Statement made on 6 July 1999 by the President of Georgia to the participants and organizers of the International Conference-Seminar on the Policy of Genocide and Ethnic Cleansing in Abkhazia, Georgia: the Principal Weapon of Aggressive Separatism

I want to express my sincere appreciation to the participants and organisers of this event, whose aim is to review and acquaint the general public with the investigation materials on the facts of genocide committed against the Georgian population in Abkhazia.

These facts are of course well known to me, and I have even been an eye-witness to many of them. What the Abkhaz separatists perpetrated against the Georgian people with the unconcealed help of outside forces must be categorised as a crime against humanity, genocide and vandalism.

These facts can be rightfully equated with the crimes committed historically by fascist regimes.

To remember and relive past tragedy is agonising, yet it is our moral obligation to do so, thereby honouring the memory of the tens of thousands people who were killed. To remember is to remind ourselves of the hundreds of thousands who remain internally displaced or refugees. They have lost their homes, suffered profound humiliation, and had their right to a peaceful life in their native land utterly trampled.

For seven years we have been trying to persuade the world that to allow such conduct to go unpunished would permit the emergence of new hotbeds of conflict, war and bloodshed.

Despite the goodwill of many political and public figures and earnest support from friendly countries, all of our efforts to peacefully resolve the Abkhaz problem remain ineffectual.

Most troubling, there are those who still attempt to distort the truth by presenting the victims as though they were the criminals. Regrettably, even some of our own countrymen engage in this disturbing behaviour.

It is fortunate that the international community is becoming increasingly intolerant of aggressive separatism and other such crimes.

I am confident that the tragedy of Abkhazia will soon be given its due assessment, and that the international community will take the necessary measures to allow those whose lives have been so horribly interrupted to return to their homes and resume a peaceful life - measures that will assure that those who carried out the massacre in Abkhazia are duly punished.

Civilised nations cannot be indifferent when human rights are being trampled, even if the aggression is not targeted against them directly.

I know that your Conference intends to draft a formal address to the UN Security Council and the international community at large. As a citizen, I too want to add my voice to this address. Georgia still has hundreds of thousands of displaced who remain living under deplorable conditions. As President of the country, I want to assure everyone - particularly those ousted from Abkhazia in the first place - that this government will continue to vigorously seek a political means for a peaceful settlement while there remains even the slightest hope for it, without further bloodshed and tragedy. If this hope is exhausted, however, we will seek another way to restore Georgia's territorial integrity and allow every refugee to return home.

This does not mean discontinuing the peaceful dialogue. It does mean that the organisers of ethnic cleansing and genocide of Georgians must realise that the heinous crime they have committed, and their culpability, has been recognized by the civilised world.

The separatist regime must quell its political ambitions and agree to a realistic compromise in order to achieve peaceful conclusion to the problem, for the benefit of all both the Georgian and the Abkhaz sides.

Appeal issued on 6 July 1999 by the participants in the International Conference on the Policy of Genocide and Ethnic Cleansing in Abkhazia, Georgia: the Principal Weapon of Aggressive Separatism to the Security Council and the world community

Seven years have passed since hundreds of thousands of innocent, peaceful civilians fell victim to the tragic events in Abkhazia, one of the ancient historical regions of Georgia.

With the support and participation of anti-democratic, reactionary political and military forces of Russia, Abkhazian separatists carried out aggressive acts against the statehood and territorial integrity of Georgia, which resulted in the violation of the integrity of the country, the occupation of Abkhazia - an integral part of Georgia, the formation of a criminal, separatist regime and the ethnic cleansing of Georgians.

Tens of thousands of peaceful residents were shot, burned alive, tortured and crippled because of their ethnic origins. Many of them are still missing. More than 20 thousand houses belonging to Georgians were destroyed. Georgian schools, libraries, kindergartens, cultural centres, churches, and architectural and historical monuments were burned and looted. It is forbidden to teach in Georgian. Eighty percent of the aboriginal population of Abkhazia was driven away from the areas where these people have traditionally lived.

Not only Georgians, but also Greeks, Jews, Russians, Ukrainians, Estonians, Armenians and even Abkhazians, who lived in Abkhazia, fell victim to the terror and the apartheid regime practised by the separatists. Some of them died in the war, and many others, who feared the separatists, had to leave their homes and find refuge in different towns and regions of Georgia, as well as in foreign countries.

The documents, photographs and audio-visual materials at our disposal, as well as the evidence of eyewitnesses, prove that Abkhazian separatists forced more than 250 thousand aboriginal Georgians to leave their homeland. This action has forcibly changed the demographic situation in the region by the use of inhumane and barbarous methods such as mass killings, the burial of people alive, the throwing of people into wells and the group raping of under-age children.

The Parliamentary Assembly of the European Union, the OSCE and a number of CIS summits have condemned the policy of ethnic cleansing with respect to the Georgian population. The international community is well aware of this.

In its numerous resolutions, the UN Security Council has confirmed as destructive the position of the Abkhazian side in negotiations, especially their negative approach to the creation of security mechanisms for the peaceful return of refugees and forcibly displaced persons to their native land. In this regard the Council has reminded the world about the Lisbon decisions and has demanded a speedy solution to the problem.

