22. We reaffirm our commitment to take urgent and concrete action to address the vulnerability of small island developing States, including through the sustained implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy, and we underscore the urgency of finding additional solutions to the major challenges facing small island developing States in a concerted manner so as to support them in sustaining the momentum realized in implementing the Samoa Pathway. With renewed political will and strong leadership, we dedicate ourselves to working in meaningful partnership with all stakeholders at all levels. It is in this context that the present Samoa Pathway presents a basis for action in the agreed priority areas.

Sustained and sustainable, inclusive and equitable economic growth with decent work for all

Development models in small island developing States for the implementation of sustainable development and poverty eradication

23. We recognize that the ability of the small island developing States to sustain high levels of economic growth and job creation has been affected by the ongoing adverse impacts of the global economic crisis, declining foreign direct investment, trade imbalances, increased indebtedness, the lack of adequate transportation, energy and information and communications technology infrastructure networks, limited human and institutional capacity and the inability to integrate effectively into the global economy. The growth prospects of the small island developing States have also been hindered by other factors, including climate change, the impact of natural disasters, the high cost of imported energy and the degradation of coastal and marine ecosystems and sea-level rise.

24. As it is vitally important to support the efforts of small island developing States to build resilient societies and economies, we recognize that, beyond the rich ecosystems of those States, people are their greatest resource. In order to achieve sustained, inclusive and equitable growth with full and productive employment, social protection and the creation of decent work for all, small island developing States, in partnership with the international community, will seek to increase investment in the education and training of their people. Migrants and diaspora communities and organizations also play an important role in enhancing development in their communities of origin. Sound macroeconomic policies and sustainable economic management, fiscal predictability, investment and regulatory certainty, responsible borrowing and lending and debt sustainability are also critical, as is the need to address high rates of unemployment, particularly among youth, women and persons with disabilities.

25. We affirm that there are different approaches, visions, models and tools available to each country, in accordance with its national circumstances and priorities, for achieving sustainable development in its three dimensions, which is our overarching goal. In this regard, we consider the green economy in the context of sustainable development and poverty eradication as one of the important tools available for achieving sustainable development. We call upon the United Nations system, in collaboration with other stakeholders, to strengthen its coordination and support of small island developing States that want to pursue green economy policies.

26. We acknowledge that the implementation of sustainable development depends primarily on national action and leadership. We recognize that the private sector plays an increasingly important role in achieving sustainable economic development, including through public-private partnerships. We recognize that sustainable development will also depend, inter alia, on intergovernmental and international cooperation and the active engagement of both the public and private sectors.

27. Taking into full account their national development priorities and individual country circumstances and legislation, we call for support for the efforts of small island developing States to take the following actions:

(a) Enhancing international cooperation, exchanges and investments in formal and non-formal education and training to create an environment that supports sustainable investments and growth. This includes the development of entrepreneurial and vocational skills, support for transitions from basic to secondary education and from school to work, the building and strengthening of education infrastructure, better health, active citizenship, respect for cultural diversity, non-discrimination and environmental consciousness for all people, including women, youth and persons with disabilities;

(b) Enhancing the enabling environment at the national and regional levels to attract more public and private investment in building and maintaining appropriate infrastructure, including ports, roads, transportation, electricity and power generation and information and communications technology infrastructure, and also enhancing the development impact of the private sector and the financial services industry;

(c) Fostering entrepreneurship and innovation, building capacity and increasing the competitiveness and social entrepreneurship of micro, small and medium-sized enterprises and State-owned enterprises in small island developing States, as well as encouraging inclusive and sustainable industrial development with the participation of all people, including the poor, women, youth and persons with disabilities;

(d) Supporting national, regional and international initiatives that develop and increase the capacity and development impact of the financial services industry in small island developing States;

(e) Creating local decent jobs through private and public projects and encouraging entrepreneurs to start up environmentally sound businesses through adequate and appropriate incentives;

(f) Promoting and fostering an environment conducive to increased public and private sector investment and the creation of decent jobs and livelihoods that contribute to sustainable development, with full respect for international labour standards;

(g) Promoting and enhancing the use of information and communications technologies for, inter alia, education, the creation of employment, in particular youth employment, and economic sustainability purposes in small island developing States;

(h) Promoting and enhancing gender equality and women's equal participation, including in policies and programmes in the public and private sectors in small island developing States;

(i) Setting national regulatory and policy frameworks, as appropriate, that enable business and industry to advance sustainable development initiatives, taking into account the importance of transparency, accountability and corporate social responsibility.

28. Acknowledging the way in which debt servicing limits the fiscal space of highly indebted small island developing States, we support the consideration of traditional and innovative approaches to promote the debt sustainability of highly indebted small island developing States, including their continued eligibility for concessional financing from international financial institutions, as appropriate, and the strengthening of domestic revenue mobilization.

29. We acknowledge the importance of addressing debt sustainability to ensure the smooth transition of those small island developing States that have graduated from least developed country status.

Sustainable tourism

30. Recognizing that sustainable tourism represents an important driver of sustainable economic growth and decent job creation, we strongly support small island developing States in taking the following actions:

(a) Developing and implementing policies that promote responsive, responsible, resilient and sustainable tourism, inclusive of all peoples;

(b) Diversifying sustainable tourism through products and services, including large-scale tourism projects with positive economic, social and environmental impacts and the development of ecotourism, agritourism and cultural tourism;

(c) Promoting policies that allow local communities to gain optimum benefits from tourism while allowing them to determine the extent and nature of their participation;

(d) Designing and implementing participatory measures to enhance employment opportunities, in particular of women, youth and persons with disabilities, including through partnerships and capacity development, while conserving their natural, built and cultural heritage, especially ecosystems and biodiversity;

(e) Leveraging the expertise of, inter alia, the Global Sustainable Tourism Council, the Global Observatories on Sustainable Tourism of the World Tourism Organization, the Global Partnership for Sustainable Tourism and other United Nations bodies, as well as the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns, to provide platforms for the exchange of best practices and direct and focused support to their national efforts;

(f) Establishing, upon request, an island, food and sustainable tourism support initiative based on community participation, which takes into consideration ethical values, livelihoods and human settlements, the landscape, the sea, local culture and local products, in collaboration with the World Tourism Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Human Settlements Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, regional development banks and regional and national agricultural, cultural, environmental and tourism authorities where they exist;

(g) Establishing and maintaining, where necessary, the governance and management structures for sustainable tourism and human settlements that bring together responsibilities and expertise in the areas of tourism, environment, health, disaster risk reduction, culture, land and housing, transportation, security and immigration, planning and development, and enabling a meaningful partnership approach among the public and private sectors and local communities.

Climate change

31. We reaffirm that small island developing States remain a special case for sustainable development in view of their unique and particular vulnerabilities, and we acknowledge that climate change and sea-level rise continue to pose a significant risk to small island developing States and their efforts to achieve sustainable development and, for some, represent the gravest threat to their survival and viability.

32. We also reaffirm that climate change is one of the greatest challenges of our time, and we express profound alarm that emissions of greenhouse gases continue to rise globally. We are deeply concerned that all countries, particularly developing countries, are vulnerable to the adverse impacts of climate change and are already experiencing an increase in such impacts, including persistent drought and extreme weather events, sea-level rise, coastal erosion and ocean acidification, further threatening food security and efforts to eradicate poverty and achieve sustainable development. In this regard, we emphasize that adaptation to climate change represents an immediate and urgent global priority.

33. We acknowledge the leadership role of small island developing States in advocating for ambitious global efforts to address climate change, raising awareness of the need for urgent and ambitious action to address climate change at the global level and making efforts to adapt to the intensifying impacts of climate change and to further develop and implement plans, policies, strategies and legislative frameworks with support where necessary.

34. We stress that the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change is the primary international intergovernmental forum for negotiating the global response to climate change in order to protect the global climate.

35. We recall the objectives, principles and provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, and underscore that the global nature of climate change calls for the widest possible cooperation by all countries and their participation in an effective and appropriate international response, with a view to accelerating the reduction of global greenhouse gas emissions. We recall that the Convention provides that parties should protect the climate system for the benefit of present and future generations of humankind on the basis of equity and in accordance with their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities.

36. We note with grave concern the significant gap between the aggregate effect of mitigation pledges by parties in terms of global annual emissions of greenhouse gases by 2020 and aggregate emission pathways consistent with having a likely chance of holding the increase in global average temperature below 2 degrees Celsius, or 1.5 degrees above pre-industrial levels.

37. We reaffirm the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change on long-term climate finance, noting the importance of climate finance in addressing climate change.

38. We look forward to the full operationalization and initial capitalization of the Green Climate Fund, including the expeditious implementation of its initial resource mobilization process, taking into account that the Fund will play a key role in channelling new, additional, adequate and predictable financial resources to developing countries and will catalyse climate finance, both public and private, at the international and national levels.

39. We urge developed country parties to increase technology, finance and capacity-building support to enable increased mitigation ambition and adaptation actions on the part of developing country parties.

40. We reaffirm the importance of engaging a broad range of stakeholders at the global, regional, subregional, national and local levels, including national, subnational and local governments and the scientific community, private businesses and civil society, and also including youth and persons with disabilities, and also reaffirm that gender equality and the effective participation of women and indigenous peoples are important for effective action on all aspects of climate change.

41. We reaffirm the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to adopt a protocol, another legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the Convention applicable to all parties at its twenty-first session, to be held in Paris in December 2015, and for it to enter into effect and be implemented as from 2020.

42. We note the convening by the Secretary-General of the Climate Summit in New York on 23 September 2014, aimed at mobilizing actions and ambition in relation to climate change.

43. We will work together to implement and operationalize the Warsaw international mechanism for loss and damage associated with climate change impacts through comprehensive, inclusive and strategic approaches to address loss and damage associated with the impacts of climate change in developing countries, including small island developing States, that are particularly vulnerable to the adverse effects of climate change.

44. We call for support for the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To build resilience to the impacts of climate change and to improve their adaptive capacity through the design and implementation of climate change adaptation measures appropriate to their respective vulnerabilities and economic, environmental and social situations;

(b) To improve the baseline monitoring of island systems and the downscaling of climate model projections to enable better projections of the future impacts on small islands;

(c) To raise awareness and communicate climate change risks, including through public dialogue with local communities, to increase human and environmental resilience to the longer-term impacts of climate change;

(d) To address remaining gaps in capacity for gaining access to and managing climate finance.

45. We recognize that the phasing out of ozone-depleting substances is resulting in a rapid increase in the use and the release into the environment of hydrofluorocarbons with a high potential for global warming. We support the gradual phasing down of the consumption and production of hydrofluorocarbons.

46. We recognize the importance of scaling up support for activities to reduce emissions from deforestation and forest degradation in the context of the REDD-plus mechanism in small island developing States, including the implementation of the Warsaw Framework for REDD-plus.

Sustainable energy

47. We recognize that dependence on imported fossil fuels has been a major source of economic vulnerability and a key challenge for small island developing States for many decades and that sustainable energy, including enhanced accessibility to modern energy services, energy efficiency and use of economically viable and environmentally sound technology, plays a critical role in enabling the sustainable development of small island developing States.

48. We highlight the efforts of small island developing States concerning sustainable energy, including through the Barbados Declaration on Achieving Sustainable Energy for All in Small Island Developing States, aimed at promoting transformational and innovative activities in such areas as access to affordable modern energy services, renewable energy, energy-efficient technologies and low carbon development, in the context of sustainable development, including, on a voluntary basis, the commitments by many small island developing States to undertake the actions contained in annex I to the Declaration. The Sustainable Energy for All initiative of the Secretary-General, which focuses on access to energy, energy efficiency and renewable energy, complemented by international commitments, provides a useful framework.

49. We urge the international community, including regional and international development banks, bilateral donors, the United Nations system, the International Renewable Energy Agency and other relevant stakeholders to continue to provide adequate support, including in the areas of capacity-building and technology transfer, on mutually agreed terms, for the development and implementation of national, regional and interregional energy policies, plans and strategies to address the special vulnerabilities of small island developing States. We welcome the Global Renewable Energy Islands Network of the International Renewable Energy Agency, which helps small island developing States by pooling knowledge and sharing best practices.

50. We strongly support actions:

(a) To develop a strategy and targeted measures to promote energy efficiency and foster sustainable energy systems based on all energy sources, in particular renewable energy sources, in small island developing States, such as wind, sustainable biomass, solar, hydroelectric, biofuel and geothermal energy;

(b) To facilitate access to existing financing mechanisms to increase capital flows for the implementation of sustainable energy projects in small island developing States on renewable energy and energy efficiency;

(c) To support investment in initiatives by and for small island developing States, in particular the "SIDS DOCK" indicative project pipeline of renewable energy and energy efficiency and conservation projects, as well as in the areas of capacity-building and human resources development and public education and awareness;

(d) To promote international collaboration to ensure the access of small island developing States to energy by, inter alia, strengthening their integration with regional and international energy markets and increasing the use of locally available sources of energy in the energy mix, joint infrastructure development projects and investment in production and storage capacities, in accordance with national legislation;

(e) To fulfil their bold and ambitious renewable energy and energy efficiency targets in small island developing States for the next decade, taking into account national circumstances, the diversification of energy systems and the provision of funds and technology on mutually agreed terms;

(f) To enhance international cooperation and cooperation among small island developing States for research and technological development and for the implementation of appropriate renewable energy and energy-efficient and environmentally sound technologies for small island developing States, including cleaner fossil fuel technology and smart grid technology, through the provision of, inter alia, financing from a variety of sources, the exchange of best practices and access to efficient technologies on mutually agreed terms;

(g) To access existing mechanisms, or, in regions with no existing mechanism, to encourage the establishment of user-friendly, accurate and comprehensive regional data repositories as online databases on energy, and to conduct technical studies and gather information on grid stability and management, including maximizing the integration of renewable energy and innovative storage mechanisms;

(h) To work on an integrated approach to establishing and strengthening innovative energy road maps in small island developing States, with detailed resource planning, which takes into account social, environmental and economic considerations, as well as access to energy for the poor and people in remote areas.

Disaster risk reduction

51. We recognize that small island developing States continue to grapple with the effects of disasters, some of which have increased in intensity and some of which have been exacerbated by climate change, which impede their progress towards sustainable development. We also recognize that disasters can disproportionately affect small island developing States and that there is a critical need to build resilience, strengthen monitoring and prevention, reduce vulnerability, raise awareness and increase preparedness to respond to and recover from disasters.

52. In consideration of the special case of small island developing States and their unique and particular vulnerabilities, we are committed to supporting their efforts:

(a) To gain access to technical assistance and financing for early warning systems, disaster risk reduction and post-disaster response and recovery, risk assessment and data, land use and planning, observation equipment, disaster preparedness and recovery education programmes, including under the Global Framework for Climate Services, and disaster risk management;

(b) To promote cooperation and investment in disaster risk management in the public and private sectors;

(c) To strengthen and support contingency planning and provisions for disaster preparedness and response, emergency relief and population evacuation, in particular for people in vulnerable situations, women and girls, displaced persons, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

(d) To implement the Hyogo Framework for Action and work for an ambitious renewed international framework for post-2015 disaster risk reduction that builds on previous achievements, prioritizes prevention and mitigation and incorporates implementation frameworks to address implementation gaps if and when they exist;

(e) To mainstream policies and programmes related to disaster risk reduction, climate change adaptation and development, as appropriate;

(f) To harmonize national and regional reporting systems, where applicable, to increase synergies and coherence;

(g) To establish and strengthen risk insurance facilities at the national and regional levels and place disaster risk management and building resilience at the centre of policies and strategies, where applicable;

(h) To increase participation in international and regional disaster risk reduction initiatives.

Oceans and seas

53. We acknowledge that oceans and seas, along with coastal areas, form an essential component of the Earth's ecosystem and are intrinsically linked to sustainable development, including that of small island developing States. Healthy, productive and resilient oceans and coasts are critical for, inter alia, poverty eradication, access to sufficient, safe and nutritious food, livelihoods, economic development and essential ecosystem services, including carbon sequestration, and represent an important element of identity and culture for the people of small island developing States. Sustainable fisheries and aquaculture, coastal tourism, the possible use of seabed resources and potential sources of renewable energy are among the main building blocks of a sustainable ocean-based economy in small island developing States.

54. Recognizing that small island developing States have large maritime areas and have shown notable leadership in the conservation and sustainable use of those areas and their resources, we support their efforts to develop and implement strategies for the conservation and sustainable use of those areas and resources. We also support their efforts to conserve their valuable underwater cultural heritage.

55. We reaffirm that international law, as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, provides the legal framework for the conservation and sustainable use of oceans and their resources.

56. Recognizing the concern that potential oil leaks from sunken State vessels have environmental implications for the marine and coastal ecosystems of small island developing States, and taking into account the sensitivities surrounding vessels that are marine graves, we note that small island developing States and relevant vessel owners should continue to address the issue bilaterally on a case-by-case basis.

57. We recognize that an integrated ecosystem approach to ocean-related activities is needed to optimize opportunities. It should be based on the best available science, give due regard to conservation efforts and precautionary approaches and ensure coherence and balance among the three dimensions of sustainable development.

58. With this in mind, we strongly support action:

(a) To promote and support national, subregional and regional efforts to assess, conserve, protect, manage and sustainably use the oceans, seas and their resources by supporting research and the implementation of strategies on coastal zone management and ecosystem-based management, including for fisheries management, and enhancing national legal and institutional frameworks for the exploration and sustainable use of living and non-living resources;

(b) To engage in national and regional efforts to sustainably develop the ocean resources of small island developing States and generate increasing returns for their peoples;

(c) To implement fully and effectively the regional seas programmes in which small island developing States participate;

(d) To address marine pollution by developing effective partnerships, including through the development and implementation of relevant arrangements, such as the United Nations Environment Programme Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities, and, as appropriate, instruments on marine debris and on nutrient, wastewater and other marine pollution, and through the sharing and implementation of best practices;

(e) To undertake urgent action to protect coral reefs and other vulnerable marine ecosystems through the development and implementation of comprehensive and integrated approaches for the management and the enhancement of their resilience to withstand pressures, including from ocean acidification and invasive species, and by drawing on measures such as those identified in the Framework for Action 2013 of the International Coral Reef Initiative;

(f) To undertake marine scientific research and develop the associated technological capacity of small island developing States, including through the establishment of dedicated regional oceanographic centres and the provision of technical assistance, for the delimitation of their maritime areas and the preparation of submissions to the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf;

(g) To enhance and implement the monitoring, control and surveillance of fishing vessels so as to effectively prevent, deter and eliminate illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing, including through institutional capacity-building at the appropriate levels;

(h) To support the sustainable development of small-scale fisheries, improved mechanisms for resource assessment and management and enhanced facilities for fisheries workers, as well as initiatives that add value to outputs from small-scale fisheries, and to enhance access to markets for the products of sustainable small-scale fisheries of small island developing States;

(i) To strengthen disciplines on subsidies in the fisheries sector, including through the prohibition of certain forms of subsidies that contribute to overcapacity and overfishing, in accordance with the Doha Ministerial Declaration adopted by the World Trade Organization in 2001 and the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration adopted by the World Trade Organization in 2005;

(j) For States that have not done so, to consider becoming parties to the 2001 United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization Convention on the Protection of the Underwater Cultural Heritage;

(k) To promote the conservation, sustainable use and management of straddling and highly migratory fish stocks, including through measures that benefit small island developing States that are adopted by relevant regional fisheries management organizations and arrangements;

(l) To enhance the capacity of small island developing States to sustainably use their fisheries resources and develop fisheries-related industries, enabling them to maximize benefits from their fisheries resources and ensure that the burden of conservation and management of ocean resources is not disproportionately transferred to small island developing States;

(m) To urge the cooperation of the international community in implementing shared responsibilities under regional fisheries management organizations and arrangements to enable small island developing States to benefit from and sustainably manage straddling and highly migratory fish stocks covered by those organizations and arrangements;

(n) To enhance local, national, regional and global cooperation to address the causes of ocean acidification and to further study and minimize its impacts, including through information-sharing, regional workshops, the integration of scientists from small island developing States into international research teams, steps to make marine ecosystems more resilient to the impacts of ocean acidification and the possible development of a strategy for all small island developing States on ocean acidification;

(o) To conserve by 2020 at least 10 per cent of coastal and marine areas in small island developing States, especially areas of particular importance for biodiversity and for ecosystem services, through effectively and equitably managed, ecologically representative and well-connected systems of protected areas and other effective area-based conservation measures in order to reduce the rate of biodiversity loss in the marine environment;

(p) To address concerns about the long-term effects of munitions dumped at sea, including their potential impact on human health and safety and on the marine environment and resources.

Food security and nutrition

59. We recognize that small island developing States, primarily net food-importing countries, are exceptionally vulnerable to the fluctuating availability and excessive price volatility of food imports. It is therefore important to support the right of everyone to have access to safe, sufficient and nutritious food, the eradication of hunger and the provision of livelihoods while conserving, protecting and ensuring the sustainable use of land, soil, forests, water, plants and animals, biodiversity and ecosystems. We stress the crucial role of healthy marine ecosystems, sustainable agriculture, sustainable fisheries and sustainable aquaculture for enhancing food security and access to adequate, safe and nutritious food and in providing for the livelihoods of the people of the small island developing States.

60. We also recognize the danger caused by an unhealthy diet and the need to promote healthy food production and consumption.

61. We recognize the call, in the outcome of the interregional preparatory meeting for the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, adopted in Bridgetown on 28 August 2013, to facilitate a meeting on food and nutrition security in small island developing States in order to develop an action programme to address food and nutrition challenges facing those States, and we invite the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to facilitate this biennial forum.

62. We note the convening of the Second International Conference on Nutrition in Rome in November 2014, organized by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization, which has important implications for small island developing States, and look forward to its outcome.

63. In this regard, we are committed to working together to support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To promote the further use of sustainable practices relating to agriculture, crops, livestock, forestry, fisheries and aquaculture to improve food and nutrition security while ensuring the sustainable management of the required water resources;

(b) To promote open and efficient international and domestic markets to support economic development and optimize food security and nutrition;

(c) To enhance international cooperation to maintain access to global food markets, particularly during periods of higher volatility in commodity markets;

(d) To increase rural income and jobs, with a focus on the empowerment of smallholders and small-scale food producers, especially women;

(e) To end malnutrition in all its forms, including by securing year-round access to sufficient, safe, affordable, diverse and nutritious food;

(f) To enhance the resilience of agriculture and fisheries to the adverse impacts of climate change, ocean acidification and natural disasters;

(g) To maintain natural ecological processes that support sustainable food production systems through international technical cooperation.

Water and sanitation

64. We recognize that small island developing States face numerous challenges with respect to freshwater resources, including pollution, the overexploitation of surface, ground and coastal waters, saline intrusion, drought and water scarcity, soil erosion, water and wastewater treatment and the lack of access to sanitation and hygiene. Furthermore, changes in rainfall patterns related to climate change have regionally varying and potentially significant impacts on water supply.

65. In this regard, we are committed to supporting the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To develop institutional and human capacities for the effective, inclusive and sustainable implementation of the integrated management of water resources and related ecosystems, including supporting women's engagement in water management systems;

(b) To provide and operate appropriate facilities and infrastructure for safe drinking water, sanitation, hygiene and waste management systems, including the exploration of desalination technology where economically and environmentally feasible;

(c) To facilitate the expansion of wastewater treatment, recycling and reuse in the context of the sustainable and efficient use of water resources;

(d) To improve water-use efficiency and work towards eliminating over-extraction, especially of groundwater, and to mitigate the effects of saltwater intrusion.

Sustainable transportation

66. We recognize that transportation and mobility are central to the sustainable development of small island developing States. Sustainable transportation can enhance economic growth, promote trade opportunities and improve accessibility. Sustainable, reliable and safe transportation achieves better integration of the economy while respecting the environment. We also recognize the importance of the efficient movement of people and goods in fostering full engagement in local, regional and global markets and the potential for sustainable transportation to improve social equity, health, the resilience of cities, urban-rural linkages and the productivity of rural areas of small island developing States.

67. In this regard, we are committed to continuing and enhancing support for the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To gain access to environmentally sound, safe, affordable and well-maintained transportation;

(b) To advance the safety of land, sea and air transportation;

(c) To develop viable national, regional and international transportation arrangements, including improved air, land and sea transport policies that take a life-cycle approach to the development and management of transport infrastructure;

(d) To increase energy efficiency in the transport sector.

Sustainable consumption and production

68. As promoting sustainable patterns of consumption and production is an overarching objective of and essential requirement for sustainable development, we recall the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns and its vision, and we recognize that all countries should promote sustainable consumption and production patterns, with developed countries taking the lead and all countries benefiting from the process. This should be done in accordance with national objectives, needs and priorities, taking fully into account the specific needs and conditions of developing countries with the aim of minimizing the possible adverse impacts on their development, and in a manner that protects the poor and affected communities.

69. In this regard, we call for support for the efforts of small island developing States to develop and implement programmes under the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns to advance sustainable consumption and production, with an emphasis on micro, small and medium-sized enterprises, sustainable tourism, waste management, food and nutrition, lifestyles, education for sustainable development and linkages in the supply chain to promote rural development.

Management of chemicals and waste, including hazardous waste

70. We recognize that the sound management of chemicals throughout their life cycle and of waste is crucial for the protection of human health and the environment. For small island developing States, as for all countries, environmentally sound waste management is also crucial for human health and environmental protection, and the small land area and remoteness of many small island developing States pose particular challenges for the sound disposal of waste.

71. In this regard, we acknowledge the following actions to improve the management of chemicals and waste:

(a) Enhancing technical cooperation programmes, including those under the Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal, the Strategic Approach to International Chemicals Management of the United Nations Environment Programme, the secretariat of the Pacific Regional Environment Programme, the London Convention and Protocol and the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, to strengthen national, regional and international mechanisms for the management of waste, including chemical and hazardous waste, ship- and aircraft-generated waste and marine plastic litter, and further strengthening and expanding geographic coverage of oil spill contingency plans;

(b) For States that have not done so, considering becoming parties to and ensuring an enabling environment for the implementation, including with technical and other appropriate support, of the multilateral environmental agreements on chemicals and waste and implementing, as appropriate, the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals and the Strategic Approach to International Chemicals Management;

(c) Facilitating improved access to existing capacity-building programmes, such as those under the International Health Regulations of the World Health Organization, which call for strengthened management of specific risks, including control programmes for chemical and other toxic and environmental events;

(d) Implementing reduction, reuse, recycling, recovery and return approaches in accordance with national capacities and priorities, inter alia, through capacity-building and environmentally appropriate technologies.

Health and non-communicable diseases

72. We recognize that health is a precondition for and an outcome and indicator of all three dimensions of sustainable development. Sustainable development can be achieved only in the absence of a high prevalence of debilitating communicable and non-communicable diseases, including emerging and re-emerging diseases, and when populations can reach a state of physical, mental and social well-being.

73. We recognize that the burden and threat of communicable and non-communicable diseases remain serious global concerns and constitute one of the major challenges for small island developing States in the twenty-first century. While prevention, treatment, care and education are critical, we call upon the international community to support the national actions of small island developing States in addressing communicable and non-communicable diseases.

74. We take note of the outcome document of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the comprehensive review and assessment of the progress achieved in the prevention and control of non-communicable diseases.

75. In this regard, we reaffirm our commitment to support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To develop and implement comprehensive, whole-government multisectoral policies and strategies for the prevention and management of diseases, including through the strengthening of health systems, the promotion of effective universal health coverage implementation, the distribution of medical and drug supplies, education and public awareness and incentivizing people to lead healthier lives through a healthy diet, good nutrition, sports and education;

(b) To develop specific national programmes and policies geared towards the strengthening of health systems for the achievement of universal coverage of health services and the distribution of medical and drug supplies, with the assistance of the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Population Fund, key development partners and other stakeholders, at the invitation of small island developing States;

(c) To take urgent steps to establish, for the period from 2015 to 2025, 10-year targets and strategies to reverse the spread and severity of non-communicable diseases;

(d) To implement well-planned and value-added interventions that strengthen health promotion, promote primary health care and develop accountability mechanisms for monitoring non-communicable diseases;

(e) To enable cooperation among small island developing States on diseases by using existing international and regional forums to convene joint biennial meetings of ministers of health and other relevant sectors to respond in particular to non-communicable diseases;

(f) To achieve universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support and to eliminate mother-to-child transmission of HIV, as well as to renew and strengthen the fight against malaria, tuberculosis and neglected emerging and re-emerging tropical diseases, including chikungunya and dengue;

(g) To reduce maternal, newborn and child mortality and improve the health of mothers, infants and children.

Gender equality and women's empowerment

76. We recognize that gender equality and women's empowerment and the full realization of human rights for women and girls have a transformative and multiplier effect on sustainable development and are a driver of economic growth in small island developing States. Women can be powerful agents of change.

77. In this regard, we support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To eliminate all forms of discrimination against women and girls;

(b) To integrate a gender perspective in priority areas for sustainable development;

(c) To strengthen women's economic empowerment and ensure equal access to full and productive employment and decent work;

(d) To end all forms of violence against women and girls;

(e) To continue to take measures to ensure women's full, equal and effective participation in all fields and leadership at all levels of decision-making in the public and private sectors through such policies and actions as temporary special measures, as appropriate, and by setting and working to achieve concrete goals, targets and benchmarks;

(f) To guarantee equal access to good-quality education and health care;

(g) To ensure in small island developing States the promotion and protection of the human rights of all women and their sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of their review conferences;

(h) To tackle the structural and socioeconomic inequalities and multiple intersecting forms of discrimination that affect women and girls, including those with disabilities, that hinder progress and development;

(i) To give women equal rights with men to economic resources, including access to, ownership of and control over land and other forms of property, credit, inheritance, natural resources and appropriate new technologies.

Social development

78. We recognize that social development, as one of the three dimensions of sustainable development, is crucial to ensuring development progress by small island developing States both now and in the future. We therefore support efforts to enhance social protection and inclusion, to improve well-being and to guarantee opportunities for the most vulnerable and disadvantaged.

79. We support small island developing States in their commitment to an approach to development that is focused on poverty eradication, which should ensure that people, particularly those living in poverty, have equal access to education, health, food, water and sanitation and other public and social services and access to productive resources, including credit, land, training, knowledge, information and know-how. That approach enables citizens and local communities to participate in decision-making on social development policies and programmes.

Culture and sport

80. We recognize that small island developing States possess a wealth of culture, which is a driver and an enabler for sustainable development. In particular, indigenous and traditional knowledge and cultural expression, which underscores the deep connections among people, culture, knowledge and the natural environment, can meaningfully advance sustainable development and social cohesion.

81. In this regard, we strongly support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To promote cultural diversity, intercultural dialogue and international cooperation in the cultural field in line with applicable international conventions, in particular those of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

(b) To leverage and build on the joint work of the World Intellectual Property Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

(c) To develop and strengthen national and regional cultural activities and infrastructures, including through the network of World Heritage sites, which reinforce local capacities, promote awareness in small island developing States, enhance tangible and intangible cultural heritage, including local and indigenous knowledge, and involve local people for the benefit of present and future generations;

(d) To develop cultural and creative industries, including tourism, that capitalize on their rich heritage and have a role to play in sustainable and inclusive growth;

(e) To develop domestic mechanisms to conserve, promote, protect and preserve their natural, tangible and intangible cultural heritage practices and traditional knowledge.

82. Recognizing the strong capacity of small island developing States in sport, we support the use of sport as a vehicle to foster development, social inclusion and peace, strengthen education, promote health and build life skills, particularly among youth.

Promoting peaceful societies and safe communities

83. We recognize the importance of supporting small island developing States in their ongoing efforts to ensure peaceful societies and safe communities, including through building responsive and accountable institutions and ensuring access to justice and respect for all human rights, taking into account their national priorities and legislations.

84. We recognize that the sustainable development of small island developing States can be negatively affected by crime and violence, including conflict, gang and youth violence, piracy, trafficking in persons, cybercrime, drug trafficking and transnational organized crime. In particular, the lack of sustainable livelihoods and opportunities for further education and the breaking down of community support structures can lead to increasing numbers of young men and women becoming involved in violence and crime.

85. We support the efforts of small island developing States to combat trafficking in persons, cybercrime, drug trafficking, transnational organized crime and international piracy by promoting the accession, ratification and implementation of applicable conventions, enacting and using legislation that prohibits trafficking, promoting strong institutions and improving protection mechanisms to ensure adequate care for victims of sex trafficking and forced labour in accordance with relevant national and international agreements and treaties.

86. We support the development of action plans in small island developing States to eliminate violence against women and girls, who are often targets of gender-based violence and are disproportionately affected by crime, violence and conflict, and to ensure that they are centrally involved in all relevant processes.

Education

87. We reaffirm that full and equal access to quality education at all levels is an essential condition for achieving sustainable development and the importance of local, national, regional and international efforts in this regard.

88. We are committed, in this regard, to strongly supporting the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To provide high-quality education and training for youth and girls with a focus on the most vulnerable, in particular persons with disabilities, including in creative, cultural and environment-related fields, so that all people have the necessary skills and can take advantage of employment opportunities to lead productive lives;

(b) To ensure that education contributes to further building peace and promoting social inclusion;

(c) To increase their investment in education, training and skills development for all, including vocational training, and to improve their access to formal and non-formal education, including to gain entrepreneurial skills, through both formal and non-formal means, such as the use of distance teaching and the development of training approaches appropriate for small island developing States.

Biodiversity

89. We agree to promote international cooperation and partnerships, as appropriate, and information exchange, and in this context we welcome the United Nations Decade on Biodiversity, 2011–2020, for the purpose of encouraging the active involvement of all stakeholders in the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity, as well as their access to and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising from the utilization of genetic resources, with the vision of living in harmony with nature.

90. We recognize that, overall, small island developing States have extraordinary marine and terrestrial biodiversity that in many cases is fundamental to their livelihoods and identity. Noting that this valuable biodiversity and the ecosystem services it provides are at grave risk, we strongly support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To conserve biological diversity, the sustainable use of its components and the fair and equitable sharing of the benefits arising out of the utilization of genetic resources;

(b) To export organic, natural, sustainably produced and locally grown products;

(c) To access financial and technical resources for the conservation and sustainable management of biodiversity.

91. We invite parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity to consider ratifying and implementing the Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from Their Utilization to the Convention on Biological Diversity, while acknowledging that having access to and sharing the benefits of genetic resources contribute to the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, poverty eradication and sustainable development.

Desertification, land degradation and drought

92. We recognize that addressing desertification, land degradation and drought challenges will be critical for the achievement by small island developing States of food security and nutrition, their adaptation to climate change, the protection of their biodiversity and the development of resilience to natural disasters. We also strongly support the efforts of small island developing States in designing and implementing preparedness and resilience policies relating to desertification, land degradation and drought as a matter of priority and in catalysing financial resources from a range of public and private sources, as well as in promoting the sustainability of their limited soil resources.

93. We acknowledge the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa entitled "Follow-up to the outcomes of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20)", in which the Conference of the Parties established an intergovernmental working group to, inter alia, establish a science-based definition of land degradation neutrality in arid, semi-arid and dry sub-humid areas.

Forests

94. Recognizing that forests are vital to livelihoods and ecosystems, we strongly support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To implement the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests;

(b) To slow, halt and reverse deforestation and forest degradation, including by promoting trade in legally and sustainably harvested forest products;

(c) To achieve appropriate and effective reforestation, restoration and afforestation;

(d) To address obstacles and pursue opportunities to mobilize financing from all sources to support national sustainable forest management policies and improve the state of biological diversity by conserving and safeguarding ecosystems, species and genetic diversity;

(e) To participate in the review of the international arrangement on forests under the United Nations Forum on Forests in order to explore the full range of options on the future of the arrangement;

(f) To strengthen their legal, institutional and human capacity for sustainable forest management on the basis of a holistic and integrated approach to the sustainable use of forest resources.

Invasive alien species

95. Noting that invasive alien species pose a threat to sustainable development and undermine the efforts of small island developing States to protect biodiversity and livelihoods, preserve and maintain ocean resources and ecosystem resiliency, enhance food security and adapt to climate change, we call for support for the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To enhance multisectoral collaboration at the national, regional and international levels, including through expanded support to existing structures, to effectively address invasive alien species;

(b) To improve efforts to eradicate and control invasive alien species, including through the provision of support for research on and the development of new technologies by expanding collaboration and supporting existing regional and international structures;

(c) To develop and strengthen their capacity to address invasive alien species issues, including prevention, as well as increasing public awareness in small island developing States about this issue.

Means of implementation, including partnerships

96. While acknowledging the primary responsibility of small island developing States for their own sustainable development, we recognize that the persistent development challenges of the small island developing States require enhanced global partnership for development, adequate provision and mobilization of all means of implementation and continued international support to achieve internationally agreed goals.

Partnerships

97. We call for an increase in all forms of partnership with and for small island developing States.

98. We recognize that, given the vulnerabilities and the need to build the resilience of small island developing States, and keeping in mind the theme of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, there is an urgent need to strengthen international cooperation and ensure genuine and durable partnerships at the national, regional and international levels to address issues related to their sustainable development priorities and needs.

99. We also call for enhanced international cooperation, including North-South, South-South and triangular cooperation, and especially cooperation among small island developing States. We reaffirm that North-South cooperation remains the core type of international cooperation and that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation. We recognize that genuine and durable partnerships will play an important role in advancing sustainable development by harnessing the full potential of engagement between governments at all levels, businesses, civil society and a wide range of other stakeholders. We further recognize that partnerships are effective instruments for mobilizing human and financial resources, expertise, technology and knowledge and can be powerful drivers for change, innovation and welfare.

100. We reaffirm that small island developing States are equal partners and that empowered, genuine and durable partnerships are based on mutual collaboration and ownership, trust, alignment, harmonization, respect, results orientation, accountability and transparency and that political will is required to undertake and implement long-term, predictable commitments. Partnerships in all their forms, regardless of size and economic value, should be utilized, enhanced and strengthened to ensure the meaningful engagement of various actors (including local authorities, civil society and non-governmental organizations, foundations, the private sector and international financial institutions) and should work to achieve the small island developing States' vision of self-reliance and to cooperate in the implementation of national policies that help to fulfil the commitments made in the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy, the Samoa Pathway, the Millennium Development Goals and other international declarations and instruments.

101. In this regard, we request the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to present recommendations, including through the use of existing intergovernmental mechanisms, for a partnership framework to monitor and ensure the full implementation of pledges and commitments through partnerships for small island developing States. The framework should ensure that partnerships focus on the priorities of small island developing States, identify new opportunities to advance their sustainable development of and ensure the full implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway. The recommendations should be presented to the General Assembly for consideration and action at its sixty-ninth session.

Financing

102. We recognize that financing from all sources, domestic and international, public and private, the development and transfer of reliable, affordable, modern technology on mutually agreed terms, capacity-building assistance and enabling institutional and policy environments at all levels are critically important means of advancing sustainable development in small island developing States. As those States have unique and particular vulnerabilities that require dedicated attention, they will continue to make use of a wide range of available financing mechanisms to implement the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway.

103. We recognize that international financing plays an important role in increasing the capacity of small island developing States to mitigate and effectively respond to multiple crises by increasing the impact of existing funds and mobilizing, catalysing and directly providing financial resources from a variety of public and private sources, including international financial institutions, to support the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway.

104. We urge all countries to fulfil their commitments to small island developing States, including through the provision of financial resources, to support the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway. In this regard, the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments to developing countries, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015, as well as the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to least developed countries, is crucial.

105. We welcome increasing efforts to improve the quality of official development assistance and to increase its development impact. We also recognize the need to improve development effectiveness, increase programme-based approaches, use country systems for activities managed by the public sector, reduce transaction costs and improve mutual accountability and transparency, and in this regard we call upon all donors to untie aid to the maximum extent. Furthermore, we will make development more effective and predictable by providing developing countries with regular and timely indicative information on planned support over the medium term. We recognize the importance of the efforts of developing countries to strengthen leadership regarding their own development, national institutions, systems and capacity to ensure the best results for effective development by engaging with parliaments and citizens in shaping those policies and deepening engagement with civil society organizations. We should also bear in mind that there is no one-size-fits-all formula that will guarantee development effectiveness. The specific situation of each country must be fully considered.

106. In this regard, we reaffirm our commitment to support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To strengthen the use of domestic policies and financing, with due consideration for their respective levels of indebtedness and national capacities;

(b) To gain access to international arrangements and modalities for the financing of development for developing countries, particularly small island developing States, including through capacity-building and a review of application procedures;

(c) To implement, with the provision of appropriate financial resources, in line with existing international commitments within the framework of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, climate change adaptation and mitigation projects;

(d) To reduce transfer costs related to remittances while pursuing the international targets and agreed outcomes of important international initiatives set by the United Nations system concerning remittances, given their importance for the economic growth of small island developing States.

Trade

107. Given the unique and particular vulnerabilities of small island developing States, for example, small size, limited negotiating capacity and remoteness from markets, we recognize that efforts are needed to support their further integration regionally and between the regions and in world markets. With this in mind, we strongly support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To encourage their successful engagement in trade and economic agreements, taking into consideration existing special and differential treatment provisions, as appropriate, and taking note of the work conducted to date under the work programme on small economies of the World Trade Organization;

(b) To obtain technical assistance through trade-related assistance mechanisms and other programmes to strengthen their capacity to effectively participate in the multilateral trading system, including with respect to explaining trade rules and disciplines, negotiating and implementing trade agreements and formulating and administering coherent trade policies, with a view to improving trade competitiveness as well as development and growth prospects;

(c) To assess the implications and mitigate the impact of non-tariff barriers to their market access opportunities through, inter alia, appropriate technical assistance and the implementation of the Trade Facilitation Agreement of the World Trade Organization;

(d) To develop and strengthen partnerships to enhance the participation of small island developing States in the international trade in goods and services, build their productive capacities and address their supply side constraints.

Capacity-building

108. We affirm that small island developing States require continued and enhanced investments in education and training programmes to develop human and institutional capacities so as to build the resilience of their societies and economies, while encouraging the use and retention of knowledge in all its forms, including traditional knowledge, within those States and ensuring accountability and transparency in all capacity-building efforts by all parties.

109. In this regard, we strongly support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To improve existing mechanisms and resources to provide coordinated and coherent United Nations system-wide capacity-building programmes for small island developing States through United Nations country teams, in collaboration with national agencies, regional commissions and intergovernmental organizations, to enhance national capacities and institutions, building on the lessons and successes of the Capacity 2015 initiative;

(b) To strengthen their national institutions to complement capacity-building;

(c) To ensure the inclusion of capacity-building and institution-strengthening, as appropriate, in all cooperation frameworks and partnerships and their integration in the priorities and work programmes of all United Nations agencies providing assistance to small island developing States in concert with other development efforts, within their existing mandates and resources;

(d) To establish a dedicated intensive training programme for sustainable development for small island developing States in the University Consortium of Small Island States;

(e) To strengthen technical assistance programmes in partnership with the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation and regional institutions in small island developing States;

(f) To build national capacity, where appropriate, to utilize cost-benefit analysis for informed policymaking in the area of sustainable development, including models specific to small island developing States that evaluate the technical, financial, social, economic and environmental aspects related to the accession, ratification and implementation of multilateral environmental agreements and related instruments;

(g) To build national capacity to fulfil reporting requirements deriving from commitments made by small island developing States when signing international agreements and commitments;

(h) To establish national and regional information and communications technology platforms and information dissemination hubs in small island developing States to facilitate information exchange and cooperation, building on existing information and communications platforms, as appropriate;

(i) To enhance regional and interregional cooperation among small island developing States on education and training so as to identify and apply appropriate good practices as solutions to shared challenges;

(j) To ensure that women are fully and equally able to benefit from capacity development and that institutions are inclusive and supportive of women at all levels, including at the senior leadership levels.

Technology

110. We recognize that access by small island developing States to appropriate reliable, affordable, modern and environmentally sound technologies is critical to achieving their sustainable development objectives and in fostering an environment that provides incentives for innovation and entrepreneurship and that science, technology and innovation are essential enablers and drivers for sustainable development.

111. In this regard, we reaffirm our commitment to support the efforts of small island developing States to gain access, on mutually agreed terms, to appropriate, reliable, affordable, modern and environmentally sound technologies and know-how and to increase connectivity and the use of information and communications technology through improved infrastructure, training and national legislation, as well as public and private sector involvement.

Data and statistics

112. We reaffirm the role that data and statistics play in development planning in small island developing States and the need for the United Nations system to collect statistics from those States, irrespective of size and in the least burdensome way, by, inter alia, allowing electronic submission and, where appropriate, submissions through competent regional agencies.

113. We recognize that improved data collection and statistical analysis are required to enable small island developing States to effectively plan, follow up on, evaluate the implementation of and track successes in attaining the internationally agreed development goals.

114. In this regard, we reaffirm our commitment to support the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To strengthen the availability and accessibility of their data and statistical systems, in accordance with national priorities and circumstances, and enhance their management of complex data systems, including geospatial data platforms, by launching new partnership initiatives or scaling up existing initiatives;

(b) To utilize existing United Nations statistical standards and resources in the areas of social and environmental statistics;

(c) To improve the collection, analysis, dissemination and use of gender statistics and data disaggregated by sex, age, disability and other relevant variables in a systemic and coordinated manner at the national level, through appropriate financial and technical support and capacity-building, while recognizing the need for international cooperation in this regard.

115. Furthermore, we call upon the United Nations, the specialized agencies and relevant intergovernmental organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates:

(a) To make greater use of the national statistics and development indicators of small island developing States, where available;

(b) To support a sustainable development statistics and information programme for small island developing States;

(c) To elaborate appropriate indices for assessing the progress made in the sustainable development of small island developing States that better reflect their vulnerability and guide them to adopt more informed policies and strategies for building and sustaining long-term resilience and to strengthen national disaggregated data and information systems as well as analytical capabilities for decision-making, the tracking of progress and the development of vulnerability-resilience country profiles.

Institutional support for small island developing States

116. We call upon the United Nations system, international and regional financial institutions and other multilateral development partners to continue to support small island developing States in their efforts to implement national sustainable development strategies and programmes by incorporating the priorities and activities of small island developing States into their relevant strategic and programmatic frameworks, including through the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, at both the national and regional levels, in line with their mandates and overall priorities.

117. In this regard, we call upon the United Nations system to provide support:

(a) To ensure that United Nations entities take fully into account the issues of small island developing States and include support for those States and the development of their capacities in their programmes at the appropriate levels;

(b) To continue to enhance, through national and regional initiatives, the voice and participation of small island developing States in the decision-making and norm-setting processes of international financial institutions;

(c) To improve interregional and intraregional cooperation and collaboration among small island developing States, including, where required, through institutional mechanisms and capacity-building;

(d) To ensure that the issues of small island developing States are adequately addressed by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as the high-level political forum on sustainable development convened under their auspices.

118. We call upon the Committee for Development Policy of the Economic and Social Council to continue to give due consideration to the unique and particular vulnerabilities of small island developing States and to continue to monitor regularly, together with their Governments, the progress of small island developing States that have graduated from least developed country status.

119. We request that the Secretary-General conduct a comprehensive review of United Nations system support for small island developing States with a view to enhancing the overall effectiveness of such support and the respective roles in supporting the sustainable development of small island developing States, and we invite the General Assembly, at its sixty-ninth session, to determine the parameters of the review. We request the Secretary-General, building on previous reports, to provide to the Assembly at its seventieth session the findings of the review and his recommendations thereon in his regular report entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States".

120. We request the Secretary-General to ensure that the Small Island Developing States Unit of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat continues, pursuant to its support and advisory services mandate, its analysis and reporting on the situation of small island developing States, including in the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway, and that the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, pursuant to its advocacy mandate, ensure the mainstreaming of the Samoa Pathway and issues related to small island developing States in the work of the United Nations system and enhance the coherence of the issues of those States in United Nations processes, including at the national, regional and global levels, and continue to mobilize international support and resources to support the implementation of the Samoa Pathway by small island developing States.

Priorities of the small island developing States for the post-2015 development agenda

121. Recalling that the small island developing States have identified their priorities for the post-2015 development agenda in the outcome document of the interregional preparatory meeting for the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, as further refined in the present outcome document, we recognize the need to give due consideration to those priorities in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda.

Monitoring and accountability

122. To ensure the realization of a transformational strategy for the sustainable development of small island developing States, we call upon the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and their subsidiary bodies to monitor the full implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway, including through the monitoring frameworks of the regional commissions.

123. We recall that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as the high-level political forum on sustainable development convened under their auspices, will devote adequate time to the discussion of the sustainable development challenges facing small island developing States in order to enhance engagement and implement commitments.

124. In this regard, we are committed to supporting the efforts of small island developing States:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly and to the Economic and Social Council on the progress achieved in implementing the priorities, commitments, partnerships and other activities of the small island developing States;

(b) To request the Department of Economic and Social Affairs to continue to maintain a partnerships platform focused on the small island developing States and to regularly convene the inter-agency consultative group to report on the full implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway, with adequate and timely analysis based on relevant targets and indicators relevant to the small island developing States in order to ensure accountability at all levels.

Preparatory process. In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/238 [YUN 2013, p. 828], the Preparatory Committee for the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States held its first (24–26 February) and second (23–27 June and 11 July) meetings; and a special meeting on 21 March [A/CONF.223/PC/8]. The Committee approved the draft outcome document [A/CONF.223/3], which it recommended to the Conference for adoption, and approved the Committee's draft report. The Committee adopted a draft decision on arrangements for accreditation and participation of relevant non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other major groups in the preparatory process and in the Conference; approved requests for accreditation and participation of intergovernmental organizations; and endorsed the recommendations of the secretariat on the accreditation of NGOs and other groups in the Conference.

Mauritius Strategy

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/238, the Secretary-General provided an August report [A/69/319] on the follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and on the preparations for the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States. The sustainable development of SIDS remained an important consideration for the international community and the UN system. With regard to the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy, the majority of activities at the international level over the preceding year had been focused on the third International Conference. Nevertheless, there were other activities of Member States from among SIDS that were geared towards the implementation of the Mauritius strategy, including the development of national sustainable development plans and strategies, and the strengthening of institutions to address priority areas; and activities from development partners, the UN system and intergovernmental organizations.

In accordance with Assembly resolution 67/206 [YUN 2012, p. 851], the International Year of Small Island Developing States was launched in February. Many events and activities occurred during the International Year on the international, national, regional and local levels.

The Secretary-General concluded that the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780] reaffirmed the special case of SIDS, and the preparatory process for the third International Conference had highlighted many of the challenges faced by those countries; however, those States also had the opportunity to address those challenges and pursue sustainable development in the post-2015 development agenda. The deliberations at the Assembly's sixty-ninth session and those on the post-2015 development agenda had the potential to become important opportunities for addressing SIDS priorities, as they transitioned towards a more sustainable future.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468/Add.2], adopted resolution 69/217 without vote [agenda item 19 (b)].

Follow-up to and implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration of Barbados and the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway (Samoa Pathway) and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), including chapter VII, on the sustainable development of small island developing States,

Recalling the outcome document of the high-level review meeting on the implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, held in New York on 24 and 25 September 2010,

Reaffirming the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, entitled "The future we want", including the call for the convening in 2014 of a third international conference on small island developing States,

Recalling its resolutions 67/206 of 21 December 2012, 67/207 of 21 December 2012, 67/290 of 9 July 2013, 68/1 of 20 September 2013, 68/6 of 9 October 2013 and 68/238 of 27 December 2013, and its decision 67/558 of 17 May 2013,

Taking note of the Leaders' Declarations of 2012 and 2014, adopted at the meetings of the Heads of State and Government of the Alliance of Small Island States, held in New York on 27 September 2012 and in Apia on 1 September 2014,

Welcoming the holding of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, held in Apia from 1 to 4 September 2014, and the adoption of the Samoa Pathway,

Expressing its satisfaction that the International Conference and its preparatory process provided for the active participation of all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, observers and various intergovernmental organizations, including the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as well as civil society, the private sector and the major groups representing all the regions of the world,

Welcoming the partnerships announced at the International Conference by Governments, international and regional organizations, the private sector, civil society and major groups, and in this regard recognizing that international cooperation and partnerships of various kinds and across a wide variety of stakeholders are critical for the implementation of the sustainable development of small island developing States,

Welcoming also the meetings of the high-level political forum on sustainable development, and looking forward to the future meetings of the forum, at which adequate time shall be devoted to the discussion of the sustainable development challenges facing small island developing States,

Recognizing that it is crucial to mobilize resources from all sources for the effective implementation of the Samoa Pathway,

Expressing its profound gratitude to the Government and the people of Samoa for the excellent facilities, staff and services provided and the arrangements made in hosting the Conference, and for the hospitality extended to the participants,

Expressing its appreciation to partners for their contributions in kind and to the Trust Fund for Small Island Developing States, to the members of the Bureaux, to the Secretariat of the United Nations, including the Secretary-General of the Conference, the specialized agencies, the United Nations regional commissions and the United Nations funds and programmes, for their contributions to the success of the Conference,

Reaffirming that small island developing States remain a special case for sustainable development, in view of their unique and particular vulnerabilities, and that they remain constrained in meeting their goals in all three dimensions of sustainable development, and recognizing the ownership and leadership of small island developing States in overcoming some of these challenges, while stressing that, in the absence of international cooperation, achieving success will remain difficult,

Recognizing that, in spite of the considerable efforts of small island developing States and the mobilization of their limited resources, their progress in the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in implementing the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy has been uneven, that some have regressed economically and that a number of significant challenges remain,

Reaffirming the need to mainstream sustainable development at all levels, integrating economic, social and environmental aspects, and recognizing their interlinkages, so as to enable small island developing States to achieve sustainable development in all its dimensions,

Taking note of the report of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway (Samoa Pathway), and urges its speedy implementation;
3. Welcomes the renewed commitment of the international community to taking urgent and concrete action to address the vulnerabilities of small island developing States and to continuing to seek solutions, including additional ones, to the major challenges facing them in a concerted manner to support the implementation of the Samoa Pathway;

4. Recalls the sustainable development priorities for small island developing States identified in the Samoa Pathway, namely sustained and sustainable, inclusive and equitable economic growth with decent work for all (development models in small island developing States for the implementation of sustainable development and poverty eradication and sustainable tourism), climate change, sustainable energy, disaster risk reduction, oceans and seas, food security and nutrition, water and sanitation, sustainable transportation, sustainable consumption and production, management of chemicals and waste, including hazardous waste, health and non-communicable diseases, gender equality and women's empowerment, social development (culture and sport, promoting peaceful societies and safe communities, and education), biodiversity (desertification, land degradation and drought, and forests), invasive alien species, means of implementation, including partnerships (partnerships, financing, trade, capacity-building, technology, data and statistics, and institutional support for small island developing States), the priorities of the small island developing States for the post-2015 development agenda and monitoring and accountability;

5. Stresses the need to ensure the effective implementation, monitoring of and follow-up to the Samoa Pathway;

6. Acknowledges in this regard that small island developing States are committed to the implementation of the Samoa Pathway and to that effect are mobilizing resources at the national and regional levels, despite their limited resource base, and calls upon the international community to assist and support small island developing States in the implementation of the Samoa Pathway, including by integrating its provisions into their national and regional policies and development frameworks;

7. Urges all partners to integrate the Samoa Pathway into their respective cooperation frameworks, programmes and activities, as appropriate, to ensure the effective follow-up to and implementation of the Samoa Pathway;

8. Calls upon the United Nations system, international and regional financial institutions and other multilateral development partners to continue to support small island developing States in their efforts to implement national sustainable development strategies and programmes by incorporating the priorities and activities of small island developing States into their relevant strategic and programmatic frameworks, including through the United Nations Development Assistance Framework process, at both the national and regional levels, in line with their mandates and overall priorities;

9. Urges the full and effective implementation of the commitments and partnerships announced at the Conference and the fulfilment of the provisions on all means of implementation, as contained in the Samoa Pathway;

10. Recalls the need to fully mainstream a gender perspective into all United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions and their follow-up processes;

11. Reaffirms paragraph 101 of the Samoa Pathway, and emphasizes that the partnership framework to monitor and ensure the full implementation of pledges and commitments through partnerships for small island developing States should be open and adaptable to the priorities and realities of small island developing States and consistent with other relevant processes and mechanisms in order to promote efficient and effective follow-up to the existing partnerships, in particular the new ones launched in Samoa, and to encourage new, genuine and durable partnerships for the sustainable development of small island developing States based on the principles of national ownership, mutual trust, transparency and accountability and focused on concrete action-oriented programmes addressing the priorities of small island developing States;

12. Recalls paragraphs 116 to 120 of the Samoa Pathway, and in this regard requests the Joint Inspection Unit to make recommendations in order to facilitate the work of the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session in determining, as soon as possible, and by no later than March 2015, the parameters of a comprehensive review of United Nations system support for small island developing States, with a view to enhancing the overall effectiveness of such support and respective roles in supporting the sustainable development of small island developing States in order to ensure a coherent and coordinated approach by the United Nations system to further improve and strengthen its overall effectiveness and delivery with respect to small island developing States and the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the Samoa Pathway;

13. Also recalls that the initial findings of the review and the recommendations thereon should be included in the regular report of the Secretary-General to be submitted to the General Assembly at its seventieth session and to be entitled “Follow-up to and implementation of the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States”, notes that the complete results should be included as an addendum to the report before the end of the seventieth session, and emphasizes that the review should be undertaken by the appropriate independent entity within the United Nations system in the most efficient and cost-effective manner;

14. Further recalls paragraph 121 of the Samoa Pathway and the need to give due consideration to the priorities of small island developing States in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

15. Underlines the need to give due consideration to the issues and concerns of small island developing States in all relevant major United Nations conferences and processes;

16. Recalls paragraph 123 of the Samoa Pathway and the need for the high-level political forum on sustainable development to devote adequate time at the 2015 meeting and at future meetings to address the sustainable development challenges facing small island developing States and the follow-up to and implementation of the Samoa Pathway;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Sustainable development”, a sub-item entitled “Follow-up to and implementation of the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States”.

Also on the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 69/216 entitled “Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations” (see p. 1191); and decision 69/546, by which it took note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled “Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations” (see p. 1191).

Landlocked developing countries

Preparations for 10-year Review Conference of the Almaty Programme of Action

The General Assembly, in resolutions 66/214 [YUN 2011, p. 834] and 67/222 [YUN 2012, p. 852], had decided to hold, in 2014, a comprehensive 10-year Review Conference of the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework [YUN 2003, p. 875]. Responding to General Assembly resolution 68/225 [YUN 2013, p. 832], the Secretary-General, in January, submitted a note [A/68/708] outlining the proposed organizational aspects of the 10-year Review Conference on the Implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action (second United Nations conference on landlocked developing countries). He indicated that Austria had agreed to host the conference scheduled to be held from 3 to 5 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 April [meeting 84], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/270 [draft: A/68/L.38/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 22 (b)].

Second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Almaty Declaration and the Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries,

Recalling also the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling further its resolutions 66/214 of 22 December 2011, 67/222 of 21 December 2012 and 68/225 of 20 December 2013,

1. Welcomes and accepts with appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Austria to host the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries in Vienna;

2. Decides to convene the Conference from 3 to 5 November 2014;

3. Also decides that two sessions of the intergovernmental Preparatory Committee shall be held in New York on 12 and 13 June and on 2 and 3 October 2014;

4. Further decides that the Preparatory Committee shall have a Bureau consisting of two members of each regional group, that the Bureau shall elect its own co-Chairs and that Austria and the Chair of the Group of Landlocked Developing Countries shall serve as ex officio members of the Bureau;

5. Decides that the Bureau shall be co-chaired by two Member States, comprising one developed State and one developing State;

6. Invites regional groups to nominate their candidates for the 10-member Bureau of the Preparatory Committee no later than 5 May 2014, so that they can be involved in the preparations for the first meeting of the Committee;

7. Invites the Bureau to convene further meetings on an informal basis in New York, as required and in the most efficient and effective manner to discuss the draft outcome document of the Conference;

8. Decides that the Conference and the meetings of its Preparatory Committee shall provide for the full and effective participation of all States Members of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies, that the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, as well as the supplementary arrangements established for the Commission on Sustainable Development by the Council in its decisions 1993/215 of 12 February 1993 and 1995/201 of 8 February 1995, shall apply to the meetings of the Committee, as applicable, and that the Committee shall consider and adopt the provisional rules of procedure of the Conference, taking into consideration the established practice of the General Assembly, except as otherwise provided in the present resolution;

9. Encourages the active participation of all States Members of the United Nations, in particular landlocked and transit developing countries and donor countries, as well as of the United Nations system and international and regional organizations, in the Conference at the highest level possible;

10. Stresses, while recognizing the intergovernmental nature of the Conference, the importance of the effective participation of all relevant stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, in the Conference and its preparatory processes as well as in the interactive thematic round tables and side events during the Conference;

11. Decides that the major groups and the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, as well as those that were accredited to the International Ministerial Conference of Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and Donor Countries and International Financial and Development Institutions on Transit Transport Cooperation and to the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the midterm review of the Almaty Programme of Action, must register in order to participate;

12. Also decides that non-governmental organizations not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council wishing to attend and contribute to the Conference, and whose work is relevant to the subject of the Conference, may participate as observers in the Conference as well as in the preparatory meetings, in accordance with the provisions contained in part VII of Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996, and subject to the approval of the Preparatory Committee in plenary meeting, and that, while respecting fully the provisions contained in rule 57 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Council, such a decision should be made by consensus;

13. Further decides that, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31, the secretariat of the Conference shall be responsible for the receipt and preliminary evaluation of requests for accreditation to the Conference and its preparatory process and that, in the discharge of its functions, the secretariat of the Conference shall work in close cooperation and coordination with the Non-Governmental Organizations Branch of the Secretariat and shall review the relevance of the work of the applicants on the basis of their background and involvement in all issues relevant to the Conference;

14. Decides that the Secretariat shall publish the list of applications received and disseminate the list in advance to members of the Preparatory Committee, at least one month before the first meeting of the second session of the Committee, at which time a decision on such applications will be taken;

15. Requests the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, as the United Nations system-wide focal point for the preparations for the 10-year Review Conference, pursuant to its resolution 66/214, and invites the Secretary-General, to take the measures necessary, within existing resources, to ensure effective, efficient and timely preparations for the Conference and to further mobilize and coordinate the active involvement of the organizations of the United Nations system;

16. Reiterates its invitation to Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, major groups and other donors to contribute to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General to support the activities related to the follow-up to the implementation of the outcome of the Almaty International Ministerial Conference and the participation of representatives of the landlocked developing countries in both the preparatory process and the Conference itself;

17. Decides that the Conference shall be organized in accordance with the organization of work set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Proposed organization of work of the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries

Vienna, 3 to 5 November 2014

1. The arrangements set out below have been formulated pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 66/214 of 22 December 2011, 67/222 of 21 December 2012 and 68/225 of 20 December 2013.

2. The second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries will be held in Vienna from 3 to 5 November 2014.

Plenary meetings

3. The Conference will consist of an opening meeting, a closing meeting and four plenary meetings.

Committee of the Whole

4. A Committee of the Whole, established in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Conference, will meet if necessary in parallel with plenary meetings, except during the opening and closing meetings. The Committee of the Whole will be responsible for finalizing any outstanding matters.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Assembly resolution 68/225, the Secretary-General, in July, submitted a report [A/69/170] on the ten-year review of the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action. The report was based on the national and regional reports on the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action; reports of the regional review meetings in Africa, Asia and Europe and Latin America (see below); outcomes of 17 pre-conference events; and substantive reports. The Secretary-General stated that since its adoption, tangible progress had been registered in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action, which had contributed to creating awareness about the challenges faced by landlocked developing countries globally. In the preceding 10 years, landlocked developing countries had registered faster economic growth and increased trade; however, progress was uneven. Landlocked developing countries remained fragile because of their vulnerability to external shocks, given their limited productive capacities, lack of export competitiveness and high transport and transit costs. Furthermore, those countries' value addition from manufacturing and agriculture had declined and their export concentration ratios had increased dramatically. The report concluded that the Almaty Programme of Action was designed largely as a sectoral programme, with a strong emphasis on infrastructure and transit, but did not address other growth and trade-determining factors, such as value addition, economic diversification, industrialization, job creation and resilience-building measures to deal with external shocks and climate change challenges. The coming development decade would need to address the special needs of landlocked developing countries in a holistic manner to ensure they could structurally transform their economies and achieve sustainable development and thus overcome the negative effects that their geographic constraints had on the livelihoods of people.

Review meetings. Regional-level preparatory review meetings were held for Europe and Asia (Vienna, 5–7 March 2013) [A/CONF.225/PC/4], Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 16–18 July 2013) [A/CONF.225/PC/2] and Latin America (Asunción, Paraguay, 19 November 2013) [A/CONF.225/PC/3].

Preparatory Committee. In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/270 (see above), the Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries held its first (New York, 12–13 June) [A/CONF.225/PC/5] and second (2–3 and 22 October) [A/CONF.225/5] sessions. On 13 June, the Preparatory Committee recommended to the Conference the adoption of the draft provisional rules of procedure and the provisional agenda [A/CONF.225/PC/L.3]. On 3 October, the Preparatory Committee heard a statement by the representative of Azerbaijan [A/CONF.225/PC/8]. On 22 October, the Preparatory Committee approved the list of private sector and civil society organizations, as contained in a note by the Secretariat [A/CONF.225/PC/7 & Add.1], to participate as observers at the Conference. Also, on 22 October, the Committee decided to annex the draft Programme of Action for Landlocked

Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024 to the report of the session, with the understanding that delegations would continue to meet informally before the Conference to reach consensus on the text for finalization by the Conference.

Communication. On 4 September [A/68/986], Azerbaijan transmitted to the Secretary-General the full text of the statement made by its delegate at the first meeting of the intergovernmental Preparatory Committee, stating that the report on that session (see above) did not contain a complete and precise reflection of its statement.

Second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries

The second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries was held (Vienna, Austria, 3–5 November) [A/CONF.225/7], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/270 (see p. 1012). It was attended by high-level officials from 129 States Members of the United Nations, including Heads of State and Government, and representatives of the private sector, academia, civil society, the UN system and other international organizations. The Conference adopted its agenda [A/CONF.225/1] and organization of work. On 3 November, the Conference established a Committee of the Whole, and allocated the consideration of the agenda item “Adoption of the final outcomes of the Conference” to the Committee. On 4 November, the representative of Azerbaijan made a statement [A/CONF.225/8] in exercise of the right of reply. The Conference held six plenary meetings; and four high-level thematic round tables on structural transformation; regional integration and transit cooperation; priorities of landlocked developing countries in the post-2015 development framework (see p. 960); and harnessing international trade and investment for the development of landlocked developing countries. The Conference adopted draft resolutions [A/CONF.225/L.1] entitled “Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024” (see below); and the “Vienna Declaration” [A/CONF.225/L.2] (see below). In addition to 18 side events, a business and investment forum was organized on the margins of the Conference.

On 12 December [meeting 71], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/137 [draft: A/69/L.28] without vote [agenda item 22 (b)].

Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 66/214 of 22 December 2011, in which it decided to convene the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries in 2014, as well as its resolutions 67/222 of 21 December 2012, 68/225 of 20 December 2013 and 68/270 of 23 April 2014,

1. Expresses its profound gratitude to the Government and the people of Austria for hosting the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries in Vienna, from 3 to 5 November 2014, and for providing all the necessary support;

2. Endorses the Vienna Declaration and the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024 adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries, which are contained in annexes I and II, respectively, to the present resolution.

ANNEX I

Vienna Declaration

We, the Heads of State and Government and representatives of the States gathered here in Vienna from 3 to 5 November 2014 to participate in the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries,

Having adopted the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024, Declare that:

1. We are strongly committed to the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024 to address in a holistic manner the special development needs and challenges of landlocked developing countries arising from their landlockedness, remoteness and geographical constraints;

2. We express our sincere appreciation for the constant efforts undertaken by the Government of Zambia in its capacity as Chair of the Group of Landlocked Developing Countries;

3. We express our profound appreciation to the Government of Austria as well as the City of Vienna and the people of Austria for hosting the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries.

ANNEX II

Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024

I. Introduction

1. Thirty-two landlocked developing countries situated in Africa, Asia, Europe and South America, with a population of about 440 million, face special challenges that are associated with their lack of direct territorial access to the sea and their remoteness and isolation from world markets. Their international trade depends on transit through other countries. Additional border crossings and long distances from major markets, coupled with cumbersome transit procedures and inadequate infrastructure, substantially increase the total expenses for transport and other transaction costs, which erodes the competitive edge of landlocked developing countries, reduces economic growth and subsequently negatively affects their capacity to promote sustained economic development, human and social progress and environmental sustainability. Landlockedness is a major contributor to the relatively high incidence of extreme poverty and structural constraints in landlocked developing countries. Landlocked developing countries, as a group, are among the poorest of developing countries, and many of them are also least developed countries, with limited capacities and dependence on a very limited number of commodities for their export earnings.

2. In most cases, the transit neighbours of landlocked developing countries are themselves developing countries, often with broadly similar economic structures and beset by similar scarcities of resources. The least developed transit countries are in an especially difficult situation. Furthermore, transit developing countries bear additional burdens, deriving from transit transport and its financial, infrastructural and social impacts. Transit developing countries are themselves in need of improvement of the technical and administrative arrangements of their transport and customs and administrative systems, to which their landlocked neighbours are expected to link.

3. The Almaty Programme of Action: Addressing the Special Needs of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, adopted in 2003, reflected the strong commitment of all actors to address the special development needs and challenges faced by landlocked developing countries and to promote their full and more effective integration into the global economy through the implementation of specific actions in the priority areas of fundamental transit policy issues, infrastructure development and maintenance, international trade and trade facilitation, international support measures and implementation and review.

4. There has been increased visibility and recognition of landlocked developing countries and their special needs at the international level, including at the United Nations. The international community has recognized the need to address the special challenges of landlocked developing countries in the outcomes of the 2005 World Summit and other high-level meetings on the Millennium Development Goals, as well as in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 2012, entitled “The future we want”. Although there has been some progress in the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action during the review period, there is a need for further global support for landlocked developing countries, including in the areas of financial and technical assistance, as they have a long way to go to fully benefit from globalization and to achieve sustained and inclusive economic growth, sustainable development, poverty eradication, employment generation and structural transformation.

5. There is therefore an urgent need for an innovative, holistic and results-oriented 10-year programme of action, based on renewed and strengthened partnerships to accompany landlocked developing countries in harnessing benefits from international trade, structurally transforming their economies and achieving more inclusive and sustainable growth. The special challenges and needs of landlocked developing countries are recognized, and there is a need to give appropriate consideration to landlocked developing countries in the formulation of the post-2015 development agenda.

II. Review and assessment of the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action

6. Economic growth has been somewhat accelerated in landlocked developing countries: since the adoption of the Almaty Programme of Action, landlocked developing countries have achieved moderate economic growth.

The gross domestic product growth rate for landlocked developing countries is estimated to have increased from 4.5 per cent in 2003 to 6.3 per cent in 2013. However, there are wide disparities among landlocked developing countries, with many of them showing high vulnerability to external shocks. High economic growth has not translated into a speedy reduction of extreme poverty. Per capita gross domestic product in two thirds of landlocked developing countries is still well below $1,000. Despite some progress in social development, half of the landlocked developing countries are still in the lowest ranks of the human development index, and there is still widespread poverty, high levels of food insecurity, high levels of child and maternal mortality and poor sanitation in many landlocked developing countries.

7. Landlocked developing countries and transit countries have initiated important policy reforms to address physical and non-physical aspects of transit transport. Landlocked developing countries have increased the harmonization of transport and transit policies, laws, procedures and practices with transit countries. A number of regional and subregional transit facilitation agreements have been concluded and adopted for implementation. Some landlocked developing countries and transit countries, through regional trade agreements, free trade areas and customs unions, have developed supportive institutional frameworks, such as transport and trade facilitation bodies or coordination committees, and road funds. Border facilities and procedures have been streamlined and harmonized, leading to increased efficiency and fewer delays. Yet there is a need to deepen the reforms, enhance efficiency and effectiveness and ensure that the achievements reached are sustained.

8. High transport and trade transaction costs remain a major stumbling block in the pursuit of landlocked developing countries to achieve their trade potential. Although the estimated time that landlocked developing countries take to import goods has decreased from 57 days in 2006 to 47 days in 2014 and to export from 49 to 42 days, that is still almost twice the time taken by transit countries. The average cost of exporting a container for landlocked developing countries is estimated at $3,204, compared with $1,268 for transit countries, and $3,884 compared with $1,434 for importing a container. The establishment of a secure, reliable and efficient transit transport system remains critical for landlocked developing countries to enable them to reduce transport costs and enhance the competitiveness of their exports to regional and global markets. Landlockedness, thus, has an enormous negative impact on the overall development of landlocked developing countries. It is estimated that the level of development in landlocked developing countries is, on average, 20 per cent lower than what it would be were they not landlocked.

9. There have been progressive efforts to develop and upgrade road and rail infrastructure and to provide maintenance for the existing infrastructure at the national, sub-regional and regional levels. Dry ports and one-stop border crossings are being established in all regions. Despite such progress, the development of physical infrastructure is still inadequate, posing a major obstacle to the ability of landlocked developing countries to utilize their full trade potential. With regard to air transport, cargo airfreight has increased in some landlocked developing countries, and the number of registered flight carrier departures in landlocked developing countries as a group increased from an estimated 200,000 in 2003 to about 362,800 in 2013. The major challenges faced by landlocked developing countries with regard to the air transport industry include the enormous resources required for infrastructure investment and the maintenance, rehabilitation and replacement of aged fleets. This limits the shipment by air of goods of high unit value or of a time-sensitive nature, such as documents, pharmaceuticals, fashion garments, electronic consumer goods and perishable agricultural and seafood products.

10. Despite some progress, landlocked developing countries lag behind other developing countries in terms of their telecommunications infrastructure, including broadband Internet access, which can play a crucial role in increasing connectivity, boosting the competitiveness of enterprises and facilitating international trade.

11. Owing, in large part, to an increase in world commodity prices, total merchandise exports from landlocked developing countries grew from an estimated $44 billion in 2003 to $228 billion in 2013. Imports have also increased to some extent. Although the global share of merchandise exports from landlocked developing countries has doubled in the last decade, they still account for a very low proportion, about 1.2 per cent, of such exports.

12. Furthermore, many landlocked developing countries rely heavily on a few mineral resources and low-value agricultural products for their exports to a limited number of markets, making them highly vulnerable to commodity price and demand volatility. The problem is further exacerbated by their low productive capacities and structural weaknesses, which limit the adding of meaningful value to their exports and the diversification of their exports and markets.

13. Official development assistance disbursements to landlocked developing countries more than doubled between 2003 and 2012, from an estimated $12.2 billion to $25.9 billion. Official development assistance accounts for more than 20 per cent of central Government expenditure in 16 landlocked developing countries. Aid-for-trade disbursements to landlocked developing countries grew from an estimated $3.5 billion in 2006 to over $5.9 billion in 2012. Aid for trade has helped to improve trade facilitation and trade-related infrastructure development.

14. While there has been some integration of the Almaty Programme of Action into the national development strategies of landlocked developing countries, there is a need for its better integration into development strategies at the national, regional and global levels.

15. While climate change was not part of the review of the Almaty Programme of Action, it remains true that landlocked developing countries are also vulnerable to climate change, which is exacerbating desertification and land degradation. Landlocked developing countries remain disproportionately affected by, inter alia, desertification, land degradation and drought as an estimated 54 per cent of their land is classified as dryland. Of the 29 countries in which at least 20 per cent of the population is estimated to live on degraded land, 14 are landlocked developing countries. Some landlocked developing countries are also affected by flooding, including glacial lake outburst floods. Landlocked developing countries also remain highly vulnerable to external economic shocks and to the multiple other challenges faced by the international community.

III. Renewed and strengthened partnerships for development

16. The present Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024 is based on renewed and strengthened partnerships between landlocked developing countries and the transit countries and their development partners. Strengthened partnerships within the context of South-South and triangular cooperation, as well as strengthened partnerships with the relevant international and regional organizations and between public and private sector actors, are also essential.

17. Partnerships between landlocked developing countries and transit countries is mutually beneficial for the improvement and constant maintenance of their infrastructure connectivity and of technical and administrative arrangements in their transport, customs and logistic systems. Efficient transit transport systems, strong collaborative efforts in multimodal transport infrastructure development and interlinkage, the promotion of an enabling legal environment and institutional arrangements and strong national leadership on cooperative arrangements between landlocked developing countries and transit countries are also crucial for achieving structural transformation and sustainable economic growth and development. Transparency, good governance and efficient institutional arrangements in landlocked developing countries and transit countries should also play a very important role in promoting such partnerships. Collaboration must be promoted on the basis of the mutual interests of both landlocked and transit countries.

18. Renewed and strengthened partnerships with development partners will be crucial for the full and successful implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action, given the immensity of the challenges faced by landlocked developing countries. The international community, including financial and development institutions, multilateral organizations and agencies and donor countries, is encouraged to provide financial and technical support, as appropriate, to advance the specific objectives listed herein. Regional and subregional cooperation or integration should also play an important role in successfully addressing the specific problems of landlocked developing countries.

19. Support from developing countries should take into full consideration the nature of South-South cooperation, in accordance with the Nairobi outcome document of the High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation. Guided by the spirit of solidarity with landlocked developing countries, developing countries, consistent with their capabilities, will provide financial and technical support for the effective implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action in mutually agreed areas of cooperation within the framework of South-South cooperation, which is a complement to, but not a substitute for, North-South cooperation.

20. The private sector and civil society are important stakeholders, whose contribution will be critical to the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action, including through transparent, effective and accountable public-private partnerships.

IV. Objectives

21. The overarching goal of the Vienna Programme of Action is to address the special development needs and challenges of landlocked developing countries arising from landlockedness, remoteness and geographical constraints in a more coherent manner and thus to contribute to an enhanced rate of sustainable and inclusive growth, which can contribute to the eradication of poverty by moving towards the goal of ending extreme poverty. Particular attention should therefore be given in the period until 2024 to the development and expansion of efficient transit systems and transport development, enhancement of competitiveness, expansion of trade, structural transformation, regional cooperation and the promotion of inclusive economic growth and sustainable development to reduce poverty, build resilience, bridge economic and social gaps and ultimately help to transform landlocked countries into land-linked countries.

22. The specific goals and objectives are:

(a) To promote unfettered, efficient and cost-effective access to and from the sea by all means of transport, on the basis of the freedom of transit, and other related measures, in accordance with applicable rules of international law;

(b) To reduce trade transaction costs and transport costs and improve international trade services through simplification and standardization of rules and regulations, so as to increase the competitiveness of exports of landlocked developing countries and reduce the costs of imports, thereby contributing to the promotion of rapid and inclusive economic development;

(c) To develop adequate transit transport infrastructure networks and complete missing links connecting landlocked developing countries;

(d) To effectively implement bilateral, regional and international legal instruments and strengthen regional integration;

(e) To promote growth and increased participation in global trade, through structural transformation related to enhanced productive capacity development, value addition, diversification and reduction of dependency on commodities;

(f) To enhance and strengthen international support for landlocked developing countries to address the needs and challenges arising from landlockedness in order to eradicate poverty and promote sustainable development.

V. Priorities for action

Priority 1: Fundamental transit policy issues.

Priority 2: Infrastructure development and maintenance:

(a) Transport infrastructure;

(b) Energy and information and communications technology infrastructure.

Priority 3: International trade and trade facilitation:

(a) International trade;

(b) Trade facilitation.

Priority 4: Regional integration and cooperation.

Priority 5: Structural economic transformation.

Priority 6: Means of implementation.

Priority 1: Fundamental transit policy issues

23. Freedom of transit and transit facilities play a key role in the overall development of landlocked developing countries. It is important for those countries to have access to and from the sea, in accordance with applicable international law, in order to fully integrate into the global trading system.

24. Harmonization, simplification and standardization of rules and documentation should be promoted, including the full and effective implementation of international conventions on transport and transit and bilateral, subregional and regional agreements. Bilateral provisions should be no less favourable than what is provided for in the international conventions standards and best practices. The Agreement on Trade Facilitation adopted by consensus at the Ninth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Bali, Indonesia, in December 2013, should further guide the work in this area. Cooperation on fundamental transit policies, laws and regulations between landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours is crucial for the effective and integrated solution to cross-border trade and transit transport problems. This cooperation should be promoted on the basis of the mutual interests of both landlocked and transit developing countries. Effective participation of key stakeholders, both public and private, is important to improve transit facilitation. It is important to promote free movement of people between landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours through the development and implementation of simplified and harmonized visa systems for drivers involved in international transport (freight and passengers).

25. Specific objectives are:

(a) To reduce travel time along corridors, with the aim of allowing transit cargo to move a distance of 300 to 400 kilometres every 24 hours;

(b) To significantly reduce the time spent at land borders;

(c) To significantly improve intermodal connectivity, with the aim of ensuring efficient transfers from rail to road and vice versa and from port to rail and/or road and vice versa.

26. Actions by the landlocked developing countries and transit countries are:

(a) To endeavour to accede to and ratify in a timely fashion relevant international, regional and subregional conventions and other legal instruments related to transit transport and trade facilitation;

(b) To ensure effective implementation of international and regional conventions and bilateral agreements on transit transport and trade facilitation, as applicable, also with a view to reducing transport prices and time;

(c) To enhance coordination and cooperation of national agencies responsible for border and customs controls and procedures between them and with the respective agencies in transit countries. In this regard, transit countries are encouraged to share information with landlocked developing countries regarding any change in regulations and procedures governing transit policies as early as possible before their entry into force, in order to enable traders and other interested parties to become acquainted with them;

(d) To create an effective bilateral or regional mechanism, as appropriate, to address challenges and bottlenecks in the implementation of bilateral, regional or multilateral agreements and to avoid maintaining, seeking or adopting bilateral or regional arrangements establishing quotas or other quantitative restrictions to international transit;

(e) To promote the simplification, transparency and harmonization of legal and administrative regulations and requirements related to transit systems by all modes of transit transport, including border crossings, consular services, customs procedures and removal of internal checkpoints;

(f) To develop effective logistics systems by aligning incentives for efficient transport and transit operations, promoting competition and phasing out anti-competitive practices such as cartels and queuing systems wherever possible;

(g) To promote the involvement of road, rail and inland waterway transport business associations in public-private partnership projects, exchange knowledge and implement transit cooperation initiatives and practices that have worked well in various regions around the world;

(h) To collaborate on exchanging trade and transport data with a view to conducting cross-border transactions faster and more efficiently;

(i) All landlocked developing countries should formulate national transit policies and establish appropriate national mechanisms with the participation of all relevant stakeholders.

27. Actions by development partners are:

(a) To support landlocked and transit developing countries in the implementation of international conventions and agreements relating to transit facilitation and initiatives that promote transit cooperation, reduce transit costs and establish smooth logistic arrangements;

(b) To assist landlocked and transit developing countries to establish multilateral sustainable and efficient transit transport regimes involving public and private stakeholders and to encourage and support the sharing of best practices related to experiences, policies and initiatives;

(c) To encourage regional and subregional organizations to assist with technical and financial support to the landlocked developing countries and transit countries to implement initiatives that promote transit cooperation.

Priority 2: Infrastructure development and maintenance

28. Infrastructure development plays a key role in reducing the cost of development for landlocked developing countries. The development and maintenance of transit transport infrastructure, information and communications technology and energy infrastructure are crucial for landlocked developing countries in order to reduce high trading costs, improve their competitiveness and become fully integrated in the global market.

(a) Transport infrastructure

29. Despite improvement in transport infrastructure in landlocked developing countries, poor quality and gaps in physical infrastructure are still major obstacles to developing viable and predictable transit transport systems. There is inadequate physical infrastructure in rail transport, road transport, dry ports, inland waterways, pipelines and air transport in many landlocked developing countries, as well as few harmonized rules and procedures and limited cross-border investment and private-sector participation. The physical links of landlocked developing countries to regional transport infrastructure networks fall well short of expectations. Landlocked developing countries have a lower logistics performance than other countries in the area of transport-related infrastructure. Missing links need to be addressed urgently, and roads, railways and inland waterways need to be upgraded to a level that can establish seamless and efficient transport infrastructure networks within the countries and across their borders. The improvement and maintenance of existing facilities is crucial. With regard to multi-modal transport, railways are important for the landlocked developing countries whose exports are usually bulky primary commodities. Railway transport should be promoted where its use is viable and rail networks already exist.

30. The magnitude of the required resources to invest in infrastructure development and maintenance remains a major challenge. It requires forging international, regional, subregional and bilateral cooperation on infrastructure projects, allocating more from national budgets, effectively deploying international development assistance and multilateral financing in the development and maintenance of infrastructure and strengthening the role of the private sector. At the same time, it also requires a substantial investment in capacity-building and legal, regulatory and policy reform to create an environment supportive of greater public and private investments in infrastructure. It is important to help landlocked developing countries to develop the capacity to prepare bankable, large-scale infrastructure projects and to explore innovative financing mechanisms for those projects, including public-private partnerships, where appropriate.

31. Specific objectives are:

(a) To significantly increase the quality of roads, including increasing the share of paved roads, by nationally appropriate standards;

(b) To expand and upgrade the railway infrastructure in landlocked developing countries, where applicable;

(c) To complete missing links in the regional road and railway transit transport networks.

32. Actions by landlocked developing countries and transit developing countries are:

(a) To develop and implement comprehensive national policies for infrastructure development and maintenance, encompassing all modes of transportation, and to ensure that they are well coordinated with the transit countries in the areas where transit infrastructures intersect;

(b) To collaborate to promote sustainable and resilient transit systems through, inter alia, regular upgrading and maintenance, development of corridors along transit highways, developing border-crossing mechanisms, including one-stop border crossings, as appropriate, and promoting economies of scale for transport systems through inter-modal transport development, dry ports or inland container depots, trans-shipment facilities and similar logistic hubs;

(c) To work towards the harmonization of gauges to facilitate regional connectivity, where feasible, the development of reloading capacities, the expansion of training programmes and inter-railway staff exchange programmes;

(d) To promote multilateral and regional permit systems for road transport and to endeavour to implement permit-free bilateral and transit road transport and the expansion of a multilateral quota system among landlocked developing countries and transit countries;

(e) To endeavour, at the bilateral, subregional and regional levels, to gradually liberalize road transport services, taking into account specific circumstances in landlocked and transit developing countries;

(f) To encourage the development of international logistic hubs;

(g) To develop the necessary policies and regulatory frameworks to promote private sector involvement in infrastructure development and promote an enabling environment to attract foreign direct investment;

(h) To promote public-private partnerships for the development and maintenance of transport infrastructure and their sustainability;

(i) To develop inland transport networks, including ancillary infrastructure, such as all-weather road, rail and riverside support infrastructures that ensure road and rail safety and involve local businesses in those services along highways and railway networks, thereby creating development corridors along transit highways and railroads.

33. Actions by development partners are:

(a) To support efforts by landlocked developing countries in the field of infrastructure development and maintenance and support landlocked developing countries and transit developing countries in sharing experiences on transit transport development;

(b) To encourage multilateral and regional development banks to provide more support to landlocked developing countries and transit developing countries for investment in transport development, in accordance with their respective mandates;

(c) To continue assisting landlocked developing countries in the completion of missing links in railroads and road systems, as appropriate.

(b) Energy and information and communications technology infrastructure

34. Energy infrastructure and access to affordable, reliable and renewable energy and related technologies, on mutually agreed terms, are critically important for modernizing information and communications technology and transit systems, reducing delays and enhancing productive capacity to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development. The importance of the Secretary-General's Sustainable Energy for All initiative is stressed. In this context, regional efforts, including the creation of networks of regional renewable energy and energy efficiency centres, will be important and need support.

35. Information and communications technology can contribute to sustainable and inclusive growth by: increasing productivity across all sectors; facilitating market expansion beyond borders to take advantage of economies of scale; and lowering costs and facilitating access to services, including access to broadband infrastructure and information via global media such as the Internet, thus contributing to increased participation in governance, accountability and transparency. However, many landlocked developing countries face severe challenges in keeping up with the necessary infrastructure deployment and concomitant evolution of policy frameworks. Broadband costs, as a share of gross national income, are much higher in landlocked developing countries than in coastal countries that are located close to submarine communications cables. Because of their small market sizes, the lack of a regionally harmonized regulatory environment is also a serious hindrance to cheaper information and communications technology services and greater geographical coverage.

36. Specific objectives are:

(a) To expand and upgrade, as appropriate, infrastructure for supply, transmission and distribution of modern and renewable energy services in rural and urban areas;

(b) All landlocked developing countries should make broadband policy universal;

(c) To promote open and affordable access to the Internet for all;

(d) Landlocked developing countries should actively engage to address the digital divide.

37. Actions by landlocked developing countries and transit developing countries are:

(a) To enhance their collaboration in promoting cross-border energy trade and energy transit through transmission lines to third countries;

(b) Landlocked developing countries should develop national energy policies to promote modern, reliable and renewable energy, with a view to significantly enhancing capacities in production, trade and distribution, with the aim of ensuring access to energy for all and the transformation of their economies;

(c) To work together to modernize transit and transport facilities and customs and other border facilities by fully utilizing the capabilities of information and communications technologies;

(d) To further improve and harmonize legal and regulatory frameworks;

(e) Landlocked developing countries should develop a national broadband policy with a view to improving access to international high-capacity fibre-optic cables and high-bandwidth backbone networks;

(f) Landlocked developing countries should strive to develop their service sectors through the development of information and communications technology infrastructures and their integration into all relevant areas to promote competitiveness, innovation and inclusion and in order to reduce transit time and cost and modernize their transit and customs facilities;

(g) To promote digital bridges to interconnect national backbones so that countries far from the sea cables also have access to affordable broadband and are able to expand the telecommunications and related services sector in order to facilitate affordable, accessible and high-quality telecommunications services.

38. Actions by development partners are:

(a) To support efforts by landlocked developing countries to develop their energy and information and communications technology sectors;

(b) To promote energy-efficient investment in landlocked developing countries and facilitate the green economic transformation;

(c) To support landlocked developing countries in promoting their national broadband policy and developing necessary broadband infrastructure;

(d) To provide capacity-building to landlocked developing countries for the use of modern and affordable communications technology;

(e) To continue to support efforts of landlocked developing countries with the respective transit developing countries to facilitate access to information and communications technologies and the transfer of relevant skills, knowledge and technology, on mutually agreed terms, for the development, maintenance and sustainability of infrastructure.

Priority 3: International trade and trade facilitation

39. Greater integration of landlocked developing countries into world trade and global value chains is vital for increasing their competitiveness and ensuring their economic development. Exporting goods produced in landlocked developing countries incurs additional transport costs, which may decrease competitiveness and reduce revenue for producers from those countries. The export structure of many landlocked developing countries continues to be increasingly characterized by a reliance on the export of a limited number of products, in particular agricultural products and mineral resources. Priority should be given to policies and measures, with the support of development partners, to diversify the production and export structures of landlocked developing countries and to enhance their productivity and competitiveness in order to take full advantage of the multilateral trading system.

40. With the growing interlinkages between world trade, investment and production, global value chains account for a rising share of international trade. Landlocked developing countries have not been able to fully participate in regional or global value chains. Linking into global value chains presents an opportunity for landlocked developing countries to achieve greater integration within world markets, increase their competitiveness and become important links in production and distribution chains.

41. Services are important enablers of trade in goods and effective participation in international trade and global value chains. Efficient services enhance productivity, reduce the cost of doing business and promote job creation. Landlocked developing countries should be supported so as to increase the share of services in their economies and exports, including through enabling policies.

42. One of the main causes of marginalization of landlocked developing countries in the international trading system is high trade transaction costs. The importance of enhanced and predictable access to all markets for the exports of developing countries, including landlocked developing countries, was recognized in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development. In accordance with the commitments contained in the Ministerial Declaration of the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization and the rules of the World Trade Organization, full attention should be given in the Doha Development Round of trade negotiations to the needs and interests of developing countries, including landlocked and transit developing countries. Given the increasing growth in South-South trade, other developing countries could be important export destinations for the products of landlocked developing countries and sources of critical foreign direct investment.

43. Trade ministers at the Ninth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Bali, Indonesia, in December 2013, agreed by consensus on a package of declarations and instruments, including the Agreement on Trade Facilitation, which clarifies and improves articles V, VIII and X of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade of 1994, with a view to further expediting the movement, release and clearance of goods, including goods in transit. The Agreement on Trade Facilitation and its timely implementation in the context of the Bali package are important for the facilitation of trade for landlocked developing countries. The Agreement includes important provisions on technical assistance and capacity-building to help landlocked developing countries to implement it effectively.

44. Specific objectives are:

(a) To significantly increase the participation of landlocked developing countries in global trade, with a focus on substantially increasing exports;

(b) To significantly increase the value added and manufactured component, as appropriate, of the exports of landlocked developing countries, with the objective of substantially diversifying their markets and products;

(c) To further strengthen economic and financial ties between landlocked developing countries and other countries in the same region so as to gradually and consistently increase the landlocked developing countries' share in intraregional trade;

(d) To invite Member States to consider the specific needs and challenges of landlocked developing countries in all international trade negotiations.

45. Actions by landlocked developing countries include:

(a) To develop a national trade strategy based on comparative advantages and regional and global opportunities;

(b) To integrate trade policies into national development strategies;

(c) To promote a better business environment so as to assist national firms to integrate into regional and global value chains;

(d) To promote policies to help national firms, especially small and medium-sized enterprises, to participate more fully in international trade;

(e) To fully leverage bilateral and regional preferential trading arrangements with a view to broadening regional and global integration;

(f) To implement policies and measures that will significantly increase economic and export diversification and value added.

46. Actions by transit developing countries include:

(a) To promote investment in landlocked developing countries, with the aim of promoting their productive and trading capacity and supporting their participation in regional trade arrangements;

(b) To improve market access for products originating from landlocked developing countries, without arbitrary or unjustified non-tariff barriers that are not in conformity with the rules of the World Trade Organization;

(c) Transit countries and landlocked developing countries should carry out studies on logistical competitiveness and logistical costs based on internationally recognized methodologies.

47. Actions by development partners include:

(a) To support efforts by landlocked developing countries to diversify exports, integrate into global and regional value chains and effectively participate in multilateral trade negotiations;

(b) To address non-tariff measures and reduce or eliminate arbitrary or unjustified non-tariff barriers, that is, those that are not in conformity with the rules of the World Trade Organization;

(c) Landlocked developing countries and development partners should promote better integration of small and medium-sized enterprises within international trade by,

when appropriate, strengthening institutions that support trade, fostering trade competitiveness, building spaces for private-public dialogue, fostering technical and vocational education and training and capacity-building and creating market linkages through business-to-business platforms;

(d) To promote the diffusion and uptake of appropriate and environmentally sound technologies on mutually agreed terms and conditions, including through investment or cooperation projects to promote economic diversification and sustainable development, as appropriate;

(e) To offer appropriate technical assistance and capacity-building to landlocked developing countries to complete the process of their accession to the World Trade Organization, fulfil their commitments and integrate into the multilateral trading system;

(f) To continue to provide aid for trade to landlocked developing countries, consistent with World Trade Organization guidelines.

(b) Trade facilitation

48. Non-physical barriers, delays and inefficiencies associated with border crossings and ports, including customs procedures and documentation requirements, uncertainty in logistical services, weak institutions and widespread lack of human and productive capacities, continue to make transport costs high. They are at the core of the continued marginalization of many landlocked developing countries. Further streamlining and harmonization of customs and transit procedures and formalities and transparent and efficient border management and coordination of agencies involved in border clearance should have a concrete and direct impact on reducing the cost of doing trade and stimulating faster and competitive trade for landlocked developing countries. Such improved trade facilitation would help landlocked developing countries to enhance the competitiveness of their export products and services.

49. In many landlocked developing countries, human and institutional capacities are not adequate in a number of areas, including in customs and border entities, transit transport agencies, the trade negotiation process and the implementation of transit and trade facilitation agreements, including the Agreement on Trade Facilitation of the World Trade Organization, leading to a lack of effective implementation. Technical assistance and the improvement of trade- and transit-related logistics are crucial in enabling landlocked developing countries to fully participate in and benefit from multilateral trade negotiations, effectively implement policies and regulations aimed at facilitating transport and trade and diversify their export base.

50. Specific objectives are:

(a) To significantly simplify and streamline border crossing procedures with the aim of reducing port and border delays;

(b) To improve transit facilities and their efficiency with the aim of reducing transaction costs;

(c) To ensure that all transit regulations, formalities and procedures for traffic in transit are published and updated in accordance with the Agreement on Trade Facilitation of the World Trade Organization.

51. Actions by landlocked developing countries include:

(a) To establish or strengthen, as appropriate, national committees on trade facilitation, with the involvement of all relevant stakeholders, including the private sector;

(b) To scale up and implement trade facilitation initiatives such as single-stop inspections, single windows for documentation, electronic payment and transparency and modernization of border posts and customs services, among others;

(c) To effectively implement integrated border management systems and strive to establish one-stop border posts, where appropriate, with neighbouring landlocked or transit developing countries to allow for the joint processing of legal and regulatory requirements, with a view to reducing clearance times at borders, while fully utilizing the tools for trade facilitation developed by international organizations to build national capacity;

(d) To ensure full and inclusive representation of the private sector, including public-private partnerships and transport business associations, in trade facilitation initiatives and policy, and to develop the necessary policies and regulatory framework to promote private sector involvement.

52. Actions by transit developing countries include:

(a) To ensure that trade facilitation initiatives, including the Agreement on Trade Facilitation of the World Trade Organization, are developed and implemented together with landlocked developing countries in all relevant areas;

(b) To undertake further harmonization, simplification and standardization of rules, documentation requirements and border crossing and customs procedures; to enhance collaboration and cooperation among various customs and border-crossing agencies across borders; to promote the use of electronic (e-transaction) processes, the pre-arrival submission of customs declarations, risk management inspection systems and authorized economic operator systems; to improve transparency, predictability and consistency in customs activities; and to establish one-stop border posts, as appropriate, joint customs controls and inspection at border sites and other forms of integrated border management at borders with landlocked developing countries;

(c) Sharing best practices in customs, border and corridor management and in the implementation of trade facilitation policies should be encouraged at the global, regional, subregional and South-South levels, including in the private sector;

(d) To fully utilize the tools for trade facilitation developed by international organizations to build national capacity and ensure secure and reliable transport across borders by, inter alia, effectively implementing existing international standards and best practices for customs transit and safety and security of transport chains;

(e) To ensure transparency in border crossings, customs and transit transport rules, regulations, fees and charges and to accord non-discriminatory treatment so that the freedom of transit of goods is guaranteed to landlocked developing countries.

53. Actions by development partners include:

(a) To support landlocked and transit developing countries in the area of trade facilitation, in accordance with the Agreement on Trade Facilitation, which was agreed upon by consensus in Bali, Indonesia, in December 2013, at the Ninth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, and to encourage international organizations to help landlocked developing countries to assess their needs in implementing that Agreement and relevant trade facilitation measures;

(b) To support activities, including trade facilitation, aimed at simplifying, streamlining, standardizing and harmonizing import, export and customs procedures;

(c) To encourage the sharing of information on experiences and best practices related to trade facilitation with a view to creating an environment that allows for the implementation of multi-country customs transit guarantee regimes through the implementation of either international transit agreements or functional regional agreements;

(d) To support capacity-building, including training programmes, in the areas of customs, border clearance and transport;

(e) To encourage regional aid for trade so as to promote trade integration among landlocked developing countries and transit countries.

Priority 4: Regional integration and cooperation

54. Close cooperation with transit countries is a sine qua non for improved connectivity in transport, energy and information and communications technology. Infrastructure, trade and regulatory policies, together with political stability of neighbouring countries, have significant repercussions for the external trade of landlocked developing countries. The costs of reaching international markets for landlocked developing countries do not depend only on their geography, policies, infrastructure and administration procedures, but also on those of neighbouring countries. Thus, regional integration and coherent and harmonized regional policies provide an opportunity to improve transit transport connectivity and ensure greater intraregional trade, common regulatory policies, border agency cooperation and harmonized customs procedures to expand regional markets.

55. There is a need to promote meaningful regional integration to encompass cooperation among countries in a broader range of areas than just trade and trade facilitation, including investment, research and development and policies aimed at accelerating regional industrial development and regional connectivity. This approach is aimed at fostering structural change and economic growth in landlocked developing countries as a goal, and also as a means of collectively linking regions to global markets. This would enhance competitiveness and help to maximize benefits from globalization. Documentation and the sharing and dissemination of best practices is important to allow cooperating partners to benefit from each other's experience.

56. Actions by landlocked developing countries include:

(a) To promote regional integration by strengthening regional trade, transport, communications and energy networks;

(b) To promote harmonization of regional policies so as to strengthen regional synergy, competitiveness and regional value chains;

(c) To strengthen participation of landlocked developing countries in bilateral and regional integration frameworks.

57. Actions by transit developing countries include their contribution to deepening regional integration through the coherent development of regional infrastructure, trade facilitation measures and regional trade agreements, including the establishment of effective and efficient customs guarantee systems to help landlocked developing countries to overcome constraints resulting from their landlockedness.

58. Actions by development partners include:

(a) To support efforts made by landlocked developing countries and their transit partners to deepen regional integration through the development and implementation of key regional transport projects and regional transport agreements for facilitating the cross-border movement of goods and passengers;

(b) To support ongoing regional integration processes involving landlocked developing countries;

(c) To share best practices in promoting regional integration.

Priority 5: Structural economic transformation

59. Many landlocked developing countries remain reliant on a few export commodities, which often have low value addition. In order for landlocked developing countries to fully utilize their export and trade potential, it is important to undertake measures that could promote structural economic transformation capable of reducing the negative impact of their geographical disadvantages and external shocks, creating jobs and ultimately leading to poverty eradication and inclusive and sustainable growth and development. Increased value addition and economic diversification are key to such structural economic transformation. Institutional capacity-building and human resources development are equally important for landlocked developing countries.

60. Improving the manufacturing capacity of landlocked developing countries, including their contribution to regional and global value chains, can achieve the triple objective of creating better-paying jobs, increasing revenue and reducing the bulk of their primary exports. Higher-value and low-bulk exports are particularly crucial for landlocked developing countries. In this context, it is important to place proper emphasis on the development of manufacturing, agriculture and the services sector, including finance, information and communications technologies and tourism, as appropriate to national circumstances. Tourism can play an important role in building the economic sector, providing employment and generating foreign exchange.

61. Science, technology and innovation play a critical role in achieving structural economic transformation, productive capacity development and value addition. Conducive national policies, international support and foreign direct investment are necessary to facilitate access to science, technology and innovation, and landlocked developing countries should promote investment in science, technology and innovation for sustainable development.

62. The private sector contributes to economic growth and poverty eradication through the building of productive capacity, creation of decent jobs, promotion of innovation, economic diversification and competition. In landlocked developing countries, the private sector is actively involved in activities related to transit and trade facilitation, including as traders, freight forwarders, insurance providers and transporters, and the sector is a source of tax revenue and domestic investment and a partner for foreign direct investment. Public-private partnerships can play an important role in infrastructure development.

63. Specific objectives are:

(a) To increase value addition in the manufacturing and agricultural sectors, with the aim of achieving inclusive growth and sustainable development;

(b) To increase economic and export diversification;

(c) To promote service-based growth, including from tourism, with a view to increasing its contribution to the national economy;

(d) To encourage the inflow of foreign direct investment in high-value added sectors.

64. Actions by landlocked developing countries include:

(a) To develop a structural transformation strategy aimed at improving science, technology and innovation, export diversification, productivity, efficiency and competitiveness in the agriculture, manufacturing and service sectors, including tourism;

(b) To encourage innovative solutions, entrepreneurship and the use of modern, cost-effective and locally adapted technologies, with an emphasis on sectors such as agriculture, transport, information and communications, finance, energy, health, water and sanitation and education, as well as the development of effective public and private partnerships;

(c) To build a critical mass of viable and competitive productive capacity in manufacturing, agriculture and services;

(d) To promote the attraction of more diversified foreign direct investment through the creation of a conducive environment, with the aim of enhancing value addition, productive capacity, transit transport infrastructure and completion of missing links connecting landlocked developing countries within the regional network;

(e) To undertake measures to modernize the services sector by strengthening links between and among financial intermediaries, creative industries and business and legal and technical services;

(f) To create industrial clusters, such as export-processing zones and regional centres of excellence, with the aim of fostering knowledge networks and connectedness among companies;

(g) To prioritize private sector development, in particular small and medium-sized enterprises;

(h) To develop an industrial policy that takes into account the need for improved access to financial resources, development of appropriate human capacity and investment in supportive economic infrastructure as a way to further strengthen the private sector;

(i) To strengthen, as appropriate, an effective competition policy that supports business activity and further consolidates a supportive legal and regulatory framework, and to create macroeconomic conditions and systems that can facilitate the development of the private sector;

(j) To utilize the International Think Tank for Landlocked Developing Countries for sharing experiences, know-how, research and other resources on issues related to trade, transit, transport and capacity-building among landlocked developing countries. Landlocked developing countries that have not yet done so should ratify the Multilateral Agreement for the Establishment of an International Think Tank for Landlocked Developing Countries.

65. Actions by development partners include:

(a) To support the efforts of landlocked developing countries to improve their productive capacities and create economic diversification;

(b) To contribute to the efforts of landlocked developing countries to share innovative technologies, scientific knowledge and technical know-how and best practices;

(c) To support the efforts of landlocked developing countries to increase the value addition of their agricultural and industrial output;

(d) To support landlocked developing countries in building institutional and human capacities aimed at improving their ability to attract foreign direct investment in high-value added sectors and to enhance negotiation skills for bringing in responsible investment;

(e) To support landlocked developing countries to enable them to pursue the effective partnerships necessary for capacity-building, sustainability and quality enhancement, as well as for sectoral development, including the development of tourism;

(f) To support landlocked developing countries in building resilience, developing capacity to respond effectively to external shocks and addressing their specific supply-side constraints.

Priority 6: Means of implementation

66. The development and progress of any country is the primary responsibility of that country itself. Landlocked developing countries have made efforts to mobilize domestic resources for the development of infrastructure and transit facilities, as well as for overall socioeconomic development. However, lack of adequate financial resources and capacity constraints are some of the biggest challenges facing landlocked developing countries in their efforts to achieve sustained growth and sustainable development. Landlocked developing countries and their transit neighbours need to effectively mobilize adequate domestic and external resources for the effective implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

67. The support of development partners is needed to complement the efforts of landlocked developing countries to establish and maintain effective transit transport systems, integration into the world economy, structural transformation of their economies and enhancement of their productive capacities. Development partners are therefore encouraged to provide targeted technical and financial support, as appropriate, towards the implementation of the specific actions listed in the Vienna Programme of Action. Development partners should also encourage private sector investment in landlocked developing countries that are implementing the Programme of Action.

68. Official development assistance flows remain a major source of external financing for many landlocked developing countries. It is important to urgently fulfil existing official development assistance commitments, and such assistance to landlocked developing countries should fully take into account the specific situation of each country. Development partners and multilateral organizations have a crucial role to play in supporting the efforts of landlocked developing countries to achieve sustainable development and the eradication of poverty.

69. Aid for trade plays a key role in assisting capacity-building for landlocked developing countries on the formulation of trade policies, the implementation of trade facilitation measures and the development of trade-related infrastructure, with a view to increasing the competitiveness of their products in export markets. Aid for trade, in combination with complementary policies, has contributed to lower trade costs, with additional infrastructure, better border institutions and regulatory procedures and enhanced capacities. Aid for trade, along with the commitment of landlocked developing countries to necessary reforms, is also important in linking to or advancing the position of landlocked developing countries in the global and regional value chains.

70. South-South cooperation is not a substitute for but rather a complement to North-South cooperation. South-South and triangular cooperation also have a role to play in increasing the growth and development of landlocked developing countries, as well as transit developing countries, through their contribution, as appropriate, to the sharing of best practices, human and productive capacity-building, financial and technical assistance and technology transfer on mutually agreed terms.

71. The implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action would also require individual and concerted efforts by the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, relevant international organizations, such as the World Bank, the regional development banks, the World Trade Organization, the World Customs Organization, the common funds for commodities, regional economic integration organizations and other relevant regional and subregional organizations. These organizations are invited to give priority to requests for technical assistance and capacity-building support from landlocked developing countries in the implementation of the Programme of Action in a well-coordinated and coherent manner, within their respective mandates.

72. The private sector, including through foreign direct investment, also has a critical role to play in the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action, for example through building and strengthening productive capacity, export growth, technology transfer on mutually agreed terms, diffusion of productive know-how, managerial skill and capital, creation of wealth, the opening up of new markets for high-value added products and services and employment generation. Foreign direct investment can also play a key role in building the infrastructure that underpins economic activities.

VI. Implementation, follow-up and review

73. Implementation, follow-up and review should be undertaken at the national, subregional, regional and global levels. Follow-up and review should be a continuous process aimed at reinforcing partnerships and mutual accountability at all levels and by all actors.

74. At the national level, Governments are invited to mainstream the Vienna Programme of Action into their national and sectoral development strategies for its effective implementation. Landlocked developing countries and transit developing countries are encouraged to establish national coordination mechanisms, where appropriate. Monitoring and review should involve all relevant stakeholders, as appropriate.

75. At the subregional and regional levels, monitoring and review should be undertaken through existing intergovernmental processes. Regional and subregional organizations, including regional economic communities and regional development banks, are invited to mainstream the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action into their relevant programmes, in coordination with the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, within their existing mandates, and the regional commissions. The regional commissions are encouraged to submit analytical reports on the implementation of the Programme of Action. The relevant regional and subregional organizations and the private sector should be actively involved in the sessions of the regional commissions in that regard.

76. At the global level, the General Assembly should continue to undertake reviews of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action through reports of the Secretary-General. The governing bodies of organizations in the United Nations system are invited to mainstream the implementation of the Programme of Action into their programme of work and to conduct sectoral and thematic reviews of the Programme of Action, as appropriate. The private sector should be involved in the reviews at the global level.

77. In accordance with the mandate given by the General Assembly, the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States will ensure coordinated follow-up to and effective monitoring of and reporting on the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action, and will undertake advocacy efforts at the national, regional and global levels. The Office of the High Representative, in collaboration with other relevant stakeholders, should work on developing relevant indicators for measuring the progress on implementing the Programme of Action in landlocked developing countries, within their existing mandates.

78. The General Assembly is invited to consider conducting a comprehensive high-level midterm review on the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024. The Assembly, towards the end of the decade, is also invited to consider holding a third United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries in order to undertake a comprehensive appraisal of the implementation of the present Programme of Action and to decide on subsequent action.

Follow-up to the Second UN Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/225, the Secretary-General, submitted a December report [A/69/708] on the outcome of the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries. The report contained an assessment of the main elements of the Conference's outcome document and suggestions for implementing the Vienna Programme of Action (see p. 1014). The Secretary-General noted that the Vienna Programme of Action succeeded the Almaty Programme of Action [YUN 2003, p. 875] as a development blueprint for landlocked developing countries for the period 2014–2024. While the principal focus of the Almaty Programme of Action was on transit transport cooperation between landlocked and transit developing countries, the Vienna Programme of Action was a holistic and results-oriented programme with an overarching goal, specific goals and time-bound, specific, results-oriented objectives. The six specific goals were to promote unfettered, efficient and cost-effective access to and from the sea by all means of transport; reduce trade transaction costs and transport costs and improve international trade services through the simplification and standardization of rules and regulations; develop adequate transit transport infrastructure networks and complete missing links connecting landlocked developing countries; effectively implement bilateral, regional and international legal instruments and strengthen regional integration; promote growth and increased participation in global trade through structural transformation; and enhance and strengthen international support for landlocked developing countries. The Vienna Programme of Action had six priority areas for action, which included the three priorities previously found in the Almaty Programme of Action—fundamental transit policy issues, infrastructural development and maintenance, and international trade and trade facilitation; and three new priorities: regional integration and cooperation, structural economic transformation, and means of implementation.

The Vienna Programme of Action reflected a deeper understanding of the challenges that landlocked developing countries faced, and contained a call for enhancing international trade performance, trade facilitation, productive capacities, economic diversification, value addition in manufacturing and agriculture, increased connectivity to regional and global value chains, regional integration and collaboration with a vibrant private sector based on expanded partnerships. The Programme of Action demonstrated also the renewed and strengthened partnerships between landlocked developing countries, their transit neighbours and their development partners. One of the notable improvements in the Vienna Programme of Action related to regional integration and cooperation, which, for the first time, was a stand-alone priority.

The Secretary-General concluded that the full and effective implementation of the goals and specific objectives and actions in the six priority areas, agreed upon in the Vienna Programme of Action, would not only facilitate the establishment of efficient transit transport systems in landlocked and transit developing countries, but would also help them build their productive capacities, diversify their exports, structurally transform their economies, integrate into the global and regional value chains and achieve more sustained economic growth. He said that it was important that the UN system support Member States in mainstreaming the Vienna Programme of Action into their development strategies, and invited regional and subregional organizations to mainstream the implementation of the Programme of Action into their respective programmes, in coordination with OHRLLS and the regional commissions. The Secretary-General urged OHRLLS to ensure coordinated follow-up to and effective monitoring of and reporting on the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action; to undertake advocacy efforts at the national, regional and global levels; and to work on developing relevant indicators for measuring progress in implementing the Programme of Action in landlocked developing countries. Clear reflection of the interests of the landlocked developing countries in the post-2015 development agenda was also crucial for the successful implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action and coherence with the global process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/471/Add.2], adopted resolution 69/232 without vote [agenda item 22 (b)].

Specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of landlocked developing countries: follow-up to the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024, adopted at the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries, held in Vienna from 3 to 5 November 2014, at which all relevant stakeholders expressed their commitment to the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Reaffirming the overarching goal of the Vienna Programme of Action of addressing the special development needs and challenges of landlocked developing countries arising from their landlockedness, remoteness and geographical constraints in a more coherent manner and thus contributing to an enhanced rate of sustainable and inclusive growth, which can contribute to the eradication of poverty by moving towards the goal of ending extreme poverty,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document and the outcome document of the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, held on 25 September 2013,

Recalling also the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in 2012, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling further the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008,

of Landlocked Developing Countries within a New Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation for Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness from world markets and high transit costs and risks, continues to impose serious constraints on export earnings, private capital inflow and domestic resource mobilization of landlocked developing countries and therefore adversely affects their overall growth and socioeconomic development,

Acknowledging the need to promote meaningful regional integration to encompass cooperation among countries and the importance of enhancing existing transport infrastructure facilities for the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action,

Recognizing that the Vienna Programme of Action is based on renewed and strengthened partnerships to accompany landlocked developing countries in harnessing benefits from international trade, structurally transforming their economies and achieving more inclusive and sustainable growth,

Taking note of the communiqué of the Thirteenth Annual Ministerial Meeting of Landlocked Developing Countries, held at United Nations Headquarters on 25 September 2014,

Taking note also of the report of the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled “Ten-year review of the implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action: addressing the special needs of landlocked developing countries within a new global framework for transit transport cooperation for landlocked and transit developing countries”;

2. Invites the landlocked developing countries, transit countries, their development partners, the United Nations system and all other actors to implement the actions that have been agreed upon in the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024 in its six priority areas, namely, fundamental transit policy issues, infrastructure development and maintenance, international trade and trade facilitation, regional integration and cooperation, structural economic transformation and means of implementation at all levels, in a coordinated, coherent and expeditious manner;

3. Invites Member States to mainstream the Vienna Programme of Action into their national and sectoral development strategies in order to ensure its effective implementation;

4. Invites the development partners to provide targeted technical and financial support, as appropriate, towards the implementation of the specific actions listed in the Vienna Programme of Action;

5. Calls upon the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, and invites international organizations, such as the World Bank, the regional development banks, the World Trade Organization, the World Customs Organization, the common funds for commodities, regional economic integration organizations and other relevant regional and subregional organizations, to integrate the Vienna Programme of Action into their programme of work, as appropriate, within their respective mandates, and to support landlocked and transit developing countries in the implementation of the Programme of Action in a well-coordinated and coherent manner;

6. Invites the developing countries, guided by the spirit of solidarity and consistent with their capabilities, to provide support for the effective implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action in mutually agreed areas of cooperation within the framework of South-South cooperation, which is a complement to, but not a substitute for, North-South cooperation;

7. Invites the private sector to contribute to the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action in the respective areas of competence and in line with the national priorities of the landlocked developing countries;

8. Reaffirms the need to give appropriate consideration to the specific needs and challenges of landlocked developing countries in the formulation of the post-2015 development agenda;

9. Underlines the importance of the successful implementation, follow-up and review of the Vienna Programme of Action at the national, subregional, regional and global levels;

10. Stresses that, in accordance with the mandate given by the General Assembly, the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States will ensure the coordinated follow-up to, effective monitoring of and reporting on the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action and will undertake advocacy efforts at the national, regional and global levels, and also stresses that the Office, in collaboration with other relevant stakeholders, should work on developing relevant indicators for measuring the progress on implementing the Programme of Action in landlocked developing countries, within their existing mandates;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Groups of countries in special situations", the sub-item entitled "Follow-up to the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries".

Operational activities for development

In 2014, the United Nations continued to review how its development operations should be situated in the evolving post-2015 development agenda, including in the context of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review (QCPR) of operational activities for development in the UN system. Several UN entities had aligned their strategic plans with QCPR in timing and content, but progress was uneven in areas related to the coherent and effective functioning of the UN development system. During its operational activities for development segment, the Economic and Social Council held a high-level dialogue on the changing landscape of development cooperation, and adopted a resolution calling for wider implementation of QCPR. In December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions that affirmed that UN operational activities for development should make a key contribution to the objectives of the post-2015 development agenda, and invited UN development entities, in collaboration with national and international stakeholders, to support efforts to strengthen the capacity of Member States in the evaluation of development activities.

Development assistance was mainly provided through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in its dual role as the lead UN development agency and coordinator of the UN development system. During the first year of its strategic plan, 2014–2017, UNDP took steps to streamline its operations and the use of its resources, with an emphasis on lasting and measurable development impacts. Progress against the strategic plan was on track, with performance against many development outputs exceeding milestones. Millions of people benefited from achievements in the areas of sustainable development pathways, inclusive and effective democratic governance, and resilience building. UNDP also boosted its readiness and agility to respond to crises. In 2014, it led the UN system early recovery support to the Ebola-affected countries of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. Organizational restructuring started to deliver benefits, and UNDP initiated critical reforms, including an upgraded strategic planning architecture; institution-wide efforts to boost and measure programme quality; and new standards for project quality.

The UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme—with 6,325 volunteers from 155 countries—provided a total financial value of $201 million, supported by the UNDP regular resources. The UNV strategic framework 2014–2017 was launched during the year, and key results were the increased acknowledgement of volunteers and volunteerism as powerful resources and vital components of sustainable development; further mobilization of UNV volunteers for the delivery of peace and development results; and the enhancement or forging of traditional and new partnerships within and outside the UN system.

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) delivered more than 1,200 peacebuilding, humanitarian and development projects in over 80 countries. UNOPS delivery during the year was $1.2 billion, compared to $1.16 billion in 2013. That increase was mainly due to increased demand for UNOPS support to partners' development work in Afghanistan and Myanmar; mine action services in Mali, Somalia and South Sudan; and humanitarian response activities in the Middle East.

In May, pursuant to the 2013 upgrade of the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation to the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation, the Secretary-General appointed a Special Envoy on South-South Cooperation. In December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution that requested the UN development system to continue improving coordination among its agencies to enhance its support for South-South and triangular cooperation, and requested the UNDP Administrator to establish a more formalized and strengthened inter-agency mechanism, coordinated by the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation, to encourage joint support for South-South and triangular initiatives.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, during its 2014 substantive session [A/69/3/Rev.1], discussed UN operational activities for international development cooperation. On 30 January (decision 2014/204), the Council decided that the focus of its 2014 operational activities segment would be the changing landscape of development cooperation and what that meant for the UN system.

At meetings of its high-level segment from 24 to 26 February and on 14 July, the Council considered the follow-up to policy recommendations of the General Assembly and the Council; reports of the Executive Boards of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Food Programme (WFP), the United Nations Entity for Gender and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS); the WFP annual report for 2013; and the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation on its eighteenth (2014) session. The Council took note of those reports on 14 July (decision 2014/228).

Also before the Council were the Secretary-General's report on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/226 on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [A/69/63-E/2014/10] (see below), and a note by the Secretary-General on the policy for independent system-wide evaluation of operational activities for development of the UN system [YUN 2013, p. 840].

On 24 February, the Council held a high-level dialogue on "The changing development landscape: what does it mean for the United Nations system?" and a dialogue with the executive heads of the UN funds and programmes on "Looking to the future: current and emerging strategic priorities". On 25 February, the Council held a policy dialogue on the "United Nations system working as one: how to make it happen?" and a dialogue with the specialized agencies on "The changing development landscape: what will it mean for specialized agencies in a post-2015 era with focus on sustainable development?" On 14 July, the Council adopted resolution 2014/14 (see below).

Comprehensive policy review

On 6 February [A/69/63-E/2014/10], the Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council on progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/226 [YUN 2012, p. 859] on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review (QCPR) of operational activities for development of the UN system. The report provided an overview of results achieved, as well as measures and processes implemented in the follow-up to QCPR by the end of 2013.

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/5 [YUN 2013, p. 837], for the first time the report integrated the analyses of both the funding of the UN operational activities for development and the implementation of QCPR. A new single, coherent and comprehensive monitoring and reporting framework on QCPR had been developed, with full ownership by the UN development system. Several UN entities had aligned their new strategic plans with QCPR both in timing and content, and there was progress on many mandates of QCPR resolution, though it was uneven in some areas in relation to the coherent and effective functioning of the UN development system. The report highlighted that effective follow-up to QCPR had to be situated in the evolving post-2015 development agenda, and that there was a need for an internal reflection by the UN development system on policy coherence in the context of the changes in the overall global environment and the new development cooperation landscape.

2012 financing. Total funding for operational activities for development of the UN system amounted to $23.9 billion in 2012. About two thirds ($16.2 billion) were directed towards development-related activities, with the other one third ($7.7 billion) spent on humanitarian assistance-related activities. Some three quarters of total contributions in 2012 were made directly by Governments, which included the contributions made to the UN multi-donor trust funds. The remaining 25 per cent was accounted for by the European Commission and by non-governmental organizations, public-private partnerships and other multilateral institutions. Those sources of funding had increased significantly over the past 15 years, which indicated a broadening of the donor base. Expenditures totalled $24.2 billion in 2012, compared with $25.1 billion in 2011.

Funding for operational activities for development was concentrated in a relatively small number of UN entities. The top 10—UNDP, WFP, UNICEF, the World Health Organization (WHO), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), UNFPA, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)—accounted for 88 per cent of all contributions in 2012. For most entities, the non-core component of funding exceeded the core component, sometimes by a significant margin. Consequently, the sustainability of the results intended to be achieved by the strategic plans was compromised, and the flexibility required by entities to dynamically respond to the changing needs and priorities of programme countries was curtailed.

By region, in 2012, Africa received 36 per cent of total expenditures; Asia and the Pacific 18 per cent; the Americas 9 per cent; Western Asia 8 per cent; and Europe 2 per cent.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/14 [draft: E/2014/L.19] without vote [agenda item 6].

Progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/226 on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 67/226 of 21 December 2012 and 68/229 of 20 December 2013 and Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/5 of 12 July 2013, in which key system-wide policy orientations were established for development cooperation at both the Headquarters and the country levels,

Reaffirming the importance of the timely and full implementation of the system-wide policy orientations established in General Assembly resolution 67/226 on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Recalling the critical role of the Council in providing coordination, monitoring and guidance to the United Nations system to ensure that those policy orientations are implemented in a full and timely manner on a system-wide basis in accordance with the present resolution and General Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993, 50/227 of 24 May 1996, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 61/16 of 20 November 2006, 65/285 of 29 June 2011, 67/226 and 68/1 of 20 September 2013,

Reaffirming that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the development needs of programme countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities are carried out for the benefit of programme countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Noting the changes to its cycle,

Recognizing the importance and catalytic role of predictable official development assistance for international development, noting that global official development assistance increased steadily from 1997 to 2010 and that official development assistance increased in 2013, and noting with concern that official development assistance declined in 2011 and 2012,

Introduction

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/226 on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

2. Acknowledges the efforts of the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States and all relevant entities, to establish a comprehensive and coherent monitoring and reporting framework for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/226 on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review;

3. Requests the United Nations funds and programmes to make every effort to continue to improve monitoring and data collection methods with a view to contributing towards further enhancement of the analytical quality of the report of the Secretary-General on operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

4. Requests the United Nations development system to provide quality inputs and appropriate updates to the report of the Secretary-General with a view to continuing to improve high-quality analytical reporting on the operational activities for development, while stressing the need to minimize transaction costs associated with reporting;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General to further improve the analytical and evidence-based quality of the report on the implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review, including by addressing challenges and presenting options for enhancing the implementation of system-wide mandates of the review;

6. Also calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations Development Group and the High-level Committee on Management fully align their efforts to monitor implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review and align their work in the area of operational activities for development with the review;

7. Reiterates its request to the United Nations funds and programmes that have not already done so to consolidate their annual reporting on the implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review within their reporting on the implementation of their strategic plans;

8. Requests the United Nations funds and programmes to continue to improve the quality of their annual reports to the Economic and Social Council;

9. Reiterates its encouragement to entities of the United Nations development system with operational activities for development that have not done so to fully align their strategic plans and their strategic planning and budgeting cycles with the quadrennial comprehensive policy review, taking into account their respective mandates;

Funding of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

10. Reiterates that core resources, because of their untied nature, continue to be the bedrock of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and in this regard recognizes the need for organizations to address, on a continuous basis, the imbalance between core and non-core resources and to report to the Council in 2015, as part of their regular reporting, on the measures taken to address this imbalance;

11. Notes that the majority of the increase in funding for the United Nations development system between 1997 and 2012 was in the form of non-core resources, resulting in an imbalance between core and non-core resources, and notes with concern that the percentage of core resources in the overall funding for operational activities has declined, representing only 28 per cent in 2012;

12. Also notes that non-core resources represent an important contribution to the overall resource base of the United Nations development system and complement core resources in supporting operational activities for development, thus contributing to an increase in total resources, while noting the need to make non-core resources more flexible and better aligned with strategic plans and national priorities and recognizing that non-core resources are not a substitute for core resources;

13. Recognizes that non-core resources pose challenges, in particular restricted earmarked funding such as single-donor project-specific funding, by potentially increasing transaction costs, fragmentation, competition and overlap among entities and providing disincentives for pursuing an Organization-wide focus, strategic positioning and coherence and may also potentially distort programme priorities regulated by intergovernmental bodies and processes;

14. Expresses its regret that the mandate contained in General Assembly resolution 67/226 with respect to taking concrete measures to broaden the donor base was not fulfilled, and requests the United Nations funds and programmes and encourages specialized agencies that have not done so to report to their governing bodies at a 2014 session on concrete measures taken to broaden the donor base and increase the number of countries and other partners making contributions to the United Nations development system in order to reduce the reliance of the system on a limited number of donors;

15. Also expresses its regret that the mandate contained in General Assembly resolution 67/226 with respect to the critical mass of core resources was not fulfilled, and reiterates the request to the United Nations funds and programmes to define common principles for the concept of critical mass of core resources, which may include the level of resources adequate to respond to the needs of the programme countries and to produce the results expected in strategic plans, including administrative, management and programme costs; in consultation with Member States, and to present specific proposals in 2014 with a view to a decision in 2014;

16. Stresses the need to avoid the use of core/regular resources to subsidize non-core/extrabudgetary financed activities, reaffirms that the guiding principle governing the financing of all non-programme costs should be based on full cost recovery, proportionally, from core and non-core funding sources, and in this regard notes the timelines agreed by the executive boards of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) for an independent and external assessment to be performed in 2016 of the consistency and alignment of the new cost recovery methodology with the quadrennial comprehensive policy review;

17. Recalls the request contained in General Assembly resolution 67/226 to the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes and the governing bodies of the specialized agencies, as appropriate, to organize structured dialogues with Member States during 2014 on how to finance the development results agreed in the new strategic planning cycle of the respective entities, with a view to making non-core resources more predictable and less restricted/earmarked, broadening the donor base and improving the adequacy and predictability of resource flows;

18. Welcomes the progress made by the United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies to ensure that available and projected core and non-core resources are consolidated within an integrated budgetary framework, based on the priorities of their respective strategic plans, and encourages all agencies that have not already done so to develop such integrated frameworks in their next budget cycle;

Contribution of the operational activities of the United Nations to national capacity development and development effectiveness

19. Reaffirms the request by the General Assembly to the United Nations development system to develop, for the consideration of Member States, a common approach for measuring progress in capacity development, including measures to ensure sustainability, as well as to develop specific frameworks aimed at enabling programme countries, upon their request, to design, monitor and evaluate results in the development of their capacity to achieve national development goals and strategies, and invites the Secretary-General to provide, in his 2015 annual report on the implementation of Assembly resolution 67/226 on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review, comprehensive and evidence-based updates on measures taken in this regard;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his regular report to the Council in 2015, in consultation with Member States, information on steps taken by entities of the United Nations development system to strengthen and use national capacities and to make proposals to address any obstacles;

21. Requests the funds and programmes of the United Nations development system, and invites specialized agencies, to consider the findings and observations related to national capacity gaps repeatedly highlighted by programme countries to be addressed through the work of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including through the strengthening and use of national capacities, and to report to their governing bodies in 2015 with recommendations for implementation in this regard;

Poverty eradication

22. Welcomes the integration of poverty eradication, as the overarching priority, into the strategic plans of some United Nations system organizations, in accordance with their mandates;

23. Reaffirms the call by the General Assembly, contained in its resolution 67/226, for the organizations of the United Nations development system to assign the highest priority to the eradication of poverty, and in this regard requests the United Nations funds and programmes to include in their regular reporting to the Council information on steps taken, in accordance with their mandates, on the scaling up of efforts to address the root causes of extreme poverty and hunger, sharing of good practices, lessons learned, strategies, programmes and policies, inter alia, capacity-building, employment generation, education, vocational training, rural development and the mobilization of resources, which aim at achieving poverty eradication and promoting the active participation of those living in poverty in the design and implementation of such programmes and policies;

South-South cooperation

24. Recalls the requests contained in General Assembly resolution 67/226 on strengthening South-South cooperation, in this regard notes the progress made by some entities of the United Nations development system in mainstreaming South-South and triangular cooperation into their key policies, strategic frameworks, operational activities and budgets, and welcomes decision 18/1 of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation, which contains, inter alia, measures to strengthen South-South and triangular cooperation, including through improved allocation of resources across the United Nations development system, including the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation;

25. Requests the Secretary-General, in close consultation with the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation, to present, as part of his annual report on the implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review in 2015, recommendations based on a thorough analysis of obstacles to and incentives for the scaling up of United Nations support for South-South cooperation, including lessons learned from the implementation of successful South-South cooperation projects and programmes;

26. Decides that the President of the Council will include in its agenda for the operational activities segment of 2015 an interactive segment with relevant United Nations stakeholders and external stakeholders on lessons learned from the implementation of South-South cooperation projects and programmes and the potential benefits for the United Nations development system and participating countries;

27. Reaffirms the call in paragraph 77 of General Assembly resolution 67/226 for all countries in a position to do so, as well as other stakeholders, to increase their support for South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, especially by providing technical assistance and mobilizing financial resources on a sustainable basis, and in this regard requests the United Nations funds and programmes to clarify for Member States, as part of their regular briefings, the role of all stakeholders and the action taken so far by such entities in this regard;

28. Recalls the request contained in General Assembly resolution 67/226 to the heads of specialized agencies, the United Nations funds and programmes and regional commissions to pay special attention to the implementation of South-South cooperation projects, including those managed or supported by the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation, and requests the Secretary-General, as part of his regular reporting to the Council, to provide an update on progress in this regard;

Transition from relief to development

29. Reaffirms the request contained in General Assembly resolution 67/226 to the United Nations development system to accelerate progress in deepening coordination between Secretariat entities and members of the United Nations development system, inter alia, through the simplification and harmonization of programming instruments and processes and business practices, with a view to providing effective, efficient and responsive support to national efforts in countries in transition from relief to development, and requests the Secretary-General to include in his regular reporting to the Council comprehensive and evidence-based updates on progress in this regard;

Gender equality and women's empowerment

30. Welcomes efforts made by entities of the United Nations development system to implement the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women, and requests those entities of the United Nations development system that have not already done so to accelerate efforts to implement the Action Plan with a view to ensuring that all relevant entities meet its performance standards by 2017;

Resident coordinator system

31. Notes with appreciation progress achieved in implementing the cost-sharing agreement for the resident coordinator system, notes the funding gap expected for the resident coordinator system for 2014 and 2015, in this regard requests entities of the United Nations development system that have not already done so to take appropriate actions to implement the agreement, subject to the approval of their governing bodies and without impacting programme delivery, including by paying their contribution in full, and requests the Secretary-General to include in his regular reporting to the Council updates on agency-specific progress in this regard;

"Delivering as one"

32. Welcomes the finalization of the standard operating procedures for countries adopting "Delivering as one" on a voluntary basis, and in this regard requests the United Nations funds and programmes, and strongly encourages the specialized agencies, to take appropriate actions to fully and coherently implement the standard operating procedures, including the United Nations Development Group Plan of Action for Headquarters, and to report annually on progress in this regard at the annual meeting of their respective governing bodies;

33. Requests the United Nations development system to provide an update to Member States on the process for review and approval of common country programme documents at the operational activities segment of the substantive session of 2015 of the Council;

34. Recognizes that pooled funding mechanisms are important tools in advancing "Delivering as one" in countries wishing to adopt this approach, and encourages donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to prioritize the use of such mechanisms in order to maximize the impact of the "Delivering as one" reforms in those countries;

Simplification and harmonization of business practices

35. Requests the United Nations funds and programmes to present the comprehensive joint action plans for the simplification and harmonization of business practices to their respective executive boards, and invites the United Nations funds and programmes to undertake a thorough review of progress in the simplification and harmonization of business practices;

36. Calls upon the United Nations funds and programmes to present an update, in 2014, on progress towards a proposal on the common definition of operating costs and a common and standardized system of cost control, paying due attention to their different business models, with a view to taking a decision on this issue in the context of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review in 2016;

37. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council at its substantive session of 2015, as part of his regular reporting, on progress in achieving full system-wide interoperability of enterprise resource planning systems in 2016 in the context of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review;

38. Notes with concern that plans containing concrete proposals for pilots for common United Nations service centres in consenting programme countries that represent the diversity of United Nations presence in all regions were not presented to the substantive session of 2014 of the Council, as requested in its resolution 2013/5, and in this regard reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure adequate and evidence-based planning and design of common United Nations service centres by including such concrete proposals in plans for review by the Council in 2015;

39. Notes that some entities of the United Nations development system are establishing agency-specific service centres, and in this regard calls upon all relevant members of the system to participate in the establishment of the common service centres, with the intent that such centres provide long-term and system-wide cost savings and ensure higher quality, more effective and cost-efficient support services in all programme countries;

Results-based management

40. Notes with concern that there was no comprehensive reporting to the Council in 2013, with a view to implementation in 2014, on progress made towards a more robust, coherent and harmonized approach to operational activities for development, focused on results, which would streamline and improve the planning, monitoring, measurement and reporting on system-wide results, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with Member States, to update the Council at the operational activities segment of its substantive session of 2015, as part of his regular reporting;

Evaluation of operational activities for development

41. Welcomes the new policy for independent system-wide evaluation of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and notes the decision by the General Assembly contained in its resolution 68/229 to launch two pilot evaluations in the current quadrennial comprehensive policy review cycle;

42. Calls upon donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to contribute resources to the implementation of the two pilot independent system-wide evaluations, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council, in 2015, as part of his regular reporting, on progress in this regard;

43. Calls upon the members of the United Nations development system to further intensify efforts to assist programme countries in strengthening their national evaluation capacities for the monitoring and evaluation of operational activities for development;

Follow-up

44. Recognizes its role in providing guidance to the United Nations development system for the implementation of operational activities for development on a system-wide basis, welcomes the dialogues held at the operational activities segment of its substantive session of 2014 regarding the role of the United Nations development system in the changing development landscape and the need to align the United Nations system to address emerging challenges, in this regard decides to convene a transparent and inclusive dialogue involving Member States and all relevant stakeholders on the longer-term positioning of the United Nations development system, taking into account the post-2015 development agenda, including the interlinkages between the alignment of functions, funding practices, governance structures, capacity and impact of the United Nations development system, partnership approaches and organizational arrangements, decides that the Bureau of the Council will provide updates on progress in this regard during the operational activities segment in 2015 and 2016, and requests the Secretary-General to reflect these discussions in his report on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review to the General Assembly for consideration and action by Member States during the 2016 review.

JIU report. By a 15 July note [A/69/125], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) following its review of the selection and appointment process for United Nations resident coordinators, including the preparation, training and support provided for their work. The JIU review focused on the UN system organizations and entities participating in the United Nations Country Teams.

Note of Secretary-General. In August [A/69/125/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly his comments and those of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination regarding the JIU report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/473/Add.1], adopted resolution 69/238 by recorded vote (130-8-43) [agenda item 24 (a)].

Operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 67/226 of 21 December 2012 on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and Economic and Social Council resolution 2014/14 of 14 July 2014 on progress in the implementation of resolution 67/226,

Recalling also the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document and the outcome document of the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Reaffirming the importance of the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, through which the General Assembly establishes key system-wide policy orientations for development cooperation and country-level modalities of the United Nations system,

Recalling the role of the Economic and Social Council in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations system in order to ensure that policy orientations established by the General Assembly are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 61/16 of 20 November 2006, 67/226, 68/1 of 20 September 2013 and other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the development needs of programme countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities are carried out for the benefit of programme countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Affirming that the operational activities for development of the United Nations system should provide a key contribution to the implementation of the ambitious and transformational objectives of the post-2015 development agenda, once adopted, and should therefore be improved, including the ability of the United Nations development system, in line with its mandate, to assist countries in responding to the challenges of sustainable development,

Recognizing the importance and catalytic role of predictable official development assistance for international development,

Taking note of the report of and the note by the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council at the operational activities segment of its substantive session of 2014,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the selection and appointment process for United Nations resident coordinators, including preparation, training and support provided for their work, and the note by the Secretary-General transmitting his comments and those of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination thereon;

2. Also takes note of the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation on its eighteenth session, and welcomes the decisions adopted at that session;

3. Recalls Economic and Social Council resolution 2014/14 on operational activities for development, and expresses appreciation for the guidance provided by the Council on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/226;

4. Acknowledges the request by the Economic and Social Council that the United Nations funds and programmes make every effort to continue to improve monitoring and data-collection methods, with a view to contributing to the further enhancement of the analytical quality of the report of the Secretary-General on operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

5. Underlines the need to better reflect the multidimensional nature of development and poverty, as well as the importance of developing a common understanding among Member States and other stakeholders of that multidimensionality and reflecting it in the context of the post-2015 development agenda, and in this regard invites Member States, supported by the international community, to consider developing complementary measurements, including methodologies and indicators for measuring human development, that better reflect that multidimensionality;

6. Reaffirms the importance of the contribution of operational activities for development to the national capacity development and development effectiveness of the United Nations development system in addressing the key areas identified in the quadrennial comprehensive policy review, recalls in this regard its request to the organizations of the United Nations development system to develop, for the consideration of Member States, a common approach for measuring progress in capacity development, including measures to ensure sustainability, as well as to develop, in a manner consistent with their mandates, specific frameworks aimed at enabling programme countries, upon their request, to design, monitor and evaluate results in the development of their capacity to achieve national development goals and strategies, and invites the Secretary-General to provide comprehensive and evidence-based updates on measures taken in this regard in his 2015 annual report on the implementation of resolution 67/226;

7. Requests the funds and programmes of the United Nations development system, and invites the specialized agencies, to consider the findings and observations related to national capacity gaps repeatedly highlighted by programme countries to be addressed through the work of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, including through the strengthening and use of national capacities, and to report to their governing bodies in 2015 with recommendations for implementation in this regard;

8. Reiterates that core resources, because of their untied nature, continue to be the bedrock of the operational activities for development of the United Nations system, and in this regard recognizes the need for the organizations of the development system to address, on a continuous basis, the imbalance between core and non-core resources and to report to the Economic and Social Council in 2015, as part of their regular reporting, on the measures taken to address this imbalance;

9. Notes with concern that the percentage of core resources in the overall funding for operational activities has declined, also notes that non-core resources represent an important contribution to the overall resource base of the United Nations development system and complement core resources in supporting operational activities for development, thus contributing to an increase in total resources, while noting the need to make non-core resources more flexible and aligned with strategic plans and national priorities, and recognizes that non-core resources are not a substitute for core resources and that they pose challenges, in particular restricted earmarked funding such as single-donor project-specific funding, by potentially increasing transaction costs, fragmentation, competition and overlap among entities and providing disincentives for pursuing a system-wide focus, strategic positioning and coherence, and that they may also potentially distort programme priorities regulated by intergovernmental bodies and processes;

10. Welcomes the progress made by the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies in ensuring that available and projected core and non-core resources are consolidated within an integrated budgetary framework, based on the priorities of their respective strategic plans, and encourages all entities that have not already done so to develop such integrated frameworks in their next budget cycle;

11. Recalls the concern expressed in its resolutions 67/226 and 68/229 of 20 December 2013 over the lack of progress in the development and operationalization of the concept of "critical mass" of core resources, while noting the adoption in 2014 by the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Office for Project Services of decisions 2014/24 and 2014/25 and the adoption by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund of decision 2014/17, in which they noted common principles for the concept of critical mass of resources and core resources as developed by United Nations funds and programmes and requested the funds and programmes to develop and present resource mobilization strategies for the consideration of their executive boards in 2015;

12. Stresses the need to avoid the use of core or regular resources to subsidize activities financed by non-core or extrabudgetary resources, reaffirms that the guiding principle governing the financing of all non-programme costs should be based on full cost recovery from core and non-core funding sources, proportionally, and in this regard notes the timelines agreed by the executive boards of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) for an independent and external assessment, to be performed in 2016, of the consistency and alignment of the new cost-recovery methodology with the quadrennial comprehensive policy review;

13. Notes with appreciation the work undertaken by those organizations of the United Nations development system that have made efforts to align their strategic plans, frameworks and budgets with the quadrennial comprehensive policy review, and encourages all organizations of the United Nations development system that have not done so to take further steps in this regard;

14. Recognizes the importance of continuing to strengthen and improve the results-focused delivery of operational activities for development of the funds and programmes of the United Nations system in order to maximize their support for accelerating progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals by 2015, especially in the least developed countries and other developing countries that are lagging behind in meeting the targets, as well as their support for the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

15. Welcomes the integration of poverty eradication, as the overarching priority, into the strategic plans of some United Nations system organizations, in accordance with their mandates;

16. Reaffirms its call, in its resolution 67/226, for the organizations of the United Nations development system to assign the highest priority to the eradication of poverty, and in this regard acknowledges the request by the Economic and Social Council to the United Nations funds and programmes to include in their regular reporting to the Council information on steps taken, in accordance with their mandates, on the scaling up of efforts to address the root causes of extreme poverty and hunger, the sharing of good practices, lessons learned, strategies, programmes and policies, including capacity-building, employment generation, education, vocational training, rural development and the mobilization of resources, which are aimed at achieving poverty eradication and promoting the active participation of those living in poverty in the design and implementation of such programmes and policies;

17. Requests all organizations of the United Nations development system to consider the post-2015 development agenda, once adopted, in the context of midterm reviews and the elaboration of strategic plans and frameworks, in order to ensure consistency and alignment with the agenda;

18. Recalls the requests contained in its resolution 67/226 on strengthening South-South cooperation, in this regard notes the progress made by some organizations of the United Nations development system in mainstreaming South-South and triangular cooperation into their key policies, strategic frameworks, operational activities and budgets, and welcomes the recommendations and measures, as set out in decision 18/1 of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation, to strengthen South-South and triangular cooperation, including through the improved allocation of resources across the United Nations development system, including the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation;

19. Stresses that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation;

20. Recalls the policy for independent system-wide evaluation of United Nations operational activities for development, reaffirms in this regard the decision in its resolution 68/229 that two pilot independent system-wide evaluations should be conducted in 2014 on the themes set out therein, subject to the provision and availability of extrabudgetary resources, as outlined in the policy, notes with concern the lack of progress in this regard, reiterates its invitation to countries in a position to do so to contribute additional extrabudgetary resources for the effective and accelerated implementation of the evaluations in 2015, and requests the interim coordination mechanism for system-wide evaluation of operational activities for development of the United Nations system to provide an update on progress in the implementation of the evaluations at the operational activities segment of the substantive session of 2015 of the Economic and Social Council;

21. Recognizes the need to review the composition and functioning of the governing structures of the United Nations funds and programmes, welcomes in this regard Economic and Social Council resolution 2014/14, and calls for early reforms of those governance structures;

22. Reaffirms the importance of achieving diversification in the composition of the resident coordinator system in terms of geographical distribution and gender, also reaffirms the importance of the participation of all United Nations agencies, funds and programmes on an equal footing in the resident coordinator system, requests the Secretary-General to make every effort in this regard to ensure the full application of these principles in the appointment of resident coordinators, encourages all agencies to nominate qualified candidates for the Resident Coordinator Assessment Centre, and requests the United Nations development system to continue to identify solutions in order to strengthen its ability to efficiently recruit and deploy appropriately senior and experienced resident coordinators who meet the highest standards of integrity;

23. Welcomes the dialogues held at the operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council of its substantive session of 2014 regarding the role of the United Nations development system in the changing development landscape and the need to align the United Nations system to address emerging challenges, reaffirms in this regard the decision of the Council to convene a transparent and inclusive dialogue involving Member States and all relevant stakeholders on the longer-term positioning of the United Nations development system, with a view to tackling the interlinkages between the alignment of functions, funding practices and governance structures of the United Nations funds and programmes, including early reform of their composition and functioning, the capacity and impact of the United Nations development system, partnership approaches and organizational arrangements, within the context of the post-2015 development agenda, and looks forward to these discussions being reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review to be submitted to the General Assembly for consideration and action by Member States during the quadrennial comprehensive policy review in 2016, with a view to fulfilling the role of the General Assembly in establishing key system-wide policy orientations for development cooperation and country-level modalities for the United Nations development system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/473], adopted resolution 69/237 without vote [agenda item 24].

Building capacity for the evaluation of development activities at the country level

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 59/250 of 22 December 2004, 62/208 of 19 December 2007, 66/209 of 22 December 2011 and 67/226 of 21 December 2012,

Reiterating the importance of building national capacity for the evaluation of development activities,

Reaffirming that national capacity for the evaluation of development activities may be further strengthened by the entities of the United Nations development system upon request and in accordance with the principle of national ownership and with the national policies and priorities defined by Member States,

Cognizant that the United Nations Evaluation Group and the relevant actors have designated 2015 as the International Year of Evaluation and that they would potentially contribute to supporting Member States, upon their request, in building their capacity for the evaluation of development activities,

1. Notes that international cooperation in building national capacity for evaluation at the country level should be voluntary and carried out upon request by Member States;

2. Invites the entities of the United Nations development system, with the collaboration of national and international stakeholders, to support, upon request, efforts to further strengthen the capacity of Member States for evaluation, in accordance with their national policies and priorities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide an update, in 2016, on progress made in building capacity for evaluation, based, inter alia, on inputs from Member States and the United Nations development system, including the United Nations Evaluation Group, as well as the Joint Inspection Unit, to be considered during the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system in 2016.

Pledging Conference for Development Activities. The 2014 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York on 10 November [A/CONF.208/2014/3]. Twenty-six countries pledged approximately $560 million in support of UN development activities for 2015. In August [A/CONF.208/2014/2], the Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions pledged or paid at the 2013 Pledging Conference to 18 funds and programmes, as well as four trust funds, as at 30 June 2014.

Technical cooperation

UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board

In 2014, the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board held two regular sessions (27–31 January and 2–5 September) and an annual session (23–27 June), all in New York [E/2014/35].

The Board adopted 29 decisions, including those providing an overview of actions taken at its January [E/2013/35 (dec. 2014/9)], June [dec. 2014/23] and September [dec. 2014/29] sessions. Other decisions dealt with the work of UNDP (see p. 1037), UNFPA (see p. 1044) and UNOPS (ibid.), the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) (see p. 1043), the United Nations Volunteers (ibid.) and the Global Environment Facility (see p. 1047).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 2014/228 of 14 July, took note of the reports of the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Board on its first regular and annual sessions of 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 842], and its second regular session of 2013 (see p. 1037).

Joint meeting of Executive Boards. On 3 February, the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board held a joint meeting with the Executive Boards of UNICEF, UN-Women and WFP to discuss performance standards on gender mainstreaming across the strategic plans of all entities, 2014–2017; and the coherence of UN action against poverty and vulnerability and towards resilience.

Organizational matters

By decisions adopted in January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/9)], June [dec. 2014/23] and September [dec. 2014/29], the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board adopted the agendas and workplans for its first [DP/2014/L.1] and second [DP/2014/L.3] regular sessions, as well as its annual session [DP/2014/L.2]. The Board also adopted the reports of the 2013 second regular session [DP/2014/1 & Corr.1]; the annual workplan for 2014 [DP/2014/CRP.1]; the report of the first regular session 2014 [DP/2014/9]; and the report of the annual session 2014 [DP/2014/18]. It agreed to the schedules for all of its 2014 sessions; approved the draft annual workplan for 2015 [DP/2014/CRP.2]; and agreed to the schedule of its 2015 sessions.

UNDP

Country and regional programmes

At its first regular session [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/9)], the Executive Board adopted the UNDP global programme, 2014–2017 [DP/GP/3 & Corr.1] [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/2)]; adopted the new regional programmes for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, the Arab States, Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, and Latin America and the Caribbean 2014–2017 [dec. 2014/3]; and adopted the modifications to the procedures for considering and approving UNDP and UNFPA country programme documentation [DP/2014/8; DP/FPA/2014/3] [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/7)]. The Board also approved the final country programmes for Namibia and Mexico.

At its annual session [dec. 2014/23], the Board took note of the first one-year extensions of the country programmes for Algeria, Argentina, Lebanon, Libya and Uganda, from 1 January to 31 December 2015 [DP/2014/15]; approved the two-year extension of the country programme for Botswana, from 1 January 2015 to 31 December 2016; approved, on an exceptional basis, the country programme document for Kenya; and took note of the draft country programme documents for Angola, the Comoros, Kuwait, Tunisia and Venezuela.

At its second regular session [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/29)], the Board approved the country programmes for Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ecuador, Paraguay, Sierra Leone and Timor-Leste; approved, on a no-objection basis without presentation or discussion, the country programmes for Angola, Comoros, Kuwait, Tunisia, Venezuela; approved the exceptional third one-year extension of the country programme for Guinea-Bissau [DP/2014/22] and the exceptional fourth one-year extension of the country programme for Syria; and took note of the first one-year extension of the country programme for Iraq [ibid.].

UNDP programme results

On 27 June [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/10)], the Executive Board took note of the report of the Administrator on the strategic plan: performance and results for 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 843]; encouraged UNDP to continue improving the quality of the annual report on performance and results by demonstrating progress towards meeting the milestones and targets and by including a more analytical narrative on challenges and lessons learned; encouraged UNDP to effectively resource results-monitoring capacity at country and regional levels; and requested UNDP to present to the Board at its second regular session 2014 an outline of the format and information that would be provided in the annual results report based on the integrated results and resources framework, which would allow for the appropriate tracking of results achieved against actual and projected expenditures.

Report of Administrator. The annual report of the Administrator on the strategic plan: performance and results for 2014 [DP/2015/11] presented an overview of progress achieved during the first year of implementation of the UNDP strategic plan, 2014–2017. Progress against the strategic plan was on track, with performance against many development outputs exceeding milestones. Of the 38 development outputs, the organization achieved or exceeded its milestones in 23 and made progress in another 13. Data for two outputs was pending. The report presented 2014 achievements in numbers for UNDP projects in the areas of sustainable development pathways, inclusive and effective democratic governance, and resilience building. Those achievements included 11.2 million people (5.7 million women) benefiting from improved livelihoods in 94 countries; the registration of over 18 million new voters in 21 countries, including nearly 4 million in Afghanistan, where 1 million more women registered than in 2009; and the establishment of 98 new disaster reduction and adaptation plans in 23 countries. UNDP also boosted its readiness and agility to respond to crises. In 2014, UNDP led the UN system early recovery support to Ebola-affected countries. Working with multiple partners, UNDP assisted in the mobilization of an emergency programme, surging staff and technical advisors to Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, improving communications and reinforcing payment systems. Across those three countries, 95 to 100 per cent of registered Ebola workers (approximately 38,000 people) were linked to payment mechanisms, and in most payment cycles more than 90 per cent of registered

Ebola workers were paid on time. Organizational restructuring started to deliver benefits, and UNDP initiated critical reforms, including an upgraded strategic planning architecture; institution-wide efforts to boost and, for the first time, measure programme quality; and new standards for project quality, to be implemented in 2015.

Sustainable growth and development

Performance in the area of inclusive and sustainable growth and development was solid in 2014. UNDP contributed to the generation of 775,000 new jobs (40 per cent for women) in 65 countries. More than 4.16 million people in 70 countries benefited from strengthened livelihoods, including 2.17 million women. At least 14 countries benefited from capacity development for collecting and analysing youth employment statistics, and in 33 countries UNDP supported the development of improved policies, systems and measures for employment generation. In Bangladesh, 90,000 underserved citizens (70 per cent women) were able to access mobile financial services through 2,000 digital centres. National commodity platforms in the Dominican Republic, Ghana, Indonesia and Paraguay provided multi-stakeholder dialogue forums aimed at improving production practices in agricultural commodity sectors. UNDP supported 57 countries in integrating biodiversity and ecosystem management into development planning and production sector activities. In Afghanistan, the Programme helped establish 279 rural infrastructure projects in energy, transport, water supply, natural resources, disaster management and agriculture, covering 31 provinces and benefiting 2.8 million people. In Rwanda, UNDP support led to the rehabilitation of 22,403 hectares of riverbanks and 723 hectares of degraded land, and the terracing of 834 hectares to protect fragile ecosystems.

UNDP supported 98 countries in integrating climate change adaptation and mitigation into development strategies, and another 21 in obtaining climate financing. In Mauritius, a financial rebate scheme for domestic and commercial sectors was launched to encourage the adoption of photovoltaic technologies and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. With UNDP support, Peru hosted the twentieth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the tenth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol. Further, UNDP assisted governments in 63 countries in establishing policies and programmes to attract investment in sustainable energy, including in Egypt and Kyrgyzstan. It supported Burkina Faso, Guinea, Guinea Bissau, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger, Senegal and Togo in establishing multifunctional platforms in 445 communities, enabling an additional 530,000 people to benefit from energy services.

Democratic governance

Performance in democratic governance was positive in 2014. With UNDP support, national administrative and human resource capacities were strengthened in 29 parliaments. Emphasis was placed on increasing women's political participation, promoting gender-sensitive laws, and supporting legislative and policy reforms. In Rwanda, UNDP technical assistance contributed to six of the 11 political parties establishing women's wings. UNDP and the United Nations Department for Political Affairs supported constitution-making processes in 22 countries, including Libya, where UNDP ensured that the voice of civil society organizations was heard. In Kuwait, the UNDP-facilitated Women's Declaration—the first in a Gulf country—advocated for an expanded role for women in matters of citizenship, decision-making, political and economic participation, and ending violence against women. UNDP support for the introduction of biometric voter registration in the Solomon Islands cleared the voter roll of 160,000 fraudulent registrations, boosting citizen confidence associated with a 90 per cent voter turnout rate. UNDP supported the adoption of 16 anti-corruption proposals, including in Costa Rica, Jordan and Kosovo. In the Arab region, it supported 324 governmental and non-governmental stakeholders in developing, implementing and monitoring national anti-corruption strategies—resulting in national strategies in Lebanon, Morocco and Tunisia, and the formulation of second national strategies in Jordan and Palestine. In Nigeria, UNDP supported anti-corruption reforms in port agencies.

UNDP strengthened capacities for civil society engagement in development processes, notably through the participation of women's groups in 21 countries, youth groups in 23 countries, and other excluded groups in 18 countries. In Bangladesh, nearly 2,600 women-led community development committees in 23 towns created federations of urban communities that were institutionalized in local governments. In Tunisia, UNDP support for the participation of youth, women and disadvantaged groups in the constitutional reform process contributed to the creation of 40 civil society coalitions for consensus-building and the facilitation of political dialogue. In Latin America, UNDP co-led the design of the first Ibero-American programme on youth empowerment, and in Azerbaijan, it supported the organization of the first global forum on youth policies. UNDP supported 11 countries in adopting proposals for legal reform to fight discrimination. In Georgia, the dialogues led to the adoption of a law on eliminating all forms of discrimination. In eight Asia-Pacific countries, UNDP helped reduce discrimination against HIV-affected populations and lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) organizations and community leaders. This led to increased awareness and support to civil society for advancing gender recognition and a more robust evidence base on LGBT rights.

Universal access to basic services

In 2014, there was progress in the area of enabling institutions to deliver universal access to basic services. UNDP championed the use of information and communications technology in government service delivery to better reach local levels. In the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, UNDP supported the creation of a new policy to digitalize local services and inter-municipal cooperation. In Zimbabwe, it strengthened the capacity of the national health information and surveillance system to generate, analyse and disseminate data, leading to the expansion of the electronic patient management system to 161 additional sites. In 84 countries, UNDP supported governments and civil society in advancing the recommendations of the Global Commission on HIV and the Law, leading to punitive laws being reconsidered and institutional capacities reinforced for increased access to justice for persons affected by HIV. National dialogues on HIV and the law were held in 19 Asia-Pacific countries. In Pakistan, the dialogue led to the passing of the first AIDS law in South Asia. Bangladesh, India, Nepal and Pakistan recognized transgender/hijra as a third gender, and UNDP supported the successful efforts in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to prevent the adoption of anti-homosexuality legislation. UNDP contributions resulted in HIV-related law review and reform in Lesotho, Namibia, Swaziland and Tanzania. In Mozambique, services for key populations in cities were integrated in the new national strategic plan on AIDS. In South Sudan, UNDP supported the strengthening of health system delivery to increase women's access, resulting in 582,980 pregnant women receiving services. Around 1.4 million people received antiretroviral treatment through the Global Fund in 2014. Twenty-two million people were reached with HIV-related behavioural change communications.

UNDP strengthened the conditions for justice, the rule of law, and citizen security in 86 countries, and strengthened access to justice in 29 countries, providing over 360,000 men and over 380,000 women with access to legal aid services. In Jamaica, safety and security committees were established in 12 parishes, contributing to a 17 per cent drop in crime and violence.

