23 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council emphasized the need for the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations (TNCs) to assist Governments of LDCs to strengthen their capabilities in dealing with TNCs. In resolution 1989/89 of 26 July, the Council decided that special attention should be accorded, in the activities of the United Nations system, to the population situation in LDCs.

Identification of LDCs

At its 1989 session,(2) CDP discussed criteria that might supplement or replace some of those used to designate countries as least developed. The Committee made observations on the need for periodic review of the list of LDCs, the need for the qualifying criteria (per capita GDP, share of manufacturing output in GDP, and adult literacy rate) to be reviewed continually in the light of changing circumstances, and the possible use of other indicators, such as a "quality of life" index. It also expressed the view that the economic and social implication of governmental policies should be taken into account. The importance of locational vulnerabilities was stressed by some Committee members. CDP asked the Secretariat to continue its analysis of the criteria and to report to it in 1990.

Preparations for the Second UN Conference on LDCs

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request⁽³⁾ the Secretary-General submitted an August 1989 report on the state of preparations for the Second (1990) United Nations Conference on LDCs⁽⁴⁾. The first conference on LDCs, held in 1981,⁽⁵⁾ adopted the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs, which was endorsed by the General Assembly later that year.⁽⁶⁾

The Secretary-General noted that the first of two preparatory meetings convened by the Assembly, the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of LDCs (Donor/Recipient Meeting), was held at Geneva from 22 to 31 May 1989.⁽⁷⁾ The Meeting had assessed progress in the socio-economic situation of LDCs during the 1980s and considered measures to accelerate their development process during the 1990s. Another preparatory meeting would be held in March/April 1990 and the Conference itself was scheduled to be held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990.

Other preparatory activities in 1989 included a high-level meeting of experts on the role of the enterprise sector in the development of LDCs (Helsinki, Finland, 4-6 April)⁽⁸⁾ and a meeting on the role of non-governmental organizations in the development of LDCs (Kathmandu, Nepal, 8-10 November).⁽⁹⁾ Meetings were also organized within the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

With regard to preparations at the national level, Governments of LDCs, at the invitation of the UNCTAD Secretary-General, were preparing country presentations. The UNDP Administrator made extrabudgetary resources available to UNCTAD, from the Special Measures Fund for LDCs, to assist LDCs in preparing for the Conference.

UNDP action. In response to a 1988 Governing Council request,⁽¹⁰⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted a report to the Council's special session (21-24 February 1989) on UNDP's participation in the preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs.⁽¹¹⁾ The Administrator described UNDP's role in implementing SNPA for the 1980s and the assistance it was providing to LDCs in their preparations for the 1990 Conference.

On 24 February,⁽¹²⁾ the Council requested the Administrator to inform it in 1990 of further developments regarding UNDP's role in support of the Conference preparations and invited donor countries to make special contributions, through the Special Measures Fund for LDCs, for the Conference's preparations, and, in particular, towards ensuring full participation of the delegations of LDCs.

ACC action. The ninth inter-agency consultation on the follow-up of SNPA for the 1980s for LDCs (Geneva, 19 and 20 September)⁽¹³⁾ was devoted to preparations for the 1990 Conference on LDCs. The consultation reviewed the preparatory work for the Conference and discussed substantive contributions of United Nations organizations in the light of the Donor/Recipient Meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 44/220 without vote.

Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/177 of 11 December 1987, in which it decided to convene the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in Paris in September 1990, as well as its resolution 43/186 of 20 December 1988,

Taking note of the outcome of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries, held at Geneva from 22 to 31 May 1989, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and of other preparatory meetings held so far,

Recalling its decision to convene early in 1990 one session of the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries, as Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in order to prepare for the Conference,

Reiterating its request to the Secretary-General to obtain extrabudgetary resources to finance the travel expenses of at least two representatives from each least developed country to attend the meeting of the Intergovernmental Group in order to ensure the effective participation of the representatives of those countries,

Recalling decision 88/30 of 1 July 1988 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, in which the Governing Council requested the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in close consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to assist the least developed countries to ensure that they are able to participate fully in the preparations for the Conference, including preparatory meetings, and in the Conference itself,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries,

Expressing deep concern at the continuing deterioration in the overall socio-economic situation of the least developed countries,

1. Emphasizes the crucial importance of adequate preparation for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, taking into account the priorities to be put forward by the least developed countries themselves;

2. Calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental and multilateral institutions and others concerned to take appropriate steps to ensure that adequate preparations are made for the Conference and to participate effectively in the forthcoming session of the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries, as well as in the Conference itself, and to support the least developed countries in making their own preparations;

3. Reiterates its request to all concerned organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to submit, if they have not already done so, reports containing a review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries within their fields of competence and proposals for further action, as input to the preparations for the Conference;

4. Notes the steps being taken by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the assistance of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and urges them to ensure the full mobilization and co-ordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the preparations for the Conference and in the Conference itself;

5. Encourages the United Nations Development Programme to pursue its specific efforts to facilitate the preparations for the Conference by the least developed countries themselves and, pursuant to decision 89/12 of 24 February 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, invites all Governments to make special voluntary contributions, through the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries or as otherwise appropriate, for the preparations for the Conference, including the preparatory meetings, and in particular towards ensuring the full participation of the representatives of the least developed countries in the Conference;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to obtain additional extrabudgetary resources, in line with past practice, to provide for travel expenses and subsistence allowances for a third representative from each least developed country to the Conference, as noted in his report;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of concerned organizations and bodies of the United Nations, including the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to take the necessary measures to intensify public information efforts and other relevant initiatives to enhance public awareness in favour of the Conference, its objectives and its significance;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the outcome of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

General Assembly resolution 44/220

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 491; draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.54), orally revised; agenda item 82 (b))

Land-locked developing countries

By an October note,⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General on progress in implementing specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries, prepared in response to a 1987 Assembly request.⁽¹⁵⁾ The report described the transit-transport situation of land-locked developing countries and discussed geographical constraints and their impact on trade and growth. It also contained summaries of replies received from individual countries and international and intergovernmental organizations to the UNCTAD Secretary-General's request for information on progress made in implementing action related to the needs and problems of the land-locked developing countries.

The report concluded that the weak economic performance of most land-locked developing countries over the previous 30 years reflected the direct and indirect impact of geographic situation in key macro-economic variables. Through trade and development policy, land-locked countries could modify the price and income effects of inaccessibility to international trade, but their room for manoeuvre in distributing the costs and risks of transit-transport among their producers and consumers was limited by the need to achieve balance between foreign-exchange requirements and foreign-exchange availability, and between public expenditure requirements and non-inflationary means of raising revenue.

Supply-side measures to rehabilitate, maintain and improve investment in transit corridor infrastructure, promote bilateral and subregional transit agreements, train transit managers and establish transit-transport information systems had to be complemented by longer-term development strategies that would transform the structure of land-locked national economies in a way that would reduce the adverse consequences of their geographical situation.

In planning structural change, land-locked countries should pay attention to: expanding regional exports through identifying and developing sectors of regional comparative advantage; promoting high-value, low-bulk exports and reducing the extent to which export production depended on imported inputs; and import substitution in both agriculture and manufacturing to take account of domestic resource costs of local production. Those structural changes would require a degree of regional co-operation, which would be easier to achieve for land-locked developing countries and their coastal neighbours if it were seen as a process of policy harmonization in specific sectors (such as transport, energy and particular industries), rather than an attempt to achieve total economic integration.

A strategy that attempted to solve persistent balance-of-payments deficits by exclusive focus on overseas exports and intensified export production in sectors of traditional comparative advantage was likely to increase the vulnerability of land-locked countries to transit-transport problems. Such a strategy would rather have to be broadened and modified to enable land-locked countries to benefit fully from opportunities offered by well-conceived and effectively implemented subregional and regional arrangements in key areas of trade and development. Only such a balanced long-term approach would ensure the gradual disentanglement of the land-locked developing countries from the vicious circle of depressive underdevelopment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/214 by recorded vote.

Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 31/157 of 21 December 1976, 32/191 of 19 December 1977, 33/150 of 20 December 1978, 34/198 of 19 December 1979, 35/58 of 5 December 1980, 36/175 of 17 December 1981, 39/209 of 18 December 1984, 40/183 of 17 December 1985 and 42/174 of 11 December 1987 and other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries,

Reiterating the importance of the specific actions related to the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries set out in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972, 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 123(V) of 3 June 1979, and 137(VI) of 2 July 1983 and Trade and Development Board resolution 319(XXXI) of 27 September 1985,

Recognizing that most land-locked developing countries are among the very poorest of the developing countries, and noting that, of the twenty-one land-locked developing countries, fifteen are also classified by the United Nations as least developed countries,

Recognizing also that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and prohibitive transit, transport and transshipment costs and risks impose serious constraints on export earnings, private capital inflow and domestic resource mobilization of the land-locked developing countries and therefore adversely affect their growth and socio-economic development,

Recognizing further that the geographical situation of land-locked developing countries is an added constraint on their overall ability to cope with the challenges of development,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987,

Recalling also the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, adopted on 10 December 1982,

Noting that bilateral, subregional and regional co-operative arrangements could make a contribution to improving the transit-transport systems in land-locked and transit developing countries,

Recognizing that most transit countries are themselves developing countries facing serious economic problems, including the lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector,

Recognizing also that the implementation of accepted international conventions on transit trade would contribute to the elimination of some of the bottle-necks that are currently restricting subregional and regional transit traffic,

Noting with concern that the international support measures taken thus far have not adequately addressed the problems of land-locked developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the right of access of land-locked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with international law;

2. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 63(III), 98(IV), 123(V) and 137(VI) and the Final Act adopted by the Conference at its seventh session, in General Assembly resolutions 39/209, 40/183 and 42/174, in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and in other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Agrees that measures to deal with the transit problems of land-locked developing countries require effective co-operation and collaboration between those countries and the neighbouring transit States;

4. Urges the international community, in particular donor countries and multilateral financial and development organizations, to provide land-locked and transit developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and transit infrastructures and facilities, including alternative routes;

5. Emphasizes that assistance for the improvement of transport and transit facilities and services should be integrated into the overall economic development strategy of the land-locked developing countries and that donor assistance should consequently take into account the requirement for long-term restructuring of the economies of the land-locked developing countries, including, as appropriate, the promotion of import-substituting industries producing high-bulk, low-value goods and developing high-value, low-bulk goods for export;

6. Invites transit countries and the land-locked developing countries to continue to co-operate effectively in the fields, inter alia, of transport and communications;

7. Calls upon the appropriate multilateral and bilateral international and technical assistance institutions to take into account such co-operative arrangements between the land-locked developing countries and the neighbouring transit States;

8. Invites Member States to ratify and implement, as appropriate, the relevant provisions of the international conventions on transit trade;

9. Invites land-locked and transit developing countries to promote bilateral, subregional and regional arrangements, as appropriate and in their mutual interest, designed to facilitate transit traffic;

10. Appeals to the international community to make available to all transit and land-locked developing countries, as required and on appropriate terms, including, inter alia, concessional arrangements, new scientific and technological know-how relating to specific transit-transport and communications problems;

11. Appeals also to the international community and, in particular donor countries, multilateral financial and development institutions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions, to extend all possible support to land-locked developing countries in their efforts to undertake economic measures and policies designed to promote a pattern of growth that renders their economies less vulnerable to adverse consequences of their land-locked situation;

12. Urges the international development bodies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions! to expand further their support to the land-locked developing countries, including technical assistance programmes in the transport and communications sectors of those countries;

13. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to carry out and intensify further the technical co-operation activities of the secretariat of the Conference in the area of transit and transport, in accordance with paragraph 9 of Conference resolution 137(VI) and paragraph 10 of Trade and Development Board resolution 319(XXXI);

14. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, for the purpose referred to in paragraph 12 of the present resolution, to continue to seek adequate resources and voluntary contributions to enable him, if requested by the Governments concerned, to assist land-locked and transit developing countries in those efforts;

15. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to make recommendations, in the context of the preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, on the problems of the land-locked developing countries, with a view to rendering their economies less vulnerable to the adverse consequences of their land-locked situation;

16. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on progress in the implementation of specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries, submitted pursuant to resolution 42/174, and requests him to prepare another report, taking into account the provisions of the present resolution, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

General Assembly resolution 44/214

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 144-0-5 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.2) by recorded vote (110-0-4), 17 December (meeting 51); 22-nation draft (A/C.2/44/L.42/Rev.1); agenda item 82 (b).

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1989, some $6.6 billion in concessional loans and grants was made available to developing countries through the United Nations system, a decrease of $0.4 billion, or 6 per cent, as compared with 1988. That amount represented less than 13 per cent of total official development assistance to those countries from all sources during the year. Following its consideration of the annual report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on United Nations operational activities, the General Assembly, in December, called upon the international community, in particular donor countries, to make a real and significant increase in resources for operational activities for development on a continuous, predictable and assured basis and urged all countries to increase their voluntary contributions for operational activities for development.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)-the UN funding body for technical assistance to developing countries-registered another record year in 1989 with total income of $1.3 billion, a 5 per cent increase over 1988. Expenditures during the year from UNDP central resources totalled $1.2 billion, of which $892 million was spent on field programme activities. As four decades had passed since the United Nations programme of technical co-operation was started, the UNDP Administrator in his annual report considered the role of UNDP in the 1990s in the face of rapidly changing global conditions and in the light of lessons learned over the past 40 years. He remarked upon the inadequacy of the earlier straightforward supply approach by a one-way transfer of technology, superseded by that of development agencies and partner countries working together and learning from each other. This had led to the current evolving concept of a more integrated approach, bringing together the global, regional, national and local contexts, adopting multisectoral approaches and co-ordinating economic and technological strategies with other considerations such as human and environmental factors. The General Assembly subsequently designated 24 October 1990 as the day to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of multilateral technical co-operation for development within the UN system.

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) executed a programme with total delivery of $162 million in 1989, a growth of $13 million, or nearly 9 per cent from 1988. Nearly two-thirds of the DTCD programme was funded by UNDP.

The United Nations Volunteers Programme expanded in 1989 with an estimated 1,801 volunteers in service at the end of the year, supported by the Special Voluntary Fund.

In 1989, project expenditures by the United Nations Capital Development Fund totalled about $45 million. Project approvals reached nearly $78 million in 1989, which was expected to lead to expenditures in future years substantially higher than in 1989.

General aspects

In his report providing statistical data on United Nations operational activities for development covering 1989,⁽¹⁾ the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) stated that some $6.6 billion in concessional resources (grants and loans) was made available to developing countries through the United Nations system, representing somewhat less than 13 per cent of the total official development assistance (ODA) developing countries received from all sources in 1989 ($51.3 billion). Compared to 1988, those concessional resources had decreased by $0.4 billion or 6 per cent in dollar terms, mainly attributable to the decline of net disbursements from the International Development Association (IDA) and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). However, as had been underlined in previous years by the governing bodies of many United Nations organizations, United Nations system assistance to developing countries went beyond its quantitative value in view of its multilateral, non-political and impartial character.

Total expenditures on operational activities overall by the system, excluding non-concessional loans but including humanitarian assistance, amounted to $7.5 billion in 1989 as against $7.8 billion in 1988. That total comprised: development grants, $3.4 billion; concessional loans, $3.2 billion; and grant-financed refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities, $4.9 billion.

Grant assistance through UNDP and UNDP-administered funds totalled $981 million in 1989; through the World Food Programme (WFP), $761.3 million; through the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), $501.1 million; and through the United Nations Population Fund (UNDP), $157.2 million. Grant assistance through specialized agencies during the year totalled $797.8 million.

Net transfers from IDA decreased by 14 per cent from $3,506 million in 1988 to $3,009 million in 1989, representing a sharp drop compared to rises of 7 and 16 per cent in 1988 and 1987, respectively. Net transfers of non-concessional loans (not ODA) from the World Bank marked an improvement in their negative balances from $4,580 million in 1988 to $3,745 million in 1989. In turn, that improvement brought the overall expenditures on operational activities for development of the system to an increase of some 22 per cent in dollar terms, from $2,781 million in 1988 to $3,384 million in 1989. As a result, the declining trend of the overall expenditures in operational activities, which began in 1985, was reversed.

Triennial policy review

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a June report⁽¹⁾ of the Director-General for DIES on the triennial policy review of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, as requested by the Assembly in 1986,⁽²⁾ 1987⁽³⁾ and 1988.⁽⁴⁾ Operational activities and co-ordination at the country level had improved over the past year. Also, as requested by the Assembly, the Director-General outlined interrelationships among problems and factors in the triennial policy review, for which he had organized a series of integrated country reviews for submission to the Assembly.

Discussing the major challenges for the 1990s, the Director-General noted that, in a rapidly changing international environment, innovative approaches would be required.

He pointed out that the world economy in the 1980s had grown more slowly and shown greater disparities in national performance than over the previous two decades. Per capita income grew at only 1.2 per cent per annum, just over half the rate for the 1970s and only a third of that of the 1960s. The developing countries had borne the brunt of the decline in growth, with the result that the income gap between the developed and developing countries had continued to widen. Worsening economic conditions, deteriorating social services and, in some cases, the erosion of political stability had affected most countries in Africa, Latin America and several parts of Asia. Diverse economic growth trends in the developing countries had emerged during a period of growing integration of the global market economy. The interdependence of national economies had increased as borders opened to financial flows and, to a lesser extent, to the movement of goods, services and persons, and as various forms of communication expanded. Those negative trends were expected to continue. The challenge to the United Nations system would be to forge a new consensus, he said.

ACC action. In his report, the Director-General noted that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), acting on the conclusions of its subsidiary body, the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)), had adopted a decision in April,⁽⁵⁾ outlining an overall declaration of principles concerning the role and functioning of the United Nations system in the 1990s. Noting the changes in the development scene and affirming the resolve of its members to adapt to the new circumstances, ACC called⁽⁶⁾ for strengthening the links between the operational activities of the system and strategies for the 1990s, as well as for a continuing focus on efforts to strengthen governmental capacities, and to tailor responses to the unique circumstances of each country.

Among suggestions for making the UN system more effective, the Director-General stressed the need for the mobilization of resources, as well as a review of how funds could be channelled to best fulfil country needs to deal with the growing volume and complexity of demand for operational activities. Another possible improvement was in the programming process of individual organizations, and country-specific work organized under the resident co-ordinator. Other areas of reform included provision of technical advice better suited to individual countries, simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures, and review of field office premises.

Economic and Social Council. The Economic and Social Council considered the report at its second regular session of 1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council recommended in decision 1989/185 that the General Assembly complete at its 1989 session the 1989 triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development.

The Council, in decision 1989/189 of 28 July, took note of the DIES Director-General's report on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development.⁽²⁾

In decision 1989/186 of the same day, the Council decided to consider at its 1990 organizational session arrangements to ensure its annual consideration of operational activities for development in a focused and co-ordinated manner and to request its President to hold informal consultations to that end prior to the 1990 organizational session.

Director-General's reports. During the Economic and Social Council's consideration of operational activities, the DIEC Director-General stated he would submit to the General Assembly recommendations on improving the effectiveness of operational activities based on the Council's debate, consultations with organizations, annual reports from 80 resident co-ordinators and findings from the integrated country reviews. In October 1989,(8) he submitted a report on integrated country reviews on the functioning of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, which was based on the findings of seven country reviews undertaken in July and August. Those countries, Colombia, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Jamaica, Niger and Uganda, were selected to reflect the diversity of size, current conditions and capacities of developing countries. The review teams found that the United Nations, in its 40 years of operational activities, had demonstrated sound and steady development co-operation work, but was now challenged to do better and to face unresolved problems.

Among the proposals cited in the report were: more project execution by national capacities rather than by external agencies; better design of projects and fewer top-heavy rules and procedures; more realistic timetables; more consideration of alternative sources of international expertise and back-stopping rather than relying solely on United Nations expertise; more flexible and more individually tailored training components in projects; maintaining support to institutions after projects were concluded; better use of exchange of technical expertise among developing countries; and better co-ordination of country programmes within the United Nations system and with the country concerned.

In an October 1988 report, the DIEC Director-General submitted recommendations for action to improve the effectiveness of operational activities, as a supplement to his report on the triennial policy review. Those recommendations focused on several major themes and specific recommendations about objectives for operational activities; strengthening and integrating developing country capacities; technical co-operation among developing countries; diversification of procurement; resource mobilization, programming of operational activities; simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures; provision of technical advice; rationalization of country-level procedures, including common premises; the role and effectiveness of the resident co-ordinator system; decentralization towards national execution and capacity-building; and governance and guidance of operational activities.

In another report,(9) submitted in response to a 1988 Assembly request,(10) the DIEC Director-General submitted information on the fulfilment of the target for official development assistance, including the responses of 20 countries to a request to provide information on their official assistance to developing countries over an 18-year period.

Further DIEC reports, issued in July and October 1989, presented statistical data for the years 1987(11) and 1988.(12) The latter provided an overview of resources channelled through United Nations organizations as well as forecasts of resources for the main funding organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/211 without vote.

Comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970, 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 41/171 of 5 December 1986, 42/196 of 11 December 1987 and 43/199 of 20 December 1988,

Taking note of the report prepared by the United Nations Population Fund on the review and assessment of population programme experience, pursuant to the request contained in resolution 43/199,

Reaffirming the exclusive responsibility of the Government of the recipient country for formulating its national development plan, priorities or objectives, as set out in the consensus of 1970 contained in the annex to its resolution 2688(XXV), and emphasizing that the integration of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system with national plans and objectives would enhance the impact and relevance of those activities,

Reaffirming also that national plans and priorities constitute the only viable frame of reference for the national programming of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming further that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities for development of the United Nations' system should be, inter alia, their universality, their voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and multilateralism, and their ability to respond to the needs of the developing countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities of the United Nations system are carried out for the benefit of the developing countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Recognizing the different and complex situations and conditions that exist in developing countries and the consequent need for the activities of the United Nations development system to respond effectively to them,

Recognizing also the urgent and specific needs of the least developed countries,

Aware of the acute problems of island and land-locked developing countries and their particular needs for development to overcome their economic difficulties,

Recalling the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Recalling also its resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988 on the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America,

Concerned about the worsening economic and social situation of many developing countries,

Stressing the need for a significant increase in real terms in the overall resources available for development co-operation, taking into account the economic problems of developing countries, the economic capacities of developed countries and recent developments in international relations, which may have an impact on resources available for development, and emphasizing in this respect the need to increase the grant element of development co-operation resources,

Concerned that the resources available for operational activities are insufficient in relation to the requirements of developing countries,

Stressing the consequent need for a substantial increase in resources for operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries, and emphasizing the special needs of the least developed countries,

Recalling the role of the United Nations Development Programme as the central funding mechanism for the United Nations system of technical co-operation, the full potential of which has not yet been realized,

Recognizing the need to reorient operational activities in order to strengthen and utilize fully national capacities in all aspects of the programme and project cycle,

Stressing that co-ordination in funding arrangements and procedures of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should minimize the administrative and financial burden on recipient Governments in their endeavours effectively to monitor and co-ordinate programmes and projects and should maximize their complementarities and avoid duplication, so as to increase the positive impact of such activities on the development of developing countries,

Stressing also that government/national execution and full utilization of national capacities would contribute to ensuring that programmes and projects are managed in an integrated manner and to promoting their long-term sustainability and wider impact on the development process,

Emphasizing the need to increase and strengthen the promotion and implementation of technical co-operation among developing countries on a priority basis, through the rapid and full implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, in order to enhance the capacities and collective self-reliance of developing countries,

Emphasizing also the need to further decentralize capacity and authority in the United Nations system to the country level in order to increase responsiveness to the needs of developing countries, enhance coherent and efficient programming and resource utilization, achieve the objectives of programmes and projects, and strengthen and utilize national capacity,

Emphasizing further that the range and quantity of skills and expertise assembled by the United Nations system at the country level, under the team leadership of the resident co-ordinator, should correspond to the multisectoral and sectoral technical backstopping needs and requirements of developing countries and should be within the framework of the respective government programme of co-operation of the United Nations system, rather than to the institutional structure of the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the need to promote the full integration of women in all aspects of the development process in accordance with the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Affirming the need to promote the survival, protection and development of children and youth and the full integration of their concerns in the development process of the developing countries,

Recognizing the importance of regional, interregional and global co-operation for solving common problems in the light of current concern for global, regional and subregional problems,

Affirming the responsibility of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation for leadership in promoting the coherence, co-ordination and effectiveness of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Welcoming the positive reaction of the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations development system to the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report on the case studies undertaken in 1987 and in General Assembly resolution 42/196 adopted subsequently,

Taking note with appreciation of the decision adopted by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in April 1989 concerning the role and functioning of the United Nations development system in the 1990s, particularly the unequivocal resolve of its members to continue to adapt, both individually and collectively, to present needs, evolving circumstances and challenges, in the developing countries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on the comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including the report on the integrated country reviews on the functioning of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

2. Reaffirms that the recipient Governments have the sole responsibility for the co-ordination of external assistance and the principal responsibility for its design and management and that the exercise of those responsibilities is crucial to the optimal use of external assistance and to the strengthening and utilization of national capacity;

3. Stresses, that, in order to attain the goal of self-reliance in the developing countries through the strengthening of national capacities, the operational activities of the United Nations system should emphasize the human dimension of development, in particular through education, training and the development of human resources, should emphasize the need to reach the poorest and most vulnerable sections of societies and should have a positive impact on the overall quality of life and development;

4. Reaffirms the need for priority allocation of scarce grant resources to programmes and projects in low-income countries, particularly the least developed countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on international co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries a section analysing the role that operational activities for development could play in that area;

6. Stresses the need for maximum participation of populations, local communities and organizations, including national non-governmental organizations, in the development process, and encourages, when Governments so request, promotion of participation at the grass-roots level and of the productive sectors in the operational activities of the United Nations system;

7. Reaffirms the importance of the integration of women in United Nations development programmes as participants in all aspects of the development process, and calls upon the funding, technical and specialized agencies to intensify efforts to increase the participation of women, particularly those from developing countries;

8. Emphasizes the protection and support of children as integral to the development process, and recognizes the need for education and the promotion of opportunities for youth and the need to reflect the concerns of children and youth in development co-operation programmes of the United Nations system;

9. Calls upon the international community, in particular donor countries, to make a real and significant increase in resources for operational activities for development on a continuous, predictable and assured basis, and urges all countries to increase their voluntary contributions for operational activities for development;

10. Urges developed countries, in particular those countries whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacity, taking into account established official development assistance targets and present levels of contribution, to increase their official development assistance substantially, including contributions to operational activities of the United Nations system;

11. Emphasizes the primary importance of funding through core resources in operational activities for development, and, at the same time, recognizes the value of special-purpose grant resources, provided that they are designed as a means to ensure additional resource flows and that their projects are coherently and effectively integrated in the technical co-operation programmes of the United Nations system, in conformity with each country's national development plan and programme and in accordance with the respective mandates of United Nations programmes and organizations;

12. Stresses the value of the concept of central funding of technical co-operation through the United Nations Development Programme in order to promote co-ordination and responsiveness to national priorities through the country programming system, and urges all Governments to channel the maximum possible share of resources available for multilateral technical co-operation through the Programme;

13. Emphasizes the need for full utilization of national capacities in all aspects of the programming processes and project cycles of operational activities;

14. Stresses the need, in this context, to improve the operational activities of the United Nations system, in particular with respect to programming, simplification and harmonization of rules and procedures governing the programming processes and project cycles, decentralization of authority, role of the country office structures and reorientation of execution modalities, in order to enable the recipient Governments to exercise their management and co-ordination responsibilities and strengthen their national capacities;

15. Emphasizes that the United Nations system at the country level should be structured and composed in such a way that it corresponds to ongoing and projected co-operation programmes rather than to the institutional structure of the United Nations system and, to this end, decides:

(a) That the country offices and the resident co-ordinators should effectively provide ongoing multidisciplinary technical advice and support to the Government in its programming and executing responsibilities;

(b) To reinforce the team-leadership capacity of the resident co-ordinator within the United Nations system at the country level for the integration of the sectoral inputs of the system and for the effective and coherent co-ordination of the response of the United Nations system to the national programme framework, through, inter alia:

(i) A clarified and strengthened mandate from the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 32/197, 41/171 and 42/196;

(ii) The effective co-ordination of technical advice and input from the United Nations system;

(iii) Closer co-operation of the field representation of the United Nations system at the country level with the resident co-ordinator;

(c) To request the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his annual report on operational activities for development, in 1991, an analysis of possible ways and means of providing multidisciplinary technical advice from the United Nations system at the country level, including the concept of multidisciplinary teams and their ability to provide effective and flexible assistance, taking into account the need to maximize the utilization of the capacities of the country offices and field representations of the United Nations system and the varied situations and needs of the developing countries;

(d) To request all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to make, without delay, the necessary arrangements, in co-operation with host Governments and without additional cost to developing countries, to establish common premises at the country level, and to request the Director-General to include in his annual reports on operational activities information on progress made in that area;

16. Recognizes the urgent need to improve the field representation of the United Nations system in accordance with the functions set out in the present resolution, and requests the Director-General to present a report containing comprehensive information, drawing on all relevant reports on the field representation of the United Nations system, and to make specific recommendations for improvement and increased effectiveness in line with the objectives of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, and requests the executive heads of all the organizations concerned to co-operate fully in the preparation of that report by providing the relevant information;

17. Calls for more integrated and co-ordinated programming of United Nations system co-operation, in which programming processes would be based on an overall national programme framework for operational activities for development to be prepared by the recipient Government, with a view to submitting it to the organizations of the United Nations system for their support and funding, whose response would be co-ordinated by the resident co-ordinator, and decides that:

(a) Governments should formulate, in accordance with their own development plans and priorities, integrated national programme frameworks setting out co-operation requirements of the organizations of the United Nations system, which would enable the system to support more effectively the development priorities of developing countries and to be more country-focused and would facilitate the development of a programme approach, through the clear definition of national objectives and systematic analysis of development problems and constraints.

(b) The organizations of the United Nations system should adapt their programming processes to base them upon those national programme frameworks and the needs and practices of recipient Governments;

(c) Programme cycles of all funding agencies of the United Nations system should be harmonized with and adapted to the planning periods of national Governments, and further consideration should be given to the introduction of budgetary cycles on a rolling-cycle basis;

(d) The need for a shift from a project approach to a programme approach implies that all relevant governing bodies, in particular the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, should develop more programme-oriented mechanisms for the provision of technical co-operation, with a view to allowing more flexible and effective support of national programmes;

(e) Non-emergency food aid channelled through the organizations of the United Nations system should be programmed coherently so as to ensure its full integration with the development programmes of the Government;

(f) Organizations participating in programming should be invited to increase their efforts directed towards integrated programming under the leadership of Governments;

(g) The Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation should be requested to conduct an independent study aimed at developing, among other possible ways to improve the co-ordination of the United Nations system at the country level, the concept of a document containing the integrated operational response of the United Nations system at the country level to the national programme framework of the recipient Government for operational activities for development, which would give greater coherence to existing programming instruments, and to submit this study to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council, including an analysis containing his views on the impact of this approach, in particular on the role of the resident co-ordinator, on the leadership role of the United Nations Development Programme, and on the relationship and relevance of such an approach to the existing co-ordinating mechanisms of the organizations of the United Nations system at the country level, such as National Technical Co-operation Assessment and Programmes, round tables and consultative groups, and possible ways to implement the relevant elements contained therein;

18. Decides that, in order fully to enable Governments to assume the execution of programmes and projects funded by the United Nations system for development, the following changes should be undertaken:

(a) The present rules and procedures for government/national execution should be adapted, as appropriate, to promote and maximize the utilization and strengthening of national capacities, while enabling Governments to make effective use of the expertise available within the United Nations system in the implementation of programmes and projects;

(b) Procedures pertaining to programme and project formulation, design, appraisal, implementation, procurement, reporting, monitoring and evaluation should be simplified and harmonized, taking into account costs involved for recipient Governments and the United Nations system, at both the country and headquarters levels, and on the basis of consultation with recipient Governments;

(c) Governing bodies should review existing budget, audit and other relevant practices, with a view to taking specific decisions on measures designed to promote and maximize the utilization of national capacities through government/national execution, a more programme-oriented approach and the improved provision of technical advice and backstopping;

19. Considers that, in the context of the application of the system of government/national execution of programmes and projects, as set out in paragraph 18 of the present resolution, the participation of specialized agencies and technical entities of the United Nations system in operational activities should be redefined towards, in particular, the provision of technical support to Governments on a multisectoral and sectoral basis, as well as a supportive technical role in the project cycle, as requested by Governments;

20. Requests all organs and organizations of the United Nations system to improve their ability to provide Governments at the country level with information on the capacities and needs of other developing countries, in the required detail, so as to enable greater integration in programme and project formulation and implementation of technical co-operation among developing countries, with a view to strengthening the capacities of developing countries;

21. Stresses the need to attach high priority to substantially increasing procurement from developing countries, in order to promote collective self-reliance, while paying due respect to the principles of international competitive bidding, and, in this regard, emphasizes the importance for all parts of the United Nations system of setting specific goals for increasing procurement from developing countries;

22. Acknowledges the commitment to procurement from under-utilized major donor countries and recommends the implementation of the relevant proposals of the Director-General in accordance with the principles of international competitive bidding;

23. Recommends, within the framework of a more decentralized and strengthened capacity of the United Nations system at the country level, the delegation of authority from the headquarters to the country level by the organs and organizations of the United Nations system in order to develop a country-focused approach and to ensure maximum utilization and strengthening of national capacities and, in this regard, calls upon those organs and organizations to introduce the following changes:

(a) Within the broad multi-year programmes and projects approved by governing bodies, approval authority for specific programmes and projects should, to the maximum extent possible, be delegated to the country level, in support of improvement of programme and project appraisal capacity, and field offices should fully exercise that approval authority with a view to improving speed, quality and efficiency of implementation;

(b) During implementation of the overall programmes approved by governing bodies, country offices should have the flexibility to make budgetary revisions of projects during implementation;

24. Reaffirms the established principles of accountability within the operational activities for development and, while maintaining the ultimate accountability of the executive heads of the funding organizations, stresses the need to redefine and adapt working mechanisms for ensuring full accountability, in the light of the reorientation of the United Nations development system towards, in particular, government/national project execution, decentralization, delegation of authority and adoption of a more programme-oriented approach, as noted in paragraphs 15, 17, 18 and 23 of the present resolution, and for this purpose recommends the following:

(a) The executive heads of the funding organizations of the United Nations system should make specific proposals to their governing bodies on ways and means of ensuring accountability through rationalizing and streamlining their existing systems, in the context of harmonization and simplification of procedures, including the possibility of conferring on the country offices a greater role in ensuring accountability;

(b) Recipient Governments should take the necessary steps to improve their capacity to satisfy the accountability requirements of their executing role, including financial reporting and the audit function, for operational activities for development, and, in this regard, the funding organizations should provide appropriate technical support;

(c) All specialized and technical agencies, in the context of the review of their budget, audit and other relevant practices referred to in paragraph 18 (c) of the present resolution, should take specific measures to achieve a greater degree of accountability and transparency in the use of funds for operational activities;

(d) Governing bodies of the relevant organizations should improve their working mechanisms so that they may exercise their overview function more effectively;

25. Encourages the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to continue to consider the question of successor arrangements for agency support costs from the standpoint of how best to meet the needs of developing countries and to foster coordination and coherence within the United Nations system, taking into account the need to ensure maximum utilization of national capacity through, in particular, government/national execution of projects, a more programme-oriented approach and regular and timely provision of technical advice and backstopping by agencies at the country level, as stated in paragraphs 17, 18 and 19 of the present resolution;

26. Requests the executive heads of the United Nations funding and technical agencies to re-examine their organizational structures and staff deployment in support of the requirements of decentralization to the country offices, with a view in particular to redeploying personnel and effecting economies at headquarters;

27. Stresses the vital importance of the full, co-ordinated and timely implementation of all modifications required of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as mentioned in the present resolution;

28. Decides that the implementation of the present resolution by the United Nations system in all the areas mentioned in the resolution should be accomplished as early as possible, and requests the Director-General to submit a proposed three-year schedule for the implementation of the resolution by all the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990 and to draw attention to recommendations on which he considers additional guidance is required, particularly those facilitating the full implementation of the present resolution, and make available his report containing recommendations for the comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

29. Requests the Director-General to submit, for the next three years, annual reports on the implementation of the present resolution, on a consolidated system-wide basis, to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session;

30. Calls upon States members of the governing bodies of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system consistently to ensure full implementation of the provisions contained in the present resolution;

31. Also calls upon the governing bodies of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to make the adjustments required to implement the provisions of paragraphs 15, 17, 18 and 20 through 24 of the present resolution and to prepare information on the measures taken, to be included, starting in 1991, in the annual reports of the Director-General submitted through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly;

32. Requests the executive heads of the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate fully with the Director-General in the implementation of the present resolution, including, in particular, the preparation and implementation of the schedule referred to in paragraph 28 of the resolution;

33. Reaffirms the provision contained in General Assembly resolution 32/197 concerning the representation of developing countries at the executive management and other central decision-making levels of secretariat structures in the area of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and requests the Director-General to include, in his annual report to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990, a section on the implementation of this provision;

34. Requests the Director-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, in the context of the triennial policy review, a comprehensive analysis of the implementation of the present resolution and to make appropriate recommendations.

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures

In his report on 1989 operational activities,(1) the Director-General for DIEC stated that net transfers made available to developing countries through the United Nations system amounted to $6.6 billion, a six per cent decrease from the 1988 figure of $7.0 billion. Expenditures overall on operational activities, including humanitarian assistance by the United Nations system, totalled $7.5 billion in 1989 ($7.8 billion in 1988). Of that, development grants accounted for $3.4 billion ($3.3 billion in 1988), concessional loans, $3.2 billion ($3.7 billion in 1988), and grants for refugees, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities, $0.9 billion ($0.8 billion in 1988). Total grant expenditures made by the United Nations system grew by about 3 per cent in 1989, as compared with an overall rise of 16 per cent in 1988.

United Nations operational activities (including technical assistance expenditures on training and consultants under World Bank loans and IDA credits, but excluding WFP budgetary and extra-budgetary expenditures) totalled $3.6 billion ($3.4 billion in 1988), representing an increase of about 6 per cent.

Total expenditure of member organizations of the Joint Consultative Group on Policy member organizations (UNDP, UNICEF, UNFPA, WFP and IFAD) was $2.76 billion ($2.78 billion in 1988).

Contributions

Governmental and other sources of contributions for United Nations system operational activities for development in 1989 increased in dollar terms by only some 3 per cent over the previous year, to $8.6 billion from $8.3 billion in 1988, while they had increased by about 8 per cent and 12 per cent in 1987 and 1988. All those increases were affected by movements in exchange rates, particularly the movements of the United States dollar against currencies of other major donor countries.

Contributions to UNDP, UNDP-administered funds and trust funds, UNFPA, UNICEF, WFP and other United Nations funds and programmes totalled $3.1 billion ($3 billion in 1988). Contributions to core programmes of UNDP and its administered trust funds stagnated in 1989, remaining at $1.2 billion as in 1988. Those to UNICEF, amounting to $586.6 million, decreased by 2 per cent and those to WFP, at $856.6 million, also remained virtually the same. Contributions to UNFPA rose by 4 per cent in 1989 to $203.7 million, but that was still less than the 1988 increase of 12 per cent.

In 1989, extrabudgetary resources made available to specialized agencies and WFP for operational activities rose 14 and 54 per cent respectively, a continuation of the previous year's sharp increases of 29 and 36 per cent.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1989 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York on 30 and 31 October to receive government pledges for 1990 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

In a September note to the General Assembly,(13) the Secretary-General listed contributions paid or pledged at the 1988 Conference for 1989, as at 30 June 1989. At that time, contributions or pledges had been received from 138 countries for 22 funds and programmes, totalling approximately $1,442 million, of which $862.2 million was designated for UNDP.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/208 without vote.

United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The General Assembly,

Noting the importance of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities,

Bearing in mind the need for the Conference, the principal occasion for Member States and others to announce their contributions to the operational activities of the United Nations system, to continue to be managed as effectively as possible,

Requests the Secretary-General to examine the modalities of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities and to make recommendations on future administrative arrangements for the Conference to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990, for transmission to the 1990 Conference and to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, as appropriate, including the following arrangements:

(a) Sessional arrangements for the Conference, including the possibility of shortening it, and its timing, bearing in mind the budgetary cycles of Governments;

(b) Procedures for making pledges, including the greater use of written pledges, as appropriate;

(c) Formalization of and rationalization of procedures for the Final Act of the Conference.

Inter-agency co-operation

Inter-agency co-operation regarding developmental operational activities, and, in particular, the role and functioning of the United Nations development system in the 1990s, was discussed in 1989 at two meetings of ACC's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities). The first session was held at Geneva (3-6 April)(14) and the second in New York (2-4 October)(15). They discussed the role and effectiveness of the resident co-ordinator system; goals and strategies for the 1990s; programming of the operational activities of the United Nations system; and global, regional and country development goals and strategies. The Committee recognized that an essential prerequisite for enhanced co-ordination and coherence as regards the programming of development assistance was confirmation that it was a government-led effort, supported, at the request of the Government concerned, by the United Nations system. Those subjects were reviewed by ACC(7) in its 1989 overview report.

In May,(16) ACC reported to the Economic and Social Council that it had published the first edition of the Register of Development Activities of the United Nations,(17) compiled under the auspices of the Advisory Committee for Co-ordination of Information Services (ACCIS). Such a register had been first requested by the Council in 1982.(18) Subsequently, ACC set up ACCIS, which proposed a format, established a technical panel and defined specifications for data provisions. Based on data collection for the year 1987, the register recorded 20,740 development activities. It covered not only technical co-operation projects funded by UNDP but also continuing or occasional activities funded from assessed budgets and loans, credits, grants and equity investments provided by the World Bank and IFAD.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the report by decision 1989/180 of 27 July.

Technical co-operation through UNDP

Forty-year review. In the light of what was now four decades of experience of the United Nations programme of technical co-operation, the UNDP Administrator, in his 1989 annual report,(1) projected the Programme's role in the 1990s in the face of rapidly changing global conditions and in the light of lessons learned in the last 40 years. Fundamental to UNDP's credibility, he said, was its firm commitment to universality and neutrality.

While the 1990s held out bright prospects, the considerable difficulties facing the developing world had first to be addressed. Those included increasing curtailment of resources by rising debt and falling commodity prices, and the consequences of the structural adjustment process, resulting in public spending reduction and added pressure on external assistance sources.

UNDP was participating in fundamental changes in the whole nature of technical co-operation, replacing the inadequate approach of one-way technology transfer. Efforts were being made to develop and improve means of technical co-operation by enhancing self-reliance of countries receiving UNDP technical co-operation, improving cost-effectiveness, providing a more sensitive response to developing countries' needs and achieving more durable solutions, with development agencies and partner countries working together and learning from each other to bring about sustainable development. The concept of development itself was evolving towards a more integrated approach, bringing together global, regional, national and local contexts, adopting multi-sectoral approaches and co-ordinating economic and technological strategies with other considerations such as human and environmental factors.

UNDP's multilateral programmes played a leading role in addressing problems transcending national boundaries, such as those of the environment. Such programmes also brought about exchanges of knowledge and skills and shared technological research that most countries could not afford on their own. UNDP thus helped to build self-sustaining international networks for information exchange.

A major UNDP achievement in 1989 was the publication of the Human Development Report, 1990, designed to be updated annually, giving what the Administrator described as an uncompromising look at the state of human development around the world over the past 30 years. The report went beyond the usual focus on gross national product

(GNP) and other economic indicators to explore factors making some nations healthy, well-educated and productive, and leaving others far behind. Three indices—life expectancy at birth, adult literacy rates and purchasing power—were combined to create a “human development index” and countries were ranked accordingly. The report showed that, while economic growth was vital to improved living conditions, growth alone was no guarantee of human development. The difference of index ratings of developing countries indicated the degree to which scarce resources were directed successfully towards human development. UNDP, therefore, stood ready to assist Governments wishing to review options for accelerated human development, and could bring together the full gamut of its multidisciplinary experience with the expertise of other relevant United Nations bodies in such fields as education, health, child care, nutrition, employment, industrial development, trade unions and agriculture.

The Governing Council, on 30 June,⁽²⁾ noting that 1990 would be the fortieth anniversary of the General Assembly’s establishment of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance,⁽³⁾ leading eventually to UNDP’s establishment in 1966,⁽⁴⁾ decided that the fortieth anniversary should be commemorated in an appropriate manner at the highest possible level and recommended that the General Assembly allocate a specific period during its forty-fifth (1990) session to this commemoration.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, by decision 1989/187, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Governing Council’s recommendation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December 1989, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/209, without vote.

Fortieth anniversary of multilateral technical co-operation for development within the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Noting that 1990 will be the fortieth anniversary of multilateral technical co-operation for development within the United Nations system, which commenced with the establishment of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance and the Special Fund, the two programmes later consolidated into the United Nations Development Programme,

Taking note of decisions 89/68 of 30 June 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and 1989/187 of 28 July 1989 of the Economic and Social Council,

1. Decides to observe, during its forty-fifth session, the fortieth anniversary of multilateral technical co-operation for development within the United Nations system in a manner benefiting the role and achievements of such co-operation, and also decides that Wednesday, 24 October 1990, United Nations Day, shall be the day for the commemoration of this anniversary;

2. Invites the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, to make the necessary preparations for the celebration of the anniversary, and also invites all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system engaged in technical co-operation to contribute to the preparations.

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/863) by consensus, 11 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.76), based on informal consultations on draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.69); agenda item 86.

1989 activities. The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report for 1989,⁽¹⁾ stated that the Programme was endeavouring to increase the capacity of partner countries to manage their own development and was encouraging those countries to take an increasing share of the responsibility for programming and implementation. Accordingly, UNDP was accelerating the movement towards national execution of projects, promoting decentralization to the field and encouraging recipients to put forward programme initiatives. Recently Governments had shown a growing tendency to increase participation of the private sector in development activities. UNDP continued to broaden its contribution to private-sector initiatives and the promotion of entrepreneurship.

In 1989, UNDP income was some $1.2 billion, another record year. Of the 1989 total, $932.6 million came from Government contributions ($931.0 million in 1988). Other major sources included cost-sharing contributions by recipient Governments ($118.4 million) and special trust funds established by the Administrator ($24.7 million).

UNDP administered another eight funds which provided an additional $1.2 billion for 1989. The funds were the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) (see below), the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see PART THREE, Chapter VI), the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) (see PART THREE, Chapter III), the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) (see below), the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) (see PART THREE, Chapter VII), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), the UNDP Energy Account and the UNDP Study Programme.

At the joint United Nations Pledging Conference in October 1989, pledges and estimates of contributions to all funds administered by UNDP amounted to a record $1.3 billion, an 8 per cent increase over 1988 pledges. (See below, under "Contributions".)