The protection of human rights is becoming an indispensable attribute and an obligation for a country on the path of civilised and democratic development. The process is in need of support from the entire world. The conference points out that the internationally recognised concept - "every man has the right to have a free and worthy life" - frequently does not go further than a declaration. The fate of more than 300 thousand people who fled from Abkhazia is a clear example of this. They have been suffering for six years, waiting for the restoration of an elementary human right - the right to return to one's home and live there. Fifteen resolutions of the UN Security Council, the minutes of the OSCE Budapest and Lisbon summits, and also the Moscow, Minsk and Chişinău CIS summits have stressed that the separatist regime in Abkhazia perpetrated the ethnic cleansing of Georgians. However, the lenient and compliant approach of international organisations has resulted in the mass violation of human rights in Abkhazia. These violations are still continuing.

Today, the Conference has uncovered numerous facts about the ethnic cleansing of Georgians carried out by the separatists in Abkhazia. The 17 December 1992 resolution of the UN Security Council recognises such facts as a form of genocide.

The events in Kosovo have shown the world the possible effects of delayed reaction to the policy of ethnic cleansing on the lives of hundreds of thousands of ethnically different people. In such cases this procrastination causes further bloodshed and adds to the number of victims.

The international community has passed a verdict on the offences against humanity in Abkhazia. It is necessary to assess the events according to the standards of international law.

We appeal to the international community on behalf of hundreds of thousands of people displaced from Abkhazia - children, women, the aged, invalids, the homeless and those unjustly condemned, all of whom are suffering and dying - to take decisive measures to settle the conflict in Abkhazia within a short period of time.

We request that the UN Secretary General Mr. Kofi Annan takes more energetic and effective measures aimed at settling the conflict in Abkhazia and establishing peace and stability there.

Taking into consideration the fact that all political means of settling the conflict have been exhausted, we believe that it is now necessary to replace the present peace operation with an initiative aimed at forcing peace. This issue should be unambiguously raised at the Security Council.

The Conference believes that it is necessary to create a special commission to consider materials at the disposal of related bodies pertaining to the ethnic cleansing and genocide of Georgians in Abkhazia, and to transfer these materials to the International Court.

We appeal to the UN Security Council to take decisive steps in this direction and take measures similar to those used in the territory of former Yugoslavia and in Rwanda in order to identify violations of humanitarian norms and use the provisions of international law against the offenders.

Any person practising ethnic cleansing in its extreme form of genocide should know that he will have to face an international court and answer for his barbaric acts against humanity.

Statement by the Prosecutor General of Georgia

Nearly six years have passed since the tragedy in Abkhazia. We have gained many new insights since then, which have led to a better comprehension and appreciation of the situation. We can now see the gross mistakes that have been made, the heroic and unequal struggle of the Georgian population against prevailing hordes of mercenaries, and the totally unjustified and undeserved loathing of Georgians as an ethnic group. What has also become evident is the treachery and hostility of some of the neighbouring countries due to the accumulated malice of years. Most importantly we can see these countries' refusal to accept either Georgia's independence or the unremitting struggle of the Georgian people for freedom and self-determination.

The Georgians who were forced to flee from Abkhazia have deep confidence that they will eventually return to their homes and, together with Abkhazians, heal the serious wounds of the past. They believe that through a difficult and painful process of reconciliation they will restore their old good-neighbourly relationship, which was destroyed by the ignorant Abkhazian separatists. The latter, inspired by Russian imperialist forces, led these two fraternal and blood-related people to oppose each other.

A part of the progressively-minded Abkhazian population, unable to endure the Ardzinba regime, left their motherland. They now live in other countries with the status of refugees. Together with Abkhazians these include Russians, Greeks, Armenians and others, not to mention Georgians who survived the war and had to leave the land of their forefathers in fear of their lives.

Abkhazia, once one of the most beautiful regions of Georgia, has now become an arena for criminal gangs and foreign militiamen who came to Abkhazia to plunder it. They are fighting against and killing each other in order to gain power and influence. The economy has been destroyed and the transport system disrupted; the activity of health resorts has come to a standstill as their infrastructure has been severely damaged. Most people are unemployed, starving and secretly expressing their protest against the dictatorship of Ardzinba and the people around him.

Since the tragedy in Abkhazia, the Government of Georgia and the legitimate Abkhazian authorities in exile have not ceased their struggle for the return of refugees to their homes and the restoration of the violated territorial integrity of Georgia. The UN has produced numerous serious and important documents recognising the territorial integrity of Georgia and hinting at the ethnic cleansing carried out against Georgians in Abkhazia. Many of the world's leading countries - the USA, Germany, Great Britain, France, Russia and others, - recognise unreservedly the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Georgia.

In spite of this, the tragic situation of the Georgian population of Abkhazia is in need of legal assessment according to the dictates of international law which are common to the entire civilised world, and which regulate relations between peoples.

The recent events in Yugoslavia have strengthened our belief that all instances of ethnic cleansing - a crime against humanity - must be brought to the attention of, and investigated by, the UN and the Hague International Tribunal. The offenders should be punished.