Disaster prevention and risk management

In 2014, there was steady progress in the field of disaster prevention and risk management. UNDP supported 21 countries in ensuring that multi-hazard disaster and climate risk assessments informed national plans. It supported the establishment of risk reduction management centres in the Dominican Republic, Guyana, Jamaica, and Trinidad and Tobago to provide information on disaster risks through a South-South cooperation engagement with Cuba. Eleven Asia-Pacific countries strengthened their capacities to assess climate risk implications for key economic sectors and evaluate adaptation and mitigation options. In Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, UNDP worked with the European Union and the World Bank to adapt post-disaster needs assessment guidelines, piloting them in four countries. UNDP expertise in risk assessments helped strengthen national databases in 57 countries. In Rwanda, UNDP support to the establishment of a disaster risk atlas facilitated local and national risk assessments.

UNDP led United Nations work on climate and disaster risk governance, supporting the development of 98 new disaster-risk reduction and adaptation plans, frameworks or multi-stakeholder coordination mechanisms in 23 countries. In 16 of those countries, the plans were gender responsive. In Sri Lanka, UNDP supported the Government in launching a cabinet-approved comprehensive disaster management programme. With UNDP support, Viet Nam adopted its first law on disaster prevention and response; in Ghana, a national disaster management organization bill was approved by the Cabinet; and Nepal increased its annual climate budget allocation for 10 key ministries from 7.4 per cent in 2011 to 10.7 per cent in 2014, and adopted a policy allocating at least 5 per cent of local budgets to climate and disaster risk management.

Performance in early recovery and the rapid return to sustainable development pathways showed solid progress in 2014. UNDP assisted 20 crisis-affected countries to restore livelihoods and create jobs. Community-building schemes resulted in the creation of 135,000 jobs (42 per cent for women) and an additional 5.7 million people (49 per cent women) benefiting from diversified livelihood opportunities. In Syria, UNDP supported 387 small businesses, resulting in 18,100 new jobs and the restoration of basic public infrastructure serving 2.3 million people. In South Sudan, it supported internally displaced persons with an early recovery pilot on livelihood skills initiated in Juba. UNDP established 33 partnerships between international and national actors to adopt innovative crisis-response mechanisms. In the Central African Republic, it spearheaded a multi-partner effort to support the payment of $12.4 million in public sector salaries, which helped prevent the collapse of national institutions during the crisis (see p. 219), and the elaboration of the national strategy for reconciliation led to the establishment of a network of local mediators to ease tensions between communities and avoid conflict escalation. In Iraq, the establishment of a joint crisis centre enabled the Kurdistan regional government to better manage crisis response interventions; and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, UNDP supported the Government in mobilizing and coordinating financial resources for an integrated recovery intervention that included the reconstruction of over 1,000 homes, 74 public institutions and 32 infrastructure facilities, and resulted in the retention and creation of 2,000 jobs. UNDP facilitated the engagement of institutions and communities to resolve recurring conflicts in seven countries, including the Philippines, where it supported the Mindanao peace process in the formulation of the basic law for Bangsamoro to guide the conduct of governance in the autonomous region.

Leadership

In 2014, UNDP assisted countries in piloting sustainable development goals and targets that emerged through the Open Working Group, including Mexico on social inclusion; Albania, Indonesia, Rwanda, Tunisia and the United Kingdom on governance; and Armenia, Indonesia, Japan, Mozambique and Paraguay on disaster risk reduction. In Latin America and the Caribbean, the Programme increased the capacities of youth networks and promoted commitments from 21 national youth organizations to support youth issues within the post-2015 agenda. “MY World”, the UNDP-hosted United Nations global citizen survey, became the largest policy crowd-sourcing exercise in UN history, with over 7 million people providing inputs to discussions on the post-2015 development agenda and voting on their development priorities. UNDP supported the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Finance, whose report would inform the discussion at the 2015 Financing for Development Conference in Ethiopia.

UNDP worked with the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation to scale up South-South and triangular cooperation to advance progress towards development goals. It supported such cooperation in 133 countries, with national governments as primary partners. UNDP supported Chile by promoting South-South cooperation with Bolivia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Nicaragua, Palestine, Egypt, Paraguay, Suriname and Caribbean Community countries. The white paper of China on foreign aid incorporated UNDP policy recommendations, resulting in trilateral cooperation support of $12.5 million for projects in Burundi, Ghana, Malawi and Zambia. During the Ebola crisis, UNDP worked with the Government of South Africa, deploying autoclaves in Ebola-affected countries to safely dispose of medical waste.

Strategic plan income was estimated at $9.5 billion for the biennium 2014–2015. In 2014, contributions to regular and other resources were $4.6 billion (48.4 per cent of the two-year estimate). Regular resources contributions in 2014 decreased to $0.793 billion from $0.896 billion in 2013 (45.3 per cent of the 2014–2015 estimate of $1.75 billion). Provisional expenditure for development activities was $4.46 billion, of which $0.55 billion was funded from regular resources and $3.92 billion from other donor resources and local resources. Expenditure in United Nations development coordination, management and special-purpose categories reached $0.12 billion, $0.42 billion and $0.06 billion, respectively. The ratio of expenditure related to management activities over total expenditure was 8.3 per cent, a 0.4 per cent decline compared to 2012–2013 (8.7 per cent), pointing to increased organizational efficiency and consistent with achieving the management efficiency ratio of 8.2 per cent in the 2014–2015 strategic plan estimates.

Gender equality

At the first regular session of the Executive Board, the Director ad interim of the Bureau for Development Policy, UNDP, introduced the report of the Administrator on the implementation of the UNDP gender equality strategy in 2013 [DP/2014/3] and the UNDP gender equality strategy 2014–2017 [DP/2014/4].

Building on the achievements and lessons learned from the first gender equality strategy 2008–2013, the gender equality strategy 2014–2017 [DP/2014/4] was designed to contribute to the eradication of poverty and the reduction of gender inequalities by empowering women and promoting and protecting their rights. The UNDP approach to implementing the gender equality strategy 2014–2017 included close attention to the issue of women and girls facing multiple and intersecting forms of discrimination as a result of ethnicity, disability, or migratory and indigenous status. It provided strategic guidance to UNDP business units to mainstream gender as they operationalized the UNDP strategic plan 2014–2017. The gender equality strategy went a step further than the UNDP strategic plan by providing detailed entry points for integrating gender equality into each of its seven outcome areas. Further, rather than offering one-size-fits-all prescriptive priorities, the strategy relied on a set of parameters for development programming, within which country offices could design their gender equality action plans as part of their country programme documents and in sync with the relevant regional programme.

On 31 January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/1)], the Executive Board urged UNDP to implement the gender equality strategy 2014–2017 in a manner that ensured complementarity and avoided duplication through effective cooperation and information-sharing to maximize synergies with other organizations of the UN system, especially UN-Women. It encouraged UNDP, while implementing the strategy, to assess innovative approaches, including access to enabling technologies as a means to empower women, and requested UNDP to align reporting of the gender equality strategy 2014–2017 with the annual reporting of the UNDP strategic plan 2014–2017, and to report to the Executive Board on the implementation, performance and results of the gender equality strategy, beginning at its annual session 2015.

South-South cooperation

UNDP was a strong supporter of South-South cooperation, through its hosting of the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation and its own operational work to promote South-South and triangular initiatives. During the first regular session of the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board, the Director of the UN Office for South-South Cooperation presented the strategic framework of the Office for 2014–2017 [DP/CF/SSC/5], which focused on helping Member States make informed decisions on South-South and triangular cooperation; strengthening South-South cooperation within the UN system; and assisting partners in developing South-South cooperation policies, plans and partnerships. The Office for South-South Cooperation and UNDP had collaborated in defining a clear division of labour, as reflected in the UNDP strategic plan 2014–2017 and in the strategic framework of the Office for 2014–2017.

On 31 January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/9)], the Executive Board took note of and approved the strategic framework of the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation 2014–2017.

The year 2014 was critical for UNDP, as it began to implement its strategic plan 2014–2017 [YUN 2013, p. 847]—the bedrock of its efforts to make UNDP a more focused, results-driven, effective and efficient organization—in alignment with the principles of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development, as laid out in General Assembly resolution 67/226 [YUN 2012, p. 859]. At the annual session of the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board, the UNDP Administrator informed the Board that UNDP was pursuing rigorous implementation of its strategic plan 2014–2017, including the integrated results and resources framework, which UNDP was in process of populating with baselines, annual milestones and multi-year targets.

On 27 June [E/2015/35 (dec. 2014/11)], the Executive Board took note of the progress towards finalizing the integrated results and resources framework of the UNDP strategic plan 2014–2017 and affirmed that the framework had been designed in conformity with results-based management principles. The Board further affirmed that the results contained in the framework of the strategic plan would be achieved with the assistance of UNDP programmes in the respective countries, as well as of UNDP regional and global programmes. It requested UNDP to ensure that any relevant indicators and targets of the integrated results and resources framework were made consistent with the sustainable development goals in the context of the post-2015 development agenda, and called on UNDP to apply the integrated results and resources framework as soon as possible and to keep the Board informed on progress and challenges encountered in that process.

Evaluation

At the first regular session of the Executive Board, the Director of the UNDP Evaluation Office presented the medium-term evaluation plan 2014–2017 [DP/2014/5]. The report discussed the evaluations conducted by the Office during that four-year period, which fell into three categories: programmatic evaluations, which assessed development results at the country level; thematic evaluations, which were planned in alignment with the key outcomes of the UNDP strategic plan 2014–2017 and ensured that critical issues for each outcome were addressed; and other evaluations, such as the evaluation of the joint Global Environment Facility/UNDP Small Grants Programme.

On 30 January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/4)], the Executive Board, emphasizing the need to safeguard the independence of the UNDP Evaluation Office, approved a change of name from the UNDP Evaluation Office to the UNDP Independent Evaluation Office. It also took note of the medium-term evaluation plan and requested that the management of UNDP allocate adequate and timely funding for the full implementation of the plan.

At the annual session of the Executive Board, the Director of the UNDP Independent Evaluation Office presented the annual report on evaluation 2013 [DP/2014/14], which provided an overview of the progress made by UNDP and associated funds and programmes in fulfilling the evaluation functions outlined in the UNDP evaluation policy. The report also presented the planned programme of work for 2014 and 2015. In 2013, expenditures by the UNDP Evaluation Office totalled $8.278 million, of which $7.624 million was from regular resources and $655,000 from other resources. This represented an increase of 4.3 per cent from 2011. Ninety-four per cent of the core funding was spent. The Office completed and presented three thematic evaluations to the Board in 2013: the evaluation of the UNDP contribution to poverty reduction (first regular session); the evaluation of the UNDP role in conflict-affected countries (first regular session); and the evaluation of the UNDP contribution to South-South and triangular cooperation (annual session). Seven programmatic evaluations were presented to the Board at its annual session: the evaluation of the UNDP strategic plan 2008–2013; the evaluation of the fourth global programme; and evaluations of the regional programmes for Africa, Arab States, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, and Latin America and the Caribbean. Country-level evaluations, termed as assessments of development results, were carried out in Afghanistan, Algeria, Iraq, Kenya and Sierra Leone.

On 26 June [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/14)], the Board urged UNDP to address in a timely manner the findings and recommendations from the annual report on evaluation 2013, with a view towards improving programme performance, effectiveness and efficiency. It also requested UNDP to ensure that evaluation findings were fully considered and used in preparing key policies, strategies and programmes, and approved the revised programme of work for 2014 and the proposed programme of work for 2015 of the UNDP Independent Evaluation Office.

Financial and administrative matters

In January, the UNDP Director, Bureau of Management, presented to the first regular session of the Executive Board a report [DP/2014/6] on the response to decision 2013/28 of the Board on additional resources for security measures [YUN 2013, p. 850]. On 31 January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/9)], the Executive Board took note of that response.

At its second regular session in September, the Board considered a report by the UNDP Administrator [DP/2014/20/Add.1] that provided detailed information on the financial performance in 2013 of UNDP regular resources, other resources, and the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), which was established by the General Assembly and administered by UNDP. The data presented in the report agreed with the figures reflected in the annual review of the financial situation for 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 849].

The UNDP Administrator, in the annual review of the financial situation [DP/2015/26], reported that in 2014, UNDP maintained a positive net asset position on its balance sheet, and achieved regular resources year-end liquidity above the threshold requested by the Executive Board. Total UNDP revenue, however, decreased by 3 per cent to $5 billion from $5.15 billion in 2013. Total expenses rose slightly, to $5.31 billion, compared to $5.24 billion in 2013. Contributions to regular resources decreased by 11 per cent to $0.79 billion from $0.89 billion in 2013, including $0.01 billion from programme country governments. A total of $0.02 billion from several donors was received in 2014. Regular resources expenses decreased by 6 per cent to $0.94 billion, from $0.99 billion in 2013. Other resources contributions fell by 1 per cent during the year, to $3.92 billion from $3.94 billion in 2013.

Regular funding commitments to UNDP

A July report [DP/2014/21] provided information on the status of regular funding commitments to UNDP and its associated funds and programmes for 2014 and onward, as well as a summary of the income for regular and other resources received in 2013. The report stated that in 2013, contributions to regular resources increased by 5.9 per cent to $895.7 million from $846.1 million in 2012 due to delayed payments budgeted for 2012 but received in 2013. Fifty-six Member States contributed to regular resources in 2013, compared to 50 countries in 2012. Total contributions (regular and other resources) to UNDP, including $0.14 billion for reimbursable support services, remained at $4.83 billion. Excluding reimbursable services, total contributions to UNDP increased from $4.64 billion in 2012 to $4.69 billion in 2013.

As of July 2014, UNDP had received 56 per cent of the regular resources projected for 2014. Subject to exchange rate fluctuations, 2014 regular resources were projected to reach $850 million, which amounted to 49 per cent of the $1.75 billion integrated budget target for 2014–2015.

On 5 September [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/24)], the Executive Board took note of the annual review of the financial situation 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 849] and the status of regular resources funding commitments to UNDP and its funds and programmes for 2014 and onwards. The Board also noted the importance of regular resources, which allowed UNDP to plan, strengthen accountability and provide predictable services in response to the needs of all programme countries, particularly the most vulnerable. It requested UNDP to continue to explore incentives, mechanisms and funding windows to broaden the donor base and to support donors to increase their core contributions and shift to less restricted/earmarked non-core funding, and to present the Board with a resource mobilization strategy for consideration at its first regular session of 2015.

Audit and oversight reports

In June, the Executive Board considered the UNDP report on the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in 2013 [DP/2014/11/Add.1]. During that year, JIU issued two notes and two reports containing 10 recommendations. Of those, one note with one recommendation and seven recommendations from the two reports were directed at UNDP. The report provided a synopsis of management responses to the recommendations and an update on the implementation of the recommendations contained in JIU reports issued in 2012 and 2011. UNDP pursued on an ongoing basis and/or implemented 63 per cent of the 40 relevant recommendations issued in 2012, and 84 per cent of the 51 recommendations issued in 2011.

The Executive Board [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/23)] took note of the UNDP report on the JIU recommendations in 2013.

Human Development Report

An oral update on the 2015 Human Development Report preparations and consultations was presented to the Executive Board at its annual session.

On 27 June, the Executive Board took note of the oral report [E/2013/35 (dec. 2014/23)].

UN Capital Development Fund

In the first year of implementation of its strategic framework 2014–2017 [DP/2015/21], UNCDF expanded its partnerships within the United Nations, the philanthropic community and the private sector to support local development finance programming in 20 least developed countries (LDCs)—14 in sub-Saharan Africa and six in Asia. The portfolio included regional and global thematic initiatives under the Local Climate Adaptive Living Facility for infrastructure adaptation to climate change; the Local Finance Initiative for domestic resource mobilization in local infrastructure and productive investments; the Local Cross-Border Initiative for a local economic development approach to cross-border trade; and the Inclusive and Equitable Development for women's economic empowerment. UNCDF supported inclusive finance programming in 25 LDCs—18 in sub-Saharan Africa and seven in Asia—mainly through global or regional initiatives, including the Making Access Possible framework. It also capitalized on synergies between those two programme areas—local development finance and inclusive finance—to pilot and scale up innovative finance mechanisms to increase investments and leverage the untapped potential in developing countries.

The Fund's financial situation was marked by a 51 per cent increase from 2013 in non-core resources to reach a record high of $73.3 million (26 per cent of which originated from eight major private sector foundations and corporations), but remained constrained by a low level of core contributions, which reached some $14.9 million, a $1.4 million decrease from 2013 and well short of the $25 million target set in the UNCDF strategic framework that would assure the Fund's operations in 40 LDCs. Total UNCDF revenue reached $88.3 million, up from $65.4 million in 2013, owing mainly to the increased non-core contributions. The base of UNCDF development partners broadened, with 44 development partners contributing to UNCDF resources in 2014, up from 36 in 2013.

At the annual session of the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board, the UNCDF Executive Secretary, ad interim, presented an overview of the activities of the Fund in 2013, while the Director of the UNCDF Local Development Programme Finance Area presented the report on results achieved in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 851], including the integrated results and resources framework 2014–2017, and its methodological note.

On 27 June, the Executive Board [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/12)] took note of the report on the results achieved by UNCDF in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 851]; expressed concern that regular resources remained short of the $25 million threshold required to sustain UNCDF programming in 40 LDCs; noted with concern that, as a result, the number of LDCs supported by UNCDF dropped from 37 in 2012 to 33 in 2013; called on Member States to contribute to UNCDF regular resources to ensure that it could reach the target of $25 million per year in annual regular resources to ensure support to at least 40 LDCs; noted the efforts of UNCDF to further streamline its business processes; and requested it to present an analysis on its cost recovery practices with a view to achieving greater efficiency and results.

UN Volunteers

In 2014 [DP/2015/26], 6,325 UN volunteers from 155 countries worked for the UNDP-administered United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, compared with 6,351 in 2013. The total financial value of UNV operations, which included support from UNDP regular resources, amounted to $201 million, compared to $210 million in 2013. Of that total, programme resource expenses made directly by the UNV programme amounted to $20 million (10 per cent). The remaining financial value was covered by direct charges to UN organizations. The UNV strategic framework 2014–2017 was launched during the year (see below), and the key results of 2014 were the increased acknowledgement of volunteers and volunteerism as powerful resources and vital components of sustainable development; further mobilization of UNV volunteers for the delivery of peace and development results; and the enhancement or forging of traditional and new partnerships within and outside the UN system.

In April [DP/2014/13], the Administrator submitted a report on UNV results during the 2012–2013 biennium in support of programme countries and UN entities in their peace and development efforts. The report also outlined challenges and opportunities for UNV in the next biennium, in the context of the UNV strategic framework 2014–2017 and its associated integrated results and resources matrix, launched in January 2014. The framework was the first of its kind, focusing on harnessing the power of volunteers and volunteerism to support Member States in achieving internationally agreed development goals. UNV would be guided by the framework over the following four years and focus on working more systematically with partner countries and UN partners to increase its impact. The vision of the strategic framework was translated into concrete deliverables in the integrated resources and results matrix, which UNV would report against in subsequent Executive Board reports—including a mid-cycle review at the end of 2015—to assess implementation progress, make necessary adjustments and ensure alignment with the post-2015 development agenda. The framework established ambitious targets in terms of volunteer numbers and their impact, and in supporting the integration of volunteerism into national frameworks. UNV would focus on strengthening partnerships for the Special Voluntary Fund (svf), the UN Youth Volunteering Trust Fund, fully-funded UN Volunteers and other cost-sharing opportunities. The 2009–2013 svf report, published in 2014, demonstrated that svf was an indispensable component of UNV funding and recommended that the mandate of the Fund be expanded to cover the activities outlined in that report.

On 27 June [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/13)], the Executive Board took note of the report of the Administrator on UNV results during the 2012–2013 biennium; commended UNV for the development and launch of its strategic framework and integrated results and resources matrix 2014–2017; noted that future reports of the Administrator would be structured using the new results framework; expressed appreciation for the outstanding contribution that UNV, including UN Online Volunteers, made to peace and to the development achievements of programme countries and UN partners; requested that Member States and UN entities develop partnerships with UNV to ensure a stronger integration of volunteerism in their development programming; welcomed the Special Voluntary Fund report 2009–2013; agreed to expand the mandate of the Fund; called on Member States to increase contributions to the Fund; and called upon UNDP to continue to provide UNV with all the necessary programmatic, administrative, financial and legal support to deliver on its mandate.

UNFPA

At its first regular session in January, the Executive Board adopted several decisions related to UNFPA activities, including those on the transitional biennial budgeted evaluation plan 2014–2015 [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/5)], and modifications to the procedures for considering and approving UNDP and UNFPA country programme documentation [dec. 2014/7]. It also took note of the evaluation report on the UNFPA-UNICEF joint programme on female genital mutilation/cutting, and approved the final country programmes for Namibia and Mexico [dec. 2014/9]. At its annual session in June, the Board adopted a decision on the annual report of the UNFPA Executive Director for 2013 [dec. 2014/15], which was comprised of a report on progress in the implementation of the UNFPA strategic plan 2008–2013 [DP/FPA/2014/5 (Part I)], a statistical and financial review for 2013 [DP/FPA/2014/5 (Part I)/Add.1] and a report on the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit in 2013 [DP/FPA/2014/5 (Part II)]. It also adopted decisions on the strategic framework for UNFPA global and regional interventions, 2014–2017 [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/16)]; the annual report on evaluation, 2013 [dec. 2014/17]; updating the UNFPA oversight policy [dec. 2014/18]; and revised UNFPA financial regulations and rules [dec. 2014/19]. On country programmes and related matters, the Executive Board approved the second programme extension, for one year, for Guinea-Bissau; the two-year programme extension for Burundi; and, on an exceptional basis, the country programme document for Kenya. The Board further took note of the first one-year programme extensions for Algeria, Lebanon and Uganda [dec. 2014/23]. At its second regular session in September, the Board adopted a decision on funding commitments to UNFPA and implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development [dec. 2014/25]; took note of the draft revised UNFPA oversight policy and the updated integrated resource plan for 2014–2017; approved the two-year programme extension for Botswana and the final country programmes for Afghanistan, Angola, Comoros, Sierra Leone, Timor-Leste, Tunisia and Venezuela. It also approved, in accordance with decision 2014/7, the country programmes for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ecuador, Guatemala, Paraguay and the State of Palestine [dec. 2014/29].

UNOPS

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) was established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 900] by General Assembly decision 48/501 [YUN 1994, p. 806] as a separate, self-financing entity of the UN system to act as a service provider to UN organizations. It offered a broad range of services, from overall project management to the provision of single inputs.

On 28 January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/6)], the Executive Board noted with regret that Jan Mattsson would retire from his position as UNOPS Executive Director effective 31 March. The Board commended him for his effective and innovative leadership of UNOPS from 2006 to 2014.

In 2014 [DP/OPS/2015/2], UNOPS delivered a range of more than 1,200 peacebuilding, humanitarian and development projects in over 80 countries. UNOPS delivery during the year was $1.2 billion, compared to $1.16 billion in 2013. That increase was mainly attributable to increased demand for UNOPS support to partners' development work in Afghanistan and Myanmar; mine action services in Mali, Somalia and South Sudan; and humanitarian response activities in the Middle East.

Key results on behalf of partners were the construction, design or rehabilitation of 175 bridges, 4,577 kilometres of road, 2 airstrips, 30 schools, and 18 hospitals and health clinics. Thirty-seven per cent of UNOPS-supported projects in 2014 provided employment for local people. That included the creation of more than 3 million days of paid work, the majority of which were generated by infrastructure projects. UNOPS procured more than $669 million worth of goods and services for its partners. Those included over 49,000 units of machinery and equipment, as well as more than 5,500 vehicles. Over 17.8 million medical supplies were handled, including the distribution of approximately 3.6 million diagnostic kits.

On 27 June [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/20)], the Executive Board welcomed the appointment of the new UNOPS Executive Director and took note of the contributions of UNOPS, often in the most challenging environments, to the operational results of the United Nations and its partners. It also welcomed the transformational change of UNOPS during the period of the strategic plan 2010–2013; the platform established for implementing the strategic plan 2014–2017 [YUN 2013, p. 853]; the continued increase of UNOPS delivery; the increased implementation of audit recommendations to 93 per cent; and the leadership role that UNOPS played in procurement, infrastructure and project management.

Audit reports

Board of Auditors report. In June, the UN Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly the UNOPS financial report and audited financial statements for the year ended 31 December 2013 [A/69/5/Add.11 & Corr.1]. UNOPS reported a net surplus of $14.7 million in 2013, compared with the net surplus for 2012 of $8.2 million. Expenses totalled $703.7 million, compared with $676.6 million in 2012. Total revenue for 2013 was $717.1 million, compared with $683.2 million in 2012. Almost half (47 per cent) of that revenue was generated by project management services and a further $255.2 million (37 per cent) from construction contracts. UNOPS also received $3.7 million in services in kind in 2013, related primarily to the estimated market rental value of office space provided by Denmark to accommodate UNOPS headquarters in Copenhagen. UNOPS spent $261.8 million in 2013 on contractual services, compared to $193.2 million in 2012. That total included payments to subcontractors and engineers for construction projects, and to vendors for security or for feasibility studies and research. Operating reserves at the end of 2013 were $82.8 million, four times higher than the minimum level of $20.2 million set by the Executive Board. As at 31 December 2013, UNOPS held total cash and investments of $1,015.5 million, compared with $1,257.6 million in 2012. The decrease of $242.1 million was mostly explained by the fact that UNOPS continued to settle outstanding balances with other UN entities, and consequently there was a $261.7 million reduction in UNOPS liabilities payable to those entities. UNOPS signed a record level of agreements with partners during 2013, and its cash position demonstrated that it will continue to fund a similar portfolio of work programmes in the future. At 31 December 2013, UNOPS held advances from project sponsors in the amount of $826.7 million (compared with $862.0 million in 2012), including $470.6 million classified as deferred revenue. That was equivalent to total delivery for nine months and showed that UNOPS financial position was solid. The report noted that as of March 2014, of the 28 recommendations of the Board made for 2012 and earlier, 11 (39 per cent) were implemented, 14 (50 per cent) were under implementation, and 3 (11 per cent) had not been implemented. Annexed to the report was a detailed commentary on the status of those recommendations.

Procurement

An annual statistical report on the procurement activities of UN system organizations [DP/OPS/2014/5] stated that the total UN system procurement under all sources of funding during 2013 was $16.1 billion, which represented an increase of $711 million, or 4.6 per cent, over 2012. The UN system procured goods and services from 192 countries in 2013, with 123 countries having an annual procurement volume of more than $10 million each in that year. Consistent with General Assembly resolutions 57/279 [YUN 2002, p. 1358] and 61/246 [YUN 2006, p. 1645], UN organizations continued to place more orders with vendors in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and the annual statistical report examined UN performance in that area. There was a steady growth of such orders over the 2009–2013 period, for a cumulative increase of 28.7 per cent. That increase represented an annual compounded growth rate of 6.1 per cent, compared with an overall average procurement volume growth of 3.7 per cent annually. The 10 major countries that supplied the UN system included four developing countries, with Afghanistan, India, Kenya and the United Arab Emirates accounting for 37.4 per cent of the total procurement volume. The United States remained the top supplier country with a 10.4 per cent share of total volume, followed by India (6.7 per cent) and Switzerland (4.5 per cent). A thematic supplement to the report focused on the issue of implementing innovative solutions in procurement.

On 5 September [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/26)], the Executive Board took note of the report and expressed its appreciation of the transparency under which the report was made available to the public by UNOPS through the International Aid Transparency Initiative.

Joint matters

Recommendations of the Board of Auditors

In January, the Executive Board considered the reports of UNDP [DP/2014/7], UNFPA [DP/FPA/2014/1] and UNOPS [DP/OPS/2014/1] on the status of the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for 2012.

The Board of Auditors report of UNDP for 2012 had issued 20 audit recommendations. Of these, the Board identified nine that had high priority, while the other 11 were assigned medium priority. The UNDP report [DP/2014/7] on the status of those recommendations noted that although the total number of 20 recommendations issued was numerically lower than that of previous audit periods, their full implementation was expected to be more demanding. At the end of September 2013, management actions had been taken on many of the 20 audit recommendations to ensure their implementation by the target completion dates. The report also reviewed progress in addressing the top nine audit priorities for 2012–2013.

The Board of Auditors report of UNFPA for 2012 made 11 new recommendations for 2012 and repeated one recommendation, compared to 34 for the period 2010–2011. The UNFPA report [DP/FPA/2014/1] on the status of those recommendations described progress and plans of implementation for both the main and previous recommendations on the following issues: the International Public Sector Accounting Standards; unfunded employee benefits liabilities; inventory management; consultants, experts and temporary assistance; human resources management; procurement and contract management; harmonized approach to cash transfers; information technology; internal audit and oversight; regionalization; and operating fund advances. The report concluded that UNFPA had to strengthen its management oversight, fiduciary duties and the monitoring of its field-level activities, including by enhancing the role and functions of the regional offices in programme delivery. To do so, UNFPA had developed and implemented new and revised policies, procedures and tools, and would continue strengthening its internal systems, controls, decision making and financial management.

The Board of Auditors report of UNOPS for 2012 made eight main recommendations classified as high priority and 10 recommendations classified as medium priority. The UNOPS report [DP/OPS/2014/1] on the status of those recommendations noted that the completion of their implementation was on track per the established timelines. Annexed to the report were specific responses to each recommendation. The report also noted that the Board of Auditors had given UNOPS an unqualified audit opinion, which was an achievement because in 2012, for the first time, UNOPS produced financial statements in compliance with the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS). It had also prepared the interim financial statements for the period January to June 2013 solely with internal resources.

On 30 January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/8)], the Executive Board took note of the reports of UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS on the status of implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations Board of Auditors for 2012. It welcomed the unqualified audit opinions issued by the Board of Auditors for 2012 for UNDP and UNFPA; supported ongoing UNDP and UNFPA management efforts in implementing the recommendations of the Board of Auditors for 2012; and requested UNDP and UNFPA to continue to strengthen internal controls and improve oversight and monitoring of country offices, including the timely implementation of outstanding recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and to continue to ensure compliance with policies and procedures for procurement, inventory tracking and bank reconciliation. The Executive Board also commended the efforts of UNOPS management for successfully addressing the challenges in making the transition from the UN system accounting standards to IPSAS.

Internal audit and oversight

At its June session, the Executive Board considered the internal audit and oversight activities reports of UNDP [DP/2014/16], UNFPA [DP/FPA/2014/6 & Add.1] and UNOPS [DP/OPS/2014/3] for the year ended 31 December 2013.

The UNDP report provided information on the activities of the UNDP Office of Audit and Investigations (OAI) in 2013, including details on OAI resources and information on issues related to the public disclosure of internal audit reports and experience gained from public disclosure to date. It also contained lessons learned on joint audits and on cases of fraud and actions taken in cases of misconduct. Appended to the report was the annual report of the Audit Advisory Committee.

The UNFPA report provided information on the activities of the UNFPA Division for Oversight Services (DOS) in 2013, including the overall audit assessment of the risk exposure of UNFPA; issues revealed through DOS internal audits and investigations; investigations of cases of fraud and actions taken; a review of internal audit recommendations issued in 2008–2013 and their implementation status; and the disclosure of internal audit reports. An addendum [DP/FPA/2014/6/Add.1] contained the annual report of the UNFPA Audit Advisory Committee and the management response thereto.

The UNOPS report provided information on the activities of the UNOPS Internal Audit and Investigations Group (IAIG) in 2013. It stated that 21 reports were released during the year, compared with 34 reports in 2012. The combined audit reports contained 135 audit recommendations, of which 87 pertained to internal audit reports and 48 to project audit reports. The top six areas of audit recommendations were human resources (25 per cent), project management (24 per cent), general administration (23 per cent), procurement (15 per cent), corporate strategic management and leadership (8 per cent), and finance (5 per cent). Of the audit recommendations issued in or prior to 2011, 99.9 per cent were implemented, as were 63 per cent of those issued in 2012. The overall implementation of audit recommendations issued from 2008—the year IAIG started conducting internal audits—to 2013 was 93 per cent. There were several annexes to the report, including the 2013 annual report of the Strategy and Audit Advisory Committee.

On 27 June [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/21)], the Executive Board took note of the reports of the three entities; noted with concern the number of recurring recommendations in the areas of project management, financial management, monitoring and procurement; and requested UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS to step up their efforts to achieve the timely, full, complete, and sustained implementation of all outstanding and new audit recommendations. The Board also urged UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS to continue to strengthen the audit and investigative functions, and to ensure those offices were sufficiently resourced to carry out their mandates, including through the analysis of audit coverage and resources in future annual reports. With regard to UNDP, the Board requested UNDP management to provide information on how accountability and oversight mechanisms would operate in the new UNDP structure. With regard to UNFPA, the Board encouraged the Fund to develop and implement effective risk management policies to ensure effective delivery of the strategic plan. With regard to UNOPS, the Board noted with appreciation the progress made in the implementation of audit recommendations more than 18 months old.

Ethics offices

At its annual meeting in June, the Executive Board considered the reports of the UNDP Ethics Office [DP/2014/17], the UNFPA Ethics Office [DP/FPA/2014/4] and the UNOPS Ethics Office [DP/OPS/2014/4], covering their respective activities in 2013 in such areas as standard-setting and policy support; training, education and outreach; advice and guidance; financial disclosure; and protection of staff against retaliation for reporting misconduct and for cooperating with audits or investigations.

On 27 June [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/22)], the Executive Board took note of the reports of the Ethics Offices of UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS, and requested those offices to improve protections for whistle-blowers by developing and implementing an effective policy on protection against retaliation that specified a statute of limitations of a minimum of six months for reporting retaliation. The Board encouraged the ethics offices to continue expanding their ethics training programmes, and to continue their efforts to achieve coherence with other members of the Ethics Panel of the United Nations regarding the ethics policies, standards and practices of their respective agencies.

Financial, budgetary and administrative matters

Procurement

At its second regular session in September, the Executive Board considered the report of UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS on joint procurement activities [DP-FPA-OPS/2014/1]. The report presented key findings and outcomes from the common procurement work conducted in 2013 and set out the initiatives underway in 2014. It concluded that collaborative procurement initiatives led by UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS delivered significant improvements and savings across the UN system. Many of those projects also eliminated duplication, increased consistency and strengthened country office procurement. As cooperative projects continued throughout 2014, the organizations were increasing their commitment to pursue common opportunities across a range of products and sectors.

On 5 September [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/27)], the Executive Board welcomed the progress made by UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS on joint procurement initiatives and encouraged them and other UN agencies to work closer together, with the High-level Committee on Management Procurement Network and other development partners, centrally and at the country level, to further identify opportunities to aggregate demand and consolidate buying to obtain better prices. The Board also called upon UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS and other UN agencies to incorporate the building of programme country procurement capacity into their overall capacity development work, and to increase opportunities for suppliers from developing countries and countries with economies in transition. It requested UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS to further improve the monitoring of joint procurement activities and to report regularly on the implementation of the United Nations model framework for vendor sanctions.

Other matters

Global Environment Facility

At the second regular session, the Director, ad interim, of the UNDP Bureau for Policy and Programme Support presented a note by the Administrator of the Global Environment Facility (GEF) [DP/2014/23] describing amendments to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility (GEF Instrument), their rationale and key implications for UNDP. The amendments addressed five matters: the confirmation that GEF should operate as one of the entities comprising the financial mechanism of the Minamata Convention on Mercury [YUN 2013, p. 1336]; the separation of the role of GEF for each convention that it served; the replacement of the focal areas of ozone layer depletion and of persistent organic pollutants by the focal area of chemicals and waste; the update of the eligibility criteria of countries to receive GEF funding; and the inclusion of references to the UNDP Independent Evaluation Office. In accordance with paragraph 34 of the Instrument, the amendments would become effective only after adoption by the three GEF Implementing Agencies, namely UNDP, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the World Bank, which also served as the Trustee. The note recommended that the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board adopt the amendments.

On 5 September [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/28)], the Executive Board decided to adopt the amendments to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility as approved by the Fifth Assembly of the Global Environment Facility (Cancún, Mexico, 28–29 May 2014).

Field visits

A delegation of six members of the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board visited Tajikistan (24–30 June 2013) [DP-FPA/2014/CRP.1] to observe the operations and programmes of UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS and gain insight into the contributions of those organizations at the country level. The United Nations had been present in Tajikistan since 1992, starting with the United Nations Tajikistan Office of Peace-building, which concluded its mission in October 2007. Since 1993, the United Nations had increased its presence to comprise 23 specialized agencies, funds and programmes. The UN Country Team (UNCT) in Tajikistan was the largest in the Europe and Commonwealth of Independent States region, reflecting the importance and impact of the United Nations on the country's development. UNDP remained the largest UN organization in Tajikistan, accounting for nearly two thirds of the total number of implemented programmes. The delegation observed good collaboration by UNCT with the Government and among donors, and a thoughtful approach to the sustainability of UNCT endeavours. With the support of the UN and the international community, Tajikistan had advanced in the adoption of more sustainable policies and systems to manage its economy and environment, and it was better equipped to respond to natural disasters and security challenges. Still, it remained the poorest of Central Asian countries and continued to face critical development issues regarding access to reliable energy; acute water shortages; population issues, including maternal and child mortality rates; and related issues of gender equality stemming from stereotypes in Tajik society concerning the roles of women and men and traditional customs and practices. The UNCT displayed techniques that represented best practices, within and beyond the region, both in terms of programming and the organization of work, and the delegation concluded that its work should continue and expand.

At its first regular session, the Executive Board took note of the report of the field visit to Tajikistan [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/9)].

A 25-member delegation of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS, UNICEF, WFP and UN-Women visited Panama and El Salvador (23 March–1 April) [DP/FPA/OPS-ICEF-UNW-WFP/2014/CRP.8] to enhance their understanding of the role of the UN development system in general and especially that of the specific organizations in the region. It was the first joint field visit to Latin America in over 10 years. The delegation learned about the role and functions of the Panama-based United Nations Regional Team in supporting and coordinating UNCTs and national Governments in the region, and considered the development of a “Delivering as Region” modality for Latin America and the Caribbean. In El Salvador, the delegation observed the role of UNCT in its efforts to achieve sustainable development, especially the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Despite being classified as a lower middle-income country, some aspects of the situation in El Salvador suggested that it might be regarded as non-typical of this category (e.g., the quality of house construction, access to drinking water and sanitation and access to education). The country had made tremendous progress in development in recent years, but still faced a number of development issues, notably the fragile rule of law; weak institutions; widespread income poverty and income inequality; limited basic social services; underemployment and unemployment; corruption; violence and crime, including a high rate of gender-based violence and violence against children and adolescents; and unplanned urbanization accompanied by environmental degradation and vulnerability to natural disasters. The delegation recommended that UNCT continue to assist the Government in building on the socioeconomic progress achieved in recent years and continue to provide policy advice on inclusive and sustainable development progress.

A delegation representing the UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS Executive Board visited Fiji and Samoa (22–29 April 2014) [DP/FPA/2014/CRP.2] to enhance the Board's understanding of how UN organizations, in particular UNDP and UNFPA, positioned their engagement with the Pacific small island developing States. The visit—the first to the Pacific Islands region—was timely, given the upcoming Third International Conference on Small Island Developing States (1–4 September, Apia, Samoa) (see p. 995), and the delegation noted that the work of the UN entities was closely aligned with the UN Development Assistance Framework and with major regional plans and strategies for the Pacific. The delegation concluded that the priority for major regional plans and strategies should remain on strengthening national development capacities, on supporting community resilience and mechanisms for coping with the adverse effects of climate change and natural disasters, and on eliminating violence against women and girls.

At its second regular session, the Executive Board took note of the respective reports of the joint field visits to Panama and El Salvador, and to Fiji and Samoa [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/29)].

Other cooperation

UN Office for Partnerships

The United Nations Office for Partnerships, reformed in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1046], served as the gateway for public-private partnerships with the UN system in furtherance of the MDGs. It oversaw the United Nations Fund for International Partnerships (UNFIP) and the United Nations Democracy Fund (UNDEF), and provided partnership advisory and outreach services.

Report of Secretary-General. In July [A/69/218], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the activities of the activities of the United Nations Office for Partnerships. The report was submitted pursuant to General Assembly decisions 52/466 [YUN 1998, p. 1297] and 53/475 [YUN 1999, p. 1318], wherein the Secretary-General was requested to inform the Assembly, on a regular basis, about the activities of the Office [YUN 2013, p. 858]. The report supplemented the information contained in the 15 previous reports of the Secretary-General, submitted between 1998 and 2013.

On 29 December (decision 69/552), the General Assembly took note of the report.

UN Fund for International Partnerships

UNFIP was established in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 1297] to serve as the interface between the UN system and the United Nations Foundation, a public charity responsible for administering Robert E. Turner's $1 billion contribution in support of UN causes. At the end of 2014, the cumulative allocations approved by the United Nations Foundation for UNFIP projects reached approximately $1.36 billion. Of this amount, it was estimated that $0.45 billion (about 33 per cent) represented core Turner funds and $0.91 billion (about 67 per cent) was generated from co-financing partners. The total number of UN projects and programmes supported as at the end of 2014 by the United Nations Foundation through UNFIP stood at 563. Collectively, those projects were implemented by 43 UN entities in 124 countries.

In 2014, the UN Foundation approved projects totalling $56.8 million, the majority of which ($53.8 million) focused on global health. Health-related projects supported by the Foundation through UNFIP during the year included the Measles Initiative (renamed the Measles and Rubella Initiative in 2012) by the disbursement of $51 million to UNICEF and WHO; the Nothing But Nets campaign to fight malaria by the disbursement of over $1,123,000 to support the distribution of insecticide-treated bednets and other interventions by UNICEF and UNHCR in Chad, Cameroon and Madagascar; a grant of $100,000 to address energy needs in health-care facilities in five sub-Saharan countries; and a grant of $1,551,500 to WHO to procure supplies to assist Governments in the management of Ebola cases. For the Girl Up campaign, the Foundation disbursed through UNFIP almost $900,000 to UNICEF and UNHCR to support projects that advance the education of Somali refugee girls in Ethiopia and the rights of adolescent girls in Guatemala, including by strengthening mechanisms for protection against gender-based violence. Energy and climate projects that received grants in 2014 included the Sustainable Energy for All initiative, the Climate Change Support Team in the Executive Office of the Secretary-General, and WHO clean household energy planning tool.

UN Democracy Fund

UNDEF was established by the Secretary-General in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 655] to support democratization around the world. It focused on strengthening the voice of civil society, promoting human rights and ensuring the participation of all groups in democratic processes. Through the Fund, the Office channeled approximately $145 million to more than 540 projects in over 120 countries around the world, ranging from strengthening civil society leadership skills and promoting the participation of women and youth, to media programmes allowing civil society to project its voice.

In 2014, the eighth round of funding came amid upheavals in several parts of the world. Both civil society groups and the media continued to face growing pressures and restrictions, and the closing space for civil society became an alarming feature in a range of countries on several continents. Against this background, the Fund received 2,062 project proposals for its eighth round of funding, reflecting a high demand for support. The proposals originated from organizations in 133 countries, most of which were local non-governmental organizations in Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean. The eighth-round project selection emphasized the media, with almost 40 per cent of selected projects operating in this field. That reflected a recognition of the media as having a revolutionizing impact in democratization processes, and the need to safeguard media freedom in the face of threats and pressures. Forty-nine projects were funded at a total cost of $9,455,000. The activities of those projects covered media (38 per cent), community development (18 per cent), youth (16 per cent), rule of law and human rights (12 per cent), strengthening instrumentalities of government (6 per cent), tools (6 per cent) and women's empowerment (4 per cent). In November, the Fund launched its ninth round for project proposals. When applications closed on 31 December, the Fund had received 2,331 project proposals that would be assessed by March 2015.

Partnership advisory and outreach services

The United Nations Office for Partnerships provided advisory and outreach services in response to the growing demand from the UN system, Governments and non-State actors in pursuing public-private partnerships. In 2014, companies, foundations and NGOs approached the Office to explore opportunities for engagement with the United Nations and to assist with pooling expertise and resources to address issues on the UN agenda. To promote the post-2015 development agenda, the Office collaborated with partners on high-impact events and issued advice on best practices for promoting the MDGs. Ten key initiatives were divided into three partner categories: Member States, the UN system and other international organizations, and the private sector and civil society. Initiatives included the permanent memorial at the United Nations to the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade; a conference and exhibit to highlight crowd-sourced projects for resilient schools and emergency shelters for areas affected by natural disasters and wars; the 2014 Equator Prize to recognize leadership by indigenous and local communities to meet climate and development challenges through sustainable solutions; World Toilet Day; the International Women's Day forum; the Media for Social Impact Summit; the Social Innovation Summit 2014; a Global Accelerator event to engage entrepreneurs on UN objectives and the post-2015 development agenda; a conference on "Changing lives through mobile: innovation in emerging markets"; and the Blouin Creative Leadership Summit.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

South-South and triangular cooperation

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/230 [YUN 2013, p. 859], the Secretary-General presented the state of South-South cooperation in a July report [A/69/153], which found that UN agencies, funds and programmes had strengthened their own capacities to support South-South cooperation and mainstream it in their policies, strategies and programmes, but they still needed improved coordination and greater financial support from both traditional sources and new public and private actors. In that context, the Special Unit for South-South Cooperation was upgraded to the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation in 2013, and its head was made Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on South-South Cooperation in May 2014.

The report contained recommendations on improving the system-wide governance, focus, coherence and coordination of South-South cooperation to maximize its development impact. South-South cooperation should continue to be mainstreamed in the operational work of the UN system through the development of more guidance tools that were aligned with the perspectives of Member States and the mandates of UN organizations and agencies. Also important was continued access by the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation and UN-system South-South cooperation focal points to the UNDP global operations and country office network, UN country teams and the UN resident coordinator system, under the auspices of UNDP, as host of the Office and Chair of the United Nations Development Group. There was progress on the implementation of recommendations emanating from the report of the Joint Inspection Unit [YUN 2012, p. 893], as well as the 2012 evaluation of UNDP support to South-South cooperation, but recommendations related to the workings of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation as the key governance structure for South-South cooperation in the UN system were unfulfilled and should be prioritized, starting with consultations with Member States on updating the rules of procedure of the Committee, which were established in 1980.

High-level Committee. The High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation, at its eighteenth session (New York, 19–22 May and 6 June) [A/69/39], considered a report [SSC/18/1] by the United Nations Office on South-South Cooperation on the review of progress made in implementing the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, the new directions strategy for South-South cooperation and the Nairobi outcome document of the High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, taking into account the complementary role of South-South cooperation in the implementation of relevant major UN conferences in the social, economic and related fields. The Committee also considered two notes by the Secretary-General on the framework of operational guidelines on UN support to South-South and triangular cooperation [SSC/17/3 & SSC/18/2]; a report of the Secretary-General on measures to further strengthen the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation [SSC/18/3]; a report on the intersessional meeting of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation in June 2013 [SSC/17/IM/L.2]; and a note by the UNDP Administrator on the organization of work [SSC/18/L.3].

In the context of the post-2015 development agenda, the Committee held a thematic discussion on the contributions and strategy of the United Nations development system to promote and strengthen South-South cooperation. The debate touched upon issues of food security, the voice of the South in global governance, the potential of regional public goods, and successful approaches to tackling the challenges of poverty and income inequality, environmental sustainability and climate change.

In a decision adopted during the session [A/69/39 (dec. 18/1)], the Committee requested the UNDP Administrator, as Chair of the United Nations Development Group, to make recommendations on the additional support that entities of the UN system and Member States could provide to South-South and triangular cooperation, and to establish a more formalized and strengthened inter-agency mechanism coordinated by the UN Office for South-South Cooperation, with a view to encouraging information-sharing on development activities and results achieved by organizations through their respective business models in support of South-South and triangular cooperation. It requested the Secretary-General to submit to the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation at its nineteenth (2016) session a comprehensive report on the progress made in the implementation of the decision. The Committee also approved the provisional agenda for its nineteenth session [dec. 18/2].

On 14 July (decision 2014/228), the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation on its eighteenth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/473/Add.2], adopted resolution 69/239 by recorded vote (129-44-7) [agenda item 24 (b)].

South-South cooperation

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 64/222 of 21 December 2009, in which it endorsed the Nairobi outcome document of the High-level United Nations Conference on South-South Cooperation, Reaffirming also its resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries,

Recalling its resolutions 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 60/212 of 22 December 2005, 62/209 of 19 December 2007, 63/233 of 19 December 2008, 64/1 of 6 October 2009, 66/219 of 22 December 2011, 67/227 of 21 December 2012, 68/230 of 20 December 2013 and other resolutions relevant to South-South cooperation,

Noting the announcement by the Secretary-General of the designation of the Director of the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation as his Envoy on South-South Cooperation,

1. Takes note of the report of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation on its eighteenth Session, the decisions taken at that session, in particular decision 18/1, and the decisions taken at the intersessional meeting of 4 June 2013;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the state of South-South cooperation;

3. Further takes note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on South-South and triangular cooperation in the United Nations system, including its recommendations, and the related note by the Secretary-General;

4. Recognizes the importance and unique history and particularities of South-South cooperation, and reaffirms its view of South-South cooperation as a manifestation of solidarity among peoples and countries of the South that contributes to their national well-being, national and collective self-reliance and the attainment of internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and that South-South cooperation and its agenda have to be set by countries of the South and should continue to be guided by the principles of respect for national sovereignty, national ownership and independence, equality, non-conditionality, non-interference in domestic affairs and mutual benefit;

5. Also recognizes that South-South cooperation is a partnership among equals based on solidarity and should not be seen as official development assistance, acknowledges in this regard the need to enhance the development effectiveness of South-South cooperation by continuing to increase its mutual accountability and transparency, as well as coordinating its initiatives with other development projects and programmes on the ground, in accordance with national development plans and priorities, and further recognizes that the impact of South-South cooperation should be assessed with a view to improving, as appropriate, its quality in a results-oriented manner;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to present, during the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, further information on the assignments and duties to be taken up by the Director of the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation, including any potential financial and institutional implications deriving from his appointment as the Envoy of the Secretary-General on South-South Cooperation;

7. Encourages the funds, programmes, the specialized agencies and other entities of the United Nations system to take further concrete measures, as appropriate, to effectively mainstream support to South-South and triangular cooperation in their policy and regular programming work, and in this context requests those organizations and the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation to leverage each other's institutional and technical capacities;

8. Recognizes the need to continue to mutually enrich South-South cooperation, based on the diverse experiences of and good practices from South-South cooperation, triangular cooperation and North-South cooperation, and to further explore complementarities and synergies between them;

9. Invites relevant Member States to share and exchange best practices in planning, implementation, data collection and information and knowledge management in order to further improve the impact of South-South and triangular cooperation initiatives on sustainable development;

10. Stresses that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation;

11. Recognizes the importance of considering South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation in the context of the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

12. Reaffirms the mandate and the central role of the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation as the focal point for promoting and facilitating South-South and triangular cooperation for development on a global and United Nations system-wide basis, recalls decision 18/1 of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation, and requests the Secretary-General, noting that further deliberation by Member States on the options presented in his report on measures to further strengthen the Office for South-South Cooperation will be required before a decision is taken on the idea of separating the Office for South-South Cooperation as operationally autonomous from the United Nations Development Programme, to present, as part of his comprehensive report to the High-level Committee at its special intersessional session to be held in 2015, in consultation with Member States, the Office for South-South Cooperation and the United Nations Development Programme, a comprehensive proposal on up-scaling the Office in financial, human and budgetary terms under the auspices of the United Nations Development Programme, including through the appointment of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on South-South Cooperation, and at the same time recommending specific contributions of the United Nations Development Programme under such a change;

13. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme to explore and undertake intensive, innovative and additional resource mobilization initiatives to attract more resources, both financial and in kind, to supplement regular resources and other funds for activities involving South-South cooperation in order to enable it to respond effectively and efficiently to the South-South cooperation needs of Member States and the United Nations system;

14. Acknowledges and encourages the initiatives and arrangements undertaken as part of the efforts to enhance cooperation among developing countries, including in the areas of eradication of poverty and hunger, gender equality, the empowerment of women, access to information and communications technologies, science and technology, environment, culture, health, education and human development, including through multilateral multi-stakeholder and public-private partnerships;

15. Requests the United Nations development system to further assess, within the scope of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General, progress made in its support, particularly with regard to the provision of adequate resources and the mobilization of technical and financial resources for South-South cooperation, as well as in mainstreaming South-South cooperation into the work of the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies in the field;

16. Also requests the United Nations development system to continue improving coordination among its agencies in order to enhance its support to South-South and triangular cooperation and monitor progress at the global and regional levels and to continue evaluating the support of the United Nations development system for those activities;

17. Requests, in this regard, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, as Chair of the United Nations Development Group, to establish a more formalized and strengthened inter-agency mechanism, co-ordinated by the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation, with a view to encouraging joint support for South-South and triangular initiatives, as well as sharing information on development activities and results achieved by various organizations through their respective business models in support of South-South and triangular cooperation, calls upon the United Nations development system to designate representational focal points to join the mechanism, and requests the Administrator to give the Office for South-South Cooperation the opportunity to be represented more regularly in strategic and coordination mechanisms of the Development Group when matters affecting South-South and triangular cooperation are being discussed;

18. Also requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, as Chair of the United Nations Development Group, to make specific recommendations on additional support that the United Nations system and its entities could provide to South-South and triangular cooperation, which could include voluntary secondment of staff and the appointment of Junior Professional Officers to the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation;

19. Requests the United Nations development system to accord a high priority to facilitating programmes and projects of South-South and triangular cooperation and to assist countries of the South, upon their request, in implementing them in order to ensure that sustainability is a key component of those projects;

20. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme and other relevant organizations of the United Nations development system to assist developing countries in implementing projects on South-South cooperation, upon request and in a manner consistent with their mandates and strategic plans;

21. Recognizes the need to mobilize adequate resources for enhancing South-South and triangular cooperation, and in this context invites all countries in a position to do so to contribute, in support of such cooperation, to the United Nations Fund for South-South Cooperation and also to the Pérez-Guerrero Trust Fund for South-South Cooperation, in accordance with its resolution 57/263 of 20 December 2002, and to support other initiatives for all developing countries, including technology transfers among developing countries;

22. Requests the United Nations development system to encourage the transfer of technologies for the benefit of developing countries to address poverty eradication and sustainable development;

23. Recognizes that South-South and triangular cooperation are mutually supportive in terms of both technical and financial assistance, emphasizes in this regard the importance of further invigorating South-South cooperation, and invites all Member States to enhance South-South and triangular cooperation, focusing on shared development priorities with the involvement of all relevant stakeholders in Governments, the private sector and civil society, including volunteer groups;

24. Invites the regional commissions, where relevant, to further harness the knowledge network, partnerships, technical and research capacity in support of enhanced subregional, regional and interregional South-South cooperation and to use the meetings of the regional coordination mechanism, as appropriate, as a tool for advancing system-wide cooperation and coordination in support of South-South cooperation at the regional level;

25. Requests all Member States and the United Nations development system to foster complementarities among North-South and South-South and triangular cooperation through greater evidence-based policy dialogue on strategic cross-cutting issues, in particular for the application of science, technology and innovation and the integration of a gender perspective into the pursuit of sustainable development;

26. Requests the Secretary-General, in his report to the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation at its nineteenth session, to provide an update on concrete steps taken to further strengthen South-South cooperation within the United Nations development system;

27. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Operational activities for development", the sub-item entitled "South-South cooperation for development", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a comprehensive report on the state of South-South cooperation within the context of the implementation of the present resolution, including an assessment of the concrete measures taken by the United Nations development system to improve its support to South-South cooperation and the implementation of the present resolution.

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 2014, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) responded to humanitarian challenges due to natural disasters and conflicts. Crises in the Central African Republic, Iraq, the Philippines, South Sudan and Syria were classified as level-three emergencies requiring immediate scale-up. Besides the Ebola virus disease outbreak in West Africa where OCHA assisted with coordination in health, food security and sanitation and protection, elsewhere in the world OCHA assisted at least 52 million people with material assistance worth $12.9 billion. At year's end, however, the number of people in need increased to 76 million and the requirement went up to $18.05 billion. Despite donors providing record levels of funding, by December, the United Nations and its humanitarian partners had received 61 per cent or $11 billion in funding. During the year, the number of people displaced internally or fleeing as refugees exceeded 50 million—the highest since 1945.

In 2014, humanitarian appeals and response plans were launched for Afghanistan, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, the Gambia, Haiti, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, Myanmar, the Niger, Nigeria, the Philippines, the Republic of Congo, Senegal, Somalia, South Sudan, the Sudan, Syria, Ukraine, Yemen, the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the Sahel region.

In June, the Economic and Social Council considered ways to strengthen the coordination of UN emergency humanitarian assistance. The General Assembly adopted resolutions on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters from relief to development; reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon; the twentieth anniversary of the participation of the White Helmets in UN humanitarian, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development activities; the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction; international cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan; and the New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support. The Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF) continued to allow for the rapid provision of assistance to populations affected by sudden-onset disasters and underfunded emergencies. In 2014, CERF allocated more than $460 million for humanitarian action in 45 countries worldwide.

Humanitarian assistance

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

In accordance with Council decision 2014/211 of 23 April, the humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council (New York, 23–25 June) [A/69/3/Rev.1] at its substantive session of 2014 considered the theme “The future of humanitarian affairs: towards greater inclusiveness, coordination, interoperability and effectiveness”. It convened two panels—one on effective Humanitarian Assistance; and another on serving the needs of people in complex emergencies. An informal event was also held on 23 June, in response to decision 2014/215, on supporting the process of transition from relief to development: funding and risk management.

The Council, along with the General Assembly, considered the Secretary-General's April report [A/69/80-E/2014/68] on strengthening the coordination of the emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, submitted in response to Assembly resolutions 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421] and 68/102 [YUN 2013, p. 869], and Council resolution 2013/6 [ibid., p. 863]. The report described the major humanitarian trends and challenges between January and December 2013 and discussed issues on reducing vulnerability and managing risk; transformation through innovation; serving the needs of people in conflict; and humanitarian effectiveness. The report also reviewed efforts to improve humanitarian coordination and response with recommendations for further improvement.

At the end of 2013, the global number of internally displaced persons (IDPs) resulting from armed conflict and generalized violence was estimated at 33.2 million, the highest number ever recorded by the Internal Displacement Monitoring Centre. Although an estimated 1 million people were able to return home in 2013, over 8.1 million were newly displaced. By mid-2013, the global refugee population stood at 11.1 million, 600,000 higher than six months earlier. The Centre for Research on the Epidemiology of Disasters recorded 334 disasters, which claimed an estimated 22,600 lives, affected 97 million people and caused over $118 billion in damages. Asia continued to be the region most impacted by natural disasters, with almost half (160) of the disasters occurring in the region, accounting for 88 per cent of the number of people killed.

In the Middle East region, the situation in the Syrian Arab Republic continued to deteriorate rapidly. The number of people in need had risen to 9.3 million, including 6.5 million IDPs. At least another 2.3 million people had sought refuge in Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey, as well as Egypt and other countries. In Yemen, sectarian and inter-tribal fighting continued to create displacement and limit returns. In October 2013, new fighting erupted in northern Yemen, where about 300,000 people continued to live in protracted displacement with limited prospects of returning to their areas of origin. In the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the number of people displaced by demolitions or evictions in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, increased from 886 in 2012 to 1,103 in 2013; and the blockade on the Gaza Strip continued to cause high levels of unemployment and food insecurity, leaving the majority of people in Gaza dependent on aid.

Africa also saw the intensification of a number of conflicts. In the Central African Republic, an estimated 2.3 million people, more than half of the country's population, were in need of assistance. In South Sudan, 1 million people faced acute food insecurity caused by displacement resulting from inter-communal violence as well as seasonal flooding. In the Sudan, inter-tribal conflict and sporadic clashes in Darfur displaced close to 400,000 people, bringing the total number of displaced people in Darfur to over 2 million. Humanitarian partners could not reach an estimated 800,000 people in areas controlled by the Sudan People's Liberation Movement-North (SPLM-North) in South Kordofan and Blue Nile States from within the Sudan. In addition, over half a million Sudanese remained in refugee camps in Chad, Ethiopia and South Sudan. In Mali, 3 million people were affected by food insecurity and in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, at the end of the year, there were nearly 3 million IDPs—many displaced multiple times. In Somalia, for the first time in five years and despite ongoing fighting in some parts of the country, the number of people in need of life-saving assistance decreased—from over 1 million to 857,000—reflecting modest gains in food security. Some 2 million people, however, continued to live on the verge of food and nutrition insecurity and required support.

In the Asia-Pacific region, intercommunal tensions and violence displaced over 140,000 people in Rakhine State, and 100,000 people in Kachin. In Afghanistan, more than 124,000 people were newly displaced in 2013, bringing the total number of displaced people to 631,000. In Pakistan, approximately 1 million people remained displaced in Khyber Pakhtunkwa and the Federally Administered Tribal Areas. In addition, 1.6 million Afghan refugees resided in Pakistan, constituting the world's largest protracted refugee situation. In the Philippines, fighting between armed groups and violent clan feuds continued in Mindanao, where over 140 people were killed and 130,000 displaced. Approximately half of the displaced returned home in late 2013.

Typhoon Haiyan (locally known as Yolanda) made landfall in the Philippines on 8 November, resulting in the largest loss of life from a natural disaster in 2013, affecting over 14 million people, including 5.4 million children. The Government reported at least 6,200 deaths and 1,700 people missing. Over 4 million people were displaced and over 1 million homes were damaged, half of them destroyed. Haiyan came less than one month after an earthquake measuring 7.2 on the Richter scale which hit the nearby island province of Bohol. In Pakistan, monsoon flooding affected approximately 1.5 million people, a significant decrease from previous years (18 million in 2010 and 5 million in 2011 and 2012). In Iran, an earthquake impacted western Balochistan in April, followed by a major earthquake in Balochistan in September, affecting 215,000 people and killing over 400.

In Africa, in the Sahel region, 11.4 million people remained food insecure while 5 million children were at risk of malnutrition. Close to 500,000 people were affected by floods in the Sahel, an estimated 233,000 of them in the Niger. Heavy rains caused flooding across Mozambique, while Tropical Cyclone Haruna made landfall over southwest Madagascar. The Seychelles declared a state of emergency in three districts owing to floods and landslides. Haiti continued to recover from the multiple shocks suffered in the last few years, but critical needs remained, with an estimated 3 million people with chronic and acute needs requiring life- and livelihood-saving interventions. Following the 2010 earthquake [YUN 2010, p. 320], over 146,000 people remained displaced, living in 271 displaced persons' sites.

In 2013, the United Nations and its partners continued to improve the quality and effectiveness of humanitarian action, including through the transformative agenda of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee—a mechanism for inter-agency coordination of humanitarian assistance, bringing together UN and non-UN humanitarian partners. An important element of the transformative agenda was the introduction in 2013 of improvements to the humanitarian programme cycle concept, designed to strengthen the way in which humanitarian actors work collectively, including with and in support of Governments, in order to help meet the needs of people affected by natural disasters and conflict. The programme cycle consisted of five elements: needs assessment and analysis; strategic response planning; resource mobilization; implementation and monitoring; and operational review and evaluation. Coordination and information management were key enablers for each of those steps, as effective, strategic and accountable humanitarian action was based on assessments and analysis of needs.

On humanitarian financing, the Secretary-General reported that in 2013, ninety-five countries, as well as numerous multilateral and regional organizations, private sector organizations and individuals, contributed a total of $14.4 billion in funding to multilateral inter-agency response plans and complementary humanitarian action. That was an increase of $1.6 billion from 2012, largely owing to the magnitude of the crisis in Syria and the response to Typhoon Haiyan-Yolanda in the Philippines. Member States and the private sector contributed $474 million to the Central Emergency Response Fund, the highest-ever annual total. Those funds enabled the Emergency Relief Coordinator to allocate $482 million for urgent humanitarian response in 45 countries and territories. More than 65 per cent of the funding was used to respond to complex emergencies, 20 per cent to natural disasters and 14 per cent went to other protracted humanitarian emergencies.

The Secretary-General recommended that Member States, the UN and humanitarian actors continue to identify, understand and analyse the distinct needs, challenges and coping capacities of women, girls, boys and men, including by improving the disaggregation of sex-, age- and disability-specific data during collation and their use in analysis and programme planning; strengthen the participation of all affected women, girls, boys and men in decision-making structures; and consistently utilize the gender marker and other monitoring tools to improve gender and age analysis and track funding allocations.

On 25 June [meeting 29], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/13 [draft: E/2014/L.18] without vote [agenda item 7].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, and recalling other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and relevant resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming also the principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance, and the need for all actors engaged in the provision of humanitarian assistance in situations of complex emergencies and natural disasters to promote and fully respect those principles,

Recalling its decision 2014/211 of 23 April 2014, in which it decided that the theme for the humanitarian affairs segment of its 2014 session would be “The future of humanitarian affairs: towards greater inclusiveness, coordination, interoperability and effectiveness” and that it would convene two panels, on the topics “Effective humanitarian assistance” and “Serving the needs of people in complex emergencies”,

Expressing deep concern at the increasing challenges to Member States and to the United Nations humanitarian response capacity posed by the consequences of natural disasters, including those related to the continuing impact of climate change, by the ongoing impact of the financial and economic crisis and by the regional food crises and continuing food insecurity, and the potential of those challenges to increase the need for resources for disaster risk reduction, preparedness and humanitarian assistance, including in developing countries,

Expressing grave concern at the increase in the number of people affected by humanitarian emergencies, including those associated with natural hazards and complex emergencies, at the increased impact of natural disasters and at the frequently protracted displacement resulting from humanitarian emergencies, recognizing the need for burden sharing in this regard, and noting with appreciation efforts at the national and international levels that promote national capacity-building to address complex challenges in this regard,

Condemning the increasing number of attacks and other acts of violence against humanitarian personnel, facilities, assets and supplies, including medical personnel and humanitarian personnel exclusively engaged in medical duties, transports and facilities, and expressing deep concern about the negative implications of such attacks for the provision of humanitarian assistance to affected populations,

Noting with grave concern that violence, including sexual and gender-based violence and violence against children, continues to be deliberately directed against civilian populations in many emergency situations,

Reiterating the need to mainstream a gender perspective into humanitarian assistance in a comprehensive and consistent manner,

Emphasizing that building and strengthening resilience at the local, national, and regional levels is critical to reducing the impact of disasters, including by saving lives, reducing suffering, mitigating damage to property and providing a more predictable and effective delivery of assistance and relief, and in this regard, while recognizing that building resilience is a long-term development process, stressing the need for continued investment in preparedness, prevention, mitigation and response capacity,

Emphasizing also the importance of improving information-sharing among Member States and the United Nations system and, where appropriate, with relevant humanitarian and development organizations, about risks that can lead to humanitarian crises, and of investing in building capacity, in particular for developing countries, to analyse, manage and reduce such risks and vulnerabilities to hazards, as well as, where appropriate, to improve risk analysis and its use in planning,

Recognizing the clear relationship between emergency response, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, and reaffirming that, in order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, emergency assistance must be provided in ways that will be supportive of recovery and long-term development and that emergency measures should be accompanied by development measures as a step towards the sustainable development of affected States, and in this regard highlighting the importance of closer cooperation between national stakeholders, including the private sector, as appropriate, and humanitarian and development actors,

Noting the contribution, as appropriate, of relevant regional and subregional organizations in the provision of humanitarian assistance within their region, upon the request of the affected State,

Recognizing that volunteerism can make an important contribution to community and nationally led efforts at all stages of humanitarian action,

Noting the importance of identifying best practices and opportunities to enhance the effective interaction and co-ordination between the United Nations and humanitarian organizations, donors, affected Governments, civil society, the private sector and other relevant actors and to make the best use of their expertise, available capacities, comparative advantages and resources with the overall aim of providing effective humanitarian assistance,

Recognizing the need for the United Nations system and its partners to improve and strengthen the coordination and accountability of humanitarian assistance and leadership within the United Nations humanitarian response system in support of national efforts, and noting the efforts made by the United Nations and its partners, including through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 68/1 of 20 September 2013, in which the Assembly stated that the Council and the Assembly, especially its Second and Third Committees, need to consider and take steps towards the rationalization of their agendas, with a view to eliminating duplication and overlap and promoting complementarity in the consideration and negotiation of similar or related issues,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Requests Member States, relevant organizations and other relevant actors to ensure that all aspects and stages of humanitarian response address the specific needs, challenges and coping capacities of women, girls, men and boys, on an equal basis, taking into consideration age and disability, including through the improved collection, analysis, reporting and use of data disaggregated by sex, age and disability, taking into account, inter alia, the information provided by States, and emphasizes the importance of the full participation of women in decision-making processes related to humanitarian response;
3. Encourages Member States, with the support of relevant organizations, as appropriate, to strengthen leadership and commitment to preventing and mitigating humanitarian crises, including through integrating risk management into national development plans, and in this regard encourages humanitarian and development organizations, in cooperation with Governments, to continue to strengthen efforts to address the underlying risks and vulnerabilities, including through considering risk management and resilience strategies;
4. Stresses that the United Nations system should continue to enhance existing humanitarian capacities, knowledge and institutions, including, as appropriate, through the transfer of technology and expertise to developing countries, encourages the international community, the relevant entities of the United Nations system and other relevant institutions and organizations to support national authorities in their capacity-building programmes, including through technical cooperation and long-term partnerships, as well as by strengthening their capacity to build resilience, mitigate disaster risks and prepare for and respond to disasters, and also encourages Member States to create and strengthen an enabling environment for the capacity-building of their national and local authorities, national societies of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and national and local non-governmental and community-based organizations in providing timely humanitarian assistance;

5. Encourages the United Nations and humanitarian organizations, together with development organizations, to continue to support national leadership in building in-country preparedness capacity, including under the Common Framework for Capacity Development for Emergency Preparedness of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, the United Nations Development Group and the United Nations International Strategy for Disaster Reduction;

6. Encourages Member States, as well as relevant regional and international organizations, in accordance with their specific mandates, to continue to support adaptation to the effects of climate change and to strengthen disaster risk reduction and early warning systems in order to minimize the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters, including those related to the continuing impact of climate change, especially for those countries that are particularly vulnerable;

7. Urges States to assess their progress in strengthening preparedness levels for humanitarian response, with a view to increasing efforts to develop, update and strengthen disaster preparedness and risk reduction measures at all levels, in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, in particular priority 5 thereof, taking into account their own circumstances and capacities and in coordination with relevant actors, as appropriate, and encourages the international community and relevant United Nations entities, including the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, United Nations funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, to give increased priority to and mainstream disaster risk reduction, including preparedness, in particular through supporting national and local efforts in that regard;

8. Encourages States, the United Nations system and all stakeholders to continue to engage in the consultations on the successor to the Hyogo Framework for Action, culminating at the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Sendai, Japan, from 14 to 18 March 2015;

9. Welcomes the growing number of initiatives undertaken at the regional and national levels to promote the implementation of the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance, encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to take further steps to review and strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account, as appropriate, the Guidelines, and welcomes the valuable support that national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies are providing to their Governments in this area, in collaboration with the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and other partners;

10. Encourages efforts to enhance cooperation and coordination of United Nations humanitarian entities, other relevant humanitarian organizations and donor countries with the affected State, with a view to planning and delivering emergency humanitarian assistance in ways that are supportive of early recovery as well as sustainable rehabilitation, reconstruction and development efforts;

11. Also encourages efforts to provide safe and enabling learning environments and quality education in humanitarian emergencies, in particular for the well-being of all girls and boys, to contribute to a smooth transition from relief to development;

12. Requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue to lead the efforts to strengthen the coordination and accountability of humanitarian assistance, urges relevant United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as other humanitarian and relevant development actors, including civil society, to continue to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to enhance the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian assistance, and encourages Member States to improve their cooperation with the Office;

13. Also requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue to improve dialogue with Member States on the relevant processes, activities and deliberations of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

14. Encourages United Nations humanitarian organizations and other relevant organizations, while strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance in the field, to continue to work in close coordination with national Governments, taking into account the primary role of the affected State in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of such assistance within its territory;

15. Requests the United Nations system and other relevant actors to continue to improve and strengthen humanitarian coordination mechanisms, notably at the field level, including the existing cluster coordination mechanism, and by improving partnership and coordination with national and local authorities, including the use of national/local coordination mechanisms, where possible;

16. Welcomes the continued efforts to strengthen the humanitarian response capacity in order to provide a timely, predictable, coordinated and accountable response to humanitarian needs, and requests the Secretary-General to continue efforts in that regard, in consultation with Member States, including by strengthening support to and improving the identification, selection and training of United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators;

17. Requests the United Nations to continue to identify solutions to strengthen its ability to recruit and deploy appropriately senior, skilled and experienced humanitarian staff quickly and flexibly, giving paramount consideration to the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, while paying due regard to gender equality and to recruiting on as wide a geographical basis as possible, and in this regard encourages the United Nations Development Group to strengthen the resident coordinator system, on which the humanitarian coordinator system is based, in order to ensure full implementation of the management and accountability system of the United Nations development and resident coordinator system;

18. Also requests the United Nations to continue to develop specialist technical expertise and capacity to fill gaps in critical humanitarian programming and to procure emergency relief material rapidly and cost-effectively, and locally when appropriate, in order to support Governments and United Nations country teams in the coordination and provision of international humanitarian assistance;

19. Recognizes the benefits of the effectiveness of the humanitarian response, including by engaging and coordinating with relevant humanitarian actors, and welcomes in this regard the ongoing efforts by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to build partnerships with regional organizations and the private sector, encourages Member States and the United Nations system to continue to strengthen partnerships at the global, regional, national and local levels in support of national efforts, which can cooperate effectively to provide humanitarian assistance to those in need and ensure that their collaborative efforts adhere to the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence, and also encourages the United Nations system to continue to pursue efforts to strengthen partnerships at the global level with the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, relevant humanitarian non-governmental organizations and other participants in the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

20. Notes the increasing challenges facing both Member States, in particular developing countries, and the international humanitarian response system in responding effectively to all humanitarian emergencies, in particular the underfunded and forgotten emergencies, and in this regard stresses the need to enhance existing partnerships and build new ones, strengthen financing mechanisms, broaden the donor base and engage other partners to ensure adequate resources for the provision of humanitarian assistance;

21. Expresses concern at the challenges related to, inter alia, safe access to and use of food and shelter, water and sanitation, health care, fuel, firewood and alternative energy and telecommunications in humanitarian emergencies, and notes with appreciation initiatives at the national and international levels that promote effective cooperation in that regard;

22. Encourages Member States, the United Nations system and humanitarian and development organizations, in accordance with their respective mandates, to continue to assess and improve, together with other relevant stakeholders, including the private sector, how innovation can be more systematically promoted through increasing investment in research and development leading to innovation, identified and integrated into humanitarian action in a sustainable manner, and promote the sharing of best practices and lessons learned on innovative tools, processes and evaluations, including those from recent large-scale natural disasters, that could improve the effectiveness and quality of humanitarian response, and in this regard encourages all relevant stakeholders to support the efforts of Member States, in particular developing countries, to strengthen their capacities, including through access to information and communication technologies;

23. Requests the United Nations humanitarian organizations, in consultation with Member States, as appropriate, to strengthen the evidence base for humanitarian assistance by further developing common mechanisms to improve the quality, transparency and reliability of and make further progress in respect of strategic planning and common humanitarian needs assessments, to assess their performance in assistance and to ensure the most effective use of humanitarian resources by those organizations;

24. Encourages Member States to improve data collection and analysis and to facilitate the exchange of information with humanitarian organizations of the United Nations, in order to support preparedness efforts and to improve the effectiveness of needs-based humanitarian response, and encourages the United Nations system, as appropriate, and other relevant actors to continue to assist developing countries in their efforts to build local and national capacities for data collection and analysis;

25. Recognizes that accountability is an integral part of effective humanitarian assistance, and emphasizes the need to enhance the accountability of humanitarian actors at all stages of humanitarian assistance;

26. Calls upon the United Nations and its humanitarian partners to enhance accountability to Member States, including affected States, and all other stakeholders, and to further strengthen humanitarian response efforts, including by monitoring and evaluating the provision of their humanitarian assistance, incorporating lessons learned into programming and consulting with the affected populations so that their needs are appropriately addressed;

27. Urges all actors engaged in the provision of humanitarian assistance to fully commit to and duly respect the guiding principles contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 46/182, including the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality as well as the principle of independence, as recognized by the Assembly in its resolution 58/114 of 17 December 2003;

28. Calls upon all States and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflict and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel and delivery of supplies and equipment in order to allow humanitarian personnel to perform efficiently their task of assisting affected civilian populations, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

29. Calls upon all parties to armed conflicts to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law;

30. Calls upon all States and parties to comply fully with the provisions of international humanitarian law, including all the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, in order to protect and assist civilians in occupied territories, and in this regard urges the international community and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen humanitarian assistance to civilians in those situations;

31. Encourages Member States, in cooperation with relevant United Nations humanitarian organizations, to ensure that the basic humanitarian needs of affected populations, including food, shelter, health, clean water, education and protection, are addressed as components of humanitarian response, including through providing timely and adequate resources with the aim of ensuring the immediate restoration of safe conditions of life, alleviating the immediate effects of humanitarian emergencies and contributing towards long-term recovery and reconstruction, while ensuring that their collaborative efforts fully adhere to humanitarian principles;

33. Urges Member States to continue to take the steps necessary to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, including medical personnel and humanitarian personnel exclusively engaged in medical duties, premises, facilities, equipment, transports and supplies operating within their borders, and in other territories under their effective control, recognizes the need for appropriate collaboration between humanitarian actors and relevant authorities of the affected State in matters related to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, requests the Secretary-General to expedite his efforts to enhance the safety and security of personnel involved in United Nations humanitarian operations, and urges Member States to ensure that perpetrators of crimes committed against humanitarian personnel on their territory or in other territories under their effective control do not operate with impunity and are brought to justice as provided for by national laws and in accordance with obligations under international law;

34. Also urges Member States to continue to prevent, investigate and prosecute acts of sexual and gender-based violence in humanitarian emergencies, calls upon Member States and relevant organizations to strengthen support services for victims of such violence, and also calls for a more effective response in that regard;

35. Encourages the United Nations and other relevant humanitarian actors to include as part of their risk management strategy the building of good relations and trust with national and local governments and to promote acceptance by local communities, and all relevant actors, in order to enable humanitarian assistance to be provided in accordance with humanitarian principles;

36. Emphasizes the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance, and, in situations in which military capacity and assets are used to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, reaffirms the need for their use to be undertaken with the consent of the affected State and in conformity with international law, including international humanitarian law, as well as humanitarian principles;

37. Encourages Member States, the private sector, civil society and other relevant entities to make new contributions and to consider increasing and diversifying their existing contributions to humanitarian funding mechanisms, including consolidated and flash appeals, the Central Emergency Response Fund and other funds such as the country-based pooled funds, based on and in proportion to assessed needs, as a means of ensuring flexible, predictable, timely, needs-based and, where possible, multi-year, non-earmarked and additional resources to meet global humanitarian challenges, encourages donors to adhere to the Principles and Good Practice of Humanitarian Donorship, reiterates that contributions for humanitarian assistance should be provided in a way which is not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development, recognizes the need for more diversified funding bases, and encourages the United Nations and humanitarian organizations to consider making further use of multi-year consolidated appeals, as appropriate;

38. Recognizes that building preparedness is a long-term investment that will contribute to the achievement of humanitarian and development objectives, including a reduction in the need for humanitarian response, and therefore further encourages Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant actors to provide effective, predictable, flexible and adequate funding for preparedness and disaster risk reduction activities, including from humanitarian and development budgets, and stresses that international preparedness efforts reinforce and support national and local response capacities and institutions;

39. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General to hold the first World Humanitarian Summit in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2016, aimed at sharing knowledge and best practices in the humanitarian field to improve the coordination, capacity and effectiveness of humanitarian response, and requests the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to ensure an inclusive, consultative and transparent preparatory process;

40. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution in his next report to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/135 [A/69/L.40 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 69 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 and the guiding principles contained in the annex thereto, other relevant General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions and agreed conclusions of the Council,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations and on the Central Emergency Response Fund,

Reaffirming the principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence in the provision of humanitarian assistance, and reaffirming also the need for all actors engaged in the provision of humanitarian assistance in situations of complex emergencies and natural disasters to promote and fully respect these principles,

Deeply concerned about global challenges, such as the ongoing adverse impact of the world financial and economic crisis, climate change, the negative impact of the volatile food prices on food security and nutrition and the rapid urbanization of populations, and about their effect on the increasing vulnerability of populations and impact on the need for and provision of humanitarian and development assistance,

Noting the substantial increase over the last decade in global humanitarian funding requirements, welcoming non-traditional donors, emphasizing the need to mobilize adequate, predictable, timely and flexible resources for humanitarian assistance, based on and in proportion to assessed needs, with a view to ensuring fuller coverage of the needs in all sectors and across humanitarian emergencies, and recognizing in this regard the achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund,

Emphasizing that strengthened needs analysis, risk management and strategic planning, in coordination with affected States, including through the use of open and disaggregated data, are crucial elements to ensure a better informed, more effective, transparent and collective response to the needs of people affected by crises,

Reiterating the need for Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and other relevant actors to mainstream a gender perspective into humanitarian assistance, including by addressing the specific needs of women, girls, boys and men in a comprehensive and consistent manner, and to take into account the needs of affected populations, including persons with disabilities,

Expressing its deep concern about the increasing challenges faced by Member States and the United Nations humanitarian response system and their capacities as a result of the consequences of natural disasters, including those related to the continuing impact of climate change, and reaffirming the importance of implementing the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, inter alia, by providing adequate resources for disaster risk reduction, including investment in disaster preparedness and capacity-building, and by working towards building back better in all phases from relief to development,

Expressing grave concern about the current unprecedented outbreak of the Ebola virus disease and its adverse impact on the affected countries, underscoring that the control of outbreaks of major infectious diseases requires proper early warning, preparedness, resilience-building, cross-sectoral action and greater national, regional and international collaboration, and in this regard stressing the continued need for a coordinated response to the Ebola outbreak,

Recognizing that developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and small island developing States, remain acutely vulnerable to natural hazards and need adequate international cooperation, as appropriate, to strengthen their resilience in this regard,

Recognizing also that economic growth and sustainable development are essential for the prevention of and preparedness for natural disasters and other emergencies,

Recognizing further, in this respect, that building national and local preparedness and response capacity through, inter alia, appropriate and conducive public policies and international assistance, is critical to a more predictable and effective response and contributes to the achievement of humanitarian and development objectives, including enhanced resilience and a reduced need for humanitarian response,

Emphasizing that enhancing international cooperation on emergency humanitarian assistance is essential, and reaffirming its resolution 68/103 of 13 December 2013 on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development,

Emphasizing also the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance, and reaffirming, in situations in which military capacity and assets are used as a last resort to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance, the need for their use to be undertaken with the consent of the affected State and in conformity with international law, including international humanitarian law, as well as humanitarian principles,

Condemning the increasing number of deliberate threats and violent attacks against humanitarian personnel and facilities, including medical personnel, their facilities and other humanitarian personnel exclusively engaged in medical duties, in a majority of cases affecting locally recruited personnel, noting with concern the negative implications for the provision of humanitarian assistance to populations in need, and in this regard welcoming the efforts such as the Health Care in Danger project of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, together with States, international and non-governmental organizations and other relevant stakeholders, to strengthen compliance with international humanitarian law by raising awareness and promoting preparedness to address the grave and serious humanitarian consequences arising from such violence,

Recognizing the high number of people affected by humanitarian emergencies, including the increasing number of internally displaced persons, of whom a majority are women and children, who are forcibly displaced owing to conflict, persecution, violence and other reasons, including terrorism, and who are often displaced for protracted periods, wherein the national authorities have the primary duty and responsibility to provide protection and humanitarian assistance and promote durable solutions for internally displaced persons within their jurisdiction, bearing in mind their particular needs,

Recognizing also the importance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, which include a vital legal framework for the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, including the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Noting with grave concern that violence, including gender-based violence, particularly sexual violence, and violence against children, continues to be deliberately directed against civilian populations during and after humanitarian situations,

Noting with appreciation the efforts that the United Nations continues to make to improve humanitarian response, including by strengthening humanitarian response capacities, improving humanitarian coordination, enhancing predictable and adequate funding and strengthening the accountability of all stakeholders, and recognizing the importance of strengthening emergency administrative procedures and funding to allow for an effective and needs-based response to emergencies,

Recognizing that, in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance in the field, the organizations of the United Nations system should continue to consult and work in close coordination with national Governments,

1. Welcomes the outcome of the seventeenth humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2014;

2. Requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue her efforts to strengthen the coordination and accountability of humanitarian assistance and leadership within the United Nations humanitarian response system, including through the transformative agenda of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, and calls upon relevant United Nations organizations and other relevant intergovernmental organizations, as well as other humanitarian and development actors, to continue to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to enhance the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian assistance;

3. Also requests the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue to improve dialogue with all Member States on the relevant processes, activities and deliberations of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

4. Encourages Member States and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to continue to improve dialogue and collaboration on humanitarian issues, including on policy, in order to foster a more consultative and inclusive approach to humanitarian assistance;

5. Welcomes the continued efforts by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to build partnerships with regional organizations and non-traditional donors and the private sector, and encourages Member States and the United Nations system to continue to strengthen partnerships at the global, regional, national and local levels in support of national efforts in order to effectively cooperate to provide humanitarian assistance to those in need and ensure that their collaborative efforts adhere to the principles of neutrality, humanity, impartiality and independence;

6. Encourages Member States, the United Nations system and humanitarian and development organizations to continue to assess and improve, together with other relevant stakeholders, including the private sector, how innovation can be more systematically identified and integrated into humanitarian action in a sustainable manner and to promote the sharing of best practices and lessons learned on innovative tools, processes and approaches, including those from large-scale natural disasters, that could improve the effectiveness and quality of humanitarian response, and in this regard encourages all relevant stakeholders to continue to support the efforts of Member States, in particular developing countries, to strengthen their capacities, including through facilitating access to information and communication technologies;

7. Welcomes innovative practices that draw on the knowledge of people affected by humanitarian emergencies to develop locally sustainable solutions and to produce life-saving items locally, with minimal logistical and infrastructure implications;

8. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and, as appropriate, other relevant humanitarian actors to continue efforts to improve the humanitarian response to natural and man-made disasters and complex emergencies by further strengthening humanitarian response capacities at all levels, by continuing to strengthen the provision and coordination of humanitarian assistance at the global and field levels, including through existing cluster coordination mechanisms and in support of national authorities of the affected State, as appropriate, and by further enhancing efficiency, transparency, performance and accountability;

9. Recognizes the benefits of engagement and coordination with relevant humanitarian actors to the effectiveness of humanitarian response, and encourages the United Nations to continue to pursue efforts to strengthen partnerships at the global level with the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, relevant humanitarian non-governmental organizations and other participants in the Inter-Agency Standing Committee;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue strengthening the support provided to United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators and to United Nations country teams, including by providing necessary training, identifying resources and improving the identification of and the selection process for United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinators, and enhancing their performance accountability;

11. Calls upon the Chair of the United Nations Development Group and the Emergency Relief Coordinator to continue enhancing their consultations before presenting final recommendations on the selection process for resident coordinators in countries likely to require significant humanitarian response operations;

12. Requests the United Nations to continue to strengthen its ability to recruit and deploy appropriately senior, skilled and experienced humanitarian staff quickly and flexibly, giving paramount consideration to the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, while paying due regard to gender equality and to recruiting on as wide a geographical basis as possible, and in this regard encourages the United Nations Development Group to strengthen the resident coordinator system, on which the humanitarian coordinator system is based, in order to ensure the full implementation of the management and accountability system of the Group and the resident coordinator system;

13. Recognizes that diversity of humanitarian staff brings value to humanitarian work and understanding of developing countries' contexts, and requests the Secretary-General to address further the insufficient diversity in geographical representation and gender balance in the composition of the humanitarian staff of the Secretariat and other United Nations humanitarian agencies, in particular regarding professional and high-level staff, and to report on measures taken in this regard in his annual report;

14. Also recognizes that accountability is an integral part of effective humanitarian assistance, and emphasizes the need for enhancing the accountability of humanitarian actors at all stages of humanitarian assistance;

15. Reaffirms the importance of implementing the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, reiterates the importance of strengthening the effectiveness of national and local preparedness in line with priority five of the Framework, notes the fourth session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, held in Geneva from 19 to 23 May 2013, and encourages States, the United Nations system and all stakeholders to continue to engage in the consultations on the successor to the Framework, culminating at the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Sendai, Japan, from 14 to 18 March 2015;

16. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations and humanitarian and development organizations to continue to build the capacity at all levels of government and within local organizations and communities to better prepare for hazards and respond to and recover from disasters;

17. Calls upon Member States and the international community to increase and commit adequate, timely, flexible and predictable resources for disaster risk reduction in order to build resilience, including through complementary humanitarian and development programming and by further strengthening national and local capacities to prevent, prepare for and respond to humanitarian emergencies, and furthermore encourages closer cooperation between national stakeholders and humanitarian and development actors in this regard;

18. Encourages the United Nations system, humanitarian organizations and development organizations to continue their efforts to mainstream preparedness, early action and early recovery into their programming, acknowledges that preparedness, early action and early recovery should receive further funding, and in this regard encourages the provision of timely, flexible, predictable and adequate resources, including from both humanitarian and development budgets, as appropriate;

19. Urges Member States, the United Nations and other relevant organizations to take further steps to provide a coordinated emergency response to the food and nutrition needs of affected populations, while aiming to ensure that such steps are supportive of national strategies and programmes aimed at improving food security;

20. Expresses concern about the challenges related to, inter alia, safe access to and use of fuel, firewood, alternative energy, water and sanitation, shelter and food and health-care services in humanitarian emergencies, and noting with appreciation initiatives at the national and international levels that promote effective cooperation in this regard;

21. Encourages the international community, including relevant United Nations organizations and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, to support efforts of Member States aimed at strengthening their capacity to prepare for and respond to disasters and to support efforts, as appropriate, to strengthen systems, especially early warning systems, for identifying and monitoring disaster risk, including vulnerability and natural hazards;

22. Welcomes the growing number of initiatives undertaken at the regional and national levels to promote the implementation of the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance, encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to take further steps to review and strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account the Guidelines, as appropriate, and welcomes the valuable support that national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies are providing to their Governments in this area, in collaboration with the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and other partners;

23. Encourages States to create an enabling environment for the capacity-building of local authorities and of national and local non-governmental and community-based organizations in order to ensure better preparedness in providing timely, effective and predictable humanitarian assistance, and encourages the United Nations and humanitarian organizations to provide support to such efforts, including, as appropriate, under the Common Framework for Preparedness of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, the United Nations Development Group and the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, through the transfer of technology and expertise to developing countries and through support to programmes aimed at enhancing the coordination capacities of affected States;

24. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations and humanitarian organizations to provide emergency assistance in ways that are supportive of recovery and long-term development, where appropriate, including through prioritizing humanitarian tools that strengthen resilience, such as, but not limited to, cash transfers, local procurement of food and services and social safety nets;

25. Encourages Member States and relevant United Nations organizations to examine their own financing mechanisms in order to improve, where possible, fast and flexible financing for preparedness, response and the transition from relief to recovery;

26. Takes note of the efforts of Member States, the United Nations system and the international community to strengthen preparedness and local, national and regional humanitarian response capacity, and calls upon the United Nations and relevant partners to continue support in this regard;

27. Encourages efforts to provide safe and enabling learning environments and quality education for all, especially for girls and boys, in humanitarian emergencies, including in order to contribute to a smooth transition from relief to development;

28. Encourages the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to continue to work with Member States and relevant United Nations entities to facilitate the exchange of updated, accurate and reliable information, including through mutually comprehensible harmonized data, in order to ensure better assessment of needs in order to improve preparedness and humanitarian response;

29. Calls upon relevant United Nations organizations to support the improvement of the humanitarian programme cycle, in particular the development of strategic response plans and humanitarian needs overviews, including consolidated appeals processes, in consultation with the affected States in order to strengthen the coordination of humanitarian action, to meet the needs of people affected by humanitarian emergencies;

30. Encourages Member States to provide humanitarian funding based on, and in accordance with, the humanitarian appeals brought forward by the United Nations;

31. Encourages Member States and relevant United Nations organizations to explore innovative risk-sharing mechanisms and to base risk management funding on objective data;

32. Requests Member States, relevant humanitarian organizations of the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian actors to ensure that all aspects of humanitarian response, including disaster preparedness and needs assessments, take into account the specific humanitarian needs and vulnerabilities of all components of the affected population, in particular girls, boys, women, older persons and persons with disabilities, including in the design and implementation of disaster risk reduction, humanitarian and recovery programming and post-humanitarian emergency reconstruction, and in this regard encourages efforts to ensure gender mainstreaming, including in the analysis of allocations and programme implementation, and through greater use of the gender marker, and emphasizes the importance of full participation of, in particular, women and persons with disabilities in decision-making processes related to humanitarian response;

improve the quality, transparency and reliability of, and make further progress towards, common humanitarian needs assessments, including through improved collection, analysis and reporting of sex-, age- and disability-disaggregated data and taking into account environmental impact, to assess their performance in assistance and to ensure the most effective use of humanitarian resources by those organizations;

34. Calls upon the United Nations and its humanitarian partners to enhance accountability to Member States, including affected States, and all other stakeholders and to further strengthen humanitarian response efforts, including by monitoring and evaluating the provision of their humanitarian assistance, incorporating lessons learned into programming and consulting with the affected populations so that their needs are appropriately assessed and effectively addressed;

35. Calls upon donors to provide adequate, timely, predictable and flexible resources based on and in proportion to assessed needs, including for underfunded and forgotten emergencies, to consider providing early and multi-year commitments to pooled humanitarian funds and to continue to support diverse humanitarian funding channels, encourages efforts to adhere to the Principles and Good Practice of Humanitarian Donorship and to improve burden-sharing among donors, and in this respect encourages the private sector, civil society and other relevant entities to make relevant contributions, complementary to those of other sources;

36. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations and humanitarian organizations to identify better ways of working to address the increasing capacity and resource gap, in order to effectively meet the needs of affected populations;

37. Calls upon Member States that are in a position to do so and development and humanitarian partners, in their efforts to provide flexible resources, to consider ways of better mainstreaming the need for preparedness and building resilience in the provision of humanitarian and development assistance, including reconstruction and rehabilitation, inter alia, with a view to ensuring smooth transition from relief to development;

38. Encourages humanitarian and development actors to pursue, where appropriate, common risk-management and resilience objectives, achievable through joint analysis, planning, programming and funding;

39. Calls upon all Member States that are in a position to do so to increase their voluntary contributions to humanitarian emergencies, and in this context reiterates that the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs should benefit from adequate and more predictable funding;

40. Welcomes the important achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund in ensuring a more timely and predictable response to humanitarian emergencies, stresses the importance of continuing to improve the functioning of the Fund, and in this regard encourages the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to review and evaluate, where necessary, their partnership policies and practices in order to ensure the timely disbursement of funds from the Fund to implementing partners in order to ensure that resources are used in the most efficient, effective, accountable and transparent manner possible;

41. Calls upon all Member States, and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions, to consider increasing their voluntary contributions to the Central Emergency Response Fund, and emphasizes that contributions should be additional to current commitments to humanitarian programming and should not be to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

42. Encourages Member States, in cooperation with relevant United Nations humanitarian organizations, to ensure that the basic humanitarian needs of affected populations, including clean water, food, shelter, health, including sexual and reproductive health, education and protection, are addressed as components of humanitarian response, including through providing timely and adequate resources, while ensuring that their collaborative efforts fully adhere to humanitarian principles;

43. Encourages Member States, the United Nations and humanitarian organizations to continue to work together to understand and address the different protection needs of affected populations, particularly the most vulnerable, in humanitarian crises and ensure that these needs are adequately integrated into preparedness, response and recovery efforts;

44. Reaffirms the obligation of all States and parties to an armed conflict to protect civilians in armed conflicts in accordance with international humanitarian law, and invites States to promote a culture of protection, taking into account the particular needs of women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

45. Also reaffirms the obligations of all States and parties to an armed conflict, in accordance with international humanitarian law, to respect and protect humanitarian personnel, including medical personnel, facilities, transports and activities, which must not be attacked, and to ensure that the wounded and sick receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required;

46. Calls upon States to adopt preventive measures and effective responses to acts of violence committed against civilian populations in armed conflicts and to ensure that those responsible are promptly brought to justice, in accordance with national law and their obligations under international law;

47. Urges all Member States to address gender-based violence in humanitarian emergencies in a strengthened manner and to ensure that their laws and institutions are adequate to prevent, promptly investigate and prosecute gender-based violence, and calls upon States, the United Nations and all relevant humanitarian organizations to improve coordination, harmonize response and strengthen capacity, with a view to preventing and reducing such violence and ensuring that humanitarian relief is provided in a way that mitigates the risk of gender-based violence, and to ensure that support services to victims and survivors of such violence are given due priority, beginning in the earliest stages of emergency response;

48. Recognizes the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement as an important international framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, encourages Member States and humanitarian agencies to continue to work together, in collaboration with host communities, in endeavours to provide a more predictable response to the needs of internally displaced persons, and in this regard calls for continued and enhanced international support, upon request, for the capacity-building efforts of States and encourages humanitarian organizations to improve coordination, including with development organizations, to better address the needs of internally displaced persons in support of Member States to promote durable solutions;

49. Calls upon all States and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular in armed conflict and in post-conflict situations, in countries in which humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel, as well as the delivery of supplies and equipment, in order to allow such personnel to efficiently perform their task of assisting affected civilian populations, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

50. Welcomes the progress made towards further enhancing the security management system of the United Nations, and supports the approach taken by the Secretary-General to focus the efforts of the security management system on enabling the United Nations system to “stay and deliver” its most critical programmes even in high-risk environments by effectively managing the risks to which personnel are exposed, including in the provision of humanitarian assistance, and to adapt quickly to changes in local security conditions;

51. Encourages the United Nations and other relevant humanitarian actors to include, as part of their risk management strategy, the building of good relations and trust with national and local governments and to promote acceptance by local communities and all relevant actors in order to enable humanitarian assistance to be provided in accordance with humanitarian principles;

52. Requests the Secretary-General to report on actions taken to enable the United Nations to continue to strengthen its ability to recruit and deploy staff quickly, effectively and flexibly, to procure emergency relief materials and services rapidly, cost-effectively and locally, where applicable, and to quickly disburse funds in order to support Governments and United Nations country teams in the coordination of international humanitarian assistance;

53. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General to hold the first World Humanitarian Summit in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2016, aimed at sharing knowledge and best practices in the humanitarian field to improve the coordination, capacity and effectiveness of humanitarian response, requests the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to ensure an inclusive, consultative, transparent preparatory process, encourages Member States and stakeholders to participate in and contribute to the process and outcome of the Summit, and encourages the Secretary-General to further engage Member States regarding the process and outcome of the Summit;

54. Encourages Member States to give appropriate consideration in the discussion on the post-2015 development agenda to disaster risk reduction, including building resilience and national and local preparedness and response capacity;

55. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2015, on progress made in strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, including on the process and update on the World Humanitarian Summit, and to submit a report to the Assembly on the detailed use of the Central Emergency Response Fund.

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the item on strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

UN and other humanitarian personnel

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/101 [YUN 2013, p. 1508], the Secretary-General in a September report [A/69/406] provided an update on the safety and security of UN personnel over the preceding year and on the efforts of the Department of Safety and Security (DSS) to implement that resolution.

The UN security management system was responsible for the safety and security of more than 150,000 UN personnel in 187 countries. Some 30,000 United Nations personnel served at headquarters locations while more than 120,000 served in non-headquarters duty stations, including field offices.

In 2013, the total number of United Nations personnel affected by significant security incidents decreased to 1,216, compared to 1,793 in 2012, 1759 in 2011 and 1,438 in 2010. A total of 28 UN personnel lost their lives in significant security incidents, compared to 35 in 2012, 70 in 2011 and 24 in 2010; and 18 UN personnel lost their lives as a result of violence in 2013, while 10 were killed in safety-related incidents. A total of 226 personnel were injured in significant security incidents (compared with 321 in 2012, 311 in 2011, 232 in 2010), 82 as the result of violence and 144 in safety-related incidents.

The continuing high number of abductions of UN personnel since 2010 remained a serious concern. In 2013, 17 UN personnel were abducted, following 31 abductions in 2012, 21 in 2011 and 12 in 2010. In the Syrian Arab Republic, UN personnel remained in captivity for eight months. Most of the abductions and hostage-taking incidents occurred in the Sudan, Syria and Yemen. During the first six months of 2014, nine UN personnel were abducted and later released. One internationally-recruited staff member abducted in October 2013 in Yemen remained in captivity. Female UN personnel accounted for some 40 per cent and almost 36 per cent of all personnel significant security incidents. About 52 per cent of the total number of personnel affected by robberies and almost 100 per cent of those affected by sexual assaults were female. DSS had continued to provide support and engage with non-governmental organizations on security. In April, the UN security management system promulgated its Saving Lives Together framework, which provided a basis to facilitate security cooperation between the United Nations and its implementing and operational partners. In addition, DSS, in cooperation with concerned UN entities, concluded an independent review of Saving Lives Together to enhance the framework and develop new operational guidance.

The Secretary-General highlighted three factors that could prompt the world community to make concerted efforts to ensure the protection of UN and humanitarian personnel: a current and evolving global security environment marked by unconventional and diverse threats against UN and humanitarian personnel; the increasing requirement by Member States for the United Nations to be present in dangerous places, including in areas of active armed conflict and volatile post-conflict environments; and the undeterred commitment of the United Nations to operate, regardless of the environment, in order to carry out life-saving programmes and to promote peace, human rights and development. While physical security was a core component of UN security management, the sustainable security management approach required a multidimensional approach. That included the need to view security management as a joint effort with host Governments and Member States. The protection of UN and humanitarian personnel was the collective responsibility of the international community.

The General Assembly, in resolution 69/133 of 12 December (see p. 1693), on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel, urged all States to make every effort to ensure the full and effective implementation of the relevant principles and rules of international law, including international humanitarian law and human rights law, and refugee law as applicable, related to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel.

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Response Fund

The Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF) was originally established in 1992 with the name Central Emergency Revolving Fund [YUN 1992, p. 584] as a cash-flow mechanism for the initial phase of humanitarian emergencies. In 2005, by General Assembly resolution 60/124 [YUN 2005, p. 991], the Fund was renamed and upgraded with the purpose of promoting early action and response, enhancing response to time-critical requirements, and strengthening core elements of humanitarian response in underfunded crises.

In 2014, $460.8 million in CERF funds supported aid agencies responding to crises in 45 countries. Some $291 million—almost two thirds of total allocations—kick-started aid operations in emergencies ranging from the conflicts in the Central African Republic (CAR) and Iraq to natural disasters in Bolivia and Nepal. Another $170 million went to life-saving programmes to help people in underfunded humanitarian crises, such as in Burkina Faso, Colombia, Myanmar and Somalia. More than half of CERF funds ($235 million) went to projects supporting conflict-affected people, mainly in Ethiopia, CAR, South Sudan and Sudan. Driven by humanitarian demands related to crises in those countries, the Ebola outbreak in West Africa and persistent needs across much of the Sahel and the Horn of Africa, almost three quarters ($338.7 million) of total CERF funding went to emergency activities on the African continent. That was the largest proportion of CERF funding that region had ever received in a year. CERF allocated more than half of all its funding to providing food, clean water, and sanitation and health services and supplies.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/102 [YUN 2013, p. 869], in June [A/69/96] the Secretary-General reported on the Central Emergency Response Fund, covering 2013. The Emergency Relief Coordinator had allocated a record $482 million from the rapid response and underfunded emergency grant windows and $27 million from the loan facility of the Fund to support activities in 45 countries and territories. Member States and the private sector contributed $477.3 million to the Fund for 2013, the highest-ever annual total. During the year, the secretariat of the Fund completed the implementation of the management response plan for the five-year independent evaluation of the Fund, given that all recommendations directly under its control had been implemented successfully.

During the year, 57 per cent of funds supported projects in conflict-related emergencies. Most conflict-related allocations went to projects in the Sudan ($41.9 million), Syria ($40.4 million), Somalia ($19.8 million) and Mali ($17.9 million). With additional allocations to address the needs of Syrians who had fled to Lebanon ($17.5 million), Jordan ($14.8 million) and Iraq ($10 million), the Fund allocated a total of $82.7 million to respond to the conflict in Syria. Fund grants to support life-saving activities following natural disasters, including an earthquake in the Philippines, floods in Mozambique and drought in Bolivia, totaled $80.5 million. In terms of humanitarian sectors, funding for food assistance ($113.7 million), health care ($75.2 million) and water and sanitation ($58.2 million) totaled more than 51 per cent of all Fund allocations. Of all regions, Africa received the largest grant allocation in 2013 (56 per cent).

In regard to agencies receiving funds directly from CERF in 2013, and consistent with previous Fund allocations, the World Food Programme remained the biggest recipient (30 per cent), followed by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) (24 per cent). The next largest recipients were the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the World Health Organization (WHO), the Food and Agriculture organization of the United Nations, and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) that combined received 39 per cent of the Fund's grant allocations.

Advisory Group meetings. At its May meeting [A/68/975] (Geneva, 14–15 May), CERF Advisory Group—established by Assembly resolution 60/124 to advise the Secretary-General, through the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, on the use and impact of the Fund—considered a number of policy issues, including CERF risk management plan, the independent review of its Performance and Accountability Framework, and the evaluation of UNHCR of its utilization of CERF funds. The Group also received an update on the resource mobilization and communications efforts of CERF secretariat.

The Group noted that the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) Humanitarian Financing Task Team was considering best practices from individual agencies, which could lead to improvements across the board in the timeliness of disbursement of CERF funds to recipient agencies' implementing partners. The Group encouraged CERF secretariat to continue strengthening its partnership with IASC members within the IASC Humanitarian Financing Task Team. The Group welcomed the piloting of the new CERF application template, which had improved the accuracy and timeliness of available data and increased the transparency and accountability of CERF to stakeholders.

The Group received an update on the semi-annual CERF risk action plan and acknowledged its importance for risk mitigation and advocacy purposes. The Group requested that CERF secretariat proceed with drafting standard operating procedures to guide the actions to be taken by CERF, including timely information exchange with donors, should CERF secretariat be made aware of a potential misuse of funds by an implementing partner.

The Group appreciated the UNHCR evaluation of the utilization of CERF funds, and encouraged UNHCR and CERF secretariat to act on the recommendations from the evaluation in a timely manner. The Group noted that some recipients were in the process of conducting their own study—such as the WFP—and also encouraged other recipients of CERF funds, in particular UNICEF, to conduct similar evaluations, as recommended by the five-year evaluation of CERF.

At its October meeting [A/69/713] (New York, 23–24 October), the Advisory Group discussed how to deal with the potential misuse of CERF funds and the challenge of communicating potential misuse to donors. The Group reaffirmed that any misuse of CERF funds should be treated in accordance with existing oversight rules and mechanisms of the recipient agencies and be informed by the ongoing system-wide efforts to ensure coherence of treatment of fraud within the United Nations. The Group also considered a number of policy issues, including CERF risk management plan; progress made following the recommendations from the independent review of the Performance and Accountability Framework; and the independent country reviews of the added value of CERF in the Sudan and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The Group appreciated the opportunity to exchange views with other representatives of IASC and welcomed the ongoing work of the IASC Humanitarian Financing Task Team on best practices to accelerate the implementation of CERF-funded projects. The Group took note of the variety of systemic and contextual factors affecting the timeliness of disbursement and implementation, including the potentially competing requests for strengthened accountability and risk management systems. The Group reiterated that rapid disbursement of funds was central to the Fund's life-saving mandate and key for maintaining the reputation of CERF as an effective humanitarian financing mechanism. The Group called upon the senior management of IASC members to demonstrate continuous measurable improvements, and requested CERF secretariat to develop targeted key messages on the timeliness of disbursement for the donors' representatives to raise at meetings of the Executive Board of the respective recipient agencies.

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/134 [draft: A/69/L.37 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 69].

Twentieth anniversary of the participation of volunteers, "White Helmets", in the activities of the United Nations in the field of humanitarian relief, rehabilitation and technical cooperation for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 50/19 of 28 November 1995, 52/171 of 16 December 1997, 54/98 of 8 December 1999, 56/102 of 14 December 2001, 58/118 of 17 December 2003, 61/220 of 20 December 2006, 64/75 of 7 December 2009 and 67/84 of 13 December 2012,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 47/168 of 22 December 1992, 48/57 of 14 December 1993, 49/139 B of 20 December 1994, 50/57 of 12 December 1995 and 51/194 of 17 December 1996 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1995/56 of 28 July 1995 and 1996/33 of 25 July 1996,

Recalling its resolution 49/139 B, in which it welcomed the establishment of a national volunteer corps called "White Helmets", undertaken in order to strengthen the standby capacity of developing countries, to support United Nations activities in the area of humanitarian emergency assistance, as well as in the promotion of a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development,

Recalling also its resolution 66/67 of 5 December 2011 on the tenth anniversary of the International Year of Volunteers, in which it noted that the momentum created by the Year had contributed to the vibrancy of volunteerism globally with the involvement of more people, from a broader cross-section of societies,

Recognizing, in the light of the increasing number and growing magnitude and complexity of natural disasters and other emergencies, the need to utilize fully the national potential of countries to provide the United Nations system, on a standby basis, with support for its activities in the area of humanitarian emergency assistance, as well as in the promotion of a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, which should contribute to more coordinated responses in these fields,

Recalling its resolution 50/19, in which it encouraged voluntary national and regional actions aimed at making available to the United Nations system, through the United Nations Volunteers, national volunteer corps such as the White Helmets on a standby basis, in accordance with accepted United Nations procedures and practices, in order to provide specialized human and technical resources for emergency relief and rehabilitation, and in that regard noted with satisfaction the establishment, in particular in developing countries, of national volunteer corps such as the White Helmets,

Recognizing the efforts being made by the White Helmets initiative to strengthen national, subregional and regional agreements in Latin America and the Caribbean,

Noting that in the 20 years since the launch of the White Helmets initiative, developing countries in a position to do so have shown a growing commitment to assisting communities in need through the provision of technical, human and material resources and cooperation, both in their fight against hunger and poverty and in the context of emergency response and international humanitarian assistance, and in this regard recognizing the efforts of the White Helmets initiative,

Welcomes the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of its first resolution on the White Helmets initiative, and in line with resolution 67/84 reiterates its invitation that the Secretary-General, on the basis of the work experience acquired by the White Helmets in the international field, suggest measures to enhance the collaboration of the White Helmets initiative with the United Nations system and report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session in a separate section of the annual report on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations.

Humanitarian action

The Consolidated Appeal Process tool was used for the last time in 2013 and replaced with the humanitarian needs overviews (HNOS), a joint multi-sectoral analysis and prioritization of needs at a country level. The purpose of HNOS was to support humanitarian partners in developing a shared understanding of the evolution and impact of a crisis; to ensure that credible evidence and a joint analysis of needs underpinned an effective and prioritized humanitarian response; and to reliably identify priority needs, vulnerable groups and most-affected areas.

The total global financial requirement in 2014 to cover humanitarian needs rose to $18.05 billion—the highest amount ever requested in a single year and exceeded the $12.9 billion requested in 2013.

Around 61 per cent ($11 billion) of the 2014 requirement was funded in assistance to people in Afghanistan, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, the Gambia, Haiti, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, Myanmar, the Niger, Nigeria, the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Philippines, the Republic of Congo, Senegal, Somalia, South Sudan, the Sudan, Syria, Ukraine, Yemen and the Sahel region.

In 2014, three major crises with significant regional impact—Central African Republic, South Sudan and Syria—dominated humanitarian response efforts.

Discrepancies in funding among crises were evident during the year. The appeals and plans for the Democratic Republic of the Congo (47.4 per cent), Mali (49.6), Somalia (49.1 per cent), Chad (36.6 per cent) were less than for Afghanistan (90.0 per cent), the Central African Republic (68.2 per cent), Iraq (70.9 per cent) and Yemen (60.1 per cent).

In 2014, the largest response to plans and appeals was by the United States (32.1 per cent), followed by the European Commission (11 per cent), the United Kingdom (9.3 per cent), Saudi Arabia (5.3 per cent) and Germany (4.5 per cent).

Africa

Central Africa

Central African Republic

The UN humanitarian response plan for the Central African Republic (CAR) in 2014 sought $555.4 million, of which 68.2 per cent ($378.9 million) was received.

For 2014, the humanitarian country team endorsed four strategic objectives for humanitarian action in the CAR: provide life-saving humanitarian, multi-sectoral packages to internally displaced persons (IDPs) and host communities, migrants and returning persons; protect conflict-affected people from harm, specifically vulnerable groups (e.g. unaccompanied minors, women, single-headed households, migrants, unaccompanied children and the elderly); and ensure access to basic services to returnees; restore resilience to affected communities.

The humanitarian crisis in the CAR that erupted in December 2013 and continued in 2014 had affected the whole country leaving thousands of civilians killed, more than 446,000 refugees and internal displaced people that culminated at 930,000 people at the peak of the crisis. The Emergency Relief Coordinator declared CAR as a level three emergency—throughout the year—to support the scale-up of the humanitarian response to provide assistance to 43 per cent of the total CAR population. While violence and killings exacerbated during the first half of the year, it decreased in the second half of the year with the signature of the Brazzaville agreement but continued in significant proportions.

The UN humanitarian response plan for Chad in 2014 sought $618.5 million, of which 36.6 per cent ($226.5 million) was received.

For 2014, the strategic objectives of the humanitarian community in Chad were to track and analyse risk and vulnerability, integrate findings into humanitarian and development programming; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks by responding earlier to warning signals, by reducing post-crisis recovery times and by building capacity of national actors; and deliver coordinated and integrated life-saving assistance to people affected by emergencies.

As at June 2014, over 2 million people (17 per cent of the population) were food insecure in Chad. In addition, the volatile security situation in Sudan and Nigeria continued to prompt population movements to Chad. An estimated 375,000 Sudanese refugees who had fled violence in Darfur over the past ten years remained in a dozen refugee camps in the east. Over 126,000 people had arrived in Chad from the CAR since 2013. On 30 July, over 1,100 people, mostly women and children, fled attacks by Boko Haram on their village in Nigeria to a Chadian military outpost in western Chad. Some of the shelters in temporary transit sites and camps were destroyed by heavy rains in June and resources were inadequate for repairing or replacing them.

The UN humanitarian response plan for the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) in 2014 sought $832.1 million, of which 47.4 per cent ($394.2 million) was received.

For 2014, the strategic objectives of the humanitarian country team in DRC were to strengthen the protection of the civilian population and improve access to food, basic goods and services in areas affected by violence and armed conflict; contribute to reducing morbidity and mortality due to acute malnutrition in areas of nutritional crisis; contribute to reducing excessive morbidity and mortality in populations affected by epidemics; and strengthen protection of the population and improve access to food, basic goods and services in areas affected by natural disasters.

During the year, DRC remained vulnerable to a wide range of crises natural (outbreaks and natural disasters) and man-made (conflicts and malnutrition) which caused large-scale human suffering, including the displacement of hundreds of thousands of people. In the East of the country, inter-communal tensions and/or between ethnic/economic armed groups (including Government forces) continued, and more than 2.7 million people remained displaced across five provinces (Oriental, North and South Kivu, Katanga, Maniema) as a result of the violence that erupted regularly since 2000. During the year, the continued armed clashes resulted in the new displacement of several thousand people.

South Sudan

The UN humanitarian response plan for South Sudan in 2014 sought $1.8 billion, of which 88.5 per cent ($1.59 billion) was received.

Aid organizations developed a three-year strategy for providing life-saving relief while also improving preparedness, mitigating against future shocks, strengthening national capacity and laying the groundwork for development. The three pillars of the 2014–2016 humanitarian strategy were to respond to immediate humanitarian need; enhance preparedness and build resilience of households and communities to shocks; and build capacity and strengthen systems of institutions to deliver basic services.

By the end of 2013, a crisis had engulfed the country, causing large-scale violence and displacement, and changing the operating environment for aid agencies. In January, a Crisis Response Plan was developed to cover the first three months of 2014, focusing on immediate, life-saving response to the most urgent humanitarian needs. In the same month the Emergency Relief Coordinator declared the crisis a level-three emergency. As the year unfolded and the emergency continued, a further revision in June extended the Crisis Response Plan to December, appealing for US $1.8 billion. By the end of the year, more than 1.5 million people had been displaced across 185 locations within DRC. Over 100,000 of those were living in eight protection-of-civilians sites. An estimated 237,000 people in 21 host community locations were also in need of assistance. Further, some 488,500 people had fled the country as refugees.

Sudan

The UN humanitarian response plan for Sudan in 2014 sought $1.8 billion, of which 88.5 per cent ($1.59 billion) was received.

For 2014, the strategic objectives of the Sudan humanitarian country team were to reduce morbidity and mortality rates to below emergency thresholds and improvement in well-being; protect conflict-affected and displaced persons more effectively from violence and exploitation; ensure that the most vulnerable households, groups and communities were better able to mitigate risk and withstand shocks and stresses; and achieve progress towards durable solutions for IDPs and affected communities in targeted localities.

A total of 6.9 million people (about 20 per cent of Sudan's population) were in need of humanitarian assistance. By the end of the year, there were 3.1 million people in protracted displacement, including a new displacement of an estimated 400,000 people in Darfur, the highest number of displaced people in any single year since the conflict began in Darfur in 2003. In parts of the Sudan, Global Acute Malnutrition levels for children under five years stood at 28.2 per cent (state level) and as high as 42 per cent (locality level), which far exceeded the internationally accepted "critical" emergency threshold of 15 per cent. In addition, 1.4 million people had been facing food insecurity in the country. Since conflict erupted in South Sudan in December 2013, over 120,000 people had sought protection in the Sudan, mostly in White Nile, Khartoum and South Kordofan states.

Cameroon

The UN humanitarian response plan for Cameroon in 2014 sought $125.8 million, of which 58.2 per cent ($73.2 million) was received.

The strategic objectives for Cameroon during 2014–2016 were to collect data on risks and vulnerabilities, analyse them and integrate the results into humanitarian programming and development; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks in responding to early warning signals, reducing the duration of the post-crisis recovery and building the capacity of national actors; and provide people in emergency situations with coordinated and integrated assistance necessary for their survival.

As at mid-year, four regions of the country were struggling with humanitarian crises. Food insecurity was worst in the Far North where severe acute malnutrition rates were the highest in the country (outside refugee populations), peaking respectively at 9 per cent and 6 per cent. The North and Far North were the worst affected by measles and cholera outbreaks. Refugees from Nigeria were mostly concentrated in the Far North while those from the CAR were sheltering in the East and Adamaoua Region.

Republic of Congo

The UN humanitarian response plan for the Republic of Congo in 2014 sought $14.3 million, of which 36.2 per cent ($5.2 million) was received.

Many had fled violence in the CAR to seek refuge in the Republic of Congo, already host to thousands of refugees from neighbours including the DRC and Rwanda.

In April, the Central Emergency Response Fund allocated $2 million to help humanitarian partners provide emergency assistance to refugees from the CAR. In December, the Emergency Relief Coordinator approved $1.7 million for the provision of critical health services in the Republic of the Congo.

West Africa

Ebola

The UN inter-agency plan for Guinea, Liberia, Sierra Leone to tackle the Ebola virus outbreak in 2014 sought $2.27 billion, of which 68.9 per cent ($1.56 billion) was received.

The Ebola virus disease outbreak was officially declared first in Guinea in March 2014. The virus was transmitted in social and healthcare settings and through funerals and burials. The cases were then confirmed in Liberia and, by May 2014, in Sierra Leone.

As at September, a total of 4,847 cases were reported and 2,419 died in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone—the three countries with intense transmission of the virus, and in Senegal and Nigeria where there was localized transmission of the virus. The humanitarian community identified five strategic objectives to deal with the public health emergency: stop the outbreak; treat the infected; ensure essential services; preserve stability; and prevent outbreaks in countries that were unaffected.

By the end of 2014, the cumulative total of cases stood at 20,206 with 7,905 deaths across the affected countries.

Burkina Faso

The UN humanitarian response plan for Burkina Faso in 2014 sought $99.3 million, of which 49.6 per cent ($49.2 million) was received.

The humanitarian community in Burkina Faso identified three strategic objectives for 2014: collect data on risks and vulnerabilities and analyze them and integrate the results into the humanitarian and development programming; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks by responding to the warning signals, reducing the duration of post-crisis recovery and building the capacity of national actors; and provide to persons in emergency situations with coordinated and integrated assistance necessary for their survival.

At the end of the 2014–2015 crop year, Burkina Faso recorded a provisional gross national cereal production of around 4.6 million tonnes, a 4.8 per cent decrease from the previous year and an increase of 7.2 per cent compared to the five-year average. The results, however, did not cover the entire territory. Of the 45 provinces in the country, 13 were in deficit. Around 144,000 children were in the category of severely malnourished during the year.

Mali

The UN humanitarian response plan for Mali in 2014 sought $481 million, of which 49.6 per cent ($238.7 million) was received.

To respond to the humanitarian situation in Mali, the humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives: collect data on risks and vulnerabilities, analyze them and integrate the results into the humanitarian programming and development; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks by responding to the warning signals, reducing the duration of post-crisis recovery and building the capacity of national actors; and provide persons in emergency situations with coordinated and integrated assistance necessary for their survival.

As at August, life-saving assistance was urgently needed across Mali, with hundreds of thousands of people in need of water, food, and protection. Almost half a million children under five, mainly in the south, suffered from acute malnutrition, while 1.5 million people did not have enough to eat. A deteriorating security worsened the food crisis and limited the access to water, health care and education. Protection from violence and increasingly from sexual violence against women was a priority. As at 31 December, the number of IDPs were 61,621 persons, down from 86,216 in October the same year. The number of Malian refugees registered in neighbouring countries also decreased in mid-November 2014.

Mauritania

The UN humanitarian response plan in 2014 sought $90.9 million, of which 69.3 per cent ($63.1 million) was received.

To respond to the humanitarian situation in Mauritania, the humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives for 2014: collect data on risks and vulnerabilities, analyze them and integrate the results into humanitarian programming and development; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks by responding to early warning signals, reducing the duration of post-crisis recovery and building the capacity of national actors; and provide persons in emergency situations with coordinated and integrated assistance necessary for their survival.

As at mid-year, Mauritania hosted the largest number of Malian refugees in the region. One in four Mauritians was food insecure, with 190,000 Mauritians severely food insecure and 126,000 children under the age of five malnourished. The loss of assets and purchasing power during the 2012 food crisis and the debts incurred by households due to the crisis had been compounded by chronic poverty and limited access to basic services. The 2013–2014 harvest only met 40 to 50 per cent of outstanding needs and 40,000 people were yet to recover from the torrential rains in July 2013. Renewed tensions in northern Mali disrupted the voluntary return of Malian refugees who took shelter in Mauritania.

The UN humanitarian response plan for the Niger in 2014 sought $305.2 million, of which 68 per cent ($207.5 million) was received.

To respond to the situation in the Niger, the humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives for 2014: collect data on risks and vulnerabilities, analyze and integrate the results into humanitarian programming and development; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks; and provide coordinated and integrated assistance to persons in emergency situations.

As at mid-year, close to 360,000 children were affected by severe malnutrition and nearly 580,000 by moderate malnutrition. Four million people, the equivalent of nearly 24 per cent of the population, were food insecure. In addition, the Niger hosted an increasing number of refugees, including 50,000 from Mali and 70,000 from Nigeria.

Gambia

The UN humanitarian response plan for the Gambia in 2014 sought $18.3 million, of which 23.9 per cent ($4.4 million) was received.

To respond to the situation in the Gambia, the humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives: track and analyse risk and vulnerability; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks; and deliver coordinated and integrated life-saving assistance to people affected by emergencies.

As at June, 48,600 children were malnourished while roughly 496,000 people were at risk of food insecurity. Additionally, the 2013 floods in Gambia affected about 29,000 people in the country mostly in the Greater Banjul Area, many of whom were yet to recover.

While Gambia was not experiencing an acute humanitarian crisis of the scale of some of its Sahel neighbours, the lack of support to recover from the impact of previous and recurring disasters (drought, floods and storms, disease outbreak among human and livestock) had pushed some households from being under pressure to the crisis phase.

Nigeria

The UN humanitarian response plan for Nigeria in 2014 sought $93.4 million, of which 19.1 per cent ($17.8 million) was received.

The humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives for Nigeria in 2014: track and analyse risk and vulnerability, integrating findings into humanitarian and development programming; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks by responding earlier to warning signals, by reducing post-crisis recovery times and by building capacity of national actors; and deliver coordinated and integrated life-saving assistance to people affected by emergencies.

As at mid-year, up to 9.5 million people were in need of humanitarian assistance across Nigeria. Nearly 4.2 million were food insecure and 539,000 children under five suffered from severe acute malnutrition. At the beginning of the year, 3.3 million people were displaced in Nigeria.

A deteriorating security situation in the northeast coupled with serious concerns about the security landscape in the lead up to the February 2015 elections created urgent humanitarian needs in the Northeast and the Middle Belt of the country, in addition to a worrying cholera outbreak. Since May 2013, the northeast states of Adamawa, Borno, and Yobe had been under a state of emergency due to a violent insurgency that had killed at least 2,000 people in 2014 alone, and internally displaced nearly 650,000 people. Over 60,000 people had fled the state of emergency states into neighbouring countries such as Cameroon, Chad, and the Niger. Access to the northeast of Nigeria was highly constrained given the frequency of insurgent attacks. Basic services, notably schools and health facilities, were systematically destroyed by insurgents.

Senegal

The UN humanitarian response plan for Senegal in 2014 sought $64.1 million, of which 32.6 per cent ($20.9 million) was received.

To respond to the situation in Senegal, the humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives for 2014: collect data on risks and vulnerabilities, analyze them and integrate the results into humanitarian programming and development; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks by responding to early warning signals, reducing the duration post-crisis recovery and strengthening the capacity of the national actors; and provide persons in emergency situations coordinated and integrated assistance necessary for their survival.

A mid-year assessment noted that a combination of inadequate rainfall and recurrent floods had hampered agricultural productivity and livestock survival in rural Senegal and had taken a toll on chronically vulnerable urban households. Almost ten per cent of children under five countrywide were acutely undernourished. Life-saving measures to meet the needs of the most vulnerable were underway, including for the protection of 14,000 refugees. Activities aimed at building the resilience of communities in view of the persistent food and nutrition crisis were ongoing.

Horn of Africa

Djibouti

The UN humanitarian response plan for Djibouti in 2014 sought $74.1 million, of which 28.1 per cent ($20.8 million) was received.

The humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives for Djibouti in 2014 and 2015: reduce the impact of drought, restore livelihoods and strengthen the resilience of affected persons; prevent epidemic, epizootic and zoonotic risks and reduce their impact on the drought-affected populations and livestock; and strengthen protection and improve access to food and other basic services for refugees and vulnerable migrants.

In mid-2014, the country had suffered from high rates of severe acute malnutrition as a result of prolonged drought within Djibouti and across the Horn of Africa. Persistent drought had drastically reduced the flow and quality of water in Djibouti and had led to people suffering from acute diarrhoea and respiratory infection, also heightening the risk of malaria. The death of livestock in times of severe drought led to major consequences for the livelihood of nomads. Competition for scarce natural resources was rife among local people and refugee communities.

Sahel

The UN humanitarian response plan for the Sahel in 2014 sought $49.8 million, of which 46.8 per cent ($23.3 million) was received.

To respond to the situation in the Sahel, the humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives from January 2014 to December 2016: track and analyse risk and vulnerability, integrating findings into humanitarian and development programming; support vulnerable populations to better cope with shocks by responding earlier to warning signals, by reducing post-crisis recovery times and by building capacity of national actors; deliver coordinated and integrated life-saving assistance to people affected by emergencies.

Although the 2013 harvest equaled the average for the past five years, the number of food insecure people across the region exceeded 20 million. It was estimated that more than 50 per cent of severe acute malnutrition cases were in the Niger, Chad, Mali and Burkina Faso.

Across the Sahel an estimated 1.5 million people were displaced (768,000 refugees and 800,000 internally displaced) as a result of violence in the Central African Republic, northern Nigeria and northern Mali. There were some 140,000 Malian refugees in Mauritania, the Niger and Burkina Faso. Thousands of refugees continued to arrive in Cameroon in a very poor state of health, while Chad was host to 400,000 refugees from the Sudan, Nigeria and the Central African Republic.

Somalia

The UN humanitarian response plan for Somalia in 2014 sought $933.1 million, of which 49.1 per cent ($457.9 million) was received.

In response to the humanitarian situation in Somalia, the humanitarian community adopted four strategic objectives for 2014: provide timely and quality life-saving assistance to people in humanitarian emergency; enhance resilience of vulnerable households and communities; improve the protective environment; and strengthen the capacity and coordination of non-governmental organizations, affected communities and local, regional and national level authorities, to prevent and mitigate risks and implement effective emergency preparedness and response.

An estimate as at midyear noted that widespread food insecurity was expected to worsen over the second half of the year due to a poor rainy season, a disrupted planting season and supply routes blocked by armed conflict. More than a million people were internally displaced. Of particular concern were the 369,000 displaced people living in appalling conditions in Mogadishu where acute malnutrition rates and mortality levels had already surpassed emergency thresholds.

Asia

Afghanistan

The UN humanitarian response plan for Afghanistan in 2014 sought $406.4 million, of which 90 per cent ($365.6 million) was received.

Humanitarian partners in Afghanistan identified four strategic priorities: provide emergency health care and prioritize access to critical services; respond to needs of internally displaced people and returning refugees; prevent protection infringements; and respond to natural disasters.

The intensification of conflict in Afghanistan resulted in civilian loss of life and injury reaching unprecedented levels with 10,548 civilian casualties reported—the highest number of civilian deaths and injuries in a single year since 2009. Military operations in neighbouring Pakistan led to some 250,000 people seeking refuge in Afghanistan. Emergency levels of acute malnutrition required urgent action, while floods in April destroyed more than 8,000 people's homes. Extensive displacement occurred in rural areas in Western and Central Afghanistan with 156,200 people displaced by conflict as compared to 125,300 in 2013.

Occupied Palestinian Territory

The UN humanitarian response plan for the Occupied Palestinian Territory sought $931.1 million, of which 54.4 per cent ($506.4 million) was received.

For 2014, the humanitarian community identified two strategic objectives: enhance the protection of populations in Gaza, Area C, the Seam Zone and East Jerusalem by promoting respect for international humanitarian and human rights law, preventing or mitigating the impact of violations, improving equitable access to essential services and ensuring the effective integration of protection considerations in service provision interventions; and help improve the food security and access to livelihoods of vulnerable communities with particular focus on Gaza, Area C, the Seam Zone and East Jerusalem by improving economic access to food.

Humanitarian needs increased dramatically in 2014, which began with recovery from the impact of the December 2013 winter storm, one of the worst in the last 50 years, followed in the summer by the longest and most deadly round of hostilities since the beginning of the occupation in 1967. Throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Palestinian civilians continued to be exposed to a range of protection threats, including threats to life, liberty and security; destruction or damage to homes and other property; forced displacement; restrictions to freedom of movement and access to livelihoods; and lack of accountability and effective remedies.

Philippines

The UN humanitarian response for the Philippines in 2014 involved the Bohol Earthquake Action Plan that sought $33.8 million of which 49 per cent ($16.6 million) was received; the Typhoon Haiyan Strategic Response Plan that sought $775.7 million of which 60.5 per cent (469.1 million) was received; and the Zamboanga crisis response plan that sought 12.8 million of which 46.7 per cent (6 million) was received.

As at mid-2014, Typhoon Rammasun had swept through four regions of the Philippines and floods affected some parts of Mindanao. The country was still in transition following the impact of Typhoon Haiyan-Yolanda in November 2013 and particular attention was being paid to shelter and early recovery/livelihoods. Armed conflict between the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) and the splinter/rebel groups continued across Mindanao and were exacerbated by violent clan feuds and rivalry between different factions of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF). Nearly 26,000 people remained displaced in transitory sites and evacuation centres in Zamboanga following fighting between AFP and a splinter group of the MILF in September 2013.

Syria

Humanitarian Assistance Response Plan. The Syria Humanitarian Assistance Response Plan (SHARP) for 2014 sought $2.26 billion, of which 50.9 per cent ($1.15 billion) was received.

In 2014, SHARP identified five overarching strategic objectives: advocate for the protection of civilians, and in particular of those with specific vulnerabilities and prioritize their needs in accordance with principles of international law, international humanitarian and human rights law; increase the provision of appropriate life-saving emergency services and relief supplies for affected people in Syria, especially in the sectors of food and agriculture, water, sanitation, health, nutrition, shelter, education and essential non-food items; expand early recovery, and restoration/stabilization of livelihoods, supporting the rehabilitation of vital public services affected by the crisis and creating an environment for humanitarian assistance to enhance the resilience of affected communities; enhance the operational capacity of national and international humanitarian responders and support existing local and community coping mechanisms; and ensure adequate levels of preparedness to respond to further emerging humanitarian needs.

Regional Response Plan. The Syria Regional Response Plan for 2014 sought $3.74 billion, of which 63.6 per cent ($2.38 billion) was received. It was one of the largest appeals ever presented for a refugee emergency. Over 100 partners—UN agencies as well as national and international NGOs—were working together to address the needs of Syrian refugees and assist the countries in the region who have so generously taken them in. The Plan called for further efforts to benefit host communities, who offered front-line protection and essential support to refugees.

Yemen

The Yemen humanitarian response plan in 2014 sought $596 million, of which 60.1 per cent ($357.9 million) was received.

For 2014, the humanitarian community identified five strategic objectives for humanitarian response in Yemen: provide effective and timely life-saving assistance to the most vulnerable people; assist and protect people affected by crisis, including refugees and migrants as well as returning Yemenis; strengthen the capacity of national actors to plan for and respond to humanitarian emergencies; address the underlying causes of vulnerability to reduce the need for continued humanitarian assistance and increase resilience working along with development partners, including the Government; and ensure meaningful participation and equitable access to services, resources, and protection measures for women, girls, boys, and men.

At the end of 2014, Yemen continued to be a large-scale humanitarian crisis. More than half the population of the country—14.7 million people—remained in need of assistance. Some 10.5 million people were food insecure, of whom 4.5 million were severely food insecure and an estimated 1,080,000 children under five suffered from acute malnutrition, of whom 279,000 children were severely acutely malnourished. In addition, about 13.1 million Yemenis had no access to improved water sources or to adequate sanitation facilities, with rural areas the worst affected. A further 8.6 million people had insufficient access to health.

Iraq

The UN humanitarian response plan for Iraq in 2014 sought $1.11 billion, of which 70.9 per cent ($788.9 million) was received.

For 2014, the humanitarian community identified three strategic objectives: respond to the protection needs of civilians, including those displaced and otherwise affected by the conflict, with due regard to human rights and international humanitarian law; provide life-saving assistance and ensure access to essential services for displaced and vulnerable individuals in a manner that supported the Government's responsibility as first responder; and improve the access of conflict-affected people to livelihoods and durable solutions to enable them to restore their self-sufficiency and build resilience.

The internal armed conflict in Iraq had escalated since January and prompted a protection crisis impacting millions of Iraqis. About 20,000 civilians had been killed or injured across Iraq between January and September. An estimated 5.2 million people were in urgent need of humanitarian and protection assistance due to ongoing violence and insecurity. That included approximately 1.8 million people newly displaced since the beginning of the year, some 1.5 million individuals in affected host communities, another 1.7 million vulnerable Iraqis who were not displaced but remained in areas directly impacted by the conflict and some 215,000 Syrian refugees. Nearly half of all those newly displaced were children. Humanitarian access to at least 2.2 million Iraqis in need was severely compromised in areas under the control of Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant and affiliated armed groups.

Myanmar

The UN Myanmar humanitarian response plan in 2014 sought $192 million, of which 67.2 per cent ($129 million) was received.

For 2014, the humanitarian community identified four strategic objectives for Myanmar: save lives by reducing mortality and morbidity amongst affected populations in Rakhine and Kachin as well as populations newly affected by conflict or disaster; ensure adequate access to basic services and the restoration of livelihoods for all displaced and conflict affected populations in Rakhine and Kachin, while linking up with recovery and development efforts; ensure a protective environment for vulnerable people and individuals at risk among the displaced population in Rakhine and Kachin; and strengthen preparedness efforts and ensure that response capacity was adequate to meet the basic humanitarian needs of people newly affected by conflict, inter-communal violence or natural disasters throughout Myanmar.

As at mid-year, tensions remained high throughout Rakhine State where over 143,000 people (the majority of them were Rohingya) were in camps following inter-communal violence that erupted in 2012. Buddhist and Muslim communities remain segregated, and the Muslim IDPs faced severe movement restrictions, seriously impacting livelihoods and access to basic services. An estimated 36,000 people living in isolated communities were also in need of humanitarian assistance. About 800,000 Muslim Rohingya living in Rakhine State were de facto stateless. An estimated 100,000 people remained displaced in Kachin State as a result of the fighting between the armed forces of Myanmar and the Kachin Independence Army, which started in June 2011. Approximately half of the internally displaced persons were located in areas beyond government control. Sporadic fighting continued displacing some 2,700 people to four camp locations in southern Kachin State, 600 in northern Shan state and an unconfirmed number had fled across the border to China. An estimated 400,000 people were internally displaced in rural areas of south-eastern Myanmar.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The UN humanitarian response plan for Haiti in 2014 sought $157.5 million, of which 80.3 per cent ($126.5 million) was received.

For 2014, the humanitarian community identified four urgent needs in Haiti: basic services, protection and durable solutions for internally displaced persons; health and sanitation related to the cholera epidemic; severe food insecurity and nutrition; and high vulnerability and low resilience to natural hazards.

By mid-year, the focus shifted from humanitarian to development priorities, however, 803,000 people still required humanitarian assistance. Progress continued to be made in the fight against cholera as humanitarian actors and the Government sought to sustain eradication efforts. Around 104,000 IDPs remained in 172 camps with very limited access to basic services and the risk of forced evictions remained high. Longer term durable housing had yet to be found for almost 67,000 of them. Evictions were usually carried out with violence, destruction of private property and in violation of human rights and legal eviction procedures.

Europe

Ukraine

The UN humanitarian preliminary response plan for Ukraine in 2014 sought $33.2 million, of which 98.4 per cent ($32.7 million) was received.

Localized military operations between Government forces and armed groups in the east of Ukraine (Donbas region) resulted in displacement, degradation of law and order, and a deterioration of the humanitarian situation in the country. By the end of the year, an estimated 5.2 million people lived in conflict-affected areas, 610,000 people were internally displaced and 594,000 fled to neighbouring countries. Moreover, at least 4,771 people had been killed (including 298 people from the downing of Malaysian Airlines flight MH17) and 10,360 had been wounded in eastern Ukraine.

Disaster response

In 2014, 319 disasters were recorded, which affected 141 million people in 107 countries and caused $110 billion in damages. The number of disasters was roughly the same as in 2013, however, the number of affected people increased from 97 million in 2013. That could be explained by an increase in the number of droughts—the only disaster category that registered an increase in 2014—and droughts accounted for 39 per cent of affected people. In terms of mortality, floods and landslides accounted for 63 per cent of fatalities. Forty-eight per cent of disasters occurred in Asia. Over 85 per cent of people killed and 86 per cent of those affected were also in Asia. As in 2013, China, the Philippines and India remained the top three countries in terms of the number of people affected in 2014.

For the second consecutive year, China had the largest number of people affected by natural disasters (58 million), followed by the Philippines (10 million) and India (5.7 million), while the top five costliest disasters were in India (Cyclone Hudhud, $7 billion), Japan (winter damage, $5.9 billion), India and Pakistan (floods, $5.1 billion), Brazil (drought, $5 billion) and China (earthquake, $5 billion).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/103 [YUN 2013, p. 881], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/303] on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development.

The most devastating disaster during the year was Typhoon Haiyan (locally known as Yolanda), which made landfall in the Philippines on 8 November and affected over 14 million people, including 5.4 million children. National authorities recorded 6,300 deaths and 1,061 people missing. Haiyan came on the heels of a 7.2 magnitude earthquake that hit the nearby island province of Bohol in the Philippines on 15 October, killing over 220 and damaging or destroying the homes of more than 367,700 people. Flooding in Pakistan impacted 1.5 million persons (compared with 18 million in 2010, 5 million in 2011 and 4.8 million in 2012).

In the Sahel region, 11.3 million people remained food insecure (compared with 18 million in 2012), while 5 million children were threatened by malnutrition. The combined effects of an increase in food prices, limited trade and access to markets owing to insecurity and high levels of poverty and debt led to the selling of assets and low purchasing power among the most vulnerable. In addition, close to half a million people across the region were affected by floods.

Heavy rains and flooding caused loss of life and destruction in many countries, including Ethiopia, Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mexico, Mozambique, Somalia, South Sudan, the Sudan and Uganda. Following the heavy rainy season, drought-like conditions impacted Angola, Botswana, Namibia, South Africa and Zimbabwe.

The United Nations Plan of Action on Disaster Risk Reduction for Resilience helped to strengthen coherent and coordinated UN system engagement in supporting Member States to accelerate progress in disaster risk reduction. It provided the framework for the UN system to extend a risk-based approach to its humanitarian and development programmes and to enhance preparedness for effective support to national- and community-level response and recovery efforts. Nevertheless, humanitarian and development actors needed to redouble their efforts to ensure a more comprehensive, coherent, systematic and people-centred approach to managing risks. The shift from response to prevention was fundamentally a political challenge and real change would happen only if Governments actively took the lead to reform the current institutional architecture within their own countries.

Funding was a critical enabler for a shift towards a more anticipatory approach. Funding reflected priorities and only 0.5 per cent of all international aid in the past 20 years went towards preparedness and prevention activities. Moreover, only 1 per cent of development aid targeting the top 40 recipients of humanitarian assistance was spent on disaster risk reduction. Funding was also poorly targeted. For instance, the Index for Risk Management indicated that South Sudan had the highest risk of humanitarian crisis, yet it remained forty-sixth in the list of official development aid per capita. Basing funding on an objective and shared risk assessment would help to prioritize funding flows and promote better coordination and burden-sharing among donors. Flexible longer-term financing would also enhance investments in risk management. Among his recommendations, the Secretary-General urged that Member States, the United Nations, humanitarian and development organizations and other stakeholders to prioritize risk management and shift towards an anticipatory approach to humanitarian crises in order to prevent and reduce human suffering and economic losses.

UN-SPIDER programme. The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (see p. 724) submitted a report [A/AC.105/1078] with a summary of activities in 2014 of the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER) under the workplan for the biennium 2014–2015.

Among major events organized were the Central American expert meeting on the use of space-based information in early warning systems (San Salvador, El Salvador, 31 March–1 April) that brought together 30 experts from Argentina, Brazil, Costa Rica, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama and the United Nations; the United Nations/Germany Expert Meeting on the Use of Space-based Information for Flood and Drought Risk Reduction (Bonn, Germany, 5–6 June) attended by 57 experts from 18 Member States; the United Nations International Conference on Space-based Technologies for Disaster Management: Multi-hazard Disaster Risk Assessment (Beijing, 15–17 September) attended by 110 participants from 32 Member States; and the Sixth Asian Ministerial Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction pre-conference event (Bangkok, 22 June).

On 5 December, in resolution 69/85 (see p. 729), the General Assembly noted the progress made within the UN-SPIDER framework, and encouraged Member States, on a voluntary basis, to provide the programme with the additional resources necessary to address the increasing demand for support successfully and in a timely manner.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 76], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/243 [draft: A/69/L.49 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 69 (a)].

International cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991, the annex to which contains the guiding principles for the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system, as well as all its resolutions on international cooperation on humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, from relief to development, and recalling the resolutions of the humanitarian segments of the substantive sessions of the Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming also the principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence for the provision of humanitarian assistance,

Reaffirming further the Hyogo Declaration, the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters and the common statement of the special session on the Indian Ocean disaster: risk reduction for a safer future, as adopted by the World Conference on Disaster Reduction, held in Kobe, Hyogo, Japan, from 18 to 22 January 2005, and bearing in mind that the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action is coming to an end in 2015,

Taking note with appreciation of the results of the midterm review of the Hyogo Framework for Action, and noting the results of the fourth session of the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, held in Geneva from 19 to 23 May 2013, and recognizing it as the main forum at the global level for strategic advice coordination and partnership development for disaster risk reduction,

Recognizing that the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction will be held in Sendai, Japan, from 14 to 18 March 2015, to review the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action and to adopt a framework for disaster risk reduction beyond 2015,

Noting the determination of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, as expressed in its decision 2/CP.18, to adopt a protocol, another legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the Convention applicable to all parties at its twenty-first session, due to be held in Paris from 30 November to 11 December 2015, and for it to come into effect and be implemented from 2020,

Emphasizing the fundamentally civilian character of humanitarian assistance, and reaffirming, in situations in which military capacity and assets are used as a last resort to support the implementation of humanitarian assistance in the field of natural disasters, the need for their use to be undertaken with the consent of the affected State and in conformity with international law, including international humanitarian law, as well as humanitarian principles,

Emphasizing also that the affected State has the primary responsibility in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory and in the facilitation of the work of humanitarian organizations in mitigating the consequences of natural disasters,

Emphasizing further the primary responsibility of each State to undertake disaster risk reduction and management, including through the implementation of and follow-up to the Hyogo Framework for Action, as well as response and early recovery efforts, in order to minimize the impact of natural disasters, while recognizing the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of affected countries which may have limited capacities in this regard,

Expressing its deep concern at the increasing challenges to Member States and to the United Nations humanitarian response capacity to deal with the consequences of natural disasters, given the effects of global challenges, including the impact of climate change, the ongoing adverse impact of the global financial and economic crisis and the negative impact of volatile food prices on food security and nutrition, and other key factors that exacerbate the vulnerability of populations and exposure to natural hazards and the impact of natural disasters,

Expressing its deep concern also that rural and urban poor communities in the developing world are the hardest hit by the effects of increased disaster risk,

Noting with concern that persons with disabilities, older persons, women and children are disproportionately affected in natural disasters,

Acknowledging the impacts of rapid urbanization in the context of natural disasters and that urban disaster preparedness and responses require appropriate disaster risk reduction strategies, including in urban planning, and early recovery strategies implemented from the initial stage of relief operations, as well as mitigation, rehabilitation and sustainable development strategies,

Noting that local communities are the first responders in most disasters, underlining the critical role played by in-country capacities in disaster risk reduction, including preparedness, as well as response and recovery, and acknowledging the need to support efforts of Member States to develop and enhance national and local capacities which are fundamental to improving the overall delivery of humanitarian assistance,

Recognizing the high numbers of persons affected by natural disasters, including in this respect internally displaced persons, and the need for Member States to address the humanitarian and development needs arising from natural disaster-induced displacement, including through national policies and resilience-building, and with the support of the United Nations and relevant humanitarian and development organizations, and encouraging all relevant actors to consider making use of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement when dealing with situations of internal displacement,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation in support of the efforts of the affected States in dealing with natural disasters in all their phases, in particular in preparedness, response and the early recovery phase, and of strengthening the response capacity of countries affected by disaster,

Recognizing the progress made by the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER) in its mission, encouraging Member States to provide all support necessary, on a voluntary basis, to UN-SPIDER, including financial support, to enable it to carry out its workplan for 2014–2015, and reiterating the importance of enhancing international coordination and cooperation at the global level in disaster management and emergency response through greater access to and use of space-based services for all countries and by facilitating capacity-building and institutional strengthening for disaster management, in particular in developing countries,

Noting the progress in the establishment of the Global Framework for Climate Services to develop and provide science-based climate information and prediction for climate risk management and for adaptation to climate variability and change, and looking forward to its implementation,

Welcoming the important role played by Member States, including developing countries, that have granted necessary and continued generous assistance to countries and peoples stricken by natural disasters,

Recognizing the significant role played by national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies, as part of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, in disaster preparedness and risk reduction, disaster response, rehabilitation and development,

Emphasizing the need to address vulnerability and to integrate disaster risk reduction, including preparedness, into all phases of natural disaster management, post-natural disaster recovery and development planning, through close collaboration of all relevant actors and sectors,

Reaffirming that strengthening resilience contributes to withstanding, adapting to and quickly recovering from disasters,

Recognizing that efforts to achieve economic growth, sustainable development and internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, can be adversely affected by natural disasters, and noting the positive contribution that those efforts can make in strengthening the resilience of populations to such disasters,

Recognizing also the clear relationship between emergency response, rehabilitation and development, and reaffirming that, in order to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development, emergency assistance must be provided in ways that will be supportive of short- and medium-term recovery leading to long-term development and that certain emergency measures should be seen as a step towards sustainable development,

Emphasizing, in this context, the important role of development organizations and other relevant stakeholders in supporting national efforts to mitigate the consequences of natural disasters,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its deep concern at the increasing impact of natural disasters, resulting in massive losses of life and property worldwide, in particular in vulnerable societies lacking adequate capacity to mitigate effectively the long-term negative social, economic and environmental consequences of natural disasters;
3. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian and development actors to accelerate the full implementation of the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters, in particular those commitments related to assistance for developing countries that are prone to natural disasters and for disaster-stricken States in the transition phase towards sustainable physical, social and economic recovery, for risk-reduction activities in post-disaster recovery and for rehabilitation processes, and in this regard encourages States, the United Nations system and all stakeholders to continue to engage in the consultations on the successor to the Framework, culminating at the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Sendai, Japan, from 14 to 18 March 2015, and to implement the successor framework;
4. Emphasizes the need to promote and strengthen disaster preparedness activities at all levels, in particular in hazard-prone areas, and encourages Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian and development actors to increase funding and cooperation for disaster risk reduction activities, including disaster preparedness;
5. Encourages Member States to provide dedicated financial contributions to preparedness, response and recovery efforts in a harmonized, flexible and complementary approach that fully utilizes and helps to coordinate humanitarian and development funding options and potential;
6. Calls upon all States to adopt, where required, and to continue to implement effectively, necessary legislative and other appropriate measures to mitigate the effects of natural disasters and integrate disaster risk reduction strategies into development planning, as well as to incorporate a gender perspective into policies, planning and funding, and in this regard requests the international community to continue to assist developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition, as appropriate;
7. Acknowledges that climate change, among other factors, contributes to environmental degradation and to the increase in the intensity and frequency of climate and extreme weather events, both of which amplify disaster risk, and in this regard encourages Member States, as well as relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, in accordance with their specific mandates, to support adaptation to the adverse effects of climate change and to strengthen disaster risk reduction and early warning systems in order to minimize the humanitarian consequences of natural disasters, including through the provision of technology and support for capacity-building in developing countries;

8. Welcomes the growing number of initiatives undertaken at the regional and national levels to promote the implementation of the Guidelines for the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Relief and Initial Recovery Assistance, encourages Member States and, where applicable, regional organizations to take further steps to review and strengthen operational and legal frameworks for international disaster relief, taking into account the Guidelines, as appropriate, and welcomes the valuable support that national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies are providing to their Governments in this area, in collaboration with the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and other partners;

9. Also welcomes the effective cooperation among the affected States, relevant bodies of the United Nations system, donor countries, regional and international financial institutions and other relevant organizations, such as the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, and civil society, in the coordination and delivery of emergency relief, and stresses the need to continue such cooperation and delivery throughout relief operations and medium- and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, in a manner that reduces vulnerability to future natural hazards;

10. Reiterates the commitment to support, as a matter of priority, the efforts of countries, in particular developing countries, to strengthen their capacities at all levels in order to reduce risks, prepare for and respond rapidly to natural disasters and mitigate their impact;

11. Urges Member States to develop, update and strengthen early warning systems, disaster preparedness and risk reduction measures at all levels, in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action, taking into account their own circumstances and capacities and in coordination with relevant actors, as appropriate, and encourages the international community and relevant United Nations entities to continue to support national efforts in this regard;

12. Also urges Member States to improve their response to early warning information in order to ensure that early warning leads to early action, and encourages all stakeholders to support the efforts of Member States in this regard;

13. Encourages Member States to consider elaborating and presenting to the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction secretariat their national platforms for disaster reduction in accordance with the Hyogo Framework for Action, and also encourages States to cooperate with each other to reach this objective;

14. Recognizes the importance of applying a multi-hazard approach to preparedness, and encourages Member States, taking into account their specific circumstances, and the United Nations system to continue to apply the approach to their preparedness activities, including by giving due regard to, inter alia, secondary environmental hazards stemming from industrial and technological accidents;

15. Stresses that, to increase further the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance, particular international cooperation efforts should be undertaken to enhance and broaden further the utilization of national and local capacities and, where appropriate, of regional and subregional capacities for disaster preparedness and response, which may be made available in closer proximity to the site of a disaster, and more efficiently and at lower cost;

16. Encourages innovative practices that draw on the knowledge of people affected by natural disasters to develop locally sustainable solutions and to produce lifesaving items locally, with minimal logistical and infrastructure implications;

17. Stresses, in this context, the importance of strengthening international cooperation, particularly through the effective use of multilateral mechanisms, in the timely provision of humanitarian assistance through all phases of a disaster, from relief and recovery to development, including the provision of adequate resources;

18. Encourages all relevant stakeholders, including Member States, to take appropriate measures to reduce and discourage the sending of unsolicited, unneeded or inappropriate relief goods in response to disasters;

19. Encourages all Member States to facilitate, to the extent possible, the transit of emergency humanitarian assistance and development assistance, provided in the context of international efforts, including in the phase from relief to development, in full accordance with the provisions of resolution 46/182 and the annex thereto, and in full respect of the humanitarian principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence, and their obligations under international law, including international humanitarian law;

20. Encourages Member States to put in place, as appropriate, customs measures to improve effectiveness in responding to natural disasters;

21. Reaffirms the leading role of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs as the focal point within the overall United Nations system for advocacy for and coordination of humanitarian assistance among United Nations humanitarian organizations and other humanitarian partners;

22. Welcomes the important contribution of the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination system to the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance in supporting Member States, upon their request, and the United Nations system in preparedness and humanitarian response, and encourages the continued incorporation into this mechanism of experts from developing countries that are prone to natural disasters;

23. Also welcomes the important contribution of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group to the effectiveness of international urban search and rescue assistance, and encourages Member States to continue to support the Advisory Group, in line with General Assembly resolution 57/150 of 16 December 2002;

24. Urges Member States, the United Nations system and other humanitarian actors to consider the specific and differentiated consequences of natural disasters in both rural and urban areas when designing and implementing disaster risk reduction, prevention and mitigation, preparedness, humanitarian assistance and early recovery strategies, giving special emphasis to addressing the needs of those living in rural and urban poor areas prone to natural disasters;

25. Welcomes the continued efforts of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to build partnerships with regional organizations, traditional and non-traditional donors and the private sector, and encourages Member States and the United Nations system to continue to strengthen partnerships at the global, regional, national and local levels in support of national efforts in situations of natural disasters, in order to cooperate effectively in providing humanitarian assistance to those in need and ensure that their collaborative efforts adhere to the principles of humanity, neutrality, impartiality and independence;

26. Recognizes that information and telecommunications technology can play an important role in disaster response, encourages Member States to develop emergency response telecommunications capacities and encourages the international community to assist the efforts of developing countries in this area, where needed, including in the recovery phase, and in this regard encourages Member States that have not acceded to or ratified the Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations to consider doing so;

27. Encourages the further use of space-based and ground-based remote-sensing technologies, including as provided by the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER), as well as the sharing of geographical data, for the prevention, mitigation and management of natural disasters, where appropriate, and invites Member States to continue to provide their support to the consolidation of the United Nations capability in the area of satellite-derived geographical information for early warning, preparedness, response and early recovery;

28. Recognizes the opportunities for new technologies, when utilized in a coordinated fashion and based on humanitarian principles, potentially to improve the effectiveness and accountability of humanitarian response, and encourages Member States, the United Nations and its humanitarian partners to consider engaging, inter alia, with the volunteer and technical communities in order to make use of the variety of data and information available during emergencies and disaster risk efforts;

29. Encourages Member States, relevant United Nations organizations and international financial institutions to enhance the global capacity for sustainable post-disaster recovery in areas such as coordination with traditional and non-traditional partners, identification and dissemination of lessons learned, development of common tools and mechanisms for recovery needs assessment, strategy development and programming, and incorporation of risk reduction into all recovery processes, and welcomes the ongoing efforts to this end;

30. Encourages Member States and the United Nations system to support national initiatives that address the differentiated impacts of natural disasters on the affected population, including through the collection and analysis of data disaggregated, inter alia, by sex, age and disability, using, inter alia, the existing information provided by States, and through the development of tools, methods and procedures that will result in more timely and useful initial needs assessments that lead to targeted and more effective assistance, and taking into account the environmental impact;

31. Calls upon United Nations humanitarian organizations, in consultation with Member States, as appropriate, to strengthen the evidence base for effective humanitarian assistance by further developing common mechanisms to improve the quality, transparency and reliability of, and make further progress towards, common humanitarian needs assessments, to assess their performance in assistance and to ensure the most effective use of humanitarian resources by these organizations;

32. Encourages Member States to take steps to develop or to improve data collection and analysis and to facilitate the exchange of information with humanitarian organizations of the United Nations, in order to support preparedness efforts and to improve the effectiveness of a needs-based humanitarian response, and encourages the United Nations system, as appropriate, and other relevant actors to continue to assist developing countries in their efforts to build local and national capacities for data collection and analysis;

33. Encourages Member States, regional organizations, the United Nations and humanitarian and development organizations to continue to improve the identification, mapping and analysis of risks and vulnerabilities, including the local impact of future disaster risk drivers, and the development and implementation of appropriate strategies and programmes to address them, and in this regard encourages all the relevant stakeholders to support Governments in capacity development, including at the regional and local levels, through the sharing of expertise and tools and the provision of necessary resources, as appropriate, to ensure that effective disaster management plans and capacities are in place in accordance with national priorities for disaster risk management;

34. Stresses the importance of the full and equal participation of women in decision-making and of gender mainstreaming in developing and implementing disaster risk reduction, preparedness, response and recovery strategies, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that gender mainstreaming is better taken into account in all aspects of humanitarian responses and activities, including the analysis of allocations and programme implementation, and through greater use of the gender marker;

35. Encourages Governments, local authorities, the United Nations system and regional organizations, and invites donors and other assisting countries, to address the vulnerabilities and capacities of women and girls through gender-responsive programming, including means to address sexual and gender-based violence and various forms of exploitation during emergencies and in post-disaster environments, and the allocation of resources in their disaster risk reduction, response and recovery efforts in coordination with the Governments of affected countries;

36. Emphasizes the importance of mainstreaming the perspective of persons with disabilities in disaster risk reduction, and recognizes the need for their inclusive participation in and contribution to disaster preparedness, emergency response, recovery and transition from relief to development, as well as the implementation of policies and programmes that are inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities;

37. Encourages efforts to provide safe and enabling learning environments and quality education for all, especially for girls and boys, in humanitarian emergencies caused by natural disasters, including in order to contribute to a smooth transition from relief to development;

38. Encourages Member States and relevant regional and international organizations to identify and improve the dissemination of best practices for improving disaster preparedness, response and early recovery and to scale up successful local initiatives, as appropriate;

39. Requests the United Nations humanitarian and development organizations to improve their coordination of disaster recovery efforts, from relief to development, inter alia, by strengthening institutional, coordination and strategic planning efforts in disaster preparedness, resilience-building and recovery, in support of national authorities, and by ensuring that development actors participate in strategic planning at an early stage;

40. Encourages the United Nations and humanitarian and development organizations to support national, sub-national and local governments and communities in their responsibility to develop long-term strategies and multi-year operational plans for preparedness that are embedded within disaster risk reduction and resilience strategies in line with the Hyogo Framework for Action;

41. Calls upon the United Nations system and other humanitarian actors to improve the dissemination of tools and services to support enhanced disaster risk reduction, in particular preparedness, and early recovery;

42. Calls upon relevant United Nations humanitarian and development organizations, in consultation with Member States, to strengthen tools and mechanisms to ensure that early recovery needs and support are integrated into the planning and implementation of disaster preparedness, humanitarian response and development cooperation activities, as appropriate;

43. Encourages the United Nations system and humanitarian organizations to continue their efforts to mainstream early recovery into humanitarian programming, acknowledges that early recovery is an important step towards resilience-building and should receive further funding, and encourages the provision of timely, flexible and predictable funding for early recovery, including through established and complementary humanitarian and development instruments;

44. Urges Member States, the United Nations and humanitarian and development organizations to prioritize risk management and shift towards an anticipatory approach to humanitarian crises in order to prevent and reduce human suffering and economic losses;

45. Encourages the United Nations and humanitarian and development organizations to work towards a common understanding of underlying risks, clarify roles and responsibilities according to their respective mandates and establish joint objectives and programmes to strengthen coordination and coherence among short-, medium- and long-term activities;

46. Stresses the need to strengthen resilience at all levels, and in this regard encourages Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant actors to support efforts, as appropriate, to integrate resilience into humanitarian and development programming, and encourages humanitarian and development actors to pursue, where appropriate, common resilience and risk management objectives, achievable through joint analysis, planning, programming and funding;

47. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations and humanitarian organizations to provide emergency assistance in ways that are supportive of recovery and long-term development, as appropriate, including by prioritizing humanitarian tools that strengthen resilience and support livelihoods, such as, but not limited to, cash transfers, vouchers, local procurement of food and services and social safety nets;

48. Encourages the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian and development actors to support humanitarian coordinators and resident coordinators, in order to strengthen their capacity, inter alia, to support the host Government in implementing preparedness measures and to coordinate preparedness activities of country teams in support of national efforts, and encourages the United Nations system and other relevant humanitarian actors to further strengthen the ability to quickly and flexibly deploy humanitarian professionals to support Governments and country teams in the immediate aftermath of a disaster;

49. Encourages Member States, the United Nations and humanitarian and development organizations to identify ways to improve the current financing architecture in order to better provide coherent, predictable and flexible longer-term funding for risk management in multi-year strategies, in particular preparedness, on the basis of a global assessment of risk, allowing for better prioritization of resources where the risk is greatest;

50. Emphasizes the need to mobilize adequate, flexible and sustainable resources for recovery, preparedness and disaster risk reduction activities in order to ensure predictable and timely access to resources for humanitarian assistance in emergencies resulting from disasters associated with natural hazards;

51. Welcomes the achievements of the Central Emergency Response Fund and its contribution to the promotion and enhancement of early humanitarian response, calls upon all Member States, and invites the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions, to consider increasing voluntary contributions to the Fund, including, when possible, through multi-year and early commitments, and emphasizes that contributions should be additional to current commitments to humanitarian programming and not to the detriment of resources made available for international cooperation for development;

52. Strongly encourages giving appropriate consideration to disaster risk reduction and the building of resilience to disasters within the post-2015 development agenda and promoting a complementary and coherent approach between that agenda and the post-2015 framework for disaster risk reduction;

53. Invites Member States, the private sector and all concerned individuals and institutions to consider voluntary contributions to other humanitarian funding mechanisms;

54. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General to hold the first World Humanitarian Summit in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2016, aimed at sharing knowledge and best practices in the humanitarian field to improve the coordination, capacity and effectiveness of humanitarian response, requests the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs to ensure an inclusive, consultative transparent preparatory process and encourages Member States and stakeholders to participate in and contribute to the process and outcome of the Summit, and also encourages the Secretary-General to further engage Member States regarding the process and outcome of the Summit;

55. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve the international response to natural disasters and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session and to include in his report recommendations on how to ensure that humanitarian assistance is provided in ways supportive of the transition from relief to development.

