The rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/107 of 12 December 1997, 52/106 of 12 December 1997 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/76 of 22 April 1998,

Reaffirming the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990,¹ notably its solemn commitment to give high priority to the rights of children, to their survival and to their protection and development, and reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993,² which, inter alia, states that national and international mechanisms and programmes for the defence and protection of children, in particular those in especially difficult circumstances, should be strengthened, including through effective measures to combat exploitation and abuse of children such as female infanticide, harmful child labour, sale of children and organs, child prostitution and child pornography, and which reaffirms that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal,

* On behalf of the States Members of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States.

² A/CONF.157/24 (Part I), chap. III.

Underlining the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes relating to children,

Welcoming the conclusion of the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court in which the special situation of children has been taken into account, guided by the principles and provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child,³

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of poverty, inadequate social and economic conditions, aggravated by the current international financial crisis in an increasingly globalized world economy, natural disasters, armed conflicts, displacement, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger, intolerance, disability and inadequate legal protection, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Recognizing that the adoption of legislation is necessary but not enough to prevent violations of the rights of the child, that stronger political commitment is needed and that Governments should implement their laws and complement legislative measures with effective action,

Recommending that, within their mandates, all relevant human rights mechanisms and all other relevant organs and mechanisms of the United Nations system and the supervisory bodies of the specialized agencies pay attention to particular situations in which children are in danger and where their rights are violated and that they take into account the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, and welcoming the rights-based approach adopted by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the steps taken to further increase system-wide coordination and inter-agency cooperation for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

Welcoming the open debate and the statement made by the President of the Security Council on behalf of the Council on 29 June 1998, on children and armed conflict,⁴

Stressing the need to strengthen partnerships between Governments, international organizations and all sectors of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations,

Reaffirming that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children,
