States in a position to do so to use the reporting template made available by the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat, and reaffirms the utility of synchronizing such reports with biennial meetings of States and review conferences as a means of increasing the submission rate and improving the utility of reports, as well as contributing substantially to meeting discussions;

15. Also encourages States, on a voluntary basis, to make increasing use of their national reports as another tool for communicating assistance needs and information on the resources and mechanisms available to address such needs, and encourages States in a position to render such assistance to make use of these national reports;

16. Encourages States, relevant international and regional organizations and civil society with the capacity to do so to cooperate with and assist other States, upon request, in the preparation of comprehensive reports on their implementation of the Programme of Action;

17. Calls upon all States to implement the International Tracing Instrument by, inter alia, including in their national reports the name and contact information of the national points of contact and information on national marking practices used to indicate country of manufacture and/or country of import, as applicable;

18. Recognizes the urgent need to maintain and enhance national controls, in accordance with the Programme of Action, to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, including their diversion to illicit trade, illegal armed groups, terrorists and other unauthorized recipients, taking into account, inter alia, their adverse humanitarian and socioeconomic consequences for the affected States;

19. Encourages States in a position to do so to provide financial assistance, through a voluntary sponsorship fund, that could be distributed, upon request, to States otherwise unable to participate in meetings on the Programme of Action;

20. Encourages interested States and relevant international and regional organizations in a position to do so to convene regional meetings to consider and advance the implementation of the Programme of Action, as well as the International Tracing Instrument, including in preparation for the meetings on the Programme of Action;

21. Encourages civil society and relevant organizations to strengthen their cooperation and work with States at the respective national and regional levels to achieve the implementation of the Programme of Action;

22. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the recommendation made by the Fifth Biennial Meeting of States in paragraph 27 (e) of its outcome document, to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "The illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects".

Assistance to States for curbing illicit small arms traffic

In July, the Secretary-General provided an overview [A/69/132] of the activities undertaken by Member States, the UN system and other intergovernmental organizations to implement General Assembly resolutions 67/50 [YUN 2012, p. 526], 68/34 [YUN 2013, p. 515] and 68/48 [ibid., p. 512].

The number of States parties to the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition (Firearms Protocol) [YUN 2001, p. 1036] increased to 109. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) continued to provide legislative assistance and technical support in strengthening firearms control regimes; building capacity to investigate and prosecute firearms trafficking and related crimes; and promoting regional and international cooperation. UNODC delivered specialized training courses on investigating firearms trafficking to practitioners in Bolivia, Ghana and Senegal and held a regional seminar for the countries of West Africa and the Sahel region to promote legislative harmonization and support implementation of the international and regional instruments on firearms. In coordination with the Office for Disarmament Affairs, it began providing technical assistance for marking firearms through the procurement of marking machines and training to national authorities in Benin, Burkina Faso, Mali, the Niger and Senegal. In cooperation with other partners, UNODC initiated the development of software for registering seized firearms, which States could use to record and analyse data relating to the seizure of firearms. UNODC presented to the second meeting of the Working Group on Firearms (Vienna, 26–28 May) the preliminary findings from its global study on firearms trafficking [YUN 2013, p. 514], which focused on the transnational routes and modus operandi of firearms trafficking, and its links to other cross-border trafficking flows and possible connections to organized crime and terrorism. The Working Group encouraged States parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime [YUN 2000, p. 1048] to develop or strengthen coordination among relevant and competent national authorities, with a view to enhancing capacities for statistics and data collection, analysis and information sharing related to illicit firearms trafficking. During the reporting period, the Office for Disarmament Affairs launched the UN SaferGuard quick response mechanism, which allowed ammunition experts to be deployed rapidly to assist States in the urgent management of ammunition stockpiles, including those in the aftermath of unintended explosions of ammunition. The Office organized the inaugural meeting of the UN SaferGuard Board (29–30 April) to oversee the implementation of the international ammunition technical guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/33 without vote [agenda item 96 (d)].

Assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/34 of 5 December 2013 on assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them,

Deeply concerned by the magnitude of human casualty and suffering, especially among children, caused by the illicit proliferation and use of small arms and light weapons,

Concerned by the negative impact that the illicit proliferation and use of those weapons continue to have on the efforts of States in the Sahelo-Saharan subregion in the areas of poverty eradication, sustainable development and the maintenance of peace, security and stability,

Bearing in mind the Bamako Declaration on an African Common Position on the Illicit Proliferation, Circulation and Trafficking of Small Arms and Light Weapons, adopted in Bamako on 1 December 2000,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General entitled “In larger freedom: towards development, security and human rights for all”, in which he emphasized that States must strive just as hard to eliminate the threat of small arms and light weapons as they do to eliminate the threat of weapons of mass destruction,

Recalling also the International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons, adopted on 8 December 2005,

Recalling further the expression of support in the 2005 World Summit Outcome for the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects,

Recalling the adoption, on 14 June 2006 in Abuja at the thirtieth ordinary summit of the Economic Community of West African States, of the Convention on Small Arms and Light Weapons, Their Ammunition and Other Related Materials, in replacement of the moratorium on the importation, exportation and manufacture of small arms and light weapons in West Africa,

Recalling also the entry into force of the Convention on 29 September 2009,

Recalling further the decision taken by the Economic Community to establish the Small Arms Unit, responsible for advocating appropriate policies and developing and implementing programmes, as well as the establishment of the Economic Community’s Small Arms Control Programme, launched on 6 June 2006 in Bamako, in replacement of the Programme for Coordination and Assistance for Security and Development,

Taking note of the latest report of the Secretary-General on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them and the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects,

Recalling, in that regard, the decision of the European Union to significantly support the Economic Community in its efforts to combat the illicit proliferation of small arms and light weapons,

Recognizing the important role that civil society organizations play, by raising public awareness, in efforts to curb the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons,

Recalling the reports of the United Nations Conferences to Review Progress Made in the Implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, held in New York from 26 June to 7 July 2006 and from 27 August to 7 September 2012,

Welcoming the inclusion of small arms and light weapons in the scope of the Arms Trade Treaty, as well as the inclusion of international assistance in its provisions,

1. Commends the United Nations and international, regional and other organizations for their assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them;

2. Encourages the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts in the context of the implementation of General Assembly resolution 49/75 G of 15 December 1994 and the recommendations of the United Nations advisory missions aimed at curbing the illicit circulation of small arms and light weapons and collecting them in the affected States that so request, with the support of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and in close cooperation with the African Union;

3. Encourages the international community to support the implementation of the Economic Community of West African States Convention on Small Arms and Light Weapons, Their Ammunition and Other Related Materials;

4. Encourages the countries of the Sahelo-Saharan sub-region to facilitate the effective functioning of national commissions to combat the illicit proliferation of small arms and light weapons, and in that regard invites the international community to lend its support wherever possible;

5. Encourages the collaboration of civil society organizations and associations in the efforts of the national commissions to combat the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and in the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects;

6. Encourages cooperation among State organs, international organizations and civil society in support of programmes and projects aimed at combating the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them;

7. Calls upon the international community to provide technical and financial support to strengthen the capacity of civil society organizations to take action to help to combat the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons;

8. Invites the Secretary-General and those States and organizations that are in a position to do so to continue to provide assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider the matter and to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them".

Illicit arms brokering

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee

[A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/62 by recorded vote (180-0-2) [agenda item 96 (g)].

Preventing and combating illicit brokering activities

The General Assembly,

Noting the threat to international peace and security posed by illicit brokering activities circumventing the international arms control and non-proliferation framework,

Concerned that, if proper measures are not taken, the illicit brokering of arms in all its aspects will adversely affect the maintenance of international peace and security, and prolong conflicts, and could be an obstacle to sustainable economic and social development and result in illicit transfers of conventional arms and the acquisition of weapons of mass destruction by non-State actors,

Recognizing the need for Member States to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities, which covers not only conventional arms but also materials, equipment and technology that could contribute to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery,

Reaffirming that efforts to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities should not hamper the legitimate arms trade and international cooperation with respect to materials, equipment and technology for peaceful purposes,

Recalling Security Council resolution 1540(2004) of 28 April 2004, in particular paragraph 3, in which the Council determined that all States shall develop and maintain appropriate effective border controls and law enforcement efforts to detect, deter, prevent and combat, including through international cooperation when necessary, illicit trafficking in and brokering of materials related to nuclear, chemical or biological weapons and their means of delivery, in accordance with their national legal authorities and legislation and consistent with international law,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 67/43 of 3 December 2012,

Noting international efforts to prevent and combat illicit arms brokering, in particular in small arms and light weapons, as demonstrated by the adoption in 2001 of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, and the entry into force in 2005 of the Protocol against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Their Parts and Components and Ammunition, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime,

Recognizing the importance of States parties to the Arms Trade Treaty taking measures, pursuant to their national laws, to regulate brokering taking place under their jurisdiction, in accordance with article 10 of the Treaty, which will enter into force on 24 December 2014,

Noting the adoption on 26 September 2013 of Security Council resolution 2117(2013) on small arms and light weapons, in which the Council encourages cooperation and information-sharing on suspect brokering activities to address the illicit transfer, destabilizing accumulation and misuse of small arms and light weapons,

Noting also the report of the Group of Governmental Experts established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 60/81 of 8 December 2005 to consider further steps to enhance international cooperation in preventing, combating and eradicating illicit brokering in small arms and light weapons as an international initiative within the framework of the United Nations,

Welcoming efforts to implement the Programme of Action, and welcoming also in this regard the outcome document of the Second United Nations Conference to Review Progress Made in the Implementation of the Programme of Action, held in New York from 27 August to 7 September 2012, including as it relates to illicit brokering of small arms and light weapons,

Underlining the inherent right of Member States to determine the specific scope and content of domestic regulations in accordance with their legislative frameworks and export control systems, consistent with international law,

Welcoming the efforts made by Member States to implement laws and/or administrative measures to regulate arms brokering within their legal systems,

Encouraging cooperation among Member States to prevent and combat illicit trafficking in nuclear materials, and recognizing in this regard existing efforts at all levels, consistent with international law,

Noting the holding of the Nuclear Security Summit on 24 and 25 March 2014 in The Hague,

Encouraging Member States in a position to do so to share their experience and practices in relation to the control of illicit brokering and to further enhance international cooperation to this end,

Noting with satisfaction the activities of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in relation to preventing and combating illicit brokering activities,

Acknowledging the constructive role civil society can play in raising awareness and providing practical expertise on the prevention of illicit brokering activities,

1. Underlines the commitment of Member States to address the threat posed by illicit brokering activities;

2. Encourages Member States to fully implement relevant international treaties, instruments and resolutions to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities, and implement, where appropriate, the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts;

3. Calls upon Member States to establish appropriate national laws and/or measures to prevent and combat the illicit brokering of conventional arms and materials, equipment and technology that could contribute to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery, in a manner consistent with international law;

4. Acknowledges that national efforts to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities can be reinforced by such efforts at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Emphasizes the importance of international cooperation and assistance, capacity-building and information-sharing in preventing and combating illicit brokering activities, and encourages Member States to take such measures as appropriate and in a manner consistent with international law;

6. Encourages Member States to draw, where appropriate, on the relevant expertise of civil society in developing effective measures to prevent and combat illicit brokering activities;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Preventing and combating illicit brokering activities".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/62:

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and Protocols

Status

As at 31 December, the accession of Grenada and Iraq brought to 119 the number of States parties to the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (ccw) and its annexed Protocols on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I) [YUN 1980, p. 76]; on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices, as amended on 3 May 1996 (Protocol II) [ibid., p. 77]; and on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III) [ibid., p. 78].

Amended Protocol II, which entered into force in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 844], had 102 parties. The 1995 Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) [YUN 1995, p. 221], which took effect in 1998 [YUN 1998, p. 530], stood at 104 parties, as Grenada and Iraq became parties during the year. The Protocol on Explosive Remnants of War (Protocol V), which was adopted in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 566] and which entered into force in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 663], had 87 parties, as Greece, Grenada and Iraq became parties during the year. The number of parties to the amendment to article I of the Convention, which entered into force in 2004, increased to 81, as Grenada and Iraq became parties in 2014.

Meeting of High Contracting Parties

The Meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention (Geneva, 13–14 November) [CCW/MSP/2014/9] welcomed the report on promoting universality of the Convention and its Protocols [CCW/MSP/2014/8], and reaffirmed its commitment to the Accelerated Plan of Action on Universalization. The Meeting recommended that the UN Secretary-General and the Chairperson-designate of the 2015 Meeting of High Contracting Parties to the Convention exercise their authority to achieve the goal of universality of the Convention and its Protocols. The Meeting reaffirmed its commitment to the Compliance Mechanism of the Convention and its Protocols; and reiterated the call for all High Contracting Parties to submit national compliance reports in accordance with the decision taken at the Fourth Review Conference [YUN 2011, p. 529] to enhance the implementation of the Compliance Mechanism. The Meeting decided on dates and duration of Convention-related meetings in 2015.

Protocol V on explosive remnants of war

Eighth Conference of High Contracting Parties to Protocol V

States parties met for the Eighth Conference of High Contracting Parties to Protocol V (Geneva, 10–11 November) [CCW/P.V/CONF/2014/10]. Preparations for the Conference were made during the eighth meeting of Experts for Protocol V (Geneva, 3–4 April). The Conference had before it documents on clearance, removal or destruction of explosive remnants of war [CCW/P.V/CONF/2014/3]; victim assistance [CCW/P.V/CONF/2014/9 & Corr.1]; cooperation and assistance [CCW/P.V/CONF/2014/4]; national reporting [CCW/P.V/CONF/2014/8]; and generic preventive measures [CCW/P.V/CONF/2014/5].

The Conference decided to consider possible measures for improving mechanisms for the transmission of information under Article 4, and the quality of the information for submission under Article 4, taking into account the impact of international governmental organizations and non-governmental organizations with expertise in surveying and clearance of explosive remnants of war. It also decided that all High Contracting Parties should be encouraged to implement Part 3 of the Technical Annex to Protocol V, report on such work in their Protocol V national annual reports, and implement the International Ammunition Technical Guidelines on a voluntary basis. All High Contracting Parties and observer States should submit national annual reports, using the Protocol V Guide to National Reporting in preparing those reports.

Amended Protocol II on Mines, Booby-traps and Other Devices

Meeting of Experts

The Amended Protocol II Meeting of Experts (Geneva, 1–2 April) continued discussions on improvised explosive devices (IEDs) in the framework of the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons corresponding to its mandate as contained in paragraph 19 of the final document of the Fifteenth Annual Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II [YUN 2013, p. 517]. It made a number of recommendations to the Sixteenth Annual Conference of High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II (see below).

Annual Conference of States Parties

The Sixteenth Annual Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II (Geneva, 12 November) [CCW/AP.II/CONF.16/6] issued an appeal to States that had not yet done so to accede to Amended Protocol II. The Conference decided that the Group of Experts should continue to review the operation and status of the Protocol, and consider matters arising from reports by High Contracting Parties and development technologies to protect civilians against indiscriminate effects of mines. It also noted the report on the subject [CCW/AP.II/CONF.16/5]. It decided that the Group of Experts should analyse the implementation by the High Contracting Parties of their obligation to submit national annual reports and study their content, and consider the “Guide to reporting” of Form E, in light of the developments and progress achieved in the field of mine action since the adoption of the Protocol.

The Conference also took note of the report by the Coordinators on IEDs [CCW/AP.II/CONF.16/4], and decided that the High Contracting Parties should note the compilation of existing guidelines, best practices and other recommendations for addressing the diversion or illicit use of materials that could be used for IEDs and request that the Implementation Support Unit maintain and update the compilation on an ongoing basis as new guidelines, best practices, recommendations and other comments were published.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/444], adopted resolution 69/79 without vote [agenda item 100].

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons
Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/66 of 5 December 2013,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption and entry into force of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its amended article 1, the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and its amended version, the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III), the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) and the Protocol on Explosive Remnants of War (Protocol V),

Noting the results of the 2013 Meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention, held in Geneva on 14 and 15 November 2013,

Welcoming the results of the Fifteenth Annual Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II, held in Geneva on 13 November 2013,

Welcoming also the results of the Seventh Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Protocol V, held in Geneva on 11 and 12 November 2013,

Recalling the role played by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the elaboration of the Convention and the Protocols thereto, and welcoming the particular efforts of various international, non-governmental and other organizations in raising awareness of the humanitarian consequences of various categories of conventional weapons which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects,

1. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take all measures to become parties, as soon as possible, to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and the Protocols thereto, as amended, with a view to achieving the widest possible adherence to these instruments at an early date and so as to ultimately achieve their universality;

2. Calls upon all States parties to the Convention that have not yet done so to express their consent to be bound by the Protocols to the Convention and the amendment extending the scope of the Convention and the Protocols thereto to include armed conflicts of a non-international character;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the universalization of the Protocol on Explosive Remnants of War (Protocol V);

4. Welcomes the additional ratifications and acceptances of or accessions to the Convention, as well as the consents to be bound by the Protocols thereto;

5. Acknowledges the continued efforts of the Secretary-General, as depositary of the Convention and the Protocols thereto, the Chair of the Meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention, the President of the Seventh Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Protocol V and the President of the Fifteenth Annual Conference of the High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II, on behalf of the High Contracting Parties, to achieve the goal of universality;

6. Recalls the following decisions by the Fourth Review Conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention:

(a) The adoption of an accelerated plan of action to promote universality of the Convention and the Protocols thereto;

(b) The adoption of actions to enhance the implementation of the compliance mechanism for the Convention and the Protocols thereto;

(c) The continuation of the Sponsorship Programme within the framework of the Convention; and, with recognition of the value and importance of the Sponsorship Programme, encourages States to contribute to it;

7. Welcomes the commitment by States parties to continue to contribute to the further development of international humanitarian law and in this context to keep under review both the development of new weapons and uses of weapons, which may have indiscriminate effects or cause unnecessary suffering;

8. Notes with satisfaction the decision of the 2013 Meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to convene in 2014 a four-day informal meeting of experts to discuss the questions related to emerging technologies in the area of lethal autonomous weapons systems, and welcomes the informal discussions held from 13 to 16 May 2014 in that regard;

9. Welcomes the commitment of States parties to Protocol V to the effective and efficient implementation of the Protocol and the implementation of the decisions of the First and Second Conferences of the High Contracting Parties to the Protocol establishing a comprehensive framework for the exchange of information and cooperation;

10. Notes that, in conformity with article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to examine amendments to the Convention or to any of the Protocols thereto, to examine additional protocols concerning other categories of conventional weapons not covered by existing Protocols or to review the scope and application of the Convention and the Protocols thereto and to examine any proposed amendments or additional protocols;

11. Acknowledges the work of the Implementation Support Unit within the Geneva Branch of the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat, which was established following a decision by the 2009 Meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to render the assistance necessary and to provide such services as may be required for annual conferences and expert meetings of the High Contracting Parties to the Convention and of the High Contracting Parties to Amended Protocol II and Protocol V, as well as for any continuation of the work after the meetings;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as depositary of the Convention and the Protocols thereto, to continue to inform the General Assembly periodically, by electronic means, of ratifications and acceptances of and accessions to the Convention, its amended article 1 and the Protocols;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Cluster munitions

As at 31 December, 88 States were parties to the Convention on Cluster Munitions, which was adopted in 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 623] and entered into force in 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 562]. During the year, Belize, the Congo, Guyana and Guinea became parties.

The Fifth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention (San Jose, Costa Rica, 2–5 September) welcomed the accession of Belize to the Convention and the ratification by the Congo, noting that the accession of Belize made Central America the first cluster munitions-free region in the world. The Meeting also welcomed the conclusion of an agreement with the Geneva International Centre for Humanitarian Demining on hosting the Implementation Support Unit and requested its President to finalize the recruitment process for the Director of the Unit. Noting that it was not possible for States parties to agree on a funding model for the Unit, it tasked the Co-Chairs for general status and operations of the Convention with conducting consultations with States parties on a draft funding model. The Meeting further welcomed the San José progress report on the implementation of the 66 concrete steps and goals contained in the 2010 Vientiane Action Plan [ibid.] [CCM/MSP/2014/6, annex I], as well as the working papers submitted by Mauritania and Norway, entitled “Declaration of compliance with article 4.1 (a) of the Convention on Cluster Munitions.” [CCM/MSP/2014/WP.2 & 3].

Anti-personnel mines

1997 Convention

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (Mine-Ban Convention), which was adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 503] and entered into force in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 498], increased to 162, with the ratification of Oman.

Third Review Conference

The Third Review Conference of the States Parties to the Mine-Ban Convention (Maputo, Mozambique, 23–27 June) [APLC/CONF/2014/4 & Add.1] was convened pursuant to a decision of the thirteenth meeting of States parties [YUN 2013, p. 519]. Representatives of over 90 States parties and observer States, as well as representatives of the United Nations and a number of international, regional and non-governmental organizations participated in the work of the Conference.

During the first five plenary meetings, the Conference reviewed the general status and operation of the Convention, reviewing progress made and challenges that remained in the pursuit of the Convention’s aims and in the application of the Cartagena Action Plan 2010–2014 [YUN 2009, p. 554]. The Conference adopted the document “Review of the operation and status of the Convention on the prohibition of the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines and on their destruction: 2009–2014”. With the aim of supporting enhanced implementation and promotion of the Convention, the Conference adopted the Maputo Action Plan 2014–2019, which contained 31 measurable, practical steps aimed at securing sustainable and significant progress in the implementation of the Convention. Those measures covered universalization, stockpile destruction, mine clearance, victim assistance, cooperation and assistance, transparency and exchange of information, measures to ensure compliance and implementation support. It also adopted the Maputo+15 Declaration, which contained a renewed political commitment by the States parties to fulfil their obligations to destroy all stockpiled anti-personnel mines, to clear all mined areas and to spare no efforts until the main object and purpose of the Convention were fully materialized; to ensure compliance with the Convention’s comprehensive prohibitions; to promote universal observance of the Convention’s norms and to condemn any use of anti-personnel mines; to strengthen efforts to address the needs of mine victims; and to strengthen national ownership and capacity, enhance cooperation and establish partnerships for completion. It also referred to the aspiration date of 2025 by which all goals of the Convention should be met.

The Conference established the following mechanisms, replacing the five Standing Committees: Committee on Article 5 Implementation; Committee on Cooperative Compliance; Committee on Victim Assistance; and Committee on Enhancing Cooperation and Assistance. The Conference agreed to the purpose, membership and mandates of the mechanism, annexed to its report. It also agreed that, beginning in 2015, a Meeting of the States Parties would be convened each year at the end of November or beginning of December until the end of 2018, and that the Fourth Review Conference would be held at the end of 2019.

The Conference had before it requests for extensions of the deadlines for completing the destruction of anti-personnel mines under Article 5. It extended the deadline for Eritrea, until 1 February 2020; the Democratic Republic of the Congo, until 1 January 2021; Yemen, until 1 March 2020; and Zimbabwe, until 1 January 2018.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/34 by recorded vote (164-0-17) [agenda item 96 (o)].

Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 54/54 B of 1 December 1999, 55/33 V of 20 November 2000, 56/24 M of 29 November 2001, 57/74 of 22 November 2002, 58/53 of 8 December 2003, 59/84 of 3 December 2004, 60/80 of 8 December 2005, 61/84 of 6 December 2006, 62/41 of 5 December 2007, 63/42 of 2 December 2008, 64/56 of 2 December 2009, 65/48 of 8 December 2010, 66/29 of 2 December 2011, 67/32 of 3 December 2012 and 68/30 of 5 December 2013,

Reaffirming its determination to put an end to the suffering and casualties caused by anti-personnel mines, which kill or injure thousands of people—women, girls, boys and men—every year, and which place people living in affected areas at risk and hinder the development of their communities,

Believing it necessary to do the utmost to contribute in an efficient and coordinated manner to facing the challenge of removing anti-personnel mines placed throughout the world and to assure their destruction,

Wishing to do the utmost in ensuring assistance for the care and rehabilitation, including the social and economic reintegration, of mine victims,

Noting with satisfaction the work undertaken to implement the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction and the substantial progress made towards addressing the global anti-personnel landmine problem,

Recalling the first to thirteenth meetings of the States parties to the Convention, held in Maputo (1999), Geneva (2000), Managua (2001), Geneva (2002), Bangkok (2003), Zagreb (2005), Geneva (2006), the Dead Sea (2007), Geneva (2008 and 2010), Phnom Penh (2011) and Geneva (2012 and 2013), and the First and Second Review Conferences of the States Parties to the Convention, held in Nairobi (2004) and in Cartagena, Colombia (2009),

Recalling also the Third Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, held in Maputo from 23 to 27 June 2014, at which the international community reviewed the implementation of the Convention and the States parties adopted a declaration and an action plan for the period 2014–2019 to support enhanced implementation and promotion of the Convention,

Noting with satisfaction that an additional State has acceded to the Convention, bringing the total number of States that have formally accepted the obligations of the Convention to 162,

Emphasizing the desirability of attracting the adherence of all States to the Convention, and determined to work strenuously towards the promotion of its universalization and norms,

Noting with regret that anti-personnel mines continue to be used in some conflicts around the world, causing human suffering and impeding post-conflict development,

1. Invites all States that have not signed the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction to accede to it without delay;

2. Urges the one remaining State that has signed but has not ratified the Convention to ratify it without delay;

3. Stresses the importance of the full and effective implementation of and compliance with the Convention, including through the continued implementation of the action plan for the period 2014–2019;

4. Urges all States parties to provide the Secretary-General with complete and timely information as required under article 7 of the Convention in order to promote transparency and compliance with the Convention;

5. Invites all States that have not ratified the Convention or acceded to it to provide, on a voluntary basis, information to make global mine action efforts more effective;

6. Renews its call upon all States and other relevant parties to work together to promote, support and advance the care, rehabilitation and social and economic reintegration of mine victims, mine risk education programmes and the removal and destruction of anti-personnel mines placed or stockpiled throughout the world;

7. Urges all States to remain seized of the issue at the highest political level and, where in a position to do so, to promote adherence to the Convention through bilateral, subregional, regional and multilateral contacts, outreach, seminars and other means;

8. Reiterates its invitation and encouragement to all interested States, the United Nations, other relevant international organizations or institutions, regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations to attend the Fourteenth Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention, to be held in Geneva during the week of 30 November to 4 December 2015, and to participate in the future meeting programme of the Convention;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with article 11, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to undertake the preparations necessary to convene the Fourteenth Meeting of the States Parties to the Convention and, on behalf of the States parties and in accordance with article 11, paragraph 4, of the Convention, to invite States not parties to the Convention, as well as the United Nations, other relevant international organizations or institutions, regional organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations, to attend the Fourteenth Meeting of the States Parties as observers;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “General and complete disarmament”, the sub-item entitled “Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction”.

Practical disarmament

Disarmament Commission. The Disarmament Commission [A/69/42] included in its agenda the item "Practical confidence-building measures in the field of conventional weapons", but was unable to achieve consensus on the matter.

Report of Secretary-General. In his July report [A/69/132] on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament, submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 67/50 [YUN 2012, p. 526], 68/34 [YUN 2013, p. 515] and 68/48 [ibid., p. 512], the Secretary-General outlined actions taken by Member States, the UN System and other intergovernmental organizations concerning the implementation of the above resolutions with regard to the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons; the assistance provided to States in that context; and the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures. In his observations and conclusions, the Secretary-General stated that the resolve of the international community to address the perennial issue of the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons was unwavering. The measures that States had identified during the fifth biennial meeting of States to consider the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All its Aspects [YUN 2001, p. 499] attested to the political will and determination at the international level to address the issue. States were increasingly aware that new technologies could be useful in addressing the uncontrolled proliferation of small arms and light weapons and were committed to devising appropriate strategies. The entry into force of the Arms Trade Treaty [YUN 2013, p. 507] augured well for the fight against the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons. Once implemented, the Treaty would strengthen and complement the Programme of Action in export assessment, preventing diversion and countering illicit arms brokering. Coordination within the wider UN system was essential for continued support to national and regional efforts for the full and effective implementation of the Programme of Action. It would also be important to ensure that relevant activities were properly resourced in a timely manner. Lessons learned from UN interventions in peacekeeping operations and special political missions demonstrated greater impact and cost-effectiveness when resources and priorities were incorporated early into planning processes. The strengthening of partnerships with international and regional organizations and with civil society organizations would be critical in that endeavour.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/60 without vote [agenda item 96 (j)].

Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/45 N of 10 December 1996, 52/38 G of 9 December 1997, 53/77 M of 4 December 1998, 54/54 H of 1 December 1999, 55/33 G of 20 November 2000, 56/24 P of 29 November 2001 and 57/81 of 22 November 2002, its decision 58/519 of 8 December 2003, as well as its resolutions 59/82 of 3 December 2004, 61/76 of 6 December 2006, 63/62 of 2 December 2008, 65/67 of 8 December 2010 and 67/50 of 3 December 2012 entitled "Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures",

Convinced that a comprehensive and integrated approach towards certain practical disarmament measures often is a prerequisite to maintaining and consolidating peace and security and thus provides a basis for effective post-conflict peacebuilding; such measures include collection and responsible disposal, preferably through destruction, of weapons obtained through illicit trafficking or illicit manufacture as well as of weapons and ammunition declared by competent national authorities to be surplus to requirements, particularly with regard to small arms and light weapons, unless another form of disposition or use has been officially authorized and provided that such weapons have been duly marked and registered; confidence-building measures; disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants; demining; and conversion,

Noting with satisfaction that the international community is more than ever aware of the importance of such practical disarmament measures, especially with regard to the growing problems arising from the excessive accumulation and uncontrolled spread of small arms and light weapons, including their ammunition, which pose a threat to peace and security and reduce the prospects for economic development in many regions, particularly in post-conflict situations,

Stressing that further efforts are needed in order to develop and effectively implement programmes of practical disarmament in affected areas as part of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration measures so as to complement, on a case-by-case basis, peacekeeping and peacebuilding efforts,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on prevention of armed conflict, which, inter alia, refers to the role which the proliferation and the illicit transfer of small arms and light weapons play in the context of the build-up and sustaining of conflicts,

Taking note of the statement by the President of the Security Council of 31 August 2001 underlining the importance of practical disarmament measures in the context of armed conflicts, and, with regard to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes, emphasizing the importance of measures to contain the security risks stemming from the use of illicit small arms and light weapons,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General prepared with the assistance of the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms and, in particular, the recommendations contained therein, as an important contribution to the consolidation of the peace process through practical disarmament measures,

Welcoming the work of the United Nations Coordinating Action on Small Arms mechanism, which was established by the Secretary-General to bring about a holistic and multidisciplinary approach to this complex and multifaceted global problem,

Recalling the establishment, within the United Nations system, of the Programme of Action Implementation Support System, which provides a comprehensive tool to facilitate international cooperation and assistance for the implementation of practical disarmament measures, including the matching of assistance needs with available resources,

Welcoming the reports of the First, Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Biennial Meetings of States to Consider the Implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, which, inter alia, underlined that States are encouraged to build on existing mechanisms, such as the enhanced Programme of Action Implementation Support System, and to consider other ways in which needs and resources can be matched effectively and assistance and cooperation can be more effectively coordinated,

Welcoming in particular the outcome of the Second United Nations Conference to Review Progress Made in the Implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, reaffirming the support of States and their commitment to the full and effective implementation of all the provisions of the Programme of Action and the International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons, with a view to ending the human suffering caused by the illicit trade in and uncontrolled spread of small arms and light weapons and their diversion into the illicit market,

Welcoming the establishment of the flexible, voluntary United Nations Trust Facility Supporting Cooperation on Arms Regulation, pursuant to the Programme of Action and the outcome of the Second United Nations Conference to Review Progress Made in the Implementation of the Programme of Action,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, submitted pursuant to resolution 67/50, and encourages Member States as well as regional arrangements and agencies to lend their support to the implementation of recommendations contained therein;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on recent developments in small arms and light weapons manufacturing, technology and design and implications for the implementation of the International Instrument to Enable States to Identify and Trace, in a Timely and Reliable Manner, Illicit Small Arms and Light Weapons;

3. Emphasizes the importance of including in United Nations-mandated peacekeeping missions, as appropriate and with the consent of the host State, practical disarmament measures aimed at addressing the illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons, including through weapons collection, disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes and through enhancing physical security and stockpile management practices, with a view to promoting an integrated comprehensive and effective weapons management strategy that would contribute to a sustainable peacebuilding process;

4. Welcomes the activities undertaken by the Group of States Interested in Practical Disarmament Measures, and invites the Group to continue to promote, on the basis of lessons learned from previous disarmament and peacebuilding projects, new practical disarmament measures to consolidate peace, especially as undertaken or designed by affected States themselves, regional and subregional organizations and United Nations agencies;

5. Encourages, in this regard, the Group of Interested States to continue to discuss how recent developments in small arms technology can contribute to the advancement of practical disarmament measures, as well as how relevant tools and technologies can be applied effectively to capacity-building projects in conflict and post-conflict contexts;

6. Also encourages the Group of Interested States to continue to function as an informal, open and transparent forum supporting the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, in particular to facilitate the exchange of views on issues related to the United Nations small arms process, as well as to continue efforts to facilitate the effective matching of needs and resources in accordance with the outcome of the Second United Nations Conference to Review Progress Made in the Implementation of the Programme of Action and the outcome of the Fifth Biennial Meeting of States to Consider the Implementation of the Programme of Action, thus effectively supporting the implementation of the Programme of Action;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat with resources adequate for maintaining the Programme of Action Implementation Support System, thus securing its important role in identifying and communicating information on needs and resources so as to enhance the implementation of the Programme of Action;

8. Encourages Member States, also in the framework of the Group of Interested States, to continue to lend their support to the Secretary-General, relevant international, regional and subregional organizations, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, and non-governmental organizations in responding to requests by Member States to collect and destroy small arms and light weapons, including their ammunition, in post-conflict situations;

9. Encourages Member States in a position to do so to financially contribute to the United Nations Trust Facility Supporting Cooperation on Arms Regulation;

10. Welcomes the synergies within the multi-stakeholder process, including Governments, the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and institutions as well as non-governmental organizations in support of practical disarmament measures and the Programme of Action;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the implementation of practical disarmament measures, taking into consideration the activities of the Group of Interested States;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled “General and complete disarmament”, the sub-item entitled “Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures”.

Also on 2 December [meeting 62], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/64 without vote [agenda item 96 (i)].

Information on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the contribution of confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms, adopted on the initiative and with the agreement of the States concerned, to the improvement of the overall international peace and security situation,

Convinced that the relationship between the development of confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms and the international security environment can also be mutually reinforcing,

Considering the important role that confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms can also play in creating favourable conditions for progress in the field of disarmament,

Recognizing that the exchange of information on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms contributes to mutual understanding and confidence among Member States,

Recalling its resolutions 59/92 of 3 December 2004, 60/82 of 8 December 2005, 61/79 of 6 December 2006, 63/57 of 2 December 2008, 65/63 of 8 December 2010 and 67/49 of 3 December 2012,

1. Welcomes all confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms already undertaken by Member States, as well as the information on such measures voluntarily provided;

2. Encourages Member States to continue to adopt and apply confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms and to provide information in that regard;

3. Also encourages Member States to continue the dialogue on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms;

4. Welcomes the establishment and continuing operation of the database containing information provided by Member States, and requests the Secretary-General to keep the database updated and to assist Member States, at their request, in the organization of seminars, courses and workshops aimed at enhancing the knowledge of new developments in this field;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 65/63;

6. Takes note of the conclusions of the report, including the importance of tailoring confidence-building measures agreed in regional and subregional or bilateral contexts to the particular security concerns of States within a region and subregion;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled “General and complete disarmament”, the sub-item entitled “Information on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms”.

Transparency

Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament [A/69/27] held informal plenary meetings (25–26 June) on “Transparency in armaments”. During the general debate, delegations reaffirmed or further elaborated their respective positions on the issue. The Conference had before it the reports of the Coordinators on the various substantive agenda items, and the text of the section on disarmament and international security of the final document of the XVII Ministerial Conference of the Non-Aligned Movement (Algiers, Algeria, 26–29 May) [CD/2002].

UN Register of Conventional Arms

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/43 [YUN 2013, p. 521], the Secretary-General reported in July [A/69/124] and September [A/69/124/Add.1] that he had received information from 45 States on the export and import of conventional arms covered by the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms that was established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 75] to enhance transparency on arms transfer. As at 31 December, 58 reports were received, a significant decrease compared to the previous year. Of the 58 reports received, 1 came from Africa, 9 from Asia and the Pacific, 8 from Latin America and the Caribbean, 19 from Eastern Europe and 21 from Western Europe and other States.

Transparency in military expenditures

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/23 [YUN 2013, p. 524], the Secretary-General presented reports [A/69/135 & Add.1] in July and September from 49 States on their national military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data were available. By year's end, 66 States had submitted reports, which was higher than that for the previous year. Of the 66 reports received, 4 came from Africa, 11 from Asia and the Pacific, 11 from Latin America and the Caribbean, 19 from Eastern Europe, and 21 from Western Europe and other States.

On 2 December (decision 69/513), the General Assembly took note of the report of the First Committee [A/69/431] on its consideration of the item entitled "Reduction of military budgets".

Other disarmament issues

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

Conference on Disarmament. The Conference on Disarmament discussed the prevention of an arms race in outer space in informal plenary meeting from 11 to 13 March [A/69/27]. The Conference had before it two letters from the High Representative for Disarmament Affairs, on behalf of the Secretary-General of the United Nations [CD/1970]; a letter dated 20 June from the Russian Federation and Argentina transmitting the text of the joint statement of not being the first to place weapons of any kind in outer space, signed on 28 May in Moscow [CD/1991]; the reports of the Coordinators on the various substantive agenda items [CD/1995]; a note verbale dated 20 August from the Russian Federation transmitting its comments on the report of the informal meetings prepared by the Coordinator on agenda item 3 entitled "prevention of an arms race in outer space" [CD/1996]; a note verbale dated 2 September from the United States transmitting its analysis of the 2014 Russian-Chinese draft treaty on the prevention of the placement of weapons in outer space, the threat or use of force against outer space objects [CD/1998]; a letter dated 3 September from the Russian Federation and Cuba transmitting the text of the joint statement of not being the first to place weapons of any kind in outer space, signed by their respective Minister of Foreign Affairs on 11 July in Havana [CD/2001]; and a note verbale dated 3 September from Algeria transmitting the text of the section on disarmament and international security of the final document of the XVII Ministerial Conference of the Non-Aligned Movement (Algiers, Algeria, 26–29 May) [CD/2002].

The President, in his summary of the discussion [CD/PV.1283], said that delegations agreed that outer space should be for peaceful uses and that the growing use of space increased the importance of having a better regime and framework. Some delegations pointed out that gaps existed in the legal framework dealing with outer space. Delegations underlined the necessity of space debris mitigation as an urgent issue for the future. Some felt that transparency and confidence-building measures were useful and could overcome mistrust, while others felt that they should not become a substitute for a legally binding instrument. Some delegates emphasized the primary role played by the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of an international instrument on the prevention of an arms race in outer space.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/438], adopted resolution 69/31 by recorded vote (178-0-2) [agenda item 94 (a)].

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes and shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development,

Reaffirming also the provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that, in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this issue, and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing that the prevention of an arms race in outer space would avert a grave danger for international peace and security,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Noting also that there were no objections in principle in the Conference on Disarmament to the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee, subject to re-examination of the mandate contained in the decision of the Conference on Disarmament of 13 February 1992,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts for the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, including the weaponization of outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling, in this context, its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, 47/51 of 9 December 1992 and 48/74 A of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as a means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that negotiations for the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remain a priority task of the Conference on Disarmament and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

Noting with satisfaction the constructive, structured and focused debate on the prevention of an arms race in outer space at the Conference on Disarmament in 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013 and 2014,

Noting the introduction by China and the Russian Federation at the Conference on Disarmament of the draft treaty on the prevention of the placement of weapons in outer space and of the threat or use of force against outer space objects in 2008 and the submission of its updated version in 2014,

Taking note of the decision of the Conference on Disarmament to establish for its 2009 session a working group to discuss, substantially, without limitation, all issues related to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that the regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness and that it is important to comply strictly with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the sole multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to establish a working group under its agenda item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space" as early as possible during its 2015 session;

7. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

8. Urges States conducting activities in outer space, as well as States interested in conducting such activities, to keep the Conference on Disarmament informed of the progress of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on the matter, if any, so as to facilitate its work;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/31:

Group of Governmental Experts. In a November note [A/AC.105/1080], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the replies from Germany and the United States to his request for their views on the modalities of making practical use of the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on Transparency and Confidence-Building Measures in Outer Space Activities [YUN 2013, p. 527].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/38 without vote [agenda item 96 (ee)].

Transparency and confidence-building measures in outer space activities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 60/66 of 8 December 2005, 61/75 of 6 December 2006, 62/43 of 5 December 2007, 63/68 of 2 December 2008, 64/49 of 2 December 2009, 65/68 of 8 December 2010 and 68/50 of 5 December 2013, as well as its decision 66/517 of 2 December 2011,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General of 15 October 1993 to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session, the annex to which contains the study by governmental experts on the application of confidence-building measures in outer space,

Reaffirming the right of all countries to explore and use outer space in accordance with international law,

Reaffirming also that preventing an arms race in outer space is in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and is an essential condition for the promotion and strengthening of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Recalling, in this context, its resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990 and 48/74 B of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, the General Assembly recognized the need for increased transparency and confirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as a means of reinforcing the objective of preventing an arms race in outer space,

Noting the constructive debates that the Conference on Disarmament has held on this subject and the views expressed by Member States,

Noting also the introduction by China and the Russian Federation at the Conference on Disarmament of the draft treaty on the prevention of the placement of weapons in outer space and of the threat or use of force against outer space objects and the submission of its updated version in 2014,

Noting further that, since 2004, several States have introduced a policy of not being the first State to place weapons in outer space,

Noting the presentation by the European Union of a draft of a non-legally binding international code of conduct for outer space activities,

Recognizing the work that takes place within the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and its Legal Subcommittee, which makes a significant contribution to the promotion of the long-term sustainability of outer space activities,

Noting the contribution of Member States that have submitted to the Secretary-General concrete proposals on international outer space transparency and confidence-building measures pursuant to paragraph 1 of resolution 61/75, paragraph 2 of resolution 62/43, paragraph 2 of resolution 63/68 and paragraph 2 of resolution 64/49,

Welcoming the work done in 2012 and 2013 by the group of governmental experts convened by the Secretary-General, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, to conduct a study on outer space transparency and confidence-building measures,

1. Stresses the importance of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on Transparency and Confidence-building Measures in Outer Space Activities, considered by the General Assembly on 5 December 2013;

2. Encourages Member States to continue to review and implement, to the greatest extent practicable, the proposed transparency and confidence-building measures contained in the report, through relevant national mechanisms, on a voluntary basis and in a manner consistent with the national interests of Member States;

3. Decides, in order to further advance transparency and confidence-building measures in outer space, to refer the recommendations contained in the report to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament for consideration, as appropriate;

4. Requests the relevant entities and organizations of the United Nations system, to which, in accordance with resolution 68/50, the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on Transparency and Confidence-building Measures in Outer Space Activities was circulated, to assist in effectively implementing the conclusions and recommendations contained therein, as appropriate;

5. Encourages relevant entities and organizations of the United Nations system to coordinate, as appropriate, on matters related to the recommendations contained in the report;

6. Decides to convene, within existing resources, a joint ad hoc meeting of the Disarmament and International Security Committee (First Committee) and the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee) to address possible challenges to space security and sustainability, and to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", a sub-item entitled "Joint ad hoc meeting of the First and Fourth Committees on possible challenges to space security and sustainability";

7. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Transparency and confidence-building measures in outer space activities".

Placement of weapons in outer space

Conference on Disarmament. During its discussion of the item on a prevention of an arms race in outer space, the Conference on Disarmament [A/69/27] had before it a 10 June letter from the Russian Federation and China transmitting the updated Russian and Chinese texts of the draft treaty on prevention of the placement of weapons in outer space and of the threat or use of force against outer space objects presented at the 10 June plenary meeting [CD/1985]; and a letter dated 3 September from the Russian Federation and Cuba transmitting the text of the joint statement of not being the first to place weapons of any kind in outer space, signed by their respective Minister of Foreign Affairs on 11 July in Havana [CD/2001].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/438], adopted resolution 69/32 by recorded vote (126-4-46) [agenda item 94 (b)].

No first placement of weapons in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Seriously concerned about the possibility of an arms race in outer space, and bearing in mind the importance of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Conscious that the prevention of an arms race in outer space would avert a grave danger to international peace and security,

Reaffirming that further measures should be examined in the search for agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with the existing legal regime providing for the peaceful use of outer space,

Reaffirming its recognition that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee prevention of an arms race in outer space and that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime,

Welcoming, in this regard, the draft treaty on the prevention of the placement of weapons in outer space and of the threat or use of force against outer space objects, introduced by China and the Russian Federation at the Conference on Disarmament in 2008, and the submission of its updated version in 2014,

Considering that transparency- and confidence-building measures in outer space activities are an integral part of the draft treaty referred to above,

Recalling its previous resolutions, including resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990 and 48/74 B of 16 December 1993, which, inter alia, confirm the importance of transparency- and confidence-building measures as a means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting the importance of the political statements made by a number of States that they would not be the first to place weapons in outer space,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of the objective to prevent an arms race in outer space and the willingness of States to contribute to reaching this common goal;

2. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement, or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

3. Urges an early start of substantive work based on the updated draft treaty on the prevention of the placement of weapons in outer space and of the threat or use of force against outer space objects submitted by China and the Russian Federation at the Conference on Disarmament, under the agenda item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space";

4. Stresses that, while such an agreement is not yet concluded, other measures may contribute to ensuring that weapons are not placed in outer space;

5. Encourages all States, especially space-faring nations, to consider the possibility of upholding as appropriate a political commitment not to be the first to place weapons in outer space;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled "No first placement of weapons in outer space".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/32:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Georgia, Israel, Ukraine, United States.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Monaco, Montenegro, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, San Marino, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, United Kingdom.

Observance of environmental norms

In July [A/69/115], responding to General Assembly resolution 68/36 [YUN 2013, p. 528], the Secretary-General provided information from Cuba, Georgia, Iraq, Portugal and Ukraine on measures they had adopted to promote the observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/55 without vote [agenda item 96 (d)].

Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/70 M of 12 December 1995, 51/45 E of 10 December 1996, 52/38 E of 9 December 1997, 53/77 J of 4 December 1998, 54/54 S of 1 December 1999, 55/33 K of 20 November 2000, 56/24 F of 29 November 2001, 57/64 of 22 November 2002, 58/45 of 8 December 2003, 59/68 of 3 December 2004, 60/60 of 8 December 2005, 61/63 of 6 December 2006, 62/28 of 5 December 2007, 63/51 of 2 December 2008, 64/33 of 2 December 2009, 65/53 of 8 December 2010, 66/31 of 2 December 2011, 67/37 of 3 December 2012 and 68/36 of 5 December 2013,

Emphasizing the importance of the observance of environmental norms in the preparation and implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements,

Recognizing that it is necessary to take duly into account the agreements adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, as well as prior relevant agreements, in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms limitation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to resolution 68/36,

Noting that the Seventeenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Algiers from 26 to 29 May 2014, welcomed the adoption by the General Assembly, without a vote, of resolution 68/36 on the observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control,

Mindful of the detrimental environmental effects of the use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirms that international disarmament forums should take fully into account the relevant environmental norms in negotiating treaties and agreements on disarmament and arms limitation and that all States, through their actions, should contribute fully to ensuring compliance with the aforementioned norms in the implementation of treaties and conventions to which they are parties;

2. Calls upon States to adopt unilateral, bilateral, regional and multilateral measures so as to contribute to ensuring the application of scientific and technological progress within the framework of international security, disarmament and other related spheres, without detriment to the environment or to its effective contribution to attaining sustainable development;

3. Welcomes the information provided by Member States on the implementation of the measures they have adopted to promote the objectives envisaged in the present resolution;

4. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General information on the measures they have adopted to promote the objectives envisaged in the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report containing that information to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control".

Effects of depleted uranium

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 67/37 [YUN 2012, p. 531], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/69/151], transmitted the views of 12 Member States (Argentina, Bolivia, Cuba, Ecuador, Iraq, Libya, Mexico, Netherlands, Oman, Panama, Spain, Ukraine), the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Environment Programme on the effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium on human health and the environment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/57 by recorded vote (150-4-27) [agenda item 96 (e)].

Effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the rules of international humanitarian law,

Recalling its resolutions 62/30 of 5 December 2007, 63/54 of 2 December 2008, 65/55 of 8 December 2010 and 67/36 of 3 December 2012,

Determined to promote multilateralism as an essential means to carry forward negotiations on arms regulation and disarmament,

Taking note of the opinions expressed by Member States and relevant international organizations on the effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium, as reflected in the reports submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to resolutions 62/30, 63/54, 65/55 and 67/36,

Recognizing the importance of implementing, as appropriate, the recommendations of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Health Organization to mitigate potential hazards to human beings and the environment from the contamination of territories with depleted uranium residues,

Considering that studies conducted so far by relevant international organizations have not provided a detailed enough account of the magnitude of the potential long-term effects on human beings and the environment of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium,

Recalling that the United Nations Environment Programme, in its report to the Secretary-General on the Subject, affirms that major scientific uncertainties persist regarding the long-term environmental impacts of depleted uranium, particularly with respect to long-term groundwater contamination, and calls for a precautionary approach to the use of depleted uranium,

Convinced that, as humankind becomes more aware of the need to take immediate measures to protect the environment, any event that could jeopardize such efforts requires urgent attention to implement the required measures,

Noting that further research should be done to assess the health risks and environmental impact of the use of arms and ammunitions containing depleted uranium in conflict situations,

Taking into consideration the potential harmful effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium on human health and the environment,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Member States and international organizations that submitted their views to the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 67/36 and previous resolutions on the subject;

2. Invites Member States and relevant international organizations, particularly those that have not yet done so, to communicate to the Secretary-General their views on the effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to request relevant international organizations to update and complete, as appropriate, their studies and research on the effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium on human health and the environment;

4. Encourages Member States, particularly the affected States, as necessary, to facilitate the studies and research referred to in paragraph 3 above;

5. Also encourages Member States to follow closely the development of the studies and research referred to in paragraph 3 above;

6. Invites Member States that have used armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium in armed conflicts to provide the relevant authorities of affected States, upon request, with information, as detailed as possible, about the location of the areas of use and the amounts used, with the objective of facilitating the assessment of such areas;

7. Encourages Member States in a position to do so to provide assistance to States affected by the use of arms and ammunitions containing depleted uranium, in particular in identifying and managing contaminated sites and material;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit an updated report on the subject to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session, reflecting the information submitted by Member States and relevant international organizations, including the information submitted pursuant to paragraphs 2 and 3 above;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/57:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Seychelles, Singapore, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Albania, Andorra, Australia, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Micronesia, Monaco, Palau, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Slovakia, Spain, Turkey, Ukraine.

Science and technology and disarmament

On 2 December (decision 69/515), the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth (2015) session the item entitled "Role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament".

Studies, research and training

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

The Secretary-General in July transmitted the report of the Director of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) [A/69/176 & Corr.1], which covered the Institute's activities from August 2013 to July 2014 and the proposed 2014–2015 programme of work and financial plan, as approved by the UNIDIR Board of Trustees, the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters. The Institute's programme of work was structured in five categories: weapons of mass destruction (wmds); weapons of societal disruption; security and society; emerging threats; and process and practice. The Director's report contained information on the status of voluntary funds received from Governments and other sources. UNIDIR was actively seeking to expand its donor base as part of its resource mobilization strategy. Contributions earmarked for projects continued to rise slightly, despite the increasing competition for a smaller pool of available funding. Non-earmarked contributions for Institute staff and support, however, continued to decline. The growing gap between institutional support and project funding was unsustainable and had to be addressed.

The Board of Trustees reiterated its concern about the impact on the Institute as a result of the continuing adverse financial situation and the limited size of the subvention from the UN regular budget allocated towards meeting the costs of the Director and the Institute staff. The Board of Trustees made recommendations with a view to ensuring the effectiveness and continuity of the Institute's operations.

In a later note [A/70/177], the Secretary-General forwarded the report of the UNIDIR Director on the activities of the Institute for the period from January to December 2014. During the year, UNIDIR conducted 16 individual projects, held 23 conferences and seminars and issued 17 publications relating to WMDs; conventional weapons; emerging security issues, including code of conduct for outer space activities and Cyber Index tool; as well as security and society.

Total UNIDIR income in 2014 was $2,447,300; and total expenditure was $2,788,800.

Disarmament fellowships, training and advisory services

Twenty-five fellows participated in the 2014 UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, which was offered by the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs (UNODA). The programme featured a study session in Geneva on 25 August; study visits to international organizations, structures or arrangements related to disarmament, arms control and non-proliferation; specific-country visits to Member States; and a study session at the UN Headquarters. The 2014 programme comprised theory-based activities and practical exercises, as well as simulation negotiation exercises, and field visits to a weapons destruction facility, a nuclear reactor, disarmament research laboratories and a chemical weapons on-site inspection simulation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/441], adopted resolution 69/75 without vote [agenda item 97 (b)].

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, including its decision to continue the programme,

Noting that the programme continues to contribute significantly to developing greater awareness of the importance and benefits of disarmament and a better understanding of the concerns of the international community in the field of disarmament and security, as well as to enhancing the knowledge and skills of fellows, allowing them to participate more effectively in efforts in the field of disarmament at all levels,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has trained a large number of officials from Member States throughout its 36 years of existence, many of whom hold positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament within their own Governments,

Recognizing the need for Member States to take into account gender equality when nominating candidates to the programme,

Recalling all the resolutions on the matter since the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, in 1982, including resolution 50/71 A of 12 December 1995,

Believing that the forms of assistance available under the programme to Member States, in particular to developing countries, will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the guidelines approved by the Assembly in its resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States and organizations that have consistently supported the programme throughout the years, thereby contributing to its success, in particular to the Governments of China, Germany, Japan, Kazakhstan and Switzerland for continuing extensive and highly educative study visits for the participants in the programme during 2013 and 2014;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the International Atomic Energy Agency, the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Wassenaar Arrangement on Export Controls for Conventional Arms and Dual-Use Goods and Technologies, the Asser Institute and the Monterey Institute of International Studies for organizing specific study programmes in the field of disarmament in their respective areas of competence, thereby contributing to the objectives of the programme;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to implement annually the programme within existing resources and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly”, the sub-item entitled “United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services”.

Disarmament and non-proliferation education

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/47 [YUN 2012, p. 534], the Secretary-General, in June [A/69/113 & Add.1], reviewed the results of the implementation of the 34 recommendations of 2002 UN study [YUN 2002, p. 544] on disarmament and non-proliferation education and possible new opportunities for promoting such education. Ten Member States (Argentina, Austria, Cuba, El Salvador, Germany, Iraq, Japan, Mexico, Panama, Portugal) submitted information, together with 6 UN entities and other international and regional organizations and 22 civil society and non-governmental organizations.

According to the report, Governments, international organizations and civil society groups continued to increase digital contents and their use of and access to new technologies, such as social media tools, to disseminate information and reach a wider audience. Those new technologies provided a platform for Member States, the United Nations, international and regional organizations, as well as civil society organizations to reach out to youth and promote their understanding of disarmament and non-proliferation issues. Young people around the world had a critical role to play in raising awareness and developing new strategies to reduce the threats from WMDs, small arms and light weapons. It was important to reach out, inform and empower young people to become agents of peace by helping them mobilize, act and promote disarmament ideals throughout their schools, communities and beyond.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/65 without vote [agenda item 96 (b)].

United Nations study on disarmament and non-proliferation education

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/33 E of 20 November 2000, 57/60 of 22 November 2002, 59/93 of 3 December 2004, 61/73 of 6 December 2006, 63/70 of 2 December 2008, 65/77 of 8 December 2010 and 67/47 of 3 December 2012,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on disarmament and non-proliferation education, in which the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the United Nations study on disarmament and non-proliferation education, and recalling that 2014 marks the twelfth anniversary of that report,

Recognizing the usefulness of the disarmament and non-proliferation education website “Disarmament education: resources for learning”, which was reorganized and updated in September 2011 by the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat to include the six official languages of the United Nations and a new interactive presentation, and encouraging the use of new communication technologies and social media for the promotion of disarmament and non-proliferation education,

Recognizing also the launch of the “Disarmament today” series of podcasts, in which experts are interviewed about present-day disarmament issues, such as education, disarmament and non-proliferation in the context of space security, as well as the experiences of the hibakusha, the atomic bomb survivors,

Emphasizing that the Secretary-General concludes in his report that efforts need to be continued to implement the recommendations of the study and follow the good examples of how they are being implemented to stimulate even further long-term results,

Desirous of stressing the urgency of promoting concerted international efforts at disarmament and non-proliferation, in particular in the field of nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, with a view to strengthening international security and enhancing sustainable economic and social development,

Conscious of the need to combat the negative effects of cultures of violence and complacency in the face of current dangers in this field through long-term programmes of education and training,

Remaining convinced that the need for disarmament and non-proliferation education, particularly among youth, has never been greater, not only on the subject of weapons of mass destruction but also in the field of small arms and light weapons, terrorism and other challenges to international security and the process of disarmament, as well as on the relevance of implementing the recommendations contained in the United Nations study,

Recognizing the importance of the participation of civil society, including academic and non-governmental organizations, which plays an active role in the promotion of disarmament and non-proliferation education,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Member States, the United Nations and other international and regional organizations, civil society, academic and non-governmental organizations, which, within their purview, implemented the recommendations made in the United Nations study, as discussed in the report of the Secretary-General reviewing the implementation of the recommendations, and encourages them once again to continue applying those recommendations and reporting to the Secretary-General on steps taken to implement them;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report reviewing the results of the implementation of the recommendations and possible new opportunities for promoting disarmament and non-proliferation education, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session;

3. Reiterates the request to the Secretary-General to utilize electronic means to the fullest extent possible in the dissemination, in as many official languages as feasible, of information related to that report and any other information that the Office for Disarmament Affairs gathers on an ongoing basis in regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations study;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to maintain the website “Disarmament education: resources for learning” as well as the “Disarmament today” series of podcasts updated, as an efficient and effective tool to promote disarmament and non-proliferation education;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled “General and complete disarmament”, the sub-item entitled “Disarmament and non-proliferation education”.

Disarmament information programme

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/67 [YUN 2012, p. 535], the Secretary-General in July [A/69/134] reviewed the activities of the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme carried out by UNODA in the areas of WMDs and conventional weapons, in particular small arms and light weapons. During the period under review, the Programme continued to focus on information relating to WMDs, especially nuclear weapons, and on the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons and the arms trade. Responding to the higher levels of computer literacy and technological capability among its constituents around the globe, the Programme oriented its publications towards electronic formats. The two-part United Nations Disarmament Yearbook, the Occasional Papers series and Office for Disarmament Affairs Update and other publications were available on the UNODA website. E-books were another area where new technologies were being explored to reach new constituencies with mobile information. The UNODA website expanded exponentially in content and specialized websites were developed for major conferences, which served as working tools for participants and disseminators of public information. The Department of Public Information highlighted disarmament and arms control issues of topical interest, especially nuclear weapons and small arms and light weapons, in print, on the Internet and in film, television and radio, using its large network of information centres around the world and its outreach capacity. Its use of the celebrity appeal of the Messenger of Peace in respect of arms control issues continued to be effective. UNODA was grateful for the support it had received from Member States for the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme and appealed for continued support for its work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/441], adopted resolution 69/71 without vote [agenda item 97 (a)].

United Nations Disarmament Information Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, by which the World Disarmament Campaign was launched,

Bearing in mind its resolution 47/53 D of 9 December 1992, in which it decided, inter alia, that the World Disarmament Campaign should be known thereafter as the “United Nations Disarmament Information Programme” and the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund as the “Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme”,

Recalling its resolutions 51/46 A of 10 December 1996, 53/78 E of 4 December 1998, 55/34 A of 20 November 2000, 57/90 of 22 November 2002, 59/103 of 3 December 2004, 61/95 of 6 December 2006, 63/81 of 2 December 2008, 65/81 of 8 December 2010 and 67/67 of 3 December 2012,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to make effective use of the limited resources available to him in disseminating, as widely as possible, information on arms control and disarmament to Governments, the media, non-governmental organizations, educational communities and research institutes and in carrying out a seminar and conference programme;

2. Stresses the importance of the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme as a significant instrument in enabling all Member States to participate fully in the deliberations and negotiations on disarmament in the various United Nations bodies, in assisting them in complying with treaties, as required, and in contributing to agreed mechanisms for transparency;

3. Commends with satisfaction the launch of The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook for 2012 and 2013, as well as its online editions, by the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat;

4. Notes with appreciation the cooperation of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and its information centres in pursuit of the objectives of the Programme;

5. Recommends that the Programme continue to inform, educate and generate public understanding of the importance of multilateral action and support for it, including action by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms control and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner, and that it focus its efforts:

(a) To continue to publish The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook, the flagship publication of the Office for Disarmament Affairs, in all official languages, as well as its Occasional Papers, Study Series and other ad hoc information materials in accordance with the current practice;

(b) To continue to update the disarmament website as a part of the United Nations website in as many official languages as feasible;

(c) To promote the use of the Programme as a means to provide information related to progress in the implementation of nuclear disarmament measures;

(d) To continue to intensify United Nations interaction with the public, principally non-governmental organizations and research institutes, to help further an informed debate on topical issues of arms limitation, disarmament and security;

(e) To continue to organize discussions on topics of interest in the field of arms limitation and disarmament with a view to broadening understanding and facilitating an exchange of views and information among Member States and civil society;

6. Recognizes the importance of all support extended to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, and once again invites all Member States to make further contributions to the Fund with a view to sustaining a strong outreach programme;

7. Takes note of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General on disarmament and non-proliferation education, which reviews the implementation of the recommendations made in the 2002 study on disarmament and non-proliferation education;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report covering both the implementation of the activities of the Programme by the United Nations system during the previous two years and the activities of the Programme contemplated by the system for the following two years;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Disarmament Information Programme".

Regional disarmament

Progress continued towards the consolidation of nuclear-weapon-free zones. The declaration of Latin America and the Caribbean as a Zone of Peace by the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States and the endorsement of the Zone by the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean marked a milestone in the cooperation between the two intraregional organizations. Furthermore, the Protocol to the Treaty on a Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone in Central Asia was signed by the five nuclear-weapon States. Intensive efforts were made to achieve consensus on the modalities for holding the Conference on the establishment of a Middle East zone free of nuclear weapons and all other WMDs. The Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa promoted disarmament, arms control and non-proliferation, and provided technical and other capacity-building assistance on various aspects of the small arms issue, including arms registration, stockpile management, awareness-raising programmes and implementing the Arms Trade Treaty. The Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean assisted States in implementing disarmament and non-proliferation instruments and in complying with international standards and norms. In particular, the Centre provided capacity-building assistance for destroying surplus, obsolete and confiscated weapons; safeguarding stockpiles of small arms and light weapons; and implementing the Arms Trade Treaty. The Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific promoted disarmament and confidence-building through dialogue and disarmament education. It assisted in enhancing national capacities for implementing Security Council resolution 1540(2004); the Arms Trade Treaty; the Biological Weapons Convention; the Chemical Weapons Convention; and for combating the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons. The Centre also promoted mutual understanding among States on cybersecurity issues, in part through the convening of a conference in Beijing in cooperation with the Government of China and the China Arms Control and Disarmament Association. Both intergovernmental and non-governmental regional organizations continued to be actively engaged in advancing the disarmament agenda within the framework of their respective mandates, backed by significant support from the donor community and various UN organs. Intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations also remained engaged in assisting post-conflict countries with demining issues and other activities related to disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, particularly in Africa and the Asia Pacific. In addition, projects and programmes were initiated or continued to be implemented in severely afflicted countries to improve citizen security through local police and community measures for the reduction of armed violence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/45 without vote [agenda item 96 (gg)].

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991, 47/52 J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 I of 16 December 1993, 49/75 N of 15 December 1994, 50/70 K of 12 December 1995, 51/45 K of 10 December 1996, 52/38 P of 9 December 1997, 53/77 O of 4 December 1998, 54/54 N of 1 December 1999, 55/33 O of 20 November 2000, 56/24 H of 29 November 2001, 57/76 of 22 November 2002, 58/38 of 8 December 2003, 59/89 of 3 December 2004, 60/63 of 8 December 2005, 61/80 of 6 December 2006, 62/38 of 5 December 2007, 63/43 of 2 December 2008, 64/41 of 2 December 2009, 65/45 of 8 December 2010, 66/36 of 2 December 2011, 67/57 of 3 December 2012 and 68/54 of 5 December 2013 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of all States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Conventional arms control at regional and subregional levels

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/56 [YUN 2013, p. 531] on conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels, the Secretary-General submitted in July a report [A/69/139] containing the views of 11 Member States (Azerbaijan, Bolivia, Chile, Cuba, Georgia, Mexico, Panama, Portugal, Serbia, Spain, Ukraine) on the issue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/47 by recorded vote (181-1-2) [agenda item 96 (ii)].

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 O of 15 December 1994, 50/70 L of 12 December 1995, 51/45 Q of 10 December 1996, 52/38 Q of 9 December 1997, 53/77 P of 4 December 1998, 54/54 M of 1 December 1999, 55/33 P of 20 November 2000, 56/24 I of 29 November 2001, 57/77 of 22 November 2002, 58/39 of 8 December 2003, 59/88 of 3 December 2004, 60/75 of 8 December 2005, 61/82 of 6 December 2006, 62/44 of 5 December 2007, 63/44 of 2 December 2008, 64/42 of 2 December 2009, 65/46 of 8 December 2010, 66/37 of 2 December 2011, 67/62 of 3 December 2012 and 68/56 of 5 December 2013,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Noting with particular interest the initiatives taken in this regard in different regions of the world, in particular the commencement of consultations among a number of Latin American countries and the proposals for conventional arms control made in the context of South Asia, and recognizing, in the context of this subject, the relevance and value of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, which is a cornerstone of European security,

Believing that militarily significant States and States with larger military capabilities have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that an important objective of conventional arms control in regions of tension should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise and to avoid aggression,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in the meantime, to seek the views of Member States on the subject and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels".

Abstaining: Bhutan, Russian Federation.

Regional confidence-building measures

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/55 [YUN 2013, p. 531] on confidence-building measures in the regional and subregional context, the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/116] containing the views of ten Member States (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Portugal, Qatar, Serbia, Spain, Ukraine) on the issue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/440], adopted resolution 69/46 without vote [agenda item 96 (b)].

Confidence-building measures in the regional and subregional context

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 58/43 of 8 December 2003, 59/87 of 3 December 2004, 60/64 of 8 December 2005, 61/81 of 6 December 2006, 62/45 of 5 December 2007, 63/45 of 2 December 2008, 64/43 of 2 December 2009, 65/47 of 8 December 2010, 66/38 of 2 December 2011, 67/61 of 3 December 2012 and 68/55 of 5 December 2013 on confidence-building measures in the regional and subregional context,

Recalling also its resolution 57/337 of 3 July 2003 on the prevention of armed conflict, in which the General Assembly calls upon Member States to settle their disputes by peaceful means, as set out in Chapter VI of the Charter, inter alia, by any procedures adopted by the parties,

Recalling further the resolutions and guidelines adopted by consensus by the General Assembly and the Disarmament Commission relating to confidence-building measures and their implementation at the global, regional and subregional levels,

Considering the importance and effectiveness of confidence-building measures taken at the initiative and with the agreement of all States concerned, and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, since such measures can contribute to regional stability,

Convinced that resources released by disarmament, including regional disarmament, can be devoted to economic and social development and to the protection of the environment for the benefit of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Recognizing the need for meaningful dialogue among States concerned to avert conflict,

Welcoming the peace processes already initiated by States concerned to resolve their disputes through peaceful means bilaterally or through mediation, inter alia, by third parties, regional organizations or the United Nations,

Recognizing that States in some regions have already taken steps towards confidence-building measures at the bilateral, subregional and regional levels in the political and military fields, including arms control and disarmament, and noting that such confidence-building measures have improved peace and security in those regions and contributed to progress in the socioeconomic conditions of their people,

Concerned that the continuation of disputes among States, particularly in the absence of an effective mechanism to resolve them through peaceful means, may contribute to the arms race and endanger the maintenance of international peace and security and the efforts of the international community to promote arms control and disarmament,

1. Calls upon Member States to refrain from the use or threat of use of force in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms its commitment to the peaceful settlement of disputes under Chapter VI of the Charter, in particular Article 33, which provides for a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements or other peaceful means chosen by the parties;

3. Reaffirms the ways and means regarding confidence- and security-building measures set out in the report of the Disarmament Commission on its 1993 session;

4. Calls upon Member States to pursue these ways and means through sustained consultations and dialogue, while at the same time avoiding actions that may hinder or impair such a dialogue;

5. Urges States to comply strictly with all bilateral, regional and international agreements, including arms control and disarmament agreements, to which they are party;

6. Emphasizes that the objective of confidence-building measures should be to help to strengthen international peace and security and to be consistent with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments;

7. Encourages the promotion of bilateral and regional confidence-building measures, with the consent and participation of the parties concerned, to avoid conflict and prevent the unintended and accidental outbreak of hostilities;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session containing the views of Member States on confidence-building measures in the regional and subregional context;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "General and complete disarmament", the sub-item entitled "Confidence-building measures in the regional and subregional context".

Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa

The United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa held its thirty-seventh meeting in N'Djamena, Chad from 19 to 23 December 2013. The Committee Chairman transmitted the report of that meeting in June 2014 [A/68/908-S/2014/358]. The thirty-eighth meeting was held in Malabo, Equatorial Guinea from 29 July to 2 August 2014.

Report of Secretary-General. In August, the Secretary-General submitted his report [A/69/361] on the activities of the Standing Committee. The Committee continued to review the geopolitical and security situation in Central Africa. The special themes of the thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth meetings were, respectively, "Central Africa and the terrorist threat" and "Elections in the Central Africa subregion: strengthening elections-related national capacities for the conduct of credible and peaceful electoral processes." The themes were considered particularly relevant as terrorism had become a growing threat for the subregion, while a number of countries were preparing for elections in 2014, 2015 and 2016. In addition, during both meetings, the Committee discussed the political, security, human rights and humanitarian situation in the Central African Republic. It also reviewed the regional humanitarian, security, and social and security repercussions of the crisis, particularly in neighbouring countries. At its thirty-seventh session, the Committee adopted the N'Djamena Appeal, by which it called upon national stakeholders to continue political dialogue towards the organization of a national conference. It also called upon bilateral and multilateral partners to provide logistical and financial support to the Central African Republic and to the African-led International Support Mission to the Central African Republic. At its thirty-eighth session, the Committee adopted the Malabo Appeal, in which it urged Central African stakeholders to respect their commitments on the cessation of hostilities and violence. The Committee also discussed progress made in the implementation of the recommendations of the 2013 Summit of Heads of State and Government on Maritime Safety and Security in the Gulf of Guinea [YUN 2013, p. 532]. The planned inauguration of the Interregional Coordination Centre and the Regional Centre for Maritime Security in Central Africa in 2014 was welcomed as an important step in the fight against piracy and armed robbery at sea in the Gulf of Guinea. The Committee encouraged continued collaboration between the Economic Community of Central African States, the Economic Community of West African States and the Gulf of Guinea Commission in the implementation of the decisions taken at the Yaoundé Summit of Heads of State and Government on Maritime Safety and Security in the Gulf of Guinea, as well as the support provided by the United Nations Regional Centre for Africa and the United Nations Regional Office for West Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/441], adopted resolution 69/73 without vote [agenda item 97 (b)].

Regional confidence-building measures: activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 68/62 of 5 December 2013,

Recalling also the guidelines for general and complete disarmament adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Bearing in mind the establishment by the Secretary-General on 28 May 1992 of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, the purpose of which is to encourage arms limitation, disarmament, non-proliferation and development in the Central Africa subregion,

Reaffirming that the purpose of the Standing Advisory Committee is to conduct reconstruction and confidence-building activities in Central Africa among its member States, including through confidence-building and arms limitation measures,

Recalling the Sao Tome Declaration on a Central African Common Position on the Arms Trade Treaty, adopted by the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee on 16 March 2011 at their thirty-second ministerial meeting, held in Sao Tome from 12 to 16 March 2011,

Noting the outcome of the United Nations Conference on the Arms Trade Treaty, held in New York from 2 to 27 July 2012, and noting also the second United Nations Conference to Review Progress Made in the Implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, held in New York from 27 August to 7 September 2012,

Convinced that the resources released by disarmament, including regional disarmament, can be devoted to economic and social development and to the protection of the environment for the benefit of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries,

Welcoming the declaration on a road map for counter-terrorism and non-proliferation of arms in Central Africa, adopted by the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee on 8 December 2011 at their thirty-third ministerial meeting, held in Bangui from 5 to 9 December 2011, and the progress made towards its implementation, including most recently through the holding of the workshop on police and security, in Libreville from 28 to 30 January 2014, and the workshop on customs, immigration, border control and small arms and light weapons for Central African States, in Bujumbura from 22 to 24 April 2014,

Bearing in mind that the implementation of the road map should be compliant with relevant legal and administrative obligations, as set out in Security Council resolutions 1373(2001) of 28 September 2001, 1624(2005) of 14 September 2005 and 1963(2010) of 20 December 2010, as well as with the four pillars of the United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy,

Considering the importance and effectiveness of confidence-building measures taken on the initiative and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, since such measures can contribute to regional stability and to international peace and security,

Convinced that development can be achieved only in a climate of peace, security and mutual confidence both within and among States,

Recalling the Brazzaville Declaration on Cooperation for Peace and Security in Central Africa, the Bata Declaration for the Promotion of Lasting Democracy, Peace and Development in Central Africa and the Yaoundé Declaration on Peace, Security and Stability in Central Africa, Bearing in mind resolutions 1196(1998) and 1197(1998), adopted by the Security Council on 16 and 18 September 1998, respectively, following its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa,

Welcoming the successful conclusion of the Summit of Heads of State and Government on Maritime Safety and Security in the Gulf of Guinea, held in Yaoundé on 24 and 25 June 2013, and the inauguration in Yaoundé, on 11 September 2014, of the interregional coordination centre for maritime security in the Gulf of Guinea,

Welcoming also the outcome of the high-level meetings on poaching and illicit wildlife trafficking, held on the margins of the high-level segments of the sixty-eighth and sixty-ninth sessions of the General Assembly and hosted by Gabon and Germany,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen the capacity for conflict prevention and peacekeeping in Africa, and noting in this regard the concrete conflict prevention initiatives facilitated by the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat,

Welcoming the close cooperation established between the United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa and the Economic Community of Central African States, as well as the signing of a framework of cooperation agreement between the two entities on 3 May 2012,

Bearing in mind the increased focus of the Standing Advisory Committee on human security questions, such as trafficking in persons, especially women and children, as an important consideration for subregional peace, stability and conflict prevention,

Expressing concern about the situation in the Central African Republic, and welcoming the efforts of the African Union and the Economic Community of Central African States, the adoption of the Kigali Declaration by the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee on 23 August 2013 at their thirty-sixth ministerial meeting, held in Kigali from 20 to 23 August 2013, and the adoption of resolutions 2121(2013) of 10 October 2013, 2134(2014) of 28 January 2014 and 2149(2014) of 10 April 2014 by the Security Council,

Welcoming, in this regard, the efforts of the African-led International Support Mission in the Central African Republic towards the re-establishment of security in the Central African Republic, and the establishment of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in the Central African Republic on 10 April 2014 and subsequent rehatting of Support Mission troops into Stabilization Mission peacekeepers on 15 September 2014,

Expressing concern about the increasing impact of cross-border criminality, in particular the activities of armed groups, such as Boko Haram and the Lord's Resistance Army, and incidents of piracy in the Gulf of Guinea, on peace, security and development in Central Africa,

Considering the urgent need to prevent the possible movement of illicit weapons, mercenaries and combatants involved in conflicts in the Sahel and in neighbouring countries in the Central African subregion,

1. Reaffirms its support for efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and sub-regional levels in order to ease tensions and conflicts in Central Africa and to further sustainable peace, stability and development in the subregion;

2. Reaffirms the importance of disarmament and arms limitation programmes in Central Africa carried out by the States of the subregion with the support of the United Nations, the African Union and other international partners;

3. Welcomes the steps taken by States members of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa to facilitate the early entry into force of the Central African Convention for the Control of Small Arms and Light Weapons, Their Ammunition and All Parts and Components That Can Be Used for Their Manufacture, Repair and Assembly (Kinshasa Convention), and encourages States members of the Standing Advisory Committee and other interested States to provide financial support for the implementation of the Convention;

4. Encourages the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee to implement the declaration on a road map for counter-terrorism and non-proliferation of arms in Central Africa, and requests the United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa, the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, the Security Council Committee established pursuant to resolution 1373(2001) concerning counter-terrorism and the international community to support those measures;

5. Also encourages the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee to carry out the programmes of activities adopted at their ministerial meetings;

6. Appeals to the international community to support the efforts undertaken by the States concerned to implement disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes;

7. Welcomes the adoption, during the Summit of Heads of State and Government on Maritime Safety and Security in the Gulf of Guinea, held in Yaoundé on 24 and 25 June 2013, of the Code of Conduct concerning the Prevention and Repression of Piracy, Armed Robbery against Ships, and Illegal Maritime Activity in West and Central Africa, which defines the regional maritime security strategy and paves the way for a legally binding instrument, and the decision to establish, in Cameroon, an interregional coordination centre responsible for coordinating the implementation of the regional strategy, and requests the Secretary-General to support the implementation of the outcomes of the Summit, including through the United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa;

8. Expresses concern over the negative impact that poaching and illegal wildlife trafficking have on the ecosystem, human development and regional security, and calls upon Member States to take immediate concerted action to counter this phenomenon;

9. Expresses its full support for the efforts of the Economic Community of Central African States, the African Union and the United Nations in the Central African Republic, and calls upon the international community to support these efforts;

10. Encourages the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee to pursue their discussions on concrete conflict prevention initiatives, and requests the assistance of the Secretary-General in this regard;

11. Requests the United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa, in collaboration with the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, to facilitate the efforts undertaken by the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee, in particular for their execution of the Implementation Plan for the Kinshasa Convention, as adopted on 19 November 2010 at their thirty-first ministerial meeting, held in Brazzaville from 15 to 19 November 2010;

12. Requests the Secretary-General and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue to assist the countries of Central Africa in tackling the problems of refugees and displaced persons in their territories;

13. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to provide their full assistance for the proper functioning of the Subregional Centre for Human Rights and Democracy in Central Africa;

14. Reminds the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee of the commitments they undertook on the adoption of the Declaration on the Trust Fund of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (Libreville Declaration) on 8 May 2009, and invites those States members of the Committee that have not already done so to contribute to the Trust Fund;

15. Urges other Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the activities of the Standing Advisory Committee effectively through voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund;

16. Urges the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee, in accordance with Security Council resolution

1325(2000) of 31 October 2000, to strengthen the gender component of the various meetings of the Committee relating to disarmament and international security;

17. Expresses its satisfaction to the Secretary-General for his support to the Standing Advisory Committee, welcomes the role played by the United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa, and strongly encourages the States members of the Committee and international partners to support the work of the Office, including by ensuring that it has adequate resources to undertake its mandate;

18. Welcomes the efforts of the Standing Advisory Committee towards addressing cross-border security threats in Central Africa, including activities of Boko Haram and the Lord's Resistance Army, and acts of piracy and armed robbery at sea in the Gulf of Guinea, as well as the fallout from the situation in Libya and the crisis in Mali, and also welcomes the role of the United Nations Regional Office for Central Africa in coordinating those efforts, working closely with the Economic Community of Central African States, the African Union and all relevant regional and international partners;

19. Expresses its satisfaction to the Secretary-General for his support for the revitalization of the activities of the Standing Advisory Committee, and requests him to continue to provide the assistance needed to ensure the success of its regular biannual meetings;

20. Calls upon the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly", the sub-item entitled "Regional confidence-building measures: activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa".

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/441], adopted resolution 69/70 without vote [agenda item 97 (c)].

United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 60/83 of 8 December 2005, 61/90 of 6 December 2006, 62/50 of 5 December 2007, 63/76 of 2 December 2008, 64/58 of 2 December 2009, 65/78 of 8 December 2010, 66/53 of 2 December 2011, 67/63 of 3 December 2012 and 68/57 of 5 December 2013 regarding the maintenance and revitalization of the three United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament,

Recalling also the reports of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean,

Reaffirming its decision, taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, to establish the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme, the purpose of which is to inform, educate and generate public understanding and support for the objectives of the United Nations in the field of arms control and disarmament,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, 41/60 J of 3 December 1986, 42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 44/117 F of 15 December 1989 on the regional centres for peace and disarmament in Nepal, Peru and Togo,

Recognizing that the changes that have taken place in the world have created new opportunities and posed new challenges for the pursuit of disarmament, and bearing in mind in this regard that the regional centres for peace and disarmament can contribute substantially to understanding and cooperation among States in each particular region in the areas of peace, disarmament and development,

Noting that, in paragraph 178 of the Final Document of the Sixteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Tehran on 30 and 31 August 1982, the Heads of State or Government emphasized the importance of United Nations activities at the regional level to increase the stability and security of its Member States, which could be promoted in a substantive manner by the maintenance and revitalization of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament,

1. Reiterates the importance of United Nations activities at the regional level to advance disarmament and to increase the stability and security of its Member States, which could be promoted in a substantive manner by the maintenance and revitalization of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament;

2. Reaffirms that, in order to achieve positive results, it is useful for the three regional centres to carry out dissemination and educational programmes that promote regional peace and security and that are aimed at changing basic attitudes with respect to peace and security and disarmament so as to support the achievement of the purposes and principles of the United Nations;

3. Appeals to Member States in each region that are able to do so, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions to the regional centres in their respective regions in order to strengthen their activities and initiatives;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the activities of the Regional Disarmament Branch of the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all support necessary, within existing resources, to the regional centres in carrying out their programmes of activities;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly", the sub-item entitled "United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament".

Africa

The Secretary-General submitted a June report [A/69/133] on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa (Lomé, Togo) from July 2013 to June 2014. The Centre continued to assist Member States and intergovernmental and civil society organizations in Africa to promote disarmament, peace and security. In the light of the continued instability and conflict in some parts of Africa, in particular in Central Africa and the Sahel, the Centre focused its work on providing assistance to States to combat illicit small arms and light weapons and to reform their security sectors. The Centre supported African Member States in their implementation of international, regional and subregional instruments for combating the proliferation of small arms and light weapons and provided training to civilian authorities, including national commissions on small arms and light weapons and defence and security forces. The Centre also partnered with civil society organizations to promote the signature and ratification of the Arms Trade Treaty [YUN 2013, p. 507]. It supported Member States in meeting their obligations regarding the implementation of international treaties and other instruments relating to WMDs, including bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons, and Security Council resolution 1540(2004). The support was aimed at strengthening the capacity of national authorities in the region. The Centre continued to provide substantive and technical support relating to disarmament issues to the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa.

As at 31 December 2013, the reserves and fund balance of the Centre's trust fund stood at $881,989.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/441], adopted resolution 69/74 without vote [agenda item 97 (g)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the provisions of Article 11, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations, in which it is stipulated that a function of the General Assembly is to consider the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and arms limitation,

Recalling its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, 41/60 D of 3 December 1986, 42/39 J of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 D of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and its resolutions 46/36 F of 6 December 1991 and 47/52 G of 9 December 1992 on regional disarmament, including confidence-building measures,

Recalling also its subsequent resolutions on the Regional Centre, the most recent of which is resolution 68/61 of 5 December 2013,

Recalling further its resolution 67/48 of 3 December 2012, in which the General Assembly recognized the role of women in disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control,

Reaffirming the role of the Regional Centre in promoting disarmament, peace and security at the regional level,

Welcoming the continuing and deepening cooperation between the Regional Centre, the African Union and African subregional organizations, in particular their institutions in the fields of disarmament, peace and security, as well as between the Centre and relevant United Nations bodies and programmes in Africa, and considering the communiqué adopted by the Peace and Security Council of the African Union at its 200th meeting, held in Addis Ababa on 21 August 2009,

Recalling the decision taken by the Executive Council of the African Union at its eighth ordinary session, held in Khartoum from 16 to 21 January 2006, in which the Council called upon member States to make voluntary contributions to the Regional Centre to maintain its operations,

Recalling also the call by the Secretary-General for continued financial and in-kind support from Member States, which would enable the Regional Centre to discharge its mandate in full and to respond more effectively to requests for assistance from African States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the continental dimension of the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa in response to the evolving needs of African Member States and the region's new and emerging challenges in the areas of disarmament, peace and security, including maritime security;

3. Also welcomes the undertaking by the Regional Centre to provide capacity-building, technical assistance programmes and advisory services to the African Union Commission, subregional organizations and African Member States on the control of small arms and light weapons, including on stockpile management and destruction, the Arms Trade Treaty and issues related to weapons of mass destruction, as detailed in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Further welcomes the contribution of the Regional Centre to continental disarmament, peace and security, in particular its assistance to the African Union Commission in the elaboration and implementation of the African Union Strategy on the Control of Illicit Proliferation, Circulation and Trafficking of Small Arms and Light Weapons and the Action Plan for the Implementation of the Strategy and in the elaboration of the African Union Common Position on an Arms Trade Treaty, as well as its assistance to the African Commission on Nuclear Energy in its implementation of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba);

5. Welcomes efforts by the Regional Centre to promote the role and representation of women in disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control activities;

6. Notes with appreciation the tangible achievements of the Regional Centre and the impact of the assistance that it provided to Central African States in the elaboration and implementation of the Central African Convention for the Control of Small Arms and Light Weapons, Their Ammunition and All Parts and Components That Can Be Used for Their Manufacture, Repair and Assembly (Kinshasa Convention), as well as the substantive support provided by the Centre to the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, to

Central and West African States in the elaboration of their respective common positions on the Arms Trade Treaty, to West Africa on the implementation of the Economic Community of West African States Convention on Small Arms and Light Weapons, Their Ammunition and Other Related Materials and on security sector reform initiatives, to East Africa on programmes to control brokering of small arms and light weapons and to African Member States in the implementation of Security Council resolution 1540(2004) of 28 April 2004 and of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction;

7. Commends the Regional Centre for the support and assistance that it provided to African States, upon request, on the Arms Trade Treaty, including through the organization of subregional and regional seminars and workshops;

8. Urges all States, as well as international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions to enable the Regional Centre to carry out its programmes and activities and meet the needs of the African States;

9. Urges, in particular, States members of the African Union to make voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa in conformity with the decision taken by the Executive Council of the African Union in Khartoum in January 2006;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to facilitate close cooperation between the Regional Centre and the African Union, in particular in the areas of disarmament, peace and security;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Regional Centre with the support necessary for greater achievements and results;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa".

Asia and the Pacific

As requested in General Assembly resolution 68/59 [YUN 2013, p. 537], the Secretary-General in July [A/69/127] reported on the work of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific (Kathmandu, Nepal) from July 2013 to June 2014. The Centre continued to promote dialogue and confidence-building in the region and beyond by organizing the twelfth United Nations-Republic of Korea Joint Conference on Disarmament and Non-proliferation Issues in Jeju, Republic of Korea in 2013, which served as an important forum to address key challenges in those fields at both the global and regional levels. The Centre undertook projects to build national capacity to combat illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in Myanmar, and to enhance national implementation of international treaties on biological and chemical weapons in Mongolia and Nepal. It also organized regional seminars to promote the Arms Trade Treaty, as well as regional seminars on information and cybersecurity. Additionally, to strengthen its outreach and advocacy activities, the Centre carried out peace and disarmament education activities. It expanded its communications and outreach efforts, with a view to strengthening its engagement with the full range of stakeholders in the region. The Regional Centre planned to expand its programmes for providing assistance to Member States and other stakeholders in the region in strengthening their capacity to tackle challenges in disarmament, arms control and non-proliferation.

As at 31 December 2013, the reserves and fund balance of the Centre's trust fund stood at $784,968.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/441], adopted resolution 69/68 without vote [agenda item 97 (e)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 44/117 F of 15 December 1989, by which it established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and renamed it the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, with headquarters in Kathmandu and with the mandate of providing, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities mutually agreed upon by the Member States of the Asia-Pacific region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, through appropriate utilization of available resources,

Welcoming the physical operation of the Regional Centre from Kathmandu in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/52 of 5 December 2007,

Recalling the mandate of the Regional Centre to provide, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities mutually agreed upon by the Member States of the Asia-Pacific region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and expressing its appreciation to the Regional Centre for its important work in promoting confidence-building measures through the organization of meetings, conferences and workshops in the region, including the twelfth United Nations-Republic of Korea Joint Conference on Disarmament and Non-proliferation Issues, held on Jeju Island, Republic of Korea, on 14 and 15 November 2013; the Second Asia Regional Meeting to Facilitate Dialogue on the Arms Trade Treaty, held in Manila on 26 and 27 November 2013; the workshop on the national implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development,

Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, held in Kathmandu on 20 and 21 February 2014; the workshop on the national implementation of the Biological Weapons Convention and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, held in Ulaanbaatar on 28 and 29 April 2014; the national capacity-building workshop on the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, held in Nay Pyi Taw on 15 and 16 May 2014; and the international workshop on information and cybersecurity, held in Beijing on 5 and 6 June 2014,

Appreciating the timely execution by Nepal of its financial commitments for the physical operation of the Regional Centre,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the activities carried out in the past year by the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, and invites all States of the region to continue to support the activities of the Regional Centre, including by continuing to take part in them, where possible, and by proposing items for inclusion in the programme of activities of the Centre, in order to contribute to the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Government of Nepal for its cooperation and financial support, which has enabled the Regional Centre to operate from Kathmandu;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat for providing necessary support with a view to ensuring the smooth operation of the Regional Centre from Kathmandu and to enabling the Centre to function effectively;

4. Appeals to Member States, in particular those within the Asia-Pacific region, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions, the only resources of the Regional Centre, to strengthen its programme of activities and the implementation thereof;

5. Reaffirms its strong support for the role of the Regional Centre in the promotion of activities of the United Nations at the regional level to strengthen peace, stability and security among its Member States;

6. Underlines the importance of the Kathmandu process for the development of the practice of region-wide security and disarmament dialogues;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific".

Latin America and the Caribbean

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 68/60 [YUN 2013, p. 538], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/136] on the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean (Lima, Peru) during the period from July 2013 to June 2014. The Regional Centre supported Member States in the region in their implementation of international disarmament, arms control and non-proliferation instruments, most notably the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects, by carrying out 55 assistance activities. The main focus of the Regional Centre's activities was to assist States in their efforts to combat illicit small arms trafficking and to address the negative impact of such illicit trafficking on public security. The Centre supported the destruction of 8,181 weapons and 3.7 tons of ammunition, as well as improvements in the management and safeguarding of weapon stockpiles throughout the region. The Centre trained more than 400 officials from the security sectors of States on various aspects of small arms control. With a view to supporting future implementation of the Arms Trade Treaty, the Centre developed an introductory training manual and a model end-user certificate. The Centre also actively promoted public policy dialogue on small arms control and relevant legislative support, reaching out to national authorities throughout the region. With regard to WMDs, the Centre launched its new Caribbean programme aimed at the effective implementation of Security Council resolution 1540(2004) [YUN 2004, p. 544]. The Centre also provided legal assistance with regard to the implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and supported the establishment of national implementation entities in the Andean region. The Centre made concerted efforts to promote the participation of women and to enhance their contribution to disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control by providing a training course exclusively for female security sector officials in Central America.

As at 31 December 2013, the reserves and fund balance of the Centre's trust fund stood at $2,191,478.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/69/441], adopted resolution 69/72 without vote [agenda item 97 (f)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/60 J of 3 December 1986, 42/39 K of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 H of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, with headquarters in Lima,

Recalling also its resolution 68/60 of 5 December 2013, as well as all previous resolutions entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean",

Recognizing that the Regional Centre has continued to provide substantive support for the implementation of regional and subregional initiatives and has intensified its contribution to the coordination of United Nations efforts towards peace and disarmament and for the promotion of economic and social development,

Reaffirming the mandate of the Regional Centre to provide, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities of the Member States of the region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament and for the promotion of economic and social development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and expressing its appreciation for the important assistance provided, upon request, by the Regional Centre to several countries in the region, including through capacity-building and technical assistance programmes, as well as outreach activities, to prevent, combat and eradicate the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, ammunition and explosives, for the development of plans to reduce and prevent armed violence from an arms control perspective, for promoting and supporting the implementation of relevant agreements and treaties and for capacity-building initiatives aimed at bolstering the efforts of the law enforcement community to combat the illicit trade in firearms,

Welcoming the support provided by the Regional Centre to Member States in the implementation of disarmament and non-proliferation instruments,

Emphasizing the need for the Regional Centre to develop and strengthen its activities and programmes in a comprehensive and balanced manner, in accordance with its mandate and in line with the requests for assistance by Member States,

Welcoming the ongoing support provided by the Regional Centre to Member States in the implementation of the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects,

Welcoming also the assistance provided by the Regional Centre to some States, upon request, in the management and securing of national weapons stockpiles and in the identification and destruction of surplus, obsolete or seized weapons and ammunition, as declared by competent national authorities,

Welcoming further the initiative of the Regional Centre to continue to conduct activities in line with efforts to promote the equitable representation of women in all decision-making processes with regard to matters related to disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control, as encouraged in its resolutions 65/69 of 8 December 2010, 67/48 of 3 December 2012 and 68/33 of 5 December 2013,

Recalling the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on the relationship between disarmament and Development, referred to in General Assembly resolution 59/78 of 3 December 2004, which is of utmost interest with regard to the role that the Regional Centre plays in promoting the issue in the region in pursuit of its mandate to promote economic and social development related to peace and disarmament,

Noting that security, disarmament and development issues have always been recognized as significant topics in Latin America and the Caribbean, the first inhabited region in the world to be declared a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Emphasizing the importance of maintaining the support provided by the Regional Centre for strengthening the nuclear-weapon-free zone established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco), as well as its efforts in promoting peace and disarmament education,

Bearing in mind the important role of the Regional Centre in promoting confidence-building measures, arms control and limitation, disarmament and development at the regional level,

Recognizing the importance of information, research, education and training for peace, disarmament and development in order to achieve understanding and cooperation among States,

1. Reiterates its strong support for the role of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean in the promotion of activities of the United Nations at the regional and subregional levels to strengthen peace, disarmament, stability, security and development among its Member States;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the activities carried out in the past year by the Regional Centre, and requests the Centre to continue to take into account the proposals to be submitted by the countries of the region for the implementation of the mandate of the Centre in the areas of peace, disarmament and development and for the promotion of, inter alia, nuclear disarmament, the prevention, combating and eradication of the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, ammunition and explosives, confidence-building measures, arms control and limitation, transparency, and the reduction and prevention of armed violence at the regional and subregional levels;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the political support provided by Member States, as well as for the financial contributions made by Member States, international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to strengthen the Regional Centre, its programme of activities and the implementation thereof, and encourages them to continue to make and to increase voluntary contributions;

4. Invites all States of the region to continue to take part in the activities of the Regional Centre, proposing items for inclusion in its programme of activities and maximizing the potential of the Centre to meet the current challenges facing the international community with a view to fulfilling the aims of the Charter of the United Nations in the areas of peace, disarmament and development;

5. Recognizes that the Regional Centre has an important role in the promotion and development of regional and subregional initiatives agreed upon by the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean in the field of weapons of mass destruction, in particular nuclear weapons, and conventional arms, including small arms and light weapons, in the relationship between disarmament and development, in the promotion of the participation of women in this field and in strengthening voluntary confidence-building measures among the countries of the region;

6. Encourages the Regional Centre to further develop activities in all countries of the region in the important areas of peace, disarmament and development and to provide, upon request and in accordance with its mandate, support to Member States of the region in the national implementation of relevant instruments, inter alia, the Programme of Action to Prevent, Combat and Eradicate the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects and the Arms Trade Treaty, as well as in the implementation of the Caribbean 1540 programme on the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean".

Other political and security questions

In 2014, the United Nations continued to address political and security questions related to its support for regional peace and cooperation, the promotion of decolonization, the peaceful uses of outer space and the Organization's public information activities.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples reviewed progress in implementing the 1960 Declaration, particularly the exercise of self-determination by the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories. In May, the Special Committee organized a Pacific regional seminar in Fiji to identify ways to accelerate decolonization within the framework of the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (2011–2021). In December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/107, in which it reaffirmed its determination to take all necessary steps to bring about the eradication of colonialism and called on all the administering Powers to cooperate fully in the work of the Special Committee.

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, at its fifty-seventh session in June, discussed ways and means to maintain outer space for peaceful purposes and to ensure that space-based technology continued to benefit humanity. It took note of the reports of its two subcommittees, one dealing with scientific and technical issues and the other with legal questions. The United Nations Programme on Space Applications continued to promote the use of space technologies and data for sustainable economic and social development in developing countries. In December, the General Assembly recognized the central role of the Office for Outer Space Affairs in fostering capacity-building in the use of space science and technology and their applications, and endorsed the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 2015.

At its sixty-first session in July, the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation considered scientific reports on an assessment of the levels and effects of radiation exposure due to the 2011 Fukushima Daiichi nuclear accident in Japan and on the effects of radiation exposure on children.

In a December resolution, the Assembly called on Member States to promote consideration of existing and potential threats in the field of information security, as well as possible strategies to address them.

The Committee on Information reviewed UN information policies and the work of the Department of Public Information (DPI). The Committee considered reports of the Secretary-General on DPI activities promoting the work of the Organization through strategic communication, news services and outreach initiatives. In December, the General Assembly increased the membership of the Committee on Information from 114 to 115.

General aspects of international peace and security

Seventieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War

Communications. In a 13 August letter addressed to the Secretary-General [A/69/191], Armenia, Belarus, China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation and Tajikistan requested the inclusion of a supplementary item in the agenda of the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly entitled “Seventieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War”.

On 6 November [A/69/588], Belarus transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the address by the Heads of the States members of the Commonwealth of Independent States on the occasion of “the seventieth anniversary of the victory of the Soviet people in the Great Patriotic War of 1941–1945”, adopted in Minsk, Belarus, on 10 October.

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on the seventieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War remained for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Regional aspects of international peace and security

South Atlantic

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the General Assembly decided that the agenda item on the zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic remained for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Decolonization

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples held its annual session in New York in two parts: on 20 February and 1 April (first part); and on 16, 23–24 and 26–27 June (second part). The Special Committee considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 1514(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49], including general decolonization issues and the situation of individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). The Special Committee recommended nine draft resolutions for adoption by the Assembly. In accordance with resolution 68/97 [YUN 2013, p. 543], the Special Committee reported to the Assembly on its 2014 activities [A/69/23].

Pacific regional seminar

The Special Committee on decolonization organized a Pacific regional seminar (Nadi, Fiji, 21–23 May) [A/69/23] to hear the views of representatives of NSGTs, experts, members of civil society and other stakeholders who could assist in identifying policy approaches and practical ways in which the UN decolonization process could be pursued. Participants identified a number of issues related to decolonization during the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (2011–2020) [YUN 2010, p. 587], including the impact of climate change, especially in NSGTs; the global economic and financial crisis; the role of regional cooperation, education and public awareness; the role of civil society and women; the empowerment of vulnerable people; and the capacity for full self-governance. They further discussed accelerating action on the implementation of the Third International Decade in the Pacific, the Caribbean and other regions, including follow-up to the 2013 Caribbean regional seminar [YUN 2013, p. 542], and considered the role of the UN system in providing assistance to NSGTs.

Regarding the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, seminar participants reaffirmed that all peoples had the right to self-determination, and to freely determine their political status and pursue their economic, social and cultural development. They also reaffirmed that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country was incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations. The participants suggested that the Special Committee strengthen its interactions and collaboration with regional and subregional organizations; seek, in collaboration with the Department of Public Information (DPI), new and innovative ways to promote a public awareness campaign aimed at fostering understanding among the people of the Territories of the options for self-determination in accordance with UN resolutions and decisions on decolonization; and draw up a plan of action for the Third Decade with a view to advancing the decolonization process.

Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/69/462], adopted resolution 69/107 by recorded vote (173-3-1) [agenda item 59].

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all its subsequent resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, the most recent of which was resolution 68/97 of 11 December 2013, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Bearing in mind its resolution 65/119 of 10 December 2010, by which it declared the period 2011–2020 the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and the need to examine ways to ascertain the wishes of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories on the basis of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism has been one of the priorities of the United Nations and continues to be one of its priorities for the decade that began in 2011,

Regretting that measures to eliminate colonialism by 2010, as called for in its resolution 55/146 of 8 December 2000, have not been successful,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the eradication of colonialism, as well as racial discrimination and violations of basic human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the continued efforts of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Stressing the importance of the formal participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Noting with satisfaction the cooperation and active participation of certain administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee, and encouraging the others also to do so,

Noting that the Pacific regional seminar was held in Nadi, Fiji, from 21 to 23 May 2014,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions and decisions on decolonization, including its resolution 65/119, by which it declared the period 2011–2020 the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all steps necessary to enable the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories concerned to exercise fully as soon as possible their right to self-determination, including independence;

2. Reaffirms once again that the existence of colonialism in any form or manifestation, including economic exploitation, is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

3. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all steps necessary to bring about the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and the faithful observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its support for the aspirations of the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination, including independence, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization;

5. Calls upon the administering Powers to cooperate fully with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to develop and finalize, as soon as possible, a constructive programme of work on a case-by-case basis for the Non-Self-Governing Territories to facilitate the implementation of the mandate of the Special Committee and the relevant resolutions on decolonization, including resolutions on specific Territories;

6. Recalls with satisfaction the professional, open and transparent conduct of both the February 2006 and the October 2007 referendums to determine the future status of Tokelau, monitored by the United Nations;

7. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration and to carry out the actions approved by the General Assembly regarding the Second and Third International Decades for the Eradication of Colonialism in all Territories that have not yet exercised their right to self-determination, including independence, and in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals to bring about an end to colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

(b) To continue to examine the implementation by Member States of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(c) To continue to examine the political, economic and social situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and to recommend, as appropriate, to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination, including independence, in accordance with the relevant resolutions on decolonization, including resolutions on specific Territories;

(d) To develop and finalize, as soon as possible and in cooperation with the administering Power and the Territory in question, a constructive programme of work on a case-by-case basis for the Non-Self-Governing Territories to facilitate the implementation of the mandate of the Special Committee and the relevant resolutions on decolonization, including resolutions on specific Territories;

(e) To continue to dispatch visiting and special missions to the Non-Self-Governing Territories in accordance with the relevant resolutions on decolonization, including resolutions on specific Territories;

(f) To conduct seminars, as appropriate, for the purpose of receiving and disseminating information on the work of the Special Committee, and to facilitate participation by the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in those seminars;

(g) To take all steps necessary to enlist worldwide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

(h) To observe annually the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

8. Recalls that the plan of action for the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, updated as necessary, represents an important legislative authority for the attainment of self-government by the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and that the case-by-case assessment of the attainment of self-government in each Territory can make an important contribution to this process;

9. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give effect within their respective spheres of competence to the recommendations of the Special Committee for the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that economic and other activities in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration do not adversely affect the interests of the peoples but instead promote development, and to assist them in the exercise of their right to self-determination;

11. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable rights of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the relevant administering Power to take all steps necessary to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

12. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide moral and material assistance, as needed, to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and requests the administering Powers to take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide economic, social and other assistance to the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to continue to do so, as appropriate, after they exercise their right to self-determination, including independence;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, President pro tempore of the Special Committee, to meet informally at least once a year with the Chair and the Bureau of the Committee during the intersessional period, in order to explore innovative ways of using his good offices to help to advance the decolonization agenda on a case-by-case basis;

15. Reaffirms that the United Nations visiting missions to the Territories are an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, as well as the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants, and calls upon the administering Powers to continue to cooperate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to facilitate visiting missions to the Territories;

16. Calls upon all the administering Powers to cooperate fully in the work of the Special Committee and to participate formally in its future sessions;

17. Approves the report of the Special Committee covering its work during 2014, including the programme of work envisaged for 2015;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as the other resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Committee.

Implementation by international organizations

In February [A/69/66], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought General Assembly resolution 68/89 [YUN 2013, p. 546] to the attention of 35 specialized agencies and organizations, and invited them to submit information regarding their implementation of activities. Replies received from five agencies and organizations were summarized in an April report [E/2014/11] of the Economic and Social Council President on consultations held with the Special Committee. According to the information received, several specialized agencies and other UN system organizations continued to provide support to the peoples of NSGTs pursuant to the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/25 [draft: E/2014/L.27] by roll-call vote (26-0-21) [agenda item 12].

Support to Non-Self-Governing Territories by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council containing the information submitted by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system on their activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement by the representative of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, the resolutions of the Special Committee and other relevant resolutions and decisions, including, in particular, Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/43 of 25 July 2013,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union, the Pacific Islands Forum and the Caribbean Community,

Conscious of the need to facilitate the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV),

Welcoming the current participation, in their capacity as observers, of those Non-Self-Governing Territories that are associate members of the regional commissions in the world conferences in the economic and social sphere, subject to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly and in accordance with relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, including resolutions and decisions of the Assembly and the Special Committee on specific Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting that only some specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system have been involved in providing assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Welcoming the assistance extended to Non-Self-Governing Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Stressing that, because the development options of the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories are limited, they face special challenges in planning for and implementing sustainable development, and that they will be constrained in meeting those challenges without the continuing cooperation and assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Stressing also the importance of securing the resources necessary for funding expanded programmes of assistance for the peoples concerned and the need to enlist the support of all the major funding institutions within the United Nations system in that regard,

Reaffirming the mandates of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all appropriate measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the African Union, the Pacific Islands Forum, the Caribbean Community and other regional organizations for the continued cooperation and assistance they have extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in that regard,

Expressing its conviction that closer contacts and consultations between and among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of programmes of assistance for the Non-Self-Governing Territories concerned,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various decisions of the United Nations relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes, cyclones and sea-level rise, and recalling the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 68/97 of 11 December 2013, entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples",

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council, and endorses the observations and suggestions arising therefrom;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Recommends that all States intensify their efforts within the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

4. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute to the implementation of the Declaration and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Also reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspirations of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to exercise their right to self-determination entails, as a corollary, the extension of all appropriate assistance to those peoples, on a case-by-case basis;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate with the United Nations and the regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and requests all of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to implement the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

7. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international and regional organizations to examine and review conditions in each Non-Self-Governing Territory so that they may take appropriate measures to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of those Territories on a case-by-case basis;

8. Urges those specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system that have not yet provided assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories to do so as soon as possible on a case-by-case basis;

9. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and regional organizations to strengthen existing measures of support and to formulate appropriate programmes of assistance to the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories on a case-by-case basis, within the framework of their respective mandates, in order to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of those Territories;

10. Recommends that the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system formulate, with the active cooperation of the regional organizations concerned and on a case-by-case basis, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and submit those proposals to their governing and legislative organs;

11. Also recommends that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system continue to review, at the regular meetings of their governing bodies, the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

12. Recalls the preparation by the Department of Public Information and the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, in consultation with the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, of an informational leaflet on assistance programmes available to the Non-Self-Governing Territories and its updated online version, and requests that they be disseminated as widely as possible;

13. Welcomes the continuing efforts made by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining a close liaison between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and in providing assistance to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

14. Encourages the Non-Self-Governing Territories to take steps to establish or strengthen disaster preparedness and management institutions and policies;

15. Requests the administering Powers concerned to facilitate, when appropriate, the participation of appointed and elected representatives of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the relevant meetings and conferences of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, including the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Special Committee on specific Territories, so that they may benefit from the related activities of those agencies and organizations;

16. Recommends that all Governments intensify their efforts within the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to accord priority to the question of providing assistance to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories on a case-by-case basis;

17. Draws the attention of the Special Committee to the present resolution and to the discussion held on the subject at the substantive session of 2014 of the Economic and Social Council;

18. Recalls the adoption by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean on 16 May 1998 of its resolution 574(XXVII), in which the Commission called for the mechanisms necessary for its associate members, including the Non-Self-Governing Territories, to participate, subject to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, in the special sessions of the Assembly convened to review and assess the implementation of the plans of action of those United Nations world conferences in which the Territories had originally participated in their capacity as observers, and in the work of the Council and its subsidiary bodies;

19. Requests the President of the Council to continue to maintain close contact on those matters with the Chair of the Special Committee and to report thereon to the Council;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to follow up on the implementation of the present resolution, paying particular attention to cooperation and integration arrangements for maximizing the efficiency of the assistance activities undertaken by various organizations of the United Nations system, and to report thereon to the Council at its 2015 session;

21. Decides to keep the above questions under continuous review.

ROLL-CALL VOTE ON RESOLUTION 2014/25:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Bangladesh, Belarus, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, China, Colombia, Cuba, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lesotho, Libya, Mauritius, New Zealand, Panama, South Africa, Togo, Tunisia, Turkmenistan.

Against: None.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/460], adopted resolution 69/99 by recorded vote (125-0-53) [agenda item 57].

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations",

Having also considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Economic and Social Council on the item,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014 relating to the item,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960 and the resolutions of the Special Committee, as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions, including in particular Economic and Social Council resolutions 2012/22 of 26 July 2012 and 2013/43 of 25 July 2013,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union, the Pacific Islands Forum and the Caribbean Community,

Conscious of the need to facilitate the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in resolution 1514(XV),

Noting that the large majority of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories are small island Territories,

Welcoming the assistance extended to Non-Self-Governing Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Welcoming also the participation in the capacity of observers of those Non-Self-Governing Territories that are associate members of regional commissions in the world conferences in the economic and social spheres, subject to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly and in accordance with relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, including resolutions and decisions of the Assembly and the Special Committee on specific Territories,

Noting that only some specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system have been involved in providing assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Stressing that, because the development options of the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories are limited, there are special challenges to planning for and implementing sustainable development and that those Territories will be constrained in meeting the challenges without the continuing cooperation and assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Stressing also the importance of securing the resources necessary for funding expanded programmes of assistance for the peoples concerned and the need to enlist the support of all major funding institutions within the United Nations system in that regard,

Reaffirming the mandates of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all appropriate measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the African Union, the Pacific Islands Forum, the Caribbean Community and other regional organizations for the continued cooperation and assistance that they have extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in this regard,

Expressing its conviction that closer contacts and consultations between and among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of programmes of assistance to the peoples concerned,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes, cyclones and sea-level rise, and recalling the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/89 of 11 December 2013 on the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Recommends that all States intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;
3. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute to the implementation of the Declaration and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;
4. Also reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspirations of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to exercise their right to self-determination entails, as a corollary, the extension of all appropriate assistance to those peoples;

5. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate with the United Nations and the regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and requests all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to implement the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

6. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to intensify their engagement with the work of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples as an important element for the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), including possible participation at the regional seminars on decolonization, upon the invitation of the Special Committee;

7. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international and regional organizations to examine and review conditions in each Territory so as to take appropriate measures to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of the Territories;

8. Urges those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not yet provided assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories to do so as soon as possible;

9. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system and regional organizations to strengthen existing measures of support and formulate appropriate programmes of assistance to the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, within the framework of their respective mandates, in order to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of those Territories;

10. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system concerned to provide information on:

- (a) Environmental problems facing the Non-Self-Governing Territories;
- (b) The impact of natural disasters, such as hurricanes and volcanic eruptions, and other environmental problems, such as beach and coastal erosion and droughts, on those Territories;
- (c) Ways and means to assist the Territories to fight drug trafficking, money-laundering and other illegal and criminal activities;
- (d) Illegal exploitation of the marine and other natural resources of the Territories and the need to utilize those resources for the benefit of the peoples of the Territories;

11. Recommends that the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system formulate, with the active cooperation of the regional organizations concerned, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and submit the proposals to their governing and legislative organs;

12. Also recommends that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system continue to review at the regular meetings of their governing bodies the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

13. Recalls the adoption by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean of its resolution 574(XXVII) of 16 May 1998, calling for the necessary mechanisms for its associate members, including Non-Self-Governing Territories, to participate in the special sessions of the General Assembly, subject to the rules of procedure of the Assembly, to review and assess the implementation of the plans of action of those United Nations world conferences in which the Territories originally participated in the capacity of observer, and in the work of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies;

14. Requests the Chair of the Special Committee to continue to maintain close contact on these matters with the President of the Economic and Social Council;

15. Recalls the publication by the Department of Public Information and the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, in consultation with the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and the Special Committee, of an information leaflet on assistance programmes available to the Non-Self-Governing Territories, which was updated for the United Nations website on decolonization, and requests its continued updating and wide dissemination;

16. Welcomes the continuing efforts made by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining close liaison among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and in providing assistance to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

17. Encourages the Non-Self-Governing Territories to take steps to establish and/or strengthen disaster preparedness and management institutions and policies, inter alia, with the assistance of the relevant specialized agencies;

18. Requests the administering Powers concerned to facilitate, when appropriate, the participation of appointed and elected representatives of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the relevant meetings and conferences of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in accordance with relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, including resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Special Committee on specific Territories, so that the Territories may benefit from the related activities of those agencies and organizations;

19. Recommends that all Governments intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to accord priority to the question of providing assistance to the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

21. Commends the Economic and Social Council for its debate and resolution on this question, and requests it to continue to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee, appropriate measures for the coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

22. Requests the specialized agencies to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the governing bodies of the appropriate specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations so that those bodies may take the measures necessary to implement it, and also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

24. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

Puerto Rico

In accordance with the Special Committee's 2013 resolution, concerning the self-determination and independence of Puerto Rico [YUN 2013, p. 549], the Special Committee's Rapporteur, in a March report [A/AC.109/2014/L.13], provided information on Puerto Rico, including political, economic, military and regional developments, as well as UN action. Following its usual practice, the Committee acceded to requests for hearings from representatives of a number of organizations, which presented their views on 23 June [A/AC.109/2014/SR.4 & 5]. The Committee adopted a decision by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence; called on the United States to expedite a process allowing the Puerto Rican people to exercise that right; urged the United States to return the occupied land and installations on Vieques Island and in Ceiba to the people of Puerto Rico and to respect fundamental human rights; and requested the General Assembly to keep the question of Puerto Rico under review. The Rapporteur was requested to report on the resolution's implementation.

Territories under review

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee [A/69/23] considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) on 26 June [A/AC.109/2014/SR.7]. The Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper on the Territory [A/AC.109/2014/15] that addressed constitutional and political developments, economic and social conditions, mine clearance, participation in international organizations and arrangements, and the future status of the Territory. The Committee heard statements from two members of the Legislative Assembly of the Falkland Islands, the Foreign Minister of Argentina, and two other petitioners. The Committee adopted a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.7] requesting Argentina and the United Kingdom to consolidate the process of dialogue and cooperation by resuming negotiations aimed at a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the Territory.

Communications. The Secretary-General received a series of letters from Argentina and the United Kingdom concerning the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) [A/68/698, A/68/747, A/68/840, A/68/978, A/69/407]. The letters addressed the anniversary of the occupation of the Islands by the United Kingdom and that country's response; the question of sovereignty over the Islands and the surrounding maritime areas; and the conduct of military exercises by the United Kingdom from 14 to 27 April, including the firing of missiles from the Islands. By a 25 April note [A/68/856], Suriname transmitted to the Secretary-General the Declaration on the Question of the Malvinas Islands, adopted by the Seventh Ordinary Meeting of the Council of Heads of State and Government of the Union of South American Nations (Paramaribo, Suriname, 30 August).

On 29 December, the General Assembly decided that the agenda item pertaining to the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) remained for consideration during the resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session (decision 69/554).

Gibraltar

The Special Committee [A/69/23] considered the question of Gibraltar on 16 June [A/AC.109/2014/SR.3]. It had before it a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2014/12] describing political developments and economic and social conditions in the Territory. The paper also presented the positions of the United Kingdom (the administering Power), Gibraltar and Spain concerning Gibraltar's future status. Spain, the Chief Minister of Gibraltar and the Self-Determination for Gibraltar Group made statements at the meeting.

On 5 December (decision 69/523), the General Assembly urged Spain and the United Kingdom, while listening to the legitimate interests and aspirations of Gibraltar, to reach, in the spirit of the 1984 Brussels Declaration [YUN 1984, p. 1075], a definitive solution to the question of Gibraltar in the light of the relevant resolutions of the Assembly and applicable principles, and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly took note of the desire of the United Kingdom to continue with the trilateral Forum for Dialogue on Gibraltar, and the position of Spain that the Forum no longer existed and should be replaced with a new mechanism for local cooperation in the interest of social well-being and regional economic development, in which the people of the Campo de Gibraltar and Gibraltar were represented.

Communication. In a 7 July letter [A/AC.109/2014/21] addressed to the Chair of the Special Committee, Spain stated that, during the 16 June meeting of the Special Committee, the representative of the Self-Determination for Gibraltar Group made inappropriate references to "corruption scandals" in Spain. Spain objected to matters within its domestic jurisdiction being raised in a public meeting of the United Nations. It also objected to the Group being allowed to participate in future meetings of the Special Committee.