Field programme expenditures in 1989 amounted to $891.6 million. That included $723.8 million delivered under indicative planning figure (IPF) resources; $107.6 million under cost-sharing arrangements; $34.0 million under Special Programme Resources (SPR); $3.2 million under Special Industrial Services; $12.1 million under the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (SMF/LDCs); and $9.8 million in government cash counterpart contributions. Of the total field programme expenditures, 48.4 per cent was spent on project personnel and experts, 20 per cent on equipment, 13.4 per cent on sub-contracts, and another 13.4 per cent on training and fellowships.

The executing agencies of the United Nations system, together with developing country Governments, recruited the project personnel, specified and purchased the equipment, awarded the fellowships and issued the sub-contracts which constituted UNDP project delivery. The estimated number of nationally recruited project personnel assigned to UNDP-assisted projects remained relatively stable at 9,734 in 1989 after a sharp rise from 4,893 to 9,877 between 1987 and 1988. The number of experts recruited internationally decreased from 8,664 in 1988 to an estimated 7,835 in 1989.

On a regional basis, expenditures in Africa accounted for the largest portion, at 37.6 per cent. Asia and the Pacific followed at 32.8 per cent, Latin America and the Caribbean at 14.8 per cent, the Arab States at 9.4 per cent, and Europe at 1.9 per cent. Global and interregional projects accounted for 3.5 per cent of the total.

The value of new projects approved in 1989 was $589.6 million, while the number was 1,437 ($708.5 million and 1,794 in 1988). The sectors with the most new approvals were the same as in 1988: a general category including trade and finance, health, employment, culture, and science and technology; development strategies, policies and planning; and agriculture, forestry and fisheries.

Except for the Asia region, which remained buoyant, economic growth in the developing world was slow. Per capita income fell in many countries and foreign indebtedness remained a serious problem. UNDP continued to emphasize more efficient economic management and more co-ordinated planning in technical co-operation.

On 30 June,(5) the UNDP Governing Council, taking note of the Administrator's report for 1988, requested him to provide in his next annual report an assessment of the impact of measures taken since 1985 to improve programme and project quality. In an annex to that decision, it supported continued co-ordination between the World Bank and UNDP on projects and programmes. It requested a report on the UNDP technical assistance studies submitted to the Consultative Group and on the Group's work; noted with satisfaction UNDP's positive response to Governments undertaking structural adjustment programmes by supporting their efforts to improve budget and debt management, liberalize markets and pricing policies, increase public sector efficiency, strengthen entrepreneurial and export programmes and address the social aspects of structural adjustment; commended the Administrator's initiatives in support of the environment and sustainable development; and emphasized the need to give adequate attention to the relationship between the environment and sustainable development in the formulation and appraisal of all projects. It noted that UNDP had been a catalyst for discussion involving the private sector in national development efforts and had been urged to train managers and entrepreneurs and to provide technical assistance in the development of capital markets.

The Council, in another decision of 30 June,(6) stressed its role in providing guidance to the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) in its operational activities funded by UNDP.

On 15 June, (7) the Governing Council expressed appreciation of the work of George Arthur Brown, Associate Administrator of UNDP from 1978 to 1989, on his retirement, congratulating him on his outstanding contribution to the United Nations development system as a whole, an expression of appreciation in which the Economic and Social Council joined, in decision 1989/188, on 28 July.

UNDP Governing Council

In 1989, the UNDP Governing Council held a series of meetings in New York: organizational meetings on 21 and 24 February; a special session to consider pending issues from 21 to 24 February; and its thirty-sixth regular session from 5 to 30 June. At the organizational meeting, the Council adopted decisions on its schedule of meetings in 1989 and other organizational matters,(8) on the election of the members of the Working Group of the Committee of the Whole,(9) and on a review of the Working Group's role.(10)

At its special session, the Council adopted thirteen decisions. Those not covered in this chapter were on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa; the Transport and Communications Decade in Asia and the Pacific; UNDP participation in preparation for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries; the United Nations Population Fund; and desert locust control.

Fifty-two decisions were adopted at the June session. Those not covered in this chapter dealt with women in development, the environment, assistance to national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity, African Economic Recovery and Development Programmes, assistance to the Palestinian people, Transport and Communications Decade in Asia and the Pacific, Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, the International Initiative against Avoidable Disablement, the United Nations Population Fund and other population aspects, the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development and the Energy Account, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, the fourth United Nations development decade, and the Special Plan for Economic Co-operation for Central America.

On 5 June, (11) the Council approved the agenda and organization of work at its thirty-sixth session. Decisions were taken on future Council sessions(12) and the provisional agenda for 1990.(13) The Council took note of several reports and other documents.(14) Regarding the Working Group of the Whole, the Council on 30 June(15) (subsequent to its decision at its organizational meeting, above) decided to extend the Working Group, on an experimental basis, until June 1990, with its membership to be comprised of all Governing Council members, and, after expressing concern that the Group had not always adhered to its mandate, reaffirmed that the Group needed to avoid any discussion of a policy nature, but should discuss only operational and technical matters.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/189 of 28 July, took note of the UNDP Governing Council's report on its 1989 organizational meeting, special session and thirty-sixth session.

UNDP operational activities

Policy review

In response to a 1988 Governing Council decision,(16) the Administrator submitted a report on UNDP and world development by the year 2000.(17) He concluded that the world of the 1990s would be one in which developing countries faced tremendous challenges, which many of them would not have the resources to meet. Debt, poverty, environmental degradation and rapid urbanization were only some of the serious problems which Governments would continue to face in their pursuit of growth with equity, sustainable development and self-reliance. There did, however, appear to be a growing preparedness by the world community to act in a concerted manner to overcome obstacles to development. With sustained effort, that preparedness could result in increased global co-operation and more concentrated efforts to mobilize potential development resources.

The Administrator saw UNDP in the 1990s as a facilitator and catalyst for member countries, enabling them to mobilize the system's technical resources to help developing countries improve the quality of life of their citizens. The most effective way to attain that goal was to focus on enabling the developing countries to take the lead; therefore UNDP's basic tenet of providing assistance to sovereign Governments should be reaffirmed in any approach to improving United Nations system capacity to respond to future challenges. UNDP's aim was to help developing countries to accelerate the process of capacity-building, both within the Government itself and within the nation as a whole. The vision of the future UNDP was one where it was able to provide Governments with United Nations system support for comprehensive, integrated approaches to development issues.

UNDP should remain a universal agency to which all developing countries could turn for specific support required in building capacity to manage their development process. UNDP success would be demonstrated in programme quality—the ability to focus assistance on critical areas and achievement of set objectives—rather than financial delivery. A flexible array of technical co-operation approaches directed towards the two goals of national capacity-building and human development was required. UNDP staff should be highly qualified development management professionals, helping Governments to draw on a global data base of advice and information through a network of closely linked offices.

Reaffirming that approach, the Governing Council, on 30 June 1989, adopted a decision on the role of UNDP in the 1990s,(18) setting out main programme directions for UNDP support and organizational issues, outlining a UNDP funding strategy, and enumerating guidelines for coordination and a consultation process on Council working methods.

In the main programme directives, the Council requested the Administrator to make proposals to the Council's 1990 session for designing indicators to assess progress in strengthening of national capacity for self-reliant development, and to report to the 1990 session on strengthening UNDP's capacity, primarily at field level, of services relating to co-financing and management services. He was also encouraged to increase decentralization of authority to the Resident Representative with a view to improving efficiency and effectiveness.

Regarding a funding strategy, the Council considered the Administrator's proposal for a funding goal whereby the Programme's 1996 core income would be double that of 1991, representing a 16 per cent annual growth, and called on developed countries, and others in a position to do so, to increase their voluntary contributions, keeping in mind the Administrator's goal. The Administrator was requested to propose elements for a funding strategy by June 1990.

Concerning co-ordination, the Council decided that UNDP's main task was to contribute, in accordance with the priorities and requirements of developing countries, to strengthening their capacity to co-ordinate external assistance. As to the consultation process, the President of the Governing Council was invited to hold consultations on improving the Council's working methods and to report to the 1990 session. An ad hoc group was set up, open to all Council members and other interested parties, to consider the future role of UNDP in the 1990s.

ACC considered the role and functioning of the United Nations development system in the 1990s(19) in the light of major changes in the development scene in recent years, which, ACC said, called for a continuing focus to further strengthen governmental capacities and to tailor responses by the United Nations to the unique circumstances of each country. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1989/189 of 28 July, took note of the ACC statement.

In other action regarding the Administrator's report on UNDP and World Development by the Year 2000, the Council referred to the 1990 session consideration of his proposal for a new special fund of micro-capital grants below $200,000.(20)

Country and intercountry programmes

At the February special session, in view of the fact that the mid-term review of country, regional, interregional and global programmes for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) would take place over approximately two years, the UNDP Governing Council decided(21) to consider the review on three occasions over the next 18 months: at the 1989 session, the February 1990 organizational meeting and the 1990 session. For each of those occasions, the Administrator was invited to submit an overview of all country programme mid-term reviews carried out before that particular session or meeting, all mid-term review reports of country programmes which had undergone major changes or which the Administrator was explicitly requested to resubmit, and a representative selection of six country mid-term review reports, as well as all reports on the mid-term review of regional, interregional and global programmes carried out before the particular Council session or meeting.

Accordingly, the Administrator submitted to the June Council session a report(22) on country and intercountry programmes and projects as well as selected country programmes in the Africa region,(23) the Arab States and European region,(24) the Asia and Pacific region,(25) and the Latin America and Caribbean region.(26) Subsequently, the Council requested(27) the Administrator to continue such reporting. It approved(28) the global and interregional projects placed before the Council (research and training in tropical diseases, sustainable rice farming and research on diarrhoeal diseases control) and the country programme for Iran.

In response to a 1988 Council request,(29) the Administrator submitted a note(30) providing background on UNDP assistance to Lebanon, noting that, due to lack of current and accurate information, the provisional IPF for Lebanon was based on an estimate for 1983 per capita GNP. Total provisional resources of $13.9 million were available during the fourth cycle. The $2.9 million committed under the IPF in 1987 and 1988 were currently funding 12 projects in agriculture, human resources development and vocational training, telecommunications and postal services despite operational difficulties in the prevailing situation in Lebanon. New project proposals for UNDP technical co-operation amounting to $10 million had been identified in close collaboration with national authorities and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in crucial areas such as primary health care, water supply, technical education for women, handicrafts, agricultural research and production, environment quality control and vocational training. Actual implementation would depend on the operational situation within the country. The Council took note(14) of that report on 30 June.

In a section of his annual report for 1989(1) on project results of global and interregional programmes, the Administrator said that the global programme supported research into development issues of world-wide importance, focusing mainly on sustainable agricultural production and health problems, while the interregional programme disseminated and applied the research results in such sectors as fisheries, health, water supply and sanitation, urban management, human resources and energy. The interregional programme also promoted co-operation among developing countries in sharing research and exchanging knowledge and skills. Both programmes received support from bilateral donors and international organizations, as well as UNDP core resources.

The mid-term review of global and interregional activities in the fourth planning cycle concluded that while most programmes were being carried out as foreseen, the Division for Global and Interregional Programmes (DGIP) of UNDP had also responded well to problems not clearly anticipated when fourth cycle plans were formulated, such as the AIDS epidemic, debt management and environmental degradation.

Nearly three quarters of the global programme resources were devoted to agricultural research, aimed primarily at increasing food production. In 1989, UNDP supported 12 projects carried out through a network of international agricultural research centres, which DGIP helped establish by providing $10.5 million for that purpose, combined with $240 million contributed by other donors. Research by the centres included testing of improved varieties of sorghum, millet, rice, maize and wheat in different ecosystems. UNDP assistance to the International Centre for Maize and Wheat Improvement in Mexico over the past 13 years had contributed to a major breakthrough in plant breeding and genetics with the development of a quality protein maize, tested in 38 locations around the world, that was now ready for wide-scale dissemination. With $22 million in UNDP support, the International Centre of Insect Physiology and Ecology at Nairobi had developed an effective technique for controlling African trypanosomiasis, a disease carried by the tsetse fly, which had killed thousands of livestock in a third of Africa.

UNDP was also investing $5 million in a new three-year global research project, launched in 1989, to develop environmentally acceptable desert locust control (see next chapter).

Under the banner of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, 1981-1990, UNDP and partner United Nations organizations and agencies were engaged in a campaign to provide the developing world with clean drinking water and adequate sanitation (see also PART THREE, Chapter VI). By the end of 1989, UNDP had committed a record $375 million to water and sanitation activities. The UNDP programme Promotion of the Role of Women in Water and Environmental Sanitation Services, designed to involve communities, especially women, in the design and implementation of systems, had extended its operations to 20 developing countries in four regions from 13 in 1988.

More than 130 countries received support through the DGIP/WHO Global Programme on AIDS, begun in 1987, to which UNDP contributed over $20 million in 1987-1990. Responding to sharp increases in the infection rate, UNDP, in 1989, approved $2.4 million to be applied to three regional projects in Africa, the Arab States and Asia and the Pacific to develop national anti-AIDS strategies and assist in training and education. UNDP and WHO also co-operated in research projects to control diarrhoeal diseases, mainly through vaccines and oral rehydration salts.

Other development programmes supported by UNDP in 1989 involved fisheries, human resources, trade finance and investment, and environment.

Country programmes by region

Africa

In Africa, economic performance in some countries improved in 1989 but was not sufficiently even and widespread to reverse the persistent decline in living standards on the continent, with average income still falling (by 0.3 per cent) as population growth rose faster than the 2.9 per cent rise in GDP. As reported by the Administrator in his 1989 annual report,⁽¹⁾ UNDP's Regional Bureau for Africa organized an historic first meeting in April 1989 at Addis Ababa between the African Ministers for Planning and UNDP resident representatives in Africa, where the ministers affirmed the need for UNDP support in such areas as management of structural adjustment, improvement of aid co-ordination and exchange of dialogue on planning and development. The ministers endorsed the ongoing UNDP project, Social Dimensions of Adjustments, and its two other new initiatives, Structural Adjustment Advisory Teams for Africa and the Planning Approaches project. A trust fund was created for Namibia's emergence as the forty-third independent self-governing country in the sub-Saharan region.

In reporting on the implementation of selected country programmes in the Africa region during 1989,⁽³¹⁾ the Administrator stated that technical co-operation remained in line with the priority areas identified in the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development, 1986-1990. Areas of primary focus included agricultural development, alleviation of external debt, reduction of unemployment, private sector development, environmental management, women in development, encouragement of NGOs and, most importantly, the development of human resources, which UNDP saw as a major component of its programmes in Africa for the next decade.

At the regional level, UNDP organized a series of cluster meetings of African planning ministers to build consensus on development policy, leading to a continent-wide meeting of ministers and resident representatives in Addis Ababa in April 1989. It was agreed that such continent-wide meetings should be held every two years. UNDP continued to organize round-table discussions and sectoral follow-up meetings for several least developed countries in the region, in which major donors were invited to participate.

Roughly three quarters of the African countries had embarked on some economic and institutional structural adjustment, with UNDP assisting countries to make the transition with minimum hardship. Structural Adjustment Advisory Teams for Africa, established in July 1989 as a regional project, provided for training national staff, particularly in finance ministries, to handle the complex analyses and negotiation of structural adjustment packages. A complementary project, which was rapidly expanding, helped sustain social services during structural adjustment.

As an example of UNDP support of development projects, the African Management Services Company was founded in 1989 to promote improved management of African enterprises.

One of the most important events for the region in 1989 was Namibia's independence. A UNDP office was opened in Windhoek, and a country programme was to be decided upon by the new Government by mid-1990. In the meantime, UNDP had established a trust fund for development activities to mobilize resources for preparatory activities and for contingency plans during the transition period, as called for by the Governing Council.⁽³²⁾ The Administrator had taken the initiative to send a fact-finding mission aimed at providing the Government of an independent Namibia with as much information as could be assembled to enable it to take important decisions for carrying on essential services immediately after independence and drafting a development programme for its further growth in the economic and social fields.⁽³³⁾ That initiative was welcomed by the Council in June. The Administrator was asked to report to the Council at its 1990 session on the results of necessary studies to establish a fourth cycle IPF for Namibia.⁽³²⁾ The Council requested⁽³⁴⁾ the Administrator to review the programme of UNDP assistance to national liberation movements recognized in its area by the Organization of African Unity, of which the South West Africa People's Organization of Namibia had been the beneficiary, so that funding could be transferred to the new Government.

Problems of acute hardship and disruption (refugees, displaced persons, famine, desertification and plagues of locusts and migratory birds) were addressed by UNDP in various countries. At the request of the Ethiopian Government, UNDP continued to co-ordinate operations within the Emergency Prevention and Preparedness Group to alleviate the effects of war and famine.

Through a specially designed package of seven projects, costing $14.4 million and involving at least 17 countries, new ways of raising the productivity of women in key development sectors were being tested. The projects focused on agriculture, drinking water supply and sanitation, energy and the informal sector, as well as women's access to credit and scientific and technical education. The purpose was to experiment with participatory grass-roots approaches and to communicate the results to government officials and donors on the front line of decision-making.

A high priority in Africa remained the building of national management and planning capacity. Other project areas included: labour-intensive schemes which not only provided needed employment sources but saved on foreign exchange costs by eliminating imported heavy machinery; identification of viable small-scale enterprises for first-time entrepreneurs among youths and school drop-outs; support for national consultants by developing national consulting industries, with special focus planned for enhancing opportunities for women professionals; environmental management, including prevention of desertification; promotion of the partnership between UNDP and the UNV programme, which had been of great benefit to Africa; upgrading urban facilities where, in many parts of Africa, inadequate urban infrastructures and heavy migration had led to poor and unhygienic living conditions; and cultural heritage preservation, an area tending to be given a lower priority than economic development, but which could be of importance in terms of national identity and tourism revenues.

Arab States and Europe

The unprecedented social and political changes affecting most countries of Eastern Europe during 1989 led the Regional Bureau for Arab States and Europe to develop a new area strategy, based on mobilization of additional resources in Eastern Europe without diversion of resources intended for use elsewhere.⁽¹⁾ That involved technical co-operation and institution-building to assist new Governments in the transition from planned to open market economies. The Bureau organized a meeting of regional resident representatives, which included the first UNDP Workshop on the Environment (Malta, 28-29 March). One of the main results of the workshop was the Malta Declaration of the UNDP Regional Bureau for Arab States and Europe on the Environment and Sustainable Development, setting out guidelines for environmentally sensitive development.

Food security continued to be a major thrust of UNDP's work in the Arab region, where only 13 per cent of the total land surface was arable and agricultural production consistently lagged behind population growth.⁽³¹⁾ Closely related efforts were made to optimize land and water resources use and environmental protection. Emphasis was also given to educating and training large numbers of men and women for jobs ranging from handicrafts production to operation of state-of-the-art communications technologies. Programmes for economic diversification also received support.

Transfer of technology was the dominant theme in the 10 European countries UNDP supported. High-level consultants, equipment and fellowships provided in such fields as agriculture, medicine, informatics and remote sensing enabled the countries to apply advanced techniques while saving scarce foreign currency. In keeping with political changes in the region, support was given to several Eastern European countries in their moves towards more market-oriented economies.

Arab and European Governments and institutions developed many fruitful linkages, with that collaboration given a boost in 1989 through UNDP-supported seminars and projects to promote a sharing of experience in photovoltaic energy systems, women in development and aquaculture.

Specific schemes in the Arab region included supporting agricultural development and new settlers in desert development areas of Egypt; training agricultural personnel to develop arable land and water resources; cutting post-harvest losses in Democratic Yemen; protecting soil from erosion in Tunisia; investigating deep ground-water sources and developing techniques for that purpose in Morocco; upgrading technical education in such areas as vehicle mechanics, construction, engineering and other skills in Somalia; and equipping and training the disabled as well as assisting in training personnel for the disabled in Jordan.

In Eastern Europe, programmes included computer education in Bulgaria and promoting entrepreneurship within new market economies. UNDP and UNIDO sponsored an International Forum of Small and Medium-scale Enterprises and a seminar on photovoltaic energy, attracting planners and policy makers from 13 Arab and eight European countries. Under certain circumstances, photovoltaic systems, generating electricity directly from the sun's rays, could be economically used in both Arab and European regions to provide electricity for rural health clinics, water pumps, village lighting and water desalination. As a result of that seminar, participants set up a steering group to pave the way for a network of Arab and European institutions and experts to exchange data in that field.

Asia and the Pacific

Most developing countries in Asia and the Pacific, although having a slow-down in economic growth to 6 per cent in 1989, from 8 per cent in 1988, showed per capita growth rates for 1989 considerably higher than those of the industrialized Western countries.⁽³¹⁾ One contributing factor was an increase in agricultural production, due largely to improved weather conditions. Overall, however, there was a sharp increase in exports, owing to economic diversification and a governmental tendency to open countries to new foreign investments. Against such a background, UNDP's aim was to work towards improving productivity in the region through promotion of new skills and technologies.

There was a significant shift in assistance project resources in 1989 towards the development of industry, services and technology, though agriculture remained the largest sector. While the provision of expertise was the largest component of UNDP assistance, training assumed growing significance in relation to the declining share for equipment. Several special themes were emphasized in 1989: women's role in development; promotion of public-private sector partnership for national development; management of the environment; development management; and aid co-ordination.

One objective of the UNDP-operated regional programmes was to maintain the Asian export growth momentum and to encourage its spread. A project under that programme helped establish joint ventures between Asian enterprises and developed-world counterparts by drawing up and distributing company profiles, arranging contracts between potential partners and organizing workshops. Participating Asian countries were India, Malaysia, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Thailand. Another regional project provided consultants on marketing strategies and export development to assist leather manufacturers, furniture businesses and printing services in China, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines and Sri Lanka.

Several Asian developing countries sought UNDP assistance in coping with disaster relief and rehabilitation, as did China, Indonesia and Myanmar. Man-made disasters also continued to present challenges. A vital feature of the Pakistan programme was an Afghanistan cross-border operation consisting of eight projects administered from Pakistan implemented by non-governmental organizations with UNDP funding of $4.15 million. Of that, approximately $500,000 was from the Afghanistan IPF, while the remaining $3.65 million was contributed by the United Nations Co-ordinator's Trust Fund for Afghanistan. UNDP-supported activities in Afghanistan in 1989 included: wheat seed distribution; repair of roads, bridges, culverts, drinking water facilities, irrigation and houses; mine clearing; launching of a crop protection programme in the north; and implementation of small, community-scale projects such as primary school and health clinic reconstruction, livestock vaccination and poultry breeding.

Other UNDP-supported projects in the region included combating illiteracy by such activities as training teachers, revising curricula and developing better textbooks; AIDS prevention and control; wildlife management; use of marine resources in a seafarming project and in strengthening marine science; integrating rural development by assisting new agriculture and forestry enterprises, providing transport, damming, surveying, health, veterinary services and water supplies; development of the handicrafts industry and upgrading by a systematic design programme; use of United Nations Volunteers; training in hydroelectric technology; and rain-water conservation projects.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The economies of Latin America and the Caribbean continued in 1989 to bear the impact of the economic crisis which had persisted unabated since the early 1980s, with the region's average per capita income declining for the second consecutive year (by 1 per cent) and an unprecedented 1,000 per cent average inflation rate.⁽¹⁾ The most serious problem continued to be in the region's external debt. The majority of countries remained in a state of continuous crisis management to the detriment of medium-term and long-term planning. Against that background, UNDP continued to provide technical co-operation in priority areas identified by Governments: alleviation of critical poverty; agricultural diversification; investment promotion; development planning; environmental issues; formulation of structural adjustment programmes; and interregional technical co-operation.

The region, beset by burdens of drug trafficking, civil conflict and pressures for environmental conservation as well as external debt and extreme poverty, took steps in 1989 to unite in facing those problems, with UNDP playing a significant

In Central America, UNDP began to implement the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (see PART TWO, Chapter V), approving 21 regional projects at a cost of $11.2 million.