The Prosecutor General's Office of Georgia began its investigation into the acts of genocide in Abkhazia with this hope about six years ago. The well-known decree of the President of Georgia, Mr. Eduard Shevardnadze "On the Creation of the State Commission for the Investigation of the Facts of Genocide and Ethnic Cleansing of the Georgian Population in the Region of Abkhazia and the Preparation of Materials for the International Tribunal" initiated the investigation.

More than 20 thousand eyewitnesses and victims have been identified and questioned so far, and we have collected many documents, video and photographic materials, and the opinions of experts. Years of work by dozens of investigators and operation workers have produced more than 200 large volumes. The final conclusion that has been reached is that aggressive separatism had taken root and been developing in Abkhazia for decades. Chief Communist Party and Soviet leaders of Abkhazian origin, directly connected to Russian imperialistic forces, led this plot against the state.

These people systematically distorted and falsified historical facts, made political insinuations, gave a biased interpretation of events and invented legends about Georgians conquering the territory of Abkhazia, oppressing the Abkhazian people and trying to exterminate them.

Armed struggle, using fascist methods for the implementation of "the right of self-determination", the forcible violation of the territorial integrity of the country and the alteration of its demography with the help of the extermination and expulsion of ethnic groups became state policy.

In order to change the political orientation of neighbouring and friendly countries, Georgia was represented as an enemy. There were assertions that Abkhazia was part of Russia and that the entire wealth of the region - the infrastructure of the former Soviet health resorts, the natural resources, sites of strategic importance and much more were all said to belong to Russia. This was done to please certain forces there.

Muslims in the North Caucasus and abroad were told over and over again that the Caucasus was united and indivisible and that Georgians were trying to exterminate Abkhazians who were in need of help.

The propaganda machine of the extremists, and of the intelligence services that supported them, began to bring its weight to bear. The movement for the salvation of the "oppressed" Abkhazians was becoming stronger and stronger. Money was collected to purchase arms and to hire killers in foreign countries and send them to Georgia, and also to fund the information war by hiring media personnel, commissioning TV programmes, etc.

In their speeches at the 23 August 1990 session of the Supreme Soviet of the Autonomous Republic, the Chairman of the Presidium V. Kobakhia, Soviet member D. Ajinjal and others tried to falsify historical facts. They said Abkhazia was not linked to Georgia at all, stimulating a new wave of hatred and gravely damaging traditionally fraternal relations between Georgians and Abkhazians.

The nationalistic political organisation named Aydgylara was a key factor in the activities of separatists. The principal aim of this organisation was the falsification of the history of Georgian-Abkhazian relations.

The investigation has shown that Aydgylara and other political organisations systematically and purposefully disseminated different statements, appeals and so-called "scientific research papers" for the purpose of violating the territorial integrity of the Georgian state. Such "works" continue to appear zealously in publications like "Abkhazia - Chronicles of an Undeclared War", "The White Book of Abkhazia", "The Tragedy of Abkhazia" and others.

On 25 August 1990, in violation of the Constitutions of the Republic of Georgia and the Abkhazian Autonomous Republic, the Supreme Soviet of the Abkhazian Autonomous Republic adopted a declaration "On the State Sovereignty of the Abkhazian Soviet Socialist Republic", in fact declaring unilaterally Abkhazia's secession from Georgia. The adoption of this so-called declaration institutionalised an ethnic Abkhazian majority in the Supreme Soviet of Abkhazia.

Separatists used force and blackmail to introduce, on 27 August 1991, changes and amendments to the law "On the Election of Members of the Supreme Soviet", institutionalising apartheid de jure in Abkhazia. According to the "law", only Abkhazians could be elected in 28 electoral districts and Georgians in 26 districts, others being left for representatives of other ethnic groups. This apartheid law enabled Abkhazians to have a majority in the Supreme Council and violate elementary civil rights of the Georgians who constituted the majority of the population of Abkhazia.

On 23 July 1992, contrary to the will of the Georgian members of the Supreme Council, Abkhazians cancelled the 1978 Constitution of Abkhazia with a simple majority of votes and "restored" the so-called 1925 Constitution of the Abkhazian Soviet Socialist Republic, which, as specialists agree, has never worked.

In order to change the demographic situation by "peaceful means" and to achieve an automatic increase in the percentage of the Abkhazian population, the current leadership of the Autonomous Republic adopted numerous discriminative resolutions such as "On the Restriction of Registration of Citizens in Abkhazia", "On the Changes of Names and Nationality" and others. These resolutions effectively forbade non-Abkhazians to live in the region. The restrictions did not apply to the citizens from distant countries who could be regarded as Abkhazians without any identity cards. Their permanent registration was done secretly and without any complications.

More than a hundred citizens from Syria, Jordan and other countries were allowed to live permanently in Sukhumi, Ochamchire and other districts from March 1992.

The practice of illegal registration continued and became especially intensive after the conflict broke out. Separatists rewarded foreign militiamen, allowing them to live in and rob Abkhazia. It is possible to say that state protection of an institutionalised militia was first implemented in Abkhazia.

The investigation has also found that a wide network of volunteer stations was set up in Moscow, St.-Petersburg, Krasnodar, Stavropol and other regions of Russia, as well as in Chechnya and some other republics of the North Caucasus. A continuous stream of hired killers who had fought in Afghanistan came to Abkhazia.