New Caledonia

The Special Committee [A/69/23] considered the question of New Caledonia on 27 June [A/AC.109/2014/SR.9]. It had before it a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2014/16 & Add.1] describing the political and socioeconomic conditions and developments in the Territory, and containing the report of the visiting mission of the Special Committee to New Caledonia (see below). Statements were made by France, Papua New Guinea and Nicaragua. Statements were also made by the Leader of the Kanak and Socialist National Liberation Front (FLNKS) in the Congress of New Caledonia; the Secretary of the International Unit of FLNKS; and the Deputy Secretary-General, Office of the French High Commission in New Caledonia. Papua New Guinea, also on behalf of Fiji, introduced a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.12] which the Committee adopted without vote.

Visiting mission. On 20 February, the Special Committee decided to send a visiting mission to New Caledonia to gather information on the implementation of the 1998 Nouméa Accord on the Territory's future status [YUN 1998, p. 574] and take stock of preparations for the May provincial elections. The mission, composed of representatives from Ecuador, Fiji, Papua New Guinea and Sierra Leone, as well as three Secretariat staff, visited New Caledonia from 10 to 16 March [A/AC.109/2014/20/Rev.1]. It met with stakeholders in the Territory's three provinces and held discussions with representatives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Ministry for Overseas Territories of the administering Power (France) in Paris from 17 to 18 March. The mission noted a lack of a unified interpretation of relevant provisions setting out the conditions for inclusion in the special electoral roll, including the 2007 constitutional amendment [YUN 2007, p. 623], which endorsed the "frozen" interpretation of the restricted electorate. It observed that the 1998 electoral roll had not been made available to the special administrative commissions until 2014. The mission considered the situation in New Caledonia to be fragile and stressed the importance of a dialogue among all stakeholders to find common ground and preserve peace. It also stressed the need to enhance the training of high-level executives for the public and private sectors, and urged the administering Power to develop reliable capacity-building programmes to enable New Caledonians to determine their future.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/462], adopted resolution 69/102 without vote [agenda item 59].

Question of New Caledonia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of New Caledonia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014 relating to New Caledonia,

Reaffirming the right of peoples to self-determination as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960,

Noting the importance of the positive measures being pursued in New Caledonia by the French authorities, in cooperation with all sectors of the population, to promote equitable political, economic and social development in the Territory, including measures in the area of environmental protection, in order to provide a framework for its peaceful progress to self-determination,

Noting also, in this context, the importance of continued dialogue among the parties involved in New Caledonia in the preparation of the act of self-determination of New Caledonia,

Recalling the report of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples on the situation of Kanak people in New Caledonia, submitted to the Human Rights Council at its eighteenth session, held from 12 to 30 September and on 21 October 2011, following his visit to the Territory in February 2011,

Noting with satisfaction the intensification of contacts between New Caledonia and neighbouring countries of the South Pacific region, including through the hosting of New Caledonian delegates in the French diplomatic and consular missions in the region,

Recalling the conclusions of the eighteenth Melanesian Spearhead Group Leaders Summit held in Suva on 31 March 2011 and the recommendations for the annual monitoring and assessment of the Nouméa Accord,

Welcoming the exchange of letters between the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat and the Melanesian Spearhead Group secretariat on the sharing of information on New Caledonia,

Mindful that New Caledonia has entered the most seminal phase of the Nouméa Accord process, a period that requires continued close monitoring by the United Nations of the situation in the Territory in order to help the people of New Caledonia to exercise their right to self-determination in accordance with the objectives set out in the Charter and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Welcoming the Charter of the Kanak people, common base of the fundamental values and principles of the Kanak civilization, which was proclaimed in April 2014 by the customary authorities, Great Chiefs, Chiefs, Presidents of District Councils and Presidents of the Clan Chiefs Councils, as the sole traditional custodians of the Kanak people of New Caledonia,

Welcoming also the dispatch of a United Nations visiting mission to New Caledonia in March 2014,

Having heard the statement of the Chair of the visiting mission,

Having examined the report of the United Nations visiting mission to New Caledonia,

Welcoming the cooperation of the administering Power with regard to the work of the Special Committee relating to New Caledonia and its readiness for and concurrence with the dispatching of the 2014 visiting mission,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the administering Power,

Acknowledging the successful conduct by New Caledonia of municipal and provincial elections in May 2014,

Taking note of the information presented to the Pacific regional seminar on the implementation of the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism: accelerating action, held in Nadi, Fiji, from 21 to 23 May 2014, on the situation in the Territory, including on the issues related to the 2014 elections,

Aware of the challenges encountered in the 2014 provincial electoral process, particularly with regard to the work of the special administrative committees in updating the special electoral roll, the non-existence of the supplementary electoral roll from 1998 and the unavailability of the 1998 general electoral roll prior to 2014, and their potential impact on the referendum on self-determination,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014 relating to New Caledonia;

2. Also approves the report, observations, conclusions and suggested recommendations of the United Nations visiting mission to New Caledonia conducted in 2014;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the administering Power and the Government of New Caledonia for the close cooperation and assistance extended to the visiting mission;

4. Notes the concerns expressed regarding the challenges encountered in the provincial elections process with respect to the persistent varying interpretations of the restricted electorate provisions and the voter registration appeal process, and encourages the administering Power and the people of New Caledonia to address in an amicable manner the concerns of all stakeholders under the existing relevant laws in the Territory and in France, while also respecting and upholding the spirit and letter of the Nouméa Accord;

5. Expresses the view that adequate measures for conducting the upcoming consultations on access to full sovereignty, including a just, fair and transparent electoral roll, as provided in the Nouméa Accord, are essential for the conduct of a free and genuine act of self-determination consistent with United Nations principles and practices;

6. Calls upon France, the administering Power, in the light of the observations, conclusions and suggested recommendations of the visiting mission, to consider developing an education programme to inform the people of New Caledonia about the nature of self-determination so that they may be better prepared to face a future decision on the matter, and requests the Special Committee to provide all available assistance in that regard;

7. Commends the observations, conclusions and suggested recommendations of the visiting mission to the Government of France, as the administering Power, and the Government of New Caledonia for appropriate action;

8. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of the people of New Caledonia and within the framework of the Nouméa Accord, to maintain their dialogue in a spirit of harmony in order to continue to promote a framework for the peaceful progress of the Territory towards an act of self-determination in which all options are open and which would safeguard the rights of all sectors of the population, based on the principle that it is for the populations of New Caledonia to choose how to determine their destiny;

9. Notes that, at its eleventh meeting, held on 11 October 2013, the Committee of Signatories of the Nouméa Accord, inter alia:

(a) Examined the transfer of powers undertaken in 2013 and conducted an initial review of the work of the interministerial standing committee responsible for supporting the transfer of powers under way or completed;

(b) Considered proposed amendments to the Organic Law of 19 March 1999 relating to New Caledonia and a draft law containing various provisions related to overseas territories, including several measures concerning New Caledonia;

(c) Considered the work of the steering committee to assess progress under the Nouméa Accord, welcomed the outcome of the working group established in 2013, and called for its continuation;

(d) Took note of the discussion paper presented by the mission responsible for considering the institutional future of New Caledonia, and agreed that it could be used as a basis for work and debate with a view to preparing for the referendum prescribed by the Nouméa Accord and that it should be widely disseminated;

(e) Discussed the conditions under which preparations would be made for the referendum after the provincial elections in 2014 with the assistance of France, if requested;

(f) Noted the status of the discussions on nickel markets and activities undertaken within the framework of the Conference of Presidents, and reiterated the need to build a coherent, long-term industrial strategic framework, with the participation of all stakeholders, in order to ensure the sustainable future development of mining and metallurgical activities and to maximize their socioeconomic benefits;

(g) Noted with satisfaction the work accomplished by the special congressional commission responsible for adopting a flag that expresses both the Kanak identity and the future to be shared by all;

(h) Examined the work carried out for the establishment of structured mechanisms for the advancement of New Caledonians in the civil service, particularly the sovereign civil service;

10. Reaffirms its resolution 68/87 of 11 December 2013, in which the General Assembly, inter alia, reaffirmed that, in the absence of a decision by the Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

11. Notes the continuing concerns expressed by the Kanak people regarding their underrepresentation in governmental and social structures, incessant migratory flows and the impact of mining on the environment;

12. Commends the “Cadres for the future” programme, and encourages further enhancement of the training and capacity-building of high-level executives in the public and private sectors in the Territory, particularly in view of the ongoing transfer of powers from the Government of France to New Caledonia, while ensuring that the transfer of powers is undertaken in a manner consistent with the Nouméa Accord;

13. Recalls the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples on the situation of Kanak people in New Caledonia, made in the light of relevant international standards, to assist with ongoing efforts to advance the rights of the Kanak people in the context of the implementation of the Nouméa Accord and the United Nations-supported decolonization process;

14. Welcomes the strengthening of the economic and social rebalancing initiatives undertaken by the administering Power, and urges its continuation in all areas and communities of the Territory, especially of the well-being of the Kanak indigenous people;

15. Encourages the administering Power, with the cooperation of the Government of New Caledonia, to ensure and enhance safeguards for and guarantees of the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to own, access, use and manage their natural resources, including proprietary rights for their future development;

16. Recalls the relevant provisions of the Nouméa Accord to the effect that New Caledonia may become a member or associate member of certain international organizations, and notes the continuing strengthening of ties between New Caledonia and both the European Union and the European Development Fund;

17. Welcomes the accession of the Front de libération nationale kanak socialiste to the Chair of the Melanesian Spearhead Group, the hosting, for the first time in New Caledonia, in June 2013, of the meetings of officials and leaders of the Group and the opening, in February 2013, of the Front de libération nationale kanak socialiste unit at the headquarters of the Group secretariat in Port Vila;

18. Acknowledges the contribution of the Jean-Marie Tjibaou Cultural Centre to the protection of the indigenous Kanak culture of New Caledonia;

19. Welcomes the cooperative attitude of other States and Territories in the region towards New Caledonia, its economic and political aspirations and its increasing participation in regional and international affairs;

20. Takes note of the information shared by participants from New Caledonia at the Pacific regional seminar on the implementation of the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism: accelerating action held in Nadi, from 21 to 23 May 2014, including on measured progress made in the social, economic, political and environmental spheres and more focused efforts, particularly on the rebalancing initiatives and electoral roll concerns, necessary for the long-term shared mutual benefit of all New Caledonians, and urges the administering Power and the Government of New Caledonia to devote appropriate attention to addressing these issues;

21. Welcomes the peaceful conduct of provincial elections in New Caledonia on 11 May 2014, the preceding municipal elections and the subsequent ongoing efforts to form a new Government of New Caledonia, and encourages constructive engagement by all stakeholders in further developing New Caledonia for all, including by respecting and upholding the Nouméa Accord;

22. Also welcomes the actions taken by the administering Power to continue to transmit to the Secretary-General information as required under Article 73 e of the Charter, particularly the submissions on 4 February and 15 May 2014 on the most recent developments in New Caledonia;

23. Notes the agreement between the signatories to the Nouméa Accord that the progress made in the emancipation process shall be brought to the attention of the United Nations;

24. Decides to keep under continuous review the process unfolding in New Caledonia as a result of the signing of the Nouméa Accord;

25. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of the question of the Non-Self-Governing Territory of New Caledonia and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

French Polynesia

The Special Committee [A/69/23] considered the question of French Polynesia on 27 June [A/AC.109/2014/SR.9]. It had before it a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2014/19] that contained information on political developments and economic and social conditions in the Territory. Saint Lucia, Sierra Leone and two representatives of the Union pour la démocratie made statements. The Committee adopted a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.16] and recommended it for adoption by the General Assembly.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/93 [YUN 2013, p. 550], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/69/189] on the environmental, ecological, health and other impacts of the 30-year period of nuclear testing in French Polynesia. In April, the Secretary-General invited 22 specialized agencies and other international organizations to submit information on the impacts of nuclear testing in the Territory. Responses were received from eight UN entities. Information submitted by the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was set out in the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/103 [draft: A/69/462] without vote [agenda item 59].

Question of French Polynesia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of French Polynesia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014 relating to French Polynesia,

Reaffirming the right of peoples to self-determination, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and in accordance with all relevant resolutions, including General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960,

Recalling its resolution 67/265 of 17 May 2013, entitled “Self-determination of French Polynesia”, in which it affirmed the inalienable right of the people of French Polynesia to self-determination and independence in accordance with Chapter XI of the Charter and its resolution 1514(XV), recognized that French Polynesia remains a Non-Self-Governing Territory within the meaning of the Charter, and declared that an obligation exists under Article 73 e of the Charter on the part of the Government of France, as the administering Power of the Territory, to transmit information on French Polynesia,

Taking note of the section related to French Polynesia of the Final Document of the Seventeenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries held in Algiers from 26 to 29 May 2014,

Expressing concern that 54 years after the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial

Countries and Peoples, there still remain a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Recognizing that all available options for self-determination of the Territories are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, on a case-by-case basis and in conformity with the clearly defined principles contained in General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly,

Recognizing also that the specific characteristics and the aspirations of the peoples of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options for self-determination, on a case-by-case basis,

Conscious of the responsibility of the administering Power to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of French Polynesia,

Mindful that, in order for the Special Committee to enhance its understanding of the political status of the peoples of the Territories and to fulfil its mandate effectively, on a case-by-case basis, it is important for it to be apprised by the administering Powers and to receive information from other appropriate sources, including the representatives of the Territories, concerning the wishes and aspirations of the people of the Territories,

Recognizing the significant health and environmental impacts of nuclear testing conducted by the administering Power in the Territory over a 30-year period, and recognizing also the concerns in the Territory related to the consequences of those activities for the lives and health of the people, especially children and vulnerable groups, as well as the environment of the region, and bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 68/73 of 11 December 2013, entitled "Effects of atomic radiation",

Recognizing also the need for the Special Committee to ensure that the appropriate bodies of the United Nations actively pursue a public awareness campaign aimed at assisting the peoples of the Territories in gaining a better understanding of the options for self-determination,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of French Polynesia to self-determination, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

2. Also reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of French Polynesia to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and in that connection calls upon the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government and appropriate bodies of the United Nations system, to develop political education programmes for the Territory in order to foster an awareness among the people of French Polynesia of their right to self-determination in conformity with the legitimate political status options, based on the principles clearly defined in Assembly resolution 1541(XV) and other relevant resolutions and decisions;

3. Calls upon the administering Power to participate in and cooperate fully with the work of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in order to implement the provisions of Article 73 e of the Charter and the Declaration and in order to advise the Special Committee on the implementation of the provisions under Article 73 b of the Charter on efforts to promote self-government in French Polynesia, and encourages the administering Power to facilitate visiting and special missions to the Territory;

4. Regrets that the administering Power has not responded to the request to submit information on French Polynesia under article 73 e of the Charter;

5. Reaffirms that an obligation exists on the part of the administering Power to transmit information under Chapter XI of the Charter, and requests the administering Power to transmit to the Secretary-General such information on French Polynesia as called for under the Charter;

6. Calls upon the administering Power to intensify its dialogue with French Polynesia in order to facilitate rapid progress towards a fair and effective self-determination process, under which the terms and timelines for an act of self-determination would be agreed;

7. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the environmental, ecological, health and other impacts of the 30-year period of nuclear testing in French Polynesia, prepared pursuant to paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 68/93 of 11 December 2013;

8. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of the Non-Self-Governing Territory of French Polynesia and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

Tokelau

The Special Committee [A/69/23], at its 24 and 27 June meetings [A/AC.109/2014/SR.6 & 9], considered the question of Tokelau (the three atolls of Nukunono, Fakaofu and Atafu in the South Pacific) administered by New Zealand. Before it was a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2014/2] covering constitutional and political developments, external relations and economic and social conditions in the Territory, and presenting the positions of New Zealand and Tokelau on the Territory's future status. Statements were made by the Ulu-o-Tokelau (titular head of the Territory's government, a position rotated annually among the three leaders of each atoll) and the Administrator of Tokelau. Statements were also made by Papua New Guinea, Sierra Leone, Fiji and New Zealand. The Special Committee adopted a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.15], which was recommended to the General Assembly for adoption.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/462], adopted resolution 69/104 without vote [agenda item 59].

Question of Tokelau

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Tokelau,

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014 relating to Tokelau,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Non-Self-Governing Territories, in particular General Assembly resolution 68/94 of 11 December 2013,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary cooperation of New Zealand as the administering Power with regard to the work of the Special Committee relating to Tokelau and its readiness to permit access by United Nations visiting missions to the Territory,

Noting with appreciation also the collaborative contribution to the development of Tokelau by New Zealand and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Noting that, as a small island Territory, Tokelau exemplifies the situation of most remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories and that, as a case study pointing to successful cooperation for decolonization, Tokelau has wider significance for the United Nations as it seeks to complete its work in decolonization,

Noting also the status of Tokelau as an associate member of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Recalling that New Zealand and Tokelau signed on 21 November 2003 a document entitled "Joint statement of the principles of partnership", which sets out the rights and responsibilities of the two partners,

Bearing in mind the decision of the General Fono at its meeting in November 2003, following extensive consultations undertaken in all three villages, to explore formally with New Zealand the option of self-government in free association and its decision in August 2005 to hold in February 2006 a referendum on self-determination on the basis of a draft constitution for Tokelau and a draft treaty of free association with New Zealand, and its subsequent decision to hold a further referendum in October 2007, and that the two referendums did not produce the two-thirds majority of the valid votes cast required by the General Fono to change the status of Tokelau from that of a Non-Self-Governing Territory under the administration of New Zealand,

Noting also the 2013 constitutional consultations, to be further considered by the Constitution Committee, which were driven by the people of Tokelau and which aimed at developing a model of government structure that is culturally appropriate and sensitive to their current situation, culminating in the approval and ratification of the national symbol of the Territory, along with the constitution, national anthem and national flag,

Bearing in mind the statement made by the Ulu-o-Tokelau at the Pacific regional seminar on the implementation of the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism: accelerating action, held in Nadi, Fiji, from 21 to 23 May 2014, that the self-determination process of the Territory could not be addressed in isolation from the threat of climate change and the rise in sea level, and also bearing in mind the intention of Tokelau to further review the National Strategic Plan in order to determine development and other priorities beyond 2015, including consideration of the issue of self-determination and how it would address a possible referendum on self-determination in cooperation with the administering Power,

Cognizant of the statement made at the seminar by the representative of the Government of New Zealand, as the administering Power, citing the close and cordial cooperation that has existed for nearly 90 years between the Territory and the administering Power, with an emphasis on quality health care and education, telecommunications, renewable energy, support for the fisheries sector and the establishment of transport infrastructure and services, including the ongoing construction of a new purpose-built ferry vessel for the people of Tokelau, to be delivered in 2015,

1. Acknowledges the decision of the General Fono in 2008 that consideration of any future act of self-determination by Tokelau will be deferred and that New Zealand and Tokelau will devote renewed effort and attention to ensuring that essential services and infrastructure on the atolls of Tokelau are enhanced and strengthened, thereby ensuring an enhanced quality of life and opportunities for the people of Tokelau;

2. Welcomes the progress made towards the devolution of power to the three taupulega (village councils) since 2004, and notes that further discussion is planned on the recommendations of the report on the devolution review, compiled in 2012;

3. Notes that Tokelau and New Zealand remain firmly committed to the ongoing development of Tokelau for the long-term benefit of the people of Tokelau, with particular emphasis on the further development of facilities on each atoll that meet their current requirements;

4. Recalls the adoption by Tokelau of its National Strategic Plan for 2010–2015 and that the Joint Commitment for Development between Tokelau and New Zealand 2011–2015 prioritizes four main development pillars, including good governance, infrastructure development, human resources capacity development and sustainable development;

5. Acknowledges the ongoing and consistent commitment of New Zealand to meeting the social and economic requirements of the people of Tokelau, including the completion of the Tokelau Renewable Energy Project and a new shipping charter service, as well as the support and cooperation of the United Nations Development Programme and the World Health Organization;

6. Commends the achievement by Tokelau in 2013 of 60 per cent of the objectives of its National Strategic Plan, including the completion of the Tokelau Renewable Energy Project with the support of the administering Power and the granting of the Renewable Energy Award to the Government of Tokelau by the New Zealand Energy Efficiency and Conservation Authority;

7. Acknowledges the need of Tokelau for continued support from the international community and its desire to become part of the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda, the impacts of climate change and the protection of the environment and oceans;

8. Notes the intention of Tokelau to further review its National Strategic Plan in order to determine development and other priorities beyond 2015 and include consideration of the issue of self-determination and how the Territory would address a possible referendum on self-determination in cooperation with the administering Power;

9. Recalls with satisfaction the establishment and operation of the Tokelau International Trust Fund to support the ongoing needs of Tokelau, and calls upon Member States and international and regional agencies to contribute to the Fund and thereby lend practical support to Tokelau in overcoming the problems of smallness, isolation and lack of resources;

10. Welcomes the cooperative attitude of the other States and territories in the region towards Tokelau and their support for its economic and political aspirations and its increasing participation in regional and international affairs;

11. Calls upon the administering Power and United Nations agencies to continue to provide assistance to Tokelau as it further develops;

12. Welcomes the positive actions taken by the administering Power to transmit to the Secretary-General under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations information regarding the political, economic and social situation of Tokelau;

13. Also welcomes the commitment of both Tokelau and New Zealand to continue to work together in the interests of Tokelau and its people;

14. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine the question of the Non-Self-Governing Territory of Tokelau and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

Western Sahara

The Special Committee [A/69/23] considered the question of Western Sahara on 16 June [A/AC.109/2014/SR.3]. The Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/2014/1] that described the Secretary-General's good offices with the parties concerned and actions taken by the General Assembly and the Security Council (see p. 390). The Committee heard a statement from a representative of the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguía el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (Frente Polisario).

The Special Committee transmitted the relevant documentation to the General Assembly to facilitate the Fourth Committee's consideration of the question, subject to the directives that the Assembly might give to its sixty-ninth (2014) session. In April [S/2014/258], the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council his report on the situation concerning Western Sahara, which covered the period from 1 July 2013 to 30 June 2014. In August [A/69/344], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly his report on the question of Western Sahara, which summarized his April report.

By resolution 69/101 of 5 December (see p. 392), the General Assembly expressed its support for the process of negotiations initiated by the Security Council in 2007, with a view to achieving a political solution that would provide for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara; called on the parties to cooperate with the International Committee of the Red Cross and to abide by their obligations under international humanitarian law; and requested the Special Committee to continue to consider the situation in Western Sahara and to report to the Assembly's seventieth (2015) session.

Island Territories

On 24 June [A/AC.109/2014/SR.6], the Special Committee [A/69/23] considered working papers on American Samoa [A/AC.109/2014/13], Anguilla [A/AC.109/2014/3], Bermuda [A/AC.109/2014/5], the British Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2014/6], the Cayman Islands [A/AC.109/2014/8], Guam [A/AC.109/2014/14], Montserrat [A/AC.109/2014/10], Pitcairn [A/AC.109/2014/4], Saint Helena [A/AC.109/2014/7], the Turks and Caicos Islands [A/AC.109/2014/9] and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2014/11], describing political developments and economic and social conditions in each of the those 11 island Territories. The United Kingdom and the United States—the administering Powers concerned—did not participate in the Committee's consideration of the Territories under their administration. The Committee adopted a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.8] and recommended it for adoption by the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/462], adopted resolutions 69/105 A and B without vote [agenda item 59].

Questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, Saint Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of the Non-Self-Governing Territories of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, Saint Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter referred to as "the Territories",

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014,

Recalling all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to those Territories, including, in particular, the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its sixty-eighth session on the individual Territories covered by the present resolutions,

Recognizing that all available options for self-determination of the Territories are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned and in conformity with the clearly defined principles contained in General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960 and other resolutions of the Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV), containing the principles that should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing concern that 54 years after the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, there still remain a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Conscious of the importance of continuing effective implementation of the Declaration, taking into account the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by 2020 and the plans of action for the Second and Third International Decades for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Recognizing that the specific characteristics and the aspirations of the peoples of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options for self-determination, without any prejudice to territorial size, geographical location, size of population or natural resources,

Noting the stated position of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the stated position of the Government of the United States of America on the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration,

Noting also the constitutional developments in some Non-Self-Governing Territories affecting the internal structure of governance about which the Special Committee has received information,

Convinced that the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories should continue to guide the development of their future political status and that referendums, free and fair elections and other forms of popular consultation play an important role in ascertaining the wishes and aspirations of the people,

Convinced also that any negotiations to determine the status of a Territory must take place with the active involvement and participation of the people of that Territory, under the auspices of the United Nations, on a case-by-case basis, and that the views of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in respect of their right to self-determination should be ascertained,

Noting that a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories have expressed concern at the procedure followed by some administering Powers, contrary to the wishes of the Territories themselves, of amending or enacting legislation for application to the Territories, either through orders in council, in order to apply to the Territories the international treaty obligations of the administering Power, or through the unilateral application of laws and regulations,

Aware of the importance of the international financial services and tourism sectors for the economies of some of the Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Noting the continued cooperation of the Non-Self-Governing Territories at the local and regional levels, including participation in the work of regional organizations,

Mindful that United Nations visiting and special missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, that some Territories have not received a United Nations visiting mission for a long time and that no visiting missions have been sent to some of the Territories, and considering the possibility of sending further visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time, in consultation with the relevant administering Powers and in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Mindful also that, in order for the Special Committee to enhance its understanding of the political status of the peoples of the Territories and to fulfil its mandate effectively, it is important for it to be apprised by the relevant administering Powers and to receive information from other appropriate sources, including the representatives of the Territories, concerning the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories,

Acknowledging the regular transmission by the administering Powers to the Secretary-General of information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter,

Aware of the importance both to the Territories and to the Special Committee of the participation of elected and appointed representatives of the Territories in the work of the Committee,

Recognizing the need for the Special Committee to ensure that the appropriate bodies of the United Nations actively pursue a public awareness campaign aimed at assisting the peoples of the Territories in gaining a better understanding of the options for self-determination,

Mindful, in that connection, that the holding of regional seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions and at Headquarters, with the active participation of representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, provides a helpful means for the Special Committee to fulfil its mandate and that the regional nature of the seminars, which alternate between the Caribbean and the Pacific, is a crucial element in the context of a United Nations programme for ascertaining the political status of the Territories,

Noting the stated positions of the representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories before the Special Committee and at its regional seminars,

Welcoming the 2014 Pacific regional seminar held by the Special Committee in Nadi, Fiji, from 21 to 23 May 2014, as a significant and forward-looking event, which enabled the participants to assess the progress made in the decolonization process and to review the existing working methods of the Committee and renew its momentum in implementing its historic task,

Recognizing the importance of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the seminar, which are annexed to the report of the Special Committee and which outline the findings of the seminar, including, especially, the way forward for the decolonization process within the context of the proclamation by the General Assembly of the period 2011–2020 as the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation, and in that connection bearing in mind the applicability to the Territories of the programmes of action or outcome documents of all United Nations world conferences and special sessions of the General Assembly in the economic and social spheres,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the development of some Territories by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, as well as regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank, the Caribbean Community, the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, the Pacific Islands Forum and the agencies of the Council of Regional Organizations in the Pacific,

Recalling the statement made by the representative of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean at the Caribbean regional seminar held in Kingstown from 31 May to 2 June 2011 that all six Caribbean Non-Self-Governing Territories are active associate members of the Commission,

Aware that the Human Rights Committee, as part of its mandate under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, reviews the status of the self-determination process, including in small island Territories under examination by the Special Committee,

Recalling the ongoing efforts of the Special Committee in carrying out a critical review of its work with the aim of making appropriate and constructive recommendations and decisions to attain its objectives in accordance with its mandate,

Recognizing that the annual working papers prepared by the Secretariat on developments in each of the small Territories, as well as the substantive documentation and information furnished by experts, scholars, non-governmental organizations and other sources, have provided important inputs to update the present resolutions,

Recalling the report of the Secretary-General on the Second International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

2. Also reaffirms that, in the process of decolonization, there is no alternative to the principle of self-determination, which is also a fundamental human right, as recognized under the relevant human rights conventions;

3. Further reaffirms that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and in that connection reiterates its long-standing call for the administering Powers, in cooperation with the territorial Governments and appropriate bodies of the United Nations system, to develop political education programmes for the Territories in order to foster an awareness among the people of their right to self-determination in conformity with the legitimate political status options, based on the principles clearly defined in Assembly resolution 1541(XV) and other relevant resolutions and decisions;

4. Stresses the importance of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples being apprised of the views and wishes of the peoples of the Territories and enhancing its understanding of their conditions, including the nature and scope of the existing political and constitutional arrangements between the Non-Self-Governing Territories and their respective administering Powers;

5. Requests the administering Powers to continue to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter;

6. Calls upon the administering Powers to participate in and cooperate fully with the work of the Special Committee in order to implement the provisions of Article 73 e of the Charter and the Declaration and in order to advise the Committee on the implementation of the provisions under Article 73 b of the Charter on efforts to promote self-government in the Territories, and encourages the administering Powers to facilitate visiting and special missions to the Territories;

7. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of the Territories, and, as a priority, to mitigate the effects of the current global financial crisis where possible, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, towards the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

8. Requests the Territories and the administering Powers to take all measures necessary to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories against any degradation, and once again requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in the Territories and to provide assistance to those Territories, consistent with their prevailing rules of procedure;

9. Welcomes the participation of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in regional activities, including the work of regional organizations;

10. Stresses the importance of implementing the plans of action for the Second and Third International Decades for the Eradication of Colonialism, in particular by expediting the application of the work programme for the decolonization of each Non-Self-Governing Territory, on a case-by-case basis, as well as by ensuring that periodic analyses are undertaken of the progress and extent of the implementation of the Declaration in each Territory, and that the working papers prepared by the Secretariat on each Territory should fully reflect developments in those Territories;

11. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to usher in a world free of colonialism within the context of the International Decades for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee in its endeavours towards that noble goal;

12. Stresses the importance of the various constitutional exercises in the respective Territories administered by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, and led by the territorial Governments, designed to address internal constitutional structures within the present territorial arrangements, and decides to follow closely the developments concerning the future political status of those Territories;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly on a regular basis on the implementation of decolonization resolutions adopted since the declaration of the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism;

14. Reiterates its request that the Human Rights Committee collaborate with the Special Committee, within the framework of its mandate on the right to self-determination as contained in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with the aim of exchanging information, given that the Human Rights Committee is mandated to review the situation, including political and constitutional developments, in many of the Non-Self-Governing Territories that are within the purview of the Committee;

15. Requests the Special Committee to continue to collaborate with the Economic and Social Council and its relevant subsidiary intergovernmental bodies, within the framework of their respective mandates, with the aim of exchanging information on developments in those Non-Self-Governing Territories which are reviewed by those bodies;

16. Also requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session and on the implementation of the present resolutions.

B

INDIVIDUAL TERRITORIES

*The General Assembly,
Referring to resolution A above,*

I

American Samoa

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on American Samoa and other relevant information,

Taking note also of the statement made by the representative of the Governor of American Samoa at the Pacific regional seminar held in Nadi, Fiji, from 21 to 23 May 2014 that, while the Territory enjoyed a great deal of self-government, its current legal status was seen as an anachronism that exposed the Territory to situations beyond its control and needed to be remedied,

Noting the constitutional amendment, approved in 2014 and to be put to the vote at the end of the year, that would give the Fono, the Territory's legislature, the authority to override the Governor's veto,

Noting also, in that regard, the announcement of a voter education process ahead of the constitutional amendment poll,

Aware that, under United States law, the Secretary of the Interior has administrative jurisdiction over American Samoa,

Recalling the position of the administering Power and the statements made by representatives of American Samoa at regional seminars inviting the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to send a visiting mission to the Territory,

Aware of the work of the Future Political Status Study Commission, completed in 2006, the release of its report, with recommendations, in January 2007 and the creation of the American Samoa Constitutional Review Committee, as well as the holding in June 2010 of the Territory's fourth Constitutional Convention,

Noting, in that regard, that, in 2013, the Governor recalled the recommendation of the Future Political Status Study Commission that American Samoa continue as an unorganized and unincorporated Territory, and that a process of negotiation with the United States Congress for a permanent political status be initiated,

Acknowledging the indication by the territorial Government, including at the 2014 Pacific regional seminar, that the effects of certain federal laws on the economy of the Territory give serious cause for concern,

Aware that, in July 2012, the United States passed Public Law 112–149, which includes a provision to delay the minimum wage increases in American Samoa, as provided by United States Public Law 110–28, until September 2015,

Aware also that American Samoa continues to be the only United States Territory to receive financial assistance from the administering Power for the operations of the territorial Government,

1. Welcomes the work of the territorial Government with respect to moving forward on political status, local autonomy and self-governance issues with a view to making political and economic progress and in particular the announcement of a dialogue, to commence in 2015, among the people of American Samoa on the Territory's future political status;

2. Expresses once again its appreciation for the invitation extended in 2011 by the Governor of American Samoa to the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to send a visiting mission to the Territory, calls upon the administering Power to facilitate such a mission if the territorial Government so desires, and requests the Chair of the Special Committee to take all the steps necessary to that end;

3. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning a public awareness programme, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter of the United Nations, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

4. Calls upon the administering Power to assist the territorial Government in the diversification and sustainability of the economy of the Territory and to address employment and cost-of-living issues;

II

Anguilla

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on Anguilla and other relevant information,

Recalling the holding of the 2003 Caribbean regional seminar in Anguilla, hosted by the territorial Government and made possible by the administering Power, the first time that the seminar had been held in a Non-Self-Governing Territory,

Recalling also the statement made by the representative of Anguilla at the Pacific regional seminar held in Quito from 30 May to 1 June 2012 that the people of the Territory are concerned that they are being denied the full range of decolonization options under a drafting exercise that began in 2011,

Aware of the follow-up meeting, held after the 2012 Pacific regional seminar, between the Chair of the Special Committee and the Chief Minister of Anguilla, who reiterated the urgent need for a visiting mission,

Noting the internal constitutional review process resumed by the territorial Government in 2006, the work of the Constitutional and Electoral Reform Commission, which prepared its report in August 2006, the holding of public and other consultative meetings in 2007 on proposed constitutional amendments to be presented to the administering Power, the decisions taken in 2008 and 2011 to set up a drafting team to prepare a new constitution and present it for public consultation in the Territory and the efforts undertaken in that regard in 2013 and 2014,

Noting also the participation of the Territory as a member in the Caribbean Overseas Countries and Territories Council and an associate member in the Caribbean Community, the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

1. Welcomes the preparations made for a new constitution, and urges that constitutional discussions with the administering Power, including public consultations, be concluded as soon as possible;

2. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory in its current efforts with regard to advancing the internal constitutional review exercise, if requested;

3. Stresses the importance of the previously expressed desire of the territorial Government for a visiting mission by the Special Committee, calls upon the administering Power to facilitate such a mission, if the territorial Government so desires, and requests the Chair of the Special Committee to take all the necessary steps to that end;

4. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public consultative outreach efforts consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

5. Calls upon the administering Power to assist the territorial Government in strengthening its commitments in the economic domain, including budgetary matters, with regional support as needed and appropriate;

6. Welcomes the active participation of the Territory in the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

III

Bermuda

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on Bermuda and other relevant information,

Aware of the statement made by the representative of Bermuda at the Pacific regional seminar held in Quito from 30 May to 1 June 2012,

Conscious of the different viewpoints of the political parties on the future status of the Territory, and noting the results of successive surveys by local media, according to which a majority of respondents did not wish to sever ties with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the administering Power, and a minority was in favour of independence,

Recalling the dispatch of the United Nations special mission to Bermuda in 2005, at the request of the territorial Government and with the concurrence of the administering

Power, which provided information to the people of the Territory on the role of the United Nations in the process of self-determination, on the legitimate political status options as clearly defined in General Assembly resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960 and on the experiences of other small States that have achieved a full measure of self-government,

Aware of serious concerns regarding good governance, transparency and accountability in the Territory, including with respect to external election campaign financing originating in a neighbouring country, which led the Premier to resign in May 2014 with a view to maintaining integrity and confidence in the political landscape,

Cognizant of the potential usefulness of regional ties for the development of a small island Territory and of Bermuda's associate membership in the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,

1. Stresses the importance of the 2005 report of the Bermuda Independence Commission, which provides a thorough examination of the facts surrounding independence, and continues to regret that the plans for public meetings and the presentation of a Green Paper to the House of Assembly followed by a White Paper outlining the policy proposals for an independent Bermuda have so far not materialized;

2. Underlines the need further to strengthen good governance, transparency and accountability in government for the benefit of the Territory;

3. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public educational outreach efforts, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

4. Welcomes the active participation of Bermuda in the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

IV

British Virgin Islands

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on the British Virgin Islands and other relevant information,

Noting the statement made by the representative of the British Virgin Islands at the Caribbean regional seminar held in Quito from 28 to 30 May 2013 that while the Territory's relationship with the administering Power was stable and not problematic, it could be enhanced,

Aware of the negative impact of the global economic slowdown on the growth of the financial and tourism services sectors of the Territory,

Cognizant of the potential usefulness of regional ties for the development of a small island Territory and of the Territory's membership in the Caribbean Overseas Countries and Territories Council,

1. Recalls the 2007 Constitution of the British Virgin Islands, and stresses the importance of continued discussions on constitutional matters, to accord greater responsibility to the territorial Government for the effective implementation of the Constitution and increased levels of education relating to constitutional matters;

2. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public outreach efforts, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

3. Welcomes the active participation of the Territory in the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

4. Notes the holding, in March 2014, of the meeting of the Inter-Virgin Islands Council between the Territory and the United States Virgin Islands;

V

Cayman Islands

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on the Cayman Islands and other relevant information,

Conscious of the statement made by the representative of the territorial Government at the 2010 Pacific regional seminar held in Nouméa,

Aware of the work, in accordance with the 2009 Constitution, of the Constitutional Commission, which serves as an advisory body on constitutional matters,

Acknowledging that, in spite of the global economic downturn and unemployment issues, the financial services, tourism and construction sectors of the Territory reportedly grew in 2013,

Cognizant of the potential usefulness of regional ties for the development of a small island Territory and of the Territory's membership in the Caribbean Overseas Countries and Territories Council,

1. Recalls the 2009 Constitution of the Cayman Islands, and stresses the importance of the work of the Constitutional Commission, including its work on human rights education;

2. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public awareness outreach efforts, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

3. Welcomes the active participation of the Territory in the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

4. Also welcomes the efforts made by the territorial Government to continue to implement financial sector management policies, medical and sports tourism initiatives and unemployment alleviation programmes in various economic sectors;

VI

Guam

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on Guam and other relevant information,

Noting the statement made by the representative of the Governor of Guam at the Pacific regional seminar held in Nadi, Fiji from 21 to 23 May 2014, presenting an update on the efforts of Guam towards decolonization and on the engagement of the Guam Commission on Decolonization for the Implementation and Exercise of Chamorro Self-Determination in reinforcing public awareness in order to address the limited and distorted understanding of decolonization,

Cognizant of the efforts made by the Guam Commission on Decolonization to promote in the Territory the holding of a plebiscite on self-determination, to populate the decolonization registry, as required by public law, to enhance the ability to expediently register those who have not yet been registered and to identify and secure territorial and federal resources for a self-determination education programme,

Aware that, under United States law, the relations between the territorial Government and the federal Government in all matters that are not the programme responsibility of another federal department or agency are under the general administrative supervision of the Secretary of the Interior,

Recalling that, in a referendum held in 1987, the registered and eligible voters of Guam endorsed a draft Guam Commonwealth Act that would establish a new framework for relations between the Territory and the administering Power, providing for a greater measure of internal self-government for Guam and recognition of the right of the Chamorro people of Guam to self-determination for the Territory,

Aware that negotiations between the administering Power and the territorial Government on the draft Guam Commonwealth Act ended in 1997 and that Guam has subsequently established a non-binding plebiscite process for a self-determination vote by the eligible Chamorro voters,

Cognizant of the importance of the administering Power continuing to implement its programme of transferring surplus federal land to the Government of Guam,

Noting that the people of the Territory have called for reform in the programme of the administering Power with respect to the thorough, unconditional and expeditious transfer of land property to the people of Guam,

Aware of the deep concern expressed by civil society and other parties regarding the potential social, cultural, economic and environmental impacts of the planned transfer of additional military personnel of the administering Power to the Territory,

Conscious that immigration into Guam has resulted in the indigenous Chamorros becoming a minority in their homeland,

1. Welcomes the convening of the Guam Commission on Decolonization for the Implementation and Exercise of Chamorro Self-Determination and its ongoing work on a self-determination vote, as well as its public education efforts;

2. Calls once again upon the administering Power to take into consideration the expressed will of the Chamorro people as supported by Guam voters in the referendum of 1987 and as subsequently provided for in Guam law regarding Chamorro self-determination efforts, encourages the administering Power and the territorial Government to enter into negotiations on the matter, and stresses the need for continued close monitoring of the overall situation in the Territory;

3. Requests the administering Power, in cooperation with the territorial Government, to continue to transfer land to the original landowners of the Territory, to continue to recognize and to respect the political rights and the cultural and ethnic identity of the Chamorro people of Guam and to take all measures necessary to address the concerns of the territorial Government with regard to the question of immigration;

4. Also requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating public outreach efforts, including through the funding of the public education campaign, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested, and welcomes the recent outreach work by the territorial Government;

5. Further requests the administering Power to cooperate in establishing programmes for the sustainable development of the economic activities and enterprises of the Territory, noting the special role of the Chamorro people in the development of Guam;

VII

Montserrat

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on Montserrat and other relevant information,

Noting with concern the continuing consequences of the 1995 volcanic eruption which led to the evacuation of three quarters of the population of the Territory to safe areas of the island and to areas outside the Territory and which continues to have enduring consequences for the economy of the island,

Acknowledging the continuing assistance provided to the Territory by States members of the Caribbean Community, in particular Antigua and Barbuda, which has offered safe refuge and access to educational and health facilities, as well as employment for thousands who have left the Territory,

Noting the continuing efforts of the administering Power and the territorial Government to deal with the consequences of the volcanic eruption,

Aware that Montserrat continues to receive budgetary aid from the administering Power for the operation of the territorial Government,

Cognizant of the potential usefulness of regional ties for the development of a small island Territory and of the Territory's membership in the Caribbean Overseas Countries and Territories Council,

1. Recalls the 2011 Constitution of Montserrat and the work of the territorial Government with respect to moving forward to consolidate the gains provided for in the Constitution;

2. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public outreach efforts, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

3. Welcomes the Territory's participation in the 2012 inauguration of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States Assembly and in the work of that Organization and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

4. Calls upon the administering Power, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as regional and other organizations, to continue to provide assistance to the Territory in alleviating the consequences of the volcanic eruption;

VIII

Pitcairn

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on Pitcairn and other relevant information,

Taking into account the unique character of Pitcairn in terms of population, area and access,

Aware that the administering Power and the territorial Government have implemented a governance structure to strengthen administrative capacity in the Territory, based on consultations with the people of the Territory, and that Pitcairn continues to receive budgetary aid from the administering Power for the operation of the territorial Government,

Cognizant that the administering Power and the territorial Government have developed a five-year strategic development plan that sets out the views and aspirations of the people of the Territory for the socioeconomic development of the Territory,

Aware of the assessment made in 2013 that the population of the Territory needs to be boosted if the Territory is to have a sustainable future and of the approval by the Pitcairn Island Council of an immigration policy designed to promote immigration and repopulation and bring people with the necessary skills and commitment to Pitcairn,

1. Welcomes all efforts by the administering Power and the territorial Government that would further devolve operational responsibilities to the Territory, with a view to gradually expanding self-government, including through training of local personnel;

2. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public outreach efforts, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

3. Also requests the administering Power to continue its assistance for the improvement of the economic, social, educational and other conditions of the population of the Territory and to continue its discussions with the territorial Government on how best to support socioeconomic and environmental security in Pitcairn, including concerning demographic matters;

4. Welcomes the work carried out on the preparation of the five-year strategic development plan for the island;

IX

Saint Helena

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on Saint Helena and other relevant information,

Recalling the statement made by the representative of Saint Helena at the Caribbean regional seminar held in Frigate Bay, Saint Kitts and Nevis, from 12 to 14 May 2009,

Taking into account the unique character of Saint Helena in terms of its population, geography and natural resources,

Noting the fact that, in January 2013, following a resolution passed in September 2012 by the Legislative Council to undertake minor adjustments to the 2009 Constitution of Saint Helena, a public consultation process was launched,

Aware that a consultative poll was held in March 2013, with the majority opting for no change to the Constitution, and that, for the first time, a general election based on one constituency was held in July 2013,

Cognizant that Saint Helena continues to receive budgetary aid from the administering Power for the operation of the territorial Government,

Aware of the efforts of the administering Power and the territorial Government to improve the socioeconomic conditions of the population of Saint Helena, in particular in the areas of employment and transport and communications infrastructure,

Noting the efforts of the Territory to address demands on its labour market, including through the Labour Market Strategy for the period 2012–2014, the Sustainable Economic Development Plan 2012/13–2021/22 and the new National Strategy for the Development of Statistics,

Noting also the importance of improving the infrastructure and accessibility of Saint Helena and, in that regard, the approval of the administering Power of the building of an airport on the island of Saint Helena,

1. Stresses the importance of the 2009 Constitution of the Territory and the further development of democratic and good governance;

2. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public outreach efforts, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

3. Requests the administering Power and relevant international organizations to continue to support the efforts of the territorial Government to address the socio-economic development challenges of the Territory;

X

Turks and Caicos Islands

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on the Turks and Caicos Islands and other relevant information,

Recalling the statement made by the representative of the Turks and Caicos Islands at the 2009 Caribbean regional seminar held in Frigate Bay, Saint Kitts and Nevis,

Recalling also the dispatch of the United Nations special mission to the Turks and Caicos Islands in 2006 at the request of the territorial Government and with the concurrence of the administering Power,

Aware of the 2002 report of the Constitutional Modernization Review Body, and acknowledging the 2006 Constitution of the Turks and Caicos Islands agreed upon between the administering Power and the elected territorial Government,

Noting the decision of the administering Power to suspend parts of the 2006 Constitution, the subsequent presentation of a draft constitution for public consultation in 2011 and the introduction of a new constitution for the Territory, as well as the election of a new territorial Government in 2012,

Aware that, in 2013, the Territory established the Constitutional Review Committee, which, following public consultations, is expected to formulate a document on constitutional matters for presentation to the administering Power,

Aware also that, in March 2014, the Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community received an update on the situation in the Turks and Caicos Islands, which they will continue to monitor, and that they expressed their support for the full restoration of democracy in the Territory on terms driven by its people,

Acknowledging the impact that the global economic slowdown and other relevant developments have had on tourism and related real estate development, the mainstays of the economy of the Territory, including on construction output during 2012 and 2013, and noting that the Territory has begun a number of fresh economic development programmes,

1. Expresses its support for the full restoration of democracy in the Territory and the work of the Constitutional Review Committee in that regard, and notes the efforts of the administering Power to restore good governance, including through the introduction in 2011 of a new constitution and the holding of elections in November 2012, and sound financial management in the Territory;

2. Notes the positions and repeated calls of the Caribbean Community and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in support of a democratically elected territorial Government and of the full restoration of democracy in the Territory as decided by its people;

3. Also notes the continuing debate on constitutional reform within the Territory, and stresses the importance of participation by all groups and interested parties in the consultation process;

4. Stresses the importance of having in place in the Territory a constitution that reflects the aspirations and wishes of its people, based on the mechanisms for popular consultation;

5. Requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning public outreach efforts, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

6. Welcomes the active participation of the Territory in the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

7. Also welcomes the continuing efforts made by the territorial Government addressing the need for attention to be paid to the enhancement of socioeconomic development across the Territory, including through public-private consultative partnerships and small business development programmes;

XI

United States Virgin Islands

Taking note of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on the United States Virgin Islands and other relevant information,

Aware that, under United States law, the relations between the territorial Government and the federal Government in all matters that are not the programme responsibility of another federal department or agency are under the general administrative supervision of the Secretary of the Interior,

Aware also of the fifth attempt of the Territory to review the existing Revised Organic Act, which organizes its internal governance arrangements, as well as its requests to the administering Power and the United Nations system for assistance to its public education programme,

Cognizant that a draft constitution was proposed in 2009 and subsequently forwarded to the administering Power, which in 2010 requested the Territory to consider its objections to the draft constitution,

Cognizant also that the Fifth Revision Convention, established and convened in 2012, was mandated to ratify and approve the final revised draft constitution,

Noting the holding of elections in the Territory in November 2012,

Aware of the closing of the Hovensia plant, and noting the continuing negative impact on manufacturing and on the employment situation in the Territory,

Cognizant of the potential usefulness of regional ties for the development of a small island Territory,

1. Welcomes the proposal of a draft constitution emanating from the Territory in 2009, as a result of the work of the United States Virgin Islands Fifth Constitutional Convention, for review by the administering Power, and requests the administering Power to assist the territorial Government in achieving its political, economic and social goals, in particular the successful conclusion of the ongoing internal Constitutional Convention exercise;

2. Requests the administering Power to facilitate the process for approval of the proposed territorial constitution in the United States Congress and its implementation, once agreed upon in the Territory;

3. Also requests the administering Power to assist the Territory by facilitating its work concerning a public education programme, consistent with Article 73 b of the Charter, and in that regard, calls upon the relevant United Nations organizations to provide assistance to the Territory, if requested;

4. Expresses its concern regarding the continuing negative impact of the Hovensia plant closure;

5. Reiterates its call for the inclusion of the Territory in regional programmes of the United Nations Development Programme, consistent with the participation of other Non-Self-Governing Territories;

6. Welcomes the active participation of the Territory in the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean;

7. Notes the holding, in March 2014, of the meeting of the Inter-Virgin Islands Council between the Territory and the British Virgin Islands.

Other issues

Economic and other activities affecting NSGTs

On 24 June [A/69/23], the Special Committee considered the issue of economic and other activities affecting the interests of the peoples of NSGTs and adopted a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.11] for adoption by the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/459], adopted resolution 69/98 by recorded vote (175-2-2) [agenda item 56].

Economic and other activities which affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled “Economic and other activities which affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories”,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014 relating to the item,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, including, in particular, resolutions 46/181 of 19 December 1991, 55/146 of 8 December 2000 and 65/119 of 10 December 2010,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that any economic or other activity that has a negative impact on the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and on the exercise of their right to self-determination in conformity with the Charter and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) is contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming further that the natural resources are the heritage of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, including the indigenous populations,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location, size and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the need to promote the stability, diversification and strengthening of the economy of each Territory,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Conscious also that foreign economic investment, when undertaken in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes, could make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories and also to the exercise of their right to self-determination,

Concerned about any activities aimed at exploiting the natural and human resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union, the Pacific Islands Forum and the Caribbean Community,

1. Reaffirms the right of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as their right to the enjoyment of their natural resources and their right to dispose of those resources in their best interest;

2. Affirms the value of foreign economic investment undertaken in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes in order to make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories, especially during times of economic and financial crisis;

3. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and reaffirms the legitimate rights of their peoples over their natural resources;

4. Reaffirms its concern about any activities aimed at the exploitation of the natural resources that are the heritage of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, including the indigenous populations, in the Caribbean, the Pacific and other regions, and of their human resources, to the detriment of their interests, and in such a way as to deprive them of their right to dispose of those resources;

5. Reaffirms the need to avoid any economic and other activities that adversely affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

6. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in the Non-Self-Governing Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises;

7. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that the exploitation of the marine and other natural resources in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration is not in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and does not adversely affect the interests of the peoples of those Territories;

8. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to take all possible measures to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization;

9. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the administering Powers to take all steps necessary to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to ensure that no discriminatory working conditions prevail in the Territories under their administration and to promote in each Territory a fair system of wages applicable to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, through all means at his disposal, to inform world public opinion of any activity that affects the exercise of the right of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination in conformity with the Charter and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

12. Appeals to trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to continue their efforts to promote the economic well-being of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and also appeals to the media to disseminate information about the developments in this regard;

13. Decides to follow the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interest of their peoples, including the indigenous populations, and at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories;

14. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/98:

Visiting missions

The Special Committee considered the question of sending visiting missions to NSGTs on 16 June [A/69/23]. It adopted a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.5/Rev.1], in which the Committee stressed the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to facilitate the full implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization, and called upon the administering Powers to facilitate such missions to the Territories under their administration. It requested the administering Powers to cooperate with the Committee in exploring the possibility of undertaking visiting or special missions in furtherance of the decolonization mandate of the General Assembly. The Committee also requested its Chair to consult with the administering Powers concerned and report on the results.

Dissemination of information

On 16 June, the Special Committee [A/69/23] held consultations with representatives of the UN Departments of Political Affairs and of Public Information on the dissemination of information on decolonization. It also considered a report of the Secretary-General on the subject, covering the period from April 2013 to March 2014 [A/AC.109/2014/18], and adopted a draft resolution [A/AC.109/2014/L.4] for adoption by the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/462], adopted resolution 69/106 by recorded vote (173-3-1) [agenda item 59].

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for 2014 relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 68/96 of 11 December 2013,

Recognizing the need for flexible, practical and innovative approaches towards reviewing the options of self-determination for the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories with a view to implementing the plan of action for the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism,

Reiterating the importance of dissemination of information as an instrument for furthering the aims of the Declaration, and mindful of the role of world public opinion in effectively assisting the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to achieve self-determination,

Recognizing the role played by the administering Powers in transmitting information to the Secretary-General in accordance with the terms of Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing also the role of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, through the United Nations information centres, in the dissemination of information at the regional level on the activities of the United Nations,

Recalling the issuance by the Department of Public Information, in consultation with the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and the Special Committee, of an information leaflet on assistance programmes available to the Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Aware of the role of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of information on decolonization,

1. Approves the activities in the field of dissemination of information on decolonization undertaken by the Department of Public Information and the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization, and recalls with satisfaction the publication, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 61/129 of 14 December 2006, of the information leaflet on what the United Nations can do to assist Non-Self-Governing Territories, which was updated for the United Nations website on decolonization in May 2009, and encourages continued updating and wide dissemination of the information leaflet;

2. Considers it important to continue and expand its efforts to ensure the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with particular emphasis on the options for self-determination available for the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories, and, to this end requests the Department of Public Information, through the United Nations information centres in the relevant regions, to actively engage and seek new and innovative ways to disseminate material to the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to further enhance the information provided on the United Nations decolonization website and to continue to include the full series of reports of the regional seminars on decolonization, the statements and scholarly papers presented at those seminars and links to the full series of reports of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

4. Requests the Department of Public Information to continue its efforts to update web-based information on the assistance programmes available to the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

5. Requests the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Public Information to implement the recommendations of the Special Committee and to continue their efforts to take measures through all of the media available, including publications, radio and television, as well as the Internet, to give publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and, inter alia:

(a) To develop procedures to collect, prepare and disseminate, particularly to the Non-Self-Governing Territories, basic material on the issue of self-determination of the peoples of the Territories;

(b) To seek the full cooperation of the administering Powers in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To explore further the idea of a programme of collaboration with the decolonization focal points of territorial Governments, particularly in the Pacific and Caribbean regions, to help to improve the exchange of information;

(d) To encourage the involvement of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of information on decolonization;

(e) To encourage the involvement of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in the dissemination of information on decolonization;

(f) To report to the Special Committee on measures taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Requests all States, including the administering Powers, to accelerate the dissemination of information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

7. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/106:

Against: Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: France.

Information on Territories

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/87 [YUN 2013, p. 566], the Secretary-General, in March [A/69/69], submitted a report indicating the dates of transmittal of information from the administering Powers on economic, social and educational conditions in NSGTs for 2013, under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/458], adopted resolution 69/97 by recorded vote (174-0-4) [agenda item 55].

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1970(XVIII) of 16 December 1963, in which it requested the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the information transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and to take such information fully into account in examining the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 68/87 of 11 December 2013, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Stressing the importance of timely transmission by the administering Powers of adequate information under Article 73 e of the Charter, in particular in relation to the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers on the Territories concerned,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

2. Requests the administering Powers concerned, in accordance with their Charter obligations, to transmit or continue to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social and educational conditions in the Territories for which they are respectively responsible, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, including the constitution, legislative act or executive order providing for the government of the Territory and the constitutional relationship of the Territory to the administering Power, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that adequate information is drawn from all available published sources in connection with the preparation of the working papers relating to the Territories concerned;

4. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/97:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Abstaining: France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Study and training

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/90 [YUN 2013, p. 567], the Secretary-General, in March [A/69/67], submitted a report on replies from Member States related to scholarships and training facilities made available to the inhabitants of NSGTs during the period from 18 March 2013 to 5 March 2014. Replies were submitted by Argentina, Australia, Austria, India, New Zealand, Saudi Arabia and the United Kingdom. Over the years, 61 Member States and one non-member State—the Holy See—had made such scholarships available.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/461], adopted resolution 69/100 without vote [agenda item 58].

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/90 of 11 December 2013,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General, prepared pursuant to its resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the facilities necessary to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present resolution;
6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Peaceful uses of outer space

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, at its fifty-seventh session (Vienna, 11–20 June) [A/69/20], discussed ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes; space and sustainable development; the spin-off benefits of space technology; space and water; space and climate change; the use of space technology in the UN system; and the future role of the Committee. It also reviewed the work of its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and its Legal Subcommittee.

Scientific and Technical Subcommittee

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, at its fifty-first session (Vienna, 10–21 February) [A/AC.105/1065], considered the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and space technology for socioeconomic development in the context of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and the post-2015 development agenda (see p. 960). It also dealt with matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellite, including applications for developing countries and monitoring of the Earth's environment; space debris; space-system-based disaster management support; developments in global navigation satellite systems (GNSS); space weather; near-Earth objects; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; the long-term sustainability of outer space activities; and the examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization and applications.

UN Programme on Space Applications

The United Nations Programme on Space Applications, as mandated by General Assembly resolution 37/90 [YUN 1982, p. 163], continued to promote, through international cooperation, the use of space technologies and data for sustainable economic and social development in developing countries by raising awareness of decision makers of the cost-effectiveness and additional benefits to be obtained; establishing and strengthening capacity in developing countries to use space technology; and strengthening outreach activities to disseminate awareness of the benefits obtained. The Programme focused on environmental monitoring, natural resource management, satellite communications for tele-education and telemedicine applications, disaster risk reduction, the use of GNSS, the Basic Space Science Initiative, space law, climate change, the Basic Space Technology Initiative, the Human Space Technology Initiative, and biodiversity and wildlife management.

In December [A/AC.105/1085], the United Nations Expert on Space Applications reported that the Programme continued to support education and training for capacity-building in developing countries through the regional centres for space science and technology education affiliated with the United Nations. The sixth Regional Centre for Space Science and Technology Education for Asia and the Pacific, hosted by Beihang University in Beijing, was formally inaugurated on 17 November. The Programme organized expert meetings, workshops and seminars on advanced space applications and space technology, as well as short- and medium-term training programmes. In 2014, two symposiums [A/AC.105/1082, A/AC.105/1086], one international conference [A/AC.105/1073], three workshops [A/AC.105/1081, A/AC.105/1087, A/AC.105/1089] and one expert meeting [A/AC.105/1069] were conducted.

The Basic Space Science Initiative, launched in 1990 as a long-term effort for the development of astronomy and space science through regional and international cooperation in the field, led to the establishment of planetariums, astronomical telescopes and space weather instrument arrays, particularly in developing countries. In 2014, the Programme organized a symposium to consider the future of the Initiative. The Basic Space Technology Initiative, launched in 2009 to support capacity-building in space technology development focused on small-satellite missions, continued to support space technology development through international conferences on capacity-building in basic space technology, the development of space technology curricula to ensure a common minimum standard of teaching, and a long-term educational fellowship programme. The Human Space Technology Initiative, launched in 2010 to promote international cooperation in spaceflight and space exploration-related activities, conducted its primary science activity, the Zero-Gravity Instrument Project, and a fellowship programme called the Drop Tower Experiment Series.

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered the January report of the United Nations Expert on Space Applications [A/AC.105/1062], which described the Programme's 2013 activities, those scheduled for 2014, and the activities of UN-affiliated regional centres for the 2012–2014 period.

The General Assembly, in resolution 69/85 of 5 December (see p. 729), endorsed the Programme on Space Applications for 2015, as proposed by the Expert and endorsed by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space.

Space technology for socioeconomic development

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/75 [YUN 2013, p. 572], the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee [A/AC.105/1065] considered the agenda item on space technology for socioeconomic development in the context of the UN Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780] and the post-2015 development agenda. The item was renamed from “Implementation of the recommendations of the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III)” in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 568]. Among the documents before the Subcommittee were a Secretariat note containing the progress report of the Open Working Group of the General Assembly on Sustainable Development Goals [A/AC.105/C.1/2014/CRP.23]; a conference room paper providing an update on recent developments in the context of the UN Conference on Sustainable Development and the post-2015 development agenda [A/AC.105/C.1/2014/CRP.21]; and a discussion paper submitted by Japan entitled “Draft proposed workplan for a mechanism of cooperative deliberation for ‘space and sustainable development’: bridging the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee” [A/AC.105/C.1/2014/CRP.22]. The Subcommittee's Working Group of the Whole agreed with the overall objective of the draft proposed workplan. On the basis of a proposal by Canada, the Working Group also agreed on the establishment of a focused expert group on space and global health to consider issues related to the use of space technology for public health.

The Committee [A/69/20] endorsed the recommendations and decisions on the item made by the Subcommittee and its Working Group of the Whole.

Scientific and technical issues

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/75, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee [A/AC.105/1065] considered matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellite, including applications for developing countries and monitoring of the Earth's environment. The Subcommittee noted the increased availability of space-based data at little or no cost, including remote sensing data, made available from the China-Brazil Earth resources satellites, the SAC-C international mission, Landsat of the United States, the greenhouse gases observing satellites of Japan, Oceansat-2 of India and the Megha-Tropiques Indian-French joint satellite mission. A growing number of developing countries were deploying their own remote sensing satellite systems and utilizing space-based data to advance socioeconomic development. The Subcommittee also noted the importance of data democracy policies in empowering users in developing countries so that they could make full use of remote sensing applications for the benefit of their own societies.

For its consideration of the issue of space debris, the Subcommittee had before it a report [A/AC.105/C.1/108] containing information from five Member States and three non-governmental organizations (NGOs) with permanent observer status with the Committee on research on space debris, the safety of space objects with nuclear power sources on board and problems relating to the collision of such space objects with space debris. The Subcommittee expressed concern over the increasing amount of space debris and encouraged States that had not yet done so to consider voluntary implementation of the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space [YUN 2007, p. 640]. It agreed that States, particularly spacefaring nations, should pay greater attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources on board. The Subcommittee noted that States had taken action to mitigate space debris, including the improvement of launch vehicles and spacecraft design.

For its review of developments in global navigation satellite systems (GNSS), the Subcommittee had before it the report on the United Nations/Croatia Workshop on the Applications of Global Navigation Satellite Systems (Baška, Croatia, 21–25 April 2013) [A/AC.105/1055]; a Secretariat note on the Eighth Meeting of the International Committee on Global Navigation Satellite Systems (Dubai, United Arab Emirates, 9–14 November 2013) [A/AC.105/1059]; and the Secretariat report on activities conducted in the framework of the workplan of the International Committee on Global Navigation Satellite Systems [A/AC.105/1060].

The following reports, issued in 2014 for consideration by the Subcommittee at its 2015 session, dealt with the Ninth Meeting of the International Committee on Global Navigation Satellite Systems (Prague, Czech Republic, 10–14 November 2014) [A/AC.105/1083]; the United Nations/Abdus Salam International Centre for Theoretical Physics Workshop on the Use of Global Navigation Satellite Systems for Scientific Applications (Trieste, Italy, 1–5 December) [A/AC.105/1087]; and activities carried out in 2014 in the framework of the workplan of the International Committee on Global Navigation Satellite Systems [A/AC.105/1084].

In accordance with resolution 68/75, the Subcommittee considered the agenda item on near-Earth objects (NEOs). The Subcommittee noted the importance of information-sharing in discovering, monitoring and physically characterizing potentially hazardous NEOs, and that effective responses for the mitigation of hazard threats from such objects were best carried out though international cooperation. It noted that the Action Team on Near-Earth Objects, in collaboration with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and the European Space Agency (ESA) organized two meetings in 2014 to establish an international asteroid warning network (IAWN) (Cambridge, United States, 13–14 January) and a space mission planning advisory group (SMPAG) (Darmstadt, Germany, 6–7 February). The Subcommittee further noted that the Action Team should continue to support the work of IAWN and SMPAG in the short term to facilitate their interaction with the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs that were not participating in those bodies.

The Subcommittee continued its consideration of the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. It encouraged States and international intergovernmental organizations to implement the Safety Framework for Nuclear Power Source Applications in Outer Space [YUN 2009, p. 605]. The Subcommittee reconvened the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space and endorsed its report, which was annexed to the Subcommittee's 2014 report.

For its consideration of the agenda item on the long-term sustainability of outer space activities, the Subcommittee had before it a Secretariat note [A/AC.105/1041/Rev.1] containing the compilation of draft guidelines proposed by expert groups as at the fifty-sixth (2013) session of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space for consideration by the Working Group on the Long-term Sustainability of Outer Space Activities. The Subcommittee reconvened the Working Group on the Long-term Sustainability of Outer Space Activities and endorsed the Working Group's report, which was annexed to the Subcommittee's report.

In accordance with resolution 68/75, the Subcommittee considered the agenda item "Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization and applications, including in the field of space communications, as well as other questions relating to developments in space communications, taking particular account of the needs and interests of developing countries, without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union⁷. The Subcommittee had before it the annual report for 2013 of the Radiocommunication Bureau of the International Telecommunication Union on the use of the geostationary orbit and other orbits, as well as other documents referred to in a 3 February Secretariat note [A/AC.105/C.1/2014/CRP.9].

Space-system-based disaster management support

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its fifty-first session, had before it a report [A/AC.105/1057] on the activities carried out in 2013 in the framework of the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER), established by the General Assembly in resolution 61/110 [YUN 2006, p. 748]; a Secretariat report on technical advisory support activities carried out in 2013 in the framework of UN-SPIDER [A/AC.105/1056]; a report of the United Nations/Germany Expert Meeting on the Use of Space-based Information in Early Warning Systems (Bonn, Germany, 25–26 June 2013) [A/AC.105/1047]; and a report on the UN International Conference on Space-based Technologies for Disaster Management (Beijing, 23–25 October 2013) [A/AC.105/1061]. The Subcommittee heard technical presentations by representatives of China and India, as well as the International Society for Photogrammetry and the UN Office for Outer Space Affairs, and noted progress made regarding planned activities, including the support provided for emergency response efforts following Typhoon Bopha in Palau and the Philippines in 2012 [YUN 2012, p. 912], Typhoon Haiyan in the Philippines in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 879], and floods in Iraq. The fifth annual meeting of the UN-SPIDER regional support offices (Vienna, 13–14 February 2014) was hosted by the Office for Outer Space Affairs to review joint activities implemented in 2013, and to develop a joint workplan for 2014 and the 2014–2015 biennium. The Subcommittee noted the ongoing activities of Member States that were contributing to the use of space-based solutions in support of disaster management.

The following reports, issued in 2014 for consideration by the Subcommittee at its 2015 session, dealt with activities carried out in 2014 in the framework of UN-SPIDER [A/AC.105/1078]; the United Nations/Germany Expert Meeting on the Use of Space-based Information for Flood and Drought Risk Reduction (Bonn, Germany, 5–6 June 2014) [A/AC.105/1074]; the UN-SPIDER knowledge portal [A/AC.105/1075]; the United Nations International Conference on Space-based Technologies for Disaster Management: Multi-hazard Disaster Risk Assessment (Beijing, 15–17 September 2014) [A/AC.105/1076]; and joint activities carried out in 2014 by the UN-SPIDER regional support offices [A/AC.105/1079].

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/75, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered the agenda item on space weather. It had before it the report on the United Nations/Austria Symposium on Space Weather Data, Instruments and Models: Looking Beyond the International Space Weather Initiative (Graz, Austria, 16–18 September 2013) [A/AC.105/1051]. The Subcommittee heard technical presentations by the representatives of Austria, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Italy, Japan, and the United States, as well as the Scientific Committee on Solar-Terrestrial Physics. It noted that progress was made over the previous year in advancing space weather capabilities at the national and international levels. Space weather involved global phenomena driven by large solar eruptions that impacted large areas of the Earth simultaneously. It was therefore important to monitor and understand the drivers of space weather, as well as the impacts on Earth and in space. The Subcommittee further noted that new space missions and ground-based instrumentation would ultimately provide data that could improve space weather predictions.

Legal Subcommittee

The Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, at its fifty-third session (Vienna, 24 March–4 April) [A/AC.105/1067], considered the status and application of the five UN treaties on outer space (see below); information on the activities of international intergovernmental organizations and NGOs relating to space law; matters related to the definition and delimitation of outer space and the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit; national legislation relevant to the peaceful exploration and use of outer space; capacity-building in space law; review and possible revision of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space; exchange of information and views on legal mechanisms relating to space debris mitigation measures; exchange of information on non-legally binding UN instruments on outer space; review of international mechanisms for cooperation in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space; and proposals to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space for new items to be considered by the Legal Subcommittee at its fifty-fourth (2015) session.

The Subcommittee reconvened its Working Group on the Status and Application of the Five United Nations Treaties on Outer Space and its Working Group on the Definition and Delimitation of Outer Space, and it established the Working Group on the Review of International Mechanisms for Cooperation in the Peaceful Exploration and Use of Outer Space.

The reports of the Working Groups were endorsed by the Subcommittee and annexed to its report.

For its consideration of the agenda item on the activities of international intergovernmental organizations and NGOs relating to space law, the Subcommittee had before it a Secretariat note containing information received from the International Law Association (ILA) [A/AC.105/C.2/104] and a conference room paper containing information received from Intersputnik and the European Centre for Space Law [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.21]. The Subcommittee noted the contributions of international intergovernmental organizations and NGOs relating to the development and study of space law and agreed that such organizations should be invited to report to the Subcommittee at its fifty-fourth (2015) session on their activities related to space law.

In addressing matters related to the definition and delimitation of outer space and the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, the Subcommittee had before it Secretariat notes on national legislation and practice relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space [A/AC.105/865/Add.14, 15]; replies from Member States on questions concerning the definition and delimitation of outer space [A/AC.105/889/Add.13, 14]; and questions on suborbital flights for scientific missions and/or for human transportation [A/AC.105/1039/Add.2, 3].

For its consideration of the item on national legislation relevant to the peaceful exploration and use of outer space, the Subcommittee had before it a Secretariat note on the schematic overview of national regulatory frameworks for space activities [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.5] and a conference room paper on the development of a system for legal regulation of space activities of the Russian Federation [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.14]. The Subcommittee noted the development of the African space policy, within the institutional framework of the African Union, which would guide the African presence in space-related endeavours. It was important to take into account the increased level of commercial and private activities in outer space in the development of a national space-related regulatory framework. The Subcommittee encouraged Member States to continue to submit texts of their national space laws and regulations and to provide updates and inputs for the schematic overview of national regulatory frameworks for space activities.

For its consideration of the agenda item on capacity-building in space law, the Subcommittee had before it several conference room papers on actions and initiatives adopted by States to build such capacity. The Subcommittee noted the completion of the education curriculum on space law and requested the Office for Outer Space Affairs to have it translated into all UN official languages to facilitate its use by the regional centres and developing countries.

The Subcommittee, in response to resolution 68/75, considered the agenda item on the general exchange of information and views on legal mechanisms relating to space debris mitigation measures. It had before it conference room papers containing a compendium of space debris mitigation standards adopted by States and international organizations, submitted by Canada, the Czech Republic and Germany [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.15], and a contribution to the compendium by the United States [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.15/Add.1]. The Subcommittee agreed that all Member States should be invited to contribute to the compendium.

For its consideration of the review of international mechanisms for cooperation in the peaceful exploration and use of outer space, the Subcommittee had before it a Secretariat note and addenda containing information received from four States and ILA [A/AC.105/C.2/105 & Add.1, 2].

Treaties

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/75 [YUN 2013, p. 572], the Legal Subcommittee considered the status and application of the five UN treaties on outer space. It had before it a document entitled "United Nations Treaties and Principles on Outer Space, related General Assembly resolutions and other documents" [ST/SPACE/61/Rev.1], and Secretariat notes containing questions provided by the chair of the Working Group on the Status and Application of the Five United Nations Treaties on Outer Space [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.16], responses to such questions received from Germany [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.17] and the Russian Federation [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.18 & Corr.1], and the contribution of Turkey to the Subcommittee's fifty-third session [A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.26].

The Subcommittee noted that, as at 1 January, the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies [YUN 1966, p. 41] had 103 States parties and had been signed by 25 additional States; the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space [YUN 1967, p. 34] had 94 States parties and had been signed by 24 additional States; the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects [YUN 1971, p. 52] had 91 States parties and had been signed by 22 additional States; the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space [YUN 1974, p. 56] had 60 States parties and had been signed by 4 additional States; and the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies [YUN 1979, p. 111] had 15 States parties and had been signed by 4 additional States.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/75 [YUN 2013, p. 572], the Secretary-General issued an April report [A/AC.105/1063] on the coordination of space-related activities within the UN system: directions and anticipated results for the period 2014–2015—addressing the post-2015 development agenda. The report provided information on the use of space-derived information to ensure environmental sustainability; promote inclusive social and economic development; and support sustainable development policies. It also described UN system efforts to build resilience through the streamlined use of space-derived information. The report identified goals that could be considered by Member States and UN entities to ensure that the potential benefits of space technology were harnessed to the fullest extent possible for the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda. The goals included enhancing awareness of the potential contribution of space-derived data and information for development; developing capacities for the discovery of, access to and processing and use of space-derived data and information; strengthening institutional frameworks to facilitate the use of remote sensing data and information; supporting standardization and updating of geospatial information; and promoting international cooperation for increased use of data and information for planning and decision-making processes.

Inter-Agency Meeting. The Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities, at its thirty-fourth session (New York, 13–14 May) [A/AC.105/1064], discussed the coordination of UN system plans and programmes in the practical applications of space technology; the preparation of a special report on initiatives and applications for space-related inter-agency cooperation addressing global health; and means of strengthening further inter-agency coordination and cooperation in space-related activities.

The UN Office for Outer Space Affairs, as the secretariat of UN-Space (the abbreviation for the Inter-Agency Meeting recommended by the General Assembly in resolution 68/75), informed the Meeting about the work of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its subsidiary bodies, bringing to its attention matters relating to inter-agency coordination. Representatives of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Office for Outer Space Affairs, in its capacity as executive secretariat of the International Committee on Global Navigation Satellite Systems, and the United Nations Children's Fund, on behalf of the United Nations Operational Satellite Applications Programme of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, reported on their current activities. Meeting participants noted that the Secretary-General's April report on the coordination of space-related activities within the United Nations system for the period 2014–2015 (see above) constituted a valid basis for reviewing efforts addressing the post-2015 development agenda. They agreed that the next special report should address the theme of space for global health and be submitted to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space in 2015. Participants also agreed that the Meeting's thirty-fifth (2015) session could be held in conjunction with a meeting of the United Nations Geographic Information Working Group, in view of the synergies between the two inter-agency coordination mechanisms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/452], adopted resolution 69/85 without vote [agenda item 49].

International cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/122 of 13 December 1996, 54/68 of 6 December 1999, 59/2 of 20 October 2004, 61/110 and 61/111 of 14 December 2006, 62/101 of 17 December 2007, 62/217 of 22 December 2007, 65/97 of 10 December 2010, 65/271 of 7 April 2011, 66/71 of 9 December 2011, 67/113 of 18 December 2012, 68/50 of 5 December 2013 and 68/74 and 68/75 of 11 December 2013,

Emphasizing the significant progress in the development of space science and technology and their applications that has enabled humans to explore the universe, and the extraordinary achievements made over the past 50 years in space exploration efforts, including deepening the understanding of the planetary system and the Sun and the Earth itself, in the use of space science and technology for the benefit of all humankind and in the development of the international legal regime governing space activities, and recognizing in that regard the unique platform at the global level for international cooperation in space activities represented by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its subsidiary bodies and assisted by the Office for Outer Space Affairs of the Secretariat,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of all humankind in promoting and expanding the exploration and use of outer space, as the province of all humankind, for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and also of the importance of international cooperation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law and their important role in international cooperation for the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes, and of the widest possible adherence to international treaties that promote the peaceful uses of outer space in order to meet emerging new challenges, especially for developing countries,

Seriously concerned about the possibility of an arms race in outer space, and bearing in mind the importance of article IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recognizing that all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, should contribute actively to the prevention of an arms race in outer space with a view to promoting and strengthening international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Deeply concerned about the fragility of the space environment and the challenges to the long-term sustainability of outer space activities, in particular the impact of space debris which is an issue of concern to all nations,

Noting the progress achieved in the development of peaceful space exploration and applications as well as in various national and cooperative space projects, and the importance of further developing the legal framework to strengthen international cooperation in space,

Convinced that space science and technology and their applications, such as satellite communications, Earth observation systems and satellite navigation technologies, provide indispensable tools for viable long-term solutions for sustainable development and can contribute more effectively to efforts to promote the development of all countries and regions of the world, and stressing in that regard the need to harness the benefits of space technology towards implementing and monitoring the United Nations Millennium Declaration and contributing to the post-2015 development agenda process,

Seriously concerned about the devastating impact of disasters, and desirous of enhancing international coordination and cooperation at the global level in disaster management and emergency response through greater access to and use of space-based services and geospatial information for all countries and facilitating capacity-building and institutional strengthening for disaster management, in particular in developing countries,

Firmly convinced that the use of space science and technology and their applications in areas such as telehealth, tele-education, disaster management, environmental protection, natural resources management and climate monitoring contribute to achieving the objectives of the global conferences of the United Nations that address various aspects of economic, social and cultural development, particularly poverty eradication,

Deeply concerned about the devastating effects of infectious diseases, in particular Ebola virus disease, to the detriment of human life, society and development, and urging the international community, in particular scientific and academic institutions, to undertake studies on the role of tele-epidemiology in monitoring, preparedness and response activities,

Recalling, in that regard, the fact that the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, recognized the important role that space science and technology play in promoting sustainable development,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its fifty-seventh session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its fifty-seventh session;

2. Agrees that the Committee, at its fifty-eighth session, should consider the substantive items recommended at its fifty-seventh session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, in particular those of developing countries;

3. Notes that, at its fifty-third session, the Legal Subcommittee of the Committee continued its work, as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 68/75;

4. Agrees that the Legal Subcommittee, at its fifty-fourth session, should consider the substantive items and reconvene the working groups recommended by the Committee, taking into account the concerns of all countries, in particular those of developing countries;

5. Urges States that have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties in accordance with their national law, as well as incorporating them into their national legislation;

6. Notes with satisfaction the conclusion by the Office for Outer Space Affairs of a space law curriculum, which could encourage further studies within States;

7. Notes that, at its fifty-first session, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee continued its work, as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 68/75;

8. Agrees that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its fifty-second session, should consider the substantive items and reconvene the working groups recommended by the Committee, taking into account the concerns of all countries, in particular those of developing countries;

9. Notes the importance of information-sharing in discovering, monitoring and physically characterizing potentially hazardous near-Earth objects to ensure that all countries, in particular developing countries with limited capacity in predicting and mitigating a near-Earth object impact, are aware of potential threats, emphasizes the need for capacity-building for effective emergency response and disaster management in the event of a near-Earth object impact, and recalls in that regard the recommendations for an international response to the near-Earth object impact threat, endorsed by the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee at its fiftieth session and by the Committee at its fifty-sixth session;

10. Notes with satisfaction that progress on establishing an international asteroid warning network and a space mission planning advisory group to implement the recommendations for an international response to the near-Earth object impact threat would be reported to the Subcommittee at its fifty-second session;

11. Notes with appreciation that some States are already implementing space debris mitigation measures on a voluntary basis, through national mechanisms and consistent with the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee and with the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 62/217, and invites other States to implement, through relevant national mechanisms, the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

12. Considers that it is essential that States pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, especially those with nuclear power sources, with space debris, and other aspects of space debris, calls for the continuation of national research on this question, for the development of improved technology for the monitoring of space debris and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris, also considers that, to the extent possible, information thereon should be provided to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, and agrees that international cooperation is needed to expand appropriate and affordable strategies to minimize the impact of space debris on future space missions;

13. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes;

14. Requests the Committee to continue to consider, as a matter of priority, ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, and agrees that during its consideration of the matter the Committee could continue to consider ways to promote regional and interregional cooperation and the role that space technology could play in the implementation of recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development;

15. Welcomes the fact that the Committee, at its fifty-seventh session, agreed to consider, under the item entitled "Ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes", the broader perspective of space security and associated matters that would be instrumental in ensuring the safe and responsible conduct of space activities, and to identify effective tools that could potentially provide the Committee with new guidance, in a pragmatic manner and without prejudice to the mandate of other intergovernmental forums, and notes with satisfaction that, in that regard, and in line with resolution 68/50, the Committee agreed to consider at its fifty-eighth session, in 2015, the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on Transparency and Confidence-Building Measures in Outer Space Activities, with a view to identifying those recommendations that could, to the extent practicable, be adapted to and instrumental in ensuring the safety of space operations and the long-term sustainability of outer space activities in general;

16. Recognizes the central role of the Office for Outer Space Affairs in fostering capacity-building in the use of space science and technology and their applications for the benefit of all countries, in particular developing countries, and urges all Member States to contribute to the Trust Fund in Support of the United Nations Programme on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space in order to enhance the capacity of the Office to provide technical and legal advisory services in its priority thematic areas;

17. Endorses the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 2015, as proposed to the Committee by the Expert on Space Applications and endorsed by the Committee;

18. Notes with satisfaction the significant achievements made and the advisory support provided to more than 30 Member States within the framework of the United Nations Platform for Space-based Information for Disaster Management and Emergency Response (UN-SPIDER), with the valuable contributions of its network of regional support offices, and encourages Member States, on a voluntary basis, to provide the programme with the additional resources necessary to address the increasing demand for support successfully and in a timely manner;

19. Also notes with satisfaction the continuous progress made by the International Committee on Global Navigation Satellite Systems with the support of the Office for Outer Space Affairs, in its capacity as executive secretariat of the International Committee, towards achieving compatibility and interoperability among global and regional space-based positioning, navigation and timing systems and in the promotion of the use of global navigation satellite systems and their integration into national infrastructure, particularly in developing countries, and notes with appreciation that the International Committee held its ninth meeting in Prague from 10 to 14 November 2014;

20. Notes with appreciation that the regional centres for space science and technology education, affiliated to the United Nations, namely, the African regional centres for space science and technology education in the French and English languages, located in Morocco and Nigeria, respectively, the Centre for Space Science and Technology Education in Asia and the Pacific, located in India, the Regional Centre for Space Science and Technology Education for Latin America and the Caribbean, with campuses located in Brazil and Mexico, and the Centre for Space Science and Technology Education for Western Asia, located in Jordan, have continued their education programmes in 2014, encourages the regional centres to continue to promote greater participation of women in their education programmes, and agrees that the regional centres should continue to report to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on their activities;

21. Notes with satisfaction the progress on the establishment of a new regional centre for space science and technology education in Asia and the Pacific located at Beihang University in Beijing;

22. Emphasizes that regional and interregional cooperation in the field of space activities is essential to strengthen the peaceful uses of outer space, assist States in the development of their space capabilities and contribute to the achievement of the goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, to that end requests relevant regional organizations and their groups of experts to offer the assistance necessary so that countries can carry out the recommendations of regional conferences, and in that regard notes the importance of the equal participation of women in all fields of science and technology;

23. Recognizes, in that regard, the important role played by conferences and other mechanisms in strengthening regional and international cooperation among States, such as the African Leadership Conference on Space Science and Technology for Sustainable Development, the Asia-Pacific Regional Space Agency Forum, the Space Conference of the Americas, a process that should not be interrupted, and the Asia-Pacific Space Cooperation Organization;

24. Emphasizes the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to sustained economic growth and sustainable development in all countries, including strengthening sustainable spatial data infrastructure at the regional and national levels and building resilience to reduce the consequences of disasters, in particular in developing countries;

25. Reiterates the need to promote the benefits of space technology and its applications in the major United Nations conferences and summits for economic, social and cultural development and related fields, and recognizes that the fundamental significance of space science and technology and their applications for global, regional, national and local sustainable development processes should be promoted in the formulation of policies and programmes of action and their implementation, including through efforts towards achieving the objectives of those conferences and summits, including implementing the Millennium Declaration and contributing to the post-2015 development agenda process;

26. Encourages Member States, to that end, to promote the inclusion in those conferences, summits and processes of the relevance of space science and technology applications and the use of space-derived geospatial data;

27. Encourages the Office for Outer Space Affairs to take active part in those conferences, summits and processes, including the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction and the summit on the post-2015 development agenda, both to be held in 2015, as appropriate and within existing resources;

28. Urges the Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities (UN-Space), under the leadership of the Office for Outer Space Affairs, to continue to examine how space science and technology and their applications could contribute to implementing the Millennium Declaration and to the post-2015 development agenda process, and encourages entities of the United Nations system to participate, as appropriate, in UN-Space coordination efforts;

29. Notes that, in accordance with the agreement reached by the Committee at its forty-sixth session on the measures relating to the future composition of the bureaux of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, on the basis of the measures relating to the working methods of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, the Asia-Pacific States, the Eastern European States, the Latin American and Caribbean States and the Western European and other States have nominated their candidates for the offices of Chair of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, First Vice-Chair of the Committee, Chair of the Legal Subcommittee and Chair of the Committee, respectively, for the period 2016–2017;

30. Urges the African States to nominate their candidate for the office of Second Vice-Chair/Rapporteur of the Committee for the period 2016–2017 before the next session of the Committee;

31. Agrees that, upon the nomination of the candidate of the African States, the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, at their respective sessions in 2016, should elect their officers nominated for the period 2016–2017;

32. Decides that Luxembourg shall become a member of the Committee;

33. Endorses the decision of the Committee to grant permanent observer status to the African Association of Remote Sensing of the Environment;

34. Encourages the regional groups to promote active participation in the work of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies by the States members of the Committee that are also members of the respective regional groups.

Effects of atomic radiation

Report of Scientific Committee. The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, at its sixty-first session (Vienna, 21–25 July) [A/69/46], considered two scientific reports that had been published since its sixtieth (2013) session, the process for finalizing them and their impact. The first report presented the results of an assessment of the levels and effects of radiation exposure due to the 2011 Fukushima Daiichi nuclear accident in Japan [YUN 2011, p. 587]. It was presented to the media on 2 April 2014, and an advance copy of a Japanese translation of the main text was presented to Fukushima Prefecture on 27 May. The second report, on the effects of radiation exposure on children, was published in October 2013.

The Committee addressed radiation exposures from electricity generation and an updated methodology for estimating human exposures due to radioactive discharges; biological effects from selected internal emitters; cancer epidemiology of exposures at low dose-rates due to environmental radiation; the collection of data on radiation exposures, in particular for an evaluation of medical exposures; and outreach activities.

The Committee discussed two draft scientific annexes, one on radiation exposures from electricity generation and the other on updating the Committee's methodology for estimating human exposures to radioactive discharges into the environment. The Committee noted that the update of the existing methodology and the associated document were advanced. It expected that the document would be ready for approval at its sixty-second (2015) session. Progress on the draft annex on radiation exposures from electricity generation was limited by large gaps in the available data, however, it was but expected to be ready for consideration in 2015.

The Committee also discussed progress on evaluations of the biological effects of exposure to selected internal emitters, addressing two specific radionuclides: tritium and uranium. It noted that an updated version of the document on tritium could be presented for the Committee's approval in 2015 but that additional revision work would be needed for the evaluation on uranium. The Committee noted that there could be merit in conducting similar evaluations for caesium and iodine.

The Committee agreed to focus on completing evaluations that had been delayed by the finalization of the two studies, particularly the study on the Fukushima Daiichi accident. It decided to set out, at its sixty-second session, long-term strategic directions beyond the period covered by its 2014–2019 strategic plan. The Committee confirmed the Governing Principles for its work and agreed to hold its sixty-second session in Vienna from 1 to 5 June 2015.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 66/70 [YUN 2011, p. 587], by which the Assembly increased the membership of the Scientific Committee from 21 to 27 States, the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/69/350] on the impact of the increase in the membership and possible approaches to further increases. The period considered (2012–2014) was too short to allow firm conclusions to be drawn on the impact of the increase on the Committee's effectiveness and work quality in the long term. Moreover, the number of States members of the Committee had almost doubled since its creation, while the geographical distribution had essentially remained stable. Because of its scientific nature, the Committee needed experts of worldwide standing; enlargement of the Committee was therefore not the most pertinent means of enhancing its work. What mattered more was whether the Committee had access to the data and expertise that institutions in UN Member States could provide. Changes to the Committee's management and organization involving more specialized scientists and institutions from many Member States could contribute to the Committee's work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/451], adopted resolution 69/84 without vote [agenda item 48].

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which mankind and the environment are exposed,

Conscious of the continuing need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on mankind and the environment, and conscious also of the increased volume, complexity and diversity of that information,

Acknowledging the concerns about the radiological consequences of nuclear accidents, which were renewed by the accident at the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear power station following the March 2011 earthquake and tsunami in Japan,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work, and welcoming the increased commitment of States members of the Committee,

Emphasizing the vital need for sufficient, assured and predictable funding, as well as efficient management, of the work of the secretariat of the Scientific Committee to arrange the annual sessions and coordinate the development of documents based on scientific reviews of the sources of ionizing radiation and its effects on human health and the environment,

Recognizing the increasing importance of the scientific work of the Scientific Committee and the need to carry out unforeseen additional work in cases such as the accident at the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear power station,

Recognizing also the importance of voluntary contributions to the general trust fund established by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to support the work of the Scientific Committee,

Considering that the high quality of the work and the scientific rigour of the Scientific Committee need to be maintained in the future,

Recognizing the importance of disseminating results from the work of the Scientific Committee and widely publicizing scientific knowledge about atomic radiation, and recalling, in that context, principle 10 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution that it has been making since its inception to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Reaffirms the decision to maintain the present functions and independent role of the Scientific Committee;

3. Notes with appreciation the work of the Scientific Committee, and takes note of the report on its sixty-first session, including the confirmation of the Governing Principles for its work and the adoption of terms of reference for its Bureau;

4. Appreciates the publication in 2014 of the complete report on the levels and effects of radiation exposure due to the nuclear accident after the 2011 great east-Japan earthquake and tsunami, and encourages the secretariat of the Scientific Committee to continue to disseminate the findings to the public;

5. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important activities to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

6. Endorses the intentions and plans of the Scientific Committee for conducting its programme of work of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly, in particular its next Global Survey of Medical Radiation Usage and Exposures, to be conducted in close cooperation with other relevant organizations, and its assessments of levels of ionizing radiation exposure from electrical energy production, and requests the Committee to submit plans for its ongoing and future programme of work to the Assembly at its seventieth session;

7. Welcomes developments in streamlining procedures for publishing the reports of the Scientific Committee electronically on its official website and as sales publications, and calls upon the secretariat to monitor the timely publication of those reports and to continue to strive to publish them within the same calendar year as their approval;

8. Re-emphasizes the need for the Scientific Committee to hold regular sessions on an annual basis so that its report can reflect the latest developments and findings in the field of ionizing radiation and thereby provide updated information for dissemination among all States;

9. Invites the Scientific Committee to continue its consultations with scientists and experts from interested Member States in the process of preparing its future scientific reports, and requests the secretariat to facilitate such consultations;

10. Welcomes, in this context, the readiness of Member States to provide the Scientific Committee with relevant information on the levels and effects of ionizing radiation, and invites the Committee to analyse and give due consideration to such information, particularly in the light of its own findings;

11. Recalls the strategy of the Scientific Committee to improve data collection, encourages in this regard Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about levels, effects and risks of radiation exposure from various sources, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Committee to the General Assembly, and encourages the International Atomic Energy Agency, the World Health Organization and other relevant organizations to further collaborate with the secretariat to establish and coordinate the arrangements for periodic exchange of data on radiation exposures of workers, the general public and, in particular, patients;

12. Welcomes the development by the secretariat of an online platform for collecting data on medical exposures, and encourages Member States to take part in the Scientific Committee's Global Survey of Medical Radiation Usage and Exposures and to nominate a national contact person to facilitate coordination of data collection and submission within their country;

13. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue, within existing resources, to actively support the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

14. Takes note, in this regard, of the Scientific Committee's outreach strategy for the coming years, in particular the enhancement of the website of the Committee and the publication of informative leaflets and posters in all the official languages of the United Nations, and encourages consideration to be given to publishing the website in all those languages;

15. Encourages the United Nations Environment Programme to continue to maintain appropriate funding for the Scientific Committee, pursuant to paragraph 14 of General Assembly resolution 68/73 of 11 December 2013;

16. Encourages Member States to make voluntary contributions to the general trust fund established by the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, and also to make contributions in kind in order to support the work of the Scientific Committee;

17. Recalls paragraph 19 of General Assembly resolution 66/70 of 9 December 2011, notes the expression of interest by Member States in membership in the Scientific Committee, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the Assembly at its seventy-second session with a list of the Member States that have expressed their particular interest in membership in the Committee between the sixty-sixth and seventy-second sessions, for consideration pursuant to the above-mentioned paragraph.

Information security

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/243 [YUN 2013, p. 577], the Secretary-General, in June [A/69/112 & Add.1], issued a report transmitting the views of 16 Member States on their general appreciation of the issues of information security; national efforts to strengthen information security and promote international cooperation in that field; international concepts aimed at strengthening the security of global information and telecommunications systems; and possible measures the international community could take to strengthen information security at the global level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 December [meeting 62], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee [A/69/435], adopted resolution 69/28 without vote [agenda item 91].

Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 53/70 of 4 December 1998, 54/49 of 1 December 1999, 55/28 of 20 November 2000, 56/19 of 29 November 2001, 57/53 of 22 November 2002, 58/32 of 8 December 2003, 59/61 of 3 December 2004, 60/45 of 8 December 2005, 61/54 of 6 December 2006, 62/17 of 5 December 2007, 63/37 of 2 December 2008, 64/25 of 2 December 2009, 65/41 of 8 December 2010, 66/24 of 2 December 2011, 67/27 of 3 December 2012 and 68/243 of 27 December 2013,

Recalling also its resolutions on the role of science and technology in the context of international security, in which, inter alia, it recognized that scientific and technological developments could have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needed to be maintained and encouraged,

Noting that considerable progress has been achieved in developing and applying the latest information technologies and means of telecommunication,

Affirming that it sees in this process the broadest positive opportunities for the further development of civilization, the expansion of opportunities for cooperation for the common good of all States, the enhancement of the creative potential of humankind and additional improvements in the circulation of information in the global community,

Recalling, in this connection, the approaches and principles outlined at the Information Society and Development Conference, held in Midrand, South Africa, from 13 to 15 May 1996,

Bearing in mind the results of the Ministerial Conference on Terrorism, held in Paris on 30 July 1996, and the recommendations that were made,

Bearing in mind also the results of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003 (first phase) and in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005 (second phase),

Noting that the dissemination and use of information technologies and means affect the interests of the entire international community and that optimum effectiveness is enhanced by broad international cooperation,

Expressing concern that these technologies and means can potentially be used for purposes that are inconsistent with the objectives of maintaining international stability and security and may adversely affect the integrity of the infrastructure of States to the detriment of their security in both civil and military fields,

Considering that it is necessary to prevent the use of information resources or technologies for criminal or terrorist purposes,

Noting the importance of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the use of information and communications technologies,

Noting also the contribution of those Member States that have submitted their assessments on issues of information security to the Secretary-General pursuant to paragraphs 1 to 3 of resolutions 53/70, 54/49, 55/28, 56/19, 57/53, 58/32, 59/61, 60/45, 61/54, 62/17, 63/37, 64/25, 65/41, 66/24, 67/27 and 68/243,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General containing those assessments,

Welcoming the initiative taken by the Secretariat and the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research in convening international meetings of experts in Geneva in August 1999 and April 2008 on developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security, as well as the results of those meetings,

Considering that the assessments of Member States contained in the reports of the Secretary-General and the international meetings of experts have contributed to a better understanding of the substance of issues of international information security and related notions,

Bearing in mind that the Secretary-General, in fulfilment of resolution 66/24, established in 2012, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, a group of governmental experts, which, in accordance with its mandate, considered existing and potential threats in the sphere of information security and possible cooperative measures to address them, including norms, rules or principles of responsible behaviour of States and confidence-building measures in information space, and conducted a study on relevant international concepts aimed at strengthening the security of global information and telecommunications systems,

Welcoming the effective work of the Group of Governmental Experts on Developments in the Field of Information and Telecommunications in the Context of International Security and the relevant outcome report transmitted by the Secretary-General,

Taking note of the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts,

1. Calls upon Member States to promote further at multilateral levels the consideration of existing and potential threats in the field of information security, as well as possible strategies to address the threats emerging in this field, consistent with the need to preserve the free flow of information;

2. Considers that the purpose of such strategies could be served through further examination of relevant international concepts aimed at strengthening the security of global information and telecommunications systems;

3. Invites all Member States, taking into account the assessments and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on Developments in the Field of Information and Telecommunications in the Context of International Security, to continue to inform the Secretary-General of their views and assessments on the following questions:

(a) General appreciation of the issues of information security;

(b) Efforts taken at the national level to strengthen information security and to promote international cooperation in this field;

(c) The content of the concepts mentioned in paragraph 2 above;

(d) Possible measures that could be taken by the international community to strengthen information security at the global level;

4. Welcomes the commencement of the work of the Group of Governmental Experts, and authorizes the Group, taking into account the assessments and recommendations contained in the above-mentioned report, to continue to study, with a view to promoting common understandings, existing and potential threats in the sphere of information security and possible cooperative measures to address them, including norms, rules or principles of responsible behaviour of States and confidence-building measures, the issues of the use of information and communications technologies in conflicts and how international law applies to the use of information and communications technologies by States, as well as the concepts referred to in paragraph 2 above, and to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the results of the study;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled "Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security".

Public information

Committee on Information

The General Assembly's Committee on Information, at its thirty-sixth session (New York, 28 April–9 May) [A/69/21], continued to review UN public information policies and activities, and to evaluate and follow up on efforts made and progress achieved by the UN system in information and communications.

The Committee had before it three reports of the Secretary-General on activities of the Department of Public Information (DPI) from September 2013 to February 2014, which addressed strategic communications services [A/AC.198/2014/2], news services [A/AC.198/2014/3]; and outreach and knowledge services [A/AC.198/2014/4].

The Committee held its general debate on 28 and 29 April. It adopted two draft resolutions and a draft decision that were submitted to the General Assembly for consideration (see below). The Committee also took note of the proposed strategic framework for the 2016–2017 period [A/69/6 (Prog. 24) & Corr.1].

The Assembly, by decision 69/522 of 5 December, increased the membership of the Committee on Information from 114 to 115 and appointed Iraq as a member.

DPI activities

In response to General Assembly resolution 68/86 B [YUN 2013, p. 580], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/310] on questions relating to information, covering activities undertaken by DPI from March to September through its three subprogrammes: strategic communications, news, and outreach and knowledge services. The report highlighted recent communication campaigns, the Department's traditional media-related products and services, the growth of the UN social media presence, progress made with regard to the multimedia website of DPI, and the activities of the United Nations News Centre. It provided an update on the Department's outreach services and relations with the creative community and NGOs. The report also reviewed the activities of the network of United Nations information centres (UNICs); summarized the Department's partnerships with institutions of higher learning and research through the United Nations Academic Impact initiative; and described efforts to maintain a culture of evaluation within DPI.

Strategic communications services

The United Nations Communications Group task force, convened by DPI, played a key role in coordinating messaging and outreach plans on the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), the post-2015 development agenda and climate change. DPI launched the "Time for Global Action" campaign as the umbrella for UN system initiatives during the 2014–2015 period. The launch of the Millennium Development Goals Report 2014 (see p. 960) by the Secretary-General at the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council (New York, 7 July) was complemented by more than a dozen regional and national launches organized by UNICs, as well as by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Nordic Representation Office. DPI issued press materials in the six official languages; coordinated media outreach, events and interviews; and produced infographics and videos on the MDGs for social media.

As part of its Special Information Programme on the Question of Palestine, DPI held its annual International Media Seminar on Peace on the Middle East (Tokyo, Japan, 9–10 June), organized in cooperation with Japan and hosted by Sophia University. For the twentieth annual commemoration of the International Day of Reflection on the Genocide in Rwanda (7 April), the Department, in cooperation with Rwanda, held a series of events at Headquarters under the theme "Kwibuka: Remember, Unite, Renew", including a panel discussion and a symposium. For the observance of Nelson Mandela International Day (18 July), DPI worked with South Africa and the Office of the President of the General Assembly in planning events at Headquarters, including an informal meeting of the Assembly. On 29 May, DPI collaborated with the Departments of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and Field Support (DFS) to mark the 2014 International Day of United Nations Peacekeepers (29 May) under the theme "United Nations Peacekeeping: A Force for Peace, A Force for Change, A Force for the Future".

The Department continued to raise global awareness of and support for the New Partnership for Africa's Development through its magazine, Africa Renewal, and the Africa Renewal Online website, offered in both English and French. From March through June, DPI placed 20 articles, which were published 585 times in English and French in 160 media outlets in more than 30 countries.

DPI launched a series of simultaneous online events and briefings at UNICs worldwide to increase interaction among geographically dispersed offices. In promoting action for the environment, UNICs promoted "A wish for the planet", an international writing and drawing competition co-organized with the estate of Antoine de Saint-Exupéry and the International Organization of la Francophonie. Many UNICs organized events in commemoration of World Press Freedom Day on 3 May. The UNIC in Antananarivo, Madagascar, in cooperation with the World Wildlife Fund and the Ministry of Information of Madagascar, held a debate on "The obstacles to the professionalism of current Malagasy journalists". The UNIC in Beirut, Lebanon, organized prime-time talk shows with three local television stations, featuring UN officials and other participants.

News services

United Nations social media grew dramatically across multiple platforms in 2014, and DPI tailored its social media approach to regional and language audiences. A coordinated effort with UNDP on the Weibo website yielded strong interest in the Secretary-General's visit to China in May. The UN posts on the Weibo site were viewed 1.18 billion times and were reposted and cited by hundreds of traditional news media outlets. The United Nations Weibo site reached more than 6 million followers in June.

DPI also increased its collaborative work across social media accounts. The United Nations News Centre drew on the Twitter account of the Spokesperson of the Secretary-General and on the main UN account to supplement information being distributed to different audiences. During the year, the Twitter and Facebook accounts of the English news portal grew by over 100 per cent, to almost 110,000 followers and 300,000 fans. The number of video views on the UN channel on YouTube in all languages exceeded 10 million, and the number of subscribers to the channel grew to more than 52,000. About 380,000 videos were viewed on the YouTube channel in French, and the Spanish-language YouTube account was expected to have more than half a million views by September. The newly created YouTube account in Arabic helped profile UN activities in Arabic-speaking countries.

The growth of the audience accessing UN information online grew from 154 million page views in the 2010–2012 period to 280 million views in the 2013–2014 period in all languages. The dramatic increase in page views was due, in part, to an upswing in the use of the Russian-language websites beginning in March. Spanish language websites also registered an increase, with some 6 million page views between March and June.

Integrated editorial planning and coordination between the Department's news and media producers working across platforms led to a high number of interviews, news and features by the United Nations News Centre and Radio teams, with increased profiles on the UN website of senior officials speaking on issues related to Iraq, Ukraine, the Syrian Arab Republic and chemical weapons, the situation in the Central African Republic, and South Sudan, among other matters. United Nations Radio initiated creative partnerships to harness the power of joint collaborations. The Chinese Unit approached China National Radio to link up with their live prime-time news programme on issues of common interest, including statements of the Secretary-General and Security Council meetings. A partnership with the call-to-listen platform AudioNow provided displaced and hard-to-reach ethnic audiences around the world with free access to United Nations Radio and other UN audio content. In 2014, listeners in Brazil, South Africa, Switzerland, Ukraine and the United States could dial in to UN news, features and live coverage in eight languages.

United Nations Television worked with partners to produce video products on priority issues, including a series of eight stories highlighting the MDGs. The monthly flagship programme, 21st Century, was produced in language versions with subtitles, rather than being dubbed, in line with current media standards. Successful partnerships continued with TV5 Monde and the China Business Network for French and Chinese language versions, respectively; partners were being sought for the other official languages. DPI continued to produce UN in Action, a series of three- to five-minute features in the six official languages. An abridged series of two-minute video pieces entitled UN Stories was also produced for the web in the six official languages. UNifeed, the flagship daily television newswire service, distributed 531 stories to hundreds of television networks around the world through the Associated Press, Eurovision and Reuters from March to mid-June. The stories reached approximately 200 broadcast users per month through the UNifeed website. Half of the news stories originated from United Nations Television in New York and Geneva, with the remaining half contributed by over 30 agencies, funds, programmes and peacekeeping missions.

DPI continued to improve and expand the ability of the Organization's live and on-demand webcast services to reach a global audience in all six official languages on multiple web platforms, including wireless mobile devices. Through its website, the Department facilitated coverage of the meetings of the Human Rights Council and press briefings at the United Nations Office at Geneva. DPI also provided webcast coverage for major UN conferences, including the World Urban Forum, organized by the United Nations Human Settlements Programme in Medellin, Colombia, in April; the sixth Global Forum of the United Nations Alliance of Civilizations in Bali, Indonesia, in August; and the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States in Samoa in September.

Between 1 March and the end of September, the Meetings Coverage Section produced 2,284 press releases (8,382 pages) in English and French. Between March and June, United Nations Photo covered close to 900 events at Headquarters, as well as the official travel of the Secretary-General. United Nations Photo had over 8.6 million accumulated views on Flickr, over 73,000 "likes" on Facebook, and more than 45,000 followers on Twitter. The new United Nations Instagram platform already had close to 58,000 followers. The Photo Library handled over 3,300 requests from Member States, the media, publishers and the general public.

Communication. In a 6 June letter addressed to the Secretary-General [A/68/935], Argentina, on behalf of the Group of Friends of Spanish at the United Nations, recognized the efforts made by DPI to strengthen multilingualism and promote linguistic parity among the six official UN languages. Annexed to the letter was the report compiled by DPI at the Group's request concerning statistics on the use of official languages on the UN websites and social networks.

Outreach and knowledge services

In collaboration with the Caribbean Community and the African Union, DPI organized a series of activities to mark the annual observance of the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade. The theme of the 2014 commemoration, "Victory over Slavery: Haiti and Beyond", paid tribute to the fight against slavery in nations around the world, marking 210 years since the establishment of Haiti as an independent State. Campaign products were available in the six official languages, as well as in Haitian Creole, Kiswahili and Portuguese.

On 28 April, the Holocaust and the United Nations Outreach Programme, in partnership with Israel and the World Jewish Congress, organized a panel discussion to examine ways to illustrate the universal lessons of the Holocaust through art. On 2 June, in partnership with the Department's model United Nations programme and the Office on Genocide Prevention and the Responsibility to Protect, the Programme expanded its outreach to youth by organizing the first model UN simulation on the Holocaust and genocide prevention at the Bronx High School of Science in New York.

The United Nations Academic Impact initiative hosted several outreach programmes, including "Classroom Conversations", in cooperation with the State University of New York, on 19 June; "Let's Skype It" on employment opportunities at the United Nations, with the European School of Management and Technology on 16 May; a "CFR@UNAI" talk on fracking, with the United States Council on Foreign Relations on 16 July. DPI published 174 titles and acquired publications in the six official languages in both print and digital formats. An Arabic version of Basic Facts about the United Nations 2014 was published in September through a financial contribution from the United Arab Emirates.

The Dag Hammarskjöld Library supported the Permanent Missions to the United Nations through training and customized information and research support. While most UN documents published since 1993 were available digitally, the Library, in partnership with the United Nations Library in Geneva, continued to digitize millions of documents that remained in paper form. It was also developing a digital repository to preserve UN knowledge and make it accessible in digital formats.

The Visitor's Services section arranged 372 briefings in English, Chinese, French, German, Japanese and Russian between March and September, reaching some 27,900 participants. The Public Inquiries Unit responded to 4,200 communications and distributed 200 educational kits.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 December [meeting 64], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/69/457], adopted resolutions 69/96 A and B without vote [agenda item 54].

Questions relating to information

INFORMATION IN THE SERVICE OF HUMANITY

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

Urges all countries, organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, deeply concerned by the disparities existing between developed and developing countries and the consequences of every kind arising from those disparities that affect the capability of the public, private or other media and individuals in developing countries to disseminate information and communicate their views and their cultural and ethical values through endogenous cultural production, as well as to ensure the diversity of sources and their free access to information, and recognizing the call in this context for what in the United Nations and at various international forums has been termed "a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process":

(a) To cooperate and interact with a view to reducing existing disparities in information flows at all levels by increasing assistance for the development of communications infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with due regard for their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by those countries, and in order to enable them and the public, private or other media in developing countries to develop their own information and communications policies freely and independently and increase the participation of media and individuals in the communication process, and to ensure a free flow of information at all levels;

(b) To ensure for journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and condemn resolutely all attacks against them;

(c) To provide support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from public, private and other media in developing countries;

(d) To enhance regional efforts and cooperation among developing countries, as well as cooperation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communications capacities and to improve the media infrastructure and communications technology in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information;

(e) To aim at, in addition to bilateral cooperation, providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and their media, public, private or other, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including:

(i) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communications systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;

(ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communications technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;

- (iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;
- (iv) The facilitation, as appropriate, of access by the developing countries to advanced communications technology available on the open market;
- (f) To provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media.