In November, the President of Costa Rica and agroupole⁽³¹⁾ of prominent regional politicians, economic and scientific leaders met in New York to draw up a common approach to the vital issues of balancing environmental needs and conservation of natural resources with the region's development needs. The Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean on Development and the Environment was formed, sponsored by UNDP and the Inter-American Development Bank, to seek major financial contributions from industrialized countries and rapid and growing technology transfer. The meeting also called for an early North-South summit to discuss a common agenda of mutual self-interest for the region.

UNDP provided emergency assistance for hurricane relief to Dominica, Jamaica and Saint Kitts and Nevis as well as the British Virgin Islands and Montserrat. Other assistance to the Caribbean in 1989 included assistance to the Pan Caribbean Disaster Preparedness and Prevention Project, and to the Caribbean Project Development Facility, which provided financial assistance to entrepreneurs in construction, furniture manufacture, agriculture and ship-building. Other projects included harnessing geothermal energy in Saint Lucia; promotion of food security in the Dominican Republic; strengthening the technical and managerial capacity of Guyana; fostering grass-roots enterprises including those for women in Brazil, Guatemala and Paraguay; provision of low-cost, self-help housing in Costa Rica; and volcano monitoring in Saint Vincent.

Indicative planning figures

The Governing Council, having earlier deferred consideration of the issue of net contributor status regarding IPFs,⁽³⁵⁾ examined at its 1989 session a report by the Administrator⁽³⁶⁾ which summarized the outstanding issues and updated IPF programme expenditures and local office cost obligations to be paid by each country covered by a multicountry office for 1987 and 1988, as well as actual contributions made by individual net contributor countries for those two years. The report also summarized the latest round of consultations with individual countries as to their acceptance of net contributor obligations.

The Administrator proposed certain arrangements applicable from 1989 onwards for all countries which either had not formally accepted their net contribution obligations or had accepted those obligations but had not made contributions to the programme for 1987-1988 equal to the cost of delivering the IPF expenditures for those years. He suggested a formula for assessing the IPFs of the countries concerned, including the setting of ceilings.

The Governing Council on 24 February approved⁽³⁷⁾ the Administrator's proposed arrangements in that regard, and invited him to develop possible economic, social, geographic, ecological and other criteria for defining and applying net contributor obligations for the fifth programming cycle. The Administrator was authorized to defer net contributor obligations for those countries facing a serious decline in economic conditions. The Council deferred all other issues regarding net contributor status to the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh sessions, for consideration within the context of discussions both on the future of UNDP and as part of the preparation for the fifth programming cycle.

On 30 June, the Council, as part of its decision on arrangements for the fifth programming cycle,⁽³⁸⁾ invited the Administrator to submit proposals relating to the net contributor countries for consideration by the Council at its February 1990 special session, with a view to enabling the Council to take a final decision during its thirty-seventh (1990) session.

By another decision of 24 February,⁽³⁹⁾ the Council approved a revised IPF for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (administered by the United States) of $3.034 million, it being understood that this increase of $1.807 million would be financed from funds set aside as unallocated.

Programme planning and management

In 1989, UNDP began planning for its fifth programming cycle which would commence on 1 January 1992 and run through 1996. In January 1989⁽²⁶⁾ the Administrator put forward a suggested timetable for planned actions and activities in conjunction with the preparations for the fifth programming cycle covering the next 18 months. The timetable was subsequently approved by the Governing Council,⁽⁴⁰⁾ which requested the Administrator to submit a conceptual paper for the overall planning of UNDP resources for 1992-1996.

In response, the Administrator, in a May report,⁽⁴¹⁾ raised some policy and conceptual issues for the Council to consider. Those issues related to the duration of the programming cycle, the resource scenarios to be considered for the cycle (such as variation in growth rates in voluntary contributions and carry-forward and/or borrowing of IPF entitlements) and the various principles and criteria to be used for the allocation of resources. The principles, which formed the basis on which the overall allocation for country IPFs was determined, included such issues as distribution of total IPF resources among specific categories of countries in accordance with their per capita GNP, per capita GNP and population, and ratio of basic IPF to supplementary IPF.

Having considered the report, the Council in June⁽⁴²⁾ invited the Administrator to prepare proposals and a limited number of simulations, including resource scenarios, illustrating the consequences of the various options the Council was considering for the utilization of resources in the fifth programming cycle. He was also requested to report on options aimed at calculating UNDP financial resources and the resulting IPFs.

Further deliberation on the fifth programme cycle was scheduled for 1990, when a final policy paper with a limited number of options and recommendations on resource levels and individual allocations would be submitted by the Administrator. In the interim, the Administrator was requested to continue informal consultations with UNDP members to determine the resources likely to be available for 1992-1996, as well as their distribution.

Mid-term country programme reviews

In addition to arrangements for the fifth programme cycle, UNDP considered mid-term reviews of fourth-cycle country programmes in 1989.

In accordance with a 1988 decision⁽⁴³⁾ the Administrator provided the Council with information⁽⁴⁴⁾ on the mid-term review of country, regional, interregional and global programmes in respect of aggregate data, an analysis of main findings and a timetable for mid-term reviews and measures taken to carry out such reviews.

The Administrator pointed out that the country programme process was primarily the responsibility of the Government, and that the primary purpose of the mid-term review of a country programme was to assess the progress made during the first half of the programme in achieving the set objectives, measured by both activities launched and results achieved. It gave the Government an opportunity to restructure in the light of unforeseen economic and political changes or natural calamities. The review also provided an opportunity to allocate available unprogrammed funds. UNDP regarded programme reviews as key management tools.

A mid-term review of the regional programme for Africa was tentatively set for the last quarter of 1989. The regional programme for Asia and the Pacific remained under continuous review on a project-by-project basis. Meetings of aid coordinators for the regional programme for Asia and the Pacific which permitted the direct participation of Governments in intercountry programmes had been held regularly since 1981, with the fourth in March/April 1989 covering a second fully fledged mid-term review. The fourth cycle regional programme for the Arab States started in 1988 and it was too early to detail measures for a mid-term review. The mid-term review of the regional programme for Europe was scheduled for June 1989 and for Latin America and the Caribbean for May 1989. Reports would be submitted to the Council in 1990 except those from the Arab States, which would be submitted in 1991.

The Administrator asked the Council for guidance on whether reporting could be done on a selective basis to make tasks realistic and feasible. The timetable called for reviews of some 80 country programmes and four regional programmes through the third quarter of 1989, with UNDP reporting in 1990. Another 40 country programmes and one regional programme were scheduled for review in the fourth quarter of 1989, or later, with UNDP reporting in 1991.

In February 1989, the Council decided⁽²¹⁾ to consider the question of mid-term review at the thirty-sixth session (1989), the February 1990 organizational meeting and the thirty-seventh (1990) session and invited the Administrator to submit on each occasion an overview of all country programme mid-term reviews carried out before the particular Council session or meeting; all country mid-term reviews undergoing major changes or for which reports were explicitly requested; a representative selection of six country reviews; and all regional, interregional and global programmes carried out before the particular session or meeting. The Administrator was also asked to submit to the 1990 session a report requested in a 1988 decision on the evaluation of the mid-term review process⁽⁴⁵⁾

The Administrator, as requested by the Council in February, submitted to the Council a May report on mid-term reviews with nine addenda⁽²²⁾ for its consideration at the thirty-sixth session. The report included an overview, summaries of eight selected country programme mid-term reviews (Chile, China, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Liberia, Peru and Saudi Arabia), a review of the inter-country programme for Asia and the Pacific, and annual progress reports on implementation of country programmes by region (Africa, Arab States and Europe, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean). There had been no significant changes in economic policy or priorities in the countries concerned and none had shown a need for major changes in the programmes for their remaining durations. For some of the countries, recommendations were made on adjusting or improving the implementation of the programme. In each case, the report mentioned the main objectives of the country programme, financing and principal areas selected for co-operation with national organizations. The Administrator estimated that about 90 mid-term reviews of country programmes and two mid-term reviews of intercountry programmes would be conducted during 1989 in time for reporting to the Council in 1990.

Having considered the mid-term reviews, the Council, in a June decision⁽²⁷⁾ requested the Administrator to provide further mid-term reviews as it had requested in February. The Council also asked him to notify its members of mid-term reviews to be presented in 1990, any changes in the schedule of mid-term reviews, and the completion of all mid-term reviews.

Agency accountability

In response to a 1988 Governing Council request⁽⁴⁶⁾ the Administrator submitted in 1989 a report on agency accountability⁽⁴⁷⁾ elaborating his efforts to reach agreement with those executing agencies that had not signed the Standard Basic Executing Agency Agreement (SBEAA) with UNDP. He stated that 11 of the 31 organizations that were executing agencies for UNDP had signed such an agreement and four regional commissions and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements had agreed in an exchange of letters to be guided by its terms. Fifteen executing agencies, including many of the larger ones, had not signed an SBEAA. However, 11 of the larger agencies had signed earlier agreements with the Special Fund, UNDP's predecessor. Thus, four agencies were not covered either by a UNDP standard basic agreement or by a Special Fund executing agency agreement. The UNDP standard basic agreement, drawn up in 1975, differed from earlier Special Fund Agreements (SFAs) in seeking to reflect the respective roles of UNDP and the executing agencies by recognizing UNDP's leadership role within the United Nations system in the administration of central technical co-operation funds; establishing recognition of the UNDP Resident Representatives as the central co-ordinating authority for all United Nations technical co-operation programmes; and setting out the status of the executing agency as an independent contractor who was accountable to UNDP for the execution of such activities. The major agencies that did not accept SBEAA, although they had signed an SEA, wished to hold discussions with UNDP, but after three years there had been little progress. Consequently UNDP decided that SBEAA would be used for new executing agencies.

The legal reasoning by which UNDP had decided not to pursue the matter with those larger agencies that had refused to accept the SBEAA provisions was that the concept of accountability became binding on all agencies when they signed UNDP project documents. However, the issue of how accountability was to be discharged in practice remained unresolved, although it was being addressed by the expert group on successor arrangements to agency support costs. On the basis of its findings, UNDP would consider reviewing SBEAA.

On 30 June⁽⁴⁸⁾ the Council, while recalling that successor arrangements for the present support-cost system would not come into force before 1992, stated that the issue of agency accountability needed to be urgently addressed. It stressed that the Standard Basic Agreement provided a sounder basis than current arrangements for co-operation between UNDP and the executing agencies, serving, among other things, the pursuance of project quality and rationalization of expenditures. The Council welcomed the expressed willingness of executing agencies to discuss the signing of the Standard Basic Agreement and requested the Administrator to enter into negotiations with those agencies that had not yet signed such an agreement with a view to finalizing it before the end of 1989. The Administrator was asked to report the results of those efforts to the Council at its 1990 session, and he and the executing agencies and Member States were urged to pay greater attention to the issue of agency accountability.

Evaluation

In March 1989⁽⁴⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator reported 011 arrangements for evaluation of UNDP. He described steps taken to obtain and apply improved assessment of the quality of the Programme, summarized the results of programme analysis undertaken by the Central Evaluation Office, as well as steps taken to assist Governments to strengthen evaluation capacity, and laid down the proposed work plan for the Office for 1989-1990.

The report concluded that the benefits attained and the experience gained by a strengthened evaluation process had value only if continuously translated into operational use. Such use needed to meet the dual requirements of effective management and effective contribution to development. Therefore, the work of the Office had shifted in focus from system development to generating lessons and facilitating their use in the development of quality projects and programmes. They also involved identifying action that could be taken for aid effectiveness, sustainability and impact. This shift meant that UNDP and the executing agencies would take greater responsibility for the quality and usage of the monitoring system.

On 30 June⁽⁵⁰⁾ the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's concern, as reflected in his report, for the use of evaluation through effective feedback of evaluation findings into programme development and implementation; noted with approval the steps taken to strengthen the evaluation capacity of Governments; and requested the Administrator to inform the Council in 1990 of his efforts to rationalize both the management of the resources devoted to, and the usage made of, evaluation work at all levels in the system. It expressed agreement that UNDP evaluation should move beyond aid management concerns to aid effectiveness, and encouraged UNDP to strengthen programme evaluation and project impact, and to further integrate it into thematic evaluation, taking into account the views of national experts when evaluating. The Administrator was requested to present to the 1990 Council session proposals regarding organization of evaluation activities in UNDP-administered funds.

Promotion of national capacity

On 30 June⁽⁵¹⁾ the Governing Council requested the Administrator to submit a report to its 1990 session outlining possible options, based on UNDP experience, to enable recipient countries to respond better to the serious difficulties faced by some of the poorer countries in attracting and retaining highly qualified national staff to serve in government positions dealing with economic development matters, and to promote national capacity.

Procurement

In April 1989⁽⁵²⁾ the Administrator, in response to two 1988 Governing Council decisions⁽⁴⁶⁾ submitted a report on procurement from developing and under-utilized donor countries, describing activities taken and planned to increase procurement from them, and containing recommendations for the 1990-1991 biennium for strengthening the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Unit (IAPSU). A major problem with statistical reporting was that a number of agencies remained unable to report both country of procurement and country of origin statistics, compounded by the fact that projects under government execution were not reported and included in the statistics. The Director-General for Development and International Economic Cooperation was arranging a consultant mission to take a fresh look at the entire procurement process, and the Administrator had arranged for UNDP participation in the mission.

IAPSU was moving its headquarters from Geneva to Copenhagen by June 1989, hoping to expand the scope of procurement sources and enhance competition among suppliers world wide. The move was expected to save UNDP $200,000 annually in operating costs.

On 30 June⁽⁵³⁾ the Council, noting that procurement by some United Nations system organizations from developing countries diminished in 1988, expressed concern about continuing difficulties in obtaining procurement information within the United Nations development system and urged agencies in the system to provide such information regularly through IAPSU. It reaffirmed the need to take concrete measures towards achieving equitable geographical distribution of procurement, giving preferential treatment to suppliers from developing countries. It welcomed the decision of the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group to hold its 1990 session in Tunisia and took note of the Working Group's intention to consider holding subsequent meetings in other developing country regions.

The Council supported a number of steps the Administrator was proposing, including: requiring project documents to identify inputs which could be procured in developing countries and to stipulate that project personnel ensure maximum inputs from developing countries; adequate briefings of project experts on increased procurement from developing countries; strengthening efforts in the field to identify local sources for programme needs; use of subsidiaries in developing countries of international suppliers; and use of local procurement of imported goods when purchase of indigenous goods was not practical. The Administrator was asked to report to the 1990 Council session on IAPSU's progress in increasing procurement from developing and under-utilized donor countries, the impact of its relocation, and the status of decisions to give suppliers from developing countries preferential treatment.

Co-operation with NGOs and grass-roots organizations

In a February 1989 report⁽⁵⁴⁾ the Administrator described UNDP efforts to encourage grass-roots approaches to development and to expand in-country co-operation among developing countries' Governments, UNDP field offices and NGOs. In 1988, UNDP had launched the Partners in Development Programme whereby Resident Representatives in 40 countries were enabled to grant awards totalling $25,000 per country in direct support of NGO grass-roots activities to strengthen indigenous NGOs, a programme enthusiastically supported by field offices, Governments and NGOs. Steps taken in 1988 to establish the Africa 2000 Network, a programme linking Africa-based grass-roots organizations and NGOs in a continent-wide effort to combat environmental degradation and promote ecologically sustainable development, included a consultation in Nairobi, missions to eight African countries and preparation of a document for the initial five-year programme.

On 30 June⁽⁵⁵⁾ the Council requested the Administrator to expand activities supporting Governments' interests in dialogue and co-operation with grass-roots organizations and NGOs and urged him to provide information to interested Governments on the potential and capacities of NGOs for grass-roots approaches when undertaking national technical co-operation assessments and programmes and round-table meetings, and in preparation and review of country programmes. It called on him to assist Governments in exploring mechanisms for enhancing participation at the grass-roots level in development programmes and projects so as to attune to people's real needs as reflected in national plans and priorities. The Council recommended that UNDP pay increased attention to the informal sector's role and micro-enterprises in providing employment and income opportunities for the poorest population sectors, taking into account the need to collaborate with Governments. The Administrator was asked to explore the potential of the Domestic Development Services activities of UNV and UNV specialists in developing countries concerned, as a means of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, with a view to initiating new activities of that kind and to report to the 1990 Council session. He was also asked to report to that session on contributions to the Partners in Development Programme and Africa 2000 Network Programme to which the Council invited contributions.

Management Development Programme

After the 1988 establishment of the Management Development Programme by the Governing Council to assist developing countries in setting up long-term, sectoral or multi-sectoral programmes; of management development and related institution-building⁽⁴³⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted preliminary guidelines for implementing the Programme.⁽⁵⁶⁾ He reported that UNDP had started to develop a network of experts and institutions to assist developing countries in the field of public sector management, and hoped to involve local consultants as much as possible. The guidelines were considered by the Council at the 1989 special session, which then requested him to present to the thirty-sixth (1989) session revised preliminary guidelines, and to report to the thirty-seventh (June 1990) session on progress in carrying out the Management Development Programme.⁽⁵⁷⁾ Those revised guidelines⁽⁵⁸⁾ were submitted to the Council at the 1989 session, which took note of them, and, taking into account views expressed by delegations during the session, repeated the request for a report on implementation of the Programme to the 1990 session.⁽⁵⁹⁾

Short-term advisory services

In March, the Administrator submitted a report to the Governing Council evaluating the focal point for short-term advisory services⁽⁶⁰⁾ as the Council had requested in 1985⁽⁶¹⁾ when it established the UNDP short-term advisory services (STAS) programme to help developing countries meet their needs for top-level technical and managerial advice on specific issues. The STAS activities were aimed at matching demand for short-term problem-specific assistance with the supply of expertise available from the private and parastatal sectors of developed and developing countries. In addition, it provided "on the job" training to ensure the durability of the advice long after the adviser's departure. Initially set up for a two-year trial period, STAS operations had been renewed. Located at UNDP headquarters in New York with a staff of three, STAS utilized the resources of 112 UNDP field offices, UNIDO senior industrial development field advisers assigned to UNDP field offices, and the skill banks of its 31 co-operating organizations. As at 31 December 1988, it had received 275 requests from 64 countries and one regional body and had completed 129 assignments in 45 countries.

Stating that the demand for STAS-type services was expected to increase through 1991 to an estimated 200 annually, the Administrator recommended that STAS be made an operational part of UNDP beginning on 1 January 1990 and that its financial requirements be made part of the UNDP administrative budget from that date.

Having considered the report, the Governing Council in June⁽⁶²⁾ noted progress made by the STAS programme as well as the imbalances in the list of countries of origin and placement, which it requested the Administrator to redress so as to ensure adequate geographic distribution. The Council also requested the Administrator to report to the Council in 1990 on the STAS evaluation with a recommendation on the establishment of a focal point for STAS as an operational part of UNDP. The Council decided to continue the operation of the focal point on STAS through 1991 under the current organizational arrangements, subject to the Council's decision in 1990.

Financing

In his review of the financial situation in 1989,⁽⁶³⁾ the Administrator stated that total UNDP income in 1989 amounted to $1,153.9 million with total expenditures of $1,206.2 million, thus giving a net deficit of income over expenditure of $52.3 million. As a result of the deficit of main programme income over expenditure, there was a decrease in UNDP's general resources from $580.9 million at December 1988 to $523.2 million at 31 December 1989 (or $476 million if accumulated non-convertible currencies were excluded). Total income was $71.7 million less than forecast. Income received from voluntary contributions alone totalled $938.2 million. After applying the accounting linkage for local office costs, income amounted to $932.6 million, lower than forecast by $51.4 million. The lower than forecast income resulted primarily from exchange rate impact on the value of pledges for 1989, with pledge value in national currencies, in dollar terms, decreasing by $58.6 million between 31 December 1988 and the date paid, and the value of UNDP-held assets in various currencies decreasing, in dollar terms, by $37.5 million. The exchange rate fluctuations in 1989 resulted in a minimal increase in the value of pledges over those received in 1988, 0.2 per cent, as opposed to an increase of 9.8 per cent from 1987 to 1988 and a departure from the trend of substantial increases in pledges for the previous three years.⁽⁶⁴⁾

Field programme expenditures in 1989 amounted to $897.6 million, of which $728.9 million represented expenditures against IPF (including $1.2 million of expenditure in respect of add-on funds), $60.8 million against supplementary programmes in the UNDP account and $107.9 million against cost-sharing. IPF expenditure in 1989 of $728.9 million, although $31.1 million less than forecast, represented an increase of 7.5 per cent over 1988 ($678 million and itself an increase of almost 15 per cent over 1987). The increase in delivery, achieved for the fifth year in a row, reflected a gradually ascending, planned expenditure pattern, confirming, the Administrator reported, an effective programme build-up yielding the desired results. This continuing build-up thus reaffirmed the principles underlying the present programme strategy of the need to utilize all liquid resources available to UNDP in a sustainable and organized manner. However, the 4.1 per cent shortfall in the IPF delivery compared with a target of $760 million could mainly be attributed to, firstly, a late revision of the 1989 expenditure target, with the time allowed for build-up possibly insufficient for expenditures to reach new targets and, secondly, new two-year budgetary procedures and some tightening up of procedures for recording unliquidated obligations. Nevertheless, delivery at $728.9 million continued the planned trend of gradually increasing IPF expenditures, with an expected continuation at least into 1990 and 1991.

In forecasting programme financing for 1990 and 1991, the Administrator stated that in the light of the 1989 results it would appear quite difficult for UNDP to meet an expenditure budget of $840 million, the intended target of the Administrator, which was $111 million (15 per cent) higher than 1989 expenditure. The original $815 million target, before the Administrator's suggested increase, now seemed more realistic, permitting a 1991 expenditure target of $860 million.

Such a continuing gradual build-up of programme expenditure would lead to a reduction in the liquid resources being held by UNDP. At the end of 1989, UNDP resources available for programming amounted to $523.2 million, with an expected further substantial decrease by the end of 1990 to $397.9 million and in 1991 to $215 million.

In 1989, project expenditures by the Office for Project Services (OPS) increased by about 20 per cent⁽⁶⁵⁾ over 1988, more than $200 million, itself a 29 per cent increase over 1987.⁽⁶⁶⁾ In particular, activities undertaken on behalf of IFAD intensified, bringing the OPS portfolio to 52 ongoing loan projects, valued at more than $400 million, for which loan administration and project supervision services were being rendered.

The audited financial statements for UNDP for 1989⁽⁶⁷⁾ showed that the total unexpended UNDP resources decreased from $773.2 million at the end of 1988 to $721.0 million as at 31 December 1989.

Contributions. The audited financial statements for 1989⁽⁶⁸⁾ showed that the total income from contributions to the UNDP account was $1,075.7 million. That included contributions from Governments and other sources as follows: voluntary contributions $932.5 million ($938.1 million, less transfers to government local office costs of $5.6 million); voluntary contributions to SMF/LDC, $15.2 million; cost-sharing contributions, $118.4 million; and cash counterpart contributions for projects, $9.6 million. Exchange adjustments on the collection of contributions of $500,000 were deducted to derive the total.

As at 31 December 1989, pledges made in 1989 to the UNDP account for use in 1990 amounted to $551.6 million; pledges for 1990 for SMF/LDC amounted to $1.7 million. The financial statements gave a breakdown of contributions by Government in 1989 and of pledges for 1990.

In his annual report,⁽⁶⁵⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that during 1989 four donor countries (Austria, Finland, Iceland, Spain) raised their contributions by 8 per cent or more in United States dollar terms, and among recipient countries nine each pledged $1 million or more (Brazil, China, Colombia, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Republic of Korea, Thailand). Sweden, with its multi-year system of pledging, remained the second largest donor to UNDP, close behind the United States. The other top 10 donor countries included Canada, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway and Switzerland.