Russian intelligence services and the so-called leader of the Confederation of Mountainous Peoples, Musa Shanibov, played an especial role in organising and financing the hired killers.

Shamil Basayev showed his worth through the torture and killing of peaceful residents, helpless women, old people and children in the territory of Abkhazia.

It has been proven that so-called volunteers made up 60% of the armed gangs of separatists participating in the Abkhazian conflict. It is with their help that separatists managed to expel the Georgian population from Abkhazia.

Separatists actively prepared for the war through the purchase of arms and military equipment. In this they were greatly assisted by the corrupt leadership of the Russian troops located in Abkhazia, who sold them arms and ammunition from their arsenals.

In such conditions, the supporters of the ex-president Zviad Gamsakhurdia in Western Georgia and Abkhazia allied themselves with Abkhazian separatists. They carried out subversive acts together, exploding railway lines, bridges, etc

Air, road and railway communications in Abkhazia were completely disrupted for the first six months of 1992. Georgia and its neighbours, especially Armenia, found themselves under the conditions of an economic blockade.

Bandits plundered 1923 carriages of goods worth 11 billion Russian roubles (at the exchange rate of that period). About 1142 subversive explosions were registered during the first six months of 1992.

In order to stop gangsters, ensure secure railway communications and restore law and order, the Georgian authorities introduced special rules pertaining to railways on 10 August 1992. The armed forces of the Internal Affairs and Defence ministries and the paramilitary units of railway protection were ordered to implement these rules. At the same time, the State Council categorically ordered the heads of these bodies not to concentrate armed forces and military equipment in towns and settlements, including the Abkhazian territory.

Thus, contrary to the assertion of separatist leaders and their supporters, the Government of Georgia planned no military action on the territory of Abkhazia. This means that, unlike Abkhazia's conduct, Georgia's cannot be described as "aggression and occupation", as this would belie the facts.

On the contrary, the leadership of the Georgian Defence Ministry was ordered to co-ordinate plans, with the leadership of the Autonomous Republic, for the movement and activities of the armed forces. Later it turned out that the directive of the Georgian Head of State, Eduard Shevardnadze, was not fulfilled and this fact was used to provoke the Abkhazian population.

On 14 August 1992, separatists opened fire on the Georgian armed forces moving in Abkhazian territory. Policemen were killed and wounded. Amongst the evidence at the disposal of the investigation are video materials, which prove the facts. This was the first act in the implementation of the plan aimed at the genocide and ethnic cleansing of Georgians and other ethnic groups living in Abkhazia.

Georgians were expelled from their homes purposefully. Those who survived were forced to write testimonies, which said they were leaving their homes, land and property to the Abkhazians voluntarily. Documents in the possession of the investigation, as well as documents of international commissions prove this.

It has turned out that the policy of genocide in Abkhazia was carried out systematically - from 14 August to 2 October 1992 in Gudauta District, from 2 October 1992 to 15 September 1993 in Gagra and since 16 September 1993 in Sukhumi, Ochamchire and Gali districts and the town of Tkvarcheli.

The deliberate genocide of the Georgian population was first manifest in the mass killing of intellectuals, physicians, teachers, journalists, writers and artists.

On 27 September 1993, the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Autonomous Republic of Abkhazia, later recognized as a National Hero of Georgia, Zhiuli Shartava, was tortured and killed in Sukhumi along with other members of the Government including the Mayor of Sukhumi, G. Gabeskiria, Chief of Police Rapava, the Deputy Head of Gagra administration, Mikheil Jincharadze, and others. More than a hundred artists, including women, were also killed. The head of Gumista House of Culture, 37-year-old Nato Milorava, actors Vasil Chkheidze, Teimuraz Zhvania, Guram Gelovani, the director of the Sukhumi park, Yuri Davitaya and others were also tortured and killed.

Separatists killed more than thirty medical workers, most of them women. Physicians Zelimkhan Danelia, Gia Sichinava, Razmik Ispekchyan, Giorgi Barkalaya, Shalva Gvazava and others were killed at work. The head of the Gulripshi Tuberculosis Centre, Shota Jgumadze, was killed in the yard of the hospital in the presence of his relatives. The same thing happened to a physician of the Republican Hospital, Petre Sichinava.

Separatists and their foreign supporters killed more than 200 teachers, including more than 60 women: Venera Sigua, Iulia Gogokhia-Sichinava, Tsatsa Dzandzava, Eka Pilpani, Lia Akubardia, Dzabuli Pachulia, Gulnara Chaladze and others.

Head of the Gulripshi collective farm, Mamuli Apkhazava, the employee of the Ministry of Finance, Tristan Gabelia, the Head of the Building Department, Leonti Jalagonia, the Chief Assistant of the Prosecutor of Abkhazia, Vladimir Kalichava, investigator Emzar Lashkhia, Head of the chair at the Subtropical Institute, Yuri Narakidze, a senior lecturer of the same Institute, Karlo Chkhenkeli, the Chief Architect of Sukhumi, Tamaz Tavadze and others were killed because they were Georgians.

Separatists and their supporters planned either to exterminate the Georgian ethnic group in Abkhazia, or evict it.