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The International Strategy for Disaster Reduction [YUN 1999, p. 860] was built upon the experience of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990–1999) [YUN 1987, p. 458] and embodied the principles articulated in a number of major documents adopted during the Decade. The Strategy reflected a major shift from the traditional emphasis on disaster response to disaster reduction. The United Nations Office of Disaster Risk Reduction acted as the secretariat of the International Strategy and was mandated by the General Assembly to ensure its implementation.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/211 [YUN 2013, p. 886], the Secretary-General in September [A/69/364] reported on the progress on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction for the period 1 July 2013 to 30 June 2014.

For the fourth consecutive year, economic losses from disasters had exceeded $100 billion, highlighting the urgency to anticipate medium- and long-term risk scenarios and to identify concrete measures to minimize the creation of future risk, reduce existing levels of risk and strengthen social, environmental and economic resilience.

During the reporting period, over 16,300 people died and 113 million people were affected by some 358 internationally reported disasters. The deadliest single disaster was Typhoon Haiyan-Yolanda in the Philippines which resulted in 7,354 deaths or missing people. Continuing a long-standing trend, storms represented the largest (49 per cent) and floods the second largest (35 per cent) share of global economic losses associated with natural hazards. In fact, storms and floods had caused 55 per cent of lives lost and 86 per cent of economic losses between 1970 and 2012. No continent was spared. Europe experienced a series of costly and highly destructive floods, as did parts of North and South America, Australia and Southern Africa. While deaths associated with those events were relatively low, millions of people were affected through private and public property and asset loss.

Investments in early warning and disaster preparedness had yielded positive and encouraging results and needed to be further strengthened. As illustrated in Odisha and Andhra Pradesh in India, where over a million people were evacuated in advance of Cyclone Phailin in October 2013, the commitment of States and communities to preparedness saved lives. The 8.2-magnitude earthquake off the coast of Chile in April 2014, and the subsequent aftershocks, also highlighted the benefits of investing in preparedness and risk mitigation associated with seismic hazards. The enforcement of building codes was credited with the very low numbers of deaths, while the evacuation of over 900,000 people from the coast, following a tsunami warning, illustrated the benefits of investing in public awareness and early warning. The intersection of natural and technological hazards was receiving increasing attention. Countries' exposure to technological disasters triggered by natural hazards entailing complex and cascading threats was a growing concern. The earthquake and tsunami that occurred in Japan in March 2011 [YUN 2011, p. 963], which damaged the Fukushima nuclear power plant, brought to the fore the complex interrelationship of natural hazards and technological disasters.

The fifth assessment report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, entitled Climate Change 2014: Impacts, Adaptation, and Vulnerability, had provided yet another wake-up call for the international community. While no single disaster event could be attributed to climate change, there was increased evidence that climate change was affecting many natural and human systems and posed significant risks to human health, ecosystems, infrastructure and agricultural production.

The Secretary-General noted that in preparation for the Third World Conference for Disaster Risk Reduction, the consultations for the post-2015 framework for disaster risk reduction had generated strong multi-stakeholder engagement at the global, regional, national and local levels. Government, civil society organizations and local communities, parliamentarians, local government officials, businesses and scientific institutions had contributed significant reflections on the progress made through the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action [YUN 2005, p. 1016], as well as ideas and guidance for the new framework.

There was understanding that the post-2015 framework for disaster risk reduction, the post-2015 sustainable development agenda and goals, and the new climate change agreement would have to constitute a body of guidance that could lead to coherent and mutually reinforcing practical actions in areas of policy guidance, programmes and financing instruments as well as monitoring systems.

The Secretary-General recommended that Member States participate in the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction and its preparatory process at the highest possible level; consider disaster risk in the post-2015 sustainable development agenda and goals, including through an adequate system to measure progress; give due consideration to whole-of-society participation; and consider augmenting their financial contributions to the Trust Fund for Disaster Reduction.

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/208 [YUN 2012, p. 921], the Secretary-General provided an update on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon, which was annexed to his report [A/69/364] on progress on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (see above).

The International Research Centre on El Niño, as the global centre for research on El Niño and a World Meteorological Organization regional climate centre for Western South America servicing Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru, had focused efforts on supporting countries potentially affected by the phenomenon with a range of services, including information systems supporting public policies on climate change and biodiversity, vulnerability assessment of watersheds, and targeted initiatives to support disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation. The Centre had consolidated its international network for climate information and supported users in over 80 countries.

The Third International Conference on El Niño-Southern Oscillation (Guayaquil, Ecuador, 12–14 November) offered an important opportunity to synthesize progress on El Niño-related research, increase understanding of the relationship between climate and society, and share experiences in El Niño vulnerability assessment methodologies. The Conference brought together scientists and professionals involved in research, observations and operational meteorological, climate and hydrological services from across the world to build new knowledge and understanding aimed at improving the prediction of El Niño and its global impacts.

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/468/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/218 without vote [agenda item 19 (d)].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/200 of 18 December 1997, 53/185 of 15 December 1998, 54/220 of 22 December 1999, 55/197 of 20 December 2000, 56/194 of 21 December 2001, 57/255 of 20 December 2002, 59/232 of 22 December 2004, 61/199 of 20 December 2006, 63/215 of 19 December 2008, 65/158 of 20 December 2010 and 67/208 of 21 December 2012 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1999/46 of 28 July 1999, 1999/63 of 30 July 1999 and 2000/33 of 28 July 2000, and taking into consideration all other relevant resolutions,

Noting that the El Niño phenomenon has a recurring character and can lead to extensive natural hazards with the potential to seriously affect humankind,

Reaffirming the importance of developing strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels that aim to prevent, mitigate and repair the damage caused by natural disasters resulting from the El Niño phenomenon,

Noting that technological developments and international cooperation have enhanced the capabilities for the prediction of the El Niño phenomenon and thereby the potential for the preventive actions that may be taken to reduce its negative impacts,

Taking into account the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), in particular paragraph 37 (i) thereof, and the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, entitled “SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway”,

Reaffirming the Hyogo Declaration and the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters,

Noting the conclusion of the Secretary-General’s Climate Summit, and welcoming its contribution to the existing political momentum with a view to galvanizing action to address climate change,

Acknowledging the importance of the ongoing efforts to mainstream disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation across sustainable development efforts, including taking into account the future impacts of El Niño in disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation activities,

Recognizing that the El Niño phenomenon is expected to occur in late 2014 or early 2015 and that it is likely to have a global impact,

Recognizing also that most of the negative effects will occur in developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, in particular the annex to the report, entitled “Update on international cooperation to reduce the impact of El Niño/La Niña”, and calls upon the international community to make further efforts to assist countries affected by this phenomenon;

2. Recognizes the continued efforts being made by the Governments of Ecuador and Spain, the World Meteorological Organization and the inter-agency secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction to support the International Research Centre on El Niño at Guayaquil, Ecuador, and encourages them and other members of the international community to continue such contributions for the advancement of the Centre;

3. Welcomes the activities undertaken so far to strengthen the International Research Centre on El Niño, through collaboration with international monitoring centres, including the national oceanographic institutions, and encourages further efforts to enhance regional and international recognition of and support for the Centre and to develop tools for decision makers and government authorities aimed at reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon;

4. Notes the contributions made by the International Research Centre on El Niño, as a reference centre on El Niño, including through developing a new climatic database for El Niño/Southern Oscillation-sensitive countries, carrying out applied research in climate change and vulnerability assessments in highlands, coastal zones and marine-protected and urban areas and providing professional training in the Americas, and encourages the sharing of best practices and lessons learned with climate centres located in other El Niño-affected regions;

5. Also notes the assistance provided to Governments by the International Research Centre on El Niño in the development of early warning systems that allow for the implementation of anticipatory risk reduction measures that contribute to the reduction of the potential human, economic and environmental impacts of the phenomenon;

6. Recognizes the technical and scientific support of the World Meteorological Organization in producing regionally coordinated monthly and seasonal forecasts, in particular its establishment of a consensus mechanism for the development of updates on El Niño/La Niña conditions, which receives contributions from several climate centres, including the International Research Centre on El Niño;

7. Encourages the World Meteorological Organization, in this regard, to continue to strengthen collaboration and the exchange of data and information with relevant institutions;

8. Notes the convening of the third International Conference on El Niño-Southern Oscillation in Guayaquil from 12 to 14 November 2014, which provided an opportunity to synthesize progress on research on the El Niño phenomenon, address linkages between climate and society and share experiences on El Niño vulnerability assessment methodologies;

9. Welcomes the convening of the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction in Sendai, Japan, from 14 to 18 March 2015, and acknowledges the ongoing preparatory process for the Conference, which is taking place in Geneva;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the relevant United Nations organs, funds and programmes, in particular those taking part in the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction, and the international community to adopt, as appropriate, the measures necessary to further enhance the services provided by the International Research Centre on El Niño, and encourages the international community to provide scientific, technical and financial assistance and cooperation for this purpose, as well as to strengthen, as appropriate, other centres devoted to the study of the El Niño phenomenon;

11. Calls upon the international community to urgently provide financial, technical and capacity-building support to countries that are likely to be affected by the El Niño phenomenon;

12. Underlines the importance of maintaining the El Niño/Southern Oscillation observation system, continuing research into extreme weather events, improving forecasting skills and developing appropriate policies for reducing the impact of the El Niño phenomenon and other extreme weather events, and emphasizes the need to further develop and strengthen these institutional capacities in all countries, in particular developing countries;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session, under the sub-item entitled “International Strategy for Disaster Reduction” of the item entitled “Sustainable development”, a section on the implementation of the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/219 without vote [agenda item 19 (c)].

International Strategy for Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/219 of 22 December 1999, 56/195 of 21 December 2001, 60/195 of 22 December 2005, 64/200 of 21 December 2009, 65/157 of 20 December 2010, 66/199 of 22 December 2011, 67/209 of 21 December 2012 and 68/211 of 20 December 2013, and taking into consideration all other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”, in particular the decisions related to disaster risk reduction,

Recalling the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation),

Recalling also the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and the outcome document of the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling further its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting the conclusion of the Secretary-General’s Climate Summit, and welcoming its contribution to the existing political momentum with a view to galvanizing action to address climate change,

Noting also the initiative of the Secretary-General to hold the World Humanitarian Summit in 2016 and its possible contributions to disaster risk reduction,

Stressing the importance of stronger interlinkages among disaster risk reduction, recovery and long-term development planning, calling for more coordinated and comprehensive strategies that integrate disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation considerations into public and private investment, decision-making and the planning of development and humanitarian actions in order to reduce risks, increase resilience and provide a smoother transition between relief, recovery and development, and in this regard recognizing the need to integrate a gender perspective and the perspectives of persons with disabilities into the design and implementation of all phases of disaster risk management,

Noting that 26 December 2014 marks the tenth anniversary of the Indian Ocean tsunami disaster, which struck the Indian Ocean and South-East Asian regions and killed approximately 240,000 people, affecting the lives of victims and their families, and resulted in severe socioeconomic and environmental damage,

Recalling that the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Sendai, Japan, from 14 to 18 March 2015, will review the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters and adopt a post-2015 framework for disaster risk reduction,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 68/211;

2. Stresses the importance of the continued substantive consideration of the issue of disaster risk reduction, and encourages Member States and the relevant United Nations bodies to take into consideration the important role of co-ordinated disaster risk reduction activities for, inter alia, the achievement of sustainable development;

3. Strongly encourages giving appropriate consideration to disaster risk reduction and the building of resilience to disasters within the post-2015 development agenda;

4. Recognizes the importance of the development of strategies at the national, subregional, regional and international levels, including government-led strategies, in particular in developing countries, to achieve disaster risk reduction, reiterates the need to further develop regional initiatives and the risk reduction capacities of regional mechanisms, where they exist, and to strengthen them within national disaster management planning, where appropriate, and requests the regional commissions, within their mandates, to support the efforts of States in this regard, in close coordination with the implementing entities of the United Nations system;

5. Stresses the need to foster better understanding and knowledge of the causes of disasters and to build resilience and strengthen coping capacities, in particular in developing countries, through, inter alia, the exchange of best practices, the transfer of technology, as mutually agreed, and technical knowledge, the provision of educational and training programmes for disaster risk reduction and access to relevant data and information, the strengthening of institutional arrangements and the promotion of community participation, recognizing that women play a vital role in disaster risk reduction, ownership through community-based disaster risk management approaches and a people-centred, holistic approach, in order to build an inclusive society and to protect livelihoods and productive assets, including livestock, working animals, tools and seeds;

6. Reiterates its appreciation to the Government of Japan for its generous offer to host the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction and its generous pledge to cover the costs of the Conference, welcomes the voluntary contributions already made to facilitate the participation in the Conference of representatives of developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and invites those States that have not yet done so to make such voluntary contributions;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Switzerland for hosting and covering the costs of two meetings of the Open-ended Intergovernmental Preparatory Committee for the Third World Conference;

8. Welcomes the work of the ongoing preparatory process for the Third World Conference, which is being carried out in Geneva, and reiterates its decision that the Conference will result in a concise, focused, forward-looking and action-oriented outcome document;

9. Invites voluntary commitments by all stakeholders and their networks to implement the Hyogo Framework for Action 2005–2015: Building the Resilience of Nations and Communities to Disasters and to support the development of the post-2015 framework for disaster risk reduction;

10. Reiterates its strong encouragement of and the need for effective coordination and coherence between the post-2015 framework for disaster risk reduction, the post-2015 development agenda and other relevant intergovernmental and United Nations processes, in order to build synergies;

11. Reiterates its invitation to Member States, all United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other relevant intergovernmental agencies and organizations, including regional development banks, to participate actively in the Third World Conference, and encourages major groups, as identified in Agenda 21, and other relevant stakeholders, to contribute further to and participate actively in the Conference, according to the rules of procedure agreed upon by its Preparatory Committee;

12. Recognizes in this context the importance of the contributions and participation of all relevant stakeholders, including major groups, parliaments, civil society, the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, non-governmental organizations, national platforms for disaster risk reduction, focal points for the Hyogo Framework for Action, local government representatives, scientific institutions and the private sector, as well as organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental organizations, at the Third World Conference and during its preparatory process;

13. Stresses the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective and the perspectives of persons with disabilities in disaster risk management so as to strengthen the resilience of communities and reduce social vulnerabilities to disasters, and in this regard recognizes the need for the inclusive participation and contribution of women, children, older persons, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples and local communities in all forums and processes related to disaster risk reduction;

14. Reiterates the importance of regional coordination in the framework of the preparatory process in order to promote broad participation in the Third World Conference, and welcomes in this regard the deliberations of the regional platforms and meetings which have been held in Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Italy, Kazakhstan, Nigeria and Thailand;

15. Takes note of the update on progress regarding the implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action at the national, regional and global levels, as contained in the report entitled “Implementation of the Hyogo Framework for Action: summary of reports 2007–2013”, and notes the support work of intergovernmental organizations and other relevant bodies in this regard;

16. Acknowledges the importance of the work of the United Nations in disaster risk reduction, the growing demands on the secretariat of the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction and the need for increased, timely, stable and predictable resources for the implementation of the International Strategy, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to recommend options on how best to support the implementation of the natural disaster reduction strategy so as to enable the secretariat to effectively coordinate the implementation of the post-2015 framework for disaster risk reduction;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the outcome document of the Third World Conference to the attention of Member States, relevant international and regional organizations, multilateral financial institutions and the regional development banks, as well as relevant intergovernmental processes and conferences;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Sustainable development”, the sub-item entitled “International Strategy for Disaster Reduction”;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including on the outcome of the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction.

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the item on the International Strategy for Disaster Reduction would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

New Partnership for Africa’s Development

The General Assembly in 2002, by resolution 57/7 [YUN 2002, p. 910], endorsed the Secretary-General’s recommendation [ibid., p. 909] that the New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD), adopted in 2001 by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity [YUN 2001, p. 900], should be the framework within which the international community should concentrate its efforts for Africa’s development. During 2014, efforts continued to focus on UN and international support for NEPAD and its implementation.

Implementation and support for NEPAD

First Biennial Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 66/293 [YUN 2012, p. 927], the Secretary-General submitted in July the first biennial report [A/69/163] on the review of the implementation of commitments made towards Africa’s development. The interim report outlined the establishment and operationalization of the United Nations monitoring mechanism, the first such mechanism aimed at monitoring commitments made towards Africa’s development, including commitments made by African countries and their development partners. The report provided an in-depth review of the implementation of commitments in four thematic areas: agriculture, food security and nutrition; financing for development; environmental sustainability and climate change; and good governance. The report highlighted the most significant commitments made by African Governments and their development partners; examined progress towards the implementation of those commitments; identified gaps and remaining challenges; and proposed measures to ensure the accelerated implementation of those commitments and deliver on their expected outcomes.

In terms of agriculture, food security and nutrition, Africa’s efforts were supported by many initiatives, including the Zero Hunger Challenge, launched by the Secretary-General at the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780] and taken forward by the 23 UN system entities that made up the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis [YUN 2008, p. 1343]. At the 24th African Union Summit (Malabo, Equatorial Guinea, June 2014), NEPAD launched an alliance of diverse partners to reach six million farming families through climate-smart agriculture processes over the next seven years. Bilateral development partners also launched specific programmes, including the Yokohama Declaration 2013, adopted at the Fifth Tokyo International Conference on African Development, that contained specific commitments to support agricultural development in Africa through the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme (CAADP). Efforts to mainstream nutrition in food security policies and initiatives were in their early stages, and limited information was available on results achieved, constraints, challenges and opportunities.

In terms of financing for development, official development assistance (ODA) to Africa had been essential in helping accelerate economic growth and lift people from extreme poverty over the past few decades and was expected to remain a critical source of development financing. Declines in global ODA in 2011 and 2012, caused in part by the eurozone crisis, raised key questions as to the reliability of ODA in the future. The challenges facing Africa were to enhance domestic revenue mobilization and, at the same time, to adopt the right policies and create credible institutions to leverage additional resources from external public and private sources. Although Africa’s share of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD)/Development Assistance Committee aid allocation was the highest, Africa’s share of total OECD/Development Assistance Committee aid allocation had remained relatively constant, averaging around 37 per cent during the past three years. That indicated that donors were not prioritizing Africa in aid allocation, despite pledges to do so.

In terms of environmental sustainability and climate change, while Africa was doing well in limiting carbon dioxide emissions and had reduced its consumption of ozone-depleting substances, the forest cover was contracting and the continent remained far off-track for meeting targets related to water and sanitation. African countries had integrated pro-poor environmental sustainability in national development plans and sector plans. About half of the countries in Africa had reached the target of protecting at least 10 per cent of their territorial and marine areas, compared with 20 countries in 1990. A total of 53 African countries had completed national biodiversity strategies and action plans and two thirds were developing or implementing national forest programmes. In addition, as of 2013, 31 African least developed countries had developed national adaptation programmes of action on climate change and 21 of them were implementing climate adaptation projects. Those efforts notwithstanding, on average African Governments allocated less than 3 per cent of national budgets to environment ministries and support for the environment represented less than 2 per cent of total ODA to Africa.

In terms of governance, the African Union (AU) had offered a range of support to African countries' electoral efforts. In 2013, the AU Long-Term Observer Mission witnessed elections, on a pilot basis, in five countries. Its Short-Term Observer Mission witnessed elections in 13 African countries. The AU also provided Building Resources in Democracy, Governance and Elections training workshops for officials of election management boards from eight countries. As at February 2014, 34 African countries had subscribed to the African Peer Review Mechanism, committing to a broad array of international and regional governance norms and standards. The AU Convention on Preventing and Combating Corruption aimed to prevent, detect, punish and eradicate corruption and related offences in Africa, had forty-five signatures and 31 ratifications.

In his recommendations, the Secretary-General noted that while Africa's new development partners continued to make important contributions towards the continent's development, the lack of reliable data on their engagement made it difficult to assess the impact of their growing partnership with the continent. Africa's new development partners should strengthen their efforts to monitor and report on their development cooperation activities in the spirit of the Busan Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation. In addition, there was a need for stronger support for the delivery of impactful results in the four thematic areas.

CPC action. The Committee for Programme and Coordination, at its fifty-fourth session (New York, 2–27 June), considered the proposed strategic framework of the United Nations support for NEPAD for the period 2016–2017 and recommended that the General Assembly approve it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 July [meeting 104], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/301 [draft: A/68/L.41/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 63 (a)].

New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/2 of 16 September 2002 on the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa's Development,

Recalling also its resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development and resolutions 58/233 of 23 December 2003, 59/254 of 23 December 2004, 60/222 of 23 December 2005, 61/229 of 22 December 2006, 62/179 of 19 December 2007, 63/267 of 31 March 2009, 64/258 of 16 March 2010, 65/284 of 22 June 2011, 66/286 of 23 July 2012 and 67/294 of 15 August 2013, entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support",

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome, including the recognition of the need to meet the special needs of Africa, and recalling also its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006,

Recalling the political declaration on Africa's development needs, adopted at the high-level meeting on Africa's development needs on 22 September 2008,

Recalling also the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document, including the recognition that more attention should be given to Africa, especially to those countries most off track to achieve the Millennium Development Goals by 2015,

Recalling further that significant challenges remain in achieving sustainable development in Africa, as emphasized in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want", including the importance of fulfilling all commitments to advance action in areas critical to Africa's sustainable development,

Recalling its resolution 66/293 of 17 September 2012, by which it established a United Nations monitoring mechanism to review commitments made towards Africa's development, and looking forward to the first biennial report, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session,

Recalling also the holding of the high-level thematic debate of the General Assembly on the promotion of investment in Africa and its catalytic role in achieving Africa's development objectives, including those of the New Partnership for Africa's Development, on 17 July 2014,

Taking note of other initiatives, such as the first high-level meeting of the Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation on the theme "Building towards an inclusive post-2015 development agenda", held in Mexico City on 15 and 16 April 2014,

Stressing that addressing Africa's special development needs should be given due attention in the post-2015 development agenda,

Bearing in mind that African countries have primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and bearing in mind also the need for their development efforts to be supported by an enabling international economic environment, and in this regard recalling the support given by the International Conference on Financing for Development to the New Partnership,

Noting with appreciation the recent progress made by the 34 African countries and the 4 regional economic communities that voluntarily adopted the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme and committed to ensuring an annual rate of growth in agriculture of 6 per cent and to allocating at least 10 per cent of public expenditure to the agricultural sector, as appropriate, and noting with appreciation also that, today, nine countries have reached or surpassed the 10 per cent budget allocation target, while another nine countries are currently spending between 5 and 10 per cent,

Welcoming the decision, taken by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union at its nineteenth ordinary session, held on 15 and 16 July 2012, to proclaim 2014 the Year of Agriculture and Food Security in Africa,

Reiterating the need for the international community to implement all commitments regarding the economic and social development of Africa,

1. Welcomes the eleventh consolidated report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms its full support for the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

3. Reaffirms its commitment to the full implementation of the political declaration on Africa's development needs, as reaffirmed in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development, adopted as the outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008;

4. Recognizes the progress made in the implementation of the New Partnership as well as regional and international support for the New Partnership, while acknowledging that much needs to be done in its implementation;

5. Takes note of the declaration of the special summit of the African Union on HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, held in Abuja from 12 to 16 July 2013, on the progress made in implementing the Abuja actions towards the elimination of HIV and AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria in Africa by 2030, also takes note of the Political Declaration on HIV and AIDS: Intensifying Our Efforts to Eliminate HIV and AIDS, adopted at the high-level meeting on HIV/AIDS on 10 June 2011, further takes note of the declaration of the extraordinary summit meeting of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and other related infectious diseases, held in Abuja from 24 to 27 April 2001, and reaffirms the resolve to provide assistance for prevention, treatment and care, with the aim of ensuring an HIV/AIDS-, malaria- and tuberculosis-free Africa by addressing the needs of all, in particular the needs of women, children and young people, and the urgent need to scale up significantly efforts towards achieving the goal of universal access to comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention programmes, treatment, care and support in African countries, to accelerate and intensify efforts to expand access to affordable and quality medicines in Africa, including antiretroviral drugs, by encouraging pharmaceutical companies to make drugs available, and to ensure strengthened global partnership and increased bilateral and multilateral assistance, where possible on a grant basis, to combat HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases in Africa through the strengthening of health systems;

6. Also takes note of the road map on shared responsibility and global solidarity for AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria response in Africa, from 2012 to 2015, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union at its nineteenth ordinary session, notes the revitalization of AIDS Watch Africa as an African high-level platform to advocate action, accountability and resource mobilization for response to HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria in Africa, and requests, as appropriate, and in line with other international obligations, development partners and the United Nations system to support efforts of African countries and organizations to reach the main objectives put forward in the African Union road map, including achieving diversified sustainable financing, strengthening regulatory harmonization and local pharmaceutical manufacturing capacity and enhancing leadership and governance of the responses;

7. Recognizes that HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases pose severe risks for the entire world, in particular the African continent, and serious challenges to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

8. Invites development partners to continue to assist African countries in their efforts to strengthen national health systems, including by providing skilled health personnel, reliable health information and data, research infrastructure and laboratory capacity, and to expand surveillance systems in the health sector, including support for the efforts to prevent, protect against and combat outbreaks of diseases, including of neglected tropical diseases, and in this context reiterates its support for the Kampala Declaration and Agenda for Global Action and follow-up conferences to respond to the serious health workforce crisis in Africa;

9. Stresses the importance of improving maternal and child health, and in this regard welcomes the declaration of the African Union summit on maternal, infant and child health and development, held in Kampala from 19 to 27 July 2010, and acknowledges the Campaign on Accelerated Reduction of Maternal Mortality in Africa;

10. Takes note of the declaration of the high-level meeting of African and international leaders, entitled "Toward African renaissance: renewed partnership for a unified approach to end hunger in Africa by 2025 under the framework of the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme";

11. Expresses deep concern about the ongoing adverse impacts, particularly on development, of the world financial and economic crisis, recognizes evidence of an uneven and fragile recovery, is cognizant that the global economy, notwithstanding significant efforts that helped to contain tail risks, improve financial market conditions and sustain recovery, still remains in a challenging phase, with downside risks, including high volatility in global markets, high unemployment, particularly among young people, indebtedness in some countries and widespread fiscal strains, which pose challenges for global economic recovery and reflect the need for additional progress towards sustaining and rebalancing global demand, and stresses the need for continuing efforts to address systemic fragilities and imbalances and to reform and strengthen the international financial system while implementing the reforms agreed upon to date;

12. Expresses concern about the negative consequences of the uneven global recovery, the increasing challenges posed by climate change, drought, land degradation, desertification, the loss of biodiversity and floods, and the serious challenges these impacts pose to the fight against poverty and hunger, which could pose serious additional challenges to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, particularly in Africa;

13. Recognizes that, while global growth is returning, there is a need to further strengthen the recovery, which is still uneven, stresses the urgent need for full recovery and sustained and accelerated growth, which translates into new employment opportunities, secure incomes and improved livelihoods, and reaffirms the need to continue to support the special needs of Africa and to take action to mitigate the multidimensional impacts of the crisis on the continent;

14. Notes that the rapid economic growth of some developing countries has had a positive impact on the efforts of the African continent to sustain and expand growth, despite the fact that those developing countries continue to face development challenges;

15. Expresses concern at Africa's disproportionately low share in the volume of international trade, which stands at approximately 3 per cent, also expresses concern that official development assistance to Africa fell in 2013, and further expresses concern at the increased debt burden of some African countries;

16. Notes that foreign direct investment is a major source of financing for development, that it has a critical role in achieving development objectives and inclusive economic growth, including through the promotion of job creation and poverty eradication, and that it contributes to the active participation of the African economies in the global economy and facilitates regional economic cooperation and integration, and in this regard calls upon developed countries to continue to devise source-country measures to encourage and facilitate the flow of foreign direct investment, inter alia, through the provision of export credits and other lending instruments, risk guarantees and business development services;

17. Also notes the importance of promoting the formalization of informal sector activities in Africa;

18. Calls upon developing countries and countries with economies in transition to continue their efforts to create a domestic environment conducive to attracting investments by, inter alia, achieving a transparent, stable and predictable investment climate with proper contract enforcement and respect for property rights;

19. Emphasizes that economic development, including inclusive industrial development, and policies which seek to enhance productive capacities in Africa can generate employment and income for the poor and, therefore, be an engine for poverty eradication and for achieving internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

20. Reaffirms the need to enhance the voice and participation of developing countries, including African countries, in international economic decision-making and norm-setting, notes the steps taken in this regard, and emphasizes in this context the need to avoid further marginalization of the African continent;

I

Actions by African countries and organizations

21. Welcomes the progress made by African countries in fulfilling their commitments in the implementation of the New Partnership to deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management, and encourages African countries, with the participation of stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to continue their efforts towards achieving development goals, developing and strengthening institutions for governance, creating an environment conducive to involving the private sector, including small and medium-sized enterprises, in the New Partnership implementation process, developing public-private partnerships for financing infrastructure projects and attracting foreign direct investment for development;

22. Also welcomes the collaboration between the African Private Sector Forum and the United Nations Global Compact, and encourages the strengthening of this partnership in conjunction with the African Union Commission in support of the development of the African private sector and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in line with the relevant executive decisions of the African Union;

23. Notes with appreciation the efforts exerted by the African Union and the regional economic communities in the area of economic integration, as well as ongoing efforts by the African Union in the operationalization of the provision contained in General Assembly resolutions 59/213 of 20 December 2004, 61/296 of 17 September 2007 and 63/310 of 14 September 2009, and stresses the key role of the United Nations system in supporting the African Union in the social, economic and political fields and in the area of peace and security;

24. Recognizes the important role that African regional economic communities can play in the implementation of the New Partnership, and in this regard encourages African countries and the international community to give regional economic communities the support necessary to strengthen their capacity;

25. Welcomes the decision by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union, at its eighteenth ordinary session, on 29 and 30 January 2012, to strengthen intra-African trade, which plays an important role in promoting economic growth and development, and calls upon the United Nations system and development partners to continue to support the efforts of African countries, the African Union and regional economic communities to enhance intra-African trade;

26. Also welcomes the commitment of the African leaders to Africa's political, social and economic integration agenda and to the ideal of pan-Africanism and African renaissance, as reaffirmed in the solemn declaration adopted on 26 May 2013 on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Organization of African Unity/African Union;

27. Takes note of the progress in the development of the African Union Agenda 2063 as a strategic vision and action plan for ensuring a positive socioeconomic transformation in Africa within the next 50 years, particularly through regional integration, industrialization, diversification of the economy and job creation;

28. Welcomes the commendable progress that has been achieved in implementing the African Peer Review Mechanism, in particular the completion of the peer review process in 17 countries, and welcomes the progress in implementing the national programmes of action resulting from those reviews, and in this regard urges African States that have not yet done so to consider joining the Mechanism process and to strengthen the Mechanism process for its efficient performance;

29. Welcomes and appreciates the continuing and increasing efforts of African countries in mainstreaming a gender perspective and the empowerment of women in the implementation of the New Partnership;

30. Encourages African countries to accelerate the achievement of the objective of food security in Africa, welcomes the commitment made by African leaders to raise the share of agriculture and rural development in their budget expenditures and ensure better governance to effectively manage the resources allocated, and in this regard reaffirms its support for, inter alia, the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, under the strong leadership of African countries, in accordance with the targets set by the New Partnership;

31. Also encourages African countries to strengthen and expand local and regional infrastructure and to continue sharing best practices with a view to strengthening regional and continental integration, and in this regard notes with appreciation the work of the high-level subcommittee of the African Union on the Presidential Infrastructure Champion Initiative, which seeks to further strengthen the development of infrastructure on the African continent in collaboration with relevant development partners;

32. Further encourages African countries to maintain the trend of increasing investment in infrastructure development and improving the efficiency of existing infrastructure investment, in the context of the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa which calls for the creation of an enabling environment for adequate investments and the adoption of the sector reforms needed to produce the expected results;

33. Encourages African countries to continue their efforts in investing in education, science, technology and innovation to enhance value addition and industrial development;

II

Response of the international community

34. Welcomes the efforts by development partners to strengthen cooperation with the New Partnership;

35. Also welcomes the various important initiatives established between African countries and their development partners, as well as other initiatives, emphasizes the importance of coordination in such initiatives on Africa and the need for their effective implementation, and in this regard recognizes the important role that North-South, South-South and triangular cooperation can play in supporting Africa's development efforts, including in the implementation of the New Partnership, while bearing in mind that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for but rather a complement to North-South cooperation;

36. Urges continued support of measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and hunger, job creation and sustainable development in Africa, including, as appropriate, debt relief, improved market access, support for the private sector and entrepreneurship, fulfilment of commitments on official development assistance and increased flows of foreign direct investment, and transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms;

37. Expresses deep concern about the continuing negative effects of desertification, land degradation and drought on the African continent and, in particular, the critical situation in the Sahel and the Horn of Africa region, which have experienced one of the worst droughts in history, and underlines the need for short-, medium- and long-term measures, and in this regard calls for the continued effective implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, including its 10-year strategic plan and framework to enhance the implementation of the Convention (2008–2018), to address the situation;

38. Recognizes that Africa, which contributes the least to climate change, is one of the regions most vulnerable and most exposed to its adverse impacts, and in this regard calls upon the international community, in particular developed countries, to continue to support Africa in its adaptation and sustainable development efforts through, inter alia, the transfer and deployment of technology, on mutually agreed terms, capacity-building and the provision of adequate and predictable new resources, in line with existing commitments;

39. Notes the progress made at the Ninth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 3 to 7 December 2013, and looks forward to the timely implementation of the “Bali package”, including the trade facilitation agreement, and calls for a balanced, ambitious, comprehensive and development-oriented outcome of the Doha Development Agenda multilateral trade negotiations;

40. Reiterates the important role of trade as an engine of sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, in particular its contribution to boosting job creation, given high youth unemployment in Africa, and to the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals, and emphasizes the need to resist protectionist tendencies and to rectify any trade-distorting measures already taken that are inconsistent with World Trade Organization rules, while recognizing the right of countries, in particular developing countries, to fully utilize their flexibilities consistent with their commitments and obligations as members of the World Trade Organization;

41. Also reiterates the need for all countries and relevant multilateral institutions to continue efforts to enhance coherence in their trade policies towards African countries, and acknowledges the importance of efforts to fully integrate African countries into the international trading system and to build their capacity to compete through such initiatives as aid for trade and, given the world economic and financial crisis, the provision of assistance to address the adjustment challenges of trade liberalization;

42. Calls for a comprehensive and sustainable solution to the external debt problems of African countries, and recognizes the important role, on a case-by-case basis, of debt relief, including debt cancellation, as appropriate, the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and debt restructuring, as debt crisis prevention and management tools for mitigating the impact of the world financial and economic crisis in developing countries;

43. Welcomes the efforts of some developed countries which are on target to meet the commitments made in terms of increased official development assistance;

44. Expresses deep concern at the fact that the commitment to double aid to Africa by 2010, as articulated at the Summit of the Group of Eight held at Gleneagles from 6 to 8 July 2005, was not entirely reached, and in this regard stresses the need to make rapid progress in order to fulfil the Gleneagles and other donors' substantial commitments to increase aid through a variety of means;

45. Underlines the fact that the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015, as well as the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to least developed countries, and urges developed countries that have not yet done so to fulfil their commitments for official development assistance to developing countries;

46. Considers that innovative mechanisms of financing can make a positive contribution towards assisting developing countries in mobilizing additional resources for financing for development on a voluntary basis and that such financing should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of financing, and, while highlighting the considerable progress on innovative sources of financing for development achieved to date, stresses the importance of scaling up present initiatives and developing new mechanisms, as appropriate;

47. Welcomes the increasing efforts to improve the quality of official development assistance and increase its development impact, recognizes the Development Cooperation Forum of the Economic and Social Council, notes other initiatives, such as the high-level forums on aid effectiveness, which produced, inter alia, the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, the Accra Agenda for Action and the Busan Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation, which make important contributions to the efforts of the countries that have made commitments to them, including through the adoption of the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization and managing for results, and bears in mind that there is no one-size-fits-all formula that will guarantee effective assistance and that the specific situation of each country needs to be fully considered;

48. Recognizes the need for Africa's development partners that are supporting agriculture and food security in Africa to align their efforts more specifically towards supporting the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, using the Programme's investment plans for alignment of external funding, and in this regard takes note of the Declaration of the World Summit on Food Security;

49. Also recognizes the need for Africa's development partners to align their efforts in infrastructure investment towards supporting the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa;

50. Invites all of Africa's development partners, in particular developed countries, to support African countries in promoting and maintaining macroeconomic stability, to help African countries to attract investments and promote policies conducive to attracting domestic and foreign investment, for example by encouraging private financial flows, to promote investment by their private sectors in Africa, to encourage and facilitate the transfer of technology to African countries, on mutually agreed terms, and to assist in strengthening human and institutional capacities for the implementation of the New Partnership, consistent with its priorities and objectives and with a view to furthering Africa's development at all levels;

51. Stresses that the prevention, management and resolution of conflict and post-conflict consolidation are essential for the achievement of the objectives of the New Partnership, and welcomes in this regard the cooperation and support granted by the United Nations and development partners to the African regional and sub-regional organizations in the implementation of the New Partnership;

52. Welcomes the continued efforts of the United Nations Peacebuilding Commission in assisting post-conflict countries in Africa, particularly the six African countries for which the Commission has established country-specific configurations;

53. Urges the international community to give due attention to Africa's priorities, including the New Partnership, in the formulation of the post-2015 development agenda;

54. Requests the United Nations system to continue to provide assistance to the Planning and Coordinating Agency of the New Partnership and to African countries in developing projects and programmes within the scope of the priorities of the New Partnership and to place greater emphasis on monitoring, evaluation and dissemination of the effectiveness of its activities in support of the New Partnership;

55. Emphasizes African ownership of the African Peer Review Mechanism process, and invites the international community to support the efforts of African countries, at their request, in implementing their respective national programmes of action arising from the process;

56. Invites the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the 2005 World Summit, to urge the United Nations development system to assist African countries in implementing quick-impact initiatives through, inter alia, the Millennium Villages Project, and requests the Secretary-General to include in his report an assessment of those quick-impact initiatives;

57. Requests the Secretary-General to promote greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, on the basis of the agreed clusters of the Regional Coordination Mechanism for Africa, and in this regard calls upon the United Nations system to continue to mainstream the special needs of Africa in all its normative and operational activities;

58. Welcomes the establishment of a United Nations monitoring mechanism to review commitments made related to Africa's development, and invites Member States and all relevant entities of the United Nations system, including funds, programmes, specialized agencies and regional commissions, in particular the Economic Commission for Africa, and all relevant international and regional organizations to contribute to the effectiveness and reliability of the review process by cooperating in the collection of data and the evaluation performance;

59. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session on the basis of inputs from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other stakeholders in the New Partnership.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 68/301 (see above), the Secretary-General submitted in July the twelfth consolidated report [A/69/161] on NEPAD implementation and international support. The report highlighted policy measures taken by African countries and organizations in the implementation of NEPAD as well as the response of the international community and support provided by the United Nations system. Also highlighted were activities undertaken by the private sector and civil society in support of NEPAD. In regard to actions initiated by African countries and organizations, the NEPAD Agency took initiatives in infrastructure development, agriculture and food security, health, education and training, environment and tourism, information and communications technology, science, technology and innovation, and gender mainstreaming, empowerment of women and civil society participation. On the political front, the African Peer Review Mechanism [YUN 2003, p. 938] continued to strengthen and institutionalize good political, economic and corporate governance throughout the continent. In January Equatorial Guinea joined the Mechanism, bringing its membership to 34 countries. In spite of a steady increase in membership, there was slow progress in the conduct of national review exercises, partly due to financial constraints. South Africa and Mozambique submitted their progress reports on the implementation of their national programmes of action for review by the African Peer Review Forum during the twentieth summit, held in January. As at June, 17 countries had been reviewed: Algeria, Benin, Burkina Faso, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Lesotho, Mali, Mauritius, Mozambique, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia.

According to the International Monetary Fund, although global economic activities increased considerably in the second half of 2013, Africa continued to show strong resilience with GDP growth averaging 4 per cent in 2013, 1 per cent faster than the global average. Though the recovery in commodity prices had been important for Africa's recovery from the global economic slowdown, efforts undertaken by African countries to reform their economies, tackle conflicts and strengthen governance had also played an important role in supporting growth. Despite improved performance, growth in Africa remained inadequate to make significant progress in poverty reduction. More remained to be done to raise growth to the 7 per cent target considered critical for sustained poverty reduction as well as for progress towards the achievement of other Millennium Development Goals targets.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Secretary-General noted that overall progress had been made in the previous 12 months in the implementation of the NEPAD agenda. In the decade since its establishment, the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme had served as an important framework for agriculture development; progress had also been evident in the implementation of other NEPAD priority sectors, including health, education and gender mainstreaming. An increasing number of countries were attaching great importance to good governance, as evidenced by the implementation of the African Peer Review Mechanism. On the international front, official development assistance to Africa increased, reversing the downward trend of the past two years. Africa's development partners should make every effort to increase financing for Africa's agriculture in line with relevant commitments, including those contained in the L'Aquila Food Security Initiative. While progress had been made in the implementation of the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa, lack of financing remained a serious challenge and there was a need to leverage private sector participation in infrastructure through innovative public-private partnerships as underscored by the Dakar Agenda for Action. The Secretary-General underscored that gender and women's empowerment issues had to be mainstreamed into national development policy frameworks in order to undergird efforts towards gender equality and accelerate development outcomes.

Social dimension of NEPAD

The Commission for Social Development at its fifty-second session (New York, 15 February 2013 and 11–21 February 2014) [E/2014/26-E/CN.5/2014/10] recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption resolution 2014/4 (see below) on the social dimensions of NEPAD.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 23], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2014/26], adopted resolution 2014/4 without vote [agenda item 17 (b)].

Social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa's Development

Recalling the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled “World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world”, held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration of 8 September 2000 and the 2005 World Summit Outcome, and recalling the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document, the United Nations Declaration on the New Partnership for Africa’s Development of 16 September 2002, General Assembly resolution 57/7 of 4 November 2002 on the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and support for the New Partnership for Africa’s Development and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Recognizing the commitments made with regard to meeting the special needs of Africa at the 2005 World Summit and reaffirmed in the political declaration on Africa’s development needs adopted at the high-level meeting held at United Nations Headquarters on 22 September 2008, and noting the conclusions of the African Union Extraordinary Summit on Employment and Poverty Alleviation in Africa, held in Ouagadougou on 8 and 9 September 2004, including relevant decisions of African Union summits related to the New Partnership for Africa’s Development,

Recalling the first session of the African Union Conference of Ministers in charge of Social Development, held in Windhoek from 27 to 31 October 2008, and the second session of the Conference of Ministers, held in Khartoum from 21 to 25 November 2010 on the theme “Strengthening social policy action towards social inclusion”, welcoming the third session of the Conference of Ministers, held in Addis Ababa from 26 to 30 November 2012, recalling in this regard the African Common Position on Social Integration and the Social Policy Framework for Africa, both of which were endorsed by the Heads of State and Government of the African Union in February 2009, as well as the African Common Position on Good Practices in Family Policy Development and Implementation, for the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family (2014), and the renewed Continental Plan of Action on the African Decade of Persons with Disabilities (2010–2019), which were endorsed by the Heads of State and Government of the African Union in January 2013, and taking note of the African Common Position on the Human Rights of Older Persons in Africa,

Noting the full integration of the New Partnership for Africa’s Development into the structures and processes of the African Union and the establishment of the Planning and Coordinating Agency of the New Partnership as a technical body of the African Union to replace the secretariat of the New Partnership,

Noting with appreciation the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa adopted by the African Union, which calls for the creation of an enabling environment for adequate investments and the adoption of the sector reforms needed to produce the expected results aimed at promoting economic and social development and reducing poverty in the continent through the implementation of integrated regional infrastructure networks,

Welcoming the ministerial statements on the themes “Unleashing Africa’s potential as a pole of global growth” and “Industrialization for an emerging Africa”, adopted by the African Union Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance and the Economic Commission for Africa Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development at their fifth and sixth joint meetings, held in Addis Ababa on 26 and 27 March 2012 and in Abidjan, Côte d’Ivoire, on 25 and 26 March 2013 respectively, and the consensus statement on the theme “Governing and harnessing natural resources for Africa’s development” adopted at the eighth African Development Forum, held in Addis Ababa from 23 to 25 October 2012,

Remaining concerned that, while Africa continues to make steady progress towards attainment of the targets of the Millennium Development Goals, this progress is, however, not enough for all countries to attain all of the Goals by 2015, and in this regard emphasizing that concerted efforts and continued support are required to fulfil the commitments to address the special needs of Africa,

Expressing concern that attainment of the social development objectives may be hindered by the ongoing adverse impacts of the world financial and economic crisis, volatile energy and food prices and challenges posed by climate change,

Stressing that addressing Africa’s special development needs should be given due attention in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda,

Noting that Africa is abundantly endowed with natural resources, including many industrial minerals and agricultural resources that are exported mainly in primary form, and that the exploitation of the natural resources sector in Africa has for many years attracted foreign direct investment in capital-intensive enclave sectors that has the potential, when paired with appropriate policies, including employment-intensive policies, to spur structural transformation, create employment, contribute to poverty eradication and reduce inequality,

Emphasizing that the African Union and the regional economic communities have a critical role to play in the implementation of the New Partnership, and in this regard encouraging African countries, with the assistance of their development partners, to increase and coordinate effectively their support for enhancing the capacities of these institutions and to promote regional cooperation and social and economic integration in Africa,

Recognizing the regional coordination mechanism of United Nations agencies and organizations working in Africa in support of the African Union and its New Partnership for Africa’s Development Programme of Action, as well as the Planning and Coordinating Agency of the New Partnership, which aims to ensure coordination and coherence in the delivery of support for greater effectiveness and impact through increased joint programming and joint implementation of activities,

Recognizing also that capacity-building, knowledge-sharing and best practices are essential for the successful implementation of the New Partnership, and recognizing also the need for continued support from the international community, partners of the New Partnership and United Nations agencies to continue to work towards sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and development on the African continent, and for greater synergy and effective coordination between the New Partnership and the international initiatives related to Africa, and emphasizing the importance of the close collaboration of the African Union Commission and the United Nations as the co-organizers of the Tokyo International Conference on African Development, Recognizing further that investments in people, especially their social protection, health and education, are essential to enhancing agricultural productivity and performance, and thereby key to growth and poverty reduction, through increasing decent job creation and employability opportunities, especially for women and youth, improving food security and nutrition and building resilience,

Noting with appreciation that the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative and bilateral donors have provided substantial debt relief to 35 countries that have reached the completion point under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, which has considerably reduced their debt vulnerability and enabled them to increase their investments in social services,

Bearing in mind that African countries have primary responsibility for their own economic and social development, that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized and that the development efforts of such countries need to be supported by an enabling international economic environment, and in this regard recalling the support given by the International Conference on Financing for Development to the New Partnership,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the progress made by African countries in fulfilling their commitments in the implementation of the New Partnership for Africa's Development to deepen democracy, human rights, good governance and sound economic management, and encourages African countries, with the participation of stakeholders, including civil society and the private sector, to intensify their efforts in this regard by developing and strengthening institutions for governance and creating an environment conducive to attracting foreign direct investment for the development of the region;

3. Also welcomes the good progress that has been made in implementing the African Peer Review Mechanism, as reflected in particular by the number of countries that have signed up to participate in the Mechanism, the completion of the peer review process in some countries, the progress in implementing the recommendations of those reviews in those countries and the completion of the annual progress reports and self-assessment processes, the hosting of country support missions and the launching of national preparatory processes for the peer review in others, and urges African States that have not yet done so to join the Mechanism as a matter of priority and to strengthen the peer review process so as to ensure its efficient performance;

4. Notes the development of Agenda 2063 as the African Union long-term strategy emphasizing industrialization, youth employment, improved natural resource governance and the reduction of inequalities, and welcomes the decision on the organization of an extraordinary summit of Heads of State and Government of the African Union to assess the progress in implementation of the 2004 Ouagadougou Declaration and Plan of Action on Employment and Poverty Alleviation, to be organized by the African Union in September 2014;

5. Recognizes the valuable efforts made by the Steering Committee of the New Partnership in the implementation of the Programme for Infrastructure Development in Africa, particularly through the mechanism of the Presidential Infrastructure Champion Initiative, under which impressive progress has been recorded in the conception of many critical infrastructure projects on the continent;

6. Stresses that industrialization is a critical engine of economic and social development, and emphasizes the need to accelerate Africa's industrialization by the adoption and implementation of specific measures and actions at the national, regional and continental levels and with the support of and in collaboration with development partners and the international community;

7. Also stresses the importance of taking measures to promote the dynamic diversification of African economies through transforming African economies from resource dependence, increasing local processing of and value addition to natural resources in order to expand the domestic economy and increase revenue, and developing new industries in order to transform lives and create opportunities for more and better jobs;

8. Welcomes the efforts made by African countries and regional and subregional organizations, including the African Union, to mainstream a gender perspective and the empowerment of women and girls in the implementation of the New Partnership, including the implementation of the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa;

9. Stresses the importance of improving maternal and child health, and in this regard welcomes the declaration of the African Union summit on maternal, infant and child health and development, held in Kampala from 19 to 27 July 2010, and acknowledges the Campaign on Accelerated Reduction of Maternal Mortality in Africa;

10. Emphasizes that progress in the implementation of the New Partnership depends also on a favourable national and international environment for Africa's growth and development, including measures to promote a policy environment conducive to private sector development and entrepreneurship and to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

11. Also emphasizes that democracy, respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society and effective participation by civil society, including non-governmental and community-based organizations, and the private sector are among the indispensable foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development;

12. Further emphasizes that the increasingly unacceptable high levels of poverty, inequality and social exclusion faced by most African countries require a comprehensive approach to the development and implementation of social and economic policies, inter alia, to reduce poverty, to promote economic activity, growth and sustainable development in order to ensure employment creation and decent work for all, to promote education, health and social protection and to enhance equality, social inclusion, political stability, democracy and good governance at all levels and the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

13. Emphasizes that identifying and removing barriers to opportunity, as well as ensuring access to basic social protection and social services, are necessary to break the cycle of poverty, inequality and social exclusion;

14. Encourages African countries to continue to prioritize structural transformation, modernize smallholder agriculture, add value to primary commodities, improve public and private institutions of economic and political governance and invest in major public infrastructure projects and in education and health in order to promote inclusive growth, generate full and productive employment and decent work for all and reduce poverty;

15. Emphasizes that economic development, including employment-intensive resource-based industrial development, infrastructural development and structural transformation, in particular in the rural economy, based on pragmatic and targeted policies to enhance productive capacities in Africa that are consistent with national development priorities and international commitments, can generate employment and income for all African men and women, including the poor, and therefore be an engine for poverty eradication and for achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

16. Underlines the fact that the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of allocating 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015 and the target of allocating between 0.15 and 0.20 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to the least developed countries, and urges developed countries that have not yet done so to fulfil their commitments for official development assistance to developing countries;

17. Stresses the essential role that official development assistance plays in complementing, leveraging and sustaining financing for development efforts in developing countries and in facilitating the achievement of development objectives, including the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the Millennium Development Goals, and welcomes steps to improve the effectiveness and quality of aid based on the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization, managing for results, inclusive development partnerships and transparency and mutual accountability;

18. Recognizes that, while social development is primarily the responsibility of Governments, international cooperation and assistance are essential for the full achievement of that goal;

19. Also recognizes the contribution made by Member States to the implementation of the New Partnership in the context of South-South cooperation, and encourages the international community, including the international financial institutions, to support the efforts of African countries, including through trilateral cooperation;

20. Welcomes the various important initiatives undertaken by Africa's development partners in recent years, and in this regard emphasizes the importance of coordination in such initiatives on Africa through ensuring the effective implementation of existing commitments, including through the African Union/New Partnership for Africa's Development African Action Plan 2010–2015: Advancing Regional and Continental Integration in Africa, which remains at the centre of the continent's engagement with partners;

21. Encourages African countries to intensify their efforts to strengthen national statistical capacity in order to produce reliable and timely statistics and indicators for the monitoring of national development policies and strategies and the implementation of commitments and the achievement of all development goals at the national, regional and international levels, and in this regard urges donor countries and organizations and the international and regional statistical communities to support African countries in strengthening statistical capacity in support of development;

22. Urges continuous support for measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, with special emphasis on the Millennium Development Goals related to poverty and hunger, health, education, the empowerment of women and gender equality, including, as appropriate, debt relief, improved market access, support for the private sector and entrepreneurship, enhanced official development assistance, increased foreign direct investment and transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms, reduced cost of sending remittances through official channels, the empowerment of women in all aspects, including economic and political aspects, the promotion of social protection systems and the conclusion of the Doha round of negotiations of the World Trade Organization;

23. Underlines the importance for African Governments to build the productive capacity of agriculture, as a top priority, in order to increase rural incomes and ensure access to food for net food buyers, and stresses that greater efforts should be made to promote and implement sustainable agriculture, increase access for smallholder farmers, in particular women, to necessary agricultural resources, including productive assets, and improve access to infrastructure, information and markets, and that, furthermore, efforts should be made to promote small and medium-sized enterprises that contribute to job growth and increase incomes along the agricultural value stream;

24. Urges Governments, within the framework of the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, to expand investment financing to agriculture to at least 10 per cent of the annual budget of the national public sector while at the same time ensuring necessary action in policy and institutional reforms for enhanced performance of the agriculture industry and systems;

25. Notes the decision taken by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union at its nineteenth ordinary session, held in Addis Ababa on 15 and 16 July 2012, to proclaim 2014 the Year of Agriculture and Food Security in Africa to mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme;

26. Recognizes the need for Africa's development partners that are supporting agriculture and food security in Africa to align their efforts more specifically towards supporting the Comprehensive Africa Agriculture Development Programme, using the Programme's investment plans for alignment of external funding, and in this regard takes note of the Declaration of the World Summit on Food Security;

27. Also recognizes that the implementation of the commitments made by Governments during the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006) has fallen short of expectations, and welcomes the proclamation of the Second Decade (2008–2017) by the General Assembly in its resolution 62/205 of 19 December 2007 in order to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, the internationally agreed development goals related to poverty eradication, including the Millennium Development Goals;

28. Urges African countries to pay close attention to inclusive, equitable and sustainable growth capable of being employment-intensive, including through employment-intensive investment programmes, which should be aimed at reducing inequalities, increasing employment and improving real per capita incomes in both rural and urban areas;

29. Emphasizes the need, in particular for African countries, to enhance capacity-building for sustainable development, and in this regard calls for the strengthening of technical and scientific cooperation, including North-South, South-South and triangular cooperation, and reiterates the importance of human resources development, including through training, the exchange of experience and expertise, knowledge transfer and technical assistance for capacity-building, which involves strengthening institutional capacity, including planning, management and monitoring capacities;

30. Also emphasizes the importance of increasing international cooperation to improve the quality of and access to education, in particular for African countries, including through building and strengthening education-related infrastructure and increasing investment in education, and in this regard notes the Global Education First Initiative of the Secretary-General and its objectives and invites Member States to contribute to the Initiative, as appropriate, including through the allocation of adequate resources;

31. Urges African countries and development partners to meet the needs of young people and empower them, in particular by tackling the high levels of youth unemployment through the development of education and training programmes that address illiteracy, enhance the employability and capabilities of young people, facilitate school-to-work transitions and expand guaranteed employment schemes, where appropriate, with particular attention to disadvantaged young people in both rural and urban areas;

32. Recognizes that improving access to school for all girls and boys, especially the poorest and most vulnerable and marginalized, and their ability to receive a quality education, and improving the quality of education beyond primary school can have a positive impact in terms of empowerment and on social, economic and political participation and thus on the fight against poverty and hunger and can contribute directly to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

33. Also recognizes that Africa's youthful population creates significant opportunities for the continent's development, and underlines in this regard the importance of African countries creating appropriate policy environments to take advantage of the continent's demographic transition while adopting an inclusive results-based approach to development planning and implementation in accordance with national priorities and legislation;

34. Encourages Governments, international organizations, other relevant institutions and stakeholders, as appropriate, to provide relevant skills training for youth, high-quality health-care services and dynamic labour markets to employ a growing population;

35. Calls upon the international community to enhance support and fulfil its commitments to take further action in areas critical to Africa's economic and social development, and welcomes the efforts by development partners to strengthen cooperation with the New Partnership;

36. Encourages all development partners to implement principles of aid effectiveness, as recalled in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development adopted on 2 December 2008 by the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus;

37. Recognizes the need for Governments and the international community to continue to make efforts to increase the flow of new and additional resources for financing for development from all sources, public and private, domestic and foreign, to support the development of African countries, and welcomes the various important initiatives established between African countries and their development partners in this regard;

38. Acknowledges the activities of the Bretton Woods institutions and the African Development Bank in African countries, and invites those institutions to continue their support for the implementation of the priorities and objectives of the New Partnership;

39. Expresses deep concern that illicit financial flows and poor legal, fiscal and regulatory frameworks for mineral resources undermine national development efforts, encourages African countries to take measures to address these challenges, and invites development partners to continue to assist African countries in tackling illicit financial flows;

40. Encourages Africa's development partners to continue to integrate the priorities, values and principles of the New Partnership into their development assistance programmes;

41. Encourages African countries and their development partners to place people at the centre of government development action, to secure core investment spending in health, education and social protection and to give particular consideration to universal access to basic social security systems, recognizing that social protection floors can provide a basis from which to address poverty and vulnerability, and in this regard takes note of Recommendation No. 202 concerning national floors of social protection, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 101st session, on 14 June 2012;

42. Notes the growing collaboration among the entities of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, and requests the Secretary-General to promote greater coherence in the work of the United Nations system in support of the New Partnership, on the basis of the agreed clusters of the Regional Coordination Mechanism for Africa;

43. Emphasizes the importance for the cluster working on communication, advocacy and outreach to continue to muster international support for the New Partnership and to urge the United Nations system to demonstrate more evidence of cross-sectoral synergies to promote a comprehensive approach with regard to successive phases of planning and implementation of social development programmes in Africa;

44. Invites the Secretary-General, as a follow-up to the 2005 World Summit, to urge the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to assist African countries in implementing quick-impact initiatives, based on their national development priorities and strategies, to enable them to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and in this respect acknowledges commitments made by development partners;

45. Encourages the international community to support African countries in addressing the challenges of climate change by providing the financial and technological resources and capacity-building training needed to support adaptation and mitigation action;

46. Notes the decision of the General Assembly to strengthen the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa, enabling it to effectively fulfil its mandate, including by monitoring and reporting on progress related to meeting the special needs of Africa;

47. Requests the Commission for Social Development to discuss in its annual programme of work those regional programmes that promote social development so as to enable all regions to share experiences and best practices, with the agreement of concerned countries, and in this regard requests that the work programmes of the Commission include priority areas of the New Partnership, as appropriate;

48. Invites engagement in intergovernmental efforts to continue to improve the coherence and effectiveness of the United Nations system in support of Africa and to continue to support the Economic Commission for Africa in the execution of its mandate, particularly by working with its members to ensure that the post-2015 development agenda gives due consideration to Africa's social development priorities;

49. Decides that the Commission for Social Development should continue to give prominence to and raise awareness of the social dimensions of the New Partnership at its fifty-third session;

50. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the Office of the Special Adviser on Africa and the Economic Commission for Africa, taking into consideration General Assembly resolutions 62/179 of 19 December 2007, 63/267 of 31 March 2009, 64/258 of 16 March 2010, 65/284 of 22 June 2011, 66/286 of 23 July 2012 and 67/294 of 15 August 2013, entitled "New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support", to submit to the Commission for Social Development, for its consideration at its fifty-third session, a report on the social dimensions of the New Partnership, including, in cooperation with relevant United Nations bodies, an overview of current processes related to social development in Africa, including recommendations on how to improve the effectiveness of the work of United Nations bodies while preserving the social dimensions of the New Partnership.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2014/4 (see above), the Secretary-General submitted a November report [E/CN.5/2015/2] on the social dimension of NEPAD, highlighting progress made in eradicating poverty and hunger, creating jobs, improving education and health outcomes, promoting gender equality, boosting agricultural productivity, investing in infrastructure, improving governance and mobilizing resources for inclusive development.

Despite having 11 of the top 20 fastest-growing economies in the world, African countries still had much more to do to achieve broadly shared prosperity and to reduce poverty and inequality. Estimates of global poverty released in October by the World Bank showed that about 39.6 per cent of Africa's population (437.1 million people) lived on less than $1.25 a day compared with 46.6 per cent (295.8 million people) in 1990, indicating that, despite a collective effort, Africa would not halve the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by 2015. The number of hungry people in Africa increased from 217 million in the period 2008–2010 to 227 million in 2012–2014, a time period when the number of undernourished people in the world declined from 840 million to 805 million. Sub-Saharan Africa had become home to more than a quarter of the world's undernourished people. The situation in North Africa remained positive, however, the number of food-insecure people in the Sahel region had risen, from 11.3 million in 2013 to 20 million in 2014.

The total unemployment rate in sub-Saharan Africa had slightly declined, from 7.7 per cent in 2009 to 7.6 per cent in 2014. There were no improvements in unemployment levels among women; in both 2009 and 2014, the rate was 8.4 per cent. Youth unemployment levels also remained elevated despite the fact that an estimated 11 million young people were expected to join the job market every year for the next decade in sub-Saharan Africa alone. In the Middle East and North Africa, the unemployment rate increased from 10.4 per cent in 2009 to 11.5 per cent in 2014.

Progress had been made across Africa in increasing enrolment of children in school. Primary enrolment more than doubled between 1990 and 2012, from 62 million to 149 million in sub-Saharan Africa, with a net enrolment rate increasing from 52 per cent in 1990 to 78 per cent in 2012, while North Africa had almost achieved universal primary education, with a net enrolment rate of 99 per cent in 2012 compared with 90 per cent in 2000.

There had been significant improvements in child immunization rates, and the number of people receiving antiretroviral therapies. The number of child and maternal deaths and deaths owing to malaria and HIV/AIDS had also been reduced. Nonetheless, sub-Saharan Africa still had the highest maternal mortality ratio in the world.

In 2014, 20 per cent of seats in African national parliaments were held by women. Rwanda, Senegal, Seychelles and South Africa were among the top 10 countries in the world with the highest percentage of women parliamentarians. The percentage of women parliamentarians ranged from 41 per cent in South Africa to 64 per cent in Rwanda. Despite the obvious gains to society from the empowerment of women, progress was being hampered by widening inequalities, disproportionately high levels of unemployment among women, as well as gender-based violence and exploitation.

To promote effective and accountable governance, 34 more countries had acceded to the African Peer Review Mechanism. Seventeen countries had completed their self-assessments and had been peer-reviewed. In mobilizing finances for inclusive development, total collected tax revenue in Africa increased from $137.5 billion in 2000 to a record $527.3 billion in 2012; however, greater efforts were also required to curb illicit financial flows connected to trade mispricing, tax evasion, corruption and other illegal activities that were costing Africa an estimated $50 billion a year.

The Secretary-General recommended the Commission for Social Development encourage African countries and their development partners to promote policies that foster agricultural transformation, including meeting the commitments on agriculture contained in the Maputo Declaration on Agriculture and Food Security; promote industrial policies that create diversified economies and contribute to poverty eradication and social inclusion through job creation; reduce inequality and vulnerability by implementing basic social protection floors and expand opportunities available to disadvantaged and vulnerable social groups; promote gender perspective across policies and programmes; prioritize investments in health care; encourage the international community to honour existing aid commitments, provide debt relief and make predictable disbursements of ODA; and set bold domestic resource mobilization targets for the implementation of national and regional development programmes.

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on NEPAD: progress in implementation and international support would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

African countries emerging from conflict

Report of Secretary-General. In October [E/2014/94], the Secretary-General presented his third report to the Economic and Social Council on integrated, coherent and coordinated support to the Government of South Sudan following the country's independence in July 2011. The report reviewed major developments in South Sudan since July 2013, with a focus on the political crisis that erupted into violence in December. It also described the impact of the conflict on prospects for development and some of the key actions taken by the international community, including the United Nations system, to help the country to end the conflict so that development could be resumed.

A political crisis that led to a violent conflict had reversed much of the progress of the past two years. A crisis of governance within the ruling Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM) led to armed violence on 15 December 2013. A leadership struggle within SPLM rapidly deteriorated into armed conflict, causing significant loss of life and large-scale displacement, with an estimated 1.3 million people internally displaced in more than 100 locations, 100,000 of whom sought protection at the United Nations Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS) bases. In addition, nearly 450,000 people fled to neighbouring countries, including Ethiopia, Kenya, the Sudan and Uganda.

Since the onset of the crisis, UNMISS had to put its State-building and peacebuilding activities on hold. As the crisis persisted in May, the Security Council (see p. 338) revised the UNMISS mandate to focus on four priority areas: protection of civilians; human rights monitoring and reporting; creating the conditions for the delivery of humanitarian assistance; and supporting the cessation of hostilities agreement. With respect to humanitarian assistance and protection, the Emergency Relief Coordinator declared a three-month Standing Committee system-wide level-three emergency response to the escalating conflict in South Sudan in February, subsequently extended by an additional six months until November.

The conflict had undermined the prospects for future growth. The most immediate impact had been on oil production. Financing nearly 80 per cent of the Government's overall budget, oil provided 98 per cent of public sector revenue, contributed 60 per cent to gross domestic product and to almost all foreign exchange earnings, thus making the South Sudanese economy highly vulnerable to changes in oil prices and oil production levels. The conflict led to the shutdown of operations of some oil fields and the partial shutdown of others, leading to oil production at less than half of the 350,000 barrels per day at the time of independence in July 2011.

As at the time of reporting, approximately 57 per cent of children and adolescents in South Sudan did not attend school. There were high levels of dropouts and delayed entry: 75 per cent of 6-year-olds were not in school and 92 per cent of grade 8 students were overage. The percentage was much higher in conflict-affected states, where children were prevented from attending school as a result of insecurity, displacement or schools' occupation by armed forces. It was estimated that only 5 to 10 per cent of about 1,130 primary schools in Jonglei, Unity and Upper Nile States were functioning.

The Secretary-General noted that while a cessation of hostilities agreement had been signed and a commitment made to work on the formation of a transitional Government, both sides continued to pursue a military solution. No concrete evidence had yet emerged that the political will existed to meet the commitments made under the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD)-led mediation. Given the unique peace, security, peacebuilding and development challenges facing South Sudan, the integrated United Nations support being provided at the technical and operational levels should be complemented by strong, integrated policy support and guidance at the intergovernmental level by all relevant

United Nations organs and bodies, within their respective mandates and competencies.

On 18 November (decision 2014/256), the Economic and Social Council took note of the report and requested that another report on the subject be submitted to the Council at its substantive session in 2015.

Other economic assistance

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on special economic assistance to individual countries and regions would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Haiti

Report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group. In October [E/2014/95], following its visit to Washington, D.C., of 28 April, and to Haiti, from 12 to 15 May, the Economic and Social Council Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti presented its tenth report since its reactivation in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 939].

The Group welcomed the progress observed in Haiti on the economic and social fronts, which went well beyond post-earthquake recovery efforts. It also expressed concerns on the sustainability of the development process in the then political context. The Group emphasized the need for continued donor engagement given the high vulnerability of the country, in terms of both natural disasters and economic shocks, and the need to sustain the development progress that had been achieved. The Group also advocated a “Delivering as one” approach to guide UN action on the ground. With a growth rate of 4.3 per cent in 2013, Haiti had reached a new phase in its development process. The overall objective of the strategic plan for the development of Haiti formulated by the Government for the period 2010–2030 was for Haiti to become an emerging country within 15 years. Although that required massive investments and a marked increase in the average income of the population, progress suggested that Haiti had embarked on a path that could bring it closer to that ambitious goal if progress was sustained and Haiti did not relapse into political turmoil.

Some social progress was also observed. It was estimated that poverty decreased by 4 to 5 per cent in urban areas, although inequality remained high. Extreme poverty had declined from 31 per cent to 24 per cent since 2000, and some targets had been reached ahead of the deadline, such as the reduction by half in the number of underweight children.

At the political level, the inter-Haitian political dialogue took several steps forward. Following the political agreement known as the El Rancho accord, the Cabinet was reshuffled and the Chamber of Deputies adopted an electoral law. Although the process had not eased political tensions, the fact that political parties were holding a dialogue, with the support of civil society actors, was a step in the right direction in building the capacity to devise collective solutions.

On the humanitarian front, some 90,000 displaced persons lived in camps, a sharp decrease compared with 1.3 million following the 2010 earthquake. Living conditions, in particular the sanitary situation, were extremely poor. In spite of training and awareness-raising activities implemented by the International Organization for Migration and others, the national and international presence in those camps did not appear as being commensurate with the needs of the population. The Group therefore called for continued humanitarian assistance and a high level of support to the Haitian National Police.

To sustain the development process, the Group encouraged Haiti’s development partners to take proactive steps to ensure that support was in line with the priorities and programmes set by the Government, as contained in the Strategic Plan for the Development of Haiti and the triennial investment plans; to simplify disbursement procedures in order to accelerate project implementation; and to provide continued support to the national police and its development plan for the period 2012–2016.

The UN system was called on to plan for a smooth transition process in relation to the consolidation of United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) in such a way as to secure continued assistance by the UN system in peacebuilding-related areas; to consider how the United Nations could best support peacebuilding efforts in Haiti, including through the possible involvement of the Peacebuilding Commission, if requested by Haiti; and to assert its role as a promoter of aid effectiveness by providing secretariat support to the Group of Twelve Plus.

The Group also called on the Haitian authorities to take all the necessary steps to ensure that the senatorial, municipal and local elections were held without further delay; to enforce the new law against corruption; and to invest in the strengthening of the national police, the judiciary, the penitentiary system and institutions geared towards embedding the rule of law in Haiti.

Communications. In letters dated 19 December 2013 [E/2014/8] from Argentina, 31 March 2014 [E/2014/54] from Colombia, and 13 May from Uruguay [E/2014/73], Argentina, Colombia and Uruguay expressed their wishes to become members of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti. On 30 January (decision 2014/207) and 23 April (decision 2014/210), the Economic and Social Council decided to appoint Argentina and Colombia as members, and on 13 June (decision 2014/221), it further appointed Uruguay as a member of the Group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 November [meeting 52], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/37 [draft: E/2014/L.34] without vote [agenda item 10 (d)].

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2004/52 of 23 July 2004, 2005/46 of 27 July 2005, 2006/10 of 26 July 2006, 2007/13 of 25 July 2007, 2008/10 of 23 July 2008, 2009/4 of 23 July 2009, 2010/28 of 23 July 2010, 2012/21 of 26 July 2012 and 2013/15 of 23 July 2013 and its decisions 2004/322 of 11 November 2004, 2009/211 of 20 April 2009, 2009/267 of 15 December 2009, 2011/207 of 17 February 2011, 2011/211 of 26 April 2011, 2011/268 of 28 July 2011, 2013/209 of 15 February 2013, 2014/207 of 30 January 2014, 2014/210 of 23 April 2014 and 2014/221 of 13 June 2014,

1. Welcomes the report of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Recognizes that political stability and socioeconomic recovery are essential to the long-term development of Haiti, and welcomes the efforts of the United Nations and the international community in both fields;

3. Commends the continued progress in the economic and social situation in Haiti since the devastating earthquake of January 2010 and congratulates the Haitian authorities and all Haitian development actors on their work in that regard, and looks forward to continued support from donors and other partners, including the United Nations system and the international financial institutions;

4. Calls upon donors to remain engaged in support of the reconstruction and development of Haiti, in line with priorities set by the Government of Haiti, and calls upon the Haitian authorities and international partners to take an active part in the External Aid Coordination Framework for the Development of Haiti with a view to making full use of its potential for effective international support;

5. Recognizes the External Aid Coordination Framework, established as a platform to strengthen mutual accountability and coordination under the leadership of the Haitian authorities with the support of the donor community;

6. Calls upon the Government of Haiti to fully operationalize the External Aid Coordination Framework and its mechanisms in keeping with the road map adopted in 2014, and calls upon the development partners of Haiti and the United Nations system to play an active role in donor coordination mechanisms in order to better coordinate and enhance the effectiveness of aid and the impact of development cooperation;

7. Encourages donors to continue funding humanitarian activities, with a view, inter alia, to addressing the needs of the most vulnerable, including those still living in camps, and to improve the sanitation and health sectors;

8. Invites donors to align their efforts with the National Plan for the Elimination of Cholera in Haiti as well as other national activities to prevent waterborne diseases, and to provide the financial resources necessary for their implementation;

9. Calls upon the Haitian authorities to take all the steps necessary to ensure the regular functioning of public institutions, and calls upon all the political actors in Haiti to work cooperatively and without further delay to ensure the holding of overdue legislative and local elections so that legitimate, credible and well-functioning authorities are in place to contribute to the recovery and development process, and to continue to interact with development partners in a constructive manner;

10. Calls upon the United Nations system in Haiti to review its integrated strategic framework with a view to promoting appropriate approaches to consolidated planning, fundraising and programme implementation, and calls for a smooth transition process in order to ensure continued assistance by the United Nations system, including in peacebuilding and related areas, such as governance, institution-building and human rights issues;

11. Decides to extend the mandate of the Ad Hoc Advisory Group on Haiti until the conclusion of the 2015 session, with the purpose of following closely and providing advice on the long-term development strategy of Haiti to promote socioeconomic recovery, reconstruction and stability, with particular attention to the need to ensure coherence and sustainability in international support for Haiti, based on the long-term national development priorities, building upon the Strategic Plan for the Development of Haiti, and stressing the need to avoid overlap and duplication with respect to existing mechanisms;

12. Expresses its satisfaction to the Secretary-General for the support provided to the Advisory Group, and requests him to continue to support the activities of the Group adequately and within existing resources;

13. Requests the Advisory Group, in accomplishing its mandate, to continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and his Special Representative for Haiti and Head of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Development Group, relevant United Nations funds and programmes, the specialized agencies, the international financial institutions, regional organizations and institutions, including the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the Organization of American States, the Caribbean Community, the Union of South American Nations and the Inter-American Development Bank, and other major stakeholders, and in this regard welcomes the continuation of the dialogue between the members of the Advisory Group and the Organization of American States;

14. Also requests the Advisory Group to submit a report on its work, with recommendations, as appropriate, to the Economic and Social Council for its consideration at its 2015 session.

Kazakhstan

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 66/193 [YUN 2011, p. 901], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/257] on the status of the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan and the progress made in accelerating development between 2011 and 2013, through programmes and actions organized by the Government of Kazakhstan and the international community, including United Nations agencies. The Semipalatinsk test site, also known as “the Polygon”, was the primary nuclear test site of the former Soviet Union. In total, 456 nuclear tests were conducted between 1949 and 1989 at Semipalatinsk, including 340 underground and 116 atmospheric explosions. Altogether, nuclear explosions at Semipalatinsk were the equivalent of over 2,500 Hiroshima bombs. The former Soviet Union had other nuclear test sites, but this was the only one close to major settlements. The resulting fallout from such tests severely affected the ecosystems of the region and the traditional way of life of its inhabitants. The site was closed on 29 August 1991, a date designated by the General Assembly in 2009 as the International Day against Nuclear Tests.

The Government of Kazakhstan, with the assistance of donors and the direct involvement of UN agencies, had carried out a considerable amount of work in the Semipalatinsk region over recent years. Numerous projects in the socioeconomic sphere and in the areas of environment, public health and education had been implemented. Much remained to be done, however. More investment would be required in human development over the coming years, in order to ensure a stable pattern of development and growth for the region. To achieve that objective, governmental and international efforts, inter alia, should focus on improving mother and child primary health-care services, and child and youth protection mechanisms; strengthening the capacity of local authorities, particularly in rural areas, in the use of evidence-based decision-making; promoting community awareness of the equal rights of vulnerable groups; and increasing the efficiency of the use of State resources in socioeconomic programmes at the local level.

The Secretary-General called on the international community to support the joint work of the Government of Kazakhstan and the United Nations by enhancing the social inclusion of vulnerable groups in the region, with the aim of reducing their stigmatization and isolation and promoting their integration into the community; and by strengthening coordination to plan, implement and monitor inclusive regional social programmes and services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/209 [A/69/468 & Corr.1] without vote [agenda item 19].

International cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 52/169 M of 16 December 1997, 53/1 H of 16 November 1998, 55/44 of 27 November 2000, 57/101 of 25 November 2002, 60/216 of 22 December 2005, 63/279 of 24 April 2009 and 66/193 of 22 December 2011,

Recognizing that the Semipalatinsk nuclear testing ground, inherited by Kazakhstan and closed in 1991, remains a matter of serious concern for the people and Government of Kazakhstan with regard to the long-term consequences of its activity for the lives and health of the people, especially children and other vulnerable groups, as well as for the environment of the region,

Taking into account the fact that a number of international programmes in the Semipalatinsk region have been completed since the closure of the nuclear testing ground, but that serious social, economic and ecological problems continue to exist,

Taking into consideration the results of the International Conference on Semipalatinsk, held in Tokyo on 6 and 7 September 1999, which have promoted the effectiveness of the assistance provided to the population of the region,

Acknowledging the progress made towards accelerating the development of the Semipalatinsk region during the period from 2011 to 2013, through programmes and actions of the Government of Kazakhstan and the international community, including United Nations agencies,

Recognizing the important role of national development policies and strategies in the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region,

Recognizing also the challenges that Kazakhstan faces in the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region, in particular in the context of the efforts by the Government of Kazakhstan to ensure the effective and timely achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in particular with regard to health care and environmental sustainability,

Recognizing further that the Government of Kazakhstan may call upon the United Nations Resident Coordinator in Kazakhstan to render assistance in conducting consultations for establishing a multi-stakeholder mechanism, with the participation of various government bodies, local governments, civil society, the donor community and international organizations, to improve governance and enable the more efficient use of resources allocated for the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region, in particular regarding the areas of radiation safety, socioeconomic development and health and environmental protection, and for the provision of information on risks to the population,

Emphasizing the importance of support by donor States and international development organizations for the efforts of Kazakhstan to improve the social, economic and environmental situation in the Semipalatinsk region and the need for the international community to continue to pay due attention to the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region,

Taking note of the need to utilize modern technologies to minimize and mitigate radiological, health, socioeconomic, psychological and environmental challenges in the Semipalatinsk region,

Considering the importance of cooperation with the United Nations in establishing a coherent framework for coordination in addressing the needs of the region to introduce innovative approaches to regional planning and social assistance to the population of the Semipalatinsk region, especially its most vulnerable groups, aimed at improving its quality of life,

Emphasizing the importance of the new development-oriented approach in tackling problems in the Semipalatinsk region in the medium to long term,

Expressing appreciation to donor countries and organizations, United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, the specialized agencies and related organizations mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General for their contribution to the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 66/193 and the information contained therein on measures taken to solve the health, ecological, economic and humanitarian problems in the Semipalatinsk region;

2. Welcomes and recognizes the important role of the Government of Kazakhstan in providing domestic resources to help meet the needs of the Semipalatinsk region, implementing measures for optimizing public administration of the territory and facilities of the former Semipalatinsk nuclear test site and surrounding areas, ensuring radiation safety and environmental rehabilitation and reintegrating the use of the nuclear test site into the national economy;

3. Urges the international community to provide assistance to Kazakhstan in formulating and implementing special programmes and projects for the treatment and care of the affected population, as well as in efforts to ensure economic growth and sustainable development in the Semipalatinsk region, including increasing the effectiveness of existing programmes;

4. Calls upon Member States, relevant multilateral financial organizations and other entities of the international community, including academia and non-governmental organizations, to share knowledge and experience in order to contribute to the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue pursuing a consultative process, with the participation of interested States and relevant United Nations agencies, on modalities for mobilizing and coordinating the necessary support to seek appropriate solutions to the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region, including those prioritized in his report;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to enhance world public awareness of the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventy-second session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

International trade, finance and transport

In 2014, the work of the United Nations on international trade, finance and transport continued to focus on multilateral efforts to support the global recovery from the world economic and financial crisis of 2008. Efforts to bolster inclusive and sustainable growth and development were at the forefront for the international community as it prepared to negotiate the development agenda beyond 2015.

Growth in world merchandise trade in 2014 grew by only 0.3 per cent, reaching $19 trillion, as a result of the significant fall in the prices of major commodities. In developed countries, trade accelerated, with the European Union and Japan increasing their import volumes by approximately 2.8 per cent and the United States by 4.7 per cent. Exports of the transition economies increased by 0.2 per cent, while import volumes plunged by 8.5 per cent, mostly due to economic and financial difficulties in the Russian Federation and Ukraine. In developing countries, import volumes fell by 2.0 per cent and export volumes fell by 2.9 per cent. Africa's real exports showed a contraction resulting from shrinking oil exports in Libya. In Latin America and the Caribbean, international trade measured in current values practically came to a standstill, largely due to the fall in export unit values. In East Asia, the growth rate of trade was unusually low for the region, at less than 4 per cent in 2014. Commodity markets witnessed turbulent times in 2014, as they continued the downward trend from their peaks of 2011–2012.

In April, the special high-level meeting was held between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). The theme of the meeting was “Coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of financing for sustainable development and the post-2015 development agenda”. In June, the Council held a special meeting on international cooperation in tax matters.

The Trade and Development Board—the governing body of UNCTAD—at its twenty-eighth special session, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of UNCTAD. In September, the Board adopted agreed conclusions on the UNCTAD contribution to the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries, and on UNCTAD technical cooperation activities.

In June, the General Assembly decided to convene the third International Conference on Financing for Development in Addis Ababa in 2015 to assess the progress made in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration, and to reinvigorate and strengthen the financing for development follow-up process.

In September, the General Assembly agreed to negotiate and adopt a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes to improve the global financial system. In December, it established an ad hoc committee to elaborate, through a process of intergovernmental negotiations, the multilateral legal framework.

International trade and development

According to the Trade and Development Report, 2015 [Sales No. E.15.II.D.4], the growth rate of world merchandise trade (by volume) stood at 2.3 per cent in 2014. In developed countries, trade accelerated. Positive gross domestic product (GDP) growth rates in the European Union and Japan helped boost their import volumes by around 2.8 per cent in 2014. In the United States, imports rose faster, by 4.7 per cent, partly due to dollar appreciation. All these factors, combined with the fact that import volume growth in developing and transition economies continued to fall short of that achieved in earlier years, made developed countries the country group with the highest annual growth of imports for the first time since the late 1990s.

Regarding the transition economies, exports in 2014 slightly increased by 0.2 per cent, while import volumes plunged by 8.5 per cent, mostly on account of economic and financial difficulties in the Russian Federation and Ukraine.

In developing countries, import volumes fell by 2.0 per cent and export volumes fell by 2.9 per cent. Africa's real exports showed a contraction as a result of shrinking oil exports in Libya. In Latin America and the Caribbean, international trade measured in current values practically ground to a halt, largely due to the fall in export unit values. Weaker demand from China and the slowdown of intraregional trade affected mostly South American countries. In West Asia, oil-exporting economies faced adverse terms of trade. Armed conflicts in several countries of the sub-region further affected intraregional trade, with spillover effects in some North African countries' exports, including from Egypt. In East Asia, the growth rate of trade, by volume, was unusually low for the region, at less than 4 per cent in 2014. To a large extent, this reflects the slowdown of China's international trade. Its exports, by volume, grew by 6.8 per cent in 2014, which was a slower rate than that of its GDP. Meanwhile, the growth of China's imports by volume decelerated even more, to 3.9 per cent. As a result, developing and transition economies which exported primary commodities experienced a significant slowdown in demand from China in 2014. In South-East Asia, export growth by volume also decelerated in 2014 to 3.4 per cent, while import growth slowed even further to 1 per cent. Both rates were lower than the subregional economic growth rate.

In 2014, commodity markets witnessed turbulence with the significant fall of commodity prices, continuing the declining trend that began after their peaks reached in 2011 [YUN 2011, p. 902]. A notable slump in crude oil prices resulted mainly from greater global production. Transition economies were among the regions most affected by lower commodity prices and capital outflows.

Multilateral trading system

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/199 [YUN 2013, p. 909], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/179] on international trade and development. The report discussed evolutions in international trade, developments in the multilateral trading system and regional trade agreements.

The Secretary-General stated that international trade had undergone transformative shifts in size, structure and patterns over the past two decades, opening new opportunities and challenges. An open, transparent, predictable, inclusive, non-discriminatory and rules-based multilateral trading system remained an integral part of an enabling economic environment. The difficulties experienced by World Trade Organization (WTO) members in bringing the 12-year-long Doha Round negotiations to a conclusion had underlined the need to seek new ways to foster multilateral consensus in addressing trade barriers and enhancing more open and fairer international trade. The international trading system was facing fragmentation as the prevalence of regional and "plurilateral" processes increases, challenging the centrality and credibility of the multilateral trading system. In considering the creation of an enabling environment, such ongoing processes needed to be factored in and coherence among policies at the national, regional and international levels needed to be enhanced, including for supporting productive capacities and greater participation in production processes to achieve sustainable growth.

On 19 December (decision 69/543), the General Assembly took note of the report.

WTO report. According to WTO Annual Report 2015, its work in 2014 focused on implementing the decisions taken at the Ninth Ministerial Conference [YUN 2013, p. 909] and on advancing the remaining Doha Development Agenda (Doha Round) issues. After a mid-year setback, WTO members succeeded in getting trade negotiations back on track by approving at the end of the year a number of important decisions related to public stockholding for food security purposes, Trade Facilitation Agreement and the post-Bali work programme. Progress was made in implementing the Bali decisions related to the least developed countries (LDCs), while a new facility was launched to help developing countries and LDCs implement the Trade Facilitation Agreement.

During the year, Yemen became the 160th member of WTO, while Seychelles' accession package was approved in December. The General Council decided that Nairobi, Kenya, would host the Tenth Ministerial Conference of WTO in December 2015.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/466/Add.1], adopted resolution 69/205 without vote [agenda item 17 (a)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/178 of 21 December 2001, 57/235 of 20 December 2002, 58/197 of 23 December 2003, 63/203 of 19 December 2008, 66/185 of 22 December 2011, 67/196 of 21 December 2012 and 68/199 of 20 December 2013 on international trade and development,

Noting its resolutions 59/221 of 22 December 2004, 60/184 of 22 December 2005, 61/186 of 20 December 2006, 62/184 of 19 December 2007, 64/188 of 21 December 2009 and 65/142 of 20 December 2010 on international trade and development,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, as well as the outcomes of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development, the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling also the Marrakesh Ministerial Decision on Measures Concerning the Possible Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-importing Developing Countries,

Recalling further the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and its outcome document,

Recalling the thirteenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in Doha from 21 to 26 April 2012, and its outcome documents,

Recalling also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”,

1. Reaffirms that international trade is an engine for development and sustained economic growth, and also reaffirms the critical role that a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system, as well as meaningful trade liberalization, can play in stimulating economic growth and development worldwide, thereby benefiting all countries at all stages of development;

2. Expresses serious concern at the lack of progress in the Doha Round of World Trade Organization negotiations, reiterates the call for the necessary flexibility and political will in order to break the current impasse in the negotiations, and in this regard calls for a balanced, ambitious, comprehensive and development-oriented outcome of the Doha Development Agenda multilateral trade negotiations, in keeping with the development mandate of the Doha Ministerial Declaration, the decision of 1 August 2004 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization and the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration adopted by the World Trade Organization in 2005;

3. Recognizes the importance of the Bali Ministerial Declaration and the set of ministerial decisions, understandings and declarations known as the “Bali package” of the Ninth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 3 to 6 December 2013, and calls upon Member States to implement all decisions therein in a timely manner, including the Agreement on Trade Facilitation, the decision on public stockholding for food security purposes and the commitment stated in the Bali Ministerial Declaration to prepare a work programme on the remaining issues of the Doha Development Agenda;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on international trade and development, including on the implementation of its resolution 68/199 and taking into account the post-2015 development agenda and other relevant processes;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Macroeconomic policy questions”, the sub-item entitled “International trade and development”.

United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

Trade and Development Board

In 2014, the Trade and Development Board (TDB)—the governing body of United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD)—held its twenty-eighth special session (17 June) [A/69/15 (Part II)]; sixty-first annual session (15–26 September) [A/69/15 (Part IV)]; and fifty-ninth (23–25 June) [A/69/15 (Part III)] and sixtieth (10–12 December) [A/70/15 (Part I)] executive sessions, all in Geneva.

At its twenty-eighth special session, TDB celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of UNCTAD.

In his opening remarks, the Secretary-General underscored the need to strengthen multilateral cooperation and global partnership and entrusted UNCTAD to play a vital role in sustainable development in the context of the post-2015 development agenda.

At its fifty-ninth executive session, TDB considered the report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General [TD/B/EX(59)/2] on activities undertaken by UNCTAD in support of Africa. The Board took note of the report of the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget [TD/B/WP/260] on its sixty-seventh session; the report of the Trade and Development Commission [TD/B/C.I/35] on its sixth session; and the report of the Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission [TD/B/C.II/26] on its sixth session and endorsed the agreed conclusions contained therein (see p. 1105). The Board approved three topics for single-year expert meetings scheduled to be held in 2015 and 2016. Further, it agreed that a fourth topic would remain under consideration by Member States.

At its sixty-first annual session, TDB adopted agreed conclusions on the third progress report on the UNCTAD contribution to the implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2011–2020 (see below), and on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities (see below).

At its sixtieth executive session, TDB took note of UNCTAD Least Developed Countries Report 2014 [Sales No. E.14.II.D.7], and the report of the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget on its sixty-ninth session. It also endorsed the agreed conclusions [TD/B/WP/267/Rev.1], and approved the applications of two non-governmental organizations seeking observer status.

On 19 December (decision 69/543), the Assembly took note of the report of TDB on its fifty-eighth executive session, twenty-eighth special session, fifty-ninth executive session and sixty-first regular session [A/69/15 (Parts I–IV)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs (2011–2020)

At its sixty-first annual session [A/69/15 (Part IV)], TDB had before it the third progress report [TD/B/61/8] on the contribution of UNCTAD to the implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the Decade 2011–2020. The report summarized UNCTAD activities in support of LDCs in 2013 under three pillars of work: research and policy analysis; consensus-building and intergovernmental support; and technical cooperation and capacity-building. The report concluded that national and global actions in the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action required concerted efforts by LDCs and increased support by UNCTAD and other development partners. Such efforts should aim to address the root causes of underdevelopment in LDCs.

TDB urged UNCTAD to expedite its work on developing indicators and benchmarks for productive capacities aimed at assisting LDCs to mainstream such capacities into their domestic policies and strategies, pursuant to paragraph 65 (e) of the Doha Mandate. The Board invited UNCTAD to analyse experience gained from successful assistance projects carried out in certain LDCs, and to utilize its conclusions and insights for the benefit of other LDCs within and outside of the same region [agreed conclusions 522(LXI)].

Review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities

At its sixty-first annual session [A/69/15 (Part IV)], TDB took note of the report of the Secretary-General of UNCTAD on the review of UNCTAD technical cooperation activities and their financing [TD/B/WP/262 & Add.1, 2]. The Board expressed concern about the decrease in contributions to UNCTAD trust funds and called on developed countries and other development partners to make multi-year contributions to UNCTAD technical cooperation [A/69/15 (Part IV) (dec. 523(LXI))].

Evaluation

In June, the Secretary-General of UNCTAD reported on the evaluation of UNCTAD activities [TD/B/WP/263], providing an overview of the external evaluations of UNCTAD programmes and projects undertaken between January 2013 and March 2014. The report presented a summary of evaluation findings on subprogramme 1: Globalization, interdependence and development, 2008–2012 and four development account projects. It also presented lessons learned in the areas of project design, implementation approaches and monitoring and evaluation. The Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget was invited to review the evaluation plan for 2015 and to submit its conclusions and recommendations to TDB.

Economic development in Africa

Catalysing investment for transformative growth in Africa

At its sixty-first annual session [A/69/15 (Part IV)], TDB had before it UNCTAD Economic Development in Africa Report 2014: Catalysing Investment for Transformative Growth in Africa [Sales No. E.14.II.D.2]. The report examined how to boost and use investment for economic transformation and sustained growth in Africa. The Board also had before it the overview report on the topic [TD/B/61/4].

UNCTAD activities in support of Africa

At its fifty-ninth executive session [A/69/15 (Part III)], TDB had before it the report [TD/B/EX(59)/2] on activities undertaken by UNCTAD in support of Africa. The report summarized the contributions of UNCTAD in research and analysis, consensus-building and technical cooperation. It also provided an assessment on policy design, formulation and implementation in Africa; and building of capacities of African government officials, institutions, the private sector and civil society. The Board also had before it the note by UNCTAD secretariat on monetary unions and regional trade in Africa [TD/B/X(59)/3].

Subsidiary bodies

During the year, the Trade and Development Commission held its sixth session (Geneva, 5–9 May) [TD/B/C.I/35] (see below); the Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission also held its sixth session (Geneva, 28 April–2 May) [TD/B/C.II/26] (see below); the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy held its fourteenth session (Geneva, 8–10 July) [TD/B/C.I/CLP/34] (see p. 1119); the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (ISAR) held its thirty-first session (Geneva, 15–17 October) [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/71] (ibid.); and the Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget held its sixty-seventh (Geneva, 12–14 March) [TD/B/WP/260], sixty-eighth (Geneva, 3–5 September) [TD/B/WP/265] and sixty-ninth sessions (Geneva, 1–5 December) [TD/B/WP/267/Rev.1] (see p. 1106).

Trade and Development Commission

The Trade and Development Commission, at its sixth session [TD/B/C.I/35], took note of the reports of UNCTAD on the contribution of international trade to development [TD/B/C.I/33]; the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Transport, Trade Logistics and Trade Facilitation on its first session [TD/B/C.I/MEM.7/3]; and the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Commodities and Development on its sixth session [TD/B/C.I/MEM.2/27].

The Commission also had before it the reports on the second session of the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Trade, Services and Development [TD/B/C.I/MEM.4/6]; the role of international trade in the post-2015 development agenda [TD/B/C.I/33]; developing sustainable and resilient transport systems in view of emerging challenges [TD/B/C.I/34]; the activities of UNCTAD Division on Technology and Logistics [UNCTAD/DTL/2014/1]; and the activities of UNCTAD Division on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities [UNCTAD/DITC/2014/1].

In agreed conclusions, the Commission stressed that open, universal, equitable, rules-based and non-discriminatory participation in international trade could deliver major benefits for development. It recognized that the role of trade in development should be adequately reflected in the post-2015 development agenda and sustainable development goals as a key enabler and means to achieve inclusive economic growth and sustainable development. The Commission also recognized that for transport systems to be sustainable and resilient, more attention should be given to addressing their social, economic and environmental dimensions. It stressed the need to mobilize financial resources at all levels to support the implementation of sustainable and resilient freight transport systems.

Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission

The Investment, Enterprise and Development Commission, at its sixth session [TD/B/C.II/26], addressed issues in the areas of entrepreneurship and productive capacity-building, private sector investment, and technology and innovation for inclusive economic development.

The Commission took note of the report of the Multi-year Expert Meeting on Investment, Innovation and Entrepreneurship for Productive Capacity-building and Sustainable Development on its second session [TD/B/C.II/MEM.4/6] and the report of ISAR on its thirtieth session [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/68].

The Commission also had before it an annual activity report [UNCTAD/DTL/2014/1] on the implementation of the provisions of the Accra Accord related to the areas of work on science, technology and innovation, and information and communications technologies, and a presentation based on an UNCTAD progress report [UNCTAD/DIAE/2014/2] on promoting and strengthening the synergies among its three pillars of work in the area of investment and enterprise development.

In agreed conclusions, the Commission acknowledged the relevance and usefulness of the UNCTAD Entrepreneurship Policy Framework for the assessment, review and promotion of entrepreneurship policies in Member States and recommended that it be widely disseminated as a contribution to assist policymakers with policy formulation and the provision of capacity-building. The Commission encouraged UNCTAD to further enhance its cooperation on entrepreneurship programmes with other relevant international and regional organizations, and requested the secretariat to continue its assistance to developing countries, particularly LDCs and countries with economies in transition, in strengthening their national capacity in science, technology and innovation.

Working Party on the Strategic Framework and Programme Budget

The Working Party on the Strategic Framework and the Programme Budget, at its sixty-seventh session [TD/B/WP/260], adopted agreed conclusions on the review of the implementation of the communications strategy and on the consideration of the draft UNCTAD fundraising strategy. It encouraged the secretariat to reassess its methods and strengthen its capacity to monitor and evaluate its media and online presence, and to further streamline its publications where appropriate. It also urged the secretariat to enhance synergies between UNCTAD publications and the other pillars of UNCTAD, with a view to enhancing the implementation of the recommendations contained in its publications.

During its sixty-eighth session [TD/B/WP/265], the Working Party considered the External evaluation of UNCTAD subprogramme 2: Investment and enterprise, and requested the secretariat to implement the evaluation plan for 2015.

At its sixty-ninth session [TD/B/WP/267/Rev.1], the Working Party concurred with the proposed programme narrative for UNCTAD for the biennium 2016–2017 [TD/B/WP(69)/CRP.1/Rev.1].

International Trade Centre

In 2014, the joint UNCTAD/WTO International Trade Centre (ITC), as set forth in its Annual Report 2014 [ITC/AG(XLIX)/258], marked its fiftieth anniversary of establishment. It delivered 35 per cent more technical assistance, capacity building and market intelligence than the year before, with extra-budgetary expenditures reaching a record $53 million.

The report presented ITC achievements during the year against six strategic objectives: supplying trade and market intelligence for small- and medium-sized enterprise competitiveness; supporting regional and economic integration and South-South trade; connecting to value chains: small- and medium-sized enterprise competitiveness, diversification and links to export markets; strengthening trade and investment support institutions; promoting and mainstreaming inclusive and green trade; and building a conducive policy and business environment through public-private partnerships. In 2014, ITC had 104 active projects in 96 countries, and provided programme support that enabled 957 enterprises to meet potential buyers and conduct business transactions. National counterparts endorsed 35 export development strategies and 416 trade support institutions improved their services and management capacities. ITC conducted 497 capacity-building workshops with 25,546 participants of whom 42 per cent were women.

Joint Advisory Group

The Joint Advisory Group on ITC, at its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 11–12 June) [ITC/AG(XLVIII)/256], discussed findings and recommendations of the external independent evaluation of ITC, the management response to the recommendations and the draft ITC strategic plan for 2015–2017.

Administrative and budgetary matters

In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the ITC financial report and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 2013 and the report of the Board of Auditors on the financial statements [A/69/5 (Vol. III)]. The Board noted that of the 20 recommendations made for the 2010–2011 biennium, 11 were fully implemented, 7 were under implementation, 1 was not implemented and 1 had been overtaken by events. For the 2012–2013 biennium, total income was $158.6 million and total expenditure was $155.6 million. Based on its audit, the Board made four recommendations: RTC should regularly inform the General Assembly and the WTO General Council of the projected future level of funding required to support end-of-service liabilities; further develop the project plan for costing methodology work, including key milestones and outputs to enable active monitoring of the project; clearly identify the objectives and envisaged wider benefits of the International Public Sector Accounting Standards project, and develop a methodology to track and manage benefits realization; and evidence more thoroughly the evaluation of candidates when recruiting consultants, and ensure quality assurance of performance evaluations.

Other matters

Public Symposium

The fifth UNCTAD Public Symposium (Geneva, 15–26 September) [TD/B/61/6 & Corr.1] focused on the theme of a better world economic order for equality and sustainable development beyond 2015. Participants discussed a range of issues related to macro-economic dimensions of inequality and best policy practices to address growing inequality. Attention was paid to how growing income inequalities within and between countries translated into insufficient aggregate demand and increased reliance on unsustainable debt-driven consumption. Participants called for UNCTAD to consider the rules on investment and tax shifting, and encouraged it to strengthen its work on debt-related issues. Participants also emphasized the role of civil society in helping to generate political will to address the external conditions fuelling inequality.

Commodities

Individual commodities

Cocoa. As at 31 December, the International Cocoa Agreement, 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 944] had 12 parties. Liberia became a party during the year.

Grains. As at 31 December, there were 29 parties to the Grains Trade Convention, 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1332].

Sugar. On 28 November, the International Sugar Council decided to extend the time limit for the deposit of constitutional instruments (article 38) of the International Sugar Agreement, 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 625] until 31 December 2015. As at 31 December, the Agreement had 62 parties. Madagascar became a party during the year.

Tropical timber. As at 31 December, there were 69 parties to the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 1124]. The Central African Republic, Suriname and Viet Nam became parties during the year.

Other commodities. During the year, the following commodities agreements remained in force without changes to their lists of parties: Asian Coconut Community (12 parties); Asian Rice Trade Fund (5 parties); International Pepper Community (6 parties, 1 associate member); and International Tea Promotion Association (8 parties).

Common Fund for Commodities

In 2014, the Common Fund for Commodities (CFC), established in 1980 to realize the potential of commodity production, processing, manufacturing and trade for the benefit of the poor [YUN 1980, p. 621], had 103 Member States plus ten institutional members. At its annual meeting (The Hague, Netherlands, 10 December), the Governing Council adopted the proposed amendments to the Agreement Establishing CFC; took note of the report on the First Account Net Earnings Programme and the activities under the Second Account for 2014; and approved the administrative budget for 2015 and the audited financial statements for 2013.

Global Forum

The fifth Global Commodities Forum (Geneva, 7–8 April) [UNCTAD/SUC/2014/4] was held on the theme “Global value chains, transparency and commodity-based development”. Approximately 300 representatives from government, civil society organizations, private industry, academia and media attended the Forum that consisted of one keynote session and five plenary sessions. The Forum concluded that there was a need for further study of the methods by which developing countries could earn more durable benefits from participation in global value chains. Participants called for multi-stakeholder cooperation in harmonizing standards initiatives, and for UNCTAD Special Unit on Commodities to facilitate a multi-stakeholder working group to develop a governance framework for the commodities sector.

Coercive economic measures

On 28 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/5 (see p. 404) on the necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba.

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the item on the elimination of unilateral extraterritorial coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

International financial system and development

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/201 [YUN 2013, p. 921], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/188] on the international financial system and development. The report contained information on recent trends in international official and private capital flows to developing countries and efforts to strengthen the international financial system towards the post-2015 development agenda. Ongoing challenges in the key areas of financial regulation, sovereign debt distress, the global financial safety net, multilateral surveillance, policy coordination and governance reform of the international financial institutions were highlighted.

The Secretary-General concluded that despite notable progress, international financial regulatory reform remained behind schedule. For the system to be instrumental in financing the post-2015 development agenda, more attention needed to be given to how regulatory structures impact access to credit in areas that were critically important for sustainable development, such as infrastructure, innovation, and small and medium-sized enterprises. Fundamental reform of the global financial system would require progress in building resilience of financial institutions; transforming shadow banking to transparent and resilient market-based financing; ending “too-big-to-fail”; and increasing the safety of derivatives markets. Enhanced cooperation and increased complementarities between International Monetary Fund (IMF) and regional financing arrangements were important for global financial stability and sustainable growth.

Communication. By a letter dated 8 October [A/C.2/69/3], Singapore, on behalf of the Global Governance Group (3G), comprised of 30 UN Member States, transmitted to the Secretary-General a document entitled “Global Governance Group input to the Group of 20 (G20) on development and governance”. The 3G emphasized that the United Nations was the only global body with universal membership and unquestionable legitimacy and that it should make final decisions on shaping the process of the new global framework. The 3G urged the G20 to support the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda and called on the G20 to push for the early and comprehensive implementation of the “Bali Package” [YUN 2013, p. 909].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/466/Add.2], adopted resolution 69/206 without vote [agenda item 17 (b)].

International financial system and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/186 of 20 December 2000 and 56/181 of 21 December 2001, both entitled “Towards a strengthened and stable international financial architecture responsive to the priorities of growth and development, especially in developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity”, as well as its resolutions 57/241 of 20 December 2002, 58/202 of 23 December 2003, 59/222 of 22 December 2004, 60/186 of 22 December 2005, 61/187 of 20 December 2006, 62/185 of 19 December 2007, 63/205 of 19 December 2008, 64/190 of 21 December 2009, 65/143 of 20 December 2010, 66/187 of 22 December 2011, 67/197 of 21 December 2012 and 68/201 of 20 December 2013,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, its resolution 56/210 B of 9 July 2002, in which it endorsed the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation) and the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway,

Recalling further the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008,

Recalling the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and its outcome document,

Recalling also the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, convened by the President of the General Assembly on 25 September 2013, and their respective outcome documents,

Recalling further the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”,

Recognizing the work undertaken by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group of the General Assembly to follow up on the issues contained in the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development, and taking note of its progress report,

Recalling the meeting of the Second Committee, held on 13 November 2013, pursuant to resolution 67/197, to discuss actions in response to the world financial and economic crisis and its impact on development and prospects for restoring confidence and economic growth,

Recalling also its resolution 68/279 of 30 June 2014 on the modalities for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in Addis Ababa from 13 to 16 July 2015,

Recalling further the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020, and recognizing in this context that the international financial institutions should be supportive, in accordance with their mandates, of the special needs and priorities of the least developed countries,

Emphasizing that the international financial system should bolster sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, sustainable development and job creation and promote financial inclusion and support efforts to eradicate poverty and hunger in developing countries, while allowing for the coherent mobilization of all sources of financing for development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Recognizes the need to continue and intensify efforts to enhance the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems, and reiterates the importance of ensuring their openness, fairness and inclusiveness in order to complement national efforts to ensure sustainable development, including strong, sustained, balanced, inclusive and equitable economic growth and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Reiterates the need to act decisively to tackle the challenges confronting the global economy in order to ensure balanced, sustained, inclusive and equitable global growth with full and productive employment and quality jobs, and also reiterates the need for significant mobilization of resources from a variety of sources and the effective use of financing in order to promote full and productive employment and decent work for all;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", the sub-item entitled "International financial system and development";

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, to be prepared in cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions and other relevant stakeholders.

Also on 19 December (decision 69/542), the General Assembly took note of the report [A/69/466 & Add.1–3] of the Second Committee on macroeconomic policy questions, including those related to the international financial system and development.

Debt situation of developing countries

External debt sustainability and development

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/202 [YUN 2013, p. 924], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/167] on external debt sustainability and development. According to the report, the total external debt stocks of developing countries and transition economies reached $6 trillion in 2013, indicating an 8.7 per cent increase over 2012. This marked the fourth consecutive year that the external debt growth of developing countries had exceeded the average growth rate of approximately 7 per cent. Long-term debt represented approximately 72 per cent of total debt stocks in 2013, as in 2012, and was mainly owed to private creditors. The share of official long-term lending to developing countries continued to decline in 2013, as in 2012. The share of short-term debt, however, increased from $1.26 trillion in 2011 to $1.35 trillion in 2012, reaching $1.5 trillion in 2013.

Despite the slight improvement in export growth, debt ratios continued to worsen in 2013. Total debt to gross domestic product (GDP) increased to 22.7 per cent in 2013, following increases in ratios in 2011 and 2012 to 20.9 and 21.7 per cent, respectively. Debt service to exports rose from 7.9 to 8.3 per cent, and total debt to exports increased from 72.8 per cent to 75.9 per cent from 2012 to 2013.

International reserves for developing countries increased to $6.8 trillion in 2013 from nearly $6.3 trillion in 2012. This represented a major improvement in the growth rate of reserves from 4.5 per cent in 2012 to 8.5 per cent in 2013. The stock of international reserves continued to exceed the stock of total debt for developing countries as a whole; the faster growth of debt than reserves since 2008, however, was a concern.

The report also provided an assessment of progress under international debt relief initiatives and the reform of credit rating agencies; and discussed emerging and existing challenges of developing countries in maintaining debt sustainability and the renewed debate surrounding a sovereign debt workout mechanism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/466/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/207 by recorded vote (125-4-44) [agenda item 17 (d)].

External debt sustainability and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/203 of 23 December 2003, 59/223 of 22 December 2004, 60/187 of 22 December 2005, 61/188 of 20 December 2006, 62/186 of 19 December 2007, 63/206 of 19 December 2008, 64/191 of 21 December 2009, 65/144 of 20 December 2010, 66/189 of 22 December 2011, 67/198 of 21 December 2012 and 68/202 of 20 December 2013,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted on 8 September 2000, and the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling further its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Recalling further the International Conference on Financing for Development and its outcome document and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and its outcome document, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development,

Recalling the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and its outcome document,

Recalling also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling further its resolution 68/279 of 30 June 2014 on the modalities for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in Addis Ababa from 13 to 16 July 2015,

Recalling its resolution 68/304 of 9 September 2014, in which it decided to define the modalities for the intergovernmental negotiations and the adoption of the text of the multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes at the main part of its sixty-ninth session, before the end of 2014,

Stressing the need for effective coordination and coherence in order to build synergies with other relevant United Nations intergovernmental processes,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Emphasizes the special importance of a timely, effective, comprehensive and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries to promote their economic growth and development;
3. Stresses the importance of the continued substantive consideration of the sub-item entitled “External debt sustainability and development”;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a comprehensive report on the issue;
5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Macroeconomic policy questions”, the sub-item entitled “External debt sustainability and development”.

Sovereign debt restructuring process

Communications. By a letter dated 7 July [A/68/946-E/2014/91], Bolivia, on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, transmitted to the Secretary-General and the President of the Economic and Social Council a declaration in support of Argentina regarding the ruling on NML Capital Ltd. vs. the Republic of Argentina. It recalled its declaration adopted on 15 June in Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Bolivia and reiterated the urgent need for the international community to examine options for an effective, equitable, durable, independent and development-oriented international debt resolution mechanism.

On the same day [A/68/948], Bolivia, on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration entitled “For a new world order for living well”, in which it stressed the importance of not allowing vulture funds to paralyse the debt-restructuring efforts of developing countries.

On September, the General Assembly decided to elaborate and adopt through a process of intergovernmental negotiations, as a matter of priority during its sixty-ninth session, a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes to improve the international financial system. It also decided to define the modalities for the intergovernmental negotiations and the adoption of the text of the multilateral legal framework at the main part of its sixty-ninth session, before the end of 2014 (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 September [meeting 107], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/304 [draft: A/68/L.57/Rev.1] by recorded vote (124-11-41) [agenda item 14].

Towards the establishment of a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted on 8 September 2000, and the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Recalling further the International Conference on Financing for Development and its outcome document, in which sustainable debt financing is recognized as an important element for mobilizing resources for public and private investment, and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and its outcome document, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development, as well as General Assembly resolution 68/204 of 20 December 2013,

Recalling its resolution 68/279 of 30 June 2014 on the convening of the third International Conference on Financing for Development to assess the progress made in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration, reinvigorate and strengthen the financing for development follow-up process, identify obstacles and constraints encountered in the achievement of the goals and objectives agreed therein, as well as actions and initiatives to overcome these constraints, and address new and emerging issues, including in the context of the recent multilateral efforts to promote international development cooperation, taking into account the current evolving development cooperation landscape, the interrelationship of all sources of development finance and the synergies among financing objectives across the three dimensions of sustainable development, as well as the need to support the United Nations development agenda beyond 2015,

Recalling also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling further its resolution 63/303 of 9 July 2009, in which it endorsed the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development, held in New York from 24 to 30 June 2009,

Stressing the need to reinforce coherence and coordination and to avoid duplication of efforts with regard to the financing for development process,

Taking note of the report of the Commission of Experts on Reform of the International Monetary and Financial System, convened by the President of the General Assembly at its sixty-third session,

Recalling its resolutions 58/203 of 23 December 2003, 59/223 of 22 December 2004, 60/187 of 22 December 2005, 61/188 of 20 December 2006, 62/186 of 19 December 2007, 63/206 of 19 December 2008, 64/191 of 21 December 2009, 65/144 of 20 December 2010, 66/189 of 22 December 2011, 67/198 of 21 December 2012 and 68/202 of 20 December 2013,

Noting that sovereign debt crises are a recurring problem that involves very serious political, economic and social consequences and that the restructuring processes of sovereign debt are a frequent phenomenon in the international financial system,

Noting with concern that there remain a number of low- and middle-income developing countries that are still facing difficulties in finding a durable solution to their external debt problems, which could adversely affect their sustainable development,

Recognizing that addressing the sovereign debt problems of developing countries is an important part of international cooperation,

Stressing the importance for developing countries, on a case-by-case basis, of debt relief, including debt cancellation, as appropriate, and debt restructuring as debt crisis prevention and management tools,

Stressing also the need to work towards the establishment of responsible and preventive financial crisis policies to enhance transparent and sustainable national financial systems,

Recognizing the sovereign right of any State to restructure its sovereign debt, which should not be frustrated or impeded by any measure emanating from another State,

Recognizing also that the efforts of a State to restructure its sovereign debt should not be frustrated or impeded by commercial creditors, including specialized investor funds such as hedge funds, which seek to undertake speculative purchases of its distressed debt at deeply discounted rates on secondary markets in order to pursue full payment via litigation,

Noting that private creditors of sovereign debt are increasingly numerous, anonymous and difficult to coordinate and that there are a variety of debt instruments and a wide range of jurisdictions in which debt is issued, thus complicating the restructuring of sovereign debt,

Noting also the concern expressed in the declaration of the Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Group of 77 and China on the theme “For a New World Order for Living Well”, held in Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Plurinational State of Bolivia, on 14 and 15 June 2014, concerning the so-called “vulture funds” and their actions of a highly speculative nature, which pose a risk to all future debt restructuring processes, for both developing and developed countries,

Taking into account the initiatives studied in the framework of the International Development Association of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to address the activities of the so-called “vulture funds”, with the objective of, inter alia, preventing such funds from benefiting from litigation initiated against indebted countries, which are forced to divert many of their resources to handle such litigation, thereby undermining the purpose of the debt restructuring processes,

Recalling, among other things, the work carried out by the International Monetary Fund in 2003, with the support of the International Monetary and Financial Committee, to formulate a proposal for a sovereign debt restructuring mechanism,

Stressing the importance of the Principles on Promoting Responsible Sovereign Lending and Borrowing issued by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on 4 May 2011, which aim to reduce the prevalence of sovereign debt crises, prevent unsustainable debt situations, maintain steady economic growth and help achieve the Millennium Development Goals, encouraging to that end responsible sovereign borrowing,

Stressing also the need to continue to address systemic fragilities and imbalances and the need for continuing efforts to reform and strengthen the international financial system,

Noting with concern that the international financial system does not have a sound legal framework for the orderly and predictable restructuring of sovereign debt, which further increases the cost of non-compliance,

Recognizing the need to create a legal framework that facilitates the orderly restructuring of sovereign debts, allows the re-establishment of viability and growth without creating incentives that inadvertently increase the risk of non-compliance and acts as a deterrent to disruptive litigation that creditors could engage in during negotiations to restructure sovereign debts,

Stressing, in this context, the importance of establishing a clear set of principles for the management and resolution of financial crises that take into account the obligation of sovereign creditors to act in good faith and with a cooperative spirit to reach a consensual rearrangement of the debt of sovereign States,

Recognizing that debt-restructuring processes should have as their core element a determination of real payment capacity so that they do not adversely affect economic growth and the fulfilment of the unfinished business of the Millennium Development Goals, the sustainable development goals and the post-2015 development agenda,

Stressing that, in the restructuring of sovereign debt, the progressive development and codification of international law are necessary in order to make it a more effective means to implement the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to give greater importance to its role in the relations among States,

1. Emphasizes the special importance of a timely, effective, comprehensive and durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries in order to promote their inclusive economic growth and development;

2. Calls for the intensification of efforts to prevent debt crises by enhancing international financial mechanisms for crisis prevention and resolution, in cooperation with the private sector, with a view to finding solutions acceptable to all;

3. Calls upon all Member States and the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions and the private sector, to take appropriate measures and actions for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits, in particular those related to the question of the external debt sustainability of developing countries;

4. Recognizes the roles of the United Nations and the international financial institutions in accordance with their respective mandates, and encourages them to continue to support global efforts towards sustainable development and a durable solution to the problem of the debt of developing countries;

5. Decides to elaborate and adopt through a process of intergovernmental negotiations, as a matter of priority during its sixty-ninth session, a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes with a view, inter alia, to increasing the efficiency, stability and predictability of the international financial system and achieving sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with national circumstances and priorities;

6. Also decides to define the modalities for the intergovernmental negotiations and the adoption of the text of the multilateral legal framework at the main part of its sixty-ninth session, before the end of 2014.

ACABQ report. On 12 December, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) transmitted to the General Assembly its report [A/69/658] on modalities for the implementation of resolution 68/304 (see p. 1110) on establishing a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes. ACABQ recommended that upon adoption of the draft resolution [A/C.2/69/L.4/Rev.1] (see below), additional resources in the amount of $251,900 would be required of the programme budget for the 2014–2015 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/466/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/247 by recorded vote (120-15-35) [agenda item 17 (c)].

Modalities for the implementation of resolution 68/304, entitled “Towards the establishment of a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes”

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/304 of 9 September 2014, entitled “Towards the establishment of a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes”,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted on 8 September 2000, and the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development and its outcome document and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and its outcome document, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development, as well as General Assembly resolution 68/204 of 20 December 2013, and the upcoming third International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in Addis Ababa from 13 to 16 July 2015,

Recalling also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled "The future we want",

Recalling further its resolution 63/303 of 9 July 2009, in which it endorsed the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development, held in New York from 24 to 30 June 2009,

Stressing the need for effective coordination and coherence in order to build synergies with other relevant United Nations intergovernmental processes, including in particular the preparatory process for the third International Conference on Financing for Development,

Recognizing the work carried out by the International Monetary Fund, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and the Paris Club on sovereign debt restructuring,

Recognizing also the roles of the United Nations and the international financial institutions in accordance with their respective mandates, and encouraging them to continue to support global efforts towards sustainable development and a durable solution to the problem of the debt of developing countries,

1. Decides to establish an ad hoc committee, open to the participation of all Member States and observers of the United Nations, to elaborate through a process of intergovernmental negotiations, as a matter of priority during its sixty-ninth session, a multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes with a view, inter alia, to increasing the efficiency, stability and predictability of the international financial system and achieving sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with national circumstances and priorities;

2. Also decides that the ad hoc committee shall hold at least three meetings of a duration of three working days each late in January and in May and June/July of 2015, and that the ad hoc committee may hold additional consultations and drafting sessions as required;

3. Further decides that the ad hoc committee shall meet at United Nations Headquarters in New York;

4. Requests the President of the General Assembly to make the necessary organizational arrangements to ensure that the ad hoc committee completes its work in a timely manner;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States and observers to submit their comments on the necessary elements of the multilateral legal framework for sovereign debt restructuring processes no later than 10 days before the first meeting of the ad hoc committee, and to make such comments available electronically;

6. Invites relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other relevant stakeholders, including regional and international financial institutions, in particular the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, as well as other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the private sector and academia, with an interest in the matter to make contributions to the work entrusted to the ad hoc committee, in accordance with the established practices of the United Nations;

7. Calls upon the regional commissions to contribute to the work of the ad hoc committee, as appropriate;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all appropriate support to the work of the ad hoc committee, including through ensuring inter-agency cooperation and effective participation and coherence within the United Nations system, in particular by taking advantage of the technical expertise of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and regional and international financial institutions, as appropriate, and in accordance with their respective mandates;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to enhance the active participation of representatives from developing countries, particularly countries in special situations, in the work of the ad hoc committee, to make efforts to use the available resources for that purpose, and also invites international and bilateral donors, as well as the private sector, financial institutions, foundations and other donors in a position to do so, to support the work of the ad hoc committee through voluntary contributions, including coverage of economy-class air tickets, daily subsistence allowances and terminal expenses;

10. Requests the ad hoc committee to submit to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session a proposal for consideration and appropriate action.

Financing for development

In 2014, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as other UN bodies, continued to follow up on the outcomes of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico [YUN 2002, p. 953] and the 2008 Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha, Qatar [YUN 2008, p. 1076].

Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development

Special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council held a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF), WTO and UNCTAD (New York, 14–15 April) under the theme “Coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of financing for sustainable development and the post-2015 development agenda”. The meeting was organized around one high-level panel on “World economic situation and prospects”; and two thematic debates on “Mobilization of financial resources and their effective use for sustainable development” and “Global partnership for sustainable development in the context of the post-2015 development agenda”.

The meeting had before it a March note by the Secretary-General [E/2014/53] on coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of financing for sustainable development and the post-2015 development agenda, which provided background information and suggested points for discussion on the above three themes.

In his concluding remarks [A/69/83-E/2014/71], the President of the Economic and Social Council noted that the deliberations on the state and prospects of the world economy had highlighted that there was a need for greater cooperation and coherence in macroeconomic policies. Moreover, the deliberations had highlighted that the mobilization of resources for sustainable development would depend on strengthened international cooperation anchored in a coherent financing framework for sustainable development. He echoed the calls made for a renewed and strengthened global partnership for sustainable development to mobilize a wide range of stakeholders in support of the post-2015 agenda. He expressed the view that, in the light of the recently adopted reforms of the Council, a strengthened Council would be able to play an effective coordinating role and meaningfully support the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 25], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/11 [draft: E/2014/L.16] without vote [agenda item 9 (a)].

Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit, held in New York from 14 to 16 September 2005, and its outcome document,

Recalling further the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development, held in New York from 24 to 30 June 2009, and its outcome document,

Recalling the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, held in New York from 20 to 22 September 2010, and its outcome document, and the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, convened by the President of the Assembly on 25 September 2013, and its outcome document,

Recalling also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions 68/1 of 20 September 2013 on the strengthening of the Economic and Social Council, 68/204 of 20 December 2013 on the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development and 65/146 of 20 December 2010 on innovative mechanisms of financing for development, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 2009/30 of 31 July 2009 on a strengthened and more effective intergovernmental inclusive process to carry out the financing for development follow-up and 2013/44 of 26 July 2013 on the follow-up to the International Conference, and all other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Council,

Taking note of the summary by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in New York on 14 and 15 April 2014,

Taking note also of the note by the Secretary-General on coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of financing for sustainable development and the post-2015 development agenda,

Reaffirming the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development in its entirety, its integrity and its holistic approach, and recalling the resolve to take concrete action to implement the Monterrey Consensus and address the challenges of financing for development in the spirit of global partnership and solidarity in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Reaffirming also that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized for the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizing that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership, strategies and sovereignty,

Acknowledging the impact of the global financial and economic crisis on development, recognizing evidence of an uneven and fragile recovery, expressing its appreciation for the efforts that helped to contain tail risks, improve financial market conditions and sustain recovery, and acknowledging also that an effective response to the impacts of the crisis requires timely implementation of all development commitments,

1. Reaffirms the importance of staying fully engaged, nationally, regionally and internationally, in ensuring proper and effective follow-up to the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development as reaffirmed in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development, adopted by the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, and of continuing unrelenting efforts to build bridges between all relevant stakeholders within the holistic agenda of the financing for development process;

2. Reiterates the role played by the United Nations as a focal point for the financing for development follow-up process and the need to maintain that role to ensure the continuity and dynamism of the process, while reaffirming the need to further intensify the engagement of all stakeholders, including the United Nations system, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization, in the follow-up to and implementation of the commitments made at Monterrey and Doha;

3. Welcomes the decision made by the General Assembly, in its resolution 68/204 on the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, to convene a third international conference on financing for development;

4. Also welcomes the conclusion of the consultations on the modalities for the third International Conference on Financing for Development;

5. Reiterates that the Economic and Social Council should continue to strengthen its role in promoting coherence, coordination and cooperation in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration and as a forum for multi-stakeholder involvement;

6. Welcomes, in that regard, the ongoing efforts, in accordance with resolution 68/1 and the annex thereto, to strengthen the Council within its mandate under the Charter of the United Nations, as a principal organ in the integrated and coordinated follow-up of the outcomes of all major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social, environmental and related fields, and to ensure its key role in achieving a balanced integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development;

7. Looks forward to the reports of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing and of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, as mandated in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, as well as the synthesis report of the Secretary-General, as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 68/6 of 9 October 2013, which are to serve as important inputs to the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, the outcome of which should constitute an important contribution to and support the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda;

8. Emphasizes the need for effective coordination between the preparatory process for the third International Conference on Financing for Development and the preparations for the summit to be held in September 2015 for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, in order to promote coherence and to minimize duplication of effort;

9. Encourages the Financing for Development Office of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat to continue providing effective secretariat support to the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing and to the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, in cooperation with all relevant stakeholders, in order to ensure a coherent and integrated approach with other related processes;

10. Emphasizes that the financing for development follow-up process should constitute a continuum of events, each contributing to and feeding into the next, ensuring the holistic nature of the process and making better and more effective use of existing mechanisms and resources;

11. Welcomes the substantive discussions at the previous High-level Dialogues on Financing for Development of the General Assembly and the special high-level meeting of the Council with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and emphasizes that those discussions are an integral and mutually reinforcing part of the financing for development follow-up process, including the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development;

12. Stresses the need to further improve the dialogue between Member States and representatives of the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development during the special high-level meeting of the Council, as part of a forum for multi-stakeholder dialogue;

13. Welcomes the increased interaction and coordination at the staff level with the institutions involved prior to the special high-level meeting of the Council;

14. Recognizes the efforts of the President of the Economic and Social Council, in consultation with Member States, to continue to work with the appropriate representatives of the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to improve the agenda and the format of the special high-level meeting of the Council, considering innovative approaches that are conducive, inter alia, to the high-level participation of those institutions;

15. Requests the President of the Council, in close consultation with Member States, to continue close cooperation and dialogue with the relevant organizations and stakeholders on all the elements of the preparations for the special high-level meeting of the Council, in particular the date and agenda of the meeting of the following year, in order to seek a more interactive, dynamic and substantive discussion on key issues related to the financing for development framework;

16. Welcomes the efforts undertaken to give more prominence to the consideration of the agenda item on financing for development during the annual substantive session of the Council, including its coordination and management meetings, and stresses the need to continue to improve those modalities;

17. Encourages all relevant stakeholders to consider organizing seminars, panel discussions and briefings as part of the preparations for and contribution to the above-mentioned events in order to raise visibility, attract interest and participation and promote substantive discussions on a continuing basis;

18. Notes the ongoing discussions on innovative mechanisms of financing for development, while reiterating that such voluntary mechanisms should supplement and not be a substitute for traditional sources of financing;

19. Reiterates the importance of further improving cooperation between the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration, based on a clear understanding of and respect for their respective mandates and governance structures;

20. Welcomes, in that regard, the invitation by the Chairman of the joint Development Committee of the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund to the President of the Council to participate in the meeting of the Committee, and notes that the participation of the President of the Council in meetings of the intergovernmental bodies of the international organizations, as appropriate, can contribute to the financing for development follow-up process;

21. Encourages the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, especially the Financing for Development Office, to maintain regular interaction at the staff level with the World Bank Group, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in the interest of greater coherence, coordination and cooperation, each acting in accordance with its respective mandates and governance structures;

22. Reiterates its appeal to Member States and other potential donors to consider contributing generously to the Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, which would facilitate the implementation of a strengthened and more effective intergovernmental inclusive process to carry out the financing for development follow-up, including the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 June [meeting 99], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/279 [draft: A/68/L.49] without vote [agenda item 18].

Modalities for the third International Conference on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008,

Recalling also its resolution 68/204 of 20 December 2013 on the follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development and all its previous resolutions on the subject, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/44 of 26 July 2013 on the follow-up to the Conference and all the previous resolutions of the Council on the subject,

Recalling further the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development and its outcome document,

Recalling also the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, held from 20 to 22 September 2010, and its outcome document, and the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, convened by the President of the Assembly on 25 September 2013, and its outcome document,

Recalling further the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”,

Taking note of the summary by the President of the General Assembly of the sixth High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development, held in New York on 7 and 8 October 2013,

Noting the steps taken by the President of the General Assembly at its sixty-eighth session to convene inclusive and transparent intergovernmental consultations, with the participation of the major institutional stakeholders involved in the financing for development process, as appropriate, on all issues related to the conference, including the date, format, organization and scope, taking into account the elements contained in its resolution 68/204,

1. Decides that the third International Conference on Financing for Development:

(a) Shall be held in Addis Ababa from 13 to 16 July 2015;

(b) Shall be held at the highest possible political level, including Heads of State or Government, relevant ministers, including ministers for finance, foreign affairs and development cooperation and special representatives and other representatives, as appropriate;

(c) Shall result in an intergovernmentally negotiated and agreed outcome;

(d) Shall also result in summaries of the plenary meetings and other deliberations of the Conference, to be included in the report of the Conference;

2. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Ethiopia to host the third International Conference on Financing for Development;

3. Reiterates the scope of the third International Conference on Financing for Development, as in resolution 68/204;

4. Reaffirms the relevance of the holistic financing for development agenda, as contained in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, for the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social, environmental and related fields, and in this regard emphasizes that the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration provide the conceptual framework, including in the context of the post-2015 development agenda, for the mobilization of resources from a variety of sources and the effective use of financing required for the achievement of sustainable development;

5. Stresses, in this regard, the need to reinforce coherence and coordination and to avoid duplication of efforts with regard to the financing for development process, with a view to ensuring a single, comprehensive, holistic, forward-looking approach addressing the three dimensions of sustainable development;

6. Emphasizes the need for effective coordination between the preparatory process for the third International Conference on Financing for Development and the preparations for the summit to be held in September 2015 for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, in order to promote coherence and to minimize duplication of effort;

7. Reaffirms that the third International Conference on Financing for Development will assess the progress made in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration, reinvigorate and strengthen the financing for development follow-up process, identify obstacles and constraints encountered in the achievement of the goals and objectives agreed therein, as well as actions and initiatives to overcome these constraints, and address new and emerging issues, including in the context of the recent multilateral efforts to promote international development cooperation, taking into account the current evolving development cooperation landscape, the interrelationship of all sources of development finance, the synergies among financing objectives across the three dimensions of sustainable development, as well as the need to support the United Nations development agenda beyond 2015;

8. Invites the Economic and Social Council to contribute to the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, as appropriate, including through its special high-level meeting with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held in 2015;

9. Looks forward to the reports of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing and of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, as mandated in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, as well as the synthesis report of the Secretary-General, as mandated in its resolution 68/6 of 9 October 2013, which are to serve as important inputs to the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, the outcome of which should constitute an important contribution to and support the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda;

10. Requests the President of the General Assembly to appoint two co-facilitators, one from a developed country and one from a developing country, to continue direct intergovernmental consultations on all issues related to the third International Conference on Financing for Development and its preparatory process, and decides that those consultations must be scheduled in advance in order to facilitate participation from capitals in the informal consultations and drafting sessions and must be open, inclusive and transparent;

11. Also requests the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States, to provide a programme of work, from within existing resources, including substantive informal sessions, with balanced geographical participation of experts and institutions, on relevant thematic areas, of a maximum duration of eight working days plus two working days for informal interactive hearings with representatives of civil society and the business sector during the period from September 2014 to March 2015, and to prepare summaries which may serve as inputs to the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development;

12. Requests that the first draft of the outcome document be prepared by the co-facilitators on the basis of informal consultations, taking into account inputs from Member States, and presented by February 2015, and that informal consultations and drafting sessions on the outcome document be held as follows: in January 2015 for three days, in April 2015 for five days, and in June 2015 for five days;

13. Stresses the need for flexibility in the informal consultation process, including the possibility of convening additional consultations and drafting sessions, as required, although not after the conclusion of the third informal consultation;

14. Decides that all the negotiations of the outcome document shall be held at United Nations Headquarters in New York;

15. Also decides that the third International Conference on Financing for Development and its preparatory process shall be open to participation by all States Members of the United Nations or States members of specialized agencies and observers in the General Assembly, in accordance with arrangements utilized for previous international conferences on financing for development;

16. Stresses the importance of the full involvement of all relevant stakeholders in the implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Doha Declaration at all levels, and also stresses the importance of their full participation in the third International Conference on Financing for Development and its preparatory process, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, in particular the accreditation procedures and modalities of participation utilized at the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha, and in their preparatory processes;

17. Invites and encourages non-governmental organizations and business sector entities, including small and medium enterprises from developing countries, to participate in the third International Conference on Financing for Development and its preparatory process, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, in particular the accreditation procedures and modalities of participation utilized at the Monterrey and Doha Conferences and their preparatory processes, and decides that:

(a) Registration shall be open to all non-governmental organizations that are in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and to all non-governmental organizations and business sector entities accredited to the Monterrey and Doha Conferences or to their follow-up processes;

(b) Interested non-governmental organizations and business sector entities that are not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council or were not accredited to the Monterrey or Doha Conferences shall apply to the General Assembly for accreditation, following the accreditation procedures established during the Conferences;

(c) The above arrangements concerning participation of non-governmental organizations and business sector entities in the Conference and its preparatory process shall in no way create a precedent for meetings of the General Assembly;

18. Reaffirms the special role that the international financial and trade institutions, in particular the major institutional stakeholders involved in the financing for development follow-up process, should play in all aspects of the third International Conference on Financing for Development, including their active involvement in its preparatory work, following the experience of the Monterrey and Doha Conferences;

19. Calls upon the regional commissions, with the support of regional development banks and other relevant entities, to hold regional consultations, as appropriate, the outcome of which could serve as input to the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development;

20. Invites all Member States and other potential donors to consider contributing generously to the Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, in order to support the activities involved in the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development and the travel and participation of representatives from developing countries, in particular the least developed countries;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a note on the organization of work of the third International Conference on Financing for Development;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide all appropriate support to the work of the preparatory process for the third International Conference on Financing for Development and to the Conference itself and to ensure inter-agency cooperation and effective participation and coherence within the United Nations system, as well as the efficient use of resources, so that the objectives of the Conference can be addressed.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/204 [YUN 2013, p. 931], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/358] on the follow-up to and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953] and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development [YUN 2008, p. 1069]. The report presented developments in six thematic areas: mobilizing domestic financial resources for development; mobilizing international resources for development; foreign direct investment (FDI) and other private flows; international trade as an engine for development; increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development; external debt; and addressing systemic issues: enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems in support of development. The report also presented an update on intergovernmental follow-up processes in the lead-up to the third International Conference on Financing for Development.

Net private financial flows to developing countries reached $420 billion in 2013, with FDI exhibiting the largest net increase over the last decade. Gross FDI inflows to developing economies reached a new high of $778 billion in 2013. Although the value of projects from greenfield FDI—the form of FDI that had the most impact on sustainable development—increased by 9 per cent, it remained significantly below historical levels. Moreover, outward FDI from developing countries increased sharply, reaching $454 billion.

Official development assistance (ODA) rose by 6.1 per cent in real terms from 2012 to 2013, reaching a record of $134.8 billion; the overall share of ODA allocated to the least developed countries, however, fell in recent years. Attention turned to climate financing in ODA, with a broad focus on mitigation, while financing for adaptation was limited.

In 2013, the external debt-to-GDP ratio for developing countries stood at 22.6 per cent, with low-income countries registering higher ratios than middle-income countries. There was a need for timely reform of the architecture for sovereign debt restructuring, including creating rules that provided comprehensive and fair treatment for all components of debt.

Efforts to improve the functioning, stability and resilience of the international monetary and financial system continued. Additional initiatives were needed in key areas relating to international economic policy coordination, multilateral surveillance, the global financial safety net, global governance and financial regulation.

Note by Secretary-General. In October [A/69/542], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a note on the organization of work of the third International Conference on Financing for Development, pursuant to Assembly resolution 68/279 (see p. 1116). Annexed thereto were the provisional rules of procedure, provisional agenda and the proposed timetable for the work of the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/467], adopted resolution 69/208 without vote [agenda item 18].

Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the International Conference on Financing for Development, held in Monterrey, Mexico, from 18 to 22 March 2002, and the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, held in Doha from 29 November to 2 December 2008, and its resolutions 68/6 of 9 October 2013, 68/204 of 20 December 2013 and 68/309 of 10 September 2014 concerning the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 66/288 and resolution 69/108 of 8 December 2014 on the report of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 66/288, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 2014/11 of 13 June 2014,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, held from 20 to 22 September 2010, and its outcome document, and the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, convened by the President of the General Assembly on 25 September 2013, and its outcome document,

Recalling the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled "The future we want",

Recalling also the sixth High-level Dialogue on Financing for Development, held in New York on 7 and 8 October 2013,

Recalling further its resolution 68/279 of 30 June 2014 on modalities for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, in which it welcomed the offer of the Government of Ethiopia to host the Conference, to be held in Addis Ababa from 13 to 16 July 2015,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to and implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and Doha Declaration on Financing for Development;

2. Invites all Member States and other potential donors to consider contributing generously to the Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the International Conference on Financing for Development, in order to support the activities involved in the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development and the travel and participation of representatives from developing countries, in particular the least developed countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the outcome of the Conference;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session an item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the outcomes of the International Conferences on Financing for Development".

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the item on the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the 2002 International Conference on Financing for Development and the 2008 Review Conference would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Other matters

Competition law and policy

Group of experts

At its fourteenth session (Geneva, 8–10 July) [TD/B/C.I/CLP/34], the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy considered the following topics: benefits of competition policy for consumers; communication strategies of competition authorities as a tool for agency effectiveness; informal cooperation among competition agencies in specific cases; review of capacity-building activities; UNCTAD online data bank on competition cases; and voluntary peer reviews of competition law and policy for Namibia, Seychelles and the Philippines.

In agreed conclusions, the Group reaffirmed the fundamental role of competition law and policy for sound economic development; noted that the Millennium Development Goals and UNCTAD XIII had focused on addressing the opportunities and challenges of globalization for development and poverty reduction; underlined that competition law and policy was a key instrument for addressing globalization; and recognized that an effective enabling environment for competition and development may include both national competition policies and international cooperation. The Group decided that UNCTAD should undertake further voluntary peer reviews on the competition law and policy of Member States or regional grouping of States during the seventh United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set in 2015. It requested UNCTAD to prepare studies for the seventh Conference. In addition, the Group requested UNCTAD to prepare a report on the implementation of the work programme and decisions taken at the sixth United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set in 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 961], and an updated review of capacity-building and technical assistance.

International Standards of Accounting and Reporting

Group of experts

At its thirty-first session (Geneva, 15–17 October) [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/71], the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting underscored the facilitating role that reliable and globally comparable corporate reporting would have on attaining the sustainable development goals. The Group agreed on the critical role that monitoring of compliance and enforcement mechanisms played in the effective implementation of global standards and codes for high-quality corporate reporting; and called on UNCTAD to continue facilitating sharing of experiences and providing information on good practices in the area of monitoring of compliance and enforcement. The session requested the UNCTAD secretariat to constitute a consultative group to assist with the preparation of a guiding document on such practices.

The Group took into consideration the note prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/C.II/ISAR/70], entitled “Key foundations for high-quality corporate reporting: Good practices of monitoring and enforcement, and compliance mechanisms”, which described the key elements that needed to be considered when building efficient monitoring and enforcement systems for companies, audit firms and professional accountants. It also highlighted standards and guidance issued by international and regional bodies; selected national good practices; and discussed the main challenges faced by countries in their efforts to establish efficient mechanisms for the monitoring of compliance and enforcement.

International cooperation in tax matters

Special meeting of the Economic and Social Council. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/24 [YUN 2013, p. 939], the Council held a one-day meeting (New York, 5 June) to consider the question of international cooperation in tax matters, including its contribution to mobilizing domestic financial resources for development and the institutional arrangements to promote such cooperation. Participants included representatives of national tax authorities and international organizations active in the tax area. The Council had before it the report [E/2013/45-E/C.18/2013/6] of the ninth session of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters [YUN 2013, p. 940]. The meeting included panel discussions on “International tax cooperation: Current issues on the agenda of international organizations” and “Current issues in domestic resource mobilization for development: Base erosion and profit shifting”, and an interactive discussion on “Extractive industries taxation issues for developing countries”.

Committee of experts

Committee session. On 13 June, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2014/220, decided to convene the tenth session of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters in Geneva from 27 to 31 October 2014 [E/2014/45-E/C.18/2014/6]. The meeting discussed, inter alia, issues related to Article 4 (Resident): application of treaty rules to hybrid entities; Article 5 (Permanent establishment); Article 8 (Shipping, inland waterways transport and air transport); and Article 9 (Associated enterprises): update of its commentary and transfer pricing issues. The Committee decided to hold its eleventh session in Geneva from 19 to 23 October 2015, and approved its provisional agenda for the session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 25], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/12 [draft: E/2014/L.17] without vote [agenda item 16 (b)].

Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2004/69 of 11 November 2004 and 2013/24 of 24 July 2013,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 68/1 of 20 September 2013,

Recognizing the call made in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development for the strengthening of international tax cooperation through enhanced dialogue among national tax authorities and greater coordination of the work of the multilateral bodies and relevant regional organizations concerned, giving special attention to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition,

Recalling the request to the Economic and Social Council made in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development to examine the strengthening of the institutional arrangements to promote international cooperation in tax matters, including the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters,

Recalling also its decision to hold, on an annual basis, a special meeting of the Council to consider international cooperation in tax matters, including, as appropriate, its contribution to mobilizing domestic financial resources for development and the institutional arrangements to promote such cooperation,

Recognizing that, while each country is responsible for its tax system, it is important to support efforts in these areas by strengthening technical assistance and enhancing international cooperation and participation in addressing international tax matters, including in the area of double taxation,

Recognizing also the need for an inclusive, participatory and broad-based dialogue on international cooperation in tax matters,

Noting the activities developing and launched within concerned multilateral bodies and relevant subregional and regional organizations, and recognizing ongoing efforts to promote collaboration between the United Nations and other international bodies dealing with cooperation in tax matters,

Taking note of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its sixteenth session,

Welcoming the discussion in the Council on 5 June 2014 on international cooperation in tax matters and its contribution to promoting the work of the Committee of Experts,

Noting the workshop on protecting the tax base of developing countries, held at United Nations Headquarters on 4 June 2014,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on its ninth session,

1. Welcomes the work of the Committee of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters to implement the mandate given to it by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 2004/69, and encourages the Committee to continue its efforts in this regard;

2. Notes the decision of the Committee, at its ninth session, to set up six subcommittees on substantial matters, namely article 9 (associated enterprises): transfer pricing; tax treatment of services; exchange of information; base erosion and profit-shifting issues for developing countries; extractive industries taxation issues for developing countries; and negotiation of tax treaties—practical manual, as well as an advisory group on capacity development;

3. Acknowledges the need for enhanced dialogue among national tax authorities on issues related to international cooperation in tax matters;

4. Decides to continue, including at its 2015 special meeting to consider international cooperation in tax matters, consultations on options with regard to the strengthening of institutional arrangements to promote international cooperation in tax matters, taking into account the need for an inclusive, participatory and broad-based dialogue on international cooperation in tax matters, including on the issue of the conversion of the Committee into an intergovernmental subsidiary body of the Council;

5. Emphasizes that it is important for the Committee to enhance its collaboration with other international organizations active in the area of international tax cooperation, including the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, and with relevant regional and subregional bodies;

6. Encourages the President of the Economic and Social Council to issue invitations to representatives of national tax authorities to attend the annual special meeting of the Council to consider international cooperation in tax matters;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, at its special meeting to consider international cooperation in tax matters, a report, within existing resources and reflecting the views of Member States, on options for further strengthening the work and operational capacity of the Committee, with an emphasis on better integrating its work into the programme of work of the Council following its reform and effectively contributing to the financing for development follow-up process and to the post-2015 development agenda;

8. Recognizes the progress made by the Financing for Development Office of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat in developing, within its mandate, a capacity development programme in international tax cooperation aimed at strengthening the capacity of the ministries of finance and the national tax authorities in developing countries to develop more effective and efficient tax systems, which support the desired levels of public and private investment, and to combat tax evasion, and requests the Office, in partnership with other stakeholders, to continue its work in this area and to further develop its activities within existing resources and mandates;

9. Stresses the need for appropriate funding for the subsidiary bodies of the Committee to enable those bodies to fulfil their mandates;

10. Reiterates, in this regard, its appeal to Member States, relevant organizations and other potential donors to consider contributing generously to the Trust Fund for International Cooperation in Tax Matters, established by the Secretary-General in order to supplement regular budgetary resources, and invites the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to that end.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport, 2015 [Sales No. E.15.II.D.6] stated that global seaborne shipments increased by 3.4 per cent in 2014, reaching 9.84 billion tons. The world fleet grew by 3.5 per cent, to 1.75 billion deadweight tons (dwt), representing the lowest annual growth rate in over a decade. For the first time since the peak of the shipbuilding cycle, the average age of the world fleet increased slightly during 2014.

Container freight rates remained volatile throughout the year. Developing countries, especially in Africa and Oceania, paid 40 to 70 per cent more on average for the international transport of their imports than developed countries, mainly due to those regions' trade imbalances, pending port and trade facilitation reforms, lower trade volumes and shipping connectivity. Furthermore, developing economies' share of world container port throughput increased marginally to 71.9 per cent, reflecting an increase in South-South trade.

In 2014, important regulatory developments in transport and trade facilitation included the adoption of the International Code for Ships Operating in Polar Waters (Polar Code), as well as a range of regulatory developments relating to maritime and supply chain security and environmental issues.

Transport of dangerous goods

Committee of experts

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, at its seventh session (Geneva, 12 December) [ST/SG/AC.10/42 & Add.1-3 & Add.1/Corr.1-3 & Add.3/Corr.1], considered the reports of the Sub-Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on its forty-third (24–28 June 2013) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/86 & Add.1], forty-fourth (25 November–4 December 2013) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/88], forty-fifth (23 June–2 July 2014) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/90] and forty-sixth (1–9 December 2014) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/92] sessions; and the reports of the Sub-Committee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals on its twenty-fifth (1–3 July 2013) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/50], twenty-sixth (4–6 December 2013) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/52], twenty-seventh (2–4 July 2014) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/54] and twenty-eighth (10–12 December 2014) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.4/56] sessions, all held in Geneva.

The Committee endorsed the reports of the Sub-Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, including the amendments to the existing recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods and the new recommendations made. The Committee likewise endorsed the reports of the Sub-Committee of Experts on the Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals, including the amendments to the existing text of the Sub-Committee and the new provisions adopted. The Committee also approved a programme of work for the biennium 2015–2016 and adopted a draft resolution on its work for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its 2015 session.

Regional economic and social activities

In 2014, the five UN regional commissions of the Economic and Social Council—the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA)—continued to provide technical cooperation, including advisory services, to their Member States, promote programmes and projects and provide training to enhance national capacity-building. Four of them—ECA, ECLAC, ESCAP and ESCWA—held regular sessions during the year while ECE did not meet in 2014. The Executive Secretaries of the commissions continued to hold periodic meetings to exchange views and coordinate activities and positions on major development issues.

ECA held its forty-seventh session under the theme “Industrialization for inclusive and transformative development in Africa”. A defining feature of 2014 was the adoption by African leaders of key frameworks for the continent’s economic and social development, in particular the African Union (AU) Agenda 2063 and the AU “Common African Position on the post-2015 development agenda”. The ECA engagement with leading pan-African institutions, notably the AU Commission, resulted also in the endorsement of the recommendations of the High-level Panel on Illicit Financial Flows from Africa. At the Commission’s ninth African Development Forum, over 900 stakeholders from across the continent adopted the Marrakech Consensus on innovative financing for Africa’s transformation.

ESCAP held its seventieth session in May and August, exploring the relationship between regional connectivity and shared prosperity, particularly the mechanisms through which regional connectivity affected and contributed to prosperity. During the year, three priority areas emerged for the Commission: solidifying its role as a regional knowledge hub; enhancing its role as the preeminent regional intergovernmental platform for building consensus on norms, agreements and policies; and seeking innovative partnerships between government and civil society.

At its thirty-fifth session, ECLAC considered the document entitled “Compacts for Equality: Towards a Sustainable Future” which, along with the 2010 and 2012 documents, completed the trilogy on the subject of equality. On 24 April, the International Year of Small Island Developing States was launched in Kingston, Jamaica. On the recommendation of ECLAC, in November, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean as a subsidiary body of the Commission that would contribute to the progress of social development policies and activities in the countries of the region. Further, on the recommendation of the Commission, the Council endorsed the admission of Sint Maarten as an ECLAC associate member.

The theme of the ESCWA twenty-eighth session was social justice in the policies of Arab States. The session concluded with the adoption of the Tunis Declaration on Social Justice in the Arab Region, despite the political instability that continued to characterize the Arab region in 2014. The Declaration represented a contract between ESCWA and its Member States to promote social justice through the development of policies based on rights, equality and equity, and the elimination of all forms of social injustice and discrimination in Arab countries through legislative and constitutional reforms.

On the recommendation of ESCWA, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the establishment of an intergovernmental committee on technology for development that would replace the Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation; and redesignated the ESCWA Technical Committee as the Executive Committee.

Regional cooperation

In 2014, the United Nations continued to strengthen cooperation among its regional commissions, between them and other UN entities, and with regional and international organizations. In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/1 [YUN 2013, p. 1413], the Economic and Social Council “coordination segment”, under which the Council had previously discussed regional activities, was replaced by the “coordination and management meetings”. One of the main functions of those meetings was to review the reports of the Council’s subsidiary bodies, including the regional commissions.

Meetings of Executive Secretaries. The Executive Secretaries of the five regional commissions met in Santiago, Chile, in March; in New York, in July on the margins of the high-level political forum and the Economic and Social Council; again in New York in September on the margins of the General Assembly; and in December through videoconferencing [E/2014/15 & E/2015/15]. The issues discussed included accountability in the post-2015 development agenda; providing input to the report of the Secretary-General entitled “The road to dignity by 2030: ending poverty, transforming all lives and protecting the planet”; preparation for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in July 2015; and interregional policy cooperation.

Cooperation in the economic, social and related fields

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 1823 (XVII) [YUN 1962, p. 293] and Economic and Social Council resolution 1817(LV) [YUN 1973, p. 449], the Secretary-General in June submitted a report [E/2014/15] structured in two main sections. The first provided regional perspectives on three global processes: the post-2015 development agenda; the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, to be held in Samoa in September; and the review of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development beyond 2014. The second part covered developments in selected areas of regional and interregional cooperation, including policy matters, efforts to promote coherence at the regional level, cooperation with non-United Nations regional organizations and enhanced interregional cooperation among the regional commissions.

Two addendums [E/2014/15/Add.1, 2 & Add.1/Rev.1] contained information on resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean; the Economic Commission for Africa; the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific; the Economic and Social Commission of Western Asia at their regular sessions.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the report and related addendums on 17 November (decision 2014/255).

Africa

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2007/4 [YUN 2007, p. 1014], the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its forty-seventh session on 29 and 30 March, as part of the seventh joint annual meetings of the ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development and the African Union (AU) Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance (Abuja, Nigeria, 25–28 March) [E/2014/38-E/ECA/CM/47/8], under the theme “Industrialization for inclusive and transformative development in Africa”.

The Commission, including its experts and ministerial segments, discussed a number of issues: the cost of hunger in Africa [E/ECA/COE/33/9]; economic and social developments in Africa in 2013 [E/ECA/COE/33/2]; the statutory report on the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning [E/ECA/COE/33/13]; the report on the UN support to the AU and its New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD) [E/ECA/33/15]; progress in achieving the Millennium Development Goals in Africa [E/ECA/COE/33/3]; status of integration in Africa [E/ECA/COE/33/5], the African regional integration index [E/ECA/COE/33/20]; a proposed strategic framework for the period 2016–2017 [E/ECA/COE/33/12]; the establishment of the South-South and triangular coalition for Africa post-2015 [E/ECA/COE/33/8]; outcomes of the nineteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [E/ECA/COE/33/18]; a new continent-wide initiative for gender equality and women’s empowerment [E/ECA/COE/33/19]; and the Extraordinary Experts’ Meeting of AU Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance [E/ECA/COE/33/10].

The Commission adopted 15 resolutions [E/2014/38-ECA/CM/47/8] providing mandates to ECA and the AU Commission to undertake work in the following areas: renewable energy in Africa’s industrialization and economic transformation [res. 913(XLVII)]; African regional integration index [res. 914(XLVII)]; a new continent-wide initiative on gender equality and women’s empowerment [res. 915(XLVII)]; illicit financial flows [res. 916(XLVII)]; country profiles for a structural transformation of African economies [res. 917(XLVII)]; strategic framework and biennial programme plan ECA for the biennium 2016–2017 [res. 918(XLVII)]; green economy and structural transformation in Africa [res. 919(XLVII)]; extraordinary meeting of the Conference of African Ministers of Economy and Finance [res. 920(XLVII)]; agricultural transformation for an industrialized Africa [res. 921(XLVII)]; industrialization for inclusive and transformative development [res. 922(XLVII)]; post-2015 development agenda [res. 923(XLVII)]; postal financial services [res. 924(XLVII)]; productivity, competitiveness and industrialization [res. 925(XLVII)]; alternative sources of financing for the AU [res. 926(XLVII)]; and the establishment of the African Risk Capacity agency: sovereign disaster risk solutions [res. 927(XLVII)].

The activities of the Commission were summarized in the ECA annual report 2015 [E/ECA/COE/34/11].

Economic trends

A defining feature of 2014 was the adoption by African leaders of transformative frameworks for the continent’s economic and social development, in particular, the AU Agenda 2063 and the document adopted by the AU entitled “Common African Position on the post-2015 development agenda". ECA engagement with leading pan-African institutions, notably the African Union Commission (AUC), resulted also in the endorsement of the recommendations of the High-level Panel on Illicit Financial Flows from Africa. At the Commission's ninth African Development Forum, over 900 stakeholders from across the African continent adopted the Marrakech Consensus on innovative financing for Africa's transformation, which promised to exert significant influence in the lead-up to the third International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in July 2015. Similar efforts by ECA and collective approaches helped to inform and strengthen the negotiating positions of the African Group in relation to the post-Bali work programme of the World Trade Organization.