UNITED NATIONS PUBLIC INFORMATION POLICIES AND ACTIVITIES

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing that the Committee on Information is its main subsidiary body mandated to make recommendations to it relating to the work of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat,

Reaffirming its resolution 13 (I) of 13 February 1946, in which the General Assembly established the Department of Public Information, with a view to promoting to the greatest possible extent an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations among the peoples of the world, and all other relevant resolutions of the Assembly related to the activities of the Department,

Emphasizing that the contents of public information and communications should be placed at the heart of the strategic management of the United Nations and that a culture of communications and transparency should permeate all levels of the Organization as a means of fully informing the peoples of the world of the aims and activities of the United Nations, in accordance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, in order to create broad-based global support for the United Nations,

Stressing that the primary mission of the Department of Public Information is to provide, through its outreach activities, accurate, impartial, comprehensive, balanced, timely, relevant and multilingual information to the public on the tasks and responsibilities of the United Nations in order to strengthen international support for the activities of the Organization with the greatest transparency,

Recalling its resolution 68/86 B of 11 December 2013, which provided an opportunity to take due steps to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the Department of Public Information and to maximize the use of its resources,

Expressing its concern that the gap in information and communications technology between the developed and the developing countries has continued to widen and that vast segments of the population in developing countries are not benefiting from the information and communications technologies that are currently available, and in this regard underlining the necessity of rectifying the imbalances in the present development of information and communications technologies in order to make it more just, equitable and effective,

Recognizing that developments in information and communications technologies open vast new opportunities for economic growth and social development and can play an important role in the eradication of poverty in developing countries, and at the same time emphasizing that the development of these technologies poses challenges and risks and could lead to the further widening of disparities between and within countries,

Recalling its resolution 67/292 of 24 July 2013 on multilingualism, and emphasizing the importance of making appropriate use of all the official languages of the United Nations in all the activities of the Department of Public Information, including in coordination with other departments of the Secretariat, with the aim of eliminating the disparity between the use of English and the use of the five other official languages, as well as the importance of ensuring the full and equitable treatment of all the official languages of the United Nations in all the activities of the Department,

I

Introduction

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in respect of the public information policies and activities of the United Nations, to continue to implement fully the recommendations contained in relevant resolutions;

2. Reaffirms that the United Nations remains the indispensable foundation of a peaceful and just world and that its voice must be heard in a clear and effective manner, and emphasizes the essential role of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in this context;

3. Stresses the importance of the provision of clear, timely, accurate and comprehensive information by the Secretariat to Member States, upon their request, within the framework of existing mandates and procedures;

4. Also stresses that Member States should abstain from using information and communications technologies in contravention of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Reaffirms the central role of the Committee on Information in United Nations public information policies and activities, including the prioritization of those activities, and decides that recommendations relating to the programme of the Department of Public Information shall originate, to the extent possible, in the Committee and shall be considered by the Committee;

6. Requests the Department of Public Information, following the priorities set out by the General Assembly in its resolution 67/236 of 24 December 2012, and recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the 2005 World Summit Outcome, to pay particular attention to peace and security, development and human rights and to major issues such as the eradication of poverty, including the global food crisis, conflict prevention, sustainable development, the HIV/AIDS epidemic, combating terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, and the needs of the African continent;

7. Requests the Department of Public Information and its network of United Nations information centres to pay particular attention to progress in implementing the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda, including on the elaboration of sustainable development goals, and the outcomes of the major related United Nations summits and conferences in carrying out its activities, and calls upon the Department to play an active role in raising public awareness of the after-effects and ongoing adverse impacts of the world financial and economic crisis and its impact on development, including the achievement of the Millennium

Development Goals, financing for development, and the discussion of options for a facilitation mechanism that promotes the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies, and of the global challenge of climate change, in particular the actions taken in accordance with the objective, principles and provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, especially in the context of the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, particularly in the context of the Conference of the Parties and of the Meetings of the Parties to the Kyoto Protocol;

II

General activities of the Department of Public Information

8. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Department of Public Information;

9. Requests the Department of Public Information to maintain its commitment to a culture of evaluation, to continue to evaluate its products and activities with the objective of enhancing their effectiveness, and to continue to cooperate and coordinate with Member States and the Office of Internal Oversight Services of the Secretariat;

10. Reaffirms the importance of more effective coordination between the Department of Public Information and the Office of the Spokesperson for the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure consistency in the messages of the Organization;

11. Notes the efforts of the Department of Public Information to continue to publicize the work and decisions of the General Assembly, and requests the Department to continue to enhance its working relationship with the Office of the President of the General Assembly;

12. Encourages continued collaboration between the Department of Public Information and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the promotion of culture and in the fields of education and communication, bridging the existing gap between the developed and the developing countries;

13. Notes with appreciation the efforts of the Department of Public Information to work at the local level with other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to enhance the coordination of their communications activities, urges the Department to encourage the United Nations Communications Group to promote linguistic diversity in its work, and reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session on progress achieved in this regard;

14. Reaffirms that the Department of Public Information must prioritize its work programme, while respecting existing mandates and in line with regulation 5.6 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, to focus its message and better concentrate its efforts and to match its programmes with the needs of its target audiences, including the linguistic dimension, on the basis of improved feedback and evaluation mechanisms;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to exert all efforts to ensure that publications and other information services of the Secretariat, including the United Nations website and the United Nations News Service, contain comprehensive, balanced, objective and equitable information in all official languages about the issues before the Organization and that they maintain editorial independence, impartiality, accuracy and full consistency with resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly;

16. Underlines the critical need to address violations of the relevant international rules and regulations that govern the area of broadcasting, including television, radio and satellite broadcasting, in the most appropriate manner;

17. Reiterates its request to the Department of Public Information and content-providing offices of the Secretariat to ensure that United Nations publications are produced in all six official languages, as well as in an environmentally friendly and cost-neutral manner, and to continue to coordinate closely with all other entities, including all other departments of the Secretariat and funds and programmes of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, in order to avoid duplication in the issuance of United Nations publications;

18. Encourages, in this regard, the Department of Public Information and the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management of the Secretariat to consult on opportunities for merging their publishing activities and to develop new collaborative arrangements to enhance multilingualism in other outputs in a cost-neutral manner, bearing in mind the importance of ensuring the full and equitable treatment of all the official languages of the United Nations, and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session;

19. Emphasizes that the Department of Public Information should maintain and improve its activities in the areas of special interest to developing countries and, where appropriate, other countries with special needs, and that the activities of the Department should contribute to bridging the existing gap between the developing and the developed countries in the crucial field of public information and communications;

20. Reiterates its growing concern that the issuance of daily press releases has not been expanded to all official languages, as requested in previous resolutions and in full respect of the principle of parity of all six official languages, recalls the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Department of Public Information, and requests the Department, as a matter of priority, to design a strategy to deliver daily press releases in all six official languages through creative schemes, in a cost-neutral manner and in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions, at the latest by the thirty-seventh session of the Committee on Information, and to report thereon to the Committee at that session;

Multilingualism and public information

21. Underlines the responsibility of the Secretariat in mainstreaming multilingualism into all its communication and information activities, within existing resources on an equitable basis, calls upon the Department of Public Information to continue to work with the Coordinator for Multilingualism on best practices throughout the Secretariat to fulfil this responsibility, and requests the Secretary-General to report on such best practices and their implementation in his upcoming report to the Committee on Information;

22. Emphasizes the importance of making use of all the official languages of the United Nations, ensuring their full and equitable treatment in all the activities of all divisions and offices of the Department of Public Information with the aim of eliminating the disparity between the use of English and the use of the five other official languages, in this regard reaffirms its request that the Secretary-General ensure that the Department has the necessary capacity in all the official languages to undertake all of its activities, and requests that this aspect be included in future programme budget proposals for the Department, bearing in mind the principle of parity of all six official languages, while respecting the workload in each official language;

23. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the Department of Public Information to enhance multilingualism in all its activities, stresses the importance of ensuring that the texts of all new public United Nations documents in all six official languages, information materials and all older United Nations documents are made available through the United Nations websites and are accessible to Member States without delay, and further stresses the importance of fully implementing its resolution 67/292;

24. Encourages the Department of Public Information to continue to use other languages in addition to the official languages, when appropriate, according to the targeted audience, with a view to reaching the widest possible spectrum of audiences and extending the United Nations message to all corners of the world in order to strengthen international support for the activities of the Organization;

25. Notes the proposal by the Chair of the Committee on Information to establish a group of friends of the Chair on multilingualism;

Bridging the digital divide

26. Requests the Department of Public Information to contribute to raising the awareness of the international community of the importance of the implementation of the outcome documents of the World Summit on the Information Society and of the possibilities that the use of the Internet and other information and communications technologies can bring to societies and economies, as well as of ways to bridge the digital divide, including by commemorating World Telecommunication and Information Society Day on 17 May;

Network of United Nations information centres

27. Emphasizes the importance of the network of United Nations information centres in enhancing the public image of the United Nations, in disseminating messages on the United Nations to local populations, especially in developing countries, bearing in mind that information in local languages has the strongest impact on local populations, and in mobilizing support for the work of the United Nations at the local level;

28. Welcomes the work done by the network of United Nations information centres, including the United Nations Regional Information Centre, in favour of the publication of United Nations information materials and the translation of important documents into languages other than the official languages of the United Nations, encourages the network of information centres to continue their important multilingual activities in the interactive and proactive aspects of their work and to develop web pages in local languages, and the Department of Public Information to provide necessary resources and technical facilities, with a view to reaching the widest possible spectrum of audiences and extending the United Nations message to all corners of the world, in order to strengthen international support for the activities of the Organization, and encourages the continuation of efforts in this regard;

29. Stresses the importance of rationalizing the network of United Nations information centres, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to continue to make proposals in this direction, including through the redeployment of resources where necessary, and to report to the Committee on Information at its successive sessions;

30. Reaffirms that the rationalization of United Nations information centres must be carried out on a case-by-case basis in consultation with all concerned Member States in which existing information centres are located, the countries served by those information centres and other interested countries in the region, taking into consideration the distinctive characteristics of each region;

31. Recognizes that the network of United Nations information centres, especially in developing countries, should continue to enhance its impact and activities, including through strategic communications support, and calls upon the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of this approach to the Committee on Information at its successive sessions;

32. Requests the Department of Public Information, through the United Nations information centres, to strengthen its cooperation with all other United Nations entities at the country level and in the context of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, in order to enhance coherence in communications and to avoid duplication of work;

33. Stresses the importance of taking into account the special needs and requirements of developing countries in the field of information and communications technology for the effective flow of information in those countries;

34. Also stresses the importance of efforts to strengthen the outreach activities of the United Nations to those Member States remaining outside the network of United Nations information centres, and encourages the Secretary-General, within the context of rationalization, to extend the services of the network of information centres to those Member States;

35. Further stresses that the Department of Public Information should continue to review the allocation of both staff and financial resources to the United Nations information centres in developing countries, taking into account the specific needs of the least developed countries;

36. Welcomes the support of some Member States, including developing countries, in offering, inter alia, rent-free premises for the United Nations information centres because of lack of funding, bearing in mind that such support should not be a substitute for the full allocation of financial resources for the information centres in the context of the programme budget of the United Nations;

37. Notes the concern of many Member States regarding the measures taken by the Secretariat in relation to the information centres in Mexico City, Pretoria and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, expresses the hope that these measures will not have an adverse impact on the ability of the centres to act as bridges between the United Nations and local audiences, and therefore requests the Secretary-General to report on the impact of these measures and to explore ways to strengthen the United Nations information centres in Cairo, Mexico City, Pretoria and Rio de Janeiro, keeping in mind the need to do so within existing resources, and encourages the Secretary-General to explore the strengthening of other centres, especially in Africa, in cooperation with the Member States concerned and in a cost-neutral manner;

38. Recalls its resolution 64/243 of 24 December 2009, in which the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to establish a United Nations information centre in Luanda as a contribution towards addressing the needs of Portuguese-speaking African countries, reiterates its request to the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Government of Angola, to take the measures necessary for the prompt establishment of the information centre, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session on the progress made in this regard;

Strategic communications services

39. Reaffirms the role of the strategic communications services in devising and disseminating United Nations messages by developing communications strategies, with the overall emphasis on multilingualism from the planning stage, in close collaboration with the substantive departments, United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, in full compliance with their legislative mandates;

Promotional campaigns

40. Notes with appreciation the work of the Department of Public Information in promoting, through its campaigns, issues of importance to the international community, such as the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the progress made in implementing the internationally agreed development goals, and discussions on the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, United Nations reform, the eradication of poverty, conflict prevention, peacekeeping, peacebuilding, sustainable development, culture and development, culture and sustainable development, disarmament, decolonization, human rights, including the rights of women and children, persons with disabilities and migrant workers, strategic coordination in humanitarian relief, especially in natural disasters and other crises, HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis, non-communicable diseases and other diseases, the needs of the African continent, the nature of the critical economic and social situation in Africa and the priorities of the New Partnership for Africa's Development, the special needs of the least developed countries, the establishment of the permanent memorial to the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade, combating terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, dialogue among civilizations, the culture of peace and tolerance and the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster, as well as prevention of genocide, and requests the Department, in cooperation with the countries concerned and with the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to take appropriate measures to enhance world public awareness of all these issues;

41. Requests the Secretariat, especially the Department of Public Information, to contribute to the observance of International Mother Language Day on 21 February, as proclaimed by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade on 25 March, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 62/122 of 17 December 2007, Nelson Mandela International Day on 18 July, in accordance with Assembly resolution 64/13 of 10 November 2009, and the International Day of Nowruz on 21 March, in accordance with Assembly resolution 64/253 of 23 February 2010, and to play a role in raising awareness and promoting these events in a cost-neutral manner, where appropriate;

42. Requests the Department of Public Information and its network of United Nations information centres to raise awareness of all high-level meetings mandated by the General Assembly, to widely disseminate information on the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, held in Apia, from 1 to 4 September 2014, including the media coverage already provided for in Assembly resolution 68/238 of 27 December 2013, on the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries, held in Vienna from 3 to 5 November 2014, on the Third World Conference on Disaster Risk Reduction, to be held in Sendai, Japan, in March 2015 in accordance with Assembly resolution 67/209 of 21 December 2012, and on the 2015 Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to be held in New York in April and May 2015, and to continue to promote the processes in follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro from 20 to 22 June 2012, as well as the high-level meeting of the Assembly on the realization of the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals for persons with disabilities, held on 23 September 2013, and the high-level meeting of the Assembly on nuclear disarmament, held on 26 September 2013;

43. Notes the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Group of 77 and China, and acknowledges the support provided by the Department of Public Information in publicizing within existing resources the summit of Heads of State and Government of the Group of 77 on a new world order for living well, held in Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Plurinational State of Bolivia, on 14 and 15 June 2014;

44. Requests the Department of Public Information and its network of United Nations information centres to raise awareness of and disseminate information, in a cost-neutral manner, on the Third International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, declared by the General Assembly in its resolution 65/119 of 10 December 2010;

45. Notes that 2015 marks the seventieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and the end of the Second World War, further notes the work already undertaken by the Secretariat on planning activities in that regard, and requests the Department of Public Information to raise awareness of and disseminate information on this anniversary and to ensure that multilingualism is mainstreamed into those activities, in a cost-neutral manner;

46. Recalls its resolution 68/237 of 23 December 2013 on the International Decade for People of African Descent, and requests the Department of Public Information and its network of United Nations information centres to raise awareness of and disseminate information on the International Decade, in accordance with the programme for the implementation of the International Decade adopted by the General Assembly, in a cost-neutral manner;

47. Encourages the Department of Public Information to develop partnerships with the private sector in a cost-neutral manner and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session, and in this regard notes the partnership with airlines that provide to their customers in-flight programmes featuring United Nations activities;

Role of the Department of Public Information in United Nations peacekeeping operations and peacebuilding

48. Requests the Secretariat to continue to ensure the active involvement of the Department of Public Information from the planning stage and in all stages of future peacekeeping operations through interdepartmental consultations and coordination with other departments of the Secretariat, in particular with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support;

49. Requests the Department of Public Information, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support to continue their cooperation in raising awareness of the new realities, far-reaching successes and challenges faced by peacekeeping operations, especially multidimensional and complex ones, and the recent surge in United Nations peacekeeping activities, and continues to call upon the three Departments to develop and implement a comprehensive communications strategy on current challenges facing United Nations peacekeeping;

50. Stresses the importance of enhancing the public information capacity of the Department of Public Information in the field of peacekeeping operations and its role, in close cooperation with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support, in the process of selecting public information staff for United Nations peacekeeping operations or missions, and in this regard invites the Department of Public Information to second public information staff who have the skills necessary to fulfil the tasks of the operations or missions, taking into account the principle of equitable geographical distribution in accordance with Chapter XV, Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter, and to consider views expressed, especially by host countries, when appropriate, in this regard;

51. Emphasizes the importance of the peacekeeping gateway on the United Nations website, and requests the Department of Public Information to continue its efforts in supporting the peacekeeping missions to further develop and maintain their websites;

52. Requests the Department of Public Information and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to continue to cooperate in implementing an effective outreach programme to explain the zero-tolerance policy of the Organization regarding sexual exploitation and abuse and to inform the public of the outcome of all such cases involving peacekeeping personnel, including cases where allegations are ultimately found to be legally unproven, and also to inform the public of the adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations Comprehensive Strategy on Assistance and Support to Victims of Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Staff and Related Personnel;

53. Notes the importance of communication and information activities relating to peacebuilding efforts, in particular those of the Peacebuilding Commission, the Peacebuilding Support Office of the Secretariat and the Peacebuilding Fund, and requests the Department of Public Information to cooperate with these entities in that regard, with a view to widening outreach of their important work;

Role of the Department of Public Information in strengthening dialogue among civilizations and the culture of peace as means of enhancing understanding among nations

54. Recalls its resolutions on dialogue among civilizations and the culture of peace, and requests the Department of Public Information, while ensuring the pertinence and relevance of subjects for promotional campaigns on this issue, to continue to provide the support necessary for the dissemination of information pertaining to dialogue among civilizations and the culture of peace, as well as the initiative on the Alliance of Civilizations, and to take due steps in fostering the culture of dialogue among civilizations, promoting a world against violence and violent extremism in accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/127 of 18 December 2013, and promoting cultural understanding, tolerance, respect for and freedom of religion or belief and effective enjoyment by all of all human rights and civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development;

55. Invites the United Nations system, especially the Department of Public Information, to continue to encourage and facilitate dialogue among civilizations and to formulate ways and means to promote dialogue among civilizations in the activities of the United Nations in various fields, taking into account the Programme of Action of the Global Agenda for Dialogue among Civilizations, and in this regard reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to present to the General Assembly at its seventieth session the report requested by the Assembly in its resolution 60/4 of 20 October 2005;

56. Recalls its resolution 64/14 of 10 November 2009, in which it acknowledged the achievements of the Alliance of Civilizations and the efforts of the High Representative of the Secretary-General for the Alliance of Civilizations, and welcomes the discussion, at the sixth Alliance of Civilizations Forum, held in Nusa Dua, Bali, Indonesia, on 29 and 30 August 2014, on strategic and practical measures that generate and sustain common values and a shared sense of responsibility among all stakeholders, and the continuing support of the Department of Public Information for the work of the Alliance of Civilizations, including its ongoing projects;

IV
News services

57. Stresses that the central objective of the news services implemented by the Department of Public Information is the timely delivery of accurate, objective and balanced news and information emanating from the United Nations system in all four mass media, namely, print, radio, television and the Internet, to the media and other audiences worldwide, with the overall emphasis on multilingualism from the planning stage, and reiterates its request to the Department to ensure that all breaking news stories and news alerts are accurate, impartial and free of bias;

58. Recognizes the important role of television and video services provided by the Department of Public Information, and notes the recent efforts in making available online broadcast-quality video that can be streamed or downloaded by smaller broadcast outlets that do not have access to satellite feeds;

Traditional means of communication

59. Welcomes the sustained efforts of United Nations Radio, which remains one of the most effective and far-reaching traditional media available to the Department of Public Information and an important instrument in United Nations activities, to enhance the timeliness, presentation and thematic focus of its multilingual programmes on United Nations activities and to ensure the widest possible dissemination of its programming to media outlets using the most suitable platforms and formats, pre-recorded or live, requests the Secretary-General to continue to make every effort to achieve parity in the six official languages in United Nations Radio productions, reiterates the important role of the 15-minute daily programmes created pursuant to General Assembly resolution 54/82 B of 6 December 1999, and requests the Department to continue the production and dissemination of the programmes, in accordance with client needs;

60. Also welcomes the ongoing efforts being made by the Department of Public Information to disseminate programmes directly to broadcasting stations all over the world in the six official languages, with the addition of Portuguese and Kiswahili, as well as in other languages where possible, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to include in his upcoming report to the Committee on Information detailed information about such partnerships with broadcasting stations as well as statistics about their multiplying impacts on potential audiences;

61. Requests the Department of Public Information to continue to build partnerships with local, national and regional broadcasters to extend the United Nations message to all corners of the world in an accurate and impartial way, and requests the News and Media Division of the Department to continue to take full advantage of the technological infrastructure made available in recent years;

62. Welcomes the completion of an inventory of 67 years of United Nations audiovisual history, and, recognizing the importance of the audiovisual archives of the United Nations, stresses the urgency of digitization in order to prevent further deterioration of these unique historical archives, and encourages the Department of Public Information to prioritize the development of collaborative arrangements for the digitization of these archives while preserving their multilingual character in a cost-neutral manner and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session;

63. Notes the efforts made by the Department of Public Information and other stakeholders to plan, procure, implement, test and deploy a media assets management system solution for file-based production and for the management of the United Nations multimedia digital archives, calls upon the Department to continue to explore alternative and feasible solutions for the digitization, preservation, quality assurance and technical processing of the audiovisual archive materials based on international standards and best practices, including in the context of the construction work of the capital master plan within the overall budget for the plan, and encourages the Department to seek the support of public and private institutions for its work in digitizing, storing and managing these multilingual archives and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session;

64. Notes, in this regard, the proposed strategy for the digitization of the United Nations audiovisual archive materials for long-term preservation, access and sustainable management, and requests the Department of Public Information to submit for consideration by the relevant bodies both a detailed proposal for the mass digitization of the audiovisual collections, within existing resources, and plans to solicit voluntary contributions to fund the digitization and storage of the audiovisual archives;

United Nations website

65. Reaffirms that the United Nations website is an essential tool for the media, non-governmental organizations, educational institutions, Member States and the general public, and in this regard reiterates the continued need for strengthened efforts by the Department of Public Information to maintain and improve it;

66. Welcomes the opening of the Accessibility Centre at United Nations Headquarters, recognizes the efforts made by the Secretariat to implement the basic accessibility requirements for persons with disabilities to gain access to and take part in the work of the United Nations in person or online, calls upon the Department of Public Information to continue to work towards compliance with accessibility requirements on all new and updated pages of the website, with the aim of ensuring its accessibility for persons with different kinds of disabilities, and in this regard encourages the Department of Public Information and the Department for General Assembly and Conference Management to further cooperate and identify potential synergies;

67. Reaffirms the need to achieve full parity among the six official languages on all United Nations websites, and urges the Secretary-General to strengthen his efforts to develop, maintain and update multilingual United Nations websites and the web page of the Secretary-General in all the official languages of the United Nations, from within existing resources and on an equitable basis;

68. Notes with concern that the multilingual development and enrichment of the United Nations website in certain official languages has improved at a much slower rate than expected, and in this regard urges the Department of Public Information, in coordination with content-providing offices, to advance actions taken to achieve full parity among the six official languages on the United Nations website;

69. Recalls paragraph 22 of its resolution 67/292 on multilingualism, and in this regard calls upon all stakeholders, including the Department of Public Information, content-providing offices and departments and the Office of Information and Communications Technology of the Secretariat, to enhance their collaboration so as to achieve full parity among the six official languages on all United Nations websites developed and maintained by the Secretariat, by making every effort to translate materials currently available only in English and by providing offices and departments with technological solutions that comply with the principle of parity, from within existing resources;

70. Reaffirms its request to the Secretary-General to ensure, while maintaining an up-to-date and accurate website, the equitable distribution of financial and human resources within the Department of Public Information allocated to the United Nations website among all official languages, with full respect for the needs and the specificities of all six official languages;

71. Welcomes the cooperative arrangements undertaken by the Department of Public Information with academic institutions to increase the number of web pages available in official and non-official languages, and requests the Secretary-General, in coordination with content-providing offices, to extend such cooperative arrangements, in a cost-effective manner, to all the official languages of the United Nations, bearing in mind the necessity of adherence to United Nations standards and guidelines;

72. Also welcomes the fact that live webcasts of open, formal meetings of the General Assembly and of the Security Council with interpretation services have been provided as from the sixty-eighth session of the Assembly, and requests the Secretariat to make every effort to provide full access to archived videos in all official languages of all past open formal United Nations meetings with interpretation services in strict observance of the principle of full parity of the six official languages of the United Nations;

73. Acknowledges the importance of the Yearbook of the United Nations as an authoritative reference work, welcomes the work of the Department of Public Information in expanding the content and the functions of the website of the Yearbook, and requests the Department to assess the readership of the Yearbook in order to evaluate its impact and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session;

74. Reaffirms the need to enhance the technological infrastructure of the Department of Public Information on a continuous basis in order to widen the outreach of the Department and to continue to improve the United Nations website in a cost-neutral manner;

75. Recognizes that some official languages use non-Latin and bidirectional scripts and that technological infrastructures and supportive applications in the United Nations are based on Latin script, which leads to difficulties in processing non-Latin and bidirectional scripts, and urges the Office of Information and Communications Technology to further collaborate with the Department of Public Information to continue its efforts to ensure that technological infrastructures and supportive applications in the United Nations fully support Latin, non-Latin and bidirectional scripts in order to enhance the equality of all official languages on the United Nations website;

76. Underlines the importance, in the implementation of new communication tools such as social networks, of taking into account the linguistic dimension in order to ensure full parity among the official languages of the Organization;

77. Recalls that, in its resolution 67/292, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to include in his upcoming report on multilingualism a comprehensive review of the United Nations websites, presenting the status of content in non-official languages, as well as identifying innovative ideas, potential synergies and other cost-neutral measures to reinforce the broader multilingual development and enrichment of the United Nations websites, as appropriate;

78. Notes the uneven development of social media among the official languages of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session on the strategy of the Department of Public Information to ensure, by a more balanced use of all six official languages, that social media contribute to raising awareness of and support for the activities of the Organization;

V Library services

79. Welcomes the efforts of the Department of Public Information to implement the recommendations of its 2011 working group on library improvement;

80. Commends the steps taken by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library and the other member libraries of the Steering Committee for the Modernization and Integrated Management of United Nations Libraries to align their activities, services and outputs more closely with the goals, objectives and operational priorities of the Organization, and calls upon the Dag Hammarskjöld Library to work with the other member libraries to devise a new statement of strategy for library services and to replace the former Steering Committee with the Steering Committee for Libraries of the United Nations focused on practical cooperation among the library services;

81. Reiterates the need to maintain a multilingual collection of books, periodicals and other materials in both hard copy and electronic formats, accessible to Member States and others, as specified in paragraph 83 of the present resolution, ensuring that the Dag Hammarskjöld Library continues to be a broadly accessible resource for information about the United Nations and its activities, including through a multilingual home page, from within existing resources;

82. Welcomes the initiatives taken by the Dag Hammarskjöld Library, in its capacity as the focal point, to expand the scope of the regional training and knowledge-sharing workshops organized for the depository libraries in developing countries to include outreach in their activities;

83. Acknowledges the role of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library in enhancing knowledge-sharing and networking activities to ensure access to the vast store of United Nations knowledge for delegates, permanent missions of Member States, the Secretariat, researchers and depository libraries worldwide;

84. Notes the efforts of the iSeek team, through the intranet, to raise awareness among staff members of new initiatives and developments in different departments of the Secretariat, and reiterates its request to the Department of Public Information to work out, as a matter of priority, a strategy for Member States to also benefit from these new developments;

VI Outreach services

85. Stresses that the central objective of the outreach and knowledge services implemented by the Department of Public Information is to promote awareness of the role and work of the United Nations by fostering dialogue with global constituencies, such as academia, civil society, educators, students and youth, with the overall emphasis on multilingualism from the planning stage, in close collaboration with the substantive departments, specialized agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations;

86. Notes with serious concern that many outreach and knowledge services are not yet available in all official languages, and in this regard urges the Department of Public Information, as a matter of priority, to mainstream multilingualism into all outreach and knowledge services, bearing in mind the importance of making use of all the official languages of the United Nations and ensuring their full and equitable treatment in all the activities of the Department, with the aim of eliminating the disparity between the use of English and the use of the five other official languages;

87. Encourages the United Nations Academic Impact to take effective steps to facilitate exchanges between the United Nations and institutions of higher education in all regions to support the common principles and goals of the United Nations, while recognizing the role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its constitution;

88. Notes the continued growth of the United Nations Academic Impact, calls upon the Department of Public Information to promote global awareness of the Academic Impact in order to encourage balanced participation among Member States and their continued support for the initiative, within existing resources, and encourages Member States to promote the initiative among their academic institutions with a view to their joining it, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/234 of 20 December 2013;

89. Welcomes the educational outreach activities of the Department of Public Information, through the Global Teaching and Learning Project, and requests the Department to continue to reach educators and young people worldwide through a range of multilingual multimedia platforms;

90. Notes the importance of the continued implementation by the Department of Public Information of the ongoing Reham Al-Farra Memorial Journalists' Fellowship Programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries and countries with economies in transition, as mandated by the General Assembly, and requests the Department to consider how best to maximize the benefits derived from the Programme by extending, inter alia, its duration and the number of its participants;

91. Encourages the Department of Public Information to make the UN Chronicle available in paperless editions only, with a view to expanding the service to all six official languages within existing resources, and requests the Department to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session on progress in this matter;

92. Welcomes the movement towards educational outreach and the orientation of the UN Chronicle, and to this end encourages the UN Chronicle to continue to develop partnerships and collaborative educational activities and events with civil society organizations and institutions of higher learning;

93. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure that, in view of their income-generating nature, guided tours at United Nations Headquarters are consistently available in all six official languages of the United Nations;

94. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General to also offer guided tours at United Nations Headquarters in non-official languages;

95. Notes the ongoing efforts of the Department of Public Information to strengthen its role as a focal point for two-way interaction with civil society relating to the priorities and concerns of the Organization identified by Member States, and also notes in this regard the increasing involvement of civil society in United Nations activities, including the outreach activities directed at youth representatives and young journalists;

96. Recalls its resolution 41/68 D of 3 December 1986, commends the World Federation of United Nations Associations and its more than 100 national United Nations associations for the valuable contributions they have made during the past 68 years through their global activities in the mobilization of popular support for the United Nations, and calls for continued collaboration between the World Federation and the Department of Public Information in support of their complementary objectives;

97. Commends, in a spirit of cooperation, the United Nations Correspondents Association for its ongoing activities and for its Dag Hammarskjöld Memorial Scholarship Fund, which sponsors journalists from developing countries to come to United Nations Headquarters and report on the activities during the sessions of the General Assembly, and further encourages the international community to continue its financial support for the Fund;

98. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts and contribution of United Nations Messengers of Peace, Goodwill Ambassadors and other advocates to promote the work of the United Nations and to enhance international public awareness of its priorities and concerns, and calls upon the Department of Public Information to continue to involve them in its global communications and media strategies and outreach activities;

99. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirty-seventh session and to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the implementation of all recommendations and requests contained in the present resolution;

100. Also requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to ensure that the level of services provided by the Department of Public Information is maintained throughout the period of the implementation of the capital master plan;

101. Notes the initiative taken by the Department of Public Information, in cooperation with the Department of Safety and Security and the Protocol and Liaison Service of the Secretariat, during the annual general debate of the General Assembly, to issue special identification stickers to press officers of Member States to enable them to escort media covering the visits of high-level officials to restricted areas, and strongly urges the Secretary-General to continue to improve this practice by acceding to the request by Member States to provide the needed number of additional passes to press officers of Member States to allow their access to all areas that are deemed restricted, in order to effectively and comprehensively report on high-level meetings that include officials of delegations of Member States;

102. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

103. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

PART TWO

Human rights

Promotion of human rights

In 2014, the United Nations continued efforts to promote human rights worldwide. The Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which allowed individual children to submit complaints regarding specific violations of their rights under the Convention and its first two protocols, entered into force on 14 April, and in November, the General Assembly convened a high-level meeting on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Convention. In other activities, an initiative of the Secretary-General, Human Rights Up Front, aimed at strengthening prevention of serious violations, was beginning to identify potential problems earlier.

The Human Rights Council examined the human rights record of 42 Member States through the universal periodic review mechanism, designed to assess the human rights record of all States every four years. During the year, the Council held three regular sessions (twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh). The Human Rights Council Advisory Committee, which provided expertise to the Council, held its twelfth and thirteenth sessions and made 13 recommendations, while the Council's complaint procedure, which consisted of the Working Group on Communications and the Working Group on Situations, addressed consistent patterns of gross and reliably attested human rights violations around the world.

In June, the General Assembly approved the Secretary-General's appointment of Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein (Jordan) as United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and he began his four-year term on 1 September. The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights continued to provide support to the work of the Council and its mechanisms, including the treaty bodies and special procedures, while strengthening its country engagement and expanding its presence at the country and regional levels. A notable trend was the continued and growing demand for the Office to deliver on multiple fronts.

During the year, the Council adopted the plan of action for the third phase of the World Programme for Human Rights Education (2015–2019). The General Assembly adopted the programme of activities for the International Decade for People of African Descent (2015–2024) and proclaimed 13 June as "International Albinism Awareness Day".

Human Rights Council

Council sessions

During the year the Human Rights Council held its twenty-fifth (3–28 March) [A/HRC/25/2], twenty-sixth (10–27 June) [A/HRC/26/2] and twenty-seventh (8–26 September) [A/HRC/27/2] regular sessions. The Council also held three special sessions: its twentieth (20 January) [A/HRC/S-20/2], on the situation of human rights in the Central African Republic and technical assistance in the field of human rights (see p. 893); twenty-first (23 July) [A/HRC/S-21/2], on ensuring respect for international law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem (see p. 929); and twenty-second (1 September) [A/HRC/S-22/4], on the human rights situation in Iraq in the light of abuses committed by the so-called Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant and associated groups (see p. 915). All sessions were held in Geneva.

The Council adopted 105 resolutions, 47 decisions and six President's statements, and brought to the attention of the General Assembly six resolutions for its consideration and possible action. The resolutions, decisions and statements adopted during the Council's 2014 sessions were contained in its reports to the Assembly [A/69/53 & Add.1 & Corr.1, 2].

On 15 September (decision 68/668), the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of Human Rights Council resolution 24/24 [YUN 2013, p. 591] until its sixty-ninth (2014) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/69/483], adopted resolution 69/155 by recorded vote (125-2-56) [agenda item 63].

Report of the Human Rights Council

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 60/251 of 15 March 2006, by which it established the Human Rights Council, and 65/281 of 17 June 2011 on the review of the Council,

Recalling also its resolutions 62/219 of 22 December 2007, 63/160 of 18 December 2008, 64/143 of 18 December 2009, 65/195 of 21 December 2010, 66/136 of 19 December 2011, 67/151 of 20 December 2012 and 68/144 of 18 December 2013,

Having considered the recommendations contained in the report of the Human Rights Council, Takes note of the report of the Human Rights Council, including the addendum thereto, and its recommendations.

Election of Council members

On 21 October, by decision 69/403, the General Assembly, pursuant to resolutions 60/251 [YUN 2006, p. 757] and 65/281 [YUN 2011, p. 607], elected the following 15 countries as members of the Human Rights Council for a three-year term of office beginning 1 January 2015: Albania, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Botswana, the Congo, El Salvador, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Latvia, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Paraguay, Portugal and Qatar. They would fill the vacancies occurring on the expiration of the terms of office of Austria, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Chile, the Congo, Costa Rica, the Czech Republic, India, Indonesia, Italy, Kuwait, Peru, the Philippines and Romania. The Council comprised 47 members.

Universal Periodic Review

The Human Rights Council established the universal periodic review (UPR) [YUN 2007, p. 663] as an instrument for assessing every four years the human rights records of all Member States. Each review, conducted by the UPR Working Group, was facilitated by groups of three States, or "troikas", acting as rapporteurs.

Working Group sessions. The UPR Working Group, made up of the 47 Council members, held its eighteenth (27 January–7 February) [A/HRC/26/2], nineteenth (28 April–9 May) [A/HRC/27/2] and twentieth (27 October–7 November) [A/HRC/28/2] sessions in Geneva. It reviewed 42 countries in the order of consideration determined by the Council in 2007 [YUN 2007, p. 663]. As provided for in Council resolution 5/1 [ibid.], the review was based on a national report prepared by the State under review; a compilation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) of information about the human rights situation in the State concerned, as reported by treaty bodies and special procedures; and a summary by OHCHR of credible information from other stakeholders, including non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

At its eighteenth session, the Working Group considered and adopted reports on New Zealand [A/HRC/26/3], Afghanistan [A/HRC/26/4], Chile [A/HRC/26/5], Viet Nam [A/HRC/26/6], Uruguay [A/HRC/26/7], Yemen [A/HRC/26/8], Vanuatu [A/HRC/26/9], Macedonia [A/HRC/26/10], the Comoros [A/HRC/26/11], Slovakia [A/HRC/26/12], Eritrea [A/HRC/26/13], Cyprus [A/HRC/26/14], the Dominican Republic [A/HRC/26/15 & Corr.1] and Cambodia [A/HRC/26/16]. The reports summarized the presentation by the State under review; the interactive dialogue in the Working Group between State and Council; the response by the State; and the conclusions on, and/or recommendations to, the State under review. The outcome of the review comprised the report of the Working Group and the views of the State under review about the recommendations and/or conclusions, as well as its voluntary commitments and its replies to questions or issues that were not sufficiently addressed during the interactive dialogue.

Responses were submitted by New Zealand [A/HRC/26/3/Add.1], Afghanistan [A/HRC/26/4/Add.1], Chile [A/HRC/26/5/Add.1], Viet Nam [A/HRC/26/6/Add.1], Uruguay [A/HRC/26/7/Add.1], Vanuatu [A/HRC/26/9/Add.1], Macedonia [A/HRC/26/10/Add.1], the Comoros [A/HRC/26/11/Add.1], Slovakia [A/HRC/26/12/Add.1], Eritrea [A/HRC/26/13/Add.1], Cyprus [A/HRC/26/14/Add.1], the Dominican Republic [A/HRC/26/15/Add.1] and Cambodia [A/HRC/26/16/Add.1].

At its nineteenth session, the Working Group considered and adopted reports on Norway [A/HRC/27/3], Albania [A/HRC/27/4], the Democratic Republic of the Congo [A/HRC/27/5], Côte d'Ivoire [A/HRC/27/6], Portugal [A/HRC/27/7], Bhutan [A/HRC/27/8], Dominica [A/HRC/27/9], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

[A/HRC/27/10], Brunei Darussalam [A/HRC/27/11], Costa Rica [A/HRC/27/12], Equatorial Guinea [A/HRC/27/13], Ethiopia [A/HRC/27/14], Qatar [A/HRC/27/15] and Nicaragua [A/HRC/27/16].

Responses were submitted by Norway [A/HRC/27/3/Add.1], Albania [A/HRC/27/4/Add.1], Côte d'Ivoire [A/HRC/27/6/Add.1], Portugal [A/HRC/27/7/Add.1], Bhutan [A/HRC/27/8/Add.1], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea [A/HRC/27/10/Add.1], Brunei Darussalam [A/HRC/27/11/Add.1], Costa Rica [A/HRC/27/12/Add.1], Equatorial Guinea [A/HRC/27/13/Add.1], Ethiopia [A/HRC/27/14/Add.1], Qatar [A/HRC/27/15/Add.1] and Nicaragua [A/HRC/27/16/Add.1].

At its twentieth session, the Working Group considered and adopted reports on Italy [A/HRC/28/4], El Salvador [A/HRC/28/5], the Gambia [A/HRC/28/6], Bolivia [A/HRC/28/7], Fiji [A/HRC/28/8], San Marino [A/HRC/28/9], Kazakhstan [A/HRC/28/10], Angola [A/HRC/28/11], Iran [A/HRC/28/12], Madagascar [A/HRC/28/13], Iraq [A/HRC/28/14], Slovenia [A/HRC/28/15], Egypt [A/HRC/28/16] and Bosnia and Herzegovina [A/HRC/28/17].

Responses were submitted by Italy [A/HRC/28/4/Add.1], El Salvador [A/HRC/28/5/Add.1], the Gambia [A/HRC/28/6/Add.1], Bolivia [A/HRC/28/7/Add.1], Fiji [A/HRC/28/8/Add.1], San Marino [A/HRC/28/9/Add.1], Kazakhstan [A/HRC/28/10/Add.1], Angola [A/HRC/28/11/Add.1], Iran [A/HRC/28/12/Add.1], Madagascar [A/HRC/28/13/Add.1], Iraq [A/HRC/28/14/Add.1], Slovenia [A/HRC/28/15/Add.1], Egypt [A/HRC/28/16/Add.1] and Bosnia and Herzegovina [A/HRC/28/17/Add.1].

Human Rights Council action. At its twenty-fifth session [A/HRC/25/2], the Council considered the outcome of the reviews conducted during the seventeenth session of the Working Group [YUN 2013, p. 593]. The Council adopted, through standardized decisions, the outcomes of the reviews on Saudi Arabia [dec. 25/101], Senegal [dec. 25/102], Nigeria [dec. 25/103], Mexico [dec. 25/104], Mauritius [dec. 25/105], Jordan [dec. 25/106], Malaysia [dec. 25/107], the Central African Republic [dec. 25/108], Belize [dec. 25/109], Chad [dec. 25/110], China [dec. 25/111], Monaco [dec. 25/112], the Congo [dec. 25/113], Malta [dec. 25/114] and Israel [dec. 25/115].

At its twenty-sixth session [A/HRC/26/2], the Council considered the outcome of the reviews conducted during the eighteenth session of the Working Group. The Council adopted the outcomes of the reviews on New Zealand [dec. 26/101], Afghanistan [dec. 26/102], Chile [dec. 26/103], Uruguay [dec. 26/104], Yemen [dec. 26/105], Vanuatu [dec. 26/106], Macedonia [dec. 26/107], Comoros [dec. 26/108], Slovakia [dec. 26/109], Eritrea [dec. 26/110], Cyprus [dec. 26/111], the Dominican Republic [dec. 26/112], Viet Nam [dec. 26/113] and Cambodia [dec. 26/114].

At its twenty-seventh session [A/HRC/27/2], the Council considered the outcome of the reviews conducted during the nineteenth session of the Working Group. The Council adopted the outcomes of the reviews on Norway [dec. 27/101], Albania [dec. 27/102], the Democratic Republic of the Congo [dec. 27/103], Côte d'Ivoire [dec. 27/104], Portugal [dec. 27/105], Bhutan [dec. 27/106], Dominica [dec. 27/107], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea [dec. 27/108], Brunei Darussalam [dec. 27/109], Costa Rica [dec. 27/110], Equatorial Guinea [dec. 27/111], Ethiopia [dec. 27/112], Qatar [dec. 27/113] and Nicaragua [dec. 27/114].

Reports of High Commissioner. In her annual report [A/69/36], the High Commissioner for Human Rights, Navanethem Pillay (South Africa), noted that the second cycle of the UPR continued with a 100 per cent rate of participation during 2013 and 2014 with an average of 120 recommendations issued per country. As at July 2014, more than 20,000 recommendations had been indexed.

In a December report [A/HRC/28/3], the newly appointed High Commissioner, Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein (Jordan) (see p. 753), noted that the UPR had reached the middle of its second cycle in November, and all 112 States scheduled for consideration had participated, most at a high level. The review focused on progress made since the first cycle. The challenge was to follow up on the growing number of recommendations and keeping the overall objective of bringing about impact on the ground.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/29)], the Council encouraged States to promote the involvement of parliaments in all stages of the UPR reporting process; welcomed the growing practice by States under review of including parliamentarians in their national delegations to the UPR and encouraged States to continue that practice; and invited the High Commissioner to provide the Council with regular updates on the activities of the Inter-Parliamentary Union on parliamentary capacity-building, as well as on its activities with regard to the work of the Council and its UPR.

OHCHR reports. In April [A/HRC/26/54], OHCHR, in accordance with Council decision 17/119 [YUN 2011, p. 613], provided an update on the operations of the Voluntary Fund for financial and technical assistance in the implementation of the UPR [YUN 2007, p. 663], established to be administered jointly with the Voluntary Fund for Participation in the UPR [ibid.] (see below) to provide assistance to help countries implement recommendations emanating from the UPR. The report reviewed contributions and expenditures as at 31 December 2013, provided a description of action taken since the previous report [YUN 2013, p. 594] to operationalize the Fund and described activities to be funded during 2014. In 2012 and 2013, the Fund received voluntary contributions from four countries totalling $1,722,332, while expenditures amounted to $1,169,271. The balance of the fund as at 31 December 2013 was $1,813,869.

In March [A/HRC/25/36], in accordance with Council resolution 16/22 [YUN 2011, p. 638], OHCHR provided an update on the operations of the Voluntary Fund for Participation in the UPR and on resources available to it as at 31 December 2013. In 2013, the Fund received voluntary contributions from five countries totalling $338,993, while expenditures amounted to $209,733. The balance of the fund as at 31 December 2013 stood at $2,166,128.

Human Rights Council Advisory Committee

The Human Rights Council Advisory Committee, a think-tank for the Council composed of 18 experts serving in their personal capacity, held its twelfth (24–28 February [A/HRC/AC/12/2] and thirteenth (11–15 August) [A/HRC/AC/13/2 & Corr.1] sessions in Geneva. At its twelfth session, the Committee requested an extension of time to submit a progress and final report on best practices and main challenges in the promotion and protection of human rights in post-disaster and post-conflict situations, respectively, to the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) and twenty-eighth (2015) sessions [rec. 12/1]; and to submit an interim and final report on the negative impact of corruption on the enjoyment of human rights to the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) and twenty-eighth (2015) sessions [rec. 12/3]. The Committee also requested its relevant drafting group to submit the progress report on the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights to the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session [rec. 12/2], and to submit to the Committee's thirteenth (2014) session draft progress reports on: promoting human rights through sport and the Olympic ideal [rec. 12/4]; the role of local government in the promotion and protection of human rights [rec. 12/5] (see below); the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights [rec. 12/6]; and the situation of human rights of persons living with albinism [rec. 12/7]. Follow-up to reports of the Committee submitted to the Council dealt with the right to food, and promotion of the right of peoples to peace.

At its thirteenth session, the Committee requested its relevant drafting group to finalize and submit to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session, the reports on best practices and main challenges in the promotion and protection of human rights in post-disaster and post-conflict situations [rec. 13/1]; the negative impact of corruption on the enjoyment of human rights [rec. 13/2]; the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights [rec. 13/5]; and the situation of human rights of persons living with albinism [rec. 13/6]. It also recommended that the Council request the Committee to submit final reports on promoting human rights through sport and the Olympic ideal [rec. 13/3] and on the role of local government in the promotion and protection of human rights [rec. 13/4] to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session. The Committee submitted research proposals on: the impact of settler colonialism on human rights; whistle-blowing and human rights; the activities of vulture funds and human rights; preserving international watercourses to protect the right to life and food; and unaccompanied child migration and human rights [rec. 13/7]. It resubmitted research proposals on: the possibility of establishing a universal human rights court; citizens' security and human rights; and youth and human rights. The Committee also adopted decisions on its methods of work [rec. 13/8]. Follow-up reports of the Committee submitted to the Council dealt with the right to food and the promotion of the right of peoples to peace.

In September, the Advisory Committee submitted a progress report [A/HRC/27/59] on the role of local government in the promotion and protection of human rights, which contained a preliminary analysis of the issues relating to the topic.

Secretariat note. By a 25 June note [A/HRC/27/62], the secretariat advised that the annual report of the Advisory Committee, consisting of the reports of the Committee on its twelfth and thirteenth (2014) sessions, would be considered at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session and would be the subject of an interactive dialogue with the Committee Chairperson.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/4)], the Council requested the Committee to continue its research and to submit at the Council's thirtieth (2015) session a final report on the role of local government in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the main challenges faced by local governments in that context, and to make recommendations on tackling those challenges based on best practices in human rights mainstreaming in local administration and public services.

By a President's statement of 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (PRST/27/2)], the Council took note of the reports of the Advisory Committee on its twelfth and thirteenth (2014) sessions and noted that the Committee had made certain research proposals.

Complaint procedure

The complaint procedure of the Human Rights Council comprised of the Working Group on Communications, which examined communications of alleged violations and assessed their merits, and the Working Group on Situations, which, on the recommendation of the Working Group on Communications, reported to the Council on consistent patterns of gross violations and recommended a course of action.

Working Group on Communications. The five-member Working Group on Communications held its fourteenth (28 April–2 May) [A/HRC/WG.5/14/R.2], and fifteenth (18–22 August) [A/HRC/WG.5/15/R.2] sessions in Geneva.

At its fourteenth session, the Working Group on Communications considered 10 communications relating to eight States, including seven new communications regarding seven countries. In addition to the new communications, the Working Group also had before it three communications that had been kept pending at its thirteenth session [YUN 2013, p. 595]. The Working Group received Government replies in relation to all 10 communications. Additional information was received from two complainants and a national human rights institution in relation to three communications.

The Working Group adopted 10 decisions. Decisions were taken on all seven new files, as well as on three files kept under review. The Working Group decided to transmit two files relating to two countries to the Working Group on Situations (Kazakhstan, Mexico), and to keep under review until its next session seven files relating to six States (Belgium, Chad, China, India, Turkey, United States of America), requesting further information from those Governments. It discontinued its consideration of one file relating to one country (United States of America).

At its fifteenth session, the Working Group had before it 11 communications relating to 10 States, including three communications deemed admissible related to three countries (Oman, Sri Lanka, Ukraine); one additional communication concerning one country (Lebanon); and seven communications on six countries (Belgium, Chad, China, India, Turkey, United States of America). The Working Group received Government replies in relation to seven communications. Additional information was received from two authors in relation to two communications. The Working Group adopted 11 decisions. It decided to transmit to the Working Group on Situations one file relating to one country (Sri Lanka) and to keep under review until its next session seven files relating to seven States (Chad, China, India, Lebanon, Oman, Ukraine, United States of America), requesting some Governments and complainants for further information. It discontinued three communications relating to two countries (Belgium, Turkey).

Working Group on Situations. The five-member Working Group on Situations held its thirteenth (10–13 February) [A/HRC/WG.1/13/R.2 & Corr.1] and fourteenth (30 June–4 July) [A/HRC/WG.1/14/R.2] sessions in Geneva.

At its thirteenth session, the Working Group had before it dossiers relating to the human rights situations in Cameroon, Colombia, Pakistan, the United States of America and Viet Nam. The material consisted of texts of communications, with Government replies, as well as UPR documents and concluding observations of treaty bodies relating to the States concerned. The Working Group referred the case regarding Cameroon to the Council's twenty-fifth (2014) session. It decided to keep under review until its next session cases concerning Colombia, Pakistan, the United States of America and Viet Nam.

At its fourteenth session, the Working Group had before it dossiers relating to Colombia, Kazakhstan, Mexico, Pakistan, the United States of America and Viet Nam. The Working Group did not refer any cases to the Council. It decided to keep under review until its next session the cases of Kazakhstan and Viet Nam, and dismissed the cases on Colombia, Mexico, Pakistan and the United States of America.

Human Rights Council action. In March [A/HRC/25/2] and September [A/HRC/27/2], the Council held closed meetings of the complaint procedure and examined the human rights situation in Cameroon. In September, it decided to discontinue the consideration of the situation in Cameroon.

Office of High Commissioner for Human Rights

Appointment. On 16 June, the General Assembly approved the Secretary-General's appointment of Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Husseini (Jordan) as the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for a four-year term, beginning on 1 September 2014 (decision 68/420).

Reports of High Commissioner. In her final annual report to the General Assembly [A/69/36], covering activities since the previous report [YUN 2013, p. 595], the High Commissioner, Navanethem Pillay, noted that the period under review confirmed the positive trends featured in previous reports, notably the steadily increasing attention to human rights in the context of peace, security and development by a growing number of States and intergovernmental bodies, as well as the determination within the United Nations to mainstream human rights throughout the work of the Organization, as illustrated by the Secretary-General's Human Rights Up Front plan of action, and his policies on the human rights due diligence and human rights screening of UN personnel. Another trend was the continued and growing demand for OHCHR to deliver on multiple fronts. On the other hand, long-lasting challenges hampered the protection of human rights, including prolonged or chronic violence and conflicts; persistent economic and social crises, poverty and deprivation; discrimination, inequality and intolerance on many grounds; and restrictions and attacks on civil society, human rights defenders and whistle-blowers in all regions. The Office continued to implement its six thematic priorities for 2014–2017: strengthening international human rights mechanisms; enhancing equality and countering discrimination; combating impunity and strengthening accountability and the rule of law; integrating human rights in development and in the economic sphere; early warning and protection of human rights in situations of conflict, violence and insecurity; and a new thematic priority for OHCHR, widening the democratic space.

In his first annual report to the Council [A/HRC/28/3], covering 2014, the newly appointed High Commissioner, Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein, stated that the Office conducted monitoring missions, issued public reports on human rights developments in various States, and deployed teams to provide advice on human rights responses in crisis situations. It also delivered a considerable number of technical assistance activities upon the request of States. He highlighted the growing trend of requests for OHCHR support, which had continued with the creation of new mandates from intergovernmental bodies, calls for technical assistance from States, and intensified engagement within the UN system in the security, development and humanitarian contexts, including with respect to the Human Rights Up Front plan of action. With regard to the plan of action, which was in its infancy, the United Nations was beginning to identify potential problems earlier, and in severe situations, human rights were given more system-wide attention. Noting the significant gap between the increasing demands and the capacity available, the High Commissioner called for renewed political and financial support for States. As at November, OHCHR supported 67 field presences: 13 country/stand-alone offices, 14 human rights components of UN peace missions, 12 regional offices/centres and 28 human rights advisers with UN country teams.

Composition of staff

Report of High Commissioner. As requested by the Human Rights Council in resolution 22/2 [YUN 2013, p. 596], the High Commissioner in June reported [A/HRC/27/18] on the composition of OHCHR staff and on further efforts to correct the imbalance and achieve equitable geographical representation. As at 31 December 2013, OHCHR had 579 staff members in the Professional category and above, of whom 503 were considered regular staff; 49 per cent from Western Europe and other States, 15.8 per cent from Africa, 14 per cent from Asia, 13 per cent from Latin America and the Caribbean and 8.2 per cent from Eastern Europe. Nationals from 117 countries were represented in the Professional and above workforce, in both geographical and non-geographical posts. Of those 117 nationalities, 14 were underrepresented, 81 were considered within range and 22 were overrepresented. Women accounted for 54.6 per cent of all staff at the Professional and above level.

Secretariat note. By a 25 June note [A/HRC/27/19], the secretariat advised that the follow-up review of OHCHR management and administration, in particular with regard to its recruitment policies and the composition of the staff, which was mandated by Council resolution 22/2, had been included in the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) 2014 programme of work and was well under way. Due to JIU procedural requirements, however, it was not feasible for the Unit to submit the results of the review to the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session, and that it would do so at the twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Other aspects

Good governance

Report of High Commissioner. In accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 19/20 [YUN 2012, p. 598], the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/25/27] on the role of the public service as an essential component of good governance in the promotion and protection of human rights, which highlighted the major challenges and presented a compilation of good practices based on submissions received from States, intergovernmental organizations, national human rights institutions, an NGO and an observer to the United Nations. The report concluded with a number of practical measures that could be adopted to further the implementation of a human rights approach to public services. It also highlighted the need for human rights-based policy coherence and coordination to support public service improvements globally and for better synergy between international financial institutions and UN mechanisms.

Advisory Committee report. Pursuant to Council resolution 23/9 [YUN 2013, p. 596], the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee, in May, submitted a progress report [A/HRC/26/42] on the negative impact of corruption on the enjoyment of human rights, which provided an update on its preparation, including responses received from various stakeholders to a questionnaire that had been circulated and discussions on the preliminary research-based report [A/HRC/AC/12/CRP.3] at the Committee's twelfth (2014) session (see p. 752). The Committee was encouraged to continue its work on the draft report.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/8)], the Human Rights Council requested the High Commissioner to organize, at its thirtieth (2015) session, a panel discussion on a human rights-based approach to good governance in the public service and to present a summary report at its thirty-first (2015) session.

On 26 June [A/69/53 (dec. 26/115)], the Council, noting the Advisory Committee's request at its twelfth (2014) session to extend the time schedule for the research-based report on the negative impact of corruption on the enjoyment of human rights to allow for analysis of the numerous responses received to the questionnaire and for better informed work, requested the Committee to submit the final report at the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Role of prevention

OHCHR report. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 24/16 [YUN 2013, p. 597], OHCHR convened at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session a panel discussion on the role of prevention in the promotion and protection of human rights (Geneva, 18 September) and submitted a summary report [A/HRC/28/30] on its outcome. Participants agreed that, while there were mechanisms and tools for prevention at the national and international levels, their implementation was patchy and needed to be improved. There was general support for the idea to further develop the concept of prevention through evidence-based research. In addition to accountability and action to combat impunity and implement the rule of law, other conditions highlighted for the effective prevention of human rights violations included tackling risk factors and providing good governance and a democratic system.

Human rights instruments

In 2014, nine UN human rights instruments were in force with expert bodies monitoring their implementation. Those instruments and their treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440, GA res. 2106 A (XX)] (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto [YUN 1966, p. 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] and the Second Optional Protocol aiming at the abolition of the death penalty [YUN 1989, p. 484, GA res. 44/128] (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [YUN 1966, p. 419, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] and the Optional Protocol thereto [YUN 2008, p. 729, GA res. 63/117] (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34/180] and Optional Protocol thereto [YUN 1999, p. 1100, GA res. 54/4] (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46] and the Optional Protocol thereto [YUN 2002, p. 631, GA res. 57/199] (Committee against Torture and Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture); the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25] and the Optional Protocols on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography [YUN 2000, pp. 616 & 618, GA res. 54/263] (Committee on the Rights of the Child); the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [YUN 1990, p. 594, GA res. 45/158] (Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families); the 2006 Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol thereto [YUN 2006, p. 785, GA res. 61/106] (Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities); and the 2006 International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance [ibid., p. 800, GA res. 61/177] (Committee on Enforced Disappearances).

The 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [YUN 1948–49, p. 959, GA res. 260 A (III)] did not establish a treaty body, but the mandate of the Office of the Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide [YUN 2004, p. 730] included collecting information on situations where there might be a risk of genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity; alerting relevant actors where such a risk existed; and advocating and mobilizing for appropriate action.

Effective implementation of international human rights instruments

Secretariat note. By a 9 December note [A/HRC/28/21], the secretariat advised that due to overlapping reporting obligations resulting from a request in resolution 68/268 (see p. 756), submission of the Secretary-General's report on the effective implementation of international human rights instruments, pursuant to Council resolution 9/8 [YUN 2008, p. 725], was postponed until the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session.

Report of Third Committee. On 3 December [A/69/488/Add.1], the Third Committee of the General Assembly reported on the implementation of human rights instruments.

On 18 December, the General Assembly took note of the report (decision 69/534).

Intergovernmental process

Open-ended intergovernmental process. In April, the General Assembly President transmitted a report [A/68/832] of the co-facilitators on the open-ended intergovernmental process to conduct open, transparent and inclusive negotiations on how to strengthen and enhance the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system. The co-facilitators—Greta Gunnarsdottir (Iceland) and Mohamed Khaled Khiari (Tunisia)—reported on their activities during the resumed sixty-eighth (2014) session of the General Assembly, including informal meetings, bilateral consultations and discussions and continued engagement with the Chairs of treaty bodies. The process was concluded on 11 February when the co-facilitators submitted the final text to the Assembly President. The report provided an overview of the 34 issues discussed in the intergovernmental process. The narrative on each issue reflected the proposal put to the intergovernmental process, and was followed by a conclusion that was based on the views of the co-facilitators after their consultations with States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 April [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/268 [draft: A/68/L.37] without vote [agenda item 125].

Strengthening and enhancing the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and relevant international human rights instruments,

Underlining the obligation that States have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights, including under international human rights treaties,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985,

Recalling also its resolution 66/254 of 23 February 2012, by which it launched the intergovernmental process of the General Assembly on strengthening and enhancing the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system, and its resolutions 66/295 of 17 September 2012 and 68/2 of 20 September 2013, by which it extended the intergovernmental process,

Recalling further its relevant resolutions on the human rights treaty bodies,

Reaffirming that the full and effective implementation of international human rights instruments by States parties is of major importance for the efforts of the United Nations to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system is indispensable for the full and effective implementation of such instruments,

Recognizing the important, valuable and unique role and contribution of each of the human rights treaty bodies in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including through their examination of the progress made by States parties to the respective human rights treaties in fulfilling their relevant obligations and their provision of recommendations to States parties on the implementation of such treaties,

Reaffirming the importance of the independence of the human rights treaty bodies,

Reaffirming also that the independence and impartiality of members of the human rights treaty bodies is essential for the performance of their duties and responsibilities in line with the respective treaties, and recalling the requirement that they be individuals of high moral standing serving in their personal capacity,

Recognizing that States have a legal obligation under the international human rights treaties to which they are party to periodically submit to the relevant human rights treaty bodies reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to the provisions of the relevant treaties, and noting the need to increase the level of compliance in this regard,

Recognizing also that the promotion and protection of human rights should be based on the principle of cooperation and genuine dialogue and be aimed at strengthening the capacity of Member States to comply with their human rights obligations for the benefit of all human beings,

Emphasizing the importance of multilingualism in the activities of the United Nations, including those linked to the promotion and protection of human rights, and reaffirming the paramount importance of the equality of the six official languages of the United Nations for the effective functioning of the human rights treaty bodies,

Recognizing that the current allocation of resources has not allowed the human rights treaty body system to work in a sustainable and effective manner, and in this regard also recognizing the importance of providing, under the existing procedures of the General Assembly, adequate funding to the human rights treaty body system from the regular budget of the United Nations,

Recognizing also the importance of continued efforts to improve the efficiency of the working methods of the human rights treaty body system,

Recognizing further the importance and added value of capacity-building and technical assistance provided in consultation with and with the consent of the States parties concerned to ensure the full and effective implementation of and compliance with the international human rights treaties,

Recalling that certain international human rights instruments include provisions regarding the venue of the meetings of the committees, and mindful of the importance of the full engagement of all States parties in the interactive dialogue with the human rights treaty bodies,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on measures to improve further the effectiveness, harmonization and reform of the human rights treaty body system,

Noting with appreciation the initiative and efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in the form of a multi-stakeholder consultation approach for reflecting on how to streamline and strengthen the human rights treaty body system,

Noting that the multi-stakeholder approach consisted of a number of meetings involving representatives of Member States, human rights treaty bodies, national human rights institutions, non-governmental organizations and academia, including events hosted by a number of Member States,

Taking note of the report of the High Commissioner on strengthening the United Nations human rights treaty body system, which includes recommendations addressed to different stakeholders,

Taking note also of the report of the co-facilitators on the open-ended intergovernmental process on how to strengthen and enhance the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the President of the General Assembly and the co-facilitators in the framework of the intergovernmental process,

Noting the participation and contributions of Member States in the intergovernmental process, as well as experts of the human rights treaty bodies, national human rights institutions, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and non-governmental organizations,

Emphasizing that strengthening and enhancing the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system is a common goal shared by stakeholders who have different legal competencies in accordance with the Charter and the international human rights instruments establishing treaty bodies, and recognizing in this regard the ongoing efforts of different treaty bodies towards strengthening and enhancing their effective functioning,

1. Encourages the human rights treaty bodies to offer to States parties for their consideration the simplified reporting procedure and to set a limit on the number of the questions included;

2. Encourages States parties to consider the possibility of using the simplified reporting procedure, when offered, to facilitate the preparation of their reports and the interactive dialogue on the implementation of their treaty obligations;

3. Also encourages States parties to consider submitting a common core document and updating it as appropriate, as a comprehensive document or in the form of an addendum to the original document, bearing in mind the most recent developments in the particular State party, and in this regard encourages the human rights treaty bodies to further elaborate their existing guidelines on the common core document in a clear and consistent manner;

4. Decides, without prejudice to the formulation of the annual report of each human rights treaty body as laid out in the respective treaty, that the annual reports of treaty bodies are not to contain documents published separately and referenced therein;

5. Encourages the human rights treaty bodies to collaborate towards the elaboration of an aligned methodology for their constructive dialogue with the States parties, bearing in mind the views of States parties as well as the specificity of the respective committees and of their mandates, with the aim of making the dialogue more effective, maximizing the use of the time available and allowing for a more interactive and productive dialogue with States parties;

6. Also encourages the human rights treaty bodies to adopt short, focused and concrete concluding observations, including the recommendations therein, that reflect the dialogue with the relevant State party, and to this end further encourages them to develop common guidelines for the elaboration of such concluding observations, bearing in mind the specificity of the respective committees and of their mandates, as well as the views of States parties;

7. Recommends the more efficient and effective use of the meetings of States parties, inter alia, by proposing and organizing discussions on matters related to the implementation of each treaty;

8. Strongly condemns all acts of intimidation and reprisals against individuals and groups for their contribution to the work of the human rights treaty bodies, and urges States to take all appropriate action, consistent with the Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and all other relevant human rights instruments, to prevent and eliminate such human rights violations;

9. Encourages the human rights treaty bodies to continue to enhance their efforts towards achieving greater efficiency, transparency, effectiveness and harmonization through their working methods, within their respective mandates, and in this regard encourages the treaty bodies to continue to review good practices regarding the application of rules of procedure and working methods in their ongoing efforts towards strengthening and enhancing their effective functioning, bearing in mind that these activities should fall under the provisions of the respective treaties, thus not creating new obligations for States parties;

10. Encourages States parties to continue their efforts to nominate experts of high moral standing and recognized competence and experience in the field of human rights, in particular in the field covered by the relevant treaty, and, as appropriate, to consider adopting national policies or processes with respect to the nomination of experts as candidates for human rights treaty bodies;

11. Recommends that the Economic and Social Council consider replacing the existing procedure for the election of experts to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights with a meeting of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, while preserving the current structure, organization and administrative arrangement of the Committee as set forth in Council resolution 1985/17;

12. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to include in the documentation prepared for elections of members of human rights treaty bodies at meetings of States parties an information note on the current situation with respect to the composition of the treaty body, reflecting the balance in terms of geographical distribution and gender representation, professional background and different legal systems, as well as the tenure of current members;

13. Encourages States parties, in the election of treaty body experts, to give due consideration, as stipulated in the relevant human rights instruments, to equitable geographical distribution, the representation of the different forms of civilization and the principal legal systems, balanced gender representation and the participation of experts with disabilities in the membership of the human rights treaty bodies;

14. Encourages the human rights treaty bodies to develop an aligned consultation process for the elaboration of general comments that provides for consultation with States parties in particular and bears in mind the views of other stakeholders during the elaboration of new general comments;

15. Decides, in line with established practice with respect to other United Nations documentation, to establish a limit of 10,700 words for each document produced by the human rights treaty bodies, and further recommends that word limits also be applied for relevant stakeholders;

16. Also decides to establish word limits for all State party documentation submitted to the human rights treaty body system, including State party reports, of 31,800 words for initial reports, 21,200 words for subsequent periodic reports and 42,400 words for common core documents, as endorsed by the human rights treaty bodies, and calls upon the treaty bodies to set a limit on the number of questions posed, focusing on areas seen as priority issues to ensure the ability of States parties to meet the aforementioned word limits;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, through the Office of the High Commissioner, to support States parties in building the capacity to implement their treaty obligations and to provide in this regard advisory services, technical assistance and capacity-building, in line with the mandate of the Office, in consultation with and with the consent of the State concerned, by:

(a) Deploying a dedicated human rights capacity-building officer in every regional office of the Office of the High Commissioner, as required;

(b) Strengthening cooperation with relevant regional human rights mechanisms within regional organizations to provide technical assistance to States in reporting to human rights treaty bodies, including through the training of trainers;

(c) Developing a roster of experts on treaty body reporting, reflecting geographical distribution and gender representation, professional background and different legal systems;

(d) Providing direct assistance to States parties at the national level by building and developing institutional capacity for reporting and strengthening technical knowledge through ad hoc training on reporting guidelines at the national level;

(e) Facilitating the sharing of best practices among States parties;

18. Underlines the need to provide further support to States parties through, inter alia, the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights and in conjunction with the provision of technical assistance, with a focus on measures to build sustainable capacity in their activities to fulfil their treaty obligations, and encourages all Member States to contribute to the Fund;

19. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to work with the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations system and United Nations country teams, in line with their respective mandates and at the request of States parties, to assist States parties in fulfilling their obligations under international human rights treaties through:

(a) The provision of advisory services, technical assistance and capacity-building to States parties for the preparation of reports to human rights treaty bodies;

(b) The development of programmatic responses, in close coordination with the relevant States parties, to support their compliance with treaty obligations;

20. Recognizes that some States parties consider that they would benefit from improved coordination of reporting at the national level, and requests the Office of the High Commissioner to include among its technical assistance activities relevant assistance in this regard, at the request of a State party, based on best practices;

21. Encourages Member States to provide voluntary funds to facilitate the engagement of States parties, in particular those without representation in Geneva, with the human rights treaty bodies;

22. Decides, in principle, with the aim of enhancing the accessibility and visibility of the human rights treaty bodies and in line with the report of the Committee on

Information on its thirty-fifth session, to webcast, as soon as feasible, the public meetings of the treaty bodies, and requests the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to report on the feasibility of providing, in all of the official languages used in the respective committees, live webcasts and video archives that are available, accessible, searchable and secure, including from cyberattacks, of relevant meetings of the treaty bodies;

23. Requests the Office of the High Commissioner, with the assistance of United Nations country teams through their existing videoconferencing facilities, as appropriate, to provide, at the request of a State party, the opportunity for members of its official delegation not present at the meeting to participate in the consideration of the report of that State party by means of videoconference in order to facilitate wider participation in the dialogue;

24. Underlines the need for summary records of the dialogue of human rights treaty bodies with States parties, and in this regard decides to issue summary records in one of the working languages of the United Nations and not to translate the pending backlog of summary records, taking into account that these measures will not constitute a precedent, given the special nature of the treaty bodies, and bearing in mind the aim of providing, through alternative methods, verbatim records of the meetings of the treaty bodies in all of the official languages of the United Nations;

25. Decides that a summary record of a meeting of a State party with a treaty body, at the request of any State party, shall be translated into the official language of the United Nations used by that State party;

26. Also decides that the allocation of meeting time to the treaty bodies will be identified in the following manner, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the corresponding financial and human resources:

(a) An allocation of the number of weeks that each treaty body requires to review the reports of States parties it can expect annually, using the average number of reports received per committee during the period from 2009 to 2012, on the basis of an assumed attainable rate of review of at least 2.5 reports per week and where relevant at least 5 reports under the Optional Protocols to the human rights treaties per week;

(b) A further allocation of two weeks of meeting time per committee to allow for mandated activities, plus an allocation of additional meeting time to those committees dealing with individual communications, on the basis of each such communication requiring 1.3 hours of meeting time for review and the average number of such communications received per year by those committees;

(c) An additional margin to prevent the recurrence of backlogs is established as a target 5 per cent increase in reporting compliance allocated among the committees to address their expected workload, at the beginning of each biennium, with a temporary target increase of 15 per cent for the period from 2015 to 2017;

(d) An adequate allocation of financial and human resources to those treaty bodies whose main mandated role is to carry out field visits;

27. Further decides that the amount of meeting time allocated will be reviewed biennially on the basis of actual reporting during the previous four years and will be amended on this basis at the request of the Secretary-General in line with established budgetary procedures, and decides that the number of weeks allocated to a committee on a permanent basis prior to the adoption of the present resolution will not be reduced;

28. Requests the Secretary-General accordingly to take into account the meeting time needed in relation to the increased capacity of States parties to submit reports under the respective human rights instruments and the situation in terms of ratifications and the number of individual communications considered, based on paragraphs 26 and 27 above, in his future biennial programme budget for the human rights treaty body system, including the specific requirements for field visits by treaty bodies mandated to conduct such visits;

29. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the progressive implementation of relevant accessibility standards with regard to the human rights treaty body system, as appropriate, particularly in connection with the strategic heritage plan being developed for the United Nations Office at Geneva, and to provide reasonable accommodation for treaty body experts with disabilities to ensure their full and effective participation;

30. Decides to allocate a maximum of three official working languages for the work of the human rights treaty bodies, with the inclusion, on an exceptional basis, of a fourth official language, when necessary to facilitate communication among the members, as determined by the committee concerned, taking into account that these measures will not constitute a precedent, given the special nature of the treaty bodies, and without prejudice to the right of each State party to interact with the treaty bodies in any of the six official languages of the United Nations;

31. Requests the Secretary-General to improve the efficiency of the current arrangement with regard to the travel of treaty body experts in line with section VI of resolution 67/254 A of 12 April 2013;

32. Invites States parties, as applicable and as an exceptional measure, with a view to achieving greater compliance with reporting obligations by States parties and eliminating the backlog of reports and in agreement with the relevant treaty body, to submit one combined report to satisfy its reporting obligations to the treaty body for the entire period for which reports to that treaty body are outstanding at the time of the adoption of the present resolution;

33. Invites the human rights treaty bodies, as an exceptional measure, and with a view to eliminating the current backlog of reports, without prejudice to the existing practices of the human rights treaty bodies or to the right of a State party to provide, or a treaty body to request, a short addendum for the purpose of reflecting significant and relevant recent national developments, to consider all State party reports which at the date of the present resolution have been submitted and are awaiting consideration to satisfy the reporting obligation of the State party concerned to the relevant treaty body until the completion of a reporting cycle starting from the time of the consideration of the report of the State party concerned;

34. Invites the human rights treaty bodies and the Office of the High Commissioner, within their respective mandates, to continue to work to increase coordination and predictability in the reporting process, including through cooperation with States parties, with the aim of achieving a clear and regularized schedule for reporting by States parties;

35. Reaffirms the importance of the independence and impartiality of members of the human rights treaty bodies, and underlines the importance of all stakeholders of the treaty body system, as well as the Secretariat, respecting fully the independence of treaty body members and the importance of avoiding any act that would interfere with the exercise of their functions;

36. Notes the adoption, at the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Chairs of the human rights treaty bodies, held in Addis Ababa from 25 to 29 June 2012, of the guidelines on the independence and impartiality of members of the human rights treaty bodies (the Addis Ababa guidelines), which are aimed at ensuring objectivity, impartiality and accountability within the treaty body system, in full respect for the independence of the treaty bodies, and in this regard encourages the treaty bodies to implement the guidelines in accordance with their mandates;

37. Encourages the human rights treaty bodies to continue to consider and review the Addis Ababa guidelines, inter alia, by seeking the views of States parties and other stakeholders on their development, and in this regard invites the Chairs of the treaty bodies to keep States parties updated on their implementation;

38. Also encourages the human rights treaty bodies, with a view to accelerating the harmonization of the treaty body system, to continue to enhance the role of their Chairs in relation to procedural matters, including with respect to formulating conclusions on issues related to working methods and procedural matters, promptly generalizing good practices and methodologies among all treaty bodies, ensuring coherence across the treaty bodies and standardizing working methods;

39. Further encourages the human rights treaty bodies to strengthen the possibilities for interaction during the annual meetings of the Chairs of the treaty bodies with States parties to all human rights treaties, held in Geneva and New York, with a view to ensuring a forum for an open and formal interactive dialogue in which all issues, including those related to the independence and impartiality of treaty body members, may be raised by States parties in a constructive manner;

40. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, on a biennial basis, a comprehensive report on the status of the human rights treaty body system and the progress achieved by the human rights treaty bodies in realizing greater efficiency and effectiveness in their work, including the number of reports submitted and reviewed by the committees, the visits undertaken and the individual communications received and reviewed, where applicable, the state of the backlog, capacity-building efforts and the results achieved, as well as the situation in terms of ratifications, increased reporting and the allocation of meeting time and proposals on measures, including on the basis of information and observations from Member States, to enhance the engagement of all States parties in the dialogue with the treaty bodies;

41. Decides to consider the state of the human rights treaty body system no later than six years from the date of adoption of the present resolution, to review the effectiveness of the measures taken in order to ensure their sustainability, and, if appropriate, to decide on further action to strengthen and enhance the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system.

Convention against racial discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2106 A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440], stood at 177, with the State of Palestine becoming party during the year.

The amendment to article 8 of the Convention, regarding the financing of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1992, p. 714], had been accepted by 45 States parties as at 31 December. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties, comprising approximately 118 of the 177 States parties to the Convention. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/69/329].

In August, the Secretary-General reported [A/69/328] that outstanding States parties' arrears to the Committee, as at 31 July, totalled $105,791. A number of States parties were in arrears as a result of the non-payment of previous assessments. Financing for the annual sessions of the Committee in 2013 and 2014 was provided from the regular budget, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 47/111 [YUN 1992, p. 769].

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, established under article 8 of the Convention, held its eighty-fourth (3–21 February) [A/69/18] and eighty-fifth (11–29 August) [A/70/18] sessions in Geneva. It considered reports submitted by 15 countries (Belgium, Cameroon, El Salvador, Estonia, Honduras, Iraq, Japan, Kazakhstan, Luxembourg, Montenegro, Peru, Poland, Switzerland, United States of America, Uzbekistan) and adopted concluding observations on them.

With regard to the Convention's implementation by States parties whose reports were seriously overdue, the Committee noted that 30 States were at least 10 years late in submitting their reports, and 27 States were at least five years late.

Under article 14 of the Convention, the Committee considered communications from individuals or groups claiming violations by a State party of their rights as enumerated in the Convention. Fifty-seven States parties had recognized the competence of the Committee to do so.

Pursuant to article 15 of the Convention, which empowered the Committee to consider petitions, reports and other information relating to trust and non-self-governing territories, the Committee noted, as it had done in the past, that it was difficult to fulfil its functions comprehensively owing to the fact that the copies of the reports received contained only scant information directly relating to the principles and objectives of the Convention. It further noted that there was significant ethnic diversity in a number of the non-self-governing territories, warranting a close watch on incidents or trends that reflected racial discrimination and violations of rights guaranteed in the Convention.

The Committee considered a number of situations under its early warning and urgent action procedure, including situations in Guyana, India and Kenya.

Complementary standards

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of Complementary Standards, established by the Council in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 774], held its sixth session (Geneva, 7–17 October) [A/HRC/28/81]. Substantive discussions took place on the topics of xenophobia; prevention and awareness-raising; the OHCHR questionnaire conducted pursuant to Council resolution 21/30 [YUN 2012, p. 603]; special measures to prevent, combat and eradicate all forms and manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; establishment, designation or maintaining of national mechanisms with competences to protect against and prevent all forms and manifestations of racism; and procedural gaps with regard to the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/486], adopted resolution 69/161 without vote [agenda item 66 (a)].

International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 67/156 of 20 December 2012,

Recalling also its resolution 68/268 of 9 April 2014 on strengthening and enhancing the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, and invites the Secretary-General to follow up with States parties that are in arrears, as articulated in the report, to fulfil their outstanding financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention;

3. Further takes note of the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on its eighty-first and eighty-second and its eighty-third and eighty-fourth sessions;

4. Reiterates, in the run-up to the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention, its call for the universal ratification and effective implementation of the Convention by all States parties to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination;

5. Invites the Chair of the Committee to present an oral report on the work of the Committee and to engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its seventy-first session under the item entitled “Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance”;

6. Decides to consider, at its seventy-first session, under the item entitled “Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance”, the reports of the Committee on its eighty-fifth and eighty-sixth and its eighty-seventh and eighty-eighth sessions, the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee, should the financial situation of the Committee change, and the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention.

Covenant on civil and political rights and optional protocols

Accessions and ratification

As at 31 December, the parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 418], stood at 168 and 115, respectively. The State of Palestine became party to the Covenant during the year.

The Second Optional Protocol, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty and adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484], was acceded to by El Salvador and Gabon, and ratified by Poland during the year, bringing the number of States parties to 81.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 2014: its 110th (10–28 March) [A/69/40 (Vol. I)], 111th (8–25 July) and 112th (7–31 October) [A/70/40] in Geneva. It considered reports submitted under article 40 from 18 States (Burundi, Chad, Chile, Georgia, Haiti, Israel, Ireland, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Malawi, Malta, Montenegro, Nepal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Sudan, United States of America), and adopted concluding observations on them.

The Committee adopted views on communications from individuals alleging violations of their rights under the Covenant, and decided that other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were accessible through the treaty body database on the OHCHR.

During its 110th session, the Committee adopted a note on the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on new communications and interim measures. Under article 36 of the Covenant, the Committee reaffirmed its grave concern over the lack of sufficient staff resources and translation services, which hampered its activities.

Pursuant to article 4 of the Covenant, certain States parties notified other States parties, through the intermediary of the Secretary-General, of the derogations of certain obligations under the Covenants due to public emergency. All such notifications were available on the website of the Office of Legal Affairs.

The General Assembly, on 18 December (decision 69/536) took note of the report of the Human Rights Committee on its 108th, 109th [YUN 2013, p. 600] and 110th sessions.

(On the Organization’s efforts to protect civil and political rights, see also p. 788.)

Covenant on economic, social and cultural rights and optional protocol

Accessions and ratification

As at 31 December, there were 162 parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 418]. The State of Palestine acceded to the Covenant during the year.

The Optional Protocol to the Covenant, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 63/117 [YUN 2008, p. 729], established a procedure of individual communications for cases of alleged violations of economic, social and cultural rights. During the year, Belgium, Cabo Verde, Costa Rica, Finland, Gabon and the Niger became States parties to the treaty, bringing the total to 17.

Implementation

Monitoring Body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held its fifty-second (28 April–23 May) and fifty-third (10–28 November) sessions [E/2015/22] in Geneva. Its pre-sessional working group met in Geneva from 26 to 30 May and from 1 to 5 December to identify additional issues to be discussed with reporting States. The Committee examined reports submitted under articles 16 and 17 of the Covenant by Armenia, China, the Czech Republic, El Salvador, Finland, Guatemala, Indonesia, Lithuania, Monaco, Montenegro, Nepal, Portugal, Romania, Serbia, Slovenia, Ukraine, Uzbekistan and Viet Nam, and adopted concluding observations on them.

The Committee decided to offer the option of a simplified reporting procedure to States parties who were scheduled to submit their third or later periodic report in 2017; and pursuant to its decision on the proposed guidelines on the independence and impartiality of members of the human rights treaty bodies (Addis Ababa guidelines) [YUN 2012, p. 619] adopted at its fifty-first session, the Committee adopted guidelines which were annexed to the report.

The Economic and Social Council on 17 November took note of the reports of the Committee on its fiftieth and fifty-first sessions [YUN 2013, p. 600] (decision 2014/253).

(On the Organization's efforts to protect economic, social and cultural rights, see also p. 841.)

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women and optional protocol

(On the status of the Convention and Optional Protocol, see p. 1298. On the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, see p. 872.)

Convention against torture

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, 156 States were parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. Eritrea and the State of Palestine became parties to the treaty during the year.

States parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention establishing an international inspection system for places of detention, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 57/199 [YUN 2002, p. 631] and entering into force in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 776], stood at 76, with Finland, Greece, Lithuania, Morocco, Mozambique and the Niger becoming parties during the year.

As at 23 May, 58 parties had made the required declarations under articles 21 and 22, which recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications by which a State party claimed that another party was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and from or on behalf of individuals who claimed to be victims of a violation of the Convention's provisions by a State party. Sixty-two parties had made the declaration under article 21, concerning inter-States communications, and 66 had made the declaration under article 22, concerning individual communications.

Amendments to articles 17 and 18, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 736], had been accepted by 30 States parties at year's end.

Implementation

Monitoring body. During the year, the Committee against Torture held its fifty-second (28 April–23 May) [A/69/44] and fifty-third (3–28 November) [A/70/44] sessions in Geneva. Under article 19 of the Convention, it considered reports submitted by 16 countries (Australia, Burundi, Croatia, Cyprus, Guinea, Holy See, Kazakhstan, Lithuania, Montenegro, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Thailand, Ukraine, United States of America, Uruguay, Venezuela) and adopted concluding observations on them.

The Committee continued, in accordance with article 20, to study reliable information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practiced in a State party. Under article 22, the Committee considered communications submitted by individuals claiming that their rights under the Convention had been violated by a State party.

The General Assembly, on 18 December (decision 69/536), took note of the report of the Committee against Torture on its fifty-first [YUN 2013, p. 601] and fifty-second sessions.

Subcommittee on prevention. The Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Subcommittee on Prevention), established in 2006 [YUN 2006, p. 776] to carry out the functions laid down in the Optional Protocol to the Convention adopted by resolution 57/199, held its twenty-second (24–28 February), twenty-third (2–6 June) and twenty-fourth (17–21 November) sessions in Geneva. The mandate of the Subcommittee was to visit places where persons were or might be deprived of liberty and make recommendations to States parties on their protection; assist States parties in establishing national preventative mechanisms; provide support to such mechanisms; and cooperate with UN and other bodies in preventing ill-treatment.

The eighth annual report of the Subcommittee [CAT/C/54/2], covering its activities in 2014, reviewed developments relating to the Optional Protocol to the Convention; highlighted areas of cooperation between the Subcommittee and other international and regional bodies and civil society; provided information on developments in the Subcommittee's working practices; set out the Subcommittee's views on pretrial detention and the prevention of torture and other ill-treatment; and reflected on the Subcommittee's programme of work for 2015.

In 2014, the Subcommittee visited Nigeria (1–3 April), Nicaragua (7–16 May), Ecuador (1–4 September) [CAT/OP/ECU/2], Malta (6–9 October) [CAT/OP/MLT/1], Togo (1–10 December) [CAT/OP/TGO/1], Maldives (8–11 December) and Azerbaijan (8–14 September), with the visit to the latter country being suspended due to the Subcommittee's inability to enjoy unfettered access to all places of deprivation of liberty. It would resume its suspended Azerbaijan visit when it was possible for the visit to be completed in accordance with the Subcommittee's mandate. The visits were followed by the submission of a confidential report to the respective Governments that included recommendations. Recipients were requested to provide a reply to a visit report within six months, giving a full account of actions taken to implement the recommendations it contained. At the end of 2014, the Subcommittee had received 12 replies from States parties. Replies from Cambodia, Gabon, Honduras, Kyrgyzstan, Liberia, Maldives, Mali and Peru were considered to be overdue.

Special Fund. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/156 [YUN 2013, p. 673], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/289] on the operations of the Special Fund established by the Optional Protocol to the Convention to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee on Prevention following visits to States parties, as well as education programmes of national preventive mechanisms. During 2014, the Fund received contributions of $10,000 from Argentina and $218,878.25 from Germany.

The General Assembly, on 18 December (decision 69/536) took note of the report.

In a December note [A/HRC/28/24], the Secretary-General reported that total grants for 2014 had amounted to $232,984 for seven projects. The Fund, however, struggled to secure a sustainable donor base and would only be able to fund seven or eight projects of $35,000 each in 2015. Based on current trends, it was estimated that the Fund reserves accumulated over the past three years would be entirely depleted by the end of 2015.

Convention on the rights of the child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], stood at 194, with the State of Palestine acceding to the treaty during the year.

States parties to the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the involvement of children in armed conflict, adopted by General Assembly resolution 54/263 [YUN 2000, p. 615], rose to 159, with the Dominican Republic, Estonia, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Saint Lucia and the State of Palestine becoming parties during the year.

The Optional Protocol to the Convention on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, also adopted by resolution 54/263, had 169 States parties, with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ethiopia and Haiti becoming parties during the year.

The Optional Protocol to the Convention on a communications procedure, adopted by resolution 66/138 [YUN 2011, p. 623], which allowed children to submit complaints regarding violations of their rights under the Convention and its first two protocols, entered into force on 14 April 2014. As at 31 December, it had 14 States parties, with Andorra, Belgium, Costa Rica, Ireland and Monaco becoming parties during the year.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention and its Optional Protocols as at 1 July 2014 [A/69/260].

The General Assembly, on 18 December (decision 69/532), took note of the report.

Implementation

Monitoring body. In 2014, the Committee on the Rights of the Child held its sixty-fifth (13–31 January) [A/69/41], sixty-sixth (26 May–13 June) and sixty-seventh (1–19 September) sessions [A/71/41] in Geneva.

Under article 44 of the Convention, the Committee considered initial and periodic reports submitted by 15 countries (Congo, Croatia, Fiji, Germany, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Morocco, Portugal, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Venezuela, Yemen) and the Holy See, and adopted concluding observations on them.

At its sixty-seventh session, the Committee adopted the joint general comment No. 18 on harmful practices, developed together with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. In other activities, on 24 September, the Committee celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Convention at an online event with conversations between 28 children, from 14 countries around the world, and Committee members.

Twenty-fifth anniversary

In 2014, the General Assembly considered the item on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and convened a high-level meeting on the topic on 20 November (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 May [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/273 [draft: A/68/L.46 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 65 (a)].

High-level meeting of the General Assembly on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

The General Assembly,

Emphasizing that the Convention on the Rights of the Child constitutes the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and, bearing in mind the importance of the Optional Protocols to the Convention, calling for their universal ratification and effective implementation, as well as that of other human rights instruments,

Welcoming the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the human rights treaty with the most ratifications in history, and acknowledging that the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto contain a comprehensive set of international legal standards for the protection and well-being of children,

Recognizing that, while progress has been made, the situation of children is critical in many parts of the world and many challenges remain to ensure the full realization of their rights, and that in this regard the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Convention is an occasion for States to reflect on implementation gaps and to undertake additional measures to ensure children's rights,

1. Decides to convene a high-level meeting on 20 November 2014 on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and that the high-level meeting will comprise an opening plenary meeting and an interactive panel discussion with the meaningful participation of children;

2. Also decides that, in addition to the participation of the President of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General, the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children, the Chair of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and Member States speaking on behalf of regional groups, will address the high-level meeting at its opening meeting;

3. Further decides that the interactive panel discussion will be chaired by two Member States, at the invitation of the President of the General Assembly, after consultations with regional groups;

4. Requests the President of the General Assembly, in a transparent manner and in consultation with Member States, with support from the United Nations Children's Fund, to finalize the organizational arrangements for the high-level meeting, including identification of the theme and panellists for the interactive panel discussion, with due regard given to gender balance and equitable geographical distribution, as well as the meaningful participation of children;

5. Encourages all Member and observer States and observers to be represented at the high-level meeting at the highest possible level and to include children and young persons in their delegations;

6. Invites all relevant United Nations entities and other relevant intergovernmental, regional and subregional organizations to participate in the high-level meeting at the highest possible level;

7. Requests the President of the General Assembly to draw up a list of interested representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council who may participate in the high-level meeting;

8. Also requests the President of the General Assembly, in a timely manner, to draw up a list of representatives of non-governmental organizations accredited to or in a collaborative relationship or partnership with the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as of other relevant non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations, academic institutions and the private sector, who may participate in the high-level meeting, taking into account the principles of transparency and equitable geographical representation, for submission to Member States for their consideration on a non-objection basis, and to bring the list to the attention of the General Assembly;

9. Further requests the President of the General Assembly, with support from the United Nations Children's Fund, to prepare a summary of the high-level meeting and to bring the summary to the attention of Member States, relevant United Nations entities and other stakeholders.

High-level meeting. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/273 (see above), a high-level meeting of the Assembly was convened on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention (New York, 20 November 2014) [A/69/PV.56]. An interactive panel discussion on the same date examined if the world was a better place for children, which was the topic of a UNICEF report entitled 25 Years of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

In his address to the Assembly, UNICEF Executive Director Anthony Lake asked the question: "What do Dr. Seuss, the beloved author of children's books, and the Convention on the Rights of the Child have in common?" The answer was that they both believed, as Dr. Seuss had written, that "A person's a person, no matter how small". He noted that since the adoption of the Convention, millions more children were surviving beyond their fifth birthdays, receiving vaccinations against preventable diseases, and enjoying improved access to education, sanitation, water, nutrition and protection from all manner of abuses. On the other hand, for millions of children, life was not better. In closing, he stressed the importance of preparing today's children to become tomorrow's adults and leaders, and to do so by extending the Convention's promise to those millions of children being left behind.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/484], adopted resolution 69/157 without vote [agenda item 64 (a)].

Rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming all its previous resolutions on the rights of the child in their entirety, the most recent of which is resolution 68/147 of 18 December 2013, and in particular recognizing the importance of resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, in which it adopted the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and welcoming the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of its adoption in 2014,

Emphasizing that the Convention on the Rights of the Child constitutes the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and bearing in mind the importance of the Optional Protocols to the Convention, and calling for their universal ratification and effective implementation, as well as that of other human rights instruments,

Recalling the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, and the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Reaffirming that the general principles of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, including the best interests of the child, non-discrimination, participation and survival and development, provide the framework for all actions concerning children,

Recalling the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples of 2007, as well as the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, held on 22 and 23 September 2014,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly on children, entitled “A world fit for children”, and recalling the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Dakar Framework for Action adopted at the World Education Forum, the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition, the Declaration on the Right to Development, the Declaration of the commemorative high-level plenary meeting devoted to the follow-up to the outcome of the special session on children, held in New York from 11 to 13 December 2007, the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, held in New York from 20 to 22 September 2010, the outcome document, entitled “The future we want”, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and the outcome document of the third Global Conference on Child Labour, held in Brasilia from 8 to 10 October 2013, and recalling the World Congresses against Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents, held in Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996, in Yokohama, Japan, from 17 to 20 December 2001 and in Rio de Janeiro from 25 to 28 November 2008,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on progress made towards achieving the commitments set out in the outcome document of the twenty-seventh special session of the General Assembly and on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the issues addressed in Assembly resolution 68/147, as well as the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children, the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, whose recommendations should be carefully studied, taking fully into account the views of Member States,

Reaffirming that States have the primary responsibility to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the rights of the child,

Acknowledging the important role played by national governmental structures for children, including, where they exist, ministries and institutions in charge of child, family and youth issues and independent ombudspersons for children or other national institutions for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

Recognizing that the family has the primary responsibility for the nurturing and protection of children, in the best interests of the child, and that children, for the full and harmonious development of their personality, should grow up in a family environment and in an atmosphere of happiness, love and understanding,

Noting with appreciation the work to promote and protect the rights of the child carried out by all relevant organs, bodies, entities and organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, by relevant mandate holders and special procedures of the United Nations and by relevant regional organizations, where appropriate, and intergovernmental organizations, and recognizing the valuable role of civil society, including non-governmental organizations,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains negatively affected by the world financial and economic crisis, and reaffirming that eradicating poverty continues to be the greatest global challenge facing the world today, recognizing its impact beyond the socioeconomic context,

Profoundly concerned also that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical, in an increasingly globalized environment, as a result of the persistence of poverty, social inequality, inadequate social and economic conditions, pandemics, in particular HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis, non-communicable diseases, lack of access to safe drinking water and sanitation, environmental damage, climate change, natural disasters, armed conflict, foreign occupation, displacement, violence, terrorism, abuse, trafficking in children and their organs, all forms of exploitation, commercial sexual exploitation of children, child prostitution, child pornography and child sex tourism, neglect, illiteracy, hunger, intolerance, discrimination, racism, xenophobia, gender inequality, disability and inadequate legal protection, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Expressing deep concern that, despite the recognition of the right of the child to express his or her views freely on all matters affecting him or her, with his or her views given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child, children are still seldom seriously consulted and involved in such matters owing to a variety of constraints and impediments and that the full implementation of this right in many parts of the world has yet to be fully realized,

Deeply concerned that children disproportionately suffer the consequences of discrimination, exclusion, inequality and poverty,

Deeply concerned also that more than 6,300,000 children under the age of 5 die each year, mostly from preventable and treatable causes, owing to inadequate or lack of access to integrated and quality maternal, newborn and child health care and services, to early childbearing, as well as to health determinants, such as safe drinking water and sanitation, safe and adequate food and nutrition, and that mortality remains highest among children belonging to the poorest and most marginalized communities,

Recognizing that a strong focus is needed on poverty, deprivation and inequality to prevent and protect children from violence and to promote the resilience of children, their families and communities,

Recognizing also the large and growing number of migrant children, including those unaccompanied or separated from their parents or primary caregivers, and especially those who find themselves in a vulnerable situation by attempting to cross international borders without the required travel documents,

Taking into special consideration the situation of child refugees and child asylum seekers, in particular those unaccompanied or separated from their parents,

I

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto

1. Welcomes the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the human rights treaty with the largest number of ratifications, and acknowledges that the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto contain a comprehensive set of international legal standards for the protection and well-being of children;

2. Recognizes that, while progress has been made, many challenges remain, and that, in this regard, the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, on 20 November 2014, was an occasion for States to reflect on implementation gaps and to undertake additional measures to ensure that the rights of children are fully realized;

3. Notes with appreciation the entry into force on 14 April 2014 of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure, and encourages States to consider its accession, ratification and implementation;

4. Reaffirms paragraphs 1 to 10 of its resolution 68/147, and urges States that have not yet done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto as a matter of priority and to implement them effectively and fully;

5. Urges States parties to withdraw reservations that are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or the Optional Protocols thereto and to consider reviewing regularly other reservations with a view to withdrawing them in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

6. Welcomes the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, taking into account the adoption of its general comments, and its actions to follow up on its concluding observations on the implementation of the Convention and recommendations, and calls upon all States to strengthen their cooperation with the Committee, to comply in a timely manner with their reporting obligations under the Convention and the Optional Protocols thereto, in accordance with the guidelines elaborated by the Committee, and to take into account its recommendations, observations and general comments on the implementation of the Convention;

II

Promotion and protection of the rights of the child and non-discrimination against children

Non-discrimination

7. Reaffirms paragraphs 11 to 14 of its resolution 68/147, and calls upon States to ensure the enjoyment by all children of all their civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights without discrimination of any kind;

8. Notes with concern the large number of children belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, migrant children, refugee or asylum-seeking children, internally displaced children, and children of indigenous origin who are victims of discrimination, including racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, stresses the need to incorporate special measures, in accordance with the principle of the best interests of the child and respect for his or her views and the child's gender-specific needs, including children with special needs, in education programmes and programmes to combat these practices, and calls upon States to provide special support and to ensure equal access to services for those children;

9. Urges all States to respect and promote the right of girls and boys to express themselves freely, and their right to be heard, to ensure that their views are given due weight, in accordance with their age and maturity, in all matters affecting them, and to involve children, including children with special needs, in decision-making processes, taking into account the evolving capacities of children and the importance of involving children's organizations and child-led initiatives;

10. Recognizes that discrimination against any child on the basis of disability is a violation of the inherent dignity and worth of the child, and expresses grave concern that children with disabilities face violations of their human rights, as well as discriminatory, attitudinal and environmental barriers to their participation and inclusion in society and in the community;

Registration, family relations, adoption and alternative care

11. Reaffirms paragraphs 15 to 19 of its resolution 68/147, and urges all States parties to intensify their efforts to comply with their obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child to protect children in matters relating to registration, family relations and adoption or other forms of alternative care, and, in cases of international parental or familial child abduction, encourages States to engage in bilateral and, when appropriate, multilateral cooperation to resolve those cases, and in this regard to consider accession to or ratification of the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction and to facilitate, inter alia, the return of the child to the country in which he or she resided immediately before the removal or retention, while taking into consideration the principle of the best interests of the child;

Economic and social well-being of children

12. Reaffirms paragraphs 20 to 29 of its resolution 68/147, paragraphs 42 to 52 of its resolution 61/146 of 19 December 2006 on children and poverty and paragraphs 37 to 42 of its resolution 60/231 of 23 December 2005 on children living with and affected by HIV and AIDS, and calls upon all States and the international community to create an environment in which the well-being of the child is ensured, including by strengthening international cooperation in this field and by implementing their previous commitments relating to poverty eradication, including the Millennium Development Goals, the right to education, including equal access to quality education, and measures to promote human rights education, including the safe and beneficial use of the Internet as a tool for the advancement of the child's social and educational well-being, the right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, including efforts to address the interlinked root causes of preventable mortality and morbidity of children under 5 years of age and to address the situation of children living with or affected by HIV and AIDS and to eliminate mother-to-child transmission of HIV, and, through the provision of adequate nutritious foods and clean drinking water and sanitation, the right to food for all and the right to an adequate standard of living, including housing and clothing;

13. Calls upon all States and the international community to cooperate, support and participate in the global efforts towards poverty eradication and to mobilize all necessary resources and support in that regard, according to national plans and strategies, including through an integrated and multifaceted approach based on the rights and well-being of children;

14. Strongly underlines the importance of giving due consideration to the inclusion of the promotion and protection of the rights and well-being of children in the post-2015 development agenda, including by ending extreme poverty, reducing inequalities and eliminating all forms of violence against children, including harmful practices;

Child labour

15. Calls upon all States to translate into concrete action their commitment to the progressive and effective eradication of child labour that is likely to be hazardous, to interfere with the child's education or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral or social development, to eliminate immediately the worst forms of child labour and to promote education as a key strategy in this regard;

16. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying both the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) and the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) of the International Labour Organization;

17. Recognizes that poverty and social exclusion, labour mobility, discrimination and lack of adequate social protection and educational opportunity as well as lack of birth registrations all influence child labour;

Prevention and elimination of violence against children

18. Reaffirms paragraphs 34 to 39 of its resolution 68/147 and paragraphs 47 to 62 of its resolution 62/141 of 18 December 2007 on the elimination of violence against children, condemns all forms of violence against children, and urges all States to implement the measures set out in paragraph 34 of its resolution 68/147 and:

(a) To take effective and appropriate legislative and other measures to prohibit, prevent and eliminate all forms of violence against children in all settings, including harmful practices in all situations, and to strengthen international, national and local cooperation and mutual assistance in this regard;

(b) To exercise due diligence, investigate, prosecute and punish the perpetrators of violence against all children and end impunity, and provide protection as well as universal access to comprehensive social, physical and mental health and legal services and counselling for all victims and survivors, to ensure their full recovery and reintegration into society and, bearing in mind the importance for all children to live free from violence, to address the structural and underlying causes of violence against all children through enhanced prevention measures, research and strengthened coordination and monitoring and evaluation;

(c) To address the gender dimension of all forms of violence against children and incorporate a gender perspective in all policies adopted and actions taken to protect children against all forms of violence, acknowledging that girls and boys face varying risks from different forms of violence at different ages and in different situations;

19. Also reaffirms that violence against children is never justifiable and that it is the duty of States to protect children, including those in conflict with the law, from all forms of violence and human rights violations and to exercise due diligence to prohibit, prevent and investigate acts of violence against children, eliminate impunity and provide assistance to the victims, including preventing revictimization;

20. Strongly condemns the abduction of children, and calls upon all States to take all the appropriate measures to secure their unconditional release, rehabilitation and reintegration and their reunification with their families;

21. Notes with appreciation the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children to advance the implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations study on violence against children and to continue to promote the prevention and elimination of all forms of violence against children, including through her regional and thematic consultations and field missions, and to continue the effective and independent performance of her mandate set out in resolution 62/141, as well as thematic reports addressing emerging concerns, such as the risks associated with information and communications technologies for the protection of children from violence;

22. Also notes with appreciation the adoption of the United Nations Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Children in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, encourages States to take effective measures for their dissemination and implementation, as appropriate, and invites relevant United Nations actors to support Member States, where appropriate, to this end through concerted efforts;

Promoting and protecting the rights of children, including children in particularly difficult situations

23. Reaffirms paragraphs 40 to 48 of its resolution 68/147, and calls upon all States to promote and protect all human rights of all children, to implement evidence-based programmes and measures that provide them with special protection and assistance, including access to health care and inclusive and quality education and social services, to consider implementing voluntary repatriation, reintegration where appropriate and feasible, family tracing and family reunification, in particular for children who are unaccompanied, and to ensure that the best interests of the child are a primary consideration;

24. Calls upon all States to ensure, for children belonging to minorities and vulnerable groups, including migrant children and indigenous children, the enjoyment of all human rights, as well as access to health care, social services and education, on an equal basis with others and to ensure that all such children, in particular unaccompanied migrant children and those who are victims of violence and exploitation, receive appropriate protection and assistance;

Migrant children

25. Reaffirms the need to promote and protect effectively the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrant children, regardless of their migration status, and to address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation and dialogue and through a comprehensive and balanced approach, recognizing the roles and responsibilities of countries of origin, transit and destination in promoting and protecting the human rights of all migrant children, and avoiding approaches that might aggravate their vulnerability;

26. Expresses the commitment to protect the human rights of migrant children, given their vulnerability, particularly unaccompanied migrant children, and to provide for their health, education and psychosocial development, ensuring that the best interests of the child are a primary consideration in policies of integration, return and family reunification;

Children and the administration of justice

27. Encourages continued regional and cross-regional efforts, the sharing of best practices and the provision of technical assistance in the field of juvenile justice, and notes in this regard the initiative to convene a world congress on juvenile justice in Geneva from 26 to 30 January 2015;

28. Takes note with appreciation of Human Rights Council resolution 25/6 of 27 March 2014 on the rights of the child: access to justice for children, and recalls in this regard the thematic report entitled "Promoting restorative justice for children", issued by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children in 2013;

29. Reaffirms paragraphs 49 to 57 of its resolution 68/147, and calls upon all States to respect and protect the rights of children alleged to have infringed or recognized as having infringed penal law, as well as children of persons alleged to have infringed or recognized as having infringed penal law;

30. Encourages States to develop and implement a comprehensive juvenile justice policy to protect and address the needs of children in contact with the law, with a view to promoting, inter alia, crime prevention programmes, the use of alternative measures, such as diversion, restorative justice and community-based programmes that focus on the rehabilitation and reintegration of the child, and ensuring compliance with the principle that deprivation of liberty of children should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, as well as to avoid, wherever possible, the use of pretrial detention for children;

Prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

31. Reaffirms paragraph 58 of its resolution 68/147, and calls upon all States to prevent, criminalize, prosecute and punish all forms of sale and trafficking of children, including for the purposes of removal of organs of the child for profit, child slavery, sexual exploitation of children, child prostitution and child pornography, with the aim of eradicating those practices and the use of the Internet and other information and communications technologies for these purposes, to combat the existence of a market that encourages such criminal practices and take measures to eliminate the demand that fosters them, as well as to address the rights and needs of victims effectively and take effective measures against the criminalization of children who are victims of exploitation;

Children affected by armed conflict

32. Reaffirms paragraphs 59 to 70 of its resolution 68/147, and condemns in the strongest terms all violations and abuses committed against children in armed conflict, and in this regard urges all States and other parties to armed conflict that are engaged, in contravention of applicable international law, including humanitarian law, in the recruitment and use of children, in patterns of killing and maiming of children and/or rape and other sexual violence against children, acknowledging that sexual violence in these situations disproportionately affects girls, and in recurrent attacks on schools and/or hospitals and related personnel, as well as in all other violations and abuses against children, to take time-bound and effective measures to end them;

33. Recalls, in accordance with international humanitarian law, that indiscriminate attacks against civilians, including children, are prohibited and that civilians shall not be the object of attack, including by way of reprisal or disproportionate attacks, condemns such practices resulting in the killing and maiming of children, and demands that all parties immediately put an end to such attacks;

34. Urges States, United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, other relevant international and regional organizations and civil society to give serious attention to, and to protect and assist child victims of, all violations and abuses committed against children in situations of armed conflict, in accordance with international humanitarian law, including the First to Fourth Geneva Conventions;

35. Calls upon States to protect children affected by armed conflict, in particular from violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law, and to ensure that they receive timely, effective humanitarian assistance, noting the efforts taken to end impunity by ensuring accountability and punishing perpetrators, and calls upon the international community to hold those responsible for violations accountable, inter alia, through the International Criminal Court;

36. Remains deeply concerned, however, over the lack of progress on the ground in some situations where parties to armed conflict continue to violate with impunity the relevant provisions of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflict;

37. Expresses deep concern about attacks, as well as threats of attacks, in contravention of applicable international law against schools and/or hospitals, and protected persons in relation to them, welcomes the publication of the guidance note on Security Council resolution 1998(2011) of 12 July 2011 on attacks on schools and hospitals by the Office of the Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict in collaboration with the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and notes the adoption of Security Council resolution 2143(2014) of 7 March 2014;

38. Welcomes in this regard the “Children, not soldiers” campaign initiated by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the United Nations Children’s Fund, in collaboration with other United Nations partners, aimed at ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children by the armed forces concerned by 2016, and requests the Special Representative to report on progress in her next report to the General Assembly;

Progress achieved and challenges in protecting children from discrimination and overcoming inequalities in the light of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

39. Reaffirms that the Convention on the Rights of the Child constitutes the standard in the promotion and protection of the rights of the child, and that States parties to the Convention shall undertake all appropriate legislative, administrative and other measures for the implementation of the rights recognized therein, while bearing in mind the importance of the Optional Protocols to the Convention;

40. Recognizes that the full realization of children’s rights requires the adoption and implementation of comprehensive laws, policies and programmes for all children, taking into account the right of the child to express his or her views freely in all matters affecting him or her, the views of the child being given due weight in accordance with his or her age and maturity;

41. Also recognizes that financial and material poverty, or conditions directly and uniquely imputable to such poverty, should never be the only justification for the removal of a child from the care of his or her parents or primary caregivers, for receiving a child into alternative care or for preventing his or her reintegration, but should be seen as a signal for the need to provide appropriate support to the family;

42. Expresses its concern that children with disabilities, particularly girls, are often at greater risk, both within and outside the home, of physical or mental violence, injury or abuse, including sexual abuse, neglect or negligent treatment and maltreatment or exploitation;

43. Calls upon States parties to respect and ensure the rights set forth in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto and to take all appropriate measures to ensure that all children are protected against all forms of discrimination, violence, including sexual violence, abuse and exploitation and traditional, customary harmful practices, which can be harmful to the child’s physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development;

44. Calls upon all Member States to take all appropriate measures to safeguard the realization of the rights of the child in a manner conducive to his or her fullest possible social inclusion and individual development;

45. Encourages States to consider the guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights in the formulation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies and programmes to implement the post-2015 development agenda;

46. Recognizes that, in order to further the positive impacts achieved through the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Millennium

Development Goals, the post-2015 development agenda will need to consider people living in poverty and in vulnerable situations as well as the most marginalized and excluded populations, including children, which are most at risk and in need of protection;

47. Also recognizes that children may face additional barriers in accessing justice, and reaffirms the duty of States to respect and ensure an effective remedy and access to justice for each child within their jurisdiction without discrimination of any kind;

48. Calls upon all States to include the relevant provisions to protect children from discrimination and overcome inequalities and, in particular:

(a) To take all necessary and effective measures to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence and discrimination motivated by intolerance or prejudice of any kind;

(b) To incorporate special measures in formal and non-formal education and other programmes to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance affecting children;

(c) To address the root causes of inequality and remove barriers that prevent children, particularly those who suffer the worst deprivations in society, from accessing education, health care, adequate nutritious food, sanitation, clean water, protection and other services necessary for their survival, growth and development;

(d) To take all necessary and effective measures to prevent and eliminate all forms of discrimination against girls and all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, rape, sexual abuse, forced sterilization and harmful traditional or customary practices, including female genital mutilation and child, early and forced marriage, by enacting and enforcing legislation and, where appropriate, by formulating comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to protect girls, as well as by promoting awareness-raising and social mobilization initiatives for the protection of their rights;

(e) To eliminate all forms of discrimination against girls and to take measures to address stereotyped gender roles and other prejudices based on the idea of the inferiority or the superiority of either of the sexes, and to mainstream in this context a gender perspective in all development and human rights policies and programmes related to children and those specific to the girl child;

(f) To take measures to collect and disaggregate relevant information, including statistical and research data, as appropriate, in order to identify the barriers faced by children, especially those who are marginalized or in vulnerable situations, in exercising their rights;

(g) To develop and strengthen the collection, analysis and dissemination of data for national statistics on children as far as possible and to use data disaggregated by relevant factors that may lead to disparities and other statistical indicators at the subnational, national, subregional, regional and international levels in order to develop and assess social and other policies and programmes so that economic and social resources are used efficiently and effectively for the full realization of the rights of the child;

(h) To take steps to design and implement preventive and comprehensive anti-bullying measures, including in educational settings, that address bullying and peer-directed aggression against children, which could include the training of educators and family members and also raising awareness of this matter among children;

(i) To take all necessary measures to ensure universal access to birth registration of all children immediately after birth, including those living in remote areas, by, inter alia, removing barriers that impede their registration, moving towards the provision of free birth registration, ensuring the existence of a simple, effective, expeditious and accessible birth registration system, including late birth registration, ensuring the right of every child to a name and the right to acquire a nationality, respecting the selection by parents of a name of their own choosing, respecting the child's preservation of his or her identity and, as far as possible, protecting the child's knowing and being cared for by his or her parents;

(j) In accordance with article 7 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to continuously raise awareness of the importance of birth registration at the national, regional and local levels, to ensure free or low-fee late birth registration, to ensure that all legal and procedural impediments to the registration of children who reside in a State party are addressed and to ensure that children who have not been registered enjoy their human rights and have access without discrimination to health care, quality education, protection from violence, safe drinking water and sanitation and other basic services;

(k) To design and implement programmes to provide pregnant adolescents and adolescent mothers with education, including access to quality education, social services and support, to enable them to continue and complete their education and protect them from discrimination, as well as to ensure a healthy and safe pregnancy;

(l) To develop and implement educational programmes and teaching materials, including comprehensive evidence-based education on human sexuality, based on full and accurate information, for all adolescents and youth, in a manner consistent with their evolving capacities, with appropriate direction and guidance from parents and legal guardians, with the involvement of children, adolescents, youth and communities, and in coordination with women's, youth and specialized non-governmental organizations, in order to modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women of all ages, to eliminate prejudices and to promote and build decision-making, communication and risk reduction skills for the development of respectful relationships based on gender equality and human rights, as well as teacher education and training programmes for both formal and non-formal education;

(m) To take all measures necessary to ensure that children enjoy the right to the highest attainable standard of health, in keeping with existing obligations, including by ensuring that all children and adolescents have access to quality, free or affordable, gender-sensitive, appropriate health-care services, including age-appropriate health-care programmes in the area of sexual and reproductive health, taking into account the needs and evolving capacities of the child;

(n) To adopt legislative and other appropriate measures, including cross-sectoral approaches, to ensure the full realization by all children of the right to education, including their access to quality education, on the basis of equal opportunity, in a manner conducive to their fullest possible social inclusion and individual development, including through the provision of compulsory primary education that is available free to all and to take all appropriate measures to make all other levels and all forms of education available and accessible to all children without discrimination;

(o) To take all appropriate measures to ensure protection and safety for all children, including the prevention of sexual abuse and exploitation, during and after situations of risk, situations of armed conflict, humanitarian emergencies and natural disasters, by adopting and implementing prevention and response programmes, including those related to the recruitment of children by armed forces and armed groups in contravention of applicable international law, to ensure the physical and psychological recovery, family reunification and social reintegration of these children and ensure that such recovery, reintegration and rehabilitation take place in an environment which fosters the well-being, health, self-respect and dignity of the child;

49. Calls upon all Member States, and invites the United Nations system, to strengthen international cooperation to ensure the realization of the rights of the child, including the most marginalized and excluded children, inter alia, by supporting national initiatives that give more emphasis to the development of the most marginalized and excluded children, as appropriate, and by reinforcing international cooperation measures in fields of research or on the transfer of technology such as assistive technologies;

50. Calls upon the relevant entities, funds and programmes of the United Nations system, and invites the international financial and donor institutions and bilateral donors, to support, when requested, national initiatives, including development programmes, for the most marginalized and excluded children, financially and technically, as well as to enhance effective international cooperation and partnerships to strengthen knowledge-sharing and capacity-building, with particular attention to policy development, programme development, research and professional training;

Follow-up

51. Recognizes the work of the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, its increased level of activity and the progress achieved since the establishment of the mandate of the Special Representative, and, bearing in mind its resolution 63/241 of 24 December 2008 and paragraphs 35 to 37 of its resolution 51/77 of 12 December 1996, recommends that the Secretary-General extend the mandate of the Special Representative for a further period of three years;

52. Decides:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the rights of the child containing information on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the issues addressed in the present resolution, with a focus on the right to education;

(b) To request the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict to continue to submit reports to the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council on the activities undertaken in the fulfilment of her mandate, including information on her field visits and on the progress achieved and the challenges remaining on the children and armed conflict agenda;

(c) To request the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children to continue to submit annual reports to the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council on the activities undertaken in the fulfilment of her mandate, consistent with paragraphs 58 and 59 of its resolution 62/141, including information on her field visits and on the progress achieved and the challenges remaining on the violence against children agenda, and, in accordance with paragraph 39 of its resolution 68/147, to ensure that the effective performance and the sustainability of the core activities of the mandate of the Special Representative are maintained;

(d) To invite the Secretary-General to commission an in-depth global study on children deprived of liberty, funded through voluntary contributions and conducted in close cooperation with relevant United Nations agencies and offices, including but not limited to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children, as well as the Inter-agency Panel on Juvenile Justice, and in consultation with relevant stakeholders, including Member States, civil society, academia and children, and to include good practices and recommendations for action to effectively realize all relevant rights of the child, including supporting the implementation of the United Nations Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Children in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and invites the Secretary-General to submit the conclusions of the study to the General Assembly at its seventy-second session;

(e) To request the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography to continue to submit reports to the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council on the activities undertaken in the fulfilment of her mandate, including information on her field visits and on the progress achieved and the challenges remaining on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography agenda;

(f) To invite the Chair of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to present an oral report on the work of the Committee and engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its seventieth session as a way to enhance communication between the Assembly and the Committee;

(g) To continue its consideration of the question at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of the rights of children", focusing section III of the resolution entitled "Rights of the child" on the theme "Right to education".

Convention on migrant workers

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594] and which entered into force in 2003 [YUN 2003, p. 676], remained at 47.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families held its twentieth (31 March–11 April) [A/69/48] and twenty-first (1–5 September) [A/70/48] sessions in Geneva. Under article 74 of the Convention, the Committee considered reports of Ghana, Uruguay, El Salvador, Mali and the Philippines and adopted concluding observations on them. The Committee also considered the situation in Belize, in the absence of a report, as well as in the absence of a delegation, and adopted concluding observations on the State party.

At its twentieth session, the Committee held a general discussion on workplace exploitation and workplace protection, which highlighted the various forms of abuse experienced by migrant workers, particularly those in temporary or seasonal employment, and those in an irregular or undocumented situation. At its twenty-first session, the Committee decided that it would develop a general comment on the human rights of children in the context of migration.

(On the Organization's efforts to protect the rights of migrants, see also p. 797.)

Convention on rights of persons with disabilities

Accessions and ratification

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 61/106 [YUN 2006, p. 785], rose to 151, with Andorra, Angola, Burundi, the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Georgia, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Japan, the State of Palestine and Switzerland becoming parties during the year.

The Optional Protocol, which established an individual complaints mechanism, had 85 States parties by year's end, with Andorra, Angola, Burundi, the Congo, Denmark and Gabon becoming parties.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 67/160 [YUN 2012, p. 616], the Secretary-General, in August, submitted a report [A/69/284] on the status of the Convention, the work of the Conference of States Parties to the Convention, the activities of the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (see below), and an overview of the progress made by UN system entities and civil society organizations to implement the Convention.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities held its eleventh (31 March–11 April) [CRPD/C/11/2] and twelfth (15 September–3 October) [CRPD/C/12/2] sessions in Geneva. The Committee considered initial reports, under article 35 of the Convention of Azerbaijan, Belgium, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Mexico, New Zealand, the Republic of Korea and Sweden and adopted concluding observations on them. The Committee adopted its general comments No. 1 on equal recognition before the law and No. 2 on accessibility at its eleventh session; and decided to establish a working group to prepare a draft general comment on independent living and on education at its twelfth session.

The Committee submitted to the General Assembly its third biennial report [A/70/55] covering activities from its ninth and tenth [YUN 2013, p. 612], and eleventh and twelfth sessions.

(On the Organization's efforts to protect the rights of persons with disabilities see also p. 884.)

Convention for protection from enforced disappearance

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 61/177 [YUN 2006, p. 800], rose to 44, with Portugal, Slovakia and Togo becoming parties during the year.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 68/166 [YUN 2013, p. 612], the Secretary-General, in July, submitted a report [A/69/214] on the status of the Convention, communications from States parties and activities to implement the resolution.

Implementation

Monitoring Body. The Committee on Enforced Disappearances held its sixth (17–28 March) [A/69/56] and seventh (15–26 September) [A/70/56] sessions in Geneva. The Committee considered reports, under article 29 of the Convention, of Belgium, Germany, the Netherlands and Paraguay and adopted concluding observations on them. At its sixth session, the Committee decided to entrust the Rapporteur on follow-up to concluding observations to remind States parties, between sessions, of the requirement to submit, within one year, information on the measures taken to implement the concluding observations that the Committee considered a priority. It also held a public thematic discussion on enforced disappearance and military justice. At its seventh session, the Committee adopted a document entitled: "The relationship of the Committee on Enforced Disappearances with national human rights institutions"; a guidance note on the conduct of the dialogues; and a framework for the concluding observations. It also decided to give precedence to the examination of the report on Iraq given the seriousness of the situation in the country; appoint a co-rapporteur on follow-up to concluding observations; and use English, Spanish and French as its working languages and use Arabic when necessary.

In October, the Rapporteurs for follow-up to concluding observations submitted their annual report [CED/C/7/2] to the Committee.

(On the Organization's efforts to combat enforced or involuntary disappearances, see also p. 830.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/169 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 61/177 of 20 December 2006, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance,

Recalling its resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance as a body of principles for all States,

Recalling also all its other resolutions on the matter, including resolution 68/166 of 18 December 2013, as well as relevant resolutions adopted by the Human Rights Council, including resolution 27/1 of 25 September 2014,

Recalling further its resolution 68/165 of 18 December 2013 on the right to the truth, as well as Human Rights Council resolution 27/3 of 25 September 2014 on the Special Rapporteur of the Council on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence,

Recalling its resolution 68/268 of 9 April 2014 on strengthening and enhancing the effective functioning of the human rights treaty body system,

Recalling also that no one shall be subjected to enforced disappearance,

Recalling further that no exceptional circumstance whatsoever may be invoked as a justification for enforced disappearance,

Recalling that no one shall be held in secret detention,

Deeply concerned, in particular, by the increase in enforced or involuntary disappearances in various regions of the world, including arrest, detention and abduction, when these are part of or amount to enforced disappearances, and by the growing number of reports concerning harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who have disappeared,

Recalling that the Convention sets out the right of victims to know the truth regarding the circumstances of the enforced disappearance, the progress and results of the investigation and the fate of the disappeared person, and sets forth State party obligations to take appropriate measures in this regard,

Recalling also that the Convention defines the victim of enforced disappearance as the disappeared person and any individual who has suffered harm as the direct result of an enforced disappearance,

Acknowledging that the widespread and systematic practice of enforced disappearance is recognized in the Convention as a crime against humanity, as defined in applicable international law,

Stressing the importance of the work of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances,

Acknowledging the valuable work of the International Committee of the Red Cross in promoting compliance with international humanitarian law in this field,

1. Recognizes the importance of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, the ratification and the implementation of which will be a significant contribution to ending impunity and to promoting and protecting all human rights for all;

2. Welcomes the fact that 94 States have signed the Convention and 44 have ratified or acceded to it, and calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, as well as to consider the option provided for in articles 31 and 32 of the Convention regarding the Committee on Enforced Disappearances;

3. Also welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to increase their intensive efforts to assist States in becoming parties to the Convention, including by supporting the actions of States to ratify the Convention, providing technical and capacity-building assistance to States and civil society and raising awareness about the Convention, with a view to achieving universal adherence;

5. Requests United Nations agencies and organizations, and invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to continue making efforts to disseminate information on the Convention, to promote understanding of it and to assist States parties in implementing their obligations under this instrument;

6. Welcomes the work achieved by the Committee on Enforced Disappearances, and encourages all States parties to the Convention to submit their reports, to support and promote the work of the Committee and to implement its recommendations;

7. Recognizes the importance of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance as a body of principles for all States designed to punish enforced disappearances, to prevent their commission and to help victims of such acts and their families to seek fair, prompt and adequate reparation;

8. Welcomes the cooperation established between the Working Group and the Committee, within the framework of their respective mandates, and encourages further cooperation in the future;

9. Takes note with interest of all the general comments of the Working Group, including the most recent comments on children and women affected by enforced disappearances, and recognizes in this regard that enforced disappearances have special consequences for women and vulnerable groups, especially children, as they most often bear the serious economic hardships that usually accompany such disappearances and, when subjected to enforced disappearances themselves, may become particularly vulnerable to sexual and other forms of violence;

10. Invites the Chair of the Committee and the Chair of the Working Group to address and engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights";

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the status of the Convention and the implementation of the present resolution.

Convention on genocide

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, 146 States were parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948–1949, p. 959], with Malta and the State of Palestine becoming parties during the year.