On the very first days of the conflict, five thousand Georgians were expelled from Eshera, Lykhny, Aradu and Akhalsopeli. Others were dealt with cruelly. Seventeen people were killed in Akhalsopeli. The heart of 70-year-old Indiko Grdzelidze was publicly cut out. Elguja Maisuradze was killed with an axe in public and 65-year old Nikoloz Kvabzinadze was tied to a tractor, dragged along the ground and killed.

After the fall of Gagra separatists began the mass plundering and killing of the peaceful population. Eyewitnesses say that about fifty Georgians were tortured and then hanged on electric pylons in Leselidze. The population of Gagra, Salkhino, Gantiadi, Pitsunda, Lidzava, Alakhadzy and Bzyp was dealt with especially cruelly. Separatists killed everyone - old people, women, helpless children. Many people were shot and killed publicly, among them Alexander Kometiani, Jemal Kuchukhidze, Nodar Charkviani, Sasha Bobokhidze, Shalva Gvazava and others.

Omar Bzhalava was killed in the presence of his family. Boris Kutsia was killed in the presence of his wife. Vladimir Benidze was killed in the presence of his daughter; and Gia Glonti was killed in the presence of his father. Sixty-five-year-old teacher Vasil Samkharadze was captured in the street and beheaded publicly. His relatives were not allowed to bury him and dogs and pigs defiled the dead body. Separatists first cut off Giorgi Pipia's ears, then his nose, and only afterwards did they kill him.

The eyewitness Kharashvili gave evidence that whilst torturing Georgians and plundering and destroying their property, separatists declared publicly and loudly that they were going to kill all of the Georgians in Gagra and Leselidze and burn Georgian books, cultural monuments and houses. Anyone who dared to help Georgians had to fear death.

Tina Barkalaya said her cousin, Tsezar Kvelidze, was killed in her presence. They first cut off his nose, then his ears and a leg below the knee before finally killing him. Seventy-year-old Andro Simonishvili was also tortured and killed.

Shota Mgeladze was forced to stand naked in water all night. One of the Chechens present cut his left hand, filled a glass with his blood and invited the victim to drink it. When Mgeladze refused the Chechen apologised cynically and said, "Don't be cross, brother. I would like to drink not only your blood, but the blood of all of the Georgians", and drank it. He also threatened that any Georgians who did not leave Abkhazia would be killed.

Abkhazian and Chechen militiamen broke into the house of the Head of the Health Resorts Department of Gagra, Alexander Baramia. They first raped Baramia's daughter Tsisia and then beheaded her. Baramia's wife was tortured and killed. They finally shot and killed Alexander Baramia himself, as well as Shalva Gvazava and Boris Kutsia, who were visiting him.

Nazi Bagishvili, a resident of Ochamchire, gave the following statement: "Our village was occupied by separatists. Most of the peaceful residents, women and children, were captured. Abkhazian and Chechen militiamen raped 25 helpless girls aged from 12 to 16 in the presence of their relatives and other residents of the village. Group violence was practised on the helpless children throughout the week. Very often the violators cut off the nipples and heads of the girls after raping them. These barbarians of the 20th century made beads out of them".

On 9 August 1993, a party of Georgians was taken to Sochi airport under the threat of death. There they were given documents testifying that their homes no longer belonged to them. 250 families were deported from the village of Bzyp like this. Givi Kiknadze and his daughter Tamuna, residents of Bzyp, were killed because they refused to leave their village. Many other people were also severely punished for the same reason.

We have documents concerning the mass killing of Georgians in the Gagra stadium and other public places after the occupation of the town in October 1992.

We have revealed facts concerning the mass killing of peaceful residents in Gagra, Ochamchire, Sukhumi, Gulripshi and other districts. Konstantine Sichinava has given evidence that after the fall of Gagra, Georgians were taken out of their homes and killed in the streets.

There is further evidence of atrocities. Local resident Tamaz Japaridze said that, together with others, he was made to collect corpses of Georgians in the streets of Gagra on 7 October. Four Kamaz lorries were loaded with the bodies. He said about 250 corpses were buried in a large pit.

Nana Chaladze said that Ardzinba made a television appeal to the Abkhazian population, promising to give them money, as well as homes and land belonging to Georgians, if Abkhazians, Chechens and Cossacks captured Gagra and exterminated the Georgians there. About thirty policemen were killed in Gagra. Peaceful residents were forced to gather in the stadium, where they were shot and killed. Cossacks killed 72 peaceful residents near the village of Dzveli Kindgi. Abkhazians killed 48 people in the village of Ganakheba (Gulripshi District). More than 400 Georgians were killed in Kurchenko Park in Sukhumi.

The witness Galina Arzumanyan told the investigation that she remembered how Abkhazians entered the village of Akhaldaba, mercilessly killing all of the children and teenagers before taking the survivors to the local stadium and killing them there in turn. Almost all of the women and children over the age of six were raped. Separatists put tyres on the heads of some of them and burned them alive. About 400 people were killed in this way, including 60 women.

A resident of Sukhumi, Lily Zoidze, said that a group of Abkhazians, Chechens, Armenians and Cossacks broke into the house of her neighbours, the Pkhakadze family. They killed the entire family, beheaded them, put the heads on poles publicly and burned them.