Despite the weak global economy, Africa's growth increased from 3.7 per cent in 2013 to 3.9 per cent in 2014 [E/2015/17], making Africa the second fastest-growing region after East and South Asia. The continent's growth was underpinned by improved governance and macroeconomic management, investment in infrastructure, rapid urbanization, a growing middle class and rising aggregate demand, diversified trade and investment ties with emerging economies, and improved regional integration and diversified trade partnerships within the region.

Private consumption and investment, which grew by 3.3 per cent and 1.6 per cent during the year, down from 3.4 per cent and 1.8 per cent respectively in 2013, remained the key drivers of gross domestic product (GDP) growth. Growth in private consumption was underpinned by increased consumer confidence and an expanding middle class. Investment was driven mainly by an improved business environment, and increased government spending on infrastructure was also an important driver of GDP growth in 2014.

Although crude oil prices continued to fall between June and December, the impact on Africa's growth was marginal. In fact, the low prices helped the continent's GDP to grow by an extra 0.03 per cent, owing to the positive impact on oil-importing countries and the marginal negative impact on oil-exporting countries. Deteriorating oil prices were the key driver of fiscal deficit increases among oil-exporting countries, in addition to fuel subsidies and infrastructure spending in many countries. Nonetheless, African oil-exporting countries (except for Libya) grew faster than other African countries in 2014, with growth of 4.7 per cent, up from 4.4 per cent in 2013.

The region's average fiscal deficit widened from 3.6 per cent of GDP in 2013 to 4.6 per cent in 2014. The continent, however, continued to attract more and more private capital owing to an improved business environment resulting, inter alia, from regulatory improvements, such as those observed in Mauritius and Rwanda. Foreign direct investment (FDI) was the second largest source of external private equity inflows and increased from $57.2 billion in 2013 to $61.1 billion in 2014, while portfolio flows decreased from $31.6 billion in 2013 to $24.1 billion in 2014. Overseas development assistance received by Africa accounted for 3.7 per cent of the continent's GDP.

At the subregional level, Central and Southern Africa's growth was expected to continue; strengthened regional integration continued to boost GDP growth in East Africa; North Africa's growth (excluding Libya) fell slightly, from 2.8 per cent in 2013 to 2.7 per cent in 2014; and West Africa grew by 5.9 per cent in 2014, up one percentage point from 2013, despite the impact of the Ebola outbreak on the GDP of Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

In March, the 2014 edition of the ECA annual flagship report, the Economic Report on Africa on the theme "Dynamic Industrial Policy in Africa" was launched at different venues, both within and outside Africa.

On 17 November (decision 2014/255), the Economic and Social Council took note of document titled "Overview of economic and social conditions in Africa, 2013–2014" [YUN 2013, p. 946].

Activities

In 2014, the ECA programme of work was organized under ten subprogrammes: macroeconomic policy; regional integration and trade; innovations, technologies and management of Africa's natural resources; statistics; capacity development; technical cooperation; gender and women in development; subregional activities for development; development planning and administration; and social development [E/ECA/COE/34/11]. Other activities included the review of the key issues and outcomes of the meetings of ECA subsidiary bodies. A review of the Commission's intergovernmental machinery, undertaken in 2013 as part of the institutional reforms, resulted in the elimination of overlapping bodies. Accordingly, in 2014, the intergovernmental machinery focused on overall development issues at the subregional and regional levels, as well as several expert-level subsidiary bodies. It consisted of the following organs: the Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development, which provided the necessary legislative mandate and policy guidance to the Commission; its Committee of Experts, providing technical support to the Conference; and the Bureau of the Commission, including a representative from each of the five subregions. Five intergovernmental committees of experts oversaw the overall formulation and implementation of the programme of work and priorities of their respective offices and made recommendations on economic and social development, and the promotion and strengthening of subregional economic cooperation and integration. Four organs under the Commission had functional and sectoral responsibilities: the Committee on Gender and Social Development, the Committee on Sustainable Development, the Committee on Regional Cooperation and Integration, and the Committee on Statistics.

Macroeconomic policy

The subprogramme on macroeconomic policy aimed to promote policies, strategies and programmes for sustainable growth and development and to contribute to economic transformation in Africa, while helping to mitigate any possible adverse effects of policies.

In 2014, the subprogramme released a report on the macroeconomic framework for the structural transformation of African economies, which reviewed existing frameworks and proposed a new one.

Throughout the year, the subprogramme worked in partnership with AUC on the production and dissemination of the African common position on the post-2015 development agenda, the translation of the related documents into goals and targets, and the development of an advocacy strategy. Most elements of the African common position were reflected in the proposal submitted by the Open Working Group of the General Assembly on Sustainable Development Goals.

In April, ECA contributed extensively to the Pan-African Conference on Inequalities in the Context of Structural Transformation, held in Accra, Ghana. The conference culminated in a draft policy statement calling upon all governments and stakeholders to make the reduction of inequalities in Africa a priority in their current and forthcoming development agendas.

In May, a collaborative effort with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs resulted in ECA hosting a regional outreach meeting for the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing. The Committee was formed after the 2012 United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780] and was mandated by the General Assembly to produce a report proposing options for an effective financing strategy in achieving sustainable development objectives.

In June, the African Governance Report III on the theme “Elections and the management of diversity in Africa” was launched, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); and in July, ECA convened an expert group meeting in Addis Ababa to explore the theme and methodology of the African Governance Report IV.

In August, ECA, in collaboration with the AUC, the African Development Bank and the UNDP Regional Bureau for Africa, conducted a regional consultative meeting on the post-2015 accountability framework, which brought together officials of the High-level Panel on the Post-2015 Development Agenda, civil society, governments and the private sector in the region. The outcome document outlined key elements of an accountability framework for the post-2015 development agenda from an African perspective.

In October, the ninth African Development Forum was held in Morocco under the theme “Innovative sources of financing Africa’s transformation”, on issues relating to domestic resource mobilization, illicit financial flows, private equity, and new forms of partnership, which resulted in the Marrakech Consensus outlining key commitments towards innovative financing for Africa’s transformation.

From 1 to 3 November, ECA hosted the ninth annual African Economic Conference, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Also in November, the MDG Report 2014: Assessing Progress in Africa toward the Millennium Development Goals was launched in Addis Ababa. It assessed performance by African countries, both individually and as a region, in the pursuit of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and included a discussion of the initial development conditions in Africa at the time of the adoption of the Goals.

At the end of the year, the prototype of an Africa-oriented economic forecasting model was developed and was expected to be finalized and launched in 2015.

Regional integration and trade

The regional integration and trade subprogramme prioritized support for Africa’s efforts to establish a continental free trade area and a common market by 2017. It also provided policy-oriented research on the linkages between investment policy and the principal driving forces of regional integration, namely, land, agriculture, food security, energy, infrastructure, trade and industrialization.

In 2014, ECA provided evidence-based policy support to countries to enhance their capacity to mobilize resources for development and improve private sector competitiveness. The Commission assessed investment needs and opportunities, with attention to the needs of regional projects; the promotion of agricultural and rural development, food security and land management; and the growth of agribusiness and value chains in Africa. It also provided evidence-based analysis of the extent to which Africa’s export expansion had been accompanied by a diversification of its trade.

Progress was made in furthering the initiative on boosting intra-African trade and promoting a continental free trade area among Member States and regional economic communities. The initiative was formulated in response to a directive from the AU Assembly at its twenty-third ordinary session, held in June, that requested the AUC, ECA, the African Development Bank and other relevant agencies to take appropriate measures for the effective implementation of the road map on the continental free trade area.

In March, ECA and AUC presented a proposed methodology for an African regional integration index to the ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development, and the AU Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance at their seventh joint annual meetings. Both bodies passed resolutions supporting the index. The project was then merged with a similar initiative by the African Development Bank and ECA. The Bank and AUC finalized a joint methodology and road map to implement the project. ECA contributed to the development of metadata and questionnaires for the indicators and presented a first progress report on the index to the Committee of Directors General of African National Statistics Offices and the Statistical Commission for Africa at their first joint session, held in Tunis, Tunisia, in December.

During the year, the ECA Observatory on Regional Integration in Africa became fully operational and was regularly updated, so that it could serve as a repository of real-time data on country profiles, treaties and other sources of information. The Commission provided capacity-building support to the African group of negotiators in Geneva in the run-up to the ninth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization (WTO), which resulted in the consolidation of the African group position on the WTO post-Bali work programme.

ECA also undertook a major review of bilateral investment policies and the bilateral investment treaties in 36 African countries to explore the prospects for regional integration in Africa and its implications, with the objective of assessing the prevalence, scope and application of such policies and treaties in Africa and their contribution to investment, and to come up with appropriate policy recommendations.

In 2014, ECA provided training to Member States on emerging trends in international agricultural markets and the strategic interests of African countries, thus helping them to promote regional integration and the establishment of the continental free trade area.

In April, ECA provided services for the third session of the AU Conference of African Ministers of Transport, held in Malabo, Equatorial Guinea. The Conference adopted the Road Safety Charter for Africa and the African regional review on the status of implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action [YUN 2003, p. 875]. In addition, ECA organized a regional seminar on promoting renewable energy and energy efficiency, which focused on investment and financing challenges. During the year, ECA initiated the Regional Forum on the Implementation of Cross-Border Transport Infrastructure Projects in Africa as a platform for the monitoring and evaluation of infrastructure projects. The first meeting of the Forum was convened in July.

In May, the AU-ECA Joint Conference of Ministers of Agriculture, Rural Development, Fisheries and Aquaculture made commitments to adopt and implement the seven goals of the programme for Africa's accelerated agricultural growth and transformation by 2015 and, in that context, the subprogramme led the work of drafting the report on the state of food and nutrition security in Africa.

In the area of land management in Africa, six regional economic communities and two Member States, with the ECA support, developed workplans for the implementation of the AU Declaration on Land Issues and Challenges in Africa. In June, ECA submitted its implementation status report on the Declaration, along with a proposed monitoring and evaluation mechanism and a capacity development framework.

Innovations, technologies and management of Africa's natural resources

The focus of the subprogramme was to promote the adoption and implementation of initiatives in the areas of natural resources management, climate change and new technologies, in order to promote economic and social transformation in Africa.

During the year, 15 capacity-building initiatives were adopted by the ECA Member States, regional economic communities and AUC, including the development of an e-government indicator manual and the e-government strategy in Guinea; the development of continental guidelines on open government and related data in Africa; and the formulation of implementation plans for an information and communications technology policy in Cameroon, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Ghana and Morocco.

In 2014, ECA contributed to the annual African meeting on innovation, science and technology—IST-Africa 2014—held in Mauritius in May; to the annual conference on technologically enhanced education and training in Africa—e-Learning Africa—held in Kampala, Uganda, also in May; and to the high-level meeting for a ten-year review of progress on the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society organized by the International Telecommunication Union in Geneva in June.

In partnership with Nigeria, ECA organized the third meeting of the African Internet Governance Forum, held in Abuja in July, and participated in the ninth annual meeting of the global Internet Governance Forum, held in Istanbul, Turkey, in September.

In 2014, ECA engaged with students and researchers in designing and marketing technological innovations for improved health care in Ethiopia, Kenya, Malawi, Uganda and Zambia.

The African Green Economy Partnership, adopted at the fourteenth African Ministerial Conference on the Environment in 2012, had demonstrated the strong commitment of African leaders towards the green economy. Accordingly, the subprogramme continued to encourage African experts and policymakers to identify the necessary measures for an inclusive green economy in Africa, and conducted case studies on green economy in Burkina Faso, Ethiopia, Gabon, Mozambique and Tunisia.

ECA assisted Lesotho, Mozambique, Tanzania, Ghana and Guinea in implementing and designing their country mining visions. During the year, the ECA-assisted African Minerals Development Centre launched the Africa Mining Vision Day to build on the outcomes of the third session of the AU Conference of Ministers Responsible for Mineral Resources Development. The Centre also launched a project to review tax design and management in four mineral-exporting African countries, namely, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, South Africa, Tanzania and Zambia; and initiated a study on gender and mining, to review existing policy, legal and regulatory frameworks in the mining sector and proposed recommendations that integrated gender parity in mining policies.

In 2014, ECA launched initiatives on the building of climate resilience in 27 Member States, and increased its support for climate change adaptation efforts to small island developing States such as Cabo Verde, the Comoros, Guinea-Bissau, Mauritius, Sao Tome and Principe and Seychelles. Activities implemented included research and capacity development in identifying sustainable development choices, in line with the recommendations set out in the Barbados Programme of Action for Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783] and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 2005, p. 946].

The subprogramme also led the preparations for Africa's participation in the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, in September, and for the ECA participation in the Climate Summit, convened by the UN Secretary-General in New York later that same month. At both summit meetings, specific side events were organized to ensure that Africa's perspectives were given due consideration.

The high point of the work of the African Climate Policy Centre in 2014 was the organization, in October, of the fourth annual Conference on Climate Change and Development in Africa, held in Marrakech, Morocco, and attended by more than 400 participants who agreed that the subprogramme would serve as the secretariat for the Climate Research for Development platform.

Under the auspices of the Climate for Development in Africa programme—a joint initiative of ECA, AUC and the African Development Bank—an Africa Day event was organized in Lima, Peru, during the twentieth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Conference on Climate Change, with the theme “Africa in the post-2015 new climate agreement”.

Statistics

The objective of the ECA work under the statistics subprogramme, managed by the Commission's African Centre for Statistics, was to improve national statistical data and information for informed policymaking and economic management. In 2014, the subprogramme worked to enhance the capacity of Member States to produce and disseminate high quality statistics.

During the year, ECA and the African Development Bank conducted evaluations of Member States' first-generation national strategies while promoting the development of second-generation strategies. The Comoros, Djibouti, Nigeria and Togo made progress in developing legal frameworks and establishing autonomous statistical agencies.

In January, the African project on the implementation of the 2008 System of National Accounts was officially launched by the African Group on National Accounts under the auspices of the Statistical Commission for Africa. The project dealt with the challenges that African countries faced in producing timely and good quality national accounts and economic statistics. ECA hosted the secretariat of the project and oversaw coordination, monitoring, evaluation and reporting.

During the year, ECA led the training component for improving agricultural and rural statistics. In January, the Commission organized a course for human resource managers from agricultural statistics offices to equip them with the necessary skills to design human resource policies in support of agricultural statistics. In all, 45 human resource officers from 23 countries participated. Another course for agricultural statisticians was held in August.

The African Centre for Statistics continued to provide leadership in the implementation of the Africa Programme on Accelerated Improvement of Civil Registration and Vital Statistics. In February, the ninth session of the African Symposium on Statistical Development was held in Gaborone, Botswana, and focused on promoting the use of civil registration and vital statistics in support of good governance in Africa. In April, a global meeting on civil registration and vital statistics was held in Addis Ababa. The meeting was co-hosted by ECA, the World Health Organization and the World Bank to discuss strengthening the civil registration and vital statistics system. A draft investment plan developed by the World Bank for scaling up the civil registration and vital statistics was also discussed.

In March, the 2014 edition of the African Statistical Yearbook, jointly produced by ECA, the African Development Bank and AUC, was submitted for review by representatives of 34 countries at an expert group meeting.

ECA designed and circulated posters, communiqués and materials for African Statistics Day, which was widely celebrated on 18 November by the majority of African countries on the theme “Open data for accountability and inclusiveness”.

In December, the fourth meeting of the Statistical Commission for Africa was held in Tunis, at which the Commission reviewed progress in the development of statistical systems, and identified statistical development issues requiring attention, including the data revolution in Africa and its implications for the post-2015 development agenda; the meeting was preceded by the sixth meeting of the Forum for African Statistical Development, whose theme was “Fostering coordination, collaboration and partnerships in support of statistical development in Africa”.

Along with other entities, ECA played a major role in encouraging African countries to undertake national censuses. During the year, the Commission, along with the African Development Bank, completed an assessment report of the 2010 round of censuses in Africa and presented it to the United Nations Statistical Commission and to the Statistical Commission for Africa in December. In addition to highlighting the unprecedented achievement by the continent, with 47 countries conducting at least one population and housing census in the 2010 round, the assessment report also drew attention to the use of technology and improved processing and dissemination of data and put forward key recommendations for the 2020 census round. Additionally, two technical manuals were produced in 2014: a handbook on the supply and use of tables and a guidebook on use of administrative data in national accounts.

During the year, ECA continued to improve the availability and use of geospatial information. The African Geodetic Reference Frame was designed to unify the many geodetic reference frames of Africa, taking data from a network of permanent global navigation satellite systems stations. The Commission finalized the logistical details for the roll-out of nearly 90 donated reference stations and agreed to install the stations in a number of countries all over the continent. In December, ECA, AUC and the international steering committee for the African Geodetic Reference Frame organized an expert meeting in Tunis in preparation for the United Nations Initiative on Global Geospatial Information Management for Africa.

The African Centre for Statistics also convened the inaugural meeting of the United Nations Initiative on Global Geospatial Information Management for Africa. A transitional bureau was elected and four working groups established, with ECA serving as secretariat. Further, in 2014, the United Nations Statistics Division and the United Nations Cartographic Section revitalized the Second Level Administrative Boundaries dataset project. In that context, the Commission concluded a memorandum of understanding with Ethiopia on the sharing of the datasets.

Capacity development

The aim of the capacity development subprogramme was to strengthen the capacity of Member States, pan-African institutions, regional economic communities and other intergovernmental organizations to formulate, implement and monitor evidence-based policies in support of Africa’s development. The responsibility for implementing the subprogramme lay with the Capacity Development Division, which worked to strengthen the governance structure of the AU and its organs and to deepen regional integration within the context of AU Agenda 2063—agreed upon by the African leaders in 2013 through the Solemn Declaration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Organization of African Unity [YUN 2013, p. 896].

In 2014, ECA provided technical support to the AU and NEPAD related to Agenda 2063, including through research, advisory services, workshops and seminars, and supported the process of aligning existing national development plans with Agenda 2063.

ECA was also responsible for coordinating the work of UN agencies working in Africa, through the regional coordination mechanism for Africa (RCM-Africa). In 2014, UN entities continued to improve the alignment of their programmes with those of AUC, the NEPAD Agency and the regional economic communities. At the fifteenth session of RCM-Africa (Abuja, 28–30 March), participants agreed to develop linkages between RCM-Africa, the subregional coordination mechanism, the Regional Directors Team of the United Nations Development Group and the UN country teams, in order to strengthen coherence and coordination.

In collaboration with the NEPAD Agency, UNDP and the AU, ECA supported the capacity-development mapping and scoping exercise carried out by the regional economic communities. In January, the AU Assembly, at its twenty-second ordinary session, endorsed the scoping report.

The year also saw the alignment of RCM-Africa clusters with the AU strategic plan for 2014–2017 and Agenda 2063, with two major achievements: a study on the feasibility of a self-financing mechanism for regional integration in the Arab Maghreb Union, and a regional food security programme in East Africa covering six pilot countries and mainstreaming intelligent transport systems. Furthermore, throughout the year, RCM-Africa continued to implement demand-driven business plans focusing on key cluster activities. Subregional coordination mechanisms became operational in all ECA five subregions—Central Africa, East Africa, North Africa, Southern Africa and West Africa—with the mechanism for North Africa officially established in June.

In 2014, the Commission provided support to the secretariat of the NEPAD African Peer Review Mechanism [YUN 2003, p. 938] process for the harmonization of the national plans of action of Lesotho and Zambia; and assisted with concluding a memorandum of understanding between Senegal and the African Peer Review Panel, a road map for Senegal and a national action plan.

Following the outbreak of Ebola in West Africa (see p. 1355), ECA undertook a study on the economic and social impact of the Ebola outbreak in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, which provided an important African analysis of the impact of the virus. The report was launched in December in Niamey, Niger.

ECA also provided support for the development of sustainable tourism plans for Ethiopia, Kenya and Rwanda; in that context, a regional sustainable tourism plan was developed for the Intergovernmental Authority on Development. In addition, ECA worked to determine the root causes of conflict in the Great Lakes Region, the Sahel and the Horn of Africa and the related development consequences.

Technical cooperation

Through technical cooperation, ECA translated its research work into operational activities for development. Funding for the ECA technical cooperation activities came from the United Nations Regular Programme of Technical Cooperation, the United Nations Development Account and extrabudgetary resources negotiated with bilateral and multilateral donors.

In 2014, Regular Programme funds provided technical assistance to four Member States and two regional economic communities to strengthen national development plans and design infrastructure policy frameworks.

As a capacity development programme of the UN Secretariat, the Development Account aimed at enhancing the capacities of developing countries in the priority areas of the Organization's development agenda. Funded from the Secretariat regular budget and implemented by 10 entities of the Secretariat, Development Account projects at ECA served to link the normative and analytical work of the Commission to its operational activities. During the year, ECA developed four new Development Account projects in the areas of statistics and data; development planning processes; strengthening African development planners' capacities for integrating the post-2015 development agenda into national development plans; and strengthening the monitoring of social protection in Member States.

Gender and women in development

Under the gender and women development subprogramme, ECA aimed to promote gender equality and women's empowerment in the context of international and regional commitments.

During the year, one of the ECA goals was to ensure that women participated in and benefited equally from Africa's structural transformation. In March, the continent-wide initiative for gender equality and women's empowerment, developed by the ECA African Centre for Gender, was endorsed at the seventh Joint Annual Meetings of the Conference of Ministers, and informed the Commission's 2014–2015 work programme on gender.

ECA Member States and regional economic communities reported a remarkable progress in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. Against a target of 15 Member States, 52 countries reported on the progress made in implementing those instruments in their 20-year review of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. The Commission's summary report highlighted notable successes regarding the increased capabilities of women in social sectors, particularly primary education and health. The report was presented and endorsed at the ninth Regional Conference on Women, held in Addis Ababa in November. The outcome declaration of the Conference was a milestone in bringing Africa's priorities into the global 20-year review of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and in positioning gender equality and women's empowerment at the centre of the post-2015 development agenda.

In 2014, ECA increased the number of Member States and regional economic communities that made use of the knowledge generated through the African Gender and Development Index, gender statistics, gender-aware macroeconomic modelling, the African Women's Rights Observatory and the e-network for national gender machineries. The Commission Member States participated in two e-discussions held to address the eradication of female genital mutilation: the African regional conference on the 20-year review of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, which took place in Addis Ababa in November; and the continent's preparations for the fifty-ninth session of the Commission on the Status of Women to be held in early 2015. A fact sheet entitled "Ban female genital mutilation worldwide" was produced by the subprogramme, along with a web-based information map on female genital mutilation.

Considering women's pivotal role in agriculture, the 2014 edition of the African Women's Report highlighted that tackling gender inequality was a cost-effective way of transforming the continent's agricultural sector, looking at six selected countries: Cameroon, Ethiopia, Mali, Morocco, Uganda and Zimbabwe. The Commission's Compendium on Good Practices and Initiatives on Economic Empowerment of Women in Artisanal and Small-Scale Mining in Africa and the Report on Gender and Mining in Africa provided a better understanding of gender-responsive mining policies and practices. Following an expert review meeting in August, ECA also published a report on women in informal cross-border trade in Africa.

ECA also organized a hands-on capacity-building exercise on the integration of gender into socioeconomic policies and public finance for African middle- and senior-level policymakers. Internally, the subprogramme finalized the development of the Commission's own in-house gender mainstreaming programme.

Subregional activities for development

In 2014, the ECA subregional offices (Central Africa, Eastern Africa, North Africa, Southern Africa and West Africa) continued to assist Member States, regional economic communities and other subregional intergovernmental organizations in strengthening their capacity to formulate and harmonize evidence-based policies and plans in support of economic and social transformation and regional integration at the subregional level through research and analytical work, expert meetings and forums, and advisory services.

A priority for the subregional offices was the preparation of country profiles, which provided data, institutional and policy information, forecasts, indicators, policy and risk analysis, and recommendations on key social and economic variables. The profiles would provide policy analysis and forecasts from an African perspective to clients ranging from Member States to academics, policymakers, civil society representatives, analysts and investors from within and outside Africa.

Development planning and administration

The main objective of the development planning and administration subprogramme, managed by the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning, was to improve public sector management in respect of economic policy planning and analysis, and development planning by African Governments and other associated development actors.

During the year, a total of 25 training courses, attended by 521 officials from 25 Member States, were organized by the Institute for the benefit of African countries on approaches for better integrating long-term development concerns and economic policy formulation. Further, experts, public officials, leaders and representatives of the private sector and civil society from 33 African countries participated in the Institute's six high-level workshops on the African economic management and development. The Institute also carried out advisory missions to support policy reform efforts in Cameroon, Morocco, Nigeria and Rwanda, and one to the NEPAD secretariat in Johannesburg, South Africa.

The Institute published eight discussion papers as part of a special "Africa at 50" series, produced three episodes of a documentary series on development planning and developed new partnerships with several African institutions, including the Macroeconomic and Financial Management Institute of East and Southern Africa, the Institute of National Planning of Egypt, the Pan-African Parliament, and the Bamanga Tukur African Institute for International Trade and Development.

Social development

The aim of the social development subprogramme was to formulate appropriate social development policies that promoted inclusive growth, specifically in the areas of employment and social protection, young people and population, urbanization and women's empowerment. In 2014, the subprogramme focused on the transformational role that social development policy could play in support of the structural transformation of African economies. It also sought to leverage the synergy with the ECA divisions for macroeconomic policy, statistics and capacity-building, which resulted in a more integrated approach to social development policy research in Africa.

The creation of the African Social Development Index was a direct response to ECA Member States' desire to assess the impact of exclusion on social development in Africa. The Index went through a validation process and was piloted in five Member States. Awareness-raising of the Index was done in collaboration with the subregional offices in Marrakech during the ninth African Development Forum, and in Lusaka, Zambia, and in Yaoundé, Cameroon.

The Social Development Policy Division conducted a study of health insurance in Rwanda and Ghana, which appeared in the African Social Development Report 2013–2014, and was intended to contribute to the critical issue of health financing in Member States. Further, in 2014, the subprogramme participated in an interregional Development Account project to promote inclusive and sustainable youth policies, with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), and the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

Programme and organizational questions

Strategic framework for 2016–2017

In March, the Conference of Ministers had before it the ECA proposed strategic framework for the 2016–2017 biennium [E/ECA/COE/33/12], which featured fewer subprogrammes than in the past as a result of the ECA restructuring. While many of the priorities underpinning the biennial programme plan for 2016–2017 reflected continuity in the direction of the work carried out by ECA in the 2014–2015 biennium, a number of enhancements and refinements were made to the programme for 2016–2017 to address important emerging issues in support of Africa's transformation. A key new feature of the strategic framework was the implementation of the priorities of the African Union's Agenda 2063 and the United Nations development agenda beyond 2015.

The Conference of Ministers endorsed the proposed strategic framework and the ECA biennial programme plan for 2016–2017 in a resolution [E/ECA/CM/47/8 (res. 918(XLVII))] adopted at the seventh joint annual meetings of the ECA Conference of African Ministers of Finance, Planning and Economic Development and the African Union Conference of Ministers of Economy and Finance (Abuja, Nigeria, 29–30 March).

Construction of office facilities

Report of Secretary-General. In August, pursuant to section I of General Assembly resolution 63/263 [YUN 2008, p. 1546], the Secretary-General provided an update [A/69/359] on the completion of the construction of additional office facilities at ECA headquarters in Addis Ababa and the full occupancy of the premises. It also presented the cost plan for finishing the remaining ancillary projects and closing out in mid-2015. The Secretary-General requested an additional appropriation of $2,695,900 for the biennium 2014–2015 for an initial dedicated project management team and for consultancy services related to the proposed renovation of the Africa Hall Building. In addition, the Secretary-General proposed the establishment of an additional 18 security officer posts, effective 1 January 2015.

ACABQ Report. In October [A/69/415], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to ensure that the remaining ancillary work was fully completed within the planned time frame—by June 2015—and avoid any further delay or cost escalation; the General Assembly approve 14 of the 18 additional security officer posts proposed to provide for safety and security for the new ECA office facilities; and the General Assembly approve the establishment of a multi-year special account for the duration of the Africa Hall renovation project.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held its seventieth session [E/2014/39] in Bangkok, Thailand, in two phases under the theme “Regional connectivity for shared prosperity”. Phase one was held on 23 May and phase two was held from 4 to 8 August.

The Commission discussed Asia-Pacific least developed, landlocked developing and Pacific Island developing countries [E/ESCAP/70/1–3, E/ESCAP/70/4 & Corr.1 & E/ESCAP/70/30 & Corr.1]; issues and challenges to inclusive and sustainable development [E/ESCAP/70/5 & Corr.1, 2]; progress in the implementation of Commission resolutions [E/ESCAP/70/6]; regional economic cooperation and integration [E/ESCAP/70/7]; poverty through alleviation through sustainable agriculture [E/ESCAP/70/8]; trade and investment [E/ESCAP/70/9]; transfer of technology [E/ESCAP/70/10]; sustainable agricultural mechanization [E/ESCAP/70/11 & Rev.1]; transport [E/ESCAP/70/12]; environment and development [E/ESCAP/70/13]; disaster risk reduction [E/ESCAP/70/14]; information and communications technology [E/ESCAP/70/15]; population and disabilities [E/ESCAP/70/16–17]; statistics [E/ESCAP/70/18]; special programme for Central Asian economies [E/ESCAP/70/19]; report of the Asian and Pacific Energy Forum [E/ESCAP/70/28]; and cross-border paperless trade [E/ESCAP/70/31].

The Committee also discussed management issues [E/ESCAP/70/20, E/ESCAP/70/22 & Rev.1], including programme changes for the biennium 2014–2015 [E/ESCAP/70/21 & Add.1], the programme performance for the biennium 2012–2013 [E/ESCAP/70/29] and the proposed strategic framework for the period 2016–2017 [A/69/6 (Prog.16)]; the establishment of the Asian and Pacific centre for the development of disaster information management [E/ESCAP/70/23]; the activities of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission between May 2013 and March 2014 [E/ESCAP/70/24]; details of the seventy-first session of the Commission (2015) [E/ESCAP/70/25 & Rev.1]; the theme of the seventieth session of the Commission (2014) [E/ESCAP/70/27]; and policy issues [E/ESCAP/70/26 & E/ESCAP/70/33].

In 2014, the Commission adopted 14 resolutions and 28 decisions. The Commission endorsed “Balancing the three dimensions of sustainable development: from integration to implementation” as the theme for its seventy-first session.

Economic trends

The summary [E/2015/18] of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2015 [Sales No. E.15.II.F.7] examined the economic growth performance and challenges in the region and stated that while growth had been more inclusive at the country level, large divergences of inclusiveness existed within countries between sexes and across the rural and urban sectors.

Real incomes per capita in developing economies of the region had doubled on average since the early 1990s. In Bhutan, Cambodia and Viet Nam, real income per capita had tripled, while in China it had grown more than sevenfold since 1990. Such impressive performances had lifted millions of people out of extreme poverty and had enabled the region as a whole to meet—ahead of the 2015 deadline—the first target of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs): reducing by half the proportion of people whose income was less than $1.25 a day.

Economic growth, however, was not as high as it had been in the past. The growth potential of the region's developing economies was being held back by infrastructure shortages and the excessive commodity-dependence of some economies. The fragile global economic recovery was an additional constraint. There was also concern that economic growth had not benefitted all equally. Income inequalities were large and widening in many countries, and if not addressed, intergenerational inequities had the potential to be perpetuated.

In view of those challenges, a number of policy considerations emerged. One was the need to establish an enabling policy and institutional environment to support the flow of innovative and equitable finance for implementing the sustainable development agenda. A second consideration was the need for well-thought-out macroprudential measures to manage capital volatility, thus supporting economic stability and providing a resilient platform for inclusive growth. The imperative for commodity-dependent economies to diversify their economies into other sectors was the third area that was investigated. Fourth, some innovative actions could be taken by economies in the region to better address climate change, particularly topical in preparation for the 2015 United Nations Conference on Climate Change.

Making economic growth more inclusive required strengthening the developmental role of the State. While Governments should create an enabling environment for the private sector to act as the main engine of growth, more efforts were needed to ensure equality of opportunities. There was a need for countries to ensure more equal access to education and health care, provide stronger social-safety nets, broaden access to financial services, particularly in rural sectors, and give greater attention to fostering employment, particularly through the development of small- and medium-sized enterprises and of rural industrialization.

Policy issues

The obstacles to higher growth in Asia and the Pacific were partly related to slow economic growth and policies in the developed world, but also to long-term structural domestic impediments, highlighting the need for countercyclical government macroeconomic policies that could support growth in the short term while helping remove structural impediments in the long term. Some possible supportive measures were: increasing spending on social protection, which would help support growth and reduce inequality; addressing the significant infrastructure shortage across the region; increasing spending to address environmental factors, which would otherwise hamper growth prospects; investing in youth by improving education systems; and mitigating the volatility of capital flows.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific, 2014 [E/2014/18] [YUN 2013, p. 954] on 17 November (decision 2014/255).

Activities

Least developed, landlocked developing and small island developing countries

At its seventieth session, the Commission had before it a note by the ESCAP secretariat [E/ESCAP/70/1] summarizing the preparations for the Third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, which was scheduled to be held in Apia, Samoa, from 1 to 4 September. The theme of the Conference was “The sustainable development of small island developing States through genuine and durable partnerships”. Priorities for Pacific small island developing States in the lead-up to the Conference included economic management, climate change, sustainable energy, oceans and seas, health and non-communicable diseases, social development, including gender equality, and governance.

Since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 546], small island developing States were considered a special case due to the inherent challenges they faced in pursuing development and reducing poverty such as remoteness from major markets and population centres, limited resource and export base, exposure to external economic shocks and vulnerability to climate change. In the Pacific region only, there were 20 small island developing States out of a total of 51.

The first international conference on the sustainable development of small island developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783] resulted in the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (known as the “Barbados Programme of Action”) [ibid.]. In 2005, a second international conference [YUN 2005, p. 946] was held, which adopted the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [ibid.]. The Third International Conference (the Samoa Conference) (see p. 1134) in September 2014 was called for at the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780] to assess the progress in the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy, seek a renewed political commitment by all countries to address the special needs of small island developing States, and identify challenges and priorities.

A preparatory process was established by the General Assembly, which involved meetings in each of the three regions of small island developing States—the Pacific, the Caribbean and the AIMS region (Atlantic, Indian Ocean, Mediterranean and South China Seas) and an interregional meeting, organized with the assistance from the United Nations system. The interregional meeting was held in Barbados in August 2013 and its outcome document formed the basis for the draft outcome document of the Samoa Conference, which was initially negotiated at the first preparatory meeting in New York in February 2014 by all United Nations Member States. The preparatory process for the Samoa Conference outcome document also contributed to the development of priorities of small island developing States for the development agenda beyond 2015.

In another note [E/ESCAP/70/2], the ESCAP secretariat provided an overview of and recommendations on how Pacific small island developing States could conserve, sustainably manage and realize the benefits of fisheries in support of sustainable development.

The Commission also considered a review [E/ESCAP/70/3], provided by the ESCAP secretariat, of the progress made by the Asia-Pacific least developed countries in implementing the Programme of Action for the Decade 2011–2020 (also known as the Istanbul Programme of Action) [YUN 2011, p. 828] since the sixty-ninth session of the Commission [YUN 2013, p. 954]. The review showed that while some countries had made considerable progress, especially in enhancing transport connectivity both domestically and with neighbouring countries, much remained to be done. The document also contained a description of some of the challenges those countries faced, as well as a summary of activities undertaken by the ESCAP secretariat to assist them. At its seventieth session, the Commission requested the Executive Secretary to organize the Asia-Pacific regional high-level policy dialogue on the Istanbul Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020 [YUN 2011, p. 828] in early 2015 [E/2014/39 (res. 70/3)].

The Commission also had before it a summary of the status of the implementation of the Vientiane Consensus in the Asia-Pacific region [E/ESCAP/70/4 & Corr.1], providing an update on the topic since the Commission's sixty-ninth session. In March 2013, the Asian European Final Regional Review of the Almaty Programme of Action for assisting landlocked developing countries was held in Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic. The outcome document of that meeting, the Vientiane Consensus, had identified priorities of the global review of the Almaty Programme of Action [YUN 2003, p. 875]. The trade structure of most of those landlocked developing countries was characterized by export baskets highly dominated by primary commodities—and those countries had become more exposed to commodity related risks, compared with a decade ago, making their economies more vulnerable to declines in world commodity prices. Their import baskets, on the other hand, were dominated by manufactured goods, indicating the need for creating a diversified manufacturing base, an area in which regional cooperation in trade and foreign direct investment could play a critical role. Under various kinds of arrangements, landlocked developing countries had made considerable progress in improving transport connectivity with neighbouring countries, as well as in enhancing domestic transport connectivity by improving and upgrading their transport networks. A number of projects had been planned or implemented involving the Asian Highway and Trans-Asian Railway routes and other routes of international importance, including in Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Bhutan, Kazakhstan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nepal, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan.

Progress had been also made by the landlocked developing countries in trade facilitation. For example, the time required to process exports in the Lao People's Democratic Republic was reduced from 66 days in 2006 to 26 days in 2012. Azerbaijan and Kyrgyzstan experienced also the highest reduction in the number of documents required to process imports, which, for both, was down to 10 documents in 2012 from 18 documents in 2006.

The Committee also considered a secretariat note on the perspectives of Asia-Pacific least developed, landlocked developing and Pacific island developing countries in the context of the development agenda beyond 2015 [E/ESCAP/70/30 & Corr.1]. As the year 2015 approached, evaluations were being made to assess how countries were performing in achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Although many countries in the Asia-Pacific region had made significant progress in achieving MDGs, the region's least developed, landlocked developing and Pacific island developing countries had continued to face formidable challenges in realizing them. For example, while Goal 1 indicators on eradicating extreme hunger and poverty had, on the whole, been satisfactory, the indicator on the prevalence of underweight children showed that most of the least developed, landlocked developing and Pacific island developing countries were off track. The least developed countries as a whole were not making good progress in ensuring universal enrolment in primary education or its completion by those who did enroll. Further, the region was falling behind as regards improving child and maternal health, with primary health-care infrastructure still unable to meet needs. As far as environment-related targets were concerned, the trend in the Asia-Pacific region reflected success as regards most indicators, except in providing greater access to improved sanitation. Also, in several least developed, landlocked developing and Pacific island developing countries, forest cover was being depleted rather than conserved; considering the challenges that those countries were facing, it was critical to provide them with a new strengthened development agenda, with the support from international and regional partners.

Issues pertinent to the subsidiary structure of the Commission

At its seventieth session, the Committee had before it a secretariat note providing an overview of the issues and challenges related to inclusive and sustainable economic and social development in Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/70/5 & Corr.1, 2]. Those issues were addressed under eight headings: macro-economic policy and inclusive development, including the activities of the Centre for the Alleviation of Poverty through Sustainable Agriculture; trade and investment, including the activities of the Centre for Sustainable Agricultural Mechanization and the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology; transport; environment and development; information and communications technology and disaster risk reduction, including the activities of the Asian and Pacific Training Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development; social development; statistics, including the activities of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific; and subregional activities for development.

The Commission also considered a note by the secretariat containing a summary of progress in implementation of Commission resolutions [E/ESCAP/70/6].

Macroeconomic policy, poverty reduction and inclusive development

While Asia and the Pacific continued to lead global economic growth, the region's performance had been buffeted by weak demand and volatility in the financial markets. Regional and domestic demand, which earlier helped offset a decline in exports to advanced economies, lost some of its momentum in 2012 and 2013, owing to a transition to lower growth in regional powerhouses, such as China, and softer demand in countries where government and household debt had increased. In India and Indonesia, monetary tightening, aimed at curbing inflation and stopping currency depreciation, also held back growth. Moreover, the region remained home to more than 700 million people living on less than $1.25 a day and some one billion workers in poorly paid jobs with low security. The gap between the rich and the poor widened, limiting further gains in poverty reduction and social development and undermining the foundations for future growth. Infrastructure shortages were severe, contributing to inflationary pressures as supply failed to keep pace with demand.

In the light of that, ESCAP had recommended a wide range of policy options which fell under the umbrella of "forward-looking macroeconomic policies", which included management of short-term capital and a monetary framework. On the fiscal front, countries were encouraged to look beyond deficit and debt and focus more on composition and quality of public expenditures, committing more to social investments important for long-term growth.

There was ample evidence that agriculture could drive inclusive growth and poverty reduction, particularly in the poorest countries. The agriculture sector, however, needed a major transformation in order to be able to provide adequate nutritious food, income and decent jobs to a growing population, while also addressing environmental challenges and sustaining progress towards eradicating poverty. Central to that transformation was a systemic shift to more sustainable food systems. In that context, the Commission adopted a resolution [E/2014/39 (res. 70/4)] on promoting sustainable agricultural development in Asia and the Pacific through technology transfer.

The Commission considered the report of the Ministerial Conference on Regional Economic Cooperation and Integration in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, 17–18 December 2013) [E/ESCAP/70/7]. The Conference adopted the Bangkok Declaration on Regional Economic Cooperation and Integration in Asia and the Pacific, in which members and associate members resolved to work together to pursue enhanced regional economic cooperation in four areas: creating an integrated market; developing seamless connectivity; enhancing financial cooperation; and increasing economic and technical cooperation to address shared vulnerability and risks.

The Commission had also before it the report of the Governing Council of the Centre for the Alleviation of Poverty through Sustainable Agriculture (CAPSA) on its tenth session (Bangkok, 13 December 2013) [E/ESCAP/70/8]. During the meeting, the Council reviewed the activities of CAPSA in 2013, including progress in implementing the Network for Knowledge Transfer on Sustainable Agricultural Technologies and Improved Market Linkages in South and Southeast Asia (SATNET Asia), and the administrative and financial status of CAPSA in 2013.

The Governing Council was informed that SATNET Asia, which aimed at strengthening South-South dialogue and intraregional learning on sustainable agricultural technologies and trade, had entered its second year of implementation. CAPSA facilitated training for approximately 500 participants. Through knowledge-sharing events, SATNET Asia was building capacity among researchers and extension workers to better transfer knowledge on sustainable agricultural technologies and trade to farmers. The Governing Council endorsed the proposed financial plan and the workplan of CAPSA for 2014 and recommended that CAPSA continue its work in policy advocacy and networking in sustainable agriculture, data collection, storage and analysis.

The Commission endorsed the Bangkok Declaration on Regional Economic Cooperation and Integration in Asia and the Pacific [E/2014/39 (res. 70/1)].

Trade and investment

The Asia-Pacific Trade and Investment Report, 2013 had introduced a new concept called “inclusive trade and investment”, whose central message to policymakers was that trade and investment would continue to play an essential role in reducing poverty and triggering growth, while stressing the need for complementary policies that spread the benefits of trade-led growth more fairly. In particular, more attention should be given to the impact of trade and investment policies on, among other things, productivity, access to employment and wages at the formulation stage. Business was assuming an ever-increasing role in addressing inclusive and sustainable growth. Many businesses in the region, however, had yet to adopt sustainable business practices along accepted international standards. The transfer and effective development and utilization of clean and green technologies played a central role in the development of innovation-based competitiveness, while ensuring inclusive and sustainable growth. In that regard, there was a need to strengthen innovation management and technology transfer capabilities of Member States.

The Commission had before it the report of the Committee on Trade and Investment on its third session [E/ESCAP/70/9]; the report of the Governing Council of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology on its ninth session [E/ESCAP/70/10]; the report of the Governing Council of the Centre for Sustainable Agricultural Mechanization on its ninth session [E/ESCAP/70/11 & Rev.1]; and the report of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on a Regional Arrangement for the Facilitation of Cross-border Paperless Trade [E/ESCAP/70/31].

The Committee on Trade and Investment recommended that those organizations providing technical assistance activities in the Asia-Pacific region in the area of trade and investment coordinate their activities with the ECLAC secretariat in order to use resources efficiently, maximize synergies and avoid duplication.

The Governing Council of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology endorsed the proposed programme of work of the Centre for 2014 and advised the Centre to raise its profile among government ministries and institutions in the Asia-Pacific region by highlighting the important role it played. Particular focus should be placed on countries that had not engaged in any recent activities with the Centre. Taking note of the administrative, financial and human resources of the Centre, the Governing Council reiterated that there was a need for member countries to enhance their annual contribution of $30,000 for developing countries and $7,000 for least developed countries.

The Governing Council of the Centre for Sustainable Agricultural Mechanization reviewed reports of the Centre covering its work in 2013 and its administrative and financial status. It endorsed the five roles of the Centre identified in 2013 as a result of a strategic repositioning—to serve as a regional forum for policy dialogues; a data and information hub; a reference point for standards and protocols; a centre for capacity-building; and a platform to facilitate interregional agribusiness development and trade and adopted the terms of reference of the Asia-Pacific Network for the Testing of Agricultural Machinery.

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on a Regional Arrangement for the Facilitation of Cross-border Paperless Trade (Bangkok, 22–24 April), reviewed and revised the draft agreement/framework arrangement on facilitating cross-border paperless trade. It also requested ESCAP to endorse the establishment of an interim intergovernmental steering group on cross-border paperless facilitation, which would be tasked, inter alia, with further improving the draft text of the regional arrangement as a potential intergovernmental agreement; and preparing a draft road map for the implementation of substantive provisions in the draft text.

In that context, ECLAC adopted two resolutions: one on strengthening regional cooperation and capacity for enhanced trade and investment in support of sustainable development [E/2014/39 (res. 70/5)]; and one on the implementation of the decision of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on a Regional Arrangement for the Facilitation of Cross-border Paperless Trade [res. 70/6].

Transport

Transport-led regional connectivity played a key role in regional and subregional integration, economic and trade cooperation. To promote regional connectivity, high-quality, reliable and integrated transport infrastructure and services that supported sustainable and inclusive development were required. The Asia-Pacific region had a high negative growth effect from lost productivity resulting from urban congestion, as well as from the pollution-related health costs and the direct and indirect costs of road crashes. With those issues in mind, the Commission considered the report of the Forum of Asian Ministers of Transport at its second session [E/ESCAP/70/12] held in Bangkok in November 2013 and adopted the Ministerial Declaration on Transport as a Key to Sustainable Development and Regional Integration. The Declaration served as a broad framework for the future direction of the ESCAP secretariat's work in collaboration with member countries and institutional partners to put in place policies aimed at developing efficient transport. That work would include continued implementation of the Regional Action Programme for Transport Development in Asia and the Pacific, phase II (2012–2016) and the promotion of three intergovernmental agreements, namely, the Intergovernmental Agreement on Dry Ports [YUN 2013, p. 957], which was opened for signature at the Forum and was signed by 14 countries and ratified by Thailand; the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Trans-Asian Railway Network [YUN 2006, p. 1161]; and the Intergovernmental Agreement on the Asian Highway Network [YUN 2003, p. 1010].

The Commission adopted two resolutions on transport. One endorsed the Suva Declaration on Improving Maritime Transport and Related Services in the Pacific [E/2014/39 (res. 70/7)], which had been adopted at the High-level Meeting on Strengthening Inter-island Shipping and Logistics in the Pacific Island Countries (Suva, Fiji, 23–25 July 2013); and the other [res. 70/8], endorsed the Ministerial Declaration on Transport as a Key to Sustainable Development and Regional Integration adopted at the Forum of Asian Ministers of Transport (Bangkok, 4–8 November 2013).

Environment and development

While economic growth had supported significant development gains, the hidden costs—social, environmental and economic—of the resource-intensive economic growth had resulted in rapidly declining natural capital, climate-related impacts and alarming trends related to energy security, water resource management and urbanization. Short-term growth strategies aimed at maximizing gross domestic product growth had created a “vicious cycle”—growth driven by the exploitation of human and natural capital. Achieving sustainable development depended on shifting to a “virtuous cycle” of investment in people and the planet, where economic growth was a means of achieving shared prosperity and human well-being, rather than a goal in itself. ESCAP had strengthened the capacity of the region to deal with the challenge of sustainable development by extending support to Member States, while its secretariat continued to work with national entities to deliver capacity and policy development.

Emerging economies accounted for more than 90 per cent of global net energy demand growth, with most of it coming from the Asia-Pacific region. Meanwhile, as at 2010, some 628 million people in the region were without access to electricity and 1.8 billion people were using traditional biomass. Between 1990 and 2010, an estimated 1.5 billion people in the region gained access to improved water sources; significant disparities, however, continued to exist between the proportion of the population with access to improved water sources in rural areas as compared to urban areas due to the high rates of economic development and urbanization.

The Commission had before it the report of the Committee on Environment and Development on its third session (Bangkok, 29–31 October 2013) [E/ESCAP/70/13]. The Committee reviewed emerging and persistent issues, including the environmental sustainability of economic growth, energy security, water resources management and sustainable urban development. The Committee also reviewed the progress made in implementing the outcomes of the sixth Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2010, p. 976], together with preparations for the seventh Ministerial Conference and for the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development, which were to be held in 2015 and 2016, respectively.

The Committee made a number of recommendations, including recognizing that ESCAP was an appropriate platform for facilitating dialogue among Member States on regional implementation of the agenda for sustainable development, and linking the regional perspective to the ongoing global processes on the follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the development agenda beyond 2015.

The Commission also considered the report of the Asian and Pacific Energy Forum (Vladivostok, Russian Federation, 27–30 May 2013) [E/ESCAP/70/28], which noted the progress achieved in the Asia-Pacific region in addressing the energy security challenges at the regional, national and household levels, and reviewed opportunities for regional cooperation to promote enhanced energy security and the sustainable use of energy. The Forum adopted the Ministerial Declaration on Regional Cooperation for Enhanced Energy Security and the Sustainable Use of Energy in Asia and the Pacific: Shaping the Future of Sustainable Energy in Asia and the Pacific; and its Plan of Action, 2014–2018. The Forum recommended to the Commission the endorsement of its outcomes and invited the Executive Secretary to review periodically the progress of implementation of the Plan of Action and to take the necessary decisions in that regard. The Commission endorsed the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the Forum [E/2014/39 (res. 70/9)]; recognized the adoption of the Bangkok Declaration of the Asia-Pacific region on the United Nations Development Agenda beyond 2015 [E/2014/39 (res. 70/10)]; welcomed the inaugural session of the Asia-Pacific Forum on Sustainable Development, held in Thailand in May [res. 70/11]; and encouraged the strengthening efforts on human settlements and sustainable urban development for the Asia-Pacific region [res. 70/12].

Information and communications technology

Despite the innovative digital opportunities unleashed by broadband Internet and other information and communications technologies (ICTs), the Asia and the Pacific region remained the most digitally divided region in the world. For example, in the Republic of Korea, 99.6 per cent of young people had been active on the Internet for at least five years while, in Timor-Leste, that figure was less than 1 per cent.

A key barrier to the universal uptake of broadband Internet in Asia and the Pacific was the high cost of international bandwidth, attributed to weaknesses in the overall ICT infrastructure in the region, including reliance on sea-based optical fiber, fragmented land-based ICT infrastructure and a lack of sufficient cross-border connectivity. Most of the region's broadband connectivity had been developed in a hub-and-spoke configuration around technologically advanced countries, while the role of point-to-point connectivity utilizing land-based infrastructure remained limited. As a result, competition among suppliers was weak and bandwidth in the region was still significantly more expensive than in Europe and North America. In the light of those challenges, the ESCAP secretariat developed, in partnership with the International Telecommunication Union, the first regional map of Internet backbone networks in Asia and the Pacific. The map provided detailed route information for all the major fiber-optic networks in the region and was digitally superimposed onto the Asian Highway and Asian Trans-Railway maps. In addition, the map showed areas where key ICT infrastructure might be missing, as well as opportunities for synchronized planning and deployment of ICT and transport infrastructure, thus furnishing a crucial tool for policymakers. The ESCAP secretariat also carried out detailed broadband infrastructure studies and stakeholder consultations in South-East Asia and Central Asia, and planned to conduct similar activities in South Asia and in East Asia.

The Commission also considered the report of the Governing Council of the Asian and Pacific Training Centre for Information and Communication Technology for Development (APCICT) on its eighth session (Incheon, Republic of Korea, 12 December 2013) [E/ESCAP/70/15]. The Governing Council recognized the wide range of programmes and services the Centre had developed to address the capacity-building needs in the region and noted the increasing demand for the APCICT programmes not only in Asia and the Pacific, but also from around the world.

The Governing Council endorsed the APCICT work plan for 2014 and recommended that APCICT expand its programmes to address the needs of vulnerable groups. It requested the Centre to continue its analytical review of ICT for development indicators and to develop a comprehensive media strategy to enhance the visibility of the Centre. The Governing Council called upon Member States to contribute to APCICT, including in-kind, in order to support its operations.

Disaster risk reduction

Regarding ICT and disaster risk reduction, the Asia and the Pacific continued to be the region most affected by frequent, intense and increasingly unpredictable disasters. It was, therefore, critical to take full advantage of progress in science and technology—areas in which the region excelled. While space and geographic information system (GIS) applications had proven effective in monitoring, providing early warning and facilitating emergency response during disasters and had become more affordable, the spread of such technologies had been uneven, not fully benefitting the region's most vulnerable. In many developing countries, those technologies continued to be underutilized due to lack of human, scientific and technological capacity, as well as of institutional resources and expertise. Since the sixty-ninth session [YUN 2013, p. 954] of the Commission, its secretariat had provided a series of training on the effective use of GIS applications for disaster risk reduction and sustainable development, which had benefited approximately 400 policymakers and practitioners from almost 30 developing countries in the region. In the area of ICT for disaster risk management, the secretariat strengthened its partnership with the regional institutions. An online knowledge platform provided a range of interactive tools, including an inventory of vulnerability and risk assessments, geo-referenced data and images from disaster-affected areas, and a comprehensive database of programmes and policies that enabled planning authorities to mainstream disaster risk management principles, concepts and practices into development processes.

The Commission had before it the report of the Committee on Disaster Risk Reduction on its third session (Bangkok, 27–29 November 2013) [E/ESCAP/70/14]. The Committee emphasized that building resilience to natural disasters was one of the most pressing contemporary challenges facing Asia and the Pacific and underscored the importance of mainstreaming disaster risk reduction and climate change adaptation into planning and finance ministries. It also emphasized the importance of space and GIS applications in disaster risk reduction and disaster response. The Committee recommended action by ESCAP in several matters, including requesting the secretariat: to prepare a regional strategy for mainstreaming disaster risk reduction into development plans; to work towards monitoring the resilience of Member States to disasters through the development, inter alia, of a core set of disaster-related statistics; to strengthen regional support to assist Member States in using space-based information for supporting disaster risk reduction, impact assessment and reconstruction, and drought monitoring and early warning; and to continue to provide near real-time satellite data and imagery to the Member States affected by severe disasters. The Committee also called on Member States to consider contributing financial support to the ESCAP Multi-Donor Trust Fund for Tsunami, Disaster and Climate Preparedness in Indian Ocean and Southeast Asian Countries.

The Commission decided to establish an expert group comprising statisticians and disaster risk reduction experts [E/2014/39 (res. 70/2)]. It also took note of the outcome of the Asia-Pacific Meeting on Disability-inclusive Disaster Risk Reduction: Changing Mindsets through Knowledge (Sendai, Japan, 22–23 April), which was organized by ESCAP [res. 70/13].

Social development

The year 2015 would mark the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action by the Fourth World Conference on Women. As mandated in Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/18 [YUN 2013, p. 1129], the international community was to undertake a global review of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, including challenges that affected the Platform's implementation, as well as opportunities for strengthening gender equality and the empowerment of women in the post-2015 development agenda. In line with that mandate, ESCAP and the other four regional commissions initiated the regional review process.

The Committee considered the report of the sixth Asian and Pacific Population Conference (Bangkok, 16–20 September 2013) [E/ESCAP/70/16], held in cooperation with the United Nations Population Fund. The Conference aimed, inter alia, at reviewing population and development trends in the Asia and the Pacific region and adopted the Asian and Pacific Ministerial Declaration on Population and Development.

The Committee had before it also the road map for the Implementation of the Incheon Strategy to “Make the Right Real” for Persons with Disabilities in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 2013, p. 959] [E/ESCAP/70/17]. The road map identified action at the regional, sub-regional and national levels, as well as the respective key actors; and proposed a time frame covering the period from 2013 to 2017. The initial draft road map was submitted for review to the Working Group on the Asian and Pacific Decade of Persons with Disabilities, 2013–2022, which was established by the Commission in 2013. The first session of the Working Group was held in Incheon, Republic of Korea, on 25 and 26 February 2014.

In the context of social development, the Commission adopted a resolution on enhancing participation of youth in sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific [E/2014/39 (res. 70/14)].

Statistics

With regard to statistics, some highlights during 2014 were the Ministerial Conference on Civil Registration and Vital Statistics in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, 24–28 November), and the fourth session of the ESCAP Committee of Statistics (Bangkok, 16–18 December). In recognition of the importance of statistics training for achieving its goals, the Committee on Statistics decided to establish a body, the Network, to oversee the coordination of statistical training in the region, with the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific serving as its secretariat. The overall role of the Network was to support the development programmes pursued by the Committee by facilitating information-sharing and promoting coordination among national, regional and international statistical training providers and donor agencies. The Network would build on existing partnerships, and work with agricultural training and research institutes participating in the Asia-Pacific Regional Action Plan to implement the Global Strategy to Improve Agricultural and Rural Statistics.

The ESCAP secretariat also assisted Member States in meeting the need for more comprehensive and gender-sensitive statistics on women and men, initially through the development of a core set of gender statistics and indicators for the region. The first round of consultations on the preliminary draft set was conducted at a regional workshop held in Bangkok in November 2013.

The Commission also decided to establish an expert group comprising statisticians and disaster risk reduction experts [E/2014/39 (res. 70/2)], which were to report to the Committee on Statistics in 2014 and to the Committee on Disaster Risk Reduction in 2015.

At its seventieth session, the Commission had before it the report of the Governing Council of the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific on its ninth session [E/ESCAP/70/18], at which the Council commended the Institute for attaining the key results set out in its programme of work for the period 1 October 2012 to 30 September 2013. Through 17 courses/workshops, 440 government statisticians and officials of planning, health, agriculture and labour ministries of 44 countries and their respective institutions improved the quality of statistical outputs and increased their use for planning, policy formulation and the monitoring of development goals.

The Governing Council also expressed appreciation for the successful deployment of more e-learning courses and the Institute's use of blended learning in some trainings. It recommended that the Institute accelerate further the delivery of online training and continue to work on creating a collaborative open online course platform for developing and delivering online statistical training.

Noting the expected increased demand for statistics in monitoring the development agenda beyond 2015, the Council advised the Institute to consider expanding its training activities to cover new topics related to, among other things, governance, big data and sustainable development.

Subregional activities for development

The four ESCAP subregional offices (Pacific, East and North-East Asia, North and Central Asia, and South and South-West Asia) continued to assist Member States in several areas including strengthening and measuring regional integration, improving environmental sustainability, addressing socioeconomic disparities within national borders and promoting disaster resilient societies.

The Commission had before it the report of the Governing Council of the Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia (SPECA) on its eighth session [E/ESCAP/70/19], at which the Council expressed support for the inclusion of the development priorities of the SPECA countries—Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan—into the development agenda beyond 2015; and approved the Joint Statement of the 2013 SPECA Economic Forum (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 19–21 November 2013). The Council also adopted SPECA workplan for 2014–2015 and called upon relevant UN agencies and programmes, as well as the donor community, to actively participate in the implementation and financing of projects contained therein.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission had before it the programme changes for the biennium 2014–2015 [E/ESCAP/70/21 & Add.1], the programme performance for the biennium 2012–2013 [E/ESCAP/70/29]; and the proposed strategic framework for the period 2016–2017 [A/69/6 (Prog. 16)].

The programme changes for the biennium 2014–2015 were designed to address new mandates adopted after the Commission's endorsement of the programme of work for 2014–2015, and had no additional regular programme budget implications.

The programme performance for the biennium 2012–2013 provided an account of the ESCAP performance for the biennium in question as assessed against the expected accomplishments set out in the strategic framework for each subprogramme. The report was central to holding ESCAP accountable to its members and associate members regarding the efficient use of resources and the delivery of mandated results. The report was reviewed by the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission at its 353rd session, which was held on 24 March (see below).

The proposed strategic framework for the period 2016–2017 covered the first biennium of the UN development agenda beyond 2015. Its strategic direction was derived from internationally agreed development mandates, including the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 782], which emphasized the role of the regional commissions in promoting the balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development; General Assembly resolution 67/226 [YUN 2012, p. 859] on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review, which called for the adoption of collaborative approaches to support country-level development initiatives; and Commission resolution 69/1 [YUN 2013, p. 954] on a conference structure of the Commission for the inclusive and sustainable development of Asia and the Pacific.

The strategic framework comprised eight interconnected subprogrammes that reflected the priorities of Member States. It built on the achievements of the previous biennium and reflected the vital role of ESCAP in implementing the development pillar of the United Nations, while focusing on enhanced organizational effectiveness and attainment of measurable results.

Activities of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives

The Commission had before it the report [E/ESCAP/70/24] of the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission on the activities of the Committee between May 2013 to March 2014. Topics discussed included the outcome of the sixty-ninth session [YUN 2013, p. 954] of ESCAP and the relevant resolutions and decisions; the review of the draft strategic framework for the biennium 2016–2017; and the work of the secretariat in the subregions. The Advisory Committee provided important advice and guidance on key issues concerning ESCAP, including the organization of various intergovernmental meetings and initiatives; and highlighted the need for stronger measures to ensure fuller implementation of ESCAP resolutions, improved coordination among all relevant stakeholders and progress on the economic and social agenda of the Commission, in accordance with the development priorities of Member States.

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) region included 56 Member States, with very different levels of development and economic situations: the world's advanced economies (Canada and the United States; the eurozone countries; and other advanced European economies), and a number of low- and lower-middle income economies among the European and Central Asian countries with economies in transition (new European Union member States that had not yet joined the eurozone; non-European Union countries in South-Eastern Europe, including Turkey; and countries belonging to the Commonwealth of Independent States and Georgia).

The Economic Commission for Europe did not meet in 2014. Its sixty-sixth session was scheduled for 2015.

Economic trends

A report on the economic situation in the ECE region, including Europe, North America and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) [E/2015/16], indicated that the economic performance in the region improved somewhat in 2014, with gross domestic product (GDP) growth accelerating to 1.8 per cent from 1.2 per cent in 2013. There were, however, marked differences across subregions. The decline in oil prices was supporting the global recovery, including in most countries in the ECE region. For a number of energy-exporting economies in the CIS, however, that development represented a significant shock.

Countries with economies in transition suffered a downturn during the year. In South and Eastern Europe, that development reflected the impact of major natural disasters. In the CIS, the conflict in Ukraine and related geopolitical tensions contributed to a decline in GDP growth from 2.0 to 0.7 per cent. Sanctions against the Russian Federation by the United States and the conflict in Ukraine increased financing costs and undermined confidence. Falling oil prices, however, were the main factor affecting economic performance. Diminished economic prospects in the Russian Federation had a negative impact on other CIS countries through trade, investment and remittances channels. Currencies in the Commonwealth weakened sharply in late 2014 as a result of lower energy prices, capital outflows and the transmission of shocks across the subregion.

In the eurozone, there was a modest return to growth, which posted a 0.8 per cent GDP increase. After years of austerity, fiscal policy was becoming less of a drag on economic activity. Growth rates, however, across the eurozone varied widely, and, despite some progress, financial fragmentation remained.

On 17 November (decision 2014/255), the Economic and Social Council took note of the report on “Economic situation in the Economic Commission for Europe region (Europe, North America and the Commonwealth of Independent States), 2013–2014” [YUN 2013, p. 963].

Activities

Trade

The Committee on Trade at its sixth session (Geneva, 10–12 February) [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/2] featured a high-level segment titled “Increasing the participation of transition economies in international trade”, under which the following topics were discussed: recent achievements in removing regulatory and procedural barriers to trade in the Caucasus and the Balkans [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/3], with country studies focused on Tajikistan [ECE/TRADE/410] and Belarus [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/4]; the review of the 2005 reform of the ECE and General Assembly budget decisions [ECE/TRADE/NONE/2014/3 & Rev.1]; the ECE activities in support of the Aid-for-Trade processes in the countries of the Special Programme for the Economies of Central Asia (SPECA) and other countries with economies in transition [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/6–8]; ECE cooperation with other organizations [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/9 & Corr.1] and the ECE contribution to trade development in transition economies: other programmes [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/10]. Also reviewed were the programmes of work for the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, including the biennial evaluation report for 2012–2013 [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/12], the programme of work 2014–2015 [ECE/TRADE/C/2014/13–15] and the draft strategic framework 2016–2017 [ECE/TRADE/NONE/2014/1]; as well as an overview of the ECE Committee on Trade and the Committee on Economic Cooperation and Integration [ECE/TRADE/NONE/2014/2].

Forestry

The seventy-second session of the Committee on Forests and the Forest Industry (Kazan, Russian Federation, 8–21 November) [ECE/TIM/2014/2] focused on the implementation of the Rovaniemi Action Plan for the Forest Sector in a Green Economy [YUN 2013, p. 963] [ECE/TIM/2014/4] and showcased how actors within and outside the forest sector had contributed to the emerging green economy in the region [ECE/TIM/2014/5]. The Committee also discussed the “Forests for Fashion” event [ECE/TIM/2014/6], which took place on 21 March—the International Day of Forests—and analysed the challenges and possibilities of sustainable wood-based fibres; a study on forest ownership in the ECE region [ECE/TIM/2014/7], as well as a questionnaire on the same topic [ECE/TIM/2014/INF.4]; the role of forests in the post-2015 agenda [ECE/TIM/2014/8]; the review of the Committee’s 2014 activities and planned activities for 2015 [ECE/TIM/2014/9], and the biennial evaluation report for 2012–2013 of the Forestry and Timber Subprogramme [ECE/TIM/2014/10]; the implementation of the United Nations Development Account (UNDA) projects [ECE/TIM/2014/11]; the draft rules of procedure of the Committee [ECE/TIM/2014/12]; the report of the joint thirty-sixth session of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/ECE Working Party on Forest Statistics, Economics and Management (Geneva, 17–18 June) [ECE/TIM/EFC/WP.2/2014/2]; the outcome of the first meeting of the FAO/ECE Team of Specialists on Forest Policy (Krakow, Poland, 16–18 September) [ECE/TIM/2014/INF.1]; the global and regional reporting on forests and sustainable forest management by the ECE/FAO Forestry and Timber Section [ECE/TIM/2014/INF.2]; the region's contribution to the eleventh session of the United Nations Forum on Forests [ECE/TIM/2014/INF.3]; draft policy issues for the following round of outlook studies [ECE/TIM/2014/INF.5]; and the implementation of the ECE/FAO Regional Forum on Cross-boundary Fire Management, which had taken place in Geneva in November 2013 [ECE/TIM/2014/INF.6].

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee (ITC), at its seventy-sixth session (Geneva, 25–27 February) [ECE/TRANS/240 & Corr.1] considered, among other topics, a draft programme of its policy segment on innovations for sustainable inland transport and mobility [ECE/TRANS/2014/1]; sustainable urban transport and mobility in the ECE region [ECE/TRANS/2014/2]; sustainable transport in the post-2015 sustainable development agenda [ECE/TRANS/2014/3]; myths and realities of air pollutants emitted by diesel engine exhausts [ECE/TRANS/2014/4]; progress of the For Future Inland Transport Systems (ForFITS) global project [ECE/TRANS/2014/5]; climate change impacts and adaptation for international transport networks [ECE/TRANS/2014/6]; activities promoting innovative transport technologies and status of implementation of the Intelligent Transport Services Road Map [ECE/TRANS/2014/7], launched at the seventy-fourth session of the Inland Transport Committee [YUN 2012, p. 975]; implementation of the project on customs-to-customs electronic document exchange [ECE/TRANS/2014/8]; strengthening the transport capacity of countries of Eastern and South-Eastern Europe, South Caucasus and Central Asia, in particular landlocked countries [ECE/TRANS/2014/9]; the 10-year comprehensive review of the Almaty Programme of Action [ECE/TRANS/2014/10]; progress report on phase III (2013–2017) of the Euro-Asian Transport Links project [ECE/TRANS/2014/11]; the ECE road safety [ECE/TRANS/2014/13] and road transport activities [ECE/TRANS/2014/14]; proposal made by the Russian Federation on the development of a new convention on the facilitation of crossing of frontiers for passengers and baggage carried by rail [ECE/TRANS/2014/15]; a unified railway law [ECE/TRANS/2014/16]; International Maritime Organization (IMO)/International Labour Organization (ILO)/ECE Code of Practice for Packing of Cargo Transport Units (CTU Code) [ECE/TRANS/2014/17]; border-crossing facilitation and relevant legal instruments [ECE/TRANS/2014/18]; TIR Convention crisis in the Russian Federation (pertaining to the Customs Convention on the International Transport of Goods under Cover of TIR Carnets) [ECE/TRANS/2014/19]; activities by the Committee's subsidiary bodies in 2013 [ECE/TRANS/2014/20], as well as results of the meetings of the Committee's Bureau in 2013 [ECE/TRANS/2014/21].

The Committee also approved the programme performance assessment for 2012–2013 (biennial evaluation) of the Transport subprogramme [ECE/TRANS/2014/22 & Corr.1]; the subprogramme's programme of work for the biennium 2014–2015 [ECE/TRANS/2014/23]; and the subprogramme's biennial evaluation plan (2014–2015) [ECE/TRANS/2014/24]. Furthermore, the Committee endorsed its own draft work plan for the period 2014–2018 [ECE/TRANS/2014/26]; took note of the information about the publication results in the 2012–2013 biennium [ECE/TRANS/2014/27]; adopted its schedule of meetings in 2014 and from January to March 2015 [ECE/TRANS/2014/28]; and was informed about the most important legislative and policy initiatives in the field of transport undertaken by the European Union in 2013 [ECE/TRANS/2014/29].

Energy

In line with the “Sustainable Energy for All” initiative of the Secretary-General [YUN 2013, p. 982], the Committee on Sustainable Energy focused its twenty-third session (Geneva, 19–21 November) [ECE/ENERGY/96] on energy for sustainable development with a view to providing access to affordable and clean energy to all and helping reduce greenhouse gas emissions and the carbon footprint of the energy sector. The session consisted of a high-level segment, high-level thematic discussions and a general segment.

The theme of high-level segment was “Energy for sustainable development: must reality conflict with ambition?”. The ECE Executive Secretary noted that it would be necessary, by 2030, to ensure universal access to sustainable modern energy services for all; increase the share of renewable energy; double the global rate of improvement in energy efficiency; facilitate access to clean energy research and technologies; and expand infrastructure and upgrade technology for supplying modern and sustainable energy services for all in developing countries.

Following a presentation by the International Energy Agency and the report of the Director of the Sustainable Energy Division on the first session of the Group of Experts on Energy Efficiency (Geneva, 17–18 November), the Committee endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of that meeting, including the workplan of the Group of Experts on Energy Efficiency for 2014–2015.

The Committee then held discussions on the role of fossil fuels in delivering a sustainable energy future [ECE/ENERGY/2014/5/Rev.1 & ECE/ENERGY/2014/6]; ways in which renewable energy could help optimize energy systems [ECE/ENERGY/2014/7]; matters related to the future work of the Committee [ECE/ENERGY/2014/1–4]; and adoption of the report of the Committee's twenty-third session [ECE/ENERGY/2014/96].

Environment

The Committee on Environmental Policy, at its twentieth session (Geneva, 28–31 October) [ECE/CEP/2014/2], discussed the outcomes of the work of its Bureau from November 2013 to June 2014 [ECE/CEP/2014/3]; the opening of the ECE environmental instruments and their promotion beyond the region [ECE/CEP/2014/6]; multilateral environmental agreements: overview of national implementation reporting [ECE/CEP/2014/16]; revised guidelines for developing national strategies to use soil contamination monitoring as an environmental policy tool [ECE/CEP/2014/14]; targets and performance indicators for measuring progress in developing the Shared Environmental Information System (SEIS) [ECE/CEP/2014/8]—a system that would link all the existing data and information flows relevant at the country and international levels in support of the regular environmental assessment process tool; the outcomes of the work of the SEIS Group of Friends from March to July [ECE/CEP/2014/7]; the extension of the mandates of: the Working Group on Environmental Monitoring and Assessment [ECE/CEP/2014/11], the Joint Task Force on Environmental Indicators [ECE/CEP/2014/12] and the Expert Group on Environmental Performance Reviews [ECE/CEP/2014/13]; lessons learned from the Environment for Europe mid-term review of the Astana Conference main outcomes [ECE/CEP/2014/10]; the ECE/United Nations Environment Programme report on greening the economy in the pan-European region [ECE/CEP/2014/5]; and the proposed framework for preparing the eighth Environment for Europe Ministerial Conference in 2016 [ECE/CEP/2014/9].

The Committee also had before it the biennial performance plan of the Environment subprogramme for 2014–2015 [ECE/CEP/2014/4].

Economic cooperation and integration

The eighth session of the Committee on Economic Cooperation and Integration (Geneva, 12–14 February) [ECE/CECI/2014/2] focused on programmes on innovation and public-private partnerships for infrastructure development. The session featured, inter alia, a high-level substantive segment on the emerging landscape for innovation and public-private partnerships financing; a high-level substantive segment on Innovation Performance Review of Armenia; a review of the implementation of the programme of work since its seventh session; and a discussion on the programme of work and draft strategic framework.

The Committee considered, among others, the report on the sixth session of the Team of Specialists on Innovation and Competitiveness Policies (Geneva, 10–11 October) [ECE/CECI/ICP/2013/2]; good practices and policy recommendations on innovation in the public sector [ECE/CECI/2014/3] and on aligning entrepreneurship and innovation policies [ECE/CECI/2014/9]; the report on the fifth session of the Team of Specialists on Public-Private Partnerships [ECE/CECI/PPP/2013/2]; and a report on capacity-building activities [ECE/CECI/2014/4]. In 2014, the work of the Team of Specialists on Intellectual Property was discontinued, as the Team's mandate had expired.

The Committee also considered a draft programme of work of the subprogramme on Economic Cooperation and Integration for 2014–2015 [ECE/CECI/2014/5]; the biennial performance evaluation of the Subprogramme for 2012–2013 [ECE/CECI/2014/6]; the Committee's biennial evaluation plan 2014–2015 [ECE/CECI/2014/7]; the publication plan for 2014–2015 [ECE/CECI/2014/8]; and the draft rules of procedure of the Committee [ECE/CECI/2014/10].

Housing and land

The Committee on Housing and Land Management, at its seventy-fifth session (Geneva, 8–9 October) [ECE/HBP/179], discussed the work of the Bureau of the Committee and the main decisions taken since the Committee's seventy-fourth session [ECE/HBP/2014/1]; the draft Geneva Charter on Sustainable Housing in the ECE region [ECE/HBP/2014/2]; the biennial evaluation report for the period 2012–2013 [ECE/HBP/2014/3]; a proposal for developing a study on standards related to energy efficiency in buildings and disaster risk reduction [ECE/HBP/2014/4]; the draft terms of reference of the Real Estate Market Advisory Group for 2015–2016 [ECE/HBP/2014/5]; a proposal for the development of a policy brief on spatial planning [ECE/HBP/2014/6]; and the Rules of Procedure for the Committee [ECE/HBP/2014/7], which were based on the Guidelines on Procedures and Practices for ECE Bodies.

Statistics

The sixty-second plenary session of the Conference of European Statistics (Paris, 9–11 April) [ECE/CES/87] discussed matters arising from the 2014 session of the United Nations Statistical Commission; the value of official statistics [ECE/CES/2014/20–22, ECE/CES/2014/32, ECE/CES/2014/20/50] and strategies for communicating the value of official statistics [ECE/CES/2014/23–25, ECE/CES/2014/33–35]; measuring recent and changing migration patterns [ECE/CES/2014/26–28, ECE/CES/2014/36–43]; methods to improve the measurement of migration [ECE/CES/2014/29–31, ECE/CES/2014/44–49, 52]; the work of the High-level Group for the Modernization of Statistical Production and Services [ECE/CES/2014/1–3, 51], set up in 2010; indicators of gender equality [ECE/CES/2014/4 & Add.1, 2]; recommendations on climate change-related statistics [ECE/CES/2014/5 & Add.1, 2]; a guide to measuring global production in the national accounts and balance of payments statistics [ECE/CES/2014/6, Add.1–3]; role of official statistics with regard to leading, composite and sentiment indicators [ECE/CES/2014/10 & Add.1, ECE/CES/2014/11 & Add.1]; outcomes of the in-depth reviews (e.g. of big data and entrepreneurship statistics) carried out by the Conference Bureau [ECE/CES/2014/7 & Add.1, ECE/CES/2014/8 & Add.1, ECE/CES/2014/9 & Add.1, ECE/CES/2014/11 & Add.1]; the follow-up to the 2013 Conference seminars on challenges in implementing the System of Environmental-Economic Accounting and measuring sustainable development [ECE/CES/2014/12]; and challenges in providing access to micro-data for research [ECE/CES/2014/13].

The Conference also considered the programme of work of the ECE Statistics subprogramme [ECE/CES/2014/14–17 & ECE/CES/2014/53], as well as topics for the seminars to be held during the 2015 plenary session of the Conference [ECE/CES/2014/18 & Add.1, ECE/CES/2014/19].

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), at its thirty-fifth session (Lima, Peru, 5–9 May) [E/2014/40], considered the document titled “Compacts for Equality: Towards a Sustainable Future” [LC/G.2586(SES.35/3)], which, along with the 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 988] and 2012 [YUN 2012, p. 977] documents, completed the trilogy on the subject of equality. The Commission also held a high-level seminar on the subject with four panels: the regional scenario; production, social and labour gaps; consumption patterns, the environment and natural resources; and compact for equality. A high-level dialogue was also held.

The Commission adopted 16 resolutions, including on the establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 682(XXXV)] (see p. 1147); on the admission of Sint Maarten as an ECLAC associate member [res. 683(XXXV)] (see p. 1153); and on the venue of its thirty-sixth session [res. 689(XXXV)] (ibid.). Resolutions on the following topics were also adopted: ECLAC calendar of conferences for the period 2015–2016 [res. 676(XXXV)]; the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean, to be held in the first half of 2015 [res. 677(XXXV)]; the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean [YUN 2000, p. 951], by which governments were requested to engage with statistical offices and institutes in the preparation of the national reports produced in the follow-up to summits, conferences and internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals [res. 678(XXX)]; the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning, by which the Commission decided to convene the twenty-fourth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning in Guatemala on 19 and 20 June [res. 679(XXXV)]; the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee [res. 680(XXXV)]; the Regional Conference on Population and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean [res. 681(XXXV)]; the ECLAC programme of work and priorities for the 2016–2017 biennium, by which the relevant programme of work was adopted in its totality, including the amendments proposed and the guidance provided by the resolutions adopted at the thirty-fifth session of the Commission [res. 684(XXXV)]; the ECLAC follow-up activities to the Millennium Development Goals and implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields [res. 685(XXXV)]; the application of Principle 10 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean [YUN 2012, p. 809], by which the Commission invited the countries in the region to participate actively in the fourth meeting of the focal points of the signatory countries of the Declaration on the application of Principle 10, held in November at the ECLAC headquarters in Santiago, Chile [res. 686(XXXV)]; the regional dimension of the post-2015 development agenda, by which the Commission’s secretariat was requested to prepare a report identifying areas of convergence between the countries of the region as regards the issues to be covered under the post-2015 development agenda and to submit it to Peru in its capacity as Chair of the thirty-fifth session of the Commission [res. 687(XXXV)]; South-South cooperation, by which the Commission decided to convene the fourth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Committee on South-South Cooperation in Lima during the second half of the year [res. 688(XXXV)]; the Lima Resolution, by which the Commission instructed its secretariat to conduct studies and formulate public policy proposals with a view to building national economic and social development capacities [res. 690(XXXV)]; and the Ministerial Conference on the Information Society in Latin America and the Caribbean, by which the Commission took note of the 2013 Montevideo Declaration from the Fourth Ministerial Conference on the Information Society in Latin America and the Caribbean [YUN 2013, p. 974] and of the Plan of Work 2013–2015 for the implementation of the Plan of Action (eLAC2015), and invited all Member States to attend the preparatory meeting for the fifth Ministerial Conference, to be held in Costa Rica during the year, and the Conference itself, to be held in Mexico in 2015 [res. 691(XXXV)].

Economic trends

According to the report titled “Situation and outlook for Latin America and the Caribbean 2014–2015” [E/2015/19], the region’s economy, in 2014, continued the slowdown that began after the upturn of 2011, in the aftermath of the global financial crisis. At 1.1 per cent, the region's 2014 growth rate represented a virtual standstill in per capita GDP. Falling prices for the region's principal export commodities worsened the terms of trade and kept the account deficit at 2.7 per cent of regional GDP, despite the contraction of imports. Imports showed a differentiated pattern by subregion. In most South American countries, the sharp slowdown in domestic demand led to heavy falls in import volumes (-4.1 per cent). By contrast, import volumes continued to climb in Colombia, Mexico and most of the Central American countries. The overall result was that import values for Latin America as a whole contracted for the first time since 2009, by 1.0 per cent.

The cooling of economic growth at the regional level impacted the labour demand and translated into a weak wage employment creation in many countries, including Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Panama, Paraguay and Peru. The fiscal accounts of Latin America and the Caribbean showed the fiscal balance deteriorating slightly, on average, during the year. The region posted a fiscal deficit since 2009, but that did not push up public debt, which held steady at about 32 per cent of GDP. On the monetary and exchange-rate front, countries in the region adopted a mainly countercyclical approach in 2014, regardless of policy regime. More emphasis was placed on stimulating aggregate demand and setting and monitoring medium-term inflation targets. At the same time, authorities sought to mitigate the effects of external volatility on the region's financial markets by using international reserves and making changes to macroprudential regulations.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the document titled "Latin America and the Caribbean: economic situation and outlook, 2013–2014" [YUN 2013, p. 973] on 17 November (decision 2014/255).

Activities

A later ECLAC report on the Commission's work [LC/G.2664(SES.36/7)] addressed activities undertaken and progress made under its 14 subprogrammes: linkages with the global economy, integration and regional cooperation; production and innovation; macroeconomic policies and growth; financing for development; social development and equality; mainstreaming the gender perspective in regional development; population and development; sustainable development and human settlements; natural resources and infrastructure; planning of public administration; statistics; subregional activities in Central America, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Mexico; subregional activities in the Caribbean; and support for regional and subregional integration and cooperation processes and organizations.

Global economy, integration and regional cooperation

The ECLAC Division of International Trade and Integration focused on trade relations between Latin America and the Caribbean and the rest of the world, particularly Asia-Pacific, Europe and the United States, and intraregional trade. Other topics included global trade negotiations, regional and global supply chains, regional integration, trade facilitation, dispute settlements, international cooperation, the role of small- and medium-sized enterprises in trade, the intersection between trade and climate change and the provision of technical assistance and capacity-building activities.

The 2014 edition of the flagship publication Latin America and the Caribbean in the World Economy [E.14. II.G.5] examined the key features of the international context and their repercussions for world and regional trade; Latin American and Caribbean participation in global value chains; the contribution of regional integration to production integration; and intra- and extraregional trade relations of the countries of the Caribbean Community (CARICOM).

The Division continued to contribute to improving the capacity of Latin American and Caribbean countries to participate effectively in global and regional trade flows and value chains through various activities, including technical assistance, research and capacity-building activities. As part of those efforts, the subprogramme on linkages with the global economy, integration and regional cooperation successfully managed a series of Development Account projects: the project entitled "Towards productivity convergence: trade, financing, and technology for small-scale enterprises", which was implemented in Ecuador, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Peru; the further implementation of the 2012 project entitled "Facilitating the effective integration of developing countries in the global economy through Aid for Trade schemes", within whose framework numerous events were held in 2014, including an interregional forum in Tunis, Tunisia, in April and a regional workshop in Santo Domingo, the Dominican Republic, in September; and the project entitled "Strengthening the national capacities of export sectors in Latin America and the Caribbean to meet the challenges of climate change", which helped countries to identify the main sources of greenhouse gas emissions.

Production and innovation

The ECLAC Division of Production, Productivity and Management continued to work on structural change and industrial policies in Latin America and the Caribbean by focusing its efforts on strengthening the capacity of governments to formulate policies and strategies to transform the production structure in the most innovative sectors. The Division published Foreign Direct Investment in Latin America and the Caribbean [Sales No. E.15.II.G.4], which analysed the causes and consequences of the 16 per cent decline in foreign direct investment that took place in 2014 in the light of slow regional and global growth. Further, as the technical secretariat of the Ministerial Conference on the Information Society in Latin America and the Caribbean, the Division received recognition from several countries for its work in areas such as infrastructure access, information and communications technology and health, information technology industries, open data and education, thus consolidating ECLAC role as a regional focal point in science, innovation and technology. In that regard, at the first session of the Conference on Science, Innovation and Information and Communications Technologies (Santiago, Chile, 9–10 June), established in 2012 [YUN 2012, p. 977], national representatives of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean discussed opportunities for regional cooperation on training and capacity-building in science, technology and innovation; the role of information and communications technologies for the development of science, technology and innovation; and the need for institution-building in that area. At that session, the Santiago Declaration was adopted. In 2014, the Division supported the development of the national digital policy of Uruguay through a comprehensive set of measures and activities, which resulted in the Digital Agenda Uruguay 2011–2015. Other events organized under the subprogramme included seminars and summer schools.

Macroeconomic policies and growth

The Economic Development Division of ECLAC published its flagship Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean [Sales No. E.15.II.G.3], which analyzed, among others, the region's economic performance in 2014, and contained the notes relating to the economic performance of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean during the year. The Division also produced the 2014 Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean [Sales No. E.15.II.G.2], which focused on the economic activities of the region, domestic prices, employment and wages, the external sector and macroeconomic policies, while providing an overview of the international context and an outlook for the following year.

The Division held the twenty-sixth regional seminar on fiscal policy in Santiago, Chile, in January and a workshop on investment, volatility and growth in November, which examined policy options for reactivating investment in the region. The countries of the region were also active in enacting labour market reforms, incorporating components championed by ECLAC. In particular, the Division—through its flagship reports and its longstanding collaboration with ILO—advocated that countries in the region adopt policies to increase the formalization of the labour force and to extend greater protection to workers. In 2014, Argentina and Chile adopted policy measures in line with the ECLAC recommendations. Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Chile also enacted measures in line with the ECLAC recommendations in the area of tax progressivity and the taxation of wealth and capital income. Further, the Division implemented several extrabudgetary projects related to fiscal and labour market policies and managed a Development Account project on the same topic.

Financing for development

One of the aims under the financing for development subprogramme was to improve the capacity of Latin American and Caribbean policymakers to formulate and implement financial policies on generating and allocating domestic resources and mobilizing foreign resources for development. To that end, four workshops were organized during the year. The Economic Development Division continued to participate in the discussions on how to improve the financial architecture at the global and regional levels, and to provide support to ECLAC and the Union of South American Nations (UNASUR) in the areas of countercyclical balance-of-payments liquidity and financial integration. All 33 Member States of the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States (CELAC) reaffirmed the importance of regional financial cooperation and integration in the final declaration—the Havana Declaration—of the Second Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States (Havana, Cuba, 28–29 January), and considered it essential for the stability and predictability of the international financial architecture to ensure that agreements reached between debtors and creditors within the context of sovereign debt restructuring processes were respected. The Division provided technical assistance to the UNASUR Working Group on Financial Integration on the financing of infrastructure. It also organized a regional meeting of the Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Finance at ECLAC headquarters (Santiago, 14 January), which discussed, from a regional perspective, financing for sustainable development in the context of the post-2015 development agenda and the sustainable development goals, and was followed by another meeting in March (Santiago, 14–15 May). A technical workshop on financial cooperation and regional integration was also organized by the Division in June, in conjunction with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. The Division also undertook new research in various areas to support the ECLAC position on topics related to financing for development.

Social development and equality

In 2014, the Social Development Division worked towards achieving social development and equality through approaches based on human rights, while its long-term policies stressed the need to expand contributory and non-contributory social protection and investment, to improve sectoral policies on health and education and to improve labour market conditions and institutions. A milestone for the region was represented by the adoption by ECLAC of resolution 682(XXXV), by which the Commission established the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean and decided to convene the Conference's first session in the second half of 2015.

The Division published the 2014 edition of Social Panorama of Latin America [Sales No. E.15.II.G.6], which presented measurements taken by ECLAC for the analysis of poverty and income distribution. Such measurements confirmed that structural poverty—deprivation reinforced by administrative, economic and social barriers preventing access to new skills, employment opportunities, improved health care and better housing—was still a feature of Latin American society, despite progress over the past decade. To contribute to a more comprehensive design of public policies aimed at overcoming poverty and socioeconomic inequality, the 2014 edition examined trends in social spending and set out a deeper gap analysis focused on three areas: youth and development, gender inequality in the labour market and urban residential segregation. Other initiatives in 2014, included a joint study by ECLAC and the Ibero-American Youth Organization, which concluded that public spending on youth was 50 per cent lower than on other social groups and emphasized the importance of investment in youth as a driver of development; and a collaboration between ECLAC and UNICEF, which led to the English version of the Guide to Estimating Child Poverty.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2014/15/Add.1/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2014/32 without vote [agenda item 13].

Establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the adoption on 9 May 2014 by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean at its thirty-fifth session, held in Lima from 5 to 9 May 2014, of resolution 682(XXXV), entitled “Establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean”,

Endorses the establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, as set out in Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean resolution 682(XXXV) and the annex thereto, which are annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Resolution 682(XXXV)

Establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled “World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world”, held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and other relevant internationally agreed instruments constitute, together with the global dialogue on this issue, the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the development goals contained therein, as well as the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit and at the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, and the outcome document of the 2013 special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Bearing in mind that the year 2015 marks the twentieth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development,

Considering that the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean has been cooperating systematically in the field of social development to facilitate inter-agency coordination among the countries of the region, international organizations and the national agencies charged with carrying out projects to promote social development,

Considering also the key role played by the Commission in the region in recent years in facilitating and encouraging dialogue among representatives of the countries of the region, and thus in promoting the consolidation of institutions devoted to social development and to policies and regulatory frameworks for such activities,

Recognizing the support function performed by the United Nations regional commissions in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development,

Taking into account the need to promote cooperation in the sphere of social development,

Having reviewed the proposal for the establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean and the proposed nature and the objectives of the Conference, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution,

1. Approves the establishment of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the objectives of which are set forth in the annex to the present resolution, as one of the subsidiary bodies of the Commission, bearing in mind the observations and suggestions included in the report of the Commission on its thirty-fifth session, with a view to eradicating poverty in the region and promoting decent work, equality and social inclusion;

2. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Commission to submit such proposals as may be necessary for the establishment of the Conference to the relevant United Nations bodies for their consideration;

3. Decides to convene the first meeting of the Conference during the second half of 2015;

4. Takes note of the fact that the seventh meeting of the Ministerial Forum for Development in Latin America and the Caribbean will be held in Mexico on 30 and 31 October 2014 and will be a discussion platform for promoting inclusive social development in the region;

5. Welcomes the generous offer of the Government of Peru to host the first meeting of the Conference;

6. Invites the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to join this initiative;

7. Requests the Executive Secretary to report on the implementation of the present resolution at the thirty sixth session of the Commission.

Annex to resolution 682(XXXV)

I. Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

Nature

1. The Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean shall be a subsidiary body of the Commission that will contribute to the progress of social development policies and activities in the countries of the region.

Objectives

2. The objectives of the Conference shall be:

(a) To promote the improvement of national policies on social development, bearing in mind national requirements and recommendations made by specialized agencies and other relevant organizations;

(b) To further international, regional and bilateral cooperation among national offices and institutions and international and regional agencies to facilitate technology and knowledge transfer and joint activities in the field of social development;

(c) To examine multidimensional poverty and make progress on the measurement of poverty, inequality and structural gaps, in conjunction with the relevant subsidiary bodies that conduct studies in this field, in particular the Statistical Conference of the Americas of the Commission;

(d) To exchange experiences in relation to social matters and support and provide technical inputs for the summits of Heads of State and Government of the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States and other regional forums;

(e) To contribute from the perspective of the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean to the discussions and proposals considered by the Commission on Sustainable Development.

Membership

3. The States members of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean will be members of the Conference.

Meetings of the Conference

4. The Conference shall hold its regular meetings every two years. The Conference may accept an invitation from the Government of a member State to hold its regular meeting in that country.

Presiding Officers

5. The Conference shall elect Presiding Officers in accordance with the regulations established by the Commission. The Chair of the Presiding Officers shall also preside over the meetings of the Conference.

Secretariat

6. The secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean shall serve as the secretariat for the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean. The secretariat shall make available to the Conference such documents as have been approved by the Commission and the facilities necessary to carry out its work.

II. Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

Nature

7. The Conference shall appoint Presiding Officers to support it, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 above.

Composition

8. The Presiding Officers shall be composed of a Chair and six members. The members shall be elected from among the member countries of the Commission. Special attention shall be devoted to ensuring that the subregional groupings of countries are duly represented among the Presiding Officers.

Election of the Presiding Officers and duration of mandates

9. At the beginning of each meeting of the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, the Chair of the Presiding Officers, in consultation with the Presiding Officers and the Conference, shall draw up a proposal for the election of the next Presiding Officers.

10. The newly elected Presiding Officers shall take up their duties upon the conclusion of the regular meeting of the Conference at which they were elected, and shall remain in office until the conclusion of the next regular meeting.

11. The Presiding Officers, including the Chair, shall be elected by the Conference at its regular meeting for a term of two years.

12. The members of the Presiding Officers may serve for three successive terms. The Chair may not be re-elected to that office for a second consecutive term, but may be elected to serve as one of the Presiding Officers.

13. A Presiding Officer who has served for three successive terms may not be re-elected until two years have elapsed since the end of his or her previous mandate.

Duties

14. The Presiding Officers shall have the following duties:

(a) To carry out the tasks assigned to them by the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean;

(b) To follow up on the implementation of the agreements adopted and the tasks assigned by the Regional Conference on Social Development in Latin America and the Caribbean;

(c) To decide on the documentation required for its meetings.

Meetings

15. The Presiding Officers shall meet at least once during the interval between regular meetings of the Conference. At the meeting preceding the next meeting of the Conference, the Presiding Officers shall adopt a programme of activities for the Conference, which shall be submitted to the Conference at its regular meeting.

16. The Presiding Officers may invite to their meetings any countries or experts they consider may make a contribution to the fulfilment of their duties.

Mainstreaming gender in regional development

The Division for Gender Affairs continued to support the mainstreaming of the gender perspective in the institutional documents and work priorities of ECLAC and contributed to the preparation of the position document for the thirty-fifth session of the Commission, which marked a turning point for the institution by deepening the gender perspective, highlighting the concept of autonomy, emphasizing the employment situation of women and proposing compacts. Further, the Division, through the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean and its Presiding Officers, and the ECLAC Statistical Conference of the Americas, continued to work with the national authorities responsible for women's and gender affairs and national statistical offices. The Division organized the fiftieth meeting (Santiago, 19–20 May) and the fifty-first meeting (Santiago, 17–19 November) of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean. It also continued its capacity-building activities for gender equality and better governance within the framework of the Gender Equality Observatory for Latin America and the Caribbean and, in that context, published the Annual Report 2013–2014: Confronting violence against women in Latin America and the Caribbean [LC/G.2626 & Rev.1]. The report followed up on a previous commitment by the Observatory to analyse violence against women and focused on the situation across the region, progress in meeting international recommendations, national public policies, and constraints and challenges.

Advances in mainstreaming a gender perspective were also achieved through interdivisional collaboration with other ECLAC subprogrammes, country offices and subregional headquarters, building on collaborative efforts in the areas of population and development, planning of public administration, and statistics. Other initiatives included Development Account projects such as the one titled “Strengthening national capacities to design and implement rights-based policies and programmes that address care of dependent populations and women’s economic empowerment in urban areas”, and a collaboration with UNICEF, which resulted in the implementation of a project aimed at studying the situation of the girl child in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Population and development

The Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre (CELADE)-Population Division of ECLAC continued to promote population issues and secure their inclusion in the development policies and programmes of Latin American and Caribbean countries, notably through the implementation of the 2013 Montevideo Consensus on Population and Development [YUN 2013, p. 730]. The Montevideo Consensus was the outcome of the first session of the Regional Conference on Population and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, held in Uruguay in August 2013, and represented a regional milestone in the follow-up to the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development beyond 2014 [YUN 2013, p. 1021]. The CELADE-Population Division of ECLAC continued to strengthen its relationship with the region’s countries by providing technical assistance on population-related subjects, including ageing, the impact of demographic changes on development, indigenous peoples and Afro-descendent populations, internal and international migration, population estimates and projections, and censuses. Efforts focused on increasing the capacity of the region’s countries to include demographic inputs in their economic and social policies, benefiting a total of 45 government institutions. The Division maintained and updated its demographic databases on spatial distribution and urbanization, internal and international migration, and indigenous peoples and Afro-descendants, which were important data sources for countries in the region. The Division also held courses and workshops on topics including indirect methods of estimating fertility and mortality, the production and use of indicators for policies and programmes, care and ageing, migration, adolescent reproduction and development and transfer accounts.

The joint work with the Latin American Population Association on a population estimates and projections network resulted in the publication of Estimaciones y proyecciones de población en América Latina: desafíos de una agenda pendiente, launched as part of the sixth Congress of the Association (Lima, Peru, 12–15 August).

In June, the Second International Forum on the Rights of Older Persons was held in Mexico City to assess the progress of international efforts to increase protection for the human rights of older persons throughout the world, paying particular attention to current and future challenges for Latin America and the Caribbean. A meeting was held in Santiago, Chile, on 24 July to discuss and review substantive issues in preparation of both the first meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on Population and Development and the second session of the Regional Conference on Population and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, to be held in 2015. The Division later organized the first meeting of the Presiding Officers (Santiago, 12–14 November).

Sustainable development and human settlements

The activities of the sustainable development and human settlements subprogramme focused on the interrelationships between economic growth, environmental protection, urban development and social equity, and were implemented by the Sustainable Development and Human Settlements Division.

The Division provided technical support on climate change adaptation, urban development, sectoral impacts of climate change, environmental taxation and the strengthening of technical and institutional capacities. The meetings of the Chief Negotiators on Climate Change in Latin America and the Caribbean provided an opportunity to strengthen capacities and prepare for the twenty-first session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (COP21), to be held in 2015.

Significant progress was made on the regional process related to Principle 10 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development [YUN 2012, p. 809] and on access to information, participation and justice in environmental matters in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Santiago Decision, adopted at the fourth meeting of the focal points appointed by the Governments of the signatory countries of the Declaration on the application of Principle 10, held at ECLAC headquarters in November, represented a milestone and led to the initiation of negotiations on a regional agreement. The Presiding Officers were requested to steer the process, with the support of ECLAC as technical secretariat, with a view to concluding negotiations on a regional instrument by December 2016.

The Division supported the development of national and regional environmental data to promote access to information, encourage public participation in environmental policymaking and, when required, facilitate access to justice in environmental matters. The Division also focused on analysing the impacts of climate change on the coasts of the Latin America and Caribbean region. During the year, the Division worked in close collaboration with the Statistics Division (subprogramme 11) and some national authorities to produce a document on public environmental information, including guidelines for decision makers to account environmental expenditures, entitled El gasto en protección ambiental en América Latina y el Caribe: Bases conceptuales y experiencia regional. In addition, a regional workshop on pollutant release and transfer registers, held in October, helped the countries to build key information on pollution as the core resource for environmental policy implementation. Workshops were also organized at the subnational level in Peru, Mexico and Brazil.

Natural resources and infrastructure

The Natural Resources and Infrastructure Division examined global issues related to sustainable energy, governance of natural resources, infrastructure gaps and the challenge of integrated and sustainable policies for logistics and mobility. Concepts as smart grids, sustainable cities and intelligent transport systems posed challenges related to industrial and technological restructuring, with a focus on increasing use of renewable energy and implementing sound energy efficiency programmes and projects. To that end, the subprogramme generated new methodological proposals and regional initiatives, such as the high-level energy efficiency policy dialogues and the Energy Efficiency Indicators Database, which gathered data for 20 countries of the region.

Several studies, workshops and conferences on the governance of natural resources were undertaken to discuss a new vision to capture revenues from natural resources and to use those rents to bring about a structural change. Further, the Division organized several events relating to trade and sustainable development, which included the sixth international seminar on carbon footprint (Santiago, 11–12 June). While the main target group of the ECLAC activities remained public policymakers from all levels of the executive, legislative and judicial branches, the Commission also worked increasingly with civil society, universities, NGOs, the private sector and international, regional and bilateral organizations.

The Commission's technical assistance to promote integrated and sustainable logistics and mobility policies had a major impact at the legislative level. National capacity-building workshops were carried out in Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama. Further, the technical assistance provided to the Haitian National Commission for the Modernization of Public Transportation enabled government and private sector representatives to consider the linkages between transport and sustainable development and to launch a national dialogue on a sustainable logistics and mobility policy.

During the year, ECLAC, the Inter-American Development Bank and the Development Bank of Latin America signed a memorandum of understanding to work together to improve analysis of infrastructure investment in the region, which resulted in more accurate data on the public and private investment in economic infrastructure in 16 countries and in the establishment of a joint database on infrastructure investment.

Public administration

The activities of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES)—ECLAC public administration division—were shaped around coordination between levels of government, monitoring and evaluating public programmes, open government practices, and foresight studies and building visions for the future. In addition, the Institute's Regional Council for Planning continued to consolidate its role as a regional political forum for national planning authorities to discuss and exchange planning practices.

During the year, ILPES assisted the countries of the region in public and fiscal policies by providing support for the formulation, implementation and evaluation of programmes and policies, and by developing advisory activities and training. To that end, ILPES organized meetings of its Regional Council for Planning and of its Presiding Officers and international meetings of experts; issued publications on public management and territorial development in the region and other studies on specific topics; held training courses and workshops; provided technical cooperation and advisory services; and updated manuals and databases.

E-government and open government issues were incorporated into the ILPES programme of work in order to apply the potential of Information and communications technology (ICT) in public administration. Most countries in the region promoted and developed e-government initiatives aimed at making public services more efficient and increasing levels of transparency and citizen participation in public affairs.

ILPES carried out training and advisory activities in the region on foresight studies, future scenarios and building up long-term development visions. In that context, the Institute organized a seminar entitled "Latin America and the Caribbean in 2030: world visions, continental views", which was held in Santiago in September, and was attended by some 240 participants from 10 countries, including international experts from Latin America and the Caribbean, the United States, Europe and Asia. During the year, the second symposium on economic and social planning was held, following a model that had been launched in 2013. At the symposium, 29 papers were presented on the theme of foresight and long-term planning, eight of which were selected and published as an e-book.

Also in 2014, the Institute issued the latest edition of the Panorama de la Gestión Pública, which highlighted the interconnectedness of public finances, public administration and planning challenges. Furthermore, during the year, ILPES launched an electronic repository to store and analyse development plans from the region, which made available, through a single digital portal, a comprehensive set of national, subnational and sectoral development plans, programmes and agendas, including a summary of the characteristics of each plan and its main strategic objectives.

Statistics

The Statistics Division's flagship publication, the Statistical Yearbook for Latin America and the Caribbean, 2014, presented a set of basic statistics on the economic, sociodemographic and environmental situation of the region as part of the CEPALSTAT—the ECLAC statistical databases and publications portal. At the thirteenth meeting of the Executive Committee of the ECLAC Statistical Conference of the Americas (Santiago, 12–14 August), the Committee reviewed, inter alia, the status of implementation of the biennial programme of regional and international cooperation activities 2014–2015, adopted by the Statistical Conference of the Americas at its seventh meeting [YUN 2013, p. 976], and the agreements adopted at the twelfth meeting of the Executive Committee, both held in 2013.

The Division also worked to increase the Latin American and Caribbean countries' capacity to monitor economic, social and environmental trends and formulate evidence-based policies. Many activities were undertaken by countries, including Uruguay, Ecuador, Panama and Honduras, in compliance with the ECLAC recommendations. Countries also received assistance in monitoring progress towards the Millennium Development Goals and with the regional mechanism for defining indicators for the sustainable development goals. A seminar was held in August on the System of National Accounts 2008 (SNA 2008) to continue helping countries of the region with their implementation of the system. It was attended by professionals from national statistical offices and central banks directly involved in the production of national accounts.

Subregional activities

Central America, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Mexico

In 2014, the subregional headquarters in Mexico—which served the needs of the Central American subregion, together with Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Mexico—continued to focus its efforts on economic and social development, energy, international trade and integration, agricultural development and climate change. Technical assistance on fiscal and monetary policies, national planning systems, and integration was provided to Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and Nicaragua.

International trade and integration remained an important focus area for the subregional headquarters in Mexico. Several meetings were organized during the year, including an experts' meeting in Guatemala in July on a strategy for trade and investments between Guatemala and China. A meeting of experts on coffee and climate change was held in Panama in October to discuss and analyse potential impacts and lines of action to address and mitigate risks. Also in October, the first meeting of the Regional Technical Group of the Joint ECLAC/International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) project on information management for public policies and projects of rural and agricultural development and food security in Central America took place in San José, Costa Rica.

A new framework agreement was established with the Central American Agricultural Council, which involved an initiative to alert decision makers to the risks of climate change and to support ministers of the environment of Central America, who, in their response to the challenge, would need to generate and disseminate solid evidence on vulnerabilities, impacts and policy options and to bring on board key sectors and fiscal authorities. The initiative included the seven Central American countries and the Dominican Republic.

The ECLAC subregional headquarters provided technical assistance to the countries it served, as well as to other stakeholders, to formulate several pieces of legislation. It also organized various workshops on the design and implementation of youth policies to promote the social inclusion of youth. Costa Rica, for example, was provided with technical assistance in the formulation of the Public Policy on Youth 2014–2019.

Among the publications issued during the year with the key contribution of the ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico were Energy Efficiency in Central America: Progress and action towards the fulfillment of the goals of the Central American sustainable energy strategy, in January; Strengthening Value Chains as an Industrial Policy Instrument: Methodology and Experience of ECLAC in Central America, in July; and Structural Change and Growth in Central America and the Dominican Republic: An Overview of Two Decades, 1990–2011, in November.

Caribbean

On 24 April, the International Year of Small Island Developing States (SIDS) was launched in Kingston, Jamaica, with an event highlighting the vulnerabilities of those countries. Several Caribbean-wide activities were organized to engage the countries of the subregion and raise awareness, including a poster competition for primary and secondary schools, and an essay competition for secondary- and tertiary-level students.

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean—based in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago—facilitated regional dialogue, cooperation, and collaboration to address, among others, development issues of the subregion. At the third Caribbean Development Roundtable (Kingston, 23–24 April), development experts examined new approaches to the sustainable development of SIDS in the Caribbean, which resulted in thirty-seven conclusions and recommendations. Further, the twenty-fifth session of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (Kingston, 25 April) was convened at the ministerial level to address key Caribbean priorities ahead of the Third International Conference on Small Island Developing States and the integration of those priorities into the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

In 2014, ECLAC finalized a study assessing the progress made in implementing the Caribbean Forum of African, Caribbean and Pacific States (CARIFORUM)-European Union Economic Partnership Agreement—which had come into force at the end of 2008—and its impact on trade and economic development in the Caribbean, with special attention to the costs and consequences of implementation, and areas for adjustment. The findings of that study contributed to the first comprehensive five-year review of the Agreement.

Several meetings were convened during the year, including the sixth meeting of the Technical Advisory Committee for the Regional Coordinating Mechanism for the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Port of Spain, 15 April), which reviewed the progress made by Caribbean countries in implementing the Strategy; and the Caribbean Technical Meeting on the Beijing+20 Review and Appraisal of the 1995 Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action (Santiago, 14–15 November), at which a Caribbean Statement outlining the ongoing challenges facing the subregion with respect to gender and development was adopted; and an expert group meeting on demand model for maritime passenger transportation in the Caribbean. ECLAC also made contributions to the subregion's understanding of the application of information and communication technology (ICT) to development. In that regard, a study was commissioned, and an expert meeting convened on the possible impact of digital currency, such as Bitcoin, and mobile money in the Caribbean.

Support for regional and subregional integration

The Office of the Secretary of the Commission provided technical and substantive inputs to regional and subregional integration organizations in support of discussions and consensus-building on social, economic and sustainable development issues and facilitated dialogue between the Latin American and Caribbean region and extraregional actors, such as Europe, China and the Republic of Korea. The Office responded to external requests; coordinated the collection and systematization of information, studies and technical reports; made arrangements for technical assistance missions; and generated guidelines for the formulation and implementation of plans and strategies.

Substantive contributions were provided to the second Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States (Havana, Cuba, 28–29 January) in the shape of five documents on public policies for equality, literacy, financial architecture and governance of natural resources and on the socioeconomic outlook for the region. Of those studies, the Economic and Social Panorama of the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States, 2014, was published during the year, based on excerpts from some of the annual flagships published by the Commission in 2014, including the Preliminary Overview of the Economies of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2014; Latin America and the Caribbean in the World Economy, 2014; and Social Panorama of Latin America, 2014. Also, in 2014, as a follow-up to the earlier reports published in 2009 and 2011, UNASUR: Fostering South American integration through development and cooperation was published providing an overview of some key issues on the development agenda of the nations of South America.

Programme and organizational questions

At its thirty-fifth session, ECLAC decided to grant associate membership in the Commission to Sint Maarten [E/2014/40 (res. 683(XXXV))], and approved its calendar of conferences for the period 2015–2016 [res. 676(XXXV)].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2014/15/Add.1/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2014/33 without vote [agenda item 13].

Admission of Sint Maarten as an associate member of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean resolution 683(XXXV) of 9 May 2014, in which the Commission welcomed the request made by the Embassy of the Netherlands in Santiago on behalf of the Government of Sint Maarten that the latter be granted associate membership in the Commission and decided that Sint Maarten should be granted associate membership in the Commission,

1. Approves the granting to Sint Maarten of associate membership in the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

2. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Commission to take the measures necessary for the implementation of the present resolution.

Venue of ECLAC thirty-sixth session

The Commission [E/2014/40 (res. 689(XXXV))] recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve the holding of the Commission's thirty-sixth session in Mexico in the first semester of 2016.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECLAC [E/2014/15/Add.1/Rev.1], adopted resolution 2014/34 without vote [agenda item 13].

Venue of the thirty-sixth session of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind paragraph 15 of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, as well as rules 1 and 2 of the rules of procedure of the Commission,

Considering the invitation of the Government of Mexico to host the thirty-sixth session of the Commission,

1. Takes note of Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean resolution 689(XXXV) of 9 May 2014, by which the Commission accepted with pleasure the invitation of the Government of Mexico to host the thirty-sixth session of the Commission;

2. Endorses the decision of the Commission to hold its thirty-sixth session in Mexico in the first half of 2016.

Western Asia

The Economic Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA), at its twenty-eighth session (Tunis, Tunisia, 8–15 September) [E/2014/41], held eight plenary meetings and four closed meetings. The theme of the session was social justice in the policies of Arab States [E/ESCWA/28/8] and the plenary meetings were held in two segments, one for senior officials and the other for ministers. At the senior officials' segment, consideration was given to requests by UN Member States and/or its specialized agencies that were not members of ESCWA to participate as observers in the session [E/ESCWA/28/3]. The segment also reviewed the economic and social developments in the Arab region 2013–2014 [E/ESCWA/EDGD/2014/1/Summary]; the outcomes of the Arab High-level Forum on Sustainable Development (Amman, Jordan, 2–4 April) [E/ESCWA/SDPD/2014/WG.1/6/Report]; support for the Palestinian people and the International Year of Solidarity with the Palestinian People [E/ESCWA/28/4]; the revised draft strategic framework for the biennium 2016–2017 [E/ESCWA/28/5]; the report of the Executive Secretary on the activities of the Commission [E/ESCWA/28/6 & Part I–Part VI]; and management issues [E/ESCWA/28/7 & Part I–Part VI]. The ministerial dialogues covered social justice and a new development approach [E/ESCWA/28/8/Panel.1]; economic policies supportive of social justice [E/ESCWA/28/8/Panel.2]; intergenerational justice and access to natural resources [E/ESCWA/28/8/Panel.3]; and monitoring and measuring social justice [E/ESCWA/28/8/Panel.4]. The session concluded with the adoption of the Tunis Declaration on Social Justice in the Arab Region and recommendations made by the senior officials' segment.

The Commission adopted eight resolutions to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council for its action or attention on the following topics: the Arab Forum on Sustainable Development [res. 314(XXVIII)]; establishing an intergovernmental committee on technology for development [res. 315(XXVIII)]; support for the Palestinian people [res. 316(XXVIII)]; adoption of the draft strategic framework for the biennium 2016–2017 [res. 317(XXVIII)]; adoption of session reports of the ESCWA subsidiary bodies [res. 318(XXVIII)]; adoption of the proposed amendments to the programme of work for the biennium 2014–2015 [res. 319(XXVIII)]; redesignating the Technical Committee as the Executive Committee and amending its terms of reference [res. 320(XXVIII)]; and redesignating ESCWA as the Economic and Social Commission for Arab States [res. 321(XXVIII)].

Economic trends

The “Summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia region, 2014–2015” [E/2015/20] stated that the average growth rate of gross domestic product (GDP) of the Arab region in real terms was estimated to be 1.5 per cent in 2014, barely changed from 2013. Negative growth estimates for Iraq, Libya and Syria, attributed to intensifying armed conflicts, contributed to the deceleration. In addition to conflicts and related security disruptions in the region, a significant fall in oil prices and the attending uncertain prospects became another predominant economic concern. From its peak in June 2014, oil prices plunged by more than 50 per cent in the second half of the year. Member countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council expanding the non-oil sector, however, continued to lead the growth of the Arab region.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the “Summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the Arab region, 2013–2014” [YUN 2013, p. 977] on 17 November (decision 2014/255).

Activities

ESCWA activities in its 2014–2015 work programme [E/ESCWA/29/4(Part IV)] were organized under its seven subprogrammes: integrated management of natural resources for sustainable development; social development; economic development and integration; information and communication technology for regional integration; statistics for evidence-based policymaking; advancement of women; and conflict mitigation and development.

Construction of office facilities

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 66/249 [YUN 2011, p. 1398], the Secretary-General, in a February report [A/68/748], proposed mitigation measures to strengthen the safety and security of staff at ESCWA in Beirut. In late 2013, he initiated a comprehensive blast assessment to be conducted of the United Nations House in Beirut. To that end, a specialist firm was commissioned to perform the blast assessment and the results of that specialist assessment were received on 17 January 2014. The report set out the resource requirements securing the building for the biennium 2014–2015 and requested the General Assembly to approve the establishment of two temporary positions (1 P-4 and 1 Local level) and appropriate an additional non-recurrent amount of $7,306,900 under the programme budget for the biennium 2014–2015. The Secretary-General also requested the Assembly to note that the non-recurrent amount of $7,306,900 would represent a charge against the contingency fund for the biennium 2014–2015.

ACABQ Report. In March [A/68/808], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the General Assembly establish one temporary position at the P-4 level under the programme budget for the biennium 2014–2015; however, the Committee recommended against the proposed establishment of one temporary Local level position and a corresponding adjustment to the related operational requirements. The Committee also recommended that the Assembly appropriate an additional non-recurrent amount of $5,722,400 under the programme budget for the biennium 2014–2015 comprising increases under section 22 ($281,800) and section 33, Construction, alteration, improvement and major maintenance ($5,440,600).

By resolution 68/247 B (section VI) of 9 April (see p. 1639), the General Assembly endorsed the ACABQ conclusions and recommendations.

Integrated management of natural resources for sustainable development

In 2014, ESCWA continued to work with Arab countries to achieve integrated and sustainable management of their natural resources through strengthened regional cooperation and policy coordination. In an effort to aid rural communities, the Commission prepared during the year field surveys in four pilot countries (Jordan, Morocco, Oman, the Sudan) and linked locally sourced renewable energy technologies to production processes that enhanced productivity and increased income. ESCWA prepared technical material to map electricity management structures in Arab countries and ran projects to develop relevant skills in the public and private sectors with the goal of helping authorities to introduce reforms that enhanced financing of energy efficiency projects. ESCWA also responded to a request from Yemen to train officials in the use of solar energy in agricultural water pumps and in finance mechanisms for renewable energy and energy efficiency projects. Further, following the establishment of green help desks in Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Oman and Tunisia, ESCWA conducted workshops on the help desks and green production, and a study tour for help desk coordinators and the directors of Cleaner Production Centres in the Arab region. A seminar on urban water management was held in Oman in February to foster the integrated management of water resources. In October, the Arab Integrated Water Resources Management Network, in conjunction with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Cap-Net and the Water Footprint Network, held a training course in Oman for water and environment professionals.

On 18 September [E/2014/41 (res. 314(XXVIII))], the Commission invited Member States to widely participate in the session of the Arab Forum on Sustainable Development and requested ESCWA to hold sessions of the Forum periodically. It further requested ESCWA to monitor progress in achieving sustainable development in the Arab region, and the ESCWA Executive Secretary to present a report on actions undertaken in that respect at the twenty-ninth session of the Commission.

Social development

During the year, as part of its regular efforts to help Member States to pursue inclusive social development, ESCWA undertook field projects, seminars, meetings and e-forums on youth empowerment, population and development, social justice and democratic governance. The Commission provided Member States with technical assistance on a rights-based approach to policy and encouraged the mainstreaming of social justice in national reform plans. Throughout the year, the Commission conducted consultations on social policy reform aimed at a fairer redistribution of wealth, greater public involvement in policymaking and maximizing the benefits of population dynamics in the context of the youth bulge, large-scale displacement and labour migration.

The fifteenth Meeting of the Heads of National Population Councils in the Arab Region, co-organized by ESCWA, the League of Arab States and the United Nations Population Fund, focused on four priority areas: the impact on development of forced migration resulting from conflicts and occupation; youth empowerment; equality and empowerment of women; and reproductive and sexual health. At a follow-up meeting, held by the Commission in November, a framework reference was proposed for priority population programmes implementing the 2013 Cairo Declaration on Development Challenges and Population Dynamics in a Changing Arab World.

In the course of the year, ESCWA convened a series of national workshops in Egypt, the State of Palestine and the Sudan on policymaking, strategic planning and evaluation, and programme cycle management. It also provided technical assistance to the Ministry of Social Development in Oman to develop the country's 10-year Social Work Strategy for the period 2016–2025. Approximately 136 officials benefited from those initiatives. Furthermore, the Tunis Declaration on Social Justice in the Arab Region, adopted at the twenty-eighth session of the Commission, represented a contract between ESCWA and its Member States to promote social justice through the development of policies based on rights, equality and equity, and the elimination of all forms of social injustice and discrimination in Arab countries through legislative and constitutional reforms.

Economic development and integration

In 2014, the subprogramme's areas of work, led by the Economic Development and Integration Division, were regional integration; globalization and financing for development; economic analysis; and development policy. In particular, ESCWA focused its work programme and interventions on deepening regional integration in three main areas: infrastructure and transport logistics; trade policies; and macroeconomic convergence and finance. The Commission also continued to follow-up on the implementation of outcomes of the Monterrey Consensus [YUN 2002, p. 953] and the Doha Conference on Financing for Development [YUN 2008, p. 1069] in the Arab region. It assisted Member States in mobilizing international resources, increasing financial and technical cooperation for development and organizing nine workshops on investment dispute settlement and double taxation avoidance, at which officials from Egypt, Lebanon, Morocco, the Sudan, Tunisia and Yemen participated.

Further, the Commission helped Member States to update their national development strategies through analytical outputs in macroeconomic policies, and through support in the design and implementation of policies and strategies for sustainable economic growth, employment creation and poverty alleviation. During the year, research was initiated exploring the links between transport and infrastructure efficiency on the one hand, and economic growth on the other.

ICT for regional integration

In 2014, the subprogramme facilitated regional discussions on challenges and opportunities in the field of ICT. Global trends and good practices in e-government service integration were reviewed in a study titled "Integration of Service Delivery in the Arab Region: Role of Standards and Interoperability". Further, the Commission continued the implementation of the Academy of ICT Essentials for Government Leaders in the ESCWA region, by organizing four core training modules to build capacity of government officials in harnessing ICT for development. ESCWA continued its work on expanding the digital Arabic content (DAC) in Egypt, Tunisia and the United Arab Emirates, where capacity-building workshops and awareness-raising campaigns on the importance of the DAC industry were held. Those events also featured the launch of national DAC competitions on the best project ideas. The Commission organized a thematic workshop on digital content for an inclusive knowledge society to explore various aspects of digital content and multilingualism and share good practices. A leaflet titled "Digital Arabic content: promoting innovation and entrepreneurship in the Arab region" was also published.

The Commission formulated a procedural framework for combating cybercrime and enhancing cybersafety in the region based on a study on the topic issued during the year. A capacity-building workshop on cybersafety was also organized (Muscat, Oman, 8–9 December).

On regional integration, the Commission prepared research papers to examine the impact of the establishment of a customs union in the Arab region. Those papers studied non-tariff measures, implementation scenarios and institutional frameworks for the creation of a customs union. They also underlined the importance of complete implementation of the Greater Arab Free Trade Area measures.

On 18 September [E/2014/41 (res. 315(XXVIII))], the Commission endorsed changing the name of subprogramme 4, from "Information and communications technology for regional integration" to "Technology for development and regional integration"; decided to establish an intergovernmental committee to be named "Committee on Technology for Development", comprising representatives from ESCWA Member States with experience in the field, and which would replace the Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation; and also decided that the Committee should hold its sessions once every two years, with effect from 2016.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/2014/15/Add.2], adopted resolution 2014/35 without vote [agenda item 13].

Establishment of an intergovernmental committee on technology for development in the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the adoption on 18 September 2014 by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia at its twenty-eighth session of resolution 315(XXVIII),

Endorses the establishment of an intergovernmental committee on technology for development in the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, as set out in Commission resolution 315(XXVIII), the text of which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Resolution 315(XXVIII)

Establishment of an intergovernmental committee on technology for development

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Referring to the 2005 World Summit Outcome, in which the States Members of the United Nations recognized that science and technology, including information and communications technology, are vital for the achievement of the development goals, and to Economic and Social Council resolution 2004/68 of 5 November 2004 on science and technology for development,

Referring also to the outcome of the two phases of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva in 2003 and in Tunis in 2005, in particular the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society and the international mechanisms and forums it generated,

Referring further to goal 8 of the Millennium Development Goals, which includes a target on making available the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communications technology,

Recognizing the importance of increasing the participation of the Governments of States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in identifying priorities and planning and improving the Commission's programme of work in the field of technology for development,

Recognizing also the need to enhance coordination and integration between the Commission and Arab regional organizations regarding technology-for-development policies and programmes, to meet the needs of member States and develop such technology to achieve inclusive development in the Arab region,

Taking into consideration the recommendations resulting from the evaluation undertaken by the Commission of its working mechanisms, including a proposal to establish a committee on technology for development,

Stressing the important role of the Commission in promoting information and communications technology sectors and related industries and enhancing their role in development, the information society and the digital economy in member States and linking them to the international process of the World Summit on the Information Society and the mechanisms and international forums it generated for Internet governance; and invigorating the role of member States at the international level in those international forums,

Stressing also the important role of the Commission's Technology Centre in the fields of science and technology and in networking scientific and technological research with major economic sectors in member States,

Taking into consideration the efforts undertaken by the Commission under subprogramme 4, Information and communications technology for regional integration, of programme 19, Economic and social development in Western Asia, of the biennial programme plan and its achievements in that field in advancing the information and communications technology sector and scientific and technological research,

Guided by the work of other United Nations regional commissions regarding the establishment of specialized committees on technology for development,

1. Endorses changing the name of subprogramme 4 of programme 19 of the biennial programme plan, from "Information and communications technology for regional integration" to "Technology for development and regional integration";

2. Decides to establish an intergovernmental committee, to be named the Committee on Technology for Development, comprising representatives from States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia with experience in the field, which would replace the Consultative Committee on Scientific and Technological Development and Technological Innovation, use the resources allocated to it and undertake the following:

(a) Identifying priorities of the Commission's programme of work and medium-term plans regarding technology for development, including scientific research and innovation, the digital economy and the information society, knowledge economies and emerging areas;

(b) Monitoring the progress achieved in the field of technology, including information and communications technology, Internet governance, the digital economy and the information society on the one hand, and areas related to scientific research and transfer of technology on the other hand; and formulating recommendations to strengthen the development of those fields;

(c) Following up regional and international processes, conferences and forums relevant to subprogramme 4, and coordinating regional efforts to implement decisions and recommendations of those conferences;

(d) Supporting the secretariat of the Commission in continuing to follow up the implementation of the Tunis Agenda on the Information Society adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society and participating in the activities and projects related to the World Summit beyond 2015;

(e) Advancing the work of the secretariat in supporting cooperation with the ministerial councils and the organizations and unions of the League of Arab States, including the Council of Arab Ministers of Communications and Information Technology, the Arab Administrative Development Organization and other specialized organizations, in harmonizing policies and strategies, supporting communication and partnerships and coordinating positions at the international level in addition to building capacities;

3. Also decides that the Committee shall hold its sessions once every two years, with effect from 2016;

4. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Commission to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission at its twenty-ninth session.

Statistics

In the field of statistics, ESCWA worked closely with national statistics offices to formulate a strategy and identify priorities for the development of official statistics in the Arab region and the improvement of data quality, availability and dissemination. During the year, the Statistics Division was in the process of modernizing statistical systems at ESCWA and of creating a database to produce reliable, high-quality data accessible to all stakeholders. The achievement of that objective would help formulate evidence-based policies in Member States and promote statistical co-ordination at all levels.

One of the most important initiatives in terms of official statistics was the migration towards the System of National Accounts (SNA) 2008. Most ESCWA Member States had made progress in that regard, particularly in implementing the input-output tables and supply and use tables in line with the SNA 2008 methodology. The importance of official statistics in the context of the data revolution and the adoption of the 2030 Agenda was highlighted in Executive Committee meetings and at the twenty-eighth ESCWA ministerial session.

Advancement of women

In 2014, the Commission played a key role in the area of the advancement of women's rights in the Arab region, leading a progress review on the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action 20 years later (Beijing+20), contributing to a High-level Ministerial Conference that adopted the Cairo Declaration on the Post-2015 Development Agenda for Women, and helping Member States to submit a record number of reports on the status of women. Legislative progress was made in several countries, with bolder commitments to gender equality and greater protection of women's rights.

ESCWA organized a series of expert group meetings in cooperation with the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) and the League of Arab States to develop a detailed regional synthesis report on the issue of the advancement of women in the region. The Commission also examined the ways in which the right of access of women and girls to justice was put into practice in the region, and, in that context, organized an expert group meeting on women's access to justice (Beirut, Lebanon, 23–24 September). The Commission also examined the extent to which international human rights frameworks were implemented in the region.

ESCWA provided technical assistance to develop national women's machineries in Bahrain, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Palestine, the Sudan and Tunisia. It also supported the League of Arab States in developing a strategic framework and action plan for the implementation of the Cairo Declaration on the Post-2015 Development Agenda for Women: Opportunities and Challenges, adopted on 23 February by the Arab countries' Governments participating in the high-level meeting on "Millennium Development Goals for women and girls, Gender equality and the empowerment of women in the Arab region".

Conflict mitigation and development

Political upheaval, violence, instability and occupation continued to characterize the Arab region in 2014. The region spent almost 4.1 per cent of its GDP on weapons—more than twice the average for developing countries—making it the world's biggest arms-buying region in relative terms. The Arab region also included three out of the five countries with the greatest outflow of refugees—Syria (almost 3 million), Somalia (1.12 million) and the Sudan (648,900); and two of its countries, Lebanon (more than 1 million) and Jordan (around 700,000), hosted the highest number of refugees around the world.

The conflict mitigation and development subprogramme, implemented by the Emerging and Conflict-related Issues Division, aimed at assessing the social and economic costs of conflict and instability in countries such as Mauritania, the Sudan and Yemen, which suffered from structural vulnerabilities and chronic poverty. Evidence-based reports on the impact of the Occupied Palestinian Territory were also issued to assist decision makers, including from the UN General Assembly.

Further, the Commission carried out research on the impact of conflict and instability on development. A report on measuring the impact of the "neighbourhood effect" in the Arab region, for example, studied the effect of conflict and other upheavals on neighbouring countries and how to reduce their impact and the likelihood of contagion.

ESCWA contributed to the Fourteenth Annual Arab Administrative Development Organization Conference on Cooperation in Establishing Resilience toward Global Risks in the Arab Region (Cairo, 17–19 December), with research on policy options to mitigate risks in the economy, the environment, public administration and governance, and in infrastructure and social matters.

In the context of the International Year of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, the Commission released a study on the social and economic situation of Palestinian women; commissioned a report on Israeli violations of the Fourth Geneva Convention; and organized a seminar on that subject in November. It also held meetings, in June and November, with NGOs assisting Palestinian refugees in Lebanon, as a result of which two research projects were initiated with the American University of Beirut and the Welfare Association. An online campaign about Palestine, "181 Posts", was launched in March, followed by the screening of two Palestinian films and photo and handicraft exhibitions.

On 18 September [E/2014/41 (res. 316(XXVIII))], the Commission welcomed General Assembly resolutions 67/19 [YUN 2012, p. 1426] and 68/12 [YUN 2013, p. 403], by which the Assembly accorded to Palestine the status of non-member observer State in the United Nations and proclaimed 2014 the International Year of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, respectively. The Commission called on the international community to support the Government of National Conciliation—formed according to the Palestinian National Reconciliation achieved in May—and requested the ESCWA secretariat to raise the level of its support for the Palestinian people and their institutions at all levels, including the enhancement of human resources for the conflict mitigation and development subprogramme.

Programme and organizational questions

At its twenty-eighth session, ESCWA adopted the draft strategic framework for 2016–2017 [E/2014/41 (res. 317(XXVIII))]; the session reports of the ESCWA subsidiary bodies [res. 318(XXVIII)], the amendments introduced to the programme of work for the biennium 2014–2015 [res. 319(XXVIII)]; the redesignation of the Technical Committee as the "Executive Committee" and the relevant amendment to its terms of reference [res. 320(XXVIII)], and the redesignation of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia as the "Economic and Social Commission for Arab States" [res. 321(XXVIII)].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 51], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCWA [E/2014/15/Add.2], adopted resolution 2014/36 without vote [agenda item 13].

Redesignation of the Technical Committee of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia as the Executive Committee and amendment of its terms of reference

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the adoption on 18 September 2014 by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia at its twenty-eighth session of resolution 320(XXVIII),

Endorses the redesignation of the Technical Committee as the Executive Committee and the amendment of its terms of reference as set out in resolution 320(XXVIII), the text of which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Resolution 320(XXVIII)

Redesignation of the Technical Committee as the Executive Committee and amendment of its terms of reference

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia,

Referring to its decision of 11 May 2006 concerning the establishment of a technical committee that would meet once every six months to follow up the implementation of the programme of work,

Referring also to the terms of reference of the Technical Committee, as revised at its fifth meeting, held on 6 and 7 April 2011, which stipulate that the Committee shall hold three meetings per biennium, in support of the ministerial session of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, to advise and assist the secretariat of the Commission in planning and implementing the programme of work and to take action on any other matters,

Having considered the recommendation of the Technical Committee at its seventh meeting to amend the mandate of the Committee in order to facilitate its work and strengthen its ability to take decisions and respond to regional and international developments,

Having also considered the recommendation of the Technical Committee at its eighth meeting to redesignate the Committee as the Executive Committee and amend its terms of reference, so that it may play a greater role in steering and coordinating the activities of the Commission,

Noting the increasing global and regional challenges and the need to develop swift regional responses to them,

Underscoring the importance of strengthening the intergovernmental engagement of member States in the decision-making processes of the Commission, in particular to ensure an integrated approach to the work of the Commission,

1. Decides to redesignate the Technical Committee as the Executive Committee;

2. Also decides to revise the role of the Technical Committee and its terms of reference, with immediate effect, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia to follow up on the implementation of the present resolution.

Annex to resolution 320(XXVIII)

Terms of reference of the Executive Committee

1. The Executive Committee shall submit a report on its activities to the Commission at its sessions.

2. The Executive Committee shall convene three meetings in the period between the biennial sessions of the Commission.

3. The Executive Committee shall be entrusted with submitting resolutions and reports to the Economic and Social Council on matters excluding the terms of reference of the Commission.

4. The Executive Committee shall undertake the following:

(a) Organize the sessions of the Commission;

(b) Review and adopt the programme of work of the subsidiary committees on the basis of criteria defined by the Executive Committee;

(c) Ensure consistency between subprogrammes;

(d) Deal with all matters related to programme planning.

5. The membership of the Executive Committee shall mirror that of the Commission.

6. The Chairs or Vice-Chairs of the subsidiary bodies of the Commission can be invited to the meetings of the Executive Committee.

7. The Executive Committee may propose amendments to its terms of reference, which shall be considered for adoption by the Commission.

8. The Executive Committee shall be chaired by a representative of the country chairing the Commission.

Energy, natural resources and geospatial information

The conservation, development and use of energy and natural resources along with the development and promotion of global geospatial information remained the focus of several United Nations bodies in 2014. The International Atomic Energy Agency, in addition to its work on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, continued to assist its member States in applying nuclear technology in areas such as energy security, human health and food security, water resources and the environment. During the year, the General Assembly, in addition to taking note of the annual report of the Agency as well as that of the Secretary-General on reliable and stable transit of energy, adopted a resolution promoting the use of new and renewable sources of energy.

Priority areas for the inter-agency mechanism UN-Water in 2014 included transboundary waters, water and climate change, water scarcity and water efficiency, water supply and basic sanitation, and water quality. The Assembly adopted a resolution inviting its President to convene a high-level interactive dialogue on progress achieved in the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015 and welcoming the offer of Tajikistan to host a high-level international conference on the implementation of the Decade in 2015.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the reports of the Committee of Experts on Global Geospatial Information Management on its fourth session and of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names on its twenty-eighth session. The Council also decided to accept the offer of the Republic of Korea to host the Twentieth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific on Jeju Island, Republic of Korea, from 6 to 9 October 2015. The Council further decided that the fifth session of the Committee of Experts would be held in New York from 5 to 7 August 2015 and that the twenty-ninth session of the Group of Experts would be held in Bangkok on 25–29 April 2016.

Nuclear energy

International Atomic Energy Agency

As set forth in its 2014 annual report [GC(59)/7], the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) continued to focus—in addition to its work in strengthening global nuclear verification and non-proliferation efforts (see PART ONE, Chapter VII)—on promoting peaceful applications of nuclear science and technology, nuclear safety and security, as well as ensuring through its technical cooperation programme that the benefits of nuclear science and technology were shared by all of its member States. The fifty-eighth session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 22–26 September) [GC(58)/RES/DEC/(2014)] adopted resolutions on international cooperation in nuclear, radiation, transport and waste safety; nuclear security; the Agency’s technical cooperation activities and those related to nuclear science, technology and applications; the effectiveness and efficiency of IAEA safeguards; implementation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons safeguards agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea; and application of the Agency’s safeguards in the Middle East, among other matters.

In August [A/69/255], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the IAEA annual report for the calendar year 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 979], of which the Assembly took note on 3 November 2014 by resolution 69/7 (see p. 1162).

Activities

According to the 2014 IAEA annual report, at the end of the year, there were 438 nuclear power reactors in operation around the world, making for a total nuclear energy-generating capacity of 376.2 gigawatts-electric. During 2014, five reactors were connected to the grid and one was permanently shut down, while construction began on three new reactors. Asia remained the centre of short- and long-term growth prospects, accounting for 46 of the 70 reactors under construction.

Among the major meetings organized by the Agency over the course of the year, the International Conference on Human Resource Development for Nuclear Power Programmes: Building and Sustaining Capacity (Vienna, 12–16 May) noted that more systematic training approaches were being used globally in the nuclear field and that development across the skills pyramid was improving. The International Symposium on Uranium Raw Material for the Nuclear Fuel Cycle: Exploration, Mining, Production, Supply and Demand, Economics and Environmental Issues (Vienna, 23–27 June) highlighted recent developments in uranium exploration, mining and processing, including innovative financing, the use of advanced technologies in “smart mines”, integrated exploration and “wealth from wastes”. The Symposium also addressed emergent issues such as the need for attention to social licensing and stakeholder engagement, the rollout of new technologies across the mining life cycle, sustainable recovery and replacement of low-cost resources. Participants in the 25th IAEA Fusion Energy Conference (St. Petersburg, Russian Federation, 13–18 October) reviewed advances and achievements in physics and technology needed to demonstrate electricity production from fusion, along with progress in constructing the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor—the world’s largest tokamak. Key areas identified for future attention included blanket and radiochemistry technologies, systems integration, technologies for the steady-state operation of fusion systems and technologies for fusion-fission hybrid systems.

Throughout 2014, IAEA continued to support its member States in building, strengthening and maintaining capacities for the safe, peaceful and secure use of nuclear technology. It also focused on developing isotope techniques for groundwater assessments—including the assessment of the Guaraní aquifer shared by Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay—in order to help meet the demand for freshwater resources and mitigate the impacts of climate change. The Agency assisted other member States in evaluating programmes created to prevent and treat malnutrition in early life by using stable isotope techniques. It hosted an International Symposium on Understanding Moderate Malnutrition in Children for Effective Interventions (Vienna, 26–29 May) that determined that better tools were required to prevent and treat moderate malnutrition. In addition, IAEA conducted a Consultants Meeting on Particle Therapy in the 21st Century: Relevance to Developing Countries (Vienna, 11–14 November) that investigated the use of proton therapy to treat cancer for low- and middle-income countries. The Agency further endeavoured to help its member States develop competencies and capabilities in the safe and efficient practice of nuclear medicine by providing an open access, web-based learning programme to support professional development.

IAEA and its member States continued to make progress in strengthening nuclear safety and security by implementing the IAEA Action Plan on Nuclear Safety endorsed after the accident at the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear power plant [YUN 2011, p. 587]. In 2014, the Agency organized two major meetings to share lessons learned from the accident. The International Experts Meeting on Radiation Protection after the Fukushima Daiichi Accident (Vienna, 17–21 February) covered issues ranging from the releases of radioactive material to the environment, managing the impact of the radioactive releases from the accident, international standards and communication. The International Experts Meeting on Severe Accident Management in the Light of the Accident at the Fukushima Daiichi Nuclear Power Plant (Vienna, 17–20 March) focused on strengthening mitigation capabilities to deal with accidents and explored approaches that could be taken by operating organizations and regulatory bodies. Six Integrated Regulatory Review Service missions and four follow-up missions took place to improve the effectiveness of regulatory structures.

The Agency also carried out five Operational Safety Review Team (OSART) missions, seven follow-up missions and one corporate OSART mission that observed substantial improvements among member States in enhancing the ability of nuclear power plants to withstand severe accidents. Safe disposal solutions for low- and intermediate-level waste were in place for many member States, while progress was made on the disposal of high-level waste. The Sixth Review Meeting of the Contracting Parties to the Convention on Nuclear Safety (CNS) (Vienna, 24 March–4 April) agreed by consensus on a number of amendments to the CNS guidance documents. The International Expert Group on Nuclear Liability (INLEX) continued to serve as the Agency’s main forum for questions related to nuclear liability. At its fourteenth regular meeting (Vienna, 20–22 May), INLEX discussed liability issues in the case of the transport of nuclear material, transportable nuclear power plants and the impact of the 2012 revision of the Agency’s Transport Regulations to exclude small quantities of nuclear material from the scope of the nuclear liability conventions. Joint IAEA-INLEX missions were conducted in an effort to raise awareness among policymakers and senior officials of the international legal instruments relevant for achieving a global nuclear liability regime.

The Agency further contributed to global efforts to achieve effective nuclear security wherever nuclear and other radioactive material was in use, storage or transport, as well as security of associated facilities. During 2014, IAEA assisted States in their efforts to meet their national responsibilities and international obligations to reduce risks and to respond appropriately to threats. The Seminar on the Promotion of the Entry into Force on the 2005 Amendment to the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material (Vienna, 12 and 13 June) was held in order to encourage States to contribute to the reinforcement of the global nuclear security regime and to demonstrate commitment to the prevention, detection and punishment of offenses related to nuclear material. The Agency also organized the International Conference on Advances in Nuclear Forensics: Countering the Evolving Threat of Nuclear and Other Radioactive Material out of Regulatory Control (Vienna, 7–10 July)—the first-ever conference dedicated exclusively to nuclear forensics as part of nuclear security infrastructure.

In Africa, IAEA technical cooperation helped more than 40 member States use nuclear and isotopic techniques to increase food production, improve water management and develop capabilities for the diagnosis and treatment of diseases. The programme also strengthened radiation protection, built competence in radiation safety and strengthened the management of radioactive waste. During 2014, IAEA joined regional and international efforts to fight the Ebola virus disease outbreak in West Africa (see p. 1355) by enhancing diagnostic capacities in Sierra Leone. In the Asia and the Pacific region, priorities remained the strengthening of nuclear safety and security, along with improving related human resources and technological capabilities in the human health and food and agriculture areas. In Europe, technical cooperation activities continued to focus on four priority areas: nuclear and radiation safety, nuclear energy, human health, and isotope and radiation technology applications. The strengthening of regulatory infrastructure for safety was a key component addressed by a two-week School for Drafting Regulations on Radiation Safety (Vienna). In Latin America, priority areas for technical cooperation included food security and agriculture, human health, environment, energy, radiation technology and radiation safety. Particular emphasis was given to supporting the use of stable isotope techniques, enhancing understanding of the processes that influence groundwater management and enhancing medical responses to emergencies. Overall in 2014, approximately €74 million was disbursed to 131 countries or territories, of which 33 were least developed countries.

On 3 November [A/69/PV.38], the Director General of IAEA presented the Agency's 2013 annual report [YUN 2013, p. 979] to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November [meeting 38], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/7 [draft: A/69/L.7 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 86].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency for 2013,

Taking note of the statement by the Director General of the Agency, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 2014,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency,

Recognizing also the cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency and the Agreement governing the relationship between the United Nations and the Agency as approved by the General Conference of the Agency on 23 October 1957 and by the General Assembly in the annex to its resolution 1145(XII) of 14 November 1957,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Takes note of resolutions GC(58)/RES/10 on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear, radiation, transport and waste safety; GC(58)/RES/11 on nuclear security; GC(58)/RES/12 on the strengthening of the Agency's technical cooperation activities; GC(58)/RES/13 on strengthening the Agency's activities related to nuclear science, technology and applications, comprising GC(58)/RES/13 A on non-power nuclear applications, GC(58)/RES/13 B on nuclear power applications and GC(58)/RES/13 C on nuclear knowledge management; GC(58)/RES/14 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of Agency safeguards; GC(58)/RES/15 on the implementation of the Agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; and GC(58)/RES/16 on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East; and decisions GC(58)/DEC/9 on the amendment to article XIV.A of the Statute of the Agency; and GC(58)/DEC/10 on the promotion of efficiency and effectiveness of the Agency's decision-making process, adopted by the General Conference of the Agency at its fifty-eighth regular session, held from 22 to 26 September 2014;

3. Reaffirms its strong support for the indispensable role of the Agency in encouraging and assisting the development and practical application of atomic energy for peaceful uses, in technology transfer to developing countries and in nuclear safety, verification and security;

4. Appeals to Member States to continue to support the activities of the Agency;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

By decision 69/554 of 29 December, the General Assembly, apart from organizational matters and items that may have to be considered by operation of the rules of procedure of the Assembly, decided that the item entitled "Administrative and budgetary coordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency" remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2014) session.

New and renewable sources of energy

In an August report on the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy [A/69/323] submitted to the General Assembly in response to resolution 67/215 [YUN 2012, p. 990], the Secretary-General addressed new and renewable sources of energy, not only as valuable options for energy supply but also as important factors for addressing global challenges such as universal energy access, energy security and climate change, as well as poverty eradication and sustainable development. Many developing and developed countries had demonstrated their potential to satisfy energy requirements with technological advances, lower costs and successful development, even as 2013 and 2014 had witnessed declining investments globally as a result of the international economic crisis, changes in national policy environments and potential competition from new discoveries of unconventional fossil fuel resources. While the global use of renewable energy had increased in that period, there was much more needed to be done for growth in renewable energy to become self-sustaining and to pursue the accelerated deployment necessary to achieve critical universal goals. Towards limiting emissions from energy generation and supporting the transition to clean energy systems, there was a need to increase investments in renewable energy deployment and development and improve energy infrastructure and energy efficiency.

Sustainable Energy for All

In September, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/69/395] to the General Assembly in response to resolution 67/215 (ibid.) by which the Assembly had declared 2014–2024 as the United Nations Decade of Sustainable Energy for All, in recognition that access to modern affordable energy services in developing countries was essential for sustainable development. The report reviewed progress in the Sustainable Energy for All initiative of the Secretary-General [YUN 2011, p. 966] along with actions and activities that had been undertaken to date in support of the Decade following its launch on 5 June by the President of the Assembly, including the appointment of a Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Sustainable Energy for All and the establishment of an annual Sustainable Energy for All Forum, the first of which was held in New York from 4 to 6 June, along with the work of the intergovernmental International Renewable Energy Agency. The report furthermore laid out a global plan of action for the Decade especially with regard to promoting more sustainable energy options, including a Sustainable Energy for All Global Tracking Framework supported by UN-Energy and more than 20 agencies. Recommendations addressed how a full spectrum of activities could be brought together to ensure long-term predictability and synergies towards the implementation and realization of sustainable energy for all, and stressed the need for well-structured public-private partnerships to mobilize finance and incentivize technology deployment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/468/Add.9], adopted resolution 69/225 without vote [agenda item 19 (ibid.)].

Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/7 of 16 October 1998, 54/215 of 22 December 1999, 55/205 of 20 December 2000, 56/200 of 21 December 2001, 58/210 of 23 December 2003, 60/199 of 22 December 2005, 62/197 of 19 December 2007, 64/206 of 21 December 2009 and 66/206 of 22 December 2011, as well as its resolutions 65/151 of 20 December 2010 on the International Year of Sustainable Energy for All and 67/215 of 21 December 2012, in which it decided to declare 2014–2024 the United Nations Decade of Sustainable Energy for All,

Recalling also its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, by which it adopted the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and the outcome document of the special event of the President of the General Assembly to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, held on 25 September 2013,

Reaffirming the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and of Agenda 21, and recalling the recommendations and conclusions contained in the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation) and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling the high-level event on Sustainable Energy for All, which was held at its sixty-seventh session and which focused on access to energy, energy efficiency and renewable energies,

Noting the launch, on 5 June 2014, of the United Nations Decade of Sustainable Energy for All, as part of the first annual Sustainable Energy for All Forum, and noting also the initial two-year focus on energy for women, children and health,

Taking note of the Secretary-General’s Sustainable Energy for All initiative in this regard,

Taking note also of the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, held in Apia from 1 to 4 September 2014, entitled “SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway”, in particular the call for actions to promote sustainable energy in small island developing States,

Noting the conclusion of the Secretary-General’s Climate Summit, and welcoming its contribution to the existing political momentum, with a view to galvanizing action to address climate change,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting that in its report the Open Working Group proposes a goal on ensuring access to affordable, reliable, sustainable and modern energy for all,

Concerned that the lack of access to energy and sustainable modern energy services is an important factor that directly affects efforts towards poverty eradication, the greatest global challenge facing the world today, and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals in the developing world,

Deeply concerned that 2.6 billion people in developing countries rely on traditional biomass for cooking and heating, that 1.2 billion people are without electricity and that, even when energy services are available, millions of poor people are unable to pay for them,

Emphasizing that the increased use and promotion of new and renewable sources of energy for sustainable development could make a significant contribution towards the achievement of sustainable development and the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Emphasizing also the need to take further action to mobilize the provision of adequate financial resources of sufficient quality and arriving in a timely manner, as well as the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms, to developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the provision of the efficient and wider use of energy sources, in particular new and renewable sources of energy,

Reaffirming that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be over-emphasized in the achievement of sustainable development, and recognizing the need for the creation of an enabling environment at all levels for investment and sustained financing,

Noting with appreciation the work of the International Renewable Energy Agency, which is aimed at promoting the widespread and increased adoption and sustainable use of all forms of renewable energy,

Highlighting the importance of the empowerment of developing countries as the way to achieve a rapid expansion of new and renewable sources of energy worldwide,

Stressing the need for a coherent, integrated approach to energy issues and the promotion of synergies across the global energy agenda for sustainable development, with a focus on eradicating poverty and achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Decade of Sustainable Energy for All, and encourages the rapid implementation of the strategic objectives defined in the global plan of action for the Decade;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the promotion of new and renewable sources of energy;

3. Further takes note of the report of the Director General of the International Renewable Energy Agency on its work programme and budget for 2014–2015, and encourages the Agency to support its member States in the achievement of their renewable energy objectives;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States and other relevant stakeholders, a report on the activities carried out to mark the Decade, related activities within the United Nations system and the long-term institutional arrangements and accountability arrangements to all stakeholders of the Sustainable Energy for All initiative for submission to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

5. Stresses the need to increase the share of new and renewable sources of energy in the global energy mix as an important contribution to achieving universal access to sustainable modern energy services, and recognizes that the activities of countries in broader energy-related matters are prioritized according to their specific challenges, capacities and circumstances, including their energy mix;

6. Emphasizes that improving energy efficiency, increasing the share of renewable energy and promoting cleaner and energy-efficient technologies are important for sustainable development;

7. Recognizes that the current share of new and renewable sources of energy in the global energy supply is still low owing to, among other factors, high costs and lack of access to appropriate technologies, and calls for action to achieve the economic viability of new and renewable sources of energy through enhanced research and development support along with appropriate policy initiatives and investments at the national and international levels, with Governments working in collaboration with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector;

8. Calls upon Governments to take further action to mobilize the provision of financial resources, technology transfer on mutually agreed terms, capacity-building and the diffusion of new and existing environmentally sound technologies to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, as set out in the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation;

9. Encourages efforts by Governments aimed at creating and developing an enabling environment at all levels to ensure the promotion and use of new and renewable sources of energy;

10. Emphasizes the need to improve access to reliable, affordable, economically viable, socially acceptable and environmentally sound energy services and resources for sustainable development, and takes into consideration the diversity of situations, national policies and specific needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

11. Reaffirms its determination to act to make sustainable energy for all a reality;

12. Recognizes the importance of giving due consideration to energy issues in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

13. Calls upon Governments, as well as relevant international and regional organizations and other relevant stakeholders, to combine, as appropriate, the increased use of new and renewable energy resources, more efficient use of energy, greater reliance on advanced energy technologies, including cleaner fossil fuel technologies, and the sustainable use of traditional energy resources, which could meet the growing need for energy services in the longer term to achieve sustainable development;

14. Calls upon Member States to galvanize efforts to make universal access to sustainable modern energy services a priority, as such services contribute to poverty eradication, improve the quality of life, reduce inequality, save lives, improve health and help to provide for basic human needs, as well as curb environmental risks, including those associated with climate change, and stresses that these services are essential to social inclusion and gender equality;

15. Calls upon Governments to promote women's full, equal and effective participation and leadership in the design and implementation of energy policies and to mainstream a gender perspective into such policies;

16. Also calls upon Governments to ensure women's full and equal access to and use of new, renewable and sustainable energy to enhance their economic empowerment, including employment and other income-generating opportunities;

17. Encourages the development of viable market-oriented strategies that could result in the most rapid reduction in the cost of new and renewable sources of energy and increase the competitiveness of those technologies, including through the adoption, as appropriate, of public policies for research, development and market deployment;

18. Reiterates its call upon all relevant funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to continue to support, as appropriate, efforts aimed at the development of the energy sector in developing countries and countries with economies in transition on the basis of environment-friendly new and renewable sources of energy of demonstrated viability, while taking fully into account the development structure of energy-based economies of developing countries, and to assist in the attainment of the levels of investment necessary to expand energy supplies, including beyond urban areas;

19. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to promote the mobilization of stable and predictable financial resources and technical assistance and to enhance the effectiveness and the full utilization of existing international funds for the effective implementation of national and regional high-priority projects in the area of new and renewable sources of energy;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into account, inter alia, the initiatives taken by Member States and international organizations to create an enabling environment at all levels for the promotion and use of new and renewable energy, including measures to improve access to such technologies;

21. Calls upon the Secretary-General to promote renewable energy and related sustainable practices in all United Nations facilities around the world and to include in his report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session the results of related actions;

22. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy".

Transit of energy

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report on the reliable and stable transit of energy and its role in ensuring sustainable development and international cooperation [A/69/309], submitted in response to resolution 67/263 [YUN 2013, p. 983], the Secretary-General emphasized that energy transit required extensive international cooperation. Ensuring the security of energy supply, demand and transit were essential to securing a sustainable energy future. The Secretary-General considered there to be an opportunity for more detailed rules on transit and more comprehensive investment guidelines that would enhance the existing energy transit framework. In addition, he suggested that international cooperation could be strengthened by further dialogue focused on developing enhanced transportation systems and pipeline networks at the international, regional and global levels. Other important areas of cooperation included the diversification of resources, the diversification of energy transportation routes, the design of enhanced oil and gas pipelines using advanced technologies, the improvement of pipeline systems and the development of pipeline networks and other energy infrastructure, including electricity grids. Such initiatives could be advanced by formulating concrete international legal principles and norms, taking into account the experience of Member States and international organizations.

Communication. In a later communication [A/69/725], Turkmenistan informed the Secretary-General that the Declaration on the Reliable and Stable Transit of Energy for Sustainable Development was adopted at the International Meeting of Experts on the Reliable and Stable Transit of Energy for Sustainable Development held in Ashgabat from 10 to 11 December.

By decision 69/544 of 19 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

Natural resources

Water resources

UN-Water

According to the 2014 annual report issued by UN-Water, priority areas for the inter-agency mechanism during the year included transboundary waters, water and climate change, water scarcity and water efficiency, water supply and basic sanitation, and water quality.

In preparation of World Water Day (21 March), the annual UN-Water Zaragoza (Spain) conference, held from 13 to 16 January, broadened its focus from the immediate nexus of water and energy to a practical consideration of how partnerships could help implement responses that would achieve water and energy efficiency, secured access and sustainability. The celebration of World Water Day in Tokyo sought to raise awareness of the interlinkages between water and energy; contribute to a policy dialogue on the broad range of issues related to the nexus of water and energy; and demonstrate to decision makers in both the energy sector and the water domain that integrated approaches and solutions to water-energy issues could achieve greater economic and social impacts. World Water Week (Stockholm, 31 August–5 September) further highlighted the theme of energy and water.

The UN-Water celebration of World Water Day was organized by the United Nations University (UNU) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on behalf of UN-Water on 20–21 March and took place at UNU headquarters in Tokyo, Japan. On this occasion, the World Water Development Report 2014 on Water and Energy was launched.

Also of note in 2014, the UN Watercourses Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1336] went into effect, as the number of accessing parties reached the required total of 35.

International Year of Water Cooperation, 2013

In August, the Secretary-General provided an overview of activities undertaken in the International Year of Water Cooperation, 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 984].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/468/Add.1], adopted resolution 69/215 without vote [agenda item 19 (a)].

International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, and further efforts to achieve the sustainable development of water resources

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/193 of 22 December 1992 on the observance of World Day for Water, 55/196 of 20 December 2000, by which it proclaimed 2003 the International Year of Freshwater, 58/217 of 23 December 2003, by which it proclaimed the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, to commence on World Water Day, 22 March 2005, 59/228 of 22 December 2004, 61/192 of 20 December 2006, by which it proclaimed 2008 the International Year of Sanitation, 64/198 of 21 December 2009 on the midterm comprehensive review of the implementation of the Decade, 65/154 of 20 December 2010, by which it proclaimed 2013 the International Year of Water Cooperation and 67/204 of 21 December 2012 on the implementation of the International Year of Water Cooperation, 2013,

Recalling also its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting that, in its report, the Open Working Group proposes a goal of ensuring the availability and sustainable management of water and sanitation for all,

Recalling its resolution 68/157 of 18 December 2013 on the human right to safe drinking water and sanitation, and the relevant resolutions of the Human Rights Council, including resolutions 24/18 of 27 September 2013 and 27/7 of 25 September 2014,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries, the annex to which includes agreed guidelines and criteria for the proclamation of international years, and General Assembly resolutions 53/199 of 15 December 1998 and 61/185 of 20 December 2006 on the proclamation of international years,

Recalling further the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and all its principles, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and the commitments made therein and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Recognizing that water is at the core of sustainable development, that it is critical for the eradication of poverty and hunger, and that it is indispensable for human health and well-being and central to achieving the Millennium Development Goals and other relevant internationally agreed goals in the economic, social and environmental fields,

Reaffirming the internationally agreed development goals on water and sanitation, including the Millennium Development Goals, and noting that there has been progress in halving by 2015 the proportion of the population without sustainable access to safe drinking water,

Noting that accelerated efforts are needed to halve the proportion of the population without sustainable access to basic sanitation by 2015, and to develop integrated water resources management and water efficiency plans at all levels, and in this regard acknowledging the importance of cooperation at all levels, including support to developing countries, for the achievement of these goals,

Noting also national, regional and international efforts to implement the International Year of Sanitation, 2008, the International Year of Water Cooperation, 2013, and the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015, and numerous recommendations from international and regional water and water-related events, with a view to taking concrete actions to accelerate progress at all levels towards achieving the internationally agreed water-related goals contained in Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Noting further the holding of the sixth World Water Forum in Marseille, France, from 12 to 17 March 2012, and noting that the seventh World Water Forum will be held in Daegu and Gyeongbuk, Republic of Korea, from 12 to 17 April 2015,

Noting that the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction will be held in Sendai, Japan, from 14 to 18 March 2015, where the issue of integrated water resources management will be discussed, among other issues,

Noting also the World Water Development Reports, a joint project of United Nations agencies and entities,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the activities related to water undertaken by Member States, the United Nations Secretariat and organizations of the United Nations system, inter alia, through inter-agency work, as well as contributions from major groups, for the observance of the International Year of Sanitation, 2008, the International Year of Water

Cooperation, 2013, and the International Decade for Action, “Water for Life”, 2005–2015;

3. Encourages Member States, the Secretariat, organizations of the United Nations system through their coordination mechanisms, including UN-Water, and major groups to accelerate their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed water-related goals contained in Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”;

4. Invites the President of the General Assembly to convene during the week following World Water Day on 22 March 2015 a one-day high-level interactive dialogue of the sixty-ninth session of the Assembly in New York on a comprehensive review of the progress achieved in the implementation of the Decade, including the best practices and lessons learned relevant to the achievement of sustainable development;

5. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Tajikistan to host and fund, in June 2015, a high-level international conference on the implementation of the Decade, as a contribution to the comprehensive review of the Decade;

6. Stresses the importance of the full involvement of all relevant stakeholders, including women, children, older persons, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples and local communities, in the implementation of the Decade at all levels and, as appropriate, in its comprehensive review;

7. Invites the Secretary-General, in cooperation with UN-Water, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system, to engage, as appropriate, in the comprehensive review of the Decade and take appropriate actions to support Member States in the implementation of the Decade during its remaining period;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on the implementation of the present resolution elaborating, inter alia, on the evaluation of the Decade, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67.