Genocide prevention

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 22/22 [YUN 2013, p. 613], a high-level panel discussion dedicated to the sixty-fifth anniversary of the Convention (Geneva, 7 March) was convened at the Council's twenty-fifth (2014) session and the High Commissioner submitted a summary [A/HRC/27/24] report on its outcome. In addressing the issue of preventing genocide, particularly in connection with early warning signs, the panellists highlighted the importance of using existing mechanisms, establishing a national architecture with focal points for atrocity crimes, and strengthening national capacity. They also recommended that the Council should consider using the Analysis Framework on the prevention of genocide, developed by the Office on Genocide Prevention and the Responsibility to Protect [YUN 2009, p. 644], in its prevention works and in conducting appropriate assessments of critical situations.

General aspects

Human rights treaty body system

Meeting of Chairs. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 57/202 [YUN 2002, p. 623], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the report [A/69/285] on the twenty-sixth meeting of the Chairs of the UN human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 23–27 June), which was held to consider the implementation of Assembly resolution 68/268 (see p. 756) on strengthening the functioning of the human rights treaty body system, as well as follow-up to the recommendations of the twenty-fifth meeting [YUN 2013, p. 613]. In the context of the intergovernmental process on treaty body strengthening, the Chairs met with States parties, civil society organizations and the International Coordinating Committee of national human rights institutions. Other topics discussed included reprisals against individuals and groups engaging or seeking to engage with the treaty bodies; complementarity between the work of the treaty bodies and the universal periodic review (UPR); harmonization of working methods through simplified reporting procedures [HRI/MC/2014/4]; constructive dialogue between treaty bodies and States parties [HRI/MC/2014/3]; and concluding observations [HRI/MC/2014/2]. The Chairs' decisions and recommendations were contained in section VII of the report.

The General Assembly, on 18 December (decision 69/536) took note of the report.

Secretariat note. By a July note [A/HRC/27/61], the secretariat advised that the twenty-first meeting of the special procedures of the Human Rights Council was rescheduled (see below) due to the decision of the Council to postpone the appointments of a number of new special procedures mandate holders until 8 May.

Meeting of Special Rapporteurs, Independent Experts and chairpersons. The High Commissioner transmitted to the Council the report [A/HRC/28/41] on the twenty-first meeting of special rapporteurs/representatives, independent experts and chairpersons of working groups of special procedures of the Council (Geneva, 29 September–3 October), which focused on the special procedure system. Mandate holders exchanged views with the High Commissioner and the Council President and met with various stakeholders. Discussions addressed methods of work, engagement with stakeholders, challenges confronting the system, and thematic issues, including women's human rights and protection of the family, sustainable development goals and climate change. During 2014, the Council established three new mandates: on the rights of persons with disabilities, on the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights and on capacity-building and technical cooperation with Côte d'Ivoire in the field of human rights.

Other activities

Strengthening action to promote human rights

International cooperation in the field of human rights

Advisory Committee report. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 23/3 [YUN 2013, p. 616], the Advisory Committee submitted a research-based report [A/HRC/26/41] on the ways and means to enhance international cooperation in the field of human rights, which discussed key challenges to international cooperation, the involvement of civil society and of national human rights institutions, efforts to realize the right to development, South-South cooperation in the human rights area, human rights education, human rights across the global institutional system, and the global infrastructure for human rights cooperation, the voluntary funds, and human rights cooperation in the field of migration. The report concluded with a series of suggestions aimed at forming the basis for immediate action by the Council.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/3)], the Council urged States to take measures to enhance bilateral, regional and international cooperation aimed at addressing the adverse impact of consecutive and compounded global crises—such as financial and economic crises, food crises, climate change and natural disasters—on the full enjoyment of human rights. It also re-emphasized its request to the Advisory Committee to prepare a more focused and in-depth study on the ways and means to enhance international cooperation in the field of human rights [YUN 2013, p. 616] and to submit a progress report to the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/179 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to promoting international cooperation, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular Article 1, paragraph 3, as well as relevant provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993 for enhancing genuine cooperation among Member States in the field of human rights,

Recalling its adoption of the United Nations Millennium Declaration on 8 September 2000 and its resolution 68/160 of 18 December 2013, Human Rights Council resolution 25/3 of 27 March 2014 and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights on the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights,

Recalling also the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, the Durban Review Conference, held in Geneva from 20 to 24 April 2009, and the political declaration of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and their role in the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights is essential for the full achievement of the purposes of the United Nations, including the effective promotion and protection of all human rights,

Recognizing also that the promotion and protection of human rights should be based on the principle of cooperation and genuine dialogue and aimed at strengthening the capacity of Member States to comply with their human rights obligations for the benefit of all human beings,

Reaffirming that dialogue among religions, cultures and civilizations in the field of human rights could contribute greatly to the enhancement of international cooperation in this field,

Emphasizing the need for further progress in the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through, inter alia, international cooperation,

Underlining the fact that mutual understanding, dialogue, cooperation, transparency and confidence-building are important elements in all activities for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling the adoption of resolution 2000/22 of 18 August 2000, on the promotion of dialogue on human rights issues, by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights at its fifty-second session,

1. Reaffirms that it is one of the purposes of the United Nations and the responsibility of all Member States to promote, protect and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through, inter alia, international cooperation;

2. Recognizes that, in addition to their separate responsibilities to their individual societies, States have a collective responsibility to uphold the principles of human dignity, equality and equity at the global level;

3. Reaffirms that dialogue among cultures and civilizations facilitates the promotion of a culture of tolerance and respect for diversity, and welcomes in this regard the holding of conferences and meetings at the national, regional and international levels on dialogue among civilizations;

4. Urges all actors on the international scene to build an international order based on inclusion, justice, equality and equity, human dignity, mutual understanding and promotion of and respect for cultural diversity and universal human rights and to reject all doctrines of exclusion based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

5. Reaffirms the importance of the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of human rights and for the achievement of the objectives of the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

6. Considers that international cooperation in the field of human rights, in conformity with the purposes and principles set out in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Reaffirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms should be guided by the principles of universality, non-selectivity, cooperation and genuine dialogue, objectivity and transparency, in a manner consistent with the purposes and principles set out in the Charter;

8. Emphasizes the need for a cooperative approach on the part of all stakeholders to resolving human rights issues in international forums;

9. Also emphasizes the role of international cooperation in support of national efforts and in increasing the capacities of Member States in the field of human rights through, inter alia, the enhancement of their cooperation with human rights mechanisms, including through the provision of technical assistance, upon the request of and in accordance with the priorities set by the States concerned;

10. Calls upon Member States, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to continue to carry out a constructive dialogue and consultations for the enhancement of understanding and the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and encourages non-governmental organizations to contribute actively to this endeavour;

11. Urges States to take measures necessary to enhance bilateral, regional and international cooperation aimed at addressing the adverse impact of consecutive and compounded global crises, such as financial and economic crises, food crises, climate change and natural disasters, on the full enjoyment of human rights;

12. Invites States and relevant United Nations human rights mechanisms and procedures to continue to pay attention to the importance of mutual cooperation, understanding and dialogue in ensuring the promotion and protection of all human rights;

13. Recalls the seminar on the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights held in 2013, with the participation of States, relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes and other stakeholders, including academic experts and civil society;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to consult States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on ways and means, as well as on obstacles and challenges and possible proposals to overcome them, for the enhancement of international cooperation and genuine dialogue in the United Nations human rights machinery, including the Human Rights Council;

15. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its seventieth session.

National policies and human rights

OHCHR report. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 23/19 [YUN 2013, p. 618], OHCHR submitted a July report [A/HRC/27/41] on technical assistance and capacity-building options for integrating human rights into national policies, which provided information on worldwide practices undertaken by States, with OHCHR support, in developing and applying methodologies to integrate human rights into national policies and programmes. The report was based on research undertaken by OHCHR on national and regional experiences in integrating human rights into public policies and programmes, taking into account national legislative frameworks and regional and international human rights instruments.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/26)], the Council recommended that States integrate a human rights perspective into their national policies; decided to convene at its twenty-eighth (2015) session a panel discussion on the issue of national policies and human rights, with a particular focus on the findings of the OHCHR report on technical assistance (see above), identifying challenges, further development and good practices in mainstreaming human rights in national policies and programmes; and requested the High Commissioner to submit a summary report on the outcome before the Council's thirtieth (2015) session.

Advisory services and technical cooperation

Voluntary fund

Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 18/18 [YUN 2011, p. 641], the Chairperson of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights submitted a report [A/HRC/29/48] on the Board's work in 2014, including activities since the previous report [YUN 2013, p. 618].

The Board held its thirty-ninth (Mexico, 17–21 February) [A/HRC/26/51] and fortieth (Geneva, 14–16 October) [A/HRC/29/48] sessions. In 2014, the Fund provided resources for technical cooperation to build strong national human rights frameworks in 30 regions, countries and territories. That included support for 16 human rights advisers in 16 countries, 8 human rights components of peace missions and 6 country/stand-alone offices. The activities conducted under the Fund had resulted in efforts made at the country level to incorporate international human rights standards into national laws, policies and practices; the establishment of national capacities to adhere to those standards; strengthened administration of justice; the development of human rights education programmes; increased capacities with regard to gender equality and women's rights; and the establishment of responsive national human rights institutions. The Fund's balance as at 31 December was $12,984,588. Income amounted to $18,052,071 and expenditures to $20,201,720.

OHCHR report. Pursuant to Council resolution 24/31 [YUN 2013, p. 618], OHCHR submitted a report [A/HRC/26/24] on activities undertaken to support efforts by States to promote and protect the rights of persons with disabilities in their national legislations, policies and programmes. The report served as a basis for the thematic panel discussion on "Technical cooperation and capacity-building in advancing the rights of persons with disabilities through legal and institutional frameworks, including public-private partnerships", convened during the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session (Geneva, 25 June) [A/HRC/26/2].

The Deputy High Commissioner opened the panel discussion with an overview of successes, best practices and challenges in OHCHR technical assistance and capacity building efforts and five panellists made statements.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/20)], the Council decided that the theme for the annual thematic panel discussion during its twenty-eighth (2015) session should be "Technical cooperation to support inclusive and participatory development and poverty eradication at the national level". It requested the High Commissioner to report on OHCHR technical assistance to support inclusive and participatory development at the national level to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session, to serve as a basis for the thematic panel discussion.

Regional arrangements

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 24/19 [YUN 2013, p. 619], the High Commissioner organized a workshop on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights (Geneva, 8–9 October) [A/HRC/28/31]. Participants agreed on a number of proposals and recommendations aimed at enhancing cooperation between UN and regional human rights mechanisms with regard to mainstreaming economic, social and cultural rights, in particular those of persons with disabilities and of women. The report contained a summary of the discussions held during the workshop, as well as its conclusions and recommendations.

South-West Asia and the Arab Region

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/241 [YUN 2013, p. 620], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/69/333] on the activities, from August 2013 to July 2014, of the United Nations Human Rights Training and Documentation Centre for South-West Asia and the Arab Region, established by Assembly resolution 60/153 [YUN 2005, p. 754]. The Secretary-General concluded that the Centre, located in Doha, Qatar, continued to establish itself as a key partner in the region, and had demonstrated its capacity to implement a wide range of training and documentation activities in the field of human rights. The increasing demand placed on the Centre by States and other stakeholders revealed a growing recognition of the Centre's role and impact on strengthening human rights capacities in the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/171 by recorded vote (182-1-3) [agenda item 68 (b)].

United Nations Human Rights Training and Documentation Centre for South-West Asia and the Arab Region

The General Assembly,

Guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of 1993, which reiterated the need to consider the possibility of establishing regional and subregional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights where they do not already exist,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/127 of 16 December 1977 and 51/102 of 12 December 1996 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling further its resolutions 60/153 of 16 December 2005, 67/162 of 20 December 2012 and 68/241 of 27 December 2013 on the United Nations Human Rights Training and Documentation Centre for South-West Asia and the Arab Region,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/51 of 9 March 1993 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Reaffirming that regional cooperation plays a fundamental role in promoting and protecting human rights and should reinforce universal human rights, as contained in international human rights instruments, and their protection,

Noting that the developments in the Middle East and North Africa have generated growing demand for the services of the Centre, and recognizing that the report of the Secretary-General indicates that regular budget resources have been allocated to reinforce the staffing capacity of the Centre, thereby enabling it to better respond to training and documentation demands in a more timely and adequate manner, and to help to fill the gaps in terms of expertise and relevant Arabic-language training materials,

Mindful of the vastness and the diversity of the needs in the field of human rights within South-West Asia and the Arab region, and taking into account the need for appropriate and sustainable funding of the Centre to fully realize its significant function and crucial role in the region,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with appreciation the successful assistance that the United Nations Human Rights Training and Documentation Centre for South-West Asia and the Arab Region has provided through human rights capacity-building activities, technical assistance programmes and training programmes on combating human trafficking, human rights and media, human rights and diplomacy, human rights education and police training on human rights, as well as support to national human rights institutions and regional consultations on the topics of United Nations human rights mechanisms;

3. Underlines the Centre's role as a source for regional expertise and the need to meet an increasing number of requests for training and documentation, including in the Arabic language;

4. Notes that the increasing demand that has been placed on the Centre by Member States and other stakeholders reveals a growing recognition of its role and impact on strengthening human rights capacities in the region;

5. Encourages the continued engagement of the Centre to work with other United Nations regional offices to strengthen its work and to avoid duplication;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report, in accordance with existing rules and procedures, on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/171:

National human rights institutions

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 23/17 [YUN 2013, p. 621], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/HRC/27/39] covering activities undertaken by OHCHR from April 2013 to August 2014 to establish and strengthen national human rights institutions, cooperation between those institutions and the international human rights system, and OHCHR support to the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and relevant regional networks. The Secretary-General concluded the report with recommendations to States and to national institutions. He encouraged States to establish a national human rights institution where none existed and to strengthen existing ones; and to ensure that national human rights institutions were provided with a broad mandate to protect and promote all human rights and with adequate human and financial resources. National human rights institutions were encouraged to continue to develop protective measures and mechanisms for human rights defenders, engage with the international human rights system, and advocate for their independent participation in the meetings of UN human rights bodies.

The Secretary-General also submitted a report [A/HRC/27/40] covering the activities carried out from May 2013 to March 2014 by the Subcommittee on Accreditation of the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in considering and reviewing applications for accreditation and re-accreditation of national human rights institutions. The report highlighted improvements in the accreditation process and concluded with recommendations. An annex to the report listed 71 national institutions that were compliant with the Paris Principles, adopted by General Assembly resolution 48/134 [YUN 1993, p. 898]; 25 institutions not fully compliant; 10 institutions that were non-compliant; and one institution that had been suspended.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/18)], the Council invited national human rights institutions to include in their cooperation activities the exchange of best practices on strengthening the liaison role between civil society and their Governments; noted the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the International Coordinating Committee (Geneva, 12–14 March); and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council's thirty-third (2016) session on the implementation of the resolution and on the activities of the Committee in accrediting national institutions in compliance with the Paris Principles.

Role of the Ombudsman and other national institutions

By an 8 August note [A/69/287], the Secretary-General advised that the information on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/163 [YUN 2012, p. 623] on the role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights was contained in his report on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights [A/HRC/27/39] (see above). In that report, the Secretary-General summarized various activities of ombudsmen, including in the areas of capacity-building, legal advice and support to regional meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/168 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

The role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed the important and constructive role played by national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights,

Reaffirming its resolutions 65/207 of 21 December 2010 and 67/163 of 20 December 2012 on the role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights,

Recalling the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles), welcomed by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/134 of 20 December 1993 and annexed thereto,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular resolutions 66/169 of 19 December 2011 and 68/171 of 18 December 2013, as well as Human Rights Council resolutions 23/17 of 13 June 2013 and 27/18 of 25 September 2014,

Welcoming the rapidly growing interest throughout the world in the creation and strengthening of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, and recognizing the important role that these institutions can play, in accordance with their mandate, in support of national complaint resolution,

Recognizing the role of the existing Ombudsman, whether a male or female, mediator and other national human rights institutions in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Underlining the importance of the autonomy and independence of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, where they exist, in order to enable them to consider all issues related to their fields of competence,

Considering the role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in promoting good governance in public administrations, as well as improving their relations with citizens, and in strengthening the delivery of public services,

Considering also the important role of the existing Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in contributing to the effective realization of the rule of law and respect for the principles of justice and equality,

Stressing that these institutions, where they exist, can play an important role in advising Governments with respect to bringing national legislation and national practices into line with their international human rights obligations,

Stressing also the importance of international cooperation in the field of human rights, and recalling the role played by regional and international associations of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions in promoting cooperation and sharing best practices,

Noting with satisfaction the active work of the Association of Mediterranean Ombudsmen and the active continuing work of the Ibero-American Federation of Ombudsmen, the Association of Ombudsmen and Mediators of la Francophonie, the Asian Ombudsman Association, the African Ombudsman and Mediators Association, the Arab Ombudsman Network, the European Mediation Network Initiative, the International Ombudsman Institute and other active ombudsman and mediator associations and networks,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General, in which he refers the General Assembly to his report on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights submitted to the Human Rights Council at its twenty-seventh session, in September 2014, and regrets that no specific report on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 67/163 was prepared, as requested in that resolution;

2. Encourages Member States:

(a) To consider the creation or the strengthening of independent and autonomous ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions at the national and, where applicable, the local level;

(b) To endow ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, where they exist, with an adequate constitutional and legislative framework, as well as financial and all other appropriate means in order to ensure the efficient and independent exercise of their mandate and to strengthen the legitimacy and credibility of their actions as mechanisms for the promotion and protection of human rights;

(c) To develop and conduct, as appropriate, outreach activities at the national level, in collaboration with all relevant stakeholders, in order to raise awareness of the important role of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions;

(d) To share and exchange best practices on the work and functioning of their Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, in collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and with the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights and other international and regional ombudsman organizations;

3. Recognizes that, in accordance with the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, it is the right of each State to choose the framework for national institutions, including the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, which is best suited to its particular needs at the national level, in order to promote human rights in accordance with international human rights instruments;

4. Welcomes the active participation of the Office of the High Commissioner in all international and regional meetings of the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions;

5. Encourages the Office of the High Commissioner, through its advisory services, to develop and support activities dedicated to the existing Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions and to strengthen their role within national systems for human rights protection;

6. Encourages the Ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions, where they exist:

(a) To operate, as appropriate, in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles) and other relevant international instruments, in order to strengthen their independence and autonomy and to enhance their capacity to assist Member States in the promotion and protection of human rights;

(b) To request, in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner, their accreditation by the International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, in order to enable them to interact effectively with the relevant human rights bodies of the United Nations system;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular on the obstacles encountered by States in this regard, as well as on best practices in the work and functioning of ombudsman, mediator and other national human rights institutions.

Human rights education

World Programme for Human Rights Education

OHCHR report. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 24/15 [YUN 2013, p. 624], OHCHR submitted an August report [A/HRC/27/28 & Corr.1] on the plan of action for the third phase (2015–2019) of the World Programme for Human Rights Education, proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 59/113 [YUN 2004, p. 678]. The aim of the third phase was to promote human rights training for media professionals and journalists and to strengthen implementation of the first (2005–2009) [YUN 2005, p. 745] and second (2010–2014) [YUN 2010, p. 661] phases of the World Programme, respectively, on human rights education in the primary and secondary school systems; and on human rights education in higher education and human rights training for teachers and educators, civil servants, law enforcement officials and military personnel at all levels. In April and May, the draft plan of action was submitted for review to States, relevant intergovernmental organizations, including UNESCO, national human rights institutions and civil society. OHCHR received 30 replies with comments, which were taken into consideration in the final text.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/12)], the Council adopted the plan of action for the third phase (2015–2019) of the World Programme for Human Rights Education; called upon national human rights institutions to assist in the implementation of human rights education programmes consistent with the plan; requested OHCHR to submit reports on implementation of the second and third phases of the World Programme, respectively, at the Council's thirtieth (2015) and thirty-sixth (2017) sessions; and decided to follow up on the implementation of the World Programme in 2017.

International Decade for People of African Descent

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/33)], the Human Rights Council noted the proclamation by the General Assembly in resolution 68/237 [YUN 2013, p. 625] of the International Decade for People of African Descent, effective from 1 January 2015 to 31 December 2024. It requested the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action to elaborate a programme of activities for the implementation of the Decade at the Working Group's twelfth (2014) session (see p. 788) and present its final report to the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session for adoption and transmission to the General Assembly.

On 18 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/1)], the Council decided to transmit to the Assembly the report of the Working Group containing the draft programme of activities [A/HRC/26/55].

On 30 June, by decision 68/556, the General Assembly decided to extend the informal intergovernmental process on a programme for the implementation of the International Decade in order to finalize the elaboration of a programme for adoption by the Assembly. On 9 September, by decision 68/558, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of and action on the draft resolution on the programme of activities for the implementation of the International Decade until its sixty-ninth session in order to allow time for further consultations on the programme budget implications of the proposal.

On 18 November, by resolution 69/16 (see below), the Assembly adopted the programme of activities for the Decade, which were annexed to the resolution. The theme of the Decade was "People of African descent: recognition, justice and development".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November [meeting 55], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/16 [draft: A/69/L.3] without vote [agenda item 66 (b)].

Programme of activities for the implementation of the International Decade for People of African Descent

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/237 of 23 December 2013, by which it proclaimed the International Decade for People of African Descent, commencing on 1 January 2015 and ending on 31 December 2024, with the theme "People of African descent: recognition, justice and development", to be officially launched immediately following the general debate of the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, and to this end emphasizing the opportunity for achieving important synergy in the combating of all the scourges of racism through the effective observance of the Decade, and in this regard contributing to the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recalling also its resolution 64/169 of 18 December 2009, by which it proclaimed 2011 as the International Year for People of African Descent, bearing in mind the primacy of building on the gains achieved during the implementation of the programme of activities for the Year, and to this end recalling paragraph 61 of its resolution 66/144 of 19 December 2011, by which it encouraged the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent to develop a programme of action, including a theme, for adoption by the Human Rights Council, with a view to proclaiming the International Decade for People of African Descent before the end of 2013,

Recalling further its resolution 52/111 of 12 December 1997, by which it decided to convene the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, and its resolutions 56/266 of 27 March 2002, 57/195 of 18 December 2002, 58/160 of 22 December 2003, 59/177 of 20 December 2004 and 60/144 of 16 December 2005, which guided the comprehensive follow-up to the World Conference and the effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action,

Cognizant of its resolution 62/122 of 17 December 2007, by which it designated 25 March as the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade,

Committed to upholding human dignity and equality for the victims of slavery, the slave trade and colonialism, in particular people of African descent in the African diaspora,

Welcoming the work undertaken by the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action on the elaboration of a draft programme of activities for the implementation of the International Decade for People of African Descent,

Taking note of the report of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the elaboration of a draft programme of activities for the implementation of the Decade,

1. Adopts the programme of activities for the implementation of the International Decade for People of African Descent annexed to the present resolution;

2. Urges States to ensure that activities and objectives for the Decade are planned and implemented in accordance with paragraph 10 of the programme of activities for the implementation of the Decade on the basis of full consultation and collaboration with people of African descent;

3. Decides to appoint the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to act as coordinator of the Decade in order to follow up on the implementation of activities in the framework of the Decade;

4. Requests States and encourages relevant human rights bodies, organs and mechanisms of the United Nations, specialized agencies, funds and programmes, international, regional, subregional and non-governmental organizations, including organizations of people of African descent, national human rights institutions and other stakeholders to develop and implement specific action-oriented activities in their areas of competence;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit annually a progress report on the implementation of the activities of the Decade;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to allocate predictable funding from the regular budget of the United Nations for the effective implementation of the programme of activities for the Decade, and invites Member States and other donors to provide extrabudgetary resources for this purpose;

7. Requests the President of the General Assembly to convene a midterm review to take stock of the progress made and decide on further necessary actions before the seventy-fourth session of the Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a final assessment of the Decade, to take place within the framework of a high-level international event, marking the closure of the Decade;

9. Decides to officially launch the Decade in accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/237 immediately following the general debate of the sixty-ninth session of the Assembly, with the requisite global visibility and appropriate profile, whose modalities shall be coordinated by the President of the Assembly in consultation with Member States.

Annex

Programme of activities for the implementation of the International Decade for People of African Descent

I. Introduction

A. Background

1. The International Decade for People of African Descent, to be observed from 2015 to 2024, constitutes an auspicious period of history when the United Nations, Member States, civil society and all other relevant actors will join together with people of African descent and take effective measures for the implementation of the programme of activities in the spirit of recognition, justice and development. The programme of activities recognizes that the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action is a comprehensive United Nations framework and a solid foundation for combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and represents a new stage in the efforts of the United Nations and the international community to restore the rights and dignity of people of African descent.

2. The implementation of the programme of activities for the International Decade is an integral part of the full and effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and in compliance with the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination as the principal international instruments for the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. Important synergies should therefore be achieved through the International Decade in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

3. The Durban Declaration and Programme of Action acknowledged that people of African descent were victims of slavery, the slave trade and colonialism, and continue to be victims of their consequences. The Durban process raised the visibility of people of African descent and contributed to a substantive advancement in the promotion and protection of their rights as a result of concrete actions taken by States, the United Nations, other international and regional bodies and civil society.

4. Regrettably, despite the above-mentioned advances, racism and racial discrimination, both direct and indirect, de facto and de jure, continue to manifest themselves in inequality and disadvantage. People of African descent throughout the world, whether as descendants of the victims of the transatlantic slave trade or as more recent migrants, constitute some of the poorest and most marginalized groups. Studies and findings by international and national bodies demonstrate that people of African descent still have limited access to quality education, health services, housing and social security. In many cases, their situation remains largely invisible, and insufficient recognition and respect has been given to the efforts of people of African descent to seek redress for their present condition. They all too often experience discrimination in their access to justice, and face alarmingly high rates of police violence, together with racial profiling. Furthermore, their degree of political participation is often low, both in voting and in occupying political positions.

5. People of African descent can suffer from multiple, aggravated or intersecting forms of discrimination based on other related grounds, such as age, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, social origin, property, disability, birth or other status.

6. The promotion and protection of human rights of people of African descent should be a priority concern for the United Nations. In this regard, the International Decade for People of African Descent is a timely and important initiative, a unique opportunity to underline the important contribution made by people of African descent to our societies and to propose concrete measures to promote their full inclusion and to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

B. Theme of the International Decade

7. As proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 68/237, the theme of the International Decade is "People of African descent: recognition, justice and development".

C. Objectives of the International Decade

8. Non-discrimination and equality before and of the law constitute fundamental principles of international human rights law, and underpin the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the main international human rights treaties and instruments. As such, the main objective of the International Decade should be to promote respect, protection and fulfilment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by people of African descent, as recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This main objective can be achieved through the full and effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference and the political declaration commemorating the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and through the universal accession to or ratification of and full implementation of the obligations arising under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and other relevant international and regional human rights instruments.

9. The International Decade shall focus on the following specific objectives:

(a) To strengthen national, regional and international action and cooperation in relation to the full enjoyment of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights by people of African descent and their full and equal participation in all aspects of society;

(b) To promote a greater knowledge of and respect for the diverse heritage, culture and contribution of people of African descent to the development of societies;

(c) To adopt and strengthen national, regional and international legal frameworks in accordance with the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and to ensure their full and effective implementation.

II. Activities to be conducted during the International Decade

A. National level

10. States should take concrete and practical steps through the adoption and effective implementation of national and international legal frameworks, policies and programmes to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance faced by people of African descent, taking into account the particular situation of women, girls and young males, by, inter alia, the activities described below.

1. Recognition

(a) Right to equality and non-discrimination

11. States should:

(a) Remove all obstacles that prevent their equal enjoyment of all human rights, economic, social, cultural, civil and political, including the right to development;

(b) Promote the effective implementation of national and international legal frameworks;

(c) Withdraw reservations contrary to the object and purpose of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and consider withdrawing other reservations;

(d) Undertake a comprehensive review of domestic legislation with a view to identifying and abolishing provisions that entail direct or indirect discrimination;

(e) Adopt or strengthen comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation and ensure its effective implementation;

(f) Provide effective protection for people of African descent, and review and repeal all laws that have a discriminatory effect on people of African descent facing multiple, aggravated or intersecting forms of discrimination;

(g) Adopt, strengthen and implement action-oriented policies, programmes and projects to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance designed to ensure full and equal enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by people of African descent; States are also encouraged to elaborate national plans of action to promote diversity, equality, equity, social justice, equality of opportunity and the participation of all;

(h) Establish and/or strengthen national mechanisms or institutions with a view to formulating, monitoring and implementing policies to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and promoting racial equality, with the participation of representatives of civil society;

(i) As appropriate, establish and/or strengthen independent national human rights institutions, in conformity with the Paris Principles, and/or similar mechanisms with the participation of civil society, and provide them with adequate financial resources, competence and capacity for protection, promotion and monitoring to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

(b) Education on equality and awareness-raising

12. States should:

(a) Celebrate the launch of the International Decade at the national level, and develop national programmes of action and activities for the full and effective implementation of the Decade;

(b) Organize national conferences and other events aimed at triggering an open debate and raising awareness on the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, with the participation of all relevant stakeholders, including government, civil society representatives and individuals or groups of individuals who are victims;

(c) Promote greater knowledge and recognition of and respect for the culture, history and heritage of people of African descent, including through research and education, and promote full and accurate inclusion of the history and contribution of people of African descent in educational curricula;

(d) Promote the positive role that political leaders and political parties, leaders of religious communities and the media could further play in fighting racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance by, inter alia, publicly recognizing and respecting the culture, history and heritage of people of African descent;

(e) Raise awareness through information and education measures with a view to restoring the dignity of people of African descent, and consider making available the support for such activities to non-governmental organizations;

(f) Support education and training initiatives for non-governmental organizations and people of African descent in the use of the tools provided by international human rights instruments relating to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

(g) Ensure that textbooks and other educational materials reflect historical facts accurately as they relate to past tragedies and atrocities, in particular slavery, the slave trade, the transatlantic slave trade and colonialism, so as to avoid stereotypes and the distortion or falsification of these historical facts, which may lead to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including the role of respective countries therein, by:

(i) Supporting research and educational initiatives;

(ii) Giving recognition to the victims and their descendants through the establishment of memorial sites in countries that profited from and/or were responsible for slavery, the slave trade, the transatlantic slave trade and colonialism and past tragedies where there is none, as well as at departure, arrival and relocation points, and by protecting related cultural sites.

(c) Information-gathering

13. In accordance with paragraph 92 of the Durban Programme of Action, States should collect, compile, analyse, disseminate and publish reliable statistical data at the national and local levels and take all other related measures necessary to assess regularly the situation of people of African descent who are victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

14. Such statistical data should be disaggregated in accordance with national legislation, upholding the right to privacy and the principle of self-identification.

15. The information should be collected to monitor the situation of people of African descent, assess progress made, increase their visibility and identify social gaps. It should also be used to assess and guide the formulation of policies and actions to prevent, combat and eradicate racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

(d) Participation and inclusion

16. States should adopt measures to enable the full, equal and effective participation of people of African descent in public and political affairs without discrimination, in accordance with international human rights law.

2. Justice

(a) Access to justice

17. States should take further measures, by:

(a) Introducing measures to ensure equality before the law, notably in the enjoyment of the right to equal treatment before the tribunals and all other organs administering justice;

(b) Designing, implementing and enforcing effective measures to eliminate the phenomenon popularly known as “racial profiling”;

(c) Eliminating institutionalized stereotypes concerning people of African descent and applying appropriate sanctions against law enforcement officials who act on the basis of racial profiling;

(d) Ensuring that people of African descent have full access to effective protection and remedies through the competent national tribunals and other State institutions against any acts of racial discrimination, and the right to seek from such tribunals just and adequate reparation or satisfaction for any damage suffered as a result of such discrimination;

(e) Adopting effective and appropriate measures, including legal measures as appropriate, to combat all acts of racism, in particular the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, incitement to racial hatred, violence or incitement to racial violence, as well as racist propaganda activities and participation in racist organizations; States are also encouraged to ensure that such motivations are considered an aggravating factor for the purpose of sentencing;

(f) Facilitating access to justice for people of African descent who are victims of racism by providing the requisite legal information about their rights, and providing legal assistance when appropriate;

(g) Preventing and punishing all human rights violations affecting people of African descent, including violence, acts of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment, including those committed by State officials;

(h) Ensuring that people of African descent, like all other persons, enjoy all the guarantees of a fair trial and equality before the law as enshrined in relevant international human rights instruments, and specifically the right to the presumption of innocence, the right to assistance of counsel and to an interpreter, the right to an independent and impartial tribunal, guarantees of justice, and all the rights to which prisoners are entitled;

(i) Acknowledging and profoundly regretting the untold suffering and evils inflicted on millions of men, women and children as a result of slavery, the slave trade, the transatlantic slave trade, colonialism, apartheid, genocide and past tragedies, noting that some States have taken the initiative to apologize and have paid reparation, where appropriate, for grave and massive violations committed, and calling upon those that have not yet expressed remorse or presented apologies to find some way to contribute to the restoration of the dignity of victims;

(j) Inviting the international community and its members to honour the memory of the victims of these tragedies with a view to closing those dark chapters in history and as a means of reconciliation and healing; further noting that some have taken the initiative of regretting or expressing remorse or presenting apologies, and calling upon all those that have not yet contributed to restoring the dignity of the victims to find appropriate ways to do so and, to this end, appreciating those countries that have done so;

(k) Calling upon all States concerned to take appropriate and effective measures to halt and reverse the lasting consequences of those practices, bearing in mind their moral obligations.

(b) Special measures

18. The adoption of special measures, such as affirmative action, where appropriate, is essential to alleviating and remedying disparities in the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms affecting people of African descent, protecting them from discrimination and overcoming persistent or structural disparities and de facto inequalities resulting from historical circumstances. As such, States should develop or elaborate national plans of action to promote diversity, equality, social justice, equality of opportunity and the participation of all. By means of, inter alia, affirmative or positive actions and strategies, these plans should aim at creating conditions for all to participate effectively in decision-making and to realize civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights in all spheres of life on the basis of non-discrimination.

3. Development

(a) Right to development and measures against poverty

19. Consistent with the Declaration on the Right to Development, States should adopt measures aimed at guaranteeing active, free and meaningful participation by all individuals, including people of African descent, in development and decision-making related thereto and in the fair distribution of benefits resulting therefrom.

20. Recognizing that poverty is both a cause and a consequence of discrimination, States should, as appropriate, adopt or strengthen national programmes for eradicating poverty and reducing social exclusion that take account of the specific needs and experiences of people of African descent, and should also expand their efforts to foster bilateral, regional and international cooperation in implementing those programmes.

21. States should implement actions to protect ancestral groups of people of African descent.

(b) Education

22. States should take all necessary measures to give effect to the right of people of African descent, particularly children and young people, to free primary education and access to all levels and forms of quality public education without discrimination. States should:

(a) Ensure that quality education is accessible and available in areas where communities of African descent live, particularly in rural and marginalized communities, with attention to improving the quality of public education;

(b) Take measures to ensure that public and private education systems do not discriminate against or exclude children of African descent, and that they are protected from direct or indirect discrimination, negative stereotyping, stigmatization and violence from peers or teachers; to this end, training and sensitization should be provided to teachers and measures should be taken to increase the number of teachers of African descent working in educational institutions.

(c) Employment

23. States should take concrete measures to eliminate racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in the workplace against all workers, in particular people of African descent, including migrants, and ensure the full equality of all before the law, including labour law, and eliminate barriers, where appropriate, to participation in vocational training, collective bargaining, employment, contracts and trade union activity; access to judicial and administrative tribunals dealing with grievances; seeking employment in different parts of their country of residence; and working in safe and healthy conditions.

(d) Health

24. States should take measures to improve access to quality health services for people of African descent.

(e) Housing

25. Recognizing the poor and insecure housing conditions in which many people of African descent live, States should develop and implement policies and projects as appropriate aimed at, inter alia, ensuring that they gain and sustain a safe and secure home and community in which to live in peace and dignity.

4. Multiple or aggravated discrimination

26. States should adopt and implement policies and programmes that provide effective protection for, and review and repeal all policies and laws that could discriminate against, people of African descent facing multiple, aggravated or intersecting forms of discrimination based on other related grounds, such as sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, social origin, property, birth, disability or other status.

27. States should mainstream a gender perspective when designing and monitoring public policies, taking into account the specific needs and realities of women and girls of African descent, including in the area of sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of their review conferences, and ensure adequate access to maternal health care.

B. Regional and international levels1. Steps to be taken by the international community and international and regional organizations

28. The international community, international and regional organizations, in particular relevant United Nations programmes, funds, specialized agencies and other bodies, international financial and development institutions, and other international mechanisms within their areas of competence should give high priority to programmes and projects specifically tailored for combating racism and racial discrimination against people of African descent, taking fully into account the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the political declaration of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and should, inter alia:

(a) Take measures to raise awareness about the International Decade, including through awareness-raising campaigns, and organizing and supporting other activities, bearing in mind the theme of the Decade;

(b) Continue to disseminate widely the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference and the political declaration of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

(c) Continue to raise awareness about the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

(d) Assist States in the full and effective implementation of the obligations arising under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and in ratifying or acceding to the Convention, with a view to attaining its universal ratification;

(e) Assist States in the full and effective implementation of their commitments under the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

(f) Incorporate human rights into development programmes, including in the areas of access to and enjoyment of the rights to education, employment, health, housing, land and labour;

(g) Assign particular priority to the projects devoted to the collection of statistical data;

(h) Support initiatives and projects aimed at honouring and preserving the historical memory of people of African descent;

(i) Use the Decade as an opportunity to engage with people of African descent on appropriate and effective measures to halt and reverse the lasting consequences of slavery, the slave trade and the transatlantic slave trade in captured African people and, to this end, ensure the participation of and consultation with non-governmental organizations, other stakeholders and civil society at large;

(j) In planning activities for the Decade, examine how existing programmes and resources might be utilized to benefit people of African descent more effectively;

(k) Give due consideration to the goals and objectives aimed at the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against people of African descent in the discussions held by the United Nations on the post-2015 development agenda.

2. Steps and measures to be taken by the General Assembly

29. The General Assembly should:

(a) Appoint the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to act as coordinator of the Decade in order to follow up on the implementation of activities in the framework of the Decade;

(b) Request the Secretary-General to submit an annual progress report on the implementation of activities of the Decade, taking into account information and views provided by States, relevant human rights bodies, organs and mechanisms of the United Nations, specialized agencies, funds and programmes, international, regional, subregional and non-governmental organizations, including organizations of people of African descent, national human rights institutions and other stakeholders;

(c) Request the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and regional and subregional organizations, to launch an awareness-raising campaign to inform the general public of the history, contributions, including to global development, challenges, contemporary experiences and situation of human rights of people of African descent;

(d) Encourage the issuance of a stamp by the United Nations postal administration on the International Decade for People of African Descent;

(e) Invite regional and subregional organizations, specialized agencies, and United Nations programmes, funds and offices to develop studies in their respective areas of competence and expertise and to report on the themes of the Decade; such studies could be used to inform a midterm review of the Decade to monitor the progress made, share learning practices among key actors and inform plans and policies for the remaining five years of the Decade and beyond;

(f) Request the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue and strengthen its fellowship programme for people of African descent during the Decade;

(g) Request the Office of the High Commissioner to include a section on the anti-discrimination database on the International Decade for People of African Descent;

(h) Request States to consider adopting measures to further promote and protect the human rights of people of African descent as enshrined in international human rights instruments, including through the elaboration of a draft United Nations declaration on the promotion and full respect of human rights of people of African descent;

(i) Decide to establish a forum to serve as a consultation mechanism, to be provided by one of the existing Durban follow-up mechanisms such as the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent or the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and in this regard requests the Human Rights Council to allocate two or three days of the annual sessions of one of these mechanisms that shall be devoted to this purpose and that would ensure the inclusive participation of all States Members of the United Nations, United Nations funds and programmes, specialized agencies, civil society organizations of people of African descent and all other relevant stakeholders;

(j) Request the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to further increase and strengthen support for the relevant mechanisms of the Human Rights Council in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in the context of the Decade;

(k) Encourage all States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, private institutions and individuals, as well as other donors in a position to do so, to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination with a view to contributing to the successful implementation of the programme;

(l) Request the Secretary-General to accord high priority to executing the programme of activities for the International Decade, and to allocate predictable funding from the regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources of the United Nations to the effective implementation of the programme of action and activities of the Decade;

(m) Keep the Decade under review, and convene a midterm review to take stock of the progress made and decide on further necessary actions;

(n) Convene a final assessment of the Decade, to be held within the framework of a high-level international event, marking the closure of the International Decade for People of African Descent;

(o) Ensure the completion of the construction and the inauguration, before the midterm review in 2020, of a permanent memorial at United Nations Headquarters to honour the memory of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade.

International Albinism Awareness Day

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/10)], the Human Rights Council took note of the OHCHR preliminary report on persons with albinism [YUN 2013, p. 705]; recommended that the General Assembly proclaim 13 June as “International Albinism Awareness Day” and invited States, UN system entities and other international and regional organizations, as well as civil society, including NGOs and individuals, to observe the Day; and urged the human rights treaty bodies and special procedures of the Council to continue to give attention to the situation of persons with albinism. It also requested the High Commissioner to keep the Council informed at its twenty-ninth (2015) session of initiatives taken to raise awareness and protect the rights of persons with albinism; and to bring the resolution to the attention of all States and UN organizations.

On 18 December, by resolution 69/170 (see below), the General Assembly proclaimed 13 June as “International Albinism Awareness Day”, with effect from 2015.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/170 by recorded vote (171-0-16) [agenda item 68 (b)].

International Albinism Awareness Day

The General Assembly,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolutions 23/13 of 13 June 2013 on attacks and discrimination against persons with albinism, 24/33 of 27 September 2013 on technical cooperation for the prevention of attacks against persons with albinism and 26/10 of 26 June 2014 on International Albinism Awareness Day,

Taking note of the preliminary report on persons with albinism submitted by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the Human Rights Council at its twenty-fourth session,

Taking note also of African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights resolution 263 of 5 November 2013 on the prevention of attacks and discrimination against persons with albinism,

Expressing concern at the attacks against persons with albinism, including women and children, which are often committed with impunity,

Welcoming the efforts by States to eliminate all forms of violence and discrimination against persons with albinism,

Welcoming also the increased international attention to the human rights situation of persons with albinism, including the work of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children,

Encouraging Member States to continue their efforts to protect and preserve the rights of persons with albinism to life, dignity and security, as well as their right not to be subject to torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and to continue their efforts to ensure equal access for persons with albinism to employment, education, justice and the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health,

Emphasizing the imperative need to enhance the promotion and protection of all human rights, including economic, social and cultural rights, as a matter of priority for the international community,

Noting that, in many parts of the world, awareness of the human rights situation of persons with albinism remains limited, and recognizing the importance of increasing awareness and understanding of albinism in order to fight against global discrimination and stigma against persons with albinism,

Welcoming the observance by civil society actors of 13 June as International Albinism Awareness Day,

Taking note of the recommendation by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 26/10 that the General Assembly proclaim 13 June International Albinism Awareness Day,

Recalling its resolutions 53/199 of 15 December 1998 and 61/185 of 20 December 2006 on the proclamation of international years, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries,

1. Decides to proclaim, with effect from 2015, 13 June as International Albinism Awareness Day;

2. Invites all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other international and regional organizations, as well as civil society, including non-governmental organizations and individuals, to observe International Albinism Awareness Day in an appropriate manner;

3. Invites Member States to provide the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with information on the initiatives taken to promote and protect the human rights of persons with albinism, including efforts to increase awareness of the human rights situation of persons with albinism and understanding of albinism;

4. Invites the human rights treaty bodies and special procedures of the Human Rights Council to continue to give attention, within their respective mandates, to the situation of persons with albinism;

5. Recalls the request to the High Commissioner to inform the Human Rights Council at its twenty-ninth session of the initiatives taken to raise awareness and promote the protection of the rights of persons with albinism;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States and United Nations organizations.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/170:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen.

Follow-up to the 1993 World Conference

Report of Third Committee. On 1 December, the Third Committee of the General Assembly reported [A/69/488/Add.4] on the implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action.

On 18 December, the General Assembly took note of the report (decision 69/535).

Protection of human rights

In 2014, the United Nations remained engaged in protecting human rights through its main organs—the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council—and the Human Rights Council, which carried out its task as the central UN intergovernmental body responsible for promoting and protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms worldwide. The Council addressed violations, worked to prevent abuses, provided overall policy guidance, monitored the observance of human rights around the world and assisted States in fulfilling their human rights obligations.

The special procedures mandate holders—special rapporteurs, independent experts, working groups and representatives of the Secretary-General—monitored, examined, advised and publicly reported on human rights situations in specific countries or on major human rights violations worldwide. At the end of 2014, there were 53 special procedures (39 thematic mandates and 14 country- or territory-related mandates) with 77 mandate holders.

In 2014, special procedures submitted 135 reports to the Human Rights Council, including 64 on country visits, and 36 reports to the General Assembly. They sent 553 communications to 116 States; 82 per cent of those communications were sent jointly by more than one mandate holder. Communications covered at least 1,061 individuals, 16.9 per cent of whom were women. Mandate holders followed up on 24 per cent of communications, and Governments replied to 42.9 per cent of communications. Some 379 news releases and public statements on situations of concern were issued, individually or jointly, by mandate holders.

Special procedures conducted 80 country visits to 60 States. The number of countries that had extended a standing invitation to special procedures rose to 110 as at 31 December.

The Council in 2014 established two thematic mandates: Special Rapporteur on the rights of persons with disabilities and Special Rapporteur on the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights. It also established a country mandate on capacity-building and technical cooperation with Côte d'Ivoire in the field of human rights.

Economic, social and cultural rights continued to be a major focus of activity. The General Assembly highlighted the right to development, and Special Rapporteurs advocated for the rights to food, safe water and sanitation, health, adequate housing, education and a life free from poverty.

In other developments, the Permanent Memorial Committee entered into an agreement with an architect for the construction of a permanent memorial at UN Headquarters in honour of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade, to be completed in 2015. In September, the first World Conference on Indigenous People, convened as a high-level meeting of the General Assembly, adopted an action-oriented document on the realization of indigenous rights.

Special procedures

Report of High Commissioner. In her annual report to the Human Rights Council [A/HRC/28/3], the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Navanethem Pillay, noted that the expertise of special procedures helped to draw attention to emerging issues such as the use of drones in extraterritorial lethal counter-terrorism operations; mass digital surveillance for counter-terrorism purposes; the implications of States' surveillance of communications on the rights to privacy and to freedom of opinion and expression; and the implementation of the right to social security through the universal adoption of social protection floors. From January to October, special procedures mandate holders conducted 63 country visits to 43 States and issued 427 communications. Some 109 States issued standing invitations for special procedures visits, although they were not always honoured. The Council established two new thematic mandates: on the rights of persons with disabilities and on the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights. In all there were 53 special procedures (39 thematic and 14 geographically related).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a Human Rights Council decision [YUN 2006, p. 760], the Secretary-General in December submitted a report [A/HRC/28/19] indicating that the special procedures' conclusions and recommendations contained in their 2014 reports to the Council's twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh sessions were available on the website of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR).

Reports of special procedures. In accordance with the decisions made by special procedures mandate holders at their sixteenth [YUN 2009, p. 645] and seventeenth [YUN 2010, p. 656] annual meetings, mandate holders issued, on 24 February [A/HRC/25/74], 2 June [A/HRC/26/21] and 20 August [A/HRC/27/72], joint communications reports containing summaries of communications and statistical information. The reports covered urgent appeals, letters of allegations and other letters sent by mandate holders from 1 June 2013 to 31 May 2014 and replies received between 1 August 2013 and 31 July 2014, including replies relating to communications sent prior to 1 June 2013.

Reprisals for cooperation with human rights bodies

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2009, p. 668], the Secretary-General in August [A/HRC/27/38] submitted a compilation and analysis of information on alleged reprisals against individuals or groups who had cooperated or sought to cooperate with representatives of UN human rights bodies, as well as recommendations on how to address cases of intimidation and reprisals. The report contained information gathered from 16 June 2013 to 31 May 2014, pertaining to cases in Algeria, Cameroon, China, Cuba, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Egypt, Israel, Kenya, Malaysia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, the United Arab Emirates and Viet Nam. It also provided follow-up information on cases included in previous reports on India, Morocco, the Russian Federation, Syria, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela. The report noted that the cases included represented only the tip of the iceberg: some cases had not been included because of concern that the alleged victims might be subjected to further reprisals if their complaints were published. Reprisals against persons cooperating with the United Nations and its human rights mechanisms and representatives ranged from threats, harassment, smear campaigns, fines, travel bans, the forced closure of organizations, arbitrary arrests, prosecution and lengthy prison sentences to torture and death. The Secretary-General recommended that States prevent and refrain from all acts of intimidation or reprisal against individuals and groups; adopt specific legislation and policies; investigate alleged acts of reprisal or intimidation to bring perpetrators to justice; and consider establishing a national focal point to address acts of intimidation and reprisal.

On 15 September, the General Assembly deferred until its sixty-ninth (2014) session consideration of the report of the Human Rights Council as it pertained to Council resolution 24/24 [YUN 2013, p. 640] on cooperation with the United Nations, its representatives and mechanisms in the field of human rights, and on intimidation or reprisals against individuals and groups who had cooperated or sought to cooperate with the United Nations (decision 68/668).

On 29 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the report of the Human Rights Council would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session (decision 69/554).

Civil and political rights

Racism and racial discrimination

Follow-up to 2001 World Conference

During the year, efforts continued to implement the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action (DDPA) adopted by the 2001 World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance [YUN 2001, p. 615].

Intergovernmental Working Group. The Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the DDPA, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 7–17 April) [A/HRC/26/55], identified, on the basis of contributions by Member States and other stakeholders, objectives and national, regional and international activities to be conducted during the International Decade for People of African Descent, 2015–2024 (see p. 780).

A 10 April secretariat note [A/HRC/25/68/Rev.1] informed the Human Rights Council that the report of the Working Group's eleventh session [YUN 2013, p. 628] would be submitted to the Council's twenty-fifth (2014) session.

Report of independent experts. The five independent eminent experts appointed by the Secretary-General in 2002 [YUN 2002, p. 662] to follow up on implementation of DDPA provisions, following their first [YUN 2003, p. 698] and second [YUN 2005, p. 757] meetings, held their third meeting in private (Geneva, 4 February 2014) [A/HRC/26/56]. The experts discussed their previous work and related challenges, mandate and working methods, including suggestions for follow-up actions. They agreed to submit information on individually undertaken activities and new developments in their regions since 2005, which would be compiled and circulated by OHCHR. Such inputs would include proposals for topics on which the experts would work, individually and as a group. The experts emphasized that the group's mandate should be reviewed and amended to reflect what could be realistically achieved; agreed to elaborate and adopt working methods to facilitate their work and increase efficiency; requested OHCHR to assist with the drafting of those methods; and proposed a December 2014 deadline for adoption of the working methods.

On 21 March, by decision 68/552, the General Assembly decided, without setting a precedent, to invite Gay McDougall (United States), first United Nations Independent Expert on minority issues, former expert member of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and Special Rapporteur of the former Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, to make a statement on the occasion of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/151 [YUN 2013, p. 629], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/69/354] on global efforts for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the DDPA. The report summarized contributions received from 14 countries and four national human rights institutions or national equality bodies and provided an update on activities undertaken by OHCHR. It concluded that despite progress made in combating racism and related phenomena, stronger political will and urgent measures were needed to reverse the recent trends of increasingly hostile racist and xenophobic attitudes and violence. States were encouraged to develop and implement national action plans to combat racial discrimination and related intolerance.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 69/533).

Working Group on people of African descent. At its fourteenth session (Geneva, 31 March–4 April) [A/HRC/27/68], the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent focused on the theme of “People of African descent: access to justice”. The Working Group acknowledged that, despite guarantees in international and national law, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance affected people of African descent in a unique fashion, to the point that many of them were unable to obtain remedies for wrongful acts through their domestic institutions. It urged States to develop a national atlas mapping injustices and to adopt national action plans against racial discrimination, which should include special measures to address structural discrimination against people of African descent. It reiterated its recommendation that national, regional and international activities should be developed during the International Decade for People of African Descent.

In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/151, the Chair of the Working Group in August reported [A/69/318] on the Working Group’s activities between 1 July 2013 and 30 June 2014.

Mission reports. Following its mission to the Netherlands (26 June–4 July) [A/HRC/30/56/Add.1], the Working Group concluded that the country had a long tradition of tolerance and openness and valued diversity, yet it had for a long time denied the existence of racism and racist practices, thus obscuring the existence of structural and institutional racism. Recognizing the complex history of people of African descent was a necessary step towards eliminating barriers affecting their ability to enjoy their fundamental rights. The Working Group recommended the adoption of policies targeting people of African descent and tailored to their situation.

Following a visit to Sweden (1–5 December) [A/HRC/30/56/Add.2], the Working Group noted the need to address Afrophobia as a serious phenomenon. Despite advances in the protection of some vulnerable groups, it was only recently that the Government had recognized Afro-Swedes and people of African descent as a specific group requiring focused attention. According to statistics, Afro-Swedes were most exposed to hate crimes, and reports of Afrophobic hate crimes had increased by 24 per cent since 2008. The police faced knowledge, security and capacity gaps in dealing with Afrophobic hate crimes. The Working Group made recommendations to assist Sweden in its efforts to tackle Afrophobia and combat all forms of racism and related intolerance faced by Afro-Swedes and Africans.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/25)], the Council extended the mandate of the Working Group on people of African descent for three years; decided that the Working Group should undertake a minimum of two country visits per year; and requested the Working Group to report annually to the Council, as well as to the General Assembly in the context of the International Decade for People of African Descent (see p. 780).

OHCHR report. In response to Assembly resolution 68/151, OHCHR in July submitted a report [A/69/186] which provided clarification on the establishment, name and activities of the OHCHR Anti-Racial Discrimination Section. In accordance with the established UN structure of departments, the Anti-Discrimination “Unit” fell within the category of a section and was placed in the Rule of Law, Equality and Non-Discrimination Branch of OHCHR. The High Commissioner aligned the name of the section with its actual OHCHR role, changing the name to the Anti-Racial Discrimination Section. The section focused on combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 69/533).

Sports and combating discrimination

Advisory Committee report. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2013, p. 629], the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee in August submitted a progress report [A/HRC/27/58] on the study on the possibilities of using sport and the Olympic ideal to promote human rights. The purpose of the study was to help stakeholders to assess the general factors relating to modern human rights policy in sport and provide insights for its development and improvement. As at August 2014, responses to a March 2014 questionnaire on the topic had been received from 22

States, 5 national human rights institutions, 8 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society representatives, an international organization and a special procedure mandate holder. The report included recommendations with regard to national legislation and executive practice, programme support, and combating discriminatory practices in sport, the media and education.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/8)], the Council called on States to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee and the International Paralympic Committee in their efforts to use sport as a tool to promote human rights. It requested the Advisory Committee to finalize the study on the possibilities of using sport and the Olympic ideal to promote human rights and to report to Council before its thirtieth (2015) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/69/486], adopted resolution 69/162 by recorded vote (134-10-42) [agenda item 66 (b)].

A global call for concrete action for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the comprehensive follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance and the effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference, and in this regard underlining the imperative need for their full and effective implementation,

Stressing that the outcome of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance has the same status as the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences, summits and special sessions in the human rights and social fields, and that the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action remains a solid basis and the only instructive outcome of the World Conference, which prescribes comprehensive measures for combating all the scourges of racism and adequate remedies for victims,

Recalling the three Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination previously declared by the General Assembly, and regretting that the Programmes of Action for those Decades were not fully implemented and that their objectives are yet to be attained,

Reiterating that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and have the potential to contribute constructively to the development and well-being of their societies, and that any doctrine of racial superiority is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous and must be rejected, together with theories that attempt to determine the existence of separate human races,

Underlining the intensity, magnitude and organized nature of slavery and the slave trade, including the transatlantic slave trade, and the associated historical injustices, as well as the untold suffering caused by colonialism and apartheid, and that Africans and people of African descent, Asians and people of Asian descent and indigenous peoples continue to be victims of the cascading effects of those legacies,

Acknowledging the efforts and initiatives undertaken by States to prohibit racial discrimination and racial segregation and to engender the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, as well as civil and political rights,

Emphasizing that, despite efforts in this regard, millions of human beings continue to be victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including their contemporary forms and manifestations, some of which manifest in violent forms,

Welcoming the efforts made by civil society in support of the follow-up mechanisms in the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recalling the appointment of the five independent eminent experts on 16 June 2003 by the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 56/266 of 27 March 2002, with the mandate to follow up on the implementation of the provisions of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and to make appropriate recommendations thereon, and in this regard underlining the role played and still to be played by those independent eminent experts in mobilizing global political will for concrete action for the total elimination of all the scourges of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Underlining the primacy of the political will, international cooperation and adequate funding at the national, regional and international levels needed to address all forms and manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance for the successful implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action,

Recalling its resolution 2142(XXI) of 26 October 1966, in which it proclaimed 21 March as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination,

Recalling also its resolution 62/122 of 17 December 2007, in which it designated 25 March as an annual International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade,

Recalling further the suffering of the victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and the need to honour their memory,

Noting that 2016 will mark the fifteenth anniversary of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and looking forward to its commemoration,

Recognizing and affirming that the global fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and all their abhorrent and contemporary forms and manifestations is a matter of priority for the international community,

I

International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

1. Reaffirms the paramount importance of universal adherence to and the full and effective implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 2106 A(XX) of 21 December 1965, in addressing the scourges of racism and racial discrimination;

2. Calls upon States that have not done so to consider acceding to the Convention, and States parties to make the declaration under article 14 of the Convention, as a matter of urgency;

3. Underlines, in the above context, that the provisions of the Convention do not respond effectively to contemporary manifestations of racial discrimination, in particular in relation to xenophobia and related intolerance, which is recognized as the rationale behind the convening of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance in 2001;

4. Takes note of the acknowledgement by the Human Rights Council and its subsidiary structures of the existence of both procedural and substantive gaps in the aforementioned Convention, which must be filled as a matter of urgency, necessity and priority;

5. Invites the Human Rights Council, in conjunction with its Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of Complementary Standards to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, in the execution of its mandate, to continue to elaborate complementary standards in order to fill existing gaps in the Convention, in the form of new normative standards aimed at combating all forms of contemporary and resurgent racism, and in this regard, areas such as xenophobia, Islamophobia, anti-Semitism and incitement to national or ethnic and religious hatred that have been identified as constituting substantive gaps;

II

International Decade for People of African Descent

6. Welcomes the proclamation of the International Decade for People of African Descent, as contained in its resolution 68/237 of 23 December 2013, and the celebratory launch of the Decade on 10 December 2014;

7. Also welcomes the adoption of the programme of activities for the implementation of the International Decade for People of African Descent;

8. Requests the Human Rights Council, through the Chair of the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, to submit a report on the work of the Working Group to the General Assembly, and in this regard invites the Chair of the Working Group to engage in an interactive dialogue with the Assembly under the item entitled "Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance" at its seventieth session;

III

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

9. Welcomes the positive response by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the requests made by the Human Rights Council, in its resolution 6/22 of 28 September 2007, and by the General Assembly, in its resolution 68/151 of 18 December 2013, to realign the work and the name of the erstwhile Anti-Discrimination Unit in the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and also welcomes its renaming as the Anti-Racial Discrimination Section and the realignment of its operational activities to focus exclusively on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as defined in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the Durban Declaration;

10. Also welcomes the inclusion of the historic and landmark World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance of 2001 among the 20 major achievements of the Office of the High Commissioner since the adoption of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action in 1993;

11. Requests the Secretary-General and the Office of the High Commissioner to provide the resources necessary for the effective fulfilment of the mandates of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, the group of independent eminent experts on the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of Complementary Standards;

IV

Group of independent eminent experts on the implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action

12. Reiterates its requests to the Secretary-General, pursuant to its resolution 68/151, to revitalize and reactivate the operational activities of the group of independent eminent experts;

13. Reiterates its invitation to the Human Rights Council, pursuant to paragraph 16 of General Assembly resolution 68/151, to ensure the visibility, effective participation and optimal utilization of the vast knowledge and experience of the group of independent eminent experts within its subsidiary structures, charged with the mandate of and responsibility for the comprehensive follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance and the effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, and in this regard requests the Council to submit a progress report to the Assembly at its seventieth session;

Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

14. Recalls the establishment by the Secretary-General, in 1973, of the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination as a funding mechanism that has been utilized for the implementation of the activities of the three Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination declared by the General Assembly, and in this regard appreciates the fact that the Trust Fund has also been utilized for the subsequent programmes and operational activities transcending the three Decades;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to include, in his report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, a section outlining the progress in the implementation of paragraph 18 of its resolution 68/151, regarding the revitalization of the Trust Fund for the purpose of ensuring the successful implementation of the activities of the International Decade for People of African Descent and enhancing the effectiveness of the comprehensive follow-up to the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance and the effective implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

16. Strongly appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals as well as other donors in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and to that end requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake appropriate contacts and initiatives to encourage contributions;

VI

Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

17. Takes note of the reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and encourages the Special Rapporteur, within his mandate, to continue to focus on the issues of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and incitement to hatred, which impede peaceful coexistence and harmony within societies, and to submit reports in this regard to the Human Rights Council and the General Assembly;

18. Reiterates the invitation to the Special Rapporteur to consider examining national models of mechanisms that measure racial equality and their added value in the eradication of racial discrimination and to report on such challenges, successes and best practices in his next report;

Follow-up and implementation activities

19. Reiterates its request to the Human Rights Council to develop and adopt a multi-year programme of activities to provide for the renewed and strengthened outreach activities needed to inform and mobilize the global public in support of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action and to strengthen awareness of the contribution that it has made in the struggle against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

20. Calls upon the Human Rights Council to commence preparations for the commemoration of the fifteenth anniversary of the adoption of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, including through the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Effective Implementation of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Requests the President of the General Assembly and the President of the Human Rights Council to continue convening annual commemorative meetings of the Assembly and the Council during the commemoration of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, with the appropriate focus and themes, and to hold a debate on the state of racial discrimination worldwide, with the participation of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and in this context encourages the participation of eminent personalities active in the field of racial discrimination, Member States and civil society organizations in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Assembly and the Council, respectively;

23. Decides to remain seized of this priority matter at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance".

Contemporary forms of racism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In April, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/150 [YUN 2013, p. 632], the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, Mutuma Ruteere (Kenya), submitted a report [A/HRC/26/50] on the implementation of that resolution, addressing the human rights and democratic challenges posed by extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis, skinhead groups and similar extremist ideological movements. He examined the main areas of concern where further efforts were required, including with regard to the protection of vulnerable groups against racist and xenophobic crimes and the protection and consolidation of democracy and human rights. He also identified good practices developed by States and various stakeholders.

Pursuant to the same resolution, in August the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly another report [A/69/334] of the Special Rapporteur on the implementation of resolution 68/150, which dealt with combating the glorification of Nazism and other practices that contributed to fuelling contemporary forms of racism and related phenomena. The report summarized contributions from 11 States and views sent by three intergovernmental, non-governmental and other organizations. The Rapporteur encouraged States to adopt legislation to combat racism; bring to justice the perpetrators of crimes with racist, xenophobic, anti-Semitic or homophobic motivation and combat impunity; and ensure implementation of measures protecting members of minority groups, people of African descent, Roma, migrants, refugees and asylum seekers. He recommended that States invest in education in order to transform attitudes and correct ideas of racial hierarchies and superiority promoted by extremist political parties, movements and groups and counter their negative influence.

In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 660], the Special Rapporteur in May submitted a report [A/HRC/26/49 & Corr.1] examining the context, trends and manifestations of racism on the Internet and social media, and reviewing the legal and policy frameworks and the measures taken at international, regional and national levels. The Rapporteur concluded that combating the use of the Internet and social media to propagate racial, ethnic and xenophobic content and incitement to violence required a multi-stakeholder approach. The role of the private sector, in particular Internet service providers and social media platforms and other industry players, was crucial. He highlighted some of the measures taken by the private sector to address the issue and pointed out the positive contribution made by such initiatives. He encouraged States to use the unique educational potential of the Internet and social media networks to combat manifestations of racism and related phenomena in cyberspace.

In August, pursuant to Assembly resolution 68/151 [YUN 2013, p. 629], the Special Rapporteur submitted a report [A/69/340] focusing on the issue of racism and sports. He referred to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in sports; illustrated some manifestations of racism in team and individual sports; discussed the applicable legislation and standards; and presented initiatives of sports federations and civil society that focused on preventing and combating racism in sports. The Rapporteur recommended that stakeholders support existing initiatives while creating environments that fostered the debate on racism and intolerance and raised awareness of patterns of discrimination.

Mission report. Following his visit to the Republic of Korea (29 September–6 October) [A/HRC/29/46/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur examined challenges in the fight against racism, including issues related to the situation of migrants, foreign seafarers and workers in the agriculture sector. He noted that as the country had consolidated its rapid economic development and industrialization, it had been faced with the arrival of foreigners and migrant workers, provoking an essential debate on multiculturalism, racism and xenophobia. It was important that efforts undertaken by all stakeholders, including the Government, to combat racism be continued. He made recommendations on the legal and institutional framework; migrant workers; marriage migrants and multicultural families; racism and xenophobic discourse promoted by private actors; racism in the media; and refugees, asylum seekers and stateless persons.

In June, Mauritania submitted its comments [A/HRC/26/49/Add.2] on the Special Rapporteur's 2013 mission to the country [YUN 2013, p. 632].

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/32)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period and requested him to report annually to the Council and to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/486], adopted resolution 69/160 by recorded vote (133-4-51) [agenda item 66 (a)].

Combating glorification of Nazism, neo-Nazism and other practices that contribute to fuelling contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and other relevant human rights instruments,

Recalling the provisions of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 2004/16 of 16 April 2004 and 2005/5 of 14 April 2005 and relevant Human Rights Council resolutions, in particular resolutions 7/34 of 28 March 2008, 18/15 of 29 September 2011 and 21/33 of 28 September 2012, as well as General Assembly resolutions 60/143 of 16 December 2005, 61/147 of 19 December 2006, 62/142 of 18 December 2007, 63/162 of 18 December 2008, 64/147 of 18 December 2009, 65/199 of 21 December 2010, 66/143 of 19 December 2011, 67/154 of 20 December 2012 and 68/150 of 18 December 2013 on this issue and its resolutions 61/149 of 19 December 2006, 62/220 of 22 December 2007, 63/242 of 24 December 2008, 64/148 of 18 December 2009, 65/240 of 24 December 2010, 66/144 of 19 December 2011, 67/155 of 20 December 2012 and 68/151 of 18 December 2013, entitled

“Global efforts for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action”,

Acknowledging other important initiatives of the General Assembly aimed at raising awareness about the suffering of victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including in the historical perspective, in particular regarding commemoration of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade,

Recalling the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and the Judgement of the Tribunal, which recognized as criminal, inter alia, the SS organization and all its integral parts, including the Waffen SS, through its officially accepted members implicated in or with knowledge of the commission of war crimes and crimes against humanity connected with the Second World War, as well as other relevant provisions of the Charter and the Judgement,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance on 8 September 2001, in particular paragraph 2 of the Declaration and paragraph 86 of the Programme of Action, as well as the relevant provisions of the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference of 24 April 2009, in particular paragraphs 11 and 54,

Alarmed, in this regard, at the spread in many parts of the world of various extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups, as well as racist extremist movements and ideologies,

Deeply concerned by all recent manifestations of violence and terrorism incited by violent nationalism, racism, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling that in 2015 the international community will celebrate the seventieth anniversary of victory over Nazism in the Second World War, and looking forward in this regard to the initiative to hold a special solemn meeting at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

1. Reaffirms the relevant provisions of the Durban Declaration and of the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference, in which States condemned the persistence and resurgence of neo-Nazism, neo-Fascism and violent nationalist ideologies based on racial and national prejudice and stated that those phenomena could never be justified in any instance or in any circumstances;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, prepared in accordance with the request contained in General Assembly resolution 68/150;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and his Office for their efforts to fight racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including the maintenance by the Office of the database on practical means to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

4. Expresses deep concern about the glorification, in any form, of the Nazi movement, neo-Nazism and former members of the Waffen SS organization, including by erecting monuments and memorials and holding public demonstrations in the name of the glorification of the Nazi past, the Nazi movement and neo-Nazism, as well as by declaring or attempting to declare such members and those who fought against the anti-Hitler coalition and collaborated with the Nazi movement participants in national liberation movements;

5. Calls for the universal ratification and effective implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, and encourages those States parties that have not yet done so to consider making the declaration under its article 14, thus providing the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination with the competence to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals within their jurisdiction claiming to be victims of a violation by a State party of any of the rights set forth in the Convention;

6. Emphasizes the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur that “any commemorative celebration of the Nazi regime, its allies and related organizations, whether official or unofficial, should be prohibited by States”, and stresses in this regard that it is important that States take measures, in accordance with international human rights law, to counteract any celebration of the Nazi SS organization and all its integral parts, including the Waffen SS;

7. Expresses concern about recurring attempts to desecrate or demolish monuments erected in remembrance of those who fought against Nazism during the Second World War, as well as to unlawfully exhume or remove the remains of such persons, and in this regard urges States to fully comply with their relevant obligations, inter alia, under article 34 of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

8. Notes with concern the increase in the number of racist incidents worldwide, including the rise of skinhead groups, which have been responsible for many of these incidents, as well as the resurgence of racist and xenophobic violence targeting, inter alia, persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities;

9. Reaffirms that such acts may be qualified to fall within the scope of the Convention, that they may not be justified when they fall outside the scope of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association as well as the rights to freedom of expression and that they may fall within the scope of article 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and may be subject to certain restrictions, as set out in articles 19, 21 and 22 of the Covenant;

10. Condemns without reservation any denial or attempt to deny the Holocaust;

11. Welcomes the call of the Special Rapporteur for the active preservation of those Holocaust sites that served as Nazi death camps, concentration and forced labour camps and prisons, as well as his encouragement of States to take measures, including legislative, law enforcement and educational measures, to put an end to all forms of Holocaust denial;

12. Calls upon States to continue to take adequate steps, including through national legislation, in accordance with international human rights law, aimed at the prevention of hate speech and incitement to violence against persons belonging to vulnerable groups;

13. Expresses deep concern about attempts at commercial advertising aimed at exploiting the sufferings of the victims of war crimes and crimes against humanity committed during the Second World War by the Nazi regime;

14. Stresses that the practices described above do injustice to the memory of the countless victims of crimes against humanity committed in the Second World War, in particular those committed by the SS organization and by those who fought against the anti-Hitler coalition and collaborated with the Nazi movement, and may negatively influence children and young people, and that failure by States to effectively address such practices is incompatible with the obligations of States Members of the United Nations under its Charter, including those related to the purposes and principles of the Organization;

15. Also stresses that such practices fuel contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and contribute to the spread and multiplication of various extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups, and in this regard calls for increased vigilance;

16. Expresses concern that the human rights and democratic challenges posed by extremist political parties, movements and groups are universal and no country is immune to them;

17. Emphasizes the need to take the measures necessary to put an end to the practices described above, and calls upon States to take more effective measures in accordance with international human rights law to combat those phenomena and extremist movements, which pose a real threat to democratic values;

18. Encourages States to adopt further measures to provide training for the police and other law enforcement bodies on the ideologies of extremist political parties, movements and groups whose advocacy constitutes incitement to racist and xenophobic violence, to strengthen their capacity to address racist and xenophobic crimes, to fulfil their responsibility of bringing to justice the perpetrators of such crimes and to combat impunity;

19. Notes the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur regarding the responsibility of political leaders and parties in relation to messages that incite racial discrimination or xenophobia;

20. Expresses concern that ethnic profiling and police violence against vulnerable groups discourage victims from seeking redress owing to distrust of the legal system, and in this regard encourages States to improve diversity within law enforcement agencies and impose appropriate sanctions against those within the public service found guilty of racially motivated violence or of using hate speech;

21. Recalls the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur to introduce into national criminal law a provision according to which committing an offence with racist or xenophobic motivations or aims constitutes an aggravating circumstance, allowing for enhanced penalties, and encourages those States whose legislation does not contain such provisions to consider that recommendation;

22. Underlines that the roots of extremism are multifaceted and must be addressed through adequate measures such as education, awareness-raising and the promotion of dialogue, and in this regard recommends the increase of measures to raise awareness among young people of the dangers of the ideologies and activities of extremist political parties, movements and groups;

23. Reaffirms, in this regard, the particular importance of all forms of education, including human rights education, as a complement to legislative measures, as outlined by the Special Rapporteur;

24. Emphasizes the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur presented at the sixty-fourth session of the General Assembly, in which he emphasized the importance of history classes in teaching the dramatic events and human suffering which arose out of the adoption of ideologies such as Nazism and Fascism;

25. Stresses the importance of other positive measures and initiatives aimed at bringing communities together and providing them with space for genuine dialogue, such as round tables, working groups and seminars, including training seminars for State agents and media professionals, as well as awareness-raising activities, especially those initiated by civil society representatives, which require continued State support;

26. Calls upon States to continue to invest in education, in both conventional and non-conventional curricula, inter alia, in order to transform attitudes and correct ideas of racial hierarchies and superiority promoted by extremist political parties, movements and groups and counter their negative influence;

27. Underlines the positive role that relevant United Nations entities and programmes, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, can play in the aforementioned areas;

28. Reaffirms article 4 of the Convention, according to which States parties to that instrument condemn all propaganda and all organizations that are based on ideas or theories of superiority of one race or group of persons of one colour or ethnic origin, or that attempt to justify or promote racial hatred and discrimination in any form, and undertake to adopt immediate and positive measures designed to eradicate all incitement to, or acts of, such discrimination and, to that end, with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the rights expressly set forth in article 5 of the Convention, inter alia:

(a) Shall declare an offence punishable by law all dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, and incitement to racial discrimination, as well as all acts of violence or incitement to such acts against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin, and also the provision of any assistance to racist activities, including the financing thereof;

(b) Shall declare illegal and prohibit organizations, and organized and all other propaganda activities, that promote and incite racial discrimination, and shall recognize participation in such organizations or activities as an offence punishable by law;

(c) Shall not permit public authorities or public institutions, national or local, to promote or incite racial discrimination;

29. Also reaffirms that, as underlined in paragraph 13 of the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference, any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence should be prohibited by law, that all dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, or incitement to racial discrimination, as well as all acts of violence or incitement to such acts, shall be declared offences punishable by law, in accordance with the international obligations of States, and that these prohibitions are consistent with freedom of opinion and expression;

30. Recognizes the positive role that the exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, as well as full respect for the freedom to seek, receive and impart information, including through the Internet, can play in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

31. Expresses concern about the use of the Internet to propagate racism, racial hatred, xenophobia, racial discrimination and related intolerance, and in this regard calls upon States parties to the Covenant to implement fully articles 19 and 20 thereof, which guarantee the right to freedom of expression and outline the grounds on which the exercise of this right can be legitimately restricted;

32. Recognizes the need to promote the use of new information and communications technologies, including the Internet, to contribute to the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

33. Also recognizes the positive role that the media can play in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, promoting a culture of tolerance and representing the diversity of a multicultural society;

34. Encourages States, civil society and other relevant stakeholders to use all opportunities, including those provided by the Internet and social media, to counter, in accordance with international human rights law, the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred and to promote the values of equality, non-discrimination, diversity and democracy;

35. Encourages those States that have made reservations to article 4 of the Convention to give serious consideration to withdrawing such reservations as a matter of priority, as stressed by the Special Rapporteur;

36. Notes the importance of strengthening cooperation at the regional and international levels with the aim of countering all manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in particular regarding issues raised in the present resolution;

37. Stresses the importance of cooperating closely with civil society and international and regional human rights mechanisms in order to counter effectively all manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as well as extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups, and other similar extremist ideological movements that incite racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

38. Encourages States parties to the Convention to ensure that their legislation incorporates the provisions of the Convention, including those of article 4;

39. Encourages States to adopt the legislation necessary to combat racism while ensuring that the definition of racial discrimination set out therein complies with article 1 of the Convention;

40. Recalls that any legislative or constitutional measures adopted with a view to countering extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups, and similar extremist ideological movements should be in conformity with the relevant international human rights norms, in particular articles 4 and 5 of the Convention and articles 19 to 22 of the Covenant;

41. Also recalls the request of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 2005/5, that the Special Rapporteur continue to reflect on this issue, make relevant recommendations in his future reports and seek and take into account in this regard the views of Governments and non-governmental organizations;

42. Encourages States to consider including in their reports for the universal periodic review and to relevant treaty bodies information on the steps taken to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including with the aim of implementing the provisions of the present resolution;

43. Requests the Special Rapporteur to prepare, for submission to the General Assembly at its seventieth session and to the Human Rights Council at its twenty-ninth session, reports on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular regarding paragraphs 4, 6, 7, 9, 13, 14, 24 and 25 above, based on the views collected in accordance with the request of the Commission, as recalled in paragraph 41 above;

44. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments that have provided information to the Special Rapporteur in the course of the preparation of his reports to the General Assembly;

45. Stresses that such information is important for the sharing of experiences and best practices in the fight against extremist political parties, movements and groups, including neo-Nazis and skinhead groups, and other extremist ideological movements that incite racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

46. Encourages Governments and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the exercise of the tasks outlined in paragraph 43 above;

47. Encourages Governments, non-governmental organizations and relevant actors to disseminate, as widely as possible, information regarding the contents of and the principles outlined in the present resolution, including through the media, but not limited to it;

48. Decides to remain seized of the issue.

Human rights defenders

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In his first report to the General Assembly [A/69/259], submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 66/164 [YUN 2011, p. 664], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders, Michel Forst (France), who was appointed by the Council on 8 May, analysed the terms of his mandate, described its working methods and the techniques used, and reviewed the activities undertaken during the first weeks of his mandate. The report focused on the manner in which he intended to perform the mandate and on the priorities he would pursue, including identifying the challenges to which human rights defenders were most exposed, strengthening his cooperation with other mandate holders and regional mechanisms, ensuring better follow-up to communications and country visits, and contributing to the development and distribution of good practices among States, stakeholders and the defenders themselves. He also intended to ensure widespread awareness and ownership of the Declaration on the Right and Responsibility of Individuals, Groups and Organs of Society to Promote and Protect Universally Recognized Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms [YUN 1998, p. 607].

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

A March addendum [A/HRC/25/55/Add.3] to the December 2013 report of the former Special Rapporteur [YUN 2013, p. 636] contained observations by the Rapporteur on communications to 78 States and other actors sent between 1 December 2012 and 30 November 2013, and responses received from States until 31 January 2014.

Mission report. Following his visit to Burundi (14–25 November) [A/HRC/31/55/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur analysed the main challenges faced by human rights defenders, in particular impunity for violations committed against them and the lack of protection against such violations, illegitimate restrictions on the exercise of fundamental rights, criminalization, the capacity of civil society actors and coordination among them and stigmatization. He concluded that overall, human rights defenders were able to operate freely, but in an environment that was not always sufficiently enabling. He noted that some defenders were subjected to physical assaults, threats and defamation and were forced to live in a difficult environment. He made recommendations addressed to the Government, human rights defenders and the international community.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/18)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period and requested him to report regularly to the Council and the General Assembly.

Protection of migrants

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a request by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2011, p. 667], the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants, François Crépeau (Canada), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/35] covering his activities from 1 June 2013 to 31 March 2014, including reflections on the 2013 High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development [YUN 2013, p. 1025]. The report focused on labour exploitation of migrants, covering some of the most common manifestations of such exploitation, groups of migrants who were specifically at risk, and access to remedy. The Rapporteur noted that certain categories of migrants were more vulnerable to exploitation, including temporary migrant workers, migrant domestic workers, women, children and migrants in an irregular situation. Much of the labour exploitation that migrants suffered was linked to recruitment agencies, which extorted high recruitment fees and deceived prospective migrants on their prospective salaries, job descriptions, working hours, overtime, days off, lodging and social protection. The Rapporteur stressed the need for Governments to regulate the recruitment industry and for comprehensive national migration policies. He made recommendations for States to combat discrimination and violence against migrant workers; ensure that workers received a contract in a language they understood; ensure that migrant workers received their salaries, in full, in a bank account; and guarantee that migrant workers had an adequate standard of living.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/179 [YUN 2013, p. 641], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Special Rapporteur's annual report [A/69/302] to the Assembly, covering his activities and focusing on including the human rights of migrants in the post-2015 development agenda (see p. 960). The Rapporteur provided guidelines, conclusions and recommendations on how to incorporate the human rights of migrants within key development goals, targets and indicators, in addition to recommendations on how to better monitor and gather data from marginalized groups such as migrants.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission reports. Following his mission to Sri Lanka (19–26 May) [A/HRC/29/36/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur focused on labour migration from the country and related recruitment practices. He welcomed efforts by the authorities to regulate labour migration and protect the rights of its citizens who migrated abroad, but noted the need to implement a human rights approach. The Rapporteur also noted the need to regulate and monitor the detention of migrants in Sri Lanka and to revise constitutional provisions which discriminated against them. He made recommendations to the Government on the normative and institutional framework to protect migrants' human rights, the recruitment process and women migrants and domestic workers, as well as recommendations to destination States.

Following his mission to Italy (2–6 December) [A/HRC/29/36/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur noted that despite a challenging economic and political climate, Italy had taken bold initiatives to address the unprecedented number of migrants and asylum seekers arriving by boat. He stated that European Union (EU) member States must collectively support front-line States such as Italy in order to provide a sustainable response that ensured full respect for migrants' human rights. In that regard, in addition to his recommendations to the Government on the normative and institutional framework to protect migrants' rights, border management, bilateral agreements on migration issues, detention and reception of migrants and access to justice, the Rapporteur also addressed recommendations to the EU.

Following his mission to Malta (6–10 December) [A/HRC/29/36/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur noted that the country must develop programmes to cope with the unprecedented number of migrants and asylum seekers arriving by boat. Those programmes should offer immediate assistance, legal safeguards and alternatives to detention, as well as integration programmes for migrants and asylum seekers who arrived irregularly. Stating that EU member States must collectively provide technical, financial and human resources to support States such as Malta in developing rights-based migration policy, the Rapporteur concluded the report with recommendations to the Government and to the EU.

In June [A/HRC/26/35/Add.2], Qatar submitted its comments on the Special Rapporteur's 2013 mission to the country [YUN 2013, p. 640].

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Assembly resolution 68/179, the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/69/277] on the implementation of that resolution, which summarized submissions received from States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The report analysed ways and means to promote and protect the human rights of migrant children, including unaccompanied children or those separated from their families, with a focus on the risks faced by adolescents. It also addressed the challenges to and recent good practices in protecting the migrants' human rights at international borders.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/19)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period and requested him to report regularly to the Council and to the General Assembly.

On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/21)], the Council encouraged States to promote equitable access to health services, disease prevention and care for migrants and ensure that their immigration policies were consistent with their obligations under international human rights law. It also requested the Rapporteur to continue to report on practical solutions to enhance the protection of migrants' human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/167 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Protection of migrants

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the protection of migrants, the most recent of which is resolution 68/179 of 18 December 2013, and recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 26/21 of 27 June 2014,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, in particular as to race,

Reaffirming also that everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State and the right to leave any country, including his or her own, and to return to his or her country,

Recalling all relevant international instruments, particularly the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Acknowledging the relevant contribution of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families to the international system for the protection of migrants,

Recalling the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want", in which States are called upon to promote and protect effectively the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants regardless of migration status, especially those of women and children, and to address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation and dialogue and a comprehensive and balanced approach, recognizing the roles and responsibilities of countries of origin, transit and destination in promoting and protecting the human rights of all migrants and avoiding approaches that might aggravate their vulnerability,

Recalling also the provisions concerning migrants contained in the outcome documents of major United Nations conferences and summits, including the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development,

Recalling further Commission on Population and Development resolutions 2006/2 of 10 May 2006 and 2009/1 of 3 April 2009, and its resolution 2013/1 of 26 April 2013 on new trends in migration: demographic aspects,

Taking note of advisory opinion OC 16/99 of 1 October 1999 on the Right to Information on Consular Assistance in the Framework of the Guarantees of the Due Process of Law and advisory opinion OC 18/03 of 17 September 2003 on the Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants, issued by the Inter American Court of Human Rights,

Taking note also of the Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 31 March 2004 in the case concerning Avena and Other Mexican Nationals and the Judgment of the Court of 19 January 2009 regarding the request for interpretation of the Avena Judgment, and recalling the obligations of States reaffirmed in both decisions,

Underlining the importance of the Human Rights Council in promoting respect for the protection of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, including migrants,

Recognizing that women represent almost half of all international migrants, and in this regard recognizing also that women migrant workers are important contributors to social and economic development in countries of origin and destination, and underlining the value and dignity of their labour, including the labour of domestic workers,

Recognizing also the importance of the second High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, held on 3 and 4 October 2013, which recognized the important contribution of migration in realizing the Millennium Development Goals and recognized that human mobility is a key factor for sustainable development, which should receive due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agendas,

Taking note of the conclusions and recommendations of the seventh meeting of the Global Forum on Migration and Development, held in Sweden in May 2014, focused on the theme “Unlocking the potential of migration for inclusive development”, which stressed the positive economic, social and cultural contributions of migrants to the development of the countries of origin and destination, and reiterated the importance of respect for the human rights of all migrants, regardless of their migration status,

Recognizing the cultural and economic contributions made by migrants to receiving societies and their communities of origin, as well as the need to identify appropriate means of maximizing development benefits and responding to the challenges that migration poses to countries of origin, transit and destination, especially in the light of the impact of the financial and economic crisis, and committing to ensuring dignified, humane treatment with applicable protections and to strengthening mechanisms for international cooperation,

Emphasizing the multidimensional character of the migratory phenomenon, the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation and dialogue in this regard, as appropriate, and the need to protect the human rights of all migrants, particularly at a time in which migration flows have increased in the globalized economy and take place in a context of continued security concerns,

Acknowledging the complexity of migratory flows and that international migration movements also occur within the same geographical regions, and in this context calling for a better understanding of migration patterns across and within regions,

Bearing in mind the obligations of States under international law, as applicable, to exercise due diligence to prevent crimes against migrants and to investigate and punish perpetrators, and that not doing so violates and impairs or nullifies the enjoyment of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of victims,

Affirming that migrant smuggling and crimes against migrants, including trafficking in persons, continue to pose a serious challenge and require a concerted international assessment and response and genuine multilateral cooperation among countries of origin, transit and destination for their eradication,

Bearing in mind that policies and initiatives on the issue of migration, including those that refer to the orderly management of migration, should promote holistic approaches that take into account the causes and consequences of the phenomenon, as well as full respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants,

Stressing the importance of regulations and laws regarding irregular migration, at all levels of government, being in accordance with the obligations of States under international law, including international human rights law,

Stressing also the obligation of States to protect the human rights of migrants regardless of their migration status, including when implementing their specific migration and border security policies, and expressing its concern at measures which, including in the context of policies aimed at reducing irregular migration, treat irregular migration as a criminal rather than an administrative offence, where the effect of doing so is to deny migrants the full enjoyment of their human rights and fundamental freedoms, and in this regard recalling that sanctions and the treatment given to irregular migrants should be commensurate with their offences,

Aware that, as criminals take advantage of migratory flows and attempt to circumvent restrictive immigration policies, migrants become more vulnerable to, inter alia, kidnapping, extortion, forced labour, sexual exploitation, physical assault, debt servitude and abandonment,

Recognizing the contributions of young migrants to countries of origin and destination, and in that regard encouraging States to consider the specific circumstances and needs of young migrants,

Concerned about the large and growing number of migrants, especially women and children, including those unaccompanied or separated from their parents, who place themselves in a vulnerable situation by attempting to cross international borders without the required travel documents, and recognizing the obligation of States to respect the human rights of those migrants,

Recognizing the obligations of countries of origin, transit and destination under international human rights law,

Underlining the importance for States, in cooperation with civil society, including non-governmental organizations, workers' organizations and the private sector, among other relevant stakeholders, to undertake information campaigns aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations, risks and rights in the event of migration in order to enable everyone to make informed decisions and to prevent anyone from utilizing dangerous means to cross international borders,

1. Calls upon States to promote and protect effectively the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, regardless of their migration status, especially those of women and children, and to address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation and dialogue and a comprehensive and balanced approach, recognizing the roles and responsibilities of countries of origin, transit and destination in promoting and protecting the human rights of all migrants and avoiding approaches that might aggravate their vulnerability;

2. Expresses its concern about the impact of financial and economic crises and natural disasters on international migration and migrants, and in that regard urges Governments to combat unfair and discriminatory treatment of migrants, in particular migrant workers and their families;

3. Reaffirms the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the obligations of States under the International Covenants on Human Rights, and in this regard:

(a) Strongly condemns the acts, manifestations and expressions of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrants and the stereotypes often applied to them, including on the basis of religion or belief, and urges States to apply and, where needed, to reinforce the existing laws when hate crimes, xenophobic or intolerant acts, manifestations or expressions against migrants occur in order to eradicate impunity for those who commit those acts and, where appropriate, to provide effective remedy to the victims;

(b) Encourages States to establish or, when appropriate, strengthen mechanisms which allow migrants to report alleged cases of abuse by relevant authorities and employers without fear of reprisals, and that allow for such complaints to be addressed fairly;

(c) Expresses concern about legislation adopted by some States that results in measures and practices that may restrict the human rights and fundamental freedoms of migrants, and reaffirms that, when exercising their sovereign right to enact and implement migratory and border security measures, States have the duty to comply with their obligations under international law, including international human rights law, in order to ensure full respect for the human rights of migrants;

(d) Calls upon States to ensure that their laws and policies, including in the areas of counter-terrorism and combating transnational organized crime, such as trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants, fully respect the human rights of migrants;

(e) Calls upon States that have not done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families as a matter of priority, and requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to promote and raise awareness of the Convention;

(f) Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families on its nineteenth and twentieth sessions;

4. Also reaffirms the duty of States to effectively promote and protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, especially those of women and children, regardless of their migration status, in conformity with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the international instruments to which they are party, and therefore:

(a) Calls upon all States to respect the human rights and inherent dignity of migrants, to put an end to arbitrary arrest and detention and, in order to avoid excessive detention of irregular migrants, to review, where necessary, detention periods and to use alternatives to detention, where appropriate, including measures that have been successfully implemented by some States;

(b) Encourages States to put in place, if they have not yet done so, appropriate systems and procedures in order to ensure that the best interests of the child are a primary consideration in all actions or decisions concerning migrant children, regardless of their migration status, and to use, when applicable, alternatives to the detention of migrant children;

(c) Encourages States to cooperate and to take appropriate measures to prevent, combat and address the smuggling of migrants, including strengthening laws, policies, information sharing and joint operational functions, enhancing capacities and support opportunities for migration in a well-managed, safe and dignified manner and strengthening legislative methods for criminalizing acts of smuggling migrants;

(d) Urges all States to adopt effective measures to prevent and punish any form of illegal deprivation of liberty of migrants by individuals or groups;

(e) Requests States to adopt concrete measures to prevent the violation of the human rights of migrants while in transit, including in ports and airports and at borders and migration checkpoints, and to adequately train public officials who work in those facilities and in border areas to treat migrants respectfully and in accordance with their obligations under international human rights law;

(f) Calls upon States to prosecute, in conformity with applicable law, acts of violation of the human rights of migrants and their families, such as arbitrary detention, torture and violations of the right to life, including extrajudicial executions, during their transit from the country of origin to the country of destination and vice versa, including transit across national borders;

(g) Recognizes the particular vulnerability of migrants in transit situations, including through national borders, and the need to ensure full respect for their human rights also in these circumstances;

(h) Also recognizes the importance of coordinated efforts of the international community to assist and support migrants stranded in vulnerable situations;

(i) Underlines the right of migrants to return to their country of citizenship, and recalls that States must ensure that their returning nationals are duly received;

(j) Reaffirms emphatically the duty of States parties to ensure full respect for and observance of the Vienna

Convention on Consular Relations, in particular with regard to the right of all foreign nationals, regardless of their migration status, to communicate with a consular official of the sending State in case of arrest, imprisonment, custody or detention, and the obligation of the receiving State to inform the foreign national without delay of his or her rights under the Convention;

(k) Requests all States, in conformity with national legislation and applicable international legal instruments to which they are party, to enforce labour law effectively, including by addressing violations of such law, with regard to migrant workers' labour relations and working conditions, inter alia, those related to their remuneration and conditions of health, safety at work and the right to freedom of association;

(l) Invites Member States to consider ratifying relevant conventions of the International Labour Organization, including Convention No. 189 on decent work for domestic workers;

(m) Encourages all States to remove unlawful obstacles, where they exist, that may prevent the safe, transparent, unrestricted and expeditious transfer of remittances, earnings, assets and pensions of migrants to their country of origin or to any other countries, in conformity with applicable legislation and agreements, and to consider, as appropriate, measures to solve other problems that may impede such transfers;

(n) Recalls that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights recognizes that everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted to him or her;

5. Emphasizes the importance of protecting persons in vulnerable situations, and in this regard:

(a) Expresses its concern about the increase in the activities of transnational and national organized crime entities and others who profit from crimes against migrants, especially women and children, without regard for dangerous and inhumane conditions and in flagrant violation of national laws and international law and contrary to international standards;

(b) Also expresses its concern about the high level of impunity enjoyed by traffickers and their accomplices as well as other members of organized crime entities and, in this context, the denial of rights and justice to migrants who have suffered from abuse;

(c) Welcomes immigration programmes, adopted by some countries, that allow migrants to integrate fully into the host countries, facilitate family reunification and promote a harmonious, tolerant and respectful environment, and encourages States to consider the possibility of adopting these types of programmes;

(d) Calls upon States that have not already done so to provide for the protection of the human rights of women migrant workers, to promote fair labour conditions and to ensure that all women, including care workers, are legally protected against violence and exploitation;

(e) Encourages States to implement gender-sensitive policies and programmes for women migrant workers, to provide safe and legal channels that recognize the skills and education of women migrant workers and, as appropriate, to facilitate their productive employment, decent work and integration into the labour force, including in the fields of education and science and technology;

(f) Encourages all States to develop international migration policies and programmes that include a gender perspective, in order to adopt the necessary measures to better protect women and girls against dangers and abuse during migration;

(g) Calls upon States to protect the human rights of migrant children, given their vulnerability, particularly unaccompanied migrant children, ensuring that the best interests of the child are a primary consideration in their policies of integration, return and family reunification;

(h) Encourages all States to prevent and eliminate discriminatory policies and legislation at all levels of government that deny migrant children access to education and, while taking into account the best interests of the child as a primary consideration, to foster the successful integration of migrant children into the education system and the removal of barriers to their education in host countries and countries of origin;

(i) Urges States to ensure that repatriation mechanisms allow for the identification and special protection of persons in vulnerable situations, including unaccompanied children and persons with disabilities, and take into account, in conformity with their international obligations and commitments, the principle of the best interests of the child, clarity about reception and care arrangements and family reunification;

(j) Urges States parties to the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the Protocols thereto to implement them fully, and calls upon States that have not done so to consider ratifying or acceding to them as a matter of priority;

6. Encourages States to take into account the conclusions and recommendations of the study of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on challenges and best practices in the implementation of the international framework for the protection of the rights of the child in the context of migration when designing and implementing their migration policies;

7. Also encourages States to protect migrant victims of national and transnational organized crime, including kidnapping and trafficking and, in some instances, smuggling, including through the implementation of programmes and policies that guarantee protection and access to medical, psychosocial and legal assistance, where appropriate;

8. Encourages Member States that have not already done so to enact national legislation and to take further effective measures to combat trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants, recognizing that these crimes may endanger the lives of migrants or subject them to harm, servitude, exploitation, debt bondage, slavery, sexual exploitation or forced labour, and also encourages Member States to strengthen international cooperation to prevent, investigate and combat such trafficking in persons and smuggling;

9. Stresses the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation in the protection of the human rights of migrants, and therefore:

(a) Requests all States, international organizations and relevant stakeholders to take into account in their policies and initiatives on migration issues the global character of the migratory phenomenon and to give due consideration to international, regional and bilateral cooperation in this field, including by undertaking dialogues on migration that include countries of origin, transit and destination, as well as civil society, including migrants, with a view to addressing, in a comprehensive manner, inter alia, its causes and consequences and the challenge of undocumented or irregular migration, granting priority to the protection of the human rights of migrants;

(b) Encourages States to take the measures necessary to achieve policy coherence on migration at the national, regional and international levels, including by ensuring coordinated child protection policies and systems across borders that are in full compliance with international human rights law;

(c) Also encourages States to cooperate effectively in protecting witnesses in cases of smuggling of migrants, regardless of their migration status;

(d) Further encourages States to cooperate effectively in protecting witnesses and victims in cases of trafficking in persons, regardless of their migration status;

(e) Calls upon the United Nations system and other relevant international organizations and multilateral institutions to enhance their cooperation in the development of methodologies for the collection and processing of statistical data on international migration and the situation of migrants in countries of origin, transit and destination and to assist Member States in their capacity-building efforts in this regard;

10. Encourages giving appropriate consideration to the issue of migration and development in the preparation of the post-2015 development agenda through, inter alia, integrating a human rights perspective and mainstreaming a gender perspective, and therefore:

(a) Requests Member States, the United Nations system, international organizations, civil society and all relevant stakeholders, especially the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the human rights of migrants, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on International Migration and Development and the International Organization for Migration and other members of the Global Migration Group, to give due consideration to international migration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

(b) Recognizes the importance of the contribution of the High Commissioner, the Chair of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families and the Special Rapporteur, as well as other key actors, to the discussion on international migration;

11. Encourages States, relevant international organizations, civil society, including non-governmental organizations, and the private sector to continue and to enhance their dialogue in relevant international meetings with a view to strengthening and making more inclusive public policies aimed at promoting and respecting human rights, including those of migrants;

12. Requests Governments and international organizations to take appropriate measures to give due consideration to the declaration of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development held on 3 and 4 October 2013;

13. Invites the Chair of the Committee to present an oral report on the work of the Committee and to engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Promotion and protection of human rights”, as a way to enhance communication between the Assembly and the Committee;

14. Invites the Special Rapporteur to submit his report to the General Assembly and to engage in an interactive dialogue at its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Promotion and protection of human rights”;

15. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session in accordance with resolution 68/179;

16. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the promotion and protection of human rights, including ways and means to promote the human rights of migrants, and notes the recommended principles and guidelines on human rights at international borders prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights referenced therein;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Also on 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/187 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Migrant children and adolescents

The General Assembly,

Recalling all relevant instruments, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto, and the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) of the International Labour Organization,

Taking into account general comment No. 6 (2005) of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the treatment of unaccompanied and separated children outside their country of origin, and taking note of the general discussion of the Committee in 2012 on the rights of all children in the context of international migration,

Recalling all previous resolutions of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council on the protection of the human rights of migrants and Commission on Population and Development resolution 2013/1 of 26 April 2013, entitled “New trends in migration: demographic aspects”, as well as the Declaration of the High-level Dialogue on International Migration and Development, adopted on 3 October 2013,

Recognizing the serious humanitarian situation in some regions related to mass migration of accompanied and unaccompanied children, including adolescents, defined as those under 18 years of age, or those separated from their parents, who face vulnerable situations by attempting to cross international borders without the required travel documents,

Concerned by the fact that migrant children, including adolescents, in particular those in an irregular situation, may be exposed to serious human rights violations and abuses at various points in their journey, which can threaten their physical, emotional and psychological well-being in the countries of origin, transit and destination, and that many irregular migrant children, including adolescents, may not be aware of their rights and may be exposed to crimes and human rights abuses committed by transnational criminal organizations and common criminals, including theft, kidnapping, extortion, threats, trafficking in persons, including forced labour, child labour, sexual abuse and exploitation, physical harm and death,

Underlining the importance for States, in cooperation with civil society, including non-governmental organizations, workers' organizations and the private sector, among other relevant stakeholders, to undertake information campaigns aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations, risks and rights in the context of migration in order to enable everyone to make informed decisions and to prevent anyone from utilizing dangerous means to cross international borders,

Aware that the migration of accompanied and unaccompanied children, including adolescents, may be the result of diverse causes and factors, such as poverty, crisis situations, lack of social and economic opportunities in their communities of origin, the death of one or both parents, the search for family reunification, all forms of violence and lack of personal safety,

Recognizing that undocumented and unaccompanied migrant children, including adolescents, should be promptly placed in the least restrictive setting, for the shortest possible period of time, that is in the best interest of the child and respects their human rights,

Encouraging States to adopt alternatives to detention that take into account the best interests of the child, as a primary consideration, and respect the human rights of migrant children, including adolescents,

Reaffirming that, when exercising their sovereign right to enact and implement migration and border security measures, States have the duty to comply with their obligations under international law, including international human rights law, in order to ensure full respect of the human rights of migrant children, including adolescents,

Reaffirming also the fact that all migrant children, including adolescents, are entitled to equal protection by the law and that all persons, regardless of their migration status, are equal before the courts and tribunals and, in the determination of their rights and obligations in a suit at law, are entitled to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law,

Aware that the risks related to irregular migration faced by children, including adolescents, can have a negative impact on the enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights, as well as their political and civil rights and their rights as set forth in the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recognizing that States, in accordance with their obligations under international law, are responsible for promoting and protecting the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants, regardless of their migration status, including accompanied and unaccompanied children, including adolescents, within their territorial jurisdiction, and encouraging States to promote national child and adolescent protection systems, in consultation with all sectors of society, including migrant communities, civil society organizations and other relevant actors,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the promotion and protection of human rights, including ways and means to promote the human rights of migrants, and notes the recommended principles and guidelines on human rights at international borders prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights referenced therein;

2. Calls upon countries of origin, transit and destination to facilitate family reunification as an important objective in order to promote the welfare and the best interest of migrant children, including adolescents, as applicable under national law, due process and the relevant provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto, and to comply with the consular notification and access obligations set forth in the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations so that States may provide child-friendly consular assistance, as appropriate, including legal assistance;

3. Underlines that children, including adolescents, should not be subject to arbitrary arrest or detention based solely on their migration status and that the deprivation of liberty of migrant children and adolescents should be a measure of last resort, under conditions that respect the human rights of each child and in a manner that takes into account, as a primary consideration, the best interest of the child;

4. Calls upon States, in accordance with their national laws and their obligations under the relevant international instruments in this field, to promote and protect the rights of every child to be registered immediately after birth, to have a name from birth, to acquire a nationality and, as far as possible, to know and be cared for by his or her parents, in particular where the child would otherwise be stateless;

5. Reaffirms the need to effectively promote and protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrant children, including adolescents, regardless of their migration status, and to address international migration through international, regional or bilateral cooperation and dialogue and through a comprehensive and balanced approach, recognizing the roles and responsibilities of countries of origin, transit and destination in promoting and protecting the human rights of migrant children, including adolescents, and avoiding approaches that might aggravate their vulnerability;

6. Calls upon States, the international community and other relevant stakeholders to address the irregular migration of children, including adolescents, from a human rights and a humanitarian perspective, taking into account the principle of the best interest of the child while promoting and protecting their human rights and fundamental freedoms, and calls upon States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to adopt measures to give effect to the rights enshrined therein;

7. Urges all States to intensify cooperation with relevant stakeholders in different areas in order to jointly identify positive alternatives to reduce, mitigate and eliminate the causes and structural factors that lead to irregular migration, so as to prevent minors from feeling compelled to migrate from their communities;

8. Encourages all States to address the irregular migration of children, including adolescents, as a multi-causal phenomenon, giving priority at all times to the personal safety and physical, emotional and psychological integrity of migrant children, including adolescents, keeping in mind the different needs of boys and girls and adolescent women and men in these situations;

9. Recognizes the importance of coordinating efforts among countries of origin, transit and destination, while also recognizing their roles and their responsibilities to address the irregular migration of unaccompanied children, including adolescents, and to safeguard their human rights, with due consideration for the protection of the best interest of the child;

10. Encourages States to protect and provide assistance to migrant children, including adolescents, within their jurisdiction, including victims of national and transnational organized crime, including through the implementation of gender-responsive programmes and policies that provide for protection and access to medical, psychosocial and legal assistance, as necessary, and urges them to prosecute perpetrators and abusers;

11. Recognizes the need for international cooperation to address, in a holistic and comprehensive manner, the challenges of irregular migration of children, including adolescents, so as to ensure safe, orderly and regular migration, with full respect for human rights;

12. Requests States and all relevant stakeholders to strengthen cooperation mechanisms that foster joint cooperation, dialogue and consensus at all times in order to promote migration policies and practices based on respect for human rights, sustainable development, gender equality and multiculturalism, recognizing the interdependent roles of the international community, State institutions and civil society;

13. Underlines that the principle of the best interest of the child should guide legislation, policies and practices relating to children, regardless of their status, including in the context of migration, and calls upon States to carry out individualized, comprehensive assessments of the status and protection needs of migrant children, including adolescents, as well as to carry out early and prompt assessments of victims of violence who may qualify for refugee status or other forms of protection;

14. Calls upon States to recognize that human mobility has become an integral part of the current social, economic and environmental situation, recognizes, in the process of elaborating future sustainable development goals, the importance of considering the reality of migration and its multiple direct impacts on the development prospects of migrants, their families and communities and on the development of countries of origin and destination, and encourages the international community to work so that aspects related to children and to migration being considered in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda can also be applicable in the case of accompanied and unaccompanied migrant children;

15. Encourages States to establish effective safeguards, where applicable, between public service providers, such as providers of child services and other social services, and immigration enforcement authorities in order to better ensure the human rights of migrant children, including adolescents;

16. Calls upon States to strengthen their public policies and programmes, especially in the social and economic fields, aimed at the most vulnerable sectors of the population in order to help reduce irregular migration push factors, and in this regard calls upon States and all other relevant stakeholders to join these efforts in a systematic way, promoting investment and economic exchange, as well as cooperation, at all levels;

17. Also calls upon States to combat xenophobia, racism and discrimination of any kind against migrants, specifically children, including adolescents, and further calls upon States to take appropriate measures to prevent, investigate and punish all human rights violations and abuses experienced by migrants within their territory and to take appropriate steps to help facilitate such measures in response to abuses outside their territory, in cooperation with other States and all other relevant stakeholders, according to their international commitments and their national legislation;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report on the situation of accompanied and unaccompanied migrant children, including adolescents, and to include information on the implementation of the present resolution in his report on the protection of migrants requested for its seventieth session;

19. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Migrants at sea

Human Rights Council action. In a 26 September statement [A/69/53/Add.1 (PRST/27/3)], the Council President expressed alarm at the reports of the sinking of boats that had resulted in the death of hundreds of people and concern at the persistent vulnerability of migrants; expressed deep sorrow at the massive loss of innocent lives of migrants, including at sea; noted that the protection of the human rights of migrants at sea required a holistic analysis and assessment, as well as a concerted international response; called on States to assist persons in distress at sea; and urged States to protect migrants' human rights and to address the root causes that drove persons to make such dangerous journeys. The President called on the High Commissioner, the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants and other special procedures to pay particular attention to the protection of the rights of migrants at sea.

Discrimination against minorities

Report of Independent Expert. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 671], the Independent Expert on minority issues, Rita Izsák (Hungary), in her annual report to the Council [A/HRC/25/56], summarized her activities since her previous report [YUN 2013, p. 645], provided an update on the work of the Forum on Minority Issues following its sixth session [ibid.] and addressed the inclusion of minority issues in post-2015 development agendas. She noted that minority issues remained poorly reflected in the emerging discussions, both internationally and nationally, and identified the need for the new global development agenda to include specific goals addressing inequality and promoting social inclusion. Minorities should be among the first targets of development strategies, yet frequently they were among the last. Lack of attention to the situations of minorities constituted one of the most serious deficiencies in the Millennium Development Goals process. The Expert recommended that States establish specific targets on the inclusion of minorities and specific indicators upon which to monitor progress. She urged States to establish independent monitoring bodies, with civil society and public participation, to ensure that the next global round of commitments was fulfilled for minorities.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/5)], the Council extended the mandate of the Independent Expert as the Special Rapporteur on minority issues for a three-year period, and requested the Rapporteur to guide the work of the Forum on Minority Issues (see below) and to report annually to the Council and to the General Assembly.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/172 [YUN 2013, p. 646], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/266] to the Assembly, which focused on preventing and addressing violence and atrocities against minorities. The Rapporteur concluded that strategies to better prevent and address violence against minorities should involve the adoption of measures to foster unity among different population groups, the implementation of minority rights and the establishment or strengthening of institutional and policy frameworks for the protection of such rights. At the national level, good and inclusive governance were key prevention prerequisites.

Mission reports. Following her mission to Nigeria (17–28 February) [A/HRC/28/64/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur noted that in most of the country, harmonious and peaceful inter-ethnic relations prevailed, yet Nigeria had seen violent intercommunal clashes in some states, particularly in the North and Middle Belt regions, which had left thousands of victims. The root causes of violence involved factors such as the issue of indigenous inhabitants versus settlers, competition for resources, poverty, good governance deficits, impunity and polarization of ethnic and religious characteristics. Other concerns included environmental degradation due to frequent oil spills in some regions and the need to safeguard Nigeria's hundreds of minority languages, several of which were under threat. Noting that Nigeria's hundreds of ethnic groups and languages posed challenges to manage and address intercommunal and minority issues, the Rapporteur made recommendations on a wide range of topics.

Following her mission to Ukraine (7–14 April) [A/HRC/28/64/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur noted that minority issues had become highly politicized as political and social unrest had emerged in some regions since February 2014, threatening to widen fractures along national, ethnic and linguistic lines. While there were challenges relating to minority issues, some radical elements were intent on promoting and inciting disunity. It was essential to establish a national and regional dialogue to understand the concerns and issues of all minority communities and ensure that they were addressed. Measures were required to reinforce the minority rights infrastructure and to build confidence that minority rights would be protected in law and in practice. Such measures should include strengthening of legal protection, enhancing institutional attention to minority issues and instituting stronger consultation mechanisms.

Forum on Minority Issues. The seventh session of the Forum on Minority Issues (Geneva, 25–26 November) [A/HRC/28/77] focused on preventing and addressing violence and atrocity crimes targeted against minorities. The approximately 570 participants included representatives of Governments and of minority communities, NGOs, UN specialized agencies, regional and intergovernmental bodies and national human rights institutions. The Forum recommended that States comply with international standards of minority rights protection, equality and non-discrimination; adopt legislation prohibiting and punishing discrimination on the ground of nationality, ethnicity, religion and language; pay particular attention to the situation of persons belonging to minority groups who might face the most severe and entrenched forms of discrimination and exclusion; identify and implement early warning indicators to assess the existence of factors that could lead to violence; collect disaggregated data; and adopt holistic, inclusive and proactive security and policing strategies.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/5)], the Council welcomed the establishment of the special fund for the participation of civil society and other stakeholders in, inter alia, the Forum on Minority Issues.

On 26 June [res. 26/4], the Council recognized the need to carry out a comprehensive study of the human rights situation of Roma worldwide, with a particular focus on the phenomenon of anti-Gypsyism; and invited the Special Rapporteur to submit the study, with recommendations, to the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions 13/12 [YUN 2010, p. 680] and 22/4 [YUN 2013, p. 646], the High Commissioner in December submitted a report [A/HRC/28/27] on the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, which presented activities undertaken by OHCHR, the UN network on racial discrimination and the protection of minorities, human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and the universal periodic review to contribute to the promotion of, and respect for the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities [YUN 1992, p. 722].

Freedom of religion or belief

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 650], the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, Heiner Bielefeldt (Germany), submitted a report [A/HRC/25/58] that reviewed his activities and focused on the root causes of collective religious hatred. Factors that increased the likelihood of such hatred included endemic corruption, an authoritarian political atmosphere and the harnessing of religion for purposes of national identity politics. He noted that policies intended to counter manifestations of religious hatred must invest in trust-building based on universal respect. In that regard, he recommended trust-building activities, such as establishing trustworthy public institutions and promoting meaningful communication, particularly among different religious or belief communities. Recommendations included calling on States to implement the Rabat Plan of Action on the prohibition of advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constituted incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence [YUN 2013, p. 650].

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/170 [YUN 2013, p. 650], the Secretary-General in August [A/69/261] transmitted to the Assembly the Special Rapporteur's report, which reviewed activities since the previous report [YUN 2013, p. 649] and focused on means to eliminate religious intolerance and discrimination in the workplace. Given the enormous significance of the workplace, in which many people spent a large share of their daily lives, he noted that the issue of religious discrimination in the area of employment had received comparatively little attention. The Rapporteur argued that "reasonable accommodation"—modifications and adjustments not imposing a disproportionate burden on others to ensure the enjoyment of human rights—should be adopted to eliminate discrimination based on religion or belief in the workplace. He provided conclusions and recommendations addressed to State institutions, public and private employers as well as other stakeholders.

Mission reports. Following his visit to Kazakhstan (25 March–4 April) [A/HRC/28/66/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur, while acknowledging a general appreciation of religious diversity, noticed adverse attitudes towards some non-traditional religious communities. The State monitored religious activities strictly to prevent extremism and to combat "sects" deemed destructive to people's well-being. Many of the measures adopted for that purpose were not in line with international standards of freedom of religion or belief. Moreover, the mandatory registration of religious communities, in conjunction with tightly knit stipulations, hampered free religious practice. The Rapporteur recommended a public debate on the meaning of secularism to overcome the predominant restrictive interpretation, reform of the 2011 Law on Religious Activity and Religious Associations, further development of the programmes on religious information for students and discontinuation of the Government's anti-sect campaigns that stoked negative stereotypes against new religious movements.

Following his mission to Viet Nam (21–31 July) [A/HRC/28/66/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur identified positive developments as well as serious problems; mainly the lack of clarity in the legal provisions that tended to give broad leeway to regulate, restrict or forbid the exercise of freedom of religion or belief in the interest of "national unity and public order". Other challenges originated from the Government's tight control of religious communities. The autonomy and activities of unrecognized communities remained restricted and unsafe, with the rights to freedom of religion or belief of such communities grossly violated in the face of constant surveillance, intimidation, harassment and persecution. The Rapporteur saw the need for improvements and shared his recommendations to maintain a constructive dialogue and cooperation with the Government.

In February, Jordan [A/HRC/25/58/Add.4] and Sierra Leone [A/HRC/25/58/Add.3] submitted comments on the Special Rapporteur's 2013 mission to those countries [YUN 2013, pp. 650 & 649].