The investigation has shown that the 17 thousand Georgians who survived the sadistic acts of separatists in Gagra left their homes unconditionally and went elsewhere.

Separatists shelled Sukhumi and Ochamchire for months. Tens of thousands of shells fell on Sukhumi. More than 400 peaceful residents fell victim to them. Air attacks were usually carried out at night, when people slept. Residential districts were especially targeted.

According to the agreement reached on 27 July 1993, the Georgian forces withdrew their artillery and military equipment from Sukhumi and Ochamchire. Seizing this opportunity, separatists treacherously began shelling Sukhumi and Ochamchire on 16 September. Sukhumi airport, where thousands of Georgians, Russians and others were gathered awaiting planes to leave the zone, became a permanent target for attacks.

Separatists shot down several civilian aircraft, causing a great number of deaths. More than 50 women and small children were killed.

49 460 out of the 119 180 residents of Sukhumi were Georgians. Most of them were expelled from the town under pain of death.

The documents pertaining to the investigation make it clear that after the fall of Sukhumi, separatists tortured and killed more than a thousand Georgians, including women, helpless old people and little children.

I would like to mention some of the gravest crimes committed by separatists in Sukhumi. In front of a pub near School #11, drunken Abkhazian and Cossack militiamen boasted, laughing loudly, about how they played football with the severed heads of Georgians.

Two residents of Sukhumi, Roin Shubladze and Guram Kvashilava, were killed in their own flat in the city. The killers then cut off flesh from their arms and legs, scattering pieces of it over the floor. Shubladze's wife dared to ask them why they were doing this and these barbarians of the 20th century answered this was the fate of all of Georgians if they did not leave Abkhazia.

The policy of genocide reached its peak in Gali District, where 97% of the 96 thousand population were Georgians. On 29 September 1993 separatists and their foreign supporters conquered Gali and began to kill the peaceful population en masse.

610 residential buildings out of 710 were destroyed and burned in the village of Okumi. 65 people, including 20 women, were tortured and killed: 90-year-old Venera Antia, 55-year-old Nelly Gergaya, 81-year-old Vera Gunia, 67-year-old Alma Latsuzbaya and 65-year-old Natela Shelia. The young sisters, Nino and Nato Politayevas, were first publicly raped and then killed.

About 1040 houses were destroyed and 128 people, including 20 women, tortured and killed in the town of Gali.

411 houses were destroyed and burned and 70 people, including 17 women, were killed in Achigvara. 429 houses were destroyed and 55 people, including 14 women, were tortured and killed in Gudava.

Similar tragic events took place in Mziuri, Kvemo and Zemo Bargebi, Repi, Shesheleti, Otobaya, Nabakevi and elsewhere. The helpless old women Zhenya Tsurtsumia, Valentina Chargazia, Chuta Chaava, Shura Jologua, Ksenya Gangia, Iamze Kvachakhia, Roza Zantaria, Bella Malasheva, Valya Tarbaya and others were burned alive.

Terror in Gali did not end with the 1993 tragedy. Many times before the notorious events of 28 May 1998, Abkhazian separatists attacked the villages of Gali District - Repi, Gumurishi, Zemo and Kvemo Bargebi, Otobaya, Nabakevi and Lekukhona. They burned and destroyed 3727 houses, 40 secondary schools and 95 other buildings of different kinds. They took away 25 thousand head of cattle and expensive foreign equipment from factories and plants, causing irreparable damage to the economy of the district.

More than 12 hundred peaceful citizens were killed during the above-mentioned period.

It is noteworthy that separatists also attacked villages in the 12-km security zone. The Russian peacekeeping forces did nothing to prevent the barbarous acts committed there. A number of crimes were even committed with their help. As for the representatives of international organisations stationed in the conflict zone, as usual, they merely registered facts.

On 26 May 1998, a limited contingent of the Internal Army and the Police of Georgia were introduced into the districts bordering Gali to save peaceful residents. They managed to evacuate the population peacefully from the battle zone. They did not participate in military operations, though 20 soldiers were killed and 14 injured.

According to the incomplete data at the disposal of the investigation, 5738 Georgians were killed in the territory of Abkhazia because of the policies of ethnic cleansing and genocide carried out by Abkhazian separatists. Among them: 483 people in Gagra; 238 in Sukhumi District; 1148 in Sukhumi; 1232 in Gulripshi District; 851 in Ochamchire District; 1553 in Gali District; 147 in Gudauta District and 20 in the town of Tkvarcheli. More than 70 children and 706 women fell victim to the genocide and ethnic cleansing in Abkhazia. Fifty percent of those killed were elderly people. Six hundred people are still missing.

Documents show that a total of 276 345 peaceful residents were expelled from Abkhazia. Among them are 73 178 from Sukhumi and Sukhumi District, 25 403 from Gagra, 34 587 from Gulripshi District, 85 678 from Gali District, 38 312 from Ochamchire District, 6 719 from Gudauta District and 3 468 from Tkvarcheli.

The existing documentation makes it clear that the war caused material damage of $3.12 billion. Damage of $5.18 billion was caused to the private property of citizens (excluding the housing). Losses to the national product amounted to $2.41 billion in 1993-1998, the total damage amounting to $10.7 billion.