Budgets

Revised 1988-1989 budget and 1990-1991 estimates

Revised budget estimates of the UNDP core budget for the biennium 1988-1989⁽⁶⁷⁾ amounted to $347.1 million (gross) or $317.8 million (net), with no volume change proposed for the biennium. The $2.0 million increase in gross terms was attributable to cost and inflation increases, partly offset by a currency release. For UNDP as a whole, revised budget estimates amounted to $429.6 million (gross) and $340.5 million (net). The 3 per cent increase in gross estimates was attributable to a $10.2 million volume increase in respect of OPS, reflecting an increase in staffing by 21 Professionals and 31 General Service posts. A further $0.8 million volume increase in respect of UNV reflected an increase in its staffing by 2 Professionals and 7 General Service posts. Both the OPS and UNV increases reflected increases in work-loads.

Original gross appropriations estimates in 1987 had been $394.1 million, revised to $416.2 million in 1988, while net estimates had been $331.7 million and $351.9 respectively.

Budget estimates for 1990-1991 for the UNDP core budget amounted to $438.2 million (gross) or $405.9 million (net). In real terms, that represented a volume increase of 8.8 per cent. The volume increase in the field included an additional 106 Professional posts, including a further 73 national officer posts, as well as 171 local staff. The volume increase at headquarters included 22 Professional and 47 General Service posts.

Budget estimates for UNDP as a whole for 1990-1991 amounted to $567.6 million (gross) or $433.5 million (net). The volume increase overall was 14.7 per cent.

In presenting the 1990-1991 budget estimates, the Administrator said he had proceeded from the view that some strengthening of UNDP was required both in the field and at headquarters, and thus, for the first time since 1981 (with the notable exception of Africa operations, strengthened in the 1986-1987 and 1988-1989 bienniums), he was not presenting a zero-growth budget. Instead, he proposed some selective strengthening, with the bulk of the strengthened field office network falling in the Asia and Pacific region, which also received a substantial increase in core programmable resources.

Further explaining the budget estimates, the Administrator provided an overall review of UNDP senior management structure, as requested by the Governing Council in 1988.⁽⁶⁸⁾ He stated that the inner core of UNDP was not really amenable to major structural change. On the other hand, he believed the Council should periodically re-examine the validity and viability of retaining each of the satellite funds as independently administered units.

The Administrator proposed, as a separate element in the 1990-1991 estimates, a wholly new dimension to the field office network—the Development Support Service, intended to give Resident Representatives access to locally available specialized expertise. The proposal would provide for 275 Development Support Officers and $11.4 million of consultancy funds. The officers would be technical specialists with 15 or more years of practical experience in the country, who would be resident in the field office for one to three years, while the consultants would serve short terms of less than 12 months and would normally be nationals of the country concerned. Specializations of both groups would be at the discretion of the Resident Representative, and therefore vary from country to country, but envisaged areas included macro-economic policy, social policy, environmental issues, human resource development, rural development, industrial development and development management. The underlying rationale for the proposal was the evident need for UNDP field offices to participate more fully in the policy aspects of the development process.

While the proposal was presented in the context of the biennial budget, the Administrator did not believe the funding should be classified as part of that budget, but should be charged to a new line in UNDP financial statements, titled "Development Support Services" and classified alongside programme support costs paid to agencies and UNDP sectoral support costs.

The Administrator also proposed a selective strengthening of the UNDP non-core units, IAPSU, UNCDF and UNSO, involving respectively one Professional and three General Service posts; three Professionals and three General Service posts; and two Professional posts and three national officers in the field.

On 30 June, the Governing Council approved⁽⁶⁹⁾ revised appropriations of $431,869,000 (gross) to finance the 1988-1989 biennial budget and resolved that the income estimates of $48,284,700 be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $383,584,300. It also approved the revised budget estimates for OPS, excluding the proposed post reclassifications.

On the same day, in a decision⁽⁷⁰⁾ covering many aspects of the 1990-1991 budget estimates, the Governing Council noted the substantial volume increase proposed in the core biennial budget for 1990-1991, and stated that this was at a time when the prospect for significant real growth in voluntary contributions was uncertain. It therefore decided to confine the overall volume increase to 4.6 per cent (plus the balance of the Africa strengthening package approved in 1988⁽⁷¹⁾), comprising a volume increase in respect of headquarters of $6,430,800 and a volume increase of field office activities of $13,196,600. The Administrator was requested to report to the thirty-seventh (1990) session on how he had utilized those volume increases. The Council deferred all proposed post reclassifications at headquarters and invited the Administrator to resubmit his proposals in the context of the revised 1990-1991 budget estimates at the Council's 1990 session.

Regarding the Development Support Services proposal, the Council decided to establish in the 1990-1991 budget a separate appropriation of $5 million for the introduction of such services in the UNDP field offices and requested the Administrator to provide a detailed report on utilization of the new facility to the thirty-eighth (1991) session in the context of the 1992-1993 budget proposals.

The Administrator was requested to prepare a comprehensive review of the UNDP senior management structure no later than the 1990 Council session, including the responsibilities of all posts at the D-2 level and above, with justification, the desirability of merging or consolidating core units performing similar or related functions, the possibility of management integration of the smaller funds and opportunities for reducing the total number of posts at D-2 level and above.

The Council approved proposed appropriations of $528,658,200 (gross) and resolved that income estimates of $53,514,000 be used to offset the appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $475,144,200.

Review of 1988 financial situation

In a May 1989 report⁽⁷²⁾ the Administrator provided a comprehensive financial review of activities financed from the UNDP account during 1988 (excluding trust funds) and the financial position at the end of that year. It included estimates of anticipated resources and expenditures for 1989 and 1990, as well as information on cost-sharing activities, the status of SMF/LDC and of SPR, the placement of UNDP funds, the Operational Reserve, utilization of accumulated non-convertible currencies, agency support cost arrangements, the status of the Reserve for Field Accommodation, management and other support services and the Senior Industrial Field Advisory Programme (see below under Sectoral Support). Total income in 1988 amounted to $1,163.7 million and total expenditure to $1,109.3 million, resulting in a surplus of income over expenditure of $54.3 million, which was attributable to individual funds of the UNDP account.

On 30 June, the Governing Council, taking note⁽⁷³⁾ of the 1988 annual review of the financial situation, urged the Administrator to continue to seek the co-operation of other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to share common premises in the field for greater co-ordination and Economics, and to report annually on the results of his consultations. It authorized overcommitment of the Reserve for Field Accommodation of up to $10 million to June 1990; requested continued reporting on problems related to utilizing non-convertible currencies; and requested the Administrator to establish expenditure targets over the balance of the fourth cycle providing for a continuous increase in the rate of IPF delivery. He was asked to report on the most desirable expenditure targets for the balance of the fourth cycle at the 1990 special and regular sessions. The Administrator was also requested to report to the 1990 special session on his recommendation on the release of the final 25 per cent of the supplementary IPFs and Special Programme Resources and the resulting final IPFs and Special Programme Resources authorized for the fourth cycle, and to review and report to the 1990 special session on prospects financed from the Special Measures Fund for Least Developed Countries.

Mid-term resource situation

As part of the mid-term review of the fourth programming cycle, the Administrator reported in April 1989 on the mid-term resource situation for the programming cycle and revised earmarkings and allocations for SPR activities (see below).⁽⁷⁴⁾ The report was made in response to a 1988 Governing Council decision⁽⁴⁵⁾ in which it authorized an additional amount of $676 million for the fourth programming cycle, of which $490 million was allocated for country and intercountry IPFs. The allocations were to be disbursed in a staggered manner: 50 per cent in 1988, 25 per cent in 1989 and the other 25 per cent in 1990, pending an annual assessment by the Administrator.

Based on resource forecasts, the Administrator released the 1989 allotment in January, bringing the total of additional resources released for commitments authorized in 1988 to 75 per cent. In February⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Council agreed with the Administrator's proposal to release the entire Project Development Facility earmarking for the fourth cycle in 1989 (or 100 per cent of the increase authorized by the Council's 1 July 1988 decision), provided that the overall SPR commitment during the year did not exceed the amount authorized in 1988. The April report provided details on the January 1989 resource forecast which served as a basis for the release of the 25 per cent of the additional resources. For the purpose of planning, it assumed for the years 1989 through 1991 an average annual growth rate of voluntary contributions in local currencies of at least 5 per cent, and an annual appreciation of the United States dollar of 5 per cent for those three years.

Having considered the Administrator's report on the mid-term resource situation, the Council on 30 June approved⁽⁷⁶⁾ as an interim measure use of funds available from reimbursements under the initial Project Development Facility allocations of a total of $2 million for future Project Development Facility missions on a non-reimbursable basis, while requesting a complete report on the operations of the Facility for the Council's 1990 session. The Council requested the Administrator, in the context of the review of the possible release of the 25 per cent of the supplementary IPFs and SPR to be undertaken in 1990, to submit proposals for possible funding of activities.

After considering the mid-term resource situation, the Governing Council, on 30 June 1989,⁽⁷⁷⁾ taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/1 of 10 May 1989, regarding emergency assistance to Democratic Yemen for rehabilitation and reconstruction after the March-April torrential rain and floods, requested the Administrator to consider additional assistance to Democratic Yemen from SPR beyond the normally authorized amount. The Administrator was asked to report to the 1990 session on his efforts in that regard.

Special Programme Resources

Following the Council's 1988 approval⁽⁴³⁾ of an allocation of $110 million to augment SPR for the remainder of the fourth cycle, the Administrator submitted a report providing details on the earmarkings and allocation of resources for activities previously agreed by the Council and traditionally financed by SPR.⁽⁷⁸⁾ In particular, he suggested increasing SPR earmarkings for assistance for disaster relief and programme development, particularly the Project Development Facility (PDF). New SPR activities for which he proposed new allocations included the Management Development Programme (see above).

On 24 February 1989 the Governing Council requested⁽⁷⁵⁾ the Administrator to provide the Council's 1989 regular session with a detailed review of commitments made under the various SPR components and invited him to submit proposals on possibilities for accommodating increased amounts for Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (TCDC) (at least $1 million) and an additional amount for disaster-related activities, while ensuring that adequate resources were allocated to SPR components which were devoted to aid co-ordination and programme quality. It agreed with the Administrator's proposal to release the entire PDF earmarking for the fourth cycle in 1989 (see above).

The Administrator, in his April report on the mid-term resource situation⁽⁷⁴⁾ made proposals as suggested by the Council on increased allocations by reducing the amount of unearmarked resources from $1.7 million to $0.7 million, and by cancelling the fourth cycle earmarking for pre-investment activities. The Administrator considered that an additional amount of at least $2 million was required so that it could be effectively used by June 1990.

On 30 June 1989, the Council, after considering the Administrator's report on the mid-term resource situation, authorized⁽⁷⁶⁾ the additional fourth cycle earmarkings under SPR of $1 million each for TCDC and for disaster-related activities funded by corresponding reductions in non-earmarked SPR as well as the cancellation of the fourth cycle earmarking of $1 million for pre-investment activities.

UNDP-administered funds

Five new trust funds established⁽⁷⁹⁾ in 1989 by the Administrator on behalf of UNDP were to finance: emergency humanitarian assistance to Angola; support for priority areas during Namibia's transition period and immediately after independence; promotion of the conservation and management of the cultural and natural inheritance of Latin America and the Caribbean; the UNDP/Norway Trust Fund for the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America; and assistance for developing countries in complying with the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer. Contributions to those funds received during the year amounted to some $2.8 million out of a total 1989 income of $28.2 million for all 50 trust funds. Actual expenditure on the 50 trust funds in 1989 was $19.2 million. A trust fund was also established on behalf of UNCDF; five on behalf of UNSO; two on behalf of UNFSTD; and two on behalf of UNV.

On 30 June, the Governing Council, after considering the Administrator's report on trust funds established by him in 1988,⁽⁸⁰⁾ the ACABQ report thereon⁽⁸¹⁾ as well as the Administrator's report on all trust funds administered by him since 1981,⁽⁸²⁾ urged⁽⁸³⁾ donor Governments to ensure that funds were received in advance of trust fund activities and requested the Administrator to provide, in future reports on trust funds established since 1981, a brief narrative text on the scope and nature of such activities.

Agency support costs

Concerning additional reimbursement of programme support costs for 1987 to executing agencies based in Europe in the light of depreciation of the United States dollar against the national currencies of the headquarters locations concerned, the Governing Council, responding to an ACC request, had in 1988 approved⁽⁸⁴⁾ an exceptional measure and asked⁽⁷¹⁾ the Administrator to have ACC inform the executing agencies of the Council's intention to examine successor arrangements for agency support costs from 1992.

The Administrator reported⁽⁸⁵⁾ to the Council's February 1989 special session on subsequent developments, stating that CCSQ(OPS), a subsidiary body of ACC, had created a task force to elaborate agency views on the matter. That task force had met several times and had kept the UNDP Administrator fully informed of its discussions.

The Administrator prepared a paper⁽⁸⁶⁾ concerning the terms of reference for UNDP's expert group study of issues connected with agency support costs. In that paper, he outlined the group's proposed terms of reference, including its composition, working methods and timetables for study, as well as the main issues for study, including the tripartite nature of technical co-operation (UNDP, the executing agency and the Government concerned), the role of the agency involved, the UNDP central funding role, arrangements for project execution, and appropriate compensation arrangements. The Administrator proposed that experts prepare a paper for submission to the Council's February 1990 meeting, reviewing existing relationships and procedures of operational activities of the United Nations system in the light of present and future needs of developing countries and giving detailed consideration to the main issues he had mentioned.

On 23 February 1989,⁽⁸⁷⁾ the Council approved the Administrator's proposed terms of reference and endorsed his proposal to hire four experts to conduct the study.

Sectoral support

The Governing Council, having agreed⁽⁸⁴⁾ in 1988 to review the classification of Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFAs) provided to developing countries in co-operation with UNIDO, and having considered proposals made by the Administrator in his annual review of the UNDP financial situation,⁽⁷²⁾ decided⁽⁷³⁾ on 30 June 1989 that SIDFA posts could be classified in a range from the P-4 or L-4 level to the D-I or L-6 level.

World Maritime University

Having considered the mid-term resource situation, the Governing Council, on 30 June 1989,⁽⁸⁸⁾ maintained UNDP financial support for the World Maritime University at $1.2 million a year for 1990-1991, while requesting the Administrator to try to secure long-term financing.

Accounts and auditing

The financial statements of UNDP for the year ended 31 December 1988, together with the report of the Board of Auditors, were submitted to the General Assembly in July 1989.⁽⁸⁹⁾ The statement also covered UNDP-administered trust funds. ACABQ, in October,⁽⁹⁰⁾ commented on the Board's findings.

By resolution 44/183, the Assembly accepted the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors regarding UNDP, among others, and requested UNDP to take action to improve conditions as suggested by the Board.

Audit reports for 1987

In May 1989, the Administrator submitted to the Governing Council the audited accounts and audit reports of participating and executing agencies relating to funds allocated to them by UNDP as at 31 December 1987.⁽⁹¹⁾ He included comments on substantive observations of the auditors and further information on follow-up action in response to a 1988 Council decision⁽⁹²⁾ and a 1988 General Assembly resolution⁽⁹³⁾ on preparation of audit reports.

On 30 June 1989, the Council noted⁽⁹⁴⁾ with concern that the Board of Auditors' opinion on the 1987 accounts was qualified on several counts, though some were of a technical nature, and noted with satisfaction that the Administrator had taken, or was taking, the necessary steps within his competence to correct the conditions that gave rise to those qualifications. It recognized that the audit opinion on UNDP accounts would remain qualified as long as audit confirmation of programme expenditure by United Nations organizations adopting biennial auditing procedures had not been received by the Board of Auditors at the time it issued opinions on UNDP accounts. The Administrator was asked, in order to resolve that problem, to submit to the 1990 session appropriate amendments to UNDP Financial Regulations providing for audited financial statements on a biennial basis, beginning with the 1990-1991 biennium, and that the Board of Auditors report, beginning in 1990, on an audit examination carried out in respect of the first year of each biennium. The Administrator was urged to continue efforts to obtain adequate audit coverage of funds disbursed by Governments as UNDP executing agencies, reporting on that to the 1990 session. The Administrator was requested to invite a representative of the Board of Auditors to future Council sessions. The Council requested the Board of Auditors to review current UNDP project budgetary procedures, in particular the impact of procedures introduced for a three-year experimental period (beginning 1 July 1987), relating to the concept of a two-year project budget cycle, and the administrations of the executing agencies were invited to involve their external auditors in the process.

The Council recommended that the General Assembly request the Administrator, in co-operation with the executing agencies, to report to the Council on specific corrective actions taken by the executing agencies to implement recommendations resulting from the external audit reports on UNDP-financed activities executed by them.

Administrative questions

In-house technical expertise

Responding to a 1988 Governing Council request,⁽⁹⁵⁾ the Administrator in March reported⁽⁹⁶⁾ on the role and need for in-house technical expertise in UNDP, including the appropriate role of the Technical Advisory Division, in the programme and project cycle. The Administrator made suggestions regarding those matters, including periodically bringing together technical professionals in the field to share experiences and identify problems or approaches which could then be pursued either in-house or through consultants. The Council on 30 June took note⁽¹⁴⁾ of the report.

Actions by other organs of the UN system

In response to a Governing Council request in 1988,⁽⁹⁵⁾ the Administrator in February 1989⁽⁹⁷⁾ submitted a report on action which UNDP had taken or intended to take in response to 1988 decisions of other organs of the United Nations system, which followed up on an earlier report⁽⁹⁸⁾ drawing the Council's attention to 1988 General Assembly resolutions and decisions requiring Council consideration. The Administrator had proposed, for the future, to make a brief presentation to the Council's organizational meeting on issues of immediate and direct concern to UNDP arising from actions taken by other United Nations organs the previous year and to prepare a substantive report, for each June Council session, on steps taken or planned by UNDP on those matters. On 30 June, the Council took note⁽¹⁴⁾ of the Administrator's February report.

Change of Council's name and venue

The General Assembly in 1988 invited⁽⁹⁹⁾ the Governing Council to consider the possibility of changing its name to "Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund" as well as of holding its future sessions at United Nations Headquarters. On 30 June⁽¹⁰⁰⁾ the Governing Council decided to inform the Assembly that it wished to retain its name and venue.

Appointment of UNDP Administrator

After consulting the members of the Governing Council, the Secretary-General, on 17 October, transmitted a note⁽¹⁰¹⁾ to the General Assembly proposing that the appointment of William H. Draper III as Administrator of UNDP, whose term of office had begun on 1 May 1986, and would expire on 31 December 1989, be extended for a four-year term until 31 December 1993. That appointment was confirmed by the General Assembly by decision 44/307 of 1 November 1989.

Other technical co-operation

UN Programmes

In 1989, the United Nations, mainly through DTCD, continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries. In a report⁽¹⁾ to the UNDP Governing Council, the Secretary-General addressed various policy issues and described DTCD's technical co-operation programme and those of other United Nations entities, reporting that, as it advanced into the closing decade of the twentieth century, DTCD had delivered the largest programme in its history.

The United Nations delivered in 1989 a technical co-operation programme of $250 million, compared to $222 million in 1988, an increase of 13 per cent in project expenditures. Of that amount, DTCD executed a programme of $162.2 million. UNDP-financed projects represented $104.3 million; projects financed by UNFPA accounted for $26.9 million; $21.0 million was financed by trust funds; and $10.0 million was expended under the United Nations regular programme for technical co-operation. In comparison with 1988, budgets increased by $27.7 million (15 per cent) in 1989 to $210.5 million, and the delivery of $162.2 million was up 9 per cent. The implementation rate was 77 per cent.

DTCD activities

In his report on technical co-operation activities,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General stated that in 1989 DTCD had projects under execution with a total delivery of $162.2 million against a budget of $210.5 million. The volume of expenditure for UNDP-financed projects increased by $7.1 million and accounted for 64 per cent of total expenditures, compared to 65 per cent in 1988. A high rate of growth in funding by UNFPA was maintained in 1989 with an increase of approximately $6 million, or more than 29 per cent over 1988, thereby offsetting a drop in UN trust funds. There was a reversal of the previous decline in UNDP trust funds which rose by nearly $1 million. Growth in delivery persisted for the second year in a row, amounting to $13 million or nearly 9 per cent in 1989, in comparison to 1988.

By sector, natural resources and energy represented 36.9 per cent of total expenditures or $59.9 million. Development planning was 19.4 per cent or $31.5 million; statistics $28.2 million (17.4 per cent); public administration and finance $20.9 million (12.9 per cent); population $9.6 million (5.9 per cent); social development $6.9 million (4.2 per cent); United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa $2.4 million (1.5 per cent); and others $2.8 million (1.6 per cent).

By geographic area, the DTCD-executed programme included expenditures of $67.4 million for Africa, $46.2 million for Asia and the Pacific, $35.1 million for the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and interregional projects, and $13.5 million for the Americas. The largest growth was in Asia, where the programme increased by $7.4 million. Project delivery in Africa remained the largest but its share of the total delivery again decreased somewhat, from 45 per cent to 42 per cent (47 per cent in 1987).

Highlights of the work of DTCD in 1989 included the first large-scale project funded by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in integrated rural development (including crop substitution and diversification of employment opportunities) to facilitate elimination of opium poppy cultivation; statistical work in Namibia to obtain preliminary estimates of population and GDP, as a basis for establishing a tentative IPF; collaboration with the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference to assist countries in the region in evaluating their potential for certain key minerals and related products; development of a rigorous and recognized methodology for assessing the size and cost of the civil service throughout Africa; assistance in financial planning and management to requesting African countries, as part of a co-ordinated package of technical co-operation in macro-economic planning and management; technical advisory services for a development planning and management information system for the public sector; build-up of investment advisory services; establishment of a focal point for environment within DTCD; authorization to undertake management services if requested; support for LDCs in their preparation of national economic data for the 1990 Second United Nations Conference on LDCs; stepped-up preparations in 71 countries for the 1990 round of population and housing censuses; an interregional meeting on corruption in Government, which called for significant administrative reform of a structural nature in the public service.

Developments in Eastern Europe in 1988 prompted DTCD and other United Nations bodies to review on-going programmes in Bulgaria, Hungary, Poland and Romania, in order to estimate the level of possible technical co-operation requirements in coming years.

Human resources development—institution-building, training, transfer of technology—remained the centrepiece of nearly all DTCD activities in 15 substantive fields, aimed at strengthening the national capacities of developing countries. In 1989, there was a noticeable increase in government requests for support related to utilization of loans financed by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Financial planning and management became an important element of the programme, as developing countries wrestled with problems of foreign debt and balance of payments.

A global campaign to rehabilitate out-dated electric power stations was initiated in 1989 and an interregional training centre for energy planning and management was inaugurated in co-operation with the Latin American Energy Organization. In all sectors, data collection and information management systems were essential components of the projects. Ecological and environmental considerations became more common features of projects executed by DTCD.