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/12)], the Council urged States to promote and protect freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief and to make use of the potential of education for the eradication of prejudices against and stereotypes of individuals on the basis of their religion or belief. It requested the Special Rapporteur to report annually to the Council and to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/175 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Freedom of religion or belief

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of

All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling also article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other relevant human rights provisions,

Recalling further its previous resolutions on freedom of religion or belief and on the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief, including resolution 68/170 of 18 December 2013, and Human Rights Council resolution 25/12 of 27 March 2014,

Recognizing the important work carried out by the Human Rights Committee in providing guidance with respect to the scope of freedom of religion or belief,

Noting the conclusions and recommendations of the expert workshops organized by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and contained in the Rabat Plan of Action on the prohibition of advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, adopted in Rabat on 5 October 2012,

Considering that religion or belief, for those who profess either, is one of the fundamental elements in their conception of life and that freedom of religion or belief, as a universal human right, should be fully respected and guaranteed,

Seriously concerned at continuing acts of intolerance and violence based on religion or belief against individuals, including against persons belonging to religious communities and religious minorities around the world, and at the increasing number and intensity of such incidents, which are often of a criminal nature and may have international characteristics,

Deeply concerned at the limited progress that has been made in the elimination of all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief, and believing that further intensified efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, as noted at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, as well as at the Durban Review Conference, held in Geneva from 20 to 24 April 2009,

Recalling that States have the primary responsibility to promote and protect human rights, including the human rights of persons belonging to religious minorities, including their right to exercise their religion or belief freely,

Concerned that official authorities sometimes tolerate or encourage acts of violence, or credible threats of violence, against persons belonging to religious communities and religious minorities,

Concerned also at the increasing number of laws and regulations that limit the freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief and at the implementation of existing laws in a discriminatory manner,

Convinced of the need to urgently address the rapid rise in various parts of the world of religious extremism that affects the rights of individuals, in particular persons belonging to religious communities and religious minorities, the situations of violence and discrimination that affect many individuals, particularly women and children, on the basis or in the name of religion or belief or in accordance with cultural and traditional practices, and the misuse of religion or belief for ends inconsistent with the principles set out in the Charter of the United Nations and in other relevant instruments of the United Nations,

Seriously concerned about all attacks on religious places, sites and shrines in violation of international law, in particular human rights and humanitarian law, including any deliberate destruction of relics and monuments,

Emphasizing that States, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, religious bodies, the media and civil society as a whole have an important role to play in promoting tolerance and respect for religious and cultural diversity and in the universal promotion and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief,

Underlining the importance of education, including human rights education, in the promotion of tolerance, which involves the acceptance by the public of, and its respect for, diversity, including with regard to religious expression, and underlining also the fact that education, in particular at school, should contribute in a meaningful way to promoting tolerance and the elimination of discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Stresses that everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief, which includes the freedom to have or not to have, or to adopt, a religion or belief of one's own choice and the freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest one's religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance, including the right to change one's religion or belief;

2. Also stresses that the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief applies equally to all persons, regardless of their religion or belief and without any discrimination as to their equal protection by the law;

3. Strongly condemns violations of freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief as well as all forms of intolerance, discrimination and violence based on religion or belief;

4. Recognizes with deep concern the overall rise in instances of discrimination, intolerance and violence, regardless of the actors, directed against members of many religious and other communities in various parts of the world, including cases motivated by Islamophobia, anti-Semitism and Christianophobia and prejudices against persons of other religions or beliefs;

5. Reaffirms that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion or belief as this may have adverse consequences on the enjoyment of the right to freedom of religion or belief of all members of the religious communities concerned;

6. Strongly condemns violence and acts of terrorism, which are increasing in number and intensity, targeting individuals, including persons belonging to religious minorities, on the basis of or in the name of religion or belief;

7. Recalls that States have an obligation to exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate and punish acts of violence against persons belonging to religious minorities, regardless of the perpetrator, and that failure to do so may constitute a human rights violation;

8. Emphasizes that freedom of religion or belief and freedom of expression are interdependent, interrelated and mutually reinforcing, and stresses the role that these rights can play in the fight against all forms of intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief;

9. Strongly condemns any advocacy of hatred based on religion or belief that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, whether it involves the use of print, audiovisual or electronic media or any other means;

10. Expresses concern at the persistence of institutionalized social intolerance and discrimination practised against many on the grounds of religion or belief, and emphasizes that legal procedures pertaining to religious or belief-based groups and places of worship are not a prerequisite for the exercise of the right to manifest one's religion or belief and that such procedures, when legally required at the national or local level, should be non-discriminatory in order to contribute to the effective protection of the right of all persons to practise their religion or belief, either individually or in community with others and in public or private;

11. Recognizes with concern the situation of persons in vulnerable situations, including persons deprived of their liberty, refugees, asylum seekers and internally displaced persons, children, persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities and migrants, as regards their ability to freely exercise their right to freedom of religion or belief;

12. Emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest one's religion or belief are permitted only if limitations are prescribed by law, are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others, are non-discriminatory and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief;

13. Expresses deep concern at continued obstacles to the enjoyment of the right to freedom of religion or belief as well as the increasing number of instances of intolerance, discrimination and violence based on religion or belief, including:

(a) Acts of violence and intolerance directed against individuals based on their religion or belief, including religious persons and persons belonging to religious minorities and other communities in various parts of the world;

(b) The rise of religious extremism in various parts of the world that affects the human rights of individuals, including persons belonging to religious minorities;

(c) Incidents of hatred, discrimination, intolerance and violence based on religion or belief, which may be associated with or manifested by the derogatory stereotyping, negative profiling and stigmatization of persons based on their religion or belief;

(d) Attacks on or destruction of religious places, sites and shrines in violation of international law, in particular human rights and humanitarian law, as they have more than material significance for the dignity and lives of persons holding spiritual or religious beliefs;

(e) Instances, both in law and practice, that constitute violations of the human right to freedom of religion or belief, including of the individual right to publicly express one's spiritual and religious beliefs, taking into account the relevant articles of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as other international instruments;

(f) Constitutional and legislative systems that fail to provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief to all without distinction;

14. Urges States to step up their efforts to protect and promote freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief, and to this end:

(a) To ensure that their constitutional and legislative systems provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief to all without distinction by, inter alia, providing access to justice, including by facilitating legal assistance and effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief or the right to freely choose and practise one's religion is violated, paying particular attention to persons belonging to religious minorities;

(b) To implement all accepted universal periodic review recommendations related to the promotion and protection of freedom of religion or belief;

(c) To ensure that no one within their jurisdiction is deprived of the right to life, liberty and security of person because of religion or belief, to provide adequate protection to persons at risk of violent attack on the grounds of their religion or belief, to ensure that no one is subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment or arbitrary arrest or detention on that account and to bring to justice all perpetrators of violations of these rights;

(d) To end violations of the human rights of women and to devote particular attention to appropriate measures modifying or abolishing existing laws, regulations, customs and practices that discriminate against women, including in the exercise of their right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief, and to foster practical ways to ensure equality between men and women;

(e) To ensure that existing legislation is not implemented in a discriminatory manner or does not result in discrimination based on religion or belief, that no one is discriminated against on the basis of his or her religion or belief when accessing, inter alia, education, medical care, employment, humanitarian assistance or social benefits and that everyone has the right and the opportunity to have access, on general terms of equality, to public services in their country, without any discrimination based on religion or belief;

(f) To review, whenever relevant, existing registration practices in order to ensure that such practices do not limit the right of all persons to manifest their religion or belief, either alone or in community with others and in public or private;

(g) To ensure that no official documents are withheld from the individual on the grounds of religion or belief and that everyone has the right to refrain from disclosing information concerning their religious affiliation in such documents against their will;

(h) To ensure, in particular, the right of all persons to worship, assemble or teach in connection with a religion or belief, their right to establish and maintain places for these purposes and the right of all persons to seek, receive and impart information and ideas in these areas;

(i) To ensure that, in accordance with appropriate national legislation and in conformity with international human rights law, the freedom of all persons and members of groups to establish and maintain religious, charitable or humanitarian institutions is fully respected and protected;

(j) To ensure that all public officials and civil servants, including members of law enforcement bodies, and personnel of detention facilities, the military and educators, in the course of fulfilling their official duties, respect freedom of religion or belief and do not discriminate for reasons based on religion or belief, and that they receive all necessary and appropriate awareness-raising, education or training on respect for freedom of religion or belief;

(k) To take all necessary and appropriate action, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to combat hatred, discrimination, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by intolerance based on religion or belief, as well as incitement to hostility and violence, with particular regard to persons belonging to religious minorities in all parts of the world;

(l) To promote, through education and other means, mutual understanding, tolerance, non-discrimination and respect in all matters relating to freedom of religion or belief by encouraging, in society at large, a wider knowledge of the diversity of religions and beliefs and of the history, traditions, languages and cultures of the various religious minorities existing within their jurisdiction;

(m) To prevent any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on religion or belief that impairs the recognition, enjoyment or exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms on an equal basis and to detect signs of intolerance that may lead to discrimination based on religion or belief;

15. Welcomes and encourages initiatives by the media to promote tolerance and respect for religious and cultural diversity and the universal promotion and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief, and stresses the importance of unhindered participation in the media and in public discourse for all persons, regardless of their religion or belief;

16. Stresses the importance of a continued and strengthened dialogue in all its forms, including among and within religions or beliefs, and with broader participation, including of women, to promote greater tolerance, respect and mutual understanding, and welcomes different initiatives in this regard, including the Alliance of Civilizations initiative and the programmes led by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

17. Welcomes and encourages the continuing efforts of all actors in society, including non-governmental organizations and bodies and groups based on religion or belief, to promote the implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, and further encourages their work in promoting freedom of religion or belief, in highlighting cases of religious intolerance, discrimination and persecution and in promoting religious tolerance;

18. Recommends that States, the United Nations and other actors, including non-governmental organizations and bodies and groups based on religion or belief, in their efforts to promote freedom of religion or belief, ensure the widest possible dissemination of the text of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief in as many different languages as possible, and promote its implementation;

19. Takes note with appreciation of the work and the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on freedom of religion or belief on tackling religious intolerance and discrimination in the workplace;

20. Urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, to respond favourably to his requests to visit their countries and to provide all information and follow-up necessary for the effective fulfilment of his mandate;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the resources necessary to fully discharge his mandate;

22. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

23. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Combating intolerance, negative stereotyping and incitement to violence

Report of High Commissioner. In accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 22/31 [YUN 2013, p. 653], the High Commissioner in April submitted a report [A/HRC/25/34] on combating intolerance, negative stereotyping, stigmatization, discrimination, incitement to violence and violence against persons based on religion or belief. The report summarized information received from 24 States on efforts and measures taken to foster a domestic environment of religious tolerance, peace and respect; promote the ability of members of all religious communities to manifest their religion; and counter religious profiling. The High Commissioner concluded that the steps taken by States were largely policy oriented or legal in nature, with many of them enshrining protection against discrimination on the basis of religion or belief in national constitutions, criminal codes and other civil laws. Advocacy of incitement to hatred was for the most part criminalized and often prohibited on several grounds, including religion or belief.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/169 [YUN 2013, p. 653], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/69/336] summarizing information received from 16 States on steps taken to combat intolerance, negative stereotyping, stigmatization, discrimination, incitement to violence and violence against persons based on religion or belief.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/34)], the Council called on States to adopt measures and policies to promote full respect for and protection of places of worship and religious sites, cemeteries and shrines and to take measures in cases where they were vulnerable to vandalism or destruction; foster a domestic environment of religious tolerance; and ensure that public functionaries did not discriminate against an individual on the basis of religion or belief. It requested the High Commissioner to submit to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session a follow-up report on the efforts and measures taken by States to implement the resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/174 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Combating intolerance, negative stereotyping, stigmatization, discrimination, incitement to violence and violence against persons, based on religion or belief

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the commitment made by all States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of all human rights and fundamental freedoms without distinction as to, inter alia, religion or belief,

Reaffirming also the obligation of States to prohibit discrimination and violence on the basis of religion or belief and to implement measures to guarantee the equal and effective protection of the law,

Reaffirming further that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Reaffirming that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides, inter alia, that everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief, which shall include freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of one's choice and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest one's religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching,

Reaffirming also the positive role that the exercise of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and full respect for the freedom to seek, receive and impart information can play in strengthening democracy and combating religious intolerance, and reaffirming further that the exercise of the right to freedom of expression carries with it special duties and responsibilities, in accordance with article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Expressing deep concern at those acts that advocate religious hatred and thereby undermine the spirit of tolerance,

Reaffirming that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group,

Condemning the criminal acts committed by terrorist and extremist groups and movements against persons based on their religion or belief, and deeply regretting attempts to link these acts to any one specific religion or belief,

Reaffirming that violence can never be an acceptable response to acts of intolerance on the basis of religion or belief,

Welcoming Human Rights Council resolutions 16/18 of 24 March 2011, 19/25 of 23 March 2012 and 22/31 of 22 March 2013 and General Assembly resolutions 67/178 of 20 December 2012 and 68/169 of 18 December 2013,

Deeply concerned about incidents of intolerance, discrimination and violence against persons based on their religion or belief in all regions of the world,

Deploing any advocacy of discrimination or violence on the basis of religion or belief,

Strongly deploring all acts of violence against persons on the basis of their religion or belief, as well as any such acts directed against their homes, businesses, properties, schools, cultural centres or places of worship,

Strongly deploring also all attacks on and in religious places, sites and shrines in violation of international law, in particular human rights law and international humanitarian law, including any deliberate destruction of relics and monuments,

Deeply concerned about the prevalence of impunity in some instances, and the lack of accountability in some cases, in addressing violence against persons on the basis of religion or belief in public and private spheres, and stressing the importance of making necessary efforts to raise awareness to address the spread of hate speech against persons on the basis of religion or belief,

Concerned about actions that wilfully exploit tensions or target individuals on the basis of their religion or belief,

Expressing deep concern at the instances of intolerance, discrimination and acts of violence occurring in the world, including cases motivated by discrimination against persons belonging to religious minorities, in addition to the negative projection of the followers of religions and the enforcement of measures that specifically discriminate against persons on the basis of religion or belief,

Expressing concern at the growing manifestations of intolerance based on religion or belief, which can generate hatred and violence among individuals from and within different nations and which may have serious implications at the national, regional and international levels, and in this regard emphasizing the importance of respect for religious and cultural diversity, as well as interreligious, interfaith and intercultural dialogue aimed at promoting a culture of tolerance and respect among individuals, societies and nations,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of people of all religions or beliefs to humanity and the contribution that dialogue among religious groups can make towards an improved awareness and understanding of the common values shared by all humankind,

Underlining the fact that States, regional organizations, non-governmental organizations, religious bodies and the media have an important role to play in promoting tolerance and respect for religious and cultural diversity and in the universal promotion and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief,

Underlining also the importance of raising awareness about different cultures and religions or beliefs and of education in the promotion of tolerance, which involves the acceptance by the public of and its respect for religious and cultural diversity, including with regard to religious expression, and underlining further the fact that education, in particular at school, should contribute in a meaningful way to promoting tolerance and the elimination of discrimination based on religion or belief,

Recognizing that working together to enhance the implementation of existing legal regimes that protect individuals against discrimination and hate crimes, increase interreligious, interfaith and intercultural efforts and expand human rights education is an important first step in combating incidents of intolerance, discrimination and violence against individuals on the basis of religion or belief,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 68/127, entitled "A world against violence and violent extremism", adopted by consensus on 18 December 2013, welcoming the leading role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in promoting intercultural dialogue, the work of the Alliance of Civilizations, the Anna Lindh Euro-Mediterranean Foundation for Dialogue between Cultures and the work of the King Abdullah Bin Abdulaziz International Centre for Interreligious and Intercultural Dialogue in Vienna, and recalling also Assembly resolution 65/5 of 20 October 2010 on World Interfaith Harmony Week, proposed by King Abdullah II of Jordan,

Welcoming, in this regard, all international, regional and national initiatives aimed at promoting interreligious, intercultural and interfaith harmony and combating discrimination against individuals on the basis of religion or belief, including the launching of the Istanbul Process for Combating Intolerance, Discrimination and Incitement to Hatred and/or Violence on the Basis of Religion or Belief, and taking note of the initiative of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the prohibition of advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence,

Welcoming also the continuation of the organization of workshops and meetings in the framework of the Istanbul Process and the promotion of effective implementation of Human Rights Council resolution 16/18 to counter global violence, religious discrimination and intolerance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses deep concern at the continued serious instances of derogatory stereotyping, negative profiling and stigmatization of persons based on their religion or belief, as well as programmes and agendas pursued by extremist individuals, organizations and groups aimed at creating and perpetuating negative stereotypes about religious groups, in particular when condoned by Governments;

3. Expresses concern that the number of incidents of religious intolerance, discrimination and related violence, as well as of negative stereotyping of individuals on the basis of religion or belief, continues to rise around the world, which may have serious implications at the national, regional and international levels, condemns, in this context, any advocacy of religious hatred against individuals that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, and urges States to take effective measures, as set forth in the present resolution and consistent with their obligations under international human rights law, to address and combat such incidents;

4. Condemns any advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence, whether it involves the use of print, audiovisual or electronic media or any other means;

5. Recognizes that the open public debate of ideas, as well as interreligious, interfaith and intercultural dialogue, at the local, national and international levels, can be among the best protections against religious intolerance and can play a positive role in strengthening democracy and combating religious hatred, and expresses its conviction that a continuing dialogue on these issues can help to overcome existing misperceptions;

6. Also recognizes the strong need for global awareness about the possible serious implications of incitement to discrimination and violence, which may have serious implications at the national, regional and international levels, and urges all Member States to make renewed efforts to develop educational systems that promote all human rights and fundamental freedoms that enhance tolerance for religious and cultural diversity, which is fundamental to promoting tolerant, peaceful and harmonious multicultural societies;

7. Calls upon all States to take the following actions, as called for by the Secretary-General of the Organization of Islamic Cooperation, to foster a domestic environment of religious tolerance, peace and respect by:

- (a) Encouraging the creation of collaborative networks to build mutual understanding, promoting dialogue and inspiring constructive action towards shared policy goals and the pursuit of tangible outcomes, such as servicing projects in the fields of education, health, conflict prevention, employment, integration and media education;

- (b) Creating an appropriate mechanism within Governments to, inter alia, identify and address potential areas of tension between members of different religious communities and assisting with conflict prevention and mediation;

- (c) Encouraging the training of government officials in effective outreach strategies;

- (d) Encouraging the efforts of leaders to discuss within their communities the causes of discrimination and developing strategies to counter those causes;

- (e) Speaking out against intolerance, including advocacy of religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence;

- (f) Adopting measures to criminalize incitement to imminent violence based on religion or belief;

- (g) Understanding the need to combat denigration and the negative religious stereotyping of persons, as well as incitement to religious hatred, by strategizing and harmonizing actions at the local, national, regional and international levels through, inter alia, education and awareness-raising;

- (h) Recognizing that the open, constructive and respectful debate of ideas, as well as interreligious, interfaith and intercultural dialogue, at the local, national, regional and international levels, can play a positive role in combating religious hatred, incitement and violence;

8. Also calls upon all States:

- (a) To take effective measures to ensure that public functionaries, in the conduct of their public duties, do not discriminate against an individual on the basis of religion or belief;

- (b) To foster religious freedom and pluralism by promoting the ability of members of all religious communities to manifest their religion and to contribute openly and on an equal footing to society;

- (c) To encourage the representation and meaningful participation of individuals, irrespective of their religion or belief, in all sectors of society;

- (d) To make a strong effort to counter religious profiling, which is understood to be the invidious use of religion as a criterion in conducting questioning, searches and other investigative law enforcement procedures;

9. Further calls upon all States to adopt measures and policies to promote full respect for and protection of places of worship and religious sites, cemeteries and shrines and to take protective measures in cases where they are vulnerable to vandalism or destruction;

10. Calls for strengthened international efforts to foster a global dialogue for the promotion of a culture of tolerance and peace at all levels, based on respect for human rights and diversity of religions and beliefs;

11. Encourages all States to consider providing updates on efforts made in this regard as part of ongoing reporting to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and in this respect requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to include those updates in her reports to the Human Rights Council;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report that includes information provided by the High Commissioner on steps taken by States to combat intolerance, negative stereotyping, stigmatization, discrimination, incitement to violence and violence against persons, based on religion or belief, as set forth in the present resolution.

Right to self-determination

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/153 [YUN 2013, p. 655], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/69/342] on the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination. The report summarized developments relating to the consideration of that subject by the Human Rights Council, including by its special procedures, and outlined the related jurisprudence of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. It also summarized information on the right to self-determination as contained in the report [S/2014/258] of the Secretary-General to the Security Council on the situation concerning Western Sahara.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/487], adopted resolution 69/164 without vote [agenda item 67].

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its sixty-first and previous sessions,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, including resolution 68/153 of 18 December 2013,

Reaffirming also its resolution 55/2 of 8 September 2000, containing the United Nations Millennium Declaration, and recalling its resolution 60/1 of 16 September 2005, containing the 2005 World Summit Outcome, which, inter alia, upheld the right to self-determination of peoples under colonial domination and foreign occupation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, in particular the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and with honour;

5. Requests the Human Rights Council to continue to give special attention to violations of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the question to the General Assembly at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Right of Palestinians to self-determination

During the year, the General Assembly reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the right to their independent State of Palestine, as well as the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders. States and UN system bodies were urged to assist Palestinians in the early realization of the right.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/27)], by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions, the Council urged Member States and UN system bodies to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/487], adopted resolution 69/165 by recorded vote (180-7-4) [agenda item 67].

The right of the Palestinian people to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Aware that the development of friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, is among the purposes and principles of the United Nations, as defined in the Charter,

Recalling, in this regard, its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, entitled “Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations”,

Bearing in mind the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling further the advisory opinion rendered on 9 July 2004 by the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, and noting in particular the reply of the Court, including on the right of peoples to self-determination, which is a right erga omnes,

Recalling the conclusion of the Court, in its advisory opinion of 9 July 2004, that the construction of the wall by Israel, the occupying Power, in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, along with measures previously taken, severely impedes the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination,

Stressing the urgency of achieving without delay an end to the Israeli occupation that began in 1967 and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement between the Palestinian and Israeli sides, based on the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, the Madrid terms of reference, including the principle of land for peace, the Arab Peace Initiative and the Quartet road map to a permanent two-State solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict,

Stressing also the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and recalling in this regard its resolution 58/292 of 6 May 2004,

Recalling its resolution 68/154 of 18 December 2013,

Taking note of its resolution 67/19 of 29 November 2012,

Affirming the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

1. Reaffirms the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the right to their independent State of Palestine;

2. Urges all States and the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system to continue to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/165:

Mercenaries

Reports of Working Group. In a June report [A/HRC/27/50], the Working Group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination described the activities undertaken since its last report [YUN 2013, p. 656] and presented the results of its global study on national legislation concerning private military and/or security companies (PMSCs), which focused on 16 selected countries in Africa and Asia. The Working Group observed that while there were common elements in the laws of those countries, diverse national contexts affected the way in which PMSCs were regulated and the regulatory approach of each country varied significantly. It reiterated the need for effective regulation of PMSC activities and invited States to facilitate its study of national legislation, which aimed to identify trends and good practices and to develop guidance for States in overseeing PMSC activities.

In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 657] and General Assembly resolution 68/152 [ibid.], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Working Group's report [A/69/338] focusing on the use by the United Nations of private security companies in light of the vast and complex challenges which outsourcing security to PMSCs posed to the United Nations and to local populations. The report was the outcome of a year-long study that aimed to examine how the United Nations contracted PMSCs and for what services. It reviewed the efforts undertaken to mitigate risks relating to the recruitment of private security providers, in particular the recently adopted policy and guidelines on the use of private armed guards. The report considered the limitations of those policy tools, suggested ways to ensure an efficient selection and vetting process when employing PMSCs and examined ways to ensure that PMSCs were held accountable for possible human rights violations.

Mission reports. Following its visit to the Comoros (7–16 May) [A/HRC/27/50/Add.1], the Working Group noted the country's difficult and turbulent history since its independence in 1975. A series of coups d'état by mercenaries and the political instability that prevailed during the three decades following independence had prevented the country's development. The Working Group recognized the negative and interdependent effects of mercenarism, separatism and the Mayotte issue on the human rights of Comorians. Despite obstacles, positive developments had brought relative stability, such as the 2009 amendment of the Constitution allowing for the rotation of the presidency that helped to counter the problem of separatism and attempted coups d'état. With respect to private security companies, the Working Group noted that the presence of natural resources in the Comoros had the potential to attract investment from multinational corporations in the extractive industry, which often used private security companies to protect their facilities. The likelihood of an increase in the number of private security companies operating in the Comoros and ongoing concerns surrounding maritime delimitation issues required the introduction of appropriate regulations.

Following its mission to Côte d'Ivoire (7–10 October) [A/HRC/30/34/Add.1], the Working Group expressed concern about the widespread lack of confidence in the justice system and the prevalent culture of impunity for perpetrators of human rights violations. The Working Group was informed that mercenaries had been recruited by both sides during the 2002 armed conflict and the 2010 post-election crisis, and had been responsible for grave violations. There had been little progress in prosecuting mercenaries or other armed actors in Côte d'Ivoire or in their countries of origin. The Working Group also noted the huge increase in private security companies after the conflicts and the existence of hundreds of such companies operating illegally. It recommended improving access to justice and remedies for victims; ending the culture of impunity by bringing perpetrators to justice; and strengthening oversight of private security companies.

Intergovernmental working group. The open-ended intergovernmental working group to consider the possibility of elaborating an international regulatory framework on the regulation, monitoring and oversight of the activities of PMSCs, established in 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 690], held its third session (Geneva, 21–25 July) [A/HRC/WG.10/3/2]. In the discussions, there was widespread agreement about gaps in the regulatory framework, as very few States had specific legislation on PMSCs. Efforts to ensure regulation through voluntary self-regulatory mechanisms were still being rolled out. In his concluding remarks, the Chair noted that the discussions had reaffirmed the shared goal of protecting human rights and ensuring accountability for violations and abuses relating to the PMSCs activities.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/10)], by a recorded vote of 32 to 14, with 1 abstention, the Council requested States to exercise the utmost vigilance against any kind of recruitment, training, hiring or financing of mercenaries, and in banning the use of private companies offering international military consultancy and security services when intervening in armed conflicts or actions to destabilize constitutional regimes. It requested the Working Group to continue work on strengthening the international legal framework for the prevention and sanction of the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries; to monitor mercenaries and mercenary-related activities; and to report to the Assembly's seventieth (2015) session and the Council's thirtieth (2015) session on implementation of the resolution.

International Convention

As at 31 December, the number of States parties to the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries remained at 33. The Convention was adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/34 [YUN 1989, p. 825] and entered into force in 2001 [YUN 2001, p. 632].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/487], adopted resolution 69/163 by recorded vote (130–52–7) [agenda item 67].

Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling all of its previous resolutions on the subject, including resolution 68/152 of 18 December 2013, and

Human Rights Council resolutions 15/12 of 30 September 2010, 15/26 of 1 October 2010, 18/4 of 29 September 2011, 21/8 of 27 September 2012, 24/13 of 26 September 2013 and 27/10 of 25 September 2014, as well as all resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights in this regard,

Recalling also all of its relevant resolutions, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit or use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling further the relevant resolutions and international instruments adopted by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity, inter alia, the Organization of African Unity Convention for the elimination of mercenarism in Africa, as well as by the African Union,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, the territorial integrity of States, the self-determination of peoples, the non-use of force or of the threat of use of force in international relations and non-interference in affairs within the domestic jurisdiction of States,

Reaffirming also that, by virtue of the principle of self-determination, all peoples have the right freely to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and that every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter,

Reaffirming further the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Welcoming the establishment of the open-ended intergovernmental working group of the Human Rights Council with the mandate of considering the possibility of elaborating an international regulatory framework, including the option of elaborating a legally binding instrument on the regulation, monitoring and oversight of the activities of private military and security companies,

Alarmed and concerned at the danger that the activities of mercenaries constitute to peace and security in developing countries in various parts of the world, in particular in areas of conflict,

Deeply concerned at the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the negative effects on the policy and economies of affected countries resulting from international criminal mercenary activities,

Extremely alarmed and concerned about recent mercenary activities in some developing countries in various parts of the world, including in areas of armed conflict, and the threat they pose to the integrity of and respect for the constitutional order of the affected countries,

Convinced that, notwithstanding the way in which mercenaries or mercenary-related activities are used or the form that they take to acquire some semblance of legitimacy, they are a threat to peace, security and the self-determination of peoples and an obstacle to the enjoyment of all human rights by peoples,

1. Acknowledges with appreciation the work and contributions of the Working Group on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination, including its research activities, and takes note with appreciation of its latest report;

2. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing, protection and training are causes for grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Recognizes that armed conflict, terrorism, arms trafficking and covert operations by third Powers encourage, inter alia, the demand for mercenaries on the global market;

4. Urges once again all States to take the steps necessary and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to take legislative measures to ensure that their territories and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training, protection or transit of mercenaries for the planning of activities designed to impede the right of peoples to self-determination, to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State or to dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent States conducting themselves in compliance with the right of peoples to self-determination;

5. Requests all States to exercise the utmost vigilance against any kind of recruitment, training, hiring or financing of mercenaries by private companies offering international military consultancy and security services, as well as to impose a specific ban on such companies intervening in armed conflicts or actions to destabilize constitutional regimes;

6. Encourages States that import the military assistance, consultancy and security services provided by private companies to establish regulatory national mechanisms for the registering and licensing of those companies in order to ensure that imported services provided by those private companies neither impede the enjoyment of human rights nor violate human rights in the recipient country;

7. Emphasizes its utmost concern about the impact of the activities of private military and security companies on the enjoyment of human rights, in particular when operating in armed conflicts, and notes that private military and security companies and their personnel are rarely held accountable for violations of human rights;

8. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking the action necessary to accede to or ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

9. Welcomes the cooperation extended by those countries that received a visit by the Working Group on the use of mercenaries and the adoption by some States of national legislation that restricts the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries;

10. Condemns recent mercenary activities in developing countries in various parts of the world, in particular in areas of conflict, and the threat they pose to the integrity of and respect for the constitutional order of those countries and the exercise of the right of their peoples to self-determination, and stresses the importance for the Working Group on the use of mercenaries of looking into sources and root causes, as well as the political motivations of mercenaries and for mercenary-related activities;

11. Calls upon States to investigate the possibility of mercenary involvement whenever and wherever criminal acts of a terrorist nature occur and to bring to trial those found responsible or to consider their extradition, if so requested, in accordance with national law and applicable bilateral or international treaties;

12. Condemns any form of impunity granted to perpetrators of mercenary activities and to those responsible for the use, recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries, and urges all States, in accordance with their obligations under international law, to bring them, without distinction, to justice;

13. Calls upon Member States, in accordance with their obligations under international law, to cooperate with and assist the judicial prosecution of those accused of mercenary activities in transparent, open and fair trials;

14. Recalls the holding of the third session of the open-ended intergovernmental working group to consider the possibility of elaborating an international regulatory framework on the regulation, monitoring and oversight of the activities of private military and security companies, expresses satisfaction at the participation of experts, including of the members of the Working Group on the use of mercenaries, as resource persons at the above-mentioned session, and requests the Working Group and other experts to continue their participation during the fourth session of the open-ended intergovernmental working group;

15. Requests the Working Group on the use of mercenaries to continue the work already done by previous Special Rapporteurs on the use of mercenaries on the strengthening of the international legal framework for the prevention and sanction of the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries, taking into account the proposal for a new legal definition of a mercenary drafted by the Special Rapporteur on the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination in his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its sixtieth session;

16. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as a matter of priority, to publicize the adverse effects of the activities of mercenaries on the right of peoples to self-determination and, when requested and where necessary, to render advisory services to States that are affected by those activities;

17. Recommends that all Member States, including those confronted with the phenomenon of private military and security companies, as contracting States, States of operations, home States or States whose nationals are employed to work for a private military and security company, contribute to the work of the open-ended intergovernmental working group, taking into account the initial work done by the Working Group on the use of mercenaries;

18. Urges all States to cooperate fully with the Working Group on the use of mercenaries in the fulfilment of its mandate;

19. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to provide the Working Group on the use of mercenaries with all the assistance and support necessary for the fulfilment of its mandate, both professional and financial, including through the promotion of cooperation between the Working Group and other components of the United Nations system that deal with countering mercenary-related activities, in order to meet the demands of its current and future activities;

20. Requests the Working Group on the use of mercenaries to consult States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the present resolution and to report, with specific recommendations, to the General Assembly at its seventieth session its findings on the use of mercenaries to undermine the enjoyment of all human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination;

21. Decides to consider at its seventieth session the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Rule of law, democracy and human rights

Administration of justice

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 24/12 [YUN 2013, p. 660], OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/28/29] of the panel discussion held at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session on the protection of the human rights of persons deprived of their liberty (Geneva, 10 September). Participants reaffirmed the adequacy of existing forms of protection in international human rights law, as well as of the international human rights mechanisms that focused on the issue. Challenges, however, remained in the national implementation of international norms and standards. Political will, or lack of thereof, was identified as one factor contributing to the failure of national implementation.

Children and access to justice

Reports of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 22/32 [YUN 2013, p. 719], the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/25/35] on access to justice for children, which addressed the definition of access to justice for children and its relation to other concepts, such as child-sensitive justice and juvenile justice, and discussed the legal framework and challenges for children in accessing justice. The main part of the report reviewed standards and good practices. The High Commissioner concluded that international and regional human rights norms and standards provided a comprehensive framework for ensuring access to justice for children. Due to their special and dependent status, however, children were faced with serious challenges in accessing justice. She recommended that States revise their laws, policies and procedures to ensure better compliance with international norms and standards; strengthen capacity-building and training initiatives to ensure that persons working with, and for, children had the necessary knowledge and skills relating to their rights and needs; ensure that the views of children were given due consideration; and protect children from the risk of manipulation, harassment, reprisals or intimidation.

In an addendum [A/HRC/25/35/Add.1], the High Commissioner submitted information received from Monaco and Uruguay for her annual report after the deadline for submission.

Pursuant to Council request [YUN 2013, p. 719], the High Commissioner submitted a summary [A/HRC/27/25] of the full-day meeting on access to justice for children (Geneva, 13 March), comprising two panel discussions: one on international norms and standards on access to justice for children and child-sensitive justice, and the other on empowering children to claim their rights.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/6)], the Council emphasized that children in contact with the justice system were entitled to the safeguarding of their rights, and called on States to remove barriers to children's access to justice.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee

[A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/172 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the principles embodied in articles 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols thereto, in particular articles 6, 7, 9, 10, 14 and 15 of the Covenant, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Optional Protocol thereto, the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in particular article 2 (c) thereof, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, in particular articles 37, 39 and 40 thereof, and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as all other relevant international treaties,

Calling attention to the numerous international standards in the field of the administration of justice,

Recalling all the resolutions of the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council that are relevant to the subject of human rights in the administration of justice, including General Assembly resolutions 65/213 of 21 December 2010 and 67/166 of 20 December 2012 and Human Rights Council resolutions 18/12 of 29 September 2011 and 24/12 of 26 September 2013,

Recalling also its resolution 67/1 of 24 September 2012, entitled "Declaration of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the rule of law at the national and international levels",

Noting the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening and coordinating United Nations rule of law activities,

Welcoming the United Nations Rules for the Treatment of Women Prisoners and Non-custodial Measures for Women Offenders (the Bangkok Rules),

Welcoming also the United Nations Principles and Guidelines on Access to Legal Aid in Criminal Justice Systems,

Welcoming further the work of all special procedures of the Human Rights Council that address human rights in the administration of justice in the discharge of their mandates,

Taking note of the work of all human rights treaty body mechanisms on human rights in the administration of justice, in particular of general comments No. 21 on the humane treatment of persons deprived of their liberty and No. 32 on the right to equality before courts and tribunals and to a fair trial, adopted by the Human Rights Committee, and general comments No. 10 on children's rights in juvenile justice and No. 13 on the right of the child to freedom from all forms of violence, adopted by the Committee on the Rights of the Child,

Noting with appreciation the important work in the field of the administration of justice of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat and the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women) as well as the work of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict,

Noting with appreciation also the thematic report by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children entitled “Promoting restorative justice for children”,

Noting with satisfaction the work of the Interagency Panel on Juvenile Justice and of its members, in particular their coordination in providing technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice, and the active participation of civil society in their respective work,

Encouraging continued regional and cross-regional efforts, the sharing of best practices and the provision of technical assistance in the field of juvenile justice, and noting in this regard the initiative to convene a world congress on juvenile justice in Geneva from 26 to 30 January 2015,

Convinced that the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and the integrity of the judicial system as well as an independent legal profession are essential prerequisites for the protection of human rights, the rule of law, good governance and democracy and for ensuring that there is no discrimination in the administration of justice and should therefore be respected in all circumstances,

Recalling that every State should provide an effective framework of remedies to redress human rights grievances or violations,

Emphasizing that the right to access to justice for all forms an important basis for strengthening the rule of law through the administration of justice,

Mindful of the importance of ensuring respect for the rule of law and human rights in the administration of justice as a crucial contribution to building peace and justice and ending impunity,

Recognizing the importance of the principle that, except for those lawful limitations that are demonstrably necessitated by the fact of incarceration, persons deprived of their liberty shall retain their non-derogable human rights and all other human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling that the social rehabilitation and reintegration of persons deprived of their liberty shall be among the essential aims of the criminal justice system, ensuring, as far as possible, that offenders are able to lead a law-abiding and self-supporting life upon their return to society,

Aware of the need for special vigilance with regard to the specific situation of children, juveniles and women in the administration of justice, in particular while they are deprived of their liberty, and their vulnerability to various forms of violence, abuse, injustice and humiliation,

Reaffirming that children who are victims and witnesses of crime and violence are particularly vulnerable and require special protection, assistance and support appropriate to their age, level of maturity and needs, in order to prevent further hardship and trauma that may result from their participation in the criminal justice process,

Recognizing the specific situation and needs of children formerly associated with armed forces or armed groups when accused of crimes under international law allegedly committed while they were associated with armed forces or armed groups,

Reaffirming that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all decisions concerning the child in the administration of justice, including in relation to pretrial measures, as well as being an important consideration in all matters concerning the child related to sentencing of his or her parents, or, where applicable, legal guardians or primary caregivers,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the most recent report of the Secretary-General on human rights in the administration of justice, containing an analysis of the international legal and institutional framework for the protection of all persons deprived of their liberty;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the reports of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the protection of human rights of juveniles deprived of their liberty and on access to justice for children and the joint report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children on prevention of and responses to violence against children within the juvenile justice system, submitted to the Human Rights Council;

3. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of all United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

4. Reiterates its call upon all Member States to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as adequate resources, to ensure the full implementation of those standards;

5. Invites States to make use of technical assistance offered by the relevant United Nations entities and programmes in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of the administration of justice;

6. Appeals to Governments to include, in their national development plans, the effective administration of justice and equal access to justice as an integral part of the development process, with a view to promoting and protecting human rights, and to allocate adequate resources for the provision of legal aid services, and invites the international community to respond favourably to requests for financial and technical assistance for the enhancement and strengthening of the administration of justice;

7. Stresses the special need for national capacity-building in the field of the administration of justice, in particular through reform of the judiciary, the police and the penal system, as well as juvenile justice reform, and through the encouragement of independence, accountability and transparency in the judiciary, in order to establish and maintain stable societies and the rule of law in post-conflict situations, and welcomes the role of the Office of the High Commissioner in supporting the establishment and functioning of transitional justice mechanisms in post-conflict situations;

8. Reaffirms that no one should be unlawfully or arbitrarily deprived of his or her liberty, and notes the principles of necessity and proportionality in this regard;

9. Calls upon States to ensure that anyone who is deprived of his or her liberty through arrest or detention has prompt access to a competent court with the effective power to determine the lawfulness of the detention and to order release if the detention or imprisonment is determined not to be lawful and prompt access to legal counsel, in accordance with their international obligations and commitments;

10. Affirms that States must ensure that any measure taken to combat terrorism, including in the administration of justice, complies with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law;

11. Notes the work of the open-ended intergovernmental expert group to exchange information on best practices, as well as on national legislation and existing international law, and on the revision of existing United Nations standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners, and invites the expert group to continue its work and to conclude the review and update of the standard minimum rules, reiterating that any changes should not lower any existing standards but should improve them and reflect recent advances in correctional science and best practices, as well as human rights standards, so as to promote safety, security and humane conditions for prisoners, and in this regard acknowledges that the expert group can benefit from the expertise of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and of the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant stakeholders;

12. Recalls the absolute prohibition of torture in international law, and calls upon States to address and prevent the detention conditions, treatment and punishment of persons deprived of their liberty that amount to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

13. Calls upon States to investigate promptly, effectively and impartially all alleged human rights violations suffered by persons deprived of their liberty, in particular cases involving death, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and to provide effective remedy to the victims, in accordance with their international obligations and commitments;

14. Urges States to endeavour to reduce, where appropriate, pretrial detention, inter alia, by adopting legislative and administrative measures and policies on its preconditions, limitations, duration and alternatives and by taking measures aimed at the implementation of existing legislation, as well as by ensuring access to justice and legal advice and assistance;

15. Encourages States to address overcrowding in detention facilities by taking effective measures, including through enhancing the use of alternatives to pretrial detention and custodial sentences where possible, access to legal aid and the efficiency as well as the capacity of the criminal justice system and its facilities;

16. Welcomes the panel discussion on the protection of the human rights of persons deprived of their liberty, held during the twenty-seventh session of the Human Rights Council, which highlighted challenges and good practices for ensuring the protection of the rights of persons deprived of their liberty, in particular with regard to judicial oversight of detention, overcrowding and overuse of detention, including by examining the use of pretrial detention and alternatives to detention;

17. Continues to encourage States to pay due attention to the United Nations Rules for the Treatment of Women Prisoners and Non-custodial Measures for Women Offenders (the Bangkok Rules) when developing and implementing relevant legislation, procedures, policies and action plans, and invites relevant special procedure mandate holders, the Office of the High Commissioner, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and all other relevant organizations to take those rules into consideration in their activities;

18. Recognizes that every child and juvenile alleged as, accused of or recognized as having infringed the law, particularly those who are deprived of their liberty, as well as child victims and witnesses of crimes, should be treated in a manner consistent with his or her rights, dignity and needs, in accordance with international law, bearing in mind relevant international standards on human rights in the administration of justice, taking into account also the age, gender, social circumstances and development needs of such children, and calls upon States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to abide strictly by its principles and provisions;

19. Welcomes the United Nations Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Children in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, and urges States to consider applying them, as appropriate, in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of laws, policies, programmes, budgets and mechanisms aimed at eliminating violence against children in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice;

20. Also welcomes the Global Programme on Violence against Children in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice recently developed by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime and the United Nations Children's Fund, which is intended to promote and assist in the effective implementation of the Model Strategies and Practical Measures, and encourages Member States and other relevant stakeholders to support and to benefit from this programme;

21. Encourages States that have not yet integrated children's issues into their overall rule of law efforts to do so and to develop and implement a comprehensive and coordinated juvenile justice policy to prevent and address juvenile delinquency and to address risks and causes for children's contact with the juvenile and/or criminal justice system, as well as with a view to promoting, inter alia, the use of alternative measures, such as diversion and restorative justice, and complying with the principle that deprivation of liberty of children should be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time, as well as to avoid, wherever possible, the use of pretrial detention for children;

22. Stresses the importance of including reintegration strategies for former child offenders in juvenile justice policies, in particular through the provision of gender-sensitive education and life skills programmes, as well as treatment and services for substance abuse and mental health needs, with a view to their assuming a constructive role in society;

23. Urges States to take all necessary and effective measures, including legal reform where appropriate, to prevent and respond to all forms of violence against children within the justice system, including within the informal justice system, where it exists;

24. Also urges States to ensure that, under their legislation and practice, neither capital punishment nor life imprisonment without the possibility of release nor corporal punishment is imposed for offences committed by persons under 18 years of age, and encourages States to consider repealing all other forms of life imprisonment for offences committed by persons under 18 years of age;

25. Encourages States not to set the minimum age of criminal responsibility at too low an age level, bearing in mind the emotional, mental and intellectual maturity of the child, and in this respect notes the recommendation of the Committee on the Rights of the Child to increase the lower minimum age of criminal responsibility to the age of

12 years as the absolute minimum age, and to continue to increase it to a higher age level;

26. Also encourages States to gather relevant information, including through data collection and research, concerning children within their criminal justice systems so as to improve their administration of justice, while being mindful of the children's right to privacy, with full respect for relevant international human rights instruments, and bearing in mind applicable international standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

27. Stresses the importance of paying greater attention to the impact on children of imprisonment or other sentences imposed upon their parents, while noting with interest the convening of and reports on all relevant meetings and panel discussions on these issues held by the Human Rights Council;

28. Invites Governments to provide for tailored and interdisciplinary human rights training, including anti-racist, multicultural, gender-sensitive and child rights training, to all judges, lawyers, prosecutors, social workers, immigration and police officers and other professionals concerned, including personnel deployed in international field presences;

29. Encourages the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, United Nations institutes active in the areas of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice, and other relevant parts of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field, and other segments of civil society, including the media, to continue to develop their activities in promoting human rights in the administration of justice;

30. Invites States, upon their request, to benefit from technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice provided by the relevant United Nations entities and programmes, in particular the Interagency Panel on Juvenile Justice, in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of the administration of justice, in particular juvenile justice;

31. Invites the Human Rights Council and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as the Office of the High Commissioner, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on Violence against Children and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, to continue to closely coordinate their activities relating to the administration of justice;

32. Invites the Office of the High Commissioner and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to reinforce, within their respective mandates, their activities relating to national capacity-building in the field of the administration of justice, in particular in post-conflict situations, and in this context to strengthen cooperation with relevant United Nations entities;

33. Underlines the importance of rebuilding and strengthening structures for the administration of justice and of respecting the rule of law and human rights, including in post-conflict situations, as a crucial contribution to building peace and justice and ending impunity, and in this respect requests the Secretary-General to further streamline and strengthen system-wide coordination and coherence of programmes and activities of the relevant parts of the United Nations system, including through the Rule of Law

Coordination and Resource Group chaired by the Deputy Secretary-General, the Rule of Law Unit in the Executive Office of the Secretary-General and the joint global focal point for the police, justice and corrections areas in the rule of law in post-conflict and other crisis situations;

34. Invites States, in the context of the universal periodic review mechanism and in their reports under international human rights treaties, to consider addressing the promotion and protection of human rights in the administration of justice;

35. Invites relevant special procedure mandate holders of the Human Rights Council, as well as relevant treaty bodies, to give special attention to questions relating to the effective protection of human rights in the administration of justice, including juvenile justice, and to provide, wherever appropriate, specific recommendations in this regard, including proposals for advisory services and technical assistance measures;

36. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the latest developments, challenges and good practices in human rights in the administration of justice and on the activities undertaken by the United Nations system as a whole;

37. Decides to continue its consideration of the question of human rights in the administration of justice at its seventy-first session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Rule of law

Transitional justice

OHCHR report. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 661], OHCHR in June submitted a study [A/HRC/27/21] focusing on gender-based and sexual violence in relation to transitional justice in conflict and post-conflict situations, which covered the effective participation of victims and the participatory procedures necessary to address the different needs and opportunities of women, men, girls and boys, as well as good practices with regard to national consultations, truth-seeking, criminal justice, reparations and institutional reform. While there had been progress, as greater attention had been given to such violence and some good practices had been developed, more efforts were needed to ensure that transitional justice processes addressed the full spectrum of gender-based and sexual violence. OHCHR recommended that the good practices highlighted in the study should be emulated in other countries, while taking into account the national context. The study also made recommendations on how transitional justice measures could be improved to address the issue.

Truth, justice, reparation and non-recurrence

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 686], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, Pablo de Greiff (Colombia), in August submitted a report

[A/HRC/27/56] that listed his activities between August 2013 and June 2014 and addressed the topic of prosecutorial prioritization strategies in the aftermath of gross human rights violations and serious violations of international humanitarian law. The Rapporteur elaborated on possible elements of a prioritization strategy; called for such strategies to tackle the systemic dimensions of violations so as to dismantle the web of players and structures that enabled the atrocities to take place; and underscored the importance of the independence of prosecutors. He also emphasized the growing importance of the participation of victims in judicial processes, including in relation to the design of prosecutorial strategies, and called for in-depth studies on the institutionalization of participation mechanisms.

In accordance with a Council request [YUN 2011, p. 686], in October, the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/518] focusing on reparation for victims in the aftermath of gross violations of human rights and serious violations of international humanitarian law. Despite significant normative progress in establishing the rights of victims to reparations and some practical experiences, the Rapporteur noted that most victims did not receive any reparation and that the implementation gap had reached scandalous proportions. It not only affected victims directly, but had a ripple effect that could be felt across generations and entire societies and was laden with legacies of mistrust, institutional weaknesses and failed notions and practices of citizenship. The Rapporteur addressed implementation challenges, including States' political unwillingness to implement existing obligations, the inadmissible exclusion of entire categories of victims on the basis of political considerations and the gender insensitivity of most reparation programmes. He urged States to address those challenges and called for a human rights-based approach in implementing reparation programmes.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission reports. Following his visit to Spain (21 January–3 February) [A/HRC/27/56/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur stated that the Spanish Civil War and the 40 years of dictatorship that followed left a colossal aftermath in terms of victims of human rights and humanitarian law violations, including executions, torture, arbitrary detentions, disappearances, forced labour for prisoners and exile. On the other hand, the consolidation of democracy constituted one of the outstanding achievements of the Spanish transition. He noted a considerable discrepancy between the positions adopted by the majority of State institutions and those of the victims and associations. The authorities maintained that, as far as possible, the claims of the victims and associations had mostly been met, while the latter felt insufficiently recognized and compensated. The most serious shortcomings were in the spheres of truth and justice. No State policy had ever been established with respect to the truth, and there was no official information and no mechanisms for elucidating the truth. The Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government and State bodies, including on truth, guarantees of non-recurrence and reparation.

In September [A/HRC/27/56/Add.3], Spain submitted its comments on the report.

Following his visit to Burundi (8–16 December) [A/HRC/30/42/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur said that serious efforts to redress past massive violations were required to demonstrate the authorities' commitment to break with the tradition of impunity, which, in turn, would enable domestic institutions and mechanisms to protect human rights in the present. Transitional justice initiatives needed to foster human rights and should not be used as instruments of "turn-taking" that benefited only one side. Reparation schemes needed systematic treatment, with special attention to the needs of the most vulnerable. Reform of the security sector should be linked with justice considerations to ensure an institutional set-up that contributed to preventing violations. While there was broad acknowledgement that reforms were required to establish an independent judiciary, the executive branch and the governing political party continued to tightly control the justice sector.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/3)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period, and requested him to report annually to the Council and the General Assembly.

Independence of judges and lawyers

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 687], the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Gabriela Knaul (Brazil), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/32], which focused on judicial accountability and judicial independence. The report considered concepts and definitions of judicial accountability; highlighted its importance for upholding the rule of law and strengthening the independence of the judiciary; examined related international human rights standards; analysed the different forms of judicial accountability and the mechanisms and proceedings for its implementation; and addressed the issue of State responsibility and the right to a remedy for people whose human rights had been violated as the result of a wrongful conviction or miscarriage of justice. The Rapporteur made recommendations to assist States in establishing judicial accountability mechanisms in line with the principles of judicial independence and impartiality.

In accordance with a Council request (see below), the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/294], which focused on the incorporation of the concepts of the rule of law and access to justice into the post-2015 development framework (see p. 960). It formulated responses to the shortcomings of the Millennium Development Goals [YUN 2000, p. 51] and highlighted the opportunity for the international community to better address the connection among the rule of law, human rights and development in the post-2015 agenda. Noting that the rule of law and development were mutually reinforcing concepts, the Rapporteur emphasized the need for incorporating human rights standards and obligations throughout the post-2015 agenda, and urged that access to justice and the independence of the justice system be reflected as goals in their own right.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission reports. Following her visit to Qatar (19–26 January) [A/HRC/29/26/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur presented her findings on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, including respect for the principle of separation of powers, the selection and appointment of judges and the impartiality of the judiciary; non-Qatari judges; accountability and disciplinary measures for judges; fair trial, due process guarantees and the administration of justice; access to justice and the situation of migrant workers; women in the justice system; prosecution services; lawyers; and education and training. She recognized Qatar's progress and achievements and made recommendations to address challenges and shortcomings that could undermine positive reform efforts.

Following her mission to the United Arab Emirates (27 January–5 February) [A/HRC/29/26/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur provided an overview of the federal justice system and presented her findings on topics such as legal uncertainty; the independence and impartiality of the judiciary; non-national judges; accountability and disciplinary measures; fair trial, due process and administration of justice; access to justice and legal aid; women in the justice system; prosecution services; lawyers; and education, training and capacity-building. She noted that the justice system had developed into an elaborate and complex court system in a relatively short time. Despite commendable progress, she expressed concern that the challenges and shortcomings she had identified were serious and negatively affected the delivery of justice. The report concluded with recommendations to relevant stakeholders.

Following her visit to Tunisia (27 November–5 December) [A/HRC/29/26/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur presented an overview of the justice system and its constitutional and legal frameworks, as well as her findings and concerns with regard to the need to adopt a comprehensive legal framework; independence, impartiality, integrity and accountability; the selection, appointment and tenure of judges; budget and conditions of work; case management, internal regulations and procedures, judicial delays and access to justice; threats, attacks and lack of protection; prosecutorial services; military courts; lawyers; and education, training and capacity-building. She concluded the report with recommendations to relevant stakeholders.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/4)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 27 to 1, with 19 abstentions, requested the High Commissioner to convene, prior to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session, an expert consultation on human rights considerations relating to the issues of administration of justice through military tribunals and the role of the integral judicial system in combating human rights violations; and to present a summary of the consultation to the Council's twenty-eight session.

On 26 June [res. 26/7], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Council resolution 25/4 (see above), the High Commissioner convened an expert consultation on the issues of administration of justice through military tribunals and the role of the integral judicial system in combating human rights violations (Geneva, 24 November), and submitted a summary report [A/HRC/28/32]. Issues discussed by participants included independence, impartiality and competence of the judiciary, including military courts; the right to fair trial before courts and other procedural protections; the personal jurisdiction of military courts; and subject matter jurisdiction of military courts.

Right to a nationality

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/14)], the Council called on States to refrain from taking discriminatory measures and from enacting or maintaining legislation that would arbitrarily deprive persons of their nationality on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, especially if such measures and legislation rendered a person stateless; welcomed the efforts made to reduce statelessness and combat arbitrary deprivation of nationality by UN entities and human rights treaty bodies; and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council before its thirty-first (2016) session on the impact the arbitrary deprivation of nationality had on the enjoyment of the rights of children concerned, as well as on the laws and practices on accessibility for children to acquire nationality, inter alia, of the country in which they were born, if they otherwise would be stateless.

Equal political participation

OHCHR report. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 663], OHCHR in June submitted a study [A/HRC/27/29] on factors that impeded equal political participation and steps to overcome them. The study examined the human rights framework relating to participation in political and public affairs, noted that discrimination against women, indigenous peoples, minorities, persons with disabilities, human rights defenders and other marginalized groups might prevent their enjoyment of the rights to participate in political and public affairs, identified some major barriers to equal participation and made recommendations on measures to overcome them.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/24)], the Council noted the OHCHR study (see above) and urged States to consider its conclusions and recommendations, and to ensure the full, effective and equal participation of all citizens in political and public affairs. It requested OHCHR to present to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session a study on best practices, experiences and challenges and ways to overcome them with regard to implementation of the right to participate in public affairs, with a view to identifying elements of principles guiding that implementation.

Civil society space

Panel discussion. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 666], OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/27/33] of the panel discussion held at the Council's twenty-fifth (2014) session on the importance of the promotion and protection of civil society space (Geneva, 11 March). Panellists addressed the challenges that States faced in their efforts to ensure such space; experiences, lessons learned and good practices with regard to such space; and strategies and steps to ensure a safe and enabling environment for civil society. Participants recommended that the Council, through its special procedures mechanisms, develop and adopt guiding principles on creating such an environment.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 & Corr.2 (res. 27/31)], the Council welcomed the holding of the panel discussion (see above); urged States to create and maintain a safe and enabling environment in which civil society could operate free from hindrance and insecurity; and requested the High Commissioner to submit to the Council's thirty-second (2016) session a compilation of practical recommendations for the creation and maintenance of a safe and enabling environment for civil society, based on good practices and lessons learned.

Freedom of expression

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 690], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Frank La Rue (Guatemala), in July submitted a report [A/HRC/26/30] which described his activities and focused on freedom of opinion and expression in electoral contexts, particularly on the establishment and enforcement of legal instruments regulating political communications. He detailed the human rights framework applicable to the question in political communications and electoral processes; described common violations of the right in electoral periods; and provided recommendations on aligning national legal frameworks to international human rights standards.

In accordance with a Council request (see below), the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/335] that focused on the right of the child to freedom of expression. Despite the almost universal ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child (see p. 763), too little had been done to give effect to the right of children to freedom of expression. He noted with concern the adoption of various restrictive measures allegedly aimed at protecting children from harmful information, and called for a greater focus by the international community and States on children's right to freedom of expression and access to information.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission reports. In April [A/HRC/26/30/Add.5], May [A/HRC/26/30/Add.4] and June [A/HRC/26/30/Add.6], respectively, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Montenegro and Italy submitted their comments on the Special Rapporteur's visit to their country in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 666].

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/2)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for three years and requested the Rapporteur to report annually to the Council and the General Assembly.

In June, the Council appointed David Kaye (United States) as Special Rapporteur.

Human rights and the Internet

Global multi-stakeholder meeting. The Global Multi-stakeholder Meeting on the Future of Internet Governance (NETmundial) (Sao Paulo, Brazil, 23–24 April) sought to develop a set of universally acceptable Internet governance principles, as well as a way forward for the evolution of the Internet governance system. It brought together 930 participants from 110 countries, representing civil society, the private sector, academia, the technical community, governments and intergovernmental organizations, as well as over 1,000 remote participants from 23 countries. In his message to the meeting, the Secretary-General stated that building consensus on a roadmap for the future of Internet governance was crucial and NETmundial was an important milestone.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/13)], the Council took note of the meeting

(see above), which acknowledged the need for human rights to underpin Internet governance and that rights that people had offline must also be protected online. It called on States to address security concerns on the Internet to ensure protection of freedom of expression, freedom of association, privacy and other human rights online; and to consider adopting national Internet-related policies that had the objective of universal access and enjoyment of human rights at their core.

Right to privacy in digital age

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (dec. 25/117)], the Council decided to convene a panel discussion at its twenty-seventh (2014) session on the promotion and protection of the right to privacy in the digital age in the context of domestic and extraterritorial surveillance and/or the interception of digital communications and the collection of personal data; and requested the High Commissioner to organize the panel discussion and submit a summary report to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session.

OHCHR report. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/167 [YUN 2013, p. 667], OHCHR in June submitted a report [A/HRC/27/37] on the right to privacy in the digital age, which focused on the protection and promotion of the right in the context of domestic and extraterritorial surveillance and/or the interception of digital communications and the collection of personal data, including on a mass scale. The report concluded that while international human rights law provided a clear and universal framework for protecting the right to privacy, practices in many States had revealed a lack of adequate legislation and/or enforcement, weak procedural safeguards and ineffective oversight. In addressing the gaps in implementation, it was observed that information relating to domestic and extraterritorial surveillance policies and practices continued to emerge. Inquiries were ongoing to gather information on electronic surveillance and the collection and storage of personal data, as well as to assess its impact on human rights. The lack of governmental transparency associated with surveillance policies, laws and practices hindered efforts to assess their coherence with international human rights law and to ensure accountability. Addressing the challenges related to the right to privacy in the context of modern communications technology would require a concerted multi-stakeholder engagement. As an immediate measure, States should review their own laws, policies and practices to ensure full conformity with international human rights law.

By a 7 August note [A/69/276], the Secretariat referred the Assembly to the OHCHR report. The General Assembly took note of the Secretariat note on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Council decision 25/117 (see above), OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/28/39] of the panel discussion held at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session on the right to privacy in the digital age (Geneva, 12 September). Topics examined included the promotion and protection of the right to privacy in the digital age in the context of domestic and extraterritorial surveillance, the interception of digital communications and the collection of personal data, including on a mass scale. Panellists concluded that technological change might pose new challenges to existing legislation; noted the need to develop effective oversight and legal safeguards against violations; and stressed that the protection of the right to privacy required the engagement of all stakeholders, including Governments, industry, civil society and international organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/166 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

The right to privacy in the digital age

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the human rights and fundamental freedoms enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and relevant international human rights treaties, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Reaffirming further the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, Recalling its resolution 68/167 of 18 December 2013 on the right to privacy in the digital age,

Welcoming the adoption by the Human Rights Council of resolution 26/13 of 26 June 2014 on the promotion, protection and enjoyment of human rights on the Internet,

Welcoming also the work of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the right to privacy in the digital age, noting with interest its report on the subject, and recalling the panel discussion on the right to privacy in the digital age held during the twenty-seventh session of the Human Rights Council,

Noting the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Council on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression,

Noting with appreciation general comment No. 16 of the Human Rights Committee on the right to respect of privacy, family, home and correspondence, and protection of honour and reputation, while also noting the vast technological leaps that have taken place since its adoption,

Recognizing the need to further discuss and analyse, based on international human rights law, issues relating to the promotion and protection of the right to privacy in the digital age, procedural safeguards, effective domestic oversight and remedies, the impact of surveillance on the right to privacy and other human rights, as well as the need to examine the principles of non-arbitrariness and lawfulness, and the relevance of necessity and proportionality assessments in relation to surveillance practices,

Noting the holding of the Global Multi-stakeholder Meeting on the Future of Internet Governance, “NETmundial”, in São Paulo, Brazil, in April 2014, and recognizing that effectively addressing the challenges relating to the right to privacy in the context of modern communications technology will require an ongoing, concerted multi-stakeholder engagement,

Noting also that the rapid pace of technological development enables individuals all over the world to use new information and communication technologies and at the same time enhances the capacity of governments, companies and individuals to undertake surveillance, interception and data collection, which may violate or abuse human rights, in particular the right to privacy, as set out in article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and is therefore an issue of increasing concern,

Reaffirming the human right to privacy, according to which no one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home or correspondence, and the right to the protection of the law against such interference, and recognizing that the exercise of the right to privacy is important for the realization of the right to freedom of expression and to hold opinions without interference and the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association, and is one of the foundations of a democratic society,

Stressing the importance of full respect for the freedom to seek, receive and impart information, including the fundamental importance of access to information and democratic participation,

Noting that while metadata can provide benefits, certain types of metadata, when aggregated, can reveal personal information and can give an insight into an individual’s behaviour, social relationships, private preferences and identity,

Emphasizing that unlawful or arbitrary surveillance and/or interception of communications, as well as unlawful or arbitrary collection of personal data, as highly intrusive acts, violate the right to privacy, can interfere with the right to freedom of expression and may contradict the tenets of a democratic society, including when undertaken on a mass scale,

Noting in particular that surveillance of digital communications must be consistent with international human rights obligations and must be conducted on the basis of a legal framework, which must be publicly accessible, clear, precise, comprehensive and non-discriminatory and that any interference with the right to privacy must not be arbitrary or unlawful, bearing in mind what is reasonable to the pursuance of legitimate aims, and recalling that States that are parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights must undertake the necessary steps to adopt laws or other measures as may be necessary to give effect to the rights recognized in the Covenant,

Emphasizing that States must respect international human rights obligations regarding the right to privacy when they intercept digital communications of individuals and/or collect personal data and when they require disclosure of personal data from third parties, including private companies,

Recalling that business enterprises have a responsibility to respect human rights as set out in the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights: Implementing the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework,

Deeply concerned at the negative impact that surveillance and/or interception of communications, including extraterritorial surveillance and/or interception of communications, as well as the collection of personal data, in particular when carried out on a mass scale, may have on the exercise and enjoyment of human rights,

Noting with deep concern that, in many countries, persons and organizations engaged in promoting and defending human rights and fundamental freedoms frequently face threats and harassment and suffer insecurity as well as unlawful or arbitrary interference with their right to privacy as a result of their activities,

Noting that while concerns about public security may justify the gathering and protection of certain sensitive information, States must ensure full compliance with their obligations under international human rights law,

Noting also in that respect that the prevention and suppression of terrorism is a public interest of great importance, while reaffirming that States must ensure that any measures taken to combat terrorism are in compliance with their obligations under international law, in particular international human rights, refugee and humanitarian law,

1. Reaffirms the right to privacy, according to which no one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home or correspondence, and the right to the protection of the law against such interference, as set out in article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

2. Recognizes the global and open nature of the Internet and the rapid advancement in information and communications technologies as a driving force in accelerating progress towards development in its various forms;

3. Affirms that the same rights that people have offline must also be protected online, including the right to privacy;

4. Calls upon all States:

(a) To respect and protect the right to privacy, including in the context of digital communication;

(b) To take measures to put an end to violations of those rights and to create the conditions to prevent such violations, including by ensuring that relevant national legislation complies with their obligations under international human rights law;

(c) To review their procedures, practices and legislation regarding the surveillance of communications, their interception and the collection of personal data, including mass surveillance, interception and collection, with a view to upholding the right to privacy by ensuring the full and effective implementation of all their obligations under international human rights law;

(d) To establish or maintain existing independent, effective, adequately resourced and impartial judicial, administrative and/or parliamentary domestic oversight mechanisms capable of ensuring transparency, as appropriate, and accountability for State surveillance of communications, their interception and the collection of personal data;

(e) To provide individuals whose right to privacy has been violated by unlawful or arbitrary surveillance with access to an effective remedy, consistent with international human rights obligations;

5. Encourages the Human Rights Council to remain actively seized of the debate, with the purpose of identifying and clarifying principles, standards and best practices regarding the promotion and protection of the right to privacy, and to consider the possibility of establishing a special procedure to that end;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Safety of journalists

Panel discussion. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council decision [YUN 2013, p. 668], OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/27/35] on the panel discussion on the safety of journalists (Geneva, 11 June) held at the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session. Participants agreed that journalists and media workers played a critical role in any democratic society. They helped to keep the public informed and the authorities and institutions that purported to work in the public interest in check. The report concluded that the safety of journalists could not be realized without a domestic legal framework and that every State needed a protection mechanism for journalists. Good practices included the creation of special investigative units or independent commissions, the appointment of a specialized prosecutor, the adoption of protocols and methods of investigation and prosecution, and the training of prosecutors and the judiciary on the safety of journalists.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/163 [YUN 2013, p. 668], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/69/268] on the safety of journalists and the issue of impunity, which reviewed recent trends with regard to the safety of journalists and media workers as well as initiatives undertaken to ensure their protection. He expressed concern about the upward trend in the number of journalists killed in recent years and the increased targeting of journalists and media workers to silence them, and noted that impunity for attacks against journalists remained the biggest obstacle to ensuring their safety. He recommended that States: establish an enabling environment for journalists and media workers so that they could fulfil their role effectively; ensure that the freedom of expression and the safety of journalists was an integral part of broader justice reforms and rule of law initiatives; ensure that investigations into threats and attacks were conducted effectively and that prosecutions were brought where supported by evidence; provide remedies to victims; and reinforce good practices.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/5)], the Council called on States to implement strategies for combating impunity for attacks and violence against journalists, including by using good practices such as those identified during the panel discussion (see above) and/or compiled in the OHCHR report on good practices on the safety of journalists [YUN 2013, p. 668]; and acknowledged the importance of addressing the issue through the universal periodic review process [YUN 2008, p. 713].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/185 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

The safety of journalists and the issue of impunity

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and recalling relevant international human rights treaties, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, as well as the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto,

Recalling its resolution 68/163 of 18 December 2013 on the safety of journalists and the issue of impunity, in which it proclaimed 2 November as the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note with appreciation of the United Nations Plan of Action on the Safety of Journalists and the Issue of Impunity, endorsed by the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination on 12 April 2012, in which United Nations agencies, funds and programmes were invited to work with Member States towards a free and safe environment for journalists and media workers in both conflict and non-conflict situations, with a view to strengthening peace, democracy and development worldwide,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolutions 21/12 of 27 September 2012 and 27/5 of 25 September 2014 on the safety of journalists, 20/8 of 5 July 2012 on the promotion, protection and enjoyment of human rights on the Internet, and 27/12 of 25 September 2014 on the World Programme for Human Rights Education, as well as Security Council resolution 1738(2006) of 23 December 2006,

Welcoming the panel discussion of the Human Rights Council on the issue of the safety of journalists, held on 11 June 2014, and taking note with appreciation of the summary report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights thereon, submitted to the Council at its twenty-seventh session, as well the 2014 report of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled World Trends in Freedom of Expression and Media Development,

Taking note of all relevant reports of the special procedures of the Human Rights Council with regard to the safety of journalists, in particular the reports of the Special Rapporteurs on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions submitted to the Human Rights Council at its twentieth session and the interactive dialogue thereon,

Commending the role and the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with regard to the safety of journalists and the issue of impunity, and their facilitation of the commemoration of the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists, in consultation with relevant entities within the United Nations system, Governments and relevant stakeholders,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights on good practices concerning the safety of journalists, submitted to the Human Rights Council at its twenty-fourth session,

Noting with appreciation the international conference on the safety of journalists, held in Warsaw on 23 and 24 April 2013, and its specific recommendations,

Mindful that the right to freedom of opinion and expression is a human right guaranteed to all, in accordance with article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and that it constitutes one of the essential foundations of a democratic society and one of the basic conditions for its progress and development,

Acknowledging that journalism is continuously evolving to include inputs from media institutions, private individuals and a range of organizations that seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, online as well as offline, in the exercise of freedom of opinion and expression, in accordance with article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, thereby contributing to the shaping of public debate,

Recognizing the relevance of freedom of expression and of free media, online as well as offline, in building inclusive and peaceful knowledge societies and democracies and in fostering intercultural dialogue, peace and good governance, as well as understanding and cooperation,

Recognizing also that the work of journalists often puts them at specific risk of intimidation, harassment and violence,

Noting the good practices of different countries aimed at the protection of journalists, as well as, inter alia, those designed for the protection of human rights defenders that can, where applicable, be relevant to the protection of journalists,

Recognizing that the number of people whose lives are influenced by the way information is presented is significant and that journalism influences public opinion,

Bearing in mind that impunity for attacks against journalists remains one of the greatest challenges to the safety of journalists and that ensuring accountability for crimes committed against journalists is a key element in preventing future attacks,

Recalling, in this regard, that journalists, media professionals and associated personnel engaged in dangerous professional missions in areas of armed conflict shall be considered as civilians and shall be respected and protected as such, provided that they take no action adversely affecting their status as civilians,

Deeply concerned by all human rights violations and abuses committed in relation to the safety of journalists, including killing, torture, enforced disappearance, arbitrary arrest and arbitrary detention, expulsion, intimidation, harassment, threats and other forms of violence,

Expressing deep concern at the increased number of journalists and media workers who have been killed or detained in recent years as a direct result of their profession,

Expressing deep concern also at the growing threat to the safety of journalists posed by non-State actors, including terrorist groups and criminal organizations,

Acknowledging the specific risks faced by women journalists in the exercise of their work, and underlining, in this context, the importance of taking a gender-sensitive approach when considering measures to address the safety of journalists,

Acknowledging also the particular vulnerability of journalists to becoming targets of unlawful or arbitrary surveillance or interception of communications in violation of their rights to privacy and to freedom of expression,

1. Condemns unequivocally all attacks and violence against journalists and media workers, such as torture, extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances, arbitrary arrest and arbitrary detention, as well as intimidation and harassment in both conflict and non-conflict situations;

2. Strongly condemns the prevailing impunity for attacks and violence against journalists, and expresses grave concern that the vast majority of these crimes go unpunished, which in turn contributes to the recurrence of these crimes;

3. Urges the immediate release of journalists and media workers who have been taken as hostages or who have become victims of enforced disappearances;

4. Encourages States to take the opportunity of the proclamation of 2 November as the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists to raise awareness regarding the issue of the safety of journalists and to launch concrete initiatives in this regard;

5. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in consultation with relevant entities of the United Nations system, and mindful of the provisions of the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980, to continue facilitating the implementation of the International Day in collaboration with Governments and relevant stakeholders;

6. Urges Member States to do their utmost to prevent violence, threats and attacks against journalists and media workers, to ensure accountability through the conduct of impartial, speedy, thorough, independent and effective investigations into all alleged violence, threats and attacks against journalists and media workers falling within their jurisdiction, to bring perpetrators, including those who command, conspire to commit, aid and abet or cover up such crimes to justice, and to ensure that victims and their families have access to appropriate remedies;

7. Calls upon States to create and maintain, in law and in practice, a safe and enabling environment for journalists to perform their work independently and without undue interference, including by means of: (a) legislative measures; (b) awareness-raising in the judiciary and among law enforcement officers and military personnel, as well as among journalists and in civil society, regarding international human rights and humanitarian law obligations and commitments relating to the safety of journalists; (c) the monitoring and reporting of attacks against journalists; (d) publicly and systematically condemning violence and attacks; and (e) dedicating the resources necessary to investigate and prosecute such attacks and to develop and implement strategies for combating impunity for attacks and violence against journalists, including by using, where appropriate, good practices such as those identified in Human Rights Council resolution 27/5 of 25 September 2014;

8. Stresses the need to ensure better cooperation and coordination at the international level, including through technical assistance and capacity-building, with regard to ensuring the safety of journalists, including with regional organizations;

9. Calls upon States to cooperate with relevant United Nations entities, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as international and regional human rights mechanisms, and to share information on a voluntary basis on the status of investigations into attacks and violence against journalists;

10. Invites the relevant agencies, organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to actively exchange information, including through already identified focal points, about the implementation of the United Nations Plan of Action on the Safety of Journalists and the Issue of Impunity, in cooperation with Member States and under the overall coordination of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session and to the Human Rights Council at its thirtieth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Freedom of peaceful assembly and association

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 670], the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, Maina Kiai (Kenya), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/29] describing his activities and assessing the threats to the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association for groups most at risk. The Rapporteur called on States to ratify all international human rights instruments that protected the rights of individuals belonging to groups most at risk; to ensure that discrimination on prohibited grounds was eliminated and that individuals belonging to groups most at risk had the ability to exercise their rights; and to refrain from supporting limitations imposed by private parties on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association.

An addendum [A/HRC/26/29/Add.1] listed communications sent by the Special Rapporteur to 70 States between 1 March 2013 and 28 February 2014, as well as responses received until 30 April 2014.

In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 670], the Secretary-General transmitted in September the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/365] focusing on the exercise of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association in the context of multilateral institutions. The Rapporteur concluded that multilateral entities had responsibilities to protect peaceful assemblies and to maintain an enabling environment for civil society. He called for multilateral institutions to implement policies that emphasized the importance of substantive engagement with civil society organizations; to engage with smaller, local civil society organizations; to increase use of information technology to encourage greater civil society participation in multilateral processes; and to undertake studies on comparative good practices in civil society engagement.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission reports. Following his visit to Rwanda (20–27 January) [A/HRC/26/29/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur referred to the historical and political background of the country; identified issues of concern related to measures to prevent and combat genocide; examined the challenges to the exercise of the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association; and recognized the work of the National Commission for Human Rights. While acknowledging the progress achieved, the Rapporteur expressed concern about the Government's hostility towards peaceful initiatives by its critics, the existence of a legal framework that silenced dissent and the prevailing opposition to vigorous debate and free expression of opinions, which made social reconciliation unstable. Stressing that a society without room for critical voices speaking freely and peacefully was unsustainable, he made recommendations for consideration by the authorities and offered to provide technical cooperation to the Government when implementing them.

In June, Rwanda submitted its preliminary comments on that report [A/HRC/26/29/Add.3].

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/38)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 31 to 9, with 7 abstentions, called on States to promote a safe and enabling environment for individuals and groups to exercise their rights to freedom of peaceful assembly; affirmed that nothing could ever justify the indiscriminate use of lethal force against a crowd; and requested the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association and the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions to submit to the Council's thirty-first (2016) session a compilation of practical recommendations for the proper management of assemblies based on best practices and lessons learned.

Capital punishment

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council decision 22/117 [YUN 2013, p. 670], OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/27/26] of the panel discussion on the question of the death penalty held at the Council's twenty-fifth (2014) session (Geneva, 5 March). The panellists emphasized that the international community had a responsibility to move universal abolition of the death penalty forward and that discussions on the issue should continue at both the national and international levels. They recommended that States ratify the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (see p. 761), aimed at the abolition of the death penalty.

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 691], the Secretary-General in June submitted a report on the question of the death penalty [A/HRC/27/23 & Corr.1]. The Secretary-General noted that the trend towards the universal abolition of the death penalty was continuing. Numerous concerns remained, however, with regard to the lack of respect for international human rights norms and standards in States where the death penalty was still imposed. He recommended that States using the death penalty on persons who committed crimes before the age of 18 stop that practice, and that the effects of the death penalty system in its entirety be further examined.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/176 [YUN 2012, p. 666], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report [A/69/288] on moratoriums on the use of the death penalty. According to the report, 160 of the 193 Member States had abolished the death penalty or introduced moratoriums, either in law or in practice. Clemency, pardons and commutations remained critical to the process of the abolition of the death penalty. The Secretary-General recommended that States adhere to fair trial guarantees in capital cases; provide up-to-date and accurate global figures on the application of the death penalty; and not reintroduce the death penalty once abolished.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/2)], by a recorded vote of 29 to 10, with 8 abstentions, the Council requested the Secretary-General to dedicate the 2015 supplement to his quinquennial report on capital punishment to the consequences of the imposition and application of the death penalty and present it to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session. It decided to convene biennial panel discussions on the question, the first of which was to be held at the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session and was to address regional efforts aimed at abolishing the death penalty. OHCHR was requested to organize the panel discussions and submit a summary report to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/186 by recorded vote (117-37-34) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Moratorium on the use of the death penalty

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming also its resolutions 62/149 of 18 December 2007, 63/168 of 18 December 2008, 65/206 of 21 December 2010 and 67/176 of 20 December 2012 on the question of a moratorium on the use of the death penalty, in which the General Assembly called upon States that still maintain the death penalty to establish a moratorium on executions with a view to abolishing it,

Welcoming all relevant decisions and resolutions of the Human Rights Council,

Mindful that any miscarriage or failure of justice in the implementation of the death penalty is irreversible and irreparable,

Convinced that a moratorium on the use of the death penalty contributes to respect for human dignity and to the enhancement and progressive development of human rights, and considering that there is no conclusive evidence of the deterrent value of the death penalty,

Noting ongoing local and national debates and regional initiatives on the death penalty, as well as the readiness of an increasing number of Member States to make available to the public information on the use of the death penalty, and also, in this regard, the decision by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 26/2 of 26 June 2014 to convene biennial high-level panel discussions in order to further exchange views on the question of the death penalty,

Recalling the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, and in this regard welcoming the increasing number of accessions to and ratifications of the Second Optional Protocol,

Noting the technical cooperation among Member States, as well as the role of relevant United Nations entities and human rights mechanisms, in supporting State efforts to establish moratoriums on the death penalty,

1. Expresses its deep concern about the continued application of the death penalty;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 67/176 and the recommendations contained therein;

3. Also welcomes the steps taken by some States to reduce the number of offences for which the death penalty may be imposed, as well as steps taken to limit its application;

4. Further welcomes the decisions made by an increasing number of States, at all levels of government, to apply a moratorium on executions, followed in many cases by the abolition of the death penalty;

5. Calls upon all States:

(a) To respect international standards that provide safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, in particular the minimum standards, as set out in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984, as well as to provide the Secretary-General with information in this regard;

(b) To comply with their obligations under article 36 of the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, particularly the right to receive information on consular assistance within the context of a legal procedure;

(c) To make available relevant information, disaggregated by applicable criteria, with regard to their use of the death penalty, inter alia, the number of persons sentenced to death, the number of persons on death row and the number of executions carried out, which can contribute to possible informed and transparent national and international debates, including on the obligations of States pertaining to the use of the death penalty;

(d) To progressively restrict the use of the death penalty and not to impose capital punishment for offences committed by persons below 18 years of age, on pregnant women or on persons with mental or intellectual disabilities;

(e) To reduce the number of offences for which the death penalty may be imposed;

(f) To establish a moratorium on executions with a view to abolishing the death penalty;

6. Calls upon States which have abolished the death penalty not to reintroduce it, and encourages them to share their experience in this regard;

7. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to continue consideration of the matter at its seventy-first session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/186:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Palau, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Samoa, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela.

Against: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, China, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Dominica, Egypt, Ethiopia, Grenada, Guyana, India, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Kuwait, Libya, Malaysia, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Disappearance of persons

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 2014: its 102nd (3–7 February), 103rd (7–16 May) and 104th (15–19 September) [A/HRC/27/49 & A/HRC/30/38], all in Geneva. In addition to its core mandate to assist families in determining the fate or whereabouts of family members who had reportedly disappeared and to act as a communication channel between families and the Government concerned, the Group monitored compliance by States with the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance [YUN 1992, p. 744].

As at 16 May 2014, the total number of cases transmitted by the Group to Governments since its inception was 54,405. Cases under active consideration that had not been clarified, closed or discontinued totalled 43,250 concerning 88 States. The Group had clarified 254 cases over the past five years.

During the year [A/HRC/WGEID/102/1, A/HRC/WGEID/103/1, A/HRC/WGEID/104/1], the Working Group adopted or reviewed general allegations concerning specific countries and clarified cases in a number of countries. It also transmitted to States cases under its urgent action procedure; transmitted communications under its prompt intervention procedure; transmitted newly reported cases of enforced disappearance; and transmitted urgent appeals concerning persons who had been arrested, detained, abducted or otherwise deprived of their liberty or who had been forcibly disappeared or were at risk of disappearance.

Mission reports. Following a regional visit in June to Croatia, Serbia and Montenegro, the Working Group noted that given the amount of time that had passed since the enforced disappearances occurred and the advanced age of many witnesses, relatives and perpetrators, there was a need for everyone involved in the search for missing persons in the region to set as a priority the determination of the fate and whereabouts of all the disappeared. Expressing concern that regional cooperation was marred with mutual mistrust, and stressing that such cooperation required strong political commitment from the highest levels, the Working Group called on everyone involved to foster a trusting environment to promote regional cooperation, inter-ethnic reconciliation and social cohesion.

Following its visit to Croatia (15–18 June) [A/HRC/30/38/Add.3], the Working Group called on the Government to establish enforced disappearance as a separate offence; to continue its efforts in the search for missing persons and the identification of human remains; to ensure efficient prosecution of war crimes; to combat impunity; and to set up comprehensive reparations programmes.

Following its visit to Serbia, including Kosovo (19–26 June) [A/HRC/30/38/Add.1], the Working Group called on the Serbian Government and the Kosovo authorities to continue their efforts in the search for missing persons and the identification of human remains; to ensure efficient prosecution of war crimes; to combat impunity; and to establish comprehensive reparations programmes.

Following its mission to Montenegro (27–30 June) [A/HRC/30/38/Add.2], the Working Group called on the Government to establish enforced disappearance as a separate offence; to ensure efficient prosecution of war crimes; combat impunity; and to set up comprehensive reparations programmes.

In September [A/HRC/27/49/Add.2], the Working Group submitted a follow-up report to the recommendations it had made following its missions to Argentina [YUN 2008, p. 807] and Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 2010, p. 700].

In December [A/HRC/27/49/Add.3], Spain submitted its comments on the Working Group's report on its visit to the country [YUN 2013, p. 671].

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (dec. 25/116)], the Council decided, in an effort to synchronize schedules for resolutions, mandates and the presentation of special procedures' reports, to postpone the renewal of the Working Group's mandate to the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session.

On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/1)], the Council extended the Working Group's mandate for three years and called on States that had not provided for a long period substantive replies concerning claims of enforced disappearances in their countries to do so.

Missing persons

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/177 [YUN 2012, p. 668], the Secretary-General in August submitted a report on missing persons [A/69/293] reviewing implementation of that resolution. Information was received from eight States, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Commission on Missing Persons and three UN system entities. The report dealt with measures to prevent persons from going missing; mechanisms to clarify the fate and whereabouts of missing persons; children; criminal investigation and prosecution; forensic recovery and identification of missing persons' remains; and the legal status of missing persons and support for their families. It ended with conclusions and recommendations.

Secretariat note. In December [A/HRC/28/52], the Secretariat referred the Council to the Secretary-General's report (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/184 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Missing persons

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes, principles and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations,

Guided also by the principles and norms of international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977, as well as international standards of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Recalling the entry into force of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and calling upon States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to it as a matter of priority, as well as to consider the option provided for in articles 31 and 32 of the Convention regarding the Committee on Enforced Disappearances,

Recalling also all previous relevant resolutions on missing persons adopted by the General Assembly, as well as the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 68/165 of 18 December 2013 on the right to the truth, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/66 of 20 April 2005 and Human Rights Council decision 2/105 of 27 November 2006 and Council resolutions 9/11 of 24 September 2008, 12/12 of 1 October 2009 and 21/7 of 27 September 2012 on the right to the truth,

Noting with deep concern that armed conflicts are continuing in various parts of the world, often resulting in serious violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law,

Noting that the issue of persons reported missing in connection with international or non-international armed conflicts, in particular those who are victims of serious violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, continues to have a negative impact on efforts to put an end to those conflicts and inflicts grievous suffering on the families of missing persons, and stressing in this regard the need to address the issue from, inter alia, a humanitarian and rule of law perspective,

Considering that the problem of missing persons may raise questions of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, as appropriate,

Bearing in mind that cases of missing persons involve conduct that may constitute criminal offences, and stressing the importance of ending impunity for violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law with respect to missing persons,

Cognizant that States that are parties to an armed conflict have a responsibility for countering the phenomenon of missing persons, taking all appropriate measures to prevent persons from going missing, including, when appropriate, effectively investigating the conditions relating to persons going missing and determining the fate of missing persons, and for recognizing their accountability as regards implementing the relevant mechanisms, policies and laws,

Bearing in mind the effective search for and identification of missing persons using forensic sciences, and recognizing that great technological progress has been made in this field, including DNA forensic analysis, which can significantly assist efforts to identify missing persons and to investigate violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law,

Recognizing that the establishment and effective work of competent national institutions can play a crucial role in clarifying the fate of missing persons in connection with armed conflict,

Recognizing also the importance of addressing the legal situation of missing persons in connection with armed conflict and supporting their family members through national policies that include a gender perspective, as appropriate,

Noting, in this regard, the progress made by coordination mechanisms, established in different parts of the world, aiming at exchanging information and identifying missing persons, which have contributed to informing families of the fate and whereabouts of their missing relatives,

Recognizing that respect for and implementation of international humanitarian law can reduce the number of cases of missing persons in armed conflict,

Stressing the importance of measures to prevent persons from going missing in connection with armed conflict, which may include enacting national legislation, producing and providing proper means of identification, the establishment of information bureaux, grave registration services and registers of deaths and ensuring accountability in cases of the missing,

Taking note of the four-year plan of action for the implementation of international humanitarian law, adopted by the Thirty-first International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held in Geneva from 28 November to 1 December 2011, in which, inter alia, States were invited, as part of its fourth objective, to consider, in the light of the right of families to know the fate of their relatives, enacting appropriate legislation or arrangements to ensure adequate participation and representation of victims and their families as well as access to justice and protection for victims and witnesses, especially women and children, in proceedings before their courts and in other transitional justice mechanisms concerning serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Taking note also of the report of the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee on best practices in the matter of missing persons,

Welcoming the convocation of the international conference entitled “The missing: an agenda for the future”, organized by the International Commission on Missing Persons in The Hague from 30 October to 1 November 2013, and taking note of the comprehensive report entitled

“The missing: an agenda for the future” and its recommendations to address the problem of missing persons and the impact on their families,

Noting with appreciation the ongoing international and regional efforts to address the question of missing persons and the initiatives undertaken by international and regional organizations in this field,

1. Urges States to strictly observe and to respect and ensure respect for the rules of international humanitarian law, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and, where applicable, in the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977;

2. Calls upon States that are parties to an armed conflict to take all appropriate measures to prevent persons from going missing in connection with the armed conflict, to account for persons reported missing as a result of such a situation and, in cases of the missing persons, to take such measures, as appropriate, to ensure thorough, prompt, impartial and effective investigations and the prosecution of offences linked to missing persons, consistent with their obligations under international law, with a view to full accountability;

3. Calls upon States to take measures to prevent persons from going missing in connection with armed conflict, including by fully implementing their obligations and commitments under relevant international law;

4. Reaffirms the right of families to know the fate of their relatives reported missing in connection with armed conflict;

5. Also reaffirms that each party to an armed conflict, as soon as circumstances permit and, at the latest, from the end of active hostilities, shall search for the persons who have been reported missing by an adverse party;

6. Calls upon States that are parties to an armed conflict to take all necessary measures, in a timely manner, to determine the identity and fate of persons reported missing in connection with the armed conflict and, to the greatest extent possible, to provide their family members, through appropriate channels, with all relevant information that they have on their fate, including their whereabouts or, if they are dead, the circumstances and cause of their death;

7. Recognizes, in this regard, the need for appropriate means of identification and for the collection, protection and management of data on missing persons and unidentified remains according to international and national legal norms and standards, and urges States to cooperate with each other and with other concerned actors working in this area by, inter alia, providing all relevant information related to missing persons, including on their fate and whereabouts;

8. Requests States to pay the utmost attention to cases of children reported missing in connection with armed conflict and to take appropriate measures to search for and identify those children and to reunite them with their families;

9. Invites States that are parties to an armed conflict to cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross in establishing the fate of missing persons and to adopt a comprehensive approach to this issue, including all such legal and practical measures and coordination mechanisms as may be necessary, based on humanitarian considerations only;

10. Urges States that are parties to an armed conflict to cooperate, consistent with their international obligations, in order to effectively solve cases of missing persons, including by providing mutual assistance in terms of information-sharing, victim assistance, location and identification of missing persons and recovery, identification and return of human remains and, if possible, by identifying, mapping and preserving burial sites;

11. Invites States to encourage interaction between competent organizations and institutions, such as national commissions on missing persons, which play a crucial role in clarifying the fate of persons missing in connection with armed conflict and providing support to the families of the missing;

12. Urges States, and encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to take all necessary measures at the national, regional and international levels to address the problem of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflict and to provide appropriate assistance, as requested by the concerned States, and welcomes in this regard the establishment and efforts of commissions and working groups on missing persons;

13. Calls upon States, without prejudice to their efforts to determine the fate of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflict, to take appropriate steps with regard to the legal situation of missing persons and the needs and accompaniment of their family members, with particular attention to the needs of women and children, in such fields as social welfare, psychological and psychosocial support, financial matters, family law and property rights;

14. Invites States, national institutions and, as appropriate, intergovernmental, international and non-governmental organizations to further their engagement in order to follow forensic best practices as they apply to preventing and resolving cases of missing persons in connection with armed conflict;

15. Also invites States, national institutions and, as appropriate, intergovernmental, international and non-governmental organizations to ensure the development and proper management of archives pertaining to missing persons and unidentified remains in connection with armed conflict, as well as access to those archives in accordance with relevant applicable laws and regulations;

16. Stresses the need to address the issue of missing persons as a part of peace and peacebuilding processes, with reference to all justice and rule-of-law mechanisms, including the judiciary, parliamentary commissions and truth-finding mechanisms, on the basis of transparency, accountability and public involvement and participation;

17. Invites relevant human rights mechanisms and procedures, as appropriate, to address the problem of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflict in their forthcoming reports to the General Assembly;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Human Rights Council at its relevant session and to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution, including relevant recommendations;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Governments, the competent United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations;

20. Decides to consider the question at its seventy-first session.

Extralegal executions

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 693], the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Christof Heyns (South Africa), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/36] covering his activities and focusing on the protection of the right to life during law enforcement. The Rapporteur made the case for a concerted effort to bring domestic laws on the use of (especially lethal) force by the police in line with the international standards. He also suggested that the Council outline the legal framework for the use of remotely piloted aircraft or armed drones and called on the Council to remain engaged with the matter of autonomous weapons systems. As a starting point, States should be asked whether their laws, seen as a whole, recognized the “protect life” principle. The Rapporteur presented recommendations addressed to the United Nations, States, regional bodies, national human rights institutions, NGOs and civil society and donors.

A 2 June addendum [A/HRC/26/36/Add.2] contained observations by the Special Rapporteur on 128 communications to 55 States and other actors sent between 1 March 2013 and 28 February 2014 and responses received between 1 May 2013 and 30 April 2014. Those included 75 urgent appeals and 53 allegation letters concerning attacks or killings (56), the death penalty (39), excessive use of force (21), death threats (22), deaths in custody (8), impunity (2), expulsion (4) and armed conflict (4). The Rapporteur received responses to 53 communications.

In August, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/168 [YUN 2012, p. 671], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur’s report [A/69/265] focusing on four topics relating to the protection of the right to life: the role of regional human rights systems; less lethal and unmanned weapons in law enforcement; resurreptions of the death penalty; and the role of statistical indicators. The Rapporteur noted that the world was not yet at a stage where each individual life was equally well tracked. States needed to treat any loss of life (whether a homicide, a death occurring during armed conflict or a death occurring during a legal intervention) as an event worthy of official record. He welcomed that the issue of violence reduction had been proposed as part of the post-2015 development agenda, with a proposal to halve violent deaths by 2030, and recommended that UN agencies and other international actors support efforts to establish a specific target for reducing violent deaths within that agenda.

Mission reports. Following his visit to Papua New Guinea (3–14 March) [A/HRC/29/37/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur noted that while many formal steps had been taken to ensure the protection of the right to life, they had not been properly implemented. A package of reforms was required. He recommended that Papua New Guinea establish: a national human rights institution to help facilitate the introduction of human rights in school curricula and police training; a centre for human rights within the University of Papua New Guinea; witness and victim protection programmes; and a human rights-focused NGO. A larger and better trained police force would strengthen the certainty of conviction for criminal offences, which, in turn, would contribute to countering calls for the reintroduction of the death penalty.

Following his mission to the Gambia (3–7 November) [A/HRC/29/37/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur presented his main findings, including with regard to the imposition of the death penalty, the resumption of executions, the use of force by law enforcement agencies, impunity for extrajudicial executions, the use of force during demonstrations, lack of accountability for human rights violations, groups at risk and fear of reprisals. He made recommendations to the Government, the international community and civil society to prevent unlawful killings and ensure better protection of the right to life.

In April [A/HRC/26/36/Add.3], Mexico submitted its comments on the Special Rapporteur's 2013 mission to the country [YUN 2013, p. 671].

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/12)], the Council demanded that States ensure that the practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions was brought to an end; take action to combat and eliminate the phenomenon; and ensure follow-up to the recommendations and conclusions of the Special Rapporteur. It also extended the Rapporteur's mandate for three years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/182 by recorded vote (122-0-66) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which guarantees the right to life, liberty and security of person, the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other relevant human rights conventions,

Reaffirming the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, as set out in Council resolution 26/12 of 26 June 2014,

Welcoming the universal ratification of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, which, alongside international human rights law, provide important legal frameworks of accountability in relation to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions during armed conflict,

Recalling all its resolutions on the subject of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions as well as the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council on the subject, and emphasizing the importance of their full and effective implementation,

Recognizing the positive role that regional human rights systems can play in the global protection against arbitrary deprivation of life,

Noting with deep concern that impunity continues to be a major cause of the perpetuation of violations of human rights, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions,

Noting that enforced disappearances can end up in extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, recalling the importance in this regard of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and calling upon all States which have not yet done so to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention,

Acknowledging that international human rights law and international humanitarian law are complementary and mutually reinforcing,

Noting with deep concern the growing number of civilians and persons hors de combat killed in situations of armed conflict and internal strife,

Noting also with deep concern the continuing instances of the arbitrary deprivation of life, resulting from, inter alia, the imposition and implementation of capital punishment when carried out in a manner that violates international law,

Deeply concerned about acts that can amount to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions committed against persons exercising their rights of peaceful assembly and freedom of expression in all regions of the world,

Deeply concerned also about killings committed by non-State actors, including terrorist groups and criminal organizations, which may amount to abuses of international human rights law and violations of international humanitarian law,

Acknowledging that extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions may under certain circumstances amount to genocide, crimes against humanity or war crimes, as defined in international law, including in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and recalling in this regard that each individual State has the responsibility to protect its populations from such crimes, as set out by the General Assembly in its resolutions 60/1 of 16 September 2005 and 63/308 of 14 September 2009,

Convinced of the need for effective action to prevent, combat and eliminate the abhorrent practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, which represent flagrant violations of international human rights law, particularly the right to life, as well as of international humanitarian law,

1. Reiterates its strong condemnation of all the extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that continue to occur throughout the world;

2. Demands that all States ensure that the practice of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions is brought to an end and that they take effective action to prevent, combat and eliminate the phenomenon in all its forms and manifestations;

3. Reiterates that all States must conduct prompt, exhaustive and impartial investigations into all suspected cases of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, identify and bring to justice those responsible, while ensuring the right of every person to a fair hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law, grant adequate compensation within a reasonable time to the victims or their families and adopt all necessary measures, including legal and judicial measures, to put an end to impunity and prevent the further occurrence of such executions, as recommended in the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extrajudicial, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, fully consistent with their obligations under international law;

4. Calls upon Governments, and invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to pay greater attention to the work of national-level commissions of inquiry into extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, with a view to ensuring the effective contribution of these commissions to accountability and to combating impunity;

5. Calls upon all States, in order to prevent extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to comply with their obligations under the relevant provisions of international human rights instruments, and also calls upon States which retain the death penalty to pay particular regard to the provisions contained in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and articles 37 and 40 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, bearing in mind the safeguards and guarantees set out in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and 1989/64 of 24 May 1989 and taking into account the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions in his reports to the Council and the General Assembly, including the report submitted to the Assembly at its sixty-seventh session, regarding the need to respect all safeguards and restrictions, including limitation to the most serious crimes, stringent respect of due process and fair trial safeguards and the right to seek pardon or commutation of sentence;

6. Urges all States:

(a) To take all measures required by international human rights law and international humanitarian law to prevent loss of life, in particular that of children, during detention, arrest, public demonstrations, internal and communal violence, civil unrest, public emergencies or armed conflicts and to ensure that the police, law enforcement agents, armed forces and other agents acting on behalf of or with the consent or acquiescence of the State act with restraint and in conformity with international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including the principles of proportionality and necessity, and in this regard to ensure that police and law enforcement officials are guided by the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials;

(b) To ensure the effective protection of the right to life of all persons, to conduct, when required by obligations under international law, prompt, exhaustive and impartial investigations into all killings, including those targeted at specific groups of persons, such as racially motivated violence leading to the death of the victim, killings of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities or because of their sexual orientation or gender identity, killings of persons affected by terrorism or hostage-taking or living under foreign occupation, killings of refugees, internally displaced persons, migrants, street children or members of indigenous communities, killings of persons for reasons related to their activities as human rights defenders, lawyers, journalists or demonstrators, killings committed in the name of passion or in the name of honour and killings committed for discriminatory reasons on any basis, to bring those responsible to justice before a competent, independent and impartial judiciary at the national or, where appropriate, international level and to ensure that such killings, including those committed by security forces, police and law enforcement agents, paramilitary groups or private forces, are neither condoned nor sanctioned by State officials or personnel;

7. Affirms the obligation of States, in order to prevent extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, to protect the lives of all persons deprived of their liberty in all circumstances and to investigate and respond to deaths in custody;

8. Encourages States, taking into account the relevant recommendations of the United Nations and of regional human rights systems, to review, where necessary, their domestic laws and practices with regard to the use of force in law enforcement in order to ensure that these laws and practices are in conformity with their international obligations and commitments;

9. Urges all States to ensure that all persons deprived of their liberty are treated humanely and with full respect for international law and that their treatment, including judicial guarantees and conditions, conform to the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and, where applicable, to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 8 June 1977, as well as to other pertinent international instruments;

10. Welcomes the International Criminal Court as an important contribution to ending impunity concerning extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and noting the growing awareness of the Court worldwide, calls upon those States that are under an obligation to cooperate with the Court to provide such cooperation and assistance in the future, in particular with regard to arrest and surrender, the provision of evidence, the protection and relocation of victims and witnesses and the enforcement of sentences, further welcomes the fact that 122 States have already ratified or acceded to and 139 States have signed the Rome Statute of the Court, and calls upon all those States that have not ratified or acceded to the Rome Statute and the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Criminal Court to give serious consideration to doing so;

11. Acknowledges the importance of ensuring the protection of witnesses for the prosecution of those suspected of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, urges States to intensify efforts to establish and implement effective witness protection programmes or other measures, and in this regard encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to develop practical tools designed to encourage and facilitate greater attention to the protection of witnesses;

12. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and to support projects with a view to training or educating military forces, law enforcement officers and government officials in international humanitarian and human rights law connected with their work and to include a gender and child rights perspective in such training, and appeals to the international community and requests the Office of the High Commissioner to support endeavours to that end;

13. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Special Rapporteur to the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council, and invites States to take due consideration of the recommendations contained therein;

14. Commends the important role that the Special Rapporteur plays towards the elimination of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue, within his mandate, to collect information from all concerned, to respond effectively to reliable information that comes before him, to follow up on communications and country visits and to seek the views and comments of Governments and to reflect them, as appropriate, in his reports;

15. Acknowledges the important role of the Special Rapporteur in identifying cases where extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions could amount to genocide and crimes against humanity or war crimes, and urges the Special Rapporteur to collaborate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and, as appropriate, the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on the Prevention of Genocide, in addressing situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions that are of particularly serious concern or in which early action might prevent further deterioration;

16. Welcomes the cooperation established between the Special Rapporteur and other United Nations mechanisms and procedures in the field of human rights, and encourages the Special Rapporteur to continue his efforts in that regard;

17. Urges all States, in particular those that have not done so, to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur so that his mandate can be carried out effectively, including by favourably and rapidly responding to requests for visits, mindful that country visits are one of the essential tools for the fulfilment of his mandate, and by responding in a timely manner to communications and other requests transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur;

18. Expresses its appreciation to those States that have received the Special Rapporteur, asks them to examine his recommendations carefully, invites them to inform him of the actions taken on those recommendations, and requests other States to cooperate in a similar way;

19. Once again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standards of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to have been respected;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with adequate human, financial and material resources to enable him to carry out his mandate effectively, including through country visits;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close collaboration with the High Commissioner and in conformity with the mandate of the High Commissioner, established by the General Assembly in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to ensure that personnel specialized in international humanitarian and human rights law form part of United Nations missions, where appropriate, in order to deal with serious violations of human rights, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions;

22. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the General Assembly, at its seventieth and seventy-first sessions, a report on the situation worldwide in regard to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and his recommendations for more effective action to combat this phenomenon;

23. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its seventy-first session.

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 694], the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, Juan E. Méndez (Argentina), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/25/60] covering his activities and focusing on the exclusionary rule—the prohibition on the use of statements made as a result of torture or other ill-treatment—in judicial proceedings, and its fundamental role in upholding the prohibition of torture and other ill-treatment by providing a disincentive to carry out such acts. The report also focused on the use of information obtained by torture or other ill-treatment by executive agencies and its relation to the absolute prohibition of torture and other ill-treatment and the obligation of the State to prevent and discourage such acts. The Rapporteur concluded that all actions of executive agencies should be reviewed under the absolute prohibition of torture and that the standards contained in the exclusionary rule should apply to the collecting, sharing and receiving of information by executive actors.

In an 11 March addendum [A/HRC/25/60/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur provided observations on communications sent to 68 Governments between 1 December 2012 and 30 November 2013, as well as on responses received until 31 January 2014.

In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/156 [YUN 2013, p. 673], the Secretary-General in September transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/387] focusing on the role forensic science played in the obligation of States to investigate and prosecute allegations of torture or other ill-treatment. He elaborated on existing standards on how legal and medical investigations into such allegations should be conducted, challenges observed during country visits and basic requirements for implementing those standards. He concluded that there was a need to step up the overall involvement of forensic medical science across the various sectors of the criminal justice cycle; and that the lack of independence and impartiality of many forensic medical services and health professionals was a key obstacle to combating impunity for perpetrators and ensuring reparations to victims.

The General Assembly took note of the report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission reports. Following his visit to Mexico (21 April–2 May) [A/HRC/28/68/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur noted that torture was generalized in the country. It occurred especially from the moment when a person was detained until he or she was brought before a judge, and was used as punishment and as a means of investigation. He identified a number of reasons for the weakness of preventive safeguards and recommended measures for addressing them. He also observed serious problems in conditions of detention, especially overcrowding. The Rapporteur called on the Government to implement his recommendations promptly and on the international community to assist Mexico in its efforts to eliminate torture and ill-treatment, end impunity and guarantee redress to victims.

Following his mission to the Gambia (3–7 November) [A/HRC/28/68/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur noted that the visit was compromised by the Government's unwillingness to grant him freedom of movement and inquiry in all areas of detention facilities. He noted that human rights activism was a weak concept in the country; that there were no institutions or legal mechanisms to counter the powers of law enforcement and security forces, which engaged in practices that violated human rights with impunity; that the practice of torture was prevalent and routine; and that the Government had not fulfilled its obligation to investigate, prosecute and punish incidents of torture and ill-treatment. The Rapporteur made recommendations that he hoped the Government would use to commence a constructive dialogue with all interlocutors to strengthen legal safeguards and improve the conditions of those deprived of their liberty.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/13)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for three years and urged those Governments that had not responded to communications transmitted to them by the Rapporteur to answer without further delay.

Voluntary fund for torture victims

Reports of Secretary-General. In his annual report [A/69/296] to the General Assembly on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, the Secretary-General presented the recommendations adopted by the Fund's Board of Trustees at its thirty-ninth session (Geneva, 10–14 March). The Board recommended clearer grant-making parameters for the Fund and the progressive introduction, as at 2015, of a case-by-case competitive review of project proposals, based on merit, documented needs and years of continuous support to the same project. It was expected that by 2017, the Fund's project portfolio would be reduced to a manageable number of projects and that the average size of the grants would increase noticeably. Contributions received from 15 countries and three private and public donors from 13 July 2013 to 1 July 2014 amounted to $7,490,935, while pledges from two countries totalled $208,804.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

The Secretary-General reported [A/HRC/28/25] on the Board's fortieth session (Geneva, 29 September–3 October), at which the Board recommended for a grant 167 ongoing projects amounting to $5,670,000; 20 new projects amounting to $590,000; and three grants for new training and seminars projects amounting to $75,400. Between 1 January and 10 November, the Fund received $8,808,111 in contributions from 16 countries and one donor and $358,692 in pledges from three countries.

Arbitrary detention

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its sixty-ninth (22 April–1 May), seventieth (25–29 August) and seventy-first (17–21 November) sessions in Geneva [A/HRC/30/36]. States informed the Working Group that they had taken measures to remedy the situation of detainees: in some cases, detainees had been released; in other cases, the Working Group was assured that the detainees concerned would be guaranteed a fair trial. The Working Group engaged in continuous dialogue with countries that it visited, particularly concerning its recommendations. Information on the implementation of recommendations made by the Working Group was received from El Salvador.

In the report, the Working Group analysed issues relating to detention in the context of drug control and to peaceful protests and arbitrary detention, and emphasized the need of remedies for arbitrary detention. It recommended that States enforce the protection of every person's right to liberty; ensure that guarantees and safeguards were extended to all forms of deprivation of liberty; and ensure that persons were not held in pretrial detention for periods longer than those prescribed by law, and were promptly brought before a judge. It also recommended that the Human Rights Council change the title of the Working Group to the Working Group on Arbitrary Deprivation of Liberty.

Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 679], the Working Group presented a June report [A/HRC/27/47], which reviewed the national, regional and international laws, regulations and practices on the right of anyone to challenge the lawfulness of his or her detention before court. The report was a compilation of information submitted by a wide range of stakeholders, including 44 States, and was the result of an independent review of international and regional legal frameworks. The exercise was undertaken as a first step in the Working Group's preparation of draft basic principles and guidelines on remedies and procedures on the right of anyone deprived of his or her liberty to challenge the lawfulness of detention before court.

Mission reports. Following its visit to New Zealand (24 March–7 April) [A/HRC/30/36/Add.2], the Working Group noted that the country's legal framework regarding the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's liberty was well-developed and consistent with international human rights law and standards. Arrested persons were immediately brought before a judge, police officers informed arrested persons of the grounds for their arrest and their legal rights immediately after their apprehension, and detainees had the right to initiate habeas corpus proceedings to challenge the lawfulness of their detention. On the other hand, it also noted that the country had a high rate of reoffending and that people of Maori descent made up 51.4 per cent of the prison population, while Maori comprised 15 per cent of the general population. The number of young Maori appearing in court was four times that of non-Maori. The Working Group recommended that the Government prevent discrimination against Maori in the administration of justice; reduce the reoffending rate through adequate programmes; and deprive of liberty asylum seekers and irregular immigrants only as a measure of last resort.

Following its mission to Italy (7–9 July) [A/HRC/30/36/Add.3] to assess progress since 2008 [YUN 2008, p. 799], the Working Group welcomed the measures undertaken by the Government and noted that there was a clear realization of the need to prevent arbitrary deprivation of liberty. Despite those positive developments, concerns remained with regard to the high number of pretrial detainees; the disproportionate application of pretrial detention in the case of foreign nationals and Roma, including minors; overcrowding in the penitentiary system; and the lack of compliance with international human rights requirements of the special detention regime for mafia offenders. With regard to the latter, the judicial review of the orders imposing or extending that form of detention needed to be strengthened and expedited. The Working Group issued a number of recommendations to the Government.

In its follow-up visit to Germany (12–14 November) [A/HRC/30/36/Add.1], the Working Group noted that the reduction in the prison population was a remarkable achievement, the positive trends observed in 2011 [YUN 2011, p. 698] had continued and the sentencing regime and review of pretrial detention constituted international best practice; however, certain detention regimes and restrictions on personal liberty that under international law were considered punishment were not regarded as such under German law. Consequently, there were different guarantees against retroactivity, including less effective remedies. The Working Group repeated its recommendations that members of the police in all Länder should be identifiable so that they could be held accountable. It also asked the Government not to limit court review of deportation orders, and to build on the achievements in reducing the number of foreigners awaiting deportation in detention.

In August [A/HRC/27/48/Add.6] and September [A/HRC/27/48/Add.7], respectively, Greece and Morocco submitted their comments on the Working Group's mission to their country in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 677].

Terrorism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 678], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism, Ben Emmerson (United Kingdom), in March submitted an annual report [A/HRC/25/59], which covered his activities from 10 January to 16 December 2013 and examined the use of remotely piloted aircraft, or drones, in extraterritorial lethal counter-terrorism operations, including in the context of asymmetrical armed conflict, and allegations that the increasing use of drones had caused a disproportionate number of civilian casualties. In his recommendations, the Rapporteur called on States identified in the report to disclose the results of any fact-finding inquiries into the alleged incidents listed therein, or to explain why no inquiries had been made; called on States on whose territory those strikes reportedly took place to provide information on those strikes; and encouraged all States to respond to his requests for clarification on legal issues on which there was no international consensus.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/178 [YUN 2013, p. 678], the Secretary-General in September transmitted the Special Rapporteur's annual report [A/69/397], covering his activities from 17 December 2013 to 31 July 2014, examining the use of mass digital surveillance for counter-terrorism purposes and considering the implications of bulk access technology for the right to privacy. The Rapporteur concluded that there was a need for States using that technology to revise and update national legislation to ensure consistency with international human rights law. States should establish strong and independent oversight bodies, and individuals should have the right to seek a remedy for any alleged violation of their online privacy rights.

Mission report. In March [A/HRC/25/59/Add.3], Chile submitted its comments on the Special Rapporteur's mission to the country in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 678].

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/7)], the Council called on States to safeguard the right to privacy, to ensure that interferences with that right were regulated by law, and to ensure that any measure taken to counter terrorism, including the use of remotely piloted aircraft, complied with their obligations under international law. It requested the Special Rapporteur to report regularly to the Council.

On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/22)], by a recorded vote of 27 to 6, with 14 abstentions, the Council called on States to ensure transparency in their records on the use of remotely piloted aircraft or armed drones and to conduct investigations whenever there were indications of a violation to international law caused by their use; decided to organize a panel discussion at its twenty-seventh (2015) session on the issues raised in the Rapporteur's report; and requested OHCHR to present a summary of the panel discussion at its twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Right to peace

Working Group activities. The Human Rights Council in 2012 [YUN 2012, p. 680] established the Open-ended Intergovernmental Working Group on the Draft United Nations Declaration on the Right to Peace, with the mandate of negotiating a draft on the basis of the one submitted by the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee [ibid.]. The first session of the Working Group was held in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 682].

By a note of 22 April 2014 [A/HRC/WG.13/2/1], the Secretariat informed the Council that the Working Group's Chairperson-Rapporteur would present, prior to the second session, a new draft text based on the discussions held during the first session and intersessional consultations. On 22 May [A/HRC/WG.13/2/2], the Chairperson-Rapporteur outlined his preliminary ideas to the Working Group. The new text was circulated to Member States by a note of 24 June.

At its second session (Geneva, 30 June–4 July 2014) [A/HRC/27/63], the Working Group proceeded with the first and second readings of the new draft text prepared by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, acknowledged the constructive dialogue, broad participation and active engagement of governments, regional and political groups, civil society and relevant stakeholders, and took note of the input received from them. The Chairperson-Rapporteur recommended that another session of the Working Group be held before the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session to finalize the text of the declaration.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/17)], the Council, by a recorded vote of 33 to 9, with 5 abstentions, decided that the Working Group should hold its third session in 2015 to finalize the declaration. It requested the Chairperson-Rapporteur to conduct informal consultations with Governments, regional groups and stakeholders, prepare a revised text based on the discussions held during the Working Group's first and second sessions and on the intersessional consultations, and present it prior to the third session of the Working Group for consideration. It also requested the Working Group to report to the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/176 by recorded vote (134-53-2) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Promotion of peace as a vital requirement for the full enjoyment of all human rights by all

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 65/222 of 21 December 2010 and 67/173 of 20 December 2012, and Human Rights Council resolutions 20/15 of 5 July 2012, 23/16 of 13 June 2013 and 27/17 of 25 September 2014, entitled "Promotion of the right to peace",

Recalling also its resolution 39/11 of 12 November 1984, entitled "Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace", and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Determined to foster strict respect for the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Underlining, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, its full and active support for the United Nations and for the enhancement of its role and effectiveness in strengthening international peace and security and justice and in promoting the solution of international problems, as well as the development of friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered,

Emphasizing its objective of promoting better relations among all States and contributing to setting up conditions in which their people can live in true and lasting peace, free from any threat to or attempt against their security,

Reaffirming the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its commitment to peace and security and justice and the continuing development of friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Rejecting the use of violence in pursuit of political aims, and stressing that only peaceful political solutions can ensure a stable and democratic future for all people around the world,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring respect for the principles of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of States and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter and international law,

Reaffirming also that all peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Reaffirming further the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that peace and development are mutually reinforcing, including in the prevention of armed conflict,

Affirming that human rights include social, economic and cultural rights and the right to peace, a healthy environment and development, and that development is in fact the realization of those rights,

Underlining the fact that the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental rights, is contrary to the Charter and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and cooperation,

Recalling that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Convinced of the aim of creating conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

Convinced also that life without war is the primary international prerequisite for the material well-being, development and progress of countries and for the full implementation of the rights and fundamental human freedoms proclaimed by the United Nations,

Convinced further that international cooperation in the field of human rights contributes to creating an international environment of peace and stability,

1. Reaffirms that the peoples of our planet have a sacred right to peace;

2. Also reaffirms that the preservation of the right of peoples to peace and the promotion of its implementation constitute a fundamental obligation of all States;

3. Stresses that peace is a vital requirement for the promotion and protection of all human rights for all;

4. Also stresses that the deep fault line that divides human society between the rich and the poor and the ever-increasing gap between the developed and developing worlds pose a major threat to global prosperity, peace and security and stability;

5. Emphasizes that the preservation and promotion of peace demands that the policies of States be directed towards the elimination of the threat of war, particularly nuclear war, the renunciation of the use or threat of use of force in international relations and the settlement of international disputes by peaceful means on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Affirms that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and an international system based on respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter and the promotion of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development and the right of peoples to self-determination;

7. Urges all States to respect and to put into practice the purposes and principles of the Charter in their relations with other States, irrespective of their political, economic or social system and of their size, geographical location or level of economic development;

8. Reaffirms the duty of all States, in accordance with the principles of the Charter, to use peaceful means to settle any dispute to which they are party and the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, as a vital requirement for the promotion and protection of all human rights of everyone and all peoples;

9. Welcomes the decision of the Human Rights Council, in its resolution 20/15, to establish an open-ended intergovernmental working group with the mandate of progressively negotiating a draft United Nations declaration on the right to peace;

10. Underlines the vital importance of education for peace as a tool to foster the realization of the right of peoples to peace, and encourages States, the specialized agencies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute actively to this endeavour;

11. Invites States and relevant United Nations human rights mechanisms and procedures to continue to pay attention to the importance of mutual cooperation, understanding and dialogue in ensuring the promotion and protection of all human rights;

12. Decides to continue consideration of the question of the promotion of the right of peoples to peace at its seventy-first session under the item entitled “Promotion and protection of human rights”.

Civilians and firearms

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/16)], by a recorded vote of 44 to 0, with 3 abstentions, the Council expressed concern that hundreds of thousands of human beings of all ages around the world, including women and children, had lost their lives or suffered injuries and psychological harm by the misuse of firearms by civilians. It called on States to take legislative, administrative and other measures, consistent with their constitutional frameworks, to ensure that civilian acquisition, possession and use of firearms were regulated with the aim of enhancing the protection of human rights, in particular the right to life and security of person.

Sexual orientation and gender identity

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/32)], by a recorded vote of 25 to 14, with 7 abstentions, the Council expressed concern at acts of violence and discrimination committed against individuals worldwide because of their sexual orientation and gender identity; welcomed positive developments at the international, regional and national levels in the fight against such acts; and requested the High Commissioner to present it to the Council’s twenty-ninth (2015) session an update of the 2011 report [YUN 2011, p. 704] on the issue with a view to sharing good practices and ways to overcome violence and discrimination.

Economic, social and cultural rights

Realizing economic, social and cultural rights

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/11)], the Council welcomed the entry into force of the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on 5 May 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 600]; underlined the importance of the joint United Nations Social Protection Floor Initiative [YUN 2010, p. 1229] for the realization of economic, social and cultural rights; and requested the Secretary-General to continue to report annually to the Council on the question of the realization of those rights in all countries, with a focus on the importance of social protection floors for their realization.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Council resolution 25/11 (see above), the Secretary-General in December submitted a report [A/HRC/28/35] that outlined the main characteristics of social protection floors and how their adoption by States could contribute to ensuring the enjoyment of minimum essential levels of economic, social and cultural rights, reducing poverty and inequality. In that context, the Social Protection Floor Initiative, led by the International Labour Organization and supported by all UN agencies, was pivotal in promoting basic income security and access to health care, and in facilitating the enjoyment of several economic and social rights by the most marginalized groups.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/141 [YUN 1993, p. 906], the High Commissioner in July submitted a report [E/2014/86] that offered a human rights analysis of land-related issues, in particular on land management, States’ obligations and other actors’ responsibilities. It also laid out the criteria that States should apply when considering land and human rights issues in relation to specific groups and existing human rights.

The Economic and Social Council took note of that report on 17 November (decision 2014/253).