Geospatial information

Global geospatial information management

Committee report. The Committee of Experts on Global Geospatial Information Management held its fourth session (New York, 6–8 August) [E/2014/46-E/C.20/2014/15], during which it brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council one draft decision for adoption. The Committee also adopted 12 decisions on a global geodetic reference frame; activities related to sustainable development and the post-2015 development; a global map for sustainable development; determination of global fundamental geospatial data themes; integration of geospatial, statistical and other information; trends in national institutional arrangements in geospatial information management; development of a shared statement of principles on the management of geospatial information; development of a knowledge base for geospatial information management; legal and policy frameworks, including issues related to authoritative data; implementation and adoption of standards for the global geospatial information community; reports by regional entities and thematic groups; and coordination of UN activities related to geospatial information management.

By decision 2014/251 of 17 November, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Committee of Experts on its fourth session; decided that the fifth session of the Committee would be held in New York from 5 to 6 August 2015; and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for that session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 50], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee of Experts on Global Geospatial Information Management [E/2014/46], adopted resolution 2014/31 without vote [agenda item 16 (i)].

A global geodetic reference frame for sustainable development

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also General Assembly resolution 54/68 of 6 December 1999, in which the Assembly endorsed the resolution entitled “The Space Millennium: Vienna Declaration on Space and Human Development”, which included, inter alia, key actions to improve the efficiency and security of transport, search and rescue, geodesy and other activities by promoting the enhancement of, universal access to and compatibility of space-based navigation and positioning systems, including Global Navigation Satellite systems,

Reaffirming further General Assembly resolution 57/253 of 20 December 2002, in which the Assembly endorsed the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), and means of implementation, which included, inter alia, strengthening cooperation and coordination among global observing systems and research programmes for integrated global observations, taking into account the need for building capacity and sharing of data from ground-based observations, satellite remote sensing and other sources among all countries,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 66/288 of 27 July 2012, in which the Assembly endorsed the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”, in which Heads of State and Government recognized the importance of space-technology-based data, in situ monitoring and reliable geospatial information for sustainable development policymaking, programming and project operations,

Noting its resolution 2011/24 of 27 July 2011, by which the Council established the Committee of Experts on

Global Geospatial Information Management, encouraged Member States to hold regular high-level, multi-stakeholder discussions on global geospatial information, including through the convening of global forums, with a view to promoting a comprehensive dialogue with all relevant actors and bodies, and emphasized the importance of promoting national, regional and global efforts to foster the exchange of knowledge and expertise, to assist developing countries in building and strengthening national capacities in that field,

Noting also resolution 1, adopted on 1 November 2012 by the Nineteenth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific, held in Bangkok from 29 October to 1 November 2012, in which the Conference, realizing the need to improve the sustainability and capability of the Global Geodetic Observing System and the need to encourage and support the adoption of the International Terrestrial Reference Frame as the foundation reference frame, urged the Committee of Experts to consult with Member States to adopt and sustain the global geodetic reference frame and provide a road map for its implementation, and to participate in and make commitments to the Global Geodetic Observing System to ensure its long-term sustainability,

Noting further decision 3/102, adopted by the Committee of Experts on 26 July 2013, in which the Committee agreed that actions should be taken to facilitate the submission of a resolution to be tabled at the sixty-eighth session of the General Assembly in order to seek support and commitment at the highest level, and requested the Secretariat to establish a working group, with equitable regional representation, to develop the conceptual note and draft text of the resolution through an open and inclusive process,

Recognizing the importance of international cooperation, as no one country can do this alone, to realize the global geodetic reference frame and services to underpin Global Navigation Satellite Systems technology and provide the framework for all geospatial activity, as a key enabler of spatial data interoperability, disaster mitigation and sustainable development,

Recognizing also the economic and scientific importance of and the growing demand for an accurate and stable global geodetic reference frame for the Earth that allows the interrelationship of measurements taken anywhere on the Earth and in space, combining geometric positioning and gravity field-related observations, as the basis and reference in location and height for geospatial information, which is used in many Earth science and societal applications, including sea-level and climate change monitoring, natural hazard and disaster management and a whole series of industrial applications (including mining, agriculture, transport, navigation and construction) in which precise positioning introduces efficiencies,

Recognizing further the extraordinary achievements made by national mapping and space agencies, geodetic commissions, research organizations and universities and other international organizations such as the International Federation of Surveyors, building upon initiatives of the International Association of Geodesy, representing the global geodetic community, in measuring and monitoring changes in the Earth's system on a best-effort basis, including the development of the now adopted International Terrestrial Reference Frame,

Recognizing the investments of Member States in developing satellite missions for positioning and remote sensing of the Earth, supporting a range of scientific endeavours that improve our understanding of the "Earth system" and underpin decision-making, and recognizing that the full societal benefits of these investments are realized only if they are referenced to a common global geodetic reference frame at the national, regional and global levels,

Recognizing with appreciation that some Member States are already implementing open geodetic data-sharing mechanisms for the benefit of realizing, improving and accessing the global geodetic reference frame at the national, regional and global levels,

Acknowledging that the global geodetic reference frame depends upon the participation of countries all around the globe, and the need to take action to strengthen international cooperation,

1. Endorses decision 3/102 of the Committee of Experts on Global Geospatial Information Management, whereby a working group should be established, with equitable regional representation, to develop a global geodetic road map that addresses key elements relating to the development and sustainability of the global geodetic reference frame;
2. Encourages Member States and relevant international organizations to enhance global cooperation in providing technical assistance, especially for capacity development in geodesy for developing countries, with the aim of ensuring the development, sustainability and advancement of the global geodetic reference frame;
3. Urges Member States to implement open sharing of geodetic data, standards and conventions to contribute to the global reference frame and regional densifications through relevant national mechanisms and intergovernmental cooperation, and in coordination with the International Association of Geodesy;
4. Invites Member States to commit to improving and maintaining appropriate national geodetic infrastructure as an essential means to enhance the global geodetic reference frame;
5. Also invites Member States to engage in multilateral cooperation that addresses infrastructure gaps and duplications towards the development of a more sustainable global geodetic reference frame;
6. Further invites Member States to develop outreach programmes that make the global geodetic reference frame more visible and understandable to society;
7. Recommends the present resolution to the General Assembly for endorsement.

Standardization of geographical names

Group of experts. The twenty-eighth session [E/2014/78] of the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names (New York, 28 April–2 May) was held in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 2013/257 [YUN 2013, p. 985]. The Group considered reports from its 10 working groups; liaison officers and international organizations; and the Task Team for Africa. It also discussed preparations for the Eleventh United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, scheduled to be held in New York from 8 to 17 August 2017, as well as the agenda for the planned twenty-ninth session of the Group. The Group proposed two draft decisions by the Economic and Social Council on the report of the Group of Experts and the dates, venue and provisional agenda for its twenty-ninth session as well as an amendment to its rules of procedure.

By decision 2014/240 of 16 July, the Economic and Social Council decided that the twenty-ninth session of the Group of Experts would be held from 25 to 29 April 2016 in Bangkok. Also on that date, by decision 2014/241, the Council approved an amendment to the rules of procedure of the Group of Experts, whereby the meetings of the Group and those of its working groups should be public, unless the Group should decide otherwise.

UN Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific

By decision 2014/252 of 17 November, the Economic and Social Council decided to accept the offer of the Government of the Republic of Korea to host the Twentieth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific on Jeju Island, Republic of Korea, from 6 to 9 October 2015.

Environment and human settlements

In 2014, the United Nations continued its work in protecting the environment and improving the living conditions of people in cities through legally binding instruments along with activities of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat).

The first session of the United Nations Environment Assembly, held in June, included a high-level segment on the themes “Sustainable development goals and the post-2015 development agenda, including sustainable consumption and production” and “Illegal trade in wildlife”. The Environment Assembly reaffirmed commitment to the full implementation of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) outcome document, “The future we want”. The Assembly also adopted resolutions on science-policy interface; chemicals and waste; marine plastic debris and microplastics; the role of UNEP in promoting air quality; ecosystem-based adaptation; the Global Environment Monitoring System/Water Programme; UN-system coordination on the environment; the relationship between UNEP and multilateral environmental agreements; implementation of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development; the programmes of work and budgets for 2014–2015 and 2016–2017; and amendments to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility.

The Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, at its twentieth session in December, adopted the Lima Call for Climate Action, which confirmed that the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Durban Platform for Enhanced Action would complete the work required for the Conference of the Parties, at its twenty-first (2015) session, to adopt a protocol, legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the Convention. Annexed to that decision were the elements for a draft negotiating text. Additional outcomes from the session included progress on the Warsaw international mechanism for loss and damage associated with climate change impacts, and the Lima work programme on gender.

In October, the twelfth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity adopted 35 decisions, including those related to the integration of biodiversity into the post-2015 development agenda and sustainable development goals, and progress made in implementing the Convention and the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020. The seventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, adopted 13 decisions, including those on risk assessment and risk management, socioeconomic considerations and monitoring and reporting. The Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from their Utilization entered into force on 12 October. The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Nagoya Protocol adopted 13 decisions to advance implementation of the Protocol.

In November, the combined tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Vienna Convention and twenty-sixth meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol adopted 22 decisions.

UN-Habitat continued to support the implementation of the 1996 Habitat Agenda and the Millennium Development Goals. The seventh session of the World Urban Forum took place in April under the theme “Urban equity in development: cities for life” and discussed, inter alia, urban equity in development law; urban planning for social cohesion; and raising standards for urban resilience. The outcome of the Forum: the Medellín Declaration, provided recommendations on four key areas: equity as a foundation of sustainable urban development; the city as opportunity; the new urban agenda; and contributing to the future.

In May, the first-ever integration segment of the Economic and Social Council focused on sustainable urbanization and provided a platform for discussion on how urbanization could become an instrument for the integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development. In September, the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III) held its first session, at which the Habitat III Secretary-General reported on an outline of work leading up to the Conference in 2016.

Environment

UN Environment Programme

United Nations Environment Assembly

The first session of the United Nations Environment Assembly (UNEA) of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) was held in Nairobi from 23 to 27 June [A/69/25]. Ministerial-level consultations (26–27 June), which focused on the themes of “Sustainable development goals and the post-2015 development agenda, including sustainable consumption and production” and “Illegal trade in wildlife”, included discussions on eradicating poverty and achieving prosperity within the earth’s safe operating space through sustainable consumption and production; and ensuring a healthy environment, restoring natural assets and enhancing the durability of infrastructure. Annexed to the report [UNEP/EA.1/10] was a summary of the views expressed during the ministerial dialogue on illegal trade in wildlife, convened on 26 June. For its consideration the Environment Assembly had before it a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/7] by the secretariat on regional consultations with major groups and stakeholders leading up to the first session, and reports of the Executive Director on UNEP engagement with regional ministerial forums and their contributions to the Assembly [UNEP/EA.1/2/Add.2] and a draft policy on stakeholder engagement in UNEP [UNEP/EA.1/2].

The Environment Assembly adopted amendments to the rules of procedure [A/69/25 (res. 1/2)] and, recalling paragraph 6 of Governing Council decision 27/2 [YUN 2013, p. 988], decided that each of the five regions would be represented by two members in the 10-member UNEA Bureau [dec. 1/1]. The Assembly further decided to hold its second session in Nairobi from 23 to 27 May 2016 [dec. 1/2].

The Committee of the Whole, established by the UNEP Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum, held six meetings during the Assembly to consider the agenda items assigned to it.

The Environment Assembly heard from the Chair of the Committee of Permanent Representatives on its preparations for the first session. A report [UNEP/EA.1/INF/4] submitted to the Assembly contained the minutes of meetings held by the Committee since the twenty-seventh (2013) session of the UNEP Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum.

On 17 November (decision 2014/254), the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Environment Assembly on its first session.

The General Assembly took note of the report in resolution 69/223 of 19 December (see p. 1178).

Election. On 7 March (decision 68/416), the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, re-elected Achim Steiner (Germany/Brazil) as UNEP Executive Director for a two-year term beginning on 15 June 2014 and ending on 14 June 2016.

High-level segment

Sustainable consumption and production

The Environment Assembly had before it a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/18] by the UNEP secretariat on environmental sustainability for human well-being in the post-2015 development agenda. The note discussed an integrated framework for the sustainable development goals and the post-2015 development agenda; evidence from integrated solutions; and building the sustainability foundation for the post-2015 development agenda. The shift to sustainable consumption and production patterns through valuing, maintaining and increasing natural capital, sustainable innovation and dematerialization processes had created opportunities for poverty eradication, green jobs, business and prosperity. The note concluded that the integration of economic growth, social protection and justice, and environmental stewardship should be at the core of the sustainable development goals and the post-2015 development agenda.

The Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/1)] adopted the ministerial outcome document of its first session, reaffirming its commitment to achieve a universal, implementable and realizable post-2015 development agenda with the aim of eradicating poverty, protecting the environment and promoting inclusive social and economic development in harmony with nature.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report [E/2014/93] prepared in response to General Assembly resolutions 67/203 [YUN 2012, p. 811] and 68/210 [YUN 2013, p. 787], the Secretary-General summarized progress on the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns. Progress had been achieved through the adoption of the 10-year framework at the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) [YUN 2012, p. 780], which created momentum for the shift to sustainable consumption and production patterns. Serving as the 10-year framework secretariat, UNEP put in place the framework’s mandated governance structure; organized regional meetings and workshops for national focal points; guided the multi-stakeholder consultation process to develop the framework programmes; and established procedures for the launch and development of such programmes. The secretariat established a trust fund to provide financial support to the framework and specific programmes and initiatives in developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The report summarized key mechanisms to delivering capacity-building and implementation at the regional and national levels, as well as regional, national and international progress. The Secretary-General reported on the UN Environment Assembly’s focus at the ministerial level on sustainable consumption and production during its first session, noting that ministers highlighted the potential of the 10-year framework as an important tool for the development of economies on a sustainable basis. He also noted that sustainable consumption and production and the 10-year framework were included in the agenda and dialogues of the 2014 high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council and at the high-level political forum on sustainable development, convened in New York from 30 June to 9 July (see p. 944). He concluded that progress had been achieved, but there remained a challenge to communicate and demonstrate the added value of sustainable consumption and production and its potential contributions to competitiveness, social development, poverty eradication and climate change mitigation.

On 17 November (decision 2014/254), the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's progress report on the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns.

Illegal trade in wildlife

The Environment Assembly had before it a UNEP secretariat note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/19] on the illegal trade in wildlife and its environmental, social and economic consequences for sustainable development. The note summarized the scale of the crisis and the particular challenge of the illegal trade in woodfuel and charcoal. It was estimated that global resources worth between $48 billion and $158 billion were lost each year through the illegal trade of wildlife, and it played a significant role in threat finance by providing funding for organized crime and non-State armed groups, including terrorist groups. The illegal trade in wildlife was recognized as a significant threat to the environment and sustainable development, as reflected in a progression of international decisions, and the international community and individual countries had implemented a range of successful initiatives to address the crisis. The most effective responses were those that caused a reduction in consumer demand, but such responses required behavioural change, effected through greater awareness and understanding at the consumer end, including about how wildlife was laundered through legal supply chains. Trends suggested that priority attention should be focused on the illegal trade in charcoal and other forest products and the illegal trade derived from charismatic mammals, such as elephants and rhinoceros. The note concluded that responses to the crisis would need to target both the demand and supply elements of the supply chain, as well as the engagement of national and international stakeholders.

In light of the negative impact of wildlife trafficking on sustainable development, the Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/3)] stressed the importance of addressing the issue in the context of the post-2015 development framework (see p. 960) and requested the UNEP Executive Director to work closely with the International Consortium on Combating Wildlife Crime, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the UN Secretary-General's Rule of Law Coordination and Resource Group, notably on core areas of UNEP expertise, such as environmental aspects of the rule of law, judicial training and information exchange about judicial decisions and practices. In the ministerial outcome document of its first session, the Assembly [res. 1/1] called on the international community and reaffirmed its commitment to take action to prevent, combat and eradicate the illegal trade in wildlife and wildlife products.

Programme areas

Climate change

During the year, UNEP assisted governments, businesses and individuals on emissions reduction towards minimizing the pace and scale of climate change, and assisted nations and communities most likely to be affected to become more resilient to changing climatic conditions.

The Environment Assembly had before it a UNEP secretariat note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/12] on progress in developing the global Programme of Research on Climate Change Vulnerability, Impacts and Adaptation (PROVIA) since the twenty-seventh (2013) and first universal session of the UNEP Governing Council/Forum [YUN 2013, p. 986]. PROVIA represented an interface between the research community, decision makers and other stakeholders, helping the international community of practice share practical experiences and research findings.

In the ministerial outcome document of its first session, the Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/1)] called on the international community and reaffirmed its commitment to undertake urgent actions to address climate change, in accordance with the objective, principles and provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), and to continue to work towards the adoption in 2015 of an ambitious outcome in the form of a protocol, other legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the UNFCCC applicable to all parties.

UN system coordination and cooperation

The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/2/Add.3] by the UNEP Executive Director on enhancing the coordinating role of UNEP in the UN system on environmental matters, prepared in follow-up to paragraph 88 of the Rio+20 outcome document, entitled "The future we want" [YUN 2012, p. 791].

Also before the Assembly was a report [UNEP/EA.1/3/Add.2] by the UNEP Executive Director on progress on the work of the Environment Management Group (EMG) [YUN 1998, p. 981], including its issue-specific and technical groups, pursuant to Governing Council decision 27/5 [YUN 2013, p. 989]. The report presented information on the Group's activities and achievements in enhancing coherence in programming environmental activities, mainstreaming environment and enhancing sustainability in policies, programmes and management practices; it also set out the Group's strategic approach and provided an overview of the direction of its future work, as approved by the Group at their nineteenth (2013) meeting.

Other documents before the Environment Assembly concerning UN system coordination on the environment were a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/9] by the Executive Director listing the corporate memorandums of understanding concluded between UNEP and other UN system bodies, and a secretariat note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/22] providing additional information on the plan for the preparation of a UN system-wide strategy on the environment.

The Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/11)] requested the Executive Director, in his capacity as EMG Chair, to develop system-wide strategies on the environment; to invite the engagement of the UN Secretary-General and the Chief Executives Board for Coordination to facilitate broad ownership in the United Nations at all levels; and to report to the second (2016) session of the Environment Assembly on the Group's work, including recommendations for measures to maximize the effectiveness of EMG and a description of the integration of the outcome of the post-2015 development agenda into the UN environmental work.

International environmental governance

In response to paragraph 29 of Governing Council decision 27/13 [YUN 2013, p. 991], the Executive Director submitted a May report [UNEP/EA.1/INF/8] on the institutional and administrative relationship between UNEP and multilateral environmental agreements for which UNEP served as secretariat or performed secretariat functions. The report was prepared in consultation with the secretariats of 11 multilateral environmental agreements. Prior to preparing the report, the Executive Director established a task team comprised of representatives from the secretariats of the multilateral agreements and the relevant UNEP offices to discuss the effectiveness of administrative arrangements and programmatic cooperation between them. The task team held its first meeting on 3 February.

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/12)] took note of the report of the Executive Director and welcomed the step taken to establish a task team. It also requested the Executive Director to submit information on the progress made by the task team to the relevant conferences and meetings held in the lead-up to the second session of the UN Environment Assembly.

JIU report. In later notes [A/69/763 & Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report [JIU/REP/2014/4] of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "Post-Rio+20 review of environmental governance within the United Nations system", followed by his comments on that report and those of the UN System Chief Executives Board for Coordination.

Chemicals and waste

Waste management. The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/5 & Add.1, 2] by the Executive Director on chemicals and waste management, which provided information on the implementation of Governing Council decision 27/12 [YUN 2013, p. 990] on the topic. The report summarized the activities carried out by UNEP on lead and cadmium; mercury; implementation of the Strategic Approach to International Chemicals Management [YUN 2006, p. 1246]; waste management; persistent organic pollutants; enhancing cooperation and coordination within the chemicals and waste cluster; and the consultative process on financing options for chemicals and wastes.

The Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/5)], having considered the report of the Executive Director, emphasized that the sound management of chemicals and waste was an essential and integral cross-cutting element of sustainable development, and requested the Executive Director to submit a progress report on the implementation of the resolution at its second session.

Financing options. The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/5/Add.1] of the Executive Director that contained draft terms of reference for a special programme to support institutional strengthening at the national level for implementation of the Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm conventions, the future Minamata Convention and the Strategic Approach to International Chemicals Management. The Assembly [res. 1/5] adopted the terms of reference for a special programme, as annexed to the resolution, to be funded by voluntary contributions. It requested the Executive Director to establish and administer the Special Programme trust fund and to provide a secretariat to deliver administrative support to the Programme. It also requested the Executive Board of the Special Programme to review the effectiveness of the operational arrangements for the Programme set out in the terms of reference and report to the UN Environment Assembly at its third (2018) session.

Cooperation and coordination. The Environment Assembly [res. 1/5] welcomed the report [UNEP/EA.1/5/Add.2] of the Executive Director on the outcome of the country-led consultative process on enhancing cooperation and coordination within the chemicals and waste cluster and the outcome document of the process, entitled "Strengthening the sound management of chemicals and wastes in the long term". It requested that the Executive Director forward the outcome document to the upcoming sessions and conferences of the parties of relevant committees, conventions and working groups.

Public participation and access to information and justice

and Development, acknowledging the importance given to broad public participation and access to information and judicial and administrative proceedings in environmental matters. It noted in particular the progress made in strengthening dialogue among the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean towards the application of Principle 10, namely their cooperation on exploring the feasibility of a regional instrument on rights of access to information, participation and environmental justice, under the coordination of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean. The Assembly requested the Executive Director to further enhance access to information in future related policies.

Access to information policy. The Environment Assembly had before it a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/23] by the secretariat transmitting the draft access-to-information policy, established by the Executive Director in accordance with paragraph 17 of decision 27/2 of the first (2013) universal session of the UNEP Governing Council/Global Ministerial Environment Forum. The policy, which would apply to information in the custody of the UNEP secretariat, would be piloted and refined in the next year, with the intention of issuing a final version by the end of June 2015.

Sustainable development and poverty eradication

The Environment Assembly [res. 1/10] took note of Governing Council decision 27/8 [YUN 2013, p. 988], in which the Council acknowledged that there were different approaches, visions, models and tools developed by UN Member States in order to achieve sustainable development, and in that regard took note of the approach of “Living Well in balance and harmony with Mother Earth” as a holistic and integrated approach to sustainable development that could guide humanity to live in harmony with nature and lead to efforts to restore the health and integrity of the Earth’s ecosystems. The Environment Assembly requested the Executive Director to consider organizing a workshop at its second (2016) session about different approaches, visions, models and tools for achieving sustainable development, and to provide a report in response to paragraph 3 of Governing Council decision 27/8 [YUN 2013, p. 988] on the collection and dissemination of information in support of sustainable development and poverty eradication. It also requested the Executive Director to guide and facilitate, through UNEP-Live (see below), the visibility of different visions, approaches, models and tools for sustainable development, and to take those findings into consideration during the consultation processes for the Global Environment Outlook and UNEP-Live.

State of the environment

The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/4] of the Executive Director on the state of the environment, which summarized the key scientific and policy issues coming from the assessment and early-warning activities of UNEP that needed to be brought to the Assembly’s attention. The report highlighted the scientific findings of the Fifth Assessment Report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, the fifth report in the UNEP Global Environment Outlook series, entitled GEO-5: Global Environment Outlook: Environment for the Future We Want, and the Emissions Gap Report 2013, among others. The report concluded that the scientific community was being asked to synthesize the latest environmental information in order to respond to a growing number of challenges facing society as a result of a changing Earth system. The knowledge gathered by UNEP, based on data and information on broad geographical and temporal scales, needed to be processed through various scientific disciplines. The goal for policymakers was to use that knowledge to inform people about the risks, opportunities and choices that existed, rather than to advocate particular management solutions.

The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/4/Add.1] by the UNEP Executive Director on support structures and processes for keeping the world environment situation under review. Pursuant to Governing Council decision 27/11 [YUN 2013, p. 990], the report summarized recent progress in the development of UNEP-Live—a web-based platform for promoting access to and the use of environmental information. The report presented a proposal for a multi-stage approach for the production of the next report in the Global Environment Outlook series, GEO-6, towards ensuring the delivery of the key findings of GEO-6 in time for endorsement at the second (2016) session of the Environment Assembly. The report also reviewed the status of various other assessment processes, platforms and networks.

Science-policy interface

The Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/2/Add.1] of the UNEP Executive Director on the key actions undertaken to strengthen the science-policy interface to better address the changing nature and implications of human–environment interactions, global megatrends and policies on sustainable development and human well-being. The actions taken included, inter alia, expanding partnerships with centres of excellence and international research programmes to underpin the science in the UNEP programme of work; working closely with Member States, major groups and stakeholders and multilateral environmental agreements to publish data through the UNEP-Live knowledge management system; and collaborating with other institutions to undertake a gap analysis and evaluation of emerging issues.

The Environment Assembly also had before it a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/14] by the UNEP secretariat on proposed procedures for enhancing future assessment processes and transparency safeguards, based on a review of best practices. The proposed procedures emphasized general principles; stakeholder engagement and selection of participants; policy relevance; legitimacy and scientific credibility; transparency; administrative processes; conflict of interest; inclusion of diverging viewpoints; and government and peer-review processes.

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/4)] welcomed the progress made during the design and development of UNEP-Live as a tool to enhance the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the future approach to keeping the world environment situation under review. It also welcomed the briefing on the science-policy interface by the Executive Director to the high-level segment of the first session of the Environment Assembly, and requested the Executive Director to continue providing information from existing and ongoing assessments, and on progress made towards previously agreed global environmental goals to guide future policy debates at the Assembly. The Executive Director was further requested to promote a strong science-policy interface by expanding partnerships with centres of excellence and research programmes; to foster collaboration with multilateral environmental agreement secretariats, relevant UN agencies and programmes and scientific panels for joint efforts to strengthen the science-policy interface; and to work closely with relevant UN bodies on production of the Global Sustainable Development Report; to undertake, within the work and budget programme, the preparation of the sixth Global Environment Outlook report. The Assembly also requested the Executive Director to submit to its second (2016) session a long-term plan for the development and use of UNEP-Live; a gap analysis report on environmental data, information and assessments as well as recommendations on policy instruments for a strengthened science-policy interface; and a report on the present resolution.

Biodiversity and ecosystem services

The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/3/Add.1] of the UNEP Executive Director on the implementation of Governing Council decision 27/4 [YUN 2013, p. 988] on the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services. The report summarized key decisions of the Plenary of the Platform at its second session (Antalya, Turkey, 9–14 December 2013) [UNEP/EA.1/INF/15], including the adoption of its work programme for 2014–2018 and other activities carried out in the first quarter of 2014. Operationalization of the Platform was an opportunity for innovation in the science-policy interface on biodiversity and ecosystem services because of its recognition of the importance of indigenous and local knowledge, and its emphasis on capacity-building and ensuring that the best available information was provided to decision makers in accordance with their needs.

Global Environment Monitoring System/Water Programme

The Environment Assembly had before it a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/13] by the secretariat on the status of the evaluation and redesign of the Global Environment Monitoring System/Water Programme (GEMS/Water). Key stakeholders in the Programme had worked out modalities, outlined a rationale and carried out a mapping of individual partner preferences. The potential for enhancing GEMS/Water benefits and services for global, regional and country-based water quality assessment and policy information, including in providing evidence and knowledge products for the post-2015 agenda and the next Global Environment Outlook (GEO), had been explored. Opportunities had emerged from the launch of UNEP-Live, which would provide freshwater quality assurance and quality-control data and information in support of the GEO process. The report highlighted the vision for GEMS/Water, including its objectives, functions, challenges, transition options and planned reforms.

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/9)] underlined the need to further improve the global coverage and consistency of water quality data and requested the UNEP Executive Director to collaborate with member States to identify additional key elements of GEMS/Water, such as regional hubs, capacity development programmes, technology support and new services, and to ensure the necessary resources for enabling the UNEP-based GEMS/Water Global Programme Coordination Unit to operate as the interface between national focal points, GEMStat, the GEMS/Water Capacity Development Centre, GEMS/Water regional hubs and relevant global partners. It also requested the Executive Director to initiate discussions on a common data policy with member States, UN agencies and other relevant organizations towards building a consistent database in GEMStat, supporting UNEP-Live and informing sustainable development policies. The Assembly further requested the Executive Director to draft a revised GEMS/Water programme, including a budget, for adoption at its second (2016) session.

Ecosystem-based adaptation

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/8)], conscious of the vulnerability of developing countries to climate change, recognized that ecosystem-based approaches should contribute to climate-resilient sustainable development in synergy with other adaptation-relevant approaches in all sectors. It encouraged all countries to include and improve ecosystem and community-based adaptation in their national policies, including those on climate change adaptation, food security and the sustainable management of forests. It requested the UNEP Executive Director to continue the collaboration between UNEP and UNDP and with other relevant institutions and organizations to integrate ecosystems as a key element in national adaptation planning processes. It also requested the Executive Director, in partnership with Governments, scientific institutions, UN agencies, civil society and other stakeholders, to enhance support to developing countries, at their request, for the development and implementation of community-based, and national and regional ecosystem-based adaptation programmes and activities.

International water quality guidelines for ecosystems

The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/3] of the UNEP Executive Director on the implementation of Governing Council decision 27/3 [YUN 2013, p. 988] on the development of international water quality guidelines for ecosystems. Achievements included strengthened recognition of the need for such guidelines, as demonstrated by the nominations from over 50 Governments of policy and technical experts to support the process, and the establishment of agreements and partnerships with UN agencies and other organizations such as water associations and universities. The Executive Director reported progress on defining the outline of the guidelines and noted that the draft guidelines would be subjected to regional and international consultation processes in 2015, with the final draft envisaged to be ready for submission to the second (2016) session of the Environment Assembly.

Marine plastic debris and microplastics

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/6)] recognized the problem of plastics, including microplastics, in the marine environment due to their large and increasing use and the inadequate management and disposal of plastic waste, and because plastic debris in the marine environment was fragmenting into secondary microplastics. It emphasized that further urgent action was needed to address the challenges posed by marine plastic debris and microplastics, by addressing such materials at source, by reducing pollution through improved waste management practices and by cleaning up existing debris and litter. The Assembly requested the Executive Director to support countries in the development and implementation of national or regional action plans to reduce marine litter, and, in consultation with other relevant institutions and stakeholders, to undertake a study on marine plastic debris and marine microplastics and to present the study for consideration at its second (2016) session.

Air quality

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/7)] recognized that poor air quality was a growing challenge in the context of sustainable development and that efforts across sectors to improve air quality were needed. It requested, inter alia, the UNEP Executive Director to support Governments through capacity-building activities on air quality, such as workshops and policy development assistance; raise awareness of the public health and environmental risks of air pollution and the benefits of improved air quality, including through public outreach and Global Environment Outlook assessment processes; and to undertake global, regional and subregional assessments by 2016, if possible, focused on identifying gaps in capacity to address air quality issues. The Assembly further requested the Executive Director to present to its second (2016) session a report on information from Governments regarding their cross-sectoral actions to improve air quality and an update on progress made in implementing the present resolution.

Environmental law

The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/3/Add.3] of the UNEP Executive Director on the process for the midterm review of the fourth Programme for the Development and Periodic Review of Environmental Law (Montevideo Programme IV), and developments in the implementation of Governing Council decision 27/9 [YUN 2013, p. 989]. The report noted that the Montevideo Programme, as a broad strategy for formulating environmental law activities for the decade 2010–2019, was synonymous with the evolution of environmental law and a driver for exemplifying the increased linkages between environmental law and the three pillars of the United Nations—peace and security, human rights and development. The Executive Director hoped the midterm review process would highlight progress or challenges in the implementation of Montevideo Programme IV and serve as a platform for those in environmental law and the international law community to enhance global partnerships and strengthen the institutional architecture for achieving environmental sustainability. Annexed to the report were the programme areas of Montevideo Programme IV.

Implementation of paragraph 88 of the Rio+20 outcome document

The Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/3/Add.5] of the UNEP Executive Director on actions taken towards implementation of paragraph 13 of UNEP Governing Council decision 27/2, in which the Council committed to progressively consolidating UNEP headquarters functions in Nairobi. Implementation of that decision took place in the context of strengthening and upgrading UNEP, according to subparagraph (g) of paragraph 88 of the Rio+20 outcome document “The future we want” [YUN 2012, p. 782], and General Assembly resolution 67/213 [YUN 2012, p. 1000]. The report also provided recommendations for the 2016–2017 programme of work to strengthen the regional presence of UNEP and consolidate its headquarters functions in Nairobi.

The Assembly also had before it a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/16] by the UNEP secretariat with information related to the consolidation of headquarters functions that supplemented and supported the above report of the Executive Director.

Governance, work programme and budget

Programme of work and budget for 2014–2015 and proposed programme for 2016–2017

At its first session, the Environment Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/7/Add.1] of the UNEP Executive Director on the proposed revised biennial programme of work and budget for 2014–2015, in response to Governing Council decision 27/13 [YUN 2013, p. 991]. The report presented changes in indicator targets against expected accomplishments and in accountability for the delivery of outputs in the programme of work that resulted from changes in the structure of UNEP. Before the Assembly was also a note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/24] by the Executive Director on changes to the programme of work and budget for 2014–2015 and changes to the strategic framework for the biennium, which the Committee on Programme and Coordination decided in 2013.

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/14)], having considered the approved medium-term strategy for 2014–2017 and the approved programme of work and budget for 2014–2015, approved the revised programme of work and budget for 2014–2015, which took into account the implications of the level of resources from the regular UN budget to UNEP in the amount of $34.9 million.

The Environmental Assembly had before it a report [UNEP/EA.1/7] on the proposed updated biennial programme of work and budget for 2016–2017, reflecting the changes made following consultations during the year with the Committee of Permanent Representatives. The programme of work contained units of measure for each indicator, estimates of baselines and targets, a theory of change and outputs that showed what the organization must deliver to achieve its expected accomplishments and fulfil its objectives. It was designed to ensure coherence and continuity with the programme of work for the first half of the medium-term strategy period, 2014–2017, as well as to continue to build on the strengthened regional presence of UNEP. The envisaged budget for the programme of work totalled $687 million, including a programmed allocation from the regular UN budget of $49.7 million. The report included narratives on seven subprogrammes: climate change; disasters and conflicts; ecosystem management; environmental governance; chemicals and waste; resource efficiency and sustainable consumption and production; and environment under review.

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/15)], having considered the approved medium-term strategy for 2014–2017 and the proposed programme of work and budget for 2016–2017, approved the programme of work for 2016–2017 and the appropriations for the Environment Fund in the amount of $271 million, of which a maximum of $122 million was allocated to defraying post costs.

The Environment Assembly also had before it reports by the Executive Director on the voluntary indicative scale of contributions for 2014–2015 [UNEP/EA.1/INF/17] and the revision of UNEP financial rules [UNEP/EA.1/6], and a note by the UNEP secretariat on programme performance [UNEP/EA.1/INF/6].

Trust funds

The Executive Director submitted a report on the management of trust funds and earmarked contributions [UNEP/EA.1/8] noting that UNEP administered both single-donor and multi-donor trust funds. In the case of the former, each designated donor contribution was managed as a separate trust fund; whereas for multi-donor trust funds, contributions from multiple donors were managed in a combined pool of funds. The primary multi-donor fund for UNEP was the Environment Fund. Donor requests for the establishment of single-donor trust funds had led to the creation of a large number of relatively small trust funds whose transaction costs were relatively high owing to varying donor requirements with regard to monitoring and reporting. UNEP-administered trust funds had grown over time from one in 1972 to 124 in December 2013. During the biennium 2012–2013, contributions to the Environment Fund were $152 million compared to $773 million for trust funds, excluding the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol. The proliferation of single-donor funds marked a change in the approach of UNEP funding, with increasing levels of contributions earmarked for specific initiatives. Multi-donor trust funds enhanced effectiveness by reducing transaction costs and mitigating the high levels of risk inherent in the management of single-donor and earmarked trust funds. The approved programme of work for 2014–2015 aimed to move increasingly from earmarked resources to the Environment Fund, guided by the member States' collective programmatic decisions.

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/16)] considered the report of the Executive Director as well as requests that UNEP carry out the functions of secretariats for other bodies related to its work. In support of the UNEP programme of work, the Assembly approved 7 trust funds (5 general, 2 technical) established since the twenty-seventh (2013) session of the UNEP Governing Council, and 16 trust funds (5 general, 11 technical) whose extension was subject to receipt by the UNEP Executive Director of requests from the relevant Governments or contracting parties. In support of regional seas programmes, conventions, protocols and special funds, the Assembly approved 2 trust funds established since the Governing Council's twenty-seventh session, and 23 trust funds subject to the receipt of requests from the relevant Governments or parties.

Board of Auditors report

In June [A/69/5/Add.7], the Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly its report and financial report and audited financial statements of UNEP for the biennium ended 31 December 2013. The report showed total income of $943.4 million and expenditure of $751.4 million, an increase in income of 17.8 per cent and a decrease in expenditure by 7.1 per cent compared to the previous biennium. UNEP also administered 14 multilateral environmental agreements, the income ($214.8 million) and the expenditure ($177.7 million) of which were included in the consolidated financial statements. The overall excess of income over expenditure was $192 million. The Trust Fund for the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer had income of $266.2 million and expenditure of $298.7 million in the biennium, and a reserve balance of $322.5 million. The report outlined key findings related to budgetary controls; procurement management; preparedness for implementation of the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS); and follow-up of previous recommendations. The Board made recommendations related to the monitoring of project budget implementation; the strengthening of procurement planning and contract management; and IPSAS implementation.

By decision 69/554 of 29 December, the General Assembly decided that the report of the Board of Auditors and financial report and audited financial statements of UNEP would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Additional reports

Other documents submitted to the first session of the Environment Assembly were reports by the Executive Director on the results of the sixty-eighth (2013) session of the General Assembly of relevance to the Environment Assembly [UNEP/EA.1/INF/3 & Add.1] and the status of the Environment Fund and other sources of UNEP funding for the biennium 2012–2013 [UNEP/EA.1/INF/5], and notes by the UNEP secretariat on changes in the status of conventions and protocols in the field of the environment [UNEP/EA.1/INF/10], and progress on the Eye on Earth initiative [UNEP/EA.1/INF/11].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/468/Add.7] adopted resolution 69/223 without vote [agenda item 19 (g)].

Report of the United Nations Environment Assembly of the United Nations Environment Programme

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the mandate contained in its resolution 2997(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, by which it established the United Nations Environment Programme, and other relevant resolutions that reinforce its mandate, as well as the 1997 Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme of 7 February 1997, the Malmö Ministerial Declaration of 31 May 2000 and the Nusa Dua Declaration of 26 February 2010,

Reaffirming also its commitment to strengthening the role of the United Nations Environment Programme as the leading global environmental authority that sets the global environmental agenda, promotes the coherent implementation of the environmental dimension of sustainable development within the United Nations system and serves as an authoritative advocate for the global environment,

Recalling its resolutions 67/213 of 21 December 2012 and 68/215 of 20 December 2013,

Reaffirming the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and its principles,

Taking into account Agenda 21 and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation),

Recalling the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held from 20 to 22 June 2012 in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, entitled "The future we want", and noting the follow-up on paragraph 88, subparagraphs (a) to (b), of the outcome document, including through General Assembly resolution 67/213,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the outcome document of the special event of the General Assembly to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling further its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Recalling the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building,

Committed to strengthening international environmental governance within the context of the institutional framework for sustainable development in order to promote a balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development as well as coordination within the United Nations system,

Committed also to enhancing the voice of the United Nations Environment Programme and its ability to fulfil its coordination mandate within the United Nations system by strengthening its engagement in key United Nations coordination bodies and empowering it to lead efforts to formulate United Nations system-wide strategies on the environment,

Reiterating the need for secure, stable, adequate and predictable financial resources for the United Nations Environment Programme, and, in accordance with resolution 2997(XXVII), underlining the need to consider the adequate reflection of all the administrative and management costs of the Programme in the context of the United Nations regular budget,

Reaffirming the commitment, as contained in the ministerial outcome document of the first session of the United Nations Environment Assembly of the United Nations Environment Programme, held in Nairobi from 23 to 27 June 2014, to, inter alia, ensure the full integration of the environmental dimension, especially throughout the sustainable development agenda, acknowledging that a healthy environment is an essential requirement and key enabler for sustainable development,

1. Welcomes the holding of the first session of the United Nations Environment Assembly of the United Nations Environment Programme in Nairobi from 23 to 27 June 2014, and takes note of the report on the session and the resolutions and decisions contained therein;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the ministerial outcome document of the first session of the United Nations Environment Assembly of the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Recognizes that the United Nations Environment Programme will participate, as appropriate, in the elaboration of and the summit on the post-2015 development agenda;

4. Reiterates that capacity-building and technology support to developing countries in environment-related fields are important components of the work of the United Nations Environment Programme, and in this regard calls for the continued and focused implementation of the Bali Strategic Plan for Technology Support and Capacity-building adopted by the Programme;

5. Also reiterates the continuing need for the United Nations Environment Programme to conduct up-to-date, comprehensive, scientifically based and policy-relevant global environmental assessments, in close consultation with Member States, in order to support decision-making processes at all levels;

6. Notes the request by the United Nations Environment Assembly to the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to provide options to secure the participation of developing countries in the Environment Assembly;

7. Recalls paragraph 88 (b) of the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 66/288 of 27 July 2012, and also recalls its resolution 68/248 of 27 December 2013;

8. Also recalls the decision contained in paragraph 88 (b) of the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 66/288;

9. Urges all Member States and other stakeholders in a position to do so to increase voluntary funding to the United Nations Environment Programme, including to the Environment Fund, notes the need for continued efforts to broaden the donor base and mobilize resources from all sources, including stakeholders, and welcomes the increased support received in this regard;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Report of the United Nations Environment Assembly of the United Nations Environment Programme".

Other matters

Cooperation with UN Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation

The General Assembly, in resolution 69/84 of 5 December (see p. 733), requested UNEP to continue to support the work of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation and the dissemination of its findings to the Assembly, the scientific community and the public. The Assembly encouraged UNEP to maintain the Committee's funding, and encouraged Member States to make voluntary contributions to the UNEP general trust fund established to support the Committee's work.

UNEP Year Book

The UNEP Year Book 2014: Emerging issues in our global environment provided information on excess nitrogen in the environment; the emergence of infectious diseases; fish and shellfish farming in marine ecosystems; illegal trade in wildlife; methane from hydrates; the potential of citizen science; air pollution, cited as the leading cause of environmentally related deaths; plastic debris in the ocean; securing soil carbon benefits; and rapid change in the Arctic. A key message of the Year Book was that access to timely, reliable environmental information from around the world would be increasingly required to identify emerging issues and develop effective actions and policies in response.

Global Environment Facility

The Global Environmental Facility (GEF) united 183 member Governments in partnership with international institutions, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector to address environmental issues. The GEF partnership comprised, among others, UNEP, UNDP, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the African Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Inter-American Development Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development. GEF served as the financial mechanism for the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) [YUN 1992, p. 683], the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) [ibid., p. 681], the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944], and the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants [YUN 2001, p. 971].

Environment Assembly. The Environment Assembly had before it a June report [UNEP/EA.1/9] of the Executive Director describing amendments to the Instrument for the Establishment of the Restructured Global Environment Facility, pursuant to their approval in May by the Fifth GEF Assembly. Under the amendments, GEF would operate as one of the entities comprising the financial mechanism of the Minamata Convention on Mercury, and its responsibilities to the conventions it already served were clarified; the “ozone layer depletion” and “persistent organic pollutants” focal areas were replaced with a “chemicals and waste” focal area; the eligibility criteria for accessing GEF funding were updated; and the name of the GEF Evaluation Office was changed to the GEF Independent Evaluation Office. A note [UNEP/EA.1/INF/21] by the UNEP secretariat provided supplementary information to the report of the Executive Director, including a joint summary of the Chairs of the forty-fifth (2013) meeting of the GEF Council; the Council’s, proposed amendments to the Instrument; the Chairs summary of the Fifth GEF Assembly; and correspondence from the Chief Executive Officer and Chair of GEF addressed to the UNEP Executive Director.

The Environment Assembly [A/69/25 (res. 1/17)] took note of the report of the Executive Director and adopted the amendments to the Instrument, pursuant to the decision of the Fifth GEF Assembly in May.

Annual Performance Report. The GEF Annual Performance Report 2014 provided an overview of the performance of GEF activities with regard to project outcomes and sustainability, factors affecting attainment of project results, and the quality of monitoring and evaluation (M&E) arrangements. The report covered 918 projects that represented $4.07 billion in GEF funding and $19.13 billion in realized co-financing. That total included 156 recently completed projects in the 2014 annual performance report cohort that accounted for $803.8 million in GEF funding, and 111 projects completed prior to 2005 that were being reported on for the first time. Inclusion of the latter data allowed the GEF Independent Evaluation Office to report on the results of the GEF project portfolio by replenishment period, which provided insights on performance trends. The report concluded that 79 per cent of projects in the 2014 cohort, which accounted for 81 per cent of the funding, had outcome ratings in the satisfactory range. Sixty-three per cent of projects in the 2014 cohort, which accounted for 62 per cent of the funding, had sustainability of outcome ratings of moderately likely or above, and the quality of implementation and execution ratings were in the satisfactory range for approximately 80 per cent of all completed projects. There had also been a steady rise in the median ratio of promised co-financing to GEF grant over the replenishment phases, with GEF partners having largely met or exceeded project co-financing expectations, but further conclusions highlighted weaknesses related to M&E project design, intervention strategies and overly ambitious project objectives.

Reports to UNFCCC. In May [FCCC/SBI/2014/INF.3], GEF reported to the fortieth (2014) session of the UNFCCC Subsidiary Body for Implementation on progress made in carrying out the Poznan Strategic Programme on Technology Transfer. The report reviewed relevant UNFCCC guidance; implementation of the Poznan Strategic and Long-Term Programmes on Technology Transfer; and GEF consultation with the Climate Technology Centre and Network.

In its report [FCCC/CP/2014/2 & Add.1] to the twentieth (2014) session of the UNFCCC Conference of the Parties (see p. 1181), GEF described its responses to the guidance provided by the Conference at its nineteenth (2013) session [YUN 2013, p. 995]; the role of GEF support in achieving climate benefits; and GEF initiatives in the fields of climate change, chemicals and waste, and natural resource management.

Report to CBD. In July [UNEP/CBD/COP/12/14/Add.1], the GEF Executive Secretary reported to the twelfth (2014) meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 1185). The report outlined GEF activities on biological diversity between July 2012 and June 2014, including those carried out in response to guidance received from the eleventh (2012) session of the Conference of the Parties [YUN 2012, p. 1006]. GEF approved 167 projects supporting implementation of the CBD and the Cartagena and Nagoya Protocols, representing 46 per cent of the resources allocated to the biodiversity focal area during the GEF-5 (2010–2014) programming period.

International conventions and mechanisms

In response to resolutions 68/212 [YUN 2013, p. 995], 68/213 [ibid., p. 1001] and 68/214 [ibid., p. 998], the Secretary-General, in a September note [A/69/317], transmitted reports submitted by the secretariats of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (see p. 1181); the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (see p. 1183); and the Convention on Biological Diversity (see p. 1185)—collectively known as the “Rio Conventions”.

Joint Liaison Group. The thirteenth meeting of the Joint Liaison Group of the Rio Conventions (New York, 24 September) discussed potential lines of cooperation within the Group for 2014 and 2015, in the context of joint indicator work. The Executive Secretary of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification suggested the adoption of three biophysical indicators for which data already existed and follow-up would be relatively easy. It was agreed that the Group should focus on issues where collective advances could be made, while bearing in mind the respective independent legal status and mandates of the Rio Conventions. The Group agreed to cooperate to promote the adoption of the joint indicators during upcoming meetings of the Rio Conventions.

Convention on climate change

As at 31 December, 195 States and the European Union (EU) were parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), which opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938]. South Sudan acceded during the year.

At year's end, 191 States and the EU were parties to the Kyoto Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1997, p. 1048], which entered into force in 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 1146]. There were 29 parties to the 2006 amendment to annex B of the Protocol [YUN 2006, p. 1220], which had not yet entered into force. South Africa deposited its instrument of ratification in 2014.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/212, the Secretary-General, in his September note [A/69/317], transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFCCC Executive Secretary on the outcomes of the nineteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention [YUN 2013, p. 995] and the ninth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol [ibid.], both of which took place in Warsaw, Poland from 11–23 November 2013. In Warsaw, the Conference made progress towards a new global agreement and major outcomes were the establishment of the Warsaw international mechanism for loss and damage associated with climate change impact under the Cancún Adaptation Framework [YUN 2010, p. 1019]; the adoption of a set of decisions related to finance, including long-term climate finance and the Green Climate Fund; adoption of the Warsaw Framework for REDD-plus; adoption of the modalities and procedures of the Climate Technology Centre and Network and its Advisory Board; and the adoption of general guidelines in the measurement, reporting and verification of domestically supported nationally appropriate mitigation actions by developing country parties. The Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol considered the status report presented by the UNFCCC Executive Secretary on the instruments of acceptance received by the Depositary in respect of the Doha Amendment to the Kyoto Protocol. It also provided further guidance in respect of article 6 of the Kyoto Protocol, on joint implementation, and in relation to the clean development mechanism and the anticipated revision of the mechanism's modalities and procedures in 2015.

Conference of parties. The twentieth session of the Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC (Lima, Peru, 1–14 December) [FCCC/CP/2014/10 & Add.1–3] adopted 24 decisions. Among the main outcomes of the Lima Conference were the Lima Call for Climate Action on further advancing the Durban Platform for Enhanced Action towards achieving an ambitious and meaningful global agreement in 2015, which included an annex with elements of a draft negotiating text; progress on the Warsaw international mechanism for loss and damage associated with climate change impacts, including agreement on the work plan and the composition of its executive committee; and the Lima work programme on gender, which represented progress since the decision on gender reached by the Parties in 2012 [YUN 2012, p. 1003].

The decisions adopted by the Conference concerned, among other topics, national adaptation plans; the report of the Adaptation Committee; long-term climate finance; the reports to the Conference of the Standing Committee on Finance, the Green Climate Fund, and the Global Environment Facility; the fifth review of the Financial Mechanism; further guidance to the Least Developed Countries Fund; the Fifth Assessment Report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change; guidelines on the technical review of information reported under the Convention related to greenhouse gas inventories, biennial reports and national communications by Parties included in Annex I to the Convention; training programmes for review experts for the technical review of greenhouse gas inventories and of biennial reports and national communications of Parties included in Annex I to the Convention; the Lima Ministerial Declaration on Education and Awareness-raising; the forum and work programme on the impact of the implementation of response measures; and parties included in Annex I to the Convention whose special circumstances were recognized by the Conference.

Meeting of Protocol parties. The tenth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol [FCCC/KP/CMP/2014/9 & Add.1], held concurrently with the twentieth session of the Conference of the Parties to UNFCCC, adopted eight decisions. The Conference of the Parties considered the status report presented by the UNFCCC Executive Secretary on the instruments of acceptance received by the Depositary in respect of the Doha Amendment to the Kyoto Protocol. The President of the Conference noted that the Doha Amendment required an additional 123 instruments of acceptance to enter into force. Other decisions concerned the Adaptation Fund Board and the Adaptation Fund; the completion date of the expert review process under Article 8 of the Kyoto Protocol for the first commitment period; guidance related to the clean development mechanism; guidance on the implementation of Article 6 of the Kyoto Protocol; synergy related to accreditation under the mechanisms of the Kyoto Protocol; and the outcome of the work programme on modalities and procedures for possible additional land use, land-use change and forestry activities under the clean development mechanism.

Subsidiary bodies. During the year, the Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice held its fortieth (Bonn, Germany, 4–15 June) [FCCC/SBSTA/2014/2 & Add.1] and forty-first (Lima, Peru, 1–6 December) [FCCC/SBSTA/2014/5] sessions. The Subsidiary Body for Implementation also held its fortieth (Bonn, 4–15 June) [FCCC/SBI/2014/8 & Add.1] and forty-first (Lima, 1–8 December) [FCCC/SBI/2014/21] sessions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468/Add.4], adopted resolution 69/220 without vote [agenda item 19 (d)].

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of humankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/53 of 6 December 1988, 54/222 of 22 December 1999, 62/86 of 10 December 2007, 63/32 of 26 November 2008, 64/73 of 7 December 2009, 65/159 of 20 December 2010, 66/200 of 22 December 2011, 67/210 of 21 December 2012 and 68/212 of 20 December 2013 and other resolutions and decisions relating to the protection of the global climate for present and future generations of humankind,

Recalling also the objectives, principles and provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change,

Recalling further that the global nature of climate change calls for the widest possible cooperation by all countries and their participation in an effective and appropriate international response, with a view to accelerating the reduction of global greenhouse gas emissions, and that the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change provides that parties should protect the climate system for the benefit of present and future generations of humankind on the basis of equity and in accordance with their common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the outcomes of the thirteenth to nineteenth sessions of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and of the third to ninth sessions of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020, adopted at the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Istanbul, Turkey, from 9 to 13 May 2011, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Declaration and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (samoa) Pathway,

Recalling further its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

1. Reaffirms that climate change is one of the greatest challenges of our time, expresses profound alarm that the emissions of greenhouse gases continue to rise globally, remains deeply concerned that all countries, particularly developing countries, are vulnerable to the adverse impacts of climate change and are already experiencing an increase in such impacts, including persistent drought and extreme weather events, sea-level rise, coastal erosion and ocean acidification, further threatening food security and efforts to eradicate poverty and achieve sustainable development, and in this regard emphasizes that adaptation to climate change represents an immediate and urgent global priority;

2. Notes the determination of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, expressed in its decision 2/CP.18, to adopt a protocol, another legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the Convention applicable to all parties at its twenty-first session, to be held in Paris from 30 November to 11 December 2015, and for it to come into effect and be implemented from 2020;

3. Takes note of the outcome of the nineteenth session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and of the ninth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, hosted by the Government of Poland in Warsaw from 11 to 23 November 2013, and in particular its invitation, in its decision 1/CP.19, to all parties to initiate or intensify domestic preparations for their intended nationally determined contributions, without prejudice to the legal nature of the contributions, in the context of adopting a protocol, another legal instrument or an agreed outcome with legal force under the Convention applicable to all parties towards achieving the objective of the Convention, as set out in its article 2, and to communicate them well in advance of the twenty-first session of the Conference of the Parties (by the first quarter of 2015 by those parties ready to do so) in a manner that facilitates the clarity, transparency and understanding of the intended contributions, without prejudice to the legal nature of the contributions;

4. Notes the reiteration by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention that the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Durban Platform for Enhanced Action shall be guided by the principles of the Convention;

5. Also notes the request of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention that the Ad Hoc Working Group on the Durban Platform for Enhanced Action further elaborate elements for a draft negotiating text, taking into consideration its work, including its work on mitigation, adaptation, finance, technology development and transfer, capacity-building and transparency of action and support;

6. Takes note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change on the United Nations Climate Change Conference held in Warsaw from 11 to 23 November 2013;

7. Also takes note of decision 2/CP.19, taken by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its nineteenth session, and resolves to work together to implement and operationalize the Warsaw international mechanism for loss and damage associated with climate change impacts;

8. Notes the conclusion of the Secretary-General's Climate Summit, and welcomes its contribution to the existing political momentum, with a view to galvanizing action to address climate change;

9. Notes with appreciation the hosting by the Government of Peru of the twentieth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and the tenth session of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol, in Lima from 1 to 12 December 2014;

10. Invites the secretariat of the Convention to report, through the Secretary-General, to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the work of the Conference of the Parties;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to make provisions for the sessions of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and its subsidiary bodies in his proposed programme budget for the biennium 2016–2017;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of humankind".

Convention to combat desertification

As at 31 December, 194 States and the EU were parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa (UNCCD) [YUN 1994, p. 944], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958]. Canada withdrew from the Convention and South Sudan acceded during the year.

In his September note on the implementation of UN environmental conventions [A/69/317], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Convention secretariat. The report reviewed the major outcomes of the eleventh (2013) session of the Conference of the Parties of relevance to the General Assembly; follow-up to the outcomes of the eleventh (2013) session of the Conference of the Parties of relevance to General Assembly processes, including the establishment of an intergovernmental working group and a science-policy interface mechanism; UN secretariat leadership dealing with desertification, land degradation and drought issues; desertification, land degradation and drought in the context of the sustainable development goals and the post-2015 development agenda; the interim report of the co-chairs of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals (see p. 945) submitted to the General Assembly; the discussion by the Open Working Group on possible goals and targets; celebrations of the World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought; collaboration with GEF; and exchanges regarding the next (2015) meetings of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies.

UN Decade for Deserts and the Fight against Desertification

In response to resolution 64/201 [YUN 2009, p. 1025], in which the General Assembly designated the UNCCD secretariat as the focal point for the 2010–2020 United Nations Decade for Deserts and the Fight against Desertification, the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/311] on the implementation of the Decade, highlighting the initiatives of the secretariat, including efforts to carry out activities collaboratively with Member States, stakeholders and other UN entities. Activities to implement the Decade, with the objective of enhancing awareness of desertification, land degradation and drought issues, included the organization of global and regional launches of the Decade; side events at conferences; publications; web-based outreach; support to the World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought; and joint observances and other special initiatives. The report concluded with lessons learned and recommendations for continuing to advance the objectives of the Decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468/Add.5], adopted resolution 69/221 without vote [agenda item 19 (e)].

Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/213 of 20 December 2013, as well as other resolutions relating to the implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa,

Recalling also the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled

"The future we want", in which the Conference, inter alia, recognized the economic and social significance of good land management, including soil, particularly its contribution to economic growth, biodiversity, sustainable agriculture and food security, eradicating poverty, women's empowerment, addressing climate change and improving water availability, stressed that desertification, land degradation and drought are challenges of a global dimension that continue to pose serious challenges to the sustainable development of all countries, in particular developing countries, also stressed the particular challenges this poses for Africa, the least developed countries and the landlocked developing countries, expressed deep concern at the devastating consequences of cyclical drought and famine in Africa, in particular in the Horn of Africa and the Sahel region, and called for urgent action through short-, medium- and long-term measures at all levels,

Recalling further that the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development recognized the need for urgent action to reverse land degradation and, in view of this, for striving to achieve a land-degradation-neutral world in the context of sustainable development, which should act to catalyse financial resources from a range of public and private sources,

Noting, in this regard, that combating land degradation, desertification and drought, including through sustainable land management, can contribute to easing forced migration flows influenced by a number of factors, including economic, social, security and environmental concerns, which can, in turn, reduce the current and potential fighting over resources in degraded areas,

Concerned by the devastating consequences of extreme weather phenomena in arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid regions, characterized by recurrent and long spells of drought, flooding and increasing frequency and severity of dust-storms and sandstorms, and their negative impact on the environment and the economy,

Emphasizing the need to promote sustainable land management, sustainable forest management and the restoration of degraded lands in order to combat desertification, land degradation and drought,

Noting that avoiding additional land degradation, especially in arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid areas, while restoring degraded land, is crucial in order for the rural poor to achieve food security and access to energy and water,

Noting also that desertification, land degradation, drought and climate change are closely related and that, if not addressed, they would pose a serious challenge to sustainable development for all countries, in particular developing countries,

Expressing concern about the fact that currently land degradation, including desertification, affects nearly 2 billion hectares of land, with many regions experiencing more frequent, prolonged periods of drought or flooding, leading to the loss of fertile topsoil through erosion, and that as land becomes degraded it loses the capacity to support livelihoods, which may influence communities to seek out other arable land, including forests and wetlands,

Noting that degraded land, if recovered, would, inter alia, contribute to restoring natural resources, thus potentially improving food security and nutrition in the affected countries, and in the process could, inter alia, contribute to the absorption of carbon emissions,

Noting also the need for enhanced coordination and cooperation at all levels among the parties to and the secretariats of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity, while respecting their individual mandates,

Underlining the cross-sectoral nature of desertification, land degradation and drought mitigation, including their economic, social and environmental dimensions, and in this regard inviting all relevant United Nations organizations to cooperate with the secretariat of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, within their respective mandates, in supporting an effective response to those challenges,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting the decision of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification to establish a science-policy interface to facilitate a two-way science-policy dialogue and ensure delivery of policy-relevant information, knowledge and advice on desertification, land degradation and drought,

Recognizing the endorsement of the Voluntary Guidelines on the Responsible Governance of Tenure of Land, Fisheries and Forests in the Context of National Food Security by the Committee on World Food Security in 2012,

Welcoming the offer of the Government of Turkey to host the twelfth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention in 2015,

Recalling its resolution 64/201 of 21 December 2009, in which it designated the secretariat of the Convention as the focal point of the United Nations Decade for Deserts and the Fight against Desertification (2010–2020),

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa;

2. Calls upon Member States to take urgent action to reverse desertification, land degradation and drought, as appropriate, with the assistance of the United Nations system, relevant regional and international organizations, multilateral agencies, major groups and other stakeholders;

3. Reaffirms its resolve, in accordance with the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, to take coordinated action, nationally, regionally and internationally, to globally monitor land degradation and restore degraded lands in arid, semi-arid and dry subhumid areas;

4. Encourages the coordination and collaboration of all stakeholders in enhancing the resilience and harnessing the potential of the affected countries;

5. Reiterates that the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development has reaffirmed women's vital role and their full and equal participation and leadership in all areas of sustainable development, and in this regard invites donors and international organizations, including the organizations of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions, regional banks and major groups, including the private sector, to fully integrate their commitments and their considerations on gender equality and women's empowerment and to ensure the participation of women and effective gender mainstreaming in their decision-making in combating desertification, land degradation and drought;

6. Notes the importance of the participation of civil society organizations and other stakeholders, including the private sector, in the sessions of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and its subsidiary bodies in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Conference of the Parties, as well as the involvement of those stakeholders in the implementation of the Convention and the 10-year strategic plan and framework to enhance its implementation (2008–2018);

7. Stresses the importance of the further development and implementation of scientifically based, sound and socially inclusive methods and indicators for monitoring and assessing the extent of desertification, land degradation and drought, as well as the importance of efforts under way to promote scientific research in accordance with the Convention, and in this respect invites the secretariats of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity, within their respective mandates, to collaborate on their activities whenever they are related to desertification, land degradation and drought;

8. Reiterates the need for cooperation through the sharing of climate and weather information, forecasting and early warning systems related to desertification, land degradation and drought, as well as to dust storms and sandstorms, at the global, regional and subregional levels, and in this regard invites States and relevant organizations to cooperate in the sharing of related information, forecasting and early warning systems;

9. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Decade for Deserts and the Fight against Desertification (2010–2020);

10. Notes with appreciation the activities undertaken by the secretariat of the Convention and encourages Member States, regional commissions, multilateral agencies and other stakeholders to support the secretariat of the Convention in organizing special activities in observance of the Decade;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-fifth session a report on the implementation of the United Nations Decade for Deserts and the Fight against Desertification (2010–2020);

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Sustainable development”, the sub-item entitled “Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa”;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Convention on Biological Diversity

As at 31 December, 193 States and the EU were parties to the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683], which entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810]. South Sudan acceded to the Convention during the year.

At year's end, the number of parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety, which was adopted in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 973] and entered into force in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 1051], rose to 167 States and the EU. Iraq and the United Arab Emirates acceded during the year.

In his September note [A/69/317] on the implementation of UN environmental conventions, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the secretariat of the Convention, submitted in accordance with resolution 68/214 [YUN 2013, p. 998]. The report recapitulated the preparations for the twelfth (2014) meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (see below) and for the seventh (2014) meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety (see below). It also discussed progress in the implementation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020 and the Aichi Biodiversity Targets, and reviewed activities conducted in follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, including for the International Day for Biodiversity, observed on 22 May in over 71 countries under the theme of “Island Biodiversity”, and for the sustainable development goals, with a view to mainstreaming biodiversity in the consideration of the post-2015 development agenda.

Conference of parties. The twelfth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity (Pyeongchang, Republic of Korea, 6–17 October) [UNEP/CBD/COP/12/29] adopted the Gangwon Declaration on Biodiversity for Sustainable Development, which called for further integration and mainstreaming of biodiversity into the post-2015 development agenda. The Conference also adopted 35 decisions, of which the first six together formed the Pyeongchang road map for the enhanced implementation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020 and achievement of the Aichi Biodiversity Targets. The Conference noted the conclusions of the fourth (2014) edition of the Global Biodiversity Outlook (GBO-4), which contained a mid-term review of progress on the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020, and requested the Executive Secretary of the Convention to identify ways and means to address the key scientific and technical needs related to implementation of the Strategic Plan and to report to the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice on those matters before the thirteenth (2016) meeting of the Conference of the Parties. Subsequent decisions focused on mainstreaming gender considerations; stakeholder engagement; biodiversity and tourism development; article 8(j) (traditional knowledge, innovations and practices); access and benefit-sharing; the Global Strategy for Plant Conservation 2011–2020; invasive alien species; sustainable use of biodiversity; ecosystem conservation and restoration; biodiversity and climate change and disaster risk reduction; biodiversity and human health; marine and coastal biodiversity; synthetic biology; the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services; the multi-year programme of work of the Conference of the Parties up to 2020; administration of the Convention and the budget for its Trust Funds; and the dates and venues of the thirteenth (2016), fourteenth (2018) and fifteenth (2020) meetings of the Conference of the Parties. On improving the efficiency of structures and processes of the Convention, the Conference decided to hold its future ordinary meetings within a two-week period that would also include the meetings of the Conference of Parties serving as the meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol and the meetings of the Conference of Parties serving as the meeting of the Parties to the Nagoya Protocol. It also established the Subsidiary Body on Implementation, which would meet in each intersessional period and serve the Convention as well as its respective Protocols.

Subsidiary body. During the year, the Subsidiary Body on Scientific, Technical and Technological Advice held its eighteenth meeting (Pyeongchang, 6–17 October) [UNEP/CBD/COP/12/3], at which it adopted 14 recommendations for consideration by the twelfth (2014) meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (see above).

Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety

The seventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety (Pyeongchang, 29 September–3 October) [UNEP/CBD/BS/COP-MOP/7/16] adopted 13 decisions concerning compliance with the Protocol; the operation and activities of the Biosafety Clearing-House; assessment and review of the effectiveness of the Protocol (article 35); contained use of living modified organisms; matters related to the financial mechanism and resources; the report of the Executive Secretary on the administration of the Protocol and on budgetary matters; handling, transport, packaging and identification (article 18); unintentional transboundary movements and emergency measures (article 17); the Nagoya-Kuala Lumpur Supplementary Protocol on Liability and Redress; risk assessment and risk management (articles 15 and 16); socioeconomic considerations; and monitoring and reporting (article 33). The Conference also decided to undertake the third assessment and review of the effectiveness of the Protocol at its eighth (2016) meeting, in combination with the mid-term evaluation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020 (see above).

Nagoya Protocol on Access and Benefit-Sharing

After receiving its fiftieth instrument of ratification on 14 July, the Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from their Utilization entered into force, 90 days later, on 12 October. The first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Nagoya Protocol (Pyeongchang, 13–17 October) [UNEP/CBD/NP/COP-MOP/1/10] adopted 13 decisions to advance implementation of the Protocol. The Conference adopted modalities for the operation of the Access and Benefit-sharing Clearing-House, which provided a platform where Parties could submit, exchange and update the information required under the Protocol, and requested the Executive Secretary of the Convention to implement the Clearing-house and promote its use. Subsequent decisions concerned the rules of procedure for meetings; monitoring and reporting; cooperative procedures and institutional mechanisms to promote compliance with the Protocol and to address cases of non-compliance; model contractual clauses, voluntary codes of conduct, guidelines and best practices and/or standards; the financial mechanism; resource mobilization; measures to assist in capacity-building and capacity development; measures to raise awareness of the importance of genetic resources and associated traditional knowledge; the need for and modalities of a global multilateral benefitsharing mechanism; improving the efficiency of structures and processes under the Convention and the Protocols; and the programme budget for the biennium following the Protocol's entry into force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/68/468/Add.6], adopted resolution 69/222 without vote [agenda item 19 (f)].

Implementation of the Convention on Biological Diversity and its contribution to sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 64/203 of 21 December 2009, 65/161 of 20 December 2010, 66/202 of 22 December 2011, 67/212 of 21 December 2012, 68/214 of 20 December 2013 and its previous resolutions relating to the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Recalling also the outcomes of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in June 1992, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation) and the outcome document of the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals convened by the President of the General Assembly,

Recalling further its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”, and, inter alia, the commitments concerning biodiversity contained therein,

Reaffirming also the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and its principles,

Recalling that the objectives of the Convention, to be pursued in accordance with its relevant provisions, are the conservation of biological diversity, the sustainable use of its components and the fair and equitable sharing of the benefits arising out of the utilization of genetic resources, including by appropriate access to genetic resources, by appropriate transfer of relevant technologies, taking into account all rights over those resources and to technologies, and by appropriate funding,

Reaffirming the intrinsic value of biological diversity as well as the ecological, genetic, social, economic, scientific, educational, cultural, recreational and aesthetic values of biological diversity and its critical role in maintaining ecosystems that provide essential services, which are critical foundations for sustainable development and human well-being,

Recognizing that the achievement of the three objectives of the Convention is crucial for sustainable development, poverty eradication and the improvement of human well-being and a major factor underpinning the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Reaffirming that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, States have the sovereign right to exploit their own resources pursuant to their own environmental policies and the responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction,

Recalling that, in its resolution 65/161, the General Assembly declared 2011–2020 the United Nations Decade on Biodiversity, with a view to contributing to the implementation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020,

Recognizing that the traditional knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous peoples and local communities make an important contribution to the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity and that their wider application can support social well-being and sustainable livelihoods,

Taking note of the decision adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity at its twelfth meeting entitled “Article 8 (j) and related provisions”,

Recalling the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples,

Recognizing the vital role that women play in the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, and reaffirming the need for the full participation of women at all levels of policymaking and implementation for the conservation of biological diversity,

Recognizing also the important role of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, an international agreement that stands at the intersection between trade, the environment and development, promotes the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity, should contribute to tangible benefits for local people and ensures that no species entering into international trade is threatened with extinction, recognizing further the economic, social and environmental impacts of poaching and of illicit trafficking in wildlife, where firm and strengthened action needs to be taken on both the supply and demand sides, emphasizing in this regard the importance of effective international cooperation among relevant multilateral environmental agreements and international organizations, and further stressing the importance of basing the listing of species on agreed criteria,

Noting the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, at its tenth meeting, of the Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from Their Utilization to the Convention on Biological Diversity, and acknowledging the role of access to genetic resources and equitable benefit-sharing arising from their utilization in contributing to the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, poverty eradication and environmental sustainability and, thereby, to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals,

Noting also that 91 States and 1 regional economic integration organization have signed and that 56 States and 1 regional economic integration organization that are parties to the Convention have deposited their instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession to the Nagoya Protocol, and noting in this regard that the Protocol entered into force on 12 October 2014,

Noting further that the Nagoya Protocol, the objective of which is the fair and equitable sharing of the benefits arising from the utilization of genetic resources, including by appropriate access to genetic resources, by appropriate transfer of relevant technologies, taking into account all rights over those resources and to technologies, and by appropriate funding, contributes to the conservation of biological diversity and the sustainable use of its components;

Noting that 50 States and 1 regional economic integration organization have signed and that 26 States and 1 regional economic integration organization that are parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety to the Convention on Biological Diversity have deposited their instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession to the Nagoya-Kuala Lumpur Supplementary Protocol on Liability and Redress to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety,

Noting also that 193 States and 1 regional economic integration organization are parties to the Convention and that 167 States and 1 regional economic integration organization are parties to the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety,

Recalling the adoption by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its ninth meeting of the strategy for resource mobilization in support of the achievement of the three objectives of the Convention, as well as decision X/3, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its tenth meeting, on the review of its implementation, including the establishment of preliminary targets by the Conference of the Parties in its decision XI/4, adopted at its eleventh meeting,

Noting the outcomes of the twelfth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, the seventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Cartagena Protocol and the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties serving as the Meeting of the Parties to the Nagoya Protocol, all held in Pyeongchang, Republic of Korea, in 2014,

1. Takes note of the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity;

2. Notes with appreciation the entry into force of the Nagoya Protocol on Access to Genetic Resources and the Fair and Equitable Sharing of Benefits Arising from Their Utilization to the Convention on Biological Diversity on 12 October 2014;

3. Takes note of the holding and outcomes of the twelfth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, held in Pyeongchang, Republic of Korea, in 2014;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the Gangwon Declaration on Biodiversity for Sustainable Development, adopted at the high-level segment of the twelfth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

5. Encourages the respective parties, in close collaboration with relevant stakeholders, to take concrete measures towards achieving the objectives of the Convention on Biological Diversity and the Nagoya Protocol, requests the parties, in close collaboration with relevant stakeholders, to coherently and efficiently implement the obligations and commitments under the Convention and the Protocol, and in this regard emphasizes the need to comprehensively address at all levels the difficulties that impede their full implementation;

6. Recognizes that the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity can significantly contribute to disaster risk reduction and to reducing the adverse impacts of climate change, including by adding resilience to fragile ecosystems and making them less vulnerable;

7. Urges the parties to the Convention to facilitate the transfer of technology for the effective implementation of the Convention in accordance with its provisions, in this regard takes note of the strategy for the practical implementation of the programme of work on technology transfer and scientific and technical cooperation developed by the Ad Hoc Technical Expert Group on Technology Transfer and Scientific and Technological Cooperation, as well as of decision XI/2, entitled "Review of progress in implementation of national biodiversity strategies and action plans and related capacity-building support to parties", and also takes note of the relevant decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its twelfth meeting in this regard;

8. Notes with appreciation the efforts made by the secretariat of the Convention, parties to the Convention and the Global Environment Facility, as the financial mechanism of the Convention, in conjunction with United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, as well as other entities, in organizing capacity-building workshops to support countries in the updating of national biodiversity strategies and action plans, with a view to enhancing capacity and addressing the need for human, technical and financial resources to implement the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020 and the Aichi Biodiversity Targets adopted by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention at its tenth meeting, in particular for developing countries;

9. Urges parties to promote the mainstreaming of gender considerations in developing, implementing and revising their national and, where appropriate, regional biodiversity strategies and action plans and equivalent instruments in implementing the three objectives of the Convention;

10. Calls upon Governments and all stakeholders to take appropriate measures to mainstream consideration of the socioeconomic impacts and benefits of the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity and its components, as well as ecosystems that provide essential services, into relevant programmes and policies at all levels, in accordance with national legislation, circumstances and priorities;

11. Reaffirms the importance of continuing to pursue more efficient and coherent implementation of the three objectives of the Convention, and calls upon parties and stakeholders to strengthen international cooperation measures for the fulfilment of obligations contained in the Convention, including through addressing implementation gaps, in particular with regard to article 15 of the Convention;

12. Also reaffirms the importance of the achievement of the Aichi Biodiversity Targets and the implementation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020 by the parties to the Convention;

13. Recognizes that parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity have reiterated that resources, financial, human and technical, need to be mobilized from all sources, and that this should be balanced with the effective implementation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020, stresses the need for further consideration of the evaluation of all resources mobilized in terms of the biodiversity outcomes achieved, and in this regard welcomes the decision of the parties to the Convention on an overall substantial increase in total biodiversity-related funding for the implementation of the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity 2011–2020 from a variety of sources, including national and international resource mobilization, international cooperation and the exploration of new and innovative financial mechanisms, and takes note of the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its twelfth meeting in this regard;

14. Invites countries that have not yet done so to ratify or accede to the Convention;

15. Invites parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to the Nagoya Protocol, and invites the Executive Secretary and the Global Environment Facility, within its mandate as the financial mechanism of the Convention, in collaboration with relevant organizations, to continue supporting capacity-building and development activities to support the ratification and implementation of the Protocol;

16. Takes note of the work done by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Intersessional Working Group on Article 8 (j) and Related Provisions, and in this regard invites the secretariat of the Convention, through the Secretary-General, to report on the progress made when reporting on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

17. Stresses the importance of continued consideration of the issue of biodiversity, and encourages Member States and all stakeholders to give due consideration to this issue in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

18. Takes note of the second plenary meeting of the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services, which aims to provide the best available policy-relevant information on biodiversity to assist decision makers;

19. Stresses the importance of the engagement of the private sector and other stakeholders in the implementation of the three objectives of the Convention and in the achievement of the biodiversity targets, invites them to align their policies and practices more explicitly with the objectives of the Convention, including through partnerships, in accordance with national legislation, circumstances and priorities, and in this regard stresses the importance of the ongoing work of the Global Partnership on Business and Biodiversity;

20. Notes the ongoing work of the Joint Liaison Group of the secretariats and offices of the relevant subsidiary bodies of the Convention on Biological Diversity, the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa, and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (the Rio conventions) and the Liaison Group of Biodiversity-related Conventions, acknowledges the importance of improving coherence in the implementation of those conventions, recognizes the importance of enhancing synergies among the biodiversity-related conventions, without prejudice to their specific objectives, and encourages the conferences of the parties to the biodiversity-related multilateral environmental agreements to consider strengthening efforts in this regard, taking into account relevant experiences and bearing in mind the respective independent legal status and mandates of those instruments;

21. Invites the secretariat of the Convention to report, through the Secretary-General, at its seventieth session, on the implementation of the present resolution, including progress in the implementation of the Convention and the Aichi Biodiversity Targets, and on difficulties encountered in the process of their implementation;

Vienna Convention and Montreal Protocol

As at 31 December, 196 States and the EU were parties to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 810].

The number of parties to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, which was adopted in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 686], included 196 States and the EU. Parties to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol [YUN 1990, p. 522] numbered 196 States and the EU. Parties to the 1992 Amendment [YUN 1992, p. 684] numbered 196 States and the EU. Parties to the 1997 Amendment [YUN 1997, p. 1049] numbered 196 States and the EU, with Libya and Saudi Arabia becoming parties in 2014. Parties to the 1999 Amendment [YUN 1999, p. 986] numbered 196 States and the EU, with Kazakhstan, Libya, Mauritania and Saudi Arabia becoming parties during the year.

Conference of parties and Meeting of Protocol parties. The combined tenth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Vienna Convention and twenty-sixth meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol (Paris, 17–21 November) [UNEP/OzL.Conv.10/7-UNEP/OzL.Pro.26/10] adopted 22 decisions concerning, among other topics, the status of ratification of the Vienna Convention, the Montreal Protocol and the London, Copenhagen, Montreal and Beijing amendments to the Montreal Protocol; the General Trust Fund for Financing Activities on Research and Systematic Observations Relevant to the Vienna Convention; financial reports and budgets for the Vienna Convention and the Montreal Protocol; essential-use nominations for controlled substances for 2015; the essential-use exemption for chlorofluorocarbon 113 for aerospace applications in the Russian Federation; an essential-use exemption for laboratory and analytical uses for 2015 in China; the global laboratory and analytical-use exemption; critical-use exemptions for methyl bromide for 2015 and 2016; availability of recovered, recycled or reclaimed halons; measures to facilitate the monitoring of trade in hydrochlorofluorocarbons and substituting substances; response to the report by the Technology and Economic Assessment Panel on information on alternatives to ozone-depleting substances; 2015–2017 replenishment of the Multilateral Fund; extension of the fixed-exchange-rate mechanism to the 2015–2017 replenishment of the Multilateral Fund; data and information provided by the parties in accordance with Article 7 of the Montreal Protocol; compliance by specific State parties with their protocol obligations; membership in the Technology and Economic Assessment Panel, the Implementation Committee and the Executive Committee of the Multilateral Fund; and the dates and location of the twenty-seventh (2015) and twenty-eighth (2016) meetings of the Parties.

Subsidiary bodies. During the year, the Open-ended Working Group of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol held its thirty-fourth meeting (Paris, 14–18 July) [UNEP/OzL.Pro/WG.1/34/6]; and the Implementation Committee under the Non-Compliance Procedure for the Montreal Protocol held its fifty-second (Paris, 9–10 July) [UNEP/OzL.Pro/ImpCom/52/4] and fifty-third (Paris, 14–15 November) [UNEP/OzL.Pro/ImpCom/53/4] meetings.

Convention on air pollution

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution [YUN 1979, p. 710], which entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 645], remained at 50 States and the EU. Eight protocols to the Convention dealt with the programme for monitoring and evaluation of pollutants in Europe (1984); the reduction of sulphur emissions or their transboundary fluxes by at least 30 per cent (1985); the control of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes (1988); the control of volatile organic compounds or their transboundary fluxes (1991); the further reduction of sulphur emissions (1994); heavy metals (1998); persistent organic pollutants (1998); and the abatement of acidification, eutrophication and ground-level ozone (1999). Amendments to the protocol on persistent organic pollutants were adopted in 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1018].

The thirty-third session of the Executive Body for the Convention (Geneva, 8–11 December) [ECE/EB.AIR/127 & Add.1] adopted eight decisions, including those concerning the improvement of guidance for adjustments under the 1999 Protocol to Abate Acidification, Eutrophication and Ground-level Ozone to emission reduction commitments or to inventories for the purposes of comparing total national emissions with them; establishment of the Task Force on Techno-economic Issues; leadership of the Task Force of Reactive Nitrogen; and the compliance by specific States parties with their protocol obligations.

Subsidiary body. During the year, the Implementation Committee held its thirty-third (Oslo, Norway, 26–28 May) and thirty-fourth (Geneva, 8–10 September) sessions. It submitted its seventeenth report [ECE/EB.AIR/2014/2], which contained information on the Committee's 2014 activities and recommendations related to the compliance of States parties with their reporting obligations. An additional report [ECE/EB.AIR/2014/3] provided supplementary information to the seventeenth report.

Basel, Rotterdam and Stockholm Conventions

The fifth joint meeting to enhance cooperation and coordination between the regional centres under the Basel and Stockholm Conventions (Geneva, 26–27 November) focused on preparing the performance and sustainability report of the regional centres for the consideration of the Conferences of the Parties in 2015, as well as on enhancing the regional delivery of technical assistance for implementation of the chemicals and wastes conventions by capitalizing on existing and emerging opportunities.

Basel Convention

As at 31 December, 180 States and the EU were parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], which entered into force in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 685]. The 1995 Amendment to the Convention [YUN 1995, p. 1333], not yet in force, had been ratified, accepted or approved by 80 parties, with Benin, Colombia and the Congo becoming parties during the year. The number of parties to the 1999 Basel Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage resulting from Transboundary Movement of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal [YUN 1999, p. 998], not yet in force, remained at 11.

Subsidiary bodies. The Open-ended Working Group on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and Their Disposal held its ninth meeting (Geneva, 16–19 September) [UNEP/CHW/OEWG.9/15]. The Working Group adopted 10 decisions, including those concerning follow-up to the Cartagena Declaration on the Prevention, Minimization and Recovery of Hazardous Wastes and Other Wastes; options for the Working Group's operations; technical guidelines for the environmentally sound management of wastes consisting of, containing or contaminated with persistent organic pollutants or mercury; technical guidelines on transboundary movements of electronic and electrical waste and used electrical and electronic equipment; national reporting; consultation with the Committee for Administering the Mechanism for Promoting Implementation and Compliance of the Convention; the provision of further legal clarity; the partnership for Action on Computing Equipment; and the work programme for 2016–2017.

The Implementation and Compliance Committee held its eleventh meeting (Geneva, 22–24 September) [UNEP/CHW/CC.11/16], at which it conducted a review of general issues of compliance and implementation under the Convention. It also considered and adopted 13 decisions on specific submissions aimed at resolving States parties' implementation and compliance difficulties with regard to their national reporting obligations.

Stockholm Convention

As at 31 December, 177 States and the EU were parties to the 2001 Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) [YUN 2001, p. 971], which entered into force in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1066].

Subsidiary body. During the year, the Persistent Organic Pollutants Review Committee held its tenth meeting (Rome, Italy, 27–30 October) [UNEP/POPS/POPRC.10/10 & Add.1, 2]. It adopted seven decisions concerning pentachlorophenol and its salts and esters; decabromodiphenyl ether; dicofol; the process for the evaluation of perfluorooctane sulfonic acid, its salts and perfluorooctane sulfonyl fluoride pursuant to Annex B to the Convention; guidance on alternatives to perfluorooctane sulfonic acid, its salts, perfluoroo-tane sulfonyl fluoride and their related chemicals; coordination and collaboration with other scientific bodies; and effective participation in the work of the Committee.

Rotterdam Convention

As at 31 December, 153 States and the EU were parties to the 1998 Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade [YUN 1998, p. 997], which entered into force in 2004 [YUN 2004, p. 1063].

Subsidiary body. During the year, the Chemical Review Committee held its tenth meeting (Rome, Italy, 22–24 October) [UNEP/FAO/RC/CRC.10/10]. It adopted six decisions on methamidophos, fenthion, polychlorinated naphthalenes, short-chained chlorinated paraffins, tributyltin compounds, and coordination and collaboration with other scientific bodies. The Committee adopted draft decision guidance documents for methamidophos and fenthion that would be forwarded to the Conference of the Parties for consideration. It also recommended that short-chained chlorinated paraffins and tributyltin compounds be listed in Annex III to the Convention as industrial chemicals.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

In 2014, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) held its thirty-eighth (Yokohama, Japan, 25–29 March), thirty-ninth (Berlin, Germany, 7–12 April) and fortieth (Copenhagen, Denmark, 27–31 October) sessions.

At its thirty-eighth session, the Chair invited the Panel to accept the actions of the tenth session of the Working Group II. The Panel accepted the Summary for Policymakers of the Working Group II contribution to the IPCC Fifth Assessment Report.

At its thirty-ninth session, the Panel approved decisions related to the IPCC trust fund and programme and budget, the admission of observer organizations and the future work of IPCC. The Panel also accepted the Summary for Policymakers of the Working Group III contribution to the Fifth Assessment Report.

At its fortieth session, the Panel approved the budget for 2015 and adopted other budget decisions that were annexed to the session report. The Panel approved the draft Summary for Policymakers of the Synthesis Report of the Fifth Assessment Report, and adopted the draft longer report of the Synthesis Report of the Fifth Assessment Report and admitted three organizations as observers to the IPCC. The Panel also discussed the future work of IPCC, communication and outreach activities, committee reports, progress reports, and matters related to UNFCCC and other international bodies.

Sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/205 [YUN 2012, p. 1014], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/314] on the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea. The report described national- and regional-level activities to address marine pollution; the sustainable management of shared coastal and marine resources; climate change and disaster risk reduction; social and economic development; sustainable oceans governance; and the development of human capacity. The report also covered the activities of the Commission on the Caribbean Sea and the Third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, held under the theme of “The sustainable development of small island developing States through genuine and durable partnerships”. The report discussed the possible legal and financial implications of the concept of the designation of the Caribbean Sea as a “special area in the context of sustainable development”, and concluded that Member States of the region continued to work collaboratively on behalf of their shared resource--the Caribbean Sea--including by addressing the economic, social and environmental aspects of development.

Annexed to the Secretary-General’s report was the report of the Association of Caribbean States on progress made in the implementation of resolution 67/205, which discussed the institutionalization of and international support for its Commission on the Caribbean Sea; progress with regard to relevant international agreements; programmes to promote fisheries management and marine biodiversity conservation; disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation, management, relief and recovery; and legal and financial implications of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468/Add.2], adopted resolution 69/216 without vote [agenda item 19 (b)].

Towards the sustainable development of the Caribbean Sea for present and future generations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles and commitments enshrined in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, the principles embodied in the Declaration of Barbados, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want", and the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway, as well as other relevant declarations and international instruments, Recalling the Declaration and review document adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-second special session,

Taking into account all its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 54/225 of 22 December 1999, 55/203 of 20 December 2000, 57/261 of 20 December 2002, 59/230 of 22 December 2004, 61/197 of 20 December 2006, 63/214 of 19 December 2008, 65/155 of 20 December 2010 and 67/205 of 21 December 2012,

Taking into account also the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region, signed at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, on 24 March 1983, and the protocols thereto, which contain the definition of the wider Caribbean region of which the Caribbean Sea is part,

Reaffirming the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which provides the legal framework for ocean activities, and emphasizing its fundamental character, conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole through an integrated, interdisciplinary and intersectoral approach,

Recalling the Convention on Biological Diversity and other biodiversity-related conventions, including the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora and the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat,

Emphasizing the importance of national, regional and global action and cooperation in the marine sector as recognized by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Recalling the relevant work done by the International Maritime Organization,

Considering that the Caribbean Sea area includes a large number of States, countries and territories, most of which are developing countries and small island developing States that are ecologically fragile and socially and economically vulnerable and are also affected, inter alia, by their limited capacity, narrow resource base, need for financial resources, high levels of poverty and the resulting social problems, and the challenges and opportunities of globalization and trade liberalization,

Recognizing that the Caribbean Sea has unique biodiversity and highly fragile ecosystems,

Recognizing also that the Caribbean has been shown to be the most tourism-dependent region in the world relative to its size,

Noting that the Caribbean Sea, when compared with all other large marine ecosystems, is surrounded by the largest number of countries in the world,

Emphasizing that the Caribbean countries have a high degree of vulnerability occasioned by climate change, climate variability and associated phenomena, such as the rise in sea level, the El Niño phenomenon and the potential increase in the frequency and intensity of natural disasters caused by hurricanes, floods and droughts, and that they are also subject to natural disasters, such as those caused by volcanoes, tsunamis and earthquakes, which increase their sustainable development challenges,

Bearing in mind the heavy reliance of most of the Caribbean economies on their coastal areas, as well as on the marine environment in general, to achieve their sustainable development needs and goals,

Acknowledging that the intensive use of the Caribbean Sea for maritime transport, as well as the considerable number and interlocking character of the maritime areas under national jurisdiction where Caribbean countries exercise their rights and duties under international law present a challenge for the effective management of resources,

Noting the problem of marine pollution caused, inter alia, by land-based sources and the continuing threat of pollution from ship-generated waste and sewage, as well as from the accidental release of hazardous and noxious substances in the Caribbean Sea area,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions of the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the safe transport of radioactive materials,

Mindful of the diversity of and dynamic interaction and competition among socioeconomic activities for the use of the coastal areas and the marine environment and their resources,

Mindful also of the efforts of the Caribbean countries to address in a more holistic manner the sectoral issues relating to the management of the wider Caribbean Sea region and, in so doing, to promote the integrated management of the wider Caribbean Sea region in the context of sustainable development, through a regional cooperative effort among Caribbean countries,

Noting the significant progress made on regional ocean governance through the formulation of the strategic action programme of the Caribbean Large Marine Ecosystem project, endorsed by ministers in 21 countries of the region,

Welcoming the continued efforts of the States members of the Association of Caribbean States to develop and implement regional initiatives to promote the sustainable conservation and management of coastal and marine resources, and recognizing in this regard the firm commitment by Heads of State and Government of the Association to take the steps necessary to ensure the recognition of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, without prejudice to relevant international law,

Recalling the creation by the Association of Caribbean States of the Caribbean Sea Commission, and welcoming its ongoing work,

Cognizant of the importance of the Caribbean Sea to present and future generations and to the heritage and the continuing economic well-being and sustenance of people living in the area and of the urgent need for the countries of the region to take appropriate steps for its preservation and protection, with the support of the international community,

1. Recognizes that the Caribbean Sea is an area of unique biodiversity and a highly fragile ecosystem that requires relevant regional and international development partners to work together to develop and implement regional initiatives to promote the sustainable conservation and management of coastal and marine resources, including the consideration of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, including its designation as such without prejudice to international law;

2. Notes the efforts of the Caribbean States and the work undertaken by the Caribbean Sea Commission of the Association of Caribbean States, including the development of their concept of the designation of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, and invites the international community to support such efforts;

3. Welcomes the plan of action adopted by the Caribbean Sea Commission, including its scientific and technical components and its governance and outreach components, and invites the international community and the United Nations system to enhance their support, including financial, technical and capacity-building assistance, as appropriate, to Caribbean countries and their regional organizations in their efforts to implement the plan of action;

4. Also welcomes the resources provided by some donors to support the work of the Caribbean Sea Commission, and invites the international community to continue and to enhance its support, as appropriate, to the Commission, including through the provision of financial resources, capacity-building and technical support, the transfer of technology on mutually agreed terms and the sharing of experience in the areas of work of the Commission;

5. Recognizes the efforts of Caribbean countries to create conditions leading to sustainable development aimed at combating poverty and inequality, and in this regard notes with interest the initiatives of the Association of Caribbean States in the focal areas of sustainable tourism, trade, transport and natural disasters;

6. Calls upon the United Nations system and the international community to assist Caribbean countries and their regional organizations, as appropriate, in their efforts to ensure the protection of the Caribbean Sea from degradation as a result of pollution from ships, in particular through the illegal release of oil and other harmful substances, and pollution from the illegal dumping or accidental release of hazardous waste, including radioactive materials, nuclear waste and dangerous chemicals, in violation of relevant international rules and standards, as well as pollution from land-based activities;

7. Invites the Association of Caribbean States to submit to the Secretary-General a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, for consideration by the General Assembly at its seventy-first session;

8. Calls upon all States to become parties to the relevant international agreements to enhance maritime safety and to promote the protection of the marine environment of the Caribbean Sea from pollution, damage and degradation from ships and ship-generated waste;

9. Welcomes, in this regard, the Special Area designation for the wider Caribbean region under annex V to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 relating thereto, which entered into force in May 2011;

10. Supports the efforts of Caribbean countries to implement sustainable fisheries management programmes and to meet the principles of the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations;

11. Calls upon States, taking into consideration the Convention on Biological Diversity, to develop national, regional and international programmes to halt the loss of marine biodiversity in the Caribbean Sea, in particular fragile ecosystems such as coral reefs and mangroves;

12. Notes with deep concern that invasive alien species, such as Pterois miles and P. volitans, known as lionfish, constitute an emerging threat to biodiversity in the wider Caribbean region, and urges the United Nations system and the international community to continue to provide assistance and support in addressing this issue in the region;

13. Invites Member States and intergovernmental organizations of the United Nations system to continue their efforts to assist Caribbean countries in becoming parties to the relevant conventions and protocols concerning the management, protection and sustainable utilization of Caribbean Sea resources and in implementing those conventions and protocols effectively;

14. Calls upon the international community, the United Nations system and the multilateral financial institutions, and invites the Global Environment Facility, within its mandate, to actively support the national and regional activities of the Caribbean States for the promotion of the sustainable management of coastal and marine resources;

15. Expresses deep concern about the severe destruction and devastation caused to several countries by heightened hurricane activity in the wider Caribbean region in recent years;

16. Notes with appreciation the ongoing activities of the Intergovernmental Coordination Group for the Tsunami and Other Coastal Hazards Warning System for the Caribbean and Adjacent Regions of the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission, and invites Member States and other partners to support early warning systems in the region;

17. Urges the United Nations system and the international community to continue to provide aid and assistance to the countries of the Caribbean region in the implementation of their long-term programmes of disaster prevention, preparedness, mitigation, management, relief and recovery, on the basis of their development priorities, through the integration of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction into a comprehensive approach to sustainable development;

18. Acknowledges the pivotal role of the Association of Caribbean States in regional dialogue and in the consolidation of a wider Caribbean cooperation zone in the field of disaster risk reduction, as well as the importance of the international community in deepening existing cooperation and consolidating new initiatives with that regional mechanism in the context of the outcomes of the High-level Conference on Disaster Reduction of the Association of Caribbean States, held in Saint-Marc, Haiti, from 14 to 16 November 2007, and the plan of action approved by the Ministerial Council of the Association upon the recommendation of the Conference;

19. Invites Member States, international and regional organizations and other relevant stakeholders to consider training programmes for the development of a human resources capacity at different levels and to develop research aimed at enhancing the food security of Caribbean countries, as well as the sustainable management of renewable marine and coastal resources;

20. Calls upon Member States to improve, as a matter of priority, their emergency response capabilities and the containment of environmental damage, particularly in the Caribbean Sea, in the event of natural disasters or an accident or incident relating to maritime navigation;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session, under the sub-item entitled "Follow-up to and implementation of the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States" of the item entitled "Sustainable development", on the implementation of the present resolution, including a section on the possible legal and financial implications of the concept of the Caribbean Sea as a special area in the context of sustainable development, including its designation as such, without prejudice to relevant international law, taking into account the views expressed by Member States and relevant regional organizations.

Oil slick in Lebanon

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/206 [YUN 2013, p. 1010], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/313] reviewing progress in implementing resolutions 61/194 [YUN 2006, p. 1215], 62/188 [YUN 2007, p. 1053], 63/211 [YUN 2008, p. 1150], 64/195 [YUN 2009, p. 1011], 65/147 [YUN 2010, p. 1015], 66/192 [YUN 2011, p. 991], 67/201 [YUN 2012, p. 1017] and 68/206 on the oil slick on Lebanese shores that resulted from the destruction by the Israeli Air Force of oil storage tanks in Lebanon following the outbreak of hostilities between Israel and the paramilitary group Hizbullah in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 574]. Some 15,000 tons of fuel oil were released into the Mediterranean Sea, contaminating about 150 kilometres of coastline in Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The report discussed actions taken to address the impacts of the spill and to measure and quantify the environmental damage sustained by Lebanon, which amounted to $856.4 million. The Secretary-General urged Member States, international organizations, international and regional financial institutions, NGOs and the private sector to continue their support for Lebanon, particularly for rehabilitation activities on the Lebanese coast. He encouraged States and the international donor community to make contributions to the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund, hosted by the Lebanon Recovery Fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/212 by recorded vote (170-6-3) [agenda item 19].

Oil slick on Lebanese shores

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 61/194 of 20 December 2006, 62/188 of 19 December 2007, 63/211 of 19 December 2008, 64/195 of 21 December 2009, 65/147 of 20 December 2010, 66/192 of 22 December 2011, 67/201 of 21 December 2012 and 68/206 of 20 December 2013 on the oil slick on Lebanese shores,

Reaffirming the outcome of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, especially principle 7 of the Declaration of the Conference, in which States were requested to take all possible steps to prevent pollution of the seas,

Emphasizing the need to protect and preserve the marine environment in accordance with international law,

Taking into account the 1992 Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, especially principle 16, in which it was stipulated that the polluter should, in principle, bear the cost of pollution, and taking into account also chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Noting with great concern the environmental disaster caused by the destruction by the Israeli Air Force on 15 July 2006 of the oil storage tanks in the direct vicinity of El-Jiyeh electric power plant in Lebanon, resulting in an oil slick that covered the entirety of the Lebanese coastline, extended to the Syrian coastline and hindered efforts to achieve sustainable development, as already highlighted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 61/194, 62/188, 63/211, 64/195, 65/147, 66/192, 67/201 and 68/206,

Noting that the Secretary-General expressed grave concern at the lack of any acknowledgement on the part of the Government of Israel of its responsibilities vis-à-vis reparations and compensation to the Government and people of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic affected by the oil spill,

Recalling that, in paragraph 4 of its resolution 68/206, it reiterated its request to the Government of Israel to assume responsibility for prompt and adequate compensation to the Government of Lebanon and other countries directly affected by the oil slick, such as the Syrian Arab Republic, whose shores have been partially polluted, and recognizing the conclusion of the Secretary-General that this request of the Assembly has yet to be implemented,

Acknowledging that the Secretary-General concluded that this oil spill is not covered by any of the international oil spill compensation funds and thus merits special consideration, and recognizing that further consideration needs to be given to the option of securing the relevant compensation from the Government of Israel,

Acknowledging also the conclusions on measuring and quantifying the environmental damage set out in the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting again with appreciation the assistance offered by donor countries and international organizations for the clean-up operations and the early recovery and reconstruction of Lebanon through bilateral and multilateral channels, including the Athens Coordination

Meeting on the response to the marine pollution incident in the Eastern Mediterranean, held on 17 August 2006, as well as the Stockholm Conference for Lebanon's Early Recovery, held on 31 August 2006,

Acknowledging that the Secretary-General has welcomed the agreement of the Lebanon Recovery Fund to host the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund, under its existing mechanism, and expressing concern that to date no contributions have been made to the Trust Fund,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reiterates, for the ninth consecutive year, its deep concern about the adverse implications of the destruction by the Israeli Air Force of the oil storage tanks in the direct vicinity of the Lebanese El-Jiyeh electric power plant for the achievement of sustainable development in Lebanon;

3. Considers that the oil slick has heavily polluted the shores of Lebanon and partially polluted Syrian shores and consequently has had serious implications for livelihoods and the economy of Lebanon, owing to the adverse implications for natural resources, biodiversity, fisheries and tourism, and for human health in the country;

4. Acknowledges the conclusions in the report of the Secretary-General, in which he stated that studies show that the value of the damage to Lebanon amounted to 856.4 million United States dollars in 2014, and requests the Secretary-General to urge United Nations bodies and agencies and other relevant organizations involved in the initial assessment of the relevant environmental damage to undertake, within existing resources, a further study, building on, inter alia, the initial work of the World Bank presented in the report of the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-second session, with a view to measuring and quantifying the environmental damage sustained by neighbouring countries;

5. Reiterates its request in this regard to the Government of Israel to assume responsibility for prompt and adequate compensation to the Government of Lebanon for the aforementioned damage and to other countries directly affected by the oil slick, such as the Syrian Arab Republic, whose shores have been partially polluted, for the costs of repairing the environmental damage caused by the destruction, including the restoration of the marine environment, in particular in the light of the conclusion contained in the report of the Secretary-General that there remains grave concern at the lack of implementation of the relevant provisions of the resolutions of the General Assembly on the subject vis-à-vis reparations and compensation to the Government and people of Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic affected by the oil spill;

6. Reiterates its appreciation for the efforts of the Government of Lebanon and those of Member States, regional and international organizations, regional and international financial institutions, non-governmental organizations and the private sector in the initiation of clean-up and rehabilitation operations on the polluted shores, and encourages Member States and the above-mentioned entities to continue their financial and technical support to the Government of Lebanon towards achieving the completion of clean-up and rehabilitation operations, with the aim of preserving the ecosystem of Lebanon and that of the Eastern Mediterranean Basin;

7. Welcomes the agreement of the Lebanon Recovery Fund to host the Eastern Mediterranean Oil Spill Restoration Trust Fund, based on voluntary contributions, to provide assistance and support to the States directly and adversely affected in their integrated environmentally sound management, from clean-up to safe disposal of oily waste, of this environmental disaster resulting from the destruction of the oil storage tanks at El-Jiyeh electric power plant;

8. Notes that in his report the Secretary-General urged Member States, international organizations, international and regional financial institutions, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue their support for Lebanon in this matter, in particular for the rehabilitation activities on the Lebanese coast and in the broader recovery efforts, and stated that such international effort should be intensified, since Lebanon is still engaged in the treatment of wastes and the monitoring of recovery, reiterates its invitation to States and the international donor community to make voluntary financial contributions to the Trust Fund, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to mobilize international technical and financial assistance in order to ensure that the Trust Fund has sufficient and adequate resources;

9. Recognizes the multidimensionality of the adverse impact of the oil slick, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/212:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Harmony with nature

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/216 [YUN 2013, p. 1011], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/322] on harmony with nature. The report addressed the social dimension of sustainable development. It examined how the holistic relationship that indigenous peoples have had with Mother Earth since ancient times had paved the way in the modern world for Earth system science, in which scientists view the Earth as a system that was indivisible, in an endless continuum and in which no single element took precedence over another. The report discussed the concept of “living well” in harmony with nature as a scalable paradigm from the developing world; Earth system science and governance; and Earth-based economics. The Secretary-General concluded that humanity must intensify its efforts to restore a healthy environment for present and future generations, where human activity took place in balance with the Earth’s offerings, and with reciprocity, dignity and respect for nature.

To commemorate International Mother Earth Day [YUN 2009, p. 1037], the General Assembly hosted an interactive dialogue on harmony with nature (New York, 22 April), focusing on the theme “The promotion of a balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development through Harmony with Nature”.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468/Add.8], adopted resolution 69/224 without vote [agenda item 19 (b)].

Harmony with Nature

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation),

Recalling the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling also its resolutions 64/196 of 21 December 2009, 65/164 of 20 December 2010, 66/204 of 22 December 2011, 67/214 of 21 December 2012 and 68/216 of 20 December 2013 on Harmony with Nature and its resolution 63/278 of 22 April 2009, by which it designated 22 April as International Mother Earth Day,

Recalling further the 1982 World Charter for Nature,

Noting the interactive dialogue of the General Assembly on Harmony with Nature, held on 22 April 2014, to commemorate International Mother Earth Day, on the promotion of the balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development through Harmony with Nature,

Recognizing that planet Earth and its ecosystems are our home and that “Mother Earth” is a common expression in a number of countries and regions, noting that some countries recognize the rights of nature in the context of the promotion of sustainable development, and expressing the conviction that, in order to achieve a just balance among the economic, social and environmental needs of present and future generations, it is necessary to promote harmony with nature,

Noting that, in promoting a holistic approach to achieve sustainable development in harmony with nature, Earth system science plays a significant role,

Expressing concern about documented environmental degradation, potentially more frequent and intense natural disasters and the negative impact on nature resulting from human activity, and recognizing the need to strengthen scientific knowledge on the effects of human activities on the Earth systems, with the aim of promoting and ensuring an equitable, balanced and sustainable relationship with the Earth,

Taking note of the Peoples’ World Conference on Climate Change and the Rights of Mother Earth, hosted by the Plurinational State of Bolivia in Cochabamba from 20 to 22 April 2010,

Recognizing that a number of countries consider Mother Earth the source of all life and nourishment, and that these countries consider Mother Earth and humankind an indivisible, living community of interrelated and interdependent beings,

Noting that in recent years there have been many initiatives on sustainable development governance, including policy documents on living well in harmony with nature,

Taking note of the conceptual framework of the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services,

Recognizing that gross domestic product was not designed as an indicator for measuring environmental degradation resulting from human activity and the need to overcome this limitation with regard to sustainable development and the work carried out in this regard,

Recognizing also the uneven availability of basic statistical data under the three dimensions of sustainable development and the need to improve their quality and quantity,

Reaffirming that fundamental changes in the way societies produce and consume are indispensable for achieving global sustainable development and that all countries should promote sustainable consumption and production patterns, with the developed countries taking the lead and with all countries benefiting from the process, taking into account the Rio principles,

Recognizing that many ancient civilizations, indigenous peoples and indigenous cultures have a rich history of understanding the symbiotic connection between human beings and nature that fosters a mutually beneficial relationship,

Recognizing also the work undertaken by civil society, academia and scientists in regard to signalling the precariousness of life on Earth, as well as their efforts, along with those of Governments and private sector organizations, to devise more sustainable models and methods for production and consumption,

Considering that sustainable development is a holistic concept that requires the strengthening of interdisciplinary linkages in the different branches of knowledge,

1. Takes note of the fifth report of the Secretary-General;

2. Invites Member States to consider existing studies and reports on Harmony with Nature, including the follow-up to the discussions at the interactive dialogues of the General Assembly, such as the dialogue held on 22 April 2014 on the promotion of the balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development through Harmony with Nature;

3. Requests the President of the General Assembly to hold an inclusive and interactive dialogue, at the sixty-ninth session of the Assembly, to be held at the plenary meetings to be convened during the commemoration of International Mother Earth Day in April 2015, with the participation of Member States, United Nations organizations, independent experts and other stakeholders, to advance discussions on Harmony with Nature in order to promote a balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development;

4. Recognizes the importance of giving due consideration to the issue of Harmony with Nature in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

5. Recalls its resolutions requesting that the Secretary-General establish a trust fund for the participation of independent experts in the interactive dialogue to be held at the plenary meetings to be convened during the commemoration of International Mother Earth Day, and in this regard invites Member States and other relevant stakeholders to consider contributing to this trust fund once it is established;

6. Also recalls the launching of the Harmony with Nature website on the occasion of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development by the secretariat of the Conference and the Division for Sustainable Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to make use of the existing website maintained by the Division to gather information and contributions on ideas and activities to promote a holistic approach to sustainable development in harmony with nature, being undertaken to advance the integration of interdisciplinary scientific work, including success stories on the use of traditional knowledge and on existing national legislation;

7. Calls for holistic and integrated approaches to sustainable development that will guide humanity to live in harmony with nature and lead to efforts to restore the health and integrity of the Earth's ecosystems;

8. Invites States:

(a) To further build up a knowledge network in order to advance a holistic conceptualization to identify different economic approaches that reflect the drivers and values of living in harmony with nature, relying on current scientific information to achieve sustainable development, and to facilitate the support and recognition of the fundamental interconnections between humanity and nature;

(b) To promote harmony with the Earth, as found in indigenous cultures, and learn from them, and to provide support for and promote efforts being made from the national level down to the local community level to reflect the protection of nature;

9. Encourages all countries and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system to develop and strengthen the quality and quantity of basic statistical data on the three dimensions of sustainable development, and invites the international community and the pertinent bodies of the United Nations system to assist the efforts of developing countries by providing capacity-building and technical support;

10. Recognizes the need for broader measures of progress to complement gross domestic product in order to better inform policy decisions, and in this regard welcomes the ongoing work of the Statistical Commission on a work programme to develop broader measures of progress, which, based on a stocktaking exercise of current national, regional and international practices to measure progress, will conduct a technical review of existing efforts in this area, with a view to identifying best practices and to facilitating the sharing of knowledge, especially for the benefit of developing countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to continue the consideration of the sub-item entitled "Harmony with Nature" at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Sustainable development".

By decision 69/554 of 29 December, the General Assembly decided that the item on harmony with nature would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Sustainable tourism

The General Assembly, in resolution 69/233 of 19 December (see p. 954), recognized that sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, created opportunities for the conservation, protection and sustainable use of biodiversity and natural areas by encouraging tourists as well as indigenous peoples and local communities in host countries to preserve and respect the natural and cultural heritage. The Assembly encouraged Governments to use sustainable tourism to support environmental protection and the sustainable use of biodiversity and to base tourism on clear evidence of market demand and on a sound economic and environmental foundation. It requested the Secretary-General to submit, at its seventy-first (2016) session, a report on the implementation of the resolution, including recommendations on promoting ecotourism as a tool for fighting poverty and promoting sustainable development.

Human settlements

UN-Habitat

Governing Council

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 56/206 [YUN 2001, p. 987], the Governing Council of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme

(UN-Habitat), which met biennially, did not meet in 2014. The twenty-fifth session of the Council would take place in 2015.

Election. On 17 July, the General Assembly, by decision 68/421, on the proposal of the Secretary-General [A/68/915], re-elected Joan Clos (Spain) as Executive Director of UN-Habitat for a term of office beginning on 18 October 2014 and ending on 31 December 2017.

Subsidiary body. The Committee of Permanent Representatives, the intersessional body of the UN-Habitat Governing Council, met four times in 2014, on 19 March [HSP/CPR/53/L.1], 18 June [HSP/CPR/54/L.1], 27 August [HSP/CPR/55/L.1] and 3 December [HSP/CPR/56/L.1]. It considered, among other matters, the financial status of UN-Habitat, progress on the implementation of the UN-Habitat medium-term strategic and institutional plan, and preparations for the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Development (Habitat III).

Board of Auditors report

In June [A/69/5/Add.9 & Corr.1], the Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly its report on the UN-Habitat financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 2013. Total income amounted to $378 million, a decrease of $52.9 million, or 12.3 per cent, over the previous financial period. Total expenditure amounted to $348.6 million, a decrease of $78.2 million, or 18.3 per cent, compared to the previous period. The excess of income over expenditure totalled $29.4 million, representing an increase of $25.4 million over the previous biennium. The Board noted that the excess of income over expenditure had been declining steadily since 2006–2007 but rose in 2012–2013. As at the end of the biennium, the level of cash held was $207 million, representing a 9.3 per cent decrease over the balance of $228.3 million held at 31 December 2011. UN-Habitat adopted the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS) from 1 January 2014 but did not meet the deadline of 31 March 2014 for the preparation of actual IPSAS-compliant opening balances.

The Board recommended, among other measures, that UN-Habitat closely monitor project budget implementation; set up and document a clear monitoring and assurance framework for the use and accountability of the Experimental Reimbursable Seeding Operations funds; and prioritize and expedite the process of data cleansing so that IPSAS opening balances would be finalized in advance of the preparation of dry-run financial statements.

By decision 69/554 of 29 December, the General Assembly decided that the item of the financial reports and audited financial statements, and report of the Board of Auditors of UN-Habitat, would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

UN-Habitat activities

In 2014, UN-Habitat continued to implement its work programme in line with Governing Council resolutions and the goals of the UN system and the international community. Under the 2014–2019 strategic plan, approved by the Council in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 1015], UN-Habitat focused on urban legislation, land and governance; urban planning and design; urban economy; urban basic services; housing and slum upgrading; risk reduction and rehabilitation; research and capacity development; and cross-cutting issues of gender, youth, climate change and human rights.

During the year, UN-Habitat adopted a more strategic and integrated approach to addressing the challenges and opportunities of cities and human settlements. The new approach was based on two premises: the empirically verified positive correlation between urbanization and development; and recognition that the major challenges faced by cities and human settlements resulted from the inadequacy of the fundamental systems underlying their functioning, particularly regarding urban legislation, design and financial systems. UN-Habitat's approach linked urbanization and human settlements to sustainable development by focusing on prosperity, livelihoods and employment, especially among youth.

UN-Habitat's Global Land Tool Network (GLTN) grew to 66 partners and 2,115 individual members who worked in a more coordinated manner to implement the GLTN agenda. The UN-Habitat Cities and Climate Change Initiative expanded its scope and impact into a global programme involving over 40 cities. UN-Habitat spearheaded the launch of two global multi-partnership initiatives at the Secretary-General's 2014 Climate Summit (New York, 23 September) to mobilize and accelerate action on the issue of climate change in cities. In the area of risk reduction and rehabilitation, UN-Habitat and its partners made progress in field operations in post-conflict and post-natural-disaster countries. Activities included the reconstruction of housing, water and sanitation infrastructure, community centres and schools; land conflict mediation; and the creation of livelihood opportunities for internally displaced persons and refugees. Through UN-Habitat's Youth Programme, 277 youth-led groups across 65 countries benefited from small grants for project implementation. Through its Participatory Slum Upgrading Programme, UN-Habitat established a network with 160 cities, 200 communities and 35 countries in the African, Caribbean and Pacific regions, all implementing city-wide slum upgrading strategies. Regarding implementation of the Umoja Enterprise Resource Planning system, UN-Habitat completed most of the preparations in readiness for deployment, scheduled for June 2015.

Progress was made towards achievement of five of the six expected accomplishments outlined in UN-Habitat's six-year (2014–2019) strategic plan, but little progress was made on mobilizing core income. With respect to urban legislation, land and governance, there was increased capacity, knowledge and awareness among local and national governments and other Habitat Agenda partners to implement programmes that improved security of tenure for vulnerable groups. On urban planning and design, a notable achievement was the development of the international guidelines on urban and territorial planning, which constituted a global framework for improving policies, plans, designs and implementation processes for more compact, socially inclusive, better integrated and connected cities and territories that fostered sustainable urbanization. There were enhanced capacities among UN-Habitat partner cities to develop urban plans and policies supportive of inclusive economic growth, as demonstrated by the increased number of partner cities that prepared local economic development plans. With the support of UN-Habitat and its partners, there was an increase in the number of local, national and regional authorities taking action towards the implementation of policies and guidelines on equitable access to sustainable urban basic services. As a long-term measure, UN-Habitat made progress in terms of increased urban resilience plans, launching recovery and rehabilitation plans and the development of urban frameworks promoting the new urban agenda. Through the Global Urban Observatory, 14 local and national urban observatories implemented UN-Habitat's methodologies and tools for data collection and analysis and supported their Governments in formulating more informed policies during the year. Since the launch of the City Prosperity Index in the State of the World's Cities 2012/2013 report, 288 cities had requested UN-Habitat's support to implement the index. Mainstreaming of the cross-cutting issues of climate change, gender, youth and human rights had been institutionalized in UN-Habitat and took place at both programme and project levels.

Regional ministerial conferences. The fifth session of the African Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development (AMCHUD 5) (N'Djamena, Chad, 25–28 February) took place under the theme, “Case studies in financing human settlements in Africa: Appropriate legislative frameworks and innovations in implementation”. Matters discussed included the urban agenda for Africa and its linkage with the African Union Agenda 2063; preparations for the seventh session of the World Urban Forum; the post-2015 development agenda; and the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee for Habitat III. The main outcome documents were the N'Djamena Declaration and Action Plan, which prioritized access to affordable and decent housing; the delivery of infrastructure and basic services for human settlements, including sanitation and waste management; slum prevention and upgrading; urban and territorial planning and effective land tenure; the urban economy; and the link between urban and rural areas.

The fifth session of the Asia Pacific Ministerial Conference on Housing and Urban Development (APMCHUD 5) (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 3–5 November) adopted the Seoul Declaration, in which participants decided to deepen their commitment to regional collaboration to make cities and human settlements integrated, inclusive, sustainable and resilient. Participants also committed to developing and implementing innovative national policies and to promoting inclusiveness and equity in urban development and infrastructure expansion. They recognized the importance of Habitat III and resolved to prepare a roadmap to participate in Habitat III and the formulation of the “New Urban Agenda”, and they requested the Chair of APMCHUD to ensure the implementation of the Declaration, in collaboration with other members of the Bureau, the APMCHUD secretariat and UN-Habitat.

Follow-up to the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

Coordinated implementation of Habitat Agenda

In an April report [E/2014/64] submitted in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/22 [YUN 2013, p. 1016], the Secretary-General described the activities undertaken by UN-Habitat in cooperation with other UN system agencies and organizations in the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda at the global, regional and national levels. Activities at the global level included Habitat III preparatory activities; the World Urban Campaign; the preparation and launch of the Global Report on Human Settlements 2013; the post-2015 development agenda and Sustainable Development Goals processes; cooperation with international financial institutions; and the International Aid Transparency Initiative. Activities at the regional level focused on regional ministerial meetings on housing and urban development and cooperation with development banks. Thematic activities at the national and subnational levels focused on urban legislation, land and governance; urban planning and design; urban economy and municipal finance; urban basic services; risk reduction and rehabilitation; research and capacity development; and gender mainstreaming and the empowerment of women.

The report recommended that Member States give appropriate consideration to the role of urbanization in sustainable development in their national development plans; formulate and implement urban planning policies that enhance economic productivity and equity; apply more systematically urban planning methods, including participatory processes; use planned city extension methodologies to guide the sustainable development of cities experiencing rapid urban growth; and facilitate the inclusion of all relevant stakeholders in the preparatory process for Habitat III.

Sustainable urbanization

In an April report [E/2014/67] prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 61/16 [YUN 2006, p. 1589], the Secretary-General discussed effective governance, policymaking and planning for sustainable urbanization. The report informed the thematic discussion of the Economic and Social Council's 2014 integration segment (see below), which focused on the same topic and summarized governance, planning and management instruments for promoting urban sustainability; emerging models for sustainable urbanization; and lessons learned from the implementation of different urban governance models to address sustainability challenges. The Secretary-General concluded that urban governance models, policies and planning tools should recognize and address the widening scope and impact of urban activities across policy areas and spatial boundaries and involve an increasing number of urban stakeholders and actors. He provided policy initiatives to be considered, including a whole-of-government approach; inclusive and participatory mechanisms for decision-making; and strong partnerships.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

The first-ever integration segment of the Economic and Social Council (New York, 27–29 May) focused on the theme of sustainable urbanization and provided a multi-stakeholder platform to demonstrate how urbanization could become an instrument for the balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development. The segment identified the potential short-term policy choices, resulting trade-offs and long-term gains inherent to an integrated and balanced sustainable development approach; provided solutions, innovations and partnerships on sustainable urbanization; and identified tools and instruments to facilitate inputs that could be used by the Council to assess the integrated approach. The high-level exchange of experiences, practices and strategies demonstrated the transformative potential of urbanization and led to the identification of recommendations that could shape the post-2015 agenda and Habitat III (see p. 1202).

On 25 July (decision 2014/248), the Economic and Social Council took note of the report [E/2014/67] of the Secretary-General on effective governance, policymaking and planning for sustainable urbanization.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/30 [draft: E/2014/L.29] without vote [agenda item 16 (d)].

Human settlements

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its relevant resolutions and decisions on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Recalling also relevant General Assembly resolutions, including resolutions 66/288 of 27 July 2012, entitled “The future we want”, and 67/216 of 21 December 2012 and 68/239 of 27 December 2013, entitled “Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat)”,

Acknowledging the work of UN-Habitat towards attaining the goal of sustainable urban development and the implementation of the Habitat Agenda as well as other goals and targets relevant to human settlements,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the first ever integration segment of the Economic and Social Council on sustainable urbanization, held from 27 to 29 May 2014, and its focus on the role of sustainable urbanization as a transformative force for achieving and advancing sustainable development, and invites the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III) to make full use of this focus in its work;

3. Encourages Governments to give appropriate consideration to the role of urbanization and human settlements in sustainable development in their national development plans in order to ensure coordinated implementation of different sectoral policies within cities and human settlements in general and to formulate and implement national urban development policies;

4. Reiterates its invitation to Governments to further enhance inclusive and sustainable urbanization and the role of local authorities and to consider the environmentally sustainable, socially inclusive and economically productive roles of cities and human settlements in their consideration of the post-2015 development agenda;

5. Emphasizes the importance of ensuring consistency and coherence in the deliberations of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on agenda items related to the work of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat);

6. Decides to transmit to the General Assembly for consideration at its sixty-ninth session the report of the Secretary-General on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council for consideration at its substantive session of 2015 a report on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda.

In response to resolution 2014/30 (see above), the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/69/343], transmitted his April report to the General Assembly for consideration at its sixty-ninth (2014) session.

Implementation of outcome of Habitat II and strengthening of UN-Habitat

An August report [A/69/298] submitted by the Secretary-General in response to General Assembly resolution 68/239 [YUN 2013, p. 1017] described UN-Habitat activities over the previous year in implementing the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994], adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [ibid., p. 992], and the strengthening of UN-Habitat. It reviewed progress in preparation for the third United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III) at the global, regional and national levels, and in information and publicity, including through the seventh session of the World Urban Forum (see below) and the World Urban Campaign [YUN 2009, p. 1038]. It also described progress in the implementation of three issues highlighted by the General Assembly in resolution 68/239: outcome of the governance review process; financial developments in UN-Habitat; and sustainable urbanization and the post-2015 development agenda. The report further described UN-Habitat's engagement in the first-ever Economic and Social Council integration segment (see p. 1200), which was on the theme of sustainable urbanization, and global and regional activities including publication of the Global Report on Human Settlements 2013: Planning and Design for Sustainable Urban Mobility, and celebrations related to World Habitat Day 2013, and the inaugural World Cities Day observed on 31 October 2014.

The UN-Habitat Committee of Permanent Representatives, through its Bureau, continued its consideration of the governance review process, including the timing of that process in relation to the envisaged outcome of Habitat III. Regarding financial developments, income projections for the biennium 2014–2015 remained at $62.9 million and $283 million for non-earmarked and earmarked income, respectively. As at 30 June, non-earmarked income received and confirmed pledges amounted to $24.5 million (or 39 per cent of the projection), while $57.6 million (or 19 per cent of the projection) had been received in earmarked income.

On Habitat III, the report called upon Members States to decide on the venue, final dates, format and organizational aspects of the conference; to decide on the venue and duration of the third and final Habitat III Preparatory Committee meeting; to ensure the participation of local governments and all other stakeholders in the preparatory process and the conference itself; and to expedite the preparation of Habitat III national reports and their submission to the Habitat III secretariat. On urbanization and human settlements policy issues, it called upon Members States to continue giving consideration to sustainable urbanization and human settlements in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda; and to continue supporting UN-Habitat through predictable multiyear funding and increased non-earmarked contributions in support of its strategic plan 2014–2019.

World Urban Forum, 2014

The seventh session of the World Urban Forum (Medellín, Colombia, 5–11 April) [HSP/WUF/7/3], held under the theme “Urban equity in development: Cities for life”, examined ways to effectively integrate urban equity into the development agenda with a view to ensuring sustainable transformative change in an increasingly urbanized world. Many events at the Forum discussed the post-2015 development agenda and sustainable development goals, with participants supporting the idea of sustainable urban development being more centrally positioned in the post-2015 agenda, together with an urban sustainable development goal. The World Urban Campaign, launched in 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 1045], was positioned as an inclusive platform to mobilize stakeholders for Habitat III (see below). There was concern among participants about the unsustainability of the current level of urban sprawl, the diminishing of arable land due to unplanned urbanization. The Forum exhibited broad consensus on the need for good and inclusively designed urban policies driven by equity and discussed urban equity in development law, urban planning and design for social cohesion, basic services: local businesses for equitable cities, innovative financing instruments for local authorities, raising standards for urban resilience and a safe city as a just and equitable city. For the first time, the programme of the Forum integrated assemblies that convened business representatives, youth, women and children, respectively. There were nine special sessions addressing traditional and emerging subjects relevant to the urban agenda, and 1,607 people, including 789 women, participated in 30 training events.

A report [HSP/GC/25/2/Add.2] of the UN-Habitat Executive Director summarized the issues discussed at the seventh session of the Forum, as well as its outcome—the Medellín Declaration, which provided recommendations that emerged from the Forum and around which a substantial consensus was reached. It contained four key areas: equity as a foundation of sustainable urban development; the city as opportunity; new urban agenda; and contributing to the future. Participants reaffirmed their commitment to integrating urban equity into the development agenda, employing all means and resources available to ensure that cities were transformed into inclusive, safe, prosperous and harmonious spaces for all. Although urbanization had ushered in economic growth, development and prosperity for many people, cities were also spaces of multidimensional poverty, environmental degradation, and vulnerability to disasters and the impacts of climate change. Participants thus agreed that although notable efforts were being made to overcome challenges to sustainable and inclusive development, much work remained to be done. They highlighted the need to promote a new urban agenda that could overcome the lack of an adequate legal framework and planning system and promote a people-centred urbanization model based on “cities for life”. On contributing to the future, the Medellín Declaration discussed the importance of sustainable urbanization in the post-2015 development agenda, contributions to Habitat III, and the World Urban Forum.

Preparations for Habitat III

In a September report [A/CONF.226/PC.1/4], the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III) described activities carried out at the national, regional and international levels prior to the first session of the Habitat III Preparatory Committee (see below). The report discussed consultations and contributions between 2012 and 2014 in relation to the UN-Habitat Governing Council, the sixth and seventh sessions of the World Urban Forum, regular ministerial conferences on housing and urban development, the UN system and global partners. The report also provided information on the activities proposed for the period 2014–2016 in four areas: knowledge, engagement, policy and operations.

Preparatory Committee. In October [A/CONF.226/PC.1/6], the Habitat III Preparatory Committee reported on its first session (New York, 17–18 September), at which it established a working group on operational and administrative matters that met twice over the course of session. The Habitat III Secretary-General reported to the session on the activities of the secretariat in preparation for the Conference and presented proposals for the improved participation of local authorities and other stakeholders in the preparatory process and in the Conference itself. He also reported on an outline of work to be carried out between September 2014 and the holding of the Conference in 2016. The Preparatory Committee held an exchange of views on progress in the implementation of the outcomes of the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and on the identification of new and emerging challenges on sustainable urban development. It took note of a note [A/CONF.226/PC.1/INF/3] by the Secretary-General of the Conference on the financing of the preparatory process and the Conference, and it recommended that the Preparatory Committee's second session be held from 14–16 April 2015.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/469], adopted resolution 69/226 without vote [agenda item 20].

Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat)

The General Assembly,

Recalling the outcomes of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held in Vancouver, Canada, in 1976, and the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held in Istanbul, Turkey, in 1996,

Recalling also relevant resolutions of the General Assembly on the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), including its resolutions 64/207 of 21 December 2009, 65/165 of 20 December 2010, 66/207 of 22 December 2011, 67/216 of 21 December 2012 and 68/239 of 27 December 2013, which addressed the convening in 2016 of the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III),

Recalling further relevant decisions and resolutions of the Economic and Social Council on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda, including Council resolution 2014/30 of 25 July 2014 on human settlements, adopted by the Council at its substantive session of 2014,

Reaffirming the outcome document, entitled “The future we want”, of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, in particular paragraphs 134 to 137 on sustainable cities and human settlements, in which, inter alia, it is recognized that cities are engines of economic growth which, if well planned and developed, including through integrated planning and management approaches, can promote economically, socially and environmentally sustainable societies,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting that, while significant progress has been made in implementing the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, since urbanization has brought growth and development, including a dramatic reduction in poverty, national economic growth, major progress in human settlements connectivity, which helps to boost productivity and the creation of opportunities, the merging of cities and towns into new regional spatial configurations that are conducive to faster economic and demographic growth, and a higher degree of interdependence between rural and urban areas that has helped to reduce the vulnerability of rural communities and enhance the prospects of more equitable development, challenges remain, such as urban sprawl, congestion, pollution, the emission of greenhouse gases, emerging urban poverty, segregation, increasing inequalities and other negative externalities, as well as the continuing increase in the number of slum dwellers in the world, the negative impact of environmental degradation, including climate change, desertification and loss of biodiversity, on human settlements and the need to reduce disaster risks and build resilience to disasters in urban settlements,

Reiterating its support for the World Urban Forum and recognizing that it is the foremost global arena for interaction among policymakers, local government leaders, non-governmental stakeholders and expert practitioners in the field of human settlements, and expressing its appreciation to the Government of Colombia and the city of Medellín for hosting the seventh session of the Forum from 5 to 11 April 2014,

Recalling the commitment of Member States and the efforts of other stakeholders to promote an integrated approach to planning and building sustainable cities and urban settlements,

Emphasizing the importance of the wide participation of all relevant stakeholders, including local authorities, in the promotion of sustainable urbanization and settlements,

Recalling its resolution 67/148 of 20 December 2012, in which it called upon the United Nations system, including the funds, programmes and specialized agencies, to increase efforts to fully mainstream a gender perspective into all issues under their consideration and within their mandates, as well as all United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions and their follow-up processes,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the coordinated implementation of the Habitat Agenda and on the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat);

2. Also takes note of the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III) on its first session, and endorses its recommendation that the second session of the Preparatory Committee be held from 14 to 16 April 2015;

3. Emphasizes the importance of ensuring consistency and coherence in the deliberations of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Governing Council of UN-Habitat and the Preparatory Committee in their respective consideration of the work of UN-Habitat and preparations for Habitat III, within their respective mandates;

4. Continues to encourage giving due consideration to sustainable urbanization in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

5. Notes the conclusion of the Secretary-General's Climate Summit, and welcomes its contribution to existing political momentum with a view to galvanizing action to address climate change;

6. Reiterates its encouragement to Member States, UN-Habitat and all relevant stakeholders to take appropriate measures to implement Governing Council resolution 24/4 of 19 April 2013, and requests the Executive Director of UN-Habitat to strengthen the mainstreaming of gender equality and women's empowerment in the normative and operational work of UN-Habitat;

7. Welcomes the offer by the Government of Ecuador to host Habitat III, and decides that the Conference will be held in Quito during the week of 17 October 2016;

8. Recalls its decisions in resolution 67/216 on the objective and results of the Conference, while remaining mindful of the need to carry out the Conference and the preparatory process in the most inclusive, efficient, effective and improved manner to ensure a successful Conference, and decides that:

(a) The Conference shall be composed of eight plenary meetings, on the basis of two meetings a day, and six high-level round-table sessions to be held concurrently with the plenary meetings, except during the opening and closing plenary meetings;

(b) Parallel meetings and other events, including multi-stakeholder segments, will be held during the same hours as the plenary meetings and the round tables, the multi-stakeholder segments will constitute an official part of the Conference, and interpretation for such meetings will be provided on an as-available basis;

(c) Special events, including briefings, seminars, workshops and panel discussions on issues related to housing and sustainable urban development, will be organized by Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and accredited institutional and non-institutional stakeholders for the benefit of the participants in the Conference;

(d) The third session of the Preparatory Committee will be held in Indonesia in July 2016 and shall consist of six plenary meetings on the basis of two meetings a day;

9. Emphasizes the need for effective coordination between the preparatory process for the Conference and the preparations for the summit to be held in September 2015 for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, in order to promote coherence and to minimize duplication of effort;

10. Encourages Member States to participate at the highest possible level in the Conference;

11. Also encourages Member States to participate in the Preparatory Committee and to continue giving due consideration at all levels to the New Urban Agenda and commit to defining it, together with all relevant stakeholders;

12. Encourages Member States and international and bilateral donors, as well as the private sector, financial institutions and foundations and other donors in a position to do so, to continue to support the national, regional and global preparations for Habitat III through voluntary contributions to the Habitat III trust fund and to support the participation of representatives of developing countries in the forthcoming Preparatory Committee meetings and in the Conference itself in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 13 (c) of resolution 67/216, and invites voluntary contributions to support the participation of Habitat Agenda partners and other relevant stakeholders in the Preparatory Committee meetings;

13. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to continue to mobilize the expertise of the United Nations system as a whole, including the regional commissions, and of other relevant international, regional and subregional organizations for the Habitat III preparatory process;

14. Calls upon Member States to ensure the effective participation in the preparatory process and in the Conference itself of local governments and all other stakeholders, including those in the national habitat committees, as appropriate, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 10 of resolution 68/239, and, inter alia, to expedite the preparation of Habitat III national reports;

15. Invites Member States to facilitate participatory processes and the wide participation of stakeholders, including local authorities and their associations, when developing, revising and implementing national urban policies, where appropriate, in particular through national urban forums, and as a means of preparing for Habitat III;

16. Encourages stakeholders gathering at the World Urban Forum, as well as at the regular ministerial conferences on housing and urban development and other relevant expert group meetings, to provide inputs and to contribute as appropriate to the process leading to the Conference;

17. Invites the Bureau of the Preparatory Committee to prepare the draft outcome document of the Conference on the basis of inputs from broad regional and thematic consultations among all stakeholders and to circulate it no later than six months prior to the Conference;

18. Calls upon Member States to continue to include in their planned regional meetings, such as the regular sessions of regional ministerial conferences on housing and urban development, as well as those accredited to Habitat II and the summit to be held in September 2015 for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, shall register in order to participate in the Conference;

19. Decides that the major groups and the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, as well as those accredited to Habitat II and the summit to be held in September 2015 for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, shall register in order to participate in the Conference;

20. Also decides that non-governmental organizations not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council wishing to attend and contribute to the Conference, and whose work is relevant to the subject of the Conference, may participate as observers in the Conference as well as in the preparatory meetings, in accordance with the provisions contained in part VII of Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996, and subject to the approval of the Preparatory Committee in plenary meeting, and that, while respecting fully the provisions contained in rule 57 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Council, such a decision should be made by consensus;

21. Notes with appreciation, as reported by the Secretary-General in his report submitted pursuant to resolution 68/239, that the discussions among stakeholders gathered at the seventh session of the World Urban Forum provided, inter alia, an important contribution to Habitat III and that in those discussions it was recognized that Habitat III was a unique opportunity to develop a new urban agenda that could contribute to harnessing urbanization as a positive force for present and future generations and to advancing the quest for equity and shared prosperity;

22. Takes note of the Medellin Declaration, adopted at the seventh session of the World Urban Forum, in which Governments, the private sector, international organizations, academia, professionals, civil society and other social actors reaffirmed the importance of cities in sustainable development;

23. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to provide, in the most efficient and cost-effective manner, all appropriate support to the Secretary-General of the Conference and to the work of the preparatory process and the Conference, while promoting inter-agency support to the maximum extent possible;

24. Recalls the seven priorities and four cross-cutting issues contained in the strategic plan of UN-Habitat for the period 2014–2019 approved by the Governing Council at its twenty-fourth session, which the General Assembly welcomed in its resolution 68/239;

25. Invites Member States, the international and bilateral donors and financial institutions to contribute generously to UN-Habitat through increased voluntary financial contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, including the Urban Basic Services Trust Fund and the technical cooperation trust funds, and invites Governments in a position to do so and other stakeholders to provide predictable multi-year funding and increased non-earmarked contributions to support the implementation of the strategic plan for the period 2014–2019;

26. Emphasizes the importance of the Nairobi headquarters location of UN-Habitat, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the resource needs of UN-Habitat and the United Nations Office at Nairobi under review so as to permit the delivery, in an effective manner, of necessary services to UN-Habitat and other United Nations organs and organizations in Nairobi;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the resource needs of UN-Habitat under review so as to continue efforts to improve its efficiency, effectiveness, transparency and accountability in supporting the implementation of its mandate;

28. Notes the governance review process of UN-Habitat, encourages the Committee of Permanent Representatives to UN-Habitat and the Governing Council to continue their consideration of proposals, including recommendations and options for reform, with a view to reaching a consensus at the twenty-fifth session of the Governing Council on how to proceed with the governance review, and underlines that it shall consider the report of the Governing Council on this and other issues at its seventieth session;

29. Recognizes that, over the years, the responsibilities of UN-Habitat have changed considerably in their scope and complexity and that the requirement to provide substantive and technical support to developing countries has changed in areas related to sustainable cities and human settlements, as reflected in its strategic plan for 2014–2019;

30. Reiterates its invitation to Member States and Habitat Agenda partners to formulate and implement sustainable urban development policies that promote just, resilient and inclusive cities, considering the contributions of all relevant stakeholders, and with a particular focus on the needs of women and those who are most vulnerable, including children and youth, older persons, persons living with disability, rural to urban migrants, internally displaced persons and indigenous peoples;

31. Notes with appreciation the first-ever integration segment of the Economic and Social Council on sustainable urbanization, held from 27 to 29 May 2014, and its focus on the role of sustainable urbanization as a transformative force for achieving and advancing sustainable development through an integrated approach that engages all key stakeholders, including local authorities, in order to produce innovative solutions to foster economic, environmental and social sustainability;

32. Invites Member States to take into account the interlinkages among the social, economic and environmental dimensions of sustainable urbanization and human settlements in the formulation of policies, plans and programmes at the local, national and international levels in order to address, as appropriate, the structural problems and challenges facing many cities;

33. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including an update on progress made in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III);

34. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled “Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat)”.

By decision 69/554 of 29 December, the General Assembly decided that the item of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat) would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Population

In 2014, global population neared 7.3 billion people, an increase of over 1.6 billion since the 1994 adoption of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD). It was projected to reach 8.4 billion by 2030, with poor families and low-income countries accounting for much of this growth. Population dynamics continued to shape the development landscape, with high mobility and migration expanding population growth in urban areas by 1.3 million people each week. The social and economic development gains achieved in the twenty-first century were already at risk from inequality and urban poverty. The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) responded to 34 humanitarian crises, including the Ebola outbreak in West Africa. As mandated by the General Assembly, UNFPA also conducted a 20-year review of the Programme of Action of the ICPD, which gathered data from 176 countries. The results of the review were summarized in the Framework of Actions for the follow-up to the Programme of Action of the ICPD, which was launched by the Secretary-General in February and was considered at a special session of the General Assembly in September.

During the year, the Commission on Population and Development considered the special theme “Assessment of the status of implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development”.

In a December resolution, the General Assembly called upon UN entities and other relevant organizations to continue addressing the issue of international migration and development with a view to integrating a gender perspective and cultural diversity, in alignment with internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals.

Population and development

Follow-up to 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Reports of Secretary-General. In February [A/69/62], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 65/234 [YUN 2010, p. 1053], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the framework of actions for the follow-up to the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) beyond 2014. In its resolution, the Assembly had called for an operational review of the implementation of the Programme of Action and its key actions on the basis of the highest-quality data and analysis of the state of population and development. The framework gathered data from 176 countries, including civil society and academia, that pointed to significant achievements from 1994–2014, and was organized around five pillars of development: dignity and human rights, health, place and mobility, governance and accountability, and sustainability.

Evidence from the operational review supported the consensus of the International Conference that respect, protection, promotion and fulfilment of human rights were necessary preconditions for improving the dignity and well-being of women and adolescent girls and for empowering them to exercise their reproductive rights, and that sexual and reproductive health and rights and understanding the implications of population dynamics were foundational to sustainable development. Measures such as safeguarding the rights of young people and investing in their quality education, creating decent employment opportunities and enabling access to sexual and reproductive health had strengthened young people’s individual resilience and created the conditions under which they could achieve their full potential. The path to sustainability, as outlined in the framework, demanded better leadership and greater innovation to address critical needs, including extending human rights and protecting all persons from discrimination and violence; investing in the capabilities and creativity of the world’s young people to assure future growth and innovation; strengthening health systems to provide universal access to sexual and reproductive health; building sustainable cities that enriched urban and rural lives alike; and transforming the global economy to one that would sustain the future of the planet.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 65/234, the Secretary-General in July submitted a report [A/69/122] on recurrent themes and key elements identified during the sessions of the Commission on Population and Development. The report drew on statements delivered during the forty-seventh session of the Commission (see p. 1207), which was devoted to assessing the status of implementation of the Programme of Action of the ICPD [YUN 1994, p. 955]. Recurrent themes and key elements identified by States during the interactive debate of the session were related to dignity and human rights; health; place and mobility; governance and accountability; sustainability; and the success of ICPD beyond 2014.

Throughout the discussions, States expressed support for the continued centrality of the Programme of Action and the key actions for its further implementation, in the period beyond 2014, taking into account the findings and recommendations of the 20-year review, including for the post-2015 development agenda and the sustainable development goals.

Regional review process. Regional meetings that contributed to the review of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the ICPD beyond 2014 included the seventh Asia Pacific Conference on Reproductive and Sexual Health and Rights (Manila, Philippines, 21–24 January) and the Sixth International Parliamentarians' Conference on the Implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action (Stockholm, Sweden, 23–25 April).

Special session. In response to its resolutions 65/234 and 67/250 [YUN 2013, p. 1020], the General Assembly held a special session on the follow-up to the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development beyond 2014 (New York, 22 September) [A/S-29/PV.1] to assess the status of implementation of the Programme of Action and renew political support for actions required for achieving its goals and objectives. The special session, which brought together heads of state and government, ministers, and other high-level government officials, was a culmination of the operational review processes launched by resolution 65/234. The session had before it the reports of the Secretary-General on the framework of actions for the follow-up to the Programme of Action of the ICPD beyond 2014 (see p. 1206) and on recurrent themes and key elements identified during the sessions of the Commission on Population and Development (see below). Member States emphasized the centrality of the ICPD agenda to global development; reaffirmed their commitment to the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action beyond 2014; and called for integrating population issues in the post-2015 development agenda. There was widespread recognition that the successful implementation of the ICPD beyond 2014 was a precondition for achieving the three pillars of sustainable development. Participants stated that the two reports of the Secretary-General formed the basis for guiding future actions on full implementation of the ICPD beyond 2014; however, they found that gaps identified in the reports required urgent attention, and called on the global community to build further on the findings and conclusions as documented in the two reports including the knowledge about the state of sexual and reproductive health globally. Member States committed to work hand-in-hand to achieve ICPD goals and objectives beyond 2014; called for further strengthening of cooperation with regional and international development agencies, such as UNFPA, and between subregional entities and groups; and encouraged the promotion of North-

South, South-South and Triangular, regional and extraregional cooperation.

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the item on the follow-up to the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development, at its forty-seventh session (New York, 26 April 2013 and 7–11 April 2014) [E/2014/25], considered as its special theme the assessment of the status of implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action [YUN 1994, p. 955] and adopted a resolution [res. 2014/1] on that theme.

The Commission considered the report of its Bureau on its three intersessional meetings [E/CN.9/2014/2 & Add.1] (New York, 12 September 2013, 22 November 2013 and 15 January 2014) and took note [E/2014/25 (dec. 2014/102)] of the report of the Secretary-General on programme implementation and progress of work in the field of population in 2013: Population Division, Department of Economic and Social Affairs [E/CN.9/2014/5] and a note by the Secretary-General on the proposed strategic framework for the period 2016–2017 [E/CN.9/2014/CRP.1]. The Commission had before it three reports of the Secretary-General [E/CN.9/2014/3–5] (see below); a Secretariat note on non-governmental organizations considered for accreditation to the Commission's forty-seventh session [E/CN.9/2014/6]; and 20 statements submitted by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council [E/CN.9/2014/NGO/1–20]. The Commission held general debates on national experience in population matters: assessment of the status of implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action; and on the contribution of population and development issues to the theme of the annual ministerial review in 2014 (see p. 960). The Commission also postponed [E/2014/25 (dec. 2014/101)] the decision on the special theme for its forty-ninth (2016) session until its forty-eighth session in 2015.

Reports of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.9/2014/3] submitted in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/2 [YUN 1996, p. 977], the Secretary-General provided an overview of demographic trends for the world, its major areas, development groups and selected countries, focusing on major changes that had occurred over the preceding 20 years since the adoption of the ICPD Programme of Action. Topics covered included population size and growth, fertility, marriage and union formation, family planning, mortality, international migration, adolescents and youth, population ageing and urbanization. The report indicated that the world's population surpassed 7.2 billion in 2014 and was expected to increase by more than 2 billion by 2050. Most of the population growth was projected to occur in the less developed regions. While the populations of Africa and Asia were projected to increase greatly in the decades to follow, a number of countries were expected to experience population decline. Despite significant improvements in life expectancy, many countries were failing to meet the ICPD Programme of Action targets for life expectancy, infant and child mortality and maternal mortality. More than half of the world's population was living in urban areas. The number of young people had grown rapidly and was expected to remain stable over the next 35 years. In contrast, the number and proportion of older persons were expected to continue rising well into the foreseeable future. The report concluded that the state of the world's population was one of unprecedented diversity and change, reflected in new patterns of fertility, mortality, migration, urbanization and ageing. The continuation and consequences of those population trends would present opportunities and challenges for the formulation and implementation of the post-2015 development agenda and for the achievement of all internationally agreed development goals.

In January [E/CN.9/2014/4 & Corr.1], in response to General Assembly resolution 65/234 [YUN 2010, p. 1053], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the framework of action for the follow-up to the ICPD Programme of Action beyond 2014 (see p. 1206). He also issued a report [E/CN.9/2014/5] reviewing progress made by the Population Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat in implementing its programme of work in the field of population in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 1032].

Commission action. The Commission adopted and brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council a resolution on the assessment of the status of implementation of the Programme of Action of the ICPD [E/2014/25 (res. 2014/1)], by which it called upon Governments to recognize the important linkages between the priorities of the Programme of Action and sustainable development and to build on the progress made and experiences gained from its implementation over the previous 20 years in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda. It urged them to develop, strengthen and implement effective strategies aimed at eradicating poverty and promoting inclusive growth and sustainable development; and to address existing gaps in the implementation of the Programme of Action. The Commission also called upon States to promote and protect effectively the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants; address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation; and intensify efforts to achieve universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support without stigma and discrimination. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to continue his substantive work on population and development, and in collaboration with the UN system and relevant organizations to continue assessing and reporting on progress towards the full implementation of the Programme of Action of the ICPD and the key actions for its further implementation.

By decision 2014/239 of 16 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Commission on its forty-seventh session and approved the provisional agenda for the forty-eighth session.

International migration and development

By resolution 69/167 of 18 December (see p. 798), the General Assembly called upon States to promote and protect the human rights of all migrants, especially those of women and children; and to address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation and dialogue. It further encouraged giving appropriate consideration to the issue of migration and development in the preparation of the post-2015 development agenda through integrating a human rights perspective and mainstreaming a gender perspective; and requested Governments and international organizations to take appropriate measures to give due consideration to the declaration of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development [YUN 2013, p. 1025].

Also on 18 December, by resolution 69/187 (see p. 802), the Assembly urged all States to intensify cooperation with relevant stakeholders in order to jointly identify alternatives to reduce, mitigate and eliminate the causes and structural factors that led to irregular migration, so as to prevent minors from feeling compelled to migrate from their communities.

Twelfth Meeting on International Migration and Development. In response to Assembly resolution 58/208 [YUN 2003, p. 1087], the UN Population Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs organized the Twelfth Coordination Meeting on International Migration (New York, 20–21 February) [ESA/P/WP/237]. The meeting was attended by more than 150 participants, including representatives of Member States, observers, agencies, funds and programmes of the UN system, offices of the UN Secretariat, and the regional commissions as well as non-governmental organizations (NGOs) active in the field of international migration. It focused on activities to follow up on and implement the Declaration of the 2013 High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development [YUN 2013, p. 1025] and the eight-point agenda for action of the Secretary-General presented in his report to that High-level Dialogue [ibid., p. 1024]; and considered how migration could be integrated into the implementation framework of the post-2015 development agenda.

Global Forum on Migration and Development.

The seventh meeting of the Global Forum on Migration and Development (Stockholm, 14–16 May) discussed the implementation of the commitments made at the 2013 High-level Dialogue and the integration of migration into the post-2015 development agenda. The meeting identified themes for future collaboration, including reducing the costs of labour migration, improving the protection of migrant domestic workers, and assisting migrants in countries facing crises.

Report of Secretary-General. In July [A/69/207], in response to resolution 67/219 [YUN 2012, p. 1029], the Secretary-General submitted a report on international migration and development, summarizing the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development (New York, 3–4 October 2013), including its preparatory events and deliberations.

In accordance with resolution 67/219, the President of the Assembly organized a panel discussion (New York, 25 June 2013) on the overall theme, which briefed Member States on the latest evidence regarding the linkages between migration and development and on the means of addressing key migration challenges. Panellists observed that the discourse on international migration and development had moved significantly beyond the narrow realm of economic impact to also include social, cultural and environmental aspects; encouraged countries to leverage the benefits of migration for development by recognizing the skills acquired by their citizens while abroad and capitalize on the potential contributions of diaspora groups; and drew attention to the progress made in fostering dialogue and cooperation on migration, including through the Global Forum on Migration and Development. The informal interactive hearings (New York, 15 July 2013), which were attended by over 300 representatives of NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, worker organizations, other civil society organizations and private sector representatives, offered an opportunity for civil society to express its views and voice its expectations for the 2013 High-level Dialogue and to interact with Member States. Civil society presented an eight-point five-year agenda focusing on tangible action and called for the adoption of an accountability framework to be followed up through appropriate intergovernmental processes. The High-level Dialogue, which sought to identify concrete measures for strengthening coherence and cooperation at all levels, enhancing the benefits of international migration and its important links to development and reducing its negative impact, included a plenary debate and four round tables. At the plenary debate, Member States highlighted the importance of protecting the human rights of migrants, especially women, children and other vulnerable groups, during every step of the migration process; the centrality of developing partnerships and strengthening cooperation on migration at all levels; the role of the Global Forum on Migration and Development in promoting informal dialogue and cooperation on migration; and the need to integrate migration into national development strategies as well as the post-2015 development agenda. The round tables reviewed the effects of international migration on sustainable development; identified measures to ensure respect for, and protection of, the human rights of all migrants; discussed partnerships and cooperation on international migration, reviewed mechanisms for integrating migration into development policies and highlighted the need for coherence at all levels; and discussed labour mobility and its impact on development.

The report further outlined the main initiatives of the Global Migration Group to implement the eight-point agenda for action, as proposed by the Secretary-General in his report prepared for the High-level Dialogue. The report found that, with respect to the protection of the human rights of all migrants, there had been only a few new ratifications of most international instruments concerned with international migrants and migration, and significant challenges persisted. Although some progress had been made in reducing the costs of labour migration, the average cost of transmitting remittances and recruitment costs for migrant workers remained high. In the field of migrant exploitation, responses to human trafficking and migrant smuggling had intensified. The plight of stranded migrants had received increasing attention, including through an initiative aimed at developing a set of voluntary guidelines for all stakeholders regarding emergency preparedness, institutional capacities, humanitarian assistance, protection responses and post-crisis support. In order to improve public perceptions of migrants, efforts had been undertaken to create greater public awareness of the contributions that migrants made to countries of origin and destination, and to combat discrimination, xenophobia and intolerance towards migrants and their families. The international community had begun to advocate for including migration-related goals and targets in the post-2015 development agenda. With regard to the migration evidence base, an April seminar found that the lack of consistent and complete migration data and the inherent challenges in forecasting migration continued to be an impediment to producing standardized approaches and reliable migration projections. During the year, the Global Migration Group organized briefings and side events to improve coordination with the Global Forum on Migration and Development.

The role of civil society in the follow-up to the High-level Dialogue was to include migration-related targets in the sustainable development goals of the post-2015 development agenda; provide protection and assistance to migrants in situations of crisis and transit; support reform of the migrant labour recruitment industry; and work with Member States to promote effective institutions and good governance in the context of international migration and development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/470/Add.1], adopted resolution 69/229 without vote [agenda item 21 (a)].