UNDP Council action. On 30 June, the Governing Council stressed⁽²⁾ its role in providing guidance to DTCD in its operational activities funded by UNDP and the importance of the Department's projects to the UNDP-funded assistance. It welcomed DTCD's increase in 1988 project implementation and reiterated the importance of intensifying co-operation between UNDP and DTCD in preparation of round-table meetings, national technical co-operation and assessments programmes and assistance activities of the Management Development Programme. DTCD was urged to continue to intensify its support for projects carried out by Governments, focusing on helping to strengthen national capacities for management and development. The Department's steps to establish a data bank of project results and evaluation reports were welcomed and the Department was encouraged to strengthen further its evaluation activities by establishing a self-evaluation system for all projects which it implemented. The Council welcomed DTCD's efforts to emphasize training activities, including promotion of integration of women in development at all stages of the project cycle, in particular the planning, design and execution phase. UNDP and DTCD were urged to develop a more effective division of labour in which their comparative strengths and capacities were used to maximum advantage.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In a March report⁽³⁾ to the sixth session of the High Level Committee on the Review of TCDC, covering the period 1 November 1986 to 31 October 1988, the UNDP Administrator recorded progress made by the United Nations development system in implementing the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC.⁽⁴⁾ The Administrator stated that progress had been made for facilitating and implementing TCDC and that the use of developing countries' capacities continued to expand, but many organizations continued to report difficulties in quantifying their support in financial terms. Progress continued in varying degrees, but most organizations had not succeeded in overcoming their internal procedural constraints that would enable them to document progress in financial and statistical terms, which was partly due to difficulties in defining TCDC activities and recording statistical and financial information. He suggested institution of procedures whereby at the time of approval of a development project any TCDC activities forming part of a project would be clearly identified, both in the narrative and in the budget of the document, and that ACC develop revised and more comprehensive guidelines on the subject. Despite the many constraints and difficulties still besetting implementation of TCDC activities, the Administrator found that 10 years after adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, TCDC had established itself as an integral part of the development process, with good progress continuing in utilizing developing countries' capacities in technical co-operation activities.

The report contained available statistical information on TCDC support by 23 of the 35 organizations of the United Nations development system invited to submit information. The response, the Administrator said, clearly demonstrated their strong commitment to TCDC and illustrated the steady growth in volume of their respective TCDC activities.

As requested by the High-level Committee, the Administrator reported in March⁽⁵⁾ on strengthening and improving intergovernmental programming exercises for TCDC. UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC was specifically responsible for promoting and supporting TCDC outside as well as within the framework of UNDP programming. An important part of the Special Unit's work in recent years had been assisting developing countries in carrying out a series of structured TCDC programming exercises, and the Administrator described that work in his report. The Special Unit headed efforts to assist countries in organizing TCDC programming, as well as mobilizing catalytic funding for emerging projects.

In discharge of its lead organizational role for promoting and supporting TCDC in the United Nations development system, the UNDP Governing Council had since 1979 approved a total of $11.75 million from Special Programme Resources

(in addition to IPFs) for promotion of action-oriented TCDC activities, including information support. Estimated UNDP expenditures for TCDC for the country, regional, interregional and global IPF's in the biennium 1987-1988 amounted to $104.9 million as against $55.7 million in the biennium 1985-1986, an increase of 88.3 per cent. Those represented 7.3 per cent of all IPF expenditures in 1987-1988, which were $1,443.4 million.

As another way of improving TCDC, UNDP had developed a TCDC information referral system, INRES-South, from a directory into a computerized service containing more than 40,000 items of information on the training and expertise capabilities of some 3,500 institutions in more than 100 developing countries. It was being continuously updated and linked with other data banks in and outside the United Nations system. Use of INRES-South continued to increase. Inquiries, which had almost tripled in 1987 to about 100 a month, reached 120 a month in 1988.

In a statement⁽⁶⁾ to the High-level Committee, the Administrator, as convener of the Committee and representative of the United Nations development system as a whole, said that a significant stimulus that the United Nations system had given TCDC was its help to Governments in organizing TCDC programming activities. Those "TCDC markets" had now occurred within and among all the regions of the developing world and had generated hundreds of TCDC exchanges. More importantly, they had opened the way to broader and lasting technical co-operation among institutions, organizations and enterprises of developing countries, where, in many cases, no contact had existed before. While initiative and action rested primarily with Governments, the United Nations system, spearheaded by the UNDP Special Unit, had played an important catalytic and supportive role.

Also addressing the Committee, the Director-General for DIEC said that the challenge remained for the United Nations development system to mobilize the capacities, skills and experiences available through TCDC in the context of all development activities, fully involving its field office network and organizations covering every possible sector. UN system organizations should selectively assemble information on innovative solutions and on capacities and then ensure that such information was effectively utilized in relevant programmes in other developing countries.

The President of the High-level Committee said the review had shown considerable progress compared with the situation that existed at the time of the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, with TCDC taking hold as a significant and potentially pervasive element of the total endeavours in international economic and social development. Further strengthening of the capacities of national focal points was required. Actions were needed for further TCDC programming activities with a focus on priority areas of development and with more innovative methods conceived and developed from experience, as well as for fostering the role of regional and interregional organizations in promoting TCDC. Intensified efforts were expected by United Nations organizations to improve the role of women in TCDC. The Committee would also expect a revitalized momentum in the role of the Special Unit for TCDC in coordinating and supporting TCDC in the United Nations organizations.

As requested by the High-level Committee in 1987,⁽⁷⁾ the Administrator submitted a report⁽⁸⁾ on progress attained by Governments in their TCDC activities in the ten years since the Buenos Aires Plan of Action was adopted. It gave an overview of submissions made by 51 Governments and 20 intergovernmental organizations, followed by the Administrator's comments and recommendations. He said the information suggested TCDC had made substantial progress over the past decade, with clear signs of increasing momentum over the past two or three years, with multiplier effects of modest initial bilateral TCDC arrangements between countries expanding into a growing web of regional and interregional activities, both within particular geographical regions and across regions. The Administrator suggested Governments continue to strengthen national focal points, establishing appropriate links with sectoral departments responsible for development activities, with the Special Unit for TCDC assisting Governments, at their request, in strengthening internal TCDC coordination mechanisms. He suggested that Governments consider organizing workshops on a regional basis during 1989 and 1990 to exchange information on how countries had effectively dealt with issues relating to strengthening national focal points, programming and financing TCDC, information collection, etc., and to develop specific recommendations and action plans for further strengthening TCDC.

In March,⁽⁹⁾ the Administrator reported on the Second Meeting of the TCDC Focal Points of the Organizations of the United Nations development system which he had convened (New York, 25-26 February 1988) in response to the High-level Committee's decision⁽⁷⁾ and which was attended by the TCDC focal points of 16 organizations. Recommendations were made in such areas as TCDC integration in United Nations system-funded projects using TCDC as a modality for project implementation; utilization of developing countries' capacities and technical co-operation programmes and activities of United Nations organizations; active involvement of the organizations in TCDC programming exercises and absorption of activities into country IPF or Trust Funds financed projects; collaboration in improving the INRES-South data base; co-ordinated publicizing of TCDC activities and experiences; and stepped-up staff training regarding TCDC.

Responding to a further Committee request⁽¹⁰⁾ the Administrator submitted a report⁽⁵⁾ on strengthening and improving intergovernmental programming exercises for TCDC. Proposals for future inter-country TCDC programming included use of a developing country's international airline as the prime mover of an exchange of experience, expertise and training with and between participatory countries in various aspects of civil aviation while, in another region, the development of ports would be the subject of inter-country programming. Several countries were interested in exchanging expertise and experience in aquaculture, with the Special Unit assisting in organizing a first round of regional projects for about 10 Latin American countries. The Unit was collaborating with the International Co-operative Alliance in organizing the first of a series of regional meetings of representatives of national co-operative authorities at which TCDC activities would be programmed. The Unit supported specialized single-sector seminars such as that in Argentina with selected African countries in agricultural technology, as well as an arrangement enabling Nicaragua, with an abnormal number of amputees, to study development in India of relatively low-cost artificial limbs, a project which could have major implications for Afghanistan. Pakistan's sectoral TCDC programming exercise of September 1988 concentrating on industry and science resulted in the Special Unit assisting in sending programming missions to 20 other developing countries, with 160 TCDC project agreements ultimately being concluded. More systematic training programmes were urgently required for UNDP field offices regarding TCDC and were being developed by the Special Unit.

In a March report on the role of women in TCDC,⁽¹¹⁾ the Administrator concluded that a great deal remained to be done by United Nations organizations in promoting the role of women in development. There remained scope for needs identification and programming missions to include women's concerns in their terms of reference. He recommended that United Nations organizations exchange guidelines on women, development, gender-specific statistics and rosters, with UNDP, UNIFEM and the United Nations International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women co-operating in compiling and preparing methodologies of assistance on the question.

Action by the High-level Committee on TCDC. The sixth session of the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC was held in New York, from 18 to 22 and 29 September.

In its report to the General Assembly,⁽⁶⁾ the High-Level Committee included a draft resolution on the tenth anniversary of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action which it recommended to the Assembly for its adoption (see below).⁽¹²⁾ In another decision, the Committee expressed concern over the lack of detailed information from many Governments of developing countries concerning their activities for TCDC and deep concern over the failure of many international organizations to supply such information to the Committee. Both the Governments and organizations concerned were urged to rectify that position.⁽¹³⁾

In a decision⁽¹⁴⁾ on its review of TCDC activities within the United Nations system, the Committee reiterated the need for more human and financial resources for the promotion and implementation of TCDC. The Committee expressed concern about the difficulties in overcoming obstacles raised by the procedures followed by the United Nations technical co-operation bodies, as those procedures had impeded introduction of any relevant component for TCDC into the UNDP programming process at the identification, design, elaboration, evaluation or implementation stage. The Committee reiterated that the Buenos Aires Plan of Action should constitute a framework for countries, agencies in the United Nations system and international organizations in implementing TCDC. Concern was expressed over the slow promotion and implementation of TCDC activities within the United Nations system. The High-level Committee reiterated its recommendation that the UNDP Governing Council consider allocating at least 25 per cent of funds for programmes under regional, interregional and global IPFs to activities for TCDC. The UNDP Administrator was requested to organize a meeting of technical co-operation experts of interested countries to identify impediments to TCDC and changes to be introduced, so as to enable the incorporation of TCDC into all programmes and projects financed by the United Nations system. The Committee requested the Administrator to submit to the 1990 Governing Council a report based on the conclusions of that proposed meeting of experts.

Regarding strengthening TCDC, the Committee said⁽¹⁵⁾ it was appropriate for developing countries to earmark a percentage of their IPF for TCDC and therefore suggested measures to be considered by Governments, including elaborating directories of supply and demand for TCDC, specifying priority areas; updating information on needs and capabilities for TCDC; ensuring access to national data banks; developing registries and methodologies for transfer of knowledge and technologies; opportunities for technical and financial support; training opportunities; use of national experts and local equipment; information on United Nations-system programmes; regional focal points; and involvement of the private sector.

In respect of programming exercises, the Committee requested⁽¹⁶⁾ UNDP to continue its support for such exercises and urged it to include projects emerging from such experience in its regional, interregional and global programming. Subregional, regional and international financial institutions were invited to offer financial support for TCDC, in particular projects and activities resulting from the meeting and programming exercises. The Committee requested the UNDP Administrator to evaluate concluded programming exercises, and invited the developing countries to identify priority themes for regional programming of TCDC activities.

As to the role of women in TCDC, the Committee requested⁽¹⁷⁾ the UNDP Administrator and heads of organs of the United Nations development system to develop and improve guidelines to ensure full access and participation of women, stressing the need for UNDP-sponsored exercises to facilitate full participation of women. The Administrator was asked to report on those matters at the Committee's next session.

The Committee, in a decision⁽¹⁸⁾ calling for strengthening UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC, urged the Governing Council to consider giving it greater financial and personnel support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 44/412 of 20 November, the General Assembly decided, on an exceptional basis, to consider directly the report of the High-level Committee.

In decision 44/450 of 22 December on further strengthening and improving intergovernmental programming exercises for TCDC, the Assembly took note of documents the Secretary-General and Administrator had submitted to the High-level Committee on this matter and expressed appreciation of UN system organizations' efforts in this regard.

The Assembly adopted two resolutions on TCDC.

On 22 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/222 without vote. Resolution 44/223 was adopted on the same day in the same manner.

Economic and technical co-operation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, and 42/180 of 11 December 1987, as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the important role that technical co-operation among developing countries plays in the growth and development of those countries,

Reaffirming that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves, that developed countries and the United Nations system should assist and support such activities, and that, in addition, the United Nations system should play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical co-operation among developing countries, in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

1. Reaffirms the continued validity of all the recommendations of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries and the importance of technical co-operation among developing countries;

2. Reaffirms also the continued importance of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries as the principal forum in which representatives of all the States Members of the United Nations and other relevant bodies of the United Nations system review and promote technical co-operation among developing countries;

3. Endorses the decisions adopted by the High-level Committee at its sixth session, taking into account the intergovernmental arrangements envisaged in recommendation 37 of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action;

4. Urges all Member States, the United Nations Development Programme and other relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to give high priority in their particular fields of activity to the support and promotion of activities in technical co-operation among developing countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 44/222

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.6) without vote, 11 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/44/L.73), based on informal consultations on draft by Malaysia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/44/L.62); agenda item 82 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 43, 44, 46, 49; plenary 85.

Tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Considering the importance of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries,

Concerned that the economic situation of developing countries, which has been aggravated over the past decade, has had an impact generally on international co-operation for development and on the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

Recognizing, however, that developing countries have achieved significant progress in implementing the recommendations contained in the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, and that technical co-operation among developing countries has gradually become a means through which they contribute to development,

1. Reaffirms the continued validity and importance of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries;

2. Emphasizes the imperative need to strengthen the implementation of activities and projects for technical co-operation among developing countries through the increased allocation and utilization of financial resources, as appropriate, for the promotion and implementation of projects for technical co-operation among developing countries;

3. Requests the various parties participating in the promotion and implementation of technical co-operation among developing countries, particularly within the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions, to give the necessary priority to the support, encouragement and implementation of specific activities and projects, so that such co-operation will become a basic component of their policies for development;

4. Urges the international community, including governmental and non-governmental organizations, to be favourably disposed to the requests for technical and financial support presented to them for the implementation of specific activities and projects of technical co-operation among developing countries;

5. Reiterates the need for developed countries and their international co-operation agencies to lend their firm support to technical co-operation among developing countries, in accordance with recommendations 35 and 36 of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and in the context of recommendation 38 thereof.

General Assembly resolution 44/223

22 December 1989 Meeting 85 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/44/746/Add.6) without vote, 11 December (meeting 49); draft by High-level Committee on Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (A/44/39); agenda item 82 (e). Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 2nd Committee 43, 44, 46, 49; plenary 85.

United Nations Volunteers

In his biennial report on the UNV programme for 1988-1989,⁽¹⁹⁾ the UNDP Administrator stated that UNV, as the only multilateral volunteer-sending agency, was the largest such programme providing opportunities for volunteers from developing countries (1,600 out of its 1,800 total) to serve abroad. Serving in 108 developing countries, the majority of UNV specialists (58 per cent) worked in the fields of public health, education and training, and agricultural development, and 63 per cent served in LDCs, with about half in Africa. Asia and the Pacific region accounted for 17 per cent of the UNV total, the Arab States 13 per cent, and 7 per cent were in the Latin America and Caribbean region. The largest number of UNV specialists still came from the developing countries of Asia and Africa and were mostly male (83 per cent).

The actual profile of volunteer development workers had changed dramatically over the last quarter of the century, yet the popular image, continuing to influence decision makers from Governments and aid agencies, remained wedded to the notion of inexperienced, relatively young volunteers, often generally dedicated and enthusiastic, but with relatively few technical skills to offer. Most current volunteers were specialists in a wide range of disciplines, aged in their thirties, who had several years of professional experience as well as solid academic training; the average programme participant was 38 years old, had 10 years professional experience, and held a master's degree.

The typical annual cost of a volunteer assignment remained at about one-fifth that of regular technical co-operation personnel. Even more important was the perceived appropriateness of volunteer personnel as willing performers in difficult circumstances, who were near enough to the concerns of the local personnel to be viewed as responsible partners, thereby enhancing their potential to act as on-the-job trainers and to contribute to capacity-building and sustainability. However, there was a risk that long-term volunteers could create dependence, so volunteer-sending agencies were trying to move away from counterpart models to ones where the volunteer was part of a local team comprising different levels of skills and responsibilities, thus allowing for mutual learning.

The biennium had seen a steady growth in demand for UNV services, partly due to greater UNV participation in the LDCs of the Arab States region, and, to a lesser extent, in Latin America, a region which previously had not made extensive use of UNV specialists. At the grass-roots level, a marked expansion in the exchange of community fieldworkers had taken place in the Africa and Pacific regions, in addition to the ongoing programme in Asia, through the Domestic Development Services projects of the UNV Participatory Development Programme (PDP/DDS). By the end of 1989, some 250 PDP/DDS fieldworkers were strengthening local rural community self-help initiatives in 26 countries in the three regions. Preparations for similar activities in the Arab States and in the Caribbean were well under way.

UNV specialists served in more than 140 professional categories, and while traditional sectors of UNV activity continued to account for the majority, their weight in the total was declining, demonstrating a wider spread of demand. There was no longer any narrowly defined niche for the UNV role in development.

Responding to a specific concern of the Governing Council that the UNV Programme should reflect diversity of the volunteers' countries of origin⁽²⁰⁾ the Administrator stated that measures to attract candidates from industrialized countries had been put in place, and the number of rostered candidates from them had risen from 460 in September 1987 to 660 on 31 December 1989. The number of fully funded UNV posts from those countries had risen from 16 in 1987 to 47 during 1989. Special efforts were made to contact women's and senior citizens' organizations. In December 1989 there were 894 female candidates on the UNV roster compared to 480 in 1987, and 270 older candidates (more than 55 years of age) compared to 200 a year earlier.

In response to other 1988 Governing Council decisions regarding support structures, a cadre of 40 UNV Programme Officers to support UNDP offices managing substantial numbers of UNV specialists became fully operational in 1989, becoming the cornerstone of the UNV field support system.

Estimated 1989 expenditures for the UNV programme amounted to $36.8 million, of which $20.2 million was allocated to projects executed by UNV, and an estimated $15 million to finance in-country costs of UNV specialists on projects executed by United Nations agencies and $1.8 million for their external costs funded from the Special Voluntary Fund (SVF). Funds for those expenditures included the following sources: $30.6 million from UNDP; $3.8 million from SVF for external costs of UNV specialists and pilot and experimental projects; and $1.2 million from funds in trust.

About 85 per cent of UNV specialists served within projects funded from IPFs. About half served in projects by United Nations specialized agencies. The other half served in projects executed by UNV or Governments.

Based on past and current trends, the number of serving UNV specialists was expected to increase to 2,400 by the end of 1991, with costs rising to $48 million, based on an estimated average annual cost of $20,000 for each specialist.

The Administrator pointed out that the UNV programme would mark its 20th anniversary in 1991 and stated that an inter-governmental meeting on volunteers and development might be held at that time to provide for a long-term, forward-looking perspective on multilateral volunteer contributions to technical co-operation and development. Among his suggestions was a special contingency fund, preferably under trust fund arrangements, to respond to urgent requests for specialists to support Governments in implementing emergency rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes and other relief efforts.

UN Capital Development Fund

In his annual report for 1989,⁽¹⁾ the UNDP Administrator said that UNCDF, which provided capital assistance for small-scale investment projects, primarily in LDCs, received pledges for 1989 of $36.7 million and had 237 ongoing projects totalling about $445 million in value.

The Administrator, in his biennial report for 1989-1990 on the Fund,⁽²⁾ said the period reflected the consolidation of achievements after a period of continued expansion. A record high volume of operations accompanied by expenditures of between $45 million and $50 million was reported. With pledges on the rise, the partial funding formula revised in 1987 had allowed project approvals to rise to $77.9 million in 1989, of which $2.3 million came from donor co-financing. Fund expenditures for 1989 rose to $49.1 million, of which $47.6 million came from general resources and $1.5 million from co-financing.

The Fund's programme was sharply focused on poverty reduction with 58 per cent of new commitments devoted to food production for lower-income groups. In the agriculture sector, the Fund gave special attention to development of small irrigation schemes as an alternative concept to the larger ventures of the past and as a means to secure food self-sufficiency with full involvement of the farmers. Since the Fund was permitted to apply a partial funding formula enabling approval levels well above current pledges, it was foreseen that increases in new projects would lead to increased expenditures and reduce the liquidity accumulated in the past under full funding conditions. This occurred in 1989 when expenditures from general resources were more than $47 million and, since funds exceeded income, UNCDF drew down accumulated financial resources by more than $6 million. Project approvals reached $77.9 million in 1989 which were expected to lead to expenditures in future years substantially higher than 1989.

On 30 June⁽³⁾ the UNDP Governing Council, which had before it the Administrator's report on Fund activities in 1987 and 1988,⁽⁴⁾ decided to review in 1991 the partial funding system for UNCDF and its liquidity position. It urged the forthcoming (1990) Second United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries to make appropriate recommendations about an increase in the Fund's resources and invited the Administrator to make the Fund better known to existing and potential donors.

Chapter III

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

During 1989, the United Nations continued to provide special assistance to countries facing severe economic hardship. Several nations received aid for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development following natural or man-made disasters. In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 44/236, proclaimed the 1990s the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, and adopted an international framework of policy measures, co-operation and action to mitigate the effects of disasters.

Another significant development was the creation in October of Operation Lifeline Sudan (44/12) which, the Secretary-General reported, set an important and historic precedent for complex relief operations. For the first time, in an area of civil war, the two warring parties agreed to a common, large-scale plan of action for relief assistance to civilians on both sides of the conflict.

The critical economic and social situation in Africa remained a major concern of the United Nations during 1989. In May, the Economic and Social Council (1989/26) invited the home countries of transnational corporations to encourage corporate investment in developing countries, particularly those in Africa, and asked the Secretary-General to increase support for technical assistance to them. In November (44/24), the Assembly invited the international community to consider the African Alternative Framework for Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-economic Recovery and Transformation, adopted by the Economic Commission for Africa in April. In December, it appealed for international support for economic rehabilitation and assistance programmes in Angola (44/168), Chad (44/176) and the front-line States (44/181) and other neighbouring States that had suffered from the apartheid policies of South Africa. The Assembly also requested continued assistance for Lebanon (44/180) and support for the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (44/182).

The UN system, and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in particular, continued to provide assistance to countries stricken by natural disasters. Heavy flooding in Democratic Yemen and Djibouti during March and April prompted the Assembly (resolutions 44/179 and 44/177) and the Council (resolutions 1989/1 and 1989/2) to call for intensified relief operations and rehabilitation and reconstruction.

The Assembly (44/3) also urged international emergency assistance for Antigua and Barbuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis after they were struck by Hurricane Hugo.

The Economic and Social Council (1989/103) recommended that desertification and drought be given priority within international assistance programmes, and also called for continued international support for efforts to control locusts and grasshoppers (1989/98). Those resolutions were subsequently endorsed by the Assembly in December (decisions 44/437 and 44/438).

With regard to man-made disasters, in May the Council (decision 1989/111) called for international support to meet urgent humanitarian needs in Somalia, particularly its northern provinces, where attacks by bandits had produced widespread destruction and large numbers of displaced persons. The Assembly echoed that request in December (resolution 44/178), and also urged States (44/239) to offer emergency humanitarian assistance to Romania.

Economic assistance

In 1989, the United Nations continued to provide economic assistance to a number of countries with severe economic problems. Some of the programmes were in support of national reconstruction following natural disasters. The United Nations responded to the increase in such disasters and a growing focus on disaster prevention and preparedness. Other programmes sought to overcome development obstacles posed by weak infrastructure and political and economic circumstances, including the negative socio-economic effects of past structural adjustment programmes. Some of the countries that received assistance faced both man-made and environmental threats.