Human rights in post-disaster and post-conflict situations

Advisory Committee report. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2013, p. 683], the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee in August submitted a progress report [A/HRC/27/57] on best practices and main challenges in the promotion and protection of human rights in post-disaster and post-conflict situations. The report summarized responses to a questionnaire received from 36 States, listed the main issues identified and provided conclusions and recommendations.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (dec. 26/116)], the Council requested the Advisory Committee to submit the final report on the topic at its twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Right to development

Working Group activities. The Working Group on the Right to Development, at its fifteenth session (Geneva, 12–16 May) [A/HRC/27/45], finalized the first reading of the remaining draft right to development operational subcriteria proposed by the High-Level Task Force on the implementation of the right to development [YUN 2010, p. 719]. It also proposed draft operational subcriteria for new draft criteria proposed at the Working Group's thirteenth session [YUN 2012, p. 683]. The Working Group recommended continuing to consider, revise and refine the draft right to development criteria and corresponding operational subcriteria, and to invite the Chairperson-Rapporteur to hold informal consultations with Governments, groups of Governments, regional groups and other stakeholders in preparation for the sixteenth (2015) session of the Working Group.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/2)], by a recorded vote of 42 to 1, with 4 abstentions, the Council endorsed the Working Group's recommendations; decided that the Working Group would continue to consider, revise and refine the draft right to development criteria and corresponding operational sub-criteria; and requested OHCHR to continue to report annually on its activities with regard to the right to development.

Report of Secretary-General and High Commissioner. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/158 [YUN 2013, p. 683], the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in June submitted a consolidated report [A/HRC/27/27] which reviewed the activities of OHCHR and UN human rights mechanisms relating to the promotion and realization of the right to development from May 2013 to April 2014. The activities included support for Council mechanisms, as well as events and initiatives in the areas of inter-agency coordination and mainstreaming of the right to development into the policies and programmes of international organizations and into the post-2015 development agenda (see p. 960).

In July, a secretariat note [A/69/121] informed the General Assembly of the report. The Assembly took note of that note on 18 December (decision 69/536).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/181 by recorded vote (156-5-26) [agenda item 68 (b)].

The right to development

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, which expresses, in particular, the determination to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and, to that end, to employ international mechanisms for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling also the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic and social fields,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986, which confirmed that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations, and that the individual is the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Stressing the importance of the World Conference on Human Rights, held in Vienna in 1993, and that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action reaffirmed the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and an integral part of fundamental human rights and the individual as the central subject and beneficiary of development,

Reaffirming the objective of making the right to development a reality for everyone, as set out in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly on 8 September 2000,

Deeply concerned that the majority of indigenous peoples in the world live in conditions of poverty, and recognizing the critical need to address the negative impact of poverty and inequity on indigenous peoples by ensuring their full and effective inclusion in development and poverty eradication programmes,

Recalling the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, and its outcome document,

Reaffirming the universality, indivisibility, interrelatedness, interdependence and mutually reinforcing nature of all civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, including the right to development,

Expressing deep concern over the lack of substantial progress in the trade negotiations of the World Trade Organization, and reaffirming the need for a successful outcome of the Doha Development Round in key areas such as agriculture, market access for non-agricultural products, trade facilitation, development and services,

Recalling the outcome of the twelfth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held in Accra from 20 to 25 April 2008, on the theme “Addressing the opportunities and challenges of globalization for development”,

Recalling also all its previous resolutions, Human Rights Council resolution 21/32 of 28 September 2012, previous resolutions of the Council and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the right to development, in particular Commission resolution 1998/72 of 22 April 1998 on the urgent need to make further progress towards the realization of the right to development, as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling further the outcome of the eleventh session of the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council, held in Geneva from 26 to 30 April 2010, as contained in the report of the Working Group and as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights,

Recalling the Sixteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Tehran from 26 to 31 August 2012, and the previous summits and conferences at which the States members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries stressed the need to operationalize the right to development as a priority,

Reiterating its continuing support for the New Partnership for Africa’s Development as a development framework for Africa,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of the Chair-Rapporteur of the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council and the members of the high-level task force on the implementation of the right to development in completing the 2008–2010 three-phase road map established by the Council in its resolution 4/4 of 30 March 2007,

Deeply concerned about the negative impacts of the global economic and financial crises on the realization of the right to development,

Recognizing that, while development facilitates the enjoyment of all human rights, the lack of development may not be invoked to justify the abridgement of internationally recognized human rights,

Recognizing also that Member States should cooperate with each other in ensuring development and eliminating obstacles to development, that the international community should promote effective international cooperation for the realization of the right to development and the elimination of obstacles to development and that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level, as well as equitable economic relations and a favourable economic environment at the international level,

Recognizing further that poverty is an affront to human dignity,

Recognizing that extreme poverty and hunger are among the greatest global threats and require the collective commitment of the international community for their eradication, pursuant to Millennium Development Goal 1, and therefore calling upon the international community, including the Human Rights Council, to contribute towards achieving that goal,

Recognizing also that historical injustices, inter alia, have contributed to the poverty, underdevelopment, marginalization, social exclusion, economic disparity, instability and insecurity that affect many people in different parts of the world, in particular in developing countries,

Stressing that poverty eradication is one of the critical elements in the promotion and realization of the right to development and that poverty is a multifaceted problem that requires a multifaceted and integrated approach in addressing economic, political, social, environmental and institutional dimensions at all levels, especially in the context of the Millennium Development Goal of halving, by 2015, the proportion of the world’s people whose income is less than one United States dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Emphasizing that all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Emphasizing also that the right to development should be central to the post-2015 development agenda,

1. Takes note of the consolidated report of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, which provides information on the activities undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights relating to the promotion and realization of the right to development;

2. Recognizes the significance of all the events held to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Right to Development, including the panel discussion on the theme “The way forward in the realization of the right to development: between policy and practice”, held during the eighteenth session of the Human Rights Council;

3. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Working Group on the Right to Development, as renewed by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 9/3 of 24 September 2008, with the recognition that the Working Group may convene annual sessions of five working days and submit its reports to the Council;

4. Endorses the recommendations adopted by the Working Group at its fourteenth session, and, while reaffirming them, calls for their immediate, full and effective implementation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant actors, noting also the efforts under way within the framework of the Working Group with a view to completing the tasks entrusted to it by the Council in its resolution 4/4;

5. Emphasizes the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 60/251 of 15 March 2006 establishing the Human Rights Council, and in this regard calls upon the Council to implement the agreement to continue to act to ensure that its agenda promotes and advances sustainable development and the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and also in this regard to lead the raising of the right to development, as set out in paragraphs 5 and 10 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of

Action, to the same level as and on a par with all other human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Welcomes the launching, by the Working Group, of the process for considering, revising and refining the draft right-to-development criteria and corresponding operational subcriteria, with the first reading of the draft criteria and operational subcriteria;

7. Stresses that the above-mentioned compilations of views, criteria and corresponding operational subcriteria, once considered, revised and endorsed by the Working Group, should be used, as appropriate, in the elaboration of a comprehensive and coherent set of standards for the implementation of the right to development;

8. Emphasizes the importance of the Working Group taking appropriate steps to ensure respect for and practical application of the above-mentioned standards, which could take various forms, including the elaboration of guidelines on the implementation of the right to development, and evolve into a basis for the consideration of an international legal standard of a binding nature through a collaborative process of engagement;

9. Stresses the importance of the core principles contained in the conclusions of the Working Group at its third session, congruent with the purpose of international human rights instruments, such as equality, non-discrimination, accountability, participation and international cooperation, as critical to mainstreaming the right to development at the national and international levels, and underlines the importance of the principles of equity and transparency;

10. Also stresses that it is important that the Chair-Rapporteur and the Working Group, in the discharge of their mandates, take into account the need:

(a) To promote the democratization of the system of international governance in order to increase the effective participation of developing countries in international decision-making;

(b) To also promote effective partnerships such as the New Partnership for Africa's Development and other similar initiatives with the developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, for the purpose of the realization of their right to development, including the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

(c) To strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international level, while urging all States to undertake at the national level the necessary policy formulation and to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as an integral part of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and also while urging all States to expand and deepen mutually beneficial cooperation in ensuring development and eliminating obstacles to development in the context of promoting effective international cooperation for the realization of the right to development, bearing in mind that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level and a favourable economic environment at the international level;

(d) To consider ways and means to continue to ensure the operationalization of the right to development as a priority;

(e) To mainstream the right to development in the policies and operational activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, funds and programmes, as well as in the policies and strategies of the international financial and multilateral trading systems, bearing in mind in this regard that the core principles of the international economic, commercial and financial spheres, such as equity, non-discrimination, transparency, accountability, participation and international cooperation, including effective partnerships for development, are indispensable in achieving the right to development and preventing discriminatory treatment arising from political or other non-economic considerations in addressing the issues of concern to the developing countries;

11. Encourages the Human Rights Council to continue considering how to ensure follow-up to the work of the former Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights on the right to development, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights and in compliance with decisions to be taken by the Council;

12. Invites Member States and all other stakeholders to participate actively in future sessions of the Social Forum, while recognizing the strong support extended to the Forum at its first four sessions by the Subcommission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights;

13. Reaffirms the commitment to implement the goals and targets set out in all the outcome documents of the major United Nations conferences and summits and their review processes, in particular those relating to the realization of the right to development, recognizing that the realization of the right to development is critical to achieving the objectives, goals and targets set in those outcome documents;

14. Also reaffirms that the realization of the right to development is essential to the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, which regards all human rights as universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, places the human person at the centre of development and recognizes that, while development facilitates the enjoyment of all human rights, lack of development may not be invoked to justify the abridgement of internationally recognized human rights;

15. Stresses that the primary responsibility for the promotion and protection of all human rights lies with the State, and reaffirms that States have the primary responsibility for their own economic and social development and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized;

16. Reaffirms the primary responsibility of States to create national and international conditions favourable to the realization of the right to development, as well as their commitment to cooperate with each other to that end;

17. Also reaffirms the need for an international environment that is conducive to the realization of the right to development;

18. Stresses the need to strive for greater acceptance, operationalization and realization of the right to development at the international and national levels, and calls upon all States to institute the measures required for the implementation of the right to development as an integral part of all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

19. Emphasizes the critical importance of identifying and analysing obstacles impeding the full realization of the right to development at both the national and international levels;

20. Affirms that, while globalization offers both opportunities and challenges, the process of globalization remains deficient in achieving the objectives of integrating all countries into a globalized world, and stresses the need for policies and measures at the national and global levels to respond to the challenges and opportunities of globalization if this process is to be made fully inclusive and equitable;

21. Recognizes that, despite continuous efforts on the part of the international community, the gap between developed and developing countries remains unacceptably wide, that most of the developing countries continue to face difficulties in participating in the globalization process and that many risk being marginalized and effectively excluded from its benefits;

22. Expresses its deep concern, in this regard, about the negative impact on the realization of the right to development due to the further aggravation of the economic and social situation, in particular of developing countries, as a result of the ongoing international energy, food and financial crises, as well as the increasing challenges posed by global climate change and the loss of biodiversity, which have increased vulnerabilities and inequalities and have adversely affected development gains, in particular in developing countries;

23. Underlines the fact that the international community is far from meeting the target set in the United Nations Millennium Declaration of halving the number of people living in poverty by 2015, reaffirms the commitment made to meet that target, and emphasizes the principle of international cooperation, including partnership and commitment, between developed and developing countries towards achieving the goal;

24. Notes with concern that some developing countries will fail to meet the deadline of 2015 to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard invites Member States and the international community to take proactive measures aimed at creating a conducive environment to contribute to meeting the targets set in the Millennium Development Goals and to allow for the effective implementation of the post-2015 development agenda;

25. Urges developed countries that have not yet done so to make concrete efforts towards meeting the targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 to 0.2 per cent of their gross national product to least developed countries, and encourages developing countries to build on the progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help to meet development goals and targets;

26. Recognizes the need to address market access for developing countries, including in the sectors of agriculture, services and non-agricultural products, in particular those of interest to developing countries;

27. Calls once again for the implementation of a desirable pace of meaningful trade liberalization, including in areas under negotiation in the World Trade Organization, the implementation of commitments on implementation-related issues and concerns, a review of special and differential treatment provisions, with a view to strengthening them and making them more precise, effective and operational, the avoidance of new forms of protectionism and capacity-building and technical assistance for developing countries as important issues in making progress towards the effective implementation of the right to development;

28. Recognizes the important link between the international economic, commercial and financial spheres and the realization of the right to development, stresses in this regard the need for good governance and for broadening the base of decision-making at the international level on issues of development concern and the need to fill organizational gaps, as well as to strengthen the United Nations system and other multilateral institutions, and also stresses the need to broaden and strengthen the participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

29. Also recognizes that good governance and the rule of law at the national level assist all States in the promotion and protection of human rights, including the right to development, and agrees on the value of the ongoing efforts being made by States to identify and strengthen good governance practices, including transparent, responsible, accountable and participatory government, that are responsive and appropriate to their needs and aspirations, including in the context of agreed partnership approaches to development, capacity-building and technical assistance;

30. Further recognizes the important role and the rights of women and the application of a gender perspective as a cross-cutting issue in the process of realizing the right to development, and notes in particular the positive relationship between the education of women and their equal participation in the civil, cultural, economic, political and social activities of the community and the promotion of the right to development;

31. Stresses the need for the integration of the rights of children, girls and boys alike, in all policies and programmes and for ensuring the promotion and protection of those rights, especially in areas relating to health, education and the full development of their capacities;

32. Recalls the Political Declaration on HIV and AIDS: Intensifying Our Efforts to Eliminate HIV and AIDS, adopted on 10 June 2011 at the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on HIV and AIDS, stresses that further and additional measures must be taken at the national and international levels to fight HIV and AIDS and other communicable diseases, taking into account ongoing efforts and programmes, and reiterates the need for international assistance in this regard;

33. Welcomes the political declaration of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly on the prevention and control of non-communicable diseases, adopted on 19 September 2011, with its particular focus on development and other challenges and social and economic impacts, particularly for developing countries;

34. Recalls the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want";

35. Also recalls the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, which entered into force on 3 May 2008, and stresses the need to take into consideration the rights of persons with disabilities and the importance of international cooperation in support of national efforts in the realization of the right to development;

36. Stresses its commitment to indigenous peoples in the process of the realization of the right to development, reaffirms the commitment to promote their rights in the areas of education, employment, vocational training and retraining, housing, sanitation, health and social security, in accordance with recognized international human rights obligations and taking into account, as appropriate, the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 61/295 of 13 September 2007, and in this regard takes note of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, held in 2014;

37. Recognizes the need for strong partnerships with civil society organizations and the private sector in pursuit of poverty eradication and development, as well as for corporate social responsibility;

38. Emphasizes the urgent need for taking concrete and effective measures to prevent, combat and criminalize all forms of corruption at all levels, to prevent, detect and deter in a more effective manner international transfers of illicitly acquired assets and to strengthen international cooperation in asset recovery, consistent with the principles of the United Nations Convention against Corruption, particularly chapter V thereof, stresses the importance of a genuine political commitment on the part of all Governments through a firm legal framework, and in this context urges States to sign and ratify the Convention as soon as possible and States parties to implement it effectively;

39. Also emphasizes the need to strengthen further the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and realization of the right to development, including by ensuring effective use of the financial and human resources necessary to fulfil its mandate, and calls upon the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the High Commissioner with the necessary resources;

40. Reaffirms the request to the High Commissioner for Human Rights, in mainstreaming the right to development, to effectively undertake activities aimed at strengthening the global partnership for development among Member States, development agencies and the international development, financial and trade institutions and to reflect those activities in detail in his next report to the Human Rights Council;

41. Calls upon the United Nations funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies, to mainstream the right to development in their operational programmes and objectives, and stresses the need for the international financial and multilateral trading systems to mainstream the right to development in their policies and objectives;

42. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs and bodies, the specialized agencies, funds and programmes, international development and financial institutions, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations;

43. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session and an interim report to the Human Rights Council on the implementation of the present resolution, including efforts undertaken at the national, regional and international levels in the promotion and realization of the right to development, and invites the Chair-Rapporteur of the Working Group to present an oral report and to engage in an interactive dialogue with the Assembly at its seventieth session.

Human rights and international solidarity

Reports of Independent Expert. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 687], the Independent Expert on human rights and international solidarity, Virginia Dandan (Philippines), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/34] summarizing her activities from May 2013 to January 2014 and work on the proposed draft declaration on the right of peoples and individuals to international solidarity, which was annexed to the report. Due to budgetary constraints, it had not been possible to hold regional consultations and the draft declaration had been finalized in the absence of comments from States, except for those received from Guatemala and Qatar. The comments and inputs from UN agencies, independent experts, NGOs, academics, national human rights institutions and local communities on the preliminary text were contained in an addendum [A/HRC/26/34/Add.1]. The Expert recommended that regional consultations be held on the proposed draft declaration. She would consolidate the outputs from the consultations, revise the draft and submit it for the Council's consideration.

In accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 26/6 (see below), the Secretary-General in September transmitted the Independent Expert's report [A/69/366] covering her activities since the previous report [YUN 2013, p. 687], notably on the draft declaration (see above), as well as on contributing to the formulation of the future sustainable development goals. In regard to the latter, the report focused on three areas of concern: overcoming inequality and ending poverty and discrimination; building effective and accountable institutions and peaceful societies; and strengthening implementation and revitalizing global partnerships for international cooperation.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/6)], by a recorded vote of 33 to 14, with no abstentions, the Council extended the Independent Expert's mandate for three years and requested her to report regularly to the Council and the General Assembly; to convene regional consultations to obtain inputs from States on the draft declaration on the right of peoples and individuals to international solidarity; to report on the consultations at the Council's thirty-second (2016) session; and to submit a revised draft declaration to the Council and the Assembly before the end of her second term.

Democratic and equitable international order

Reports of Independent Expert. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request (see below), the Independent Expert on the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order, Alfred-Maurice de Zayas (United States), submitted a July report [A/HRC/27/51] covering his activities from June 2013 to June 2014. In the report, he undertook a preliminary study of the adverse impacts of military spending, including ongoing armed conflict, the war on terror, surveillance, procurement, military research, diversion and corruption, on the realization of a democratic and equitable international order. He concluded that reduced military budgets would release funds for promoting human rights and addressing global problems. He made recommendations to States, parliaments, national human rights institutions, civil society and the Human Rights Council.

In August, in accordance with Assembly resolution 68/175 [YUN 2013, p. 688], the Secretary-General transmitted the Independent Expert's report [A/69/272], which focused on the implementation of the right of self-determination as key to the international order envisaged by the UN Charter. The Expert acknowledged the need to balance competing rights and interests in the spirit of the Charter and proposed criteria to facilitate an understanding of the various manifestations of self-determination.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/15)], by a recorded vote of 30 to 14, with 3 abstentions, the Council urged States to continue their efforts towards the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order; called on OHCHR to build on the issue and to bring the resolution to the attention of States, UN entities, intergovernmental organizations, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), and NGOs; and requested the Independent Expert to report on its implementation at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session.

On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/9)], by a recorded vote of 29 to 14, with 4 abstentions, the Council reaffirmed that everyone was entitled to a democratic and equitable international order. It extended the Independent Expert's mandate for three years and requested him to report regularly to the Council and the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/178 by recorded vote (129-53-6) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Promotion of a democratic and equitable international order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order, including resolution 68/175 of 18 December 2013, and Human Rights Council resolutions 18/6 of 29 September 2011 and 25/15 of 27 March 2014,

Reaffirming the commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, other instruments relating to human rights and international law,

Affirming that the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights should continue to be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and international law as set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter and with full respect for, inter alia, sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence, the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations and non-intervention in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State,

Recalling the Preamble to the Charter, in particular the determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small,

Reaffirming that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights can be fully realized,

Reaffirming also the determination expressed in the Preamble to the Charter to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practise tolerance and good-neighbourliness and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Stressing that the responsibility for managing worldwide economic and social issues, as well as threats to international peace and security, must be shared among the nations of the world and should be exercised multilaterally, and that in this regard the central role must be played by the United Nations, as the most universal and representative organization in the world,

Considering the major changes taking place on the international scene and the aspirations of all peoples for an international order based on the principles enshrined in the Charter, including promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, peace, democracy, justice, equality, the rule of law, pluralism, development, better standards of living and solidarity,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights is essential for the full achievement of the purposes of the United Nations, including the effective promotion and protection of all human rights,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and that democracy is based on the freely expressed will of the people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives,

Recognizing that the promotion and protection of human rights should be based on the principle of cooperation and genuine dialogue and aimed at strengthening the capacity of Member States to comply with their human rights obligations for the benefit of all human beings,

Emphasizing that democracy is not only a political concept, but that it also has economic and social dimensions,

Recognizing that democracy, respect for all human rights, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society and effective participation by civil society are an essential part of the necessary foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development,

Noting with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalization and social exclusion,

Reaffirming that dialogue among religions, cultures and civilizations could contribute greatly to the enhancement of international cooperation at all levels,

Underlining the fact that it is imperative for the international community to ensure that globalization becomes a positive force for all the world's people and that only through broad and sustained efforts, based on our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable,

Deeply concerned that the current global economic, financial, energy and food crises, resulting from a combination of several major factors, including macroeconomic and other factors, such as environmental degradation, desertification and global climate change, natural disasters and the lack of financial resources and the technology necessary to confront their negative impact in developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries and small island developing States, represent a global scenario that is threatening the adequate enjoyment of all human rights and widening the gap between developed and developing countries,

Stressing that efforts to make globalization fully inclusive and equitable must include policies and measures at the global level that correspond to the needs of developing countries and countries with economies in transition and are formulated and implemented with their effective participation,

Stressing also the need for adequate financing of, technology transfer to and capacity-building in developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States, including to support their efforts to adapt to climate change,

Having listened to the peoples of the world, and recognizing their aspirations to justice, to equality of opportunity for all, to the enjoyment of their human rights, including the right to development, to live in peace and freedom and to equal participation without discrimination in economic, social, cultural, civil and political life,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolutions 5/1 on institution-building of the Council and 5/2 on the Code of Conduct for Special Procedures Mandate Holders of the Council of 18 June 2007, and stressing that all mandate holders shall discharge their duties in accordance with those resolutions and the annexes thereto,

Emphasizing the importance of a global and inclusive post-2015 development agenda for the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order,

Resolved to take all measures within its power to secure a democratic and equitable international order,

1. Affirms that everyone is entitled to a democratic and equitable international order;

2. Also affirms that a democratic and equitable international order fosters the full realization of all human rights for all;

3. Takes note of the report of the Independent Expert on the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order, and notes in this regard its focus on the implementation of the right of self-determination as crucial to the international order as envisaged in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Calls upon all Member States to fulfil their commitment expressed in Durban, South Africa, during the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, to maximize the benefits of globalization through, inter alia, the strengthening and enhancement of international cooperation to increase equality of opportunities for trade, economic growth and sustainable development, global communications through the use of new technologies and increased intercultural exchange through the preservation and promotion of cultural diversity, and reiterates that only through broad and sustained efforts to create a shared future based upon our common humanity and all its diversity can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable;

5. Declares that democracy includes respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms and is a universal value based on the freely expressed will of people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives, and reaffirms the need for universal adherence to and implementation of the rule of law at both the national and international levels;

6. Affirms that a democratic and equitable international order requires, inter alia, the realization of the following:

(a) The right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they can freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

(b) The right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources;

(c) The right of every human person and all peoples to development;

(d) The right of all peoples to peace;

(e) The right to an international economic order based on equal participation in the decision-making process, interdependence, mutual interest, solidarity and cooperation among all States;

(f) International solidarity, as a right of peoples and individuals;

(g) The promotion and consolidation of transparent, democratic, just and accountable international institutions in all areas of cooperation, in particular through the implementation of the principle of full and equal participation in their respective decision-making mechanisms;

(h) The right to equitable participation of all, without any discrimination, in domestic and global decision-making;

(i) The principle of equitable regional and gender-balanced representation in the composition of the staff of the United Nations system;

(j) The promotion of a free, just, effective and balanced international information and communications order based on international cooperation for the establishment of a new equilibrium and greater reciprocity in the international flow of information, in particular correcting the inequalities in the flow of information to and from developing countries;

(k) Respect for cultural diversity and the cultural rights of all, since this enhances cultural pluralism, contributes to a wider exchange of knowledge and understanding of cultural backgrounds, advances the application and enjoyment of universally accepted human rights across the world and fosters stable, friendly relations among peoples and nations worldwide;

(l) The right of every person and all peoples to a healthy environment and to enhanced international cooperation that responds effectively to the needs for assistance of national efforts to adapt to climate change, particularly in developing countries, and that promotes the fulfilment of international agreements in the field of mitigation;

(m) The promotion of equitable access to benefits from the international distribution of wealth through enhanced international cooperation, in particular in international economic, commercial and financial relations;

(n) The enjoyment by everyone of ownership of the common heritage of mankind in connection to the public right of access to culture;

(o) The shared responsibility of the nations of the world for managing worldwide economic and social development, as well as threats to international peace and security, which should be exercised multilaterally;

7. Stresses the importance of preserving the rich and diverse nature of the international community of nations and peoples, as well as respect for national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds, in the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights;

8. Also stresses that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and reaffirms that, while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all;

9. Urges all actors on the international scene to build an international order based on inclusion, social justice, equality and equity, human dignity, mutual understanding and promotion of and respect for cultural diversity and universal human rights and to reject all doctrines of exclusion based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

10. Reaffirms that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and, to that end, should do their utmost to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control, as well as to ensure that the resources released by effective disarmament measures are used for comprehensive development, in particular that of the developing countries;

11. Also reaffirms the need to continue working urgently for the establishment of a new international economic order based on equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest and cooperation among all States, irrespective of their economic and social systems, which shall correct inequalities and redress existing injustices, make it possible to eliminate the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries and ensure steadily accelerating economic and social development and peace and justice for present and future generations, in accordance with relevant previous General Assembly resolutions, programmes of action and major conferences and summits in the economic, social and related areas;

12. Further reaffirms that the international community should devise ways and means to remove the current obstacles and meet the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and to prevent the continuation of human rights violations resulting therefrom throughout the world;

13. Urges States to continue their efforts, through enhanced international cooperation, towards the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order;

14. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to provide all the human and financial resources necessary for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Independent Expert;

15. Calls upon all Governments to cooperate with and assist the Independent Expert in his task, to supply all necessary information requested by him and to consider responding favourably to the requests of the Independent Expert to visit their countries to enable him to fulfil his mandate more effectively;

16. Requests the Human Rights Council, the human rights treaty bodies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the special mechanisms extended by the Council and the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee to pay due attention, within their respective mandates, to the present resolution and to make contributions towards its implementation;

17. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to build upon the issue of the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of Member States, United Nations organs, bodies and components, intergovernmental organizations, in particular the Bretton Woods institutions, and non-governmental organizations and to disseminate it on the widest possible basis;

19. Requests the Independent Expert to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session an interim report on the implementation of the present resolution and to continue his work;

20. Decides to continue consideration of the matter at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Globalization

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 68/168 [YUN 2013, p. 691], the Secretary-General in June submitted a report [A/69/99] that summarized the views on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights received from seven Governments (Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cuba, Lebanon, Morocco, Oman, Panama), as well as from the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law. The report identified common themes and made recommendations on how to address the issue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/173 by recorded vote (135-53-1) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and expressing, in particular, the need to achieve international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance on 8 September 2001, the outcome document of the Durban Review Conference, adopted on 24 April 2009, and the political declaration of the high-level meeting of the General Assembly to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, entitled "United against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance", of 22 September 2011,

Recalling also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Right to Development adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 41/128 of 4 December 1986,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the outcome documents of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth special sessions of the General Assembly, held in New York from 5 to 10 June 2000 and in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000, respectively,

Recalling also its resolutions 66/154 of 19 December 2011, 67/165 of 20 December 2012 and 68/168 of 18 December 2013,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 2005/17 of 14 April 2005 on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolutions 17/4 of 16 June 2011 on human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises and 21/5 of 27 September 2012 on the contribution of the United Nations system as a whole to the advancement of the business and human rights agenda and the dissemination and implementation of the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights: Implementing the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework,

Recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Realizing that globalization affects all countries differently and makes them more exposed to external developments, positive as well as negative, inter alia, in the field of human rights,

Realizing also that globalization is not merely an economic process, but that it also has social, political, environmental, cultural and legal dimensions, which have an impact on the full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Emphasizing the need to fully implement the global partnership for development and enhance the momentum generated by the 2005 World Summit in order to operationalize and implement the commitments made in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits, including the 2005 World Summit, in the economic, social and related fields, and reaffirming in particular the commitment contained in paragraphs 19 and 47 of the 2005 World Summit Outcome to promote fair globalization and the development of the productive sectors in developing countries to enable them to participate more effectively in and benefit from the process of globalization,

Realizing the need to undertake a thorough, independent and comprehensive assessment of the social, environmental and cultural impact of globalization on societies,

Recognizing in each culture a dignity and value that deserve recognition, respect and preservation, convinced that, in their rich variety and diversity and in the reciprocal influences that they exert on one another, all cultures form part of the common heritage belonging to all humankind, and aware of the risk that globalization poses more of a threat to cultural diversity if the developing world remains poor and marginalized,

Recognizing also that multilateral mechanisms have a unique role to play in meeting the challenges and opportunities presented by globalization,

Realizing the need to consider the challenges and opportunities linked to globalization with a view to addressing such challenges and building on possible opportunities in order to achieve the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Emphasizing the global character of the migratory phenomenon, the importance of international, regional and bilateral cooperation and the need to protect the human rights of migrants, particularly at a time in which migration flows have increased in the globalized economy,

Expressing grave concern at the negative impact of international financial turmoil on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly in the light of the continuing global financial and economic crisis, which has an adverse impact on the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, particularly the Millennium Development Goals, and recognizing that developing countries are in a more vulnerable situation when facing such impact and that regional economic cooperation and development strategies and programmes can play a role in mitigating such impact,

Expressing deep concern at the negative impact of the continuing global food and energy crises and climate change challenges on social and economic development and on the full enjoyment of all human rights for all,

Recognizing that globalization should be guided by the fundamental principles that underpin the corpus of human rights, such as equity, participation, accountability, non-discrimination at both the national and the international levels, respect for diversity, tolerance and international cooperation and solidarity,

Emphasizing that the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full realization and effective enjoyment of human rights and that its immediate alleviation and eventual elimination must remain a high priority for the international community,

Acknowledging that there is greater acceptance that the increasing debt burden faced by the most indebted developing countries is unsustainable and constitutes one of the principal obstacles to achieving sustainable development and poverty eradication and that, for many developing countries, excessive debt servicing has severely constrained their capacity to promote social development and to provide basic services to realize economic, social and cultural rights,

Strongly reiterating the determination to ensure the timely and full realization of the development goals and objectives agreed at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including those agreed at the Millennium Summit, described as the Millennium Development Goals, which have helped to galvanize efforts towards poverty eradication,

Gravely concerned at the inadequacy of measures to narrow the widening gap between the developed and the developing countries, and within countries, which has contributed to, inter alia, deepening poverty and has adversely affected the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries,

Emphasizing that transnational corporations and other business enterprises have a responsibility to respect all human rights,

Emphasizing also that human beings strive for a world that is respectful of human rights and cultural diversity and that, in this regard, they work to ensure that all activities, including those affected by globalization, are consistent with those aims,

1. Recognizes that, while globalization, by its impact on, inter alia, the role of the State, may affect human rights, the promotion and protection of all human rights is first and foremost the responsibility of the State;

2. Emphasizes that development should be at the centre of the international economic agenda and that coherence between national development strategies and international obligations and commitments is imperative for an enabling environment for development and an inclusive and equitable globalization;

3. Reaffirms that narrowing the gap between rich and poor, both within and between countries, is an explicit goal at the national and international levels, as part of the effort to create an enabling environment for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

4. Also reaffirms the commitment to create an environment at both the national and the global levels that is conducive to development and to the eradication of poverty by, inter alia, promoting good governance within each country and at the international level, eliminating protectionism, enhancing transparency in the financial, monetary and trading systems and committing to an open, equitable, rules-based, predictable and non-discriminatory multilateral trading and financial system;

5. Recognizes the impacts that the global financial and economic crisis is still having on the ability of countries, particularly developing countries, to mobilize resources for development and to address the impact of this crisis, and in this context calls upon all States and the international community to alleviate, in an inclusive and development-oriented manner, any negative impacts of this crisis on the realization and the effective enjoyment of all human rights;

6. Also recognizes that, while globalization offers great opportunities, the fact that its benefits are very unevenly shared and its costs unevenly distributed represents an aspect of the process that affects the full enjoyment of all human rights, in particular in developing countries;

7. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on globalization and its impact on the full enjoyment of human rights, which focuses on the liberalization of agricultural trade and its impact on the realization of the right to development, including the right to food, and takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

8. Reaffirms the international commitment to eliminating hunger and to securing food for all, today and tomorrow, and reiterates that the relevant United Nations organizations should be assured the resources needed to expand and enhance their food assistance and support social safety net programmes designed to address hunger and malnutrition, when appropriate, through the use of local or regional purchase;

9. Calls upon Member States, relevant agencies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and civil society to promote inclusive, equitable and environmentally sustainable economic growth for managing globalization so that poverty is systematically reduced and the international development targets are achieved;

10. Recognizes that the responsible operations of transnational corporations and other business enterprises can contribute to the promotion, protection and fulfilment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular economic, social and cultural rights;

11. Also recognizes that only through broad and sustained efforts, including policies and measures at the global level to create a shared future based upon our common humanity in all its diversity, can globalization be made fully inclusive and equitable and have a human face, thus contributing to the full enjoyment of all human rights;

12. Underlines the urgent need to establish an equitable, transparent and democratic international system to strengthen and broaden the participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

13. Affirms that globalization is a complex process of structural transformation, with numerous interdisciplinary aspects, which has an impact on the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including the right to development;

14. Also affirms that the international community should strive to respond to the challenges and opportunities posed by globalization in a manner that promotes and protects human rights while ensuring respect for the cultural diversity of all;

15. Underlines, therefore, the need to continue to analyse the consequences of globalization for the full enjoyment of all human rights;

16. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to continue to seek further the views of Member States and relevant agencies of the United Nations system and to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a substantive report on the subject based on those views, including recommendations on ways to address the impact of globalization on the full enjoyment of all human rights.

Foreign debt

Reports of Independent Expert. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 716], the Independent Expert on the effects of foreign debt and other related international financial obligations of States on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights, Cephass Lumina (Zambia), in March submitted a report [A/HRC/25/50] that reflected on his tenure between 2008 and 2014. It described the main activities undertaken, the challenges faced by the Council in addressing sovereign debt as a human rights issue and the constraints confronting the special procedures in carrying out their mandate, including insufficient resources. He concluded that sovereign debt and its negative impact on the capacity of Governments to fulfil their human rights obligations remained an important issue and urged the Council to continue its engagement.

Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request (see below), the Secretary-General in August transmitted the report [A/69/273] of the new Independent Expert, Juan Pablo Bohoslavsky (Argentina), who was appointed by the Council on 8 May. The report set out his preliminary workplan for the period 2014–2017, which would focus on six thematic areas: preventive aspects of fiscal policy and debt management; international human rights law in the context of debt restructuring and debt relief; good practices to avoid negative human rights implications; human rights and debt arbitration in the context of bilateral investment treaties; lending to States and non-State actors involved in gross human rights violations and transitional justice; and the impact of illicit financial flows on human rights.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission report. Following his mission to Iceland (8–15 December) [A/HRC/28/59/Add.1], the Independent Expert assessed the extent to which the country had fulfilled its obligations to protect economic, social and cultural rights in the aftermath of its recent banking crisis. Although Iceland had managed the crisis better than many other countries, he identified gaps that needed to be addressed. He recommended that the country's legal and institutional framework be strengthened to prevent the recurrence of a similar crisis and that attention be paid to vulnerable groups, in particular highly indebted individuals, people living in rented accommodation, immigrants and children living in single-parent households. He concluded that international organizations and other countries could learn from the path that Iceland had chosen, which included protecting its core social welfare system, seeking to ensure citizen participation in decision-making and endeavouring to establish accountability.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/16)], by a recorded vote of 30 to 14, with 3 abstentions, the Council reiterated its request to the High Commissioner to pay more attention to the problem of the debt burden of developing countries; extended the Independent Expert's mandate for three years; and requested him to report regularly to the Council and the General Assembly.

On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/30)], by a recorded vote of 33 to 5, with 9 abstentions, the Council welcomed the Advisory Committee's research proposal on the activities of vulture funds and human rights (see p. 752); condemned such activities for the negative effect that the debt repayment to those funds had on the capacity of Governments to fulfil their human rights obligations; and requested the Advisory Committee to prepare a research-based report on the issue and submit a progress report to the Council's thirty-first (2016) session.

Non-repatriation of funds of illicit origin

In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 699], the Independent Expert on the effects of foreign debt and other related international financial obligations of States on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights, Cephass Lumina, in May submitted a final report [A/HRC/25/52] on the negative impact of the non-repatriation of funds of illicit origin on the enjoyment of human rights. The report indicated that by reducing the resources available to States to establish the conditions for the realization of economic, social and cultural rights and to create and strengthen institutions that upheld civil and political rights, illicit financial flows compromised the affected Governments' ability to devote resources to the realization of human rights. The Expert concluded that the substantial amounts lost to illicit financial flows, estimated at $946.7 billion in 2011, could help the efforts of developing countries to mobilize domestic resources for poverty alleviation, development and human rights, and to reduce their costly dependence on external financing.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/9)], by a recorded vote of 33 to 2, with 12 abstentions, the Council called on States to consider enacting legislation to address offences by business enterprises, which deprived Governments of legitimate domestic revenue sources for implementing their development agendas; asserted the need to repatriate illicit funds to the countries of origin without conditionalities; and requested the Independent Expert to undertake a further study to analyse the negative impact of illicit financial flows on the enjoyment of human rights in the context of the post-2015 development agenda and to present an interim study and a final study, respectively, to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) and thirty-first (2016) sessions.

Transnational corporations

Working Group activities. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 717], the Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises in May submitted a report [A/HRC/26/25], which reviewed the strategic objectives, activities and outcomes of its first three years and identified the challenges ahead. The Working Group concluded that while significant efforts had been undertaken to implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights [YUN 2011, p. 716], challenges remained, including with respect to broadening dissemination, reaching scale in implementation, building trust between stakeholders and overcoming barriers to effective remedies. There was a growing gap between the pace of implementation and the expectations of civil society and affected stakeholders. The Working Group urged that efforts towards the implementation of the Guiding Principles be scaled up and made recommendations addressed to States, business enterprises and civil society organizations.

An addendum [A/HRC/26/25/Add.1] summarized the findings from a 2013 questionnaire for corporations on the Guiding Principles, to which 153 business representatives from 39 countries had responded. The responses revealed that the majority of the sampled businesses were aware of the Guiding Principles and that half had a public statement of human rights; were engaged in the human rights agenda; and cited moving from policy to practice and addressing human rights in business relationships as the main challenges. Despite those insights, the small scale of the questionnaire and the fact that it was not randomized had limited the extent to which the results could be extrapolated and global generalizations could be made. The results underscored the value of conducting a future larger scale, randomized survey to gather a solid baseline of credible and complete data.

Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions 17/4 [YUN 2011, p. 717] and 26/22 (see below), the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Working Group's report [A/69/263], which explored how national action plans on business and human rights might be employed to implement the Guiding Principles and to protect against business-related human rights abuses. The Working Group made recommendations addressed to States, business enterprises and civil society.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission report. Following its visit to Azerbaijan (18–27 August) [A/HRC/29/28/Add.1], the Working Group reported on efforts by the Government and companies to prevent, protect against and redress human rights abuses by business enterprises, in conformity with the Guiding Principles. It highlighted issues of particular importance, namely, the space for participation of civil society; efforts to tackle corruption and abuse of public positions; the oil and gas sector and the construction industry; and labour rights. The Working Group made observations on access to remedy and on ways forward to strengthen the national policy framework, and made recommendations for further action.

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 21/5 [YUN 2012, p. 696], the Secretary-General in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/20] on the challenges, strategies and developments with regard to implementation of that resolution by the UN system. The report found that further efforts were needed to embed the Guiding Principles in the strategic coordination mechanisms of the UN system.

The Secretary-General also presented the conclusions from an OHCHR study on the feasibility of a global fund to enhance the capacity of stakeholders to implement the Guiding Principles [A/HRC/26/20/Add.1]. One finding was that there was strong support for such a fund among a broad range of stakeholders. Perspectives, however, differed on the most desirable mandate, governance model and sources of funding.

Forum on Business and Human Rights. The third annual United Nations Forum on Business and Human Rights (Geneva, 1–3 December) [A/HRC/FBHR/2014/3] gathered an estimated 2,000 participants from some 130 countries, with equal representation of women and men. The theme of the Forum was “Advancing business and human rights globally: alignment, adherence and accountability”. Plenary sessions focused on leadership perspectives on the business and human rights agenda in the context of global trends, and on how the Guiding Principles could contribute to human rights and dignity for all in the global economy. The thematic tracks examined issues such as: the role of public policy and national action plans; progress achieved and challenges faced by companies in integrating the corporate responsibility to respect human rights; enhancing accountability and access to remedy for victims of business-related human rights abuse; integrating the Guiding Principles in global governance structures; and good practice models for stakeholder engagement.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/22)], the Council decided that the two-day Forum on Business and Human Rights would continue to be held on an annual basis, with the addition of one meeting day to allow for the preparation and sharing of new tools and experience; extended the Working Group's mandate for three years; and requested the High Commissioner to consult with States and stakeholders on whether to create a global fund to enhance the capacity of stakeholders to implement the Guiding Principles, and to report thereon to the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session.

On 26 June [res. 26/9], by a recorded vote of 20 to 14, with 13 abstentions, the Council established an open-ended intergovernmental working group on transnational corporations and other business enterprises with respect to human rights, to elaborate an international legally-binding instrument to regulate the activities of transnational corporations and other business enterprises. It decided that the working group's first two sessions would deliberate on the content, scope, nature and form of the international instrument; that the working group's Chairperson-Rapporteur would prepare elements for the draft instrument for negotiations at the commencement of the third session; and that the working group would hold its first session before the Council's thirtieth (2015) session and report on progress made to the Council's thirty-first (2016) session.

Unilateral coercive measures

OHCHR report. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 696], OHCHR reported [A/HRC/27/32] on the workshop on the impact of the application of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights by the affected populations, in particular their socioeconomic impact on women and children, in the States targeted (Geneva, 23 May). Participants examined a wide range of impacts of coercive measures, from their impact on international humanitarian and human rights law, to their impact on the economy, on peace and security and on the social fabric of States. A number of panelists questioned the purposes and effectiveness of those measures, whether imposed to react to prior violations by the targeted State, in response to terrorism, as an alternative to war or in the context of war. The Chair pointed to a need to redefine what was understood as the effectiveness of coercive measures in order to take human rights and humanitarian concerns into account. She noted the need to move beyond tweaking sanctions to examine the place of sanctions in the international setting.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/162 [YUN 2013, p. 696], the Secretary-General in June submitted a report [A/69/97] that summarized submissions received from five Governments (Colombia, Cuba, Iran, Lebanon, Mauritius) on the impact of unilateral coercive measures on their populations.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 & Corr.1 (res. 27/21)], by a recorded vote of 31 to 14, with 2 abstentions, the Council decided to organize a biennial panel discussion on the issue of unilateral coercive measures and human rights, starting at the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session; requested OHCHR to report on the panel discussion; and requested the Council's Advisory Committee to prepare a research-based report on mechanisms to assess the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights and promote accountability and submit a progress report to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session. The Council decided to appoint, for a three-year period, a Special Rapporteur on the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights with the mandate to: gather information on the issue; study trends, developments and challenges and make recommendations; and review independent mechanisms to assess unilateral coercive measures to promote accountability. The Council requested the Rapporteur to report annually to the Council and the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/180 by recorded vote (134-53-1) [agenda item 68 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on this subject, the most recent of which was resolution 68/162 of 18 December 2013, and Human Rights Council decision 18/120 of 30 September 2011 and resolutions 24/14 of 27 September 2013 and 27/21 of 26 September 2014, as well as previous resolutions of the Council and the Commission on Human Rights,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/162, and recalling the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Assembly resolutions 52/120 of 12 December 1997 and 55/110 of 4 December 2000,

Stressing that unilateral coercive measures and legislation are contrary to international law, international humanitarian law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and in this regard reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling the Final Document of the Sixteenth Ministerial Conference and Commemorative Meeting of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 23 to 27 May 2011, the Final Document of the Sixteenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held in Tehran from 26 to 31 August 1972, and the documents adopted at previous summits and conferences, in which States members of the Movement agreed to oppose and condemn those measures or laws and their continued application, persevere with efforts to effectively reverse them, urge other States to do likewise, as called for by the General Assembly and other organs of the United Nations, and request States applying those measures or laws to revoke them fully and immediately,

Recalling also that, at the World Conference on Human Rights, held in Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, States were called upon to refrain from any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights and also severely threatens the freedom of trade,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) on 14 June 1996, and in their five-year reviews,

Expressing concern about the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on international relations, trade, investment and cooperation,

Expressing grave concern that, in some countries, the situation of children is adversely affected by unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and hinder the well-being of the population in the affected countries, with particular consequences for women, children, including adolescents, the elderly and persons with disabilities,

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this question by the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Commission on Human Rights and recent major United Nations conferences, and contrary to general international law and the Charter, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented, with all their negative implications for the social-humanitarian activities and economic and social development of developing countries, including their extraterritorial effects, thereby creating additional obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights by peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

Bearing in mind all the extraterritorial effects of any unilateral legislative, administrative and economic measures, policies and practices of a coercive nature against the development process and the enhancement of human rights in developing countries, which create obstacles to the full realization of all human rights,

Reaffirming that unilateral coercive measures are a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling article 1, paragraph 2, common to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which provides, inter alia, that in no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence,

Noting the continuing efforts of the open-ended Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council, and reaffirming in particular its criteria, according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to cease adopting or implementing any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law, international humanitarian law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States, in particular those of a coercive nature, with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Strongly urges States to refrain from promulgating and applying any unilateral economic, financial or trade measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that impede the full achievement of economic and social development, particularly in developing countries;

3. Condemns the inclusion of Member States in unilateral lists under false pretexts, which are contrary to international law and the Charter, including false allegations of terrorism sponsorship, considering such lists as instruments for political or economic pressure against Member States, particularly developing countries;

4. Urges all States not to adopt any unilateral measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that impede the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries, in particular children and women, that hinder their well-being and that create obstacles to the full enjoyment of their human rights, including the right of everyone to a standard of living adequate for his or her health and well-being and his or her right to food, medical care and education and the necessary social services, as well as to ensure that food and medicine are not used as tools for political pressure;

5. Strongly objects to the extraterritorial nature of those measures which, in addition, threaten the sovereignty of States, and in this context calls upon all Member States neither to recognize those measures nor to apply them, as well as to take administrative or legislative measures, as appropriate, to counteract the extraterritorial applications or effects of unilateral coercive measures;

6. Condemns the continuing unilateral application and enforcement by certain Powers of unilateral coercive measures, and rejects those measures, with all their extraterritorial effects, as being tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, adopted with a view to preventing those countries from exercising their right to decide, of their own free will, their own political, economic and social systems, and because of the negative effects of those measures on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women, the elderly and persons with disabilities;

7. Expresses grave concern that, in some countries, the situation of children is adversely affected by unilateral coercive measures not in accordance with international law and the Charter that create obstacles to trade relations among States, impede the full realization of social and economic development and hinder the well-being of the population in the affected countries, with particular consequences for women, children, including adolescents, the elderly and persons with disabilities;

8. Reaffirms that essential goods such as food and medicines should not be used as tools for political coercion and that under no circumstances should people be deprived of their own means of subsistence and development;

9. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to abide by the principles of international law, the Charter, the declarations of the United Nations and world conferences and relevant resolutions and to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are parties by revoking such measures at the earliest possible time;

10. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

11. Recalls that, according to the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, and the relevant principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, proclaimed by the Assembly in its resolution 3281(XXIX), in particular article 32 thereof, no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights and to secure from it advantages of any kind;

12. Rejects all attempts to introduce unilateral coercive measures, and urges the Human Rights Council to take fully into account the negative impact of those measures, including through the enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application that are not in conformity with international law, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

13. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging his functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development and bearing in mind the continuing impact of unilateral coercive measures on the population of developing countries, to give priority to the present resolution in his annual report to the General Assembly;

14. Underlines the fact that unilateral coercive measures are one of the major obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, and in this regard calls upon all States to avoid the unilateral imposition of economic coercive measures and the extraterritorial application of national laws that run counter to the principles of free trade and hamper the development of developing countries, as recognized by the Working Group on the Right to Development of the Human Rights Council;

15. Recognizes that, in the Declaration of Principles adopted at the first phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, States were strongly urged to avoid and refrain from any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations in building the information society;

16. Takes note with appreciation of the decision of the Human Rights Council, in its resolution 27/21, to appoint a Special Rapporteur on the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights;

17. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide all the human and financial resources necessary for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur;

18. Recalls the decision of the Human Rights Council, in its resolution 27/21, to organize a biennial panel discussion on the issue of unilateral coercive measures and human rights;

19. Welcomes the increased attention paid by the Human Rights Council and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to the negative impact of the application of unilateral coercive measures, and invites the Council to continue to explore ways to address this issue;

20. Reiterates its support for the invitation of the Human Rights Council to all special rapporteurs and existing thematic mechanisms of the Council in the field of economic, social and cultural rights to pay due attention, within the scope of their respective mandates, to the negative impact and consequences of unilateral coercive measures;

21. Reaffirms the request of the Human Rights Council that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights organize a workshop on the impact of the application of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights by the affected populations, in particular their socioeconomic impact on women and children, in the States targeted;

22. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session an interim report on the implementation of the present resolution and on the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the full enjoyment of human rights;

23. Invites Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his or her mandate through, inter alia, the submission of comments and suggestions on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on the full enjoyment of human rights;

24. Decides to examine the question on a priority basis at its seventieth session, under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms" of the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/180:

Social Forum

Social Forum session. The Social Forum (Geneva, 1–3 April) [A/HRC/26/46], which was attended by States, UN bodies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, academic and national human rights institutions and independent experts, focused on the rights of older persons, including best practices. Participants agreed that there must be greater national and international protection of older persons' rights and that need would grow as population demographics changed to reflect longer life expectancies for people worldwide. Issues of concern included insufficient mechanisms for guaranteeing older persons the exercise of their rights; the absence of an express prohibition of age discrimination in most human rights instruments; and deficiency in the human rights framework in addressing issues affecting older persons, such as poverty, employment discrimination, inadequate systems for long-term care, violations of informed consent, insufficient services for persons with dementia, restricted autonomy and decision-making, discrimination and lack of pension coverage. Participants called for a new legally binding instrument on the rights of older persons and for further monitoring, study and analysis of older persons' issues. The report concluded that older persons contributed to economic and social development where they were not prevented from doing so through discriminatory laws, policies or attitudes, and that a paradigm change was needed to enable older persons to enjoy their rights regardless of whether or not they were able to contribute to society economically.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/28)], the Council decided that the Social Forum in 2015 would focus on access to medicines in the context of the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, and invited the Social Forum to report to the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session.

Extreme poverty

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2011, p. 720], the Special Rapporteur on extreme poverty and human rights, Magdalena Sepúlveda Carmona (Chile), in May submitted a report [A/HRC/26/28 & Corr.1] focusing on fiscal policy, and particularly taxation policies, as a major determinant in the enjoyment of human rights. She outlined relevant human rights obligations to guide and inform State revenue-raising practices, analysed the questions of how the principles of non-discrimination and equality and the duty of international cooperation and assistance should inform global and national taxation policies and assessed how revenue-raising policies and practices could be strengthened through a human rights-based approach. She made recommendations for fiscal and tax policies that were grounded in human rights and could lead to poverty reduction, sustainable development and the realization of transformative rights.

In a 5 June addendum [A/HRC/26/28/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur reviewed her activities during the term (2008–2014) of her mandate, including country visits, thematic reports as well as her work on advocacy and in concluding the drafting process for the Guiding Principles on extreme poverty and human rights [YUN 2012, p. 700].

In accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 26/3 (see below), the Secretary-General in August transmitted the first report [A/69/297] of the new Special Rapporteur, Philip Alston (Australia), who was appointed by the Council on 8 May. The report focused on the implementation of the right to social protection through the adoption by States of social protection floors. The widely endorsed Social Protection Floor Initiative [YUN 2010, p. 1229] aimed to guarantee basic income security and access to essential social services for all. The Rapporteur examined challenges to the Initiative's success, including overcoming the ambivalence of key international actors, including the World Bank, towards the concept; the lack of sufficient legal recognition of social protection as a human right; and misgivings as to the affordability of social protection floors. He called for civil society groups to engage with the Initiative and for the World Bank to adopt a new approach that was supportive of it. He recommended greater engagement with the Initiative by both the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the special procedures mandate holders.

Mission report. Following her visit to Guinea-Bissau (23 February–1 March) [A/HRC/29/31/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur reported that the country ranked as one of the poorest in the world, with a consistent decline of investment in essential social services such as health care and education. She expressed concern about the disproportionate vulnerability of certain groups, especially women, as well as obstacles to poverty reduction, such as political instability, corruption and impunity. She recommended implementing policies and programmes to enable those living in extreme poverty to enjoy their human rights on an equal basis with the rest of the population.

Human Rights Council. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/3)], the Council extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years and requested the Rapporteur to report annually to the Council and the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/183 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

Human rights and extreme poverty

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and all other human rights instruments adopted by the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 47/196 of 22 December 1992, by which it declared 17 October the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty, and its resolution 62/205 of 19 December 2007, by which it proclaimed the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), as well as its resolution 67/164 of 20 December 2012 and its previous resolutions on human rights and extreme poverty, in which it reaffirmed that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them,

Recalling also its resolution 52/134 of 12 December 1997, in which it recognized that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights was essential for the effective understanding, promotion and protection of all human rights,

Recalling further Human Rights Council resolutions 2/2 of 27 November 2006, 7/27 of 28 March 2008, 8/11 of 18 June 2008, 12/19 of 2 October 2009, 15/19 of 30 September 2010, 17/13 of 17 June 2011 and 26/3 of 26 June 2014,

Recalling Human Rights Council resolution 21/11 of 27 September 2012, by which the Council adopted the guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights as a useful tool for States in the formulation and implementation of poverty reduction and eradication policies, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, welcoming the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, and recalling its outcome document, contained in resolution 65/1 of 22 September 2010,

Taking note of the fact that the proposal contained in the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, and noting that the report includes a goal on eradicating poverty in all its forms everywhere,

Concerned that, during the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), while there has been progress in reducing poverty, especially in some middle-income countries, such progress has been uneven and the number of people living in poverty in some countries continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority of those most affected, especially in the least developed countries and particularly in sub-Saharan Africa,

Deeply concerned that extreme poverty persists in all countries of the world, regardless of their economic, social and cultural situation, and that its extent and its manifestations, such as social exclusion, hunger, trafficking in human beings, disease, lack of adequate shelter, illiteracy and hopelessness, are particularly severe in developing countries, while acknowledging the significant progress made in several parts of the world in combating extreme poverty,

Deeply concerned also that gender inequality, violence and discrimination exacerbate extreme poverty, disproportionately impacting women and girls,

Stressing that special attention should be given to those who are living in extreme poverty and in vulnerable situations, in particular women, children, youth, older persons, persons with disabilities and indigenous peoples,

Concerned by the challenges faced today, including those derived from the ongoing impact of the financial and economic crisis, the food crisis and ongoing concerns over food security, as well as the increasing challenges posed by climate change and the loss of biodiversity, and by the resulting increase in the number of people living in extreme poverty and their negative effect on the capacity of all States, especially developing countries, to fight extreme poverty,

Recognizing that the eradication of extreme poverty is a major challenge within the process of globalization that requires the coordination and continuation of inclusive policies through decisive national action and international cooperation,

Recognizing also that social protection systems make a critical contribution to the realization of human rights for all, in particular for those who are in vulnerable or marginalized situations and are trapped in poverty and subject to discrimination,

Recognizing further that persistent and growing inequalities within countries are a major challenge to poverty eradication, particularly affecting those who are living in extreme poverty and in vulnerable situations,

Stressing the necessity of better understanding and addressing the multidimensional causes and consequences of extreme poverty,

Reaffirming that, since the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of all human rights and may, in some situations, constitute a threat to the right to life, its immediate alleviation and eventual eradication must remain a high priority for the international community,

Stressing that respect for all human rights, which are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, is of crucial importance for all policies and programmes to fight extreme poverty,

Underlining the priority and urgency given by Heads of State and Government to the eradication of extreme poverty, as expressed in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields,

Reaffirming that democracy, development and the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing and that they contribute to the eradication of extreme poverty,

1. Reaffirms that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constitute a violation of human dignity and that urgent national and international action is therefore required to eliminate them;

2. Also reaffirms that it is essential for States to foster participation by the poorest people in the decision-making process in the societies in which they live, in the promotion of human rights and in efforts to combat extreme poverty and exclusion and that it is essential for people living in and affected by poverty and in situations of vulnerability to be empowered to organize themselves and to participate in all aspects of political, economic, social and cultural life, in particular the planning and implementation of policies that affect them, thus enabling them to become genuine partners in development;

3. Emphasizes that extreme poverty is a major issue to be addressed by Governments, civil society, community-based social organizations and the United Nations system, including international financial institutions, and in this context reaffirms that political commitment is a prerequisite for the eradication of poverty;

4. Also emphasizes the need to accord due consideration and priority to poverty eradication within the United Nations development agenda, while stressing the importance of addressing the causes and challenges of poverty through integrated, coordinated and coherent strategies at the national, intergovernmental and inter-agency levels, consistent with the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields;

5. Reaffirms that the existence of widespread extreme poverty inhibits the full and effective enjoyment of human rights and renders democracy and popular participation fragile;

6. Recognizes the need to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to address the most pressing social needs of people living in poverty, including through the design and development of appropriate mechanisms to strengthen and consolidate democratic institutions and governance;

7. Reaffirms the commitments contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular the commitments to spare no effort to fight against extreme poverty and to achieve development and poverty eradication, including the commitment to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one United States dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger;

8. Also reaffirms the commitment made at the 2005 World Summit to eradicate poverty and promote sustained economic growth, sustainable development and global prosperity for all, including women and girls;

9. Further reaffirms the commitment made at the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals to accelerating progress in order to eradicate extreme poverty and hunger by 2015;

10. Reaffirms furthermore that the objective of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017) is to support, in an efficient and co-ordinated manner, the follow-up to the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals relating to the eradication of poverty, including the Millennium Development Goals, and to coordinate international support to that end;

11. Acknowledges that, in its report, the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals reiterated that poverty eradication is the greatest challenge facing the world today and included the goal to end poverty in all its forms everywhere, with a specific target to eradicate extreme poverty for all people everywhere, currently measured as people living on less than 1.25 dollars a day, by 2030;

12. Recalls that promoting universal access to social services and providing social protection floors can make an important contribution to consolidating and achieving further development gains and that social protection systems that address and reduce inequality and social exclusion are essential for protecting the gains made towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and in this regard takes note of International Labour Organization Recommendation No. 202 on social protection floors;

13. Encourages States, when designing, implementing, monitoring and evaluating social protection programmes, to ensure gender mainstreaming and the promotion and protection of all human rights in accordance with their obligations under international human rights law, throughout this process;

14. Also encourages States to take all necessary measures to eliminate discrimination against all persons, in particular those living in poverty, to refrain from adopting any laws, regulations or practices denying or limiting the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including economic, social and cultural rights, and to ensure that people, in particular those living in poverty, have equal access to justice;

15. Welcomes the ongoing efforts to strengthen and support South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, recognizing their contributions to the efforts of developing countries to collaborate in the eradication of poverty, and stresses that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for, but rather a complement to, North-South cooperation;

16. Encourages the international community to strengthen its efforts to address challenges that are contributing to extreme poverty, including those derived from the ongoing impact of the financial and economic crisis, the food crisis and ongoing concerns over food security, as well as the increasing challenges posed by climate change and the loss of biodiversity in all parts of the world, especially in developing countries, by enhancing cooperation to help to build national capacities;

17. Reaffirms the critical role of both formal and informal education in the achievement of poverty eradication and other development goals, as envisaged in the Millennium Declaration, in particular basic education and training for eradicating illiteracy, efforts towards expanded secondary and higher education as well as vocational education and technical training, especially for girls and women, the creation of human resources and infrastructure capabilities and the empowerment of those living in poverty, reaffirms in this context the Dakar Framework for Action, adopted at the World Education Forum on 28 April 2000, and recognizes the importance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization strategy for the eradication of poverty, especially extreme poverty, in supporting the Education for All programmes as tools for achieving the Millennium Development Goal of universal primary education by 2015;

18. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to give high priority to the question of the relationship between extreme poverty and human rights, and also invites his Office to pursue further work in this area;

19. Calls upon States, United Nations bodies, in particular the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Development Programme, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to continue to give appropriate attention to the links between human rights and extreme poverty, and encourages the private sector and international financial institutions to proceed likewise;

20. Takes note with appreciation of the guiding principles on extreme poverty and human rights, adopted by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 21/11, as a useful tool for States in the formulation and implementation of poverty reduction and eradication policies, as appropriate;

21. Encourages Governments, relevant United Nations bodies, funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations and national human rights institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations and non-State actors, including the private sector, to consider the guiding principles in the formulation and implementation of their policies and measures concerning persons affected by extreme poverty;

22. Requests the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to disseminate the guiding principles, as appropriate;

23. Welcomes the efforts of entities throughout the United Nations system to incorporate the Millennium Declaration and the internationally agreed development goals set out therein into their work;

24. Also welcomes the work undertaken by the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on extreme poverty and human rights, including her report, submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-eighth session, and his report, submitted to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session;

25. Decides to consider the question further at its seventy-first session under the sub-item entitled “Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms” of the item entitled “Promotion and protection of human rights”.

Right to food

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 700], the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Olivier De Schutter (Belgium), submitted his final report [A/HRC/25/57], entitled “The transformative potential of the right to food”, which presented the main conclusions from his mandate, showing the connections among his various contributions. An overview of key recommendations made in his previous thematic reports to the Council and the General Assembly was appended as an annex. He concluded that the eradication of hunger and malnutrition was an achievable goal. Reaching it, however, required improving coordination across sectors, across time and across levels of governance.

In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/177 [YUN 2013, p. 700], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the first report [A/69/275] of the new Special Rapporteur, Hilal Elver (Turkey), who was appointed by the Council on 8 May. The report outlined issues she intended to focus on during her tenure, including the obstacles faced by those wishing to seek remedy for violations related to the right to food; gender gaps related to equal assets and productive resources; the effect of unpaid care work on women’s right to food; the need for mainstreaming gender in all legislative frameworks, programmes and policies related to food security and nutrition; the nutritional dimension of national food policies and development strategies; the effects of undernutrition on the most vulnerable, particularly children under five; the relationship between climate change, the right to food and the post-2015 sustainable development agenda; and the impact of protracted conflicts and emergency situations on the right to food.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/14)], the Council called on States and international organizations to combat the different forms of malnutrition; urged States to give priority in their development strategies and expenditures to the realization of the right to food; and requested the Special Rapporteur to report to the Council’s twenty-eighth (2015) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.2 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/177 without vote [agenda item 68 (b)].

The right to food

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Charter of the United Nations and its importance for the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reaffirming also all previous resolutions and decisions on the right to food adopted within the framework of the United Nations,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for her or his health and well-being, including food, the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition and the United Nations Millennium Declaration, in particular Millennium Development Goal 1 on eradicating extreme poverty and hunger by 2015,

Recalling also the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in which the fundamental right of every person to be free from hunger is recognized,

Bearing in mind the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and the Declaration of the World Food Summit: five years later, adopted in Rome on 13 June 2002,

Reaffirming the importance of the concrete recommendations contained in the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in November 2004,

Reaffirming also the Five Rome Principles for Sustainable Global Food Security contained in the Declaration of the World Summit on Food Security, adopted in Rome on 16 November 2009,

Reaffirming further that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that they must be treated globally, in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis,

Reaffirming that a peaceful, stable and enabling political, social and economic environment, at both the national and the international levels, is the essential foundation that will enable States to give adequate priority to food and nutrition security and poverty eradication,

Reiterating, as set out in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the Declaration of the World Food Summit, that food should not be used as an instrument of political or economic pressure, and reaffirming in this regard the importance of international cooperation and solidarity, as well as the necessity of refraining from unilateral measures that are not in accordance with international law and the Charter and that endanger food and nutrition security,

Convinced that each State must adopt a strategy consistent with its resources and capacities to achieve its individual goals in implementing the recommendations contained in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the World Food Summit Plan of Action and, at the same time, cooperate regionally and internationally in order to organize collective solutions to global issues of food and nutrition security in a world of increasingly interlinked institutions, societies and economies where coordinated efforts and shared responsibilities are essential,

Recognizing the complex character of the global food crisis, in which the right to adequate food has been threatened to be violated on a substantial scale, as a combination of several major factors, such as the global financial and economic crisis, environmental degradation, desertification and the impacts of global climate change, as well as natural disasters and the lack in many countries of the appropriate technology, investment and capacity-building necessary to confront its impact, particularly in developing countries, least developed countries and small island developing States,

Resolved to act to ensure that the human rights perspective is taken into account at the national, regional and international levels in measures to address the impacts of the global food crisis,

Expressing its deep concern at the number and scale of natural disasters, diseases and pest infestations, as well as the negative impact of climate change, and their increasing impact in recent years, which have resulted in substantial loss of life and livelihood and threatened agricultural production and food and nutrition security, in particular in developing countries,

Emphasizing that a multisectoral approach that integrates nutrition across all sectors, including agriculture, health, water and sanitation, social protection and education, as well as a gender perspective, is critical to achieving global food and nutrition security and the realization of the right to food,

Recalling the endorsement of the Voluntary Guidelines on the Responsible Governance of Tenure of Land, Fisheries and Forests in the Context of National Food Security by the Committee on World Food Security at its 38th session, held on 11 May 2012, and by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its 144th session,

Recalling also the Principles for Responsible Investment in Agriculture and Food Systems, which were transmitted to the governing bodies of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for consideration at the forty-first session of the Committee on World Food Security, held in October 2014,

Stressing the importance of the Second International Conference on Nutrition, hosted by the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in Rome from 19 to 21 November 2014,

Stressing also the need to increase official development assistance devoted to agriculture, both in real terms and as a share of total official development assistance,

Recognizing the importance of the protection and preservation of agrobiodiversity in guaranteeing food security and the right to food for all,

Recognizing also the role of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as the key United Nations agency for rural and agricultural development and its work in supporting the efforts of Member States to achieve the full realization of the right to food, including through its provision of technical assistance to developing countries in support of the implementation of national priority frameworks,

Recalling the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want", endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 66/288 of 27 July 2012,

Acknowledging the High-level Task Force on the Global Food Security Crisis established by the Secretary-General, and supporting the Secretary-General in his continuing efforts in this regard, including continued engagement with Member States and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the right to food,

1. Reaffirms that hunger constitutes an outrage and a violation of human dignity and therefore requires the adoption of urgent measures at the national, regional and international levels for its elimination;

2. Also reaffirms the right of everyone to have access to safe, sufficient and nutritious food, consistent with the right to adequate food and the fundamental right of everyone to be free from hunger, so as to be able to fully develop and maintain his or her physical and mental capacities;

3. Considers it intolerable that, as estimated by the United Nations Children's Fund, more than one third of the children who die every year before the age of 5 die from hunger-related illness and that, as estimated by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, about 805 million people worldwide suffer from chronic hunger, including as one of the effects derived from the global food crisis, while, according to the latter organization, the planet could produce enough food to feed everyone around the world;

4. Expresses its concern at the fact that the effects created by the world food crisis still continue to have serious consequences for the poorest and most vulnerable people, particularly in developing countries, which have been further aggravated by the impacts of the world financial and economic crisis, and at the particular effects of this crisis on many net food-importing countries, especially least developed countries;

5. Expresses its deep concern that, according to the report of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, entitled The State of Food Insecurity in the World 2013, the number of hungry people in the world remains unacceptably high and the vast majority of hungry people live in developing countries;

6. Expresses its concern that women and girls are disproportionately affected by hunger, food and nutrition insecurity and poverty, in part as a result of gender inequality and discrimination, that in many countries, girls are twice as likely as boys to die from malnutrition and preventable childhood diseases and that it is estimated that almost twice as many women as men suffer from malnutrition;

7. Encourages all States to take action to address gender inequality and discrimination against women, in particular when they contribute to the malnutrition of women and girls, including measures to ensure the full and equal realization of the right to food and that women have equal access to resources, including income, land and water and their ownership and agricultural inputs, as well as full and equal access to health care, education, science and technology, to enable them to feed themselves and their families, and in this regard stresses the need to empower women and strengthen their role in decision-making;

8. Encourages the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the right to food to continue mainstreaming a gender perspective in the fulfilment of her mandate, and encourages the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and all other United Nations bodies and mechanisms addressing the right to food and food insecurity to continue integrating a gender perspective into their relevant policies, programmes and activities;

9. Reaffirms the need to ensure that programmes delivering safe and nutritious food are inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities;

10. Calls upon all States and, if appropriate, relevant international organizations to take measures and support programmes that are aimed at combating undernutrition in mothers, in particular during pregnancy, and children and the irreversible effects of chronic undernutrition in early childhood, in particular from birth to the age of 2 years;

11. Encourages all States to take steps, with a view to progressively achieving the full realization of the right to food, including steps to promote the conditions for everyone to be free from hunger and, as soon as possible, to enjoy fully the right to food, and to create and adopt national plans to combat hunger;

12. Recognizes the advances reached through South-South cooperation in developing countries and regions in connection with food security and the development of agricultural production for the full realization of the right to food;

13. Stresses that improving access to productive resources and public investment in rural development are essential for eradicating hunger and poverty, in particular in developing countries, including through the promotion of investment, including private investment, in appropriate small-scale irrigation and water management technologies in order to reduce vulnerability to droughts;

14. Recognizes the critical contribution made by the fisheries sector to the realization of the right to food and to food security and the contribution of small-scale fishers to the local food security of coastal communities;

15. Also recognizes that 70 per cent of hungry people live in rural areas, where nearly half a billion family farmers are located, and that these people are especially vulnerable to food insecurity given the increasing cost of inputs and the fall in farm incomes; that access to land, water, seeds and other natural resources is an increasing challenge for poor producers; that sustainable and gender-sensitive agricultural policies are important tools for promoting land and agrarian reform, rural credit and insurance, technical assistance and other associated measures to achieve food security and rural development; and that support by States for small farmers, fishing communities and local enterprises, including through the facilitation of access for their products to national and international markets and empowerment of small producers, particularly women, in value chains, is a key element for food security and the provision of the right to food;

16. Stresses the importance of fighting hunger in rural areas, including through national efforts supported by international partnerships to stop desertification and land degradation and through investments and public policies that are specifically appropriate to the risk of drylands, and in this regard calls for the full implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa;

17. Urges States that have not yet done so to favourably consider becoming parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and to consider becoming parties to the International Treaty on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture as a matter of priority;

18. Recalls the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, acknowledges that many indigenous organizations and representatives of indigenous peoples have expressed in different forums their deep concerns over the obstacles and challenges they face in achieving the full enjoyment of the right to food, and calls upon States to take special actions to combat the root causes of the disproportionately high level of hunger and malnutrition among indigenous peoples and the continuous discrimination against them;

19. Welcomes the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, held on 22 and 23 September 2014, and the commitment to developing, in conjunction with the indigenous peoples concerned and where appropriate, policies, programmes and resources to support indigenous peoples' occupations, traditional subsistence activities, economies, livelihoods, food security and nutrition;

20. Notes the need to further examine various concepts, such as "food sovereignty", and their relation with food security and the right to food, bearing in mind the need to avoid any negative impact on the enjoyment of the right to food for all people at all times;

21. Requests all States and private actors, as well as international organizations, within their respective mandates, to take fully into account the need to promote the effective realization of the right to food for all, including in the ongoing negotiations in different fields;

22. Recognizes the need to strengthen national commitment as well as international assistance, upon the request of and in cooperation with the affected countries, towards the full realization and protection of the right to food, and in particular to develop national protection mechanisms for people forced to leave their homes and land because of hunger or humanitarian emergencies affecting their enjoyment of the right to food;

23. Takes note with appreciation of the growing movement, in different regions of the world, towards the adoption of framework laws, national strategies and measures in support of the full realization of the right to food for all;

24. Stresses the need to make efforts to mobilize and optimize the allocation and utilization of technical and financial resources from all sources, including external debt relief for developing countries, and to reinforce national actions to implement sustainable food security policies;

25. Calls for the conclusion and a successful, development-oriented outcome of the Doha Round of trade negotiations of the World Trade Organization as a contribution to creating international conditions that permit the full realization of the right to food;

26. Stresses that all States should make all efforts to ensure that their international policies of a political and economic nature, including international trade agreements, do not have a negative impact on the right to food in other countries;

27. Recalls the importance of the New York Declaration on Action against Hunger and Poverty, and recommends the continuation of efforts aimed at identifying additional sources of financing for the fight against hunger and poverty, as well as non-communicable diseases;

28. Recognizes that the promises made at the World Food Summit in 1996 to halve the number of persons who are undernourished are not being fulfilled, while recognizing the efforts of Member States in this regard, and once again invites all international financial and development institutions, as well as the relevant United Nations agencies and funds, to give priority to and provide the necessary funding to realize the aim of halving by 2015 the proportion of people who suffer from hunger, as well as the right to food as set out in the Rome Declaration on World Food Security and the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

29. Reaffirms that integrating food and nutritional support, with the goal that all people at all times will have access to sufficient, safe and nutritious food to meet their dietary needs and food preferences for an active and healthy life, is part of a comprehensive effort to improve public health, including the response to the spread of HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, malaria and other communicable diseases;

30. Urges States to give adequate priority in their development strategies and expenditures to the realization of the right to food;

31. Stresses the importance of international cooperation and development assistance as an effective contribution both to the expansion and improvement of agriculture and its environmental sustainability, food production, breeding projects on diversity of crops and livestock and institutional innovations such as community seed banks, farmer field schools and seed fairs and to the provision of humanitarian food assistance in activities related to emergency situations for the realization of the right to food and the achievement of sustainable food security, while recognizing that each country has the primary responsibility for ensuring the implementation of national programmes and strategies in this regard;

32. Also stresses that States parties to the World Trade Organization Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights should consider implementing that agreement in a manner that is supportive of food security, while being mindful of the obligation of Member States to promote and protect the right to food;

33. Calls upon Member States, the United Nations system and other relevant stakeholders to support national efforts aimed at responding rapidly to the food crises currently occurring across different regions, and expresses its deep concern that funding shortfalls are forcing the World Food Programme to cut operations across different regions, including Southern Africa;

34. Invites all relevant international organizations, including the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, to continue to promote policies and projects that have a positive impact on the right to food, to ensure that partners respect the right to food in the implementation of common projects, to support strategies of Member States aimed at the fulfilment of the right to food and to avoid any actions that could have a negative impact on the realization of the right to food;

35. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council;

36. Supports the realization of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, as extended by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 22/9 of 21 March 2013;

37. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to provide all the human and financial resources necessary for the effective fulfilment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur;

38. Welcomes the work already done by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting the right to adequate food, in particular its general comment No. 12 (1999) on the right to adequate food (article 11 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights), in which the Committee affirmed, inter alia, that the right to adequate food is indivisibly linked to the inherent dignity of the human person and is indispensable for the fulfilment of other human rights enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights and is also inseparable from social justice, requiring the adoption of appropriate economic, environmental and social policies, at both the national and the international levels, oriented to the eradication of poverty and the fulfilment of all human rights for all;

39. Recalls general comment No. 15 (2002) of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on the right to water (articles 11 and 12 of the Covenant), in which the Committee noted, inter alia, the importance of ensuring sustainable access to water resources for human consumption and agriculture in realization of the right to adequate food;

40. Reaffirms that the Voluntary Guidelines to Support the Progressive Realization of the Right to Adequate Food in the Context of National Food Security, adopted by the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in November 2004, represent a practical tool to promote the realization of the right to food for all, contribute to the achievement of food security and thus provide an additional instrument in the attainment of internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, and welcomes the outcome of the meeting on the 10-year retrospective of the implementation of the Guidelines, held in October 2014;

41. Calls upon all Governments to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur in her task, to supply all necessary information requested by her and to give serious consideration to responding favourably to the requests of the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries to enable her to fulfil her mandate more effectively;

42. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session an interim report on the implementation of the present resolution and to continue her work, including by examining the emerging issues with regard to the realization of the right to food within her existing mandate;

43. Invites Governments, relevant United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, treaty bodies, civil society actors and non-governmental organizations, as well as the private sector, to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of her mandate through, inter alia, the submission of comments and suggestions on ways and means of realizing the right to food;

44. Decides to continue the consideration of the question at its seventieth session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of human rights".

Rights of peasants and other rural area workers

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/26)], by a recorded vote of 29 to 5, with 13 abstentions, the Council took note of the expert seminar on the rights of peasants and other people working in rural areas (Geneva, 8–9 April) held at the Geneva Academy of International Humanitarian Law and Human Rights; decided that the intergovernmental working group on a UN declaration on the rights of peasants and other people working in rural areas [YUN 2012, p. 707] would hold its second session before the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session; and requested the working group's Chairperson-Rapporteur to prepare a new text on the basis of the discussions during its first session [YUN 2013, p. 703] and the informal consultations to be held, and to present the new text to the working group's second session. It requested the working group to report on progress made to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session.

Right to adequate housing

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by Human Rights Council resolution 15/8 [YUN 2010, p. 741], the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in that context, Raquel Rolnik (Brazil), submitted a report [A/HRC/25/54] recommending a set of guiding principles to assist States and other actors in addressing the tenure insecurity crisis faced by the urban poor. The 10 principles, which were based on input from States, various stakeholders and civil society organizations, dealt with: strengthening diverse tenure forms; improving security of tenure; prioritizing in situ solutions; promoting the social function of property; combating discrimination on the basis of tenure; promoting women's security of tenure; respecting security of tenure in business activities; strengthening security of tenure in development cooperation; empowering the urban poor and holding the State accountable; and ensuring access to justice.

As requested by Council resolutions 15/8 and 25/17 (see below), the Secretary-General in August transmitted to the Assembly the first report [A/69/274] of the new Special Rapporteur, Leilani Farha (Canada), who was appointed by the Council on 8 May. The Rapporteur outlined areas in which she wished to consult with States, civil society and other stakeholders as she prepared her work plan; reflected on the work undertaken by previous mandate holders and advances achieved; offered preliminary thoughts about the status of the right to adequate housing; and highlighted priority areas in which she hoped that advances could be made.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission report. In March [A/HRC/25/54/Add.4], the United Kingdom submitted its comments on the report of the Special Rapporteur's 2013 visit to the country [YUN 2013, p. 704].

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/17)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period and requested the Rapporteur to report regularly to the Council and the General Assembly.

Right to health

Reports of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2013, p. 705], the Special Rapporteur on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, Anand Grover (India), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/31] that drew links between unhealthy foods and diet-related non-communicable diseases. He highlighted the need for States to address structural changes in the food environment, which negatively affected individuals' enjoyment of the right to adequate and nutritious food. Global trade, increased foreign direct investment in the food sector and the pervasive marketing of unhealthy foods had increased their consumption. The Rapporteur outlined policies to increase the availability and accessibility of healthier food options, as well as to increase awareness about the risks posed by unhealthy foods. He pointed to States' obligations to ensure the fulfilment of the right to health, and to the food industry's responsibility to refrain from producing, marketing and promoting unhealthy foods. He stressed the need for accountability and remedial mechanisms by which individuals could seek redress to violations of their right to health. The Rapporteur made recommendations aimed at States and the food industry.

In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 705], the Secretary-General in August transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/299], which considered elements that affected implementation of the right to health framework, including the justiciability of economic, social and cultural rights; the concept of the progressive realization of the right to health; and the accountability deficit of transnational corporations. The Rapporteur called for an international mechanism to hold them liable for violations of human rights and urged a review of the system of international investment agreements and the investor-State dispute settlement system, with a view to creating a level playing field between transnational corporations and States. He presented recommendations on bridging the gaps in the realization of the right to health.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission report. Following his visit to Malaysia (19 November–2 December) [A/HRC/29/33/Add.1], the new Special Rapporteur, Dainius Pūras (Lithuania), appointed by the Council in June, assessed issues related to the country's health-care system and financing, as well as to the right to health of particular groups, such as women and girls; indigenous communities; migrants, refugees and asylum seekers; lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender persons; persons living with HIV/AIDS; children; and persons with psychosocial and developmental disabilities. He commended the country for advances made in reducing poverty, increasing spending on health and improving basic health-related indicators. He encouraged the Government to address challenges that were mostly connected to a selective approach to human rights and the prevalence of discrimination against vulnerable groups. In that regard, the Rapporteur made a number of recommendations.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/18)], the Council called on States to promote physical activity and sport among all segments of their population and requested the Special Rapporteur to submit a study on sport and healthy lifestyles as contributing factors to the right of everyone to health to the Council's thirty-second (2016) session.

Maternal mortality

OHCHR report. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 710], OHCHR in June submitted a report [A/HRC/27/20] which discussed initiatives to implement the technical guidance on the application of a human rights-based approach to the implementation of policies and programmes to reduce preventable maternal morbidity and mortality [YUN 2012, p. 710]. Taking into consideration information received from 12 States, one UN agency, civil society groups and other stakeholders, the report documented efforts in disseminating and utilizing the guidance, examined challenges in its implementation and offered recommendations to support implementation.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/11)], the Council urged States to renew their political commitment to eliminate preventable maternal mortality and morbidity; called on States and encouraged stakeholders to consider the recommendations in the OHCHR report on the technical guidance (see above); and requested the High Commissioner to submit a follow-up report on the application of the technical guidance by States and other actors to the Council's thirty-third (2016) session.

Water and sanitation

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 711], the Special Rapporteur on the human right to safe drinking water and sanitation, Catarina de Albuquerque (Portugal), in June submitted a report [A/HRC/27/55] that focused on common violations of those rights, as identifying them was crucial for prevention and remedial action. She developed a typology of violations, examining breaches of the obligations to respect, to protect, to fulfil, to refrain from discrimination, to ensure substantive equality and to ensure participation, as well as extraterritorial obligations. The report also discussed access to justice for violations. The Rapporteur noted that violations of the right to sanitation had not received the attention they deserved and that victims were among the most stigmatized in society. Taboos remained that prevented open discussions about unhygienic conditions. She urged all actors to frame violations related to water and sanitation more explicitly as violations of human rights and presented conclusions and recommendations.

In a July addendum [A/HRC/27/55/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur introduced the “Handbook for realizing the human rights to safe drinking water and sanitation” that she had developed as a culmination of her six years of work as a mandate holder. The handbook would be published in September before her term ended.

In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 730], the Secretary-General in July transmitted the Special Rapporteur’s report [A/69/213], which focused on the right to participation in the context of realizing the right to safe drinking water and sanitation, emphasizing that States had an obligation to ensure participation. She provided guidance on what the right to participation required, what elements were essential for ensuring active, free and meaningful participation, and what participation entailed at various levels of decision-making. She noted that while there were excellent practices that ensured participation, those appeared to be isolated rather than institutionalized. The Rapporteur made recommendations for States and other stakeholders.

Mission reports. Following her visit to Jordan (11–16 March) [A/HRC/27/55/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur noted that the country, characterized by an arid environment, faced enormous challenges in providing water and sanitation services to a growing population and to the millions of refugees it hosted. The country had made considerable progress in the connection of water and sanitation networks and in the collection, treatment and reuse of wastewater; yet several challenges persisted, such as the intermittency of the water supply, with grave consequences for its quality, availability and affordability. The water and sanitation tariff system put an unjust burden on the poor and marginalized, while the heavy subsidization of water, in particular for agriculture, threatened sustainability. The Rapporteur made recommendations to address those challenges, and called on the Government to take a holistic approach, linking pressing emergency needs with a long-term development strategy.

In July, Brazil [A/HRC/27/55/Add.4] and Jordan [A/HRC/27/55/Add.5] submitted their comments on the Special Rapporteur’s report on her visit to those countries, respectively, in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 706] and in 2014 (see above).

Following her mission to Kenya (22–28 July) [A/HRC/30/39/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur noted that it was one of the first States to explicitly recognize the human rights to water and sanitation in national legislation, and was undertaking legal and institutional reforms in the areas related to the provision of those services. Kenya faced enormous challenges, including those related to access to sanitation in informal settlements and rural areas. The Rapporteur encouraged the Government to place the human rights to water and sanitation at the core of the reform processes and to prioritize the most marginalized groups. She made recommendations to address those challenges and called on the Government to clarify the allocation of responsibilities in the provision of water and sanitation services.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/7)], the Council took note of the work of the World Health Organization (WHO) and the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) in their 2014 update on the Joint Monitoring Programme for Water Supply and Sanitation, and called on States to progressively realize the right to safe drinking water and sanitation and to support the goals of the advocacy campaign “Sustainable sanitation: the five-year drive to 2015”. It also called on non-State actors, including business enterprises, to comply with their responsibility to respect those rights.

In November, the Council appointed Léo Heller (Brazil) as the second Special Rapporteur. He took office on 1 December.

Ebola epidemic

Human Rights Council action. In a 26 September statement [A/69/53/Add.1 (PRST/27/4)], the Council President deplored the fact that the Ebola virus had claimed, and continued to claim, the lives of so many people in West Africa, including health workers; noted that WHO had declared the Ebola outbreak a public health emergency of international concern; requested States and international organizations to support the rapid establishment of an African centre for disease control and prevention; and called on States to implement the recommendations of WHO and international health regulations in taking prevention and containment measures.

Cultural rights

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 712], the Special Rapporteur in the field of cultural rights, Farida Shaheed (Pakistan), in January submitted a report [A/HRC/25/49] that addressed memorialization processes of past events in post-conflict and divided societies, with a focus on memorials and museums of history/memory. States exiting conflicts or periods of repression were increasingly engaging in memorial policies as a means of ensuring recognition for the victims, as reparation for mass or grave violations of human rights and as a guarantee of non-recurrence. Addressing challenges in memorializing the past, the Rapporteur made recommendations grounded in the principle that memorialization should be understood as a process that provided the space for those affected by human rights violations to articulate their narratives. Memorial practices should stimulate civic engagement, critical thinking and discussions on the representation of the past, as well as on contemporary challenges of exclusion and violence.

In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 712], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/286], which considered the impact that commercial advertising and marketing practices had on the enjoyment of cultural rights. The Rapporteur was concerned by the disproportionate presence of advertising and marketing in public spaces, the myriad advertisements people received daily, and the resort to techniques aimed at circumventing individual rational decision-making. The Rapporteur concluded that States should protect people from undue levels of commercial advertising and marketing while increasing the space for not-for-profit expressions. She recommended that States regulate the area more effectively, and in particular that all commercial advertising and marketing in schools be banned.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission report. Following her visit to Botswana (14–26 November) [A/HRC/31/59/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur commended the country's achievements in the area of development and poverty reduction. Important nation-building policies had been implemented and efforts to recognize, value and benefit from the rich cultural diversity of the country had been developed. Many people, however, felt excluded from the main society and lacked recognition of their cultural heritage. The Rapporteur expressed concern about the imbalance in recognition and power between Tswana and non-Tswana communities, a system inherited from the colonial past that influenced the realization of cultural rights. Botswana needed to engage in a new era of nation-building that fully reflected, built upon and celebrated its rich cultural diversity.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/19)], the Council decided to hold, at its twenty-seventh (2014) session, a panel discussion on history teaching and memorialization processes to contribute to the sharing of good practices; requested the High Commissioner to submit a summary report on the discussion to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session; and requested the Special Rapporteur to report to that session.

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 25/19 (see above), the High Commissioner submitted a summary report [A/HRC/28/36] on the panel discussion on history teaching and memorialization processes (Geneva, 9 September). Panelists reaffirmed that a lack of attention to past wrongs and historical events inevitably resulted in a recurrence of violations and stressed that more attention had to be paid to victims of violations. They welcomed the fact that so many delegations had expressed support for the Special Rapporteur's recommendations relating to the multi-perspective approach in teaching history and memorialization processes, and encouraged States to implement such an approach.

Right to education

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 734], the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, Kishore Singh (India), in May submitted a report [A/HRC/26/27] focusing on the assessment of the educational attainments of students and the implementation of the right to education. He underlined the importance of applying national assessment systems which were in compliance with international human right norms, thus fostering the humanistic mission of education rather than its instrumental role, assessing students on more than just mathematical literacy and language skills. He placed emphasis on skills development as an integral part of basic education, and on the need for innovative assessment modalities of technical and vocational education and training. The Rapporteur recommended strengthening human rights-based, holistic approaches to national assessments of the educational attainments of students.

In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 734], the Secretary-General in September transmitted to the General Assembly the report [A/69/402] of the Special Rapporteur, which examined State responsibility in the face of the explosive growth of private education providers from a right to education perspective. The Rapporteur emphasized the need to preserve education as a public good, which must not be reduced to a profit-making business. Privatization often excluded marginalized groups, who were unable to pay, undermining the right of universal access to education. The Rapporteur stressed that States must develop a regulatory framework for private education providers, including sanctions for abusive practices.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission report. Following his mission to Bhutan (26 May–3 June) [A/HRC/29/30/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur welcomed the progress achieved, including the increasing access of boys and girls to primary and secondary education, and measures taken to improve the quality of education. Basic education was free and compulsory, 40 per cent of meritorious students were offered government scholarships for two additional years of secondary schooling and university-level education was available for graduates of grade 12; however, some areas of concern remained. An education act had not been developed, children without residency rights might not always be enrolled in schools, and technical and vocational education and training was not adequate for the needs of the nation. The Rapporteur concluded the report with recommendations, including on reinforcing education for “gross national happiness”.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/17)], the Council urged States to apply assessment systems that were in compliance with international human rights law; called on stakeholders to increase efforts towards attaining the 2015 education goals; and extended the Special Rapporteur’s mandate for three years.

On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/6)], the Council expressed concern that despite progress in recent years, many girls continued to suffer severe disadvantage and exclusion in education systems throughout their lives; decided to convene at its twenty-ninth (2015) session a panel discussion on realizing the equal enjoyment of the right to education by every girl to share lessons learned and best practices; and requested the High Commissioner to organize the discussion and present a summary report to the Council’s thirtieth (2015) session.

Environmental and scientific concerns

Human rights and the environment

Report of Independent Expert. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 713], the first Independent Expert on the issue of human rights obligations relating to the enjoyment of a safe, clean, healthy and sustainable environment, John H. Knox (United States), submitted his second report [A/HRC/25/53], which mapped human rights obligations relating to the environment. The Expert described procedural obligations of States to assess environmental impacts on human rights, make environmental information public, facilitate participation in environmental decision-making and provide access to remedies for environmental harm. He described States’ obligations to adopt legal and institutional frameworks that protected against environmental harm interfering with the enjoyment of human rights, including harm caused by private actors, and outlined obligations relating to the protection of members of vulnerable groups, including women, children and indigenous peoples.

Mission report. Following his visit to France (20–24 October) [A/HRC/28/61/Add.1], the Independent Expert noted that the country provided many good examples of the application of human rights to environmental protection, including: the adoption of the Charter for the Environment at the constitutional level; innovative steps to provide environmental information to the public through online platforms; national consultations on environmental issues of sweeping importance; and the emphasis on sustainable development in the French Development Agency. The Expert also noted challenges, such as projects with public inquiry opportunities very late in the process and decision-making processes that were lengthy, complicated or unpredictable. He encouraged innovative thinking about ways to strengthen public participation in environmental decision-making.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/21)], the Council recognized that human rights law set out obligations on States regarding the enjoyment of a safe, clean, healthy and sustainable environment and reaffirmed the duty of States to protect against human rights abuse as well as the importance of non-discrimination in the application of environmental laws. The Council urged States to comply with their human rights obligations when developing and implementing their environmental policies.

Climate change

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/27)], the Council noted the 23 September convening by the Secretary-General of the climate summit (see p. 1198); reiterated its concern that the adverse effects of climate change had direct and indirect implications for the enjoyment of human rights; and decided to hold a full-day discussion on themes relating to human rights and climate change at its twenty-eighth (2015) session, which would include two panel discussions: one on identifying challenges and ways forward towards the realization of human rights for all, and another on the adverse impact of climate change on States’ efforts to realize the right to food, as well as policies, lessons learned and good practices. OHCHR was requested to submit a summary report to the Council.

Toxic waste

Report of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 715], the new Special Rapporteur on the implications for human rights of the environmentally sound management and disposal of hazardous substances and waste, Baskut Tuncak (Turkey), appointed by the Council in June, submitted a report in August [A/HRC/27/54] reviewing the background, history, scope and context of the mandate, and presenting his preliminary strategy for the mandate. He assumed office on 1 August following the tragic loss of the previous mandate holder Marc Pallemmaerts [YUN 2012, p. 715] in May after months of ill health. In order to fulfil his mandate, which included an analysis of gaps and ambiguities in international laws, as well as the development of a best practices guide, the Rapporteur would hold consultations and undertake country missions.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/23)], the Council extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for three years, and requested that he report annually to the Council; develop a guide to good practices and submit it to the Council's thirty-sixth (2017) session; and hold two international meetings of experts to draw up the guide.

Slavery and related issues

Report of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2013, p. 712], the new Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, Urmila Bhoola (South Africa), who was appointed by the Council on 8 May, submitted her first annual report [A/HRC/27/53] to the Council in July. The report summarized the activities undertaken by the previous mandate holder since her 2013 report [YUN 2013, p. 712], including country visits to Mauritania and Kazakhstan (see below), and outlined the priorities on which the new Rapporteur intended to focus.

Mission reports. Following her visit to Mauritania (24–27 February) [A/HRC/27/53/Add.1] to assess developments since her 2009 mission [YUN 2009, p. 731], the former Special Rapporteur, Gulnara Shahinian (Armenia), found that the Government had made progress in taking legislative and institutional measures to fight forms of slavery. It had adopted the road map for implementing the Rapporteur's recommendations, marking a new stage in the fight against all forms of slavery and slavery-like practices. The Rapporteur stressed the need to implement laws and policies fully and expressed concern at the lack of reliable information, which was a prerequisite for the efficiency of Government programmes. She stressed the need for the Government to publish in the official gazette the anti-slavery conventions it had ratified in order to raise awareness that all work should be entered into freely and fundamental human rights should be respected.

Following her mission to Kazakhstan (25–27 March) [A/HRC/27/53/Add.2] to assess developments since her 2012 visit [YUN 2012, p. 716], the Special Rapporteur, while welcoming the action taken in response to her recommendations, found that some challenges remained. The country was experiencing a growing demand for workers in a variety of sectors in which contemporary forms of slavery and forced and bonded labour persisted, in particular in the tobacco, cotton and construction industries. She recommended that the Government adopt a comprehensive legal and policy approach to the eradication of slavery, which involved a review of laws, policies, programmes and practices to ensure subsequent streamlining. She stressed the need for a substantive survey and for the collection of disaggregated data and statistics. The Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government, the business community and the international community.

Following her mission to the Niger (11–21 November) [A/HRC/30/35/Add.1], the new Special Rapporteur highlighted issues of concern, including descent-based slavery, the practice known as wahaya (the purchase of one or more girls, usually of slave descent, under the guise of a fifth wife), child marriage, domestic servitude and child labour. While commending the criminalization of slavery in 2003 and acknowledging the Government's commitment to eradicating slavery, she noted challenges the Government faced to address the root causes of slavery, including poverty, inequality and customary norms that caused widespread discrimination against former slaves and their descendants. She made recommendations to assist the Government in improving the coordination and streamlining of anti-slavery efforts, ensure effective law enforcement, increase access to justice and enhance victim protection.

Trust fund on slavery

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported [A/70/299] on the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. The Fund's Board of Trustees, at its nineteenth session (Geneva, 24–28 November), recommended 44 project grants amounting to $588,900 to assist NGO projects in 35 countries in 2015. The High Commissioner approved those recommendations on behalf of the Secretary-General on 10 December. During 2014, the Fund received contributions and pledges amounting to $683,005 from 11 States. The Board reiterated that the Fund would need a minimum of $2 million in annual contributions to fulfil its mandate.

Slavery and transatlantic slave trade

Commemorative meeting. On 25 March (decision 68/553), the General Assembly decided that its commemorative meeting on the occasion of the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, held on that day, would include a statement by Michaëlle Jean, Special Envoy for Haiti of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and member of the International Scientific Committee of the UNESCO Slave Route Project. The meeting was also addressed by the General Assembly President, the Chef de Cabinet on behalf of the Secretary-General, Member States on behalf of the regional groups and the representative of the host country [A/68/PV.77].

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/7 [YUN 2013, p. 713], the Secretary-General in August reported [A/69/281] on the programme of educational outreach on the transatlantic slave trade and slavery. The theme of the 2014 commemoration, “Victory over slavery: Haiti and beyond”, paid tribute to the fight against slavery in nations around the world. Haiti was the first nation to become independent on 1 January 1804 as a result of the struggle of enslaved men and women, led by Toussaint Louverture. Working with States members of the Caribbean Community and the African Union, the UN Department of Public Information organized a series of activities throughout 2014, including observance of the International Day, a film festival on slavery and an exhibition. To increase awareness of the observance, the Department mobilized its network of UN information centres, used social media platforms and engaged in partnerships with Member States and civil society.

On 29 December, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on the follow-up to the commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session (decision 69/554).

Permanent memorial

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by Assembly resolution 68/7 [YUN 2013, p. 713], the Secretary-General in June reported [A/69/93] on the status of the United Nations Trust Fund for Partnerships—Permanent Memorial, established to erect a permanent memorial in honour of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade. In August 2013, following the conduct of an international competition to select a design for the memorial, the receipt of 310 entries worldwide and the shortlisting of 16 entries by UNESCO, a panel of five judges met in New York to evaluate the proposals. The winning design, Ark of Return by Rodney Leon, was unveiled by the Secretary-General at a 23 September 2013 ceremony at UN Headquarters. In February 2014, the Permanent Memorial Committee [YUN 2008, p. 846] entered into an agreement with the winning architect to provide design services for the construction of the memorial, which was expected to be completed in 2015.

As at 31 May 2014, $1,448,065 had been recorded as income under the Fund, including $1,288,519 in voluntary contributions from Member States, $108,612 in public and private donations and $50,934 in interest income. The Fund had an unspent balance of $1,074,085.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 November [meeting 58], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/19 [draft: A/69/L.19 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 116].

Permanent memorial to and remembrance of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 61/19 of 28 November 2006, entitled “Commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade”, and subsequent resolutions entitled “Permanent memorial to and remembrance of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade”,

Recalling also the designation of 25 March as the annual International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade,

Recognizing how little is known about the transatlantic slave trade and its lasting consequences, felt throughout the world, and welcoming the increased attention that the annual commemoration by the General Assembly has brought to the issue, including raising awareness in many States,

Noting the initiatives undertaken by States in reaffirming their commitment to implement paragraphs 101 and 102 of the Durban Declaration of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, aimed at countering the legacy of slavery and contributing to the restoration of the dignity of the victims of slavery and the slave trade,

Recalling, in particular, paragraph 101 of the Durban Declaration, which, inter alia, invited the international community and its members to honour the memory of the victims,

Recalling also its resolution 68/237 of 23 December 2013, by which it proclaimed the International Decade for People of African Descent, from 1 January 2015 to 31 December 2024, and its resolution 69/16 of 18 November 2014, in which it adopted the programme of activities for the Decade,

Stressing the importance of educating and informing current and future generations about the causes, consequences and lessons of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade,

Recalling that the permanent memorial initiative complements the work being done at the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the Slave Route Project, the twentieth anniversary of which is commemorated in 2014,

1. Endorses the initiative of Member States to erect, at a place of prominence at United Nations Headquarters that is easily accessible to delegates, United Nations staff and visitors, a permanent memorial in acknowledgement of the tragedy and in consideration of the legacy of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade;

2. Recalls the establishment of a committee of interested States to oversee the permanent memorial project, drawn from all geographical regions of the world, with Member States from the Caribbean Community and the African Union playing a primary role, in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, representatives of the Secretariat and civil society;

3. Also recalls the establishment of a trust fund account for the permanent memorial, referred to as the United Nations Trust Fund for Partnerships—Permanent Memorial, administered by the United Nations Office for Partnerships, and notes the current status of contributions to the Trust Fund;

4. Expresses sincere appreciation to those Member States, organizations and individuals that have made contributions to the Trust Fund;

5. Recognizes the necessity of sustained voluntary contributions in order to achieve in a timely manner the goal of erecting a permanent memorial in honour of the victims of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade, and in this regard, encourages Member States and other interested parties to make further voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund;

6. Decides that the United Nations will incorporate the memorial within the existing United Nations Headquarters campus, on an exceptional basis and without setting a precedent, also decides that any funds remaining in the Trust Fund will be retained to support the maintenance of the memorial, and welcomes efforts to continue to solicit voluntary contributions in this regard;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to organize a series of activities annually to commemorate the International Day of Remembrance of the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade, including a commemorative meeting of the General Assembly at United Nations Headquarters and, as appropriate, activities through the network of United Nations information centres;

8. Requests the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, in cooperation with the countries concerned and with relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to take appropriate steps to enhance world public awareness of the commemorative activities and the permanent memorial at United Nations Headquarters;

9. Reiterates its request, in resolution 64/15 of 16 November 2009, for Member States to develop, in accordance with their national legislation, educational programmes, including through school curricula, designed to educate and inculcate in future generations an understanding of the lessons, history and consequences of slavery and the slave trade, and to provide such information to the Secretary-General for inclusion in his report;

10. Notes with satisfaction the selection of the design “Ark of Return” as the model for the permanent memorial and the ongoing construction of the memorial, scheduled for completion during the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly;

11. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the programme of educational outreach on the transatlantic slave trade and slavery relating to the diverse educational outreach strategy to increase awareness of and to educate future generations about the causes, consequences, lessons and legacy of the transatlantic slave trade and to communicate the dangers of racism and prejudice, and encourages continued action in this regard;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on continued action to implement the programme of educational outreach, including actions taken by Member States in implementing the present resolution, as well as steps to enhance world public awareness of the commemorative activities and the permanent memorial;

13. Requests the United Nations Office for Partnerships, through the Secretary-General, to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the status of the Trust Fund and, in particular, on contributions received and their utilization;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled “Follow-up to the commemoration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade”.

Women

Violence against women

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 715], the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Rashida Manjoo (South Africa), in May submitted a report [A/HRC/26/38] that covered her activities since her previous report [YUN 2013, p. 714] and focused on developments in the United Nations over 20 years, including the expanding conceptualization of the theme. The Rapporteur concluded that despite the existence of guidelines and monitoring by human rights treaty bodies and the universal periodic review, the limitations of large and varied monitoring mandates, coupled with time constraints when examining State party reports, had resulted in insufficient interrogation concerning the information relating to the issue and insufficient assessment of responses. The lack of specific, legally enforceable standards further affected efforts to ensure appropriate responses and accountability. She recommended that the Council undertake an inquiry into the normative gap to strengthen efforts to eliminate violence against women and that the Secretary-General initiate a study on the impact of other challenges raised in the report.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 67/144 [YUN 2012, p. 1095], the Secretary-General in September transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/368], which focused on violence against women as a barrier to the realization of women's civil, political, economic, social, cultural and developmental rights and the effective exercise of citizenship rights. The Rapporteur concluded that many States had acknowledged violence against women as a widespread and systematic human rights violation and were working on eradicating it.

Mission reports. Following her visit to Honduras (1–8 July) [A/HRC/29/27/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur noted that while the Government had undertaken legislative and institutional initiatives to address the situation of women and girls, those initiatives had not been translated into practical improvements. The absence of a data collection system to guide policy development and monitor progress, as well as the failure of the State to fulfil its obligation to investigate, prosecute and punish perpetrators of gender-based violence presented further challenges. The Rapporteur made recommendations on law and policy reforms, accountability, societal transformation, and statistics and data collection. She also recommended a review of the presence, programmes and resources of UN agencies in the country in the quest to respond to the problem.

Following her mission to the United Kingdom (31 March–15 April) [A/HRC/29/27/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur noted that while the Government had developed national strategies and action plans, those initiatives had resulted in isolated pockets of good practice, largely due to the lack of a consistent human rights-based approach to address violence against women and girls. She expressed concern about regressive measures that had been adopted, including the shift from gender specificity to gender neutrality; austerity measures that affected the provision of services; as well as cross-cutting issues, such as poverty and unemployment. Women from black and minority ethnic communities, as well as migrant, refugee and asylum-seeking women, women belonging to the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex community and women with disabilities had been affected by those cutbacks. The Rapporteur made a series of recommendations to the Government.

Following her mission to Afghanistan (4–12 November) [A/HRC/29/27/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur said that the Government had undertaken legal and institutional initiatives to meet its human rights obligations and address the situation of women and girls. Despite continued challenges, political commitments to protect and promote human rights continued to be highlighted through the Bonn process, the Kabul Conference, the Tokyo Conference and the 2014 London Conference. Those commitments, however, had not translated into concrete improvements in the lives of the majority of women. The Rapporteur reiterated and expanded on key recommendations made by her predecessors in 1999 [YUN 1999, p. 668] and 2005 [YUN 2005, p. 852], many of which remained relevant.

In June [A/HRC/26/38/Add.4] and October [A/HRC/26/38/Add.6], respectively, India and Azerbaijan submitted their comments on the Special Rapporteur's report on her visit to those countries in 2013 [YUN 2013, pp. 714 & 715].

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/15)], the Council urged States and all segments of society to address the harmful attitudes, customs, practices, stereotypes and unequal power relations that underlay and perpetuated violence against women and girls; welcomed the panel discussions on gender stereotyping and on women's human rights in the context of the sustainable development agenda held at the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session (see p. 749); and requested OHCHR to submit a summary report on the panel recommendations to the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session and the Assembly's sixty-ninth (2014) session.

Female genital mutilation

Panel discussion. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 715], OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/27/36] on the panel discussion on the identification of good practices in combating female genital mutilation (FGM), held during the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session (Geneva, 16 June). There was a consensus among States on the need to eliminate FGM and on the action required to address it. Panellists recommended a greater focus on education for young people on FGM; broader dissemination of international human rights instruments; the development of national action plans; support from communities and local role models in advocacy campaigns; and the involvement of men and boys. The role played by civil society and NGOs was deemed to be critical.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/22)], the Council urged States to condemn all harmful practices that affected women and girls, in particular FGM, whether committed within or outside a medical institution; called on States, the international community and UN system entities to end the medicalization of FGM; and requested the High Commissioner to submit a compilation of good practices and challenges in preventing and eliminating FGM to the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session.

Trafficking in women and girls

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 740], the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, Joy Ngozi Ezeilo (Nigeria), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/37] reviewing her activities from 1 March 2013 to 1 March 2014 and providing a thematic analysis of the first decade of the mandate. She summarized the achievements of the anti-trafficking movement and identified challenges in developing rights-based responses to trafficking, drawing on the responses of States and partners to a questionnaire she had sent. The Rapporteur made recommendations on how the mandate could contribute to the global movement against human trafficking.

In a March addendum [A/HRC/26/37/Add.2], the Rapporteur provided an in-depth analysis of the first decade of the mandate, 2004–2014.

In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2011, p. 740], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/269] covering her activities from 1 March to 31 July 2014 and assessing the first decade of the mandate. The basic principles on the right to an effective remedy for victims of trafficking in persons [YUN 2011, p. 739], which were finalized through consultations with States and other stakeholders and written submissions (see below), were annexed to the report.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/536).

Mission report. Following her mission to Seychelles (27–31 January) [A/HRC/26/37/Add.7], the Special Rapporteur expressed concern about the absence of legal and policy frameworks, as well as of targeted policies and institutions to prevent and combat trafficking in persons; the lack of comprehensive support for victims of trafficking; the lack of capacity, including front-line officials, law enforcement agents and civil society organizations; and the lack of awareness on the part of the general population with regard to the issue. As a result, the scale of the problem, its trends and scope appeared to be underestimated in the absence of statistical information. The Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government, including on addressing gaps in the anti-trafficking legislative, policy and institutional frameworks; improving the justice system; establishing a comprehensive data collection system on trafficked persons; increasing capacity-building activities for those involved in addressing trafficking issues; and addressing the root causes of trafficking.

Seychelles in June submitted its comments [A/HRC/26/37/Add.8] on that report.

On 28 May [A/HRC/26/37/Add.9] and 11 June [A/HRC/26/37/Add.10 & 11], respectively, Italy, the Bahamas and Belize submitted their comments on the Special Rapporteur's report on her 2013 mission to those countries [YUN 2013, p. 716].

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 721], the High Commissioner in May submitted a summary report [A/HRC/26/18] on the regional and global consultations convened by OHCHR to discuss and collect inputs on the draft basic principles on the right to an effective remedy for victims of trafficking in persons. The draft basic principles were revised on the basis of international human rights law and standards, as well as oral inputs and some 30 written submissions received during the consultative process from several stakeholders, including States, experts, participants, intergovernmental bodies and civil society. OHCHR welcomed the basic principles and encouraged the Council to endorse them with a view to States incorporating the principles into their legal framework so that they could become a living tool for practitioners in their daily anti-trafficking work.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/8)], the Council took note of the General Assembly decision to declare 30 July World Day against Trafficking in Persons [YUN 2013, p. 1249]; acknowledged the work of the Special Rapporteur in drafting the basic principles; extended the Rapporteur's mandate for three years; requested the Rapporteur to report annually to the Council and the Assembly; and urged States and subregional, regional and multilateral organizations to develop strategies and action plans to combat trafficking in persons in accordance with a victim-centred approach.

In June, the Human Rights Council appointed Maria Grazia Giammarinaro (Italy) as Special Rapporteur.

Discrimination against women in law and in practice

Working group activities. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2010, p. 751], the Working Group on the issue of discrimination against women in law and in practice in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/39], which summarized its activities since its last report [YUN 2013, p. 716] and addressed the topic of eliminating discrimination against women in economic and social life, with a focus on economic crisis, the priority theme for 2013–2014. The report noted that discriminatory legislation in a number of States continued to obstruct women's enjoyment of equal rights and access to economic opportunity and resources. While a significant number of countries had adopted anti-discrimination measures, those had not resulted in equality of opportunity in women's economic and social lives. Women were disproportionately concentrated in informal and precarious employment and were exposed to multiple forms of discrimination; the wage gap persisted; maternity protections had not been fully implemented; and in many countries women did not have equal rights and access to resources. Austerity measures taken by some States in response to economic crisis had had a disparate impact on women, increasing the precarity of their employment and their burden of unpaid care work. The Working Group called for the establishment of gender-responsive and effective accountability systems at the international, regional and national levels; and called on States to ratify the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and international human rights treaties and conventions that guaranteed women's economic and social rights.

Mission reports. Following its visit to Chile (1–9 September) [A/HRC/29/40/Add.1], the Working Group noted that although Chile had made significant progress towards gender equality, there was still a large gap between the principles of equality and the actual rights of women. There were hard cores of resistance to change in relations between the sexes in the country. A cultural shift needed to take place through the adoption and implementation of legislation on equality in order to empower women and eliminate discrimination. The Working Group made recommendations to bolster initiatives aimed at ensuring gender equality and the promotion women's human rights.

Following its mission to Peru (11–19 September) [A/HRC/29/40/Add.2], the Working Group noted that while progress had been made in areas such as the strengthening of the legal and institutional framework, a gap remained between the rhetoric and the reality. Although in law women had the right to equal treatment in public, political and economic life, there were no effective mechanisms to enable them to file complaints of discrimination. Women had been oppressed and silenced by the prevailing culture of religious conservatism and machismo, which undermined their well-being and especially the full realization of their sexual and reproductive rights. The Working Group made recommendations to strengthen measures designed to guarantee gender equality and the protection of women's rights.

Following its visit to Spain (9–19 December) [A/HRC/29/40/Add.3], the Working Group examined the incidence of gender-based violence and the effectiveness of Government measures adopted to combat it. It reviewed issues regarding women's sexual and reproductive health and rights, highlighted the role of education and media in combating discriminatory stereotypes, identified good practices and noted the achievements made. It concluded with recommendations regarding remaining challenges.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/5)], the Council requested States to take measures to overcome the barriers to women's economic opportunities resulting from maternity and the disproportionate burden of unpaid care work, and called on States and encouraged institutions of global economic governance and business to promote women's equal access to decision-making positions.

Mainstreaming women's human rights

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions 6/30 [YUN 2007, p. 787] and 26/15 (see above), OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/27/73] on the annual full-day discussion on women's human rights held during the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session (Geneva, 17 June). The meeting comprised two panel discussions: one on the impact of gender stereotypes and gender stereotyping on the recognition, exercise and enjoyment of women's human rights, and another on the intersections between realizing women's rights and achieving sustainable development. Panellists recommended that States take into consideration the diverse needs of all women, and for an approach to address gender stereotyping in all sectors of society, including in education, employment, marriage and family life. The discussion on sustainable development affirmed the importance of ensuring a strong focus on gender equality in the post-2015 universal framework. Many speakers called for a stand-alone goal covering women's human rights. The need to mainstream gender concerns across the entire framework, ensure adequate financing and accountability mechanisms to achieve its goals, and ensure the availability of disaggregated data were emphasized.

By a 3 September note [A/69/369], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the OHCHR summary report. The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on 18 December (decision 69/531).

Children

Violence against children

Reports of Special Representative. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/152 [YUN 2012, p. 609], the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on violence against children, Marta Santos Pais (Portugal), in January submitted her annual report [A/HRC/25/47] which highlighted initiatives aimed at consolidating the human rights foundation of children's freedom from violence through the ratification and implementation of international standards; accelerating progress towards a world free from violence; placing children's protection from violence at the centre of the UN development agenda beyond 2015; and enhancing awareness to strengthen children's protection from violence, with a special focus on promoting restorative justice for children. The Representative concluded that restorative justice represented a paradigm shift in how justice for children and young people was perceived in many countries. It promoted the accountability and reintegration of children who had committed an offence through a non-adversarial and voluntary process based on dialogue and problem solving.

In response to Assembly resolution 68/147 [YUN 2013, p. 603], the Special Representative in August submitted to the Assembly a report [A/69/264] that reviewed the strategic initiatives that she had developed to advance the implementation of the recommendations of the UN study on violence against children [YUN 2006, p. 916]. Those initiatives had helped to consolidate cross-regional commitments to children's protection from violence and strengthen national advocacy, legal and policy action aimed at preventing and eliminating violence.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/532).

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/10)], the Council urged States to protect children from all forms of violence or abuse; decided to convene a panel discussion at its twenty-seventh (2014) session on accelerating global efforts to end violence against children, with a particular focus on how to better prevent violence and protect children as a global priority and cross-cutting concern; and requested the High Commissioner to organize the panel discussion and submit a summary report to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 25/10 (see above), the High Commissioner submitted a summary report [A/HRC/28/34] of the panel discussion on accelerating global efforts to end violence against children (Geneva, 23 September) convened at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session. Panellists focused on the need to assess the underlying causes of violence against children; address the impact of traditional practices and culture on the realization of children's rights; tailor solutions to individual situations rather than apply a "one-size-fits-all" approach; address birth registration in order to make children visible; and ensure that violence against children was central to the post-2015 development agenda.

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2012, p. 723], the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Najat Maalla M'jid (Morocco), submitted a report [A/HRC/25/48] covering the activities since her previous report [YUN 2013, p. 717] and reviewing the main issues relating to the mandate and lessons learned during her six-year tenure. She noted that even though the issue had gained visibility over the past years, millions of children worldwide were still victims of sexual exploitation. The phenomenon had become increasingly complex, with risk factors growing and multiplying. Impunity, social tolerance for such crimes, corruption and precarious socioeconomic situations remained among the most challenging obstacles. Strategies aimed at preventing and combating the phenomenon needed to be constantly reviewed and laws, action plans and strategies needed to be translated into concrete actions, with adequate funding and capacities to be fully operational. The Rapporteur recommended the inclusion of child-sensitive social protection in the post-2015 development agenda; underlined the need to strengthen child-rights strategies; and invited States to put in place child rights-centred protection systems.

In accordance with Assembly resolution 68/147, the Secretary-General in August transmitted the first report [A/69/262] of the new Special Rapporteur, Maud de Boer-Buquicchio (The Netherlands), appointed by the Council on 8 May. The report provided information on activities undertaken by her predecessor from August 2013 to May 2014 and her own activities from June to August 2014. The Rapporteur outlined her approach to the mandate and the methods of work. She would closely follow negotiations on sustainable development goals and the post-2015 development agenda to ensure that child protection issues were included in the outcome document.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/532).

Mission report. Following her mission to Honduras (21–25 April) [A/HRC/28/56/Add.1] to assess progress since 2012 [YUN 2012, p. 723], the Special Rapporteur noted that although most of her recommendations remained valid, she urged the State to prioritize three sets of recommendations: establish an integrated child protection system by means of a comprehensive framework and strategic plan; provide the Directorate for Children, Adolescents and the Family with the budget it needed to perform its coordinating and supervisory functions; and create a framework for cooperation in implementing the child protection policy, with the support of international cooperation agencies and the UN system.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/6)], the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a three-year period.