International migration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/208 of 23 December 2003, 59/241 of 22 December 2004, 60/227 of 23 December 2005, 61/208 of 20 December 2006, 63/225 of 19 December 2008, 65/170 of 20 December 2010 and 67/219 of 21 December 2012 on international migration and development, as well as its resolution 68/4 of 3 October 2013, by which it adopted the Declaration of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, its resolution 60/206 of 22 December 2005 on the facilitation and reduction of the cost of transfer of migrant remittances, its resolutions 62/156 of 18 December 2007, 64/166 of 18 December 2009, 66/172 of 19 December 2011 and 68/179 of 18 December 2013 on the protection of migrants and its resolution 62/270 of 20 June 2008 on the Global Forum on Migration and Development, and recalling also chapter X of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and Commission on Population and Development resolutions 2006/2 of 10 May 2006, 2008/1 of 11 April 2008, 2013/1 of 26 April 2013 and 2014/1 of 11 April 2014,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome and its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals, and recalling further the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, held from 20 to 22 September 2010, and its outcome document and the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, convened by the President of the General Assembly on 25 September 2013, and its outcome document,

Recalling further the Second High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, held in New York on 3 and 4 October 2013, which provided a useful opportunity to address constructively the issue of international migration and development and explore the opportunities and the challenges that international migration presents, including the protection of the human rights of migrants and the contribution of migrants to development, as reflected in the summary of its four round tables,

Recalling the regional events organized in 2013 in Bangkok from 29 to 31 May, in Cairo on 4 and 5 June, in Addis Ababa on 3 and 4 July and in Santiago on 10 and 11 July, during the preparatory process for the Second High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, as well as the preparatory events on international migration and development organized by the President of the General Assembly,

Recalling also its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and recalling the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling the importance of the decent work agenda of the International Labour Organization, including for migrant workers, the eight fundamental Conventions of that Organization and the Global Jobs Pact adopted by the International Labour Conference at its ninety-eighth session as a general framework within which each country can formulate policy packages specific to its situation and national priorities in order to promote a job-intensive recovery and sustainable development,

Taking note of the Secretary-General's eight-point agenda for action, which is aligned with the Declaration of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, and noting the contribution of civil society,

Recognizing the contribution of the Global Forum on Migration and Development to addressing the multidimensional nature of international migration and promoting balanced and comprehensive approaches, and noting the seventh meeting of the Forum, held in Stockholm in May 2014, on the theme "Unlocking the potential of migration for inclusive development",

Acknowledging that the Global Forum on Migration and Development has proved to be a valuable forum for holding frank and open discussions and that it has helped to build trust among participating stakeholders through the exchange of experiences and good practices and by virtue of its voluntary, informal State-led character,

Acknowledging also the important and complex interrelationship between international migration and development and the need to deal with the challenges and opportunities that migration presents to countries of origin, transit and destination, recognizing that migration brings benefits and challenges to the global community, and confirming the importance of including the matter in relevant debates and discussions held at the international level, including at the United Nations, in relation to development,

Recognizing that remittance flows constitute sources of private capital, complement domestic savings and are instrumental in improving the well-being of recipients, bearing in mind that remittances cannot be considered a substitute for foreign direct investment, official development assistance, debt relief or other public sources of financing for development,

Reaffirms that there is a need to further address and promote conditions for cheaper, faster and safer transfers of remittances in both source and recipient countries and, as appropriate, to encourage opportunities for development-oriented investment in recipient countries by beneficiaries that are willing and able to take such action,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Recognizes that international migration is a multi-dimensional reality of major relevance for the development of countries of origin, transit and destination, and in this regard recognizes that international migration is a cross-cutting phenomenon that should be addressed in a coherent, comprehensive and balanced manner, integrating development with due regard for social, economic and environmental dimensions and respecting human rights;

3. Also recognizes the need to strengthen synergies between international migration and development at all levels, including the global, regional, national and local levels, as appropriate;

4. Acknowledges the complexity of migratory flows and that international migration movements also occur within the same geographical regions, and in this context calls for a better understanding of migration patterns across and within regions, regardless of the level of development;

5. Reaffirms the need to promote and protect effectively the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, regardless of their migration status, especially those of women and children, and to address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation and dialogue and through a comprehensive and balanced approach, recognizing the roles and responsibilities of countries of origin, transit and destination in promoting and protecting the human rights of all migrants, and avoiding approaches that might aggravate their vulnerability;

6. Expresses concern about legislation adopted by some States that results in measures and practices that may restrict the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants, and reaffirms that, when exercising their sovereign right to enact and implement migratory and border security measures, States have the duty to comply with their obligations under international law, including international human rights law, in order to ensure full respect for the human rights of migrants;

7. Recognizes the need for international cooperation to address, in a holistic and comprehensive manner, the challenges of irregular migration to ensure safe, orderly and regular migration, with full respect for human rights;

8. Expresses concern about the large and growing number of migrants, especially women and children, including those unaccompanied or separated from their parents, who place themselves in a vulnerable situation by attempting to cross international borders without the required travel documents, and recognizes the obligation of States to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, especially those of women and children, regardless of their migration status;

9. Emphasizes the need to respect and promote international labour standards, as appropriate, and to respect the rights of migrants in their workplaces, including appropriate measures for the protection of women migrant workers in all sectors, including those involved in domestic work;

10. Notes the contribution of applicable international conventions, including the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, to the international system for the protection of migrants;

11. Recognizes that it is necessary to consider how the migration of highly skilled persons, especially in the health, social and engineering sectors, affects the development efforts of developing countries, and emphasizes the need to consider circular migration in this regard;

12. Also recognizes the importance of enhancing the capacities of low-skilled migrants in order to increase their access to employment opportunities in countries of destination;

13. Underlines the important role that migrants play as contributors in the development of origin, transit and destination countries and the need to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, regardless of their migration status, and encourages Member States to consider reducing the costs related to migration, such as the fees paid to recruiters, where applicable, lowering the transfer costs of remittances, enhancing the portability of social security entitlements and other acquired rights and promoting the mutual recognition of the educational and professional qualifications and competencies of migrants;

14. Takes note of the references to migration and development contained in the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, including target 10.c, which reads: "By 2030, reduce to less than 3 per cent the transaction costs of migrant remittances and eliminate remittance corridors with costs higher than 5 per cent";

15. Expresses its concern about the impact of financial and economic crises and natural disasters on international migration and migrants, and in this regard urges Governments to combat unfair and discriminatory treatment of all migrants, in particular migrant workers and their families;

16. Recognizes that women and girls account for almost half of all international migrants at the global level, and also recognizes the need to address the special situation and vulnerability of migrant women and girls by, inter alia, incorporating a gender perspective into policies and strengthening national laws, institutions and programmes to combat gender-based violence, including trafficking in persons and discrimination against women and girls;

17. Reiterates its commitment to preventing and combating trafficking in persons, protecting victims of trafficking, preventing and combating migrant smuggling, as well as the activities of transnational and national organized crime entities, and protecting migrants from exploitation and other abuses, stresses the need to establish or upgrade, as appropriate, national and regional anti-human-trafficking policies and to reinforce cooperation on prevention, the prosecution of traffickers and the protection of victims of trafficking, and encourages Member States to ratify, accede to and implement relevant international instruments on preventing and combating trafficking in persons and the smuggling of migrants;

18. Recognizes that the implementation at the national level of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, all of which were adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 55/25 of 15 November 2000, remains a challenge, and therefore stresses that it is important for States parties thereto to continue their efforts in this regard;

19. Encourages Member States to cooperate on mobility programmes that facilitate safe, orderly and regular migration, including through labour mobility, as well as programmes that allow migrants to integrate fully into society and that facilitate family reunification in accordance with the laws and specific criteria of each Member State;

20. Recognizes the need to consider the role that environmental factors may play in migration;

21. Also recognizes the need to improve public perceptions of migrants and migration, and in this regard welcomes the efforts undertaken to create greater public awareness of their contributions;

22. Strongly condemns the acts, manifestations and expressions of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrants and the stereotypes often applied to them, including on the basis of religion or belief, and urges States to apply and, where needed, reinforce the existing laws when xenophobic or intolerant acts, manifestations or expressions against migrants occur, in order to eradicate impunity for those who commit those acts;

23. Acknowledges the important contribution of migration in realizing the Millennium Development Goals, and recognizes that human mobility is a key factor for sustainable development which should be adequately considered in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

24. Recognizes the importance of coordinated efforts of the international community to assist and support migrants stranded in vulnerable situations and to facilitate, and cooperate on when appropriate, their voluntary return to their country of origin, and calls for practical and action-oriented initiatives aimed at identifying and closing protection gaps;

25. Underlines the right of migrants to return to their country of citizenship, and recalls that States must ensure that their returning nationals are duly received;

26. Requests the 18 members of the Global Migration Group to continue to take steps to strengthen their cooperation, enhance their engagement with Member States and civil society and engage jointly in work at the country level that is in the service of migrants and their families in societies of origin, transit and destination;

27. Emphasizes the need for reliable, accurate, disaggregated, nationally relevant and internationally comparable statistical data and indicators on international migration, including, when possible, on the contributions of migrants to development in both countries of origin and countries of destination in order to facilitate the design of evidence-based policymaking and decision-making in all relevant aspects of sustainable development, and in this regard invites the entities of the United Nations system and other relevant international organizations and multilateral institutions, in accordance with their mandates and as appropriate, to assist Member States in their capacity-building efforts in this matter;

28. Calls upon all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, other relevant intergovernmental, regional and subregional organizations, including the International Organization for Migration and other members of the Global Migration Group, and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on International Migration and Development, within their respective mandates, to strengthen their collaboration and cooperation to better and more fully address the issue of international migration and development, in order to adopt a coherent, comprehensive and coordinated approach, and to consider migration issues in their contributions to the preparatory process that will establish the post-2015 development agenda;

29. Recognizes the efforts made by the international community in addressing relevant aspects of international migration and development, through different initiatives, both within the United Nations system and in other processes, particularly the Global Forum on Migration and Development and regional processes, as well as in drawing on the expertise of the International Organization for Migration and other member agencies of the Global Migration Group;

30. Stresses the need to deepen the interaction between Governments and civil society in order to find responses to the challenges and the opportunities posed by international migration, to recognize the contribution of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to promoting the well-being of migrants and their integration into society, especially at times of conditions of extreme vulnerability, and to strengthen the support of the international community to the efforts of such organizations;

31. Requests the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on International Migration and Development to continue to facilitate the linkages between the United Nations and the Global Forum on Migration and Development, promote collaboration between the Global Forum process and the Global Migration Group, including the International Organization for Migration, and continue to advocate for the principles reflected in the Declaration of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development;

32. Decides to hold the Third High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development by no later than 2019, at United Nations Headquarters, in New York, to review the follow-up to the outcome of the Second High-level Dialogue and to advance the discussion on the multidimensional aspects of international migration, with the date and modalities of the dialogue to be decided upon at its seventy-first session, and also decides to hold such dialogues to continue reviewing the follow-up to previous High-level Dialogues at regular intervals and to determine the periodicity thereof at its seventy-first session, taking into account alignment with all relevant United Nations development review processes;

33. Calls upon all relevant bodies, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other relevant intergovernmental, regional and subregional organizations, including the Global Migration Group, within their respective mandates, to continue to address the issue of international migration and development, with a view to integrating migration issues, including a gender perspective and cultural diversity, in a more coherent way in the context of the follow-up to the Second High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development and the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and with respect for human rights;

34. Decides to work towards an effective and inclusive agenda on international migration that integrates development and respects human rights by improving the performance of existing institutions and frameworks, as well as partnering more effectively with all stakeholders involved in international migration and development at the regional and global levels;

35. Invites the regional commissions, in collaboration with other relevant entities of the United Nations system and the International Organization for Migration and in accordance with their respective mandates, to continue to examine the regional aspects of international migration and development and to provide inputs to the report of the Secretary-General on international migration and development to be submitted to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session;

36. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution that also looks further into the integration of the migration perspective at the national, regional and international levels, including information on best practices and recommendations to address the difficulties that migrants face and to bolster their contribution to development;

37. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled “Globalization and interdependence”, the sub-item entitled “International migration and development”.

Activities

Executive Board. The Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) held its first regular session (27–31 January), annual session (23–27 June) and second regular session (2–5 September) [E/2014/35] in New York.

On 27 June [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/15)], the Executive Board took note of the documents contained in the UNFPA Executive Director’s 2013 report [DP/FPA/2014/5 (Part I & Add.1, Part II)] [YUN 2013, pp. 1027–1028]. It requested UNFPA to present to the Board at its second regular session in 2014 an outline of the format and information that would be provided in the annual report 2015, based on the integrated results and resources framework of the strategic plan, including those from the global and regional interventions, which would allow for appropriate tracking of results achieved against expenditures.

Reports of Executive Director. In a report [DP/FPA/2015/5 (Part I)] to the Executive Board, the UNFPA Executive Director reviewed progress towards the 2014 results of the UNFPA strategic plan 2014–2017; outlined the progress achieved in implementing General Assembly resolution 67/226 [YUN 2012, p. 859] on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system, as requested by Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/5 [YUN 2013, p. 837]; and summarized the contribution of the global and regional interventions to the strategic plan results.

In 2014, the focus of UNFPA activities was on adolescents and youth, particularly adolescent girls, including in humanitarian settings, which underscored the importance of maintaining the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) agenda as a global development priority beyond 2014. UNFPA responded to 34 humanitarian crises, including the Ebola outbreak in West Africa and five Level 3 emergencies, in the Central African Republic, Iraq, the Philippines, South Sudan and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Fund achieved the results that it set out to deliver in the first year of the strategic plan 2014–2017. Eighty per cent of the outcome indicators were positive compared to baselines and on track towards the 2015 targets. Target achievement was satisfactory for 89 per cent of the indicator targets; only 3 per cent was the achievement unsatisfactory. The performance of the global and regional interventions, through which global and regional offices contributed to the strategic plan results, was also strong, with satisfactory target achievement for 79 per cent of the output indicator targets. It was not, however, satisfactory for 21 per cent of the targets. In 2014, the Fund spent $959.7 million of the integrated budget, including $61.6 million of the global and regional interventions. In line with the integrated budget, the largest expenditure, 52.3 per cent, went to increasing access to sexual and reproductive health services and reproductive rights. UNFPA addressed the two leading challenges—weakness in programme planning, monitoring and reporting, and limited implementing partner capacity—through implementing programmes in an inclusive, rights-based and culturally sensitive manner, engaging relevant stakeholders including religious parties and civil society actors; applying harmonized approaches with other UN agencies, development partners and civil society organizations; conducting proper environmental scanning; and applying the human rights-based approach to programming and proper advocacy strategies.

An addendum [DP/FPA/2015/5 (Part I/Add.1)] provided a statistical and financial review for 2014. The total UNFPA revenue was $1,025.1 million, including $523.3 million in regular resources. Total revenue increased by five per cent to $48.4 million, which was attributable to an increase in regular resource and other resource revenue of $27.7 and $20.7 million, respectively. Gross regular resource contribution revenue increased by $17.4 million, or 3.8 per cent, from 2013 to 2014.

JIU recommendations. The Executive Director reported [DP/FPA/2015/5 (Part II)], on UNFPA management responses to the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU). JIU issued six reports and one note in 2014 that were relevant to UNFPA: analysis of the resource mobilization function in the UN system

[JIU/REP/2014/1]; capital/refurbishment/construction projects across the UN system [JIU/REP/2014/3]; Post-Rio+20 review of environmental governance within the UN system [JIU/REP/2014/4]; analysis of the evaluation function in the UN system [JIU/REP/2014/6]; use of non-staff personnel and related contractual modalities in the UN system organizations [JIU/REP/2014/8]; contract management and administration in the UN system [JIU/REP/2014/9]; and use of retirees and staff retained beyond the mandatory age of separation at UN organizations [JIU/NOTE/2014/1]. Out of 61 recommendations made in 2014, 41 were relevant to UNFPA, of which 34 recommendations were addressed to UNFPA management and 7 to the legislative organs. Recommendations relevant to UNFPA issued by JIU in 2013 had been implemented or were being pursued; however, one recommendation was not accepted by UNFPA.

State of World Population report. The Fund's State of World Population 2014 report [Sales No. E.14.III.H.1], entitled "The Power of 1.8 Billion", focused on adolescents, youth and the transformation of the future. It framed investments in youth not solely as responding to the needs of young people, but also as an imperative for sustainable development. Investments were needed to build institutional capacity, strengthen human capital, pursue economic models that improved employment prospects, and promote inclusive governance and the enjoyment of human rights.

Development results

Access to integrated SRH services. Overall, steady progress was made in increasing the availability and use of integrated sexual and reproductive health (SRH) services, including family planning, maternal health and HIV. The proportion of countries in which 95 per cent of service delivery points had the seven life-saving maternal/reproductive health medicines increased from 32 per cent to 44 per cent; and the estimated proportion of countries in which at least 80 per cent of live births were attended by skilled health personnel increased from 53 per cent to 59 per cent. Exceeding the 2015 target of 21, 43 countries increased their annual SRH budget by at least 5 per cent. Through its global and regional interventions, the Fund advocated for expanded access to integrated SRH services. UNFPA co-chaired the Family Planning 2020 Reference Group; backed resolution 69/148 (see p. 1270) on intensification of efforts to end obstetric fistula; and provided 42 technical inputs for promoting SRH in the ICPD agenda beyond 2014 and the post-2015 development agenda. At country level, UNFPA strengthened capacity for delivering integrated SRH services by providing financial and technical support, tools and guidance to advocate for and strengthen systems. The Fund continued to lead and scale up the global Campaign to End Fistula, which comprised over 90 international partner agencies and supported over 50 countries to strengthen their national programming and policies. More than 10,175 fistula repair surgeries were conducted in 2014 with UNFPA support.

Development policies for adolescents. Adolescents, especially very young adolescent girls, were increasingly prioritized in development policies and programmes in 2014. The number of countries with laws allowing adolescents to access SRH services increased from 74 to 86, surpassing the 2015 target of 78. The proportion of young women aged 15–24 who had correct knowledge about HIV prevention increased from 22 per cent to 23 per cent. For young men, it remained at 32 per cent. At national level, particularly through the UNFPA-led Action for Adolescent Girls initiative, countries were provided with evidence, technical know-how and capacity in evidence-based programming on adolescents and youth. UNFPA advocated in 42 countries to allow adolescents and youth to have legal access to quality SRH counselling and HIV services, surpassing the target of 36 countries. With regard to comprehensive sexuality education, 24 countries aligned their curricula with international standards, bringing to 63 the number of programme countries with such curricula.

Gender equality and reproductive rights. The number of countries with a gender action plan covering reproductive rights and supported by a national budget allocation increased from 46 to 64; however, the proportion of countries that took action on all the reproductive rights recommendations accepted by the Universal Periodic Review from the previous cycle dropped from 37 per cent in 2012 to 23 per cent. With a view to the development, dissemination and implementation of multisectoral essential services standards on gender-based violence, the first-ever joint programme between UNFPA and UN-Women was rolled out, and over 23,000 women and girls received prevention, protection and care services related to female genital mutilation. Some 2,021 communities supported by UNFPA declared the abandonment of female genital mutilation, exceeding the target of 1,800. UNFPA supported civil society organizations, including faith-based groups, to engage in promoting reproductive rights and women's empowerment; and led the coordination of gender-based violence services in humanitarian crises. In 2014, 54 per cent of countries affected by humanitarian crises had a functioning inter-agency gender-based violence coordination body, compared to 38 per cent in 2012.

Population dynamics. UNFPA made progress in strengthening national policies and international development frameworks through integration of evidence-based analysis. The number of countries that had at least one census whose results were analysed and disseminated according to internationally agreed standards increased from 66 to 104; the number of countries that conducted a national household survey allowing estimation of key population and reproductive health indicators increased from 69 to 101; and the number of countries that completed evaluations on strategic interventions addressing SRH and adolescents and youth increased from 26 to 66. Additionally, 130 national development plans in UNFPA programme countries addressed population dynamics in setting development targets based on population trends and projections. At the global and regional level, UNFPA developed 35 tools, exceeding the target of 2, to reflect key findings on UNFPA priority issues in the post-2015 development agenda. The Fund provided technical support for 39 countries to conduct, analyse and disseminate census data; the population situation analysis was conducted in 31 countries.

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA programme expenditures for country, regional and global activities in 2014 from regular resources totalled $339.2 million, according to the Executive Director's statistical and financial review [DP/FPA/2015/5 (Part I/Add.1)]. That figure was complemented by $481.0 million from other resources, bringing 2014 expenditures to a total of $820.2 million. The 2014 figure from regular resources included $277.6 million for country programmes and $61.6 million for global and regional interventions. The figures for country programmes were complemented by $344.5 million from other sources, bringing the total for country programmes to $622.1 million.

Eastern and Southern Africa. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Eastern and Southern Africa totalled $183.2 million in 2014. The largest share was spent on increased availability and use of integrated SRH services (69.7 per cent), followed by population dynamics (11.5 per cent) and gender equality and reproductive rights (10.9 per cent).

On 31 January [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/9)], the Executive Board approved the final country programme document for Namibia. The Executive Board [dec. 2014/23], in June, approved the two-year programme extension for Burundi and, on an exceptional basis, the country programme document for Kenya. It further took note of the first one-year programme extension for Uganda; and the draft country programme documents and comments made for Angola and the Comoros. On 5 September [dec. 2014/29], the Executive Board approved the final country programmes of Angola and the Comoros, and approved the two-year programme extension for Botswana.

Western and Central Africa. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Western and Central Africa totalled $158.1 million in 2014. The largest share was spent on increased availability and use of integrated SRH services (66.2 per cent), followed by population dynamics (15.9 per cent) and increased priority on adolescents, especially on very young adolescent girls, in national development policies and programmes (8.2 per cent).

On 27 June [dec. 2014/23], the Executive Board approved the second programme extension, for one year, for Guinea-Bissau, and took note of the first one-year programme extension for Algeria and the draft country programme document and comments made for Sierra Leone. In September [dec. 2014/29], the Executive Board approved the final country programmes of Sierra Leone and Tunisia.

Arab States. Provisional data for UNFPA expenditures on programmes in Arab states totalled $83.4 million in 2014. The largest share was spent on increased availability and use of integrated SRH services (55.2 per cent), followed by gender equality and reproductive rights (26.4 per cent) and population dynamics (10.6 per cent).

In June [dec. 2014/23], the Executive Board took note of the first one-year programme extension for Lebanon and the draft country programme document and comments made for Tunisia. On 5 September [dec. 2014/29], the Executive Board approved the final country programme for Afghanistan and the country programme document for the State of Palestine.

Asia and the Pacific. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Asia and the Pacific totalled $160.2 million in 2014. The largest share was spent on increased availability and use of integrated SRH services (39.2 per cent), followed by population dynamics (39.0 per cent) and gender equality and reproductive rights (12.3 per cent).

On 27 June [dec. 2014/23], the Executive Board took note of the draft country programme documents and comments made for Afghanistan and Timor-Leste. On 5 September [dec. 2014/29], the Executive Board approved the final country programme of Timor-Leste.

Latin America and the Caribbean. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes amounted to $55.0 million in 2014. The largest share was spent on increased availability and use of integrated SRH services (45.5 per cent), followed by increased priority on adolescents, especially on very young adolescent girls, in national development policies and programmes (20.5 per cent) and population dynamics (16.0 per cent).

On 31 January [dec. 2014/9], the Executive Board approved the final country programme document for Mexico. In June [dec. 2014/23], the Executive Board took note of the draft country programme document and comments made for Venezuela. On 5 September, the Executive Board [dec. 2014/29] approved the final country programme for Venezuela and the country programme documents for Ecuador, Guatemala and Paraguay.

Eastern Europe and Central Asia. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA programmes in Eastern Europe and Central Asia totalled $28.0 million in 2014. The largest share was spent on increased availability and use of integrated SRH services (41.1 per cent), followed by population dynamics (22.5 per cent) and gender equality and reproductive rights (17.9 per cent).

On 5 September, the Executive Board approved [dec. 2014/29] the country programme document for Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Global programme. Provisional expenditures for UNFPA global activities totalled $152.3 million in 2014. Most of that amount was spent on increased availability and use of integrated SRH services (81.2 per cent), followed by gender equality and reproductive rights (6.2 per cent) and population dynamics (5.1 per cent).

Financial and management questions

Financing

UNFPA total revenue was $1,025.1 million in 2014, a $48.4 million (5.0 per cent) increase over the 2013 figure of $976.7 million. The revenue from regular resources was $477.4 million and the gross contribution of other resources was $529.2 million, summing up total gross contributions of $1,006.6 million. Total expenses were $995.6 million.

On 5 September [E/2014/35 (dec. 2014/29)], the Executive Board took note of the updated integrated resource plan for 2014–2017.

Audit and oversight

On 30 January [dec. 2014/8], the Executive Board took note of the UNFPA report on the status of implementation of the recommendations of the UN Board of Auditors for 2012 [YUN 2013, p. 1030]. It welcomed the progress made by UNDP and UNFPA in addressing the top audit-related priorities in 2012–2013 and requested them to continue to strengthen internal controls and improve oversight and monitoring of country offices, including the timely implementation of outstanding recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and to continue to ensure compliance with policies and procedures for procurement, inventory tracking and bank reconciliation. The Board further encouraged UNDP and UNFPA to prioritize the finalization of the revised framework for the harmonized approach to cash transfers, in coordination with other members of the United Nations Development Group, and to ensure improved oversight when the revised framework was implemented.

In April [DP/FPA/2014/6], the Director of the UNFPA Division for Oversight Services (DOS) reported on internal audit and oversight activities in 2013. During the year, DOS worked on 24 internal audit engagements; and issued 14 internal audit reports and 10 country office internal audit reports. The annual report of the UNFPA Audit Advisory Committee and the management response thereto were contained in an addendum [DP/FPA/2014/6/Add.1]. A separate comprehensive management response was made available on the UNFPA website. On 27 June [dec. 2014/21], the Executive Board took note of the reports and the corresponding management response, and encouraged UNFPA to develop and implement effective risk management policies to ensure effective delivery of the strategic plan.

On 27 June [dec. 2014/18], the Executive requested UNFPA to review and update its oversight policy, and to present for consideration and approval by the Executive Board, that revised oversight policy at the Board's first regular session in 2015. It further requested the Executive Director of UNFPA to keep the Board informed on progress made.

Other reports. Other documents issued in 2014 included a report of the UN Board of Auditors on UNFPA financial statements for 2013 [A/69/5/Add.8] and UNFPA follow up to that report of the Board of Auditors [DP/FPA/2015/3].

Evaluation

The UNFPA transitional biennial budgeted evaluation plan, 2014–2015 [DP/FPA/2014/2], which was aligned with the revised UNFPA evaluation policy approved by the Executive Board in decision 2013/21 [YUN 2013, p. 1031], and with General Assembly resolution 67/226 [YUN 2012, p. 859], encompassed both corporate evaluations, which included thematic and independent country programme evaluations, and programme-level evaluations. It also presented the resources allocated to evaluation that were incorporated in the UNFPA integrated budget estimates, 2014–2017, which the Executive Board approved in decision 2013/32 [YUN 2013, p. 1030]. The report further proposed topics for consideration in the evaluation plan, 2016–2017, including evaluation of the contribution of regionalization to UNFPA corporate and development results, 2009–2014; and evaluation of the Global Programme to Enhance Reproductive Health Commodity Security, 2013–2020.

On 30 January [dec. 2014/5], the Executive Board approved the UNFPA transitional biennial budgeted evaluation plan, 2014–2015, and invited UNFPA to hold discussions with the Executive Board on areas to be evaluated in 2016–2017, taking into account the topics as set out in the report.

In response to Executive Board decision 2013/31, in May UNFPA submitted the strategic framework for UNFPA global and regional interventions, 2014–2017 [DP/FPA/2014/8]. It presented the accountability mechanism, governance structure and strategic vision; outlined the linkages with the integrated results framework of the UNFPA strategic plan, 2014–2017; and included projected resources by outcome, disaggregated at the global and regional levels. An addendum [DP/FPA/2014/8/Add.1] provided results and resources frameworks for UNFPA global and regional interventions, 2014–2017.

On 27 June [dec. 2014/16], the Executive Board approved the strategic framework and endorsed the results and resources framework. It endorsed the proposal of UNFPA to conduct in 2016 an independent evaluation of the global and regional interventions; encouraged UNFPA to coordinate the evaluation; and requested that UNFPA ensure an appropriate and timely follow-up to relevant findings. It further requested that UNFPA report annually on the global and regional interventions as part of the annual report of the Executive Director, summarizing the contributions of the results and resources of the global and regional interventions to the achievements under the strategic plan, 2014–2017.

In April, the Director of the Evaluation Office [DP/FPA/2014/7] presented the annual report of evaluation, reviewing the evaluation function at UNFPA for the 2012–2013 biennium. The report contained information on human and financial resources dedicated to evaluation at UNFPA; progress made to build evaluation capacity within the organization; key findings and lessons learned from corporate evaluations finalized in 2012–2013; and actions undertaken to facilitate the use of evaluation at UNFPA.

On 27 June [dec. 2014/17], the Executive Board took note of the report on evaluation and requested the UNFPA Evaluation Office to include in the report information on the implementation of the evaluation policy and the biennial budgeted evaluation plan, 2014–2015. It requested UNFPA to report on progress in addressing key issues and challenges in evaluation in the report, and on follow-up to management responses to corporate and programme-level evaluations. The Executive Board further urged UNFPA to ensure that management responses addressed evaluation findings and recommendations in a timely manner, with a view to improving programme performance, effectiveness and efficiency.

Ethics Office

A March report [DP/FPA/2014/4] of the UNFPA Ethics Office reviewed the Office's activities in 2013, described trends in the mandated areas of its work, and assessed actions taken and progress made in addressing the key recommendations that were made to management in the 2012 annual report [YUN 2013, p. 1031].

On 27 June [dec. 2014/22], the Executive Board welcomed the report of the UNFPA Ethics Office and urged UNFPA management to continue its efforts to allocate sufficient resources to the ethics function.

Other financial and administrative issues

In a May report [DP/FPA/2014/9], UNFPA submitted to the Executive Board the proposed revisions to the financial regulations and rules to become effective 1 July 2014. In addition to a robust internal review by UNFPA management, the proposed revisions had been thoroughly reviewed and discussed with the UNFPA

Legal Office and UNFPA Office of Audit and Investigation Services. The Executive Board also had before it the report of the Advisory Committee on Administration and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on the proposed revisions to the UNFPA financial regulations and rules.

On 27 June [dec. 2014/19], the Executive Board endorsed the recommendations contained in the ACABQ report; approved the revisions of the financial regulations subject to the provisions listed in that decision, and took note of the changes to the financial rules and that the revised financial regulations and rules would become effective 1 July 2014.

The UNFPA Executive Director in July [DP/FPA/2014/15] reported on contributions by Member States and others to UNFPA and revenue projections for 2014 and future years. In 2013, UNFPA contribution revenue for regular and co-financing resources was $957.9 million, a decrease of 0.6 per cent over 2012. The breakdown of that total revenue was $460.0 million in voluntary contributions to regular resources and $497.8 million to co-financing resources. Compared with 2012, the increase in contributions for regular resources in 2013 was $22.5 million, or 5.1 per cent, and for co-financing, there was a decrease in contributions of $27.8 million, or 5.3 per cent.

On 5 September [dec. 2014/25], the Executive Board took note of the report; requested UNFPA to continue to improve its effectiveness and efficiency, including through the reduction of management costs; and encouraged all Member States to increase their contributions to regular resources. It further requested UNFPA to continue to explore incentives, mechanisms and funding windows to broaden the donor base and to support donors to increase their core contributions; and to present a resource mobilization strategy toward that end at the second regular session of the Executive Board in 2015. It encouraged UNFPA, in the context of the planned review of the new cost-recovery methodology and the related rates in 2016, to propose adjustments that might strengthen incentives for providing more predictable and less restricted/earmarked core and non-core funding; and decided to organize a structured dialogue with Member States to monitor and follow up on the predictability, flexibility and alignment of resources provided for implementation of the Strategic Plan, 2014–2017, including information on funding gaps.

A July report [DP-FPA-OPS/2014/1] of UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS on joint procurement activities presented key findings and outcomes from common procurement work conducted in 2013 and set out the initiatives under way in 2014.

On 5 September [dec. 2014/27], the Executive Board welcomed the report; requested UNDP, UNFPA and UNOPS to further improve the monitoring of joint procurement activities; to report on the implementation of the UN model framework for vendor sanctions; and to enhance the analysis in future reports, including quantified information on efficiency gains, lessons learned, challenges in pursuing a collaborative approach and how they were being addressed.

Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS

A July report [DP/2014/24-DP/FPA/2014/16 & Corr.] prepared jointly by UNDP and UNFPA addressed the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the Programme Coordinating Board of the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS). Issues of particular relevance to UNDP and UNFPA included the AIDS response in the post-2015 development agenda; a thematic segment on HIV, adolescents and youth; and the Unified Budget, Results and Accountability Framework and 2014–2015 budget of UNAIDS. The report stated that, despite considerable progress, AIDS was far from vanquished, and gains were reversible. Accelerated efforts were needed to achieve Millennium Development Goal 6 of halting and reversing the spread of HIV and reaching the targets of the UN Political Declaration on HIV/AIDS [YUN 2011, p. 1135]. UNDP, UNFPA and partners needed to step up the pace and sharpen the focus of HIV response. Continued dedicated action was required on the strategic vision of UNAIDS, concentrating on high-impact countries, and within countries, on key populations and underserved groups.

On 5 September [dec. 2014/29], the Executive Board took note of the report.

United Nations Population Award

The 2014 United Nations Population Award was presented to Father Aldo Marchesini of Italy in the individual category and the non-governmental organization Jhpiego (originally known as the Johns Hopkins Program for International Education in Gynaecology and Obstetrics) of the United States of America in the institutional category.

The Award was established by General Assembly resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals and institutions, or any combination thereof, for the most outstanding contributions to increasing awareness of population questions and to their solutions. In July [A/69/129], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award.

Other population activities

UN Population Division

The Secretary-General's report [E/CN.9/2015/6] on programme implementation and progress of work of the United Nations Population Division in 2014 described the Division's activities on the analysis of fertility, population policies and international migration; preparation of world population estimates and projections; analysis of mortality; interrelations between population and development; and the monitoring and dissemination of population information. The report also covered other major activities carried out by the Division, including the substantive servicing of intergovernmental bodies, preparation of parliamentary documentation and technical publications, organization of expert meetings and dissemination of results, mainly through the Internet.

In the area of fertility and family planning, the Population Division issued World Contraceptive Use 2014, a comprehensive data set on family planning indicators for 194 countries or areas. The data set filled some of the gaps in empirical data on family planning, including on the prevalence of specific methods and on the unmet need for family planning. A concise analysis of fertility was presented in the World Fertility Report 2013, which focused on fertility at the extremes: countries where fertility levels were relatively high (more than 3.2 children per woman) and countries where levels were relatively low (2.0 children per woman or fewer). The report highlighted the different pathways countries had taken that resulted in extreme levels of fertility, how key correlates of fertility had changed over time and the policy approaches of countries with extreme fertility levels.

In the area of population policies, the Population Division launched the United Nations Eleventh Inquiry among Governments on Population and Development, which was to be completed in 2015. It recorded government views and policies on key aspects of population and development; and provided a tool for documenting how such views and policies had changed over time. The Division published a report entitled "Abortion Policies and Reproductive Health around the World", which provided up-to-date information on government policies on abortion and related reproductive health issues for all Member, Observer and non-member States of the United Nations, and discussed changes between 1996 and 2013 in the legal grounds on which induced abortion was permitted in each country. The Division also published a policy brief on that topic using information from the 2013 revision of the World Population Policies Database [YUN 2013, p. 1033]. Among the key findings was that, although a growing number of countries around the world had expanded the legal grounds for abortion, abortion policies in many countries continued to be restrictive.

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/219 [YUN 2012, p. 1029], the Population Division prepared the report of the Secretary-General on international migration and development (see p. 1209). It hosted two retreats of the Global Migration Group related to international migration, migrants and mobility for the post-2015 development agenda; and continued to maintain and update the global migration database, which included over 4,800 data tables available for over 91 per cent of all countries and areas of the world.

In the field of world population estimates and projections, the Population Division issued World Urbanization Prospects: The 2014 Revision, which showed that 54 per cent of the world's population resided in urban areas in 2014. The most urbanized regions included northern America (82 per cent living in urban areas in 2014), Latin America and the Caribbean (80 per cent) and Europe (73 per cent). In contrast, Africa and Asia remained mostly rural, with 40 and 48 per cent of their respective populations living in urban areas.

Regarding health and mortality, the Population Division produced several studies related to adult mortality, including mortality at older ages; contributed to the work of the Inter-Agency Group for Child Mortality Estimation; continued to collaborate in the Maternal Mortality Estimation Inter-Agency Group; conducted research on the use of sibling histories from surveys to derive maternal mortality estimates; and produced a technical paper entitled "The impact of including reports from male respondents on estimates of maternal mortality from demographic and health surveys".

In the field of population and development, the Population Division published a wall chart on population and development in small island developing States, in anticipation of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States (see p. 936). In the area of urbanization, the Division produced a new version of the estimates of the Urban and Rural Population by Age and Sex for the period 1980–2015 for all countries of the world with a population of 300,000 inhabitants or more in 2014, which was available in CD-ROM and as an interactive database online. The Division continued its work in updating its databases and analyses in the area of population ageing. It released a new database entitled "Population ageing and development 2014", which contained time-series indicators on population ageing and development, including population size and age structure, fertility, health and mortality, socioeconomic indicators and government views and policies related to ageing.

In relation to the interrelations between population and the environment and the international attention to sustainable development and the post-2015 development agenda, the Population Division released the "Population and development" database, which included 62 variables dealing with population dynamics, labour force, education, health, economic growth, social development, natural resources and the environment.

Regarding monitoring, coordination and dissemination of population information, the Population Division prepared the reports for the forty-seventh session of the Commission on Population and Development (see p. 1207), including the biennial report of the Secretary-General on world demographic trends (ibid.); the report of the Secretary-General on the framework of action for the follow-up to the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) beyond 2014 (see p. 1206); an index report indicating recurrent themes and key elements identified during the sessions of the Commission, which was transmitted for consideration at the twenty-ninth special session of the General Assembly on the follow-up to ICPD beyond 2014 (see p. 1207).

The Population Division organized the Twelfth Coordination Meeting on International Migration (New York, 21–22 February) (see p. 1208), which focused on the follow-up to and implementation of the Declaration of the 2013 High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development [YUN 2013, p. 1025], and of the eight-point agenda for action of the Secretary-General [ibid., p. 1024]. The Division also participated in the twenty-fourth session of the Committee for the Coordination of Statistical Activities (see p. 1465) and in the meeting of the Inter-Agency and Expert Group on Millennium Development Goals Indicators (Geneva, 7–9 October) to assess progress towards Goal 5 on improving maternal health, including target 5.B on reproductive health. The Division updated and expanded its website to provide timely access to population information, including through the newly released Population Policy Database; and promoted content via social media channels.

In the area of technical cooperation, the Population Division, in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, provided technical support to the Government of Uruguay at the request of the Office of Planning and Budget. In collaboration with the Statistics Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the Economic Commission for Africa, the Population Division convened a workshop on "Strengthening the collection and use of international migration data for development" in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in November, which served to enhance the capacity of 40 participants from 13 countries of sub-Saharan Africa to produce national migration data and use the data for policy purposes.

Social policy, cultural development and human resources development

In 2014, the United Nations continued to promote social, cultural and human resources development, and to implement related programmes of action including on the situation of ageing persons, persons with disabilities, youth, the family and literacy.

The Commission for Social Development held its fifty-second regular session in February under the priority theme “Promoting empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all”. The General Assembly considered follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development and to the Assembly’s twenty-fourth (2000) special session.

The Open-ended Working Group on Ageing continued to monitor progress in the implementation and follow-up to the Second World Assembly on Ageing, focusing on implementation of existing international framework on the human rights of older persons and identification of existing gaps at the international level.

In the area of disability, in December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution calling for urgent action by all stakeholders towards the adoption and implementation of more ambitious disability-inclusive national development strategies with disability-targeted actions, backed by increased international cooperation and support.

The General Assembly, in December, designated 15 July as World Youth Skills Day, highlighting the importance of the acquisition of skills by youth in enhancing their ability to make informed choices in life and work. During the year, the United Nations observed the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family.

Regarding cultural development, in June, the General Assembly established the United Nations Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela Prize as a tribute to the achievements and contributions of individuals to the purpose and principles of the United Nations. In August, the United Nations Alliance of Civilizations held its sixth Global Forum in Bali, Indonesia and adopted the Bali Declaration, by which Member States reaffirmed the importance of common and shared values as a unifying factor in a world facing multiple challenges to coexistence.

In the field of human resources development, the United Nations University (UNU) established the UNU Centre for Policy Research at the UNU Centre in Tokyo to enhance UNU policy relevance in the fields of peace, security and global development. In addition, the United Nations System Staff College reached a record number of beneficiaries in 2014, exceeding 16,000.

Follow-up to 1995 World Summit and General Assembly special session

On 18 July [A/69/157], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/135 [YUN 2013, p. 1036], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly [YUN 2000, p. 1012]. He provided an overview of discussions held by the Commission for Social Development at its fifty-second session (see p. 1226), with a focus on the priority theme “Promoting empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all”.

In the first part of the report, the Secretary-General reviewed policies and strategies for the promotion of people empowerment. He also addressed the special needs of Africa and the least developed countries, as well as progress made in the implementation of programmes related to social groups and social integration, highlighting the situations of young people, older persons, persons with disabilities, families and indigenous peoples. In the second part, he focused on the social dimension of sustainable development and examined policies and strategies that could influence the social conditions and factors that shape processes of change across social, economic and environmental domains.

The Secretary-General’s recommendations to the General Assembly included the need for Governments to invest in social protection and essential social services; improve access to decent work and to information and productive resources; eliminate discriminatory laws, policies and practices and other barriers to participation; enhance institutional transparency and accountability mechanisms in order to facilitate broad-based civic participation through periodic consultations, public hearings, town hall meetings and social dialogue; strengthen capacities for gathering, and analysing and making widely available, high-quality, timely and reliable data; enhance policy coherence and coordination across the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development, with poverty eradication and the promotion of decent work as central objectives; and give priority to employment creation and the expansion of social protection in national policymaking.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/69/480], adopted resolution 69/143 without vote [agenda item 26 (a)].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled “World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world”, held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, as well as a continued global dialogue on social development issues, constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the development goals contained therein, as well as the commitments made at major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, including the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit and at the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, and the outcome of the 2013 special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling also its resolution 57/270 B of 23 June 2003 on the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling further its resolution 63/303 of 9 July 2009 entitled “Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development”,

Welcoming the decision of the Economic and Social Council that the priority theme for the 2015–2016 review and policy cycle of the Commission for Social Development shall be “Rethinking and strengthening social development in the contemporary world”,

Recalling the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2012 of the Economic and Social Council, entitled “Promoting productive capacity, employment and decent work to eradicate poverty in the context of inclusive, sustainable and equitable economic growth at all levels for achieving the Millennium Development Goals”,

Recalling also the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2013 of the Economic and Social Council, entitled “Science, technology and innovation, and the potential of culture, for promoting sustainable development and achieving the Millennium Development Goals”,

Recalling further the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the 2014 session of the Economic and Social Council on the theme “Addressing ongoing and emerging challenges for meeting the Millennium Development Goals in 2015 and for sustaining development gains in the future”,

Noting that the decent work agenda of the International Labour Organization, with its four strategic objectives, has an important role to play in achieving the objective of full and productive employment and decent work for all, including its objective of social protection, as reaffirmed in the International Labour Organization Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, in which the particular role of the Organization in promoting fair globalization and its responsibility to assist its members in their efforts were acknowledged, as well as in the Global Jobs Pact,

Emphasizing the need to enhance the role of the Commission for Social Development in the follow-up to and review of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, welcoming the views of the Commission, as discussed at its fifty-first and fifty-second sessions, in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda, and looking forward to the views of the Commission on the ongoing discussions on the post-2015 development agenda,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Developments Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Recognizing that the three core themes of social development, namely, poverty eradication, full and productive employment and decent work for all and social integration, are interrelated and mutually reinforcing and that an enabling environment therefore needs to be created so that all three objectives can be pursued simultaneously,

Recognizing also that a people-centred approach must be at the centre of economic and social development,

Expressing deep concern that attainment of the social development objectives is being hindered by the ongoing adverse impact of the world financial and economic crisis, volatile energy and food prices and the challenges posed by climate change,

Recognizing the complex character of the ongoing food insecurity situation, including food price volatility, as a combination of several major factors, both structural and conjunctural, which is also negatively affected by, inter alia, environmental degradation, drought and desertification, global climate change, natural disasters and the lack of the necessary technology, and recognizing also that a strong commitment from national Governments and the international community as a whole is required to confront the major threats to food security and to ensure that policies in the area of agriculture do not distort trade and worsen food insecurity,

Acknowledging the need to further mainstream sustainable development at all levels, integrating economic, social and environmental aspects and recognizing their interlinkages, so as to achieve sustainable development in all its dimensions,

Reaffirming the need to achieve sustainable development by promoting sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, creating greater opportunities for all, reducing inequalities, raising basic standards of living, fostering equitable and inclusive social development and promoting the integrated and sustainable management of natural resources,

Deeply concerned that extreme poverty persists in all countries of the world, regardless of their economic, social and cultural situation, and that its extent and its manifestations, such as hunger and malnutrition, trafficking in human beings, disease, lack of adequate shelter and illiteracy, are particularly severe in developing countries, while acknowledging the significant progress made in several parts of the world in combating extreme poverty,

Recognizing the importance of the international community in supporting national capacity-building efforts in the area of social development, while recognizing the primary responsibility of national Governments in this regard,

Affirming its strong support for fair globalization and the need to translate growth into eradication of poverty and commitment to strategies and policies that aim to promote full, freely chosen and productive employment and decent work for all and that these strategies and policies should constitute fundamental components of relevant national and international policies and national development strategies, including poverty reduction strategies, and reaffirming that employment creation and decent work for all should be incorporated into macroeconomic policies, taking fully into account the impact and social dimension of globalization, the benefits and costs of which are often unevenly shared and distributed,

Recognizing the need to enhance access to the benefits of trade, including agricultural trade, for developing countries in order to foster social development,

Recognizing also that social inclusion is a means for achieving social integration and is crucial for fostering stable, safe, harmonious, peaceful and just societies and for improving social cohesion so as to create an environment for development and progress,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the reaffirmation by Governments of their will and commitment to continue implementing the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, in particular to eradicate poverty, promote full and productive employment and decent work for all and foster social integration to achieve stable, safe and just societies for all;

3. Recognizes that the implementation of the Copenhagen commitments and the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, are mutually reinforcing and that the Copenhagen commitments are crucial to a coherent people-centred approach to development;

4. Reaffirms that the Commission for Social Development continues to have the primary responsibility for the follow-up to and review of the World Summit for Social Development and the outcome of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly and that it serves as the main United Nations forum for an intensified global dialogue on social development issues, and calls upon Member States, the relevant specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and civil society to enhance their support for its work;

5. Expresses deep concern that the ongoing adverse impact of the world financial and economic crisis, volatile energy and food prices and food insecurity and the challenges posed by climate change, as well as the lack of results so far in the multilateral trade negotiations, have negative implications for social development;

6. Stresses the importance of the policy space of national Governments, in particular in the areas of social expenditure and social protection programmes, and calls upon international financial institutions and donors to support developing countries in achieving their social development, in line with their national priorities and strategies by, among other things, providing debt relief;

7. Recognizes that the broad concept of social development affirmed by the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly has not been fully implemented in national and international policymaking and that, although poverty eradication is a central part of development policy and discourse, further attention should be given to the other commitments agreed to at the Summit, in particular those concerning employment and decent work and social integration, which have also suffered from a general disconnect between economic and social policymaking;

8. Acknowledges that the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997–2006), launched after the World Summit for Social Development, has provided the long-term vision for sustained and concerted efforts at the national and international levels to eradicate poverty;

9. Recognizes that the implementation of the commitments made by Governments during the first Decade has fallen short of expectations, and recalls the proclamation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017) by the General Assembly in its resolution 62/205 of 19 December 2007 in order to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, the internationally agreed development goals related to poverty eradication, including the Millennium Development Goals;

10. Emphasizes that the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the Millennium Summit, the 2005 World Summit, the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the 2013 special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, the International Conference on Financing for Development, in its Monterrey Consensus, and the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, have reinforced the priority and urgency of poverty eradication within the United Nations development agenda;

11. Also emphasizes that poverty eradication policies should tackle poverty by addressing its root and structural causes and manifestations and that equity, inclusivity, the reduction of inequalities and the empowerment of the poor need to be incorporated into those policies;

12. Reaffirms that each country has the primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, and underlines the importance of adopting effective measures, including new financial mechanisms, as appropriate, to support the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth, sustainable development, poverty eradication and the strengthening of their democratic systems;

13. Stresses that an enabling environment is a critical precondition for achieving equity and social development and that, while economic growth is essential, entrenched inequality and marginalization are an obstacle to the broad-based and sustained growth required for sustainable, inclusive and people-centred development, and recognizes the need to balance and ensure complementarity between measures to achieve growth and measures to achieve economic and social equity and inclusion in order for there to be an impact on overall poverty levels;

14. Also stresses that stability in global financial systems and corporate social responsibility and accountability, as well as national economic policies that have an impact on other stakeholders, are essential in creating an enabling international environment to promote economic growth and social development;

15. Recognizes the need to promote respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to address the most pressing social needs of people living in poverty, including through the design and development of appropriate mechanisms to strengthen and consolidate democratic institutions and governance;

16. Stresses the importance of economic, social and cultural rights and the importance of the principles of non-discrimination, inclusivity and meaningful participation for the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development;

17. Reaffirms the commitment to gender equality and the empowerment of women, as well as to the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into all development efforts, recognizing that they are critical for achieving sustainable development and for efforts to combat hunger and malnutrition, poverty and disease and to strengthen policies and programmes that improve, ensure and broaden the full participation of women in all spheres of political, economic, social and cultural life, as equal partners, and improve their access to all resources needed for the full exercise of all their human rights and fundamental freedoms by removing persistent barriers, including ensuring equal access to full and productive employment and decent work for all, as well as strengthening their economic independence;

18. Encourages Governments to promote effective participation of people in civic, social, economic and political activities, as well as in the planning and implementation of social integration policies and strategies, in order to better achieve the goals of poverty eradication, full employment and decent work and social integration;

19. Reaffirms the commitment to the promotion of opportunities for full, freely chosen and productive employment, including for the most disadvantaged, as well as decent work for all, including respect for fundamental principles and rights at work, also reaffirms that there is an urgent need to create an environment at the national and international levels that is conducive to the attainment of full and productive employment and decent work for all as a foundation for sustainable development, that an environment that supports investment, growth and entrepreneurship is essential to the creation of new job opportunities and that human resources development strategies should be premised on national development objectives that ensure a strong link between education, health, training and employment, help to maintain a productive and competitive workforce and are responsive to the needs of the economy, and further reaffirms that opportunities for men and women to obtain productive work in conditions of freedom, equity, security and human dignity are essential to ensuring the eradication of hunger and poverty, the improvement of economic and social well-being for all, the achievement of sustained economic growth and sustainable development of all nations and a fully inclusive and equitable globalization;

20. Stresses the importance of removing obstacles to the realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, in particular of peoples living under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, which adversely affect their social and economic development, including their exclusion from labour markets;

21. Reaffirms the need to address all forms of violence in its many manifestations, including domestic violence, particularly against women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities, and discrimination, including xenophobia, recognizes that violence increases challenges to States and societies in the achievement of poverty eradication, full and productive employment and decent work for all and social integration, and further recognizes that terrorism, trafficking in arms, organized crime, trafficking in persons, money-laundering, ethnic and religious conflict, civil war, politically motivated killing and genocide present fundamental threats to societies and pose increasing challenges to States and societies in the attainment of conditions conducive to social development and that they also present urgent and compelling reasons for action by Governments individually and, as appropriate, jointly to foster social cohesion while recognizing, protecting and valuing diversity;

22. Requests the United Nations funds, programmes and agencies to mainstream the goal of full and productive employment and decent work for all into their policies, programmes and activities, as well as to support the efforts of Member States aimed at achieving this objective, and invites financial institutions to support efforts in this regard;

23. Recognizes that promoting full employment and decent work for all also requires investing in education, training and skills development for women and men, and girls and boys, strengthening social protection and health systems and applying international labour standards, and urges States and, as appropriate, the relevant entities of the United Nations system and international and regional organizations, within their respective mandates, as well as civil society, the private sector, employer organizations, trade unions, the media and other relevant actors, to continue to develop and strengthen policies, strategies and programmes to enhance, in particular, the employability of women and youth and to ensure their access to full and productive employment and decent work for all, including by improving access to formal and non-formal education, skills development and vocational training, lifelong learning and retraining and long-distance education, inter alia, in information and communications technology and entrepreneurial skills, particularly in developing countries, including with a view to supporting the economic empowerment of women in the different stages of their lives;

24. Also recognizes that full and productive employment and decent work for all, which encompass social protection, fundamental principles and rights at work, tripartism and social dialogue, are key elements of sustainable development for all countries and are therefore an important objective of international cooperation, and supports the promotion of innovative approaches in the design and implementation of employment policies and programmes for all, including the long-term unemployed;

25. Encourages States to design and implement policies and strategies for poverty eradication, full employment and decent work for all, including the creation of full and productive employment that is appropriately and adequately remunerated, as well as policies and strategies for social integration that promote gender equality and the empowerment of women and address the specific needs of social groups such as young people, persons with disabilities, older persons, migrants and indigenous peoples, taking into account the concerns of those groups in the planning, implementation and evaluation of development programmes and policies;

26. Stresses the need to allocate adequate resources for the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women in the workplace, including unequal access to labour market participation and wage inequalities, as well as reconciliation of work and private life for both women and men;

27. Acknowledges the important nexus between international migration and social development, and stresses the importance of effectively enforcing labour laws with regard to migrant workers' labour relations and working conditions, inter alia, those related to their remuneration and conditions of health, safety at work and the right to freedom of association;

28. Recognizes the responsibility of Governments to urgently and significantly scale up efforts to accelerate the transition towards universal access to affordable and quality health-care services;

29. Acknowledges that universal health coverage implies that all people have access, without discrimination, to nationally determined sets of needed promotive, preventive, curative and rehabilitative basic health services and essential, safe, affordable, effective and quality medicines, while ensuring that the use of these services does not expose the users to financial hardship;

30. Recognizes that, since the convening of the World Summit for Social Development in Copenhagen in 1995, advances have been made in addressing and promoting social integration, including through the adoption of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, the World Programme of Action for Youth, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

31. Stresses that the benefits of economic growth should be inclusive and distributed more equitably and that, in order to close the gap of inequality and avoid any further deepening of inequality, comprehensive social policies and programmes, including appropriate social transfer and job creation programmes and social protection systems, are needed;

32. Recognizes the importance of providing social protection schemes for the formal and informal economy as instruments for achieving equity, inclusion and stability and cohesion of societies, and emphasizes the importance of supporting national efforts aimed at bringing informal workers into the formal economy;

33. Stresses that poverty eradication policies should, inter alia, ensure that people living in poverty have access to education, health care, water and sanitation and other public and social services, as well as access to productive resources, including credit, land, training, technology, knowledge and information, and also ensure that citizens and local communities participate in decision-making on social development policies and programmes in this regard;

34. Recognizes that the social integration of people living in poverty should encompass addressing and meeting their basic human needs, including nutrition, health, water, sanitation, housing and access to education and employment, through integrated development strategies;

35. Reaffirms that social integration policies should seek to reduce inequalities, promote access to basic social services, education for all and health care, eliminate discrimination, increase the participation and integration of social groups, particularly young people, older persons and persons with disabilities and address the challenges posed to social development by globalization and market driven reforms in order for all people in all countries to benefit from globalization;

36. Urges Governments, with the cooperation of relevant entities, to develop systems of social protection that support labour market participation and address and reduce inequality and social exclusion and to extend or broaden, as appropriate, their effectiveness and coverage, including for workers in the informal economy, invites the International Labour Organization to strengthen its social protection strategies and policies on extending social security coverage, urges Governments, while taking account of national circumstances, to focus on the needs of those living in, or vulnerable to, poverty and to give particular consideration to universal access to basic social security systems, including the implementation of social protection floors, which can provide a systemic base upon which to address poverty and vulnerability, and in this regard takes note of the International Labour Organization recommendation on social protection floors;

37. Requests the United Nations system to continue to support national efforts of Member States to achieve inclusive social development in a coherent and coordinated manner;

38. Reaffirms the commitment to promote the rights of indigenous peoples in the areas of education, employment, housing, sanitation, health and social security, and notes the attention paid to those areas in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples;

39. Recognizes the need to formulate social development policies in an integral, articulated and participative manner, recognizing poverty as a multidimensional phenomenon, calls for interlinked public policies on this matter, and underlines the need for public policies to be included in a comprehensive development and well-being strategy;

40. Acknowledges the role that the public sector can play as an employer and its importance in developing an environment that enables the effective generation of full and productive employment and decent work for all;

41. Also acknowledges the vital role that the private sector can play in generating new investments, employment and financing for development and in advancing efforts towards full employment and decent work for all, and encourages the private sector, including small and medium-sized enterprises and cooperatives, to contribute to decent work for all and job creation for both women and men, and particularly for young people, including through partnerships with Governments, the United Nations system, civil society and academia;

42. Recognizes that steps should be taken to anticipate and offset the negative social and economic consequences of globalization, giving priority to agricultural and non-farm sectors, and to maximize its benefits for poor people living and working in rural areas, while paying special attention to the development of microenterprises and small and medium-sized enterprises, particularly in rural areas, as well as subsistence economies, to secure their safe interaction with larger economies;

43. Stresses that more concerted efforts are required to boost smallholder productivity in a sustainable manner, including scaling up public investments in agriculture, attracting responsible private investment in agriculture, improving the quality and quantity of rural extension services and ensuring that smallholder farmers, in particular women, have access to the necessary resources, assets and markets;

44. Recognizes the need to pay necessary attention to the social development of people in urban areas, especially the urban poor;

45. Also recognizes the need to give priority to investing in and further contributing to sustainable development, including sustainable agricultural development, and to a financial infrastructure that provides access to a variety of sustainable products and services for micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises and entrepreneurship cooperatives and other forms of social enterprises, and the participation and entrepreneurship of women as means to promote full and productive employment and decent work for all;

46. Reaffirms the commitments made in respect of meeting the special needs of Africa at the 2005 World Summit, underlines the call of the Economic and Social Council for enhanced coordination within the United Nations system and the ongoing efforts to harmonize the current initiatives on Africa, and requests the Commission for Social Development to continue to give due prominence in its work to the social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa's Development;

47. Also reaffirms, in this context, that international cooperation has an essential role in assisting developing countries, including the least developed countries, in strengthening their human, institutional and technological capacity;

48. Stresses that the international community should enhance its efforts to create an enabling environment for social development and poverty eradication through increasing market access for developing countries, technology transfer on mutually agreed terms, financial aid and a comprehensive solution to the external debt problem;

49. Also stresses that international trade and stable financial systems can be effective tools to create favourable conditions for the development of all countries and that trade barriers and some trading practices continue to have negative effects on employment growth, particularly in developing countries;

50. Acknowledges that good governance and the rule of law at the national and international levels are essential for sustained economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty, hunger and malnutrition;

51. Underlines the fact that the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015 and the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for official development assistance to the least developed countries, and urges developed countries that have not yet done so to fulfil their commitments for official development assistance to developing countries;

52. Stresses the essential role that official development assistance plays in complementing, leveraging and sustaining financing for development efforts in developing countries and in facilitating the achievement of development objectives, including the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the Millennium Development Goals, and welcomes steps to improve the effectiveness and quality of aid based on the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization, managing for results and mutual accountability;

53. Urges Member States and the international community to fulfil all their commitments to meet the demands for social development, including social services and assistance, that have arisen from the global financial and economic crisis, which particularly affects the poorest and most vulnerable;

54. Encourages Member States to reflect in their development strategies current trends in global growth, including nascent recoveries in some economies that offer new opportunities for trade, investment and growth;

55. Welcomes the contribution to the mobilization of resources for social development by the initiatives taken on a voluntary basis by groups of Member States based on innovative financing mechanisms, including those that aim to provide further drug access at affordable prices to developing countries on a sustainable and predictable basis, such as the International Drug Purchase Facility, UNITAID, as well as other initiatives such as the International Finance Facility for Immunization and the Advance Market Commitments for Vaccines, and notes the New York Declaration of 20 September 2004, which launched the Action against Hunger and Poverty initiative and called for further attention to raising funds urgently needed to help to meet the Millennium Development Goals and to complement and ensure the long-term stability and predictability of foreign aid;

56. Reaffirms that social development requires the active involvement of all actors in the development process, including civil society organizations, corporations and small businesses, and that partnerships among all relevant actors are increasingly becoming part of national and international cooperation for social development, also reaffirms that, within countries, partnerships among the Government, civil society and the private sector can contribute effectively to the achievement of social development goals, and acknowledges the importance of efforts to promote the exchange of information and knowledge on decent work for all and job creation, including green jobs initiatives and related skills, and to facilitate the integration of relevant data into national economic and employment policies;

57. Underlines the responsibility of the private sector, at both the national and the international levels, including small and large companies and transnational corporations, regarding not only the economic and financial implications but also the development, social, gender and environmental implications of their activities, their obligations towards their workers and their contributions to achieving sustainable development, including social development, emphasizes the responsibility of transnational corporations to respect all applicable laws and international principles, including the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights: Implementing the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, to operate transparently, in a socially and environmentally responsible manner and to refrain from affecting the well-being of peoples, and also emphasizes the need to take further concrete actions on corporate responsibility and accountability, including through the participation of all relevant stakeholders, inter alia, for the prevention or prosecution of corruption, and to prevent human rights abuses;

58. Stresses the importance of promoting corporate social responsibility and accountability, encourages responsible business practices, such as those promoted by the Global Compact and the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, invites the private sector to take into account not only the economic and financial implications but also the development, social, human rights, gender and environmental implications of its undertakings, and underlines the importance of the International Labour Organization Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy;

59. Acknowledges the inclusion in the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals of a goal to end poverty in all its forms everywhere and a goal to promote sustained, inclusive and sustainable economic growth, full and productive employment and decent work for all, and reiterates the continued importance of giving due consideration to poverty eradication, social integration, full employment and decent work for all in the ongoing discussion on the post-2015 development agenda;

60. Reaffirms the importance of rethinking and strengthening social development in the contemporary world by, inter alia, appraising progress made, identifying gaps and challenges in achieving the internationally agreed social development goals and realizing opportunities for social development;

61. Stresses the importance of the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and invites all Member States, relevant organizations of the United Nations development system and the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other international organizations, as well as civil society and private sector organizations, to actively promote and undertake activities during 2015 to support an appropriate celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the World Summit;

62. Decides to devote one high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly, within existing resources, at its seventieth session, in 2015, to the commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the World Summit, in order to celebrate the progress made so far and to further strengthen the role of social development beyond 2015, and requests the President of the General Assembly to conduct consultations with Member States in order to determine the modalities for that meeting;

63. Invites the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council, the regional commissions, the relevant specialized agencies, the funds and programmes of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental forums, within their respective mandates, to continue to integrate into their work programmes and give priority attention to the Copenhagen commitments and the Declaration on the tenth anniversary of the World Summit for Social Development, to continue to be actively involved in their follow-up and to monitor the achievement of those commitments and undertakings;

64. Invites the Economic and Social Council and the Commission for Social Development to give appropriate consideration to the commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the World Summit by organizing a meeting during the regular programme of work of the substantive session of the Council and a half-day meeting during the fifty-third session of the Commission, in 2015, taking into account the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda and the fact that a summit at the level of Heads of State and Government for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda will be held in September 2015;

65. Invites the Commission for Social Development to emphasize, in its review of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action, the increased exchange of national, regional and international experiences, the focused and interactive dialogues among experts and practitioners and the sharing of best practices and lessons learned and to remain actively engaged in the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda;

66. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Social development”, the sub-item entitled “Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly”, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the question to the Assembly at that session.

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development, at its fifty-second regular session (New York, 11–21 February 2014) [E/2014/26-E/CN.5/2014/10], discussed the priority theme “Promoting empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all”, and reviewed UN programmes of action on the situation of social groups and the social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD) (see p. 1085). It also convened three high-level panel discussions on: the priority theme; the emerging issue of social drivers of sustainable development; and the observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family [YUN 1989, p. 612]. The high-level panel on the priority theme highlighted the importance of empowerment in accelerating the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 49] and ensuring that the post-2015 development agenda would be people-centred. To that end, the panel stressed the need to create synergies between empowerment policies and the social pillar of sustainable development as highlighted in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the post-2015 development agenda, as well as the need to integrate social, economic and environmental aspects of development. The high-level panel on social drivers of sustainable development emphasized the importance of viewing sustainable development through a social lens as a means to formulating an inclusive post-2015 development framework. In that vein, focusing on social drivers would enable policymakers to understand social factors that drive or sustain development outcomes. Moreover, it stressed that broadening the scope of social policy and initiatives would allow multidimensional challenges such as climate change, water and food security, energy, land use and natural or man-made disasters to be tackled, allowing for more effective, durable, equitable and just solutions to be found. The high-level panel on the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family affirmed the important role of families in development and proposed the inclusion of a family focus in the post-2015 development agenda.

The Commission also highlighted the need for increased participation by youth in decision-making processes, including in the post-2015 agenda. Member States shared ideas on how to tackle the challenge of youth employment, in particular mismatches between young people's qualifications and the skills required for the labour market.

The Commission welcomed the Five-Year Action Agenda of the Secretary-General and acknowledged the increased focus on youth in the works of the UN system. The Commission recommended that the Social and Economic Council adopt six draft resolutions on the following topics: the future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development; social dimensions of the New Partnership for Africa's Development; promoting empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all; promoting the rights of persons with disabilities and mainstreaming disability in the post-2015 development agenda; further implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002; and observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family and beyond. It also recommended for adoption by the Council two draft decisions: the first on the Commission's report on its fifty-second session, and the second on the provisional agenda and documentation for its fifty-third session. The Council was also notified of the Commission's adoption of a resolution on visual health as a tool for achievement of the empowerment of people.

On 12 June, the Economic and Social Council at its twenty-third plenary meeting took note of the report of the Commission on its fifty-second session (decision 2014/218).

Other Commission reports. The Commission issued a number of other reports for consideration during its fifty-third session. The reports addressed the social dimensions of NEPAD [E/CN.5/2015/2]; initiatives and activities by Member States and other relevant stakeholders in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family [A/70/61-E/2015/3]; rethinking and strengthening social development in the contemporary world [E/CN.5/2015/3]; further implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002 [E/CN.5/2015/4]; monitoring of the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities [E/CN.5/2015/5]; contributions of social development to the transition from the MDGs to the sustainable development goals [E/CN.5/2015/6]; the report of the Board of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development [E/CN.5/2015/7]; and the nomination of members of that Board [E/CN.5/2015/8].

On 12 June, by decision 2014/217, the Economic and Social Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the fifty-third session of the Commission for Social Development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 23], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2014/26], adopted resolution 2014/3 without vote [agenda item 17 (b)].

Future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2005/11 of 21 July 2005, 2006/18 of 26 July 2006, 2008/19 of 24 July 2008 and 2010/10 of 22 July 2010 on the future organization and methods of work of the Commission for Social Development,

Recalling also its resolution 2012/7 of 26 July 2012, in which it decided that the Commission shall keep its methods of work under review, and taking note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Review of methods of work of the Commission for Social Development" requested therein,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 68/1 of 20 September 2013 entitled "Review of the implementation of General Assembly resolution 61/16 on the strengthening of the Economic and Social Council", in which the Assembly stipulated that the Council shall invite, inter alia, its subsidiary bodies to contribute, as appropriate, to its work in keeping with the agreed annual theme,

Recalling the commitment to and emphasizing the need to strengthen the Council, within its mandate under the Charter as a principal organ of the United Nations, in the integrated and coordinated follow-up of the outcomes of all major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social, environmental and related fields, and recognizing the key role of the Council in achieving a balanced integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development,

Noting the acceleration of the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals and the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda and the relevance of the work of the Commission in this respect,

1. Recalls that the current practice of discussing one core issue over a two-year period has allowed the Commission for Social Development to go into greater depth by also addressing related cross-cutting issues and emerging issues relevant to the theme under discussion;

2. Decides that the Commission will report on social aspects related to the agreed main theme of the Economic and Social Council in order to contribute to its work;

3. Also decides to maintain the two-year review and policy cycle for the 2015 and 2016 sessions;

4. Reaffirms that the officers elected to the Bureau of the Commission should continue to be elected for a term of office of two years, in parallel with the review and policy cycle of 2015–2016;

5. Also reaffirms that the Commission, in fulfilling its mandate, shall assist the Council in monitoring, reviewing and appraising the progress achieved and problems encountered in the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and shall advise the Council thereon;

6. Decides that the priority theme for the 2015–2016 review and policy cycle shall allow the Commission to contribute to the work of the Council and shall be “Rethinking and strengthening social development in the contemporary world”;

7. Also decides that the Commission should utilize, as appropriate, its agenda item on emerging issues to promote consideration of relevant issues on the agenda of the Council, in particular the annual main theme of the Council and the integration segment linked thereto, which will bring together the key messages from the Council system on the main theme and develop action-oriented recommendations for follow-up;

8. Further decides to consider the biennialization of the resolutions of the Commission with a view to eliminating duplication and overlap and promoting complementarity in the consideration and negotiation of similar or related issues between the Council and the General Assembly;

9. Invites all relevant stakeholders to continue to actively participate in the work of the Commission at an appropriately high level;

10. Decides that the Commission shall keep its methods of work, including the functioning of the two-year review and policy cycle, under review also in order to adjust, as appropriate, to the work and cycle of the Council.

Social integration

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2012/7 [YUN 2012, p. 1045], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.5/2014/3] on the promotion of people empowerment for achieving poverty eradication, social integration and decent work for all. In the report, the Secretary-General reviewed policies, strategies and programmes that had effectively enabled people empowerment, and stressed the importance of building inclusive institutions and eliminating discrimination. He emphasized the role of empowerment as an engine of social development and its role in breaking the cycle of poverty and exclusion. He further stressed that Governments were best positioned to remove the formal and informal institutional barriers which prevented some individuals and groups from taking action to improve their well-being and expand their choices. In that vein, he added that Governments remained essential to people's empowerment, because only they could establish inclusive and secure legal, political, social, administrative and regulatory environments, and also possessed the mandate and resources necessary for providing services and infrastructure on the scale needed.

The Secretary-General highlighted the importance of empowerment policies that promoted human capital and productive skills; fostering access to information and communications technology; investments in social services and social protection; improving access to decent work and other productive assets; and harnessing the contributions of social movements. He also emphasized the importance of promoting civic engagement and inclusive governance processes that promoted transparency, responsiveness, and accountability on the part of public institutions. He further highlighted that certain social groups faced greater challenges than others in empowering themselves to overcome poverty or find a decent job, stressing that in order to achieve equality and non-discrimination, attention should be given to power differentials—and the barriers to participation of disadvantaged social groups must be identified and addressed.

He concluded by recommending that Governments prioritize people empowerment in the post-2015 global development agenda; allocate adequate funding to ensure universal access to social services, including quality education and health; strengthen access to productive resources by individuals belonging to socially excluded or marginalized groups, including by securing land-tenure rights; promote the use of information and communications technology and bridge the digital divide by further developing necessary infrastructure; foster broad-based participation in policymaking and governance processes and enhance the capacity of public administration entities to be transparent, accountable and responsive to the needs and aspirations of all people; take all necessary measures to eliminate discrimination against all persons, including people living in poverty, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples, older persons, young persons and women; and build inclusive monitoring frameworks and social impact assessments into all relevant policies and use existing monitoring frameworks to measure progress in advancing empowerment.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 23], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2014/26], adopted resolution 2014/5 without vote [agenda item 17 (b)].

Promoting empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2012/7 of 26 July 2012, in which the Council decided that the priority theme for the 2013–2014 review and policy cycle of the Commission for Social Development would be “Promoting empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all”,

Reaffirming that the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives for social development adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fourth special session, as well as a continued global dialogue on social development issues, constitute the basic framework for the promotion of social development for all at the national and international levels,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the development goals contained therein, as well as the commitments made at major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, including the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit and at the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, and the outcome of the 2013 special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Expressing concern about the crippling effects of poverty, inequality and disparity all over the globe,

Recognizing that the empowerment of people is essential to achieving development,

Recognizing also that policies aimed at eradicating poverty, reducing inequality and promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all as well as social integration, and policies intended to foster the empowerment of people, are mutually reinforcing,

Recognizing further that a people-centred approach must be at the centre of social and economic development, and that people should be the key focus of plans, programmes and policies at all levels so that the results of development fairly benefit all people,

Reaffirming that empowerment and participation are important for social development and that sustainable development requires the meaningful involvement and active participation of all, including children, youth, older persons, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples and other disadvantaged and vulnerable persons and groups, with due regard to the need for the full and equal participation of women,

Recalling the outcome document of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities: the way forward, a disability-inclusive development agenda towards 2015 and beyond, in which Governments reaffirmed their resolve to work together through a participatory approach involving the public sector and representatives of civil society associations and organizations of persons with disabilities for disability-inclusive development and the commitment of the international community to the advancement of the rights of all persons with disabilities, which is deeply rooted in the goals of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as to the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities towards 2015 and beyond,

Reaffirming that the empowerment of all people, in particular women and girls as well as youth, older persons, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples and other disadvantaged and vulnerable persons and groups, to strengthen their own capacity to make informed decisions in exercising the right and responsibility to take an active part in the affairs of the community in which they live is a main objective of development and its principal resource, and in this regard that empowerment requires the full participation of people in the formulation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of decisions, as appropriate, determining the functioning and well-being of our societies,

Recalling the outcome document of the third Global Conference on Child Labour, held in Brasilia from 8 to 10 October 2013, and further recalling our understanding that investments in children and the realization of their rights are among the most effective ways to eradicate poverty, our vow to break the cycle of poverty within the framework of the internationally agreed goals, and the need for measures to improve access to free, compulsory and quality education and health care for all children, as well as to the progressive universalization of social protection,

Recognizing also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”, in which Governments reaffirmed the importance of supporting developing countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty and promote the empowerment of the poor and other disadvantaged and vulnerable persons and groups, including by removing barriers to opportunity, enhancing productive capacity, developing sustainable agriculture and promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all, complemented by effective social policies, including social protection floors,

Recognizing that providing universal access to social services, including quality education, adequate and affordable water and sanitation and health care and other social care services, promoting employment and decent work for all and providing social protection floors consistent with national priorities and circumstances are important instruments for empowering people, and recognizing also the need to mobilize political commitment to full and equal access to and achievement in education of good quality for all, including persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples, persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and people living in rural areas,

Stressing the importance of increasing efforts by the international community, Member States and all relevant groups of society, including social partners, to reduce inequalities and eliminate social exclusion and discrimination,

Acknowledging that good governance and the rule of law at the national and international levels are essential for sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing that the mobilization of domestic and international resources for social development and their effective use are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Stressing the importance of the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and recalling the decision of the General Assembly to include in the provisional agenda of its sixty-ninth session the consideration of an appropriate celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the World Summit, in 2015, in the context of coordinated and integrated follow-up to the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields,

Acknowledging the need to further mainstream sustainable development at all levels, integrating economic, social and environmental aspects and recognizing their interlinkages, so as to achieve sustainable development in all its dimensions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms that the ultimate goal of social development is to improve and enhance the quality of life of all people and that empowerment and participation are essential for democracy, harmony and social development;

3. Also reaffirms the commitment made by Member States in the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development to ensure substantial public investment and promote private investment in human resource development and in capacity-building, including in health and education and social protection, as well as in empowerment and participation, especially for people living in poverty or suffering from social exclusion;

4. Stresses that Member States should prioritize the creation of a "society for all" with respect for the human rights of all individuals and based on equality, mutual responsibility and cooperation, access to essential services, including health care and social care services, and the promotion of the active participation of every member of society, without discrimination, in civic, social, economic, cultural and political activities, as well as participation in decision-making processes;

5. Reaffirms the commitment to gender equality and the empowerment of women, as well as to the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into all development efforts, recognizing that these are critical for achieving sustainable development and for efforts to combat hunger, poverty and disease and to strengthen policies and programmes that improve, ensure and broaden the full participation of women in all spheres of political, economic, social and cultural life, as equal partners, and to improve their access to all resources needed for the full exercise of all their human rights and fundamental freedoms by removing persistent barriers, including ensuring equal access to full and productive employment and decent work, as well as strengthening their economic independence, and also emphasizes that the education of women and girls is essential for poverty eradication and for their empowerment;

6. Stresses that special efforts should be made to foster the participation of all people, including women, people living in poverty and those belonging to disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, including children, youth, older persons, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples, in all aspects of political, economic, social, civic and cultural life, in particular the planning, implementation, monitoring and evaluation, as appropriate, of policies that affect them;

7. Calls upon Member States to continue their efforts to strive for more inclusive, equitable, balanced, stable and development-oriented sustainable socioeconomic approaches to overcoming poverty, and, in view of the negative impact of inequalities on poverty, emphasizes the importance of improving access to quality education, employment, water and sanitation, health care and social protection;

8. Encourages Governments, with the cooperation of relevant entities, including social partners, as appropriate, to continue to develop, improve and implement inclusive, effective and sustainable social protection systems and social protection floors based on national priorities for all members of society, including women as well as disadvantaged and vulnerable persons and groups, and in this regard takes note of Recommendation No. 202 concerning national floors of social protection, adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organization on 14 June 2012;

9. Also encourages Governments to continue to develop and strengthen policies, strategies and programmes to enhance, in particular, the employability of women and youth as well as older persons, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples and members of other disadvantaged groups and to ensure their access to full and productive employment and decent work;

10. Urges Member States and, as appropriate, the relevant entities of the United Nations system and international and regional organizations, within their respective mandates, as well as all relevant actors, to continue to develop and strengthen policies, strategies and programmes to enhance the employability of all members of society and to ensure their access to full and productive employment and decent work, including by improving access to formal and non-formal education, skills development and vocational training, lifelong learning and retraining, and long-distance education, including in information and communications technology and entrepreneurial skills, particularly in developing countries, including with a view to supporting the economic empowerment of all members of society in the different stages of their lives;

11. Recognizes that the creation of full and productive employment and decent work should be a central objective of national policies and that macroeconomic policy should contribute to creating more and better job opportunities and an environment that supports investment, growth and entrepreneurship, which is essential to the creation of new jobs;

12. Also recognizes that access to employment and decent work for all and social dialogue are essential for people's empowerment and participation, and calls for Member States to respect, promote and realize fundamental principles and rights at work, in accordance with the International Labour Organization Declaration of Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work;

13. Stresses the relevance of the World Programme of Action for Youth, including its priority areas regarding poverty, employment, participation and education, for the empowerment and development of youth, and in this regard recognizes the need to improve opportunities for young people to gain access to productive employment and decent work through increased investment in youth employment, active labour market support and public-private partnerships, as well as through the creation of enabling environments to facilitate the participation of young people in labour markets, in accordance with international rules and commitments;

14. Reaffirms the need to enhance the welfare of women, children, youth, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples, older persons and smallholder and subsistence farmers and to improve the livelihoods and empowerment of the poor and other disadvantaged and vulnerable persons and groups, in particular in developing countries;

15. Stresses the importance of implementing the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002 in order to, inter alia, help societies to balance the needs of different generations in their policies, promote economic empowerment and avoid age-based discrimination against older persons;

16. Encourages Governments to strengthen access to productive resources for disadvantaged and vulnerable persons, including by securing land tenure rights and other rights related to the use of natural resources in accordance with national legislation, priorities and policies and by improving access to a broad range of appropriate financial services;

17. Encourages Member States to strengthen the capacity of national financial institutions to reach out to those who have no access to banking, insurance and other financial services, and also encourages them to adopt regulatory and supervisory frameworks that facilitate the safe and sound provision of services to such populations, increase access to information and promote financial literacy, particularly for women;

18. Stresses the potential of information and communications technology to improve the quality of life of all people in order to enable them to better participate in sustainable development and the global economy, and in this regard calls upon Member States, with the support of the United Nations system, donors, the private sector and civil society, to promote universal, non-discriminatory, equitable, safe and affordable access to information and communications technology, especially in schools and public places, and to remove the barriers to bridging the digital divide;

19. Invites Governments to enhance the capacity of the public administration to be transparent, accountable and responsive to the needs and aspirations of all people, without discrimination of any kind, and to foster broad-based participation in governance and development processes;

20. Recognizes that supportive institutional structures and participatory mechanisms, including consultative democratic institutions and processes, are necessary for the empowerment of people and that special efforts should be made to promote participation in policymaking and governance processes in all aspects of political, economic, social and cultural life and to enhance the capacity of national institutions to be responsive to the needs and aspirations of all members of society;

21. Encourages Member States to take all measures necessary to eliminate discrimination of any kind against all persons, without distinction of any kind, in particular those living in poverty, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to refrain from adopting any laws, regulations or practices denying or limiting the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including economic, social and cultural as well as civil and political rights, and to ensure that people, in particular those living in poverty and women, have equal access to justice;

22. Encourages the international community to support developing countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty and promote empowerment of the poor and disadvantaged and vulnerable persons and groups, with a view to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, improving access to finance, microfinance and credit, removing barriers to opportunity, enhancing productive capacity, developing sustainable agriculture and promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all, complemented by national efforts on comprehensive social policy systems, including social protection floors, and in this regard takes note of International Labour Organization Recommendation No. 202 concerning national floors of social protection;

23. Recognizes that there is a need for all donors to maintain and deliver on their existing bilateral and multilateral official development assistance commitments and targets and that the full implementation of those commitments will substantially support the efforts of developing countries to achieve the social development objectives by promoting the empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all;

24. Invites Member States to give due consideration to promoting the empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda, and encourages Member States, in cooperation with civil society, the private sector, academia and social organizations, to make every possible effort to support good governance at the national and international levels and address the needs of the most vulnerable as well as promote their participation in decision-making processes;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to include, in his report entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly", to be submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session, policy recommendations on the empowerment of people, taking into account the discussions held at the fifty-second session of the Commission for Social Development under the priority theme.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued to conduct research based on its 2010–2014 agenda [YUN 2010, p. 1076], whose main theme was social development in a context of crisis and uncertainty. Research focused on three areas: social policy for inclusive development; gender; and social dimensions of sustainable development. Within that framework, the work of UNRISD addressed UN system-wide concerns related to the post-2015 sustainable development goals, including poverty reduction, inequality, social protection, the empowerment of women and social drivers of sustainability. In November [E/CN.5/2015/7], the UNRISD Board submitted a report to the Commission for Social Development in which it summarized UNRISD activities during 2013 and 2014.

UNRISD also embarked on a number of new research projects. One of those projects examined the emergence, nature and effectiveness of social policy innovations from the global South, in order to ascertain whether they were better suited to the risks facing developing countries. Another project involved research on the feminization of non-traditional agriculture and its impacts on women by a joint team comprised of UNRISD, the University of Berne (Switzerland) and entities in Bolivia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal and Rwanda. The ultimate aim was to investigate the gender implications of agriculture commercialization and rise of non-traditional agricultural exports in those four countries.

Other UNRISD projects focused on how countries were moving towards universal social policy, including health and social protection; the mobilization of domestic resources for financing social development; the ways in which gender egalitarian policy change occurred; and the potential and limits of social and solidarity economy as a pathway towards inclusive and sustainable development. UNRISD also worked to strengthen its communications and outreach, results-based management and impact. An evaluation undertaken by UNRISD donors acknowledged significant achievements in those areas, including higher visibility, excellent value for money and the expanding influence of the Institute. As at 30 November 2014, a total of 10 staff members were under contract at UNRISD in Geneva, including the director, four research coordinators, three communications and outreach staff and two administrative and support staff.

Ageing persons

Follow-up to Second World Assembly on Ageing (2002)

In February [E/CN.5/2014/4], pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/29 [YUN 2013, p. 1048], the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report on the implementation of the 2002 Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing [YUN 2002, p. 1194]. In the report, the Secretary-General summarized the evolution of policy analysis and approach to ageing at the UN since the Madrid Plan of Action. He highlighted four thematic clusters that were at the forefront of discussions on ageing: income security; emerging challenges in the provision of health care; abuse and violence; and age discrimination.

The Secretary-General also discussed impediments to the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, including lack of financial and human resources in developing countries to fund and implement policies and programmes for older persons; inadequate mainstreaming of ageing into national and global development agendas; and divergent national and regional perceptions of old age issues. On emerging views and approaches, the Secretary-General stated that discussions in the Open-ended Working Group on Ageing had begun to slowly generate a better understanding of the social, economic, cultural and legal barriers to the economic and social integration of older persons and offered insights into how to better implement the Madrid Plan of Action. He recommended greater outreach and capacity-building at all levels in order to better inform deliberations and policy development in the field of ageing.

Commission action. At its February session [E/2014/26-E/CN.5/2014/10], the Commission for Social Development recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council on the further implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002 (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 23], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2014/26], adopted resolution 2014/7 without vote [agenda item 17 (b)].

Further implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that, in the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, adopted by the Second World Assembly on Ageing, held in Madrid from 8 to 12 April 2002, the systematic review of its implementation by Member States was requested as being essential for its success in improving the quality of life of older persons,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 42/1 of 13 February 2004, the Commission for Social Development decided to undertake the review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action every five years,

Recalling its resolution 2013/29 of 25 July 2013 on the second review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 68/134 of 18 December 2013 and previous Assembly resolutions on ageing, as well as Human Rights Council resolution 24/20 of 27 September 2013 and its previous resolutions on ageing,

Noting that the third review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action will take place in 2017,

Noting also the work of the Open-ended Working Group on Ageing, established by the General Assembly in paragraph 28 of its resolution 65/182 of 21 December 2010,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that, in many parts of the world, awareness of the Madrid Plan of Action remains limited or non-existent, which limits the scope of implementation efforts,

Bearing in mind that the second review and appraisal highlighted several major challenges faced by older persons in most regions that undermined the social, economic and cultural participation of the aged, namely, income security, access to age-appropriate health-care services, access to labour markets and social protection, protection from abuse and violence, and age discrimination,

Affirming the importance of national capacity-building as a prerequisite for successful implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action and an important component in promoting and protecting the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons,

Stressing the need to continue international cooperation, including through technical assistance for countries, aimed at strengthening the promotion and protection of the rights of older persons, including the development of relevant national strategies, according to national development plans,

Recognizing the importance of integrating ageing into existing processes and work programmes of the United Nations system and its development activities and of including older persons in policy implementation and evaluation on a regular basis,

Recognizing also the essential contribution that older men and women can make to the development of their societies and communities and to the well-being of the family, which can be enhanced by supportive policies, and stressing that older persons must be full participants in national development processes and share in the benefits of development,

Emphasizing the particular risks faced by older persons of neglect, physical and psychological abuse and violence, including in emergency situations,

Recognizing that population ageing is among the contributing factors to the rising incidence and prevalence of non-communicable diseases,

Recognizing also the vulnerability of older women to disability owing, inter alia, to gender differences in life expectancy and disease susceptibility and gender inequalities over the life course, and calling for the elimination of gender- and age-based social and economic inequalities in the provision of health-care services,

1. Expresses concern that when ageing has not received adequate attention it has led to older persons being overlooked by and omitted from national development plans, poverty-reduction strategies and national employment priorities;

2. Encourages Member States to continue their efforts to mainstream the rights and concerns of older persons into their policy agendas in order to adequately address the social, economic, cultural, political and other factors that make older persons vulnerable to poverty, unemployment, inequality, humanitarian emergencies, natural disasters, violence, gender discrimination, social exclusion and marginalization;

3. Also encourages Member States to narrow gaps between policy and practice in the implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, and to consider the elaboration of national implementation strategies, which include efforts to enhance national capacity-building on ageing, inter alia, by building institutional infrastructure, investing in human resources and mobilizing financial resources;

4. Calls upon Member States to continue to participate effectively in the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action through, inter alia, improving data collection and sharing ideas, information and good practices;

5. Reiterates its invitation to Member States to set time-bound benchmarks for action at the national level based on the shortcomings and priorities identified at the national and regional levels of review and appraisal, in order to enhance implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action;

6. Recognizes that ageism is a widely prevalent and prejudicial attitude that may rest on the assumption that neglect of and discrimination against older persons is acceptable and that ageism is the common source of, the justification for and the driving force behind age discrimination;

7. Encourages Member States to promote social integration and the realization of all human rights for older persons and to prevent age discrimination;

8. Calls upon Member States to adopt appropriate measures, including, if necessary, legislative measures at the national level to promote and protect the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons and to promote their full social, economic, cultural and political participation;

9. Encourages Member States to consider including in their national strategies, inter alia, policy implementation approaches, such as empowerment and participation, gender equality, awareness-raising and capacity development, and such essential policy implementation tools as evidence-based policymaking, mainstreaming, participatory approaches and indicators;

10. Also encourages Member States to strengthen efforts to develop their national capacity to set priorities and address the national implementation priorities identified during the review and appraisal exercise, bearing in mind the specific needs of older persons in natural disasters and emergencies, including through the strengthening of institutional mechanisms, research, data collection and analysis and the training of necessary personnel in the field of ageing;

11. Further encourages Member States to establish or strengthen strategic approaches and policy options in relation to the physical and mental health of older persons in the light of new and emerging disease patterns, notably non-communicable diseases, and increased life expectancy, with particular attention to addressing health needs across a care continuum, including prevention, detection and diagnosis, management and rehabilitation, treatment and palliative care, with the aim of achieving comprehensive health-care coverage for older persons;

12. Calls upon Member States to continue their efforts to promote the participation of older persons in the decision-making process affecting their lives and ageing with dignity;

13. Recognizes the crucial importance of family intergenerational interdependence, solidarity and reciprocity for sustainable social development, and encourages Member States to reinforce the intergenerational transmission of knowledge and positive values, including by acknowledging the instructive role of grandparents;

14. Encourages Member States to provide services and support to older persons, including grandparents, who have assumed responsibility for children who were abandoned or whose parents are deceased, have migrated or are otherwise unable to care for their dependants;

15. Also encourages Member States to support the national and international research community in developing studies on the impact of the Madrid Plan of Action on older persons and national social policies;

16. Encourages the international community and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other regional and subregional mechanisms, within their respective mandates, to support national efforts and to provide funding for research and data-collection initiatives on ageing in order to better understand the challenges and opportunities presented by population ageing and to provide policymakers with more accurate, practical and specific information and analysis on ageing, gender and disability, such as for policy planning, monitoring and evaluation;

17. Invites Member States to establish and/or strengthen partnerships with civil society organizations and organizations of older persons in order to improve their national capacity for policy formulation, implementation and monitoring in the area of ageing;

18. Stresses the need for additional capacity-building at the national level guided by each country's needs in order to promote and facilitate the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, and in this connection encourages Member States to support the United Nations Trust Fund for Ageing in order to enable the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat to provide expanded assistance to countries, upon their request;

19. Encourages the international community to enhance international cooperation to support national efforts to eradicate poverty, in keeping with internationally agreed goals, in order to achieve sustainable social and economic support for older persons, including to build capacity on ageing through stronger partnerships with civil society, such as organizations of older persons, academia, research foundations and community- and faith-based organizations, and with the private sector;

20. Invites Member States and all other major national and international stakeholders to continue their cooperation with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, as the United Nations global focal point on ageing, in further implementing the Madrid Plan of Action;

21. Acknowledges the essential contributions of the United Nations regional commissions to the implementation, review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action, including the organization of regional review and appraisal meetings and the preparation of their outcome documents, and calls upon the Secretary-General to strengthen the work of the regional commissions, including their focal points on ageing, to enable them to continue their regional implementation activities;

22. Invites all relevant United Nations entities that can contribute to advancing the situation of older persons to, within their respective mandates, give greater priority to addressing the needs and concerns of older persons, while maximizing synergies;

23. Recommends that the situation of older persons, including the issues of poverty eradication, social integration, non-discrimination and empowerment, be taken into account in the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and be given due consideration in the elaboration of the United Nations development agenda beyond 2015;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and other relevant stakeholders on:

(a) A possible theme or themes for the third review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action, to be held in 2017;

(b) How the review and appraisal process could better contribute to advancing the social integration and broad-based participation of older persons in development;

(c) How the mainstreaming of issues of ageing and older persons into the work of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council could be achieved;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission for Social Development at its fifty-third session, in 2015, a report on the modalities of the third review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action.

Open-ended Working Group on Ageing

The Open-ended Working Group on Ageing, established by General Assembly resolution 65/182 [YUN 2010, p. 1194], held its fourth working session (New York, 30 July–1 August) [A/AC.278/2014/2] during which it elected new officers, adopted its provisional agenda and granted accreditation to 13 NGOs from 13 countries. The session included three expert panel discussions entitled “Human rights and the care of older persons”; “Violence and abuse against older persons”; and “Planning for end of life care: legal and financial issues”. The session also featured presentations by the independent expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons; the Chair and Rapporteur of the 2014 Social Forum of the Human Rights Council; an interactive dialogue on “How to strengthen the rights of older persons through enhanced implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing; and the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Post-2015 Development Planning. The Working Group also held a general discussion featuring statements from the representatives of 16 countries, eight NGOs and the European Union.

During the discussion session, a number of delegations observed that the goal of greater protection for older persons would be reached only through a specific international legal instrument encompassing the particular human rights of that population group, as called for in General Assembly resolution 65/182 [YUN 2010, p. 1194]. The Working Group was urged to reflect on how to implement, in its entirety, its General Assembly mandate on formulating the main elements of such a legal instrument. The session formulated specific proposals for recommendation to the General Assembly, focusing on measures to address the gaps in implementation, data and monitoring on the issue of ageing. The proposals, inter alia, included the need for treaty bodies to incorporate in their respective mandates and procedures the issue of human rights of older persons; UN system funds, programmes and specialized agencies to include indicators related to older persons; Member States to include language content related to the rights of older persons in resolutions and documents of various intergovernmental bodies; and for the rights of older persons and related issues to be highlighted in the post-2015 development agenda.

Implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action

In July [A/69/180], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/134 [YUN 2013, p. 1050], the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly on the follow-up to the Second World Assembly on Ageing [YUN 2002, p. 1193]. In the report, he focused on efforts to address age-based discrimination and neglect, and abuse and violence. Both these issues had been singled out as critical to the well-being and human rights of older persons within the framework of both the second review and appraisal of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing and the working sessions of the Open-ended Working Group on Ageing. The Secretary-General detailed the discussion of the issue of age-based discrimination at the first four working sessions of the Open-ended Working Group on Ageing held during the period 2011–2013. He also summarized the findings of the second review and appraisal of the Madrid International Plan of Action.

The Secretary-General detailed the problem of neglect, abuse and violence against older women, and identified the following as key contributing factors: care settings; fragmented approaches, gender, and cultural and societal contexts; lack of data on older women's experiences of neglect, violence and abuse; underreporting and patterns of reporting; and risk factors. While some Member States had begun to address the lack of nationally uniform response systems, the report stated that a more harmonized approach to the prevention of abuse and protection of older women at the national and local levels was needed, as well as throughout the UN system. In that context, there was a critical need to broaden the prevailing knowledge base and take steps towards drafting global definitions and guidelines.

The Secretary-General also provided an update on major policy developments in the regions, civil society initiatives and publications from 2014 that were aimed at addressing the well-being and human rights of older persons. Regional policy developments included the Council of Europe's February adoption of a non-binding recommendation on the rights of older persons, which was grounded in pre-existing provisions, such as the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and the European Social Charter; and the adoption by the African Union Conference of Ministers of Social Development of a draft Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights concerning the rights of older persons in Africa, which would be forwarded to the African Union Assembly of Heads of State and Government for adoption and signature. The Protocol would see States parties include in national law the United Nations Principles on Older Persons which dealt with independence, participation, care, self-fulfilment and dignity, and ensure that they would become legally binding as the basis for protecting the rights of older persons.

He also reported that the World Social Protection Report 2014/15, published by the International Labour Organization in June, contained a chapter on social protection for older persons which emphasized that social protection had played an increasing role in ensuring income security in old age in many countries. The findings of the report suggested that without addressing the issue of expanded and adequate old-age income security and related social and health services for older persons, the post-2015 sustainable development goals aimed at reducing or eliminating poverty would remain elusive and there could in fact be a rise in poverty rates among the growing numbers of older persons across the world. In addition, the sixty-seventh World Health Assembly on 24 May adopted resolution WHA67.19, entitled "Strengthening of Palliative Care as a Component of Comprehensive Care throughout the Life Course". The lack of age-disaggregated data had long been considered a primary reason as to why the national development strategies of many developing countries lacked attention to and knowledge of the life circumstances of older persons. Against that background, the Secretary-General reported that the Global Age Watch Index—launched on the International Day of Older Persons in 2013, created by HelpAge International, with the financial support of the United Nations Population Fund, and with the aim of providing policymakers and other stakeholders with policy-oriented research and analysis tools—had been able to compile data for 91 countries to date and planned to monitor progress and expand the Index.

The Secretary-General noted that while Member States had begun to address neglect, violence and abuse against older persons, and in particular older women, a more harmonized and universal approach to abuse prevention and protection of older women was needed. The lack of explicit references to age in anti-discrimination instruments and legislation, be it at the international or national level, was identified as undermining the protection and promotion of the rights of older persons. In that vein, the Secretary-General proposed that the General Assembly consider recommending that Member States develop an explicit reference and policy framework for addressing neglect, violence and abuse against older persons; make violence against older women an integral part of the global campaign on violence against women; and make explicit reference to age in their national anti-discrimination legislation and take effective measures to prevent forms of multiple discrimination against older persons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/480], adopted resolution 69/146 without vote [agenda item 26 (c)].

Follow-up to the Second World Assembly on Ageing

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 57/167 of 18 December 2002, in which it endorsed the Political Declaration and the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, its resolution 58/134 of 22 December 2003, in which it took note, inter alia, of the road map for the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, and its resolutions 60/135 of 16 December 2005, 61/142 of 19 December 2006, 62/130 of 18 December 2007, 63/151 of 18 December 2008, 64/132 of 18 December 2009, 65/182 of 21 December 2010, 66/127 of 19 December 2011, 67/139 and 67/143 of 20 December 2012 and 68/134 of 18 December 2013,

Recognizing that, in many parts of the world, awareness of the Madrid Plan of Action remains limited or non-existent, which limits the scope of implementation efforts,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the important opportunity provided by the ongoing dialogue on the issues of ageing, inter alia, in the context of the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda,

Acknowledging the reference to older persons contained in the proposal of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, which shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, as decided by the Assembly in its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014,

Recognizing that, by 2050, more than 20 per cent of the world's population will be 60 years of age or older, and recognizing also that the increase in the number of older people will be the greatest and the most rapid in the developing world,

Recalling World Health Assembly resolution 58.16 of 25 May 2005 on strengthening active and healthy ageing, which stressed the important role of public health policies and programmes in enabling the rapidly growing number of older persons in both developed and developing countries to remain in good health and maintain their many vital contributions to the well-being of their families, communities and societies,

Recalling also World Health Assembly resolution 65.3 of 25 May 2012 on strengthening non-communicable disease policies to promote active ageing, which recognized that population ageing is among the major factors contributing to the rising incidence and prevalence of non-communicable diseases,

Concerned that many health systems are not sufficiently prepared to respond to the needs of the rapidly ageing population, including the need for preventative, curative, palliative and specialized care,

Deeply concerned that the situation of older persons in many parts of the world has been negatively affected by the world financial and economic crisis,

Recognizing the essential contribution that the majority of older men and women can continue to make to the functioning of society if adequate guarantees are in place,

Noting that older women outnumber older men, and noting with concern that older women often face multiple forms of discrimination resulting from their gender-based roles in society, compounded by their age or disability or on other grounds, which affect the enjoyment of their human rights,

1. Reaffirms the Political Declaration and the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002;

2. Recognizes that the major challenges faced by older persons undermine their social, economic and cultural participation;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the appointment by the Human Rights Council of the Independent Expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons, and invites Member States to cooperate with the Independent Expert in carrying out the mandate set out in Human Rights Council resolution 24/20 of 27 September 2013;

4. Invites Member States to continue to share their national experiences in developing and implementing policies and programmes aimed at strengthening the promotion and protection of the human rights of older persons, including within the framework of the Open-ended Working Group on Ageing established by the General Assembly in paragraph 28 of its resolution 65/182;

5. Stresses the importance of the Independent Expert and the Working Group working in close coordination, while avoiding unnecessary duplication of each other's mandates and those of other special procedures and subsidiary organs of the Human Rights Council, relevant United Nations bodies and treaties;

6. Encourages all Member States to be mindful of the reports of the Independent Expert, including the comprehensive report to be brought to the attention of the Working Group;

7. Encourages Governments to actively address issues that affect older persons and to ensure that the social integration of older persons and the promotion and protection of their rights form an integral part of development policies at all levels;

8. Invites Member States to adopt and implement non-discriminatory policies and to systematically review and amend, where appropriate, existing practices and regulations that discriminate against older persons, in order to promote an enabling environment for older persons;

9. Encourages Member States to address the issue of discrimination on the basis of age in relevant national legislation and to take appropriate measures to prevent discrimination against older persons;

10. Encourages Governments to pay greater attention to building capacity to eradicate poverty among older persons, in particular older women, by mainstreaming ageing issues into poverty eradication, women's empowerment strategies and national development plans, and to include both ageing-specific policies and ageing-mainstreaming efforts in their national strategies;

11. Encourages Member States to strengthen their efforts to develop national capacity to address their national implementation priorities identified during the review and appraisal of the Madrid Plan of Action, and invites Member States that have not done so to consider a step-by-step approach to developing capacity that includes the setting of national priorities, the strengthening of institutional mechanisms, research, data collection and analysis and the training of necessary personnel in the field of ageing;

12. Also encourages Member States to overcome obstacles to the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action by devising strategies that take into account the entirety of the human life course and foster intergenerational solidarity in order to increase the likelihood of greater success in the years ahead;

13. Further encourages Member States to place particular emphasis on choosing national priorities that are realistic, sustainable and feasible and have the greatest likelihood of being achieved in the years ahead and to develop targets and indicators to measure progress in the implementation process;

14. Invites Member States to identify key priority areas for implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, including empowering older persons and promoting their rights, raising awareness of ageing issues and building national capacity to address ageing;

15. Recommends that Member States increase efforts to raise awareness of the Madrid Plan of Action, including by promoting and supporting initiatives to advance a positive public image of older persons and their multiple contributions to their families, communities and societies and by working with the regional commissions and enlisting the help of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in seeking increased attention for ageing issues;

16. Encourages Governments that have not done so to designate focal points for handling the follow-up of national plans of action on ageing, and also encourages Governments to strengthen existing networks of national focal points on ageing;

17. Invites Governments to conduct their ageing-related policies through inclusive and participatory consultations with relevant stakeholders and social development partners, in the interest of developing effective policies that create national policy ownership and consensus-building;

18. Recommends that Member States enhance their capacity to more effectively collect data, statistics and qualitative information, disaggregated when necessary by relevant factors, including sex and disability, in order to better assess the situation of older persons and to set adequate monitoring mechanisms for programmes and policies geared towards protecting the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by older persons;

19. Recommends that States parties to existing international human rights instruments, where appropriate, address the situation of older persons more explicitly in their reports, and encourages treaty body monitoring mechanisms and special procedures mandate holders, in accordance with their mandates, to pay more attention to the situation of older persons in their dialogue with Member States, in their consideration of reports or in their country missions;

20. Encourages Governments to continue their efforts to implement the Madrid Plan of Action and to mainstream the concerns of older persons into their policy agendas, bearing in mind the crucial importance of intergenerational family interdependence, solidarity and reciprocity for social development and the realization of all human rights for older persons, and to prevent age discrimination and provide social integration;

21. Recognizes the importance of strengthening intergenerational partnerships and solidarity, and in this regard calls upon Member States to promote opportunities for voluntary, constructive and regular interaction between young people and older generations in the family, the workplace and society at large;

22. Encourages Member States to adopt social policies that promote the development of community services for older persons, taking into account the psychological and physical aspects of ageing and the special needs of older women;

23. Also encourages Member States to ensure that older persons have access to information about their rights so as to enable them to participate fully and justly in their societies and to claim full enjoyment of all human rights;

24. Calls upon Member States to develop their national capacity for monitoring and enforcing the rights of older persons, in consultation with all sectors of society, including organizations of older persons, through, inter alia, national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, where applicable;

25. Also calls upon Member States to strengthen and incorporate a gender and disability perspective into all policy actions on ageing, as well as to address and eliminate discrimination on the basis of age, sex or disability, and recommends that Member States engage with all sectors of society, in particular with relevant organizations with an interest in the matter, including organizations of older persons, women and persons with disabilities, in changing negative stereotypes about older persons, in particular older women and older persons with disabilities, and promote positive images of older persons;

26. Acknowledges that universal health coverage implies that all people, including older persons, have access, without discrimination, to nationally determined sets of needed promotive, preventive, curative and rehabilitative basic health services and essential, safe, affordable, effective and quality medicines, while ensuring that the use of such services does not expose older persons to financial hardship, with a special emphasis on the poor, vulnerable and marginalized;

27. Urges Member States to develop, implement and evaluate policies and programmes that promote healthy and active ageing and the highest attainable standard of health and well-being for older persons and to develop health care for older persons as part of primary care in the existing national health systems;

28. Recognizes the importance of training, education and capacity-building of the health workforce, including for home-based care;

29. Urges Member States to strengthen intersectoral policy frameworks and institutional mechanisms, as appropriate, for the integrated management of the prevention and control of non-communicable diseases, including health promotion, health care and social welfare services, in order to address the needs of older persons;

30. Calls upon Member States to address the issue of the well-being and adequate health care of older persons, as well as any cases of neglect, abuse and violence against older persons, by designing and implementing more effective prevention strategies and stronger laws and by developing coherent and comprehensive policy frameworks to address these problems and their underlying factors;

31. Also calls upon Member States to take concrete measures to further protect and assist older persons in emergency situations, in accordance with the Madrid Plan of Action;

32. Stresses that, in complementing national development efforts, enhanced international cooperation is essential to support developing countries in implementing the Madrid Plan of Action, while recognizing the importance of such assistance as well as the provision of financial assistance;

33. Encourages Member States to ensure that the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of age is incorporated and upheld in health policies and programmes and that the implementation of such policies and programmes is regularly monitored;

34. Also encourages Member States to adopt and enforce guidelines that establish standards for the provision of long-term support and assistance to older persons;

35. Recommends that Governments involve older persons and their organizations in the formulation, implementation and monitoring of policies and programmes that affect them;

36. Encourages the international community, including international and bilateral donors, to enhance international cooperation to support national efforts to eradicate poverty, in keeping with internationally agreed goals, in order to achieve sustainable and adequate social and economic support for older persons, while bearing in mind that countries have the primary responsibility for their own economic and social development;

37. Encourages the international community to support national efforts to forge stronger partnerships with civil society, including organizations of older persons, academia, research foundations, community-based organizations, including caregivers, and the private sector, in an effort to help to build capacity on ageing issues;

38. Encourages the international community and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to support national efforts to provide funding for research and data-collection initiatives on ageing, as appropriate, in order to better understand the challenges and opportunities presented by population ageing and to provide policymakers with more accurate and more specific information with regard to a gender perspective on ageing;

39. Recognizes the important role of various international and regional organizations that deal with training, capacity-building, policy design and monitoring at the national and regional levels in promoting and facilitating the implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, and acknowledges the work that is undertaken in various parts of the world, as well as regional initiatives, and by institutes such as the International Institute on Ageing in Malta and the European Centre for Social Welfare Policy and Research in Vienna;

40. Recommends that Member States reaffirm the role of United Nations focal points on ageing, increase technical cooperation efforts, expand the role of the regional commissions on ageing issues and continue to provide resources for those efforts, facilitate the coordination of national and international non-governmental organizations on ageing and enhance cooperation with academia on a research agenda on ageing;

41. Reiterates the need for additional capacity-building at the national level in order to promote and facilitate further implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, as well as the results of its review and appraisal cycle, and in this regard encourages Governments to support the United Nations Trust Fund for Ageing so as to enable the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat to provide expanded assistance to countries, upon their request;

42. Requests the United Nations system to strengthen its capacity to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, national implementation of the Madrid Plan of Action, where appropriate;

43. Requests relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), to ensure that the situation of older women is mainstreamed and incorporated across their work;

44. Recommends that the situation of older persons be taken into account in the ongoing efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

45. Recognizes the continuing need to give due consideration to the situation of older persons in the ongoing discussion on the post-2015 development agenda;

46. Notes with appreciation the work of the Working Group, and recognizes the positive contributions of Member States, as well as relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and relevant non-governmental organizations, national human rights institutions and invited panellists, during the first five working sessions of the Working Group;

47. Calls upon Member States to continue to contribute to the work of the Working Group, in particular by presenting concrete proposals, practical measures, best practices and lessons learned that will contribute to promoting and protecting the rights and dignity of older persons, in order to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

48. Requests the Working Group to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a compilation of the above-mentioned proposals and measures;

49. Invites relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including relevant human rights mandate holders and treaty bodies and the regional commissions, as well as intergovernmental and relevant non-governmental organizations with an interest in the matter, to continue to make contributions to the work entrusted to the Working Group, as appropriate;

50. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary support to the Working Group, within existing resources, for the organization of a sixth working session, in 2015;

51. Invites the Independent Expert to address and engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Social development";

52. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Persons with disabilities

World Programme of Action

In July [A/69/187], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/140 [YUN 2012, p. 1055], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on progress made in mainstreaming disability in the development agenda, which reviewed the extent to which the proposed post-2015 development framework had addressed the rights, well-being and perspectives of persons with disabilities. It also discussed the role of the United Nations in promoting better coordination for disability-inclusive development, as well as the efforts of Member States and UN system entities to institute measures that addressed disability in development policies and programmes. The report concluded with proposals to address continuing gaps between policy and practice and recommended steps towards a disability-inclusive global development agenda.

The Secretary-General highlighted efforts undertaken by Member States to mainstream disability in development process, among them, the inclusion of disability as a national priority in development plans, programmes and policies; mainstreaming disability in their development cooperation initiatives beyond 2015; legislative and policy measures that supported national implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities; obstacles to the implementation of inclusive development strategies and the inclusion of persons with disabilities; increased support to strengthen the role of organizations of persons with disabilities in decision-making processes, including policy development; and strengthening of regional frameworks for disability-inclusive development and the advancement of the rights of persons with disabilities.

Lastly, the Secretary-General provided recommendations for better integrating persons with disabilities into development strategies. Those included, inter alia, the review by the General Assembly President at the Assembly's seventieth session, of the status of and progress made towards the realization of the development goals for persons with disabilities; strengthening and applying the international normative framework on disability for an inclusive society at all levels; improving disability data and statistics to support the formulation, monitoring and evaluation of evidence-based disability policies; enhancing international cooperation and mobilization of resources on a sustainable basis; and rethinking and adapting the UN system to improve responsiveness to the needs of Member States in implementing a disability-inclusive development agenda. He also recommended that the General Assembly consider promoting the realization of the rights and well-being of persons with disabilities in all economic, social, cultural and environmental spheres; encourage Member States to take immediate steps to support the goal of mainstreaming disability data into official statistics and to submit the information to the United Nations; encourage all Member States to consider taking measures to build or improve the social protection system; and call for a systematic review to evaluate and monitor progress in the mainstreaming efforts of Member States, the UN system, civil society and other stakeholders.

Equalization of opportunities

In November [E/CN.5/2015/5], pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2014/6 (see p. 1240), the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission for Social Development a note transmitting the fifth and final report of the Commission's Special Rapporteur on disability Shuaib Chalklen (South Africa). The report described the Special Rapporteur's activities in the period from November 2013 to October 2014, covering topics including the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities [YUN 1993, p. 977]; synergy between the Standard Rules and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities [YUN 2006, p. 785]; mainstreaming disability in development; fostering disability-inclusive international development; and promoting awareness-raising and implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the Standard Rules and other international instruments; and collaborating with civil society.

The Special Rapporteur observed that the political will of Member States to achieve equalization of opportunities was fairly strong, as demonstrated by the rapid ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities by States, but noted that existing gaps between commitments and practices on the ground illustrated remaining challenges. Lack of resources and capacity was a persistent barrier in many developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries. In that vein, there was a need to advance international cooperation in the field of disability in order to accelerate the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Standard Rules; international cooperation should also include the exchange of expertise and technical cooperation and support. The Special Rapporteur further stressed the importance of granting organizations of persons with disabilities a greater role in policymaking. He also provided recommendations for Member States to improve the collection and reporting of disability statistics so as to facilitate international comparability and disaggregation of all available data by disability; called for the Conference of States Parties to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities to include disability, poverty and development in annual sessions in line with the Convention; for the Commission for Social Development to consider establishing a standing mechanism to systematically review and monitor progress in realizing agreed disability goals towards and beyond 2015; for the post-2015 development agenda to give due consideration to the conditions of extreme poverty and social exclusion that existed disproportionately among persons with disabilities and include specific targets and indicators to measure progress; and for accessibility to be an integral part of the work of the UN and be promoted progressively in all aspects, including its premises, communication and human resource management, as well as in conference documentation and services.

As at 2 November 2014, there were 159 signatories and 151 ratifications to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, and 92 signatories and 85 ratifications to the Optional Protocol.

Mainstreaming disability in the development agenda

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/28 [YUN 2013, p. 1055], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission for Social Development a report [E/CN.5/2014/6] on progress made in mainstreaming disability into the development agenda towards 2015 and beyond, in which he highlighted the urgency of including disability in the environmental, economic and social pillars of sustainable development. He analysed prevailing trends and challenges to the mainstreaming of disability and proposed steps in four areas: national policies; plans and strategies to advance the inclusion of persons with disabilities; promotion of accessibility for all; disability data and statistics, monitoring and evaluation; and international cooperation and mobilization of resources.

The Secretary-General noted that the more than 1 billion persons living with disabilities worldwide constituted an untapped human resource that could make significant contributions to global sustainable development. Despite strong commitment to disability inclusion in the global development agenda, however, progress had been limited. He recommended that Governments promote the inclusion of persons with disabilities in policies and programmes relating to poverty eradication; support the development of internationally comparable disability statistics disaggregated by sex and age, and report such data through appropriate mechanisms of the UN system; address accessibility in all relevant policies; urge Governments and other stakeholders to promote international cooperation, including through multi-stakeholder partnerships and networks of experts and practitioners on specific issues in development; and include the disability perspective in all areas of development cooperation in coordination with development agencies, international organizations and other stakeholders. He further recommended that disability perspectives be integrated into UN country programming processes such as the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, and that consultative processes towards a post-2015 development framework, as well as future UN development conferences and summits include disability perspectives and the participation of persons with disabilities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 23], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2014/26], adopted resolution 2014/6 without vote [agenda item 17 (b)].

Promoting the rights of persons with disabilities and mainstreaming disability in the post-2015 development agenda

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the outcomes of the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March 1995, and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, entitled “World Summit for Social Development and beyond: achieving social development for all in a globalizing world”, held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000,

Reaffirming the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, adopted on 13 December 2006, as a landmark convention affirming the human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons with disabilities, and recognizing that it is both a human rights treaty and a development tool,

Recalling earlier operational frameworks, such as the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities,

Welcoming the adoption of the outcome document of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities: the way forward, a disability-inclusive development agenda towards 2015 and beyond, held on 23 September 2013, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the need for the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities towards 2015 and beyond, recognizing persons with disabilities as agents and beneficiaries of development and acknowledging the value of their contributions to the general well-being, progress and diversity of society,

Convinced that addressing the profound social, cultural and economic disadvantage and exclusion experienced by many persons with disabilities, promoting the use of universal design, as appropriate, as well as the progressive removal of barriers to the full and effective participation of persons with disabilities in all aspects of development, and promoting the equal enjoyment by persons with disabilities of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights will further the equalization of opportunities and contribute to the realization of a “society for all” in the twenty-first century,

Noting that, while progress has already been made by Governments, the international community and the United Nations system in mainstreaming disability as an integral part of the global development agenda, major challenges remain,

Welcoming the efforts of the United Nations to improve accessibility, in particular the opening of the Accessibility Centre at United Nations Headquarters in New York, which contributes to a disability-inclusive United Nations by facilitating the participation of persons with disabilities in the meetings of the United Nations and their access to the documentation of the United Nations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on mainstreaming disability in the development agenda towards 2015 and beyond;

2. Welcomes the work of the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development, and takes note of his report on monitoring of the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities;

3. Also welcomes the appointment of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on Disability and Accessibility, bearing in mind the need to create synergies with the existing United Nations mechanisms;

4. Notes the expiry of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on disability on 31 December 2014, and in this regard decides that the Commission shall consider at its fifty-third session the possibility of another monitoring mechanism, with a view to strengthening the mainstreaming of disability in social development;

5. Requests the Special Rapporteur to promote the implementation of the outcome document of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, including by supporting the relevant efforts of Member States and other stakeholders, and to further contribute to the development of a disability-inclusive, equitable and sustainable post-2015 development framework;

6. Calls upon Member States, relevant regional organizations and United Nations bodies and agencies to ensure that all development policies and programmes, including those regarding poverty eradication, social protection, full and productive employment and decent work, and appropriate measures for financial inclusion as well as accessible community and housing development, take into account the needs, rights and potentials of and benefit all persons with disabilities on an equal basis with others;

7. Encourages Member States, relevant regional organizations and United Nations bodies and agencies to achieve the full application and implementation of the international normative framework on disability and development by encouraging the ratification and implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and by considering the ratification of the Optional Protocol thereto, as both human rights and development instruments;

8. Emphasizes the need for measures to ensure that persons with disabilities, in particular women, children, youth, indigenous peoples and older persons, are not subject to multiple or aggravated forms of discrimination or excluded from participation on an equal basis with others in the implementation of the international development goals;

9. Decides to continue to give due consideration to the issue of disability and development, including within the framework of United Nations operational activities, in accordance with relevant mandates, in order to enhance awareness and cooperation at all levels, including the participation, where appropriate, of United Nations agencies, multilateral development banks and institutions and other relevant stakeholders, while ensuring coordination and avoiding any possible overlapping;

10. Urges Member States, the United Nations agencies and bodies, development agencies and international organizations and encourages the private sector to regard accessibility as both a means and a goal of inclusive and sustainable development and therefore an essential investment that benefits all members of society; hence accessibility should be an integral part of programmes and projects relating to the built environment, transportation and information and communications technologies;

11. Encourages the mobilization of resources on a sustainable basis to mainstream disability in development at all levels, and in this regard underlines the need to promote and strengthen international cooperation, including South-South and triangular cooperation, in support of national efforts, including, as appropriate, through the establishment of national mechanisms, in particular in developing countries;

12. Encourages Member States, the United Nations system and all relevant stakeholders to improve disability data collection, analysis and monitoring for development policy planning, implementation and evaluation, taking fully into account regional contexts, to share, where appropriate, relevant data and statistics with relevant agencies and bodies within the United Nations system, including the Statistical Commission, through appropriate mechanisms, and to underline the need for internationally comparable data and statistics disaggregated by sex and age, including information on disability;

13. Underlines the importance of closely consulting with and actively involving persons with disabilities and their representative organizations in the elaboration of the emerging post-2015 United Nations development agenda;

14. Calls upon all Governments to continue to cooperate and engage in direct dialogue with the Special Rapporteur and to provide him or her with all the relevant information needed to fulfil his or her mandate effectively;

15. Expresses concern at the insufficiency of resources for the Special Rapporteur, and recognizes the importance of providing adequate resources for the implementation of the mandate by the Special Rapporteur;

16. Encourages Governments, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability;

17. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the Commission for Social Development at its fifty-third session an annual report on his or her activities in implementing the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/480], adopted resolution 69/142 without vote [agenda item 26 (b)].

Realizing the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities towards 2015 and beyond

The General Assembly,

Recalling earlier operational frameworks, such as the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, which it adopted on 3 December 1982, and the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, which it adopted on 20 December 1993, in which persons with disabilities are recognized as both development agents and beneficiaries in all aspects of development,

Reaffirming the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, which it adopted on 13 December 2006 and which entered into force on 3 May 2008, a landmark convention affirming the human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons with disabilities, recognizing that it is both a human rights and a development instrument, and taking note of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities,

Recalling all of its previous resolutions on realizing the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Human Rights Council and of the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions,

Recalling also its previous resolutions on the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, in which it recognized the collective responsibility of Governments to uphold the principles of human dignity, equality and equity at the global level, and in this sense stressing the duty of Member States to achieve the full application and implementation of the international normative framework on persons with disabilities and development, including by encouraging the ratification and implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities,

Recalling further the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”, and the outcome document of the 2011 high-level plenary meeting of the Assembly on HIV and AIDS, entitled “Political Declaration on HIV and AIDS: Intensifying Our Efforts to Eliminate HIV and AIDS”, which contain references to the rights, participation, well-being and perspectives of persons with disabilities in development efforts,

Recognizing that persons with disabilities make up an estimated 15 per cent of the world’s population, or 1 billion people, of whom an estimated 80 per cent live in developing countries, and acknowledging the value of their contribution to the general well-being, progress and diversity of society,

Gravely concerned that persons with disabilities, in particular women, children, youth, indigenous peoples and older persons, continue to be subject to multiple and aggravated forms of discrimination and are still largely invisible in the implementation, monitoring and evaluation of the Millennium Development Goals and the internationally agreed development goals, and noting that, while progress has already been made by Governments, the international community and the United Nations system in mainstreaming disability, in particular the rights of persons with disabilities, as an integral part of the development agenda, major challenges remain,

Underlining the need for urgent action by all stakeholders towards the adoption and implementation of more ambitious disability-inclusive national development strategies and efforts with disability-targeted actions, backed by increased international cooperation and support,

Stressing the need for capacity development efforts aimed at empowering persons with disabilities and their representative organizations to ensure equal access to full and productive employment and decent work on an equal basis and without discrimination to persons with disabilities, including by promoting access to inclusive education systems, skills development, volunteering opportunities and vocational and entrepreneurial training in order to enable persons with disabilities to attain and maintain maximum independence,

Concerned that persons with disabilities are disproportionately affected in disaster, emergency and conflict situations, as well as by poverty,

Concerned also that the continuing lack of statistics and reliable data and information on the situation of persons with disabilities at the national, regional and global levels contributes to their exclusion in official statistics, presenting an obstacle to achieving development planning and implementation that is inclusive of persons with disabilities,

Stressing the importance of collecting and analysing reliable data on persons with disabilities following existing guidelines on disability statistics, encouraging ongoing efforts to improve data collection in order to disaggregate data with regard to persons with disabilities by gender and age, and underlining the need for internationally comparable data to assess progress on development policies that are inclusive of persons with disabilities,

1. Reaffirms the outcome document of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities, held on 23 September 2013, at the level of Heads of State and Government, with the overarching theme “The way forward: a disability-inclusive development agenda towards 2015 and beyond”, and also reaffirms the commitments contained therein;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General entitled “Realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities: a disability-inclusive development agenda towards 2015 and beyond”, and the recommendations contained therein;

3. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General entitled “A life of dignity for all: accelerating progress towards and advancing the United Nations development agenda beyond 2015”, in which the consideration of the inclusion of disability as a cross-cutting issue across the successor set of goals and targets of the post-2015 development agenda was recommended;

4. Recalls its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, and acknowledges that the report of the Open Working Group integrates a disability perspective;

5. Recognizes the continued need to give appropriate consideration to the issue of the rights of persons with disabilities in relation to the post-2015 development agenda;

6. Expresses appreciation to Member States and United Nations entities that have submitted information on progress made towards the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, including on specific priorities for action, and data and analysis on persons with disabilities, and urges Member States and relevant United Nations entities that have not already done so to submit the requested information;

7. Invites the Chair of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the rights of persons with disabilities to address and engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights", as a way to enhance communication between the Assembly and the Committee;

8. Welcomes Human Rights Council resolution 26/20 of 27 June 2014, in which the Council established the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of persons with disabilities, which included making concrete recommendations on how to better promote and protect the rights of persons with disabilities, including how to contribute to the realization of internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, for persons with disabilities, how to promote development that is inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities and how to promote their role as both agents for and beneficiaries of development;

9. Urges Member States, United Nations agencies, international and regional organizations, regional integration organizations and financial institutions to make a concerted effort to include persons with disabilities and to integrate the principles of accessibility and inclusion into the monitoring and evaluation of the development goals;

10. Encourages Member States, the United Nations system and other stakeholders to further improve coordination among existing international processes and instruments in order to advance a disability-inclusive global agenda;

11. Emphasizes the importance of mainstreaming the perspectives of persons with disabilities in disaster risk reduction, and recognizes the need for their inclusive participation in and contribution to disaster preparedness, emergency response, recovery and the transition from relief to development, as well as the implementation of policies and programmes that are inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities;

12. Encourages the mobilization of resources on a sustainable basis to mainstream disability in development at all levels, and in this regard underlines the need to promote and strengthen international cooperation, including South-South and triangular cooperation, in support of national efforts, including, as appropriate, through the establishment of national mechanisms, in particular in developing countries;

13. Welcomes the contributions made to the United Nations Partnership to Promote the Rights of Persons with Disabilities trust fund, and in this regard encourages Member States and other stakeholders to support its objectives, including by providing voluntary contributions;

14. Requests the United Nations system to facilitate technical assistance, within existing resources, including the provision of assistance for capacity-building and for the collection and compilation of national and regional data and statistics on persons with disabilities, in particular to developing countries, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with existing guidelines on disability statistics, to analyse, publish and disseminate disability data and statistics in future periodic reports, as appropriate, on the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities;

15. Welcomes the opening of the Accessibility Centre at United Nations Headquarters in New York, and requests the Secretary-General to continue the progressive implementation of relevant standards and guidelines with respect to the accessibility of facilities and services in the United Nations system, taking into account relevant provisions of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, in particular when undertaking renovations, including interim arrangements;

16. Encourages Member States, United Nations organizations and mechanisms, including the newly appointed Special Rapporteur on the rights of persons with disabilities, and the regional commissions to make all efforts to engage with and ensure accessibility for the full and effective participation and inclusion of persons with disabilities, in cooperation with organizations of persons with disabilities and, as appropriate, national human rights institutions, in development processes and decision-making at the local, national, regional and international levels;

17. Encourages Member States that have not yet done so to adopt a national disability strategy that can be operationalized, including through measurable and appropriate targets and indicators, and that assigns responsibility to and incorporates the views of a broad range of stakeholders, including persons with disabilities and their representative organizations;

18. Requests the United Nations system, in particular the Statistical Commission, in consultation with the Special Rapporteur on the rights of persons with disabilities, within the scope of her mandate, within existing resources, to update existing methodologies for the collection and analysis of data on persons with disabilities, to obtain internationally comparable data on the situation of persons with disabilities and to regularly include relevant data on disability or relevant qualitative facts, as appropriate, in relevant United Nations publications in the field of economic and social development;

19. Encourages Member States to take appropriate steps to expedite the mainstreaming of data on disability into official statistics;

20. Requests the President of the General Assembly to organize, during the seventieth session of the Assembly, a panel discussion to follow up on the status of and progress made towards the realization of the development goals for persons with disabilities in relation to the follow-up to the outcome of the high-level meeting on disability and development and to the principles of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities;

21. Requests the Secretary-General, in coordination with all relevant United Nations entities:

(a) To submit information to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on the implementation of the present resolution and of the outcome document of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities, and to make appropriate recommendations to further strengthen implementation;

(b) To compile and analyse national policies, programmes, best practices and available statistics regarding persons with disabilities, reflecting progress made in addressing the relevant internationally agreed development goals and the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, to be submitted to the General Assembly in a flagship report during 2018.

Youth

World Programme of Action for Youth

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to resolution 51/1 of the Commission for Social Development, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a progress report [E/CN.5/2014/5] on national programmes and policies related to young people, in accordance with his Five-Year Action Agenda [YUN 2012, p. 3]. He described the efforts of Member States and UN entities in implementing the World Programme of Action for Youth, and based the report on responses obtained through a note verbale sent to Member States and a request to the members of the United Nations Inter-Agency Network on Youth Development. He observed that the challenges facing young people were directly related to the 15 priority areas of the World Programme of Action for Youth, namely, education, employment, hunger and poverty, health, environment, drug abuse, juvenile delinquency, leisure-time activities, girls and young women, full and effective participation of youth in the life of society and in decision-making, globalization, information and communications technology, HIV/AIDS, armed conflict and intergenerational issues. Member States and UN entities reported on a variety of initiatives geared towards addressing the priority areas as laid out in the Programme of Action.

The Secretary-General reported that many Member States were working to ensure the full participation of youth in society by establishing new youth structures and programmes to bring the voices of young people to government representatives and strengthening their national strategies and laws. Examples included Switzerland, where a new federal law on children and youth encouraged the political participation of young people, with a particular focus on those from disadvantaged backgrounds; and Lithuania, where the national youth policy 2012–2013 outlined steps to create favourable conditions for the inclusion of young people in all societal processes. Many Governments also instituted programmes to improve the employability of young people, promote youth entrepreneurship, ensure greater access to information and communications technology, ensure greater awareness of HIV/AIDS, and promote the involvement of young people in maintaining peace and security.

The Secretary-General also reported on the efforts of UN entities in promoting young people. The Democratic Governance Thematic Trust Fund of UNDP supported 35 projects worldwide with a total value of almost $8 million during its 2012–2014 cycle, with a focus on ensuring youth participation in governance processes and adequate representation of young people in policymaking. With regard to girls and young women, the Secretary-General's UNiTE to End Violence against Women campaign prioritized youth engagement in violence prevention, while UN-Women worked globally to enhance young women's influence in decision-making processes at the national, regional and global levels. UN entities also provided technical assistance to governments in youth policy design and implementation; supported youth development projects through the United Nations Development Account; provided a range of services to youth refugees, encompassing health, education and skills development; and undertook communication, awareness-raising and advocacy campaigns to place a spotlight on issues related to youth. The Secretary-General further reported that the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination (CEB) had endorsed the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Youth as a framework to guide youth programming for the UN system. A majority of activities to implement the commitments and measures contained in the Action Plan would take place at the country level—but also at the regional and global levels.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/480], adopted resolution 69/145 without vote [agenda item 26 (b)].

World Youth Skills Day

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/81 of 14 December 1995 and 62/126 of 18 December 2007, in which it adopted the World Programme of Action for Youth, its resolution 65/312 of 26 July 2011, by which it adopted the outcome document of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on youth: dialogue and mutual understanding, including the actions recommended therein on youth, and its resolution 68/130 of 18 December 2013 on policies and programmes involving youth,

Recalling also its resolution 54/120 of 17 December 1999, in which it endorsed the recommendation that 12 August be declared International Youth Day, and its resolution

64/134 of 18 December 2009, by which it proclaimed the year commencing on 12 August 2010 the International Year of Youth: Dialogue and Mutual Understanding,

Reaffirming its resolutions 53/199 of 15 December 1998 and 61/185 of 20 December 2006 on the proclamation of international years, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries, particularly paragraphs 1 to 10 of the annex thereto on the agreed criteria for the proclamation, as well as paragraphs 13 and 14, stating that an international day or year should not be proclaimed before the basic arrangements for its organization and financing have been made,

Expressing concern at the high number of unemployed youth, estimated globally at 74.5 million in 2013, the majority of whom live in developing countries,

Noting that Member States have an important role in meeting the needs and aspirations of youth, particularly in developing countries,

Recognizing that fostering the acquisition of skills by youth would enhance their ability to make informed choices with regard to life and work and empower them to gain access to changing labour markets,

1. Decides to designate 15 July as World Youth Skills Day;
2. Invites all Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations, as well as civil society, including youth-led organizations, to commemorate World Youth Skills Day in an appropriate manner, in accordance with national priorities, including through education, campaigns, volunteering and public awareness-raising activities;
3. Stresses that the cost of all activities that may arise from the implementation of the present resolution should be met from voluntary contributions;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member and observer States and all organizations of the United Nations system.

Family

Twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, 2014

Report of Secretary-General. In November [A/70/61-E/2015/3], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/136 [YUN 2013, p. 1063], the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly and to the Economic and Social Council on the activities of Member States and other stakeholders in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, related policy developments; and activities related to celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family at all levels. The report focused on poverty reduction, work-family balance, intergenerational issues and the prevention of violence within the family.

The Secretary-General stated that despite efforts made by Member States, social protection remained a right unfulfilled for most children and families. According to the International Labour Organization (ILO), although specific provisions for child and family benefits existed in 108 countries, they mostly covered a limited segment of the population. A further 75 countries had no specific policy or programme for child and family benefits. It was highlighted that countries spent on average 0.4 per cent of gross domestic product (GDP) on child and family benefits, with the amount ranging from 0.2 per cent in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, to 2.2 per cent in Western Europe. Social protection schemes such as family and child allowances and cash transfers were not meeting the income security needs of children and families, especially in middle- and low-income countries with large child populations.

The Secretary-General also highlighted the events that took place in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family: a high-level panel discussion held from 11 to 21 February by the Commission for Social Development; a panel discussion by the Human Rights Council at its twenty-seventh session; research and expert meetings and awareness-raising events conducted by the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs; a civil society declaration sponsored by 27 international entities and signed by over 542 civil society representatives from 285 national organizations, as well as by elected officials, academics and individuals; regional expert group meetings and capacity development workshops held in Europe, Africa, North and South America, the Middle East and North Africa; national initiatives in Argentina, Australia, Brazil, South Korea, Portugal and United Kingdom; and research by entities such as the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) and the European Union aimed at improving family policies.

The Secretary-General observed that as family issues were multisectoral in nature and could not be addressed by a single ministry or governmental agency, more attention needed to be paid to integrated and coordinated approaches, including engagement with civil society organizations, the private sector and families themselves. He recommended that Governments advance family-centred policies and programmes as part of a comprehensive approach to development; Member States invest in family-oriented anti-poverty programmes; Governments, in partnership with relevant stakeholders, support data collection and research on family issues and the impact of public policy on families and invest in family-oriented policy and programme design, implementation and evaluation; and for the Commission for Social Development to consider requesting that future reports of the Secretary-General focus thematically on issues affecting families.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 23], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/2014/26], adopted resolution 2014/8 without vote [agenda item 17 (b)].

Observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family and beyond

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 44/82 of 8 December 1989, 47/237 of 20 September 1993, 50/142 of 21 December 1995, 52/81 of 12 December 1997, 54/124 of 17 December 1999, 56/113 of 19 December 2001, 57/164 of 18 December 2002, 58/15 of 3 December 2003, 59/111 of 6 December 2004, 59/147 of 20 December 2004, 60/133 of 16 December 2005, 62/129 of 18 December 2007, 64/133 of 18 December 2009, 66/126 of 19 December 2011, 67/142 of 20 December 2012 and 68/136 of 18 December 2013 concerning the proclamation of, preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family and its tenth and twentieth anniversaries,

Recognizing that the preparations for and observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year provide a useful opportunity to draw further attention to the objectives of the Year for increasing cooperation at all levels on family issues and for undertaking concerted actions to strengthen family-centred policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

Recognizing also that the follow-up to the International Year is an integral part of the agenda and of the multi-year programme of work of the Commission for Social Development,

Recognizing further that the family, as the natural and fundamental group unit of society, has the primary responsibility for the nurturing and protection of children and that children, for the full and harmonious development of their personality, should grow up in a family environment and in an atmosphere of happiness, love and understanding,

Stressing the importance of creating a conducive environment to strengthen and support all families, recognizing that equality between women and men and respect for all of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all family members are essential to family well-being and to society at large, noting the importance of reconciliation of work and family life and recognizing the principle of shared parental responsibility for the upbringing and development of the child,

Convinced that equality between men and women, women's equal participation in employment and shared parental responsibility are essential elements of policy on the family,

Recognizing that the overall objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes continue to guide national and international efforts to improve family well-being worldwide and address emerging issues that impact the family,

Noting the importance of designing, implementing and monitoring family-oriented policies, especially in the areas of poverty eradication, full employment and decent work, work-family balance, social integration and intergenerational solidarity,

Recognizing that the family can contribute to eradicating poverty and hunger, achieving universal primary education, promoting gender equality and empowering women, reducing child mortality, improving maternal health and combating HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases,

Noting that single-headed households, child-headed households, intergenerational and intragenerational households are particularly vulnerable to poverty and social exclusion,

Acknowledging that the family plays a key role in social development and as such should be strengthened, with attention to the rights, capabilities and responsibilities of its members,

Noting the active role of the United Nations in enhancing international cooperation in family-related issues, particularly in the areas of research and information, including the compilation, analysis and dissemination of data,

Emphasizing that it is necessary to increase coordination of the activities of the United Nations system on family-related issues in order to contribute fully to the effective implementation of the objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes,

Convinced that civil society, including research and academic institutions, has a pivotal role in advocacy, promotion, research and policymaking and, as appropriate, policy evaluation, in respect of family policy development and capacity-building,

Recalling that the twentieth anniversary of the International Year will be observed during the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the preparations for and observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family in 2014 and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Recalls its invitation to all States to view 2014 as a target year by which concrete efforts will be taken to improve family well-being through the implementation of effective national policies, strategies and programmes;

3. Encourages Governments to make every possible effort to realize the objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes and to integrate a family perspective into national policymaking;

4. Urges Member States to give due consideration to advancing family policy development in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

5. Invites Member States and the organizations of the United Nations system as well as other relevant stakeholders to take into account the role of the family as a contributor to sustainable development and the need to strengthen family policy development in their ongoing efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, the Millennium Development Goals and future United Nations development goals;

6. Encourages Member States to take into consideration the panel discussion held in observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year at the fifty-second session of the Commission for Social Development in order to guide its future deliberations on family issues, with the aim of establishing appropriate follow-up processes to guide national policy development;

7. Also encourages Member States to strengthen or, if necessary, establish relevant national agencies or governmental bodies responsible for the implementation and monitoring of family policies and to research the impact of social policies on the family and its members;

8. Further encourages Member States to continue their efforts to develop appropriate policies to address family poverty, social exclusion, work-family balance and intergenerational solidarity and to share good practices in those areas;

9. Encourages Governments, the United Nations and regional entities, civil society organizations, the private sector and academic institutions to promote and advance family empowerment through appropriate family-centred policies and programmes;

10. Encourages Member States to adopt effective means to reduce family poverty and prevent the intergenerational transfer of poverty through family-centred benefits and social protection measures, such as old-age pensions, cash transfers, housing assistance, child benefits and tax breaks;

11. Also encourages Member States to promote family policies in support of work-family balance and to strengthen flexible provisions for parental leave, extend flexible working arrangements for employees with family responsibilities, including flexible part-time job opportunities and arrangements, promote gender equality and empowerment of women, including by eliminating workplace discrimination against women and men with family responsibilities, and enhance paternal involvement and shouldering of responsibilities and support a wide range of quality childcare arrangements, noting the importance of reconciliation of work and family life and recognizing the principle that both parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of the child;

12. Further encourages Member States to invest in intergenerational programmes for helping families in their caregiving responsibilities, including care for family members of all ages, and facilitating intergenerational exchanges and support through, inter alia, the provision of social protection schemes, including pensions, and investment in cross-generational facilities, volunteering programmes aimed at youth, older persons and persons with disabilities, mentoring and job-sharing programmes;

13. Encourages Member States to develop and implement policies and national strategies to prevent violence within the family as a whole, including child abuse, elder abuse and domestic violence, and thereby enhance the well-being of all of its members;

14. Recommends that United Nations agencies and bodies, including the regional commissions, and invites relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and research and academic institutions, to work closely with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat in a coordinated manner on family-related issues;

15. Encourages Member States to consider establishing partnerships with civil society organizations, the private sector and academic institutions, as appropriate, in support of family-oriented policy and programme design;

16. Encourages Governments to support the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities to enable the Department of Economic and Social Affairs to continue research activities and provide assistance to countries, upon their request;

17. Encourages the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, within existing resources, to continue to cooperate with Governments, the United Nations system and civil society in strengthening national capacities through the implementation of the objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes;

18. Invites Member States, United Nations agencies and bodies, civil society organizations and academic institutions to continue providing information on their activities in support of the objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes and to share good practices and data on family policy development to be included in the relevant reports of the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/480], adopted resolution 69/144 without vote [agenda item 26 (b)].

Celebrating the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/82 of 8 December 1989, 50/142 of 21 December 1995, 52/81 of 12 December 1997, 54/124 of 17 December 1999, 56/113 of 19 December 2001, 57/164 of 18 December 2002, 58/15 of 3 December 2003, 59/111 of 6 December 2004, 59/147 of 20 December 2004, 60/133 of 16 December 2005, 62/129 of 18 December 2007, 64/133 of 18 December 2009, 66/126 of 19 December 2011, 67/142 of 20 December 2012 and 68/136 of 18 December 2013 concerning the proclamation of, preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family and its tenth and twentieth anniversaries,

Recognizing that the preparations for and observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year in 2014 provided a useful opportunity to continue to raise awareness of the objectives of the International Year for increasing cooperation on family issues at all levels and for undertaking concerted action to strengthen family-centred policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

Recognizing also the efforts made by Governments, the United Nations system and civil society to fulfil the objectives guiding the preparations for the twentieth anniversary of the International Year at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling that 2014 marks the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, as observed during the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the holding of a plenary meeting during the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, in December 2014, on the observance of the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, in order to discuss the role of family-oriented policies in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

3. Encourages Governments to continue to make every possible effort to realize the objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes and to develop strategies and programmes aimed at strengthening national capacities to address national priorities relating to family issues;

4. Recognizes the continued importance of giving due consideration to advancing the development of family policy in the ongoing discussions on the post-2015 development agenda;

5. Encourages Governments to support the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes by Member States and by agencies and bodies of the United Nations system;

7. Calls upon Member States, agencies and bodies of the United Nations, civil society organizations and academic institutions to take into account the role the family plays as a contributor to sustainable development, and encourages Member States to continue providing information on their activities, including on good practices, in support of the objectives of the International Year and its follow-up processes, to be included in the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Decides to consider the topic “Follow-up to the twentieth anniversary of the International Year of the Family and beyond” at its seventieth session under the sub-item entitled “Social development, including questions relating to the world social situation and to youth, ageing, disabled persons and the family” of the item entitled “Social development”.

Cultural development

Culture of peace

Culture of Peace and interreligious and intercultural understanding

In October [A/69/413], pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 68/125 [YUN 2013, p. 1066], the Secretary-General submitted a report to the General Assembly on the promotion of a culture of peace and interreligious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace, which outlined the main activities carried out by the UN system in support of peace and dialogue.

The Secretary-General highlighted the work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), in particular its programme of action for a culture of peace and non-violence and Action Plan for the International Decade for the Rapprochement of Cultures. In that vein, he described the use of education to promote peace and mutual understanding by UNESCO; developing new policies and tools for addressing social inclusion, intercultural dialogue and peaceful coexistence; use of media and information literacy as a catalyst for intercultural dialogue; promotion of intercultural and interreligious dialogue for mutual understanding and peace; and plans for its International Decade for the Rapprochement of Cultures (2013–2022).

In pursuance of Assembly resolutions 67/106 [YUN 2012, p. 1064] and 68/125 [YUN 2013, p. 1066], the General Assembly President convened a one-day High-level Forum on the Culture of Peace in September. The United Nations Peacebuilding Support Office, through its Peacebuilding Commission, continued to advance a culture of peace and non-violence in post-conflict peacebuilding efforts by advancing an integrated and coherent approach to peacebuilding activities in the six countries on its agenda. United Nations Volunteers worked to define innovative projects in the context of the post-2015 development agenda and partnered with other UN entities in projects aimed at promoting access to justice and civic education, engaging adolescents in peacebuilding activities and promoting youth education on the culture of peace in several African countries emerging from conflict or in a delicate political transition. UN-Women, together with the Peacebuilding Support Office, hosted an event in September that enabled women from across the world to share their peacebuilding stories, which would be compiled in a joint publication entitled “Women: everyday peacebuilders”. The United Nations University promoted intercultural dialogue through its Institute on Globalization, Culture and Mobility. On 21 September in New York, the United Nations Department of Public Information led celebrations for the International Day of Peace, in which several United Nations Messengers of Peace were involved. In addition, some 500 students from the United States and the Democratic Republic of the Congo participated in a conference with the Secretary-General and Messengers of Peace. The Congolese students participated through a video link facilitated by the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the DRC (MONUSCO).

The Secretary-General also detailed UN system efforts to promote interreligious dialogue through advocacy and policy engagement activities with faith-based organizations. Such activities brought together peoples of different faiths to enable them to find solutions to common issues, such as those related to maternal health, violence against women and HIV/AIDS. In May, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), in its capacity as convener of the United Nations Inter-Agency Task Force on Engaging Faith-based Organizations for the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 49], hosted a policy round table for donors, on “Religion and development post-2015”. Discussions were focused on partnerships around the Millennium Development Goals and the policy implications of religion for the post-2015 sustainable development goals. UNFPA continued its of partnership with faith-based organizations through advocacy, capacity-building, knowledge management and strengthened South-South cooperation on population issues, including a multimillion-dollar investment, in partnership with UNICEF, to reduce female genital mutilation in 17 countries and end child marriage. The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) intensified its efforts to scale up service provision by faith-based organizations activities in five key areas: leadership and advocacy; support aimed at scaling up service provision by faith-based organizations and integrating it into national responses; addressing human rights challenges; combating stigma and discrimination; and addressing sensitive issues such as sexuality and gender-based violence in the context of HIV. The approaches of the partnership included convening consultations of religious leaders and technical partners at the national level; addressing gatherings of high-level religious leaders and inviting them to engage in dialogue with UNAIDS staff; writing joint opinion pieces; and leveraging high-level events on critical issues. For example, following a UNAIDS-organized national consultation, religious leaders in Ethiopia issued a call for the inclusion of equitable access to HIV/AIDS treatment for all in the post-2015 development framework (see p. 960). The Secretary-General also detailed the efforts of the UN human rights machinery, including the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in promoting a culture of peace and dialogue.

High-level Forum

On 9 September, the General Assembly convened a High-level Forum on “Culture of Peace”, which focused on “the role and contributions of women and youth to the culture of peace” and “global citizenship as a pathway to the culture of peace”. Speaking before the Assembly, the Secretary-General called for a new commitment to respect the right to be different and to make the most of diversity as a strength to share among all people.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/139 [draft: A/69/L.34 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 14].

Follow-up to the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Charter of the United Nations, including the purposes and principles contained therein, and especially the dedication to saving succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Recalling the Constitution of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which states that, “since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed”,

Recognizing the importance of the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace, which serve as the universal mandate for the international community, particularly the United Nations system, for the promotion of a culture of peace and non-violence that benefits humanity, in particular future generations,

Recalling its previous resolutions on a culture of peace, in particular resolution 52/15 of 20 November 1997 proclaiming 2000 the International Year for the Culture of Peace, resolution 53/25 of 10 November 1998 proclaiming the period 2001–2010 the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, and resolutions 56/5 of 5 November 2001, 57/6 of 4 November 2002, 58/11 of 10 November 2003, 59/143 of 15 December 2004, 60/3 of 20 October 2005, 61/45 of 4 December 2006, 62/89 of 17 December 2007, 63/113 of 5 December 2008, 64/80 of 7 December 2009, 65/11 of 23 November 2010, 66/116 of 12 December 2011, 67/106 of 17 December 2012 and 68/125 of 18 December 2013, adopted under its agenda item entitled “Culture of peace”,

Recalling also its resolution 68/127 of 18 December 2013 on a world against violence and violent extremism,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration, which calls for the active promotion of a culture of peace,

Taking note of the 2005 World Summit Outcome adopted at the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly,

Welcoming the observance of 2 October as the International Day of Non-Violence, as proclaimed by the United Nations,

Recognizing that all efforts made by the United Nations system in general and the international community at large for peacekeeping, peacebuilding, the prevention of conflicts, disarmament, sustainable development, the promotion of human dignity and human rights, democracy, the rule of law, good governance and gender equality at the national and international levels contribute greatly to the culture of peace,

Recognizing also the importance of respect and understanding for religious and cultural diversity throughout the world, of choosing dialogue and negotiations over confrontation and of working together and not against each other,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, which provides an overview of the activities that have been carried out by the main United Nations entities working in the areas of a culture of peace and interreligious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace since the adoption by the General Assembly of its resolutions 68/125 and 68/126 of 18 December 2013,

Recalling the proclamation by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of 21 February as International Mother Language Day, which aims at protecting, promoting and preserving linguistic and cultural diversity and multilingualism, in order to foster and enrich a culture of peace, social harmony, cross-cultural dialogue and mutual understanding,

Recalling also the proclamation by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of 30 April as International Jazz Day, which aims to develop and increase intercultural exchanges and understanding between cultures for the purpose of mutual comprehension, tolerance and the promotion of a culture of peace,

Welcoming the efforts of the international community to enhance understanding through constructive dialogue among civilizations,

Expressing its appreciation for the ongoing efforts of the United Nations Alliance of Civilizations in promoting a culture of peace through a number of practical projects in the areas of youth, education, media and migrations, in collaboration with Governments, international organizations, foundations and civil society groups, as well as media and the private sector,

Welcoming the successful holding on 9 September 2014 of the General Assembly High-level Forum on the Culture of Peace, convened by the President of the Assembly, and the high-level participation, wide-ranging partnership and inclusive collaboration among Member States, international organizations and civil society, as evidenced at the Forum, and welcoming also with appreciation the observance by the Forum of the fifteenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recognizing the role of women and young people in advancing the culture of peace and, in particular, the importance of greater involvement of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in activities promoting a culture of peace, including in post-conflict situations,

Welcoming the adoption by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its thirty-sixth session of a programme of action for a culture of peace and non-violence, and noting that the objectives of that programme of action are in line with the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace adopted by the General Assembly,

Recalling the Yamoussoukro Declaration on Peace in the Minds of Men, and acknowledging the observance in 2014 of the twenty-fifth anniversary of its adoption,

Noting the initiatives of civil society, in collaboration with Governments, to strengthen civilian capacities to enhance the physical safety of vulnerable populations under threat of violence and to promote the peaceful settlement of disputes,

Encouraging the continued and increasing efforts and activities on the part of civil society organizations throughout the world in advancing the culture of peace as envisaged in the Declaration and Programme of Action,

1. Reiterates that the objective of the effective implementation of the Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace is to strengthen further the global movement for a culture of peace following the observance of the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World, 2001–2010, and calls upon all concerned to renew their attention to this objective;

2. Notes the importance of giving due consideration to a culture of peace in the context of the post-2015 development agenda;

3. Invites Member States to continue to place greater emphasis on and expand their activities promoting a culture of peace at the national, regional and international levels and to ensure that peace and non-violence are fostered at all levels;

4. Invites the entities of the United Nations system, within their existing mandates, to integrate, as appropriate, the eight action areas of the Programme of Action into their programmes of activities, focusing on promoting a culture of peace and non-violence at the national, regional and international levels;

5. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for strengthening efforts to mobilize all relevant stakeholders within and outside the United Nations system in support of a culture of peace, and invites the Organization to continue to enhance communication and outreach, including through the culture of peace website and in the context of the celebration of its seventieth anniversary;

6. Commends the practical initiatives and actions by relevant United Nations bodies, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) and the University for Peace, as well as their activities in further promoting a culture of peace and non-violence, including the promotion of peace education and activities related to specific areas identified in the Programme of Action, and encourages them to continue and further strengthen and expand their efforts;

7. Encourages the United Nations peacebuilding architecture to continue to promote peacebuilding activities and to advance a culture of peace and non-violence in post-conflict peacebuilding efforts at the country level;

8. Urges the appropriate authorities to provide age-appropriate education in children's schools that builds a culture of peace, including lessons in mutual understanding, tolerance, active citizenship and human rights;

9. Encourages the involvement of media, especially the mass media, in promoting a culture of peace and non-violence, with particular regard to children and young people;

10. Commends civil society, non-governmental organizations and young people for their activities in further promoting a culture of peace and non-violence, including through their campaign to raise awareness on a culture of peace and the peaceful settlement of disputes;

11. Encourages civil society and non-governmental organizations to further strengthen their efforts to promote a culture of peace, inter alia, by adopting their own programme of activities to complement the initiatives of Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations, in line with the Declaration and Programme of Action on a Culture of Peace;

12. Invites Member States, all parts of the United Nations system and civil society organizations to accord increasing attention to their observance of the International Day of Peace on 21 September each year as a day of global ceasefire and non-violence, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/282 of 7 September 2001;

13. Requests the President of the General Assembly to consider convening a high-level forum, as appropriate and within existing resources, devoted to the implementation of the Programme of Action on the occasion of the anniversary of its adoption, on or around 13 September;

14. Invites the Secretary-General, within existing resources, in consultation with the Member States and taking into account the observations of civil society organizations, to explore mechanisms and strategies, in particular strategies in the sphere of information and communications technology, for the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action and to initiate outreach efforts to increase global awareness of the Programme of Action and its eight areas of action aimed at their implementation;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report, within existing resources, on actions taken by Member States, on the basis of information provided by them, and those taken system-wide by all concerned entities of the United Nations to implement the present resolution and on heightened activities by the Organization and its affiliated agencies to implement the Programme of Action and to promote the culture of peace and non-violence;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled "Culture of peace".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/140 [draft: A/69/L.41 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 14].

Promotion of interreligious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in particular the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion,

Recalling its resolution 68/126 of 18 December 2013 on the promotion of interreligious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace and its other related resolutions,

Recalling also that in its resolution 67/104 the General Assembly proclaimed the period 2013–2022 as the International Decade for the Rapprochement of Cultures,

Encouraging, in this regard, activities aimed at promoting interreligious and intercultural dialogue in order to enhance peace and social stability, respect for diversity and mutual respect and to create, at the global level, and also at the regional, national and local levels, an environment conducive to peace and mutual understanding,

Recalling its resolution 64/14 of 10 November 2009 on the Alliance of Civilizations, in which it welcomed and expressed continuing support for the efforts made by the Secretary-General and his High Representative for the Alliance of Civilizations to promote greater understanding and respect among civilizations, cultures and religions,

Recalling also its resolution 68/127 of 18 December 2013 on a world against violence and violent extremism,

Recalling further its resolution 53/22 of 4 November 1998, by which it declared 2001 the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations and expressed its firm determination to facilitate and promote dialogue among civilizations,

Bearing in mind the valuable contribution that interreligious and intercultural dialogue can make to an improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

Noting that interreligious and intercultural dialogue has made significant contributions to mutual understanding, tolerance and respect, as well as to the promotion of a culture of peace and an improvement of overall relations among people from different cultural and religious backgrounds and among nations,

Recognizing that cultural diversity and the pursuit of cultural development by all peoples and nations are sources of mutual enrichment for the cultural life of humankind,

Recalling its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Bearing in mind that tolerance of cultural, ethnic, religious and linguistic diversities contributes towards peace, mutual understanding and friendship among people of different cultures and nations and that these diversities should be made part of intercultural and interreligious dialogue efforts, as appropriate,

Emphasizing the importance of culture for development and its contribution to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and recognizing the importance of giving due consideration to culture in the ongoing discussions on the post-2015 development agenda, and in this regard noting the close links between cultural diversity, dialogue and development,

Noting the various initiatives at the local, national, regional and international levels for enhancing dialogue, understanding and cooperation among religions, beliefs, cultures and civilizations, which are mutually reinforcing and interrelated,

Welcoming the leading role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as the work of the United Nations Alliance of Civilizations, in promoting intercultural dialogue,

Welcoming also the declaration of the High-level Conference on Intercultural and Interfaith Dialogue adopted by the Asia-Europe Meeting, with the theme “Harmony between civilizations as a prerequisite for sustainable development”, held in St. Petersburg, Russian Federation, on 3 and 4 July 2014,

Welcoming further the work of the Anna Lindh Foundation and the ongoing work of the King Abdullah Bin Abdulaziz International Centre for Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue in Vienna,

Taking note of the initiative for education for peace through interreligious and intercultural dialogue in Africa, and the offer of the Government of Benin to host an international symposium on the initiative in Cotonou, Benin, during the first half of 2015,

Acknowledging the positive contribution of individuals and of relevant civil society organizations to the promotion of interreligious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and the culture of peace,

Recognizing the contributions of the media and of new information and communications technology to promoting peoples’ understanding of different cultures and religions, including through the promotion of dialogue,

Reaffirming the importance of sustaining the process of engaging all stakeholders, including young men and women as relevant actors, in interreligious and intercultural dialogue within the appropriate initiatives at various levels, which aims to challenge prejudices and improve mutual understanding,

Recognizing the commitment of all religions to peace and the need for voices of moderation from all religions and beliefs to work together in order to build a more secure and peaceful world,

1. Reaffirms that mutual understanding and interreligious and intercultural dialogue constitute important dimensions of the dialogue among civilizations and of the culture of peace;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on promotion of a culture of peace and interreligious and intercultural dialogue, understanding and cooperation for peace;

3. Recognizes the importance of interreligious dialogue and its valuable contribution to promoting social cohesion, peace and development, and calls upon Member States to consider, as appropriate and where applicable, interreligious and intercultural dialogue as an important tool in efforts aimed at achieving peace and social stability and the full realization of internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and to give due consideration to culture in the ongoing discussions on the post-2015 development agenda;

4. Also recognizes the efforts by relevant stakeholders to foster peaceful and harmonious coexistence within societies by promoting respect for religious and cultural diversity, including by engendering sustained and robust interaction among various segments of society;

5. Further recognizes the leading role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on intercultural dialogue and its contribution to interreligious dialogue, as well as its activities related to the culture of peace and non-violence and its focus on concrete actions at the global, regional and subregional levels;

6. Welcomes the adoption of the Action Plan for the International Decade for the Rapprochement of Cultures (2013–2022), by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in consultation with Member States and the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, which provides a framework to enhance interreligious and intercultural dialogue and to promote tolerance and mutual understanding, while placing emphasis on the involvement of women and youth in such dialogue;

7. Encourages Member States and the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to carry out activities in support of the Action Plan for the International Decade for the Rapprochement of Cultures (2013–2022);

8. Condemns any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, whether it involves the use of print, audiovisual or electronic media or any other means;

9. Reaffirms the solemn commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for and observance and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other instruments relating to human rights and international law, the universal nature of these rights and freedoms being beyond question;

10. Welcomes the Bali Declaration adopted at the Sixth Global Forum of the United Nations Alliance of Civilizations, with the theme “Unity in diversity: celebrating diversity for common and shared values”, held in Bali, Indonesia, on 29 and 30 August 2014, encourages relevant stakeholders to continue their efforts to promote mutual understanding among different civilizations, cultures, religions and beliefs, and in this regard looks forward to the next meeting of the Global Forum, in Azerbaijan in 2016;

11. Underlines the importance of moderation as a value within societies for countering extremism in all its aspects and for further contributing to the promotion of interreligious and intercultural dialogue, tolerance, understanding and cooperation, and encourages efforts, as appropriate, to enable voices of moderation to be heard;

12. Welcomes the efforts by the media to promote interreligious and intercultural dialogue, encourages the further promotion of dialogue among the media from all cultures and civilizations, emphasizes that everyone has the right to freedom of expression, and reaffirms that the exercise of this right carries with it special duties and responsibilities and may therefore be subject to certain restrictions, but that these shall be only such as are provided by law and necessary for respect of the rights or reputations of others, protection of national security or of public order, or of public health or morals;

13. Also welcomes the efforts to use information and communications technology, including the Internet, to promote interreligious and intercultural dialogue, including through the Interfaith Dialogue e-Portal established following the Special Non-Aligned Movement Ministerial Meeting on Interfaith Dialogue and Cooperation for Peace and Development, held in Manila in 2010, as well as the Peace and Dialogue e-Portal of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and encourages relevant stakeholders to utilize the opportunity to disseminate their best practices and experiences on interreligious and intercultural dialogue by contributing to the Interfaith Dialogue e-Portal and to the Peace and Dialogue e-Portal;

14. Encourages Member States to consider, as and where appropriate, initiatives that identify areas for practical action in all sectors and levels of society for the promotion of interreligious and intercultural dialogue, tolerance, understanding and cooperation, inter alia, the ideas suggested during the High-level Dialogue on Interreligious and Intercultural Understanding and Cooperation for Peace, held in New York in October 2007, including the idea of an enhanced process of dialogue among world religions, as well as the ideas suggested during the third High Panel on Peace and Dialogue among Cultures, held in Paris in November 2012;

15. Acknowledges the active engagement of the United Nations system with faith-based organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations in the promotion of interreligious and intercultural dialogue and in bringing together people of different cultures, religions, faiths or beliefs to discuss common issues and objectives;

16. Also acknowledges the important role of civil society, including academia and volunteer groups, in fostering interreligious and intercultural dialogue, and encourages support for practical measures that mobilize civil society, including building capacities, opportunities and frameworks for cooperation;

17. Invites Member States to further promote reconciliation to help to ensure durable peace and sustained development, including by working with faith leaders and communities and through reconciliatory measures and acts of service and by encouraging forgiveness and compassion among individuals;

18. Recognizes that the Office for Economic and Social Council Support and Coordination in the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat plays a valuable role as focal point within the Secretariat on the issue, and encourages it to continue to interact and coordinate with the relevant entities of the United Nations system and coordinate their contribution to the intergovernmental process aimed at promoting interreligious and intercultural dialogue;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the item on the culture of peace would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

United Nations Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela Prize

On 30 May [A/68/L.48], pursuant to resolution 64/13 of 10 November 2009 [YUN 2009, p. 1075], the General Assembly considered a draft resolution entitled “United Nations Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela Prize”.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 June [meeting 91], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/275 [draft: A/68/L.48] without vote [agenda item 118].

United Nations Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela Prize

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 64/13 of 10 November 2009, by which it designated 18 July as Nelson Mandela International Day, which has been observed by the United Nations every year since 2010,

Commending the President of the sixty-eighth session of the General Assembly for his initiative in establishing the United Nations Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela Prize,

Bearing in mind Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela’s leading role in and support for Africa’s struggle for liberation and Africa’s unity, his outstanding contribution to the creation of a non-racial, non-sexist, democratic South Africa and his contribution to the struggle for democracy internationally and the promotion of a culture of peace throughout the world,

Bearing in mind also Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela’s values and his dedication to the service of humanity, as a humanitarian, in the fields of conflict resolution, race relations, promotion and protection of human rights, reconciliation, gender equality and the rights of children and other vulnerable groups, as well as the uplifting of poor and underdeveloped communities,

Wishing to further honour and pay homage to the extraordinary life and legacy of Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela,

1. Decides to establish the United Nations Nelson Rolihlahla Mandela Prize, which will be honorary in nature, as a tribute to the outstanding achievements and contributions of individuals to the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the General Assembly, to establish within six months of the adoption of the present resolution the criteria and procedures for bestowing the Prize, to be adopted by the Assembly not later than 30 November 2014.

Alliance of Civilizations

Report of High Representative. By a letter of 12 September [A/69/382], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the seventh annual report of the High Representative for the United Nations Alliance of Civilizations highlighting the main activities carried out by the Alliance from July 2013 to June 2014. The Alliance numbered 114 Member States and entities, and 25 international organizations.

The High Representative described efforts by the Alliance to consolidate itself as a global multi-stakeholder platform in the area of advocacy and outreach, inter alia, guidance from members of its

Group of Friends; national and regional strategies; engagement with the private sector; and policy coherence with the UN system. He also detailed the Alliance’s initiatives and activities in the four core pillars of action: education, media, migration and media. Among the highlights, during the 2013 edition of the Youth Solidarity Fund project, the Alliance selected 17 youth-led organizations from the Middle East, North Africa, sub-Saharan Africa and Asia. Over 29,000 young people and adults directly benefited from projects supported through the Youth Solidarity Fund during the period between July 2013 and February 2014.