Critical situation in Africa

In accordance with a 1987 request of the Economic and Social Council,⁽¹⁾ the Secretary-General in February submitted a comprehensive report on the critical social situation in Africa, as an annex to the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation.⁽²⁾ It outlined the many obstacles in achieving the objectives of the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development⁽³⁾ as well as the impact of economic policies on the African social situation. Most of the gains made in health, education, employment and social integration in the decade and a half following independence were either lost or seriously diminished in the African countries during the 1980s. At the root of Africa's economic and social crisis were structural economic imbalances and weaknesses, such as the dominance of export-oriented agriculture, and mining and other extractive industries. Dependence on external sources of capital, equipment and expertise, a global economic recession, and the unprecedented drought emergency from 1983 to 1985 were among the factors that led to a precipitous decline in living standards throughout the region. Per capita incomes fell by an annual average rate of 3.4 per cent between 1980 and 1986, to levels between 15 and 25 per cent lower than in 1970. In the 1970s, gross domestic product (GDP) averaged 3.3 per cent growth a year, but fell to 1 per cent in 1986 and 0.8 per cent in 1987. Inflation, a decline in real wages and shortages of essential goods and services pushed prices beyond the reach of most workers. Other factors contributing to the crisis included the collapse of commodity prices, debt and debt-servicing burdens, diminishing resource flows, and measures by African Governments to reduce their expenditures and control imports by cutting social spending. Environmental and demographic trends, such as desertification and high rates of population growth and urbanization, further aggravated the situation.

Most African countries undertook financial stabilization and macro-economic structural adjustment programmes during the 1980s to counter the economic decline, the majority of them under the influence of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank. The IMF and World Bank programmes took a narrowly economic approach, focused on improving the external economic position and exports. Available data and emerging evidence strongly indicated that the programmes had devastating social consequences, particularly in the areas of employment, incomes, food, nutrition, health and education. The health and nutritional status of the poorest Africans in particular was worsened by the removal of subsidies on imported food and the introduction of cost recovery for health care and other social services. Hiring freezes and retrenchment of government jobs eliminated hundreds of thousands of employment opportunities. Overall, structural adjustment programmes created a vicious circle: some measure of economic growth was achieved, but countries became more indebted and dependent on external financial resources, and were less capable of delivering the social benefits that should follow that growth.

The impact of the contracting economy was felt most severely by workers in agriculture, manufacturing and the construction industry. Particularly hard hit by unemployment were African youth and women, and, increasingly, educated Africans, who began to emigrate to other regions. Total employment in sub-Saharan Africa increased by 2 per cent a year in the 1970s, but fell by some 16 per cent between 1980 and 1987.

During the 1980s, 50 to 75 of every 100 Africans were living in poverty according to some estimates, with rates for absolute poverty in rural areas running between 50 and 90 per cent. The severely hungry and undernourished numbered 80 million in 1972-1974, but the number had risen to more than 150 million by 1984. In the early 1980s, on average, 43 per cent of children under 5 years of age suffered from moderate to severe malnutrition. Most child deaths were caused by preventable diseases, diarrhoea and malnutrition. Maternal mortality was caused mostly by ignorance, poverty and lack of access to essential services.

The economic crisis and structural adjustment requirements retarded and in some cases reversed the momentum of educational reform. Annual growth in the total number of students fell from 8.1 per cent in 1970-1980 to 3.9 per cent in 1980-1987, with the sharpest decline at the primary school level. Drop-out rates increased, especially among girls, and repetition rates were also high.

The African social situation was further aggravated by political conflicts and tensions caused by the tenuous state of both democracy and socio-cultural homogeneity within States, and by disputes over boundaries between States. Regional conflicts and attendant military expenditures diverted scarce financial resources at the expense of health, education and other social services. Military engagements disrupted food production and destroyed settlements. Apartheid and the destabilization policies of the South African Government turned southern Africa into an especially vulnerable conflict zone.

The annex concluded that the intolerable social situation in Africa required immediate attention by all African Governments and the international community. Whereas IMF and World Bank programmes had been highly sectoral, both in analysing development malfunctions and in prescribing solutions, the report recommended a holistic approach with people as its focus. While short-term measures would be necessary to relieve immediate hardships, what needed to be restructured were the basic patterns and relations of production, distribution and consumption, with a long-term and transformational perspective aimed at ending the externally oriented and dependent economic status of African countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/46 without vote.

Critical social situation in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969 containing the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, which provides the framework for international co-operation in the field of social development,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 39/29 of 3 December 1984 and 40/40 of 2 December 1985, which led to the convening of the thirteenth special session of the General Assembly, devoted to the critical economic situation in Africa, at which the Assembly adopted by consensus resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, to which is annexed the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Alarmed at the acceleration in the deterioration of social conditions in most African countries,

Noting with concern the gravity of the situation in the southern part of Africa due to the continued policy of apartheid of the racist régime of South Africa,

Noting that in Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, the Governments of African States reaffirmed their primary responsibility for the economic and social development of their countries, identified areas for priority action, and undertook to mobilize and utilize domestic resources for the achievement of their priority objectives,

Emphasizing that the African social and economic crisis is a development crisis that concerns the international community as a whole and that greater realization of the rich physical and human potential of the continent is an integral part of a common strategy to promote the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recognizing the efforts being made by African Governments to redress some of the acute social problems confronting the African continent,

Noting that the prospects for concerted implementation of Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990 are being affected by an unfavourable external economic environment, debt-servicing obligations and the rate of flow of development finance, particularly that of a concessionary nature,

1. Takes note of the 1989 report on the world social situation, including the annex thereto on the critical social situation in Africa;

2. Appeals to the international community, the States members of the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to increase their co-operation and assistance to enhance the efforts made by the African countries to establish or improve their infrastructure, through the creation of a favourable economic environment;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank, to prepare a report providing an in-depth evaluation of the critical social situation in Africa, paying particular attention to the obstacles to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, including the impact of structural adjustment policies on the social situation in Africa, for submission to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session;

4. Decides that the Commission should consider at its thirty-second session the report requested in paragraph 3 above, in the context of its review of the world social situation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/46

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1989/91) without vote, 11 May (meeting 12); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1989/25); agenda item 11.

UNPAAERD activities

UNDP consideration. In response to a 1988 decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)⁽⁴⁾ the UNDP Administrator submitted a report⁽⁵⁾ in April 1989 on UNDP's efforts to increase its role in implementing the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD). Updating his 1988 report⁽⁶⁾ the Administrator noted an increase in the scope of UNDP's activities to deal with the economic and social crisis in Africa, including increases in staff. The report outlined UNDP's efforts to intensify its co-operation with the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Organization of African Unity (OAU), and all major regional and subregional intergovernmental organizations in Africa to implement UNPAAERD. In 1989, 18 new projects were approved under the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries. The report also described UNDP measures to increase African assistance, speed up project approval, mobilize additional resources, develop innovative approaches to technical co-operation, participate in subregional meetings, and involve women in its development projects.

On 30 June⁽⁷⁾ the Governing Council called on the Administrator to intensify efforts to mobilize additional resources for UNPAAERD, and asked him to continue to provide the necessary support to ECA and OAU in implementing UNPAAERD. It urged even closer collaboration between UNDP, ECA, OAU, the African Development Bank and African subregional economic organizations. He was asked to reinvigorate initiatives to improve national planning capacity and external co-operation management, to expand training in UNDP procedures for government officials, to increase UNDP support for technical co-operation and the exchange of development experiences among African countries, and to intensify efforts to make greater use of African expertise, sub-contractors and equipment. The Administrator was asked to report to the Council in 1990.

UNCTAD action. In a July 1989 progress report⁽⁸⁾ to the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the UNCTAD secretariat stated that it had provided substantive support to UNPAAERD through assistance to the Secretary-General's Expert Group on African Commodity Problems, participated in meetings dealing with debt rescheduling for African countries, and had prepared an inventory of African investment laws and regulations⁽⁹⁾ to provide potential investors and African financial institutions with an analytical tool for investment in joint ventures. The secretariat also prepared reports for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

In March/April, UNCTAD sent a special needs appraisal mission to Angola, Malawi, Mozambique, Rwanda and Swaziland to identify possibilities for technical co-operation. A preparatory programming mission went to Nigeria in April in response to a Nigerian request for technical assistance in several areas. UNCTAD also provided technical assistance on the generalized system of preferences through seminars and advisory missions. UNCTAD continued to help African countries strengthen their negotiating capabilities and participation in the Uruguay Round negotiations. It also continued to work with UNDP and other agencies on a project to improve economic and technical co-operation between Africa and Latin America. To increase capacity to manage external debt, UNCTAD was working towards the installation of computerized Debt Management and Financial Analysis Systems in eight African countries, and also made progress with three transport and transit projects in southern Africa, West-Central Africa and East-Central Africa.

On 5 October⁽¹⁰⁾ the Trade and Development Board asked UNCTAD's secretariat for more detailed reporting on its contributions to UNPAAERD and appealed to developed countries and multilateral institutions for more support for the implementation of UNPAAERD.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/26 without vote.

Contribution of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations to the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 on the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Recalling its resolution 1988/1 of 5 February 1988 and its decision 1988/161 of 27 July 1988,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on investment of transnational corporations in Africa, submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-third session in the context of the mid-term review of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Bearing in mind the fact that transnational corporations can contribute to Africa's economic recovery and development through increased direct investment in productive sectors of African Economies,

Recognizing that investment by transnational corporations in Africa would constitute a significant source of non-debt-creating resource flows to Africa,

Noting with concern that the share of investments made by transnational corporations in developing countries has been substantially declining in general and in Africa in particular,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report containing, inter alia, recommendations on alternative strategies that would create a mutually beneficial framework and lead to concrete measures to encourage transnational corporations to respond positively to improvements in the investment climate in Africa and thereby promote economic growth and self-sustaining socio-economic development, in accordance with the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, adopted in 1980, especially in those sectors in which transnational corporations can make a major contribution through capital mobilization, technical expertise, transfer of technology and market access;

2. Invites the home countries of transnational corporations, as a complement to measures taken by developing countries themselves, to encourage investment by such corporations in all developing countries, particularly those in Africa, and, to that end, to consider providing, inter alia, financial and fiscal incentives, including tax-sparing;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize resources for increased support of technical assistance requirements of African countries, at the national, subregional and regional levels, to enable them to increase their capacities to deal with transnational corporations, so as to take advantage of investment opportunities through transnational corporations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to upgrade the report prepared for the mid-term review of the implementation of the Programme of Action, to provide detailed and comprehensive coverage of foreign direct investment in Africa on a sector-by-sector basis and to report thereon to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its sixteenth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/26

24 May 1989 Meeting 15 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1989/87) without vote, 19 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1989/28/Rev.1; agenda item 8.

By decision 44/411 of 17 November, the General Assembly decided that support of UNPAAERD should be continued pending the final review and appraisal of the Programme of Action, to be undertaken by the Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Other action. In resolution 1989/116 of 28 July, the Economic and Social Council took note with interest of the African Alternative Framework for Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-economic Recovery and Transformation⁽¹¹⁾ adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa in April 1989⁽¹²⁾ and asked the General Assembly to consider taking action. It also called on the international community, especially developed countries and multilateral institutions, to consider support for country programmes prepared by African countries.

In resolution 44/24 of 17 November, the Assembly took note with interest of the Alternative Framework and invited the international community, including multilateral financial and development institutions, to consider it as a basis for dialogue and consultation.

Angola

In a note verbale⁽¹³⁾ to the President of the General Assembly on 1 December, Angola requested that an agenda item regarding international assistance for its economic rehabilitation be included in the 1989 Assembly agenda. An explanatory memorandum described the damage suffered by Angola in its 14-year military conflict with South Africa. Damage to the Angolan economy from the destruction of infrastructure was estimated at more than $16 billion, with 1988 losses at $4.5 billion, or 90 per cent of GDP. The country was further strained by the presence of an estimated 600,000 displaced persons, and another 50,000 disabled by the war.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/168 by recorded vote.

International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola",

Noting with great concern the serious consequences of the acts of aggression and destabilization perpetrated by South Africa that adversely affect the economy of Angola,

Deeply concerned about the human suffering and the destruction of property resulting from the effects of South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization,

Noting the efforts undertaken by the Government of Angola to cope with the economic and social problems confronting the country through a concerted programme of economic and financial readjustment,

Conscious of the urgent need for the international community to assist Angola in its economic rehabilitation,

Mindful of Security Council resolutions 387(1976) of 31 March 1976, 428(1978) of 6 May 1978, 447(1979) of 28 March 1979, 454(1979) of 2 November 1979, 475(1980) of 27 June 1980, 545(1983) of 20 December

1983, 546(1984) of 6 January 1984, 567(1985) of 20 June 1985, 571(1985) of 20 September 1985, 574(1985) of 7 October 1985, 577(1985) of 6 December 1985, 602(1987) of 25 November 1987, 606(1987) of 23 December 1987 and 628(1989) of 16 January 1989, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to Angola and considered that Angola is entitled to appropriate redress for any material damage it has suffered,

1. Expresses its solidarity with and support for the efforts of Angola to lessen the adverse effects caused by the acts of aggression and destabilization and to cope with the economic and social problems;

2. Appeals to the international community to render the substantial financial, material and technical assistance necessary for the economic rehabilitation of Angola;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to enter into consultation with the Government of Angola for the purpose of determining the level of assistance required by Angola and to report to Member States and the relevant United Nations bodies on the results of those consultations;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session the item entitled "International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola".

Benin

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ that Benin's financial crisis peaked in 1989, with fiscal revenues falling by a third from the levels of the previous year. This decline was caused by tax base erosion, the collapse of the banking system, strikes that lowered productivity in the revenue services, and the poor regional economic situation. External assistance reduced the payment lag for civil servants' salaries from three months to one by December, but 1988 arrears remained. The crisis slowed the country's development programme; as arrears on external debt accumulated, development funding was blocked. Lack of financial resources was felt most strongly in the social sector. On the positive side, agricultural production recovered from a poor 1987 performance, allowing Benin to remain self-sufficient in foodstuffs, except for wheat and rice.

In June, the Government, supported by IMF and the World Bank, adopted a structural adjustment programme for 1989-1992. It sought to create a sustainable 3 per cent growth rate in GDP, contain inflation, improve the country's debt status, and radically change Benin's development strategy by reducing the role of the public sector while promoting the private sector and restructuring the banking system. The programme would require $732 million in external assistance. In December, the Government decided to abandon Marxism-Leninism, but the new transitional Government remained committed to the programme.

Central African Republic

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ that the Central African Republic's public debt amounted to nearly $600 million at the beginning of 1989, and that debt servicing consumed 16 per cent of export revenues. An evaluation of the national structural adjustment programme's second phase indicated that there had been a measure of economic recovery in 1989, and that inflation had moderated. Still, the public deficit for the year equalled 13 per cent of GDP, compared with the programme's objective of 11 per cent. There was also some progress with restructuring and privatizing public enterprises.

UNDP was working to strengthen the national capacity in macro-economic analysis and programming to ameliorate the effects of the structural adjustment process on the population. In June, consultations took place on rural development. UNDP provided support for national planning and socio-economic management, and consulted with the Government and the donor community on ways to improve technical co-operation.

Chad

In response to a 1988 request of the General Assembly⁽¹⁵⁾ the Secretary-General in an August 1989 report⁽¹⁶⁾ noted that although the effects of war, natural calamities and disasters had compromised Chad's efforts for reconstruction and development, favourable rainfall in 1987/88 resulted in a striking recovery of agricultural output in 1989. Food crop production was 50 per cent higher than in 1987/88. Chad continued to rely heavily on external assistance to finance its investment budget. Beginning 1 January, however, the Government undertook to pay the salaries of civil servants in full and lifted a moratorium on bank deposits, which had been introduced in 1983.

These and other developments suggested that Chad had reached a better position from which to proceed with a true restructuring of the economy. UNDP was funding a project under which the World Bank was assisting the Government with the preparation of a new 1989-1992 development plan. Development assistance for Chad for 1987-1991 from UNDP and other UN bodies amounted to $179.3 million.

In a later report⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that Chad's GDP rose by 1.2 per cent in 1989, and food crop production continued its favourable trend. A 1989-1993 government programme included plans to rehabilitate the communications infrastructure, and a plan to reform the fiscal system was finalized under the aegis of IMF. Still under discussion was a planned $24 million social development programme to create jobs, improve sanitation and health, and strengthen social planning, with the support of the World Bank and other donors. In December, a new planning document identified three major objectives for Chad: increasing agricultural production through modernization, improving the population's well-being, and restoring financial equilibrium.

A programme to rehabilitate the depressed Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti prefecture in northern Chad had yet to be fully implemented; by the end of 1989, only 38 per cent of the programme's $43 million budget had been secured.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/176 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/205 of 20 December 1988 and its previous resolutions on assistance in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad and on special economic assistance to that country,

Recalling the round table on assistance to Chad, convened by the United Nations Development Programme at Geneva on 4 and 5 December 1985 in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad, held in November 1982,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on special economic assistance to Chad dealing with, inter alia, the economic and financial situation of Chad, the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress made in organizing and executing the programme of assistance for that country,

Considering that the effects of war, natural calamities and disasters are compromising all the reconstruction and development efforts of the Government of Chad,

Recalling that a donor round table on assistance in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of northern Chad was convened by the Government of Chad, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, on 14, 15 and 16 December 1988,

Noting that round tables on education and the development of human resources and on public health and family welfare will be convened by the Government of Chad, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, in 1990,

Noting with satisfaction that the term of the interim plan for 1986-1988 is now drawing to an end and that a development plan for 1990-1994 will be submitted to all contributors in 1990,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that responded and are continuing to respond generously to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties of Chad and to mobilize assistance for that country;

3. Renews the request made to all States, competent United Nations organizations and programmes and international economic and financial institutions to continue to contribute to the rehabilitation and development of Chad;

4. Notes with satisfaction that the donor round table on assistance in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of northern Chad was held at N'Djamena on 14, 15 and 16 December 1988;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assess, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the area of health, of the displaced populations;

6. Invites all States and competent United Nations organizations and programmes to participate actively:

- (a) In the contributors' round table on the implementation of the five-year development plan for Chad for 1990-1994, scheduled to be held in 1990 at Geneva;

- (b) In the round tables on education and the development of human resources and on public health and family welfare, scheduled to be held in 1990 at N'Djamena;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Chad under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

Djibouti

The Secretary-General, reporting⁽¹⁴⁾ on the situation in Djibouti, noted that the country's budget deficit was substantially reduced between 1986 and 1989 by government efforts to limit expenditures and increase revenues, and budget balance had been achieved mainly through external financial assistance. Total external debt in 1989 was approximately $140 million. Debt-service payments, at $14.1 million, represented about 6 per cent of GNP. About one half of a $470 million public investment programme planned for 1983-1989 had been completed.

For information on UN emergency relief to Djibouti for flood relief, see below.

Madagascar

The Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁴⁾ that Madagascar's economic growth accelerated in 1989 as a result of good performance in agriculture, trade, tourism and the informal sector. Rice production was up 17.6 per cent, while overall agricultural output was 3.5 per cent greater than in 1988. The inflation rate fell from 26 per cent in 1988 to 9.4 per cent in 1989. External debt, however, remained a major development constraint: in 1989, debt-servicing obligations were estimated at nearly 169 per cent of export earnings. The structural adjustment programme produced improvements in macro-economic balances, but social welfare investment remained unsatisfactory by comparison with spending for other sectors. Consultations with donors to correct this imbalance were scheduled for 1990.

Mozambique

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution⁽¹⁷⁾ a representative of the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship reported on 12 July⁽¹⁸⁾ to the Economic and Social Council on the programme of assistance to Mozambique. In 1988, the Government and the United Nations had appealed for international support for the period 1988-1989, taking into account previous problems in the areas of logistics, security, the Government's emergency relief capacity, scarcity of currency, kinds of donor support and delays in aid delivery. It was noted that government military operations had liberated many population centres and virtually all district capitals, and that a large number of affected and displaced persons could now be reached.

In April 1989, the Secretary-General launched an international appeal for emergency aid for 4.5 million affected and displaced persons, costing approximately $380 million for the biennium 1989-1990. At a donors' meeting held at UN Headquarters, pledges of some $350 million were announced, but subsequent analysis showed that the actual sums pledged amounted to $252 million, and as of mid-July, only $119 million had been allocated by donors to specific activities. Less than one third of the required food commodities had been pledged, raising the threat of severe shortages. The need for road, air and sea transport to deliver relief supplies was emphasized in the report. Inadequate support for health, water, education and agricultural programmes made the implementation of certain projects in the appeal impossible.

By decision 1989/176 of 26 July 1989, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report by the representative of the Under-Secretary-General.

Front-line and other bordering States

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request,⁽¹⁹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²⁰⁾ in July describing special assistance to the front-line States of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, as well as to other bordering States adversely affected by economic measures taken either by South Africa or by the international community against South Africa. Assistance continued to flow through direct bilateral agreements, regional networks, and UN bodies such as the World Bank, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Food Programme (WFP). Details of financial, technical, developmental and humanitarian assistance from Argentina, Brazil, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, New Zealand, Nigeria, Spain and Turkey were included, as well as action taken by UN bodies. Two addenda to the report contained replies from Austria, Canada, the Ukrainian SSR, UNICEF and IMF describing assistance that had been rendered.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/181 by recorded vote.

Special assistance to the front-line States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/199 of 8 December 1986, 42/201 of 11 December 1987 and 43/209 of 20 December 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned about the adverse effects of South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization against the front-line States and other neighbouring States,

Aware that the continuing existence of the apartheid system in South Africa aggravates the economic and social problems confronting the front-line States and other neighbouring States,

Conscious of the urgent need and responsibility of the international community to address the problems affecting the region,

Commending the concerted and determined efforts of the countries of the region to cope with the prevailing adverse conditions by strengthening their economic co-operation and lessening their dependence on South Africa, particularly in the areas of transportation, communications and related sectors,

Reaffirming the importance of close co-operation between the United Nations system and the front-line States,

Mindful of Security Council resolutions 568(1985) of 21 June 1985, 571(1985) of 20 September 1985 and 581(1986) of 13 February 1986, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to the front-line States,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to the front-line States;

2. Notes with appreciation the assistance being rendered to the front-line States by donor countries, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations;

3. Strongly urges the international community to continue to provide in a timely and effective manner the financial, material and technical assistance necessary to enhance the individual and collective capacity of the front-line States and other neighbouring States to withstand the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa, in accordance with their national and regional plans and strategies;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to respond to such requests for assistance as might be forthcoming from individual States or the appropriate subregional organizations, and further urges all States, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to respond favourably to such requests;

5. Appeals to all States and appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the national and collective emergency programmes prepared by the front-line States and other neighbouring States to overcome the critical problems arising from the situation in South Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Other assistance

Central America

Pursuant to two General Assembly resolutions of 1988⁽²¹⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽²²⁾ in October on the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America.⁽²³⁾ The Plan, launched in September 1988, was being implemented through a mechanism that included the five Central American Governments, the United Nations and other international and regional organizations, as well as donor Governments.

The Central American Economies deteriorated significantly during the 1980s. The average rate of growth in GDP was 3.6 per cent during 1981-1988—barely one third the rate of Latin America during the same period. On a per capita basis, the growth rate was minus 17 per cent. These conditions resulted from a persistent decline in the terms of trade and failure of export volumes to compensate for the fall in international prices; political unrest and civil strife, which discouraged private investments; foreign debt service; and natural disasters.

At the preparatory meeting of the Support Committee, held in New York in November 1988, it was decided that meetings with the Central American Vice-Ministers responsible for the Special Plan would include the Permanent Secretary of the General Treaty of Central American Economic Integration (SIECA) and UNDP. The first of those meetings took place in January 1989.