The investigation has already identified more than twenty ringleaders and organisers of this grave crime and more than 800 executioners, all of whom have their hands deep in Georgian blood.

Taking into consideration the realities of the day, the Prosecutor's Office has already taken practical steps towards bringing certain criminals to court. The investigation of the criminal cases of Pachulia, Tsvizhba, Sadzba, Narmania and others has already been concluded. The Supreme Court of Georgia has sentenced them to many years in prison. Warrants for the arrest of 15 more people have also been issued.

Years of investigation and incontrovertible evidence have proved that what the separatists did and are still doing in Abkhazia is not just an ethnic conflict. This is a well-organised conspiracy of Abkhazian separatists and North Caucasian confederates, supported by intelligence services. The plot is aimed at the creation of a fundamentalist Islamic state in the Transcaucasus, specifically in the territory of Abkhazia. To this end it was necessary, first of all, to radically change the geopolitical situation in Abkhazia. The majority of the population of Abkhazia, namely Georgians, would be partly exterminated. Dreadful and cruel methods of physical deterrent, much spoken about in this report, would be used against the survivors, who would be oppressed and unable to resist the aggressors under such conditions of mass terror. These people, living in a state of panic, fearing death, torture and humiliation, would be forced to leave their native homes and abandon the territory of Abkhazia.

Tribes from the North Caucasus would then occupy the lands and houses left by Georgians, populating the entire coastal zone of the Black Sea. This is why thousands of mercenaries (killers and cannibals) from foreign countries, envenomed with separatism, nationalism and extremism were allowed to invade Abkhazia.

It is necessary to take new and decisive steps, Mister President.

The Prosecutor General's Office of Georgia is one of the main authors of more than 200 volumes of the investigation's findings, which contain details of unheard-of crimes committed in Abkhazia against the Georgian population. This office is ready to appear at the Hague International Tribunal immediately, with a mandate from our country to act for the prosecution against the Abkhazian separatists. Keeping strictly to the legislation, the Office can, with a clear conscience, support the grave accusations made against Abkhazian separatists in order to make them answer for the unprecedented evil done both to the population of Georgia and to humanity.

I would like to conclude optimistically this very difficult and sad speech of mine. I am sure justice will prevail and we will return to Abkhazia. For our land, our memories of childhood and adolescence, our burned houses and the neglected graves of our ancestors are calling us.

Annex IV

Statements made by some eyewitnesses of the tragedy

Naira Kalandia, resident of Sukhumi

After the fall of Sukhumi in September 1993, my entire family, together with our neighbours, started on their way to the river Enguri. A gang consisting of Abkhazians, Russians and Chechens caught up with us near the village of Kindgi. The nine days spent with them were like nine days in hell. I saw with my own eyes how people were humiliated and insulted. About twenty young men were shot and killed. Seeing this, I realised that they would kill my only son too, so I implored the Abkhazians, Chechens and others who were with them to kill me instead of my son. However, they said in answer, "You will soon die a natural death. What we have to do is kill this foul creature, so that you are unable to multiply". Then they hit me with a butt and I fainted.

A burst of sub-machine-gun fire brought me to my senses. My seventeen-year-old son was lying flat in front of me. One more burst of fire from the murderer followed, and a mixture of bones and blood was all that was left of my son. I still have a piece of his bone - nose gristle - in my pocket, as a token of remembrance. Then they dragged me by the hair to a well full of water. Seven or eight people, both young and old, were standing near it. The murderers told me to watch these peoples' acrobatic jumps into the well and began dropping them into it alive.

I was a mother whose son had been killed only ten minutes before, but I was nevertheless happy that my son was dead, as now he did not have to face such torture and humiliation.

However, I found that death is not the worst fate in the world. They took off a young man's skull with a bullet and made me thrust my face into his brains. Then they hung me by my feet, opened my mouth and made me swallow his eye, which had been put out with a knife. I wanted to die. I asked some Russian soldiers to kill me, but the Abkhazians did not allow them to do so, as they wanted to torture me further.

I left my son in Kindgi half buried in a grave, or, to be more exact, in a pit dug with my own hands. There was not enough room for him there, so his hands and feet stuck out on the surface. I covered them with branches and managed to put stones on them, so that pigs and dogs would be unable to eat his corpse.

I am just an ordinary woman, but I have come to a conclusion during the last six years. What was done to me was not simply a crime against my family. It is part of something much more dangerous and sinister: the well-organised and large-scale genocide of Georgians.

Khuta Jaiani, resident of Sukhumi

The policy of extermination of Georgians had been planned purposefully for years before Abkhazian separatists began the 1992-1993 war against Georgians.

Long before the war began, I worked as a train conductor. Trains going from Moscow to Sukhumi were often loaded with boxes full of arms in the town of Tula (Russia) and unloaded in the town of Gudauta (Abkhazia).

Not only the Abkhazian leadership, but also common Abkhazians were preparing for the war. One day, by chance, I saw a great number of truncheons in the house of my neighbour, Robik Ladaria. The truncheons had two or three 150-mm long nails in them. They were made to kill people.