Child, early and forced marriage

OHCHR report. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 718], OHCHR in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/22 & Corr.1] on preventing and eliminating child, early and forced marriage, which took into consideration 110 replies received as at 17 March from UN agencies, civil society groups, other stakeholders and 31 States. According to UNICEF estimates, in 2012, approximately 400 million women aged 20–49 worldwide (41 per cent of the total population of women in that age group) had been married or entered into a union before they reached 18 years of age. The United Nations Population Fund reported that the rate of marriage for girls before the age of 18 in developing countries (not including China) was one in three. The report concluded that despite progress made, challenges remained in the adoption and implementation of laws, policies and strategies to address the factors which allowed child marriage to persist and prevented women from marrying a spouse of their choice, including cultural attitudes supporting the practice. It was recommended that national policies and strategies be developed and implemented with the involvement of national and local government departments, civil society organizations and other stakeholders. Policy and protection measures should be part of broader efforts to promote equality and eliminate discrimination against women and girls.

By a 22 July note [A/69/166], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the OHCHR report. The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on 18 December (decision 69/532).

Panel discussion. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 718], OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/27/34] on the panel discussion on preventing and eliminating child, early and forced marriage, with a particular focus on challenges, achievements, best practices and implementation gaps (Geneva, 23 June), held at the Council's twenty-sixth (2014) session. The panellists concluded that further action was necessary to tackle the problem from a human rights perspective; approaches should address the root causes of child, early and forced marriage, including poverty and gender inequality; girls should have access to education and services, including on sexual and reproductive health, and child, early and forced marriage should be featured in the post-2015 development agenda.

By a 22 July note [A/69/165], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the summary report. The Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on 18 December (decision 69/532).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/484], adopted resolution 69/156 without vote [agenda item 64 (a)].

Child, early and forced marriage

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 68/148 of 18 December 2013 on child, early and forced marriage,

Recalling its resolutions 66/140 of 19 December 2011 and 68/146 of 18 December 2013 on the girl child and 67/144 of 20 December 2012 on the intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women, as well as Human Rights Council resolution 24/23 of 27 September 2013, entitled "Strengthening efforts to prevent and eliminate child, early and forced marriage: challenges, achievements, best practices and implementation gaps", and all other previous resolutions relating to child, early and forced marriage,

Guided by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as other relevant human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, together with the relevant Optional Protocols thereto,

Reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, as well as the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome documents of their review conferences,

Recalling the agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-seventh and fifty-eighth sessions,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 2 April 2014 on preventing and eliminating child, early and forced marriage and its summary report of 18 July 2014 on the panel discussion on preventing and eliminating child, early and forced marriage, and noting the summary report on the panel discussion held by the General Assembly on 5 September 2014,

Recognizing that child, early and forced marriage is a harmful practice that violates, abuses and impairs human rights and is linked to and perpetuates other harmful practices and human rights violations and that such violations have a disproportionately negative impact on women and girls, and underscoring the human rights obligations and commitments of States to promote and protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women and girls and to prevent and eliminate the practice of child, early and forced marriage,

Deeply concerned about the continued prevalence of child, early and forced marriage worldwide, including the fact that approximately 15 million girls are married every year before they reach 18 years of age and that more than 700 million women and girls alive today were married before their eighteenth birthday,

Noting with concern that the continued prevalence of child, early and forced marriage has had a negative impact on the achievement and the overarching aims of Millennium Development Goals 1 to 6, including in the areas of gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls, poverty reduction, education, maternal and child mortality and health, including sexual and reproductive health, and recognizing that child, early and forced marriage continues to impair sustainable development, inclusive economic growth and social cohesion,

Noting with concern also that poverty and insecurity are among the root causes of child, early and forced marriage and that child, early and forced marriage remains common in rural areas and among the poorest communities, and recognizing that the immediate alleviation and eventual eradication of extreme poverty must remain a high priority for the international community,

Recognizing that child, early and forced marriage is itself a barrier to development and helps to perpetuate the cycle of poverty and that the risk of child, early and forced marriage is also exacerbated in conflict and humanitarian crisis situations,

Recognizing also that child, early and forced marriage is inherently linked to deep-rooted gender inequalities, norms and stereotypes and to harmful practices, perceptions and customs that are obstacles to the full enjoyment of human rights and that the persistence of child, early and forced marriage places children, in particular the girl child, at risk of being exposed to and encountering various forms of discrimination and violence throughout their lives,

Recognizing further that child, early and forced marriage undermines women's and girls' autonomy and decision-making in all aspects of their lives and continues to be an impediment to improvements in the education and the economic and social status of women and girls in all parts of the world and that the empowerment of and investment in women and girls is critical for economic growth, including the eradication of poverty, as well as the meaningful participation of girls in all decisions that affect them,

Noting with concern that child, early and forced marriage disproportionately affects girls who have received little or no formal education and is itself a significant obstacle to educational opportunities for girls and young women, in particular girls who are forced to drop out of school owing to marriage and/or childbirth, and recognizing that educational opportunities are directly related to women's and girls' empowerment, employment and economic opportunities and to their active participation in economic, social and cultural development, governance and decision-making,

Recognizing that child, early and forced marriage constitutes a serious threat to multiple aspects of the physical and psychological health of women and girls, including but not limited to their sexual and reproductive health, significantly increasing the risk of early, frequent and unintended pregnancy, maternal and newborn mortality and morbidity, obstetric fistula and sexually transmitted infections, including HIV/AIDS, as well as increasing vulnerability to all forms of violence, and that every girl and woman at risk of or affected by these practices must have equal access to quality services such as education, counselling, shelter and other social services, psychological, sexual and reproductive health-care services and medical care,

1. Urges all States to enact, enforce and uphold laws and policies aimed at preventing and ending child, early and forced marriage and protecting those at risk and to ensure that marriage is entered into only with the informed, free and full consent of the intending spouses;

2. Calls upon States, with the participation of relevant stakeholders, including girls, religious and community leaders, civil society, women's and human rights groups, men and boys and youth organizations, to develop and implement holistic, comprehensive and coordinated responses and strategies to eliminate child, early and forced marriage and to support already married girls, adolescents and women, including through the strengthening of child protection systems, protection mechanisms such as safe shelters, access to justice and the sharing of best practices across borders;

3. Calls upon States and the international community to create an environment in which the well-being of women and girls is ensured by, inter alia, cooperating, supporting and participating in efforts for the eradication of extreme poverty, and reaffirms that investment in women and girls and the protection of their rights are among the most effective ways to end the practice of child, early and forced marriage;

4. Calls upon States to promote and protect the right of women and girls to education through enhanced emphasis on quality education, including catch-up and literacy education for those who have not received formal education, while recognizing that education is one of the most effective ways to prevent and end child, early and forced marriage and to help married women and girls to make more informed choices about their lives;

5. Urges Governments to promote and protect the human rights of all women, including their right to have control over and decide freely and responsibly on matters related to their sexuality, including sexual and reproductive health, free of coercion, discrimination and violence, and to adopt and accelerate the implementation of laws, policies and programmes that protect and enable the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including reproductive rights, in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of their review conferences;

6. Encourages relevant United Nations entities and agencies to continue to collaborate with and support Member States in developing and implementing strategies and policies at the national, regional and international levels to prevent and eliminate child, early and forced marriage, as well as to support already married girls, adolescents and women;

7. Recalls the inclusion of a target on eliminating all harmful practices, such as child, early and forced marriage, in the outcome document of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, recognizes child, early and forced marriage as a barrier to development and the full realization of women's and girls' human rights, and recognizes the need to give due consideration to the inclusion of the target in the post-2015 development agenda in order to help to ensure progress towards the elimination of child, early and forced marriage;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report to the General Assembly, before the end of its seventieth session, on progress towards ending child, early and forced marriage worldwide since the issuance of the report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 2 April 2014, with particular emphasis on high-prevalence countries, best practices for programmes aimed at ending the practice and supporting already married women and girls, gaps in research and implementation and legal reforms and policies related to this matter, using information provided by Member States, United Nations bodies, agencies, funds and programmes, civil society and other relevant stakeholders;

9. Decides to consider the issue of child, early and forced marriage at its seventy-first session under the item entitled "Promotion and protection of the rights of children", taking into account the multifaceted and worldwide nature of the issue of child, early and forced marriage.

Child mortality

OHCHR report. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 719], OHCHR in June presented a report [A/HRC/27/31] containing technical guidance on the application of a human rights-based approach to the implementation of policies and programmes to reduce and eliminate preventable mortality and morbidity of children under 5 years of age. The technical guidance was prepared by OHCHR in collaboration with WHO and with an external advisory group of human rights and child health experts, and was informed by input from States, national human rights institutions and civil society. OHCHR encouraged the implementation of the technical guidance at the national and subnational levels. States were encouraged to consider the technical guidance in their deliberations on the post-2015 development agenda, and in the implementation and monitoring of the new development goals.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/14)], the Council, concerned that more than 6.3 million children under 5 years of age died each year, mostly from preventable and treatable causes, urged States to disseminate and apply the technical guidance (see above); called on States to strengthen their international commitment, cooperation and mutual assistance to reduce and eliminate preventable child mortality and morbidity; and requested the High Commissioner to submit to the Council's thirty-third (2016) session a report on the application of the technical guidance and its impact on the development and implementation of policies and programmes in States.

Birth registration and right to recognition

OHCHR report. In response to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 719], OHCHR in June presented a report [A/HRC/27/22] which reviewed the global rates of birth registration, a universal human right recognized in international instruments; considered the consequences and impact of non-registration on human rights, particularly since the right to be registered at birth was closely linked to the realization of many other rights; analysed the barriers to access to birth registration; and provided examples of good practices. OHCHR noted that the universal implementation of the right to birth registration for all was fundamental to the protection of children and the implementation of their rights. One of the most basic institutional responsibilities of a Government was to provide a person with a legal identity, which was central to good governance. The report concluded with recommendations to ensure the universal implementation of that right.

Right of child to engage in play

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/15)], the Council acknowledged the fundamental importance of the right of children to engage in play and recreational activities for their well-being, health and development; encouraged States to respect, protect, promote and fulfil that right; and recommended that the celebration of the International Day of Sport for Development and Peace (6 April) emphasize, through specific events, the right of the child to engage in play and recreational activities.

Investment in child rights

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/6)], the Council decided to focus its next (2015) full-day meeting on the rights of the child on the theme, “Towards better investment in the rights of the child”, and invited the High Commissioner to present a report on that issue to the Council’s twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Children and armed conflict

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 2068(2012) [YUN 2012, p. 724], the Secretary-General in May submitted a report [A/68/878-S/2014/339] on children and armed conflict, covering developments in 2013. Two annexes listed those parties that recruited or used children, killed or maimed children, committed rape and other forms of sexual violence against children, or engaged in attacks on schools and/or hospitals in situations of armed conflict. The report provided information on grave violations committed against children during armed conflict and progress made by parties on dialogue, action plans and other measures to halt and prevent violations. It concluded with recommendations to States, parties listed in the annexes, the Security Council and regional and subregional organizations.

Security Council consideration. On 7 March [S/PV.7129], the Council held an open debate on children and armed conflict. It had before it a 1 March concept note [S/2014/144] on the topic submitted by Luxembourg. Addressing the meeting, the Secretary-General observed that, given a chance, former child soldiers could rebuild their lives and help to build peace in their countries. He welcomed the launch on 7 March of the “Children, not soldiers” campaign, which was supported by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict (see below), UNICEF and other partners, and noted that the States concerned had renewed their commitment to the action plans.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 March [meeting 7129], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 2143(2014). The draft [S/2014/149] was submitted by 47 Member States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 1261(1999) of 25 August 1999, 1314(2000) of 11 August 2000, 1379(2001) of 20 November 2001, 1460(2003) of 30 January 2003, 1539(2004) of 22 April 2004, 1612(2005) of 26 July 2005, 1882(2009) of 4 August 2009, 1998(2011) of 12 July 2011 and 2068(2012) of 19 September 2012, and the statements by its President of 24 July 2006, 28 November 2006, 12 February 2008, 17 July 2008, 29 April 2009, 16 June 2010 and 17 June 2013, which contribute to a comprehensive framework for addressing the protection of children affected by armed conflict,

Acknowledging that its resolutions 1612(2005), 1882(2009), 1998(2011) and 2068(2012) and the statements by its President on children and armed conflict have generated progress in preventing and responding to violations and abuses committed against children, in particular in the demobilization, rehabilitation and reintegration of thousands of children, the signing of action plans between parties to armed conflict and the United Nations and the delisting of parties to conflict from the annexes to the annual report of the Secretary-General,

Remaining deeply concerned, however, over the lack of progress on the ground in some situations of concern, where parties to conflict continue to violate with impunity the relevant provisions of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflict,

Recalling that all parties to armed conflict must comply strictly with the obligations applicable to them under international law for the protection of children in armed conflict, including those contained in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocol thereto on the involvement of children in armed conflict, as well as the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 1977,

Noting that article 28 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child recognizes the right of the child to education and sets forth obligations for States parties to the Convention, with a view to progressively achieving this right on the basis of equal opportunity,

Expressing deep concern about the military use of schools by armed forces and non-State armed groups in contravention of applicable international law, including their use as military barracks, weapons storage facilities, command centres, detention and interrogation sites and firing and observation positions,

Expressing further concern regarding the high number of children that are being killed and maimed in conflict and post-conflict situations by landmines, explosive remnants of war, improvised explosive devices and other unexploded ordnance,

Convinced that the protection of children in armed conflict should be an important aspect of any comprehensive strategy to resolve conflict and build peace,

Recalling the responsibility of all Member States to comply with their respective obligations to end impunity and to investigate and prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children, and noting that the fight against impunity for the most serious crimes of international concern committed against children has been strengthened through the work on and prosecution of these crimes by the International Criminal Court, ad hoc and mixed tribunals and specialized chambers in national tribunals,

Acknowledging the adoption of the Arms Trade Treaty, and noting that, in line with the provisions in article 7, paragraph 4, of the Treaty, exporting States parties shall take into account the risk of covered conventional arms or items being used to commit or facilitate serious acts of violence against children,

Reiterating its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security and, in this connection, its commitment to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on children,

Stressing the primary role of Governments in providing protection and relief to all children affected by armed conflict, recognizing the importance of strengthening national capacities in this regard, and reiterating that all action undertaken by United Nations entities within the framework of the monitoring and reporting mechanism must be designed to support and supplement, as appropriate, the protection and rehabilitation roles of national Governments,

Recognizing further that capacity-building for the protection of children affected by armed conflict is a process that must begin from the earliest days of international engagement,

Emphasizing the vital role of the United Nations, in consultation with international partners, to support national authorities in consolidating peace and in developing strategies for peacebuilding priorities as well as to ensure that these strategies strengthen coherence between political, security, human rights, development and rule of law activities,

Recognizing the crucial role of child protection advisers in mainstreaming child protection and leading monitoring, prevention and reporting efforts in relevant United Nations peacekeeping missions, political missions and peacebuilding offices in accordance with their mandate, including advice for and close cooperation and coordination between the missions, the United Nations Children's Fund and specialized non-governmental organizations for child demobilization and integration and prevention of recruitment,

Underlining the importance of providing military, police and civilian peacekeepers with adequate predeployment and in-mission training on mission-specific child protection issues and on appropriate comprehensive prevention and protection responses,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of relevant regional and subregional organizations and arrangements for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, and commending in this regard the declaration signed on 17 September 2013 by the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the Peace and Security Department of the African Union Commission, in order to mainstream protection mechanisms in all peace and security activities of the African Union, in close partnership with the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as the European Union Guidelines on Children and Armed Conflict, including its Checklist for the Integration of the Protection of Children affected by Armed Conflict into European Union Common Security and Defence Policy Operations, and the development by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, in close collaboration with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the United Nations Secretariat and the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, of training courses and military guidelines on children and armed conflict,

1. Strongly condemns all violations of applicable international law involving the recruitment and use of children by parties to armed conflict, as well as their recruitment, killing and maiming, rape and other sexual violence, abductions, attacks against schools or hospitals and denial of humanitarian access by parties to armed conflict and all other violations of international law, including international humanitarian law, human rights law and refugee law, committed against children in situations of armed conflict, and demands that all relevant parties immediately put an end to such practices and take special measures to protect children;

2. Calls upon Member States to devise ways, in close consultation with the United Nations country-level task force on monitoring and reporting and United Nations country teams, to facilitate the development and implementation of time-bound action plans and the review and monitoring by the United Nations country-level task force of obligations and commitments relating to the protection of children affected by armed conflict;

3. Reiterates the value of interministerial committees as a successful framework for partnership with concerned Governments to discuss and follow up on child protection commitments, and encourages those Governments, with the support of the United Nations, to utilize those committees to foster action plan implementation;

4. Stresses the importance of regular and timely consideration of violations and abuses committed against children in armed conflict, including through incorporating, where appropriate, a children and armed conflict dimension in the terms of reference of Security Council field visits, and invites its Working Group on Children and

Armed Conflict to make full use of its toolkit in the light of ongoing discussions on enhancing compliance, and in this regard to continue to consider the issue of persistent perpetrators and action plan implementation;

5. Recalls the fact that the conscription or enlistment of children under the age of 15 or using them to participate actively in hostilities in both international and non-international armed conflict constitutes a war crime under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and notes that the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict requires States parties to set a minimum age of 18 for compulsory recruitment and participation in hostilities and to raise the minimum age for voluntary recruitment from that set out in article 38, paragraph 3, of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to take all feasible measures to ensure that members of their armed forces who have not attained the age of 18 years do not take a direct part in hostilities;

6. Welcomes, in this context, the campaign “Children, Not Soldiers” initiated by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict and the United Nations Children’s Fund, in collaboration with other United Nations partners, with a view to ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children by government armed forces in conflict by 2016;

7. Urges, in this regard, concerned Governments to undertake all efforts in order to ensure that no children are in their ranks in conflict, in particular through the development and implementation of time-bound action plans, and calls upon Member States, all relevant United Nations entities, non-governmental organizations and the donor community to support in their various capacities the campaign “Children, Not Soldiers”, recognizing that its goal can only be attained through partnership and active involvement of all;

8. Invites the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to inform the Council about the campaign “Children, Not Soldiers”, including about process and progress in delisting concerned parties;

9. Further urges Member States, United Nations entities and other parties concerned to ensure that child protection provisions, including those relating to the release and reintegration of children formerly associated with armed forces or armed groups, are integrated into all peace negotiations and peace agreements;

10. Reiterates its readiness to adopt targeted and graduated measures against persistent perpetrators of violations and abuses committed against children, taking into account the relevant provisions of resolutions 1539(2004), 1612(2005), 1882(2009), 1998(2011) and 2068(2012), and to consider including provisions pertaining to parties to armed conflict that engage in activities in violation of applicable international law relating to the rights and protection of children in armed conflicts, when establishing, modifying or renewing the mandate of relevant sanctions regimes;

11. Stresses the need to exclude genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children from amnesty laws and other similar provisions, and strongly encourages concerned States to establish a vetting mechanism to ensure that those responsible for such crimes are not included in the ranks of the army or other security forces;

12. Emphasizes the responsibility of all States to put an end to impunity and to investigate and prosecute those responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other egregious crimes perpetrated against children, and highlights in this regard the contribution of the International Criminal Court, in accordance with the principle of complementarity to national criminal jurisdictions as set out in the Rome Statute;

13. Urges concerned Member States, when undertaking security sector reforms, to mainstream child protection, such as the establishment of child protection units in national security forces and of effective age assessment mechanisms to prevent underage recruitment, while stressing in this regard the importance of ensuring universal birth registration, including late birth registration;

14. Further urges all parties concerned, including Member States and United Nations entities as well as financial institutions, to support, as appropriate, bearing in mind national ownership, the development and strengthening of the capacities of national institutions and local civil society networks for advocacy, protection and rehabilitation of children affected by armed conflict as well as national accountability mechanisms, including building investigative and prosecutorial capacities and the adoption of legislation criminalizing violations and abuses committed against children affected by armed conflict;

15. Reiterates its request to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General to pursue efforts to coalesce the donor community in order to address funding gaps, and encourages bilateral, regional and international partners to provide financial and capacity-building support in this regard, including for education during conflict and post-conflict periods;

16. Recalls the importance of ensuring that children continue to have access to basic services during conflict and post-conflict periods, including education and health care;

17. Reiterates its deep concern about attacks as well as threats of attacks in contravention of applicable international law against schools and/or hospitals and protected persons in relation to them, as well as the closure of schools and hospitals in situations of armed conflict as a result of attacks and threats of attacks, and urges all parties to armed conflict to refrain from actions that impede the access of children to education and health services;

18. Expresses deep concern at the military use of schools in contravention of applicable international law, recognizing that such use may render schools legitimate targets of attack, thus endangering the safety of children and teachers as well as the education of children, and in this regard:

(a) Urges all parties to armed conflict to respect the civilian character of schools in accordance with international humanitarian law;

(b) Encourages Member States to consider concrete measures to deter the use of schools by armed forces and armed non-State groups in contravention of applicable international law;

(c) Urges Member States to ensure that attacks on schools in contravention of international humanitarian law are investigated and those responsible duly prosecuted;

(d) Calls upon United Nations country-level task forces to enhance monitoring of and reporting on the military use of schools;

19. Recalls the obligations of all parties to an armed conflict, in accordance with international humanitarian law, to ensure that the wounded and sick, including children, receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition and to respect and protect medical and health personnel, facilities, transports and activities in accordance with international humanitarian law;

20. Recommends that Member States include child protection in military training and standard operating procedures, as well as in military guidance as appropriate, and recommends further that United Nations entities and United Nations peacekeeping troop-and police-contributing countries undertake targeted and operational trainings for the preparation of United Nations mission personnel, including troop and police contingents, on their contribution in preventing violations against children so as to give all mission personnel the ability to effectively recognize, report and respond to violations and abuses committed against children and to successfully support child protection activities for better implementation of their respective mandates;

21. Urges all United Nations entities, including peacekeeping missions, political missions, peacebuilding offices, United Nations offices, agencies, funds and programmes, to give full attention to violations against children in the application of the human rights due diligence policy on United Nations support to non-United Nations security forces;

22. Urges Member States, United Nations entities, including the Peacebuilding Commission, and other parties concerned to ensure that post-conflict recovery and reconstruction planning, programmes and strategies give due priority to issues concerning children affected by armed conflict;

23. Urges relevant United Nations entities to continue to take concrete steps to reduce the impact of mines, unexploded ordnance and cluster munitions and explosive remnants of war on children by prioritizing mine clearance, risk education and risk reduction activities;

24. Decides to continue the inclusion of specific provisions for the protection of children in the mandates of all relevant United Nations peacekeeping operations and political missions, encourages deployment of child protection advisers to such missions, and calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that the need for and the number and roles of such advisers are systematically assessed during the preparation and renewal of each United Nations peacekeeping operation and political mission and encourages the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat to take into account child protection when briefing the Council on country-specific situations;

25. Encourages pertinent regional and subregional organizations and arrangements to help to address the widespread impact of armed conflict on children, invites them to continue the mainstreaming of child protection into their advocacy, policies, programmes and mission planning and the development and expansion of guidelines to protect children affected by armed conflict, as well as the training of personnel and the inclusion of child protection staff in their peacekeeping and field operations, and reiterates its call for the establishment of child protection mechanisms within their secretariats, including through the appointment of child protection focal points;

26. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that, in all his reports on country-specific situations, the matter of children and armed conflict is included as a specific aspect of the report;

27. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Reports of Special Representative. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/152 [YUN 2012, p. 609], the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Leila Zerrougui (Algeria), submitted an annual report [A/HRC/25/46], which covered the period from May 2012 to December 2013 and outlined the progress achieved in developing and implementing action plans, as well as the challenges of the children and armed conflict agenda. She acknowledged the progress made with regard to cooperation with regional organizations and in the development and implementation of international law to protect children's rights, yet also noted the ongoing impunity for grave violations against children. The Representative reiterated her call on States to sign and ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict; to enact legislation to prohibit and criminalize the recruitment of children into armed forces or groups; and to establish 18 years as the minimum age for voluntary recruitment.

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 68/147 [YUN 2013, p. 603], the Special Representative in July submitted a report [A/69/212] on activities undertaken and progress achieved from August 2013 to July 2014. It described trends, issues of concern and progress made at both the policy and operational levels, including the mainstreaming of child protection issues within the UN system. The Representative made recommendations for States to seek alternatives to the prosecution and detention of children for their alleged association with armed groups; for States that were the focus of the "Children, not soldiers" campaign to redouble their efforts towards compliance with their commitments; and for States, regional organizations and parties to conflict to protect schools and hospitals and to deter the military use of schools.

The General Assembly took note of that report on 18 December (decision 69/532).

Working Group activities. In December [S/2014/914], the Chair of the Security Council Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict reported on the Working Group's activities since its last report [YUN 2013, p. 722]. It held 10 meetings in 2014 (14 February, 1 May, 2, 6 and 20 June, 7 and 21 July, 19 September, 26 November and 8 December), during which it adopted conclusions on children and armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo [S/AC.51/2014/3], Mali [S/AC.51/2014/2], the Philippines [S/AC.51/2014/1] and the Syrian Arab Republic [S/AC.51/2014/4].

On the basis of the Working Group's conclusions, the Security Council President sent letters to the Secretary-General on the Democratic Republic of the Congo [S/2014/809], Mali [S/2014/588] and the Philippines [S/2014/150].

The family

Human Rights Council action. On 26 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/11)], by a recorded vote of 26 to 14, with 6 abstentions, the Council reaffirmed that the family was the natural and fundamental group unit of society and was entitled to protection by society and the State; decided to convene a panel discussion on the protection of the family and its members at its twenty-seventh (2014) session; and requested the High Commissioner to submit a summary report to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 26/11 (see above), OHCHR submitted a summary report [A/HRC/28/40 & Corr.1, 2] of the panel discussion on the protection of the family and its members (Geneva, 15 September) held at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session. Participants emphasized the importance of families as key means of ensuring welfare and stability, promoting traditional values and protecting human rights. They also recognized the need to focus on the protection of individuals' rights within the family, observing that human rights abuses might be experienced in the family by more vulnerable family members such as women, children and the elderly. The importance of recognizing the diversity of families, which could include same-sex unions, single parents and adoptive or foster parents, was also acknowledged.

Older persons

Report of Independent Expert. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 722], the first Independent Expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons, Rosa Kornfeld-Matte (Chile), appointed by the Council on 8 May, submitted her first annual report [A/HRC/27/46], which described the activities undertaken since she took office on 2 June, her views about the foundations and context of the mandate, as well as some preliminary considerations that would inform her work. Emphasizing her desire for constructive engagement with UN Member States, she reiterated the importance of an inclusive and all-encompassing approach in the discharge of her mandate, and noted the central role of NGOs, including in providing her with information and engaging with and assisting her.

Mission report. Following her visit to Slovenia (17–21 November) [A/HRC/30/43/Add.1], the Independent Expert identified both best practices and gaps in the implementation of existing laws; assessed the implementation of international instruments, as well as law and policies; and analysed the challenges faced, paying particular attention to ostracized persons and groups. The Expert noted that the impressive number of normative actions, policy support and societal initiatives, as well as government measures, had contributed to the relatively high human rights standard enjoyed by the majority of older persons. Recognizing that Slovenia had a good normative framework, she noted that there was room for improvement in practice and that some of the relevant laws had not been fully implemented.

Internally displaced persons

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 724], the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons (IDPs), Chaloka Beyani (Zambia), in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/33 & Corr.1] which reviewed his activities from January 2013 to March 2014, analysed the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa (Kampala Convention) [YUN 2009, p. 1207], examined the progress made in its implementation and offered recommendations to maximize its potential. The Rapporteur recommended that States address internal displacement and ensure the implementation of the Kampala Convention.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/180 [YUN 2013, p. 724], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report [A/69/295], which outlined his activities from August 2013 to July 2014 and addressed the challenge of finding durable solutions for IDPs in urban settings. He concluded that durable solutions remained available options for IDPs, including those in urban settings. The very nature of urban displacement, however, tended to lend weight to local integration as the viable choice preferred by IDPs in urban areas. The Rapporteur made recommendations addressed to States, national and municipal authorities, donor States and international organizations.

Mission reports. Following his follow-up mission to Azerbaijan (19–24 May) [A/HRC/29/34/Add.1] to assess progress since 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 758], the Special Rapporteur said that the Government had made commendable progress in providing durable housing for IDPs, especially with the construction of new settlements that were all equipped with modern facilities. One of the main obstacles to the search for durable solutions for IDPs, including return to their homes or places of origin, remained the absence of a political settlement to the unresolved armed conflict in and around the Nagorno-Karabakh region. In that connection, the Rapporteur called on all parties to step up efforts towards reaching a political settlement.

Following his visit to Haiti (29 June–5 July) [A/HRC/29/34/Add.2] to assess progress since the January 2010 earthquake [YUN 2010, p. 930], the Special Rapporteur called for a transition from a largely humanitarian approach to a development rights-based approach, and for solutions for IDPs along with the vulnerable segments of the population. He stressed that the closure of IDP camps, to which the Government had given priority, did not mean that durable solutions had been found. One of the main obstacles to finding solutions remained the extreme poverty from which a large portion of the population suffered, and which particularly affected those displaced by the earthquake. Other concerns included the absence of a protection-sensitive approach to the issue of displacement, the lack of coherent urban planning and of a cadastre, and the persistent instability, in part due to poor rule of law. The Rapporteur concluded the report with a number of recommendations.

Following his visit to Ukraine (16–25 September) [A/HRC/29/34/Add.3] to examine the situation of IDPs following the political upheavals and conflict that had affected, in particular, the Autonomous Republic of Crimea and the eastern regions of Luhansk and Donetsk, the Special Rapporteur stated that the Government must exercise primary responsibility, establish more effective systems and step up its efforts to meet the needs of IDPs. Ukraine was urged to learn from the experiences of similar IDP situations in other countries where internal displacement had become protracted. It should put in place policies, frameworks, support structures and programmes to move towards a situation in which protection and assistance were linked to durable solutions.

In April and June, respectively, South Sudan [A/HRC/26/33/Add.5] and Sri Lanka [A/HRC/26/33/Add.6] submitted their comments on the Special Rapporteur's reports on his visits to those countries [YUN 2013, p. 723].

Persons with disabilities

OHCHR report. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 618], OHCHR in April submitted a report [A/HRC/26/24] focusing on activities undertaken by the Office, the United Nations Partnership to Promote the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and other UN agencies and regional organizations to support States' efforts to promote and protect the rights of persons with disabilities in their national legislation, policies and programmes, including to mainstream disability in development efforts, and suggesting a way forward.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/20)], the Council welcomed the OHCHR study on the right of persons with disabilities to education [YUN 2013, p. 727], called on stakeholders to consider the study's recommendations and urged States to eliminate accessibility barriers to education.

It decided that its next annual interactive debate on the rights of persons with disabilities would be held at its twenty-eighth (2015) session and would focus on article 19 of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities on living independently and being included in the community, and requested OHCHR to submit a study on the topic prior to that session. The Council noted expiry of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on Disability of the Commission for Social Development on 31 December 2014 and the Commission's decision to consider the possibility, at its fifty-third (2015) session, of another monitoring mechanism.

On 27 June [res. 26/20], the Council reaffirmed the obligation of States to eliminate discrimination against persons with disabilities and to promote and protect their human rights. It also decided to appoint, for a three-year period, a Special Rapporteur on the rights of persons with disabilities with a mandate to consult with States and other stakeholders to identify, exchange and promote good practices relating to the realization of the rights of persons with disabilities; request, receive and exchange communications on violations of their rights; make recommendations on promoting and protecting their rights; and report annually to the Council starting from its twenty-eighth (2015) session, and to the General Assembly.

In November, the Council appointed Catalina Devandas Aguilar (Costa Rica) as the first Special Rapporteur.

Indigenous peoples

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2010, p. 761], the new Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, Victoria Tauli Corpuz (Philippines), who was appointed by the Council on 8 May, submitted her first report [A/HRC/27/52] to the Council in August. The report presented some preliminary reflections on the status of operationalization of international standards in the field and her vision for her work. While there had been many advances, many challenges continued to confront indigenous peoples worldwide. Obstacles included the failure or reluctance of governments to recognize indigenous peoples; challenges in developing practical implementation measures; reconciliation and redress for historical wrongs yet to be completed; negative attitudes towards indigenous peoples on the part of broader societies in which they lived; and social and economic conditions preventing the full exercise of indigenous rights. The Rapporteur intended to focus on issues surrounding the economic, social, cultural and environmental rights of indigenous peoples.

In a 3 September report [A/HRC/27/52/Add.4], the former Special Rapporteur, James Anaya (United States), provided information on communications sent as at 1 June 2013 and replies received as at 31 May 2014 concerning 22 countries.

In accordance with a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 728.], the Secretary-General in August transmitted the new Special Rapporteur's first report [A/69/267] to the General Assembly. Given that the Assembly was reviewing and adopting the post-2015 development agenda, including global sustainable development goals, the Rapporteur provided some thoughts on that issue for indigenous peoples, in the hope that her comments might guide Member States and others as they reflected on development priorities.

Mission report. Following her visit to Paraguay (21–28 November) [A/HRC/30/41/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur noted that while it had a constitutional framework in which the rights of indigenous peoples were recognized, that framework had not been translated into the legislative, administrative and other measures needed to ensure the enjoyment of those rights. There was a widespread lack of legal protection for indigenous peoples' rights over their lands, territories and resources, which were vital to ensure their survival and uphold their dignity. That situation, she observed, gave rise to numerous conflicts and human rights violations, which the Government should regard as an emergency situation. The Rapporteur made a series of recommendations to the Government.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to a Human Rights Council request [YUN 2013, p. 728], the High Commissioner in June reported [A/HRC/27/30] on the activities of OHCHR and human rights bodies and mechanisms between May 2013 and April 2014 for the promotion and application of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 2007, p. 691].

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/13)], the Council requested the High Commissioner to report annually to the Council on the rights of indigenous peoples and requested the Special Rapporteur to report to the Assembly's seventieth (2015) session. It requested the Expert Mechanism (see below) to submit a study on the promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous peoples with respect to their cultural heritage to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session; continue the questionnaire survey on best practices and implementation strategies to attain the Declaration's goals; and present a final summary of responses to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session. The Council also decided to hold, at its thirtieth (2015) session, a half-day panel discussion on the follow-up to and implementation of the outcome of the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples (see p. 888).

Expert Mechanism

The five-member Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, at its seventh session (Geneva, 7–11 July) [A/HRC/27/64], held a half-day session to discuss the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples (2014), a panel discussion on post-2015 development agenda and a discussion on the follow-up to thematic studies and advice. It adopted the proposals to be submitted to the Human Rights Council at its twenty-seventh (2014) session; the Expert Mechanism's follow-up study and advice on access to justice in the promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous peoples [A/HRC/EMRIP/2014/3/Rev.1]; the study and advice on the promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous peoples in disaster risk reduction, prevention and preparedness initiatives [A/HRC/EMRIP/2014/2]; and the final summary of responses to a questionnaire [A/HRC/EMRIP/2014/4] (see below). Discussions on the Declaration included a panel discussion on the role of parliaments in implementing the Declaration.

As requested by the Human Rights Council [YUN 2013, p. 728], the Expert Mechanism in July submitted a report [A/HRC/27/67], which contained the final summary of responses to the questionnaire seeking the views of States and indigenous peoples on best practices regarding possible appropriate measures and implementation strategies to attain the goals of the Declaration. Responses to the questionnaire were received from 25 States and 18 indigenous peoples' organizations.

In August, the Expert Mechanism submitted the study [A/HRC/27/65] on access to justice in the promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous peoples, which examined barriers and remedies in access to justice for indigenous women, children and youth, and persons with disabilities; addressed restorative justice and its role in achieving peace and reconciliation; and concluded with Expert Mechanism Advice No. 6: Restorative justice, indigenous juridical systems and access to justice for indigenous women, children and youth, and persons with disabilities.

Also in August, the Expert Mechanism submitted the study [A/HRC/27/66] on promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous peoples in disaster risk reduction, prevention and preparedness initiatives. The study explored the links between disaster risk reduction and human rights; analysed factors placing indigenous peoples at risk of being affected by disasters; proposed ways to increase indigenous peoples' participation in disaster risk reduction initiatives; and concluded with Expert Mechanism Advice No. 7: Promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous peoples in disaster risk reduction initiatives.

Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Peoples

The Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Peoples, at its twenty-seventh session (Geneva, 17–21 February) [A/69/278], allocated 25 grants to support the participation of representatives of indigenous peoples' organizations and communities in the thirteenth session of the Permanent Forum, 20 grants to attend the seventh session of the Expert Mechanism and three grants to attend sessions of other bodies. Between December 2013 and June 2014, nine States contributed $471,321 to the Fund.

Second International Decade

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/153 [YUN 2012, p. 732], the Secretary-General in August submitted the final report [A/69/271] on progress made in the achievement of the goal and objectives of the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (2005–2014) [YUN 2004, p. 799], which followed assessments in 2010 [YUN 2010, p. 762] and 2012 [YUN 2012, p. 732]. The final report provided examples of efforts to achieve the objectives of the Programme of Action for the Decade [YUN 2005, p. 879], and analysed the impact of the Second Decade on the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals. While there had been some progress in achieving the goals of the Decade, a substantial gap remained between the formal recognition of indigenous peoples and the implementation of policies on the ground. The Secretary-General concluded that the post-2015 development agenda provided an opportunity to develop indicators to measure the progress of development initiatives that addressed the needs of indigenous peoples. The report would also serve as input to the preparatory process for the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples (see p. 888).

Trust Fund for Second International Decade

On 8–9 May, the Bureau of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, acting as the Advisory Group for the projects for the Second International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, decided to fund projects in 15 countries in the 2014 round.

Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues

The 16-member Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, at its thirteenth session (New York, 12–23 May) [E/2014/43 & Corr.1], considered as its special theme “Principles of good governance consistent with the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples: articles 3 to 6 and 46”. It had before it reports [E/C.19/2014/1–10] submitted by its secretariat and subsidiary mechanisms, Governments, UN system bodies, intergovernmental organizations, regional organizations and NGOs. The Forum recommended five draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council on: an international expert group meeting on the theme “Dialogue on an optional protocol to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples”; report of the Forum on its thirteenth session and provisional agenda for its fourteenth session; venue and dates of the fourteenth session; changing the name of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues; and an additional one-day meeting. The Forum identified proposals, objectives, recommendations and areas of possible action and, through the Council, recommended that States, UN system entities, intergovernmental organizations, indigenous peoples, the private sector and NGOs assist in their realization. The Forum issued recommendations and held half-day discussions on the Asian Region and on the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples.

Economic and Social Council action. On 16 July, the Economic and Social Council authorized an international expert group meeting on the theme “Dialogue on an optional protocol to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples” (decision 2014/243); decided that further discussion was needed on the change of name of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues to the “Permanent Forum on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples” (decision 2014/246); decided that an additional one-day meeting would be organized for members of the Permanent Forum to discuss methods of work (decision 2014/247); took note of the report of the Permanent Forum on its thirteenth session and approved the provisional agenda for its fourteenth session (decision 2014/245); and decided that the fourteenth session of the Permanent Forum would be held in New York from 20 April to 1 May 2015 (decision 2014/244).

Expert meetings and conferences

An international expert group meeting on the theme “Sexual health and reproductive rights: articles 21, 22 (1), 23 and 24 of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples” (New York, 15–17 January) [E/C.19/2014/8] called for increased emphasis on the provision of intercultural health care that responded to and engaged with indigenous peoples’ notions of health and illness, traditional medicinal knowledge and practices.

The annual meeting of the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples’ Issues (Geneva, 1–2 December) [E/C.19/2015/7] discussed, among other matters, issues related to the outcome document of the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/485], adopted resolution 69/159 without vote [agenda item 65 (a)].

Rights of indigenous peoples

The General Assembly,

Recalling all relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council and the Economic and Social Council relating to the rights of indigenous peoples, reaffirming its resolutions 65/198 of 21 December 2010, 66/142 of 19 December 2011, 67/153 of 20 December 2012, 68/149 of 18 December 2013 and 69/2 of 22 September 2014, and recalling also Human Rights Council resolution 27/13 of 25 September 2014,

Welcoming the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, held in New York on 22 and 23 September 2014, in which Heads of State and Government, ministers and representatives of Member States reiterated the important and continuing role of the United Nations in promoting and protecting the rights of indigenous peoples and welcomed the inclusive preparatory process for the high-level plenary meeting, including the comprehensive engagement of the representatives of indigenous peoples,

Reaffirming the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, which addresses their individual and collective rights,

Stressing the importance of promoting and pursuing the objectives of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples also through international cooperation to support national and regional efforts to achieve the ends of the Declaration, including the right to maintain and strengthen the distinct political, legal, economic, social and cultural institutions of indigenous peoples and the right to participate fully, if they so choose, in the political, economic, social and cultural life of the State,

Recalling the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, entitled “The future we want”,

Recognizing the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) of the International Labour Organization,

Taking note of the outcome documents of the recent regional review conferences on population and development, including the Regional Conference on Population and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, which included “Indigenous peoples: interculturalism and rights”,

Recognizing the value and the diversity of the cultures and the form of social organization of indigenous peoples and their holistic traditional scientific knowledge of their lands, natural resources and environment,

Recognizing also the importance of traditional sustainable agricultural practices, including traditional seed supply systems, as well as access to credit and other financial services, markets, secure land tenure, health care, social services, education, training, knowledge and appropriate and affordable technologies, including efficient irrigation, the reuse of treated wastewater and water harvesting and storage for indigenous peoples and others living in rural areas,

Welcoming the achievements made during the Second International Decade of the World’s Indigenous People, and recognizing that challenges remain in finding solutions to the problems faced by indigenous peoples in such areas as traditional knowledge, science, culture, education, health, human rights, the environment and social and economic development,

Concerned about the extreme disadvantages that indigenous peoples have typically faced across a range of social and economic indicators and about the impediments to their full enjoyment of their rights,

Stressing the need to pay particular attention to the rights and special needs of indigenous women, children, youth, older persons and persons with disabilities, as set out in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, including in the process of protecting and promoting their access to justice,

Recognizing the forthcoming thirtieth anniversary of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Peoples, in 2015,

1. Notes the work of the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues and of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the rights of indigenous peoples, takes note of her report, and encourages all Governments to respond favourably to her requests for visits;

2. Welcomes the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, and urges Governments and the United Nations system, in consultation and cooperation with indigenous peoples through their representatives and institutions, to implement, when necessary, appropriate measures, concrete policies, plans, programmes, projects and other measures to realize the commitments made in the outcome document, and invites international and regional organizations, within their respective mandates, national human rights institutions, where they exist, civil society, including non-governmental organizations, and other relevant actors to contribute to those efforts;

3. Reiterates the commitment of Member States to cooperate with indigenous peoples, through their own representative institutions, to develop and implement national action plans, strategies or other measures, where relevant, to achieve the ends of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the final report of the Secretary-General on the achievement of the goal and objectives of the Second International Decade of the World’s Indigenous People, one of the major highlights of which was the adoption, in 2007, of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, but regrets that gaps remain between the formal recognition of indigenous peoples’ rights and the implementation of policies on the ground;

5. Decides to convene a high-level event to mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, to be held during the seventy-first session of the General Assembly, in 2017, and that the event will take stock of the achievements of the preceding 10 years and assess the remaining challenges for the rights of indigenous peoples, and also consider the further follow-up to the Declaration, including the consideration of a third International Decade;

6. Welcomes the designation by the Secretary-General of the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs as the senior official of the United Nations system responsible for coordinating follow-up action to the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, in order, in consultation and cooperation with indigenous peoples, the Inter-

Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples' Issues and Member States, to begin development, within existing resources, of a system-wide action plan to ensure a coherent approach to achieving the ends of the Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, raising awareness of the rights of indigenous peoples and increasing the coherence of the activities of the system in this regard;

7. Encourages those States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) of the International Labour Organization to consider doing so and to consider supporting the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and welcomes the increased support of States for the Declaration;

8. Urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Peoples, the Trust Fund on Indigenous Issues and the United Nations Indigenous Peoples' Partnership, and invites indigenous organizations and private institutions and individuals to do likewise;

9. Decides to continue observing in New York, Geneva and other United Nations offices every year on 9 August the International Day of Indigenous Peoples, to request the Secretary-General to support the observance of the day from within existing resources and to encourage Governments to observe the day at the national level;

10. Encourages States to consider including in their reports related to indigenous peoples and women information on the progress made and challenges in the implementation of Commission on the Status of Women resolutions 49/7 of 11 March 2005, entitled "Indigenous women: beyond the ten-year review of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action", and 56/4 of 9 March 2012, entitled "Indigenous women: key actors in poverty and hunger eradication";

11. Also encourages States, in consultation and cooperation with indigenous peoples, to take the appropriate measures at the national level, including legislative, policy and administrative measures, to achieve the ends of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, and to promote awareness of it among all sectors of society, including members of legislative, judicial and civil service bodies;

12. Underlines the need to intensify efforts, in cooperation with indigenous peoples, to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence and discrimination against indigenous women, children, youth, older persons and persons with disabilities and to support measures that will ensure their empowerment and full and effective participation in decision-making processes at all levels and in all areas and eliminate barriers to their full, equal and effective participation in political, economic, social and cultural life;

13. Stresses the need to strengthen the commitment of States and the entities of the United Nations system to mainstream the promotion and protection of the rights of indigenous peoples into development agendas at the national, regional and international levels, and encourages giving due consideration to the rights of indigenous peoples in the ongoing discussion of the post-2015 development agenda;

14. Encourages States and entities of the United Nations system to strengthen international cooperation, including to address the disadvantages faced by indigenous peoples, and to increase technical cooperation and financial assistance in this regard;

15. Reaffirms its decision in the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples to continue at its seventieth session the consideration of ways to enable the participation of indigenous peoples' representatives and organizations in meetings of relevant United Nations bodies on issues affecting them, including any specific proposals made by the Secretary-General in this regard;

16. Welcomes the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the status of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Peoples and requests the High Commissioner to submit a report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Rights of indigenous peoples", a sub-item entitled "Follow-up to the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples".

World Conference

The General Assembly held a high-level plenary meeting (New York, 22 September) [A/69/PV.4] known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples to share perspectives and best practices on the realization of the rights of indigenous peoples, including pursuing the objectives of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples [YUN 2007, p. 690]. The World Conference resulted in a concise, action-oriented outcome document prepared on the basis of inclusive and open informal consultations with Member States and indigenous peoples. Addressing the meeting, the Secretary-General stated that he was encouraged that the draft conference outcome document [A/69/L.1] contained action-oriented commitments; welcomed the document's requests to him; and said that he would consult with UN system entities on the way forward, and that the Organization would work closely with all indigenous peoples and Member States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 September [meeting 4], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/2 [draft: A/69/L.1] without vote [agenda item 65].

Outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples

The General Assembly

Adopts the following outcome document:

Outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples

1. We, the Heads of State and Government, ministers and representatives of Member States, reaffirming our solemn commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in a spirit of cooperation with the indigenous peoples of the world, are assembled at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 22 and 23 September 2014, on the occasion of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, to reiterate the important and continuing role of the United Nations in promoting and protecting the rights of indigenous peoples.

2. We welcome the indigenous peoples' preparatory processes for the World Conference, including the Global Indigenous Preparatory Conference held in Alta, Norway, in June 2013. We take note of the outcome document of the Alta Conference and other contributions made by indigenous peoples. We also welcome the inclusive preparatory process for the high-level plenary meeting, including the comprehensive engagement of the representatives of indigenous peoples.

3. We reaffirm our support for the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, adopted by the General Assembly on 13 September 2007, and our commitments made in this respect to consult and cooperate in good faith with the indigenous peoples concerned through their own representative institutions in order to obtain their free, prior and informed consent before adopting and implementing legislative or administrative measures that may affect them, in accordance with the applicable principles of the Declaration.

4. We reaffirm our solemn commitment to respect, promote and advance and in no way diminish the rights of indigenous peoples and to uphold the principles of the Declaration.

5. In addition to the Declaration, we recall the other major achievements of the past two decades in building an international framework for the advancement of the rights and aspirations of the world's indigenous peoples, including the establishment of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, the creation of the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the establishment of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples. We commit ourselves to giving due consideration to recommendations and advice issued by those bodies in cooperation with indigenous peoples.

6. We encourage those States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the International Labour Organization Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), to consider doing so. We recall the obligation of ratifying States under the Convention to develop coordinated and systematic action to protect the rights of indigenous peoples.

7. We commit ourselves to taking, in consultation and cooperation with indigenous peoples, appropriate measures at the national level, including legislative, policy and administrative measures, to achieve the ends of the Declaration and to promote awareness of it among all sectors of society, including members of legislatures, the judiciary and the civil service.

8. We commit ourselves to cooperating with indigenous peoples, through their own representative institutions, to develop and implement national action plans, strategies or other measures, where relevant, to achieve the ends of the Declaration.

9. We commit ourselves to promoting and protecting the rights of indigenous persons with disabilities and to continuing to improve their social and economic conditions, including by developing targeted measures for the forementioned action plans, strategies or measures, in collaboration with indigenous persons with disabilities. We also commit ourselves to ensuring that national legislative, policy and institutional structures relating to indigenous peoples are inclusive of indigenous persons with disabilities and contribute to the advancement of their rights.

10. We commit ourselves to working with indigenous peoples to disaggregate data, as appropriate, or conduct surveys and to utilizing holistic indicators of indigenous peoples' well-being to address the situation and needs of indigenous peoples and individuals, in particular older persons, women, youth, children and persons with disabilities.

11. We commit ourselves to ensuring equal access to high-quality education that recognizes the diversity of the cultures of indigenous peoples and to health, housing, water, sanitation and other economic and social programmes to improve well-being, including through initiatives, policies and the provision of resources. We intend to empower indigenous peoples to deliver such programmes as far as possible.

12. We recognize the importance of indigenous peoples' health practices and their traditional medicine and knowledge.

13. We commit ourselves to ensuring that indigenous individuals have equal access to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health. We also commit ourselves to intensifying efforts to reduce rates of HIV and AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and non-communicable diseases by focusing on prevention, including through appropriate programmes, policies and resources for indigenous individuals, and to ensure their access to sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcome documents of their review conferences.

14. We commit ourselves to promoting the right of every indigenous child, in community with members of his or her group, to enjoy his or her own culture, to profess and practise his or her own religion or to use his or her own language.

15. We support the empowerment and capacity-building of indigenous youth, including their full and effective participation in decision-making processes in matters that affect them. We commit ourselves to developing, in consultation with indigenous peoples, policies, programmes and resources, where relevant, that target the well-being of indigenous youth, in particular in the areas of health, education, employment and the transmission of traditional knowledge, languages and practices, and to taking measures to promote awareness and understanding of their rights.

16. We acknowledge that indigenous peoples' justice institutions can play a positive role in providing access to justice and dispute resolution and contribute to harmonious relationships within indigenous peoples' communities and within society. We commit ourselves to coordinating and conducting dialogue with those institutions, where they exist.

17. We commit ourselves to supporting the empowerment of indigenous women and to formulating and implementing, in collaboration with indigenous peoples, in particular indigenous women and their organizations, policies and programmes designed to promote capacity-building and strengthen their leadership. We support measures that will ensure the full and effective participation of indigenous women in decision-making processes at all levels and in all areas and eliminate barriers to their participation in political, economic, social and cultural life.

18. We commit ourselves to intensifying our efforts, in cooperation with indigenous peoples, to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence and discrimination against indigenous peoples and individuals, in particular women, children, youth, older persons and persons with disabilities, by strengthening legal, policy and institutional frameworks.

19. We invite the Human Rights Council to consider examining the causes and consequences of violence against indigenous women and girls, in consultation with the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples and other special procedures mandate holders within their respective mandates. We also invite the Commission on the Status of Women to consider the issue of the empowerment of indigenous women at a future session.

20. We recognize commitments made by States, with regard to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, to consult and cooperate in good faith with the indigenous peoples concerned through their own representative institutions in order to obtain their free and informed consent prior to the approval of any project affecting their lands or territories and other resources.

21. We also recognize commitments made by States, with regard to the Declaration, to establish at the national level, in conjunction with the indigenous peoples concerned, fair, independent, impartial, open and transparent processes to acknowledge, advance and adjudicate the rights of indigenous peoples pertaining to lands, territories and resources.

22. We recognize that the traditional knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous peoples and local communities make an important contribution to the conservation and sustainable use of biodiversity. We acknowledge the importance of the participation of indigenous peoples, wherever possible, in the benefits of their knowledge, innovations and practices.

23. We intend to work with indigenous peoples to address the impact or potential impact on them of major development projects, including those involving the activities of extractive industries, including with the aim of managing risks appropriately.

24. We recall the responsibility of transnational corporations and other business enterprises to respect all applicable laws and international principles, including the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights: Implementing the United Nations "Protect, Respect and Remedy" Framework and to operate transparently and in a socially and environmentally responsible manner. In this regard, we commit ourselves to taking further steps, as appropriate, to prevent abuses of the rights of indigenous peoples.

25. We commit ourselves to developing, in conjunction with the indigenous peoples concerned, and where appropriate, policies, programmes and resources to support indigenous peoples' occupations, traditional subsistence activities, economies, livelihoods, food security and nutrition.

26. We recognize the importance of the role that indigenous peoples can play in economic, social and environmental development through traditional sustainable agricultural practices, including traditional seed supply systems, and access to credit and other financial services, markets, secure land tenure, health care, social services, education, training, knowledge and appropriate and affordable technologies, including for irrigation and water harvesting and storage.

27. We affirm and recognize the importance of indigenous peoples' religious and cultural sites and of providing access to and repatriation of their ceremonial objects and human remains in accordance with the ends of the Declaration. We commit ourselves to developing, in conjunction with the indigenous peoples concerned, fair, transparent and effective mechanisms for access to and repatriation of ceremonial objects and human remains at the national and international levels.

28. We invite the Human Rights Council, taking into account the views of indigenous peoples, to review the mandates of its existing mechanisms, in particular the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, during the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly, with a view to modifying and improving the Expert Mechanism so that it can more effectively promote respect for the Declaration, including by better assisting Member States to monitor, evaluate and improve the achievement of the ends of the Declaration.

29. We invite the human rights treaty bodies to consider the Declaration in accordance with their respective mandates. We encourage Member States to include, as appropriate, information on the situation of the rights of indigenous peoples, including measures taken to pursue the objectives of the Declaration, in reports to those bodies and during the universal periodic review process.

30. We welcome the increasingly important role of national and regional human rights institutions in contributing to the achievement of the ends of the Declaration. We encourage the private sector, civil society and academic institutions to take an active role in promoting and protecting the rights of indigenous peoples.

31. We request the Secretary-General, in consultation and cooperation with indigenous peoples, the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples' Issues and Member States, to begin the development, within existing resources, of a system-wide action plan to ensure a coherent approach to achieving the ends of the Declaration and to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on progress made. We invite the Secretary-General to accord, by the end of the seventieth session of the Assembly, an existing senior official of the United Nations system, with access to the highest levels of decision-making within the system, responsibility for coordinating the action plan, raising awareness of the rights of indigenous peoples at the highest possible level and increasing the coherence of the activities of the system in this regard.

32. We invite United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, in addition to resident coordinators, where appropriate, to support the implementation, upon request, of national action plans, strategies or other measures to achieve the ends of the Declaration, in accordance with national priorities and United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks, where they exist, through better coordination and cooperation.

33. We commit ourselves to considering, at the seventieth session of the General Assembly, ways to enable the participation of indigenous peoples' representatives and institutions in meetings of relevant United Nations bodies on issues affecting them, including any specific proposals made by the Secretary-General in response to the request made in paragraph 40 below.

34. We encourage Governments to recognize the significant contribution of indigenous peoples to the promotion of sustainable development, in order to achieve a just balance among the economic, social and environmental needs of present and future generations, and the need to promote harmony with nature to protect our planet and its ecosystems, known as Mother Earth in a number of countries and regions.

35. We commit ourselves to respecting the contributions of indigenous peoples to ecosystem management and sustainable development, including knowledge acquired through experience in hunting, gathering, fishing, pastoralism and agriculture, as well as their sciences, technologies and cultures.

36. We confirm that indigenous peoples' knowledge and strategies to sustain their environment should be respected and taken into account when we develop national and international approaches to climate change mitigation and adaptation.

37. We note that indigenous peoples have the right to determine and develop priorities and strategies for exercising their right to development. In this regard, we commit ourselves to giving due consideration to all the rights of indigenous peoples in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda.

38. We invite Member States and actively encourage the private sector and other institutions to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Peoples, the Trust Fund on Indigenous Issues, the Indigenous Peoples Assistance Facility and the United Nations Indigenous Peoples' Partnership as a means of respecting and promoting the rights of indigenous peoples worldwide.

39. We request the Secretary-General to include relevant information on indigenous peoples in his final report on the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals.

40. We request the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Inter-Agency Support Group on Indigenous Peoples' Issues and Member States, taking into account the views expressed by indigenous peoples, to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the implementation of the present outcome document, and to submit at the same session, through the Economic and Social Council, recommendations regarding how to use, modify and improve existing United Nations mechanisms to achieve the ends of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, ways to enhance a coherent, system-wide approach to achieving the ends of the Declaration and specific proposals to enable the participation of indigenous peoples' representatives and institutions, building on the report of the Secretary-General on ways and means of promoting participation at the United Nations of indigenous peoples' representatives on the issues affecting them.

In October [A/69/521], the Secretary-General submitted proposed additional requirements for the 2014–2015 programme budget of $101,800 resulting from requests in the outcome document, to which the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions had no objection [A/69/657].

Human rights country situations

In 2014, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Secretary-General, Special Rapporteurs and Independent Experts addressed the human rights situation in Member States.

In Africa, in response to continued and widespread human rights violations and abuses in the Central African Republic, the Human Rights Council held its twentieth special session and appointed an Independent Expert to undertake an urgent visit to the country. In Côte d'Ivoire, the situation intensified with the approach of the 2015 presidential elections. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the High Commissioner commended the efforts of the Congolese authorities to address serious human rights violations, but remained concerned about the situation, particularly in the eastern provinces. The Council called on the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to commission a study on the impact of technical assistance and capacity-building on the human rights situation in the country for submission in 2015. In Eritrea, the Council established a commission of inquiry to investigate alleged violations of human rights. The Ebola virus disease outbreak exacerbated problems in Guinea, and slowed progress made in other human rights areas. Libya faced the worst political crisis and escalation of violence since the armed conflict of 2011, with two parliaments and governments claiming legitimacy, while powerful armed groups exercised control on the ground, committing violations of international human rights and humanitarian law with impunity. The High Commissioner for Human Rights reiterated his appeal to all parties to end hostilities and build a State based on respect for human rights and the rule of law. The ongoing violent crisis in South Sudan saw the targeted killing of civilians, mass displacement, allegations of the recruitment and use of child soldiers, widespread incidents of arbitrary arrest and detention, sexual violence and mass killings. The human rights situations in Mali, Somalia and the Sudan also remained of concern.

In the Americas, progress was made in Bolivia, Colombia and Guatemala, yet issues remained. In Haiti, the Council welcomed the El Rancho Accord of 14 March, which led to elections and the appointment in December of a new Prime Minister.

In Asia, the human rights situation in Afghanistan was negatively affected by the contested security, political and economic transitions.

The High Commissioner provided recommendations for the Government, anti-Government bodies and the international community to improve the situation. In Cambodia, the human rights situation was profoundly affected by the political climate. Security forces used violence, arrests and live ammunition to disperse demonstrations, and physical attacks against journalists spiked during the year. The commission of inquiry on human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea reported that, in many instances, the systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations committed by the authorities in that country constituted crimes against humanity. The General Assembly decided to submit the report of the commission to the Security Council for action towards ensuring accountability. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iran found that numerous issues flagged by the international community persisted, and in some cases appeared to have worsened. The Human Rights Council held its twenty-second special session on the situation in Iraq in the light of the violations and abuses committed by the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant and associated groups. In Myanmar, efforts continued for a nationwide ceasefire and framework for political dialogue, but the tension in Rakhine did not lessen, causing concern and alarm both domestically and internationally. The High Commissioner briefed the Council on the comprehensive investigation into alleged serious violations and abuses of human rights committed in Sri Lanka by both parties to the conflict and appealed to the authorities to cooperate fully with the investigation, as well as with the relevant special procedures mandate holders. In Yemen, the High Commissioner welcomed the conclusion in January of the National Dialogue Conference and the Conference outcomes pertaining to human rights, but she regretted that the overall security situation in the country.

In Europe, there was a continued systemic denial of human rights to citizens in Belarus by way of a purposeful combination of restrictive laws and abusive practices, and in Cyprus, concerns were expressed about factors impeding the implementation of international human rights standards owing to the protracted conflict. In Ukraine, there was violence and excessive use of force by the police in response to large-scale street protests, particularly on Independence Square in Kyiv, where over 100 people were killed in January and February. The violations led to the downfall of the Government. In March, after soldiers without insignia as well as paramilitary and self-defence groups took control of Crimea, the High Commissioner deployed a monitoring mission to propose recommendations regarding the emerging human rights issues and the root causes of the situation.

In the Middle East, the international commission of inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic found that more than 250,000 people were besieged in the country and subjected to relentless shelling and bombardment. Government forces and pro-government militia perpetrated massacres and conducted widespread attacks on civilians, systematically committing crimes against humanity, war crimes and gross violations of human rights. Chemical weapons were used in multiple incidents during the conflict. The Assembly condemned the use of chemical weapons in the Syrian Arab Republic, demanded that the Syrian authorities meet their responsibilities to protect the Syrian population, and demanded that all parties end all violations and abuses of international human rights and humanitarian law. In territories occupied by Israel, settlement activity, including increased settler violence, continued. The Council held its twenty-first special session to address the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory following an Israeli military operation that involved disproportionate and indiscriminate attacks, aerial bombardment and the targeting of civilians in collective punishment. In the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, the human rights situation deteriorated as security operations increased and resulted in a high number of killings and injuries.

General aspects

In the annual report on the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) [A/HRC/28/3], the High Commissioner, Zeid Ra'ad Zeid Al-Hussein (Jordan), reviewed the work of the Office at the country and regional levels, including its efforts to respond to deteriorating human rights situations. At the country level, its work was conducted through human rights field presences, support for human rights mechanisms and dialogue between the High Commissioner and Member States—including bilateral meetings, open or confidential communication, country visits by the High Commissioner and technical cooperation programmes. The report highlighted the new four-year (2014–2017) planning cycle and its newly defined thematic priorities: strengthening international human rights mechanisms; enhancing equality and countering discrimination; combating impunity and strengthening accountability and the rule of law; integrating human rights into development and in the economic sphere; widening the democratic space; and early warning and protection of human rights in situations of conflict, violence and insecurity. All priorities were cross-cutting and mutually reinforcing.

In November, OHCHR supported 67 field presences: 13 country or stand-alone offices, 12 regional offices and centres, 14 human rights components in peace missions, and 28 human rights advisers within country teams. Country or stand-alone offices were comprised of 12 country offices in Bolivia, Cambodia, Colombia, Guatemala, Guinea, Mauritania, Mexico, the State of Palestine, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda and Yemen and one stand-alone office in Kosovo. Regional presences included 10 regional offices in East Africa (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia); Southern Africa (Pretoria, South Africa); West Africa (Dakar, Senegal); Central America (Panama City, Panama); South America (Santiago, Chile); Europe (Brussels, Belgium); Central Asia (Bishkek, Kyrgyzstan); South East Asia (Bangkok, Thailand); the Pacific (Suva, Fiji); and the Middle East and Africa (Beirut, Lebanon), as well as a subregional centre for human rights and democracy for Central Africa (Yaoundé, Cameroon) and a Training and Documentation Centre for South-West Asia and the Arab Region (Doha, Qatar).

On efficiency aspects, OHCHR established a results-based management system to ensure that its scant resources were planned and allocated to ensure maximum impact. The High Commissioner concluded that OHCHR continued to provide substantive support to human rights mechanisms; worked to fulfil all mandates received from the relevant intergovernmental bodies and to provide valuable advice to stakeholders; and delivered a considerable number of technical assistance activities upon the request of States.

Africa

Central African Republic

Human Rights Council special session. In a 13 January letter [A/HRC/S-20/1], Ethiopia, on behalf of the Group of African States in Geneva, requested the convening of a special session of the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in the Central African Republic, which was supported by 36 Council members and 43 observer States. The Council held its twentieth special session on 20 January [A/HRC/S-20/2].

Human Rights Council action. On 20 January [A/69/53 (res. S-20/1)], the Council condemned the continued and widespread violations and abuses of human rights perpetrated by all actors; demanded an immediate halt to all human rights violations, abuses and acts of violence; urged all parties to protect civilians, in particular women and children, from sexual violence; and called on the international community to assist the national authorities and neighbouring host countries to ensure protection of and assistance to those fleeing the violence. It emphasized the urgency of appointing an Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Central African Republic; and requested the Independent Expert to undertake an urgent visit to the country, present an oral update on the situation at the Council's twenty-fifth (2014) session, and submit a preliminary report to its twenty-sixth (2014) session, pursuant to Council resolution 24/34 [YUN 2013, p. 733].

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Council resolution 23/18 [YUN 2013, p. 733], in February, the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/25/43] on the situation of human rights in the Central African Republic, which evaluated the need for technical assistance and capacity-building in the country. The High Commissioner identified the priority areas in which assistance needed to be provided by the end of the year, including support for national reconciliation, the development of a strategy to combat impunity, rehabilitation of the judicial and prison systems, reform of the security sector and strengthening of the national human rights protection system. The report made recommendations to the transitional authorities, the international community and the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in the Central African Republic on their respective roles. She concluded that, during the conflict between 10 December 2012 and 23 March 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 733], violations of international humanitarian and human rights law had been committed by Government forces, under the regime of former President François Bozizé, and the Séléka armed group, and that those human rights violations had continued when the Séléka came to power. Violence had continued throughout 2013 and by year's end, the number of deaths had reached 728 in Bangui alone, and the number of displaced persons reached 370,000 in the capital and 785,000 nationwide.

Reports of Independent Expert. On 26 March [A/HRC/25/CRP.2], pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 24/34 [YUN 2013, p. 733], the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Central African Republic, Marie-Thérèse Keita Bocoum (Côte d'Ivoire), submitted an oral update to the Council following her visit to the country (4–14 March).

In May, pursuant to Council resolution S-20/1 (see above), the Independent Expert submitted a preliminary report [A/HRC/26/53], following her second visit to the country (10–18 April), where she held talks with leading political figures and the transitional authorities, in particular the transitional Head of State. During her first visit, the Independent Expert noted that the right to life, security and physical integrity was being violated by assassinations, summary executions, and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment. In addition, the exercise of civil and political rights, more particularly freedom of opinion, religion and movement and freedom to choose one's place of residence, were constrained by the deterioration of the security situation, impunity and the fragility of State institutions. Overcrowding and the prevailing insecurity in Bangui prison, the lack of appropriate detention facilities in the rest of the country, the weaknesses of the judicial system and the ineffectiveness of the criminal justice system, hampered the administration of justice and the fight against impunity. The situation was regarded as one of the root causes of the instability threatening social peace and undermined efforts at dialogue and inter-communal reconciliation. Breaches of international humanitarian law were reported during the Independent Expert's two visits, including: forced displacements of the civilian population, particularly Muslims; destruction of property essential to the survival of the population, including health centres, schools, residential dwellings and fields; attacks against the civilian population in some parts of the country; rapes and other forms of sexual violence; and the recruitment of minors by armed groups.

On the economic and social level, the Independent Expert noted that the crisis experienced by the Central African Republic since December 2012 had led to the collapse of economic activity, paralysed the Government administration and given rise to an unprecedented humanitarian crisis with nearly one quarter of the population being displaced or reduced to refugee status. She concluded that the economic recovery remained dependent on the normalization of security conditions, the return of displaced persons and refugees and the gradual recovery of economic activity, particularly in the agricultural and trade sectors.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/28)], the Council condemned the widespread human rights violations and abuses committed by all actors; urged all parties to protect civilians from sexual and gender-based violence; and called on the authorities to ensure respect for the rights and fundamental freedoms of the entire population and take steps to end the impunity of the perpetrators of crimes. It welcomed the appointment of a new Government to lead the political transition; called on all parties to respect the terms of the Cessation of Hostilities Agreement of 23 July (see p. 228); and invited the Central African authorities to consolidate the security situation in the country through the introduction of a disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme. The Council extended the mandate of the Independent Expert for one year to monitor, verify and report on the human rights situation in the country, with a view to making recommendations concerning technical assistance and capacity-building; and requested the Independent Expert to provide an oral update at its twenty-eighth (2015) session and a written report at its thirtieth (2015) session. It also decided to hold an interactive dialogue at its twenty-ninth (2015) session to assess developments in the human rights situation on the ground, with a particular focus on the fight against impunity.

Côte d'Ivoire

Report of Independent Expert. In a May report [A/HRC/26/52] on the situation of human rights in Côte d'Ivoire for the period from December 2013 and April 2014, the Independent Expert, Doudou Diène (Senegal), reported on his sixth visit to the country (11–24 February) and included a proposed programme of action for addressing the needs of the victims of the Ivorian crisis, which was the outcome of the international conference on the situation (Abidjan, 12–14 February), organized by the Independent Expert. The situation in the country was becoming more complex with the approach of the 2015 presidential elections. The Independent Expert re-examined a number of concerns, connected, inter alia, with the increase in sexual violence, the persistence of abuses committed by the Forces républicaines de Côte d'Ivoire and the dozos, the population's socioeconomic circumstances, and concerns about freedom of expression and association. He also confirmed the progress made towards consolidating the rule of law, while underscoring the major challenges that remained. In conclusion, the Independent Expert recommended taking up the situation of victims as a national cause, in order to ensure that victims of the crisis did not become victims of the political polarization in Ivorian society.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/32)], the Council condemned attacks by unidentified armed groups in Côte d'Ivoire; and welcomed the substantial improvement in security matters, the cooperation of the Government with UN human rights machinery, and the resumption of criminal trials throughout the national territory after a 16-year hiatus. It applauded the work in the political framework for ongoing dialogue aimed at facilitating inclusive political pluralism, the adoption of new legislation, notably in the area of family law providing for equal rights between men and women in marriage; the reform of the Independent Electoral Commission; the commitments made by the Government to endorse the Independent Expert's recommendations; and Government efforts to ratify international and regional human rights instruments. The Council urged the Government to support the implementation of the mandate of the Dialogue, Truth and Reconciliation Commission [YUN 2011, p. 146]; requested the international community to continue to support the reconstruction and reconciliation process underway; and requested OHCHR to continue to provide the technical assistance requested by the Government, including support for the Dialogue, Truth and Reconciliation Commission. It requested the Independent Expert to submit a report at the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session and final recommendations at its twenty-ninth (2015) session; and decided to establish a new mandate on capacity-building and technical cooperation with Côte d'Ivoire in the field of human rights, to follow on from the previous mandate, for a period of one year, renewable, from the twenty-sixth (2014) to the twenty-ninth (2015) sessions of the Council.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Report of High Commissioner. In a September report on the human rights situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) [A/HRC/27/42], covering the period from June 2013 to May 2014, pursuant to Council resolution 24/27 [YUN 2013, p. 736], the High Commissioner commended the efforts made by the Congolese authorities to address serious human rights concerns, in particular, the continued increase in the prosecution of State agents for human rights violations, as well as the promulgation by the Government of an amnesty law for acts of insurrection, acts of war and political offences, excluding amnesty for genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and other serious violations of human rights. The Government had also proposed legislation aimed at establishing specialized chambers within the civilian justice system to try perpetrators of war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide. Despite those efforts, the High Commissioner remained concerned about the human rights situation in the country, particularly in the eastern provinces. While the defeat of Mouvement du 23 mars, in November 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 735], had had a positive impact on the security and human rights situation, the operations of several armed groups to control resource-rich territories still represented a serious threat for civilians. In addition, the justice system continued to face various challenges in investigating and prosecuting perpetrators of human rights violations. Military tribunals, where they existed, were often understaffed and under-resourced, and the lack of independence of the military justice system from military hierarchy was problematic. Human rights activists, journalists and political opponents continued to face challenges and threats, particularly in the lead-up to the 2015 provincial and local elections and the 2016 presidential and legislative elections. The report reiterated previous recommendations of the High Commissioner, notably with regard to addressing impunity for past and present violations.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/27)], the Council encouraged the DRC to make the National Human Rights Commission operational [YUN 2013, p. 736] soon; welcomed the appointment, by an 8 July presidential order, of the Personal Representative of the Head of State on Sexual Violence and Child Recruitment; invited the Government and its national partners to ensure the transparency and credibility of the electoral process; welcomed the 30 August adoption of the action plan of the DRC Armed Forces to combat sexual violence; and encouraged the Government to ensure appropriate protection for journalists and human rights defenders in the course of their respective activities, and to ensure that the national disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programme took account of the specific needs of children affected by the armed conflict and the protection of their rights. The Council called on the High Commissioner to commission a study on the impact of technical assistance and capacity-building on the human rights situation in the DRC and to submit the report at its thirtieth (2015) session within the framework of an interactive dialogue.

Eritrea

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a May report [A/HRC/26/45] on the situation of human rights in Eritrea, submitted pursuant to Council resolution 23/21 [YUN 2013, p. 737], the Special Rapporteur, Sheila B. Keethartuh (Mauritius), focused on two main issues, namely, the indefinite national service, and arbitrary arrest and detention, including incommunicado detention and inhuman prison conditions. She emphasized that the rampant human rights violations occurring in those contexts, which were causing hundreds of thousands to leave the country for an unknown and precarious future elsewhere, required the Council's particular attention. Noting that Eritrea lived in a state of constant preparedness for combat based on what the State termed as a "no war-no peace" situation, the Special Rapporteur concluded that that rhetoric provided the context for the non-implementation of the Constitution ratified by the Constituent Assembly in 1997; withholding the organization of free and fair elections at the national level; severe restrictions on civil, political, economic and social rights; excessive militarization of society, with a high proportion of the population either in indefinite national service or in the People's Militia; and forced migration.

The Special Rapporteur highlighted that her recommendations from her first report [YUN 2013, p. 736] remained valid, as the Government of Eritrea had not demonstrated its willingness to take them into consideration and to act upon them. She presented a series of recommendations to the Government, including, inter alia, to discontinue the indefinite national service and demobilize those who had completed the 18 months of service originally envisaged; ensure children were not conscripted into the military; promptly investigate allegations of extrajudicial killings, torture, rape and sexual abuse within the national service; end human rights violations committed against conscripts during national service; close all unofficial and secret places of detention; permit unhindered access by international monitors to all detention facilities; end restrictions on the freedom of movement, within Eritrea and travel outside the country, without requiring an exit permit; and treat returnees in accordance with human rights international law.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/24)], the Council condemned the continued widespread and systematic violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms committed by the Eritrean authorities. It reiterated its call on the Government to end the use of arbitrary detention of its citizens, to account for and release all political prisoners, to end the system of indefinite national service, and to cooperate with OHCHR and allow unhindered access to a further mission. It extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year; requested the Rapporteur to report at its twenty-ninth (2015) session and to engage in an interactive dialogue with the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth (2014) session; invited the High Commissioner to report to the Council on progress in cooperation between Eritrea and OHCHR; and established, for one year, a commission of inquiry comprising the Special Rapporteur and two members appointed by the Council President to investigate all alleged violations of human rights in Eritrea, as outlined in the Special Rapporteur's reports. The Council requested the commission of inquiry to present an oral update to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session and to the General Assembly's seventieth (2015) session, and a written report to the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session. It also decided that all reports of the commission of inquiry would be transmitted to all relevant UN bodies and to the Secretary-General for appropriate action.

Guinea

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/35)], the Council welcomed the holding of peaceful elections in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 737] and the establishment of the new National Assembly of Guinea on 13 January 2014; recognized the Government's efforts to strengthen the rule of law and improve the human rights situation in the country; welcomed the existence of the new Ministry of Human Rights and Civil Liberties; and called on the Guinean authorities to guarantee freedom of opinion, expression, peaceful assembly and association. It urged all political stakeholders to continue to take an active part in the political dialogue, prevent and prohibit any act of violence, and be involved in the national reconciliation process; encouraged the Government to draw up a comprehensive programme to strengthen the administration of justice to combat impunity and strengthen respect for human rights; and invited the High Commissioner to report at the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session on the situation of human rights and the work of OHCHR in Guinea.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Council resolution 25/35 (see p. 896), the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/28/50] on the situation of human rights in Guinea in 2014, made recommendations to address diverse human rights problems and provided information on the activities of OHCHR in the country. During the year, action by the Government was dominated by efforts to control the Ebola virus. The case fatality rate, the measures adopted by the authorities to tackle the virus and the decisions by some neighbouring countries to close their borders affected the exercise of fundamental rights, such as, freedom of movement, the right to education, the right to health and the right to work. Government efforts to consolidate national institutions continued. The reform of the judicial system was marked by the establishment of the Supreme Council of Justice and the implementation of the special status for magistrates to ensure their independence and significantly improve their salary. Progress in combating impunity among members of the defence and security forces, however, had been very limited; prison overcrowding remained a major problem, due to the systematic use of pretrial detention; no progress had been made in efforts to combat violence against women and girls; and female genital mutilation was still practiced.

As Guinea was readying itself for presidential elections in 2015 in an extremely difficult socio-economic and health situation, the High Commissioner concluded that it was essential to foster and ensure the dialogue and prevent instability and all forms of violence. He recommended that the Government continue efforts to combat impunity; ensure that any measures taken to control the Ebola virus were based on respect for human rights; strengthen the resources of the security forces; ensure security and transparency during the Presidential elections, while respecting electoral rights and freedoms; strengthen efforts to combat discrimination, particularly gender-based stereotypes; and strengthen cooperation with the treaty bodies and the universal periodic review mechanism. The international community should continue to provide the Government with the assistance necessary to enable it to combat the spread of the Ebola virus; support the reform of the security and justice sectors; and provide the Government with the assistance necessary to reduce poverty and help improve the realization of social and economic rights.

Libya

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 22/19 [YUN 2013, p. 738], the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/25/42] on technical assistance for Libya in the field of human rights, which highlighted the importance of supporting the ongoing efforts of the Government to build the capacity of institutions dealing with human rights, transitional justice and the rule of law, and made recommendations to the Government on establishing a robust legal framework, strengthening national human rights bodies, ensuring effective administration of justice, developing comprehensive transitional justice processes and addressing the needs of social groups. The High Commissioner recommended that the Government, through capacity-building and technical assistance support, review and strengthen protections in law and policy to guarantee the rights of women, minorities, migrants, refugees and children; develop a strategy to address the issue of all persons displaced since 2011; address the situation of persons deprived of their liberty, with due regard to the situation of female detainees; strengthen the capacity of State institutions, such as the judicial system and the judicial police; implement an approach to transitional justice through ensuring the appointment of qualified and independent members of the Fact-Finding and Reconciliation Commission; develop a legal framework for the promotion and protection of human rights; ratify outstanding human rights treaties and optional protocols; and establish a moratorium on the use of the death penalty.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/37)], the Council welcomed the promulgation of Law No. 29 on 2 December 2013 on transitional justice; the issuance of Decree No. 119 of 2014 on recognizing victims of sexual violence as victims of war; and an amendment to the law to enhance the independence of the judiciary. It expressed concern at the continued mistreatment of detainees in detention centres out of judicial police control and called on the Government to establish control over all detention centres to ensure that detainees were treated in accordance with its international obligations; further empower women and girls, ensuring their full participation in relation to the electoral system, the police and the judiciary; and protect freedom of religion and belief.

The Council requested the High Commissioner to provide technical assistance to support the Government in building and strengthening national structures that had a direct impact on the overall observance of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law in the country; and to submit a report on the human rights situation in Libya and its technical support and capacity-building needs at the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Council resolution 25/37 (see p. 897), the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/28/51] on the situation of human rights in Libya and on related technical support and capacity-building needs. He stated that the country was facing the worst political crisis and escalation of violence since the 2011 armed conflict [YUN 2011, p. 266], with two parliaments and governments claiming legitimacy, while powerful armed groups exercised effective control on the ground, committing violations of international human rights and humanitarian law with impunity. In May, in Benghazi, General Khalifa Haftar, the head of the Libyan National Army, launched Operation Dignity against the Benghazi Revolutionaries Shura Council, with fierce fighting continuing throughout the year. A renewed offensive by the Libyan National Army in October, led to the Army gaining control of sizeable areas of Benghazi by December. Tripoli witnessed six consecutive weeks of heavy fighting from mid-July, when an alliance of armed groups launched Operation Libya Dawn against Zintan-affiliated armed groups allied with fighters from the Warshafana region, west of the city. In August, Libya Dawn fighters seized control of Tripoli International airport and other areas of Tripoli, and subsequently took control over the region. Sporadic fighting also erupted throughout the year in southern Libya. Meanwhile, the justice system had continued to be attacked and was no longer functioning in parts of the country. In that context, the provision of technical assistance had been significantly disrupted. Some State institutions and civil society organizations, however, were still functioning to varying degrees and required assistance.

The High Commissioner concluded that the actions taken by all parties involved in the violence had led to numerous grave abuses of human rights and violations of international human rights and humanitarian law. He reiterated his appeal to all parties to end hostilities and, through an inclusive political dialogue, establish a framework to build a State based on respect for human rights and the rule of law. He recommended that the Libyan authorities, through capacity-building and technical support: address the situation of persons deprived of their liberty; develop a strategy to address the issue of displaced persons; resume building State institutions, in particular the armed forces, law enforcement and the judiciary; review and strengthen legal and policy protections which guaranteed the rights of women, minorities, children, migrants, refugees and asylum seekers; ensure that those responsible for human rights violations and abuses were brought to justice; and cooperate fully with the International Criminal Court by assisting its investigations and complying with its rulings.

Mali

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/36)], the Council welcomed the return to constitutional order and significant improvement in the security situation in Mali; commended action taken by the Government to bring all perpetrators of human rights violations and abuses before impartial and independent courts regardless of their status or function; and welcomed the establishment of a Ministry for National Reconciliation. It reiterated its concern over the human rights violations, abuses and violations of international humanitarian law committed in the country since 2012; called on the Government to continue its efforts to protect human rights and promote national reconciliation; and urged the international community to continue to provide humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons in order to encourage the voluntary return of such persons to their place of origin. The Council extended the mandate of the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Mali for one year and requested him to report to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Report of Independent Expert. Pursuant to Council resolution 25/36 (see above), the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Mali, Suliman Baldo (Sudan), submitted a report [A/HRC/28/83 & Corr.1] covering the period from 1 May to 29 December and providing an account of his third visit to the country (7–17 October). He noted with concern that the progress observed during his second mission in February, in terms of strengthening State authority, deploying the administration in the north of the country and combating impunity, had been called into question following the fighting that broke out in Kidal from 16 to 21 May. Those events, which had rekindled the power struggle between the Government and rebel groups, had had major political, security and humanitarian repercussions in the country, as well as serious consequences for the human rights situation. Armed movements, including terrorist groups, had gradually regained control of the north of the country and, for the first time, members of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali were targeted by jihadi groups, keeping humanitarian actors away from people living in northern Mali. The Independent Expert noted the contrast, since his previous report [YUN 2013, p. 739], between the marked decrease in cases of violations of the right to life, attributable to the Malian armed forces, and the significant increase in violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law by the different armed groups in northern Mali. The rape of minors by certain members of the Malian armed forces was the main source of concern. Armed and extremist groups present in the north of the country continued to be involved in violations of human rights and the fragile security situation in northern Mali was pushing many groups, formed most often on the basis of their identity, to acquire weapons to defend their communities. Against a backdrop of intercommunal and intracommunal tensions, the risk of serious human rights violations among the civilian population was of great concern. The Independent Expert noted the Government's efforts to reform the National Human Rights Commission and establish mobile counselling centres to expedite judicial proceedings for crimes committed in the north of the country. He concluded the report with a series of recommendations for the Malian authorities.

Somalia

Report of Independent Expert. In a September report [A/HRC/27/71], the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Somalia, Bahame Tom Nyanduga (Tanzania), who assumed his mandate in June and made preliminary inquiries for OHCHR to organize a visit to the country in June-July 2014, indicated that it was not feasible to undertake a visit that would not yield any meaningful outcomes as the Holy month of Ramadan was approaching. In addition, he needed to complete the requisite security training before travelling to Somalia. Consequently, the Independent Expert undertook extensive background research on the prevailing socioeconomic, political, security, humanitarian, and human rights situation in the country. He also held meetings in Geneva and Nairobi with various stakeholders, including UN agencies, permanent missions, international organizations, donor countries, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society organizations, with whom he exchanged a broad range of ideas and views on his mandate and the human rights situation in Somalia. In July, reports of a sustained Al-Shabaab campaign of terror and violence were impacting the human rights situation in Somalia. Mogadishu witnessed targeted assassinations of government officials and members of the Somali Federal Parliament, and attacks on vital institutions, such as the Parliament and the Villa Somalia, the seat of Government. The attacks caused loss of life to members of the security forces and civilians, including women and children. The Independent Expert provided a summary of the meetings held, a brief analysis of the human rights situation and of the emerging issues in Somalia, as well as some recommendations.

Sudan

Report of Independent Expert. Pursuant to Council resolution 24/28 [YUN 2013, p. 741], the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, Mashood A. Baderin (Nigeria), submitted a September report [A/HRC/27/69] covering the period from October 2013 and July 2014, during which he undertook two missions to the Sudan. The report focused principally on the need to enhance the protection of human rights on the ground and implementation of the recommendations contained in his previous report [YUN 2013, p. 741]. It outlined the subsisting human rights challenges in the country, highlighted a list of communications sent to the Government during the reporting period, identified technical assistance and capacity-building needs and provided a list of recommendations, addressed to the Government and other stakeholders, necessary for addressing the human rights challenges in the country.

The Independent Expert concluded that the Government had sustained its efforts in respect of policies to improve the human rights situation in the Sudan, but the effective and practical implementation of those policies on the ground still remained protracted. He recommended the Government implement the remaining recommendations from his previous report without delay; institute an independent judicial public enquiry into the killings and other human rights violations that occurred during the September 2013 demonstrations; ensure that the death of the third-year economics student killed by gunshot at the University of Khartoum on 10 March 2014 was fully investigated and its findings made public; charge or release the leader of the Sudanese Congress Party and all other political and youth activist detainees; ensure that security agents desist from arbitrary arrests and detentions, press censorship, clamping down on civil society organisations, and fully respect the right to liberty and freedom of individuals; recognize representatives of armed movements, civil society organisations, academia, women and youth groups as formal participants in the proposed national dialogue; stop indiscriminate aerial strikes and respect the principle of proportionality in armed response to attacks by armed movements; provide police forces in areas where sexual and gender-based violence was prevalent; lift the suspension on International Committee of the Red Cross activities; allow vaccination access to the conflict areas to save children from preventable diseases and facilitate humanitarian access to populations in need of assistance; improve the conditions of prisons outside Khartoum; and cooperate with the international community to find a permanent peaceful solution to armed conflicts in the country, especially in Darfur, South Kordofan and Blue Nile States. The international community should continue to provide necessary technical assistance to the Government and civil society organizations in the Sudan towards the effective improvement of the human rights situation in the country.

In a September addendum [A/HRC/27/69/Add.1], the Government of the Sudan provided its comments on the Independent Expert's report.

Human Rights Council action. On 26 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/29)], the Council encouraged the initiative of holding a comprehensive, inclusive national dialogue in the Sudan to achieve sustainable peace; expressed serious concern at the excessive use of force, including the lethal shooting of demonstrators in September 2013 and March 2014, and called on the Government to institute an independent public inquiry and to refer its findings to the judiciary within its legal system; urged the Government to further its efforts for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular to ensure freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, and to respect the human rights of all individuals; and condemned the violations and abuses of international human rights and humanitarian law reported in the States of Darfur, South Kordofan and Blue Nile and by all parties, including sexual and gender-based violence, the indiscriminate aerial bombings on humanitarian facilities, and the targeting of civilians and humanitarian aid workers. The Council extended the Independent Expert's mandate for one year; requested him to report to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session; and called on the Government to continue its cooperation with the Independent Expert and to permit effective access to visit all areas of the country.

Communication. In a 26 September note verbale [A/HRC/27/G/10], the Sudan transmitted its comments regarding the 7 July 2014 call for application vacancy of an Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Sudan.

South Sudan

Human Rights Council action. By a President's statement of 28 March [A/69/53 (PRST/25/2)], the Council expressed concern at and deplored the situation of human rights resulting from the crisis and violence that broke out in mid-December 2013 in South Sudan [YUN 2013, p. 242] and called on the parties to the conflict to end all violations and abuses of human rights, and violations of international humanitarian law, including attacks against and killings of civilians, the displacement of populations and sexual and gender-based violence. It expressed support for the democratically elected Government, encouraged it to investigate the root causes of the crisis and outbreak of violence in December 2013 and welcomed the establishment by the African Union (AU) of a commission of inquiry for South Sudan as an important step towards ensuring accountability and preventing the recurrence of such abuses. The Council urged the parties to the conflict to allow access to humanitarian assistance to all populations in need, and stressed the importance of the Council's continued attention to the human rights situation, including through the High Commissioner's interim report to be submitted at its twenty-sixth (2014) session.

High Commissioner visit. An 8 September note by the secretariat [A/HRC/26/23] (see also p. 901) advised that the cessation of hostilities agreement signed by the parties to the conflict in Addis Ababa, in January 2014 (see p. 335), had proved ineffective, as both parties had continued attacks. At the request of the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, together with the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Prevention of Genocide, visited South Sudan (28–30 April). The visit provided the High Commissioner with an opportunity to witness firsthand the human rights situation in the country and to engage with the country's leaders with regard to their responsibilities to bring an end to the violence and protect civilians from violations of human rights and humanitarian law.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/31)], the Council condemned the abuses and violations of human rights, and violations of international humanitarian law, including the targeted killing of civilians and mass displacements, allegations of unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers, widespread incidents of arbitrary arrest and detention, sexual violence and mass killings that had occurred in the aftermath of the violence of 15 December 2013. It demanded a halt to all human rights violations, abuses and acts of violence by all parties; stressed that the perpetrators should be held accountable and brought to justice; and called on the international community to assist neighbouring countries hosting refugees. The Council decided to convene, at its twenty-seventh (2014) session, a panel discussion on the human rights situation in South Sudan; and requested the High Commissioner to submit an interim report on the situation for discussion by the panel, and to submit a summary on the outcome of the discussion and a report on technical assistance and capacity-building measures to its twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Council resolution 26/31 (see above), the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/27/74] on the situation of human rights in South Sudan covering the period from 8 May to 8 August and noted that the scale and severity of reported violations and abuses of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law had declined in the country compared with the first months of the conflict. Civilians, nonetheless, continued to bear the brunt of the armed conflict. The number of civilians displaced across and from South Sudan continued to rise, and the humanitarian situation further deteriorated, with the country experiencing extreme food insecurity and facing a possible famine. Despite the relative lull in large-scale hostilities, the United Nations Mission in South Sudan (UNMISS) continued to receive reports of the killing and wounding of civilians by all parties to the armed conflict and other armed groups.

The Government and opposition Sudan People's Liberation Movement continued to mobilize forces and amass weapons in an effort to consolidate their respective power bases, and to undermine the conditions for the protection of civilians and the life-saving work of humanitarian agencies and UNMISS. Accountability for human rights abuses committed since the outbreak of violence in December 2013 remained of great concern, with little or no progress registered. Despite the establishment of several investigation committees and numerous pronouncements by both parties to the conflict that perpetrators would be held accountable for conflict-related human rights abuses and violations, as well as serious violations of international humanitarian law, no concrete steps had been taken.

Secretariat note. An 8 September note by the secretariat [A/HRC/26/23], in reference to Council resolution 23/24 [YUN 2013, p. 741] requesting the High Commissioner to report on the situation of human rights in South Sudan and submit an interim progress report on technical assistance and capacity-building, informed that OHCHR carried out its human rights programme through the Human Rights Division of UNMISS (see p. 348). The severe crisis triggered on 15 December 2013 by an internal political conflict within the ruling Sudan People's Liberation Movement had not been resolved and the conflict that ensued had resulted in the loss of thousands of innocent lives, the destruction of major towns and more than a million people displaced. Security institutions, especially the Sudan People's Liberation Army, had partially disintegrated and their legitimacy had been eroded by the human rights violations committed by their members. In light of the crisis, UNMISS had adjusted its posture and proceeded with a strategic shift from its original mandate of support to peacebuilding, State-building and the extension of State authority to one of strict impartiality in its relations to the parties to the conflict. In the absence of any capacity-building programmes in South Sudan, the High Commissioner drew the Council's attention to the May report by UNMISS Human Rights Division for an overview of the human rights situation in the country since the outbreak of conflict.

Panel discussion. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 26/31 (see p. 900), a panel discussion on the human rights situation in South Sudan was convened at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session (Geneva, 24 September) and the High Commissioner submitted a summary [A/HRC/28/53] on its outcome. The discussion focused on identifying measures to improve the human rights situation in South Sudan and to strengthen UN support for the work of the AU Commission of Inquiry on South Sudan and for the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD)-led peace process. The report also included specific recommendations addressed to the parties to the conflict, IGAD, UNMISS and the Human Rights Council.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Council resolution 26/31 (see p. 900), the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/28/49] on the human rights situation in South Sudan, covering the period from 15 August to 15 December, prepared in cooperation with UNMISS. He stated that the situation remained of serious concern: the Mission had continued to receive reports of human rights violations and abuses, as well as violations of international humanitarian law. Incidents of conflict-related sexual violence continued to be reported, not only in the context of the hostilities between the main belligerents, but also of cyclical intercommunal clashes. Reports were also received of the large-scale recruitment of children, the military use and occupation of schools and hospitals, and other grave violations and abuses perpetrated against children. Restrictions on freedom of expression characterized the human rights situation, with regular incidents of harassment of members of civil society, detention of journalists, confiscation of newspapers and closure of radio stations by government officials. Other areas of concern included, problems in the administration of justice; allegations of torture and ill-treatment in custody; and the lack of accountability for human rights violations and abuses committed during the conflict. While the Government had acknowledged that violations had been committed and had established several accountability measures, there were serious concerns as to whether such measures met international standards, including due process, independence and transparency.

Americas

Bolivia

Report of High Commissioner. In his annual report [A/HRC/28/3/Add.2], the High Commissioner reviewed the human rights situation in Bolivia and the work undertaken by OHCHR in the country during 2014. President Evo Morales Ayma was re-elected in the October general elections, and as a result of those elections, the Plurinational Legislative Assembly would have equal male and female representation. Income redistribution programmes registered progress in the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and in the fight against extreme poverty. Food insecurity fell from 38 per cent to 19.5 per cent. The High Commissioner expressed concern about the number of femicides, the length of the related investigations and the low number of convictions. He noted that the adoption of Comprehensive Law 348 in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 742] guaranteeing women a life free from violence, and the publication of the corresponding regulation in October 2014, constituted an important step forward in the struggle against gender-based violence. He welcomed the initiative taken in October by female judges of the judicial branch and the Constitutional Court to present a draft policy on gender equality in judicial institutions.

The main structural problems faced by the administration of justice had worsened. The High Commissioner hoped that the establishment of the National Council for Strategic Development of the Bolivian Justice System would be the first step towards effective judicial reform. Emblematic cases cited in the report exemplified the delays in the delivery of justice, resulting in impunity. OHCHR remained concerned at the high-level of pretrial detention—82 per cent of prisoners—despite short- and medium-term measures taken to combat it, as well as developments affecting human rights defenders and civil society organizations.

The High Commissioner concluded with recommendations, including those which related to drawing up a plan for judicial reform, with short-, medium- and long-term measures to rectify structural problems; continuing the investigations of the events surrounding the fire at Palmasola Prison, which led to the deaths of 35 people; bringing prison conditions into line with international norms and ensuring that national police adhered to detention protocols; increased Government efforts to support the National Committee against Racism and All Forms of Discrimination; promulgation of the law on free, prior and informed consultation; creation by the Government of a specialized interministerial coordination body for the drafting of State party reports and for following up on the implementation of the recommendations of international human rights mechanisms; the adoption of measures to address gender-based violence; and the conduct of prompt, thorough and impartial investigations into all instances of lynching.

Colombia

Report of High Commissioner. In his annual report [A/HRC/28/3/Add.3] on the situation of human rights in Colombia, the High Commissioner welcomed the efforts of the Government to meet its human rights obligations and the progress made in the pursuit of a negotiated end to the internal armed conflict. He described how sustainable peace would require substantial efforts to overcome inequalities in access to political and economic rights and public services, and highlighted the need to address past violations, including extrajudicial executions. The High Commissioner recommended that peace negotiations should take into account the different views of those affected by the armed conflict, such as victims of violations and displacement, women, human rights defenders, ethnic communities, and children used by armed groups, and that the participation of those groups should be actively sought; that Colombia should develop judicial and non-judicial means for society as a whole to confront past violations of human rights and international humanitarian law; the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia-People's Army and the National Liberation Army should respect human rights and international humanitarian law and cease the use of children in their ranks; and the State should invest in maximizing economic and work opportunities for youth that provided them with viable alternatives to joining criminal groups. Further recommendations related to accountability for extrajudicial executions, enforced disappearances, sexual violence, child recruitment and killings of human rights defenders; efforts to prevent and respond to attacks and threats against human rights defenders; measures to guarantee the rights of everyone to enjoy the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health; measures to guarantee access to education for children with disabilities in line with its international obligations; steps to provide access to drinking water to all municipalities within a 10-year period and to eradicate preventable diseases; and the establishment of a national torture preventive mechanism as a step towards addressing the penitentiary crisis.

Guatemala

Communication. By a 12 February note verbale [A/HRC/25/G/8], Guatemala provided its comments on the report of the High Commissioner on OHCHR work in Guatemala during 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 742].

Report of High Commissioner. In his annual report [A/HRC/28/3/Add.1 & Corr.1, 2] on OHCHR activities in Guatemala during the year, the High Commissioner, in the context of elections to high-level posts in the justice sector, reviewed progress and challenges to judicial independence and the fight against impunity, including transitional justice. He also highlighted the persistently high levels of violence, which particularly affected women; outlined the response strategies of security institutions; and described the insecure environment in which human rights defenders worked, and the outstanding challenges in ensuring the rights of indigenous peoples. The report identified the causes of social unrest, the impacts on human rights and the response provided by the State. Issues related to the right to food, access to land and labour rights were also addressed, and a section on business and human rights had been incorporated. The report summarized activities undertaken by OHCHR-Guatemala, including training for indigenous organizations on strategic litigation for indigenous peoples' rights, and training for officials of the judiciary in the human rights of indigenous peoples.

In his recommendations, the High Commissioner called on the State to conduct a comprehensive review and reform of the constitutional and legal framework related to the judiciary; urged newly appointed judges of the Supreme Court of Justice to ensure the continuity of previous efforts at expediting proceedings, diminishing the judicial backlog and facilitating access for the rights holders; recommended that all judicial authorities continue efforts to investigate human rights violations committed in the context of the armed conflict and to prosecute the perpetrators; urged that the renewal of the mandate of the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala [YUN 2007, p. 308] be considered an important contribution in the struggle against impunity; and called on the judiciary to carry out specific actions to strengthen indigenous peoples' access to justice. Further recommendations related to the investigation and prosecution of attacks on human rights defenders; a mechanism for protecting journalists; creation of a new category of environmental protection to harmonize environmental protection with the traditional systems for the administration, use and possession of communal lands; recognition and respect by justice institutions of indigenous jurisdiction in their areas of competency, in accordance with international standards; complaints regarding the impact of monocultures in the communities on the Southern Coast; measures to fully implement the agrarian policy; and legal reforms to reinstate the capacity of the Ministry of Labour to impose sanctions in cases where labour rights were infringed.

Communication. By a 26 December note verbale [A/HRC/28/G/1], Guatemala provided its comments on the High Commissioner's report on the work of OHCHR in Guatemala.

Haiti

Human Rights Council action. By a President's statement of 28 March [A/69/53 (PRST/25/1)] on the situation of human rights in Haiti, the Council noted the latest legal and political developments in the country, which had been marked by progress in terms of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights; and welcomed the signature of the El Rancho Accord on 14 March (see p. 397), which gave voice to the desire of Haitian political actors to move forward with the planning of elections and the consolidation of democracy, as well as, the commitment of the authorities to improve the living conditions of Haitians by devoting greater attention to human rights. The Council encouraged the Government to strengthen national human rights and judicial institutions; strengthen the rule of law by combating impunity, crime and its causes, and the use of prolonged pretrial detention; and continue to adopt measures to increase women's participation in political affairs, combat gender-based violence and discrimination, and safeguard the rights of vulnerable groups, including women, persons with disabilities and children—particularly child domestic workers. It extended the mandate of the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Haiti for one year and invited the Independent Expert to submit a report on the human rights situation in Haiti to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session, and to undertake a mission to Haiti and also report on the mission at its twenty-eighth session.

Report of Independent Expert. Pursuant to Human Rights Council statement PRST/25/1 (see above), the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Haiti, Gustavo Gallón (Colombia), submitted a report [A/HRC/28/82] covering his second mission to the country (15–22 July) and reviewing efforts made to address the following five human rights areas identified in his previous report [YUN 2013, p. 743]: illiteracy; prolonged pretrial detention; elections; redress for large-scale human rights violations perpetrated in the past; and resettlement of the people displaced by the 2010 earthquake. For each area, he identified the problems observed and proposed specific solutions. As prerequisites for addressing those urgent human rights matters, he identified strong political will on the part of the Government and the international community, active involvement by civil society, consensus on the priority problems to be addressed, focused coordination of work and perseverance in efforts to attain the state goals. In December, a new Prime Minister was appointed as a first step towards clearing the impasse surrounding the holding of elections. Success on that front could bring momentum to the efforts to improve the human rights situation in Haiti.

The Independent Expert recommended that the State set a reasonably short time frame for eradicating illiteracy, which afflicted roughly one half of the adult population; promptly reduce prison overcrowding, ensure proper sanitation in prisons, provide food to inmates and process the cases of persons being held in prolonged pretrial detention; set up the national commission for reparation that was to have been established in 1995, as recommended by the National Truth and Justice Commission created for victims of the 1991 coup; and establish a reparations commission for the victims of the cholera epidemic. Further recommendations pertained to the increased resources required to guarantee the right to housing and decent living conditions for displaced persons still living in camps set up after the January 2010 earthquake; Dominican Republic authorities ensuring the rights of residents of Haitian origin as ordered by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in its 28 August judgement; special attention being accorded to the rights of women; and the recruitment of an expert to assist with the preparation of the report of Haiti to the Committee for the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

Asia

Afghanistan

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan [A/HRC/28/48], submitted pursuant to a Human Rights Council decision [YUN 2006, p. 948] and resolution 14/15 [YUN 2010, p. 772], the High Commissioner stated that the human rights situation in 2014 had been negatively affected by the contested security, political and economic transitions. Anti-Government elements sought to exploit the uncertainty by increasing their offensives, resulting in more ground engagements and a rising toll in civilian casualties. In the first 11 months of the year, civilian deaths and injuries from conflict-related violence increased by 19 per cent compared with the same period in 2013, and 2014 had the highest number of civilian deaths and injuries recorded by the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA) and OHCHR since 2009. Unaddressed violence against women and girls and impunity for abusive detention practices, including torture, continued. Despite the worsening conflict and continued human rights violations, the formation in September 2014 of the National Unity Government committed to a reform agenda, provided an opportunity to consolidate and expand human rights protections. The High Commissioner welcomed the strong public statements by the new Government that emphasized the importance of human rights, especially women's rights. He noted that UNAMA/OHCHR supported Government initiatives on women's empowerment, the rights of detainees, combatting sexual harassment and addressing concerns regarding internally displaced persons (IDPs). UNAMA/OHCHR also provided support and advocacy to strengthen the effectiveness and independence of the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission. It had prioritized four areas: protection of civilians in armed conflict, including children; elimination of violence against women; prevention of torture and arbitrary detention; and human rights aspects of peace and reconciliation processes.

The High Commissioner recommended that the Government take concrete measures to reduce civilian casualties from ground engagements; strengthen structures that track, mitigate and provide accountability for civilian casualties by pro-Government forces; prosecute and punish those found responsible for violations of international humanitarian and human rights law and human rights abuses; disband and disarm all illegal militia and armed groups; establish a concrete plan covering a two-year period to improve the status of the elimination of violence against women; ensure that prosecutors and courts dismiss evidence obtained through the use of torture and ill-treatment; support the public release of the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission's conflict-mapping report as a way of promoting peace and reconciliation; and establish a moratorium on executions.

Recommendations to anti-Government elements, included to cease firing mortars, rockets and grenades into civilian-populated areas; cease the indiscriminate and disproportionate use of improvised explosive devices; cease the deliberate targeting and killing of civilians; cease practices carried out by parallel judicial structures that impose unlawful punishments, such as killing, amputation, mutilation and beatings; apply a definition of "civilian(s)" that is consistent with international humanitarian law; and enforce codes of conduct, instructions and directives ordering members to prevent and avoid civilian casualties.

Cambodia

Report of Special Rapporteur. In an August report [A/HRC/27/70] submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 24/29 [YUN 2013, p. 744], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cambodia, Surya P. Subedi (Nepal), stated that his last two missions to the country in January and June 2014 focused on the possible establishment of an independent national human rights institution that met the benchmarks of the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and on the implementation of the recommendations contained in his previous four reports dealing with judicial, parliamentary, electoral and land reform. Although elections to the National Assembly in July 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 744] were conducted in a largely peaceful manner, they were marred by allegations of electoral irregularities. The newly elected members of Parliament belonging to the opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party initially refused to take their seats in the National Assembly and called for an independent and credible investigation into those allegations. The Special Rapporteur believed that the ability of people to exercise their rights of freedom of assembly, thought and speech, was a sign of a maturing democracy in the country; however, the violence and use of excessive force on repeated occasions since the elections, the indefinite continuation of an ambiguous and arbitrary ban on demonstrations that lasted over six months, and the arrest of opposition members on very serious charges ran counter to that trend. The Special Rapporteur concluded that Cambodia stood at a crossroads and that change in the country was possible if it was underpinned by comprehensive reform of State institutions. He highlighted the need for the independence of national structures to promote and protect human rights, as well as transparency and participation in the way the country is governed.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government continue strengthening the legal and institutional framework for human rights protection, and to give effect to the human right to participate in public affairs; accelerate the process of establishing an independent national human rights institution; reach a detailed agreement with the opposition on the promised reform of the electoral, parliamentary and other institutions for upholding people's rights; bring all perpetrators of violence during demonstrations to justice, including members of the security forces who caused death and injury; renew its efforts aimed at legal and judicial reform; pursue public administration reform; respect the trade union rights of all workers; protect human rights defenders; refrain from using the judiciary to intimidate, harass and imprison human rights defenders and trade union representatives; resolve existing land rights disputes as a matter of priority; and review its position on the recommendations from the universal periodic review (UPR) that were legal obligations on Cambodia as a party to international treaties, and take steps to implement them.

In a September addendum [A/HRC/27/70/Add.1], the Government of Cambodia provided its comments on the report of the Special Rapporteur.

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report [A/HRC/27/43] on the role and achievements of OHCHR in assisting the Government and people of Cambodia in the promotion and protection of human rights, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 24/29 [YUN 2013, p. 744], the Secretary-General found the human rights situation to be profoundly affected by the political situation following the July 2013 elections of the National Assembly, which led to the approval of a newly formed Government. Negotiations between the ruling Cambodian People's Party and the main opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party took place on and off, but remained unresolved. Cambodia witnessed a wave of demonstrations that were unprecedented in number and scale, which gathered momentum towards the end of 2013. On 2 January 2014, security forces intervened violently at a generally peaceful demonstration outside a factory on the outskirts of Phnom Penh, beating people and eventually arresting 10 men. Further violence, arrests and deaths continued in the following days. Physical attacks by security forces against journalists spiked in 2014, and fatalities and injuries caused by State forces during demonstrations over the year had not been investigated or resolved. Ongoing human rights concerns continued to demand attention, particularly with respect to land and housing rights. OHCHR continued its most significant technical cooperation activities. In February 2014, its Memorandum of Understanding with the Government was renewed for another two years until 31 December 2015. In 2014, several programmes yielded achievements in the professionalization of key groups of public servants, particularly in securing a separate legal status and setting out specific training requirements for prison staff and in requiring all judges to set out their legal reasoning when deciding on pretrial detention. Agreement was also reached with the Bar Association that all new trainee lawyers would receive training on fair trial rights, thereby institutionalizing the Fair Trial Rights Academy that had been delivered by OHCHR.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

Communication. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), in a 3 February letter [A/HRC/25/G/6] to the President of the Human Rights Council, rejected the commission of inquiry and Council resolution 22/13 [YUN 2013, p. 745] establishing the commission's mandate.

Reports of commission of inquiry. Pursuant to Council resolution 22/13 [ibid.], the commission of inquiry on human rights in the DPRK submitted a February report [A/HRC/25/63], which found that systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations had been and were being committed by the DPRK, its institutions and its officials. In many instances, the violations of human rights found by the commission constituted crimes against humanity. The principal findings of the commission included violations of the freedoms of thought, expression and religion; discrimination; violations of the freedom of movement and residence; violations of the right to food and related aspects of the right to life; arbitrary detention; torture; executions and prison camps; abductions and enforced disappearances from other countries; and crimes against humanity. The commission noted that the perpetrators enjoyed impunity and the DPRK was unwilling to implement its international obligation to prosecute and bring the perpetrators to justice, because those perpetrators acted in accordance with State policy.

Based on its findings, the commission of inquiry recommended that the DPRK undertake political and institutional reforms to introduce genuine checks and balances upon the powers of the Supreme Leader and the Workers' Party of Korea; acknowledge the existence of human rights violations, including the political prison camps; reform the Criminal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure to abolish the vaguely worded "anti-State" and "anti-People" crimes and to enshrine the right to a fair trial and due process guarantees; implement an immediate moratorium on the death penalty; allow the establishment of independent newspapers and other media; abolish activities that espouse hatred or war propaganda; allow religious believers to exercise their religion independently and publicly; end discrimination against citizens on the basis of their political loyalty or socio-political background; take immediate measures to ensure gender equality in practice; ensure that citizens enjoy the right to food and other economic and social rights without discrimination; pay particular attention to the needs of women and vulnerable groups; and legalize and support free market activities, internal and external trade and other independent economic conduct that provide citizens with a livelihood. The Government should also abolish the prohibition on foreign travel imposed on ordinary citizens; decriminalize illegal border crossings; provide the families and nations of origin of all persons who had been abducted, or otherwise forcibly disappeared, with full information on their fate and whereabouts; allow separated families to unite; and prosecute those persons most responsible for alleged crimes against humanity and appoint a special prosecutor to supervise that process.

The commission of inquiry recommended that China and other States respect the principle of non-refoulement and abstain from forcibly repatriating any persons to the DPRK; provide OHCHR and humanitarian organizations unimpeded access to all persons from the DPRK seeking such contact; adopt a victim-centric and human rights-based approach to trafficking in persons; and take measures to prevent DPRK agents from carrying out further abductions from Chinese territory. The commission also recommended that the Korean people foster inter-Korean dialogue in a phased approach leading to an agenda for reconciliation. The commission on inquiry further recommended that the Security Council refer the situation in the DPRK to the International Criminal Court [YUN 1998, p. 1209]; that the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council extend the country-specific human rights monitoring and reporting mechanisms on the DPRK that predated the commission's establishment; that the High Commissioner establish a structure to help ensure accountability for human rights violations in the DPRK; and that States refrain from using the provision of food and other essential humanitarian assistance to impose economic or political pressure on the DPRK.

Also in February, the commission of inquiry submitted a report [A/HRC/25/CRP.1] that contained its detailed findings on the situation of human rights in the DPRK.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/25)], the Council condemned the long-standing and ongoing systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations and abuses committed in the DPRK and expressed its concern at the detailed findings in the commission of inquiry's report (see above). It urged the Government to acknowledge the human rights violations and take immediate steps to end such violations and abuses; expressed concern at the situation of refugees and asylum seekers returned to the DPRK; acknowledged that the commission's findings provided reasonable grounds to believe that crimes against humanity had been committed in the country; and stressed that DPRK authorities had failed to prosecute those responsible for crimes against humanity and other human rights violations. The Council recommended that the General Assembly submit the commission of inquiry's report to the Security Council for its consideration and appropriate action; extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK for one year and requested him to submit regular reports to the Human Rights Council and the General Assembly; and requested OHCHR to follow up on the commission of inquiry's recommendations, establish a field-based structure to strengthen monitoring and documentation of the situation, and report on its follow-up efforts in the regular annual report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly. It urged the Government to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur, and to participate in its UPR in a constructive manner.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 25/25 (see above), the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the DPRK, Marzuki Darusman (Indonesia), submitted a June report [A/HRC/26/43 & Corr.1], in which he presented his thoughts on the direction he intended to take in fulfilling his mandate, building on the findings and recommendations of the commission of inquiry (see above). He also stressed the international law implications of the commission's findings and the responsibility of the international community to protect; highlighted DPRK responses, including some opportunities for engagement presented by the Government's latest position on the recommendations made at UPR; and discussed the way forward and the responses required of States, the UN system, civil society, individuals and other stakeholders.

In an October report [A/69/548], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 68/183 [YUN 2013, p. 746], the Special Rapporteur provided an update on the human rights situation in the country; elaborated on the strategic engagement required by the UN system, including a "human rights up front" response; and presented further analysis and recommendations taking into account the outcome of the second UPR of the country adopted by the Council in September. He emphasized that the international community had to seize the opportunity and momentum created by the commission of inquiry to make a difference in the lives of the people in the country, and to ensure the accountability of those responsible for serious violations of human rights, including crimes against humanity. He recommended that the General Assembly: submit the report of the commission of inquiry to the Security Council for its consideration and action; recommend that the Security Council place the human rights situation in the DPRK on its agenda and hold regular briefings with the Special Rapporteur and other experts to address the links between peace and security and human rights in the Korean Peninsula; reaffirm the responsibility of the international community to protect the people of the DPRK and victims abroad from crimes against humanity; ensure that the OHCHR field-based structure to follow up on the commission's work could function with independence; request the Secretary-General and the UN system as a whole to address the grave human rights situation in a coordinated manner; and request the DPRK to allow persons who had been abducted or otherwise forcibly disappeared to return immediately to their countries of origin; halt all human rights violations relating to prison camps; and allow access for independent agencies and UN human rights mechanisms to verify and assess the implementation of the recommendations that the DPRK had made voluntarily during two cycles of UPR. The Special Rapporteur called on all countries where persons from the DPRK had sought refuge or were in transit to protect such persons, treat them humanely and adhere to the principles of non-refoulement. He also stated that he would assist States in forming a contact group to raise concerns about and provide support for initiatives to improve the situation of human rights in the country.