To facilitate aid co-ordination, a UNDP-financed computerized information system became operational in September 1989. Donors were encouraged to work directly with the recipient countries on the identification, formulation and implementation of projects, with UN assistance if requested. As of 1 August 1989, 21 projects with a total cost of $11,224,000 had been approved or were in the final stages of approval. The Programme in Favour of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Returnees was the first result of successful resource mobilization within the framework of the Special Plan, receiving $115 million from Italy. The Programme, to be implemented by UNDP, would benefit 136,500 persons directly and 245,900 persons indirectly in the five Central American countries and Belize, by helping to establish infrastructure to meet basic needs in health, water and sanitation, food and nutrition, education and housing for targeted populations in well-defined geographical areas.

Other UN efforts regarding the Special Plan included action to meet immediate food and energy needs, and to alleviate the external debt crisis. A technical co-operation project, to be executed by UNCTAD, was formulated to help reactivate intraregional trade, UNDP was financing a project entitled Strengthening of the Central American Monetary Stabilization Fund. A draft proposal to restructure the Fund was finalized in June 1989.

The first meeting of Central American Governments with co-operating Governments and institutions was held in Geneva from 4 to 6 July, and was attended by representatives of 27 Governments, 29 organizations of the United Nations and 15 subregional Central American integration organizations.

UNDP consideration. On 30 June 1989⁽²⁴⁾ the Governing Council of UNDP urged the co-operating community to support the funding needs of the United Nations Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America. It also invited the community, intergovernmental agencies, financial institutions and UN bodies to participate in the first meeting of the Central American Governments with co-operating Governments and institutions in Geneva in July, to review the Special Plan's implementation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/182 without vote.

Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 42/204 of 11 December 1987, 43/24 of 15 November 1988 and 44/10 of 23 October 1989, as well as decisions 88/31 A of 1 July 1988 and 89/64 of 30 June 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Recalling in particular its resolutions 42/231 of 12 May 1988 and 43/210 of 20 December 1988, in which it urged the international community and international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with the Central American countries within the framework of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America,

Reiterating the importance of the commitments made by the Central American Presidents in the agreement signed at Guatemala City at the Esquipulas II Summit Meeting, the declarations adopted at Alajuela, Costa Rica, and Costa del Sol, El Salvador, and, in particular, the agreements reached at Tela, Honduras, which represented concrete progress and strengthened the peace process in the region,

Welcoming with satisfaction the convening of the first meeting between the Governments of the countries of Central America and co-operating Governments and institutions, held at Geneva from 4 to 6 July 1989, to review the evolution of the regional development process with regard to assistance and co-operation requirements and to discuss programmes and projects that could be implemented in accordance with resolution 43/210,

Stressing the need to encourage the convening of sectoral meetings for the purpose of mobilizing resources for the implementation of programmes and projects within the framework of the Special Plan,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the situation in Central America and on the work done to promote the Special Plan and, in particular, his report on the work of the Organization, in which he states that "the time has now come to buttress the emerging peace by providing the massive support that the region needs to overcome its age-old problems",

Deeply concerned about the emergency situation in Central America and alarmed at the seriousness of the economic and social crisis that the region faces,

Reaffirming its conviction that peace, development and democracy are inseparable,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his reports on the situation in Central America and for the efforts that he has made to promote the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America;

2. Welcomes with satisfaction the Joint Political Declaration and the Joint Economic Communiqué of the San Pedro Sula Ministerial Conference on Political Dialogue and Economic Co-operation between the European Community and its member States and the countries of Central America and the Contadora Group, held at San Pedro Sula, Honduras, on 27 and 28 February 1989, in which they reaffirmed their commitment to and interest in continuing to participate in specific activities and in the reactivation and economic development of the region in accordance with the priorities established in the Special Plan;

3. Welcomes the Declaration and Concerted Plan of Action in Favour of Central American Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons adopted by the International Conference on Central American Refugees, held at Guatemala City from 29 to 31 May 1989;

4. Welcomes with satisfaction the convening of the first meeting between the Governments of Central America and co-operating Governments and institutions, at which the evolution of the regional development process, including the region's assistance and co-operation requirements, were reviewed within the framework of the Special Plan;

5. Recommends the convening of sectoral meetings during 1990, in continuation of the process already begun between the Governments of the countries of Central America and the co-operating Governments and institutions, to examine the possibility of mobilizing additional resources for the early implementation of programmes and projects within the framework of the Special Plan;

6. Urges Member States and observers, intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and regional and subregional organs and agencies, taking into account the emergency situation faced by the Central American countries, to participate actively and to adopt immediate measures for the implementation of the activities in support of the goals and objectives of the Special Plan;

7. Emphasizes the urgent need to provide the Central American countries with financial resources on concessional and favourable terms, in addition to those which they are already receiving from the international community;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the Special Plan;

9. Decides to review and evaluate the progress in the implementation of the Special Plan at its forty-fifth session.

Ecuador

Reporting on economic assistance to Ecuador⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that many aspects of Ecuador's economy showed improvement in 1989, largely as a result of economic policies put in place in the third quarter of 1988. Inflation had slowed to 54.2 per cent in December 1989, down from 85.7 per cent a year earlier. The budget deficit represented 1 per cent of GDP in 1989, compared with 2.7 per cent in 1988. GDP rose by 0.5 per cent, an improvement over the negative performance of previous years. The Government made substantial efforts to enhance social development, and remained concerned about inflation, stagnant wages, inequalities in national income distribution, insufficient productivity, increased social sector needs and continuing external debt.

Lebanon

In accordance with a 1988 General Assembly resolution⁽²⁵⁾ the Secretary-General submitted a report in October⁽²⁶⁾ describing assistance programmes to Lebanon. The report stated that unprecedented violence had erupted in Lebanon, with almost uninterrupted shelling in and around Beirut. Lebanese government and social institutions continued to disintegrate, and the effect on the overall economic and social situation had been devastating. Approximately 75 per cent of Beirut's population had fled to other areas of Lebanon. United Nations and other relief operations were severely affected by the closure of the ports, and the movement of personnel and relief items were hindered by an unpredictable security situation. The economy was collapsing and the consumer price index increased by 28.5 per cent during the first half of 1989. Political instability and increasing violence made it extremely difficult for the UN system to carry out its reconstruction and development programme. The ongoing destruction meant that the organization's activities inevitably had to focus on emergency relief aid and maintenance of essential services, such as health care and water supplies.

The Secretary-General sent a high-level inter-agency mission to Lebanon from 16 to 26 January 1989 to reassess emergency relief needs, led by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General and composed of senior representatives of several UN agencies. The mission reported that the Secretary-General's 1987 appeal for $85 million had been answered, and that total relief assistance for Lebanon from contributions to the United Nations and from other sources was more than $116 million for 1988. Total requirements for relief and urgent rehabilitation for the following year were estimated at about $87.3 million, of which slightly less than half was for food aid. Following a discussion of UN assistance to Lebanon with the heads of UN programmes and specialized agencies at the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination meeting at Geneva, the Secretary-General on 21 April appealed to the international community for urgent humanitarian assistance for those most seriously affected by the crisis. To improve the United Nations ability to implement emergency relief assistance, the Special Representative established co-ordination meetings between UN representatives, government officials and donor officials, and a similar co-ordination mechanism for non-governmental organizations.

Individual reports were included on relief provided by the following bodies: UNICEF, UNDP, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, WFP, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization (WHO). The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) continued to provide humanitarian assistance on an ad hoc basis. The report concluded that international relief assistance in response to the Secretary-General's appeals had significantly alleviated the suffering of the Lebanese people.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, adopted resolution 1989/100 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/207 of 20 December 1988 and previous resolutions of the General Assembly on international assistance for the reconstruction of Lebanon, in which the Assembly requested the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand and intensify their programmes of assistance in response to the needs of Lebanon,

Aware of the deteriorating socio-economic conditions of the people of Lebanon and the magnitude of their unmet needs,

Noting with great concern the unprecedented inflation in Lebanon during the past five years and the catastrophic erosion of the value of the country's currency,

Appeals to all Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their efforts to mobilize all possible assistance for the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/100

26 July 1989 Meeting 35 Adopted without vote

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/180 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/207 of 20 December 1988 and its previous resolutions on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/100 of 26 July 1989 and recalling the previous relevant resolutions and decisions of the Council,

Noting with deep concern the grave deterioration of the economic situation in Lebanon, compounded recently by the extensive damage to the basic infrastructure of the country and to its utilities,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further international action to assist the Government of Lebanon in its continuing efforts for reconstruction and development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon, and of the statement made by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Lebanon;

2. Commends the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services for his co-ordination of system-wide assistance to Lebanon;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts;

4. Calls upon the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their programmes of assistance and to expand them in response to the pressing needs of Lebanon, and to take the necessary steps to ensure that their offices in Beirut are operational and adequately staffed at the senior level;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Vanuatu

Reporting on assistance to Vanuatu⁽¹⁴⁾ the Secretary-General noted that the island developing country continued to experience severe constraints on its economic and social development because of declining export prices, deteriorating terms of trade, and a high population growth rate coupled with a shortage of skilled manpower. In April 1989, cyclone Devi brought heavy rains, exacerbating difficulties caused by cyclones in previous years. Exports of copra, the main crop, declined from 42,300 tons in 1986 to 23,620 tons in 1989, but were offset by increases in other exports. Vanuatu's tourist industry made a significant contribution to foreign exchange earnings and employment, but the number of cruise ship visitors was down in the first half of 1989.

The international community had provided substantial assistance for reconstruction and rehabilitation following cyclone Uma in February 1987 and much of that work had been completed. Further relief aid was received following 1988 cyclones, but the infrastructure in rural areas would not be restored to former levels for some years. Almost all of Vanuatu's public sector capital and development expenditure in 1989 was funded by donors or lenders.

Disasters

In 1989, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) continued to act as the focal point for disaster management within the UN system, in accordance with its mandate, covering all aspects of disaster relief and mitigation. Disaster prevention and preparedness continued to grow in importance and UNDRO moved to increase communication and co-operation. UNDRO also assisted Governments with pre-disaster planning. The rise in both the number of disasters and public interest in them posed new challenges. The number of requests from developing countries to strengthen their emergency relief capabilities also grew.

Office of the UN Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

During 1989, UNDRO—the specialized office of the United Nations for all disaster-related matters—was deeply involved in preparatory work for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, 1990-2000 (see below), and in strengthening its collaborative relationship with UNDP. In his report⁽¹⁾ on UNDRO activities in 1988-1989, the Secretary-General stated that the traditional division between natural and man-made disasters had increasingly lost relevance, while the distinction between sudden disasters and slow-onset emergencies had become more significant. He also reported that UNDRO's limited resources for disaster relief co-ordination had been put under great strain. With the increased vulnerability of communities to natural hazards and other emergencies, the number of disasters and their human and economic cost had grown.

Because the need for donor Governments, intergovernmental, non-governmental and UN organizations to receive reliable and immediate information from UNDRO for decision-making in emergencies was more compelling than ever, UNDRO's data management and communication capacities needed to be improved during the 1988-1989 biennium. UNDRO's information network, the United Nations International Emergency Network, completed its pilot phase at the end of 1989, and the Office planned an international conference on disaster telecommunications for early 1990.

In response to recommendations made by the Administrative Management Service in February, UNDRO's organizational structure was adjusted to reflect new requirements, which were identified by the Secretary-General in an October 1987 report⁽²⁾ and later endorsed by the General Assembly⁽³⁾. UNDRO activities relating to public information, communications and electronic data-processing support, and registry and reference library functions were regrouped under the information and disaster data systems management. Two substantive branches, renamed the Relief Co-ordination Branch and the Disaster Mitigation Branch, were relieved of general office support functions to allow them to focus on their specific mandates. To strengthen further its co-operation with non-governmental organizations, in October UNDRO convened a third meeting of officials in charge of national emergency relief services on enhancing international co-operation in response to the needs of disaster victims. The emergency transport and warehousing facility at Pisa, Italy, was considerably developed, in order to increase UNDRO's efficiency and effectiveness.

Donor meetings continued to be valuable forums for presenting emergency appeals for assistance to the international donor community. In 1989, UNDRO organized or participated in such meetings for Angola, Bangladesh and Mozambique.

Contributions channelled directly through UNDRO for disaster relief totalled $40 million during 1988-1989, compared to $22 million for the preceding biennium. A total of 117 disasters, both natural and man-made, were addressed. On average, UNDRO was called upon to deal with a new emergency situation every week, issuing a minimum of four information/situation reports weekly.

Major disasters that elicited an UNDRO response included earthquakes in Algeria, Nepal and the Soviet Socialist Republics of Tajikistan and Armenia; floods in Bangladesh, Brazil, China, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Paraguay, the Sudan, Tunisia and Zambia; Hurricanes Hugo, Gilbert and Joan in the Caribbean and Latin America; drought in Ethiopia; civil strife in Angola, Lebanon, Mozambique and Romania; returnees in Mauritania and Senegal; and displaced persons in Mali and the Niger. UNDRO mounted large airlift and air-drop operations for emergency relief in Ethiopia and Mozambique.

UNDRO financing

UNDRO activities continued to be financed mainly from the UN regular budget and voluntary contributions to a number of trust funds administered by the Co-ordinator. Appropriations by the General Assembly for the 1988-1989 biennium were $6,944,800.⁽⁴⁾

Disaster relief efforts

Drought-stricken areas

Sudano-Sahelian region

In 1989, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) continued, under UNDP supervision, to assist countries in drought preparedness, recovery and rehabilitation, medium- to long-term development, and in implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see also PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

In a report⁽⁵⁾ to the UNDP Governing Council on UNSO activities during 1989, the UNDP Administrator noted that although the Sudano-Sahelian region experienced above-average rainfall compared to the deficit of the previous 17 years, outbreaks of desert locusts and flooding following the rainy seasons continued to threaten the region's physical condition. The natural resource base continued to deteriorate despite efforts to halt ecological degradation. Climatic variations and human activities, such as overexploitation of land and water, overgrazing of rangelands and deforestation, remained driving forces behind the ecological deterioration of the region.

The report summarized UNSO activities in the 22 Sudano-Sahelian countries in such areas as deforestation control, range and water management, soil and sand dune stabilization, international planning and co-ordination, ecological monitoring, funding mobilization and development, and the promotion of public awareness of drought and desertification issues. UNSO's collaborative and co-operative activities with other agencies were described, as well as measures against drought and desertification taken by other entities within UNDP. By the end of 1989, ongoing UNSO projects were valued at approximately $100 million. The total amount of resources mobilized through the UNSO Trust Fund was $37.5 million, an increase of more than 37 per cent over 1988. UNSO was designated as the UN focal point for a new initiative, the "Observatory of the Sahara and the Sahel", undertaken by France. The programme, intended for 20 countries, aimed to complete and reinforce existing anti-drought and anti-desertification programmes for northern, western and eastern Africa.

UNDP Council action. On 30 June,⁽⁶⁾ the UNDP Governing Council, having considered the Administrator's report on UNSO's 1988 activities,⁽⁷⁾ noted with satisfaction UNSO's renewed efforts to combat drought and desertification and encouraged it to contribute actively to major initiatives for the protection of the environment, by promoting measures to control desertification and by ensuring their co-ordination with other development activities. The Council renewed its appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to UNSO's general resources and particular projects, and to make use of its services.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1987 General Assembly request,⁽⁸⁾ in May the Secretary-General submitted a report⁽⁹⁾ on African countries stricken by desertification and drought. He noted UNSO's steps to assist the 22 countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region in controlling desertification and drought, to strengthen contacts with the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development (IGADD) and the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS), and its establishment of a regional office in East Africa to deal with IGADD. The report said UNSO had increased direct support to Governments in planning, co-ordination and monitoring at the country level.

The Secretary-General drew the Council's attention to the report of the UNDP Administrator on UNSO activities,⁽⁷⁾ as well as the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Contain Desertification 1987-1988⁽¹⁰⁾ which included sections on implementing the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region and its financing.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1989/103 without vote.

Countries stricken by desertification and drought in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 39/208 of 17 December 1984, 40/175 of 17 December 1985 and 42/188 of 11 December 1987, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/44 of 21 July 1986,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 40/209 of 17 December 1985, in which the Assembly rationalized its consideration of desertification and drought issues,

Deeply alarmed by studies indicating that major climatic changes have taken place in Africa, making the present situation very critical, and by the disturbing assessment that emerged from the Scientific Round Table on the Climatic Situation and Drought in Africa, held at Addis Ababa in February 1984,

Greatly concerned at the tragic consequences of the accelerating desertification, which has resulted in a substantial decline in agricultural output and contributed in particular to the worsening of the current economic crisis in Africa,

Taking note of the interest shown at the summit meeting of the seven main industrialized countries held in Paris in July 1989 in matters relating to the control of desertification and, in particular, in the plan to establish a Sahel observatory,

Recalling that, pursuant to the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, African Governments have undertaken to strengthen measures to combat desertification and drought, and bearing in mind the active support and commitment to action expressed forcefully by the international community, including the United Nations system, in General Assembly resolution 43/27 of 18 November 1988 on the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on countries stricken by desertification and drought,

Taking note of the work of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on this question and its decision 15/23 of 25 May 1989,

Welcoming the results and resolutions of the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries, in Egypt and in the Sudan, held at Dakar in July 1984 and November 1985 and at Algiers in October 1988,

Welcoming also the renewed efforts of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to increase support to the countries and organizations concerned and to co-operate with them, in particular with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development,

Having considered the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office,

Acknowledging that, in view of the scale and gravity of desertification and drought, programmes to combat those scourges require financial and human resources beyond the means of the countries concerned,

1. Recognizes the sustained and praiseworthy efforts made by the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel to combat desertification and drought, and welcomes its fruitful co-operation with Governments and United Nations organs and bodies;

2. Appeals urgently to the international community, particularly donor countries, while maintaining their support for the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, to continue to support the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel, the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development and the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification;

3. Welcomes with satisfaction the progress made by the International Fund for Agricultural Development through its Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification;

4. Stresses the fundamental importance of South-South co-operation in executing programmes to combat desertification and drought and of the necessary support of the international community for such co-operation;

5. Notes with satisfaction the generosity and solidarity with which the international community has responded to the assistance needs resulting from the emergency in Africa, particularly with regard to food aid, emergency medical assistance and the fight against grasshoppers and locusts;

6. Recommends that, within the framework of bilateral and multilateral development assistance programmes, the fight against desertification and drought be given priority attention in keeping with the scope of those problems;

7. Urges the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office to assist the Sudano-Sahelian countries with regard to preparations for the United Nations conference on the environment and development and the follow-up actions resulting from the conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to place greater emphasis in the World Economic Survey on the situation and prospects of countries stricken by desertification and drought;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the situation in countries stricken by desertification and drought and to prepare, as necessary, specific and co-ordinated proposals for action.

Storms and floods

Harsh weather battered several areas of the world in 1989, causing many deaths, rendering thousands homeless and leaving vast structural damage. Severe flooding in Djibouti in April affected some 250,000 people, including 150,000 who were left homeless, while 260,000 people were affected by March floods in Democratic Yemen. Hurricane Hugo struck the eastern Caribbean in mid-September with winds in excess of 150 miles per hour, causing extensive damage and leaving thousands homeless.

Hurricane Hugo

On 27 September⁽¹¹⁾ Antigua and Barbuda requested the General Assembly to include an additional item on the agenda of the forty-fourth session, entitled "Emergency assistance to Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica and Saint Kitts and Nevis". The request stated that these islands had been devastated by hurricane Hugo on 16 September. Assistance to the British Virgin Islands and Montserrat was subsequently included in the item on the proposal of the United Kingdom and with the recommendation of the General Committee.

UNDRO entrusted the Manager of its Pan-Caribbean Disaster Preparedness and Prevention Project with monitoring the situation and activating regional and national response systems. Overall co-ordination of the disaster relief operation was provided by the Project, which co-operated closely with UNDP and other agencies. Through its direct links with the Caribbean Community Disaster Relief Unit, UNDRO was able to secure the requests from and pledges for the stricken countries in good time. UNDRO issued situation reports on damage and relief needs and, together with UNDP, provided emergency grants for the purchase of relief materials totalling $200,000. Contributions reported to UNDRO exceeded $11 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/3 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Antigua and Barbuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/202 of 20 December 1988 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Deeply distressed by the large number of afflicted persons and the destruction wrought by hurricane Hugo, which, on 16 September 1989, devastated Antigua and Barbuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis,

Conscious of the efforts of the Governments and peoples of Antigua and Barbuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of hurricane Hugo,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Conscious also of the prompt response being made by Governments, the bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals to provide relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its medium-term and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the peoples and Governments of Antigua and Barbuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral co-operation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and to initiate the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Governments and peoples of Antigua and Barbuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat and Saint Kitts and Nevis;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to the affected countries;

3. Urges all States of the international community, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the international financial institutions and the bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, to assist the Governments of Antigua and Barbuda, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, Montserrat and

Saint Kitts and Nevis in identifying the medium-term and long-term needs and in mobilizing resources, as well as to help with the task of reconstruction of the affected countries undertaken by their respective Governments.

12 October 1989 Meeting 31 Adopted without vote

33-nation draft (A/44/L.3 & Add.1); agenda item 156.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Colombia, Cuba, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Malta, Mauritius, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Singapore, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela.

Following adoption of resolution 44/3, the Secretary-General reported⁽¹⁾ direct losses estimated at $365 million.

Floods in Democratic Yemen

In an October report⁽¹²⁾ the Secretary-General noted that, following heavy rains that started on 19 March and continued for more than a week, Democratic Yemen was struck by severe floods in its central and eastern regions. Twenty-five people were killed, 80,000 were left homeless, and crop losses alone reached $5.8 million.

On 26 March, the Government asked UNDR0 to launch an appeal for international assistance, and UNDR0 responded the same day with the first of five situation reports alerting the international community to the disaster and urging donors to extend emergency assistance. As of 31 August, UNDR0's efforts had helped secure about $2.9 million from Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, private firms, individuals and UN agencies. Medical assistance was provided by UNICEF and WHO; UNDP provided $50,000 for food assistance; and WFP approved a three-month food-for-work programme valued at $1 million. UNDP subsequently approved additional funding of $1.1 million for a technical assistance project to supervise reconstruction of 25 schools and, in co-operation with the International Development Association, made available $2 million for construction materials. In a later report⁽¹³⁾ the Secretary-General noted that national damage and reconstruction costs were estimated at $72 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 10 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1989/1 without vote.

Emergency assistance to Democratic Yemen

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned at the extensive and unprecedented damage and devastation in Democratic Yemen caused by torrential rain and floods in March and April 1989,

Extremely concerned about the destruction of thousands of dwellings and the widespread damage to or disruption of the country's infrastructure, in particular roads, water supplies, electricity supplies, communication systems, health centres, schools and other public services,

Considering that many thousands of hectares of cultivated land were inundated and hundreds of villages have completely disappeared, leaving tens of thousands of people without shelter or food,

Noting that a detailed assessment of the extent and nature of the damage is being prepared by the Government of Democratic Yemen with the assistance of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Coordinator,

Noting the efforts made by the Government of Democratic Yemen to provide adequate food and shelter promptly for those affected by the floods and to undertake rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes in response to the devastation caused by the floods,

Considering that Democratic Yemen, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to sustain the mounting burden of providing adequate food and shelter for the large number of people who need them,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to respond fully to requests for emergency humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Democratic Yemen,

Noting with appreciation the support provided by various countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to emergency relief operations,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and the people of Democratic Yemen in facing the devastation caused by the rain and floods;
2. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have rendered support and assistance to the Government of Democratic Yemen in its relief and rehabilitation efforts;
3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to co-ordinate and mobilize relief and rehabilitation assistance for Democratic Yemen;
4. Calls upon all States to contribute generously and respond effectively to meet the urgent needs of relief operations and rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes;
5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Government of Democratic Yemen, to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help Democratic Yemen in its emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, to mobilize resources for their implementation and to keep the international community informed of the needs of that country;
6. Also requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989 of his efforts and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.