In accordance with the 2013–2018 strategic review, the Alliance of Civilizations office established a programme management unit to enhance management of various projects and initiatives. The Alliance continued to seek adequate, regular, reliable and predictable sources of replenishment for its Voluntary Trust Fund and improve relationships with the private sector. The High Representative recommended that Member States regularly support the Alliance because private sector funding could only augment, not replace, their support.

Sixth Global Forum. The Sixth Global Forum of the Alliance (Bali, Indonesia, 29–30 August) was held under the theme “Unity in Diversity: Celebrating Diversity for Common and Shared Values”. The Forum was opened by the President of Indonesia and the UN Secretary-General, and attended by 1,300 delegates including 30 Government ministers from 115 countries.

The Forum featured two plenary sessions: “Unity in Diversity: Celebrating Diversity for Common and Shared Values” and “Knowing one another: the urgent need to foster dialogue and Understanding between Eastern and Western Civilizations”. It also featured the following sessions: youth participation in peace building; use of interreligious and intercultural approaches to advance mediation; social inclusion and migration developments for post-2015 agenda; role of culture in the formulation of new sustainable development goals; perception of migration; media conversation across lines; harnessing positive power of social media; harmony through interreligious and cross cultural education; role of women in fostering understanding among cultures; and fostering understanding through sports, art, music and entertainment.

The Forum culminated in the adoption by consensus of the Bali Declaration, by which Member States reaffirmed the importance of common and shared values as a unifying factor in a world facing multiple challengers to coexistence, and encouraged the Alliance of Civilizations to continue addressing, within its mandate, the prevailing global political and social situations.

Communication. By a letter dated 12 December letter [A/69/663], the Islamic Republic of Iran transmitted to the Secretary-General a copy of the Declaration and Plan of Action of the First International Conference on A World against Violence and Violent Extremism (Tehran, 9–10 December).

Sport for development and peace

The Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Sport for Development and Peace, with the assistance of the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace (UNOSDP), continued to lead UN system efforts to promote sport as a tool for attaining the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 49] and the Post-2015 sustainable development goals; lead and coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to promote the understanding and support amongst UN Member States of sport as a tool to attain the MDGs and the sustainable development goals in the Post-2015 Development Agenda; encourage dialogue, collaboration and partnerships between the United Nations, Member States and other stakeholders around Sport for Development and Peace; and represent the Secretary-General and the UN system at important global sporting events and other important forums.

The Special Adviser noted that progress was made in five priority areas: contributing to the development of Africa (in particular sub-Saharan Africa); encouraging dialogue and mutual understanding in conflict areas; advancing gender equality; fostering the inclusion of persons with disabilities; and promoting youth development and supporting community role models. Notably, the Special Adviser continued efforts to encourage dialogue between conflicting parties such as the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea. He invited and met with officials from the two Koreas at the Imagine PEACE Youth Camp and at the Incheon Asian Games, held in South Korea, engaged in further exchanges with the two sides in order to strengthen diplomatic ties, and stated that his Office would continue playing a facilitation role between the two Koreas using upcoming sport events such as, but not limited to, the 2015 Summer Universiade and the 2015 World Military Games.

The Special Adviser also encouraged the Qatar 2022 (World Cup) Supreme Committee and other Qatari sport stakeholders to advance social progress and respect the human rights of migrant workers in the country, and led a UN System-wide response towards the Ebola crisis in West Africa in collaboration with the World Health Organization and the Fédération Internationale de Football Association (FIFA). In July, the inauguration of the Sport of Hope Center, attended by the Secretary-General, the Special Adviser, and International Olympic Committee (IOC) President, took place in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. That event followed a commitment from the IOC to provide aid to help rebuild Haiti's sporting infrastructure after the earthquake that hit the country in 2010. To mark the first observance of the International Day of Sport for Development and Peace, which was declared by General Assembly resolution 67/296 [YUN 2013, p. 1073], UNOSDP organized a number of events to recognize and celebrate the growing number of sport-based development initiatives around the world.

Also, as part of the first observance of the International Day of Sport for Development and Peace, a High-level Panel Discussion on "Celebrating Sport for Development and Peace" was convened on 28 April at UN Headquarters in New York. At the event, a formal agreement was signed between the United Nations and IOC to join hands in achieving common objectives, further highlighting the role of partnerships and cooperation to foster sustainable development through sport.

Report of Secretary-General. In August [A/69/330], pursuant to resolution 67/17 [YUN 2012, p. 1070], the Secretary-General submitted a report on initiatives undertaken by Member States and UN entities to promote sport for development and peace since his last report [YUN 2012, p. 1069], including on the Olympic Truce of the 2014 Sochi Olympic and Paralympic Games; Human Rights Council and sport; inaugural International Day of Sport for Development and Peace; partnerships, initiatives, programmes and policies; and UN system activities related to the 2014 FIFA World Cup. He also provided an update on the activities and functioning of the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace and its Trust Fund; reviewed the contribution of sport to the achievement of the MDGs [YUN 2000, p. 49] and presented an updated Action Plan on Sport for Development and Peace [A/67/282].

Solemn Appeal by the President of the General Assembly. On 29 January [A/68/710], the General Assembly President issued a solemn appeal in connection with the observance of the Olympic Truce, calling on all Member States to demonstrate their commitment to the Olympic Truce for the 2014 Sochi Olympic and Paralympic Games, and to undertake concrete actions at the local, national, regional and global levels to promote and strengthen a culture of peace and harmony based on the spirit of the Truce. Referring to the original tradition of the Olympic Truce practised in ancient times, as described in resolution 68/9 [YUN 2013, p. 1073], the President also called upon all warring parties of armed conflicts around the world to agree to true mutual ceasefires for the duration of the Olympic Truce, thus providing an opportunity to settle disputes peacefully.

On the same day, the General Assembly, at its seventy-third plenary meeting, took note of the solemn appeal made by the General Assembly President in connection with the observance of the Olympic Truce (decision 68/551).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 October [meeting 36], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/6 [draft: A/69/L.5 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 11].

Sport as a means to promote education, health, development and peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 58/5 of 3 November 2003, 59/10 of 27 October 2004, its decision to proclaim 2005 the International Year for Sport and Physical Education, to strengthen sport as a means to promote education, health, development and peace, and its resolutions 60/1 of 16 September 2005, 60/9 of 3 November 2005, 61/10 of 3 November 2006, 62/271 of 23 July 2008, 63/135 of 11 December 2008, 65/4 of 18 October 2010 and 67/17 of 28 November 2012,

Recalling also its resolution 67/296 of 23 August 2013, in which it proclaimed 6 April the International Day of Sport for Development and Peace,

Recalling further its resolution 68/9 of 6 November 2013 on building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal, and all its previous resolutions on this matter,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Sport for development and peace: realizing the potential", which reviews the programmes and initiatives implemented by States Members of the United Nations, United Nations funds and programmes, specialized agencies and other partners, using sport as a tool for development and peace,

Acknowledging the major role of the United Nations system and its country programmes as well as the role of Member States and their programmes abroad in promoting human development through sport and physical education,

Recognizing the potential of sport to contribute to the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, noting that sport has the potential, as declared in the 2005 World Summit Outcome, to foster intercultural dialogue, peace and development and to contribute to an atmosphere of harmony, tolerance and understanding, and reaffirming that sport is a tool for education that can promote cooperation, solidarity, social inclusion and cohesion, gender equality and health at the local, national and international levels, as declared in the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing also the need to strengthen and further coordinate efforts, including multi-stakeholder partnerships, at all levels to maximize the potential of sport for contributing to the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and national peacebuilding and State-building priorities,

Encouraging Member States to give sport due consideration in the context of the post-2015 development agenda,

Acknowledging the importance of sport and physical activity in combating non-communicable diseases, as reflected in the political declaration of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the prevention and control of non-communicable diseases,

Recalling the Declaration of Berlin, adopted by more than 120 States members of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at the fifth International Conference of Ministers and Senior Officials Responsible for Physical Education and Sport, held in Berlin from 28 to 30 May 2013, as an essential guideline for strengthening the educational, cultural and social dimensions of sport and physical education and for developing an international sport and physical education policy which fosters peace and understanding between peoples and which safeguards human rights in the world of sport by creating access to sport for all, improving physical education, developing new standards for mega and major sport events and preserving the integrity of sport,

Welcoming the memorandum of understanding signed between the International Olympic Committee and the United Nations in April 2014, in which a call was made to strengthen efforts around sport-based initiatives that encourage social and economic development, as well as to strengthen the many partnerships that United Nations organizations have established with the Committee, and welcoming also the holding of the third International Forum on Sport for Peace and Development, jointly organized by the Committee and the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace,

Affirming the invaluable contribution of the Olympic movement in establishing sport as a unique means for the promotion of peace and development, in particular through the ideal of the Olympic Truce, and welcoming the XXXI Olympic Summer Games and the XV Paralympic Summer Games, to be held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 5 to 21 August and from 7 to 18 September 2016, respectively, the XXIII Olympic Winter Games and the XII Paralympic Winter Games, to be held in Pyeongchang, Republic of Korea, from 9 to 25 February and from 9 to 18 March 2018, respectively, and the XXXII Olympic Summer Games and the XVI Paralympic Summer Games, to be held in Tokyo from 24 July to 9 August and from 25 August to 6 September 2020, respectively,

Recognizing the importance of continental sporting events for promoting education, health, development and peace, and in this regard welcoming the upcoming 2015 Pan-American Games, to be held in Toronto, Canada, the eleventh All-Africa Games, to be held in Brazzaville, the 2018 Asian Games, to be held in Jakarta, and the inaugural 2015 European Games, to be held in Baku,

Acknowledging the Olympic Charter and that any form of discrimination is incompatible with belonging to the Olympic movement,

Acknowledging also the opportunities provided by the XXII Olympic Winter Games and the XI Paralympic Winter Games, held in Sochi, Russian Federation, for education, understanding, peace, harmony and tolerance among and between peoples and civilizations, and the opportunities provided by the second Youth Summer Olympic Games, held in Nanjing, China, to inspire the youth of the world to embrace, embody and express the Olympic values, as reflected in resolution 68/9 relating to the Olympic Truce,

Calling upon future hosts of the Olympic Games and the Paralympic Games and other Member States to include sport, as appropriate, in conflict-prevention activities and to ensure the effective implementation of the Olympic Truce during the Games,

Acknowledging the International Inspiration programme, the first legacy initiative ever linked to the Olympic and Paralympic Games, which has reached over 25 million children in 20 countries around the world through the power of high-quality and inclusive physical education, sport and play,

Recognizing the role that the International Paralympic Committee plays in showcasing the achievements of athletes with an impairment to a global audience and in acting as a primary vehicle to change societal perceptions of disability sport,

Recalling article 31 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, outlining a child's right to play and leisure, and the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly on children, entitled "A world fit for children", stressing the promotion of physical, mental and emotional health through play and sports,

Recalling also article 30 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, outlining the right of persons with disabilities to take part on an equal basis with others in cultural life, recreation, leisure and sport, while also stipulating that States parties shall take appropriate measures to this end,

Recognizing the important role played by the International Convention against Doping in Sport in harmonizing the actions taken by Governments in the fight against doping in sport, which are complementary to those undertaken by the sporting movement under the World Anti-Doping Code of the World Anti-Doping Agency,

Acknowledging the recommendations contained in the report of the Sport for Development and Peace International Working Group entitled "Harnessing the power of sport for development and peace: recommendations to Governments", encouraging Member States to implement and further develop the recommendations, and welcoming in this regard the efforts undertaken by the secretariat of the Working Group, which is provided by the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace,

Recognizing the need for indicators and benchmarks based on commonly agreed standards to assist Governments to enable the consolidation of sport in cross-cutting development strategies and the incorporation of sport and physical education in international, regional and national development policies and programmes,

Recalling resolution 64/289 of 2 July 2010, by which the General Assembly established the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), and the opportunities it provides for the realization of gender equality and the empowerment of women, including in and through sport, and welcoming the continued advancement of women in sports and sporting activities, in particular the support for their progressive high performance in sporting events, which provides opportunities for economic development through sports,

Highlighting the importance of continuing to reduce barriers to participation in sport events, particularly for participants from developing countries,

Emphasizing the critical role of productive public-private partnerships for funding sport for development and peace programmes, institutional development and physical and social infrastructures,

Recognizing that major international sport events should be organized in the spirit of peace, mutual understanding, friendship, tolerance and inadmissibility of discrimination of any kind and that the unifying and conciliative nature of such events should be respected, as recognized by fundamental principle 6 of the Olympic Charter,

1. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, including its peacekeeping missions, special political missions and integrated peacebuilding missions, sport-related organizations, federations and associations, athletes, the media, civil society, academia and the private sector to collaborate with the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace to promote greater awareness and action to foster peace and accelerate the attainment of the Millennium Development Goals through sport-based initiatives and promote the integration of sport for development and peace in the development agenda, by working along the following principles adapted from the United Nations Action Plan on Sport for Development and Peace, contained in the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its sixty-seventh session:

(a) Global framework for sport for development and peace: further develop a framework to strengthen a common vision, define priorities and further raise awareness to promote and mainstream policies on sport for development and peace that are easily replicable;

(b) Policy development: promote and support the integration and mainstreaming of sport for development and peace in development programmes and policies, including mechanisms for growth and wealth;

(c) Resource mobilization and programming: promote innovative funding mechanisms and multi-stakeholder arrangements at all levels, including the engagement of sport organizations, civil society, athletes and the private sector, to create effective programmes with sustainable impact;

(d) Evidence of impact: promote and facilitate common evaluation and monitoring tools, indicators and benchmarks based on commonly agreed standards;

2. Encourages Member States to provide institutional structures, appropriate quality standards, policies and competencies and promote academic research and expertise in the field to enable ongoing training, capacity-building and education of physical education teachers, coaches and community leaders in sport for development and peace programmes;

3. Invites Member States and international sport organizations to continue to assist developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in their capacity-building efforts in sport and physical education, by providing national experiences and best practices, as well as financial, technical and logistic resources for the development of sport programmes;

4. Encourages the stakeholders referred to in paragraph 1 above to emphasize and advance the use of sport as a vehicle to foster development and strengthen education, including physical education, for children and young persons, prevent disease and promote health, including the prevention of drug abuse, realize gender equality and empower girls and women, foster the inclusion and well-being of persons with disabilities and facilitate social inclusion, conflict prevention and peacebuilding;

5. Encourages the stakeholders, and in particular the organizers of mass sport events, to use and leverage such events to promote and support sport for development and peace initiatives and to strengthen existing and build new partnerships, coordinate common strategies, policies and programmes and increase coherence and synergies, while raising awareness at the local, national, regional and global levels;

6. Encourages Member States to adopt best practices and means to promote the practice of sport and physical activities among all members of society, and in this regard welcomes initiatives to adopt dedicated health, youth and sport days, including specialized sport days, at the national and local levels, as a means to promote physical and mental health and cultivate a sport culture in society;

7. Encourages Member States that have not yet done so to designate a focal point for sport for development and peace within their governments and provide updates to the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace on institutional, policy and programme-related developments;

8. Supports the independence and autonomy of sport as well as the mission of the International Olympic Committee in leading the Olympic movement;

9. Urges Member States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying, acceding to and implementing the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the International Convention against Doping in Sport;

10. Notes the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General, the President of the General Assembly, Member States and civil society for the observance of the Olympic Truce, and encourages future hosts of the Olympic Games and the Paralympic Games and other Member States to support the effective implementation of the Truce;

11. Appreciates the leadership of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Sport for Development and Peace, supported by the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace, on issues relating to sport for development and peace within the United Nations system and beyond, and their creation and implementation of innovative initiatives such as the Youth Leadership Programme;

12. Encourages Member States, in particular those committed to promoting sport as a tool for development and peace, and other stakeholders, such as international sports federations, organizers of global mass sports events, sports clubs and leagues, foundations and the private sector, especially businesses involved in the sports sector, to provide voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for Sport for Development and Peace and to enter into innovative partnerships with the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace, which is funded exclusively through voluntary contributions, in order to sustain the mandate of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Sport for Development and Peace, ensure the continuous activities of the Office, including its provision of secretariat services to the Sport for Development and Peace International Working Group, and provide project implementation funding for the Office and the United Nations system at large;

13. Welcomes the ongoing efforts undertaken by the Sport for Development and Peace International Working Group, which met for its thematic meeting on harnessing the power of sport to address gender-based violence and its fourth plenary session, on 30 June and 1 July 2014, respectively, and the commencement of the substantive work of the thematic working group on sport and persons with disabilities, in addition to the working groups on sport and peace, sport and gender, and sport and child and youth development;

14. Invites Member States and other relevant stakeholders, as observers, to join and support the Sport for Development and Peace International Working Group, so as to further strengthen its work on all envisaged themes, including the pending thematic working group on sport and health;

15. Encourages Member States to join and participate in the Group of Friends of Sport for Development and Peace, an informal group of permanent missions to the United Nations in New York and Geneva serving as a platform to promote dialogue and facilitate and encourage the integration of sport to support the achievement of the United Nations goals and objectives;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, including on specific initiatives aimed at ensuring more effective implementation of the Olympic Truce and progress made by Member States and the United Nations system, including activities and the functioning of the United Nations Office on Sport for Development and Peace and the Trust Fund for Sport for Development and Peace, as well as other relevant stakeholders, towards the implementation of the United Nations Action Plan on Sport for Development and Peace and the Sport for Development and Peace International Working Group policy recommendations, and to provide a review of the contribution of sport to the promotion of the post-2015 development agenda and present an updated action plan on sport for development and peace;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session the item entitled “Sport for development and peace”.

Culture and sustainable development

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/223 [YUN 2013, p. 1076], the Secretary-General transmitted a July [A/69/216] report from the UNESCO Director-General on progress made since July 2013 in implementing that resolution through the activities undertaken by Member States and UN organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). It also included options for a consolidated UN approach to the role of culture for poverty eradication and sustainable development through inclusive economic and social development and environmental sustainability.

As mandated by resolution 68/223, a special thematic debate on “Culture and sustainable development in the post-2015 development agenda” was convened at UN Headquarters in May 2014 by the President of the General Assembly, in partnership with UNESCO. Participants included 18 Government Ministers and high-level representatives of Member States, the G-77 plus China, the European Union, the United Nations Deputy Secretary-General, the Director-General of UNESCO, the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization, the President of the General Conference of UNESCO, and the Chairperson of the Executive Board of UNESCO. The participants highlighted the importance of integrating culture into the post-2015 development agenda. Also, in May, the global campaign “#culture2015goal”, a coalition of more than 600 NGOs working in the field of culture, published a declaration on the need to include explicit targets and indicators for culture in the post-2015 sustainable development goals.

The Director-General highlighted the efforts of Member States and UN system entities in implementing specific measures to enhance the role of culture, covering the areas of promoting cultural diversity through education and the media; enabling women and men to equally access, participate and contribute to cultural life; developing a dynamic cultural and creative sector; supporting the emergence of local markets for cultural goods and services; promoting global awareness of the linkages between cultural and biological diversity; developing innovative mechanisms of financing for culture; and mobilizing culture as a vehicle for tolerance, understanding, peace and reconciliation. In June, a declaration adopted by the Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Group of 77 and China on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Group recommended that the role of culture be fully taken into account to achieve sustainable development, as development was “a comprehensive economic, social, cultural and political process”.

The Director-General proposed a set of options for Member States to consider while devising a consolidated UN approach on culture and sustainable development. Those included integrating culture in development strategies and policies at all levels; developing cultural literacy, including an understanding of cultural heritage; safeguarding traditional knowledge and skills; and increasing access to and participation in cultural life of all individuals and communities to improve social cohesion. The Director-General also recommended that Member States fully integrate culture, through cultural heritage and the cultural and creative industries, into the framework of the post-2015 system of goals, targets and indicators.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/470/Add.2], adopted resolution 69/230 without vote [agenda item 21 (b)].

Culture and sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 41/187 of 8 December 1986, 46/158 of 19 December 1991, 51/179 of 16 December 1996, 52/197 of 18 December 1997, 53/184 of 15 December 1998, 55/192 of 20 December 2000, 57/249 of 20 December 2002, 65/166 of 20 December 2010 and 66/208 of 22 December 2011, concerning culture and development, and its resolutions 66/288 of 27 July 2012, entitled “The future we want”, and 68/223 of 20 December 2013 on culture and sustainable development,

Recalling also its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Recalling further the declaration adopted in Florence, Italy, on 4 October 2014, at the third United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization World Forum on Culture and Cultural Industries,

1. Takes note of the report on culture and sustainable development prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization as transmitted by the Secretary-General, which identifies options for a consolidated United Nations approach on culture and sustainable development;

2. Recalls the discussions at and takes note of the Chair’s summary of the special thematic debate of the General Assembly on the role of culture and sustainable development in the post-2015 development agenda, held at United Nations Headquarters on 5 May 2014, as mandated by its resolution 68/223, at which high-level participants highlighted the importance of integrating culture into the post-2015 development agenda;

3. Notes the contribution of culture to sustainable development, as recognized in the proposal of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals;

4. Encourages all Member States, intergovernmental bodies, organizations of the United Nations system, relevant non-governmental organizations and all other relevant stakeholders to continue to give due consideration to culture and sustainable development in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

5. Recalls the decision, in its resolution 68/223, to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Globalization and interdependence”, a sub-item entitled “Culture and sustainable development” and to maintain the biennial nature of the sub-item.

United Nations research and training institutes

United Nations University

The Council of the United Nations University (UNU) (Rome, 12–13 May; Tokyo, Japan, 8–9 December) adopted the statute of the UNU Operating Unit on Policy-driven Electronic Governance; reviewed the progress and status of ongoing and new institutional development initiatives; approved the text of the host country agreement and bilateral agreement; adopted the statute of the consolidated UNU Institute for the Advanced Study of Sustainability; adopted the UNU strategic plan 2015–2019; considered and approved a revised biennial programme and budget for 2014–2015; and reviewed the progress made towards the establishment of a UNU Institute on Human Resources and Economic Development in Dakar, Senegal.

In 2014, the UNU Centre for Policy Research (UNU-CPR) was established at the UNU Centre in Tokyo as part of a broader effort by the UNU Rector to respond to the Secretary-General's request to enhance UNU policy relevance in the fields of peace and security as well as in global development. The core mission of UNU-CPR was to generate policy research that spoke to major debates in the wider UN community as well as the Secretary-General's priorities. Another highlight was the formation of the UNU Institute for the Advanced Study of Sustainability (UNU-IAS) which was formed through the merger of the University's two Japan-based research and training institutes: the UNU Institute of Advanced Studies and the UNU Institute for Sustainability and Peace. The proposal to consolidate the two institutes was endorsed by the UNU Council in April 2013, and the new UNU-IAS was formally inaugurated on 1 January 2014.

In 2014, the research work of UNU focused on five interdependent thematic clusters: development governance, global change and sustainable development, peace, security and human rights, population and health and science, technology and society. UNU implemented 178 research projects (60 new, 70 ongoing, 48 completed during the year), of which 114 (64 per cent) were primarily focused on or in developing countries. UNU researchers published 34 books and 81 chapters in edited volumes, 233 articles in peer-reviewed journals and 44 other articles, and 13 special journal issues. UNU also published 304 working and discussion papers, 34 policy briefs, and 51 research/technology briefs, as well as numerous website articles, videos/podcasts, proceedings and conference papers.

During the year, UNU received $46.9 million in contributions from 22 Governments and some 112 additional sources.

United Nations System Staff College

In response to General Assembly resolution 60/214 [YUN 2005, p. 1527] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/14 [YUN 2013, p. 1084], the Secretary-General transmitted a report to the Economic and Social Council covering the activities of the United Nations System Staff College over the 2013–2014 biennium, focusing on the College's outreach efforts, impact of services, substantive course portfolio and strategic orientation. He reported that the Staff College made notable progress in terms of increasing the number of UN staff participating in its programmes, the level and diversification of its partnerships, the thematic focus of its courses and the quality of its services. In 2013, the College reached more than 9,000 beneficiaries with its courses, workshops and knowledge products, while in 2014 the overall number of beneficiaries exceeded 16,000. The combined figure represented an increase of 23 per cent over the 2011–2012 biennium, while the 2014 figure represented a historical peak. The year 2014 also saw an important increase over 2013 in terms of the value and number of partnership contracts signed with UN system entities, which amounted to 56 per cent and 55 per cent, respectively.

The Secretary-General also detailed the Staff College's key institutional achievements in terms of strengthening its efficiency, effectiveness, accountability in delivering results, and collaboration and partnerships. Regarding the financial situation of the College, total income in 2014 amounted to $7.39 million. The College maintained its previous trend of self-generating a major portion of its income. It self-generated 65 per cent of its income in 2013 and 74 per cent in 2014 despite the decreasing resources of United Nations entities following the 2008 global financial crisis and its direct impact on funding available for learning and training activities.

The Secretary-General recommended that Member States and UN system entities provide full support to the Staff College in its efforts to deliver appropriately contemporary and forward-looking range of capacity-building measures for UN staff. In particular, Member States were encouraged to work with the College to ensure shared ownership of the change process and to support the College in consolidating a resource base commensurate with interlinked tasks.

Education for All

Literacy for life

In July [A/69/183], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/132 [YUN 2013, p. 1085], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a report from the UNESCO Director-General on the implementation of that resolution and the process of elaborating a literacy vision and agenda for the period subsequent to the United Nations Literacy Decade (2003–2012) [YUN 2001, p. 1052].

The Director-General reported that there had been steady progress in the global literacy landscape. Global literacy rates for persons aged between 15 and 24 years had increased from 83 per cent in 1990 to 87 per cent in 2000 and 89 per cent in 2012. The absolute number of non-literate adults had fallen from 884 million in 1990 to 787 million in 2000 and 781 million in 2012. Progress proved uneven, however, across regions and countries. Three quarters of the global non-literate adult population lived in South Asia, West Asia and sub-Saharan Africa. Women still constituted two thirds of the world's non-literate population. Low literacy skills were also a concern in many high-income countries. The European Commission, for example, noted that in Europe, an estimated 20 per cent of adults lacked the literacy skills they needed to function fully in a modern society. Based on the prevailing trends, it was projected that 751 million adults, including 103 million young people aged between 15 and 24 years old, would lack basic literacy skills by 2015, and only 36 countries and territories were likely to achieve or exceed Education of All (goal 4)—achieving a 50 per cent improvement in levels of adult literacy by 2015, especially for women, and equitable access to basic and continuing education for all adults. The Director-General stressed that literacy was a global challenge and an unfinished agenda item that had to be urgently addressed.

As part of its drive to continue playing a catalytic role in the global literacy agenda, UNESCO proposed five strategic themes for the period subsequent to the 2003–2012 Literacy Decade: developing the capacities of Member States in the areas of policies, programme delivery and literacy assessments; scaling up literacy actions for girls and women; reinforcing innovative modes of literacy delivery, including through the use of information and communication technologies; expanding the knowledge base and monitoring and evaluation; and advocating for literacy on the global agenda and ensuring synergies between different actions, including through a multi-stakeholder partnership and networks.

The Director-General proposed that the General Assembly consider the following six recommendations: recognize literacy as a foundation for lifelong learning, as well as a building block for achieving basic human rights and sustainable development; encourage Governments to seek innovative solutions to accelerate literacy efforts and create institutional frameworks and systems for literacy and lifelong learning, and translate political commitment into dependable financing, robust programming and improvement-oriented monitoring; call upon countries, development partners, UN system entities and civil society to promote literacy and literate environments; express its support to the five strategic axes proposed for the global literacy agenda; urge countries to consider integrating literacy into the post-2015 global development and education agenda as an education and development imperative; and encourage UNESCO to continue to strengthen its role in coordinating and catalysing global efforts towards scaling up literacy in the period subsequent to the United Nations Literacy Decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/480], adopted resolution 69/141 without vote [agenda item 26 (d)].

Literacy for life: shaping future agendas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 56/116 of 19 December 2001, by which it proclaimed the 10-year period beginning on 1 January 2003 the United Nations Literacy Decade, its resolution 57/166 of 18 December 2002, in which it welcomed the International Plan of Action for the United Nations Literacy Decade, and its resolutions 59/149 of 20 December 2004, 61/140 of 19 December 2006, 63/154 of 18 December 2008, 65/183 of 21 December 2010 and 68/132 of 18 December 2013,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in which Member States resolved to ensure that, by 2015, children everywhere, boys and girls alike, would be able to complete a full course of primary schooling and that girls and boys would have equal access to all levels of education, which requires a renewed commitment to promote literacy for all,

Reaffirming the Education for All goals, in particular goal 3, on ensuring that the learning needs of all young people and adults are met through equitable access to appropriate learning and life-skills programmes, and goal 4, on achieving a 50 per cent improvement in levels of adult literacy by 2015, especially for women, and equitable access to basic and continuing education for all adults,

Convinced that literacy is crucial to the acquisition by every child, young person and adult of the essential life skills that will enable them to address the challenges that they may face in life and represents an essential condition of lifelong learning, which is an indispensable means for effective participation in the knowledge societies and economies of the twenty-first century,

Reaffirming the right of indigenous peoples to have non-discriminatory access to all levels and forms of education provided by States, and recognizing the importance of effective measures to promote access for indigenous individuals, in particular children, to education in their own language, whenever possible, as addressed in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples,

Deeply concerned that, according to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, 781 million adults do not have basic literacy skills and 58 million children of primary and 63 million children of secondary school age remain out of school, that an estimated 250 million children of primary school age are failing to acquire basic literacy skills, that millions more young people leave school without a level of literacy adequate for productive and active participation in their societies, that the issue of literacy may not be sufficiently high on national agendas to generate the kind of political and economic support required to address global literacy challenges and that the world is unlikely to meet those challenges if present trends continue,

Recognizing that literacy is a foundation for lifelong learning, a building block for achieving human rights and fundamental freedoms and a driver of sustainable development and that the United Nations Literacy Decade (2003–2012) had a catalytic effect as a global framework for sustained and focused efforts for the promotion of literacy and literate environments,

Welcoming the convening of the International Conference on Girls' and Women's Literacy and Education: Foundations for Sustainable Development, held in Dhaka and co-hosted by the Government of Bangladesh and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in support of the Global Education First Initiative and on the occasion of International Literacy Day, on 8 September 2014, and taking note with appreciation of the adoption of the Dhaka Declaration,

Taking note of the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, which shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, and acknowledging that it includes a goal on ensuring inclusive and equitable quality education and promoting lifelong learning opportunities for all with a stand-alone target on literacy,

Affirming that the realization of the right to education, especially for girls, contributes to the promotion of human rights, gender equality and the eradication of poverty, as well as to development,

Recognizing the importance of continuing to implement national programmes and measures to eliminate illiteracy worldwide as reflected in the Dakar Framework for Action on Education for All, adopted on 28 April 2000 at the World Education Forum, and in the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard also recognizing the important contribution of South-South and triangular cooperation through, inter alia, innovative pedagogical methods in literacy,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the gender gap in education, which is reflected by the fact that, according to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, nearly two thirds of the world's non-literate adults are women,

Concerned that, according to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, one third of the children not attending school are children with disabilities and that the literacy rate among adults with disabilities is as low as 3 per cent in some countries,

Deeply concerned about the impact of disrupted educational services in humanitarian emergencies on efforts to promote literacy skills, especially for all children and young people,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled "Literacy for life: shaping future agendas";

2. Commends the efforts made by Member States, their development partners, the international donor community, the private sector, civil society and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the lead organization of the United Nations Literacy Decade, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in promoting the right to education, including by making progress on the goals of the Decade;

3. Recognizes the importance of continuing to implement national programmes and measures for everyone to acquire, use and advance literacy skills in order to eliminate illiteracy worldwide, enhancing further political and financial commitments, in particular for youth and adult literacy and non-formal education, intensifying collective efforts through enhanced education systems and interventions and building a robust knowledge and technical base through improved literacy monitoring, assessment and research;

4. Calls upon all Governments to develop reliable measures of literacy and generate data that are comparable across time and disaggregated by age, sex, disability, socio-economic status, geographical location (urban/rural areas) and other relevant factors;

5. Encourages Member States, their development partners and the specialized agencies and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, as appropriate, to sustain and expand the gains achieved during the Decade through improving the integration of literacy into sector-wide and multisectoral education and development strategies, expanding the provision of quality literacy programmes, enhancing education systems to provide quality basic education through schooling, enriching literate environments to allow people to acquire, use and advance literacy skills and promoting literacy for women and girls, as well as for marginalized groups, for their empowerment and inclusion in societies;

6. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue its coordinating and catalysing role in the fight against illiteracy, including in the context of the agenda for the period following the United Nations Literacy Decade, through developing Member States' capacities in the areas of policies, programme delivery and literacy assessments, scaling up literacy actions for girls and women, reinforcing innovative models of literacy delivery, including through information and communications technologies, and expanding the knowledge base and monitoring and evaluation, as well as advocating literacy on the global agenda and ensuring synergies between different actions, including through multi-stakeholder partnerships and networks;

7. Encourages efforts to provide education for all, especially for boys and girls, in humanitarian emergencies, including in order to contribute to a smooth transition from relief to development;

8. Recognizes the continued need to give appropriate consideration to the issue of literacy in the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled "Social development", the sub-item entitled "Literacy for life: shaping future agendas".

Women

In 2014, UN efforts to advance the status of women worldwide continued to be guided by the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women, and the outcome of the General Assembly's twenty-third (2000) special session (Beijing+5), which reviewed progress in their implementation.

During the year, the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) spearheaded political and social mobilization to accelerate implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action in marking the twentieth anniversary of the Beijing Fourth World Conference on Women in 2015. A record number of 164 reviews by as many Governments undertook national stock-taking of their implementation of those gender equality targets. The year also brought the international community to a crucial confluence of efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) by the target date of 2015 and to deliberate on a successor road map for sustainable development.

The fifty-eighth session of the Commission on the Status of Women had as its priority theme "Challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals for women and girls". At the session, Member States for the first time assessed progress for women and girls on all eight MDGs and identified factors constraining achievement. As a result, the Commission endorsed a stand-alone gender equality goal in the post-2015 agenda and the integration of gender equality across the agenda.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women that the Council adopted in June. In July, the Council adopted a resolution on mainstreaming a gender perspective in the United Nations system. Further, the agreed conclusions on the priority theme adopted by the Commission at its annual session were transmitted as input into the 2014 high-level segment of the Council. The conclusions called for action in five areas: realizing women's and girls' full enjoyment of all human rights; strengthening the enabling environment for gender equality and the empowerment of women; maximizing investments in gender equality and the empowerment of women; strengthening the evidence-base for gender equality and the empowerment of women; and ensuring women's participation and leadership at all levels and strengthening accountability.

Issues central to women's lives on which the General Assembly adopted resolutions included the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and the full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the Assembly's twenty-third special session; the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development; intensification of efforts to end obstetric fistula; female genital mutilations; all forms of violence against women and girls; and trafficking in women and girls.

The Security Council held two debates on women and peace and security, with statements made by the Secretary-General, the Special Representative on Sexual Violence in Conflict, and the UN-Women Executive Director. A Council presidential statement in October addressed the particular needs of displaced women, highlighted the impact of violent extremism on women and welcomed the Secretary-General's commissioning of a global study.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference and Beijing+5

During 2014, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly considered follow-up to the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women, particularly the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and further actions and initiatives to implement both instruments adopted five years later at the twenty-third (2000) special session of the Assembly (Beijing+5) by resolution S/23-2 [YUN 2000, p. 1084]. The Declaration had reaffirmed the commitment of Governments to the goals and objectives of the Fourth World Conference and to the implementation of 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform for Action: women and poverty; education and training of women; women and health; violence against women; women and armed conflict; women and the economy; women in power and decision-making; institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women; human rights of women; women and the media; women and the environment; and the girl child. The issue of mainstreaming a gender perspective into UN policies and programmes continued to be addressed (see p. 1290).

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/140 [YUN 2013, p. 1088], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/69/182], reviewed the follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcomes of the Assembly's twenty-third special session. He focused on the extent to which gender perspectives were reflected in selected UN intergovernmental processes and provided quantitative and qualitative analyses on the subject. The report assessed separately the work of the Commission on the Status of Women, noting that as a consensus-building and policymaking body, it continued to lead at the global level on issues of gender equality and women's empowerment. The Commission also had primary responsibility for the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women, a role which took on additional importance as the target date for the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) approached; as Member States elaborated the post-2015 development agenda and sustainable development goals (SDGs); and as stakeholders intensified their activities towards commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women, for which the Commission would undertake, in March 2015, a comprehensive review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. The report also described the role played by the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) in integrating a gender perspective into the post-2015 development agenda, and in defining a set of SDGs, particularly by intensifying the contribution of UN-Women to the work of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals (see p. 945).

The Secretary-General concluded that intergovernmental bodies were making progress in reflecting a gender perspective in their work, but such progress remained uneven. Resolutions of the General Assembly that included a gender perspective showed a solid upward trend, and those with a focus on gender equality increased significantly, but those adopted by the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions registered a downward trend. In some areas, a gender perspective was still too seldom reflected, such as in resolutions dealing with disarmament and related international security questions, political issues and decolonization, administrative and budgetary matters, international legal matters, crime prevention and criminal justice, and narcotic drugs.

Several important intergovernmental processes were under way, including those on the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda and the development of a new climate agreement, at a time when Member States were also conducting the 20-year review of the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action. Those processes were closely related and would influence global and national policies on a range of issues for years to come. It was therefore critical that such intergovernmental processes addressed gender perspectives so that women as well as men could benefit from their outcomes, and that inequality and discrimination against women were not perpetuated.

The Secretary-General recommended, among other measures, that the General Assembly reaffirm the relevance of gender mainstreaming as a globally accepted strategy in all issues considered by its Main Committees and subsidiary bodies.

Also pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/140 [YUN 2013, p. 1088], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/346 & Corr.1] on the improvement of the status of women in the UN system. The report, which covered the period from December 2011 to December 2013, discussed progress made and obstacles encountered in efforts to achieve gender balance within the 35 funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the UN system. The representation of women in the Professional and higher categories in the UN system increased marginally during the reporting period from 40.9 to 41.8 per cent, but the inverse relationship between the level and the representation of women continued: P-1 (54.3 per cent), P-2 (57.9 per cent), P-3 (45.3 per cent), P-4 (40.5 per cent), P-5 (34.2 per cent), D-1 (32.4 per cent), D-2 (30.1 per cent) and ungraded (26.7 per cent). Nonetheless, the P-4 to D-2 levels reached historic highs in their representation of women in 2013. Most notable were the increases in the representation of women at the D-1 level with 2 percentage points and at the D-2 level with 3.2 percentage points. The P-3 level registered a negligible decrease and the two lowest Professional levels, P-1 and P-2, maintained parity. With respect to promotions, progress was needed at the senior levels (P-5 to D-2), where the proportion of women promoted remained nearly 15 percentage points away from the achievement of parity, despite gains. The challenge for the UN system, including the Secretariat, was to reverse the inverse relationship between seniority and the representation of women, which pointed to the need to target each level. In that respect, 50 per cent of the entities surveyed by UN-Women on impediments to achieving gender balance cited a "lack of special measures for appointments and promotions" among their top three choices. Recommendations to address such challenges included the need for more intensive sponsorship by senior leaders; more rigorous promulgation and implementation of existing policies, including special measures for women and flexible working arrangements; enhanced monitoring and accountability; and career development for female staff members, accompanied by targeted outreach. The Secretary-General also recommended the harmonization and unification of gender-related policies, as part of the development and implementation of the United Nations System-wide Action Plan for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women [YUN 2012, p. 1082], led by UN-Women. The Action Plan was the first unified gender accountability framework of the UN system and established 15 performance indicators, three of which pertained to the status of women and their equal representation in the UN system, to be achieved by 2017.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/69/481], adopted resolution 69/151 without vote [agenda item 27 (b)].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 68/140 of 18 December 2013, and recalling also the section of resolution 64/289 of 2 July 2010 entitled “Strengthening the institutional arrangements for support of gender equality and the empowerment of women”,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, are important contributions to the achievement of gender equality and the empowerment of women and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned,

Reaffirming the commitments to gender equality and the advancement of women made at the Millennium Summit, the 2005 World Summit, the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the special event of the General Assembly to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals and other major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, and reaffirming also that their full, effective and accelerated implementation is integral to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Welcoming progress made towards achieving gender equality, but stressing that challenges and obstacles remain in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session,

Noting that 2015 marks the twentieth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, and welcoming the efforts of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) to commemorate the occasion,

Recognizing that the responsibility for the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session rests primarily at the national level and that strengthened efforts are necessary in this respect, and reiterating that enhanced international cooperation is essential for full, effective and accelerated implementation,

Welcoming the work of the Commission on the Status of Women in reviewing the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, and taking note with appreciation of all its agreed conclusions, including the agreed conclusions on the challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals for women and girls adopted by the Commission at its fifty-eighth session, and of the need to implement them,

Welcoming also the strengthening of the capacity of UN-Women and its experience in achieving its mandate,

Taking note of the activities carried out by the Fund for Gender Equality and the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women,

Recognizing that the participation and contribution of civil society, in particular women’s groups and organizations and other non-governmental organizations, are important to the successful implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, in particular in the lead-up to the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Platform for Action,

Reaffirming that gender mainstreaming is a globally accepted strategy for promoting the empowerment of women and achieving gender equality by transforming structures of inequality, which is relevant in all issues considered by its Main Committees and subsidiary bodies, including in resolutions dealing with issues beyond social, humanitarian, cultural, economic and financial matters,

Reaffirming also the commitment to actively promote the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes in all political, economic and social spheres, as well as the commitment to strengthen the capabilities of the United Nations system in the area of gender equality,

Reaffirming further the commitments in regard to gender equality and the empowerment of women in the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Bearing in mind the challenges and obstacles to changing discriminatory attitudes and gender stereotypes, which perpetuate discrimination against women and girls and stereotypical roles of boys and girls, men and women, and stressing that challenges and obstacles remain in the implementation of international standards and norms to address inequality between men and women,

Reaffirming the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and the Political Declaration on HIV and AIDS: Intensifying Our Efforts to Eliminate HIV and AIDS, adopted at the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on AIDS, held on 10 June 2011, in which, inter alia, the promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of women were recognized as fundamental for reducing the vulnerability of women to HIV and AIDS,

Welcoming the integration of a gender perspective into the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”, and in this regard commending UN-Women for its efforts to ensure coherence throughout the United Nations system in its advocacy for gender equality and the empowerment of women in the context of sustainable development, and in particular in the context of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals,

Noting with appreciation the attention to gender equality and the empowerment of women reflected in the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, entitled “SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway”, and encouraging its appropriate follow-up and implementation,

Expressing serious concern that the urgent goal of 50/50 gender balance in the United Nations system, especially at senior and policymaking levels, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, remains unmet, and that the representation of women in the United Nations system has remained almost static, with negligible improvement in some parts of the system, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on improvement in the status of women in the United Nations system,

Reaffirming the important role of women in the prevention and resolution of conflicts and in peacebuilding, and stressing the need for their participation therein, including at decision-making levels,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000, 1820(2008) of 19 June 2008, 1888(2009) of 30 September 2009, 1889(2009) of 5 October 2009, 1960(2010) of 16 December 2010, 2106(2013) of 24 June 2013 and 2122(2013) of 18 October 2013 on women and peace and security and resolution 1882(2009) of 4 August 2009 on children and armed conflict,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the measures taken and progress achieved in follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly;

2. Reaffirms the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women, the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly and the declaration adopted on the occasion of the 15-year review of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action at the fifty-fourth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, and also reaffirms its commitment to their full, effective and accelerated implementation;

3. Also reaffirms the primary and essential role of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as the catalytic role of the Commission on the Status of Women, in promoting gender equality and the empowerment of women based on the full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session and in promoting and monitoring gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system;

4. Recognizes that the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the fulfilment of the obligations of States parties under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women are mutually reinforcing in respect of achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women, welcomes in this regard the contributions of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to promoting the implementation of the Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, and invites States parties to the Convention to include information on measures taken to enhance implementation at the national level in their reports to the Committee under article 18 of the Convention;

5. Calls upon States parties to comply fully with their obligations under the Convention and the Optional Protocol thereto and to take into consideration the concluding observations as well as the general recommendations of the Committee, urges States parties to consider limiting the extent of any reservations that they lodge to the Convention, to formulate any reservations as precisely and narrowly as possible and to regularly review such reservations with a view to withdrawing them so as to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, also urges all Member States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to consider doing so, and calls upon those Member States that have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Optional Protocol;

6. Reiterates the importance and value of the mandate of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), and welcomes the Entity's leadership in providing a strong voice for women and girls at all levels;

7. Reaffirms the important role of UN-Women in leading, coordinating and promoting accountability of the United Nations system in its work on gender equality and the empowerment of women;

8. Notes with appreciation the important and extensive work of UN-Women for more effective and coherent gender mainstreaming across the United Nations system, and calls upon UN-Women to continue to support gender mainstreaming across the United Nations system as an integral part of its work and of its efforts to accelerate action across the United Nations system;

9. Welcomes the commitment of UN-Women to support Member States in their efforts to develop and strengthen norms, policies and standards on gender equality and the empowerment of women as well as to integrate gender perspectives into sectoral policy and normative frameworks, and encourages the Entity to continue to promote the need to mainstream and strengthen a gender perspective in the work of intergovernmental bodies and processes and the opportunities therein, and to provide technical assistance, at the request of Member States, in strengthening a gender perspective in resolutions and other outcomes;

10. Urges Member States to increase funding for the budget of UN-Women by providing, when legislative and budgetary provisions allow, core, multi-year, predictable, stable and sustainable voluntary contributions, recognizing the importance of adequate funding in enabling UN-Women to implement its strategic plan promptly and effectively and that the mobilization of financial resources for achieving its goals still remains a challenge;

11. Encourages all actors, including Governments, the United Nations system, other international organizations and civil society, to continue to support the work of the Commission on the Status of Women in fulfilling its central role in the follow-up to and review of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session and, as applicable, to carry out the recommendations of the Commission, welcomes in this regard the Commission's continued sharing of experiences, lessons learned and good practices in overcoming challenges to the full implementation at the national and international levels and the evaluation of progress in the implementation of priority themes, and encourages the intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations system, as appropriate, to incorporate the outcomes of the Commission into their work;

12. Calls upon Governments and the organs and the relevant funds and programmes and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, other international and regional organizations, including financial institutions, and all relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, to intensify and accelerate action to achieve the full and effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, nearly 20 years after their adoption, and of the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

13. Reaffirms that States have an obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent and combat all forms of violence against women and girls, provide protection to the victims and investigate, prosecute and punish the perpetrators of violence against women and girls, and that failure to do so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms, calls upon Governments to elaborate and implement laws and strategies to eliminate violence against women and girls, encourages and supports men and boys to take an active part in the prevention and elimination of all forms of violence, encourages increased understanding among men and boys of how violence harms girls, boys, women and men and undermines gender equality, encourages all actors to speak out against any form of violence against women, and in this regard encourages Member States to continue to support the Secretary-General's ongoing campaign "UNITE to End Violence against Women" and the social mobilization and advocacy platform of UN-Women "Say NO—UNITE to End Violence against Women";

14. Reiterates its call upon the United Nations system, including the main organs, their main committees and subsidiary bodies, through forums such as the high-level political forum on sustainable development and functions such as the annual ministerial review and the Development Cooperation Forum of the Economic and Social Council and the funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, to increase efforts to fully mainstream a gender perspective into all issues under their consideration and within their mandates, as well as into all United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions and their follow-up processes, including those of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in 2012;

15. Calls upon States to ensure that intergovernmental processes, such as the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction, the third International Conference on Financing for Development and the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III), consistently address gender perspectives in their preparatory processes and outcomes, and also calls upon States to ensure the reflection of a gender perspective in the discussions of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change as they elaborate a new climate change agreement, to be adopted in 2015;

16. Reiterates that the full, effective and accelerated implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session is essential to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

17. Recalls its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly;

18. Urges States to build on the lessons learned from the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals as the new post-2015 development agenda is being shaped, also urges States to tackle critical remaining challenges through a transformative and comprehensive approach, and calls for gender equality, the empowerment of women and the human rights of women and girls to be reflected as a stand-alone goal and to be integrated through targets and indicators into all goals of any new development framework;

19. Requests the entities of the United Nations system to systematically incorporate the outcomes of the Commission on the Status of Women into their work, within their mandates, and, inter alia, to ensure effective support for the efforts of Member States towards the achievement of gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls, and in this regard encourages UN-Women to continue to use concrete results-based reporting mechanisms and to ensure coherence, consistency and coordination between the normative and operational aspects of its work;

20. Strongly encourages Governments to continue to support the role and contribution of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations and women's organizations, in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session;

21. Calls upon Governments and the United Nations system to encourage women's groups and other non-governmental organizations specializing in gender equality and the empowerment of women to participate in intergovernmental processes, including through increased outreach, funding and capacity-building;

22. Calls upon the intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations system to systematically request the inclusion of a gender perspective in reports of the Secretary-General and other inputs to intergovernmental processes;

23. Requests that reports of the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and their subsidiary bodies systematically address gender perspectives through gender-sensitive analysis and the provision of data disaggregated by sex and age and that conclusions and recommendations for further action address the different situations and needs of women and men and girls and boys in order to facilitate gender-sensitive policy development, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to convey the importance of reflecting a gender perspective to all stakeholders who provide input to his reports;

24. Encourages Member States, with the support of, as appropriate, United Nations entities, including UN-Women, international and regional organizations and other relevant actors, to prioritize the strengthening of national data collection and monitoring capacities with regard to statistics disaggregated by sex and age, as well as national tracking indicators for gender equality and the empowerment of women through multisectoral efforts and partnerships;

25. Calls upon all parts of the United Nations system to continue to play an active role in ensuring the full, effective and accelerated implementation of the Beijing

Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session through, inter alia, the maintenance of gender specialists in all entities of the United Nations system, as well as by ensuring that all personnel, especially those in the field, receive training and appropriate follow-up, including tools, guidance and support, for accelerated gender mainstreaming, and reaffirms the need to strengthen the capabilities of the United Nations system in the area of gender;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to review and redouble his efforts to make progress towards achieving the goal of 50/50 gender balance at all levels throughout the United Nations system, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, considering, in particular, women from the developing and the least developed countries, countries with economies in transition and unrepresented or largely underrepresented Member States, and to ensure the implementation of measures, including temporary special measures, to accelerate progress, and managerial and departmental accountability with respect to gender balance targets, and strongly encourages Member States to identify and regularly submit more women candidates for appointment to positions in the United Nations system, especially at more senior and policymaking levels, including in peacekeeping operations;

27. Calls upon the United Nations system to continue its efforts towards achieving the goal of gender balance, including with the active support of gender focal points, and requests the Secretary-General to provide an oral report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-ninth session and to report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on the improvement of the status of women in the United Nations system, under the item entitled “Advancement of women”, and on progress made and obstacles encountered in achieving gender balance, with recommendations for accelerating progress and up-to-date statistics to be provided annually by entities of the United Nations, including on the number and percentage of women and their functions and nationalities throughout the United Nations system, as well as information on the responsibility and accountability of the offices of human resources management and the secretariat of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination for promoting gender balance;

28. Encourages increased efforts by Governments and the United Nations system to enhance accountability for the implementation of commitments to gender equality and the empowerment of women at the international, regional, national and local levels, including through improved monitoring and reporting on progress in relation to policies, strategies, resource allocations and programmes and by achieving gender balance;

29. Reaffirms that Governments bear the primary responsibility for the achievement of gender equality and the empowerment of women and that international cooperation has an essential role in assisting developing countries in progressing towards the full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

30. Encourages its Main Committees and subsidiary bodies, as well as the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions, particularly in the light of the analysis contained in the report of the Secretary-General and of the cross-cutting nature of gender equality and the empowerment of women, to make further progress in the integration of a gender perspective into their work;

31. Encourages the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the United Nations system the findings of his report in order to strengthen follow-up on these findings and accelerate the implementation of the present resolution;

32. Recalls Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/18 of 24 July 2013, in which the Council decided that, at its fifty-ninth session, in 2015, the Commission on the Status of Women would undertake a review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, including current challenges that affect the implementation of the Platform for Action and the achievement of gender equality and the empowerment of women, as well as opportunities for strengthening gender equality and the empowerment of women in the post-2015 development agenda through the integration of a gender perspective;

33. Urges all States and all other stakeholders, in that context, to undertake comprehensive reviews of the progress made and challenges encountered in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, with a view to strengthening and accelerating their full implementation, and to consider appropriate commemorative activities for the twentieth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

34. Encourages States and all stakeholders to strengthen the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into all sectors and in all areas of development, including through the national and regional preparations for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

35. Calls upon the United Nations system to continue to support and contribute to the review and appraisal process of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action at the international, regional, national and local levels, encourages UN-Women to continue its efforts in support of the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the central role it is playing in mobilizing States, civil society, the United Nations system, the private sector and other relevant stakeholders at all levels, including through its activities, campaigns and special events for the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action aimed at strengthening political will and commitment, social mobilization, awareness-raising and revitalized public debates, a strengthened evidence base and knowledge generation, and encourages all stakeholders to ensure enhanced and sufficient resources to achieve gender equality, the empowerment of women and the realization of women's full enjoyment of all human rights;

36. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report annually to the General Assembly under the item entitled “Advancement of women”, and to the Commission on the Status of Women and the Economic and Social Council on the follow-up to and progress made in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session, with an assessment of progress in gender mainstreaming, including information on key achievements, lessons learned and good practices and recommendations on further measures to enhance and accelerate implementation.

Women in development

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2014/3] that gave an overview of challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) for women and girls. The report provided recommendations for accelerating progress on the Goals, and for prioritizing gender equality and women's rights and empowerment in the post-2015 development agenda and sustainable development goals. The Secretary-General concluded that while there had been successes for women and girls in the case of some MDG targets, overall progress on gender equality and women's rights remained slow and uneven. The MDGs could not be achieved without harnessing the synergies between gender equality and all the Goals through systematic gender mainstreaming. The 20-year review of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action provided an opportunity to align acceleration on the Goals with action on the full range of existing global norms and agreements on gender equality, thereby responding to gender inequality in all parts of the world. Lessons from the MDGs should inform the post-2015 development framework (see p. 960) and sustainable development goals, and gender equality and women's rights had to remain an explicit global priority. The development framework had to address the structural drivers of inequalities based on gender, age, income, location, race, ethnicity, sexuality and disability. The framework had to be grounded in international human rights obligations and in accordance with existing policy frameworks, with strong monitoring and accountability mechanisms for all development actors. The Secretary-General's recommendations for the Commission included actions on the creation of an enabling environment for gender equality and the rights of women and girls, a comprehensive approach to gender equality, and investment in gender statistics.

The Secretary-General also submitted a report [E/CN.6/2014/4] on progress in mainstreaming a gender perspective into the development, implementation and evaluation of national policies and programmes, with a focus on challenges and achievements in the implementation of the MDGs for women and girls. The report provided an overview of national approaches to the implementation of the MDGs for women and girls. It also presented a set of priorities for accelerating progress on the MDGs for women and girls, particularly in the areas of violence against women and girls, women's economic rights, universal social protection across the life cycle, women's sexual and reproductive health and rights, universally accessible and high-quality services and infrastructure (education, health, water and sanitation), gender equality and unpaid care work, gender equality and women's rights in sustainability policies, the voice and participation of women and girls at all levels in public and private institutions, an enabling environment for gender equality, and regular and high-quality data to permit the monitoring of gender equality and to inform policies.

The Secretary-General concluded that while some countries recognized the need for a comprehensive approach to gender equality in achieving the MDGs for women and girls, implementation at the national level was largely fragmented and narrowly approached. Gender mainstreaming across the framework remained weak, thus slowing progress on all the Goals. Important policy considerations had to be addressed, namely, the persistence of discriminatory laws, social norms and practices; the inequalities experienced by the most marginalized groups of women and girls; the need to embed gender equality in all policy areas and national development plans; the need for monitoring and accountability mechanisms; the participation of women and girls; and adequate and sustained resources for gender equality. The Secretary-General's recommendations for the Commission included actions on the creation of an enabling environment for gender equality, investment in gender equality, a comprehensive policy approach to gender equality, investment in gender statistics, and monitoring and accountability for gender equality.

Commission action. In March [E/2014/27], the Commission on the Status of Women held parallel high-level round tables on the priority theme of its 2014 session, namely, "Challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals for women and girls", as well as panel discussions on key policy initiatives. Participants had before them a Secretariat note [E/CN.6/2014/5] that contained the round-table discussion guide. On 21 March, the Commission adopted agreed conclusions on the priority theme and, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/1 [YUN 2013, p. 1413], decided to transmit them as input into the 2014 high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council.

Communication. On 6 May [E/2014/90], the Philippines, in its capacity as chair of the fifty-eighth session of the Commission, transmitted to the President of the Economic and Social Council, the Commission's agreed conclusions on its priority theme, "Challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals for women and girls", adopted on 21 March.

World Survey. In response to General Assembly resolution 64/217 [YUN 2009, p. 1120], the Secretary-General, in July, submitted the seventh World Survey on the Role of Women in Development [A/69/156], a report presented to the Assembly at five-year intervals. The theme of the Survey was "Gender equality and sustainable development” and the survey demonstrated why sustainable development policies and frameworks at the global, regional, national and local levels had to include an explicit commitment to gender equality and the realization of women’s and girls’ human rights and capabilities. Women’s collective action and full and equal participation in all aspects of decision-making related to policy development and monitoring also had to be supported.

States played a central role in delivering on commitments to gender equality, setting standards and regulations for resource use and providing public services and investments for sustainable development. Public investment was necessary for scaling-up key innovations for gender-responsive public goods, such as the provision of water supplies, appropriate sanitation facilities and modern energy services. Alliances between the state, private sector and civil society actors that advanced gender equality and sustainable development also had a vital role to play.

The Survey proposed three criteria to assess whether sustainable development was in line with gender equality and women’s human rights: compliance with human rights standards and the realization of women’s capabilities; attention to the unpaid care work of women and girls, especially those in poor and marginalized households and communities; and full and equal participation by women and girls in all aspects of sustainable development. It also noted that Member States should fully implement the commitment to gender equality and the empowerment of women contained in the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, and States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women should implement their obligations thereunder. The Survey recommended policy actions to move towards an economically, socially and environmentally sustainable future, including in the areas of food security; investments that accelerated gender equality; data and statistics; financing; population measures related to sexual and reproductive health and rights; and the green economy and green growth.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/69/472/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/236 without vote [agenda item 23 (d)].

World Survey on the Role of Women in Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/104 of 20 December 1995, 52/195 of 18 December 1997, 54/210 of 22 December 1999, 56/188 of 21 December 2001, 58/206 of 23 December 2003, 59/248 of 22 December 2004, 60/210 of 22 December 2005, 62/206 of 19 December 2007, 64/217

of 21 December 2009, 66/216 of 22 December 2011 and 68/227 of 20 December 2013, and all its other resolutions on women in development, and the relevant resolutions and agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women, including the Declaration adopted at its forty-ninth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, which focuses on gender equality and sustainable development, and decides to consider the report at its seventieth session, under the sub-item entitled “Women in development” of the item entitled “Eradication of poverty and other development issues”;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to update the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development for the consideration of the General Assembly at its seventy-fourth session, noting that it should continue to focus on selected emerging development themes that have an impact on the role of women in the economy at the national, regional and international levels.

Elimination of obstetric fistula

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/147 [YUN 2012, p. 1087], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/256] on supporting efforts to end obstetric fistula, a devastating childbirth injury leaving women incontinent and therefore often stigmatized and isolated within their communities. The report noted a strong association between fistula and stillbirth, as research indicated that most women (from 78 to 95 per cent) who developed obstetric fistula also delivered a stillborn baby. Women with fistula might also experience neurological disorders, orthopaedic injury, bladder infections, painful sores, kidney failure, infertility and social isolation, which severely affected their mental health and made it difficult to secure income or support, thereby deepening their poverty. Precise figures were unavailable, but it was estimated that more than 2 million women and girls were living with obstetric fistula. To prevent its occurrence, it was necessary to address the root causes of maternal mortality and morbidity, which included poverty, gender inequality, barriers to education, especially for girls, and child marriage and adolescent pregnancy. The report identified three well-known, cost-effective interventions to reduce maternal mortality and morbidity, including obstetric fistula, which urgently needed to be scaled up to reduce the number of deaths and disabilities: universal access to family planning; a trained health professional with midwifery skills at childbirth; and timely access to high-quality emergency obstetric and neonatal care. Most cases of obstetric fistula could be treated through surgery, after which women could be reintegrated into their communities with appropriate psychosocial care, but research suggested there was a significant unmet need for fistula treatment. Few health-care facilities were able to provide high-quality fistula surgery, owing to a lack of health-care professionals with the necessary skills, as well as essential equipment and life-saving medical supplies. When the services were available, many women were not aware of them or could not afford or access them because of barriers, such as transportation costs.

The report outlined efforts made by countries and the UN system to end obstetric fistula. It also offered recommendations to intensify those efforts, within a human rights-based approach, to end obstetric fistula in the days remaining for the achievement of MDG 5 and beyond, by improving maternal health, strengthening health systems, reducing health inequities and increasing the levels and predictability of funding.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/481], adopted resolution 69/148 without vote [agenda item 27 (a)].

Intensification of efforts to end obstetric fistula

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 62/138 of 18 December 2007, 63/158 of 18 December 2008, 65/188 of 21 December 2010 and 67/147 of 20 December 2012 on supporting efforts to end obstetric fistula,

Reaffirming the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and their reviews, and the international commitments in the field of social development and to gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls made at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance and the 2005 World Summit, as well as those made in the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, entitled “Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals”,

Reaffirming also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and urging States that have not done so to consider, as a matter of priority, signing, ratifying or acceding to those Conventions and the Optional Protocols thereto,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

Stressing the interlinkages between poverty, malnutrition, lack of or inadequate or inaccessible health-care services, early childbearing, child, early and forced marriage, violence against young women and girls and gender discrimination as root causes of obstetric fistula, and that poverty remains the main social risk factor,

Recognizing that the difficult socioeconomic conditions that exist in many developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, have resulted in the acceleration of the feminization of poverty,

Recognizing also that early childbearing increases the risk of complications during pregnancy and delivery and entails a much higher risk of maternal mortality and morbidity, and deeply concerned that early childbearing and limited access to the highest attainable standard of health, including sexual and reproductive health, specifically timely access to high-quality emergency obstetric care, cause high levels of obstetric fistula and other maternal morbidities, as well as maternal mortality,

Recognizing further that adolescent girls are at particular risk of maternal death and morbidity, including obstetric fistula, and concerned that the leading cause of death among girls aged 15 to 19 in many low- and middle-income countries is complications from pregnancy and childbirth and that women aged 30 and older are at increased risk of developing complications and of dying during childbirth,

Noting that a human rights-based approach to eliminating obstetric fistula is underpinned by the principles of, inter alia, accountability, participation, transparency, empowerment, sustainability, non-discrimination and international cooperation,

Deeply concerned about discrimination against women and girls and the violation of their rights, which often result in less access for girls to education and nutrition, reduced physical and mental health and the enjoyment by girls of fewer of the rights, opportunities and benefits of childhood and adolescence compared with boys, and in their often being subjected to various forms of cultural, social, sexual and economic exploitation and to violence and harmful practices,

Deeply concerned also about the situation of women living with or recovering from obstetric fistula, who are often neglected and stigmatized,

Recognizing the need to raise awareness among men and adolescent boys and, in this context, to fully engage men and community leaders as strategic partners and allies in the efforts to address and eliminate obstetric fistula,

Welcoming the contribution by Member States, the international community and civil society to the global Campaign to End Fistula led by the United Nations Population Fund, bearing in mind that a people-centred approach to social and economic development is fundamental for protecting and empowering individuals and communities,

Deeply concerned that, as the Campaign to End Fistula has completed its tenth anniversary, while some progress has been made, significant challenges remain that require the intensification of efforts at all levels to end obstetric fistula,

Recognizing the Secretary-General's Global Strategy for Women's and Children's Health, undertaken by a broad coalition of partners, in support of national plans and strategies aimed at significantly reducing the number of maternal, newborn and under-five child deaths and disabilities as a matter of immediate concern by scaling up a priority package of high-impact interventions and integrating efforts in sectors such as health, education, gender equality, water and sanitation, poverty eradication and nutrition,

Welcoming the various national, regional and international initiatives on all the Millennium Development Goals, including those undertaken bilaterally and through South-South cooperation, in support of national plans and strategies in sectors such as health, education, gender equality, energy, water and sanitation, poverty eradication and nutrition as a way to reduce the number of maternal, newborn and under-five child deaths,

Welcoming also ongoing partnerships between stakeholders at all levels to address the multifaceted determinants of maternal, newborn and child health in close coordination with Member States based on their needs and priorities, including beyond 2015, and in this regard welcoming further the commitments to accelerate progress on the health-related Millennium Development Goals by 2015,

Reaffirming the renewed and reinforced commitments made by Member States to achieve Millennium Development Goal 5 by 2015 and to continue with these efforts beyond 2015,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014 on the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, in which it decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, and in this regard noting the importance of continuing efforts to end obstetric fistula,

1. Recognizes the interlinkages between poverty, lack of or inadequate access to health-care services, early childbearing and child, early and forced marriage as root causes of obstetric fistula, that poverty and inequality remain the main social risk factor and that the eradication of poverty is critical to meeting the needs and rights of women and girls, and calls upon States, in collaboration with the international community, to take accelerated action to address the situation;

2. Stresses the need to address the social issues that contribute to the problem of obstetric fistula, such as poverty, lack of or inadequate education for women and girls, lack of access to health-care services, including sexual and reproductive health-care services, early childbearing, child, early and forced marriage and the low status of women and girls;

3. Calls upon States to take all measures necessary to ensure the right of women and girls to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health, including sexual and reproductive health, and reproductive rights, in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of their review conferences, and to develop sustainable health systems and social services with a view to ensuring access to such systems and services without discrimination, while paying special attention to adequate food and nutrition, water and sanitation, family planning information, increasing women's empowerment, knowledge and awareness and ensuring equitable access to high-quality appropriate prenatal and delivery care for the prevention of obstetric fistula and the reduction of health inequities, as well as postnatal care for the detection and early management of fistula cases;

4. Also calls upon States to ensure the right to education of good quality for women and girls, on an equal basis with men and boys, and to ensure that they complete a full course of primary education, and to renew their efforts to improve and expand girls' and women's education at all levels, including at the secondary and higher levels, and including age-appropriate sex education, as well as vocational education and technical training, in order to, inter alia, achieve gender equality, the empowerment of women and girls and poverty eradication;

5. Urges States to enact and strictly enforce laws to ensure that marriage, including in rural and remote areas, is entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses and, in addition, to enact and strictly enforce laws concerning the minimum legal age of consent and the minimum age for marriage, and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary;

6. Calls upon the international community to provide intensified technical and financial support, in particular to high-burden countries, to accelerate progress towards the achievement of Millennium Development Goal 5 by 2015 and the elimination of obstetric fistula in the remaining days of the Millennium Development Goals and beyond 2015;

7. Urges multilateral donors, international financial institutions and regional development banks in the public and private sectors, within their respective mandates, to review and implement policies to support national efforts and institutional capacity-building to end obstetric fistula and to ensure that a higher proportion of resources reach young women and girls, in particular in rural and remote areas, as well as to ensure that needed funding is increased, predictable and sustained;

8. Calls upon the international community to support the activities of the United Nations Population Fund and other partners, including the World Health Organization, in the global Campaign to End Fistula in establishing and financing regional fistula treatment and training centres and, where necessary, national centres, by identifying and supporting health facilities that have the potential to serve as centres for treatment, training and convalescent care;

9. Calls upon States to accelerate progress in order to improve maternal health in the remaining days of the Millennium Development Goals and beyond 2015, by addressing sexual and reproductive, maternal, newborn and child health in a comprehensive manner, inter alia, through the provision of family planning, prenatal care, skilled attendance at birth, emergency obstetric and newborn care, postnatal care and methods of prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases and infections, such as HIV, within strengthened health-care systems that provide equal access to affordable, equitable and high-quality integrated health-care services and include community-based preventive and clinical care, as also reflected in the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, entitled "Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals", and in the Secretary-General's Global Strategy for Women's and Children's Health;

10. Urges the international community to address the shortage of doctors and the inequitable distribution of midwives, nurses and other health-care workers trained in lifesaving obstetric care, and of space and supplies, which limit the capacity of most fistula centres;

11. Commends the commemoration by the international community of 23 May as the International Day to End Obstetric Fistula and the decision to continue to use the International Day each year to significantly raise awareness and intensify actions towards ending obstetric fistula;

12. Calls upon States and/or the relevant funds and programmes, organs and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, and invites the international financial institutions and all relevant actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, and the private sector:

(a) To redouble their efforts to meet the internationally agreed goal of improving maternal health by making maternal health-care services and obstetric fistula treatment geographically and financially accessible, including by ensuring universal access to skilled attendance at birth and timely access to high-quality emergency obstetric care and family planning, as well as appropriate prenatal and postnatal care;

(b) To make greater investments in strengthening health systems, ensuring adequately trained and skilled human resources, especially midwives, obstetricians, gynaecologists and doctors, and providing support for the development and maintenance of infrastructure, as well as investments in referral mechanisms, equipment and supply chains, to improve maternal and newborn health-care services and ensure that women and girls have access to the full continuum of care, with functional quality control and monitoring mechanisms in place for all areas of service delivery;

(c) To support the training of doctors, nurses and other health-care workers in lifesaving obstetric care, especially midwives, who are the front-line workers in the fight to prevent obstetric fistula and maternal and newborn mortality, and include training on fistula repair, treatment and care as a standard element of the training curricula of health professionals;

(d) To ensure equitable access through national policies, plans and programmes that make maternal and newborn health-care services, particularly family planning, skilled attendance at birth, emergency obstetric and newborn care and obstetric fistula treatment, financially accessible, including in rural and remote areas and among the poorest women and girls, through, where appropriate, the establishment and distribution of health-care facilities and trained medical personnel, collaboration with the transport sector for affordable transport options, the promotion of and support for community-based solutions and the provision of incentives and other means to secure the presence in rural and remote areas of qualified health-care professionals who are able to perform interventions to prevent obstetric fistula;

(e) To develop, implement and support national and international prevention, care and treatment and socio-economic reintegration and support strategies, policies and plans to eliminate obstetric fistula, to develop further multisectoral, multidisciplinary, comprehensive and integrated action plans in order to bring about lasting solutions and put an end to maternal mortality and morbidity and obstetric fistula, including by ensuring access to affordable, accessible, comprehensive, high-quality maternal health-care services and, within countries, to incorporate into all sectors of national budgets policy and programmatic approaches to address inequities and reach poor, vulnerable women and girls;

(f) To establish or strengthen, as appropriate, a national task force for obstetric fistula, led by the Ministry of Health, to enhance national coordination and improve partner collaboration to end obstetric fistula;

(g) To strengthen the capacity of health-care systems, in particular public health systems, to provide the essential services needed to prevent obstetric fistula and to treat existing cases by increasing national budgets for health, ensuring that adequate funds are allocated to reproductive health, including for obstetric fistula, ensuring access to fistula treatment through increased availability of trained, expert fistula surgeons and permanent, holistic fistula services integrated into strategically selected hospitals, thereby addressing the significant backlog of women and girls awaiting surgical repair of fistula, and encouraging communication among fistula centres to facilitate training, research, advocacy and fundraising and the application of relevant medical standards, including consideration of the use of the World Health Organization manual entitled "Obstetric Fistula: Guiding Principles for Clinical Management and Programme Development", which provides background information and principles for developing fistula prevention and treatment programmes, as appropriate;

(h) To mobilize funding to provide free or adequately subsidized maternal health-care and obstetric fistula repair and treatment services, including by encouraging networking among providers and the sharing of new treatment techniques and protocols to protect women's and children's well-being and survival and to prevent the recurrence of subsequent fistulas by making post-surgery follow-up and the tracking of fistula patients a routine and key component of all fistula programmes, and also to ensure access to elective caesarean sections for fistula survivors who become pregnant again in order to prevent fistula recurrence and to increase the chances of survival of mother and baby in all subsequent pregnancies;

(i) To ensure that all women and girls who have undergone fistula treatment, including the forgotten women and girls with incurable or inoperable fistula, are provided with and have access to comprehensive health-care services, holistic social integration services and careful follow-up, including counselling, education, family planning and socio-economic empowerment, for as long as needed, through, inter alia, skills development and income-generating activities, so that they can overcome abandonment and social exclusion, and to develop linkages with civil society organizations and women's and girls' empowerment programmes so as to help to achieve this goal;

(j) To empower fistula survivors to contribute to community sensitization and mobilization as advocates for fistula elimination, safe motherhood and newborn survival;

(k) To educate individual women and men, girls and boys, communities, policymakers and health professionals about how obstetric fistula can be prevented and treated, and increase awareness of the needs of pregnant women and girls, as well as of those who have undergone surgical fistula repair, including their right to the highest attainable standard of health, including sexual and reproductive health, by working with community and religious leaders, traditional birth attendants, women and girls who have suffered from fistula, the media, social workers, civil society, women's organizations, influential public figures and policymakers;

(l) To enhance the participation of men and adolescent boys in the intensification of efforts to end obstetric fistula and to further strengthen their involvement as partners, including in the Campaign to End Fistula;

(m) To strengthen awareness-raising and advocacy, including through the media, to effectively reach families and communities with key messages on fistula prevention and treatment and social reintegration;

(n) To strengthen research, monitoring and evaluation systems, including by developing a community- and facility-based mechanism for the systematic notification of obstetric fistula cases and maternal and newborn deaths to ministries of health, and their recording in a national register, and by acknowledging obstetric fistula as a nationally notifiable condition, triggering immediate reporting, tracking and follow-up for the purpose of guiding the development and implementation of maternal health programmes;

(o) To strengthen research, data collection, monitoring and evaluation to guide the planning and implementation of maternal health programmes, including for obstetric fistula, by conducting up-to-date needs assessments on emergency obstetric and newborn care and for fistula and routine reviews of maternal deaths and near-miss cases as part of a national maternal death surveillance and response system, integrated within national health information systems;

(p) To improve data collection, pre- and post-surgery, to measure progress in addressing the needs for surgical treatment and the quality of surgery, rehabilitation and socioeconomic reintegration services, including post-surgery prospects for successful subsequent pregnancies, live births and severe health-related complications, so as to address the challenges of improving maternal health;

(q) To provide essential health-care services, equipment and supplies, skills training and income-generating projects to women and girls so that they can break out of the cycle of poverty;

13. Acknowledges that intensification of efforts is urgently needed to end obstetric fistula and, in this context, the importance of giving the issue due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

14. Invites Member States to contribute to efforts to end obstetric fistula, including, in particular, through the Campaign to End Fistula, as part of the endeavours to achieve Millennium Development Goal 5 by 2015, and to commit themselves to continue efforts to improve maternal health beyond 2015 with the aim of eliminating obstetric fistula globally;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls

Elimination of female genital mutilation

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/146 [YUN 2012, p. 1091], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/211] on ending female genital mutilation (FGM), which provided information on measures taken by Member States and activities within the UN system to address the practice, as well as recommendations for future action. Responses to the Secretary-General's request for information were received from 13 Member States and 6 UN system entities.

The report described FGM as a form of violence against women and girls that could have both immediate and long-term consequences for their physical, sexual and mental health, and even result in death. In the 29 countries where the practice was concentrated, more than 125 million girls and women alive in 2014 had undergone FGM and a further 30 million girls might be at risk. The practice was most common in the western, eastern and north-eastern regions of Africa, and some countries in Asia and in the Middle East. Owing to increased migration, the practice was on the rise worldwide among communities of migrants from those areas. In many cultures, FGM appeared to be an important physical marker of insider/outsider status and was intertwined with shared values such as sexual restraint and respect for one's elders. Support for FGM was stronger among girls and women in the poorest households, and the data showed a strong association between level of education and support among women for the practice: support declined progressively with increased levels of education and income. In most countries where the practice was concentrated, most girls and women, as well as men, thought it should end. In all countries with available data, girls and women consistently underestimated the proportion of boys and men who wanted it to end. That indicated the importance of more open dialogue between men and women, and between boys and girls, so that social expectations concerning FGM could be challenged and traditional forums and decision-making influenced.

The report noted that the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund Joint Programme on Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting: Accelerating Change completed its first phase in 2013 and had succeeded in accelerating the elimination of FGM with 8 million people in more than 12,000 communities in 15 countries publicly declaring their abandonment of the practice. In its second phase (2014–2017), the Joint Programme would contribute to accelerating the total elimination of FGM within the next generation.

Numerous efforts and initiatives had fostered change in social beliefs and behaviours, but the practice remained a grave concern in the 29 countries where it was concentrated. States had introduced relevant criminal offences and legal and policy reforms through the development of guidelines, but there remained insufficient enforcement of legislation and policies and limited allocation of resources for their implementation. Inadequate monitoring and accountability mechanisms and a lack of comparable data to facilitate trend analysis also hampered progress. The report highlighted the need for holistic strategies that addressed the root causes of those practices, such as gender inequality and provided recommendations for future actions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/481], adopted resolution 69/150 without vote [agenda item 27 (a)].

Intensifying global efforts for the elimination of female genital mutilations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/117 of 9 December 1998, 56/128 of 19 December 2001, 67/146 of 20 December 2012 and 68/146 of 18 December 2013, Commission on the Status of Women resolutions 51/2 of 9 March 2007, 52/2 of 7 March 2008 and 54/7 of 12 March 2010 and Human Rights Council resolution 27/22 of 26 September 2014, and all relevant agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women,

Reaffirming that the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, together with the Optional Protocols thereto, constitute an important contribution to the legal framework for the protection and promotion of the human rights of women and girls,

Reaffirming also the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and their 5-, 10-, 15- and 20-year reviews, as well as the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and the commitments relevant to women and girls made at the 2005 World Summit and reiterated in Assembly resolution 65/1 of 22 September 2010, entitled “Keeping the promise: united to achieve the Millennium Development Goals”,

Recalling the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples’ Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa, adopted in Maputo on 11 July 2003, which contains, inter alia, undertakings and commitments on ending female genital mutilation and marks a significant milestone towards the abandonment and ending of female genital mutilation,

Recalling also the decision of the African Union, adopted in Malabo on 1 July 2011, to support the adoption by the General Assembly at its sixty-sixth session of a resolution banning female genital mutilation,

Recalling further the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-sixth session that the Economic and Social Council recommend to the General Assembly the adoption of a decision to consider the issue of ending female genital mutilation at its sixty-seventh session under the item entitled “Advancement of women”,

Recognizing that female genital mutilations constitute irreparable, irreversible harm that impairs the human rights of women and girls, affecting about 100 million to 140 million women and girls worldwide, and that each year an estimated further 3 million girls are at risk of being subjected to the practice throughout the world,

Reaffirming that female genital mutilations are a harmful practice, constituting a serious threat to the health of women and girls, including their psychological, sexual and reproductive health, increasing their vulnerability to HIV and possibly having adverse obstetric and prenatal outcomes, as well as fatal consequences for the mother and the newborn, and that the abandonment of this harmful practice can be achieved as a result of a comprehensive movement that involves all public and private stakeholders in society, including girls and boys, women and men,

Concerned about evidence of an increase in the incidence of female genital mutilations being carried out by medical personnel in all regions in which they are practised,

Recognizing that negative discriminatory stereotypical attitudes and behaviours have direct implications for the status and treatment of women and girls and that such negative stereotypes impede the implementation of legislative and normative frameworks that guarantee gender equality and prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex,

Recognizing also that the campaign of the Secretary-General entitled “UNITE to End Violence against Women” and the database on violence against women have contributed to addressing the elimination of female genital mutilations,

Welcoming the efforts of the United Nations system to end female genital mutilations, in particular the commitment of 10 United Nations entities, announced in their joint inter-agency statement of 27 February 2008 on eliminating female genital mutilation, as well as the Joint Programme on Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting: Accelerating Change of the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children’s Fund, to accelerate the elimination of the practice,

Commending the continued efforts and actions undertaken by States, individually and collectively, regional organizations and United Nations agencies for the elimination of female genital mutilation as well as the implementation of its resolution 67/146,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with disappointment, in this regard, the continuing need for the information requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 67/146, which was not provided, concerning the root causes of and factors contributing to the practice of female genital mutilations, its prevalence worldwide and its impact on women and girls, including evidence and data, analysis of progress made to date and action-oriented recommendations for eliminating this practice on the basis of information provided by Member States, relevant actors of the United Nations system working on the issue and other relevant stakeholders,

Deeply concerned that, despite the increase in national, regional and international efforts and the focus on the abandonment of female genital mutilations, the practice continues to persist in all regions of the world, and is often on the rise for migrant women and girls,

Deeply concerned also that a tremendous gap in resources continues to exist and that the shortfall in funding has severely limited the scope and pace of programmes and activities for the elimination of female genital mutilations,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, on the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, in which it decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, and noting that the report integrates the importance of the elimination of all harmful practices to women and girls, including female genital mutilation,

1. Stresses that the empowerment of women and girls is key to breaking the cycle of discrimination and violence and for the promotion and protection of human rights, including the right to the highest attainable standard of mental and physical health, including sexual and reproductive health, and calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as their commitments to implement the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, and of the special session of the Assembly on children;

2. Calls upon States to place a stronger focus on the development of comprehensive prevention strategies, including the enhancement of educational campaigns, awareness-raising and formal, non-formal and informal education and training in order to promote the direct engagement of girls and boys, women and men and to ensure that all key actors, Government officials, including law enforcement and judicial personnel, immigration officials, health-care providers, civil society, community and religious leaders, teachers, employers, media professionals and those directly working with girls, as well as parents, families and communities, work to eliminate attitudes and harmful practices, in particular all forms of female genital mutilations, that negatively affect women and girls;

3. Also calls upon States to strengthen advocacy and awareness-raising programmes, to mobilize girls and boys to take an active part in developing preventive and elimination programmes to address harmful practices, especially female genital mutilations, and to engage local community and religious leaders, educational institutions, the media and families and provide increased financial support to efforts at all levels to end discriminatory social norms and practices;

4. Urges States to condemn all harmful practices that affect women and girls, in particular female genital mutilations, whether committed within or outside a medical institution, and to take all necessary measures, especially through educational campaigns, including enacting and enforcing legislation, to prohibit female genital mutilations and to protect women and girls from this form of violence, and to hold perpetrators to account;

5. Also urges States to complement punitive measures with awareness-raising and educational activities designed to promote a process of consensus towards the elimination of female genital mutilations, and further urges States to protect and support women and girls who have been subjected to female genital mutilations and those at risk, including by developing social and psychological support services and care, and to explore other remedies, as appropriate, and take measures to improve their health, including sexual and reproductive health, in order to assist women and girls who are subjected to the practice;

6. Further urges States, as appropriate, to promote gender-sensitive, empowering educational processes by reviewing and revising school curricula, educational materials and teacher-training programmes and elaborating policies and programmes of zero tolerance for violence against girls, including female genital mutilations, and to further integrate a comprehensive understanding of the causes and consequences of gender-based violence and discrimination against women and girls into education and training curricula at all levels;

7. Urges States to ensure that the protection and provision of support to women and girls subject to, or at risk of, female genital mutilation are an integral part of policies and programmes that address the practice and to provide women and girls with coordinated, specialized, accessible and quality multisectoral prevention and response, including education, as well as legal, psychological, health-care and social services, provided by qualified personnel, consistent with the guidelines of medical ethics;

8. Calls upon States to ensure that national action plans and strategies on the elimination of female genital mutilations are comprehensive and multidisciplinary in scope and that they include projected timelines for goals and incorporate clear targets and indicators for the effective monitoring, impact assessment and coordination of programmes among all relevant stakeholders and promote their participation, including the participation of affected groups, practising communities and non-governmental organizations, in the development, implementation and evaluation of such plans and strategies;

9. Urges States to take, within the general framework of integration policies and in consultation with affected communities, effective and specific targeted measures for refugee women and women migrants and their communities in order to protect girls from female genital mutilations, including when the practice occurs outside the country of residence;

10. Calls upon States to develop information and awareness-raising campaigns and programmes to systematically reach the general public, relevant professionals, families and communities, including through the media, featuring television and radio discussions, on the elimination of female genital mutilations;

11. Urges States to pursue a comprehensive, culturally sensitive, systematic approach that incorporates a social perspective and is based on human rights and gender-equality principles in providing education and training to families, local community leaders and members of all professions relevant to the protection and empowerment of women and girls in order to increase awareness of and commitment to the elimination of female genital mutilations;

12. Also urges States to ensure the national implementation of international and regional commitments and obligations undertaken as States parties to various international instruments protecting the full enjoyment of all human rights and the fundamental freedoms of women and girls;

13. Calls upon States to develop policies and regulations to ensure the effective implementation of national legislative frameworks on eliminating discrimination and violence against women and girls, in particular female genital mutilations, and to put in place adequate accountability mechanisms at the national and local levels to monitor adherence to and implementation of these legislative frameworks;

14. Also calls upon States to develop unified methods and standards for the collection of data on all forms of discrimination and violence against girls, especially forms that are underdocumented, such as female genital mutilations, to develop additional indicators so as to effectively measure progress in eliminating the practice and to reinforce the sharing of good practices relating to the prevention and the abandonment of the practice at the subregional and regional levels;

15. Urges States to allocate sufficient resources to the implementation of policies and programmes and legislative frameworks aimed at eliminating female genital mutilations;

16. Calls upon States to develop, support and implement comprehensive and integrated strategies for the prevention of female genital mutilations, including the training of social workers, medical personnel, community and religious leaders and relevant professionals, and to ensure that they provide competent, supportive services and care to women and girls who are at risk of or who have undergone female genital mutilations and encourage them to report to the appropriate authorities cases in which they believe women or girls are at risk;

17. Also calls upon States to support, as part of a comprehensive approach to eliminate female genital mutilations, programmes that engage local community practitioners of female genital mutilations in community-based initiatives for the abandonment of the practice, including, where relevant, the identification by communities of alternative livelihoods for them;

18. Calls upon the international community, the relevant United Nations entities and civil society and international financial institutions to continue to actively support, through the allocation of increased financial resources and technical assistance, targeted comprehensive programmes that address the needs and priorities of women and girls at risk of or subjected to female genital mutilations;

19. Calls upon the international community to strongly support, including through increased financial support, a second phase of the Joint Programme on Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting: Accelerating Change of the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund, which will run until 2017, as well as national programmes focused on the elimination of female genital mutilations;

20. Stresses that some progress has been made in combating female genital mutilations in a number of countries using a common coordinated approach that promotes positive social change at the community, national, regional and international levels, and recalls the goal set out in the United Nations inter-agency statement that female genital mutilations are to be eliminated within a generation, with some of the main achievements being obtained by 2015, in line with the Millennium Development Goals;

21. Encourages men and boys to take positive initiatives and to work in partnership with women and girls to combat violence and discriminatory practices against women and girls, in particular female genital mutilations, through networks, peer programmes, information campaigns and training programmes;

22. Calls upon States, the United Nations system, civil society and all stakeholders to continue to observe 6 February as the International Day of Zero Tolerance for Female Genital Mutilation and to use the day to enhance awareness-raising campaigns and to take concrete actions against female genital mutilations;

23. Calls upon States to improve the collection and analysis of quantitative and qualitative data and, where appropriate, to collaborate with existing data collection systems, which are crucial for evidence-based legal and policy development, programme design and implementation and the monitoring of the elimination of female genital mutilation;

24. Acknowledges that intensifying efforts for the elimination of female genital mutilations is needed and, in this regard, the importance of giving the issue due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Development Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, individually and collectively, take into account the protection and promotion of the rights of women and girls against female genital mutilations in their country programmes, as appropriate and in accordance with national priorities, in order to further strengthen their efforts in this regard;

26. Renews its request to the Secretary-General that he submit to the General Assembly, at its seventy-first session, an in-depth multidisciplinary report on the root causes of and factors contributing to the practice of female genital mutilations, its prevalence worldwide and its impact on women and girls, including evidence and data, analysis of progress made to date and action-oriented recommendations for eliminating this practice on the basis of information provided by Member States, relevant actors of the United Nations system working on the issue and other relevant stakeholders.

Women, the girl child and HIV/AIDS

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Commission on the Status of Women resolution 56/5 [YUN 2012, p. 1093], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2014/12] on women, the girl child and HIV and AIDS, which provided information on the activities undertaken by 18 Member States and 11 UN entities to implement the resolution.

He reported that persistent gender inequality and human rights violations putting women and girls at greater risk of infection continued to hamper progress in preventing the spread of HIV and increasing access to antiretroviral treatment. In addition to women's and girls' biological susceptibility to HIV, sociocultural, economic and legal challenges compounded their vulnerability to infection. Challenges to the health and well-being of women and girls persisted across countries and hindered efforts to mitigate the epidemic. Such challenges included a lack of accessible and affordable health services, education and employment opportunities; inequitable property and inheritance rights; harmful cultural norms; and child marriage. Member States had made progress in improving the situation of women and girls infected with and affected by HIV, but further and accelerated action was required at the national, regional and international levels. Significant gaps persisted in action and funding to provide gender-responsive programmes and services that took into consideration the barriers brought on by structural and social realities. More effort was required to eradicate harmful gender norms and discriminatory laws and promote the participation of women and girls in national and international decision-making processes.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Commission encourage Member States to adopt the following strategies: ensure that HIV plans and policies prioritized the needs of women and girls and that targeted programmatic actions were costed, budgeted for and implemented; expand the evidence base, including through the collection and disaggregation of data by sex and age to guide interventions and ensure that the needs of women and girls were addressed; review laws, regulations and programmes that addressed the rights of women and girls living with and affected by HIV and institutionalize legal frameworks to ensure the elimination of discrimination on the basis of HIV status, gender and sexual orientation; invest in actions that tackled the structural drivers of HIV, such as by increasing the access of women and girls to employment and education; increase access to treatment, prevention and care services for women and girls; and implement legislation and commitments that promoted the sexual and reproductive health needs and rights of women and girls.

Commission action. On 21 March, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution [E/2014/27 (res. 58/3)] on women, the girl child and HIV and AIDS, which called on Governments, the international community, the UN system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their support of national efforts against HIV/AIDS, particularly with respect to women and girls; recommended that a bold vision for addressing the HIV epidemic, including the situation of women and girls living with and affected by HIV and AIDS, be given due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda; and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the situation of women, the girl child and HIV and AIDS to the Commission at its sixtieth (2016) session.

Eliminating maternal mortality

In response to Commission on the Status of Women resolution 56/3 [YUN 2012, p. 1094], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2014/11] describing UN system actions to strengthen linkages among programmes, initiatives and activities for gender equality, the empowerment of women and girls, the protection of their human rights and the elimination of preventable maternal mortality and morbidity. Fifteen Member States and 12 UN entities contributed information for the report.

According to the 2013 MDG report, the maternal mortality ratio had declined globally by 47 per cent, from 400 maternal deaths per 100,000 live births in 1990 to 210 in 2010, but there remained large disparities in maternal mortality ratios across and within countries. The vast majority of maternal deaths occurred in developing countries; notably, the maternal mortality ratio was 15 times higher in developing countries than in high-income countries. The major causes of maternal deaths were haemorrhage, infection/sepsis, unsafe abortion, pre-eclampsia and eclampsia, and prolonged or obstructed labour. HIV/AIDS and malaria were also significant contributing causes, and in a number of countries, high fertility rates continued to account for high maternal mortality. Many pregnant women in developing countries still did not receive the minimum standard of antenatal care and were not attended to by skilled medical personnel at the time of delivery, and the situation of pregnant women was even more challenging in remote and rural areas.

The Secretary-General concluded that actions by Member States and UN entities had led to greater resource commitments; increased collaboration and accountability for progress; and increased interventions addressing the human rights of women and the root causes of maternal mortality, which included gender inequality, violence against women and girls, poverty, malnutrition, harmful practices, and a lack of accessible and appropriate health-care services, information and education. Limited information and analysis, however, had been provided on the implementation of interventions with a human rights-based approach that addressed those root causes, the effectiveness of such interventions and the allocation of sufficient resources to that end. As maternal mortality and morbidity ratios remained high in many countries and subpopulations around the world, efforts should continue not only to strengthen the response of the health sector but also to ensure that the key principles of gender equality and women's empowerment were integrated into responses at all levels.

Recommendations for Member States included the intensification of actions to reduce maternal mortality and morbidity within a gender equality framework; the elimination of structural barriers to the enjoyment of reproductive health; the use of legal and policy frameworks and programmes to address the root causes of maternal mortality and morbidity; and the adoption and implementation of laws to protect women and girls from violence and harmful practices, including child, early and forced marriages.

Violence against women

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 67/144 [YUN 2012, p. 1095], the Secretary-General submitted an August report

[A/69/222] on the intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women. Based on inputs from 32 Member States and 19 UN entities, the report provided information on measures taken by Member States and activities undertaken within the United Nations system to address violence against women.

Global estimates showed that 35 per cent of women worldwide had experienced either physical and/or sexual intimate partner violence or non-partner sexual violence; and regional studies showed similar findings. A regional study on male behaviour demonstrated that the perpetration of rape was pervasive, though varied across countries, with no legal consequences for the majority of the perpetrators.

Developments at the global and UN level included the endorsement by the UN Statistical Commission of a set of nine core indicators for surveys on violence against women [YUN 2013, p. 1262], which would allow for better comparison and monitoring of trends over time.

The Secretary-General's campaign "UNITE to End Violence against Women" continued its advocacy at the global, regional and national levels and engaged multiple stakeholders, including high-level officials, including through the Secretary-General's Network of Men Leaders. The campaign emphasized the engagement of young people, particularly through the UNITE Global Youth Network, and declared the twenty-fifth of each month as Orange Day, a day for action against violence against women and girls. The initiative "United Nations Action against Sexual Violence in Conflict" strengthened its responses to conflict-related sexual violence through intensified advocacy at the global level, the deployment of advisers and technical support in more than 10 countries, and the development of policy and guidance notes on reparations and the provision of services to survivors. Measures were also taken in more than 20 countries to strengthen policy development and coordination among actors.

Actions by States to prevent and address violence against women included the strengthening of legal, policy and institutional frameworks as well as coordination among different stakeholders, with efforts focused on legal reforms as well as gender inequality. Although there was limited information about long-term support for victims and survivors, States had focused on addressing the immediate needs of women in the aftermath of violence through the provision of services. Such services, however, remained insufficient and limited to central locations. The prevention of violence was still an area under development, and largely limited to awareness-raising initiatives.

The Secretary-General presented recommendations for addressing the following challenges: the limited allocation of resources to implement laws, policies and programmes and insufficient monitoring and evaluation of their impact; the lack of reliable data to monitor progress; the lack of coordination among multiple stakeholders; the underreporting of incidents and high attrition rates; and the discriminatory attitudes of officials handling cases of victims and survivors and insufficient legislation enforcement.

Report of Special Rapporteur. On 1 September, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/144 [YUN 2012, p. 1095], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report [A/69/368] of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences. The report focused on violence against women as a barrier to the realization of women's civil, political, economic, social, cultural and developmental rights and the effective exercise of citizenship rights, and presented recommendations to address such violence (see p. 873).

Trust Fund activities. In response to General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Human Rights Council and the Commission on the Status of Women a December report [A/HRC/29/3-E/CN.6/2015/6] of UN-Women on the 2014 activities of the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women.

The Fund awarded $8.3 million in 25 grants covering 23 countries and territories. Twenty-two civil society organizations, two Governments and the UN country team in Fiji received grants that together were expected to reach over 730,000 primary beneficiaries by the end of 2018. In terms of grant value, 28 per cent of the funds allocated went to programmes in Asia and the Pacific; 26 per cent to Africa; 14 per cent to Europe and Central Asia; 12 per cent to Latin America and the Caribbean; 11 per cent to the Arab States and North Africa; and 9 per cent to cross-regional programmes. Grants amounting to 8 per cent of the total ($700,000) were awarded to eight small organizations (those requesting less than $100,000) as part of the Fund's new strategy to increase funding to smaller grass-roots organizations. Six new programmes in the Gambia, Togo, the State of Palestine, Nepal, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan would address harmful practices; and seven new grantees in Albania, Colombia, Egypt, Guatemala, Serbia, Thailand and Zimbabwe would work to address and prevent violence against women who faced discrimination and exclusion.

By the end of the year, the Fund had a portfolio of 95 active grants covering 75 countries and territories, with a total value of $56,311,108.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/481], adopted resolution 69/147 without vote [agenda item 27 (a)].

Intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 61/143 of 19 December 2006, 62/133 of 18 December 2007, 63/155 of 18 December 2008, 64/137 of 18 December 2009, 65/187 of 21 December 2010 and 67/144 of 20 December 2012, and all its previous resolutions on the elimination of violence against women,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1325(2000) of 31 October 2000, 1820(2008) of 19 June 2008, 1888(2009) of 30 September 2009, 1889(2009) of 5 October 2009, 1960(2010) of 16 December 2010, 2106(2013) of 24 June 2013 and 2122(2013) of 18 October 2013 on women and peace and security and all relevant Council resolutions on children and armed conflict, including resolutions 1882(2009) of 4 August 2009, 1998(2011) of 12 July 2011, 2068(2012) of 19 September 2012 and 2143(2014) of 7 March 2014,

Recalling further Human Rights Council resolutions 17/11 of 17 June 2011, 20/12 of 5 July 2012 and 23/25 of 14 June 2013, as well as Council resolutions 26/5 and 26/15 of 26 June 2014 on the elimination of discrimination against women and on accelerating efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and reaffirming also that discrimination on the basis of sex is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and other international human rights instruments, such as the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, and that its elimination is a cross-cutting issue and an integral part of efforts towards the elimination of all forms of violence against women,

Recalling the rules of international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome documents of its review conferences and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”,

Reaffirming also the declarations adopted at the forty-ninth and fifty-fourth sessions of the Commission on the Status of Women and the agreed conclusions on the priority theme “Elimination and prevention of all forms of violence against women and girls” adopted at its fifty-seventh session, and welcoming the attention given to the elimination of violence against women and girls in the agreed conclusions of the Commission at its fifty-eighth session on the challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals for women and girls,

Reaffirming further the international commitments in the field of social development regarding gender equality and the advancement of women made at the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development and in the key actions for the further implementation of its Programme of Action, at the World Summit for Social Development and the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance and in the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, adopted on 22 September 2014, as well as those made in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, at the 2005 World Summit and at the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, and noting the attention paid to the elimination of all forms of violence against women in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, adopted by the Assembly in its resolution 61/295 of 13 September 2007, as well as in the Declaration of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development of 3 October 2013,

Recalling that the proposal of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals contained in its report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, and in this regard taking note with appreciation of the reference to gender equality, women’s empowerment and the need to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls contained therein,

Reaffirming the need for the full and effective participation of women in sustainable development policies, programmes and decision-making at all levels, as agreed in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, and taking note of the statement adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at its fifty-seventh session on the post-2015 development agenda and the elimination of discrimination against women, including its emphasis on accountability,

Recalling the inclusion of gender-related crimes and crimes of sexual violence in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, noting in this regard the undertakings of its Chief Prosecutor to strengthen efforts to combat impunity for sexual and gender-based violence, and recalling the recognition by the ad hoc international criminal tribunals that rape and other forms of sexual violence can constitute a war crime, a crime against humanity or a constitutive act with respect to genocide or torture,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights: Implementing the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework, including the responsibility of business enterprises to respect human rights, bearing in mind the different risks that may be faced by women and men,

Recognizing the importance of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) and its role in leading, coordinating and promoting the accountability of the United Nations system in its work on gender equality and the empowerment of women,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls and the high number of activities undertaken by the United Nations bodies, entities, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, including by the Working Group on the issue of discrimination against women in law and in practice, by the Special Rapporteurs of the Human Rights Council on violence against women, its causes and consequences, on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence and by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Sexual Violence in Conflict, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children,

Deeply concerned about the pervasiveness of violence against women and girls in all its different forms and manifestations worldwide, and reiterating the need to intensify efforts to prevent all forms of violence against women and girls throughout the world and to re-emphasize that violence against women and girls is unacceptable,

Emphasizing that States should continue to adopt and implement legislation and policies in accordance with their obligations under international law, and in particular in accordance with international human rights obligations and with their commitments, which address the issue of violence against women in a comprehensive manner, not only by criminalizing violence against women and girls and providing for punishment of the perpetrators, but also by including protection and preventive measures and access to just and effective remedies, including compensation and indemnification, for victims and survivors of violence against women and girls, with provisions for adequate funding for their implementation, while exercising due diligence in addressing violence against women, including in their role as contributors to peace operations led by the United Nations or regional organizations,

Underlining the detrimental impact of sexual violence in armed conflict on women's participation in the resolution of conflict and in the post-conflict transition, reconstruction and peacebuilding processes,

Reaffirming the importance of effective accountability with regard to violence against women and girls, including sexual violence, abuse and exploitation, and of undertaking adequate measures to combat such violence,

Taking note, in this regard, of the Secretary-General's guidance note on reparations for conflict-related sexual violence,

Taking note also of international and regional initiatives to combat sexual violence in armed conflict, including the Global Summit to End Sexual Violence in Conflict, which focused on justice, accountability and support for victims,

Recognizing that violence against women and girls is rooted in historical and structural inequality in power relations between men and women and that all forms of violence against women seriously violate and impair or nullify the enjoyment by women and girls of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and constitute a major impediment to women's full, equal and effective participation in society, the economy and political decision-making,

Recognizing also that women's poverty and lack of empowerment, as well as their marginalization resulting from their exclusion from social policies and from the benefits of education and sustainable development, can place them at increased risk of violence, and that violence against women impedes the social and economic and therefore the sustainable development of communities and States, as well as the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Acknowledging the need to address violence against women and girls holistically, including through the recognition of linkages between violence against women and girls and other issues, such as HIV/AIDS, poverty eradication, food security, peace and security, humanitarian assistance, education, access to justice, health and crime prevention,

Acknowledging also that trafficking in persons is one of the forms of transnational organized crime which exposes women to violence and that concerted efforts are needed to combat it, and in this regard stressing that full and effective implementation of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, as well as the full and effective implementation of the United Nations Global Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons, will contribute to the elimination of all forms of violence against women and girls,

Gravely concerned about the unprecedented number of refugees and displaced persons globally, recognizing the particular vulnerability of women and children among refugees and displaced persons, including their exposure to discrimination and sexual and physical abuse, violence and exploitation, and in this regard acknowledging the importance of preventing, responding to and addressing sexual and gender-based violence,

Recognizing the need to address violence against women and girls resulting from transnational organized crime, including trafficking in persons and drug trafficking, and to adopt specific policies to prevent and eradicate violence against women in crime prevention strategies,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts and the high number of activities undertaken by States to eliminate all forms of violence against women, which have resulted in the strengthening of legislation and the criminal justice system, including the adoption of national action plans, strategies and coordination mechanisms, the implementation of preventive and protective measures, as well as awareness-raising and capacity-building, for example through training for public officials and professionals, including the judiciary, the police and the military, and for educational and criminal justice professionals, the provision of support and services for women facing or subjected to violence and the improvement of data collection and analysis,

Recognizing that domestic violence remains widespread and affects women of all social strata across the world, and the need to eliminate such violence, and in this connection recognizing the work done by relevant parts of the United Nations system, such as UN-Women, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Population Fund,

Recognizing also the important role of the family in combating violence against women and girls and the need to support its capacity to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls,

Recognizing further the important role of the community, in particular men and boys, as well as civil society, including women human rights defenders and women's and youth organizations and the media, in the efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls,

Recognizing the vulnerability of those who suffer multiple and intersecting forms of discrimination, such as older women, indigenous women, migrant women and women with disabilities, and the particular risk of violence they face, and stressing the urgent need to address violence and discrimination against them,

Gravely concerned that impunity for violations and abuses against women human rights defenders persists owing to such factors as a lack of reporting, documentation, investigation and access to justice, social barriers and constraints with regard to addressing gender-based violence, including sexual violence, and the stigmatization that may result from such violations and abuses,

Alarmed by the acts of intolerance, violent extremism, violence, including sectarian violence, and terrorism in various parts of the world, which claim innocent lives, cause destruction and displace people, including women and girls,

Recognizing that the illicit use of and illicit trade in small arms, light weapons and ammunition aggravate violence, inter alia, against women and girls,

Taking note of the forthcoming entry into force of the Arms Trade Treaty on 24 December 2014, which includes provisions for States parties regarding serious acts of gender-based violence or serious acts of violence against women and children,

1. Stresses that “violence against women” means any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women and girls, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life, and also notes the economic and social harm caused by such violence;

2. Recognizes that gender-based violence is a form of discrimination that seriously inhibits women’s ability to enjoy rights and freedoms on a basis of equality with men;

3. Also recognizes that violence against women and girls persists in every country in the world as a pervasive violation of the enjoyment of human rights and a major impediment to achieving gender equality, development, peace, security and the internationally agreed development goals, in particular the Millennium Development Goals;

4. Further recognizes that all human rights are universal, indivisible and interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and stresses that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Stresses that it is important that States strongly condemn all forms of violence against women and refrain from invoking any custom, tradition or religious consideration to avoid their obligations with respect to its elimination as set out in the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women;

6. Strongly condemns the targeting of civilian populations, including women and girls, in violation of international law, by violent extremists, and calls upon all

States to intensify their efforts to counter violent extremism, including by addressing the conditions conducive to its spread, while ensuring that those efforts comply with their obligations under international law;

7. Also strongly condemns all acts of violence against women and girls, whether those acts are perpetrated by the State, by private persons or by non-State actors, including business enterprises, and calls for the elimination of all forms of gender-based violence in the family, within the general community and where perpetrated or condoned by the State;

8. Stresses that States have the obligation, at all levels, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including women and girls, and must exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate, prosecute and hold to account the perpetrators of violence against women and girls and eliminate impunity and provide for access to appropriate remedies for victims and survivors, and should ensure the protection and empowerment of women and girls, including adequate enforcement by police and the judiciary of civil remedies, orders of protection and criminal sanctions, and the provision of shelters, psychosocial services, counselling, health-care and other types of support services, in order to avoid revictimization, and that to do so contributes to the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by women subjected to violence;

9. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women, as well as the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on violence against women, its causes and consequences;

10. Also welcomes the efforts and contributions at the local, national, regional and international levels to eliminate all forms of violence against women, including by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, and encourages States to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and its Optional Protocol;

11. Expresses its appreciation for the progress achieved in the Secretary-General’s 2008–2015 campaign “UNITE to End Violence against Women” and the regional components of the campaign, and stresses the need to accelerate the implementation of concrete follow-up activities by the United Nations system to end all forms of violence against women;

12. Welcomes the contributions already made by States, the private sector and other donors to the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women, while stressing the importance of the need for further funding of the Fund in order to provide support for national, regional and international actions, including those taken by governmental and non-governmental organizations working to prevent and end violence against women and girls;

13. Reaffirms that the persistence of armed conflicts in various parts of the world is a major impediment to the elimination of all forms of violence against women, and, bearing in mind that armed and other types of conflicts and terrorism and hostage-taking still persist in many parts of the world and that aggression, foreign occupation and ethnic and other types of conflicts are an ongoing reality, affecting women and men in nearly every region, calls upon all States and the international community to place particular focus on their plight, to give priority attention and increased assistance to relieving the suffering, of women and girls living in such situations and to ensure that, where violence is committed against them, all perpetrators of such violence are duly investigated and, as appropriate, prosecuted and punished in order to end impunity, including by appropriate authorities contributing police, military or civilian personnel serving in peacekeeping missions, while stressing the need to respect international humanitarian law and human rights law, and invites States to consider the various provisions on sexual and gender-based violence set out in relevant international instruments, including, where appropriate, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court;

14. Stresses the need for the exclusion of killing and maiming of women and girls, as prohibited under international law, and crimes of sexual violence from amnesty provisions in the context of conflict resolution processes and to address such acts during all stages of the armed conflict, conflict resolution and post-conflict situations, including through transitional justice mechanisms, while ensuring the full and effective participation of women in such processes;

15. Also stresses the importance of ensuring that in armed conflict and post-conflict situations and in natural disaster situations, the prevention of and response to all forms of violence against women and girls, including sexual and gender-based violence, are prioritized and effectively addressed, including, as appropriate, through the investigation, prosecution and punishment of perpetrators to end impunity, the removal of barriers to women's access to justice, the establishment of complaint and reporting mechanisms and the provision of support to victims and survivors, affordable and accessible health-care services, including sexual and reproductive health care, and reintegration measures, as well as by taking steps to increase women's participation in conflict resolution and peacebuilding missions and processes and post-conflict decision-making;

16. Further stresses that, despite important steps taken by many countries around the world, States should continue to focus on the prevention of violence against women and girls, as well as on their protection, their empowerment and the provision of services, and should therefore implement laws and policies for ending violence against women and girls and monitor and rigorously evaluate the implementation of available programmes, policies and laws and improve, where possible, their impact, accessibility and effectiveness;

17. Stresses that States should take measures to ensure that all officials responsible for implementing policies and programmes aimed at preventing violence against women and girls, protecting and assisting victims and investigating and punishing acts of violence receive ongoing and adequate training and access to information to sensitize them to the different and specific needs of women and girls, in particular those who have been subjected to violence, so that women and girls are not revictimized when seeking justice and redress, including in peacekeeping missions and processes and special political missions;

18. Also stresses that States should take all possible measures to empower and protect women against all forms of violence, to inform them of their human rights, including by disseminating information on the assistance available to women and families who have experienced violence and ensuring that timely and appropriate information is available to all women who have been subjected to violence, including at all stages of the justice system, and to inform everyone of women's rights and of the existing penalties for violating those rights;

19. Calls upon States, with the support of United Nations entities, to fully engage men and boys, as well as families and communities, as partners and agents of change in preventing and condemning violence against women and girls, as well as in achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls, and to develop appropriate policies to promote the responsibility and role of men and boys in eliminating all forms of violence against women and girls;

20. Urges States to continue to develop their national strategies, translating them into concrete programmes and actions and a more systematic, comprehensive, multisectoral and sustained approach, aimed at eliminating all forms of violence against women, including by achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls and keeping in view the responsibility of States to exercise due diligence to prevent, protect against and investigate all acts of violence against women, by, for example:

(a) Establishing, in partnership with all relevant stakeholders and at all relevant levels, a comprehensive integrated national plan dedicated to combating violence against women and girls in all its aspects, which includes data collection and analysis and prevention and protection measures, as well as national information campaigns, using resources to eliminate gender stereotypes in the media that lead to violence against women and girls;

(b) Reviewing and, where appropriate, revising, amending or abolishing all laws, regulations, policies, practices and customs that discriminate against women or have a discriminatory impact on women, and ensuring that the provisions of multiple legal systems and alternative dispute resolution mechanisms, where they exist, comply with international human rights obligations, commitments and principles, including the principle of non-discrimination;

(c) Ending impunity by ensuring accountability and punishing the perpetrators of sexual and gender-based crimes against women and girls under national and international law, and stressing the need for the alleged perpetrators of those crimes to be held accountable by national justice systems or, where applicable, international justice;

(d) Evaluating and assessing the impact of current legislation, rules and procedures regarding violence against women with a view to ensuring access to justice, improving rates of reporting and addressing the high attrition rate from reporting to conviction, and reinforcing, where necessary, criminal law and procedure relating to all forms of violence against women, with a focus on prevention and the protection of women and easy access to redress for victims;

(e) Adopting, as appropriate, reviewing and ensuring the accelerated and effective implementation of laws and comprehensive measures that criminalize violence against women and girls and that provide for multidisciplinary and gender-sensitive preventive and protective measures, such as emergency orders and protection orders, and for the investigation, submission for prosecution and appropriate punishment of perpetrators to end impunity, and support services that empower victims and survivors, as well as access to appropriate civil remedies and redress;

(f) Addressing and eliminating, as a matter of priority, domestic violence through adopting, strengthening and implementing legislation that prohibits such violence, prescribes punitive measures and establishes adequate legal protection against such violence;

(g) Promoting awareness among all stakeholders, in particular men and boys, of the need to combat violence against women and girls occurring in public or private life, and promoting gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls, inter alia, through regular and repeated use and funding of awareness-raising campaigns nationwide and other ways to promote prevention and protection and the transformation of discriminatory social norms and gender stereotypes, as part of an integrated prevention strategy;

(h) Encouraging the media to examine the impact of gender role stereotypes, including those perpetuated by commercial advertisements, which foster gender-based violence and inequalities;

(i) Ensuring that there is sufficient knowledge, including expertise in effective legal approaches to eliminating violence against women and girls, awareness and coordination in the legal system and, to that end, where appropriate, appointing a focal point in the legal system for cases of violence against women and girls;

(j) Also ensuring the systematic collection, analysis and dissemination of data disaggregated by sex and age to monitor all forms of violence against women and girls, including on the effectiveness of preventive and protective measures, with the involvement of national statistical offices and, where appropriate, in partnership with other actors, including law enforcement agencies, in order to effectively review and implement laws, policies, strategies and preventive and protective measures, while ensuring and maintaining the privacy and confidentiality of the victims;

(k) Establishing appropriate national mechanisms for monitoring and evaluating the implementation of national measures, including national action plans, taken to eliminate violence against women, including through the use of national indicators;

(l) Providing adequate financial support and human resources for the implementation of national strategies and action plans to promote the empowerment of women and girls and gender equality, to end violence against women and girls, to prevent all forms of violence against women and girls and to provide for the redress of such violence and financial support and human resources for other related activities;

(m) Investing in the realization of the right to education, by, inter alia, eliminating illiteracy, in particular in rural and remote areas, and by closing the gender gap at all levels of education, thereby contributing to the empowerment of women and girls and to the elimination of all forms of discrimination and violence against women and girls;

(n) Adopting all appropriate measures, especially in the field of education, from the entry levels of the education system, to modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women of all ages in order to promote the development of respectful relations and to eliminate prejudices, harmful customary practices and all other practices based on the idea of the inferiority or superiority of either of the sexes and on stereotyped roles for men and women, and raising awareness of the unacceptability of violence against women and girls at all levels, including through schools, educational programmes, teachers, parents, religious leaders, youth organizations and teaching materials sensitized on gender equality and human rights;

(o) Improving the safety and security of girls at and on the way to and from school, including by establishing a safe and violence-free environment, by improving infrastructure such as transportation, by providing separate and adequate sanitation facilities in all relevant places and improved lighting, playgrounds and safe environments, and by adopting national policies to prohibit, prevent and address violence against children, especially girls, including sexual harassment and bullying and other forms of violence, through such measures as conducting violence prevention activities in schools and communities and establishing and enforcing penalties for violence against girls;

(p) Developing gender-sensitive educational programmes at all levels and, in this regard, taking concrete measures to ensure that women and men, youth, girls and boys are portrayed in positive and non-stereotypical roles;

(q) Promoting preventive measures at an early stage with families and children exposed to or at risk of violence, such as parenting education programmes, in order to reduce the risk of possible perpetration of violence or revictimization in later childhood and adulthood;

(r) Ensuring that the appropriate legislative, administrative, social and educational measures are in place to protect children from all forms of physical or mental violence, injury or abuse, neglect or negligent treatment, maltreatment or exploitation, including sexual abuse;

(s) Ensuring also that the appropriate legislative, administrative, social and educational measures are in place to eliminate the occurrence of child, early and forced marriages and female genital mutilation and to provide information regarding the harm associated with these practices;

(t) Empowering women, in particular women living in poverty, by, inter alia, strengthening their economic autonomy and by ensuring their full participation in society and in decision-making processes, through, inter alia, social and economic policies that guarantee them full and equal access to all levels of quality education and training and to affordable and adequate public and social services, as well as equal access to financial resources and employment, and full and equal rights to own and have access to land and other property, and taking further appropriate measures to address the increasing rate of homelessness of and inadequate housing for women in order to reduce their vulnerability to violence;

(u) Treating all forms of violence against women and girls as a criminal offence, punishable by law, contributing, inter alia, to the prevention and non-recurrence of such crimes, and ensuring penalties commensurate with the severity of the crimes and sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress, as appropriate, the wrongs caused to women and girls who are subjected to violence;

(v) Taking effective measures, as appropriate, to prevent the requirement for victim consent from becoming an impediment to bringing perpetrators of violence against women and girls to justice, while ensuring that criminal justice processes are gender-sensitive and that ap-appropriate safeguards and measures to protect women facing or subjected to violence, such as restraining and expulsion orders against the perpetrators, testimonial aids and adequate and comprehensive measures for the rehabilitation and reintegration of victims of violence into society, are in place;

(w) Encouraging the removal of all barriers to women's access to justice and ensuring that they all have access to effective legal assistance so that they can make informed decisions regarding, inter alia, legal proceedings and issues relating to family law, and also ensuring that they have access to just and effective remedies for the harm that they have suffered, including through the adoption of national legislation where necessary;

(x) Ensuring effective cooperation and coordination among all stakeholders, including all relevant public officials and civil society, in the prevention, investigation, prosecution and punishment of all forms of violence against women and girls;

(y) Ensuring the promotion and protection of the human rights of all women and their sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of their review conferences, including through the development and enforcement of policies and legal frameworks and the strengthening of health systems that make universally accessible and available quality comprehensive sexual and reproductive health-care services, commodities, information and education, including safe and effective methods of modern contraception, emergency contraception, prevention programmes for adolescent pregnancy, maternal health care such as skilled birth attendance and emergency obstetric care, which will reduce obstetric fistula and other complications of pregnancy and delivery, safe abortion where such services are permitted by national law and prevention and treatment of reproductive tract infections, sexually transmitted infections, HIV and reproductive cancers, recognizing that human rights include the right to have control over and decide freely and responsibly on matters related to their sexuality, including sexual and reproductive health, free from coercion, discrimination and violence;

(z) Preventing, combating and eliminating trafficking in women and girls by criminalizing all forms of trafficking in persons, as well as by raising public awareness of the issue of trafficking in persons, particularly women and girls, including the factors that make women and girls vulnerable to trafficking, and eliminating the demand that fosters all forms of exploitation and forced labour, and encouraging, where appropriate, the media to play a role with a view to eliminating the exploitation of women and children;

(aa) Establishing comprehensive, coordinated, interdisciplinary, accessible and sustained multisectoral services, programmes and responses at all levels to provide immediate protection and support, to be made available and accessible also in rural areas, through which shelter and legal, health-care, psychological, counselling and other services are available to all women facing or subjected to violence, as well as their children, and, where integrated centres are not feasible, promoting collaboration and coordination among agencies;

(bb) Encouraging the establishment or the strengthening of, or support for, national and local helplines that provide information, counselling, support and referral services to women facing or subjected to violence;

(cc) Ensuring that the prison system and probation services provide appropriate rehabilitation programmes for perpetrators, as a preventive tool against recidivism as part of an integrated response to violence against women, and that they consider the safety of women and girls as the highest priority;

(dd) Adopting a life-cycle approach in efforts to end discrimination and violence against women and girls and ensuring that specific issues affecting older women are given greater visibility and attention;

21. Urges the international community, including the United Nations system and, as appropriate, regional and subregional organizations, to support national efforts to promote the empowerment of women and girls and gender equality in order to enhance national efforts to eliminate violence against women and girls, including, upon request, in the development and implementation of national action plans on the elimination of violence against women and girls, through, inter alia, official development assistance and other appropriate assistance, such as facilitating the sharing of guidelines, methodologies and best practices, taking into account national priorities;

22. Stresses the contribution of the ad hoc international criminal tribunals and the International Criminal Court to ending impunity by ensuring accountability and punishing perpetrators of violence against women, and urges States to consider ratifying or acceding as a matter of priority to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which entered into force on 1 July 2002;

23. Calls upon the inter-agency Programme Advisory Committee of the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women, in consultation with the Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality, to continue to provide guidance on the implementation of the 2010–2015 strategy for the Trust Fund and to further enhance its effectiveness as a system-wide funding mechanism for preventing and redressing all forms of violence against women and girls and to give due consideration, inter alia, to the findings and recommendations of the external evaluation of the Trust Fund;

24. Stresses that, within the United Nations system, adequate resources should be assigned to the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) and other bodies, the specialized agencies, funds and programmes responsible for the promotion of gender equality, the empowerment of women and the human rights of women and girls and to efforts throughout the United Nations system to prevent and eliminate violence against women and girls, and calls upon the United Nations system to make the necessary support and resources available;

25. Also stresses the importance of the Secretary-General's database on violence against women, expresses its appreciation to all the States that have provided the database with information regarding, inter alia, their national policies and legal frameworks aimed at eliminating violence against women and supporting victims of such violence, strongly encourages all States to regularly provide updated information for the database, and calls upon all relevant entities of the United Nations system to continue to support States, at their request, in the compilation and regular updating of pertinent information and to raise awareness of the database among all relevant stakeholders, including civil society;

26. Acknowledges the work of the Statistics Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, as requested by the Statistical Commission, on the development of guidelines to support the production by Member States of statistics on violence against women and girls;

27. Calls upon all United Nations bodies, entities, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions, to intensify their efforts at all levels to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls and to better coordinate their work with a view to increasing effective support for national efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women;

28. Requests the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences to present an annual report to the General Assembly at its seventieth and seventy-first sessions;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report containing:

(a) Information provided by the United Nations bodies, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies on their follow-up activities to implement resolution 67/144 and the present resolution, including on their assistance to States in their efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women;

(b) Information provided by States on their follow-up activities to implement the present resolution;

30. Also requests the Secretary-General to present an oral report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-ninth and sixtieth sessions, including information provided by the United Nations bodies, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies on recent follow-up activities to implement resolutions 65/187, 67/144 and the present resolution, including on the progress made in enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women as a system-wide United Nations mechanism and on the progress of the Secretary-General's campaign to end violence against women, and urges United Nations bodies, entities, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies to contribute promptly to that report;

31. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its seventy-first session under the item entitled "Advancement of women".

Women and armed conflict

Women, peace and security

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to presidential statement S/PRST/2010/22 [YUN 2010, p. 1161] and Council resolution 2122(2013) [YUN 2013, p. 1109], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [S/2014/693] on women and peace and security. The report was based on contributions from 32 UN system entities, 27 Member States and 8 regional organizations and focused on five broad action areas: prevention; participation; protection; peacebuilding, relief and recovery; and coordination and accountability for results.

Progress had been made in ensuring that peace-keeping missions provided more gender-responsive protective environments; supported the participation of women in UN-led peace processes and mediation efforts; tackled impunity for sexual and gender-based crimes; addressed linkages between irresponsible arms transfers and gender-based violence; and responded to the needs of women and girls in humanitarian and recovery settings. There was also increased awareness of the importance of seizing the political moment offered by post-conflict transitions to repeal discriminatory laws and policies and foster the economic and political empowerment of women. Nevertheless, the Secretary-General remained concerned about the continued incidence of sexual and gender-based violence and targeted attacks and threats against women and girls and those defending their rights. He called upon all parties to armed conflict to respect and uphold international law, and underlined the obligation of States to protect civilians and investigate and prosecute such crimes. He also called upon Member States to continue supporting the capacity of field missions in technical gender expertise towards ensuring the mainstreaming of gender perspectives throughout the work of field missions and the application of gender analysis to inform policy and planning processes. He encouraged Member States, the UN system and civil society to explore means of increasing the funding dedicated to the implementation of the women and peace and security agenda, and encouraged Governments and regional organizations to consider using tools such as gender markers to assess and improve performance. He noted that the convergence of major global policy events in 2015 must be maximized, including by ensuring that the 20-year review of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women addressed the women and peace and security agenda.

Security Council consideration. On 28 October [S/PV.7289], the Council considered the Secretary-General's report and a concept note [S/2014/731] submitted by Argentina on "Women and peace and security—displaced women and girls: leaders and survivors". The adoption of the presidential statement 2014/21 (see below) was accompanied by a series of statements, including by UN-Women Executive Director, Phumzile Mlambo-Ngcuka; Assistant Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations, Edmond Mulet; Special Representative of the Secretary-General of NATO for Women, Peace and Security, Mariëtte Schuurman; and Senior Adviser on Gender Issues of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, Miroslava Beham. Ms. Mlambo-Ngcuka also delivered a statement on behalf of the Secretary-General, in which she called for greater investment in measures to address the problem of discrimination against women and girls, including through broad participation in her upcoming global study on the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) on women, peace and security [YUN 2000, p. 1113], which would include targeted recommendations to accelerate results.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 October [meeting 7289], following consultations among Security Council members, the President made statement S/PRST/2014/21 on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council reaffirms its commitments to the full and effective implementation of resolutions 1325(2000), 1820(2008), 1888(2009), 1889(2009), 1960(2010), 2106(2013) and 2122(2013) and recalls all statements by its President on women and peace and security as reiterating the Council's commitments.

The Council takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on women and peace and security for the purpose of implementation of resolution 1325(2000), and particularly welcomes its focus on implementation, sustaining progress and the need to translate commitments into improved outcomes.

The Council reaffirms that women's and girls' empowerment and gender equality are critical to efforts to maintain international peace and security, and emphasizes that persistent barriers to full implementation of resolution 1325(2000) will only be dismantled through dedicated commitment to women's empowerment, participation and human rights, and through concerted leadership, consistent information flows and action, and support, to ensure women's full and equal participation at all levels of decision-making.

The Council welcomes the efforts of Member States to implement resolution 1325(2000) at the national, regional and local levels, including the development of national action plans and other national, sub-regional and regional-level strategies and implementation frameworks, and encourages Member States to continue to pursue such implementation. The Council further stresses that United Nations entities should continue to support and supplement, as appropriate, efforts of Member States in the implementation of 1325(2000). The Council recognizes the critical contributions of civil society, including women's organizations, to conflict prevention, resolution and peacebuilding and in this regard the importance of sustained consultation and dialogue between women and national and international decision makers. The Council encourages the involvement of men in promoting gender equality and ending sexual and gender-based violence.

The Council welcomes the additional steps taken to implement Council resolutions 2106(2013) and 2122(2013), and notes the importance of sustained efforts by the United Nations to improve the quality of information and analysis on the impact of armed conflict on women and girls, the role of women in all areas of conflict prevention and resolution, peacemaking and peacebuilding and the gender dimensions of these areas, and to systematically include information and related recommendations on issues of relevance to women and peace and security in their reports and briefings to the Council. The Council reiterates its intention to increase its attention to women and peace and security as a cross-cutting subject in all relevant thematic areas of work on its agenda, including on threats to international peace and security caused by terrorist acts.

The Council recognizes that refugee and internally displaced women and girls are at heightened risk of being subject to various forms of human rights violations and abuses, including sexual and gender-based violence, and discrimination, which can occur during the various stages of the displacement cycle. The Council reaffirms the primary responsibility of Member States in the protection of their populations, including refugee and internally displaced women and girls. The Council stresses the importance of the Secretary-General and relevant United Nations agencies, inter alia, through consultation with women and women-led organizations as appropriate, supporting the development and strengthening of effective mechanisms for preventing and providing protection from violence, including in particular sexual and gender-based violence, to refugee and internally displaced women and girls.

The Council urges Member States to take measures to prevent refugee and internally displaced women and girls from being subject to violence, and to strengthen access to justice for women in such circumstances, including through the prompt investigation, prosecution and punishment of perpetrators of sexual and gender-based violence, as well as reparations for victims as appropriate. The Council stresses that the fight against impunity for the most serious crimes of international concern committed against women and girls has been strengthened through the work of the International Criminal Court, ad hoc and mixed tribunals, as well as specialized chambers in national tribunals.

The Council reiterates with grave concern that the illicit transfer, destabilizing accumulation and misuse of small arms and light weapons fuel armed conflicts and have a disproportionate impact on violence perpetrated against women and girls, and exacerbate sexual and gender-based violence.

The Council urges all parties involved in an armed conflict to allow full and unhindered access by refugee and internally displaced women to humanitarian assistance and protection as well as basic services such as education, health, housing and productive livelihoods, including assets such as land and property, in particular for those refugee and internally displaced women and girls at increased risk of marginalization. The Council recognizes the importance of Member States and United Nations entities seeking to ensure that humanitarian aid and funding includes provision for the full range of medical, legal, psychosocial and livelihood services, and noting the need for access to the full range of sexual and reproductive health services, including regarding pregnancies resulting from rape, without discrimination. The Council further recognizes that refugee and internally displaced women and girls are at increased risk of becoming stateless as a result of discriminatory nationality laws, obstacles to registering and the lack of access to identity documents, and urges States to ensure prompt and equitable provision of all necessary identity documents to such women and girls.

The Council urges Member States, the Secretary-General and relevant United Nations agencies to ensure meaningful participation of refugee and internally displaced women, as well as adolescent girls as appropriate, in the development, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes for refugee and internally displaced women and girls at all stages of the displacement cycle. The Council further calls for the systematic collection, analysis and utilization of sex- and age-disaggregated data that is required to assess the specific needs and capacities of women and to meaningfully measure to what extent recovery programmes are benefiting women, men, girls and boys, by all relevant actors.

The Council expresses its deep concern that violent extremism, which can be conducive to terrorism, often results in increased displacement and is frequently targeted at women and girls, leading to serious human rights violations and abuses committed against them, including murder, abduction, hostage-taking, kidnapping, enslavement, their sale and forced marriage, human trafficking, rape, sexual slavery and other forms of sexual violence. The Council urges all Member States to protect their population, in particular women and girls, affected by violent extremism which can be conducive to terrorism, while respecting all their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and international humanitarian law. The Council encourages Member States to engage the participation and leadership of women and women's organizations, including refugee and internally displaced women, in developing strategies to counter violent extremism, and further to address, including by the empowerment of women, the conditions conducive to the spread of violent extremism.

The Council reiterates its intention to convene a high-level review in 2015 to assess progress at the global, regional and national levels in implementing resolution 1325(2000), renew commitments and address obstacles and constraints that have emerged in the implementation of resolution 1325(2000). The Council encourages those Member States, regional organizations as appropriate, and United Nations entities that have developed frameworks and plans to support the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) to start reviewing existing implementation plans and targets, and to accelerate progress and prepare to formulate new targets, in time for the 2015 high-level review.

The Council welcomes the commissioning by the Secretary-General, in preparation for the high-level review, of a global study on the implementation of resolution 1325(2000), highlighting good practice examples, implementation gaps and challenges, as well as emerging trends and priorities for action. The Council encourages Member States, regional and subregional organizations as appropriate, and United Nations entities to contribute to the study. The Council invites the Secretary-General within his next annual report on the implementation of resolution 1325(2000) to submit information on the results of the global study and to make this available to all States Members of the United Nations.

Sexual violence and armed conflict

In response to Security Council resolution 2106(2013) [YUN 2013, p. 1112], and to presidential statement S/PRST/2012/23 [YUN 2012, p. 1101], the Secretary-General submitted a March report

[S/2014/181] on sexual violence in conflict, covering the period from January to December 2013. The report highlighted actions taken and challenges faced by States in conflict and post-conflict situations to protect women, men and children from such sexual violence; the implementation of the monitoring, analysis and reporting arrangements; the deployment of women's protection advisers; the work of the Team of Experts on the Rule of Law and Sexual Violence in Conflict; the efforts of the UN system; and recommendations to strengthen efforts to combat conflict-related sexual violence. It also provided information—presented according to country and based on cases documented by the UN system—on parties to conflict credibly suspected of committing or being responsible for acts of rape and other forms of sexual violence. A list was annexed to the report. Although UN peacekeeping and political missions were the primary sources of information for the report, consultations also included UN field missions and country teams, Member States, NGOs and the 13 UN entities comprising the United Nations Action against Sexual Violence in Conflict (United Nations Action) [YUN 2007, p. 1168].

Sexual violence in conflict was almost universally underreported because of the risks faced by survivors and witnesses who came forward, and by the humanitarian workers, human rights defenders, journalists and others to whom they spoke. Those risks included severe stigmatization, familial and social shunning and reprisals. In many contexts, the limited availability of services for survivors also hampered data gathering. Sexual violence was found to be closely related to broader issues of insecurity and security sector reform (SSR) and to incomplete and/or flawed disarmament, demobilization and reintegration (DDR) processes. It was therefore essential to address conflict-related sexual violence explicitly in such processes and in the context of peace agreements and ceasefires, which often established the parameters for SSR and DDR efforts. There was often a legacy from sexual violence during conflict, with acute consequences for the security of women and children in peacetime, as demonstrated by the high levels of rape and other forms of sexual violence perpetrated against women and minors in some post-conflict settings. Sexual violence was also reported as a significant factor motivating the flight of displaced persons. During flight and while displaced, civilian populations continued to be vulnerable to sexual violence, and in the context of prolonged and repeated displacement, mechanisms to prevent rape and other forms of sexual violence were often absent or limited.

Elsewhere, the report noted that pregnancy as a result of sexual violence and the plight of children born of rape required further research as a basis for response; as did the concern of sexual violence against men and boys where challenges included deep stigma, the failure of national legislation in many instances to recognize sexual violence against men and boys as a crime, the inadequacy of services, specifically for male victims, and the lack of access to legal services.

At the same time, there had been unprecedented commitment and momentum at the global level. The Security Council in resolution 2106(2013) [YUN 2013, p. 1112] outlined for the first time a comprehensive approach and framework to prevent conflict-related sexual violence. In April 2013, the Group of Eight countries adopted the historic Declaration on Preventing Sexual Violence; and, on the sidelines of the sixty-eighth session of the General Assembly, more than 140 Member States endorsed the Declaration of Commitment to End Sexual Violence in Conflict.

The Secretary-General called upon all parties to conflict responsible or credibly suspected of acts of sexual violence to cease such violations and to make specific and time-bound protection commitments that included: clear orders through chains of command and codes of conduct prohibiting sexual violence; timely investigation of alleged violations; immediate identification and release from their ranks of those most vulnerable to sexual violence, especially women and children; designation of a high-level interlocutor responsible for ensuring implementation of commitments; and cooperation with the United Nations to monitor compliance. He also urged the Security Council to reinforce the key elements of the prevention framework outlined under its resolution 2106(2013).

Security Council consideration (April). On 25 April [S/PV.7160], the Council considered the Secretary-General's report (see above) on sexual violence in conflict in the context of women and peace and security (see p. 156).

Women and children taken hostage

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Commission on the Status of Women resolution 56/1 [YUN 2012, p. 1105], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2014/7] on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts. The report was based on responses from Denmark and Togo on the status of implementation of resolution 56/1; and provided information on attention given to issues related to the topic in intergovernmental processes and bodies, including the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Human Rights Council.

There were stronger normative frameworks and mechanisms in place to address and act on issues such as enforced disappearance, missing persons, hostage-taking and the protection of women and children in armed conflict. The ratification and implementation of related international instruments and enhanced efforts to end impunity for violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, along with measures to support victims, witnesses and their families, remained essential to preventing and combating hostage-taking in armed conflicts. The limited input received from Member States, however, might be an indication of increased reporting on issues covered in resolution 56/1 in related intergovernmental processes. The Commission might therefore consider recommending that information on women and children taken hostage and the means to facilitate their release be reported to all other relevant processes and integrated into relevant reports of the Secretary-General rather than being prepared as a separate biennial report.

Commission action. On 20 March, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution [E/2014/27 (res. 58/1)] on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts. The resolution requested the Secretary-General and all international organizations to use their capabilities to facilitate the release of civilian women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned; and it also requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission at its sixtieth (2016) session a report on the implementation of the resolution.

Women and the economy

In a 30 September letter to the Secretary-General [A/69/396], Japan transmitted a summary of the proposals of the World Assembly for Women (Tokyo, 12–14 September), chaired by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Japan. Participants, including senior UN officials, stressed the importance of promoting women's active role in the economy and discussed global issues and women's initiatives.

Women in power and decision-making

Women and disarmament

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/33 [YUN 2013, p. 467], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/114] which provided views of Member States and relevant entities of the UN system on ways and means of promoting the role of women in disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control. Responses were received from 14 Member States, the European Union and five UN entities. An addendum [A/69/114/Add.1] contained replies from Colombia and Trinidad and Tobago.

On 2 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 69/61 (see p. 614) requested the relevant UN system entities to assist States in promoting the role of women in disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control, including in preventing, combating and eradicating the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons. It also requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation of the resolution at its seventy-first (2016) session.

Empowerment of women in natural disasters

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Commission on the Status of Women resolution 56/2 [YUN 2012, p. 1106], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2014/13] on gender equality and the empowerment of women in natural disasters, covering the period from March 2012 to July 2013.

Major natural disasters in 2012 included Typhoon Bopha in the Philippines, Hurricane Sandy in the Caribbean and the United States, drought in the Sahel, flooding in Nigeria, Pakistan and India and earthquakes in Iran, Guatemala, Mexico and China, which collectively affected 124.5 million people causing 9,655 deaths and 32.4 million displacements. During the same period, gender equality and the empowerment of women in natural disasters was highlighted in important resolutions and outcome documents with themes on sustainable development, resilience, humanitarian action and disaster risk reduction.

Since 2012, the mandatory use of the gender marker—a tool coding, on a 0–2 scale, whether a humanitarian project was designed to ensure that women, girls, men and boys would benefit equally from it or advance gender equality in any other way—in the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) consolidated appeals process had been particularly significant in mainstreaming of gender perspectives into humanitarian action. A number of Member States, such as Germany and Sweden, had started considering the gender marker in their voluntary donor funding decisions, while others, such as Japan, Mauritius and Spain, reported the development of legislation, policies and projects that further integrated gender equality into their national humanitarian strategies.

Disasters affected women, girls, boys and men in different ways; gender inequalities increased women's vulnerability and limited their access to the information and resources they needed to reduce the risks posed by disasters. In general, natural disasters killed more women than men, and killed women and at a younger age than men. During natural disasters, the likelihood of rape, sexual exploitation and risky behaviour greatly increased the risk of unwanted pregnancies, sexually transmitted infections and complications regarding reproductive health. As such, access to reproductive health care and education was crucial for adolescents and adults in crisis-affected settings.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Commission on the Status of Women encourage Member States to give gender-equality appropriate consideration in the development of humanitarian policies, plans and strategies; incorporate gender equality and women's empowerment into international negotiations and consultations; ensure that adequate financial resources were available for the implementation of gender equality commitments and that those were monitored by a tracking mechanism; ensure gender balance in beneficiary selection for economic relief and recovery and/or livelihoods programming; address the lack of data disaggregated by sex; and further develop gender markers.

Commission action. On 21 March, the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution [E/2014/27 (res. 58/2)] on gender equality and the empowerment of women in natural disasters, which urged Governments, UN entities and civil society to integrate a gender perspective in policies, planning and funding for disaster risk reduction, response and recovery; facilitate and increase women's access to information and communications technology and economics for participation and leadership in environmental decisions, including during natural disasters; and ensure the full enjoyment by women and girls of all human rights in every phase of disaster risk reduction, response and recovery. It also requested all relevant UN entities to report systematically on progress towards such mainstreaming under the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women [YUN 2012, p. 1116].

Institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women

Inter-Agency Network

The United Nations Inter-Agency Network on Women and Gender Equality, at its thirteenth annual session (New York, 11–13 March) [IANWGE/2014/Report], focused on the intergovernmental priorities for 2014 and 2015 that deserved system-wide attention, as well as on key coordination issues related to the UN system's work on gender equality and the empowerment of women. Concerning intergovernmental priorities, the Network was briefed on the status of the fifty-eighth session of the Commission on the Status of Women, including emerging issues and challenges towards the agreed conclusions. The discussion highlighted the importance of accelerating the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 52] and identifying lessons learned from that process to inform the post-2015 development framework (see p. 960).

Concerning the framework itself, the discussion identified both areas of consensus and of contention. The former included the need for the new post-2015 agenda to be transformative, universal and rights-based; the need for stronger institutions, governance and accountability to deliver real change for women and girls; and the recognition that, to address the multiple forms of discrimination, gender equality should be integrated across all new goals and targets. Contentious issues included how the new development agenda would address human rights, in particular, sexual and reproductive health and rights; governance and the rule of law; peace and security; and climate change in the light of the negotiations under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change towards a 2015 universal agreement.

Concerning the twentieth anniversary of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, in 2015, UN-Women advised that it focus on the accelerated implementation of the Platform identifying areas of progress, challenges and opportunities. Regarding the twenty-year review of the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), the United Nations Population Fund advised that it conduct a review of the implementation of the ICPD Plan of Action using quality data and analysis of the state of population and development. For the follow-up to inter-sessional activities, summaries of progress reports were shared virtually by the chairs of the relevant task forces and leading agencies on the standing agenda items, which included women and peace and security, violence against women, and Women-Watch, among others.

Mainstreaming a gender perspective in the UN system

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/16 [YUN 2013, p. 1117], the Secretary-General, in an April report [E/2014/63], assessed progress made in promoting gender equality and the empowerment of women within the UN system since the adoption of that resolution on 24 July 2013. Emphasis was placed on accountability for system-wide work on gender equality and the empowerment of women at both the global and the country levels and on progress made in the implementation of the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women. Under the Action Plan, almost the entire United Nations system had reported over two consecutive years on a common set of performance indicators, resulting in substantial progress in the performance of the UN system on gender mainstreaming. Sixty-two UN entities reported under the Action Plan for 2013, compared with 55 for 2012. The second year of implementation of the Action Plan had seen progress in 14 of the 15 performance indicators.

For performance management, significant progress was made in the Secretariat, where 100 per cent of its departments, offices and economic commissions met the Action Plan requirements. Funds and programmes also improved their performance in that area, with 64 per cent meeting or exceeding requirements, compared with 50 per cent in 2012. On gender equality and empowerment of women policies, almost half of the reporting entities (29) had such policies in place. Entities exceeded requirements in only a few instances, however, demonstrating that much remained to be done for the UN system to demonstrate excellence in gender mainstreaming.

The Secretary-General suggested that the Economic and Social Council might wish to request the UN system, inter alia, to intensify the implementation of the Action Plan in order to meet its targets by 2017; to invest adequate human and financial resources to tackle identified areas of weakness, including in gender policies, capacity development, resource tracking and allocation, equal representation of women and organizational culture; to better align gender equality programming with national priorities across sectors, and encourage States and stakeholders to strengthen gender mainstreaming into all areas of development; and to substantially increase the investment in and focus on outcomes and outputs relating to gender equality and the empowerment of women in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework programmes, including by strengthening the predictability of funding, broadening the donor base and increasing the flexibility of non-core resources.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 June [meeting 23], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/2 [draft: E/2014/L.12] without vote [agenda item 10 (c)].

Mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming its agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, and recalling its resolutions on the subject matter, including resolutions 2011/6 of 14 July 2011, 2012/24 of 27 July 2012 and 2013/16 of 24 July 2013,

Reaffirming also the commitments to gender equality and the advancement of women made at the Millennium Summit, the 2005 World Summit, the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and other major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions, and reaffirming further that their full, effective and accelerated implementation is integral to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Reaffirming further the commitment made at the 2005 World Summit to actively promote the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes in all political, economic and social spheres and to further undertake to strengthen the capabilities of the United Nations system in the area of gender,

Reaffirming that gender mainstreaming is a globally accepted strategy for achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls and constitutes a critical strategy in the full, effective and accelerated implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly, entitled “Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century”, as well as in the full implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development,

Underlining the catalytic role played by the Commission on the Status of Women and the important roles played by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, and taking note of the agreed conclusions and decisions of the Commission related to the promotion and monitoring of gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 67/226 of 21 December 2012, entitled “Quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system”, including in particular section III.D on gender equality and women’s empowerment,

Recalling also the section of General Assembly resolution 64/289 of 2 July 2010 entitled “Strengthening the institutional arrangements for support of gender equality and the empowerment of women”,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General, and appreciates that it provides a comprehensive and systemic approach to data collection and evidence-based analysis of gender mainstreaming through the United Nations system;

2. Also welcomes the recommendations contained in the report, and calls for intensified and continued efforts to mainstream a gender perspective, commensurate with gender equality goals, into all policies and programmes of the United Nations, in accordance with all relevant United Nations resolutions, in particular those of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Stresses that the Inter-agency Network on Women and Gender Equality constitutes a key forum for achieving more effective coordination, coherence and gender mainstreaming across the United Nations system and for the exchange and cross-fertilization of ideas and practical experiences on gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system, and looks forward to the continued role of the Network in accelerating the implementation of the policy and strategy for gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system;

4. Also stresses the need to leverage existing inter-agency networks, including the Inter-agency Network on Women and Gender Equality, the United Nations Evaluation Group and the Representatives of Internal Audit Services of the United Nations Organizations and Multilateral Financial Institutions, to take increased responsibility for the implementation of relevant action plan performance indicators;

5. Notes with appreciation the important and extensive work of the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) for more effective and coherent gender mainstreaming across the United Nations and its role in leading, coordinating and promoting accountability of the United Nations system in its work on gender equality and the empowerment of women, as established by the General Assembly in its resolution 64/289, and recognizes its role in assisting Member States upon their request;

6. Requests the United Nations system, including its agencies, funds and programmes, within their respective mandates, to accelerate the full and effective mainstreaming of a gender perspective, commensurate with gender equality goals, in accordance with previous Economic and Social Council resolutions, in particular resolution 2008/34 of 25 July 2008, and General Assembly resolutions 64/289 and 67/226, including by:

(a) Mainstreaming a gender perspective into all its operational mechanisms, inter alia, the United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks and other development frameworks;

(b) Ensuring that managers provide strong leadership and support, within the United Nations system, to advance gender mainstreaming;

(c) Increasing investment in and focus on outputs and outcomes relating to gender equality and the empowerment of women;

(d) Strengthening monitoring, evaluation and reporting so as to allow for system-wide assessment of progress in gender mainstreaming;

(e) Mobilizing and developing sufficient gender expertise for planning, implementation and gender-related resource allocation and tracking;

(f) Mainstreaming gender-responsive planning and budgeting and intensifying the use of gender marker systems, including in the humanitarian programme cycle;

(g) Strengthening capacities and using existing resources, including institutions and infrastructure, to assist in the development and application of unified training modules and tools on gender mainstreaming;

7. Also requests the United Nations system to continue and increase support to Member States, with their agreement and consent, in the implementation of national policies for the achievement of gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls, inter alia, by providing support and capacity development to national machineries for the advancement of women and girls and related national entities;

8. Welcomes the report on the second year of implementation of the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women, and commends the progress made under the leadership of UN-Women in the performance of the United Nations system on gender mainstreaming;

9. Requests the continued use of reporting under the System-wide Action Plan to inform the report of the Secretary-General on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, in order to measure the progress of the United Nations system on gender mainstreaming at the corporate level against the baseline defined in 2013;

10. Encourages the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination and senior managers to continue to direct their attention to promoting gender mainstreaming in the United Nations system;

11. Recognizes that large gaps remain between policy and practice and that, while building United Nations staff capacities is very important, additional efforts, such as those recommended in the report of the Secretary-General, would enable the entire United Nations system to meet its commitments and obligations with respect to gender mainstreaming;

12. Requests the United Nations system, including its agencies, funds and programmes, within their respective organizational mandates, to continue to work collaboratively to enhance and accelerate gender mainstreaming within the United Nations system, including by:

(a) Fully implementing the System-wide Action Plan, including ensuring 100 per cent reporting compliance by all relevant entities, in order to meet its targets;

(b) Investing in adequate human and financial resources to address shortcomings that threaten to impede progress, including in the areas of gender policies, capacity development, education and training resource tracking and allocation, the equal representation of women and organizational culture;

(c) Supporting efforts by the governing bodies of United Nations entities to devote adequate attention to gender mainstreaming in their plans and activities;

(d) Ensuring that the various accountability mechanisms of the United Nations system provide for more coherent, accurate and effective monitoring, evaluation and reporting on gender equality results and common indicators on gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls;

(e) Ensuring the tracking of gender-related resource allocation and expenditure, including through the promotion of the use of gender markers that apply similar standards and principles to allow for comparability and aggregation;

(f) Continuing to better align gender equality programming with national priorities across sectors, as requested by the Member State concerned, with the aim of mainstreaming gender perspectives into all legislation, policies and programmes, and supporting national and regional preparations for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action;

(g) Strengthening the coordination of gender-responsive operational activities among entities of the United Nations system through existing coordination mechanisms at the country level and in partnership, where appropriate, with national stakeholders;

(h) Instituting greater accountability in evaluations conducted by United Nations country teams by including gender perspectives in such evaluations;

(i) Empowering resident coordinators and humanitarian coordinators to promote gender mainstreaming and to expand and strengthen the use by country teams of the United Nations Development Group performance indicators on gender equality (gender score-card), including in the context of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, as a planning, accountability, monitoring, evaluation and reporting tool for assessing the effectiveness of gender mainstreaming;

(j) Substantially increasing the investment in and focus on outcomes and outputs relating to gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework programmes, including by strengthening the predictability of the funding, broadening the donor base and increasing the flexibility of non-core resources;

(k) Acquiring appropriate technical expertise for gender mainstreaming into programme planning and implementation to ensure that gender dimensions are systematically addressed, and in this regard drawing on the gender equality expertise available in the United Nations system, including at UN-Women and from gender advisers, to assist in the preparation of United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks and other relevant programming frameworks;

(l) Collecting, analysing, disseminating and using accurate, reliable, comparable and relevant data, disaggregated by, inter alia, sex, age and disability, in a regular and systematic manner, in order to guide country programming, to support the preparation of organization-wide and country-level documents, such as the strategic, programmatic and results-based frameworks and evaluations, and to continue to promote and refine their tools for measuring progress and impact;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2015 a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including on the promotion of accountability at both the national and the global levels and on progress made in the implementation of the System-wide Action Plan.

Human rights of women

Palestinian women

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/17 [YUN 2013, p. 419], a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/2014/6] reviewed the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women from October 2012 to September 2013 (see p. 560).

On 12 June, the Economic and Social Council took action on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women in resolution 2014/1 (see p. 562).

Trafficking in women and girls

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/145 [YUN 2012, p. 1110], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/224] on trafficking in women and girls, which provided information on measures taken by 28 Member States and 10 UN entities to combat the practice since his last report [YUN 2012, p. 1109]. United Nations bodies continued to adopt resolutions and recommendations to address human trafficking, including trafficking in women and girls. At its sixty-eighth session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/192 [YUN 2013, p. 1249] on improving coordination of efforts against trafficking in persons. At the same session, a high-level meeting was held on the Global Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons (13–14 May 2013). Other UN bodies also adopted legally binding agreements, resolutions and conclusions relating to trafficking. On 14 June, for example, the annual International Labour Conference adopted a legally binding protocol to the International Labour Organization's Convention No. 29, concerning forced or compulsory labour.

During the reporting period, actions were taken at all levels to prevent and address trafficking in persons, many of which were focused on trafficking in women and children. The majority of States, however, did not distinguish between responses relating to girls and those relating more broadly to children. Adherence to relevant international instruments—such as the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its two supplementing Protocols, and the Convention on the Rights of the Child and/or the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women—increased, and the majority of reporting States carried out legal reforms to varying degrees. While States were making some efforts to ensure that existing and new laws were enforced and that members of the police, prosecutors and the judiciary were adequately trained, prosecution rates continued to be low. Few Member States reported on improving the prevention of trafficking in women and girls in humanitarian situations, conflict environment and other emergencies. Many States continued to find it difficult to identify trafficking victims and few of them reported collaboration with the private sector.

The Secretary-General recommended that all States ensure that the responses to trafficking took into account the needs of women and girls, especially in addressing sexual exploitation and domestic servitude; that laws were developed in accordance with the standards set by the Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and associated Protocols and that sentences were in line with those for other serious crimes. Efforts must continue to ensure the gender-sensitive enforcement of anti-trafficking legislation and to hold perpetrators accountable for their crimes; and to ensure that national action plans were adequately funded and evaluated. States should take more action to address the factors that made women and girls vulnerable to trafficking, particularly in relation to reducing poverty, unemployment and providing access to education. Furthermore, States should provide residency to victims, as well as long-term support to enable victims to begin new lives.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, submitted to the Human Rights Council her thematic report [A/HRC/26/37] on the first decade of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, covering the period from 1 August 2013 to 28 February 2014. Additional reports by the Special Rapporteur covered topics such as partnerships with national rapporteurs on trafficking in persons, as well as official visits to different countries [A/HRC/26/37/Add.1–11]. In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly another report [A/69/269] of the Special Rapporteur which, besides the activities presented in her report to the Human Rights Council, summarized her activities from 1 March to 31 July 2014 (see p. 873).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/481], adopted resolution 69/149 without vote [agenda item 27 (a)].