I was captured in September 1993, after the Russian-Abkhazian army entered Sukhumi. I was beaten, tortured and then transferred to Bambora concentration camp in Gudauta.

Many Georgian captives were tormented there together with me. Every night I was cruelly beaten and tortured. I was made to shoot and kill Georgians; if I refused I was beaten until I fainted.

I survived thanks to international peacekeeping forces.

I can say aloud that Russia, its authorities and military forces fought against us together with Abkhazians.

Lamara Nachkebia, teacher from Gali

The battle between Georgia and Abkhazian separatists ended six years ago. However, battles are still underway in Gali. No conquerors of any epoch have committed atrocities similar to those witnessed by the ancient land of Samurzakano.

Your souls will be moved when you see the burned houses, which became the graves of their owners, as most of the people were burned alive in their homes. Being burned alive, buried alive, mutilated, raped, castrated and scalped - this is an incomplete list of the torments and humiliation suffered by Georgians from Gali. And all this is happening at a time when the leader of the perpetrators of these crimes, Ardzinba, is trying to speak the language of civilised people. He has even turned out to know human rights. However, his people are victimising peaceful residents solely because they are Georgians.

This is why the invaders have tortured innocent people. They know that the extermination of the educated members of the community will lead them to their goal - the genocide of Georgians. This is why they have killed tens of families of Georgian intellectuals.

Leonti Kvaratskhelia and his son, together with their close relative Dazmir Kakulia, were shot and killed in their own house at midnight. Their bodies were then cut into pieces. The Sigua family, all of whom were teachers known for their goodness and warmth, was also destroyed with unimaginable cruelty. On 11 November 1993, 76-year-old Arsen Sigua was first tortured and then killed in his own house. His 87-year old sister Nino tried to protect him, but she too was killed. Their younger sister Vera Sigua, who had taught and raised many people, was first raped and then killed.

In Gali District, in 1993-1997, Abkhazian militiamen inhumanely tortured and killed the well-known teachers Khuta Pirtskhelava and Vakhtang Emkhvari, Bidzina Gujejiani and Platon Takalandze. The teacher Akaki Shengelia was forced into his house, and there burned alive. The former headmaster of the school at Ganakhleba, Akaki Tsobekhia, was locked up in the library and burned together with the books.

A Police Major from Chuburkhinji Bochia Kolbaya was cruelly tortured. They first cut out his shoulder blade and then shot and killed him.

The Sanaya family in Shesheleti was exterminated with unimaginable brutality. The father saw how six members of his family - two sons and four under-age granddaughters were killed. Later the father himself was also killed.

The most respected intellectuals of Gali; Bidzina Otkhozoria, Zhilin, Emir and Rabo Shonia were also tortured and killed.

The sadists were equally cruel to everyone. Nineteen-year-old Tutu Ketsbaya and 67-year-old Nazo Kilanava-Akishbaya from Gudava were tortured and killed. Seventy-three-year-old David Rukhaya was strangled with wire.

Sixteen-year old Gocha Khasaya and 15-year-old Lasha Tsikolia, 15-year-old Zaza Buava and 16-year-old Khvicha Kalandia were barbarously tortured and killed.

What crime had the 16 and 20-year-old Lezhava brothers committed? The boys were locked up in a trunk and then shot while inside.

I do not think Gocha Cherkezia from Tsarche, who had done nothing wrong, could have imagined the forms of torture he would have to suffer. He was taken away from his home and held captive for two weeks. He was then tied to a tractor together with Kvaratskhelia from the same village. They were dragged along the ground until they lost consciousness, after which they were covered with kerosene and burned to death.

On 20 May 1998, Abkhazian separatists started a large-scale punitive operation against the population of Gali. This was a continuation of the bloody policies of ethnic cleansing and genocide carried out by the Ardzinba regime for the previous five years against the Georgians who remained in the Gali District, or who had returned there on their own.

The martyrs' deaths of more than 70 peaceful residents; tens of people missing; about 40 thousand homeless people who became displaced for the second time and had to flee to the Zugdidi and Tsalenjikha Districts; 24 hundred houses and 18 schools burned. These are the bloody statistics of the second stage of the genocide of Georgians.

Ladies and gentlemen! I am a teacher from Gali, so it is not surprising that I am preoccupied with the problems of the men, women and children from this region. There is a Georgian school in Gali, which has not had a Georgian first grade for five years. Very few Georgian lessons are taught in the so-called Georgian school; Georgian history and geography are not taught at all.

It should be noted that the tragedy in Gali District has caused the resentment of the population towards international organisations. We are well aware that the obligation of the UN observers is to register events and submit the data to the international community. But if these observers do their work honestly, why doesn't the UN assess the crimes of Abkhazian separatists committed against the Georgian population? Why is the UN silent? Why does it make useless and ineffectual statements?

We demand equal consideration of the conflicts in Kosovo and Abkhazia. As has been the case in Kosovo, force should be used in Abkhazia to establish peace. The leader of the Abkhazian separatists should be made to answer, like Milosevic, for the crimes committed against the Georgian population.

I hope that our proposals will be taken into consideration. When these demands are met, the Georgian and Abkhazian peoples will be able to unite and think about their common future.