Trafficking in women and girls

The General Assembly,

Reiterating its strong condemnation of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, which constitutes a serious threat to human dignity, human rights and development,

Recalling all international conventions that deal specifically with and address issues relevant to the problem of trafficking in women and girls, such as the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto, in particular the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, as well as relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions and the Human Rights Council on the issue,

Recognizing the crucial importance of the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, which entered into force on 25 December 2003 and which provided, for the first time, an internationally agreed definition of the crime of trafficking in persons aimed at the prevention of trafficking in persons, the protection of victims and the prosecution of the perpetrators,

Welcoming the outcome of the seventh session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, held in Vienna from 6 to 10 October 2014, in which the Conference took a further step towards identifying an appropriate mechanism or mechanisms to review the implementation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto,

Reaffirming the provisions pertaining to trafficking in women and girls contained in the outcome documents of relevant international conferences and summits, in particular the strategic objective on the issue of trafficking contained in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Reaffirming also the commitment made by world leaders at the Millennium Summit, the 2005 World Summit and the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals to devise, enforce and strengthen effective measures to combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in persons in order to counter the demand for trafficked victims and to protect the victims,

Welcoming in particular the efforts of States, United Nations bodies and agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to address the problem of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, including the United Nations Global Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 64/293 of 30 July 2010,

Taking note of the adoption by the International Labour Conference, at its 103rd session, on 11 June 2014, of the Protocol to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) and Recommendation No. 203 on supplementary measures for the effective suppression of forced labour, of the International Labour Organization, which specify that measures to be taken for the prevention of forced or compulsory labour shall include specific actions against trafficking in persons for the purposes of forced or compulsory labour,

Welcoming, in the agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-eighth Session, the commitment of Governments to take appropriate measures to raise public awareness of the issue of trafficking in persons, particularly women and girls, including the factors that make women and girls vulnerable to trafficking, to discourage, with a view to eliminating, the demand that fosters all forms of exploitation, including sexual exploitation and forced labour, and to review and adopt the laws, regulations and penalties necessary to deal with this issue and publicize them to emphasize that trafficking is a serious crime,

Welcoming also the observance, on 30 July 2014, of the first World Day against Trafficking in Persons, in the context of the need for raising awareness of the situation of victims of human trafficking and for the promotion and protection of their rights,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken, including the reports of human rights treaty bodies and the Special Rapporteurs of the Human Rights Council on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, on violence against women, its causes and consequences, on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children, and by United Nations agencies and other concerned intergovernmental and governmental organizations, within their existing mandates, as well as civil society, to address the serious crime of trafficking in persons, and encouraging them to continue doing so and to share their knowledge and best practices as widely as possible,

Noting the renewal by the Human Rights Council, at its twenty-sixth session, of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, and the fact that part of her task is to integrate a gender- and age-specific perspective throughout the work of her mandate, inter alia, through the identification of gender- and age-specific vulnerabilities in relation to the issue of trafficking in persons,

Acknowledging the inclusion of gender-related crimes in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, which entered into force on 1 July 2002,

Bearing in mind the obligations of States to exercise due diligence to prevent trafficking in persons, to investigate and punish perpetrators of trafficking in persons and to protect and empower victims, and that not doing so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the victims,

Seriously concerned that an increasing number of women and girls are being trafficked, including to developed countries, as well as within and between regions and States, and that men and boys are also victims of trafficking, including for sexual exploitation,

Recognizing that certain efforts against trafficking in persons lack the gender and age sensitivity needed to effectively address the situation of women and girls, who are particularly vulnerable to trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation, forced labour, services and other forms of exploitation, thus highlighting the need to incorporate a gender- and age-sensitive approach into all anti-trafficking efforts,

Recognizing also the need to address the impact of globalization on the particular problem of trafficking in women and children, in particular girls,

Recognizing further that poverty, unemployment, lack of socioeconomic opportunities, gender-based violence, discrimination and marginalization are some of the contributing factors that make persons vulnerable to trafficking,

Recognizing the heightened vulnerability to trafficking of women and girls in humanitarian crisis situations, including in conflict and post-conflict environments, natural disasters and other emergency environments,

Recognizing also the need to reinforce efforts regarding the provision of relevant documents, such as birth registration documents, in order to lower the risk of being trafficked and to help to identify victims of trafficking in persons,

Recognizing further that, despite the progress made, challenges to preventing and combating trafficking in women and girls remain and that further efforts should be made to adopt adequate legislation and programmes to implement such legislation and to continue improving the collection of reliable data disaggregated by sex and age and of statistics that would allow proper analysis of the nature, extent and risk factors of trafficking in women and girls,

Recognizing the importance of exploring the link between migration and trafficking in persons in order to further efforts to protect women migrant workers from violence, discrimination, exploitation and abuse,

Concerned about the use of new information and communications technologies, including the Internet, for purposes of recruiting for the exploitation of the prostitution of others, including for exploiting women and children and for child pornography, paedophilia and any other forms of sexual exploitation of children, as well as for forced marriage and forced labour,

Concerned also about the increasing activities of transnational criminal organizations and others that profit from international trafficking in persons, especially women and children, without regard to dangerous and inhuman conditions and in flagrant violation of national laws and international standards,

Noting with concern that women and girls are also vulnerable to the risk of trafficking in persons for the purpose of organ removal, and in this regard taking note of Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice resolution 23/2 of 16 May 2014, entitled "Preventing and combating trafficking in human organs and trafficking in persons for the purpose of organ removal" adopted by the Commission at its twenty-third session,

Recognizing that victims of trafficking are particularly exposed to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and that women and girl victims are often subject to multiple forms of discrimination and violence, including on the grounds of their gender, age, ethnicity, disability, culture and religion, as well as their origin, and that those forms of discrimination themselves may fuel trafficking in persons,

Noting with concern that some of the demand fostering sexual exploitation, exploitative labour and the illegal removal of organs is met by trafficking in persons,

Acknowledging that women and girl victims of trafficking, on account of their gender, are further disadvantaged and marginalized by a general lack of information on or awareness and recognition of their human rights and by the stigmatization often associated with trafficking, as well as by the obstacles they meet in gaining access to accurate information and recourse mechanisms in cases of the violation of their rights, and that special measures are required for their protection and to increase their awareness,

Encouraging the Commission on the Status of Women to consider the issue of trafficking in women and girls at its fifty-ninth session, within the framework of the review of progress made in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, as well as opportunities for achieving gender equality and the empowerment of women in the post-2015 development agenda,

Welcoming the decision by the General Assembly, in its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, that the proposal of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals contained in its report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the Assembly, and taking note with appreciation of the reference to ensuring gender equality and empowerment of all women and girls contained in the proposal of the Open Working Group,

Reaffirming the importance of bilateral, subregional, regional and international cooperation mechanisms and initiatives, including information exchanges on best practices, of Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to address the problem of trafficking in persons, especially women and children,

Taking note of the second consultative meeting on strengthening partnerships with national rapporteurs on trafficking in persons and equivalent mechanisms, held in Bangkok in May 2014, and the establishment of an informal network of such mechanisms from all over the world in order to address trafficking in persons in a consistent manner, exchange information and best practices and build on different national experiences,

Reaffirming that global efforts, including international cooperation and technical assistance programmes, to eradicate trafficking in persons, especially women and children, demand the strong political commitment, coordinated and coherent efforts and active cooperation of all Governments of countries of origin, transit and destination,

Recognizing that policies and programmes for prevention, protection, rehabilitation, repatriation and reintegration should be developed through a gender- and age-sensitive, comprehensive and multidisciplinary approach, with concern for the security of the victims and respect for the full enjoyment of their human rights and with the involvement of all actors in countries of origin, transit and destination,

Convinced of the need to protect and assist all victims of trafficking, with full respect for the human rights and dignity of the victims,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General, which provides information on measures by States and activities within the United Nations system to tackle trafficking in women and girls;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the information submitted by Member States and United Nations entities on measures and activities taken to combat trafficking in women and girls, and urges Member States and United Nations entities that have not done so to submit the requested information for inclusion in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Takes note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on trafficking in persons, especially women and children;

4. Urges Member States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to, as a matter of priority, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, taking into consideration the central role of those instruments in the fight against trafficking in persons, and urges States parties to those instruments to implement them fully and effectively;

5. Urges Member States to consider signing and ratifying and States parties to implement the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Optional Protocol thereto, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto, and the Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as well as the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) and the Protocol thereto, the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), and the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), of the International Labour Organization;

6. Urges Member States, the United Nations and other international, regional and subregional organizations, as well as civil society, including non-governmental organizations, the private sector and the media, to fully and effectively implement the relevant provisions of the United Nations Global Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons and the activities outlined therein;

7. Welcomes the efforts of Governments, United Nations bodies and agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to address the particular problem of trafficking in women and girls, and encourages them to further enhance their efforts and cooperation, including by sharing their knowledge, technical expertise and best practices as widely as possible;

8. Also welcomes the convening of the Regional Ministerial Conference on Human Trafficking and Smuggling in the Horn of Africa, in Khartoum, from 13 to 16 October 2014, organized by the African Union in collaboration with the Government of the Sudan, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organization for Migration, in this regard takes note with appreciation of the outcome document of the Conference, known as the Khartoum Declaration, and calls for its implementation, including through technical cooperation and capacity-building by the United Nations and the international community;

9. Encourages the United Nations system to mainstream, as appropriate, the issue of trafficking in persons, especially women and girls, into its broader policies and programmes aimed at addressing economic and social development, human rights, the rule of law, good governance, education, health and natural disaster and post-conflict reconstruction;

10. Welcomes the focus given by the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) to ending violence against women and to increasing women's access to economic opportunities, as well as its work on building effective partnerships for the empowerment of women, which will contribute to the efforts to combat trafficking in persons;

11. Calls upon Governments to intensify their efforts to address, with a view to eliminating, the demand that fosters the trafficking of women and girls for all forms of exploitation and in this regard to put in place or to enhance preventive measures, including legislative and punitive measures to deter exploiters of trafficked persons, as well as ensure their accountability;

12. Acknowledges the drafting of the basic principles on the right to an effective remedy for victims of trafficking in persons;

13. Calls upon Governments to strengthen measures aimed at advancing gender equality and empowering women and girls by, inter alia, enhancing their participation and leadership in society, including through education, economic empowerment and promoting an increase in the number of women assuming decision-making roles in both the public and private sectors, and to take further appropriate measures to address the increasing rate of homelessness of and inadequate housing for women in order to reduce their vulnerability to being trafficked;

14. Also calls upon Governments to take appropriate measures to address the factors that increase vulnerability to being trafficked, including poverty and gender inequality, as well as other factors that encourage the particular problem of trafficking in women and girls for exploitation in prostitution and other forms of commercialized sex, forced marriage, forced labour and organ removal, in order to prevent and eliminate such trafficking, including by strengthening existing legislation, with a view to providing better protection of the rights of women and girls and to punishing perpetrators, including public officials engaging in or facilitating human trafficking, through, as appropriate, criminal and civil measures;

15. Calls upon Governments, the international community and all other organizations and entities that deal with conflict, post-conflict, disaster and other emergency situations to address the heightened vulnerability of women and girls to trafficking and exploitation and associated gender-based violence and to include the prevention of the trafficking of affected women and girls in all such national, regional and international initiatives;

16. Urges Governments to devise, enforce and strengthen effective gender- and age-sensitive measures to combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in women and girls, including for sexual and economic exploitation, as part of a comprehensive anti-trafficking strategy that integrates a human rights perspective, and to draw up, as appropriate, national action plans in this regard;

17. Also urges Governments to ensure that the prevention of and responses to trafficking in persons continue to take into account the specific needs of women and girls and their participation in and contribution to all phases of preventing and responding to trafficking, especially in addressing specific forms of exploitation, such as sexual exploitation;

18. Further urges Governments, in cooperation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to support and allocate resources to strengthen preventive action, in particular education for women and men, as well as for girls and boys, on gender equality, self-respect and mutual respect, and campaigns, carried out in collaboration with civil society, to increase public awareness of the issue at the national and grass-roots levels, including anti-trafficking awareness-raising campaigns targeted at groups that are at increased risk of becoming victims of trafficking, as well as at those who may fuel the demand for the exploitation of trafficked persons and/or their labour;

19. Reiterates the importance of continued coordination among, inter alia, the Special Rapporteurs of the Human Rights Council on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, in order to avoid unnecessary duplication in their activities in fulfilment of their mandates;

20. Urges Governments to strengthen measures to eliminate sex tourism demand, especially for children, through all possible preventive actions, including legislative measures and other relevant policies and programmes;

21. Encourages the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the World Tourism Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to promote their global campaign urging travellers to support the fight against trafficking in persons, especially women and girls;

22. Urges Governments to develop age-appropriate educational and training programmes and policies aimed at preventing sex tourism and trafficking, giving special emphasis to the protection of young women and children;

23. Encourages Member States to establish or strengthen national programmes and to engage in bilateral, subregional, regional and international cooperation, including by forging regional initiatives or plans of action, to address the problem of trafficking in persons through, inter alia, the enhancement of information-sharing, data disaggregated by sex and age, specific data collection and other technical capacities and mutual legal assistance, as well as the combating of corruption and laundering of proceeds derived from trafficking, including for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation, and to ensure, as appropriate, that such agreements and initiatives are particularly responsive to the problem of trafficking as it affects women and girls;

24. Calls upon all Governments to criminalize all forms of trafficking in persons, recognizing its increasing occurrence for purposes of sexual exploitation, commercial sexual exploitation and abuse, sex tourism and forced labour, and to bring to justice and punish the offenders and intermediaries involved, including public officials involved with trafficking in persons, whether local or foreign, through the competent national authorities, either in the country of origin of the offender or in the country in which the abuse occurs, in accordance with the due process of law, as well as to penalize persons in authority found guilty of sexually assaulting victims of trafficking in their custody;

25. Urges Governments, in accordance with their respective legal systems, to take all appropriate measures, including through policies and legislation, to ensure that victims of trafficking are protected from prosecution or punishment for acts those victims have been compelled to commit as a direct consequence of having been trafficked and that the victims do not suffer from revictimization as a result of actions taken by Government authorities, and encourages Governments to prevent, within their legal framework and in accordance with national policies, victims of trafficking in persons from being prosecuted or punished as a direct consequence of their illegal entry or residence;

26. Invites Governments to consider establishing or strengthening a national mechanism, with the participation of civil society, as appropriate, including non-governmental organizations, to ensure a holistic and coordinated approach to anti-trafficking policies and measures, to encourage the exchange of information and to report on data, root causes, factors and trends in trafficking in persons, especially women and girls, and to include data on victims of trafficking disaggregated by sex and age;

27. Invites the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, to continue cooperating with international, regional and national mechanisms to combat trafficking in persons, in consultation with Governments, relevant treaty bodies, special procedures, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, civil society, including non-governmental organizations, national human rights institutions and other sources, including victims of trafficking or their representatives, as appropriate;

28. Encourages Governments and relevant United Nations bodies, from within existing resources, to take appropriate measures to raise public awareness of the issue of trafficking in persons, particularly women and girls, including the factors that make women and girls vulnerable to trafficking, to discourage, with a view to eliminating, the demand that fosters all forms of exploitation, including sexual exploitation and forced labour, to publicize the laws, regulations and penalties relating to this issue and to emphasize that trafficking is a serious crime;

29. Calls upon concerned Governments to allocate resources, as appropriate, to provide access to appropriate programmes for the physical, psychological and social recovery of victims of trafficking, including sexual and reproductive health-care services that include affordable treatment, care and support services for HIV/AIDS and sexually transmitted infections, free of stigma and discrimination, as well as comprehensive information and voluntary counselling, and to take measures to cooperate with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide for the social, medical and psychological care of the victims;

30. Encourages Governments, in cooperation with intergovernmental and civil society organizations, to undertake or strengthen campaigns aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations, rights and responsibilities with respect to migration, as well as information on the risks of irregular migration and the ways and means used by traffickers, to enable women to make informed decisions and to prevent them from becoming victims of trafficking;

31. Also encourages Governments to review and strengthen, as appropriate, the enforcement of relevant labour and other laws within their territories or jurisdictions that are aimed at, or have the effect of, requiring business enterprises, including recruitment agencies, to prevent and combat human trafficking in supply chains, and to periodically assess the adequacy of such laws and address any gaps;

32. Invites the business sector to consider the adoption of ethical codes of conduct to ensure decent work and to prevent any form of exploitative practices that foster trafficking;

33. Encourages Governments to intensify collaboration with non-governmental organizations to develop and implement gender- and age-sensitive programmes for effective counselling, training and reintegration into society of victims of trafficking and programmes that provide shelter and helplines to victims or potential victims;

34. Urges Governments to provide or strengthen training for, and to raise awareness among, law enforcement, judicial, immigration and other relevant officials on the prevention and combating of trafficking in persons, including the sexual exploitation of women and girls, and in this regard calls upon Governments to ensure that the treatment of victims of trafficking, especially by law enforcement officials, immigration officers, consular officials, social workers and other first response officials, is conducted with full respect for the human rights of those victims and with gender and age sensitivity and observes the principles of non-discrimination, including the prohibition of racial discrimination;

35. Invites Member States to provide training for law enforcement and border control officials, as well as medical personnel, in identifying potential cases of trafficking in persons for the purpose of organ removal;

36. Invites Governments to take steps to ensure that criminal justice procedures and witness protection programmes are sensitive to the particular situation of trafficked women and girls, and that they are supported and assisted, as appropriate, in making complaints to the police or other authorities, without fear, and are available, when required, by the criminal justice system, and to ensure that during this time they have access to gender- and age-sensitive protection and, as appropriate, social, medical, financial and legal assistance, including the possibility of obtaining compensation for damages suffered;

37. Also invites Governments to intensify efforts aimed at the speedy disposition of cases of trafficking in persons and, in cooperation with, inter alia, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to devise, enforce and strengthen systems and mechanisms for combating trafficking in persons;

38. Further invites Governments to encourage media providers, including Internet service providers, to adopt or strengthen self-regulatory measures to promote the responsible use of media, particularly the Internet, with a view to eliminating the exploitation of women and children, in particular girls, which could foster trafficking;

39. Invites the business sector, in particular the tourism, travel and telecommunications industries, relevant recruitment agencies and mass media organizations, to cooperate with Governments in eliminating trafficking in women and children, in particular girls, including through the dissemination by the media of information regarding the dangers of trafficking, the means used by traffickers, the rights of trafficked persons and the services available to victims of trafficking;

40. Stresses the need for the systematic collection of data disaggregated by sex and age and comprehensive studies at both the national and the international levels and the development of common methodologies and internationally defined indicators to make it possible to develop relevant and comparable figures, and encourages Governments to enhance information-sharing and data-collection capacity as a way of promoting cooperation to combat the trafficking problem;

41. Invites Governments, United Nations bodies, agencies and special mechanisms, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the private sector to undertake collaborative and joint research and studies on trafficking in women and girls that can serve as a basis for policy formulation or change;

42. Invites Governments, with the support of the United Nations, when necessary, and other intergovernmental organizations, taking into account best practices, to formulate training manuals and other informational materials and to provide training for law enforcement, judicial and other relevant officials and medical and support personnel, with a view to sensitizing them to the special needs of women and girl victims;

43. Encourages Governments and relevant intergovernmental bodies and international organizations to ensure that military, peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel deployed in conflict, post-conflict and other emergency situations are provided with training on conduct that does not promote, facilitate or exploit trafficking in women and girls, including for sexual exploitation, and to raise the awareness of such personnel about the potential risks to victims of conflict and other emergency situations, including natural disasters, of being trafficked;

44. Invites States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenants on Human Rights to include information and disaggregated statistics on trafficking in women and girls as part of their national reports to their respective committees and to work towards developing a common methodology and statistics to obtain comparable data;

45. Invites States to continue to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery and to the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund for Victims of Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children;

46. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report that compiles information on successful interventions and strategies, as well as the gaps, in addressing the gender dimensions of the problem of trafficking in persons and provides recommendations on the strengthening of human rights-based, gender- and age-sensitive approaches within comprehensive and balanced efforts to address trafficking in persons.

The girl child

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/146 [YUN 2013, p. 1120], the Secretary-General in a July note [A/69/165] informed the Assembly that the summary report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on the panel discussion on preventing and eliminating child, early and forced marriage was contained in document A/HRC/27/34 (see p. 876).

On 18 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 69/156 (see p. 877), requested the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to the Assembly, before the end of its seventieth session, on progress towards ending child, early and forced marriage worldwide since the issuance of the OHCHR report of 2 April [A/HRC/26/22 & Corr.1].

UN machinery

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women

As at 31 December, 188 States were parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. The State of Palestine acceded on 2 April.

As at 31 December, the Optional Protocol to the Convention, which was adopted by the Assembly in resolution 54/4 [YUN 1999, p. 1100] and entered into force in 2000 [YUN 2000, p. 1123], had 105 States parties. Tajikistan ratified the Optional Protocol on 22 July.

CEDAW

In 2014, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1149] to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention, held three regular sessions [A/69/38 & A/70/38].

Fifty-seventh session. At its fifty-seventh session (Geneva, 10–28 February) [A/69/38], CEDAW adopted concluding observations on the reports of Bahrain, Cameroon, Finland, Iraq, Kazakhstan, Qatar and Sierra Leone; considered the follow-up reports from Bangladesh, Italy, Lesotho and Sri Lanka; and considered additional information sent by Myanmar. CEDAW also considered a report of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) [CEDAW/C/57/2] and a report of the International Labour Organization (ILO) [CEDAW/C/57/3]. The Committee adopted a statement on the post-2015 development agenda and the elimination of discrimination against women [A/69/38 (dec. 57/I)], as well as a statement on sexual and reproductive health rights [dec. 57/II]; decided to entrust the working group on working methods with the task of reviewing the rules of procedure of the Committee [dec. 57/III]; confirmed the members of the pre-session working group for the fifty-ninth session [dec. 57/IV]; decided to mandate the OHCHR Petitions and Inquiries Section to service the Committee's work under article 8 of the Optional Protocol [dec. 57/V]; designated the Chair and Vice-Chair of the task force on inquiries and decided to expand the task force to include one additional member, in addition to the existing nine [dec. 57/VI]; decided to establish a task force on women in conflict prevention, conflict and post-conflict situations [dec. 57/VII]; and expanded the working group on gender-related dimensions of refugee status, asylum and statelessness to include one more member, in addition to the existing seven [dec. 57/VIII].

Fifty-eighth session. At its fifty-eighth session (Geneva, 30 June–18 July) [A/70/38], CEDAW prepared concluding observations on the reports of the Central African Republic, Georgia, India, Lithuania, Mauritania, Peru, Swaziland and the Syrian Arab Republic; considered the follow-up reports from Belarus, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Liechtenstein, Mauritius, Paraguay, the Republic of Korea and Singapore; and considered additional information received from the Netherlands and Turkey. CEDAW also considered a note by the secretariat on ways of expediting the Committee's work [CEDAW/C/58/2]; a report of UNESCO [CEDAW/C/58/3] and a report of ILO [CEDAW/C/58/4]. The Committee adopted a statement on the situation of women in Gaza [A/70/38 (dec. 58/I)]; decided to offer, on a pilot basis and under certain conditions, a simplified reporting procedure to those States parties that so wished for the submission of their periodic reports as from 1 January 2015 [dec. 58/II]; adopted its findings and recommendations in relation to inquiry No. 2011/1 and decided to transmit them to the State party concerned—Canada [dec. 58/III]; decided to discuss, at an informal meeting during its fifty-ninth session, the modalities of its consideration of inquiries under article 8 of the Optional Protocol, including adequate time and resources and the issue of confidentiality [dec. 58/IV]; decided to appoint three members as focal points for the cooperation of the Committee with the Intergovernmental Commission on Human Rights of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations [dec. 58/V]; and confirmed five members of the pre-sessional working group for the sixtieth session [dec. 58/VI].

On 25 July, by decision 2014/249, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretariat note [E/2014/3] transmitting the results of the fifty-fourth [YUN 2013, p. 1126], fifty-fifth [ibid.] and fifty-sixth [ibid., p. 1127] sessions of the Committee.

Fifty-ninth session. At its fifty-ninth session (Geneva, 20 October–7 November) [A/70/38], CEDAW adopted concluding observations on the reports of Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, China, Ghana, Guinea, Poland, Solomon Islands and Venezuela; and considered the follow-up reports of Brazil, Costa Rica, Kenya, Montenegro and Norway. CEDAW also considered a report of ILO [CEDAW/C/59/2] and a report of UNESCO [CEDAW/C/59/3]. The Committee adopted joint general recommendation No. 31 of CEDAW/general comment No. 18 of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on harmful practices [A/70/38 (dec. 59/I)], as well as general recommendation No. 32 on the refugee status, asylum, nationality and statelessness of women [dec. 59/II]; decided to systematically apply the guidelines on the independence of members of the human rights treaty bodies (the Addis Ababa guidelines) [YUN 2012, p. 619] from 1 January 2015 [dec. 59/III]; decided to entrust its pre-sessional working group with the preparation of draft lists of issues prior to reporting under the simplified reporting procedure [dec. 58/II] and to limit the number of questions in those lists to a maximum of 25 [dec. 59/IV]; decided to amend rule 24 of its rules of procedure and have English, French and Spanish as the Committee's official working languages and to have, from 1 January 2015 to 31 December 2016, Arabic at its fourth official language [dec. 59/V]; decided to establish, on a pilot basis, a Working Group on Inquiries under the Optional Protocol, consisting of no more than five Committee members and reflecting equitable geographical representation [dec. 59/VI]; decided to publish on the OHCHR website a full report of an inquiry setting out the Committee's findings, comments and recommendations upon the completion of all proceedings related to the conduct of the inquiry as well as the expiry of the time limit pursuant to article 8, paragraph 4, of the Optional Protocol [dec. 59/VII]; decided that the Working Group on Communications under the Optional Protocol should meet immediately prior to the regular sessions of the Committee and that the thirty-first session of the Working Group would be held from 10 to 13 February 2015 in Geneva [dec. 59/VIII]; appointed the rapporteur on follow-up and the alternate rapporteur, both for a period of two years, from 1 January 2015 to 31 December 2016 [dec. 59/IX]; confirmed the four members of the pre-sessional working group for the sixty-first session [dec. 59/X]; and entrusted a member with exploring ways for mobilizing extrabudgetary financial resources for the Committee [dec. 59/XI].

Commission on the Status of Women

At its fifty-eighth session (New York, 10–21 March) [E/2014/27], the Commission on the Status of Women, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2009/15 [YUN 2009, p. 1155], considered as its priority theme “Challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals for women and girls”. It also considered as its review theme “Access and participation of women and girls in education, training, science and technology, including for the promotion of women's equal access to full employment and decent work”. It further considered an emerging issue, “Women's access to productive resources”. As part of its consideration of those themes, the Commission held one high-level round table and five panel discussions.

The Commission adopted agreed conclusions on the priority theme and recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women. It further brought to the attention of the Council three resolutions it had adopted on the following topics: release of women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts [E/2014/27 (res. 58/1)]; gender equality and the empowerment of women in natural disasters [res. 58/2]; and women, the girl child and HIV and AIDS [res. 58/3].

The Commission also brought to the Council's attention a decision [dec. 58/101] by which it took note of the following documents: the report of the Executive Director of UN-Women on the normative aspects of the work of that entity [E/CN.6/2014/2]; the reports of the Secretary-General on the challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) for women and girls [E/CN.6/2014/3], on the progress in mainstreaming a gender perspective in national policies and programmes [E/CN.6/2014/4], on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women [E/CN.6/2014/6], on the release of women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts [E/CN.6/2014/7], on actions to strengthen linkages between gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls, and the elimination of preventable maternal mortality and morbidity [E/CN.6/2014/11], on women, the girl child and HIV and AIDS [E/CN.6/2014/12], on gender equality and the empowerment of women in natural disasters [E/CN.6/2014/13] and on ways to enhance the impact of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/CN.6/2014/14]; a note by the Secretariat containing a discussion guide for the high-level round table on the challenges and achievements in the implementation of the MDGs for women and girls [E/CN.6/2014/5], and notes by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of UN-Women on the activities of the United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women [A/HRC/26/17-E/CN.6/2014/8] and on the proposed strategic framework for the period 2016–2017: Programme 14, Gender equality and empowerment of women [E/CN.6/2014/CRP.3].

By decision 2014/216 of 12 June, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its fifty-eighth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its fifty-ninth (2015) session.

Communication. In a 19 December letter [E/CN.6/2015/7] to the Commission Chairperson, the Economic and Social Council President requested the Commission's substantive contributions to the themes for the 2015 session of the Council and informed the Commission of the theme for the 2016 session of the Council. The Council President also informed the Commission of the 2014 session of the Council and its adopted mandates that were relevant to the Commission.

Other reports. Documents issued during the year, to be addressed during the Commission's 2015 session, included a report of the UN-Women Executive Director [E/CN.6/2015/2]; reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly [E/CN.6/2015/3] and on the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women [E/CN.6/2015/5]; and notes by the Secretariat on a discussion guide for the ministerial round tables to be held under the 2015 overall theme [E/CN.6/2015/4] and on the results of the fifty-eighth and fifty-ninth sessions of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women [E/CN.6/2015/9].

Future organization and working methods

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/18 [YUN 2013, p. 1129], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/2014/14] reviewing the functioning of the Commission's methods of work; and made recommendations for consideration by the Commission with a view to further enhancing the impact of its work.

The Commission's methods of work provided for: the consideration of one priority theme and one review per session; discussion of emerging issues, trends and new approaches to issues affecting the situation of women or equality between women and men that required urgent attention; and participation of stakeholders, including non-governmental organizations. The working methods sought to contribute to advancing and accelerating the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcomes of the twenty-third special session of the General Assembly at all levels.

The multi-year thematic approach, which encompassed one priority theme and one review theme per session, had enabled the Commission to undertake a systematic follow-up to the Beijing Platform for Action and to take up themes and issues that required further consideration in the light of new developments. The approach also strengthened the Commission's capacity to undertake a careful analysis of the selected themes, with sufficient lead time to facilitate substantive preparations. The Secretary-General recommended that the Commission continue to use a multi-year thematic approach to its work.

With regard to the priority theme, the Secretary-General recommended that the Commission hold a general discussion, with a focus on the priority theme, to consolidate its role and its strategic value as the primary global forum for the promotion of gender equality and women's empowerment; maintain and further enhance the interactive nature of the consideration of its priority theme, with the participation of high-level representatives as well as experts; and consider possible options for the outcome on its priority theme.

With regard to the format of the review theme, the Secretary-General recommended that the Commission retain the interactive nature of the review, and expand it through national voluntary presentations, the submission of written assessments of progress by Member States, the preparation of analysis and joint panel discussions of the Commission and the Executive Board of UN-Women in order to further enhance follow-up and implementation of its policy guidance. On the matter of the emerging issue theme, the Secretary-General recommended that the Commission retain an item on emerging issues, trends and new approaches to issues affecting the situation of women or equality between women and men that required urgent consideration, to be selected intersessionally by the Commission's bureau in consultation with Member States. On the participation of stakeholders and non-governmental organizations, the Secretary-General recommended that the Commission consider expanding opportunities for non-governmental organizations to contribute through allocating more time to their interventions during the general discussion, greater priority to their interventions during panel discussions and granting a limited number of regionally diverse representatives access to negotiations. On the reform of the Economic and Social Council and implications for the work of the Commission, the Secretary-General recommended that the Commission align its thematic priorities with those of the Council in order to provide effective and targeted inputs from a gender perspective.

Communications on the status of women

At a closed meeting on 19 March [E/2014/27], the Commission considered the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women [E/CN.6/2014/CRP.2] and a note by the Secretariat transmitting the list of confidential communications concerning the status of women. The Working Group considered 67 confidential communications received by UN-Women and noted that there were 33 replies from 18 Governments.

The communications most frequently concerned sexual violence against women and girls and forced prostitution; other forms of violence, including domestic violence and female genital mutilation; abuse of power by law enforcement and military forces; serious and systematic violations of the human rights of women and girls, some of which targeted vulnerable groups such as indigenous women or women with disabilities; absence of adequate legislation to address and eliminate all forms of discrimination against women; ineffective implementation and/or enforcement of laws aimed at promoting and protecting women's human rights; and failure by States to prevent violence and discrimination against women.

While expressing appreciation for the cooperation extended by the Governments that had submitted replies to the communications received, the Working Group noted the gap between the number of communications and the number of replies received. From the replies received, the Working Group was encouraged to note that some Governments had carried out investigations into the allegations made, explained their positions or taken measures, including improving the enforcement of existing legislation; introducing programmes and services to better protect and assist women; prosecuting perpetrators of violence; making efforts to guarantee the full enjoyment of human rights by women; and promoting gender equality and the advancement of women in accordance with relevant international standards.

UN-Women

The United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), established by General Assembly resolution 64/289 [YUN 2010, p. 1396], became fully operational in 2011. That resolution consolidated and transferred to the Entity the mandates and functions of four former entities—the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the Office of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, the Division for the Advancement of Women, and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women—engaged in the field of gender equality and the empowerment of women. In 2014, the work of UN-Women continued to be guided by the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 889], the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170], Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] on women and peace and security, and the United Nations Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 49] and the Millennium Development Goals.

Executive Board

First regular session. At its first regular session of the year (New York, 20 January) [UNW/2014/1], the Executive Board adopted the report on the second regular session of 2013 [UNW/2013/10] [YUN 2013, p. 1132]; approved the proposed provisional agenda and workplan for the annual session of 2014 (see below); and adopted the draft annual workplan for the year. It also adopted one decision [dec. 2014/1] requesting UN-Women to consolidate the report on operational activities and the one on the implementation of the strategic plan into one report to be presented at its annual session in June. The session included briefings on the contribution of UN-Women to increasing women's leadership and participation in peace and security and in humanitarian response, and on a draft humanitarian response strategy.

Annual session. At the annual session (New York, 17–19 June) [UNW/2014/5], the Executive Board adopted decisions on: the report of the Executive Director on progress made on the strategic plan 2011–2013, including operational activities in 2013 [UNW/2014/2]; the report on the evaluation function for 2013 [UNW/2014/3]; and the report on internal audit and investigation activities for 2013 [UNW/2014/4].

The session included a briefing on the joint evaluation of joint programmes—implemented by UN-Women along with other UN entities and Member States—on gender equality in the UN system, which was followed by briefings on management response to such programmes; on the evaluation function of UN-Women [UNW/2014/3] and the corporate evaluation plan 2014–2017; on the “Safe Cities” initiative in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea; on the UN-Women internal audit and investigation activities for 2013 [UNW/2014/4], as well as the second annual report of the Audit Advisory Committee in relation to UN-Women [UNW/2014/4/Add.1]; and on the field visit of the Executive Board to Panama and El Salvador, which took place from 23 March to 1 April and was the first visit of its kind to Latin America in over 10 years.

Second regular session. At its second regular session (New York, 15–16 September) [UNW/2014/7], the Executive Board adopted decisions on the election of the Bureau of the Executive Board [UNW/2014/6] and on the structured financing dialogue, as contained in the compilation of decisions adopted by the Board in 2014 [UNW/2014/6]. The session included presentations on the meta-analysis of evaluations managed by UN-Women in 2013 and on the management response to that meta-analysis. Briefings were held on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and commemorative activities for the twentieth anniversary of the Fourth World Conference on Women; on the implementation of humanitarian work; and on the operational response at the country level.

All six decisions adopted by the Executive Board at its 2014 sessions were subsequently compiled in an October document [UNW/2014/6].

Election of new members. On 23 April, by decision 2014/201 A, the Economic and Social Council elected Germany, Turkey, Israel, Italy and Portugal to replace New Zealand, Iceland, Australia, Spain and Liechtenstein respectively, who were resigning their seats in the UN-Women Executive Board effective 1 January 2015. The Council also elected Denmark and Spain to replace Norway and Sweden, who were resigning their seats effective 1 January 2015.

Functional areas

Operational activities

UN-Women strategic plan 2011–2013. In April, the Executive Director submitted to the Executive Board the final report [UNW/2014/2] on progress made in the implementation of the 2011–2013 strategic plan [YUN 2011, p. 1096], including operational activities in 2013. The report contained information on how UN-Women had responded to the recommendations of Assembly resolution 67/226 [YUN 2012, p. 859] on the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system.

Milestones in 2013 included the end of a three-year establishment phase and the realization of a new regional architecture for UN-Women in the field [YUN 2012, p. 1123]; further consolidation of the inter-agency coordination role of UN-Women; measurable improvements in organizational efficiency; and tangible impacts on the lives of women and girls in some 90 countries around the world. In 2013, UN-Women delivered approximately $133 million in country programmes, an implementation rate of 88 per cent of budgeted activities. UN-Women also broke new ground in engaging with humanitarian organizations, from working with the Inter-Agency Standing Committee on humanitarian response to interventions on the ground. Important advances were also made in women's leadership and participation in peace and security processes. UN-Women played a key role in the work of the Security Council, as reflected, for example, in Council resolution 2122(2013) [YUN 2013, p. 1109], which reaffirmed gender equality and women's empowerment as “critical to efforts to maintain international peace and security”.

Promoting greater coherence and accountability in the work of the UN system on gender equality and the empowerment of women was central to the Entity's mandate through such efforts as leading the first reporting cycle for the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women. UN-Women also used innovative coordination practices. For example, within the “Delivering as one” approach of the Liberia country team, UN-Women led the development of a single framework on gender. The Entity also contributed to the plan of action of the United Nations Development Group, which contained 55 measures to be undertaken at the Headquarters level for accelerating progress towards United Nations coherence and supporting the second generation of the initiative.

On the ground, UN-Women became a global presence, supporting 24 countries in their incorporation of priorities and budgets on gender equality and women's empowerment into national planning instruments, and 19 countries in their adoption of strengthened legislation addressing violence against women and girls, with greater numbers of women at the negotiating table in peacebuilding contexts.

In 2013, UN-Women was on track in 26 of the 32 performance indicators in its strategic plan, almost on track with 2 and off track with 4. It delivered direct programmatic support in 96 countries, with a focus on ending violence against women and on economic empowerment. The Entity supported women's participation and leadership in 71 countries; promoted gender-responsive constitutional reforms and legal frameworks in 26 countries; and launched a new constitutional database, the first searchable database that looked at constitutions through a gender lens. It also supported women's economic empowerment in 67 countries; efforts to end violence against women in 85 countries; worked on women's leadership in peace, security and humanitarian response in 37 countries; and supported 65 countries in strengthening gender equality priorities in their plans and budgets.

In 2013, the Fund for Gender Equality, which directly supported women-led civil society organizations and governmental agencies working on programmes that politically and economically empowered women and girls, achieved major results in China, India and Zimbabwe. The United Nations Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women, in its seventeenth cycle, awarded $8 million in 17 grants, covering 18 countries and territories.

UN-Women funds were provided by both assessed and voluntary contributions. Assessed contributions (regular budget) totalled $15.2 million for the biennium 2012–2013, with $8 million being allocated for 2013. In 2013, UN-Women final revenue from voluntary contributions totalled $156.9 million in regular resources and $118.5 million in other resources, reflecting a revenue shortfall for the year of $124.6 million against the original target in the budget and of $56.9 million against the reforecast.

In geographic terms, the largest share of UN-Women total programme expenditure of $164.5 million went to country or regional offices in Africa ($63.7 million), followed by those in Asia and the Pacific ($45.2 million), Latin America and the Caribbean ($24.8 million), the Arab States ($16.1 million), and Europe and Central Asia ($14.7 million). The UN-Women Policy and Programme Bureau received $47.8 million and the Directorate, Bureau of Management, Bureau of Strategic Partnerships, and Intergovernmental Support received $51.7 million.

On 19 June, at its annual session, the Executive Board took note of the report [UNW/2014/6 (dec. 2014/2)] and welcomed the achievements made in the implementation of the first UN-Women strategic plan.

On 14 July, by decision 2014/228, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretariat note

[E/2014/49] transmitting the reports of the UN-Women Executive Board on its first [UNW/2013/2] and second [UNW/2013/10] and annual session [UNW/2013/5] of 2013, as well as the decisions adopted by the Executive Board at that session [UNW/2013/11].

UN-Women strategic plan 2014–2017. On 16 September, by its decision 2014/6, the Executive Board decided to engage, on an annual basis, in a structured dialogue on financing with Member States to monitor and follow up on the level of funding, in particular of regular resources, as well as predictability, flexibility and alignment of other resources provided for the implementation of strategic plan 2014–2017 [YUN 2013, p. 1133].

Normative support

In response to resolution 64/289 [YUN 2010, p. 1396], the Executive Director of UN-Women [E/CN.6/2015/2] reported to the Commission on the Status of Women on normative aspects of the Entity's work in 2014, with particular attention to the preparations for the 20-year review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and related activities. UN-Women provided support to the Commission, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the Security Council; engaged in other intergovernmental processes, such as the post-2015 development agenda and a set of sustainable development goals; the preparation for the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States; and the third United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III); and worked with Governments and civil society to strengthen consensus on gender equality, the empowerment of women and the enjoyment of human rights by women and girls.

During 2014, UN-Women spearheaded the 20-year review and appraisal of the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the related commemorative activities. A record number of national reviews were completed and 164 national reports submitted to the respective regional commissions and to UN-Women. In many countries, UN-Women provided technical assistance to governments and supported national mechanisms for gender equality. Whenever possible, UN-Women linked the Beijing review process to post-2015 consultations. The reviews provided important insights about progress made and remaining gaps in relation to gender equality and the empowerment of women. Further, UN-Women launched the communication campaign entitled "Empowering women, empowering humanity: Picture it!", engaging constituencies on the 12 critical areas of concern of the Platform for Action; provided information on the Beijing Platform for Action and its 12 critical areas of concern [YUN 1995, p. 1171] through its trilingual website; and launched its year-long global Beijing review and appraisal campaign at the Apollo Theater in New York City on 26 June, bringing together 1,200 supporters.

UN-Women provided support to Member States for the fifty-eighth session of the Commission on the Status of Women (see p. 1299), whose priority theme was “Challenges and achievements in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals for women and girls”. The resulting agreed conclusions on the priority theme constituted the only intergovernmental outcome that assessed the situation of women and girls in regard to each Millennium Development Goal; identified gender equality issues that were insufficiently addressed in the Goals; provided policy recommendations to accelerate the achievement of the Goals for women and girls; and confirmed the strong relationship between development and the human rights of women and girls. The conclusions called for action in five areas: realizing women’s and girls’ full enjoyment of all human rights; strengthening the enabling environment for gender equality and the empowerment of women; maximizing investments in gender equality and the empowerment of women; strengthening the evidence-base for gender equality and the empowerment of women; and ensuring women’s participation and leadership at all levels and strengthening accountability.

In its support to the General Assembly, UN-Women prepared five mandated reports of the Secretary-General on efforts to eliminate violence against women; trafficking in women and girls; efforts for the elimination of female genital mutilation (see p. 873); implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and outcome of the twenty-third special session of the Assembly; and improvement in the status of women in the UN system. For the Economic and Social Council, UN-Women prepared the report of the Secretary-General on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the UN system.

In July, the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals [YUN 2012, p. 809] proposed a set of 17 sustainable development goals, including a goal to achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls, which included targets such as ending all forms of discrimination against women and girls; eliminating all forms of violence against women and girls; and ensuring universal access to sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights.

Owing to the UN-Women engagement in the preparations for the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States (Apia, Samoa, 1–4 September), the outcome document of the Conference included a dedicated section recognizing that gender equality and the empowerment of women and the full realization of human rights for women and girls were drivers of economic growth in small island developing States.

Evaluation

Report on evaluation function, 2013. In compliance with the UN-Women evaluation policy and the 2011–2013 strategic plan, the UN-Women Evaluation Office submitted its annual report [UNW/2014/3], presenting key performance indicators put in place to strengthen the internal evaluation function in 2013, as well as the programme of work of the Office for 2014.

The evaluation policy of UN-Women [YUN 2012, p. 1122] became effective in January 2013 and the Evaluation Advisory Committee was established in December of that year. At its first meeting, held in early February 2014, the Committee provided advice on the progress made by the evaluation function in UN-Women, as well as feedback on the strategic plan for evaluation 2014–2017 and the corporate evaluation plan 2014–2017. Also in December 2013, the Evaluation Office established a global evaluation oversight system, which presented key performance indicators for the evaluation function.

The Evaluation Office developed the corporate evaluation plan 2014–2017, which was presented at the 2014 annual session of the Executive Board (see p. 1302) and outlined the corporate evaluations to be managed by the Office during that period, in accordance with the strategic plan 2014–2017. Further, since field offices managed 89 per cent of UN-Women evaluations, the Evaluation Office, the Programme Division of UN-Women and the regional offices were working jointly to ensure that evaluations met internationally agreed evaluation standards. To this end, in December 2013, the Evaluation Office launched the global evaluation reports assessment and analysis system with the aim of improving the quality and use of decentralized evaluations. Additionally, the United Nations Evaluation Group, a voluntary network bringing together units responsible for evaluation in the UN system, developed a new strategy covering the period 2014–2019.

Since its launch in 2012, the number of evaluations available through the gender equality evaluation portal had continued to increase, counting, in 2013, 352 reports from 55 entities (an increase of 20 per cent from 2012). Further, at the International Conference on National Evaluation Capacities (São Paulo, Brazil, 2013), EvalPartners, a partnership advocating for environments that enabled quality and gender-responsive evaluations, declared 2015 the International Year of Evaluation. The Year was intended to contribute to high-level debates at the international and national levels on the role of evaluation in good governance for equitable human development.

The proposed programme of work for 2014 was aligned with the evaluation policy of UN-Women and followed the strategic plan 2014–2017, in which the independent Evaluation Office was requested to develop an annual workplan, specifying the activities and results to be achieved each year in relation to four key areas: implementation of effective corporate evaluation systems; implementation of effective decentralized evaluation systems; promotion of United Nations coordination on gender-responsive evaluation; and strengthening of national evaluation capacities for gender-responsive monitoring and evaluation systems.

The budget of core resources for the Evaluation Office for 2014 was $1,730,000, with an additional $1,300,000 to cover the costs of the regional evaluation specialists. The Office also received cost-sharing funds from Switzerland ($675,000), Finland ($350,000) and the United States ($125,000).

On 19 June [UNW/2014/6 (dec. 2014/3)], the Executive Board took note of the report on the evaluation function for 2013 and of the programme of work for 2014, and requested the Entity to continue to strengthen its evaluation capacity.

Administrative and budgetary matters

Board of Auditors report

In its financial report and audited financial statements [A/69/5/Add.12] on UN-Women for the year ended 31 December 2013, the Board of Auditors reported a total revenue of $288.5 million and total expenses of $264.1 million, resulting in a surplus of $24.4 million. Of the total revenue, voluntary contributions accounted for $283.4 million and comprised: voluntary regular resources of $156.9 million (54.4 per cent) of all contributions, which were unearmarked and funded the operational requirements; voluntary other resources of $118.5 million (41.1 per cent), which were earmarked for specific programmes and projects; and assessed resources from the UN regular budget of $8 million (2.8 per cent), which funded the normative and intergovernmental work of UN-Women. The increase in voluntary contributions was a result of the resource mobilization strategy established in 2012 and positive donor support. The net current assets balance was $277.6 million, resulting from current assets of $312.7 million and current liabilities of $35.1 million. UN-Women thus had good short-term financial strength, with assets exceeding liabilities.

The Board regarded the implementation by UN-Women of the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS) in 2012 as a major achievement. Key findings of the report were related to the recognition and disclosure of revenue; the limited scope of inventory recognition; management of property, plant and equipment; long outstanding project advances; and understaffing of the procurement unit and improper delegates procurement authority.

The Board recommended that UN-Women improve coordination and information flow between the Strategic Partnership Division and the Finance Section to ensure that concluded agreements were recognized in correct periods, in line with the revenue accounting policy; review its Programme and Operations Manual to match the requirements of IPSAS 12 and improve its year-end closure instructions; review its current procurement catalogue to avoid, inter alia, misclassifications in the Atlas system; enhance its monitoring of advances to implementing partners to verify, among other things, the correct use of funds; and introduce a mechanism for ensuring that procurements below $30,000 were reviewed by a committee or an individual with procurement expertise.

Report of Secretary-General. By a September report [A/69/353/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the responses of the executive heads of the funds and programmes, including UN-Women, on measures taken or to be taken to implement the recommendations of the Board of Auditors.

UN-Women agreed with all the Board's recommendations. With reference to the recommendation of improving the coordination and information flow between the Strategic Partnership Division and the Finance Section, UN-Women reconfirmed that coordination between the two was regular and consistent. There had been monthly meetings held during 2013 and a year-end meeting was held where the Strategic Partnership Division confirmed to the Finance Section that all pledges were included as regular resources prior to preparation of the financial statements. Concerning the recommendation to review its Programme and Operations Manual to match the requirements of IPSAS 12, UN-Women informed the Board that the Manual had been updated in line with the Accounting Policy Manual and IPSAS 12, Inventories.

Concerning the recommendation to review its current procurement catalogue, UN-Women developed and issued new asset verification and impairment guidelines to the business units to enhance the documentation and credibility of the physical verification process. UN-Women also completed the migration of the assets to the newly created business unit codes to ensure accountability of the assets by each business unit rather than by the regional offices. Concerning the recommendation to enhance its monitoring of advances to implementing partners, UN-Women informed the Board that it had put in place mechanisms to follow up outstanding advances. Additional measures taken during 2013 included messages from senior management to offices to aggressively pursue advances older than 12 months. Those efforts resulted in a more than 50 per cent reduction in long-outstanding advances as at 30 September 2013. In response to the Board of Auditor's recommendation to ensure that procurements below $30,000 were reviewed by a committee, UN-Women was considering initiating a quality-check mechanism for low value procurement between $5,000 and $30,000.

Internal audit and investigation activities

In April [UNW/2014/4], the UN-Women Audit Unit and the Investigations Section (both part of the Office of Audit and Investigations of the United Nations Development Programme) submitted a report on the Entity's internal audit and investigation function for 2013. The results of the internal audits indicated that the internal controls, governance and risk management processes audited were generally functioning but needed improvement. No significant investigation matters were identified in 2013. The report of the Audit Advisory Committee of UN-Women and the management response thereto were contained in an addendum to the report [UNW/2014/4/Add.1].

On 19 June [UNW/2014/6 (dec. 2014/4)], the Executive Board took note of the two reports and requested UN-Women to present a separate budget line for internal audit and investigation activities in the integrated budget for the biennium 2016–2017, to be considered by the Executive Board at its second regular session of 2015.

Children

In 2014, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued efforts to refocus its programmes, operations, partnerships, innovation and advocacy towards a vision of every child having a fair chance in life. It drew worldwide attention to the issue of children and equity, particularly the very poorest, girls, children with disabilities, those living in remote areas and those facing ethnic and religious discrimination.

UNICEF responded to 294 humanitarian situations in 98 countries. With an estimated 230 million children living in countries and areas affected by conflicts, UNICEF and its partners worked to reach those in greatest need and gain public support for vulnerable children and families. UNICEF programme assistance expenditure totalled $4,130.8 million, focusing on seven principal areas: health; HIV and AIDS; water, sanitation and hygiene; nutrition; education; child protection; and social inclusion.

In December, the General Assembly adopted a resolution on protecting children from bullying, recognizing that bullying, including cyberbullying, could have a potential long-term impact on the enjoyment of the human rights of children and negative effects on children affected by or involved in bullying.

Follow-up to 2002 General Assembly special session on children

In August [A/69/258], pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 58/282 [YUN 2004, p. 1175] and 61/272 [YUN 2007, p. 1201], the Secretary-General submitted his twelfth report on the follow-up to the Assembly's twenty-seventh (2002) special session on children [YUN 2002, p. 1168]. He reviewed progress achieved in realizing the commitments set out in the Declaration and Plan of Action from the session's final document, "A world fit for children", adopted in resolution S-27/2 [ibid., p. 1169], and highlighted gaps in achievement and the strategic shifts necessary for attaining unmet goals. Failure to achieve the commitments would undermine efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) by 2015. The Secretary-General also reviewed progress in the four major areas of the Plan of Action: promoting healthy lives; providing quality education; protecting against abuse, exploitation and violence; and combating HIV/AIDS.

In the area of health, the global mortality rate for children fell to an estimated 6.6 million in 2012, an all-time low. About 40 per cent of the fatalities occurred during the first month of life. Furthermore, the global under-five mortality rate had fallen by almost 50 per cent from the 1990 rate of 90 deaths per 1,000 live births to 48 per 1,000 in 2012. In 2013, the endemic transmission of polio remained only in Afghanistan, Nigeria and Pakistan, while India was certified a polio-free country in 2014. Since 2000, global measles deaths had decreased by 78 per cent, but the virus continued to be one of the leading causes of death among young children. Regarding malaria, 3.3 million deaths had been averted since 2001 in sub-Saharan Africa, 90 per cent of them in children under the age of five, as a result of UNICEF scaling up its interventions.

Since 2013, several Technical Resource Teams were established to carry out the 10 cross-cutting recommendations put forward by the UN Commission on Life-Saving Commodities for Women and Children to scale up access to 13 life-saving commodities for women and children. Regarding nutrition, globally, one in four children under the age of five was stunted, with an estimated 92 per cent of the world's 162 million stunted children living in Asia and Africa. UNICEF continued to promote the fortification of wheat flour to reduce iron deficiencies and help prevent birth defects in women of childbearing age, as well as provision of vitamin A supplementation to children aged 6 to 59 months in developing countries. For the first time, in 2013, early childhood development reporting was made possible through the Holistic Early Childhood Development Index, which illustrated that, globally, only 63.6 per cent of children under the age of five were developmentally on track.

In the area of education, over 57 million children of primary-school age remained out of school. More than half of them were in sub-Saharan Africa, where the primary net enrolment rate had increased from 58 per cent in 1990 to 77 per cent in 2011. South and West Africa registered the highest gains in reducing the number of children out of school; however, the region's primary net enrolment rate stood at 89 per cent, leaving 12 million children out of school. Progress in guaranteeing that children stayed in school had also stalled since 2009, with a quarter of all out-of-school children entering school late and becoming more likely to drop out. Dropout rates were highest in sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia. About half of the children out of school, most of them girls, were living in countries affected by conflict.

Globally, inequities in education persisted, based on gender, poverty, location and deeply rooted social and cultural barriers. Such barriers were often amplified in secondary education, which in many countries was neither free nor compulsory. Pre-primary education had expanded considerably since 2000, yet half the children aged 3 to 6 remained unreached, with progress unevenly distributed between countries. In 2013, UNICEF helped approximately 3.6 million children in countries affected by conflict or natural disasters to access formal and non-formal education opportunities in safe, protected areas, and considered emergency response through advocacy, preparedness planning, risk assessments and back-to-school campaigns at various levels.

On protecting children against abuse, exploitation and violence, UNICEF issued in 2013 a revised global framework on child labour, seeking to improve understanding of its underlying causes and help eliminate the practice altogether; launched, with the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), a comprehensive analysis on female genital mutilation; intensified efforts in several countries with medium and high prevalence rates to put an end to child marriage; and responded to the protection needs of children in more than 50 countries affected by armed conflict and natural disasters.

At the end of 2012, approximately 2.1 million young people aged 10 to 19, of whom 57 per cent were female, were living with HIV. An estimated 260,000 children under 15 years of age became infected with HIV in 2012. Sub-Saharan Africa remained the region most affected by HIV and AIDS, with more than 90 per cent of AIDS-related deaths occurring among adolescents. In 2012, 62 per cent of pregnant women living with HIV received antiretroviral therapy to prevent mother-to-child transmission. For children under 15 years of age, access to antiretroviral therapy increased by 14 per cent between 2011 and 2012.

On 18 December (decision 69/532), the General Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the special session of the General Assembly on children (see above).

Promotion and protection of the rights of children

At the request of the General Assembly [A/69/484], the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee considered the item on the promotion and protection of the rights of children. The Committee had before it a report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict [A/69/212]; a report of the Secretary-General on the follow-up to the special session of the General Assembly on children (see p. 1307); a report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child [A/69/260]; the annual report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children [A/69/264]; and notes and letters on issues related to children's rights. At the end of the debate, the Committee recommended that the General Assembly adopt three draft resolutions on child, early and forced marriage; the rights of the child; and on protecting children from bullying (see below).

The General Assembly, by resolution 68/273 of 20 May (see p. 763), decided to convene, on 20 November, a high-level meeting on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560] (see p. 764). On 18 December, the Assembly, in resolution 69/157 (ibid.), urged States to consider acceding to or ratifying the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto and to implement them effectively and fully. In resolution 69/156 of 18 December (see p. 877), it urged States to enact, enforce and uphold laws and policies aimed at preventing and ending child, early and forced marriage. In resolution 69/187 of 18 December (see p. 802), on migrant children and adolescents, the Assembly called on countries of origin, transit and destination to facilitate family reunification as an objective to promote the welfare and the best interest of migrant children, including adolescents, as applicable under national law, due process and the relevant provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto. By resolution 69/194 of 18 December (see p. 1440), the Assembly adopted the United Nations Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Children in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/69/484], adopted resolution 69/158 without vote [agenda item 64 (a)].

Protecting children from bullying

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing that the Convention on the Rights of the Child constitutes the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child and that States parties to the Convention shall undertake all appropriate legislative, administrative and other measures for the implementation of the rights recognized therein,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the rights of the child and the resolutions adopted by the Human Rights Council that are relevant to the protection of children against bullying,

Recalling also the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights Education and Training, and noting the adoption of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization Declaration of Principles on Tolerance,

Taking note of the United Nations report on violence against children of 2006, the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children entitled “Tackling violence in schools: a global perspective—bridging the gap between standards and practice”, the 2014 thematic report entitled “Releasing children’s potential and minimizing risks: information and communication technologies, the Internet and violence against children” and the 2014 report of the United Nations Children’s Fund on violence against children, entitled “Hidden in plain sight: a statistical analysis of violence against children”, which included references regarding bullying,

Recognizing that bullying, including cyberbullying, can be expressed through violence and aggression and that bullying in any form can have a negative impact on the rights of children and their well-being, and aware of the need to prevent and eliminate bullying among children,

Concerned about the occurrence of bullying in different parts of the world and the fact that children who are victimized by their peers may be at heightened risk for a wide range of emotional problems, as well as potential long-term effects on the individual’s ability to realize his or her own potential,

Acknowledging that in some countries, relevant United Nations agencies and mechanisms have been providing, upon request, technical cooperation and support to enhance national capacities to address and prevent bullying,

Recognizing that the family has the primary responsibility for the nurturing and protection of children, in the best interests of the child, and that children, for the full and harmonious development of their personality, should grow up in a family environment and in an atmosphere of happiness, love and understanding,

Recognizing also that environments surrounding children can affect their behaviour, and recognizing further the important role that family members, legal guardians, caregivers, teachers and civil society have and that the media should have in the prevention of bullying,

Recognizing further the importance of generating appropriate statistical information on bullying,

Noting the risks associated with the misuse of new information and communication technologies and applications, including increased vulnerability to bullying, while stressing that these can create new ways to enhance education and, inter alia, learn and teach about the rights of the child, and can be useful tools to promote children’s protection,

Recognizing that children in vulnerable situations can be at greater risk of being bullied and that children may face different forms of bullying,

1. Recognizes that bullying, including cyberbullying, can have a potential long-term impact on the enjoyment of the human rights of children and negative effects on children affected by or involved in bullying;

2. Also recognizes that bullying can be associated with, inter alia, discrimination and stereotypes, and that action must be taken to prevent bullying on any basis;

3. Encourages Member States:

(a) To take all appropriate measures to prevent and protect children, including in school, from any form of violence, including forms of bullying, by promptly responding to such acts, and to provide appropriate support to children affected by and involved in bullying;

(b) To continue to promote and invest in education, including as a long-term and lifelong process by which everyone learns tolerance and respect for the dignity of others and the means and methods of ensuring such respect in all societies;

(c) To generate statistical information and data disaggregated by sex, age and other relevant variables at the national level, and to provide information on disability, with regard to the problem of bullying, as a basis on which to elaborate effective public policies;

(d) To raise public awareness, involving family members, legal guardians, caregivers, youth, schools, communities, community leaders and the media as well as civil society organizations, with the participation of children, regarding the protection of children from bullying;

(e) To share national experiences and best practices for preventing and tackling bullying, including cyberbullying;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, using information provided by Member States and relevant stakeholders, in collaboration with relevant United Nations entities, to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on protecting children from bullying, with an emphasis on causes and effects, good practices and guidance to prevent and respond to bullying.

United Nations Children’s Fund

In 2014, the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) remained committed to achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) [YUN 2000, p. 41] and the goals set out by the General Assembly’s twenty-seventh (2002) special session on Children [YUN 2002, p. 1168] in the document “A world fit for children” [ibid., p. 1169]. The work of UNICEF was also guided by the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], and its Optional Protocols. In line with the first year of its strategic plan (2014–2017), UNICEF addressed seven outcome areas: health; HIV and AIDS; water, sanitation and hygiene; nutrition; education; child protection; and social inclusion.

The annual UNICEF flagship publication, The State of the World’s Children 2014 in Numbers [Sales No. E.14.XX.1] focused on indicators that detailed the circumstances of children worldwide. The indicators continued to support advocacy and action on behalf of the world’s 2.2 billion children, providing Governments with facts on which to make decisions and take actions to improve children’s lives. Data also revealed gaps and inequities, showing that gains and deprivations were unevenly distributed, depending on whether the children’s country was rich or poor, whether they were born girls or boys, into families rich or poor; or whether they lived in affluent areas or impoverished neighbourhoods. Efforts were made to extend data collection to cover groups of children previously undercounted, overlooked or excluded, including children living in institutions or temporary housing, children in detention, children living and working on the street, children with disabilities, trafficked children, migrant children, internally displaced and refugee children, and children from ethnic minorities in remote areas. To improve the reach, availability and reliability of data on deprivations affecting children and their families, the tools of collection and analysis were constantly modified and new ones were developed. While data showed that progress was made, disparities persisted. UNICEF operations in 2014 were described in the UNICEF Annual Report 2014 and the annual report of the Executive Director on performance and results for 2014, including a report on implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review [E/ICEF/2015/5].

Executive Board

The Executive Board of UNICEF held its first regular session (4–7 February), its annual session (3–6 June) and its second regular session (9–12 September), all in New York [E/2014/34/Rev.1], during which it adopted 18 decisions.

On 6 June [E/2014/34/Rev.1], the Executive Board took note of the annual report of UNICEF covering 2013, including implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review (QCPR) [E/ICEF/2014/6 & Add.1], and decided to transmit the report to the Economic and Social Council.

By decision 2014/228 of 14 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the UNICEF Executive Board on its first and second regular sessions and annual session of 2013 [E/2013/34/Rev.1].

On 11 September [dec. 2014/16], the Board adopted the programme of work for its 2015 session.

In response to Economic and Social resolution 2013/5 [YUN 2013, p. 837] and Executive Board decision 2013/15, the Executive Director submitted an annual report [E/ICEF/2015/5] on performance and results for 2014, including on implementation of the quadrennial comprehensive policy review. He covered the first year of the UNICEF Strategic Plan (2014–2017), including QCPR of operational activities for development of the United Nations system.

The Executive Director outlined results and analyzed progress in each outcome area of the plan: health; HIV and AIDS; water, sanitation and hygiene; nutrition; education; child protection; and social inclusion. It also covered humanitarian action; gender equality and implementation strategies; and the Fund's organizational performance in 2014. While overall progress had been achieved towards reaching the MDGs for children in many countries, those advances were highly uneven. Strong urban-rural gaps persisted in access to drinking water, as well as the gap between least developed countries and the rest of the world. Piped supplies accounted for 64 per cent of improved water sources globally, compared with just 17 per cent in least developed countries. The disparity in use of antiretroviral treatment in low- and middle-income countries grew every year between 2007 and 2013. The adolescent age group (10 to 19 years) was the one group in which AIDS-related deaths had not decreased between 2005 and 2013. The numbers of stunted children under the age of 5 had declined globally; however, regional disparities persisted, with half of stunted children living in Asia and a third in Africa. While globally most children of primary school age were attending school, about 40 per cent in that age group were not learning basic reading and writing. A substantial gap also persisted in the prevalence of child marriage between the poorest and the richest girls, with the poorest girls being 2.5 times more likely to marry in childhood.

During the year, UNICEF continued to support countries, communities and families in improving the rights of all children, particularly the most disadvantaged. With the humanitarian crises at unprecedented levels worldwide, UNICEF assisted 8.6 million children in acquiring formal and non-formal education, and provided psychosocial support to 3.1 million children. In response to the Ebola outbreak in West Africa (see p. 1355), UNICEF mounted its largest-ever supply operation, providing family support and placement services to more than 15,000 children who lost one or both parents to the epidemics and psychosocial support to more than 36,000 children.

Programme policies

Strategic plan (2014–2017)

At its annual session in June, the Executive Board had before it a report on the final results framework of the UNICEF strategic plan (2014–2017) [E/ICEF/2014/8], which provided an update to the addendum of the strategic plan [YUN 2013, p. 1141]. The document refined the summary results and key performance indicators, included baselines and targets for the strategic plan, and presented results and key performance indicators in each of the plan's outcome areas: health; HIV and AIDS; water, sanitation and hygiene; nutrition; education; child protection; and social inclusion. It also covered organization effectiveness and efficiency.

Since the second regular session of the Executive Board in September 2013, an intensive process had been undertaken to develop the baselines and targets. The review helped to reduce the number of indicators by over 20 per cent in 2014, compared to 2013. The results framework reflected, whenever possible, globally agreed targets. The updated status of indicators would be reported globally every year, and support would be provided to strengthen monitoring systems in countries to generate required information.

On 6 June [dec. 2014/6], the Executive Board, taking note of the final results framework of the UNICEF Strategic Plan, 2014–2017, requested UNICEF to update the Executive Board at its annual session of 2015 on how country programme results and resources frameworks were aligned with the final results framework, and, as part of the annual report of the Executive Director, to provide an annual update on progress made towards achieving the results identified in the final results framework.

Financial estimates

The Executive Board, at its second regular session in September, had before it the four-year financial framework [E/ICEF/2014/AB/L.5] of the UNICEF strategic plan (2014–2017), in accordance with the Executive Board decisions 2000/3 and 2013/20. Total revenue was forecast to be $4,034 million in 2014, projected to remain flat in 2015 and to resume gradual growth thereafter. Total expenditures in 2014 were estimated to exceed revenue by $244 million. UNICEF recommended that the Executive Board approve the framework of the planned financial estimates for 2014–2017 and the preparation of programme expenditure submissions to the Executive Board.

On 11 September [dec. 2014/17], the Executive Board requested UNICEF to continue to explore incentives, mechanisms and funding windows to broaden the donor base in a cost-effective manner and to encourage donors to increase their core contributions as well as to shift to less restricted or earmarked non-core funding, and in that regard to present to the Executive Board a resource mobilization strategic brief towards that end for consideration at its second regular session of 2015; decided to organize, with UNICEF support, on an annual basis during the second regular session of the Executive Board, a structured dialogue with Member States to monitor and to follow up the predictability, flexibility and alignment of resources provided for the implementation of the strategic plan (2014–2017), including information on funding gaps; approved the framework of the planned financial estimates for 2014–2017; and approved the preparation of programme expenditure submissions to the Executive Board of up to $1,247 million from regular sources in 2015.

Programme matters

At its first regular session, the Executive Board had before it a report on modifications to procedures for consideration and approval of country programme documentation [E/ICEF/2014/P/L.1]. The proposed changes were in line with QCPR of operational activities for development of the United Nations system to simplify and harmonize agency-specific instruments and processes, and to reinforce alignment of country programmes to the strategic plans of organizations. The changes aimed to further strengthen national ownership, situating cooperation programmes within national development processes.

On 6 February, taking note of the report [dec. 2014/1], the Executive Board requested that the country programme documents continue to be developed on the basis of national plans and priorities under the leadership of national Governments and in consultation with the resident coordinator and other members of the UN country team, as well as with other relevant stakeholders at country level; requested UNICEF, in line the recommendations of QCPR, to further simplify, harmonize and reduce the number of its agency-specific country programming instruments and processes, whenever possible, in particular in “Delivering as one” countries and countries deciding to apply the standard operating procedures; encouraged UNICEF to continue to work with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) to further harmonize their country programme documents templates, associated documentation and annexes; and requested UNICEF to ensure that the results and resources frameworks were an integral part of country programme documents and to translate them accordingly.

The UNICEF secretariat informed the Executive Board [E/ICEF/2014/P/L.11] about the Executive Director’s approval of one-year extensions of country programmes for Algeria, Argentina, Lebanon, Libya and Uganda. The secretariat also presented the reasons for the proposed two-year extension of the country programme for Burundi, the extension of the country programme for Guinea-Bissau for the third consecutive one-year, the fourth one-year extension for the Syrian Arab Republic, and a two-month extension, following three one-year extensions, for Madagascar.

On 6 June [dec. 2014/7], at its annual session, the Board took note of the one-year extensions of country programmes approved by the Executive Director for the country programmes for Algeria, Argentina, Lebanon, Libya and Uganda; and approved a two-year extension for Burundi, a third consecutive one-year extension for Guinea-Bissau, a fourth consecutive one-year extension for Syria, and a two-month extension, following three one-year extensions, for Madagascar.

Also on 6 June [dec. 2014/9], recalling its 2013 decision [YUN 2013, p. 1141], the Board approved the country programme document for Kenya, with the aggregate indicative budget of $54,640,000 from regular resources, subject to the availability of funds, and $124,000,000 in other resources, subject to the availability of specific-purpose contributions, for the period 2014–2018.

The UNICEF secretariat informed the Executive Board [E/ICEF/2014/P/L.16] of the Executive Director's approval of one-year extensions of the country programme for Iraq and of the common country programme for the United Republic of Tanzania. It also presented the reasons for the proposed two-year extension of the country programme for Botswana, a two-month extension, following two one-year extensions, for Mali, and a nine-month extension, following one two-year extension for Colombia.

On 11 September [dec. 2014/18], at its second regular session, the Executive Board took note of the one-year extensions of the country programme for Iraq and of the common country programme for Tanzania; and approved the two-year extension of the country programme for Botswana, the two-month extension, following two one-year extensions, for Mali, and the nine-month extension following a two-year extension for Colombia.

On the same date [dec. 2014/15], the Board took note of the country programme documents, including aggregate indicative budgets, for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ecuador, Guatemala and Paraguay; and approved on a no-objection basis, and in accordance with its decision 2014/1, the country programme documents, including aggregate indicative budgets of those four countries.

Joint programming

The joint meeting of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA/United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS), UNICEF, UN-Women and the World Food Programme (WFP) (New York, 3 February) [E/2014/34/Rev.1] discussed the performance standard on gender mainstreaming across the strategic plans (2014–2017) of the six agencies with emphasis on country experiences and the UN system-wide action plan on gender equality and the empowerment of women, and coherence of the UN action against poverty and vulnerability and towards resilience, with emphasis on “Delivering as one” at country level to ensure coherence of action.

The agencies were encouraged to prioritize several themes in the post-2015 development agenda (see p. 960), including promotion of family-based solutions to global problems; strengthening of efforts to combat sexual violence against women and girls; enhancing the sexual and reproductive health of women; strengthening gender equality laws; and ensuring access to quality education and skills application for women and girls. The six agencies reported that there was room for improvement despite the progress made so far; recommended that gender mainstreaming initiatives consider the specific needs of girls and the protection of the rights of both boys and girls. They also indicated that the new UNICEF Gender Action Plan, still under development, was aligned with the 2014–2017 strategic plan. The agencies further reaffirmed their commitment to the “Delivering as one” plan and to United Nations reform, and stressed the need for enhancing joint evaluation and monitoring.

Gender equality

On 6 February, the Executive Board encouraged UNICEF to continue to consult it and the other relevant stakeholders and partners with a view to finalizing the costed Gender Equality Action Plan (2014–2017), by mid-April 2014, for its presentation to the Executive Board at its 2014 annual session, together with the annual report on the progress of work in gender equality.

In response to Executive Board decision 2013/9 [YUN 2013, p. 1142], UNICEF reported [E/ICEF/2014/10] on progress in its work on gender equality and empowerment of women, and on implementation of its new Gender Action Plan (2014–2017). On 6 June [dec. 2014/8], the Executive Board encouraged UNICEF to implement the Plan in an effective and efficient manner, including by stressing the importance of UN system-wide cooperation and implementation; and requested that UNICEF prepare annual reports on the implementation of the Gender Action Plan, as well as strengthen gender reporting in all of its work.

Programmes by region

In 2014 [E/ICEF/2015/5/Add.1], UNICEF direct programme expense by region totalled $4,130.8 million, of which $115.7 million went to Central and Eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States; $332.3 million to East Asia and the Pacific; $1,057.3 million to Eastern and Southern Africa; $165.3 million to Latin America and Caribbean; $703.4 million to Middle East and North Africa; $421.9 million to South Asia; $1,173.9 million to West and Central Africa; and $161 million to Headquarters.

Field visits

At its second regular session in September [E/2014/34/Rev.1], the Executive Board had before it the reports of the Executive Board field visits in 2014.

Members of the UNICEF Executive Bureau visited Burkina Faso (26 April–2 May), to gain first-hand knowledge of UNICEF work at the country level and to better understand the challenges facing women and children in Burkina Faso. Child labour in gold mines remained a major problem; female genital mutilation/cutting (FGM/c) was still widespread despite being legally banned; and malnutrition continued to be a major concern. The Bureau noted the increased cooperation among UN agencies and encouraged their coordinated efforts under the framework of “Delivering as one” programme.

A UNICEF Executive Board delegation visited the Sudan (26 April–2 May), where the political and security context was complex. Children under 18 years of age constituted half of the estimated population, and a firm and stronger commitment by the Government to put children at the heart of the national development agenda was crucial. The delegation visited Zam Zam camp at El Fasher where 40,000 internally displaced persons, most of whom had been there for more than a decade, lived in deplorable conditions, and malnutrition was also of great concern. The delegation was impressed with the innovative and multifaceted approach and involvement of stakeholders in the FGM/C “Saleema” campaign, but highlighted the need for more support for the campaign at the federal level. The Sudan had made remarkable progress towards achieving universal primary education and Education for All.

After a joint visit of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS, UNICEF, UN-Women and WFP to Panama and El Salvador (23 March–1 April), members of the delegation reported on the productive interaction between the UNICEF regional office and the Panamanian authorities, and the extraordinary support from the Government of El Salvador to the UN system. In El Salvador, where most of the visit took place, the delegation recommended an integrated strategy mechanism incorporating all elements of response, recovery, involvement of community organizations and women into disaster risk management. Panama, despite its classification as a middle-income country, faced major challenges, including economic inequality affecting boys, girls and adolescents, and especially concentrated in rural areas or among indigenous groups, and those of African descent.

Programmes by sector

In 2014, UNICEF direct programme assistance in the seven outcome areas totalled $4,130.8 million. The largest share of expenditure, $1,229.0 million, went to health, followed by $826.2 million to education; $727.4 million to water, sanitation and hygiene; $524.4 million to child protection; $484.4 million to nutrition; $242.6 million to social inclusion; and $107.1 million to HIV and AIDS.

Health

In the area of health, UNICEF increasingly focused on the first month of life, based on the finding that approximately 44 per cent of deaths under the age of 5 occurred during the neonatal period. Pneumonia, diarrhea and malaria were responsible for most under-five deaths, most of which were preventable with proven, low-cost interventions. Efforts by UNICEF included development of costed maternal, newborn and child health implementation plans and development of related communication plans. UNICEF continued to assist in polio eradication, including the delivery of 1.7 billion doses of oral vaccines, which contributed to a significant reduction in the number of reported cases in Somalia, from 194 in 2013 to 5 in 2014, and in Nigeria, from 53 in 2013 to 6 in 2014. In response to the Ebola crisis, UNICEF developed a “community care centre” model and supported the establishment of 65 such centres, whose location in communities reduced by 30 per cent the time between onset of symptoms and diagnosis. UNICEF was most active in supporting those centres in Sierra Leone, where over 6,000 patients underwent community-level triage by the end of 2014.

HIV and AIDS

In 2014, UNICEF focused on achieving an AIDS-free generation, in which children were born free of HIV and remained so for the first two decades of their lives, and children living with HIV had access to treatment and care. Yet, despite a 40 per cent decline in new HIV infections among children in the previous four years, the target of 90 per cent reduction between 2009 and 2015 remained out of reach, with an estimated 190,000 children under the age of 14 dying of AIDS-related causes in 2013. UNICEF-backed programmes supported equitable use of HIV prevention and treatment interventions for children, pregnant women and adolescents in 22 Global Plan priority countries, and provided greater geographical coverage of services for prevention of mother-to-child transmission in Chad. UNICEF also began implementing innovative community-based social norm programmes in Somalia and South Sudan. In June 2014, UNICEF and the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS announced the All In initiative to end adolescent AIDS, which established targets to reduce AIDS-related deaths among adolescents by 65 per cent and new HIV infections among adolescents by 75 per cent by 2020.

Water, sanitation and hygiene

In response to the Ebola crisis, UNICEF supported a large-scale hand-washing promotional campaign, construction and management of water and sanitation systems in treatment centres, and distribution of hygiene kits and disinfectant. Lack of water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) services disproportionately hindered the lives of women and girls. In response, gender assessments were commissioned in Kiribati, Rwanda and the Sudan in 2014, and UNICEF encouraged the participation, especially the leadership, of women in managing community WASH committees. In 2014, UNICEF also convened a high-level meeting on Sanitation and Water for All (see p. 1350), that brought together ministers of finance and ministers responsible for water and sanitation, as well as representatives of donors and development banks who made commitments to eliminate inequities and improve sustainability. Additionally, UNICEF facilitated South-South cooperation initiatives that supported the sharing of experiences and best practices on hygiene packages for schools, hand-washing and technical developments.

Nutrition

UNICEF assisted 91 countries in developing or revising their national nutrition policies or plans for equitable use of nutritional support and improved nutrition practices, up from 83 countries in 2013. As part of an inter-agency response, UNICEF worked with WFP to expand its field presence and establish rapid response teams, particularly in South Sudan and the Horn of Africa. The two agencies reached over 600,000 people with nutrition services in locations affected by the Ebola epidemic. Through creation of the Iodine Global Network, UNICEF played a leading role in harmonizing efforts to address iodine deficiency disorders, and was a lead partner in various initiatives to improve nutrition.

Education

In 2014, UNICEF country-level support for education enrolment drives and cash transfer schemes brought 360,000 girls into schools in five northern states in Nigeria. UNICEF mounted a robust response to serve the millions of children who were losing access to school because of emergencies, including five million children kept out of classrooms by the Ebola outbreak (see p. 1355) in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone. Access to formal and non-formal basic education was provided to 3.1 million children in Iraq and Syria, and 2.4 million children affected by Ebola in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone; education by radio was used to reach the children after the outbreak forced schools to close. UNICEF assisted 38 countries in incorporating risk assessment into their education sector plan or policy, and helped establish community-based mechanisms to prevent and respond to gender-based violence as well as provide teacher training on gender-sensitivity in conflict-affected areas in Somalia and Uganda. A UNICEF-supported replenishment event for the Global Partnership for Education programme mobilized $26 billion in domestic resources from developing-country partners and $2.1 billion from other donors.

Child protection

An estimated 230 million children lived in countries and areas affected by armed conflict. UNICEF reached approximately 5.6 million children through initiatives to prevent armed violence, and an additional 14.6 million children through birth registration initiatives. UNICEF also supported 137 countries to strengthen child protection services, up from 74 in the previous year. At least 70 UNICEF country offices supported government and civil society efforts to prevent and respond to sexual abuse and exploitation. Eighty countries applied child-friendly procedures or approaches for dealing with children in contact with the law. UNICEF and partners took action in 35 countries affected by conflict or natural disasters to prevent and respond to various forms of gender-based violence, especially sexual violence, including through training and awareness programmes for more than 420,000 girls, women, boys and men. Among key results achieved with UNICEF support in 2014, the National Army of Chad was “delisted” from the annexes of the report of the Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict; an action plan was signed with Yemen; age assessment protocols were developed in Afghanistan; and children were released from armed forces and groups in Myanmar.

Social inclusion

In 2014, UNICEF assisted 23 countries in collecting data through its household survey program, Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys, which allowed disaggregation of data by geographic location, wealth quintile, ethno-linguistic group and other factors. Since children were particularly vulnerable to stigma and discrimination, UNICEF efforts to promote the social inclusion of children with disabilities expanded to Armenia, Mozambique, the Republic of Moldova and Tanzania, and aided Serbia to conduct a household survey on the needs of Roma families. UNICEF also supported 115 countries in integrating issues of climate, disaster and conflict into national development plans. In Burundi, conflict sensitivity and peacebuilding competencies were incorporated into school programmes; in Zimbabwe, the Government developed a child-sensitive national climate change response strategy; and Morocco integrated climate change adaptation and disaster risk reduction into municipal agendas.

Humanitarian action

During the year, UNICEF responded to 294 humanitarian situations in 98 countries. In South Sudan, UNICEF contributed by providing direct response where there was insufficient partner presence through the inter-agency Rapid Response Mechanism. It also contributed by vaccinating about 238,000 children under the age of 5 against measles in displacement camps in the Central African Republic (CAR); providing access to education for 2.8 million children in Syria; providing psychosocial support to more than 600,000 children in Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey; supplying life-saving items to 74,000 displaced people in Iraq; providing safe drinking water to 60,000 people in Ukraine; and providing psychosocial support for 230,000 children in Gaza. An emergency simulation exercise conducted with WFP and aimed at training emergency response teams strengthened the capacity of UNICEF to respond to large-scale emergencies.

Organizational matters

Evaluation system

At the first regular session of the Executive Board in February, the UNICEF Evaluation Office presented a plan for global thematic evaluations (2014–2017) [E/ICEF/2014/3] containing its guiding principles and objectives for such evaluations, and a prioritized list of topics, along with details of the resource framework, approach to implementation, key risks and reporting arrangements. The purpose of the plan was to provide a coherent framework within which useful evaluation evidence could be systematically generated on the relevance, efficiency and effectiveness of work carried out under the UNICEF strategic plan (2014–2017), and evidence provided on impact and sustainability. The key evaluation principles guiding the evaluations were utility, credibility and independence. Progress in the implementation of the plan would be reported in the annual report of the Evaluation Office and the annual report on the evaluation function presented to the Executive Board each year.

In response to the revised UNICEF evaluation policy and relevant Executive Board decisions [YUN 2013, p. 1145], UNICEF submitted an annual report [E/ICEF/2014/12] on its evaluation function and major evaluations. The report provided information on global developments in evaluation and the current UNICEF evaluation function, concentrating on activities at regional level, and concluded that there was continued improvement in the UNICEF evaluation function, including its role in supporting harmonization within the United Nations and the wider agenda around national evaluation capacity development. The key challenge for UNICEF in the next four years would be to further improve its evaluation performance and that of its partners in meeting future challenges.

On 6 June [E/2014/34.Rev.1 (dec. 2014/10)], the Executive Board of UNICEF took note of the annual report on the evaluation function in UNICEF, and requested UNICEF to report in 2015 on steps taken to implement the revised evaluation policy and on implementation of the plan for global thematic evaluation (2014–2017); and to present to the Executive Board on an annual basis a comprehensive review of evaluation coverage, including, coverage by region, theme and programme expenditure level. The Executive Board further requested UNICEF to inform the Executive Board of the implementation of the plan for global thematic evaluations, as part of the annual report on evaluation.

Ethics Office

In March [E/ICEF/2014/11], pursuant to Executive Board decision 2010/18 [YUN, 2010, p. 1190], the UNICEF Ethics Office submitted its fifth annual report covering its activities in 2013. The report provided information on the Office's mandated areas of work: standard setting and policy support; training, education and outreach; advice and guidance; the Financial Disclosure Programme; protection of staff against retaliation; and participation in the United Nations Ethics Committee and Ethics Network for Multilateral Organizations. During 2013, the Office focused on increasing staff awareness of ethics, understanding and acting to avoid or mitigate conflicts of interests and fostering a "speak up" culture in UNICEF. The main means towards achieving those goals were: administering the Financial Disclosure Programme; developing training materials for use at country level; and bringing an ethics lens to standard setting and policy support and sharing experience within the United Nations system. The Ethics Office received 271 requests for its services in 2013, up from 221 in 2012. Of the 271 requests, 121 concerned services provided under the advisory and guidance functions of the Office. Requests related to training (51), the Financial Disclosure Programme (24), advice on alleged wrongdoing (21) and inputs to standard and policy setting (23) were also common. Meanwhile, the number of requests for ethics advice decreased from 146 in 2012 to 121 in 2014. Such requests mainly concerned conflicts of interests in the broad sense: outside activities, gifts, family relations and post-employment. The number of staff participating in the Financial Disclosure Programme decreased from 2,694 in 2012 to 2,498 in 2013. The decrease was the result of a more stringent scrutiny process regarding the type of staff selected to participate in the programme.

On 6 June [dec. 2014/12], after taking note of the annual report, the Board requested the Ethics Office to improve protection for whistle-blowers by developing and implementing an effective policy on protection against retaliation that specified a statute of limitations of a minimum of six months for reporting retaliation; and was in line with the management indicator on that issue included in the UNICEF strategic plan (2014–2017); and also requested the Ethics Office to continue to submit annual reports to the Executive Board at future annual sessions containing recommendations to management that would strengthen the organizational culture of integrity and compliance.

JIU reports

In June, the Executive Board had before it a report [E/ICEF/2014/9] summarizing the response of UNICEF to recommendations contained in seven reports and two notes of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) issued from September 2012 through December 2013. According to the report, UNICEF had continued to work with JIU on various reviews conducted under its auspices, as well as on the follow-up to recommendations issued by JIU. That interaction had increased the relevance of the reports, improved implementation of recommendations and enhanced transparency.

The Executive Board took note of the report at its annual session in June.

Management for results

In June [E/ICEF/2014/AB/L.4], the Executive Board considered a proposal to create a fourth position of Assistant Secretary-General/Deputy Executive Director in the context of strengthened management for results across the organization. The proposal recommended that the new Deputy Executive Director focus his attention on management for field results, overseeing the performance of UNICEF regional offices, and, through regional directors, the performance of country offices in achieving pragmatic results and sound financial management.

Taking note of the proposal on 6 June [dec. 2014/13], the Executive Board approved the establishment of the position of Deputy Executive Director for field results at the level of Assistant Secretary-General; requested UNICEF to update the Executive Board ahead of the 2015 annual session on structural and governance changes within UNICEF, including clarifying reporting lines, responsibilities and new accountabilities, and other effectiveness and efficiency initiatives; and also requested UNICEF Executive Director, in his 2015 annual report, to update the Executive Board on effectiveness and efficiency initiatives.

Finances

In 2014, UNICEF revenue totalled $5,169 million. Income was derived mainly from Governments, which contributed $3,181 million, and from the private sector and NGOs, which contributed $1,397 million. The balance came from inter-organizational arrangements, with contributions of $497 million, and other sources, with contributions of $94 million.

UNICEF expenditure amounted to $4,868 million. Expenditure on development, including programme and development effectiveness totalled $4,438 million. The balance included expenditure on management ($309 million); other costs, including private fundraising and partnerships ($102 million); special purpose expenditures, including capital investment ($11 million); and UN development coordination ($8 million).

Budget appropriation

At its annual session, the Executive Board had before it nine country and area programmes of cooperation documents for approval. On 6 June [E/2014/34/Rev.1 (dec. 2014/14)], the Board approved the aggregate indicative budgets for those programmes, amounting to the following totals of regular and other resources, respectively, by region: East Asia and the Pacific: $5,650,000 and $55,000,000; Eastern and Southern Africa: $92,262,500 and $215,730,000; Latin America and the Caribbean: $4,270,000 and $10,000,000; Middle East and North Africa: $13,340,000 and $23,423,000; South Asia: $210,000,000 and $455,500,000; and West and Central Africa: $35,780,000 and $205,585,000.

Resource mobilization

In 2014, UNICEF continued to collaborate with the public and private sectors to mobilize other resources. A total of 135 Governments contributed to UNICEF resources. Total income from public sector donors—Governments, intergovernmental organizations and inter-organizational arrangements—amounted to $3,679 million. Private sector contributions, mainly comprising resources from UNICEF National Committees, individual donors, NGOs and foundations, amounted to $1,397 million. Income for humanitarian assistance totalled $1,579 million. The increase of 19 per cent over the 2013 level of $1,332 million, was attributed primarily to funding for humanitarian emergencies in the CAR, Iraq, the Philippines, South Sudan and Syria, and the Ebola crisis.

Humanitarian needs grew exponentially during 2014; the funding requirement increased from $2.1 billion in January to $3.1 billion by the end of 2014.

Private Fundraising and Partnerships

In February, the Executive Board had before it a report on the 2014 Private Fundraising and Partnerships (PFP) workplan and proposed budget [E/ICEF/2014/AB/L.1], which stated that PFP in 2014 would generate a projected $1,010.6 million in net revenue, of which $480.6 million would be for regular resources and $530 million for other resources. Planned expenses for 2014 would amount to $128.4 million.

On 6 February, [dec. 2014/4], the Executive Board approved budgeted expenses of $109 million, and authorized an expenditure range of $107 million to $112 million, depending on final revenue from fundraising. The Board authorized UNICEF to re-deploy resources among the various budget lines up to a maximum of 10 per cent of the amounts approved, and, when necessary, to spend an additional amount between Board sessions, up to the amount caused by currency fluctuations. The Board also approved allocation of investments funds, with $49 million for 2014, and an interim one-month allocation for January 2015 of $13.14 million, to be absorbed in the annual PFP budget for 2015.

In September, the Executive Board considered a report [E/ICEF/2014/AB/L.6] on UNICEF private fundraising. According to the report, net revenue for the UNICEF PFP in 2013 amounted to $1.13 billion. That was $198 million (21 per cent) more than the planned target of $932 million and $227 million (25 per cent) more than the $903 million generated in 2012. The 2013 net income included private fundraising ($437 million), sales of UNICEF cards and products ($16 million), and fundraising for other resources ($677 million).

Audits

In an annual report [E/ICEF/2014/AB/L.2] to the Executive Board, the Office of Internal Audit and Investigations (OIAI) provided information on its internal audit activities in 2013. OIAI issued 55 internal audit and advisory engagement reports in 2013, consisting of 39 new audits and advisory engagement reports and finalization of 15 audits and 1 advisory engagement that were ongoing at the end of 2012. The 51 audits completed in 2013 included 42 country-office audits, 1 regional audit, 6 headquarters audits and 2 inter-agency audits. The 51 OIAI internal audit reports contained a total of 517 recommendations, of which 129 were rated as high priority and 388 as medium priority. In 2013, issues related to the risk area of organizational strategy and neutrality were primarily addressed at the country level under the category of governance and accountability. At the end of 2013, there were five outstanding recommendations older than 18 months, one related to country offices and four to headquarters, regional offices and thematic areas. OIAI also managed 148 investigations in 2013, including 21 cases carried over from 2012 and 128 allegations received in 2013. The overall caseload intake more than doubled from 62 cases in 2012 to 127 cases in 2013.

In June, the Executive Board had before it the UNICEF management response to the annual report of OIAI for 2013 [E/ICEF/2014/AB/L.3], which contained management actions and plans to address overall findings; recommendations of country-office audits; recommendations regarding headquarters, regional offices, joint audits, and advisory services; findings from investigations; and concluding observations in the 1023 annual report of the UNICEF Audit Advisory Committee.

The Executive Board, on 6 June [dec. 2014/11], took note of the annual report of OIAI for 2013 and the UNICEF management response to that annual report; expressed its continued support for the strengthening and resourcing of UNICEF internal audit and investigations function; and welcomed continued UNICEF commitment to greater accountability and implementation of recommendations arising from its internal audits.

Financial report and audited financial statements

Taking note of the UNICEF financial report and audited financial statements for 2012 and the Board of Auditors' report [A/68/5/Add.2]; the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions [A/68/381]; and the report of the Secretary-General [A/68/350], the Executive Board, on 6 February [dec. 2014/3], requested UNICEF to continue strengthening its core business practices and internal controls, as well as monitoring and oversight of implementing partners; encouraged UNICEF to continue strengthening the monitoring and oversight of the implementation of its cooperation agreements with National Committees for UNICEF; and also encouraged UNICEF to prioritize the finalization of the revised framework for the harmonized approach to cash transfers, in coordination with other members of the UN Development Group, and to ensure improved oversight when the revised framework was implemented.

In June [A/69/5/Add.3], the Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly the UNICEF financial report and audited financial statements for the year ended 2013 and the report of the Board of Auditors. During that period, UNICEF continued to improve its governance, risk management and programme and operations management at its headquarters and field offices. There was, however, room for improvement in the areas of cash transfers to implementing partners, cost management and programme management. Of the 26 recommendations made for 2012, 19 (73 per cent) had been fully implemented and 7 were under implementation. Total revenue in 2013 amounted to $4.85 billion, an increase of $908 million compared with 2012. The main sources of revenue continued to be voluntary contributions from Governments, private organizations and individuals (97 per cent); the remaining revenue (3 per cent) was generated from the sale of greetings cards and products ($70 million), interest ($29 million), procurement services for partners ($46 million) and miscellaneous services ($13 million). Total expenses increased by $467 million, from $3.62 billion in 2012 to $4.08 billion in 2013. Approximately 33 per cent of expenses in 2013 ($1.33 billion) were in the form of cash assistance to implementing partners. At the end of 2013, UNICEF total assets amounted to $7.76 billion, $4.04 billion (52 per cent) of which comprised cash and term deposits as well as investments. The total budget utilized in 2013 was $4.23 billion.

Refugees and displaced persons

The year 2014 saw nearly 60 million individuals displaced worldwide as a result of conflict and persecution. The total number of persons of concern to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) increased to 14.4 million. More than half came from three countries: Afghanistan, Somalia and the Syrian Arab Republic. Only 126,800 refugees returned home in 2014—the lowest level since 1983.

With new conflicts emerging in Africa and ongoing crises there worsening, the UNHCR emergency response capacity was severely tested during the year. Level 3 emergencies, requiring system-wide mobilization, were declared in the Central African Republic (CAR), South Sudan and Iraq. Meanwhile, further displacement in the eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and Darfur in the Sudan, as well as the outbreak of the Ebola virus disease in West Africa exacerbated the humanitarian situation. In the CAR, UNHCR focused on meeting basic needs, mainly shelter and non-food items, and facilitated the return and reintegration of internally displaced persons (IDPs) in their areas of origin. In search of durable solutions, a pilot project to support the spontaneous repatriation of 10,000 Somali refugees from Kenya was launched in December, under a tripartite agreement between Kenya, Somalia and UNHCR. The voluntary repatriation of Angolans also resumed in 2014, bringing the Angolan refugee chapter near conclusion after 50 years of displacement.

In the Americas, UNHCR facilitated the Cartagena+30 process, which led to the adoption of the Brazil Declaration and Plan of Action to strengthen protection and find solutions for the region's refugees, displaced and stateless people in the decade to come. In the Asia and the Pacific region, the Office carried out refugee status determination in countries without national eligibility procedures. In the Middle East and North Africa region, during the year, Syrians became the largest refugee population under the Office's mandate, with an estimated 3.7 million. Following the declaration of the level 3 emergency in Iraq in August, UNHCR launched an expanded operation to bring in relief supplies by air, land and sea—the largest single aid distribution organized by the Office in more than a decade, targeting half a million IDPs. In Europe, the number of people of concern to UNHCR rose significantly in 2014, particularly in Turkey with more than 1.7 million Syrian refugees, and in the Russian Federation, which received more than 235,000 applications for refugee status mainly from Ukraine. Two of the UNHCR priorities in Europe were to ensure access to territory and asylum procedures; and prevent loss of life at sea. The seventh High Commissioner's annual Dialogue on Protection Challenges in December was dedicated to the issue of protection at sea.

The scale and protracted nature of displacement forced the international community to rethink traditional approaches to humanitarian assistance. In particular, measures to facilitate the self-reliance of displaced persons while they were in exile represented an important shift away from "care and maintenance" models. The UNHCR "Global strategy for livelihoods" (2014–2018) was rolled out in 15 country operations and included innovative ways of connecting refugees with employment opportunities. In 2014, the Office collaborated with over 900 partners, including 720 non-governmental organizations. The World Food Programme remained one of its most important operational partners.

During the year, UNHCR signed a revised memorandum of understanding with the Office of Internal Oversight Services to strengthen arrangements for internal audit services; and a cross-functional working group was established to assess the strength of the Office's fraud prevention system.

In December, the General Assembly increased the membership of the UNHCR Executive Committee from 94 to 98 States. Also in December, the Assembly adopted a resolution on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, by which it condemned all acts that posed a threat to the personal security and well-being of refugees and asylum seekers, such as refoulement, unlawful expulsion and physical attacks, and urged the international community to continue to fund generously the refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Programme policy

Executive Committee

At its sixty-fifth session (Geneva, 29 September–3 October) [A/69/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) held a high-level segment on “Enhancing international cooperation, solidarity, local capacities and humanitarian action for refugees in Africa”, at the end of which the Executive Committee adopted a statement. On administrative, financial and programme matters, the Executive Committee approved total revised requirements for 2014 amounting to $6,236,218,896, as well as the programmes and budgets for regional programmes, global programmes and headquarters amounting to $6,234,449,630 for 2015. The Executive Committee decided to convene three formal meetings of its Standing Committee in 2015: in March, June and September. The Executive Committee also approved applications by Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Lithuania, Malaysia, Nepal and Panama, for observer participation in meetings of its Standing Committee in 2014–2015. It further adopted the provisional agenda for its sixty-sixth session (2015).

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, António Guterres, in his opening statement at the sixty-fifth session of the Executive Committee, said that, with more than 3 million refugees, 12.5 million internally displaced persons (IDPs) and around 700,000 stateless persons, Africa represented the biggest challenge for UNHCR in terms of capacity and financial requirements. The surge in new conflicts during the previous 12 months had had devastating effects in terms of internal and cross-border displacement.

In the Central African Republic (CAR), for example, almost 500,000 persons remained internally displaced and more than 400,000 persons were refugees in Cameroon, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and the Congo. In northern Nigeria, continued insecurity had displaced almost 650,000 persons internally, and around 61,000 persons had sought refuge in Cameroon, the Niger and Chad. There were still almost 140,000 Malian refugees in Mauritania, the Niger and Burkina Faso. The number of internally displaced in Mali had dropped by half in 2014, and some refugees had returned spontaneously, despite the persistent insecurity. The conflict in Libya had displaced around 147,000 persons within the country, and the worsening security situation had led many to board boats to Europe.

The spate of recent emergencies threatened to dilute the focus on protracted displacement, particularly in Somalia and the DRC, and on refugee populations (Eritreans, Darfuri, Saharans and Ivorians). The combination of old and new conflicts and new emergencies placed an enormous stress on the capacities of all the actors involved and jeopardized the food security of refugees and IDPs.

At the end of the high-level segment, the Executive Committee adopted a statement on enhancing international cooperation, solidarity, local capacities and humanitarian action for refugees in Africa.

The general debate of the session focused on more systematic support to host countries and local communities, the need for a renewed focus on prevention and strong international resolve to bring about an end to conflict, the need to foster refugee resilience and livelihoods, and the importance of redoubling efforts towards durable solutions while ensuring that no one was left behind. In his opening statement to the debate [A/AC.96/SR.678], the High Commissioner said that the response to five system-wide level 3 emergencies in Syria, the Philippines, the CAR, South Sudan and Iraq over the previous year had placed an unprecedented strain on the UNHCR resources. More than 670 emergency deployments of UNHCR and partner staff had been made since 2013, and 400 international emergency fast-track posts had been advertised to ensure continuity beyond the immediate emergency response.

UNHCR continued to rely on the support of the host countries and donors to protect refugees and provide humanitarian assistance. Nine out of ten refugees lived in developing countries—up from 70 per cent 10 years earlier. It was crucial, therefore, for host States in the developing world to benefit from increased international solidarity and burden-sharing. Voluntary contributions to UNHCR had reached a record $2.9 billion in 2013. Numerous measures had been taken to address the issues of statelessness, protection at sea, protection of women and children. Internal displacement, which stood at over 33 million persons worldwide, however, required greater international attention.

Finding durable solutions to the surge in displacement rates remained the most challenging aspect of the agency’s mandate. UNHCR had established 19 operations worldwide with non-earmarked funding as part of the Transitional Solutions Initiative and had increased its budget for the Global Strategy for Livelihoods by more than 40 per cent over the previous three years. To expand the available resource base, UNHCR intended also to make structural improvements to the existing humanitarian funding system and establish partnerships with emerging donors and the private sector. Funding difficulties notwithstanding, the fundamental challenge to humanitarian response remained conflict prevention and resolution.

The annual report [A/69/12] of the High Commissioner to the General Assembly covered the first half of the year 2014 [YUN 2013, p. 1154]. The second half was covered in a later report [A/70/12] (see p. 1323).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee

[A/69/482], adopted resolution 69/152 without vote [agenda item 61].

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office and the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its sixty-fifth session and the decisions contained therein,

Recalling its previous annual resolutions on the work of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees since its establishment by the General Assembly,

Expressing deep concern that the number of people who are forcibly displaced owing to conflict, persecution, violence and other reasons, including terrorism, has reached the highest level since the Second World War,

Expressing its appreciation for the leadership shown by the High Commissioner,

Commending the staff of the Office of the High Commissioner and of its partners for the competent, courageous and dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities,

Underlining its strong condemnation of all forms of violence to which humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel are increasingly exposed,

1. Welcomes the important work undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and its Executive Committee in the course of the year, which is aimed at strengthening the international protection regime and at assisting Governments in meeting their protection responsibilities;

2. Endorses the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its sixty-fifth session;

3. Recognizes the relevance of the Executive Committee's practice of adopting conclusions, and encourages the Executive Committee to continue this process;

4. Appreciates the convening of the high-level segment on enhancing international cooperation, solidarity, local capacities and humanitarian action for refugees in Africa of the sixty-fifth plenary session of the Executive Committee, welcomes the statement adopted on 30 September 2014 by the States members of the Executive Committee, commends African States for their hospitality and refugee-friendly policies in hosting large numbers of refugees over a long period of time despite their limited resources, calls upon the African States and the international community to pursue efforts as identified in the statement, and calls upon all States to act in international solidarity, burden-sharing and partnership with African States to support international protection of refugees and facilitate durable solutions;

5. Also appreciates the follow-up to the high-level segment of the sixty-fourth plenary session of the Executive Committee, renews its call upon all States to provide the necessary support with a view to sharing the burden of the host countries, and underscores the critical importance of development support for host communities;

6. Reaffirms the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto as the foundation of the international refugee protection regime, recognizes the importance of their full and effective application by States parties and the values they embody, notes with satisfaction that 148 States are now parties to one or both instruments, encourages States not parties to consider acceding to those instruments and States parties with reservations to give consideration to withdrawing them, underlines, in particular, the importance of full respect for the principle of non-refoulement, and recognizes that a number of States not parties to the international refugee instruments have shown a generous approach to hosting refugees;

7. Re-emphasizes that the protection of refugees is primarily the responsibility of States, whose full and effective cooperation, action and political resolve are required to enable the Office of the High Commissioner to fulfil its mandated functions, and strongly emphasizes, in this context, the importance of active international solidarity and burden-sharing;

8. Welcomes recent accessions to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons and the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness since the intergovernmental ministerial event marking the sixtieth anniversary of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the fiftieth anniversary of the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, as well as pledges to remove reservations to them, also welcomes the recent increase in the number of accessions to the two Conventions, and notes that 84 States are now parties to the 1954 Convention and 63 States are parties to the 1961 Convention, encourages States that have not done so to give consideration to acceding to those instruments, notes the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in regard to identifying stateless persons, preventing and reducing statelessness and protecting stateless persons, and urges the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to work in this area in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and Executive Committee conclusions;

9. Re-emphasizes that prevention and reduction of statelessness are primarily the responsibility of States, in appropriate cooperation with the international community, and in this regard welcomes the call by the High Commissioner for action to end statelessness within a decade;

10. Also re-emphasizes that protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons are primarily the responsibility of States, in appropriate cooperation with the international community;

11. Notes the current activities of the Office of the High Commissioner related to protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, including in the context of inter-agency arrangements in this field, emphasizes that such activities should be consistent with relevant General Assembly resolutions and should not undermine the refugee mandate of the Office and the institution of asylum, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue his dialogue with States on the role of his Office in this regard;

12. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue responding adequately to emergencies, in accordance with its mandate and in cooperation with States, notes the measures taken by the Office to strengthen its capacity to respond to emergencies, and encourages the Office to pursue its efforts to further strengthen its emergency capacity and thereby ensure a more predictable, effective and timely response;

13. Also encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to work in partnership and in full cooperation with relevant national authorities, United Nations offices and agencies, international and intergovernmental organizations, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the continued development of humanitarian response capacities at all levels, and recalls the role of the Office as the leading entity of the cluster for protection, camp coordination and management and emergency shelter in complex emergencies;

14. Further encourages the Office of the High Commissioner, among other relevant United Nations and other relevant intergovernmental organizations and humanitarian and development actors, to continue to work with the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to enhance the coordination, effectiveness and efficiency of humanitarian response and to contribute, in consultation with States, as appropriate, to making further progress towards common humanitarian needs assessments, as stated, among other important issues, in General Assembly resolution 68/102 of 13 December 2013 on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations;

15. Welcomes the recent efforts by the Office of the High Commissioner to ensure a more inclusive, transparent, predictable and well-coordinated response to refugees as well as internally displaced persons and other persons of concern, consistent with its mandate, and in this regard takes note of the articulation of the refugee coordination model;

16. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to engage in and implement in full the objectives of the "Delivering as one" initiative;

17. Notes with appreciation the measures taken and efficiencies gained in the process of structural and management change to reinforce the capacity of the Office of the High Commissioner, and encourages the Office to focus on continuous improvement in order to enable a more efficient response to the needs of beneficiaries, including identifying unmet needs, and to ensure the effective and transparent use of its resources;

18. Expresses deep concern about the increasing threats to the safety and security of humanitarian aid workers and convoys and, in particular, the loss of life of humanitarian personnel working in the most difficult and challenging conditions in order to assist those in need;

19. Emphasizes the need for States to ensure that perpetrators of attacks committed on their territory against humanitarian personnel and United Nations and associated personnel do not operate with impunity and that the perpetrators of such acts are promptly brought to justice as provided for by national laws and obligations under international law;

20. Strongly condemns attacks on refugees, asylum seekers and internally displaced persons and acts that pose a threat to their personal security and well-being, and calls upon all States concerned and, where applicable, parties involved in an armed conflict to take all measures necessary to ensure respect for human rights and international humanitarian law;

21. Deplores the refoulement and unlawful expulsion of refugees and asylum seekers, and calls upon all States concerned to ensure respect for the relevant principles of refugee protection and human rights;

22. Urges States to uphold the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, inter alia, through effective measures to prevent the infiltration of armed elements, to identify and separate any such armed elements from refugee populations, to settle refugees in secure locations and to afford to the Office of the High Commissioner and, where appropriate, other humanitarian organizations prompt, unhindered and safe access to asylum seekers, refugees and other persons of concern;

23. Notes with concern that asylum seekers, refugees and stateless persons are subject to arbitrary detention in some situations, welcomes the increasing use of alternatives to detention, and emphasizes the need for States to limit detention of asylum seekers, refugees and stateless persons to that which is necessary;

24. Expresses concern at the large number of asylum seekers who have lost their lives at sea trying to reach safety, and encourages international cooperation to further strengthen search and rescue mechanisms;

25. Emphasizes that the international protection of refugees is a dynamic and action-oriented function that is at the core of the mandate of the Office of the High Commissioner and that it includes, in cooperation with States and other partners, the promotion and facilitation of the admission, reception and treatment of refugees in accordance with internationally agreed standards and the ensuring of durable, protection-oriented solutions, bearing in mind the particular needs of vulnerable groups and paying special attention to those with specific needs, and notes in this context that the delivery of international protection is a staff-intensive service that requires adequate staff with the appropriate expertise, especially at the field level;

26. Expresses deep concern about the long-term impact of cuts in food rations on the health and well-being of refugees globally, particularly in Africa and the Middle East, and especially its impact on children, owing to insufficient funding and increased costs, and in this regard calls upon States to ensure sustained support for the Office of the High Commissioner and the World Food Programme, while looking to provide refugees with alternatives to food assistance, pending a durable solution;

27. Affirms the importance of age, gender and diversity mainstreaming in analysing protection needs and ensuring the participation of refugees and other persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner, as appropriate, in the planning and implementation of programmes of the Office and of State policies, also affirms the importance of according priority to addressing discrimination, gender inequality and the problem of sexual and gender-based violence, recognizing the importance of addressing the protection needs of women, children and persons with disabilities in particular, and underlines the importance of continuing to work on those issues;

28. Notes that the lack of civil registration and related documentation makes persons vulnerable to statelessness and associated protection risks, recognizes that birth registration provides an official record of a child's legal identity and is crucial to preventing and reducing statelessness, and welcomes efforts by States to ensure the birth registration of children;

29. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental importance and the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the function of the Office of the High Commissioner of providing international protection to refugees and seeking durable solutions to refugee problems, and recalls that those solutions include voluntary repatriation and, where appropriate and feasible, local integration and resettlement in a third country, while reaffirming that voluntary repatriation, supported, as necessary, by rehabilitation and development assistance to facilitate sustainable reintegration, remains the preferred solution;

30. Expresses concern about the particular difficulties faced by the millions of refugees in protracted situations, recognizes that the average length of stay has continued to grow, and emphasizes the need to redouble international efforts and cooperation to find practical and comprehensive approaches to resolving their plight and to realize durable solutions for them, consistent with international law and relevant General Assembly resolutions;

31. Recognizes the importance of achieving durable solutions to refugee problems and, in particular, the need to address in this process the root causes of refugee movements;

32. Encourages further efforts by the Office of the High Commissioner, in cooperation with countries hosting refugees and countries of origin, including their respective local communities, relevant United Nations agencies, international and intergovernmental organizations, regional organizations, as appropriate, non-governmental organizations and development actors, to actively promote durable solutions, particularly in protracted refugee situations, with a focus on sustainable, timely and voluntary return, which encompasses repatriation, reintegration, rehabilitation and reconstruction activities, and encourages States and other relevant actors to continue to support these efforts through, inter alia, the allocation of funds;

33. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to adopt a solution-oriented approach that supports the sustainability of voluntary repatriation and reintegration, including from the onset of displacement, and in this regard urges the Office to further strengthen partnerships with national Governments and development actors, as well as international financial institutions;

34. Calls upon States to create opportunities for resettlement as a durable solution, acknowledges with appreciation the many countries that continue to offer enhanced resettlement opportunities and other forms of humanitarian admission, recognizes the need to further increase the number of resettlement places and the number of countries with regular resettlement programmes and to improve the integration of resettled refugees, calls upon States to ensure inclusive and non-discriminatory policies in their resettlement programmes, and notes that resettlement is a strategic protection tool and solution for refugees;

35. Notes with appreciation the activities undertaken by States to strengthen the regional initiatives that facilitate cooperative policies and approaches on refugees, and encourages States to continue their efforts to address, in a comprehensive manner, the needs of the people who require international protection in their respective regions, including the support provided for host communities that receive large numbers of persons who require international protection;

36. Notes the importance of States and the Office of the High Commissioner discussing and clarifying the role of the Office in mixed migratory flows in order to better address protection needs in the context of mixed migratory flows, bearing in mind the particular needs of vulnerable groups, especially women, children and persons with disabilities, including by safeguarding access to asylum for those in need of international protection, and also notes the readiness of the High Commissioner, consistent with his mandate, to assist States in fulfilling their protection responsibilities in this regard;

37. Emphasizes the obligation of all States to accept the return of their nationals, calls upon States to facilitate the return of their nationals who have been determined not to be in need of international protection, and affirms the need for the return of persons to be undertaken in a safe and humane manner and with full respect for their human rights and dignity, irrespective of the status of the persons concerned;

38. Expresses concern about the challenges associated with climate change and environmental degradation to the operations of the Office of the High Commissioner and the assistance it provides to vulnerable populations of concern across the globe, particularly in the least developed countries, and urges the Office to continue to address such challenges in its work, within its mandate, and in consultation with national authorities and in cooperation with competent agencies in its operations;

39. Urges all States and relevant non-governmental and other organizations, in conjunction with the Office of the High Commissioner, in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing, to cooperate and to mobilize resources, including through financial and in-kind assistance, as well as direct aid to host countries, refugee populations and the communities hosting them, with a view to enhancing the capacity of and reducing the heavy burden borne by countries and communities hosting refugees, in particular those that have received large numbers of refugees and asylum seekers, and whose generosity is appreciated;

40. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to play its catalytic role in mobilizing assistance from the international community to address the root causes as well as the economic, environmental and social impact of large-scale refugee populations in developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and countries with economies in transition, and notes with appreciation those host countries, donor States, organizations and individuals that contribute to improving the condition of refugees through building the resilience of refugees and their host communities, while working towards a durable solution;

41. Expresses concern that the needs required to protect and assist persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner continue to increase and that the gap between global needs and available resources continues to grow, appreciates the continued and increasing hospitality of host countries and generosity of donors, and therefore calls upon the Office to continue and enhance efforts to broaden its donor base so as to achieve greater burden-sharing by reinforcing cooperation with governmental donors, non-governmental donors and the private sector;

42. Recognizes that adequate and timely resources are essential for the Office of the High Commissioner to continue to fulfil the mandate conferred upon it through its statute and by subsequent General Assembly resolutions on refugees and other persons of concern, recalls its resolution 58/153 of 22 December 2003 and subsequent resolutions on the Office of the High Commissioner concerning, inter alia, the implementation of paragraph 20 of the statute of the Office, and urges Governments and other donors to respond promptly to annual and supplementary appeals issued by the Office for requirements under its programmes;

43. Requests the High Commissioner to report on his annual activities to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

Enlargement of Executive Committee

On 16 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 2014/242, took note of the requests of Armenia [E/2014/79], Chad [E/2014/48], Georgia [E/2014/62] and Uruguay [E/2014/47] to become members of the Executive Committee, and recommended that the General Assembly decide on enlarging the membership of the Committee from 94 to 98 States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/482], adopted resolution 69/153 without vote [agenda item 61].

Enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 2014/242 of 16 July 2014 concerning the enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Taking note also of the request regarding the enlargement of the Executive Committee contained in the note verbale dated 10 December 2013 from the Permanent Mission of Georgia to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, the letter dated 18 February 2014 from the Permanent Representative of Uruguay to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, the note verbale dated 3 March 2014 from the Permanent Mission of Chad to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General and the letter dated 15 May 2014 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Armenia to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to increase the number of members of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from 94 States to 98 States;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to elect the additional members at a coordination and management meeting in 2015.

Standing Committee

In 2014, the Standing Committee, established by the Executive Committee in October 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1234] to carry on the Executive Committee's work between its annual sessions, held its fifty-ninth (4–6 March) [A/AC.96/1133], sixtieth (1–3 July) [A/AC.96/1140] and sixty-first (23–24 September) [A/AC.96/1141] meetings in Geneva. It considered issues relating to the UNHCR programme budgets and funding; international protection; regional activities and global programmes; programme/protection policy; coordination; management, financial control, administrative oversight and human resources; and governance. The Committee also held informal consultative meetings on issues requiring in-depth discussion: the proposed themes for the Executive Committee's conclusion on international protection; the follow-up to the high-level segment on solidarity and burden-sharing with countries hosting Syrian refugees; and the revised programme budget for 2014–2015. The Committee adopted decisions on budgets and funding for 2013 and 2014. The Committee's work was summarized in a September Secretariat report [A/AC.96/1142].

Refugee protection and assistance

In his annual report covering 2014 [A/70/12], the High Commissioner noted that by the end of 2014, nearly 60 million individuals worldwide were in situations of forced displacement as a result of persecution, conflict, generalized violence or human rights violations. This was the highest number recorded, with 13.9 million people newly displaced in 2014 alone. Of the 14.4 million refugees under the UNHCR mandate, more than half came from Afghanistan, Somalia and Syria. While the numbers of displaced persons continued to rise, solutions remained elusive. Only 126,800 refugees were able to return home in 2014, the lowest level since 1983, and some 6.4 million refugees under the UNHCR mandate had been in exile for five years or longer. The scale of global forced displacement and the response required outpaced anything seen since the Second World War, with needs far exceeding resources. Further, the denial of protection and the shrinking asylum space in some countries had been discouraging, particularly in the face of the overwhelming numbers of refugees in others, including Ethiopia, Iran, Jordan, Lebanon, Pakistan and Turkey, each of which hosted over 600,000 refugees.

In addition to the crises in the CAR, Iraq, South Sudan and Syria, which generated significant refugee outflows necessitating a UNHCR response in surrounding countries, the Office declared emergencies also for Burundi, Nigeria and the Mediterranean Sea. Risks to humanitarian workers remained considerable, and more than 100 were killed in violent incidents during the year. Twenty-three humanitarian workers lost their lives in Syria alone. The UNHCR staff and partners nonetheless continued to “stay and deliver” in many situations where security was deteriorating, like Syria, Iraq and Yemen.

The scale and protracted nature of displacement forced the international community to rethink traditional approaches to humanitarian assistance. In particular, measures to facilitate the self-reliance of displaced persons while they were in exile represented an important shift away from “care and maintenance” models. The UNHCR “Global strategy for livelihoods” (2014–2018) was rolled out in 15 country operations and included innovative ways of connecting refugees with employment opportunities, such as the online platform “UNHCR Exchange”, because experience showed that supporting refugee livelihoods in exile better prepared them for future durable solutions.

Similarly, the “Policy on alternatives to camps”, launched in July, focused on creating opportunities for refugees to live lawfully and independently in their host communities and drew on the UNHCR “Policy on refugee protection and solutions in urban areas” [YUN 2009, p. 1197], community-based protection practices and broader efforts to include refugees in national structures. The Office also partnered with governments to include refugees in national public services and development plans, for example in Ghana and Rwanda. The expanded and systematic use of cash-based interventions was another example of innovation to support the autonomy of refugees while in exile. The Office continued to implement a number of other strategies, such as the “Global strategy on settlement and shelter” (2014–2018), to enhance services for persons of concern in the sectors of public health, education, settlement and shelter, and fuel and energy.

UNHCR also highlighted the need for a change in approach to humanitarian funding, despite an unprecedented increase. There was an urging imperative to make better use of development programmes and funding in conjunction with humanitarian responses, as well as to ensure the involvement of development actors at all stages of displacement.

Many States made progress in developing and strengthening national asylum systems. At the end of the year, approximately 40 States were in the process of drafting or revising national laws relevant to refugee protection, and a total of 19 laws had been adopted, including in Albania and Rwanda. The temporary protection regime for Syrians adopted by Turkey in October was a significant milestone. Many European Union (EU) member States made progress in transposing the recast asylum directives under the Common European Asylum System into national law. During the year, UNHCR launched its “Global strategy—beyond detention” (2014–2019), which focused on expanding the availability of alternatives to detention for asylum seekers and refugees and ending the detention of children. The Office welcomed a number of positive developments in this area, including an Inter-American Court on Human Rights advisory opinion, which highlighted that detention of children as part of immigration procedures should be the exception rather than the rule.

The High Commissioner concluded that in a year that continued to break records in terms of the scale and scope of forced displacement worldwide, there were nonetheless positive developments in preventing and resolving statelessness and opportunities for some internally displaced persons to return home.

Populations of concern

Populations of concern to UNHCR included different categories: refugees and persons in a refugee-like situation; asylum seekers; IDPs and persons in an IDP-like situation; returned refugees and IDPs; persons under UNHCR stateless mandate; and other persons of concern. As at 2014, the “other persons of concern” referred to individuals who did not fall directly into any of the groups usually assisted by UNHCR but to whom the Office extended its protection and/or assistance services, based on humanitarian or other special grounds. Until 2003, this category also included stateless persons. Until 2007, people in refugee-like and IDP-like situations were also included in this category.

According to the High Commissioner’s annual report [A/70/12], by the end of 2014, the total population of concern to UNHCR stood at an unprecedented 54.9 million persons, including over 13 million refugees; 1.7 million asylum seekers; 32.2 million IDPs; 3.4 million people under UNHCR statelessness mandate; and over 1 million of other persons of concern.

Protection issues

A July note [A/AC.96/1134] of the High Commissioner on international protection highlighted protection responses in emergency and ongoing crisis situations, as well as the challenges presented by mixed migration and movements by sea. The note also reported on broader aspects of refugee and IDP protection, comprehensive solutions and statelessness.

Mixed flows

Throughout the year, securing access to territory and protection, especially in the context of mixed migratory movements, remained a global challenge. The principle of non-refoulement (non-expulsion)—the cornerstone of international protection and a norm of customary international law—was not always respected. The routine detention of asylum seekers, refugees and stateless persons, alongside economic migrants and often in sub-standard conditions, posed another major threat to their security and rights. In 2014, UNHCR received a record 245,700 applications for refugee status under its mandate. The Office continued to support States in the implementation of the “10-point plan of action on refugee protection and mixed migration”, and to encourage regional cooperation with respect to mixed movements, together with the International Organization for Migration (IOM). During the year, Caribbean States and Territories agreed to set up a Regional Consultative Mechanism to support the progressive establishment of asylum systems and other procedures to identify and assist persons travelling as part of mixed movements. In response to serious concerns about kidnapping and trafficking of refugees, asylum seekers and migrants in the East and Horn of Africa, regional governments adopted a declaration and plan of action in October at a conference in Khartoum organized by the African Union, the Sudan, UNHCR and IOM to share best practices, promote greater cooperation across borders and the development of national strategies to address smuggling and trafficking.

Refugee at sea

An estimated 350,000 refugees and migrants were reported to have taken to the seas in 2014, with some 4,300 people losing their lives. In the Mediterranean Sea alone, 219,000 persons arrived irregularly in the EU during the year. There were also significant mixed movements by sea in South-East Asia and in the Gulf of Aden (some 91,600 arrivals in Yemen in 2014). While movements by sea remained “mixed”, for the first time in several decades, the majority were persons fleeing conflict and persecution. The High Commissioner’s annual Dialogue on Protection Challenges in December was dedicated to the issue of protection at sea (see below). UNHCR continued to provide practical support to States confronting these movements. Cooperation between international and regional organizations to enhance protection at sea was also strengthened. An updated guide on rescue at sea and the principles and practices as applied to refugees and migrants was published by UNHCR, the International Chamber of Shipping and the International Maritime Organization (IMO). UNHCR also established the Regional Maritime Movements Monitoring Unit at its Regional Office in Bangkok in 2014, with the objective of improving knowledge of mixed movements by sea in South-East Asia and informing timely operational responses.

Dialogue on protection challenges. The seventh High Commissioner’s Dialogue on Protection Challenges (Geneva, 10–11 December) focused on the theme of “Protection at Sea”. The Dialogue informed implementation of the two-year Global Initiative on Protection at Sea, which aimed to support State action to limit loss of life at sea as well as exploitation, abuse and violence. The initiative also sought to ensure that responses to mixed migration by sea were sensitive to the international protection needs of specific individuals and groups.

The Dialogue brought together delegations from 88 countries, 52 non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and 13 international governmental organizations, as well as academics and experts. In total, approximately 450 people participated, making it the largest Dialogue to date. During the two-day meeting, the heads of UNHCR, IMO, IOM, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime issued a joint statement calling upon States to tackle the root causes of maritime migration, which included lack of access to safe and regular migration channels.

Refugee children and women

In its July meeting [A/AC.96/1140], the Standing Committee considered a document [EC/65/SC/CRP.13] on child protection. In 2014, 51 per cent of all refugees under the UNHCR mandate were children under the age of 18, the highest percentage in more than a decade. Some 34,300 asylum applications were lodged by unaccompanied and separated children in 82 countries, mostly from Afghanistan, Eritrea, Somalia and Syria. This was the highest number on record since the Office started collecting such data in 2006.

Most of the 16 priority countries under the UNHCR “Framework for the protection of children” reported an increase in access by children of concern to the Office to national child protection and social services. The Office also supported 16 youth-initiated and led projects as part of its Youth Initiative Fund. The Office’s “Education strategy” (2012–2016) was expanded to 25 priority countries, with multi-year strategies developed and implemented with ministries of education and local education partners. The “Educate a Child” partnership enabled an additional 266,000 out-of-school refugee children to enrol in primary school in 12 countries. In October, States from the Middle East and North Africa adopted the “Sharjah Principles” at a regional conference in the United Arab Emirates; the Principles called for all refugee children in the region to have their births registered to help prevent statelessness.

Several initiatives involving UNHCR were undertaken to strengthen sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) prevention and response. In June, the British Foreign Secretary and UNHCR Special Envoy Angelina Jolie co-hosted a high-level summit on ending sexual violence in conflict. With participation from 129 countries, the summit agreed on practical steps to tackle impunity. Further, UNHCR helped develop an international protocol on the documentation and investigation of sexual violence in conflict, which was launched at the summit. The Office welcomed the 2014 International Protocol on the Documentation and Investigation of Sexual Violence in Conflict, and took steps to facilitate survivors’ access to legal representation and interpreters, as well as to strengthen the capacity of lawyers and judges to adjudicate SGBV cases. In Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia and Uganda, UNHCR supported government efforts to establish and administer mobile courts. In line with the UN strategic results framework on women, peace and security, a 46 per cent participation rate amongst women in leadership and management structures was reported across 65 operations in 2014. UNHCR worked with the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women with respect to its general recommendation on the gender-related dimensions of refugee status, asylum, nationality and statelessness.

Resettlement

In July [A/AC.96/1140], the Standing Committee had before it a progress report on resettlement [EC/65/SC/CRP.11], highlighting increased resettlement submissions and departures in 2013 as compared with 2012 (25 per cent and 16 per cent, respectively). Noting that 27 States had regular resettlement programmes, the Deputy Director of the Division of International Protection expressed appreciation to those States that had expanded their quotas, as well as to those that had established humanitarian admission programmes for Syrians refugees. Yet a tremendous gap remained: nearly 1 million refugees globally were in need of resettlement, while only 80,000 regular resettlement places were available. Calling on States to be flexible in their resettlement criteria, she underscored the importance of resettlement partners closely engaging with host countries. UNHCR, for its part, was strengthening oversight to ensure integrity in its processing.

Age, gender and diversity

In July [A/AC.96/1140], the Standing Committee considered a document [EC/65/SC/CRP.14] on the 2011 implementation of the age, gender and diversity (AGD) policy, which, by formalizing the AGD approach [YUN 2004, p. 1203], sought to ensure that all persons of concern could enjoy their rights on an equal footing. The launch of the policy was followed by the development of a five-year plan (2011–2016), whose strategic results were: participatory assessments, to facilitate structured dialogue between UNHCR and persons of concern; staff capacity, to ensure that staff and partners had the skills and knowledge necessary to deliver on UNHCR commitments; and organizational accountability, to ensure that strong internal leadership and accountability for AGD were embedded in the organizational structure.

The 2013 AGD Accountability Report had been included into the UNHCR planning and reporting platform, Focus, which provided deeper insight on the broad range of age-, gender- and diversity-related problems faced by persons of concern and on the actions the Office was taking to address them. In 2014, UNHCR continued to improve the AGD Accountability Report in Focus in order to make gender-disaggregated data available; and to revise the participatory assessment tool based on feedback.

Refugee and HIV/AIDS

UNHCR aimed to ensure that persons of concern could access life-saving and essential health care; nutrition; reproductive health services; and HIV prevention, protection and treatment services in emergency and non-emergency settings. In 2014, considerable progress had been made toward ensuring that persons of concern had access to those services. The UNHCR Global Strategy for Public Health 2014–2018, which included HIV and reproductive health, stressed the importance of mainstreaming refugee health care into national health systems. The top priority for the Office was to address the essential health needs of newly-arrived refugees in emergencies. The Office's HIV programme was anchored in principles of protection and human rights. Over the five previous years, the proportion of countries in which refugees received access to antiretroviral treatment at the same level as nationals had increased from 79 to 97 per cent. In 2013, the proportion of operations reporting the inclusion of refugees in national HIV strategic plans stood at 87 per cent. Progress toward legislation protecting the rights of HIV-positive refugees and asylum seekers, including protection from mandatory HIV testing, however, required more attention. Further, 95 per cent of the UNHCR operations ensured refugees' access to "prevention of mother-to-child transmission" programmes on par with nationals.

Protracted situations and durable solutions

According to the High Commissioner's annual report [A/70/12], in 2014, some 6.4 million refugees under the UNHCR mandate remained in protracted exile. The lack of sustainable solutions was in part due to the continuing violence in many parts of the world. The Office strengthened internal institutional arrangements to create better momentum for solutions. For example, the Office set aside $20 million for the "Seeds for Solutions" initiative, which provided 20 country operations with technical expertise and increased resources for solutions-related activities. "Seeds for Solutions" funds supported the repatriation of some 12,000 former Angolan refugees from the DRC. The UNHCR Solutions Steering Group assisted operations to develop multi-year and multi-partner protection and solutions strategies; and the 2016–2017 biennium planning instructions directed all field operations to incorporate protection and solutions strategies in yearly and biennial country operation plans. At the global level, UNHCR was one of the co-chairs of the Solutions Alliance, which was established in April to encourage innovative solutions for the displaced by bringing together humanitarian and development actors.

The Office also continued to enhance partnerships with development actors to support efforts to achieve solutions. Cooperation with the World Bank resulted in the preparation of three regional forced displacement studies (Sahel, Great Lakes, and Horn of Africa) and the establishment of financial facilities for the Great Lakes region ($100 million) and the Horn of Africa ($150 million). A pilot project to support voluntary repatriation from Kenya to Somalia was launched in December, under a tripartite agreement between the Governments of Kenya and Somalia, and UNHCR.

Regarding voluntary return, far fewer refugees were able to return home in 2014 as compared to previous years, due to ongoing violence in several major countries of origin. Over the course of the year, 126,800 refugees returned to their countries of origin, including to the DRC (25,200), Mali (21,000) and Afghanistan (17,800). A tripartite agreement was concluded in May by UNHCR and the Governments of Mali and the Niger. The organized repatriation of 38,000 Ivorian refugees from Liberia was suspended in July as a precaution due to the Ebola virus, while the voluntary repatriation of Angolans resumed in 2014, bringing the Angolan refugee chapter near conclusion after 50 years of displacement. In 2014, some 5,800 Rwandans voluntarily returned home, bringing the total number of returns between 2001 and 2014 to 199,600. UNHCR and partners also supported efforts in Afghanistan, the DRC, Georgia, Mauritania and South Sudan to address housing, land and property disputes for returnees, including through legal counselling programmes.

On resettlement, during the year, UNHCR offices in 90 countries presented more than 103,800 cases to States for resettlement consideration. The main beneficiaries were refugees from Syria (21,100), the DRC (18,800), Myanmar (15,200), Iraq (11,800) and Somalia (9,400). Over 73,000 refugees departed for resettlement in 2014 with UNHCR assistance. Women and girls at risk represented more than 12 per cent of total submissions, surpassing for a fourth consecutive year the 10 per cent target set by UNHCR. In 2014, the Office also initiated a comprehensive review of its existing policies to address fraud in the context of resettlement.

Internal displacement

At the end of the year, the number of persons displaced internally within their countries by armed conflict, generalized violence or human rights violations was estimated at 38.2 million—the highest number since global statistics started to be collected in 1989. Notable increases in internal displacement occurred in the DRC, Iraq, Syria and Yemen. Other countries that experienced new conflict-induced internal displacement in 2014 included Afghanistan, the CAR, Colombia, Libya, Nigeria, Pakistan and South Sudan. December 2014 marked the second anniversary of the entry into force of the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (Kampala Convention) [YUN 2009, p. 1207]. Among the countries that adopted national legislation to address internal displacement or took steps in developing relevant national laws were Ukraine, the DRC, Nigeria and Afghanistan.

UNHCR continued to engage in situations of internal displacement primarily through an inter-agency framework. The Office led 22 of 27 protection clusters worldwide and 11 of the 24 country-level shelter clusters. The Office also worked closely with national human rights institutions to enhance protection for IDPs, including in Afghanistan, Colombia, the Philippines and Uganda. Multi-year, multi-partner strategies for solutions for IDPs progressed in Colombia, Mali, Serbia, Somalia and Sri Lanka. Among those countries where UNHCR was operational, some 1.8 million IDPs returned home during 2014; about one quarter of them with the UNHCR assistance.

Statelessness

In 2014, UNHCR reported a figure of 3.5 million stateless persons. In November, the Office launched the #IBelong global campaign to end statelessness within 10 years, along with the “Global action plan to end statelessness: 2014–2024”. During the year, some 37,100 persons who were formerly stateless acquired nationality in 23 countries. Côte d’Ivoire continued its efforts to resolve one of the largest statelessness situations in the world, including through an innovative 2013 amendment to its nationality law that allowed long-term residents to acquire nationality through a simple declaration. UNHCR worked with the Government of Kyrgyzstan to assist over 6,000 stateless persons to apply for Kyrgyz nationality since May. Efforts to identify persons who were stateless or at risk of statelessness also continued in Indonesia and the Philippines. To reduce the risk of statelessness, UNHCR continued to support host governments to ensure timely registration of births by competent authorities in the context of refugee emergencies. Jordan launched mobile birth registration for all camp-based refugees and issued 2,400 birth certificates to Syrian refugee children in 2014, compared to fewer than 300 in 2013. During the year, over 40,000 families were counselled on birth registration procedures in Lebanon.

International instruments

In 2014, the number of parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] remained at 145, and the number of parties to its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477] remained at 146.

The number of parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416] rose to 86 with the accession of the Gambia, Mozambique, the Niger, Paraguay and Peru. The number of parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533] increased to 63 with the accession of Argentina, Belgium, Colombia, the Gambia, Georgia, Guinea, Mozambique and Peru.

Regional activities

Africa

According to UNHCR Global Report 2014, with new conflicts emerging in Africa and ongoing crises worsening, the UNHCR emergency response capacity was severely tested during the year. Level 3 emergencies—major, sudden-onset humanitarian crises, triggered by natural disaster or conflict, which required system-wide mobilization—were declared in the CAR and South Sudan, with massive displacement inside the countries and across borders. The High Commissioner designated two senior Regional Refugee Coordinators to manage the humanitarian response to the crises, and additional resources and staff were rapidly deployed to the affected countries. The Regional Refugee Coordinators led the humanitarian community in formulating Regional Refugee Response Plans for both crises.

Meanwhile, further displacement in long-standing areas of conflict, such as the eastern DRC, Somalia and Darfur in the Sudan, exacerbated the situation in already overburdened host countries. In a year of multiple, large-scale crises on the continent, the outbreak of the Ebola virus in West Africa presented additional challenges (see p. 1355). Refugees in the three main countries affected by the virus—Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone—were also at risk. UNHCR ensured that refugees were included in national prevention and response plans. Measures were also undertaken to prevent infection in the camps, including awareness-raising and the establishment of early detection mechanisms, and support was provided to the local response mechanisms in each country.

The CAR and South Sudan emergencies dominated much of the UNHCR attention during the year. In the CAR, the deployment of UN peacekeeping forces in September brought about hope for the re-establishment of security in the country. Ongoing fighting and human rights abuses targeting civilians, however, continued to cause massive displacement, and violence spilled across borders into the host countries of Cameroon, Chad, the Congo and the DRC. Many of the Central Africans arriving in neighbouring countries were severely malnourished, having walked for weeks to reach safety. By mid-year, UNHCR and its partner aid agencies were able to strengthen assistance to meet the needs of the refugees and enhance reception services for new arrivals.

Because of the unrest in South Sudan, the number of refugees that fled to Ethiopia, Kenya, the Sudan and Uganda reached 614,000, of whom 488,000 fled in the course of 2014. In some countries, humanitarian assistance was hampered by severe rains, strained logistical capacity and lack of access, with camps experiencing food shortages and overcrowding. Several refugee settlements in flood-prone areas were moved to higher land. Despite ongoing peace negotiations, fighting in South Sudan continued to displace civilians. By the end of the year, there were more than 1.6 million South Sudanese displaced within the country, tens of thousands of whom continued to seek temporary protection in or around UN peacekeeping sites.

The situation in north-eastern Nigeria also deteriorated in 2014, with attacks on civilians more frequent and violent. Cross-border attacks from Nigeria into Cameroon, Chad and the Niger also caused internal displacement in these countries. By the end of the year, some 1.1 million Nigerians were internally displaced, and more than 54,000 were refugees in the three host countries. Appeals for emergency requirements were launched in September to address the needs of the refugees and IDPs. The appeals, however, were only 45 per cent funded at the end of the year, while the needs continued to grow.

In the DRC, conflict continued to affect the east of the country, internally displacing around 2.7 million people. Approximately 450,000 Congolese were refugees in neighbouring countries. In Mali, the security situation remained fragile. Despite some spontaneous returns, it was not yet conducive for organized voluntary return. Some 143,000 Malian refugees remained in Burkina Faso, Mauritania and the Niger at year end. In South Africa, xenophobia and violence against foreigners, affecting many refugees and asylum seekers, were a major concern and resulted in loss of lives, property damage and displacement. UNHCR, working along with the Government and civil society, bolstered efforts to address the situation, including by establishing a 24-hour assistance hotline and organizing mass information campaigns to promote tolerance.

While the situation in Somalia remained volatile, the High Commissioner's Global Initiative for Somali Refugees galvanized support for solutions. At a ministerial-level meeting held in Ethiopia on 20 August, representatives of concerned countries, the United Nations and regional partners signed the Addis Ababa Commitment towards Somali Refugees, which agreed on the need to ensure asylum space, while supporting host countries and working towards creating the conditions for voluntary repatriation to Somalia. The Commitment also emphasized other solutions, including local integration, resettlement and alternative stay arrangements. By the end of the year, some 2,000 Somalis had voluntarily repatriated to areas of relative stability. A pilot project to support the spontaneous repatriation of 10,000 Somali refugees from Kenya by 30 June 2015 was launched in December, under the auspices of a tripartite agreement between the Government of Kenya, Somalia and UNHCR.

In 2014, the voluntary repatriation of Angolans resumed, bringing the Angolan refugee chapter near conclusion after 50 years of displacement. Approximately 14,300 former Angolan refugees repatriated with the UNHCR assistance, mainly from the DRC, and from Zambia and the Congo. In Zambia, UNHCR continued to support a government programme to locally integrate former Angolan refugees. The voluntary repatriation of Rwandans also gradually moved forward. In 2014, around 5,300 Rwandans returned home. The biometric registration of Rwandans in eastern DRC commenced, with a view to eventually facilitating repatriation and local integration. In Tanzania, the naturalization process for more than 162,000 former Burundian refugees resumed in 2014, after having been on hold since 2011. By the end of the year, more than 40,000 former Burundian refugees, now Tanzanians, received naturalization certificates, which accorded them the same rights as nationals. UNHCR was supporting the Government with all aspects of the naturalization process, while working with the authorities and development partners on the longer-term socioeconomic aspects of their integration. At the end of 2014, approximately 35,000 refugees returned to Mali from exile in Burkina Faso, Mauritania and the Niger. A tripartite agreement was concluded between the Governments of Burkina Faso and Mali, and UNHCR to facilitate voluntary repatriation.

In 2014, UNHCR submitted the cases of some 34,800 refugees for resettlement from Africa, and more than 19,000 refugees departed to their resettlement countries. This was a 19 per cent increase compared to the number of submissions made in 2013 and a 52 per cent increase compared to 2012. Advances were also made in addressing statelessness, with several African countries acceding to the 1954 and 1961 Conventions. Côte d'Ivoire took steps to identify and address the status of an estimated 700,000 people at risk of becoming stateless. At the end of the year, 22 of the 54 African Union member States were parties to the 1954 Convention and 15 were parties to the 1961 Convention.

At the end of the year, the UNHCR budget for the Africa region stood at $2.6 billion, which included four supplementary budgets for the emergency situations in the CAR, the Ebola response, Nigeria and South Sudan. The total funding received in 2014 for Africa was $995 million, leaving a gap of over $1.6 billion. Expenditure stood at $1.1 billion in 2014, which represented an increase of $153 million over 2013 (when the budget was $1.97 billion). Regarding its financial commitments by subregion, in 2014, UNHCR spent $710.8 million in East Africa and the Horn of Africa, where there were some 7.7 million people of concern. In Central Africa and the Great Lakes region, $236.2 million were spent on 6 million people of concern, while in West Africa $135.8 million were spent on some 2.5 million people of concern. In Southern Africa, UNHCR expended $42.5 million where there were approximately 741,746 people of concern.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/143 [YUN 2013, p. 1160], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/69/339] on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa provided by UNHCR and other UN entities including the World Food Programme (WFP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights of Internally Displaced Persons. The report updated information contained in the Secretary-General 2013 report on the topic [YUN 2013, p. 1159], covered the period from 1 January 2013 to 30 June 2014, and provided overviews by subregions.

During the reporting period, both new and escalating emergencies, triggered by extreme violence and human rights abuses, occurred in the Central African Republic, eastern DRC, northern Nigeria and South Sudan. Meanwhile, protracted displacement continued into the second and third decades for some Somalis, Rwandans, Burundians, Liberians, Eritreans and Congolese in exile.

Despite strong support from donors, crucial gaps remained in the funding of refugee operations, particularly for more protracted situations, which suffered from chronic underfunding. In 2013 alone, UNHCR issued three supplementary funding appeals for the DRC, the CAR and Chad emergencies to the total amount of $271.7 million. The UNHCR 2014 comprehensive needs assessment budget for Africa was nearly $1.9 billion, as a result of the CAR and South Sudan emergencies.

East Africa, including the Horn of Africa, remained the subregion with the largest refugee population on the continent, although the absolute number of refugees and asylum seekers declined modestly, from nearly 2 million at the end of 2012 to 1.7 million at the end of 2013. East Africa was home to the largest percentage of refugee children, at 60 per cent of the total refugee population. In Central Africa and the Great Lakes region, the violence in the CAR triggered subregional movements, as the country had long hosted hundreds of thousands of migrants from Cameroon, Chad and elsewhere.

West Africa was home to more than 366,000 refugees and asylum seekers, and the number of internally displaced persons was also on the rise. Security had deteriorated everywhere but particularly in northern Mali and Nigeria, limiting humanitarian access and the delivery of protection and assistance. Nearly one third of the refugees in the subregion was living in protracted displacement. The population of refugees and asylum seekers in southern Africa remained nearly constant in 2013, with 135,542 refugees and 278,633 asylum seekers at year-end. In South Africa, episodes of xenophobic violence continued. For many other southern African countries with small refugee populations, the overall protection atmosphere remained largely unchanged.

Concerning individuals with specific needs, the Secretary-General reported that a regional framework for the protection of South Sudanese and Sudanese refugee children, comprising 65 per cent of refugees from these countries, was developed by UNHCR and NGOs and was guiding operational actors in a coordinated response. Initiatives to enhance the protection of refugee women included the provision of safe physical spaces. The use of mobile services facilitated the provision of psychosocial assistance to survivors of sexual and gender-based violence. Given the complex challenges of trafficking and related abuses reported in the subregion, the Government of the Sudan, UNHCR and IOM developed a strategy to deal with smuggling and trafficking in the Horn of Africa and East Africa.

On the humanitarian front, WFP provided food to 2.4 million refugees in 23 countries in Africa in 2013. By the end of 2013, 97 per cent of refugees in Africa had access to anti-retroviral treatment on a par with the nationals of their country of asylum. Eighteen countries had completed or drafted refugee education strategies, including child protection and sexual and gender-based violence prevention and response elements, in consultation with host governments, UNICEF and partners. The UN agencies were supporting strategies to improve the self-reliance of refugees, particularly to enable them to live within hosting communities, to work and to contribute to local economies. In South Sudan, the International Labour Organization focused on capacity-building through the introduction of basic market-relevant business skills, and the provision of start-up kits for 1,500 women and young people.

The Secretary-General concluded that despite progress made in finding durable solutions, with many refugees returning home or integrating locally, new and ongoing emergencies in Africa had caused massive internal displacement and resulted in an increase in the number of new refugees for the fourth consecutive year. Forced displacement had exposed people to many protection risks, including forced recruitment, sexual and gender-based violence, armed attacks, abductions and trafficking. He called on all States to respect fully the principle of non-refoulement, maintain open borders, combat xenophobia, ensure the humanitarian and civilian character of displacement sites, and end impunity for all forms of violence. He urged States and non-State actors to ensure rapid, unimpeded access of humanitarian relief to persons in need; ensure the security of humanitarian workers; sign, ratify and enforce the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel; and respect international human rights and humanitarian law in preventing the forced displacement of civilian populations within State borders. States were also encouraged to sign and ratify international instruments including the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, and the two conventions on statelessness. He further called on Governments, together with development and humanitarian actors, to work closely in developing durable solutions strategies for refugees and internally displaced persons, including by incorporating them into national plans, ensuring access to employment and taking all preventative measures to end displacement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/482], adopted resolution 69/154 without vote [agenda item 61].

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969 and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Reaffirming that the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, together with the 1967 Protocol Thereto, as complemented by the Organization of African Unity Convention of 1969, remains the foundation of the international refugee protection regime in Africa,

Welcoming the entry into force on 6 December 2012 and the ongoing process of ratification of the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, which mark a significant step towards strengthening the national and regional normative frameworks for the protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons,

Recognizing the particular vulnerability of women and children among refugees and displaced persons, including exposure to discrimination and sexual and physical abuse, violence and exploitation, and in this regard acknowledging the importance of preventing, responding to and addressing sexual and gender-based violence,

Gravely concerned about the rising number of refugees and displaced persons in various parts of the continent,

Acknowledging the efforts of Member States, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other stakeholders in improving the situation of refugees, and expressing grave concern about the deteriorating living conditions in many refugee camps in Africa,

Recognizing that refugees, internally displaced persons and, in particular, women and children are at an increased risk of exposure to HIV and AIDS, malaria and other infectious diseases,

Recalling the Joint Declaration adopted at the joint summit of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and the East African Community on the Horn of Africa crisis, held in Nairobi on 8 and 9 September 2011, which, inter alia, expressed concern about the mass exodus of refugees into neighbouring countries, as well as the increased number of internally displaced persons due to the ongoing humanitarian crises of drought and famine in the Horn of Africa,

Recalling also the Pact on Security, Stability and Development in the Great Lakes Region, adopted by the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region in 2006, and its instruments, in particular two of the protocols to the Pact which are relevant to the protection of displaced persons, namely, the Protocol on the Protection of and Assistance to Internally Displaced Persons and the Protocol on the Property Rights of Returning Persons,

Acknowledging with appreciation the generosity, hospitality and spirit of solidarity of African countries that continue to host the influx of refugees due to the humanitarian crises and protracted refugee situations, and in this regard expressing particular appreciation for the commitment and efforts of neighbouring countries in the recent humanitarian crises on the continent, and further acknowledging with appreciation the coordination of humanitarian assistance by the United Nations as well as the continuing efforts of donors, the United Nations system, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, regional organizations, international agencies, non-governmental organizations and other partners, with regard to, inter alia, integration, voluntary return, reintegration and resettlement, in addressing the plight of refugees during the emergency,

Recognizing that host States have the primary responsibility for the protection of and assistance to refugees on their territory and the need to redouble efforts to develop and implement comprehensive durable solution strategies, in appropriate cooperation with the international community, and burden- and responsibility-sharing,

Emphasizing that States have the primary responsibility to provide protection and assistance to internally displaced persons within their jurisdiction, as well as to address the root causes of the displacement problem, in appropriate cooperation with the international community,

Welcoming the ongoing implementation of pledges made by States at the intergovernmental ministerial event held in 2011 to mark the sixtieth anniversary of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the fiftieth anniversary of the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Calls upon African Member States that have not yet signed or ratified the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa to consider doing so as early as possible in order to ensure its wider implementation;

3. Notes the need for African Member States to address resolutely the root causes of all forms of forced displacement in Africa and to foster peace, stability and prosperity throughout the African continent so as to forestall flows of refugees;

4. Notes with great concern that, despite all the efforts made so far by the United Nations, the African Union and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa remains precarious, and calls upon States and other parties to armed conflict to observe scrupulously the letter and spirit of international humanitarian law, bearing in mind that armed conflict is one of the principal causes of forced displacement in Africa;

5. Welcomes decisions EX.CL/Dec.686(XX) and EX.CL/Dec.709(XXI) adopted by the Executive Council of the African Union at its twentieth ordinary session, held in Addis Ababa from 23 to 27 January 2012, and at its twenty-first ordinary session, held in Addis Ababa from 9 to 13 July 2012, on the humanitarian situation in Africa, insofar as they relate to persons of concern to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

6. Expresses its appreciation for the leadership shown by the Office of the High Commissioner, and commends the Office for its ongoing efforts, with the support of the international community, to assist African countries of asylum, including by providing support to vulnerable local host communities, and to respond to the protection and assistance needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa;

7. Notes with appreciation the initiatives taken by the African Union, the Subcommittee on Refugees, Returnees and Internally Displaced Persons of its Permanent Representatives Committee, and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, in particular the role of its Special Rapporteur on Refugees, Asylum Seekers, Migrants and Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, to ensure the protection of and assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa;

8. Acknowledges the important contribution of age, gender and diversity mainstreaming in identifying, through a participatory approach, the protection risks faced by the different members of the refugee communities, in particular the non-discriminatory treatment and protection of women, children, persons with disabilities and the elderly;

9. Affirms that children, because of their age, social status and physical and mental development, are often more vulnerable than adults in situations of forced displacement, recognizes that forced displacement, return to post-conflict situations, integration into new societies, protracted situations of displacement and statelessness can increase child protection risks, taking into account the particular vulnerability of refugee children to forcible exposure to the risks of physical and psychological injury, exploitation and death in connection with armed conflict, and acknowledges that wider environmental factors and individual risk factors, particularly when combined, may generate different protection needs;

10. Recognizes that no solution to displacement can be durable unless it is sustainable, and therefore encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to support the sustainability of voluntary return, reintegration and resettlement;

11. Welcomes the adoption of the conclusion on civil registration by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its sixty-fourth session, held in Geneva from 30 September to 4 October 2013, and recognizes the importance of early registration and effective registration systems and censuses as a tool of protection and as a means to the quantification and assessment of needs for the provision and distribution of humanitarian assistance and to implement appropriate durable solutions;

12. Recalls the conclusion on registration of refugees and asylum seekers adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its fifty-second session, notes the many forms of harassment faced by refugees and asylum seekers who remain without any form of documentation attesting to their status, recalls the responsibility of States to register refugees on their territories and, as appropriate, the responsibility of the Office of the High Commissioner or mandated international bodies to do so, reiterates in this context the central role that early and effective registration and documentation can play, guided by protection considerations, in enhancing protection and supporting efforts to find durable solutions, and calls upon the Office, as appropriate, to help States to conduct this procedure should they be unable to register refugees on their territory;

13. Calls upon the international community, including States and the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant United Nations organizations, within their respective mandates, to take concrete action to meet the protection and assistance needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons and to contribute generously to projects and programmes aimed at alleviating their plight, facilitating durable solutions for refugees and displaced persons and supporting vulnerable local host communities;

14. Reaffirms the importance of timely and adequate assistance and protection for refugees, returnees and displaced persons, also reaffirms that assistance and protection are mutually reinforcing and that inadequate material assistance and food shortages undermine protection, notes the importance of a rights- and community-based approach in engaging constructively with individual refugees, returnees and displaced persons and their communities so as to achieve fair and equitable access to food and other forms of material assistance, and expresses concern with regard to situations in which minimum standards of assistance are not met, including those in which adequate needs assessments have yet to be undertaken;

15. Also reaffirms that respect by States for their protection responsibilities towards refugees is strengthened by international solidarity involving all members of the international community and that the refugee protection regime is enhanced through committed international cooperation in a spirit of solidarity and burden- and responsibility-sharing among all States;

16. Further reaffirms that host States have the primary responsibility to ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum, calls upon States, in cooperation with international organizations, within their mandates, to take all measures necessary to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection and, in particular, to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian nature of refugee camps is not compromised by the presence or the activities of armed elements or used for purposes that are incompatible with their civilian character, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue efforts, in consultation with States and other relevant actors, to ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of camps;

17. Condemns all acts that pose a threat to the personal security and well-being of refugees and asylum seekers, such as refoulement, unlawful expulsion and physical attacks, calls upon States of refuge, in cooperation with international organizations, where appropriate, to take all measures necessary to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection, including the humane treatment of asylum seekers, notes with interest that the High Commissioner has continued to take steps to encourage the development of measures to better ensure the civilian and humanitarian character of asylum, and encourages the

High Commissioner to continue those efforts, in consultation with States and other relevant actors;

18. Deplores the continuing violence and insecurity which constitute an ongoing threat to the safety and security of staff members of the Office of the High Commissioner and other humanitarian organizations and an obstacle to the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Office and the ability of its implementing partners and other humanitarian personnel to discharge their respective humanitarian functions, urges States, parties to conflict and all other relevant actors to take all measures necessary to protect activities related to humanitarian assistance, prevent attacks on and kidnapping of national and international humanitarian workers and ensure the safety and security of the personnel and property of the Office and that of all humanitarian organizations discharging functions mandated by the Office, and calls upon States to investigate fully any crime committed against humanitarian personnel and bring to justice the persons responsible for such crimes;

19. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the African Union, subregional organizations and all African States, in conjunction with agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community, to strengthen and revitalize existing partnerships and forge new ones in support of the protection system for refugees, asylum seekers and internally displaced persons, and encourages African States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying and enforcing the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

20. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the international community and other entities concerned to continue and, where appropriate, to intensify their support to African Governments through appropriate capacity-building activities, including training of relevant officers, disseminating information about refugee instruments and principles, providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment or amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees, strengthening emergency response and enhancing capacities for the coordination of humanitarian activities, in particular those Governments that have received large numbers of refugees and asylum seekers;

21. Reaffirms the right of return and the principle of voluntary repatriation, appeals to countries of origin and countries of asylum to create conditions that are conducive to voluntary repatriation, and recognizes that, while voluntary repatriation remains the pre-eminent solution, local integration and third-country resettlement, where appropriate and feasible, are also viable options for dealing with the situation of African refugees who, owing to prevailing circumstances in their respective countries of origin, are unable to return home;

22. Also reaffirms that voluntary repatriation should not necessarily be conditioned on the accomplishment of political solutions in the country of origin in order not to impede the exercise of the refugees' right to return, recognizes that the voluntary repatriation and reintegration process is normally guided by the conditions in the country of origin, in particular that voluntary repatriation can be accomplished in conditions of safety and dignity, and urges the High Commissioner to promote sustainable return through the development of durable and lasting solutions, particularly in protracted refugee situations;

23. Calls upon the international donor community to provide financial and material assistance that allows for the implementation of community-based development programmes that benefit both refugees and host communities, as appropriate, in agreement with host countries and consistent with humanitarian objectives;

24. Appeals to the international community to respond positively, in the spirit of solidarity and burden- and responsibility-sharing, to the third-country resettlement needs of African refugees, notes in this regard the importance of using resettlement strategically, as part of situation-specific comprehensive responses to refugee situations, and to this end encourages States, the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant partners to make full use of the Multilateral Framework of Understandings on Resettlement, where appropriate and feasible;

25. Calls upon the international donor community to provide material and financial assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and infrastructure affected by refugees in countries of asylum as well as internally displaced persons, where appropriate;

26. Urges the international community, in the spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing, to continue to fund generously the refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the substantially increased needs of programmes in Africa, inter alia, as a result of repatriation possibilities, to ensure that Africa receives a fair and equitable share of the resources designated for refugees;

27. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner and interested States to identify protracted refugee situations which might lend themselves to resolution through the development of specific, multilateral, comprehensive and practical approaches to resolving such refugee situations, including the improvement of international burden- and responsibility-sharing and the realization of durable solutions, within a multilateral context;

28. Expresses grave concern about the plight of internally displaced persons in Africa, notes the efforts of African States in strengthening the regional mechanisms for the protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, calls upon States to take concrete action to prevent internal displacement and to meet the protection and assistance needs of internally displaced persons, recalls in that regard the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, notes the current activities of the Office of the High Commissioner related to the protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons, including in the context of inter-agency arrangements in this field, emphasizes that such activities should be consistent with relevant General Assembly resolutions and should not undermine the refugee mandate of the Office and the institution of asylum, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue his dialogue with States on the role of his Office in this regard;

29. Invites the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the human rights of internally displaced persons to continue his ongoing dialogue with Member States and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in accordance with his mandate, and to include information thereon in his reports to the Council and the General Assembly;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, taking fully into account the efforts expended by countries of asylum, under the item entitled “Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions”.

The Americas

In 2014, the region commemorated the thirtieth anniversary of the Cartagena Declaration on Refugees. UNHCR facilitated the Cartagena +30 process, which culminated in a ministerial event in Brasília, Brazil, in December, where States adopted the landmark Brazil Declaration and Plan of Action to strengthen protection and find solutions for the region’s refugees, displaced and stateless people in the decade to come. Brazil received the second largest number of asylum applications, surpassed only by the United States.

The year also saw unprecedented movements of people from the Northern triangle of Central America—El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras—many fleeing violence, persecution and transnational organized crime. More than 130,000 individuals fled to Mexico and North America in search of protection. At least 68,000 unaccompanied children were apprehended crossing the southern border of the United States. UNHCR responded to the forced displacement crisis by launching a regional initiative to bolster border monitoring and expand protection networks in Guatemala, Honduras and southern Mexico. The Office sought alternatives to detention, as well as ways to improve the reception conditions and shelter for children with protection concerns in Guatemala and Mexico.

During the year, the Office concluded partnership agreements with regional organizations, such as the Organization of American States and the Central American Integration System, to strengthen the region’s legal and institutional frameworks and promote high standards of regional refugee protection. Within Southern Common Market, the presidents of the respective National Eligibility Commissions helped advance common asylum policies and develop improved protection standards.

In Colombia, the operational focus was on enabling the transition from immediate assistance to longer-term solutions for displaced populations through the Transition Solutions Initiative, a joint project between UNHCR and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Initiative had potential to further assist victims of forced displacement in regaining their rights as citizens. In Costa Rica, Colombian refugees were integrated locally or appeared to be less dependent on aid. With the support of UNHCR partner Asociación de Consultores y Asesores Internacionales in San José, the Office implemented the “graduation approach”, which sought to “graduate” people out of poverty in rural or urban areas through a sequenced combination of livelihoods provisioning, capacity-building and microfinance.

Protection at sea posed a challenge for Caribbean States and Territories, which struggled to patrol their extensive maritime boundaries and provide protection safeguards for asylum seekers and others with protection needs in mixed flows. The Caribbean, however, committed to enhancing protection standards by establishing a regional consultative mechanism, which aimed to support the progressive establishment of asylum systems and procedures that identified and assisted different groups at risk; guarantee access to refugee status determination procedures; and provide alternatives to detention for asylum seekers and children. Trinidad and Tobago set an example by adopting, in 2014, a new refugee policy, including a three-year phased strategy to assume full responsibility for refugee status determination and protection. The number of asylum seekers doubled to nearly 500 in the Caribbean, a sub-region that struggled to provide an effective response across such a large geographical area. Another concern for the Caribbean was statelessness, with hundreds of thousands in the Dominican Republic who had been denied their nationality following a constitutional court ruling in 2013. Despite Dominican authorities’ efforts to restore nationality for some, an effective solution for all had not yet been found.

In 2014, Panama issued permanent residence documents to approximately 400 Colombians, who had previously benefitted from temporary protection status in the Darién province of the country for the past 15 years. To help respond to the influx of new arrivals to the United States—mainly unaccompanied children from Central America—UNHCR supported improved access to asylum procedures and legal representation. The Office further advocated for alternatives to detention and alternative refugee status determination mechanisms. In March, a report entitled Children on the Run, which reflected the findings of research undertaken at the southern border of the United States, was launched. The report concluded that most unaccompanied children apprehended were found to be in need of international protection. In Venezuela, a work plan enabled authorities to register many asylum seekers, allowing them to access asylum procedures and benefit from a rising recognition rate of nearly 20 per cent. More than 56,000 refugees were resettled in Canada and the United States. Solidarity resettlement countries, such as Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay, offered to resettle nearly 120 refugees. In 2014, approximately 10 per cent of all resettled Syrians were living in the Americas, mainly in Brazil, Canada, Uruguay and the United States.

The region’s 2014 budget approved by the Executive Committee in 2013 amounted to $110.4 million. As the budget did not increase significantly in the course of the year, a reprioritization exercise was conducted to address displacement in Central America; strengthen programmes for child protection in Mexico and protection monitoring in Honduras; and promote durable solutions in Colombia, Costa Rica and Ecuador. Total expenditure in 2014 stood at $61.1 million for a population of concern of 7.3 million. Lack of funding prevented a stronger protection response to the needs of people in mixed migratory movements in the Caribbean.

Asia and the Pacific

By the end of 2014, some 8.7 million people of concern to UNHCR were living in the Asia and the Pacific region, including 3.6 million refugees, 2.7 million IDPs and more than 1.5 million stateless people. Most countries and territories in the region continued to uphold their traditions of hospitality towards refugees and displaced people, although only 20 out of 45 States had acceded to the 1951 Refugee Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol.

The majority of refugees in the region were from Afghanistan and Myanmar. There were nearly 2.6 million Afghan refugees across the world, but the vast majority were in the neighbouring Iran and Pakistan. In addition, there were an estimated 2 million unregistered Afghans in these two countries. The voluntary return of Afghan had decreased significantly in the previous few years and had reached a historical low in 2014. Inside Myanmar, approximately 370,000 people remained displaced in Rakhine and Kachin States, and in the south-east of the country. Moreover, an estimated 810,000 people were without citizenship in Rakhine State. There were also approximately 265,000 refugees of different ethnicities, originating from Myanmar, who were displaced in neighbouring countries.

Around 75 per cent of refugees—2.7 million people—in the Asia and Pacific region were living in urban or semi-urban areas. Displaced people in urban situations were generally more vulnerable than camp populations and had a different set of protection needs, which were often not adequately addressed. For example, because they were not confined to a camp, many lacked documentation and were at risk of arrest, detention and deportation. Lack of documentation prevented them from legally accessing the labour market, and therefore they were more likely to become victims of labour exploitation. Women and adolescent girls were particularly vulnerable to sexual exploitation.

Because of inadequate protection, unequal access to education and livelihoods, and the lack of solutions, increasing numbers of people were undertaking dangerous journeys by sea, making irregular migration a key issue facing the Asia and the Pacific region. In 2014, some 63,000 people undertook irregular maritime journeys, the majority departing from the Bay of Bengal bound for Malaysia and Thailand. Hundreds of others followed routes through the Indian Ocean from South Asia and Indonesia to Australia, and across the Strait of Malacca from Malaysia to Indonesia. UNHCR received reports of 750 people who allegedly died at sea in South-East Asia in 2014, due to starvation, dehydration or ill treatment on board vessels. Those who arrived were malnourished and traumatized as a result of mistreatment at the hands of smugglers.

After 40 years, the UNHCR office in Viet Nam closed at the end of June and the coverage of its activities was assumed by the Regional Office in Bangkok as of 1 July. UNHCR carried out refugee status determination in countries without national eligibility procedures and continued to work on addressing the root causes of irregular movements, improving protection standards and seeking adequate solutions through closer multilateral cooperation in the region. In Bangkok, the Office established a Maritime Monitoring Unit tasked with compiling and reporting periodical statistics related to the irregular maritime departures. The Office and the Government of Indonesia co-chaired a workshop to assess the implementation of the 2013 Jakarta Declaration on Addressing Irregular Movement of Persons [YUN 2013, p. 1164]. In Central Asia, UNHCR promoted protection-sensitive border management in line with the 2013 Almaty Process on Refugee Protection and International Migration (Almaty Process). Almaty Process member States expressed concern over inadequate emergency preparedness, and agreed to establish national mechanisms for the identification and referral of people in need of international protection.

Under the joint Pakistan-UNHCR Refugee-Affected and Hosting Areas programme, over 1,000 projects were carried out throughout Pakistan in education, health, environment, social protection, water and sanitation, livelihood, and infrastructure sectors in 2014. The main objective of the programme was to promote tolerance towards Afghan refugees in hosting communities in Pakistan. In Myanmar, UNHCR prepared for the return of IDPs and refugees to the country's south-east. In the Philippines, the Strategic Response Plan for Typhoon Haiyan ended in August, following the Government's decision to phase out the humanitarian response coordination structures in favour of State-led recovery systems.

In June, the International Conference on Migration and Statelessness in Ashgabat, hosted by the Government of Turkmenistan and co-organized by IOM and UNHCR, addressed regional challenges and identified best practices for reducing and preventing statelessness, and improving migration management. Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan had taken practical steps towards resolving statelessness in their respective countries. Through funding provided by the "Seeds for Solutions" initiative, those countries