Report of Secretary-General. In a December report [A/69/639] submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 68/183 [YUN 2013, p. 746], the Secretary-General provided an update on the UN engagement with the DPRK regarding the human rights situation in the country from September 2013 to November 2014. The report drew attention to the participation of the DPRK in the second cycle of UPR and to the findings of the commission of inquiry and the related follow-up. It contained updated information on human rights and humanitarian issues, including the rights to food, health and education; the right to life, liberty and security of the person; the rights of women, children and persons with disabilities; and the impact of economic sanctions on UN assistance. The Secretary-General recommended that the Government translate the commitments made during UPR into concrete follow-up measures; consider the findings and recommendations of the commission of inquiry; invite the Special Rapporteur and other independent human rights mechanisms to visit the country; seek technical assistance from OHCHR; engage with States concerned on human rights issues, particularly with respect to the resolution of international abductions and enforced disappearances; and provide humanitarian agencies with the access required to bring humanitarian assistance to the population. The Secretary-General appealed to the international community to step up the provision of funding for humanitarian assistance efforts, especially food and medicine; work to minimize the adverse humanitarian consequences of sanctions imposed on the DPRK for the population; respect the international human rights law principle of non-refoulement under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520]; and refrain from forcibly returning to the DPRK persons seeking asylum, given the grave risks they faced upon return.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/69/488/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/188 by recorded vote (116-20-53) [agenda item 68 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations that they have undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling all previous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including Assembly resolution 68/183 of 18 December 2013 and Council resolution 25/25 of 28 March 2014, and mindful of the need for the international community to strengthen its coordinated efforts aimed at achieving the implementation of those resolutions,

Deeply concerned at the grave human rights situation, the pervasive culture of impunity and the lack of accountability for human rights violations in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea,

Welcoming the report of the commission of inquiry on human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and expressing grave concern at the detailed findings contained therein,

Noting the transmission of the report of the commission of inquiry to the Security Council on 14 April 2014,

Recalling the responsibility of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to protect its population from crimes against humanity,

Taking note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, regretting that he still has not been allowed to visit the country and that he has received no cooperation from the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and taking note also of the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea submitted in accordance with resolution 68/183,

Mindful that the Democratic People's Republic of Korea is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and recalling the concluding observations of the treaty bodies under the four treaties,

Noting with appreciation the signature of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional

Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, encouraging the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to take speedy steps to ratify the Convention and the Optional Protocol, and urging the Government to fully respect the rights of persons with disabilities and children,

Acknowledging the participation of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in the second universal periodic review process, noting the acceptance by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of 113 out of the 268 recommendations contained in the outcome of the review and its stated commitment to implement them and look into the possibility of implementing a further 58 recommendations, and emphasizing the importance of the implementation of the recommendations in order to address the grave human rights violations in the country,

Noting with appreciation the collaboration established between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization in order to improve the health situation in the country, and the collaboration established with the United Nations Children's Fund in order to improve the quality of education for children,

Noting the decision on the resumption, on a modest scale, of the activities of the United Nations Development Programme in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and encouraging the engagement of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the international community to ensure that the programmes benefit the persons in need of assistance,

Noting also the cooperation between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on food security assessments, underscoring the importance of those assessments in analysing changes in the national, household and individual food security and nutritional situation and thereby in supporting donor confidence in the targeting of aid programmes, noting further the letter of understanding signed by the Government and the World Food Programme and the importance of further improvements in operating conditions, bringing access and monitoring arrangements closer to international standards for all United Nations entities, and noting with appreciation the work of international aid operators,

Noting further the importance of the issue of international abductions and of the immediate return of all abductees, taking note of the outcome of the government-level consultation between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Japan in May 2014, and expecting concrete and positive results from the investigations being conducted by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on all the Japanese nationals, in particular victims of abduction,

Noting the importance of the inter-Korean dialogue, which could contribute to the improvement of the human rights and humanitarian situation in the country,

Welcoming the resumption of the reunions of separated families across the border in February 2014, and, given that this is an urgent humanitarian concern of the entire Korean people, hoping that necessary arrangements for further reunions on a larger scale and a regular basis will be made by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Republic of Korea and members of the Korean diaspora,

1. Condemns the long-standing and ongoing systematic, widespread and gross violations of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including those which the commission of inquiry on human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, established by the Human Rights Council in its resolution 22/13 of 21 March 2013, has said may amount to crimes against humanity, and the continuing impunity for such violations;

2. Expresses its very serious concern at:

(a) The persistence of continuing reports of violations of human rights, including the detailed findings made by the commission of inquiry in its report, such as:

(i) Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including inhuman conditions of detention; rape; public executions; extrajudicial and arbitrary detention; the absence of due process and the rule of law, including fair trial guarantees and an independent judiciary; extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions; the imposition of the death penalty for political and religious reasons; collective punishments extending up to three generations; and the extensive use of forced labour;

(ii) The existence of an extensive system of political prison camps, where a vast number of persons are deprived of their liberty and subjected to deplorable conditions and where alarming violations of human rights are perpetrated, and in this regard strongly urges the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to immediately end this practice and to release all political prisoners unconditionally and without any delay;

(iii) The forcible transfer of populations and the limitations imposed on every person who wishes to move freely within the country and travel abroad, including the punishment of those who leave or try to leave the country without permission, or their families, as well as punishment of persons who are returned;

(iv) The situation of refugees and asylum seekers expelled or returned to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and sanctions imposed on citizens of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who have been repatriated from abroad, leading to punishments of internment, torture, other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, sexual violence or the death penalty, and in this regard strongly urges all States to respect the fundamental principle of non-refoulement, to treat those who seek refuge humanely and to ensure unhindered access to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his Office, with a view to protecting the human rights of those who seek refuge, and once again urges States parties to comply with their obligations under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto in relation to refugees from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who are covered by those instruments;

(v) All-pervasive and severe restrictions on the freedoms of thought, conscience, religion or belief, opinion and expression, peaceful assembly and association, the right to privacy and equal access to information, by such means as the persecution, torture and imprisonment of individuals exercising their freedom of opinion and expression, religion or belief, and their families, and the right of everyone to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives, of his or her country;

- (vi) Violations of economic, social and cultural rights, which have led to severe hunger, malnutrition, widespread health problems and other hardship for the population in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in particular for women, children, persons with disabilities and the elderly;
 - (vii) Violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women, in particular the creation of internal conditions that force women to leave the country and make them extremely vulnerable to trafficking in persons for the purpose of prostitution, domestic servitude or forced marriage and the subjection of women to forced abortions, gender-based discrimination, including in the political and social spheres, and other forms of sexual and gender-based violence;
 - (viii) Violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of children, in particular the continued lack of access to basic economic, social and cultural rights for many children, and in this regard notes the particularly vulnerable situation faced by, inter alia, returned or repatriated children, street children, children with disabilities, children whose parents are detained, children living in detention or in institutions and children in conflict with the law;
 - (ix) Violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of persons with disabilities, especially in the use of collective camps and of coercive measures that target the rights of persons with disabilities to decide freely and responsibly on the number and spacing of their children;
 - (x) Violations of workers' rights, including the right to freedom of association and effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining, the right to strike as defined by the obligations of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the prohibition of the economic exploitation of children and of any harmful or hazardous work of children as defined by the obligations of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea under the Convention on the Rights of the Child;
 - (xi) Discrimination based on the songbun system, which classifies people on the basis of State-assigned social class and birth, and also includes consideration of political opinions and religion;
- (b) The continued refusal of the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to recognize the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea or to extend cooperation to the Special Rapporteur;
- (c) The continued lack of acknowledgement by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea of the grave human rights situation in the country and its consequential lack of action to implement the recommendations contained in the outcome of its first universal periodic review;

(d) The failure of the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to prosecute those responsible for human rights violations, including violations which the commission of inquiry has said may amount to crimes against humanity;

3. Underscores its very serious concern at the systematic abduction, denial of repatriation and subsequent enforced disappearance of persons, including those from other countries, on a large scale and as a matter of State policy, and in this regard strongly calls upon the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea urgently to resolve these issues of international concern, in a transparent manner, including by ensuring the immediate return of abductees;

4. Expresses its very deep concern at the precarious humanitarian situation in the country, which could rapidly deteriorate owing to limited resilience to natural disasters and to government policies causing limitations in the availability of and access to food, compounded by structural weaknesses in agricultural production resulting in significant shortages of diversified food and the State restrictions on the cultivation of and trade in foodstuffs, as well as the prevalence of chronic malnutrition, particularly among the most vulnerable groups, pregnant women, children, persons with disabilities and the elderly, and urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, in this regard, to take preventive and remedial action, cooperating where necessary with international donor agencies and in accordance with international standards for monitoring humanitarian assistance;

5. Commends the Special Rapporteur for the activities undertaken so far and for his continued efforts in the conduct of his mandate despite the denial of access;

6. Also commends the work of the commission of inquiry and recognizes the importance of its report, and regrets that the commission received no cooperation from the authorities of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including with regard to access to the country;

7. Acknowledges the commission's finding that the body of testimony gathered and the information received provide reasonable grounds to believe that crimes against humanity have been committed in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, pursuant to policies established at the highest level of the State for decades;

8. Decides to submit the report of the commission of inquiry to the Security Council, and encourages the Council to consider the relevant conclusions and recommendations of the commission and take appropriate action to ensure accountability, including through consideration of referral of the situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to the International Criminal Court and consideration of the scope for effective targeted sanctions against those who appear to be most responsible for acts that the commission has said may constitute crimes against humanity;

9. Welcomes the steps taken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights towards establishing a field-based structure in the Republic of Korea to strengthen the monitoring and documentation of the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, to ensure accountability, to provide the Special Rapporteur with increased support, to enhance the engagement and capacity-building of the Governments of all States concerned, civil society and other stakeholders and to maintain the visibility of the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, including through sustained communications, advocacy and outreach initiatives;

10. Calls upon Member States to undertake to ensure that the field-based structure of the Office of the High Commissioner can function with independence, that it has sufficient resources and that it is not subjected to any reprisals or threats;

11. Strongly urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms and, in this regard:

(a) To immediately put an end to the systematic, widespread and grave violations of human rights emphasized above, inter alia, by implementing fully the measures set out in the above-mentioned resolutions of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council, and the recommendations addressed to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea by the Council in the context of the universal periodic review and by the commission of inquiry, the United Nations special procedures and treaty bodies;

(b) To protect its inhabitants, address the issue of impunity and ensure that those responsible for violations of human rights are brought to justice before an independent judiciary;

(c) To tackle the root causes leading to refugee outflows and prosecute those who exploit refugees by human smuggling, trafficking and extortion, while not criminalizing the victims;

(d) To ensure that citizens of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea who are expelled or returned to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are able to return in safety and dignity, are treated humanely and are not subjected to any kind of punishment, and to provide information on their status and treatment;

(e) To extend its full cooperation to the Special Rapporteur, including by granting him full, free and unimpeded access to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and to other United Nations human rights mechanisms so that a full needs assessment of the human rights situation may be made;

(f) To engage in technical cooperation activities in the field of human rights with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and his Office, as pursued by the High Commissioner in recent years, with a view to improving the situation of human rights in the country, and to strive to implement the accepted recommendations stemming from the universal periodic review;

(g) To engage in cooperation with the International Labour Organization;

(h) To continue and reinforce its cooperation with United Nations humanitarian agencies;

(i) To ensure full, safe and unhindered access to humanitarian aid and take measures to allow humanitarian agencies to secure its impartial delivery to all parts of the country on the basis of need in accordance with humanitarian principles, as it pledged to do, and to ensure access to adequate food and implement more effective food security policies, including through sustainable agriculture, sound food production distribution measures and the allocation of more funds to the food sector, and to ensure adequate monitoring of humanitarian assistance;

(j) To further improve cooperation with the United Nations country team and development agencies so that they can directly contribute to improving the living conditions of the civilian population, including accelerating progress towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, in accordance with international monitoring and evaluation procedures;

(k) To consider ratifying and acceding to remaining international human rights treaties, which would enable a dialogue with the human rights treaty bodies;

12. Urges the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to implement the recommendations of the commission of inquiry without delay;

13. Encourages all Member States, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, the Office of the High Commissioner, the United Nations Secretariat, civil society organizations, foundations and engaged business enterprises and other stakeholders towards which the commission of inquiry has directed recommendations to implement or take forward those recommendations;

14. Welcomes the recent willingness expressed by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to consider human rights dialogues with States and groups of States, technical cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner and a country visit of the Special Rapporteur;

15. Calls upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to continue to engage constructively with international interlocutors with a view to promoting concrete improvements in the human rights situation on the ground, including through dialogues, official visits to the country and more people-to-people contact;

16. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea at its seventieth session, and to this end requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and requests the Special Rapporteur to continue to report his findings and recommendations, as well as to report on the follow-up to the implementation of the recommendations of the commission of inquiry, in line with Human Rights Council resolution 25/25.

Iran

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a March report [A/HRC/25/61] submitted in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 16/9 [YUN 2011, p. 768], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, Ahmed Shaheed (Maldives), outlined his activities since the Council renewed his mandate in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 748], examined ongoing issues and presented the most pressing developments in the State's human rights situation. The Special Rapporteur concluded that Iran possessed the basic tools necessary to observe its international human rights obligations. He stressed that despite welcome amendments to the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure, and the proposal for a new charter of citizens' rights, the issues previously raised by the UN human rights mechanisms and recommendations made during the 2010 UPR [YUN 2010, p. 634] of the country were not resolved. Reports continued to detail cases of frequent infringement of the rule of law established by national laws and international standards, resulting in the arbitrary detention of hundreds of individuals peacefully exercising their rights. Most of the violations, including psychological and physical torture for the purpose of extorting information to be used as evidence in court, were reportedly committed during pretrial detention or court sessions.

In his recommendations, the Special Rapporteur urged the Government to facilitate the unconditional release of individuals imprisoned for peacefully exercising their rights to freedom of expression, association, assembly, belief and religion; strengthen fair trial safeguards by ensuring access to legal counsel during all phases of pretrial detention and the investigative stages of cases; improve access of legal counsel to all files containing evidence against the accused; investigate all allegations of mistreatment and prosecute the parties responsible; prevent the intimidation of lawyers, including threats of detention and prosecution for discharging their ethical and professional responsibilities; and prohibit capital punishment for juveniles and for crimes that did not meet the most serious criminal standards under international law, including for drug offences and perceived sexual offences.

Communication. In a 18 March letter [A/HRC/25/G/17] to the Human Rights Council President, Iran, in its capacity as Chair of the Non-Aligned Movement in Geneva, stated that there was a lack of clarity, transparency, equitability and predictability on the rules governing the publishing of addenda containing comments by States to country reports of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General and requested that the Bureau remain seized of the matter with a view to finding a fair and equitable solution.

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/24)], by a recorded vote of 21 to 9, with 16 abstentions, the Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year; requested him to report on the implementation of his mandate to the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session and the General Assembly's sixty-ninth (2014) session; and called on the Government to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur and to permit access to visit the country, as well as, to provide all information necessary to allow the fulfilment of his mandate.

Reports of Secretary-General. In an April report [A/HRC/25/26] submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 68/184 [YUN 2013, p. 750], the Secretary-General discussed the patterns and trends in the situation of human rights in Iran and provided information on progress made in the implementation of that resolution. He welcomed the positive steps taken by the Government, notably the release of high-profile political prisoners and the reinstatement of some students and lecturers in universities, and encouraged the Government to build on those developments by creating space for human rights defenders, lawyers and journalists, and to release political prisoners, including human rights defenders and lawyers detained solely for exercising their rights to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly. He remained troubled by reports of increasing numbers of executions, including of political prisoners, and continuing amputations and floggings and reiterated his call for a moratorium on the use of the death penalty, and to prohibit executions in public. He encouraged the Government to continue to address regional disparities in the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, as well as discrimination against women and members of certain minorities; urged the Government to establish an independent national human rights institution; and regretted that, despite repeated requests for a country visit, the Special Rapporteur had not yet been admitted to the country.

In an August report [A/69/306], the Secretary-General welcomed the positive statements in relation to freedom of expression and non-discrimination made by the Government under President Hassan Rouhani, and encouraged the authorities to translate them into concrete steps; remained troubled by reports of increased numbers of executions and reiterated his call for a moratorium on the use of the death penalty, and to prohibit executions of juvenile offenders in all circumstances; urged the Government to create space for human rights defenders, lawyers and journalists, and to release political prisoners; urged the Government to establish an independent national human rights institution; and called on the Government to cooperate in the Special Rapporteur's mandate by inviting him to the country in the near future.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In an August report [A/69/356] to the General Assembly submitted in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 25/24 (see p. 911), the Special Rapporteur found that numerous issues flagged by the General Assembly, UN human rights mechanisms and the Secretary-General persisted, and in some cases appeared to have worsened. Progress on the 123 recommendations made by States during the first UPR consideration of the country in 2010 remained slow. Various laws, policies and institutional practices continued to undermine the conditions needed for the realization of the fundamental rights guaranteed by international and national law. Some draft laws appeared to further undermine the rights to freedom of expression and association and markedly compounded discrimination against women by further eroding their protection from forced marriage and rights to education, work and equal wages. The rise in executions for crimes that did not meet the threshold of "most serious crimes" and reports about the pervasive use of torture and the continued arbitrary arrest, detention and prosecution of individuals for exercising their fundamental rights severely contravened the Government's international and national commitments. The uneven application of national laws and an apparent reluctance to investigate claims of rights violations both undermined the rule of law and cultivated a culture of impunity. Concerns persisted in terms of the realization of social and economic rights, notably as a result of legislative and policy developments between 2010 and 2014, including laws that discriminated against women in the areas of early marriage, educational opportunities and participation in the workforce. Other laws appeared to eliminate access to reproductive health services for all Iranians.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated the call for the Government to establish an independent national human rights institution; echoed the call of the Human Rights Committee to ensure the independence of the judiciary and to investigate all allegations of torture and mistreatment of detainees; and repeated his call for substantive engagement and cooperation between the Government and the UN human rights mechanisms. The Government should consider extending the de facto moratorium on stoning and halt the use of the death penalty, and take immediate steps to address the increased incidence of early and forced child marriage, by banning child marriage and raising the minimum age for marriage to 18 years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/190 by recorded vote (83-35-68) [agenda item 68 (d)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international human rights instruments,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, the most recent of which is resolution 68/184 of 18 December 2013,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in August 2014 pursuant to resolution 68/184, and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran submitted in August 2014 pursuant to Council resolution 25/24 of 28 March 2014;

2. Welcomes pledges made by the President of the Islamic Republic of Iran with regard to some important human rights issues, particularly on eliminating discrimination against women and members of ethnic minorities and promoting freedom of expression and opinion, and urges the Islamic Republic of Iran to translate them into concrete action that results in demonstrable improvements as soon as possible and to ensure that its national laws are consistent with its obligations under international human rights law and that they are implemented in accordance with its international obligations;

3. Acknowledges legislative and administrative changes in the Islamic Republic of Iran that address some human rights concerns, including amendments to the Islamic Penal Code and to the criminal procedure code, and notes efforts to introduce a citizen's rights charter, while urging the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to ensure that these measures are consistent with its international human rights obligations;

4. Also acknowledges recent engagement by the Islamic Republic of Iran with human rights treaty bodies through the submission of periodic national reports, as well as participation in its second universal periodic review by the Human Rights Council, while remaining seriously concerned about the broader lack of engagement with human rights monitoring mechanisms, including the ongoing lack of response to requests from special procedures mandate holders for information and country visits;

5. Expresses deep concern at serious ongoing and recurring human rights violations in the Islamic Republic of Iran relating to, inter alia:

(a) The alarming high frequency of and increase in the carrying-out of the death penalty in the absence of internationally recognized safeguards, including public executions, notwithstanding the issuance of a circular by the former head of the judiciary prohibiting public executions, and secret group executions, as well as reports of executions undertaken without the notification of the prisoner's family members or legal counsel;

(b) The continuing imposition and carrying-out of the death penalty against minors and persons who at the time of their offence were under the age of 18, in violation of the obligations of the Islamic Republic of Iran under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

(c) The imposition of the death penalty for crimes that lack a precise and explicit definition and for crimes that do not qualify as the most serious crimes, in violation of international law;

(d) Torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including flogging and amputations;

(e) Widespread and serious restrictions on the right to peaceful assembly, freedom of association and freedom of opinion and expression, including through continued efforts to block, filter or hinder Internet access and content, including social media outlets, to jam international satellite transmission and to censor or close media outlets;

(f) The systematic targeting and harassment of human rights defenders and the renewed targeting of journalists, bloggers and social media users, who face arrest, arbitrary detention, long-term exile and harsh sentences, including the death sentence;

(g) Pervasive gender inequality and violence against women and ongoing discrimination against women and girls in law and in practice, including by continuing to limit equal access to employment and to certain fields of higher education, as well as restrictions on access to decision-making positions in the Government and to the labour market, despite the granting of 3 of 11 deputy vice-presidential posts to women;

(h) Continued discrimination and other human rights violations, at times amounting to persecution, against persons belonging to ethnic, linguistic or other minorities, including Arabs, Azeris, Balochis and Kurds and their defenders, noting in particular reports of the violent suppression and detention of ethnic Arabs and Azeris, including ongoing violations of their due process rights and alleged torture while imprisoned, and the reported secret execution of members of the Ahwaz Arab community;

(i) Ongoing severe limitations and restrictions on the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief and restrictions on the building of, as well as attacks against, places of worship and burial;

(j) Continued harassment, at times amounting to persecution, and human rights violations against persons belonging to recognized religious minorities, including Christians, Jews, Sufi Muslims, Sunni Muslims and Zoroastrians and their defenders, noting in particular the arbitrary arrest and detention of Sufi Muslims, Sunni Muslims and evangelical Christians, including the continued detention of Christian pastors;

(k) Continued discrimination, persecution and human rights violations against persons belonging to unrecognized religious minorities, particularly members of the Baha'i faith and their defenders, including targeted attacks and murders, without proper investigation to hold those responsible accountable, arbitrary arrests and detention, the denial of access to higher education on the basis of religion, the continued imprisonment of the entire leadership of the Iranian Baha'i community, the closure of Baha'i-owned businesses, the desecration and destruction of Baha'i cemeteries and the effective criminalization of membership in the Baha'i faith;

(l) Continued and sustained house arrest of leading opposition figures from the 2009 presidential elections, despite serious concerns about their health, as well as ongoing restrictions on their supporters and family members, including through harassment, intimidation and reprisals;

(m) Persistent failure to uphold due process of law, and violations of the rights of detainees, including the widespread and systematic use of arbitrary detention and enforced disappearance, the lack of access of detainees to legal representation of their choice, the refusal to consider granting bail to detainees, the poor conditions of prisons, the denial of access to adequate medical treatment and the consequent risk of death faced by prisoners, detainees being subjected to torture, rape and other forms of sexual violence, harsh interrogation techniques and the use of pressure exerted upon their relatives and dependants, including through arrest, to obtain false confessions that are then used at trials and are broadcast on national television;

(n) Continuing arbitrary or unlawful interference by State authorities with the privacy of individuals, in particular in relation to private homes, and with their correspondence, including telephone and e-mail communications, in violation of international law;

6. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to address the substantive concerns highlighted in the reports of the Secretary-General and the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as well as the specific calls to action found in previous resolutions of the General Assembly, and to respect fully its human rights obligations, in law and in practice, in particular:

(a) To abolish, in law and in practice, public executions and other executions carried out in the absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, including by stoning and suspension strangulation;

(b) To further revisit the revised Islamic Penal Code to make it consistent with its obligation, under article 37 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to abolish executions of minors and persons who at the time of their offence were under the age of 18;

(c) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

(d) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination and other human rights violations against women and girls, including to address the increasing incidence of child, early and forced marriage, to promote women's participation in decision-making positions and, while recognizing the high enrolment of women in all levels of education, to lift all restrictions on women's equal access to all aspects of university education and promote women's participation in the labour market and in all aspects of economic, cultural, social and political life;

(e) To eliminate, in law and in practice, all forms of discrimination and other human rights violations against persons belonging to religious, ethnic, linguistic or other minorities, recognized or otherwise;

(f) To eliminate discrimination against, and exclusion of, members of certain groups with respect to access to higher education based on their political, ethnic or religious affiliations or community, including through the unqualified readmission of those students previously excluded for these reasons, to eliminate the criminalization of efforts to provide higher education to Baha'i youth denied access to Iranian universities and to release those imprisoned for this reason;

(g) To implement, inter alia, the 1996 report of the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, in which he recommended ways in which the Islamic Republic of Iran could emancipate the Baha'i community, to release the seven Baha'i leaders held since 2008 and to accord all Baha'is, including those imprisoned because of their beliefs, the due process of law and the rights that they are constitutionally guaranteed;

(h) To launch a comprehensive accountability process in response to cases of serious human rights violations, including those involving the Iranian judiciary and security agencies, and to end impunity for such violations, including those that took place during the attack that injured dozens of prisoners in Evin prison in April 2014, as promised by the Government;

(i) To fulfil repeated pledges by the President for greater space for freedom of expression and opinion by ending the ongoing harassment, intimidation and persecution of political opponents, human rights defenders, women's and minority rights activists, labour leaders, students, academics, film-makers, journalists and their families, other media representatives, bloggers, social media users, clerics, artists and lawyers, including by releasing persons who continue to be detained arbitrarily or on the basis of their political views;

(j) To end restrictions on, and the arbitrary arrest of, the press and media representatives, Internet users and Internet providers, including the selective jamming of satellite broadcasts, that violate the rights to freedom of expression and association, and, while the General Assembly welcomes the decision of the Government to increase Internet speed, it further encourages improvements to facilitate open and free Internet access;

(k) To uphold, in law and in practice, procedural guarantees to ensure due process of law;

7. Also calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to strengthen its national human rights institutions in accordance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the Paris Principles) by establishing an independent national human rights institution as it committed itself to doing in the framework of its first universal periodic review by the Human Rights Council, with due regard for the recommendation of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

8. Notes the recent engagement by the Islamic Republic of Iran with human rights treaty bodies, including the submission of national periodic reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, and calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to consider acting upon the concluding observations adopted by those Committees;

9. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to effectively implement its obligations under those human rights treaties to which it is already a party, to withdraw any reservations that it may have made upon signature or ratification of other international human rights instruments where such reservations are overly general, imprecise or could be considered incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty, to consider acting upon the concluding observations concerning the Islamic Republic of Iran adopted by the bodies of the international human rights treaties to which it is a party and to consider ratifying or acceding to the international human rights treaties to which it is not already a party;

10. Notes with concern the poor implementation record of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran in respect of the recommendations that it had accepted during its first universal periodic review by the Human Rights Council, and strongly encourages the Government to implement all accepted recommendations, including from its second universal periodic review, with the full and genuine participation of independent civil society and other stakeholders in the implementation process;

11. Expresses deep concern that, despite the standing invitation issued by the Islamic Republic of Iran to all thematic special procedures mandate holders, it has not fulfilled any requests from those special mechanisms to visit the country in nine years and has left unanswered the vast majority of the numerous and repeated communications from those special mechanisms, and strongly urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to fully cooperate with the special mechanisms, including facilitating their visits to its territory, so that credible and independent investigations of all allegations of human rights violations can be conducted;

12. Expresses serious concern about allegations of reprisals against individuals for their cooperation or contact with United Nations human rights mechanisms or representatives;

13. Strongly encourages the thematic special procedures mandate holders to pay particular attention to, with a view to investigating and reporting on, the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran, in particular the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders, the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Special Rapporteur on the right to education, the Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, the Special Rapporteur on minority issues, the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Working Group on the issue of discrimination against women in law and in practice of the Human Rights Council;

14. Welcomes the recent engagement, through country visits, of the heads of United Nations agencies, and urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to deepen its engagement with United Nations human rights mechanisms;

15. Encourages the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to continue to explore cooperation on human rights and justice reform with the United Nations, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

16. Continues to call upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran and other international human rights mechanisms, including by accepting the repeated requests made by the Special Rapporteur to visit the country to carry out his mandate;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, including options and recommendations to improve its implementation, and to submit an interim report to the Human Rights Council at its twenty-eighth session;

18. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran at its seventieth session under the item entitled “Promotion and protection of human rights”.

Iraq

Human Rights Council special session. In a 26 August letter [A/HRC/S-22/1], Iraq requested that the Human Rights Council convene a special session on 1 September, entitled “The human rights situation in Iraq in the light of the abuses committed by the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant and associated groups”, and transmitted a list of Council members and observer States that were also in support of that request. On the same day [A/HRC/S-22/2] and on 27 August [A/HRC/S-22/3], respectively, the coordinators of the Group of Arab States, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Organization of Islamic Cooperation and the Head of the Permanent Delegation of the European Union, and Costa Rica supported that request. The Council held its twenty-second special session on 1 September [A/HRC/S-22/4].

Human Rights Council action. On 1 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. S-22/1)], the Council condemned the systematic violations and abuses of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law resulting from the terrorist acts committed by Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) and associated groups taking place since 10 June in several provinces of Iraq, which might amount to war crimes and crimes against humanity, and condemned in particular all violence against persons based on their religious or ethnic affiliation, and against women and children; urged all parties to comply with international humanitarian law and human rights law, protect civilians, respect their human rights and meet their basic needs, which required safe access for humanitarian and medical services to all affected populations; called on the Iraqi Government to ensure that all perpetrators of violations and abuses were brought to justice; expressed its support for the Iraqi authorities in establishing a new and inclusive Government within the constitutionally mandated time frame; called on the new Iraqi Government to promote and protect human rights; called on the international community to assist the Iraqi authorities to ensure the protection of and assistance to those fleeing the areas affected by terrorism; and requested the High Commissioner to provide technical and capacity-building assistance to the Government. The Council requested OHCHR to dispatch a mission to Iraq to investigate alleged violations and abuses of international human rights law committed by ISIL and associated terrorist groups to report on its findings at an interactive dialogue during the Council's twenty-eighth (2015) session and to provide an oral update during the twenty-seventh (2014) session of the Council on the implementation of the resolution.

On 25 September, at the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session [A/HRC/27/2], the Deputy High Commissioner for Human Rights presented the oral country update of the High Commissioner pursuant to Council resolution S-22/1 (see above).

Myanmar

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/26)], the Council welcomed the positive developments in Myanmar and the Government's commitment to continue on its path of political and economic reform, democratization and national reconciliation. It expressed concern about remaining human rights violations and abuses; the situation of the Rohingya and other minorities in Rakhine State; and further delays to open an OHCHR country office. The Council extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for one year; invited him to provide in his next report further recommendations on the needs of the country, including with regard to technical assistance and capacity-building; and requested him to submit a progress report to the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth (2014) session and to the Council in accordance with its annual programme of work.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In an April report [A/HRC/25/64], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, Tomás Ojea Quintana (Argentina), described his ninth visit to the country (14–19 February) and reflected on the progress made during the course of his six years as the mandate holder. He noted important improvements such as the release of over 1,100 prisoners of conscience, the opening up of space for freedom of expression, the development of political freedoms and the holding of free and fair by-elections, and progress in securing an end to fighting in the ethnic border areas. The democratic transition, however, was still in its early stages and remained fragile. He noted that the military retained a prevailing role in the life and institutions of the country; State institutions remained unaccountable; the judiciary was not yet functioning as an independent branch of the State; and rule of law was not yet in existence.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government continue to convene the prisoner review committee and upgrade the status of the committee to enable it to investigate cases of prisoners of conscience, including in Rakhine State; ensure that the police and military officers alleged to have committed acts of torture and ill-treatment were held accountable through the criminal justice system; expedite a new prisons law to meet international standards; and abolish the death penalty. On the situation in ethnic border areas, the Government, and ethnic armed groups, should abide by humanitarian and human rights law in areas where armed conflict persisted; establish a system for monitoring the implementation of ceasefire and political agreements; ensure that political negotiations abide by the principles of participation, transparency, accountability, equality and non-discrimination; ensure access to non-government controlled areas in Kachin State for humanitarian organizations; ensure that any return of refugees, asylum seekers and IDPs be carried out voluntarily; and accelerate the identification and release of all children in the national armed forces and border guard forces. The Special Rapporteur also made recommendations on addressing the Rakhine State, the transition to democracy and establishment of the rule of law, the right to freedom of expression, the problem of hate speech, the rights to peaceful assembly and association, human rights in the context of development, and joint plans of action on child soldiers.

In an addendum to the report [A/HRC/35/64/Add.1] Myanmar presented its comments on the report of the Special Rapporteur.

Report of Secretary-General. In an August report [A/69/362] submitted pursuant to General Assembly 68/242 [YUN 2013, p. 753] and covering the period from 11 August 2013 and 6 August 2014, the Secretary-General stated that Myanmar continued the reform agenda while the country prepared for the 2015 elections. Parliament enacted fresh laws reflecting popular needs and ensuring popular accountability, and efforts continued for a nationwide ceasefire and for building the framework for a political dialogue. The tension in Rakhine did not lessen, however, causing widespread concern and alarm both domestically and internationally. In that regard, the Secretary-General welcomed the establishment by presidential decree of a centre for diversity and national harmony in Yangon, with the objective of bridging the gap between communities, promoting peaceful coexistence and establishing early warning systems and building capacity among government bodies and civil society with the goal of detecting areas of potential tension and friction among communities. He observed that while human rights concerns and the communal violence of the past few years had, at times, overshadowed the progress made by the country, the political transition in Myanmar and the Government's commitment towards a strong developmental agenda had held ground. He urged the international community to continue to support the country along the path of democratization, reform, respect for human rights and stable economic growth and towards a more harmonious and inclusive society.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a September report [A/69/398], the newly appointed Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, Yanghee Lee (South Korea), presented her preliminary key areas of focus and recommendations aimed at contributing to the country's efforts towards respecting, protecting and promoting human rights and achieving democratization, national reconciliation and development. She took up her functions in June 2014 and conducted her first mission to Myanmar (17–26 July). She concluded that Myanmar was undergoing an important transition and that far-reaching reforms in the country had dramatically transformed the political, economic, social and human rights landscape. Possible signs of backtracking, however, if not addressed, could undermine the progress achieved. She recommended that the Government implement an electoral framework and process in line with international standards to ensure that elections were transparent, inclusive, participatory, free and fair; amend relevant laws and regulations affecting the rights to vote, campaign and stand for elections, ensuring no discrimination between different citizenship categories and using objective and reasonable criteria for candidates running for public office; ensure an enabling environment for civil society and the freedoms of expression, assembly and association; end discrimination against, and ensure the protection of, the rights of minorities; utilize the Rabat Plan of Action to develop a holistic set of measures to address the root causes of discrimination against racial and religious minorities, as well as intercommunal tensions and violence; ensure a rights-based and people-centred form of sustainable development and the protection of economic, social and cultural rights; strengthen the rule of law; and amend the Constitution to ensure that human rights were accorded to all persons in the country, providing for the prohibition of torture and the presumption of innocence until proven guilty, and ensuring that the military was subject to civilian rule and to the rule of law.

The Special Rapporteur also made recommendations to the Government regarding Rakhine State, including immediately addressing the critical health situation in camps; providing adequate basic services; investigating and prosecuting those responsible for human rights violations perpetrated against the Rohingya community; respecting the right to self-identification for Rohingyas and other minorities; and developing reconciliation measures as a necessary step to rebuilding integrated communities for inclusion in the Rakhine State Action Plan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/248 without vote [agenda item 68 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant human rights instruments, and recalling its previous resolutions on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the most recent of which is resolution 68/242 of 27 December 2013, those of the Commission on Human Rights, and those of the Human Rights Council, the most recent of which is resolution 25/26 of 28 March 2014,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in Myanmar and the facilitation by the Government of Myanmar of the visits of his Special Adviser to the country from 25 August to 2 September, from 5 to 11 October, from 31 October to 6 November and from 29 November to 2 December 2013 and from 18 to 28 January, from 28 March to 10 April, from 26 to 28 June and from 26 July to 1 August 2014,

Welcoming also the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in Myanmar and the access granted to her during her visit to Myanmar from 17 to 26 July 2014,

1. Welcomes the continued positive developments in Myanmar towards political and economic reform, democratization and national reconciliation and the promotion and protection of human rights, recognizes the scale of the reform effort undertaken to date, and encourages the Government of Myanmar to take further steps to consolidate the progress made and address outstanding concerns;

2. Also welcomes the continued engagement of the Government of Myanmar with political actors within the parliament and opposition parties, as well as with civil society, and urges the authorities to continue the process of constitutional review and reform in order to ensure, inter alia, that the elections to be held in 2015 are credible, inclusive and transparent, allowing all candidates to fairly contest the elections, and to ensure that Myanmar continues its democratic transition by bringing all national institutions, including the military, under a democratically elected, fully representative civilian government;

3. Further welcomes the ongoing efforts aimed at reviewing and reforming legislation, recalls the importance of ensuring its compatibility with international standards and democratic principles, welcomes some steps taken to strengthen good governance and the rule of law, and calls upon the Government of Myanmar to continue legal reform, including by repealing laws restricting fundamental freedoms, to consider ratifying additional international instruments, including international human rights conventions, and to take further steps to strengthen good governance and the rule of law, including through legislative, judicial and institutional reform;

4. Welcomes the release of prisoners of conscience, stressing the important role of the political prisoner review committee and encouraging its continuation, urges the Government of Myanmar to continue the unconditional release of all prisoners of conscience, including all political activists and human rights defenders recently detained or convicted, and to provide for the full rehabilitation of former prisoners of conscience, welcomes the announcement of a mandate for the Interim Press Council to mediate disputes between journalists and the authorities, and encourages the Government to fulfil its commitment to protect the right to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly, to allow for free and independent media and to take appropriate steps to ensure the safety and security of journalists, civil society activists and human rights defenders and their freedom to pursue their activities;

5. Urges the Government of Myanmar to step up its efforts to end remaining human rights violations and abuses, including arbitrary arrest and detention, forced displacement, rape and other forms of sexual violence, torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, arbitrary deprivation of property, including land, and violations of international humanitarian law in some parts of the country, and repeats its call upon the Government to take necessary measures to ensure accountability and end impunity;

6. Welcomes the important steps taken towards a nationwide ceasefire with ethnic armed groups and towards an all-inclusive political dialogue with the objective of achieving lasting peace, and urges full implementation of existing ceasefire agreements, including for all parties to protect the civilian population against ongoing violations and abuses of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law and for safe, timely, full and unhindered humanitarian access to be granted to all areas;

7. Urges the Government of Myanmar to accelerate its efforts to address discrimination, human rights violations, violence, hate speech, displacement and economic deprivation affecting various ethnic and religious minorities, and attacks against Muslims and other religious minorities, and calls upon the Government to uphold the rule of law and to step up its efforts to promote tolerance and peaceful co-existence in all sectors of society by, inter alia, facilitating interfaith and intercommunity dialogue and understanding and supporting community leaders in this direction;

8. Reiterates its serious concern about the situation of the Rohingya minority in Rakhine State, including further instances of violence and other abuses in the past year, and, while noting some steps taken by the Government of Myanmar to address the situation, calls upon the Government to protect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all inhabitants of Rakhine State regardless of legal status, to ensure full and immediate access to humanitarian assistance without discrimination, to permit unhindered access for humanitarian agencies across Rakhine State, to take measures to ensure the safe and voluntary return of internally displaced persons to their communities of origin, to allow freedom of movement and equal access to full citizenship for the Rohingya minority, to allow self-identification, to ensure equal access to services, particularly health and education, the right to marry and birth registration, to address the root causes of violence and discrimination, and to undertake full, transparent and independent investigations into all reports of human rights violations and abuses to ensure accountability and to bring about reconciliation;

9. Notes the efforts made to address comprehensively the complex situation in Rakhine State, and urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure transparency and a consultative approach that ensures the full engagement of all stakeholders, including religious minorities, in these efforts with a view to protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms and providing access to full citizenship on an equal basis, and to promote peaceful coexistence and the long-term development of all communities in Rakhine State;

10. Welcomes the establishment of the Centre for Diversity and National Harmony in Myanmar, which is intended to promote harmony and peaceful coexistence among communities;

11. Also welcomes the continued steps taken by the Government of Myanmar to improve engagement and cooperation with the United Nations and other international actors, including regional organizations, encourages the full implementation of relevant agreements, and, recalling the commitment of the Government to open a country office of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, expresses concern about delays and calls upon the Government to establish, without further delay, the office in accordance with the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

12. Encourages the international community to continue to support the Government of Myanmar in the fulfilment of its international human rights and international humanitarian law obligations and commitments, the implementation of its democratic transitional process and its economic and social development;

13. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to provide his good offices and to pursue his discussions on human rights, democracy and reconciliation in Myanmar, involving all relevant stakeholders, and to offer technical assistance to the Government of Myanmar in this regard;

(b) To give all assistance necessary to enable the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Myanmar and the Special Rapporteur of the Human Rights Council on the situation of human rights in Myanmar to discharge their mandates fully, effectively and in a coordinated manner;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, as well as to the Human Rights Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to remain seized of the matter on the basis of the reports of the Secretary-General and the Special Rapporteur.

Sri Lanka

Report of High Commissioner. In a February report [A/HRC/25/23] on promoting reconciliation and accountability in Sri Lanka, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 22/1 [YUN 2013, p. 755], the High Commissioner acknowledged the progress made in reconstruction and in the implementation of some of the recommendations made by the Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission, but highlighted that the Government had not ensured independent and credible investigations into past violations of international human rights and humanitarian law. The report contained updates on the ongoing attacks on religious minorities, the harassment and intimidation of human rights defenders, lawyers and journalists, and continued militarization. The Government had also not responded to the multiple offers of technical assistance made by the High Commissioner and special procedures, and new evidence continued to emerge on the events that took place in the final stages of the armed conflict, with human remains still being discovered. In addition to the establishment of an independent, international inquiry mechanism, which would contribute to establishing the truth, the High Commissioner recommended that the Government finalize laws dealing with incitement to hatred, witness and victim protection, the right to information and the criminalization of enforced disappearances; arrest, prosecute and punish perpetrators of attacks on minority communities, media and human rights defenders; undertake independent and credible criminal and forensic investigations, with international assistance, into all alleged violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including recently discovered mass graves; broaden the scope and tenure of the Commission of Inquiry on Disappearances to encompass cases from all parts of the island and all periods of the history of disappearances; take further steps in demilitarization and ensure military disengagement from activities that were meant to be civilian; resolve land disputes and promote community participation in reconstruction and development; and engage civil society and minority community representatives in a consultative process to support the implementation of the recommendations made by the Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission.

Communications. In letters dated 24 [A/HRC/25/G/9] and 27 February [A/HRC/25/G/10], Sri Lanka, respectively, provided its comments on the report of the High Commissioner on promoting reconciliation and accountability in Sri Lanka; and stated it had requested that its comments be published as an addendum to the report of the High Commissioner, not as a separate communication. It further stated that there was a lack of clarity and transparency with regard to the rules governing addenda and submissions of comments by States on the reports of the High Commissioner and the Secretary-General and requested that the issue be addressed in consultation with the Bureau with a view to seeking an equitable solution.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/1)], by a recorded vote of 23 to 12, with 12 abstentions, the Council called on the Government to conduct an independent and credible investigation into allegations of violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, and hold accountable those responsible; implement the constructive recommendations made in the report of the Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission; release publicly the results of its investigations into alleged violations by security forces; investigate all alleged attacks on journalists, human rights defenders, members of religious minority groups and other members of civil society, as well as on temples, mosques and churches; and cooperate with special procedures mandate holders and respond formally to their outstanding requests. The Council requested OHCHR to monitor the human rights situation in Sri Lanka and continue to assess progress on relevant national processes; undertake a comprehensive investigation into alleged serious violations and abuses of human rights and related crimes by both parties in the country during the period covered by the Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission, and establish the facts and circumstances of alleged violations and of the crimes perpetrated with a view to avoiding impunity and ensuring accountability; and present an oral update to the Council's twenty-seventh (2014) session, and a comprehensive report at its twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Council resolution 25/1 (see above), the High Commissioner in September presented an oral update [A/HRC/27/CRP.2] on promoting reconciliation, accountability and human rights in Sri Lanka. He urged the Government to seize the opportunity presented by the recommendations of the Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission to address many root causes and structural issues that contributed to the conflict, and lay the basis for longer-term reconciliation; and to end the climate of intimidation, threat and harassment against civil society actors advocating for justice and human rights, as well as the incitement of hatred and violence against the country's Muslim and Christian minorities, which would only undermine the prospects for peace and reconciliation. The High Commissioner briefed the Council on the progress of the OHCHR-conducted comprehensive investigation into alleged serious violations and abuses of human rights and related crimes by both parties to the conflict in Sri Lanka and appealed to the Sri Lankan authorities to cooperate fully with the investigation, as well as with the relevant special procedures mandate holders.

Yemen

Report of High Commissioner. In an August report on the situation of human rights in Yemen [A/HRC/27/44] covering the period from 1 July 2013 to 30 June 2014, the High Commissioner focused on accountability and transitional justice in providing redress for victims of serious human rights violations; incidents of extrajudicial killing; the use of the death penalty; the situation of refugees, migrants, asylum seekers and IDPs; enforced disappearances, fair trial and prison conditions; marginalized groups; developments regarding the judiciary; children's rights, women's rights and the rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association; and human rights activities conducted in cooperation with OHCHR. The High Commissioner welcomed the conclusion on 25 January 2014 of the National Dialogue Conference [YUN 2012, p. 351] and noted the Conference outcomes pertaining to human rights, especially with regard to women, children and marginalized communities. She, nonetheless, regretted that the overall security situation in the country had escalated into intermittent conflict since October 2013; urged all parties involved to respect their obligations under international humanitarian and human rights law; and deplored that no independent and effective investigation had been conducted in relation to allegations of the excessive use of force and grave human rights violations committed in Al-Dhale'a, Amran and other regions, in particular in cases that resulted in deaths and attacks against civilian targets, such as schools and hospitals. The High Commissioner recommended that the Government expedite the establishment of the national commission of inquiry; cooperate with OHCHR to revise the draft law on Transitional Justice and National Reconciliation to be in conformity with international standards; release all individuals imprisoned for their peaceful participation in the 2011 events; establish a moratorium on the death penalty; ensure independent investigations into allegations of the excessive use of force and grave human rights violations; ensure safe and unimpeded access for humanitarian organizations to all areas affected by armed conflict; and ensure the safety and security of journalists; ensure the consideration of women's rights in the Constitution drafting process; and implementation of the Action Plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Yemeni Armed Forces.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/19)], the Council noted with concern the armed violence in Dhale'a, Amran, Al Jawf, Ma'rib and Sana'a, and in particular the recent escalation of violence; welcomed the Peace and National Partnership Agreement of 21 September and called on all parties to cooperate and implement that Agreement; urged the competent State organs of Yemen to ensure the early adoption of the draft law establishing an independent national human rights institution; noted that the appointment of the members of the committee to investigate allegations of violations of human rights in 2011 had not yet been finalized by the President; and demanded that armed groups end the recruitment and use of children and release those who had already been recruited. It called on the Government to release persons arbitrarily detained; end any practice of unlawful detention of persons; investigate cases of violence against journalists and review cases of detention of journalists; uphold the rights of all non-nationals; and ensure fair trial guarantees and continue to ensure that the death penalty was not applied to minors. The Council also welcomed the recommendations on women's rights in the outcome document of the National Dialogue Conference; called on the international community to provide financial support to the 2014 Yemen humanitarian response plan; requested the High Commissioner to provide technical assistance and work with the Government to identify additional areas of assistance; and requested OHCHR to report to the Council's thirtieth (2015) session on the human rights situation in Yemen.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Belarus

Report of Special Rapporteur. In an April report on the situation of human rights in Belarus [A/HRC/26/44], the Special Rapporteur, Miklós Haraszti (Hungary), in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 23/15 [YUN 2013, p. 757], outlined major concerns in detail, and the general situation, which was characterized by a systemic denial of human rights to citizens in the country by way of a purposeful combination of restrictive laws and abusive practices. Those concerns included the independence of the judiciary and of lawyers; torture and other cruel, inhuman treatment or degrading treatment or punishment; prison conditions; arbitrary arrest and detention; the imprisonment of political opponents, human rights defenders and activists; enforced disappearances; the death penalty; freedoms of opinion and expression, of peaceful assembly and of association; access to information; trade unions; just and favourable work conditions; forced labour; discrimination; persons with disabilities; gender; minorities; and elections. The Special Rapporteur concluded that there had been very little progress since his last report in 2013 [YUN 2013, p. 756] and noted that the majority of the recommendations made by UN human rights mechanisms, including matters such as shortcomings of rule of law institutions, lack of accountability for human rights violations and impunity, had neither been implemented nor followed up on.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government release all political opponents, human rights defenders and activists convicted solely for the exercise of their political rights; take measures leading to meaningful political accountability; decriminalize public activities without permission; activate the work of the parliamentary working group on the death penalty, release information on those executed and establish a moratorium on the use of the death penalty; establish a national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles; investigate the fate of disappeared persons; ensure the prohibition of torture and other ill-treatment in law and in practice; adopt anti-discrimination legislation; adopt legislation in favour of holding peaceful assemblies; protect human rights defenders and journalists; and recognize and extend full cooperation to the mandate holder by engaging in a constructive dialogue and facilitating a visit to the country.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/25)], by a recorded vote of 24 to 7, with 16 abstentions, the Council called on the Government to conduct a comprehensive review of relevant legislation, policies, strategies and practices to ensure that the provisions were clearly defined and consistent with international human rights law; carry out a comprehensive reform of the justice sector and bar associations; and release all political prisoners. It extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year, and requested him to report to the Council's twenty-ninth (2015) session and to the General Assembly's seventieth (2015) session.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In an August report on the situation of human rights in Belarus [A/69/307], submitted in accordance with Council resolution 23/15 [YUN 2013, p. 757], the Special Rapporteur focused on the state of freedom of association and the impact of the legal framework and legal practices on NGOs and human rights defenders in the country. He identified the main obstacles hampering the activities of civil society organizations and human rights defenders. Findings indicated that such organizations and individuals continued to endure extreme political pressure and a restrictive regulatory setting, and that civil activities outside the official framework were criminalized. He concluded that the overall legislative framework and practices of the Belarusian authorities violated, on a regular basis, the relevant provisions of international law and paralyzed the exercise of citizens' right to full and inclusive participation in public life. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government release the remaining human rights defenders and activists convicted for exercising their civil and political rights; guarantee the independence and protection of human rights defenders, civil society organizations and NGOs from harassment, intimidation and violations; conduct a comprehensive review of the Belarusian legislation pertaining to freedom of association to bring it in line with international human rights law; review the law on public association and all regulations and practices pertaining to the activities of civil society organizations; remove legal and administrative impediments on funding for NGOs and human rights defenders, including funding from abroad; cease the vilification campaigns against NGOs critical of the government; end the obstruction, harassment and punishment of NGOs exercising their right to peaceful assembly; engage in constructive dialogue with independent NGOs and human rights defenders on civil society issues; and establish a national human rights institution in compliance with the Paris Principles in cooperation with all national NGOs willing to defend human rights.

On 18 December (decision 69/536), the General Assembly took note of the report of the Special Rapporteur.

Cyprus

Communications. By a 21 March note verbale [A/HRC/25/G/21], Turkey transmitted to the High Commissioner the Turkish Cypriot view on the OHCHR report on the question of human rights in Cyprus [YUN 2013, p. 757]. On 25 April [A/HRC/25/G/26], Cyprus provided its comments in relation to the Turkey's letter.

Report of High Commissioner. In a report on the question of human rights in Cyprus [A/HRC/28/20], the High Commissioner highlighted the concerns voiced by international and regional human rights mechanisms at factors and difficulties impeding the implementation of international human rights standards on the whole island owing to the protracted conflict. The report, which covered the period from 1 December 2013 to 30 November 2014, provided an overview of the specific human rights concerns in the country, including with regard to the right to life and the question of missing persons, the principle of non-discrimination, freedom of movement, property rights, freedom of religion and cultural rights, freedom of opinion and expression and the right to education. It also provided an update on activities conducted to promote the implementation of Security Council resolution 1325(2000) [YUN 2000, p. 1113] and adopt a gender perspective when negotiating and implementing peace agreements. OHCHR noted some positive developments, including in the identification and return of the remains of missing persons, an improved climate of interreligious cooperation and progress in conservation works at cultural heritage sites. The persistent division on the island, however, continued to hinder the full enjoyment by the whole population of Cyprus, of all human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Office reiterated the importance of addressing all human rights protection gaps and the underlying human rights issues in situations of protracted conflict.

Ukraine

In Ukraine, from 21 November 2013 to 22 February 2014, large-scale street protests erupted, triggered by the decision of former President Viktor Yanukovich not to sign an association agreement with the European Union. The protests were exacerbated by violence and the excessive use of force by the police, particularly in Independence Square (Maidan) in Kyiv, where over 100 people were killed in January and February 2014, including by snipers. The violence and human rights violations led to the downfall of the Government, the departure of President Yanukovich to the Russian Federation and the formation of a pro-European interim Government on 27 February. In March, the crisis broadened; paramilitary and so-called self-defence groups, as well as soldiers without insignia took control of the Autonomous Republic of Crimea and organized a referendum to join the Russian Federation. In the east and south of the country, regular rallies were organized with participation of the local population, but also allegedly with individuals and groups from neighbouring regions of the Russian Federation, with the demand for a referendum on the federalization of Ukraine or union with the Russian Federation, as well as recognition of Russian as a second State language. Supporters and opponents regularly clashed, resulting in the first three deaths of the crisis in the eastern regions on 13 and 14 March.

UN monitoring mission. On 14 March, OHCHR deployed the Human Rights Monitoring Mission to Ukraine to monitor and report on the human rights situation throughout the country and to propose recommendations to the Government and other actors to address emerging human rights issues as well as the root causes of the situation. The mission was deployed for a three month period. On 27 March, by resolution 68/262 (see p. 505), the General Assembly, reiterating the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the country, concluded that the referendum to join the Russian Federation had no validity.

Human Rights Council action. On 27 June [A/69/53 (res. 26/30)], by a recorded vote of 23 to 4, with 19 abstentions, the Council welcomed the holding of presidential elections in Ukraine on 25 May; the cooperation of the Government with the UN Human Rights Monitoring Mission in Ukraine and the renewal of the Mission's mandate until 15 September 2014 (see below). It called on all parties to cooperate with human rights monitors and implement the recommendations contained in the reports of OHCHR (see below); and called on the Government to continue its reform efforts and investigate all alleged human rights violations and abuses in a prompt, impartial, transparent and comprehensive manner. The Council expressed concern that individuals were not able to take part in voting in the Autonomous Republic of Crimea and the city of Sevastopol, and in parts of the Luhansk and Donetsk regions owing to disruption by illegal armed groups; called for an end to all acts of discrimination and harassment, in particular towards persons belonging to minorities, indigenous peoples and other residents of Crimea and Sevastopol; condemned the violence and abuses committed by illegal armed groups; urged all members of such groups to disarm and stop their unlawful acts, including to release all those unlawfully detained and vacate occupied public and administrative buildings; and urged the Government to conduct security and law enforcement operations in accordance with international law. The Council invited the High Commissioner to report on the implementation of the resolution at its twenty-seventh (2014) session.

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 26/30 (see above), the High Commissioner submitted a September report [A/HRC/27/75] covering the period from 21 November 2013 to 5 September 2014. He provided an overview of key human rights developments and concerns in Ukraine on the basis of the work of the UN Human Rights Monitoring Mission in Ukraine. The Mission's mandate was extended twice, most recently until 15 December 2014. Since April 2014, OHCHR had issued five public monthly reports on the human rights situation in Ukraine, based on the findings of monitoring teams in Kyiv, Donetsk, Kharkiv, Lviv and Odessa. OHCHR recommended the Government to prioritize addressing systemic and structural issues affecting human rights through institutional reform; establish governance and justice systems that promoted and protected human rights for all and were non-discriminatory; and integrate a comprehensive human rights plan, reflecting recommendations from international and regional mechanisms, into the reform agenda of the country. OHCHR noted the good cooperation extended by the Government to Human Rights Monitoring Mission, and stated that the Mission would continue to monitor and report on the evolving situation, with a view to contributing to an unbiased and accurate assessment of the human rights situation and a stronger and effective national human rights protection system.

Middle East

Syrian Arab Republic

Report of international commission of inquiry.

A February report [A/HRC/25/65] of the independent international commission of inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic, established by Human Rights Council resolution S-17/1 [YUN 2011, p. 780] to investigate alleged violations of international human rights law since March 2011, covered investigations conducted from 15 July 2013 to 20 January 2014, including 563 interviews and the collection of other evidence. The commission found that more than 250,000 persons were besieged in the country and subjected to relentless shelling and bombardment. Denied humanitarian aid, food and medical care, they had to choose between surrender and starvation. Government forces and pro-government militia perpetrated massacres and conducted widespread attacks on civilians, systematically committing crimes against humanity such as murder, torture, rape and enforced disappearance. Government forces committed gross violations of human rights and the war crimes of murder, hostage-taking, torture, rape and sexual violence, the recruitment and use of children in hostilities and the targeting of civilians in sniper attacks. Government forces also disregarded the special protection accorded to hospitals, medical and humanitarian personnel and cultural property; used incendiary weapons, causing superfluous injury and unnecessary suffering, in violation of international humanitarian law; and conducted indiscriminate and disproportionate aerial bombardment and shelling causing large-scale arbitrary displacement.

Non-State armed groups, named in the report, committed war crimes, including murder, execution without due process, torture, hostage-taking, enforced disappearance, rape and sexual violence, the recruitment and use of children in hostilities, attacks on protected objects and the forcible displacement of civilians. Medical and religious personnel and journalists were targeted, and armed groups besieged and indiscriminately shelled civilian neighbourhoods, in some instances spreading terror through the use of car bombings in civilian areas. Armed groups also perpetrated massacres. In Al-Raqqa, the widespread detention of civilians and their systematic torture amounted to a crime against humanity. Chemical weapons, specifically sarin, were used in multiple incidents during the conflict. The report concluded that States that exerted influence on the parties in Syria had to act to ensure that those parties complied with the rules of international humanitarian law. The Security Council bore responsibility for allowing the warring parties to violate those rules with impunity.

Human Rights Council actions. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/23)], by a recorded vote of 32 to 4, with 11 abstentions, the Human Rights Council decided to extend the mandate of the commission of inquiry until the twenty-eighth (2015) session of the Council, and requested the commission to present a written report on the situation of human rights in Syria during an interactive dialogue at its twenty-seventh (2014) and twenty-eighth (2015) sessions and to provide an oral update at its twenty-sixth (2014) session. It demanded that the Syrian authorities cooperate with the commission of inquiry, including by granting it immediate, full and unfettered access throughout the country; that all parties demilitarize medical facilities, schools and other civilian facilities, avoid establishing military positions in populated areas and desist from attacks against civilian objects; and that the Syrian authorities meet their responsibility to protect the Syrian population. It condemned the continued gross, systematic and widespread violations of human rights and all violations of international humanitarian law by the Syrian authorities and affiliated militias, including those involving aerial bombardment of civilian areas; violations and abuses against children; violence against persons belonging to religious or ethnic groups; the use of chemical weapons and all indiscriminate methods of warfare—prohibited under international law—that had a devastating impact on civilians; the intentional denial of humanitarian assistance to civilians, from whatever quarter, noting especially the responsibilities of the Government in that regard; and all acts of violence against humanitarian actors. It called on the Syrian authorities to accelerate the complete and irreversible destruction of their chemical weapons programme in accordance with their international obligations. The Council expressed grave concern at the spread of extremism and extremist groups, and at the credible reports that thousands of detainees, both Syrian and non-Syrian nationals, had died in government prisons as a result of starvation and torture. It stressed the need to ensure that all those responsible for violations of international humanitarian law or violations and abuses of human rights were held to account; reaffirmed that the Syrian people should determine the process and mechanisms to achieve justice, reconciliation, truth and accountability for gross violations and abuses of international law; encouraged the full participation of women in political talks; and urged the international community to provide financial support for the growing humanitarian needs of refugees.

On 27 June [res. 26/23], by a recorded vote of 32 to 5, with 9 abstentions, the Human Rights Council condemned the continued gross, systematic and widespread violations of human rights and all violations of international humanitarian law by the Syrian authorities and affiliated militias and demanded the Syrian authorities cooperate fully with the commission of inquiry and meet their responsibility to protect the Syrian population. The Council called upon all parties to the conflict to put an end to all forms of violence and to prevent violations of international humanitarian law and human rights violations and abuses. It condemned incidences of enforced disappearance by the Syrian regime; the use by the Syrian authorities of starvation as a method of combat; and violations and abuse committed against journalists and media activists, and against the civilian population, in particular women and children. It demanded the release of all persons arbitrarily detained, including children, and called upon the Syrian authorities to publish a list of all detention facilities and allow access to those facilities by independent monitors. The Council condemned the use of chemical weapons and indiscriminate methods of warfare in Syria; expressed concern at the allegations of the use of toxic chemicals and supported the fact-finding mission of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons to investigate those allegations; condemned the attack against inspectors of the Organization; and demanded that safe and unfettered access for the mission be ensured throughout the country. It reaffirmed its commitment to international efforts to find a political solution to the crisis; urged those countries with influence over the parties to the Syrian conflict to take measures to encourage them to negotiate constructively; and called upon the international community to respond to the Syrian humanitarian appeal and to fulfil previous pledges. The Council also expressed concern at the growing number of refugees and IDPs fleeing the violence and urged the international community to provide financial support to enable host countries to respond to the growing humanitarian needs of Syrian refugees.

Reports of international commission of inquiry. In a July report [A/HRC/27/60] covering the period from 20 January to 15 July, the independent international commission of inquiry on Syria, based on 480 interviews and other collected evidence, found that the conduct of the warring parties in the country had caused civilians immeasurable suffering. Government forces continued to perpetrate massacres and conduct widespread attacks on civilians, systematically committing murder, torture, rape and enforced disappearance amounting to crimes against humanity. Government forces also committed gross violations of human rights and the war crimes of murder, hostage-taking, torture, rape and sexual violence, the recruitment and use of children in hostilities and the targeting of civilians. Government forces disregarded the special protection accorded to hospitals and medical and humanitarian personnel; carried out indiscriminate and disproportionate aerial bombardment and shelling to spread terror; and used chlorine gas, an illegal weapon. Non-State armed groups, named in the report, committed massacres and war crimes, including murder, execution without due process, torture, hostage-taking, enforced disappearance, rape and sexual violence, the recruitment and use of children in hostilities and attacks on protected objects. Armed groups besieged and shelled civilian neighbourhoods, and members of Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) committed torture, murder, enforced disappearance and forcible displacement as part of an attack on the civilian population in Aleppo and Ar Raqqa governorates. The commission concluded with a series of recommendations aimed at urgently finding a political settlement to the war.

Human Rights Council action. On 25 September [A/69/53/Add.1 (res. 27/16)], by a recorded vote of 32 to 5, with 10 abstentions, the Human Rights Council demanded that the Syrian authorities cooperate fully with the commission and meet their responsibilities to protect the Syrian population. The Council condemned all violations and abuses of international human rights and humanitarian law committed against the civilian population; the reports of the widespread use of sexual violence in government detention centres, including those run by intelligence agencies; practices including abduction, hostage-taking, incommunicado detention, torture and killings carried out by non-State armed groups, most notably ISIL; the intervention in Syria of all foreign terrorist fighters and those foreign combatants fighting on behalf of the regime; the arbitrary arrest, detention, ill-treatment and torture of children by government forces for their, or their relatives', alleged support of opposition groups; the use of chemical weapons and all indiscriminate methods of warfare; and the intentional denial of humanitarian assistance to civilians and in particular the Syrian authorities' denial of medical assistance and the withdrawal of water and sanitation services to civilian areas, stressing that the starvation of civilians as a method of combat was prohibited under international law. It expressed concern at reports from the commission of inquiry on the suffering and torture in detention centres throughout Syria, including on prisoners in government facilities being held in dire conditions, denied medical assistance and food and subjected to torture; at the allegations of torture in detention facilities controlled by non-State armed groups; and at the abduction, incommunicado detention and torture of human rights defenders by Syrian authorities and armed opposition groups. The Council called for international monitoring bodies to be granted access to detainees in government prisons and detention centres; demanded that all armed groups halt the arbitrary detention of civilians; and demanded that the Syrian authorities end incommunicado detention. The Council also emphasized the need to ensure that all those responsible for violations were held to account, and decided to transmit all reports and oral updates of the commission of inquiry to all relevant bodies of the United Nations, including the General Assembly and the Secretary-General for appropriate action.

Communications. On 17 January [A/HRC/25/G/3], Syria transmitted to the Human Rights Council its response to the 2013 thematic report of the independent international commission of inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic, entitled "Without a trace: enforced disappearances in Syria".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/69/488/Add.3], adopted resolution 69/189 by recorded vote (127-13-48) [agenda item 68 (d)].

Situation of human rights in the Syrian Arab Republic

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and relevant international human rights treaties, including the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming its strong commitment to the sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity of the Syrian Arab Republic and to the principles of the Charter,

Recalling its resolutions 66/176 of 19 December 2011, 66/253 A of 16 February 2012, 66/253 B of 3 August 2012, 67/183 of 20 December 2012 and 67/262 of 15 May 2013, Human Rights Council resolutions S-16/1 of 29 April 2011, S-17/1 of 23 August 2011, S-18/1 of 2 December 2011, 19/1 of 1 March 2012, 19/22 of 23 March 2012, S-19/1 of 1 June 2012, 20/22 of 6 July 2012, 21/26 of 28 September 2012, 22/24 of 22 March 2013, 23/1 of 29 May 2013, 23/26 of 14 June 2013, 24/22 of 27 September 2013, 25/23 of 28 March 2014, 26/23 of 27 June 2014 and 27/16 of 25 September 2014 and Security Council resolutions 2042(2012) of 14 April 2012, 2043(2012) of 21 April 2012, 2118(2013) of 27 September 2013, 2139(2014) of 22 February 2014, 2165(2014) of 14 July 2014, 2170(2014) of 15 August 2014 and 2178(2014) of 24 September 2014 and the statements by the President of the Council of 3 August 2011 and 2 October 2013,

Condemning the grave deterioration of the human rights situation and the indiscriminate killing and deliberate targeting of civilians as such, in violation of international humanitarian law, and acts of violence that may foment sectarian tensions,

Noting with concern the culture of impunity for serious violations of international humanitarian law and violations and abuses of human rights law committed during the present conflict, which has provided a fertile ground for further violations and abuses,

Recalling that, amid expressions of popular discontent over restrictions on the enjoyment of civil, political, economic and social rights, civilian protests erupted in Dar'a in March 2011, and noting that the excessive and violent oppression of civilian protests by the Syrian authorities, which later escalated to the direct shelling of civilian population areas, fuelled the escalation of armed violence and extremist groups,

Expressing outrage at the continuing escalation of violence in the Syrian Arab Republic, which has caused more than 191,000 fatalities, and in particular at the continued widespread and systematic gross violations, as well as abuses, of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law, including those involving the continued use of heavy weapons and aerial bombardments, such as the indiscriminate use of ballistic missiles, cluster munitions, barrel and vacuum bombs, and chlorine gas, and starvation of civilians as a method of combat by the Syrian authorities against the Syrian population,

Expressing grave concern at the disproportionate use of force by the Syrian authorities against civilians, which has caused immense human suffering and fomented the spread of extremism and extremist groups and which demonstrates the failure of the Syrian authorities to protect the Syrian population and to implement the relevant resolutions and decisions of United Nations bodies,

Expressing grave concern also at the spread of extremism and extremist groups, terrorism and terrorist groups, and strongly condemning all violations and abuses of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law committed in the Syrian Arab Republic by any party to the conflict, in particular the so-called Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant, militias fighting on behalf of the regime, Al-Qaida-affiliated terrorist groups and other extremist groups,

Expressing support for the work carried out by the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic, and strongly condemning the lack of cooperation by the Syrian authorities with the Commission of Inquiry,

Recalling the statements made by the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the special procedures of the Human Rights Council that crimes against humanity and war crimes are likely to have been committed in the Syrian Arab Republic, noting the repeated encouragement by the High Commissioner for the Security Council to refer the situation to the International Criminal Court, and regretting that a draft resolution was not adopted despite broad support from Member States,

Expressing its deepest concern about the findings of the Commission of Inquiry and also the allegations contained in the evidence presented by "Caesar" in January 2014 regarding the torture and execution of persons incarcerated by the Syrian authorities, and underlining the need for those allegations and similar evidence to be collected, examined and made available for future accountability efforts,

Welcoming Security Council resolutions 2139(2014) and 2165(2014) and expressing grave concern that implementation remains largely unfulfilled, and noting the urgent need to strengthen efforts to address the humanitarian situation in the Syrian Arab Republic, including through protection of civilians and rapid, safe and unhindered humanitarian access,

Recalling its commitment to Security Council resolutions 2170(2014) and 2178(2014),

Expressing deep concern at the more than 3 million refugees who have been forced to flee the Syrian Arab Republic, of whom more than 750,000 are women and more than 1.5 million are children, and at the 10.8 million people in the Syrian Arab Republic requiring urgent humanitarian assistance, of whom 6.45 million are internally displaced, as well as at the impact of the influx of Syrian refugees into neighbouring countries and other countries in the region, and at the risk the situation presents to regional stability,

Expressing its profound indignation at the death of well over 10,000 children and the many more injured since March 2011,

Expressing its deep appreciation for the significant efforts that have been made by neighbouring countries and other countries in the region to accommodate Syrian refugees, while acknowledging the increasing political, socioeconomic and financial impact of the presence of large-scale refugee populations in those countries, notably in Lebanon, Jordan, Turkey, Iraq, Egypt and Libya,

Welcoming the hosting by the Government of Kuwait of the First and Second International Humanitarian Pledging Conferences for Syria on 30 January 2013 and 15 January 2014, and expressing its deep appreciation for the significant pledges of humanitarian assistance that have been made,

Welcoming also the efforts of the United Nations and the League of Arab States and all diplomatic efforts to achieve a political solution to the Syrian crisis based on the final communiqué of the Action Group for Syria (Geneva communiqué) of 30 June 2012, and welcoming further the appointment of Mr. Staffan de Mistura as Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Syria and expressing its full support for his mission,

Expressing its regret that the parties to the conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic, in particular the Syrian authorities, have failed to take advantage of the opportunities to achieve a political solution and form a transitional government with full executive powers based on the Geneva communiqué,

1. Strongly condemns all violations and abuses of international human rights law and all violations of international humanitarian law committed against the civilian population, in particular all indiscriminate attacks, including those involving the use of barrel bombs against civilian populated areas and civilian infrastructure, and demands that all parties immediately demilitarize medical facilities and schools and comply with their obligations under international law;

2. Deplores and condemns in the strongest terms the continued armed violence by the Syrian authorities against the Syrian people since the beginning of the peaceful protests in 2011, and demands that the Syrian authorities immediately put an end to all indiscriminate attacks on civilian areas and public spaces, including those involving the use of terror tactics, airstrikes, barrel and vacuum bombs, chemical weapons and heavy artillery;

3. Also deplores and condemns in the strongest terms the continued widespread and systematic gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms and all violations of international humanitarian law by the Syrian authorities and the Government-affiliated shabbiha militias, including those involving the use of heavy weapons, aerial bombardments, cluster munitions, ballistic missiles, barrel bombs, chemical weapons and other force against civilians, including starvation of the civilian population as a method of combat, attacks on schools, hospitals and places of worship, massacres, arbitrary executions, extrajudicial killings, the killing and persecution of protestors, human rights defenders and journalists, arbitrary detention, enforced disappearances, violations of women's and children's rights, unlawful interference with access to medical treatment, failure to respect and protect medical personnel, torture, systemic sexual and gender-based violence, including rape in detention, and ill-treatment, and further strongly condemns all human rights abuses or violations of international humanitarian law by armed extremists, as well as any human rights abuses or violations of international humanitarian law by armed anti-Government groups;

4. Further deplores and condemns in the strongest terms the terrorist acts and violence committed against civilians by the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant, its violent extremist ideology and its continued gross, systematic and widespread abuses of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law, and reaffirms that terrorism, including the actions of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant, cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality or civilization;

5. Reminds the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic of the obligations of the Syrian Arab Republic under the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, including to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture in any territory under its jurisdiction, and calls upon all States parties to the Convention to comply with any relevant obligations, including with respect to the extradite or prosecute principle contained in article 7 of the Convention;

6. Strongly condemns the reported persistent and widespread use of sexual violence, abuse and exploitation, including in government detention centres, including those run by the intelligence agencies, and notes that such acts may constitute violations of international humanitarian law and international human rights law, and in this regard expresses deep concern at the prevailing climate of impunity for sexual violence crimes;

7. Also strongly condemns all violations and abuses committed against children in contravention of applicable international law, such as their recruitment and use, killing and maiming, rape and all other forms of sexual violence, attacks on schools and hospitals, as well as their arbitrary arrest, detention, torture, ill-treatment and their use as human shields;

8. Recalls the statement made by the Chair of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic on 16 September 2014 that the Syrian authorities remain responsible for the majority of the civilian casualties, killing and maiming scores of civilians daily, and decides to transmit the reports of the Commission of Inquiry to the Security Council;

9. Reaffirms the Syrian authorities' responsibility for enforced disappearances, and takes note of the assessment of the Commission of Inquiry that the Syrian authorities' use of enforced disappearances amounts to a crime against humanity, and condemns the targeted disappearances of young men following Government-brokered ceasefires;

10. Demands that the Syrian authorities cooperate fully with the Commission of Inquiry, including by granting it immediate, full and unfettered access throughout the Syrian Arab Republic;

11. Also demands that the Syrian authorities meet their responsibilities to protect the Syrian population;

12. Strongly condemns the intervention in the Syrian Arab Republic of all foreign terrorist fighters and those foreign organizations fighting on behalf of the Syrian regime, particularly militia groups such as Hizbullah, Asa'ib Ahl al-Haq and Liwa' Abu al-Fadl al-Abbas, and expresses deep concern that their involvement further exacerbates the deteriorating situation in the Syrian Arab Republic, including the human rights and humanitarian situation, which has a serious negative impact on the region;

13. Demands that all foreign terrorist fighters, including those who are fighting in support of the Syrian authorities, immediately withdraw from the Syrian Arab Republic;

14. Also demands that all parties immediately put an end to all violations and abuses of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, recalls, in particular, the obligation under international humanitarian law to distinguish between civilian populations and combatants and the prohibition against indiscriminate and disproportionate attacks and all attacks against civilians and civilian objects, further demands that all parties to the conflict take all appropriate steps to protect civilians, including by desisting from attacks directed against civilian objects, such as medical centres, schools and water stations, immediately demilitarize such facilities, avoid establishing military positions in populated areas and enable the evacuation of the wounded and all civilians who wish to do so from besieged areas, and recalls in this regard that the Syrian authorities bear primary responsibility for protecting the population;

15. Strongly condemns practices including abduction, hostage-taking, incommunicado detention, torture, brutal murder of innocent civilians and summary executions carried out by non-State armed groups and terrorist groups, most notably the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant and Al-Nusra Front, and underlines that such acts may amount to crimes against humanity;

16. Deplores the suffering and torture in detention centres throughout the Syrian Arab Republic as depicted in the reports of the Commission of Inquiry and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, demands that the Syrian authorities immediately release all persons arbitrarily detained, including the members of the Syrian Centre for Media and Freedom of Expression, and ensure that detention conditions are consistent with international law, and calls upon the Syrian authorities to publish a list of all detention facilities;

17. Demands that the Syrian authorities, the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant, Al-Nusra Front, and all other groups halt the arbitrary detention of civilians and release all civilians detained;

18. Calls for the appropriate international monitoring bodies to be granted access to detainees in government prisons and detention centres, including the military facilities referred to in the reports of the Commission of Inquiry;

19. Strongly condemns the use of chemical weapons and all indiscriminate methods of warfare in the Syrian Arab

Republic, which is prohibited under international law, and notes with grave concern the Commission of Inquiry's findings that the Syrian authorities have repeatedly used chlorine gas as an illegal weapon, which constitutes a violation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction and is prohibited under international law;

20. Demands that the Syrian Arab Republic respect fully its obligations under the Chemical Weapons Convention, the decision of 27 September 2013 of the Executive Council of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons and Security Council resolution 2118(2013) requiring it to declare its programme in full and eliminate it in its entirety, and strongly urges the Syrian Arab Republic to provide full cooperation to the fact-finding mission of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons looking at the allegations of the use of chlorine as a weapon of war and to the declaration assessment team working to verify the chemical weapon declarations of the Syrian Arab Republic and seeking to clarify the gaps and discrepancies discovered therein;

21. Also demands that all parties take all appropriate steps to protect civilians, including members of ethnic, religious and confessional communities, and stresses that, in this regard, the primary responsibility to protect the Syrian population lies with the Syrian authorities;

22. Emphasizes the need to ensure that all those responsible for violations of international humanitarian law or violations and abuses of human rights law are held to account through appropriate fair and independent, national or international, criminal justice mechanisms in accordance with the principle of complementarity, and stresses the need to pursue practical steps towards this goal, and for this reason encourages the Security Council to take appropriate action to ensure accountability, noting the important role that the International Criminal Court can play in this regard;

23. Strongly condemns the intentional denial of humanitarian assistance to civilians, from whatever quarter, in particular the denial of medical assistance and the withdrawal of water and sanitation services to civilian areas, which has recently worsened, stressing that the starvation of civilians as a method of combat is prohibited under international law and noting especially the primary responsibility of the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic in this regard, and deplores the deteriorating humanitarian situation;

24. Reaffirms its commitment to international efforts to find a political solution to the Syrian crisis that meets the legitimate aspirations of the Syrian people for a civil, democratic and pluralistic State, with the full and effective participation of women, and where there is no room for sectarianism or discrimination on ethnic, religious, linguistic, gender or any other grounds, and urges those countries with influence over the Syrian parties, in particular over the Government of the Syrian Arab Republic, to take all measures to encourage the parties to the conflict to negotiate constructively and on the basis of the call made in the Geneva communiqué for the formation of a transitional governing body with full executive powers;

25. Urges the international community, including all donors, to provide urgent financial support to enable the host countries to respond to the growing humanitarian needs of Syrian refugees, while emphasizing the principle of burden-sharing;

26. Calls upon all members of the international community, including all donors, to fulfil their previous pledges and continue to provide much-needed support to the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other humanitarian actors to provide humanitarian assistance to the millions of Syrians displaced both internally and in host countries;

27. Urges all Syrian parties to the conflict to take all appropriate steps to ensure the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel, personnel of the specialized agencies and all other personnel engaged in humanitarian relief activities as required by international humanitarian law, without prejudice to their freedom of movement and access, stresses the need not to impede or hinder those efforts, recalls that attacks on humanitarian workers may amount to war crimes, and notes in this regard that the Security Council affirmed in its resolution 2165(2014) that it will take further measures in the event of non-compliance with resolutions 2139(2014) or 2165(2014) by any Syrian party.

Territories occupied by Israel

In 2014, the Human Rights Council addressed cases of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel following the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East. Political and other issues in the region were considered by the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Report of High Commissioner. In a January report [A/HRC/25/39] submitted pursuant to Council resolution 22/29 [YUN 2013, p. 763], the High Commissioner provided information on the status of implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem [YUN 2012, p. 765], and addressed continued Israeli settlement activity, settler violence and accountability, Palestinian detainees, including children in Israeli custody, as well as business and human rights in relation to the settlements. The report also included summaries of the submissions received from Member States.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a January report [A/HRC/25/67], the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Richard Falk (United States), addressed Israeli settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the wall in the context of the tenth anniversary of the 2004 advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) [YUN 2004, p. 465], and considered the policies and practices of Israel in occupied Palestine in light of the prohibition on segregation and apartheid. He also addressed concerns in relation to the deterioration of the human rights situation of Palestinians living under the Israeli blockade in the Gaza Strip. The Special Rapporteur recommended that Palestinian rights be fully respected in attempts to reach a peaceful and just resolution of the conflict between the two peoples. He recommended that the General Assembly request the ICJ to issue an advisory opinion on the legal status of the prolonged occupation of Palestine, and that the Human Rights Council appoint an expert group to propose a special protocol to the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 with the purpose of proposing a legal regime for any occupation that lasts for more than five years. The international community should investigate the business activities of companies and financial institutions registered in their own respective countries, which profit from the settlements of Israel and other unlawful Israeli activities, and take appropriate action to end such practices and ensure appropriate reparation for affected Palestinians; and the Government of Israel should cease expanding and creating settlements in occupied Palestine, start dismantling existing settlements and returning its citizens to the Israeli side of the Green Line, lift the unlawful blockade of Gaza, cease military incursions, allow Gazans to benefit from their natural resources situated within their borders or off the coast of Gaza and take account of the deepening emergency in Gaza. He recommended that the Human Rights Council pay increased attention to the failure by Israel to cooperate with the normal functioning of the United Nations by way of the Special Rapporteur and to the protection of Special Rapporteurs from defamatory attacks diverting attention from issues integral to the mandate.

Human Rights Council actions. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/27)], by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions, the Human Rights Council reaffirmed its support for the solution of two States, Palestine and Israel, living side by side in peace and security; and the inalienable, permanent and unqualified right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including their right to live in freedom, justice and dignity, and to establish their sovereign, independent, democratic and viable contiguous State. It stressed the need for respect for and preservation of the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of all of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem; confirmed that the right of the Palestinian people to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources had to be used in the interest of their national development, the well-being of the Palestinian people and as part of the realization of their right to self-determination; urged all Member States and relevant bodies to support and assist the Palestinian people in the early realization of their right to self-determination; and decided to continue the consideration of the question at its twenty-eighth (2015) session.

On the same date [res. 25/29], by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions, the Council stressed the need for Israel to withdraw from the Palestinian Territory to enable the Palestinian people to exercise the universally recognized right to self-determination, and reiterated the need for respect for the territorial unity, contiguity and integrity of the Occupied Palestinian Territory and for guarantees of the freedom of movement of persons and goods within that territory, including movement into and from East Jerusalem, into and from the Gaza Strip, between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and to and from the outside world. It demanded that Israel comply with the provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention and cease all measures and actions taken in violation of that Convention; cease all practices and actions that violated the human rights of the Palestinian people; cease its imposition of prolonged closures and economic and movement restrictions, including those amounting to a blockade on the Gaza Strip; cease all of its settlement activities, the construction of the wall and any other measures aimed at altering the character, status and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory; and comply with its legal obligations under international law.

The Council expressed concern at the confiscation and damage by Israel of fishing nets in the Gaza Strip; the conditions of the Palestinian prisoners and detainees in Israeli jails and detention centres; the restrictions imposed by Israel that impeded the access of Christian and Muslim worshippers to holy sites; and the Citizenship and Entry into Israel Law adopted by the Knesset, which suspended the possibility, with certain rare exceptions, of family reunification between an Israeli citizen and a person residing in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. It condemned the excessive use of force by the Israeli occupying forces against Palestinian civilians, particularly in the Gaza Strip, and in the context of peaceful protests in the West Bank, which resulted in extensive loss of life and vast numbers of injuries; the firing of rockets against Israeli civilian areas; and all acts of violence, including all acts of terror, provocation, incitement and destruction by Israeli settlers. It urged States to provide emergency assistance to the Palestinian people to alleviate the financial crisis and the dire socioeconomic and humanitarian situation; and requested the Secretary-General report on the implementation of the resolution at its twenty-eighth (2015) session.

Human Rights Council special session. On 18 July [A/HRC/S-21/1], the Group of Arab States, the Group of African States, the Organization of Islamic Cooperation, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the State of Palestine requested the holding, on 23 July, of a special session of the Human Rights Council to address the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The request was supported by 17 States Members of the Council and five observer States. The Council held its twenty-first special session on 23 July [A/HRC/S-21/2].

Human Rights Council action. On 23 July [A/69/53 (res. S-21/1)], by a recorded vote of 29 to 1, with 17 abstentions, the Council condemned the widespread, systematic and gross violations of international human rights and fundamental freedoms arising from the Israeli military operation carried out in the Occupied Palestinian Territory since 13 June, particularly the Israeli military assault on the occupied Gaza Strip, by air, land and sea, which involved disproportionate and indiscriminate attacks, including aerial bombardment of civilian areas, the targeting of civilians and civilian properties in collective punishment contrary to international law. It condemned violence against civilians wherever it occurred, including the killing of two Israeli civilians as a result of rocket fire, and urged all parties concerned to respect their obligations under international humanitarian and human rights law; called for an immediate cessation of Israeli military assaults throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory; and demanded Israel to end its illegal closure of the occupied Gaza Strip.

The Council expressed concern at the rising number of incidents of violence, destruction, harassment, provocation and incitement by extremist Israeli settlers illegally transferred to the Occupied Palestinian Territory against Palestinian civilians and their properties; and at the condition of Palestinian prisoners and detainees in Israeli jails and detention centres, in particular following the arrest by Israel of more than 1,000 Palestinians since 13 June. It recommended that the Government of Switzerland, in its capacity as depositary of the Fourth Geneva Convention, reconvene the conference of High Contracting Parties to the Convention on measures to enforce the Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; requested that all relevant special procedures mandate holders seek and gather information on all human rights violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem; and decided to dispatch an independent, international commission of inquiry, to be appointed by the President of the Council, to investigate all violations of international humanitarian and human rights law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, particularly in the Gaza Strip, in the context of the military operations conducted since 13 June. The Council requested that other relevant UN bodies cooperate with the commission of inquiry to carry out its mission, and also requested the assistance of the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner, including in the provision of administrative, technical and logistical assistance to enable the commission of inquiry and special procedures mandate holders to fulfil their mandates promptly. It further requested the High Commissioner to report on the implementation of the resolution to the Council at its twenty-seventh (2014) session.

Communication. In a letter dated 28 July [A/HRC/S-21/G/1], Israel highlighted its concerns regarding the level of transparency and timeliness observed in the process of organizing the special session of the Human Rights Council.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In August, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, Makarim Wibisono (Indonesia), submitted his first report [A/69/301 & Corr.1], based on consultations held with the relevant States and other stakeholders in Geneva, and outlined his next steps towards the fulfilment of the mandate.

On 18 December (decision 69/536), the General Assembly took note of the report.

Reports of High Commissioner. An October report [A/HRC/27/76] of the High Commissioner, submitted pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution S-21/1 (see above), reviewed the status of implementation of that resolution. The report provided an update on the steps taken by the Government of Switzerland to resume consultations on the question of reconvening a conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention [YUN 1999, p. 415]; outlined the steps taken by OHCHR to support the establishment of the commission of inquiry to investigate violations of international humanitarian and human rights law in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; contained information on the activities of special procedures mandate holders in relation to their efforts to gather information on all human rights violations in the Occupied Palestinian Territory; and presented preliminary information, covering the period from 12 June to 26 August, gathered by OHCHR on the situation of human rights in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and in the Gaza Strip.

The deterioration in the situation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, remained a cause for concern. With regard to violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, the actions of the Israeli forces included excessive use of force, including use of live ammunition against unarmed demonstrators; the arrest and detention of hundreds of Palestinians, in violation of fair trial rights; and restrictions on the freedom of movement of Palestinians. Between 1,100 and 1,500 Palestinians were detained, including 27 members of the Palestinian Legislative Council, following the kidnapping of three Israeli youths on 12 June. The bodies of the three youths were discovered on 30 June, followed by the resumption of punitive house demolitions by the Israeli authorities and, on 31 August, the declaration by the Israeli Civil Administration of 988 acres of Palestinian land, south of Bethlehem, as State land, reportedly in response to the kidnapping and murders. Clashes between Palestinians and Israeli Security Forces took place throughout the reporting period and resulted in a high number of killings and injuries, and some actions by the Israeli authorities, especially in the Hebron area, potentially amounted to collective punishment. In Gaza, increased hostilities between Israel and Palestinian armed groups were noted since early June. Preliminary data indicated that as of 9 September, 2,142 Palestinians were killed or died from injuries in the period between 7 July and 26 August. Those casualties included 1,474 civilians, including 501 children and 257 women. According to Israeli media reports, four Israeli civilians, including one child; one foreign civilian; 66 soldiers; and one person of unknown status, were killed during the reporting period. As at 26 August, 18,080 housing units were destroyed, leaving approximately 108,500 people homeless. More than a quarter of the entire population of Gaza—479,000 Palestinians—had been displaced.

In response to Human Rights Council resolutions S-9/1 [YUN 2009, p. 780] and S-12/1 [ibid., pp. 785 & 787], the High Commissioner issued the seventh periodic report [A/HRC/28/80] on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, covering the period from 9 November 2013 to 31 October 2014, which highlighted issues of concern with regard to each of the main duty bearers in the Territory, namely the Government of Israel, the Palestinian Authority and the authorities in Gaza. With regard to the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the High Commissioner examined the excessive use of force by Israeli and Palestinian security forces, which resulted in an increase in deaths during the year. With regard to Gaza, he addressed the ongoing blockade and the enforcement of access-restricted areas, noting the hardships and human rights violations those measures created. He drew particular attention to the impact of the blockade on freedom of movement and reconstruction and economic development in Gaza. The High Commissioner recommended that the Government of Israel lift the Gaza blockade in order to halt the ongoing punitive measure against civilians; ensure that the use of force by its security forces in situations other than hostilities was in compliance with the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials; carry out prompt, effective, independent, impartial, thorough and transparent investigations of alleged unlawful killings and injuries of Palestinians, and of allegations of torture and ill-treatment; and halt plans that would result in the forcible transfer of Palestinian Bedouin communities and herders currently residing in Area C of the West Bank.

The Government of the State of Palestine should take measure to protect the rights of persons deprived of their liberty, particularly the rights of physical integrity, to a fair trial and to due process of law; conduct prompt, effective, independent, impartial, thorough and transparent investigations of allegations of torture and ill-treatment, and ensure that perpetrators are brought to justice; either charge and bring to trial or release all detainees under the governor orders, and end the practice of detention based on governor orders; ensure periodic and effective judicial review of a person's detention in all cases; and take all necessary measures to ensure that perpetrators of all acts involving violence against women, including so-called "honour killings", were prosecuted and appropriately sentenced. Authorities in Gaza should respect international humanitarian law, particularly the principle of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and ensure accountability for violations; take all the necessary measures to ensure that the rights of persons deprived of liberty were respected, including by ensuring effective, independent, impartial, thorough and transparent investigations into allegations of torture and ill-treatment; investigate allegations of summary executions and cases of death of persons in the custody of the authorities; and refrain from unlawful restrictions on the freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly. The High Commissioner also called on Palestinian armed groups in Gaza to respect international humanitarian law, particularly the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution, and to ensure accountability for violations.

In an addendum to the report [A/HRC/28/80/Add.1], the High Commissioner provided information on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory between 12 June and 26 August, including the escalation in hostilities between the State of Israel and Palestinian armed groups in Gaza, the consequences of which would continue to be felt by Palestinians across the Gaza Strip for some time. The High Commissioner concluded that effective accountability was a key means to break the cycle of violence, human rights violations and impunity. Violations in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, continued to drive the conflict with wider implications for peace and security in the region. The protracted conflict was at a critical juncture, with the heightened tensions emphasising the imperative for an end to the recurrent human rights violations by all parties and to the prolonged occupation, as well as the full realization of the right to self-determination.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 25/29 (see p. 928), the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/HRC/28/45] on the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, covering the period from 26 May 2013 to 31 October 2014. He presented an analysis of how violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law and abuses of human rights by all duty bearers drove the conflict and violence, and explained how an end to those violations and abuses was a key component of any enduring peace. The Secretary-General concluded that the human rights situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territory remained of grave concern. The murders of the Israeli teenagers and the Palestinian boy in June and July 2014, and the subsequent security operations in the West Bank, followed by rocket fire and the escalation in Gaza, heightened the already entrenched tensions and divisions that characterized the situation. The settlements in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, violated international law and ran counter to the two-State solution. They were at the centre of many other human rights violations in the occupied West Bank, and were a source of demonstrations, incidents involving the excessive use of force by Israeli security forces, settler violence and widespread discriminatory policies affecting Palestinians' enjoyment of their human rights. On the Palestinian side, attacks on Israelis provided material for a justification of hard-line measures that reinforced the cycle of violence. The ongoing blockade in Gaza—a collective penalty against the affected population—weakened links between Gaza and the West Bank and should end. Impunity for violations and abuses by all sides reinforced those problems, and for the tension to be diffuse in a meaningful way, all sides must address the human rights dimensions of the conflict.

The Secretary-General recommended that all duty bearers comply fully with international law, including by adequately remedying, and ensuring accountability for, violations and abuses. Obstacles to peace and to Palestinians' enjoyment of their human rights, including their right to self-determination, had to be removed, including by ending and reversing settlement activity in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, lifting the blockade on Gaza and ending the occupation of Palestinian land. At the same time, due consideration should be given to ensuring the legitimate security needs of Israel with due respect for international humanitarian and human rights law. All parties should refrain from unilateral actions that exacerbate tensions and resentment, and promote an environment conducive to peace, mutual understanding and respect for human rights.

Occupied Syrian Golan

Human Rights Council actions. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/31)], by a recorded vote of 33 to 1, with 13 abstentions, the Council called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan, and to desist from the continuous building of settlements and from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan. The Council emphasized that the displaced persons of the population of the occupied Syrian Golan must be allowed to return to their homes and recover their property. It further called on Israel to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan and from its repressive measures against them. Israel should release the Syrian detainees in Israeli prisons, some of whom had been detained for more than 27 years, and to treat them in conformity with international humanitarian law; and allow delegates of the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit Syrian prisoners of conscience and detainees in Israeli prisons accompanied by specialized physicians to assess the state of their physical and mental health and to protect their lives. The Council requested that the Secretary-General bring the resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, international and regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report on the matter at its twenty-eighth (2015) session.

On 28 March [res. 25/28], by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions, the Council condemned the continued settlement and related activities by Israel, including the expansion of settlements, the expropriation of land, the demolition of houses, the confiscation and destruction of property and the construction of bypass roads, which changed the physical character and demographic composition of the occupied territories, including the occupied Syrian Golan, and constituted a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention; called on Israel to reverse the settlement policy in the occupied territories and to end all human rights violations linked to the presence of settlements, especially the right to self-determination; demanded that Israel comply fully with its legal obligations; and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the implementation of the resolution at its twenty-eighth (2015) session. The Council also requested that all parties implement the recommendations in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission to investigate the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory [YUN 2012, p. 765], and requested the High Commissioner to report to the Council at its twenty-eighth (2015) session on the status of implementation of those recommendations (see below).

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Council resolution 25/31 (see p. 931), the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/HRC/28/46] on the implementation of that resolution. The Secretary-General indicated that OHCHR, on 3 September, had addressed notes verbales to the Government of Israel and to the Governments of Member States that requested information on steps taken or envisaged to be taken concerning the implementation of resolution 25/31. No reply was received from Israel. Replies from Cuba (15 September), Denmark (17 September) and the Syrian Arab Republic (16 October) were summarized in the report.

Pursuant to Council resolution 25/28 (see p. 931), the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/HRC/28/44] on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan, which covered the period from 1 November 2013 to 31 October 2014. The report analysed the impact of Israeli settlements and settler violence on the human rights of Palestinians, and addressed the issues related to Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Golan, including the exploitation of natural resources. The Secretary-General concluded that Israel continued to fail to comply with its international obligation to protect the Palestinian population from violent acts committed by Israeli settlers, and to effectively prevent, and ensure accountability for, such violence. Israeli policies and practices regarding access to Palestinian land had a negative impact on the rights of Palestinians, in particular their rights to an adequate standard of living and to work.

He recommended that Israel cease all settlement activity in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, as well as in the occupied Syrian Golan; implement the relevant UN resolutions; withdraw from the territories occupied since 1967; and cease the exploitation of natural resources from those territories.

Follow-up to the 2012 fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on Palestinian rights

Report of High Commissioner. Pursuant to Human Rights Council resolution 25/28 (see p. 931), the High Commissioner submitted a report [A/HRC/28/43 & Corr.1] on the status of implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the independent international fact-finding mission on the implications of Israeli settlements on the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of the Palestinian people throughout the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem [YUN 2012, p. 765]. The High Commissioner addressed the continued Israeli settlement activity; settler violence and accountability; Palestinian detainees, including children in Israeli custody; and business and human rights in relations to the settlements. The report also reflected submissions received from Member States on the status of implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the fact-finding mission.

Follow-up to the 2009 Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict

Human Rights Council action. On 28 March [A/69/53 (res. 25/30)], by a recorded vote of 46 to 1, with no abstentions, the Council renewed its recommendation that the General Assembly remain apprised of the Independent International Fact-Finding Mission on the Gaza Conflict until it was satisfied that appropriate action with regard to implementing the recommendations contained in report [YUN 2009, p. 783] of the Fact-Finding Mission was taken at the domestic or international level in order to ensure justice for victims and accountability for perpetrators, and to remain ready to consider whether additional action within its powers was required in the interests of justice.

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Development policy and international economic cooperation

In 2014, the global economy continued to expand at only a moderate estimated pace of 2.6 per cent. Recovery was hampered by new challenges, including a number of unexpected shocks, such as the heightened geopolitical conflicts in different parts of the world. Most economies had seen a shift in gross domestic product growth to a noticeably lower path compared to pre-crisis levels, raising the spectre of longer-term mediocre economic growth. In developing countries and economies in transition, growth rates had become more divergent during the year, with a sharp deceleration in a number of large emerging economies, particularly in Latin America and the Commonwealth of Independent States. At the same time, inequality within countries had increased markedly, and global inequality remained very high. Public policy actions by national Governments and other stakeholders were an important starting point for tackling and reducing inequality, and policy frameworks for reducing inequality needed to be designed and implemented in accordance with country-specific circumstances. At the United Nations, accelerating progress towards achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), as well as steps for advancing the development agenda beyond 2015, were major focus areas in development policy and international economic cooperation.

The high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council 2014 session, held in July, included the three-day ministerial meeting of the high-level political forum on sustainable development, convened under the auspices of the Council. The segment discussed the theme of addressing ongoing and emerging challenges for meeting the MDGs in 2015 and for sustaining development gains in the future. The high-level political forum on sustainable development, which replaced the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development as the main UN platform on sustainable development, considered the theme of achieving the MDGs and charting the way for an ambitious post-2015 development agenda, including the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). Ministerial Declaration adopted at the high-level segment and the high-level political forum called for the urgent implementation of all commitments under the global partnership for development so as to overcome the gaps identified in the reports of the Millennium Development Goals Gap Task Force. They called upon developed countries to fulfill the official development assistance commitments. In September, the General Assembly decided that the proposal on SDGs submitted by the Open Working Group of the General Assembly on Sustainable Development Goals would be the main basis for integrating the SDGs into the post-2015 development agenda. In December, the Assembly decided that the UN summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda would be held in New York from 25 to 27 September 2015. Further activities by the UN system in the field of sustainable development were related to sustainable tourism, and the role of transport and transit corridors in ensuring international cooperation for sustainable development. In November, the World Conference on Education for Sustainable Development, organized by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to mark the end of the UN Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005–2014), adopted the Global Action Programme on Education for Sustainable Development.

The Assembly reviewed progress made in implementing the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017) and stressed the need for the development of a global strategy on youth employment.

In June, the Commission on Science and Technology for Development reviewed progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society. It also considered two priority themes: “Science, technology and innovation for the post-2015 development agenda” and “Information and communications technologies for inclusive social and economic development”.

With regard to development policy and public administration, the Committee for Development Policy, in March, addressed four themes: global governance and global rules for development in the post-2015 era; review and fine-tuning of the criteria for the identification of least developed countries (LDCs); monitoring of countries that were graduating and had graduated from the list of LDCs; and the role of country groupings for development.

The Committee of Experts on Public Administration, at its April session, considered transforming public administration for sustainable development by strengthening national and local capacities for sustainable development management; promoting leadership, innovation and risk management for sustainable development; and invigorating the professionalism and morale of the public service.

The United Nations continued to address the development problems of groups of countries in special situations, including the follow-up on the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries; UN system support to small island developing States, as well as progress in implementing the 1994 Barbados Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States; the follow-up 2005 Mauritius Strategy; and the 2003 Almaty Programme of Action for assisting landlocked developing countries. At the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States in September, participants adopted the Small Island Developing States Accelerated Modalities of Action (Samoa Pathway), which was endorsed by the General Assembly in a November resolution. The 10-year Review Conference on the Implementation of the Almaty Programme of Action (second United Nations conference on landlocked developing countries), in November, adopted the Vienna Declaration and the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024, both of which were endorsed by the Assembly in December.

International economic relations

Economic and social trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 2014: Reducing Inequality for Sustainable Development [E/2014/50], published by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), discussed trends in the evolution of inequality and alternative ways to reduce inequality. The Survey focused on four key areas in which policies could have a significant impact in reducing inequality: the environment, employment, redistributive policies, and global measures affecting climate change, taxation and migration. It also investigated the channels through which income inequality would impact the environment. The Survey explored inequality within countries and provided references to the broader global context, as many of the drivers of national inequality related to global processes, including technological developments and international flows of people, goods, services and finance, threats to environmental sustainability and climate change, among others.

The Survey noted that inequality within countries had increased markedly in preceding decades. The majority of the world's population lived in countries where inequality in 2010 was higher than it was in 1980. The standardized and updated indicators used in the Survey showed that inequality in Asia had increased, reaching levels similar to those in Latin America, which at that time was the region with the highest inequality in the world. Countries in Europe, including the Russian Federation and Eastern European economies in transition, experienced a sharp increase in inequality during the 1990s, whereas countries in North America and Oceania experienced a marked increase in inequality since the 1980s. Global inequality, which combined between- and within-country inequality, remained very high.

On the positive side, within-country inequality had decreased in Latin America and Africa, although uncertainty about inequality trends in Africa remained, owing to poor data. Overall, however, the weight of inequality reductions in those regions had not surpassed that of the increases in the other regions.

With regard to the links between inequality and environmental sustainability, qualitative analysis showed that the influence of inequality on the environment ran along four channels—individual, community, national and international—which often overlapped, and their overall impact depended on the sum total of their interactions. Therefore, a vicious circle could arise, with inequality causing ecological damage, which would then exacerbate inequality.

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (see p. 1191) highlighted the serious risks arising from climate change, including coastal and inland flooding; breakdown of infrastructure networks; threats to food systems and food security; loss of rural livelihoods and income; and loss of ecosystems and biodiversity. Those risks disproportionately affected the least developed countries (LDCs) and vulnerable communities, which had the least capacity to cope with the consequences, implying an increase in inequality. The Survey stated that, from the perspective of development and inequality, as well as environmental sustainability, it was imperative to secure a binding global agreement designed to limit global carbon emissions to a sustainable level, while ensuring that development was not impeded.

The Survey emphasized that public policy actions by national Governments and other stakeholders were an important starting point for tackling and reducing within-country inequality. Policy frameworks would need to be designed and implemented in accordance with country-specific circumstances. Reducing inequality in the context of sustainable development might require, among other things, an integrated employment framework supporting decent jobs; increased progressivity of the tax system; the taxation of negative externalities arising from unsustainable production and consumption patterns; a greater empowerment of women in managing common-property resources, as in other areas of sustainable development; and international tax cooperation involving developing countries.

The World Economic Situation and Prospects 2014 [Sales No. E.14.II.C.2], jointly produced by DESA, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the five UN regional commissions, found that the world economy had begun to show signs of improvement. The euro area had finally come out of a protracted recession; the economy of the United States continued to recover; and a few large emerging economies, including China, had either stopped a further slowdown or would see accelerated growth. The world economy was projected to grow at a pace of 3.0 and 3.3 per cent in 2014 and 2015, respectively. Those rates were revised downwards to 2.8 per cent and 3.2 per cent in the mid-year update [E/2014/70], mostly due to a downward revision in growth projections for developing economies and economies in transition, as the situation in a number of countries in those two groups had deteriorated. Growth in the developed economies was projected to be 2.0 per cent and 2.4 per cent for 2014 and 2015, respectively—about one percentage point higher than in the previous two years. For the first time since 2011, all major developed economies in North America, Europe and developed Asia were aligned together on the same upward growth trajectory. Nevertheless, those projected growth rates were insufficient to recuperate the output and job losses in most of those economies.

The report identified a number of risks and uncertainties for the world economy, including international spillovers from the future unwinding of monetary easing by major developed economies; vulnerabilities of emerging economies on both the external and domestic fronts; remaining fragilities in the euro area; unsustainable public finance in the longer term for many developed countries; and risks associated with geopolitical tensions. With regard to employment rates, a main challenge across developing countries remained the level of informal employment which, on average, had reached between 40 and 50 per cent in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean. Global employment was expected to continue to grow at a slow pace.

After assessing policy challenges facing different groups of economies in the monetary and fiscal areas, the report called for the strengthening of international policy coordination to support a robust recovery of output and jobs; cooperation in international financial reforms; and the provision of sufficient development financing resources to the least developed countries.

UNCTAD Trade and Development Report 2015 [Sales No. E.15.II.D.4] (see p. 1102) examined trends in the world economy and focused on financialization and its macroeconomic discontents, systemic challenges in the international monetary system, financial regulatory reform after the crisis, external debt and debt crises and new challenges, and long-term international finance for development.

Development and international economic cooperation

International economic cooperation issues were considered by various UN bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

The Council held a special high-level meeting (New York, 14–15 April) with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), the World Trade Organization (WTO) and UNCTAD on the overall theme “Coherence, coordination and cooperation in the context of financing for sustainable development and the post-2015 development agenda” (see p. 1114). It had before it a note by the Secretary-General on the subject [E/2014/53]. The Council also held a ministerial segment on the theme “World economic situation and prospects”.

On 19 December (decision 69/542), the Assembly took note of the report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee regarding macroeconomic policy questions [A/69/466].

High-level segment of Economic and Social Council

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 67/290 [YUN 2013, p. 782] and 68/1 [ibid., p. 1413] and Economic and Social Council decision 2014/202 of 30 January (see p. 1603), the Council held the high-level segment of its substantive 2014 session (New York, 7–11 July) [A/69/3/Rev.1], including the three-day ministerial meeting of the high-level political forum on sustainable development (7–9 July) (see p. 994). As decided in decision 2011/208 [YUN 2011, p. 791], the Council discussed the theme: “Addressing on-going and emerging challenges for meeting the Millennium Development Goals in 2015 and for sustaining development gains in the future”. On 8 July, the Council also held a ministerial panel discussion on integrating employment-centric sustainable development into the post-2015 development agenda.

The Council had before it the Secretary-General’s reports on the subject [E/2014/61] (see p. 960); on options for the scope and methodology for a global sustainable development [E/2014/87] (see p. 944); on trends and progress in international development cooperation [E/2014/77] (see p. 938); and on effective governance, policymaking and planning for sustainable urbanization [E/2014/67] (see p. 938).

It also had before it the World Economic and Social Survey 2014: Reducing Inequality for Sustainable Development [E/2014/50] (see p. 936); the report on the world situation and prospects 2014: as at mid-2014 [E/2014/70]; and the summary report of the parliamentary hearing-note by the President of the General Assembly [A/68/790-E/2104/52].

On 9 July, the Council adopted a draft ministerial declaration on the theme of the high-level segment and the high-level political forum [E/2014/L.22] (see p. 944).

On 25 July (decision 2014/248), the Economic and Social Council took note of the reports submitted by the Secretary-General under the high-level segment item.

Policy-dialogue. On 7 July [A/69/3/Rev.1], the Council held a high-level policy dialogue on macro-economic policies in support of a post-2015 sustainable development agenda.

Development Cooperation Forum. As part of its high-level segment, the Council held the fourth biennial Development Cooperation Forum (10–11 July). Outcome documents of high-level symposiums held in preparation for the Forum were submitted to the Council President by Switzerland [E/2014/88] and Mexico [A/68/944-E/2014/89]. The Forum considered the Secretary-General's report [E/2014/77] on trends and progress in international development cooperation, submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 61/16 [YUN 2006, p. 1589], which underscored the need for a new narrative of development cooperation to fit the transformation envisaged in the emerging post-2015 development agenda. The report reviewed recent trends in international development cooperation, focusing on progress in and allocation of official development assistance (ODA), and trends in other development cooperation sources—public and private, international and domestic resources—that would be needed to support implementation of an ambitious post-2015 development agenda. It also examined the principles of quality and effectiveness of development cooperation; reviewed South-South cooperation and features of a renewed global partnership for development; and addressed how to strengthen mutual accountability and the availability of user-friendly information, looking ahead to a global monitoring and accountability framework for development cooperation after 2015. The report found that, while ODA would remain crucial, its use would have to be adapted to meet new demands and respond to a post-2015 development agenda. Progress towards the UN target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income needed to be accelerated. More ODA should be provided to support efforts to mobilize domestic resources, build productive capacity and incentivize private investment otherwise deemed too risky or unprofitable. Continued global policy dialogue and effective monitoring were needed for intensified collective action on the effectiveness of development cooperation. While Governments should take the lead in renewing the global partnership for development, the breadth of development actors had to be engaged from the outset in its design and implementation. A basic global monitoring and accountability framework for development cooperation should function as an integral part of the monitoring and accountability of the broader post-2015 development agenda, and should be linked to a renewed global partnership for development, global enabling environment and systemic issues.

Thematic discussion. On 18 March (decision 2014/209), the Economic and Social Council decided that the theme for the thematic discussion during its 2014 session would be “Effective governance, policymaking and planning for sustainable urbanization”; and that it would take place during the integration segment (27–29 May). The Council had before it the Secretary-General's report on the topic [E/2014/67], which addressed the increasing contribution made by urban management to sustainable urbanization. According to the report, many cities were struggling to meet the development needs of the world's growing urban population that was expected to reach 6.25 billion in 2050. Of that total, 73 per cent would reside in the developing regions in Africa and Asia. Cities faced challenges in providing adequate social services, job opportunities and security without straining the urban infrastructure and imposing unsustainable demands on local and global natural resources and systems. Those challenges included congestion, pollution, access to energy, provision of basic services, adequate housing, infrastructure maintenance, crime and security, environmental degradation and natural disasters. Policy, planning and management approaches to effectively deal with the conflicts and contradictions of modern urban living were critical to addressing those challenges. While current models had made some headway in that regard, issues of fragmented decision-making, conflicting policy targets and insufficient coordination among city stakeholders continued to present obstacles to a more effective and sustainable management of rapidly changing urban areas.

To be effective, urban governance models, policies and planning tools had to address the scope and impact of urban activities across policy areas and spatial boundaries and involve an increasing number of urban stakeholders. They also needed to be strategic, participatory and action-oriented. With that in mind, the following policy initiatives were recommended: a whole-of-government approach to address complex urban challenges more holistically; inclusive, participatory mechanisms for decision-making; inclusive mechanisms to monitor the implementation of urban priorities and related initiatives and hold politicians accountable; strong partnerships with the private sector and other civil society organizations; effective coordination between national and local interventions; and a clear division of responsibilities among local authorities and between local and national authorities.

Communication. On 30 September, Bolivia transmitted the Ministerial Declaration [A/69/423], adopted at the thirty-eighth annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 and China (New York, 26 September), which underlined the need for a coherent approach to the post-2015 development agenda that should reinforce the commitment of the international community to poverty eradication and the integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development in a balanced manner.

Globalization and interdependence

On 19 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the agenda of its sixty-ninth session the item entitled: “Globalization and interdependence: International migration and development; and culture and sustainable development”, and to allocate it to the Second Committee.

New International Economic Order

Pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) [YUN 1974, p. 324], and 3202(S-VI) [ibid., p. 326], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/69/203], provided an updated overview of the major international economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development, and of the role of the United Nations in addressing those issues in the light of the New International Economic Order. The report analysed the most recent global growth trends and macroeconomic policies, as well as international trade flows, commodity prices, developments in the multilateral trading system and regional trade agreements, international financial capital flows, policy measures for managing volatility in short-term capital flows, and reforms to international and domestic financial systems. It focused on policies to promote equitable, inclusive and sustained growth, and discussed measures to reduce inequality, both across and within countries. It also analysed the connection between income inequality and economic growth, and policy options for reducing inequality. It emphasizes the importance of employment and decent work in promoting inclusive growth. The report also discussed challenges for ensuring sustainable development, and the central role of the United Nations in managing global sustainable development for all.

According to the report, over the past few decades, the world economy had undergone significant changes, with the share of developing countries in global output increasing steadily. With respect to developing countries, however, the world economy continued to face challenges for achieving equitable, inclusive and sustained growth in the aftermath of the global financial crisis and for ensuring global sustainable development. Six years after the eruption of that crisis, the world economy had still not fully recovered, particularly with respect to employment. International policy coordination was needed to support demand, output and jobs; mitigate negative international policy spillover effects; and push forward reforms of the international financial system. While there was some convergence in per capita income across countries, large inequality persisted in the world along economic, social and environmental dimensions. Country-specific redistributive policies were useful instruments for reducing income inequality. Achieving sustainable development required global actions to deliver on the legitimate aspiration towards further economic and social progress, robust growth and employment, and environmental protection. The United Nations had to play a central role in managing global sustainable development, reducing threats to international peace and security, and promoting human rights. The Organization had played a leading role in promoting the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and would also play a leading role in promoting the post-2015 sustainable development agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/470], adopted resolution 69/227 by recorded vote (131-46-3) [agenda item 21].

Towards a New International Economic Order

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations to promote the economic advancement and social progress of all peoples,

Recalling the principles of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, as set out in resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI), respectively, adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth special session, on 1 May 1974,

Recalling also its resolutions 63/224 of 19 December 2008, 64/209 of 21 December 2009, 65/167 of 20 December 2010 and 67/217 of 21 December 2012,

Reaffirming the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Recalling the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document,

Recalling also the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling further the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, including the development goals and objectives contained therein, and recognizing the vital role played by those conferences and summits in shaping a broad development vision and in identifying commonly agreed objectives,

Stressing the need to fulfil all financing for development commitments, including those contained in the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus and other relevant outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits,

Noting that there have been systemic challenges to the global economic architecture demanding a review of global economic governance,

Concerned about the multiple interrelated and mutually exacerbating current global crises, in particular the world financial and economic crisis, volatile energy prices, the food crisis and the challenges posed by climate change, which have a negative impact on the development prospects of developing countries and threaten to further widen the gap between developed and developing countries, including the technological and income gap, and which could further undermine the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Also concerned, in this regard, that, although certain regions have made some progress, more than half of the workers in the developing world, about 1.5 billion people, live in vulnerable employment situations, and approximately one in five people in the developing regions live on less than 1.25 United States dollars a day,

Underlining the need for a more sustainable economic growth and recovery, and recognizing that this goal can be achieved through inclusive multilateralism and the equal participation of all countries, as envisioned, inter alia, in the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,

Recognizing that innovative and enhanced approaches to financing for development are needed to address the challenges posed by the current global economic situation, poverty and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and stressing that these approaches should neither be a substitute for nor negatively affect the level of traditional sources of development financing, including official development assistance, and that they need to be developed in a spirit of partnership, cooperation and solidarity, bearing in mind the common interests and national priorities of each country,

Recognizing also that many relevant aspects of the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order have not been implemented and that, consequently, many developing countries continue to face significant challenges to their development prospects, including vulnerability to external shocks and lack of adequate representation in global economic governance,

Recognizing further the role played by regional, sub-regional and interregional cooperation as well as regional economic integration, based on equality of partnership, in strengthening international cooperation with the objective of facilitating economic coordination and cooperation for development, the achievement of development goals and the sharing of best practices and knowledge,

Recognizing that widespread financial deregulation has contributed to larger net capital outflows from developing countries to developed countries,

Concerned that excessively expansionary monetary policies and the ensuing competitive currency evaluations pursued by developed countries have an effect equivalent to an across-the-board export subsidy and a generalized increase in import tariffs, which thus nullify or impair existing World Trade Organization market access commitments and further hinder the capacity of developing countries to fulfil their commitments to implement all the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Stressing the need for policy space to allow for the formulation of national development strategies by developing countries, aimed at bringing prosperity for all,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Updated overview of the major international economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development, and of the role of the United Nations in addressing these issues in the light of the New International Economic Order";

2. Reaffirms the need to continue working towards a new international economic order based on the principles of equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest, cooperation and solidarity among all States;

3. Also reaffirms the need to enhance the voice and participation of developing countries in international economic decision-making and norm-setting;

4. Further reaffirms that international trade is an engine for development and sustained economic growth, and reaffirms the critical role that a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system can play in stimulating economic growth and development worldwide, thereby benefiting all countries at all stages of development;

5. Decides to continue considering the international economic situation and its impact on development at its seventy-first session, and in that regard requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly, under the item entitled "Globalization and interdependence", an updated overview of the major international economic and policy challenges for equitable and inclusive sustained economic growth and sustainable development and of the role of the United Nations in addressing those issues, as well as possible ways and means to overcome those challenges, bearing in mind the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields and the principles contained therein, and the preparations for the post-2015 development agenda, in the light of the relevant principles contained in the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 69/227:

New global human order

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/230 [YUN 2012, p. 776], the Secretary-General, submitted a September report [A/69/410] on the UN role in promoting a new global human order. The report discussed progress in human well-being, with attention to poverty, employment and social integration, and the significance of inequality in the global development agenda. Paying particular attention to the ongoing deliberations of the post-2015 development agenda and the sustainable development goals (SDGs), the report noted the work of the UN system and other actors in taking better account of inequality and its impacts on human well-being.

According to the report, much progress had been made since the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 1995, p. 1114] and the Second South Summit [YUN 2005, p. 983]; however, transformations in human well-being had been too slow for too many. Progress in both poverty eradication and gender equality was varied, and significant disparities remained. In the area of employment, progress was stymied by the impact of and slow recovery from the 2008 global financial and economic crisis. While the employment crisis affected developed countries more directly than other countries, the impact on the global marketplace was not negligible. Similarly, progress towards equitable growth and social integration was mixed, with the reality and perception of rising inequality threatening social and economic stability in many parts of the world. With the growing attention to inequality within the international community, the project of promoting a new global human order, in which no one was left behind, had taken on renewed fervour, and the post-2015 development agenda was likely to feature the reduction and prevention of high inequality. Those goals were supported by UN system agencies and were featured in the report of the Open Working Group of the General Assembly on Sustainable Development Goals [A/68/970] (see p. 945).

The Secretary-General recommended that countries and the international community improve the employability of all members of society and ensure their access to full and productive employment and decent work; and create an enabling environment for the development of a vibrant, representative and accountable civil society sector as a means of strengthening the efficiency, equity and effectiveness of investments in human well-being and social integration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/202 [draft: A/69/L.45 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 15].

The role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/48 of 29 November 2000, 57/12 of 14 November 2002, 62/213 of 21 December 2007, 65/120 of 10 December 2010 and 67/230 of 21 December 2012,

Recalling also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and its outcome document, entitled "The future we want",

Acknowledging that peace and security, development and human rights are the pillars of the United Nations system and the foundations for collective security and well-being and that development, peace and security and human rights are interlinked and mutually reinforcing,

Reaffirming that development is a central goal by itself and that sustainable development in its economic, social and environmental aspects constitutes a key element of the overarching framework of United Nations activities,

Recognizing that the well-being of people and the full development of their potential is pivotal to sustainable development, and convinced of the urgency of international cooperation towards that end,

Deeply concerned about persistent and considerable disparities between rich and poor, both within and among countries, and about the adverse implications of these disparities for the promotion of human well-being and development throughout the world,

Recalling resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which the General Assembly welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the Assembly,

Taking account of the significance of inequality in the global development agenda and the importance of continued efforts to strive for inclusive and equitable development approaches to overcome poverty and inequality,

Taking note of the work of the United Nations system and other actors in taking better account of inequality,

Stressing the multidimensional nature of inequality and unequal access to social and economic opportunities and their complex interrelationship with efforts to eradicate poverty and promote sustained, inclusive and equitable growth and sustainable development and the full enjoyment of human rights, especially for those people living in situations of vulnerability,

Concerned by the prevalence of gender inequality in various forms worldwide, which is often expressed in poorer outcomes for women relative to men on many social development indicators,

Considering that inequality continues to pose major barriers to attaining the Millennium Development Goals and that efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, often take inadequate account of the relationship and impact of inequality on sustainable development,

Reaffirming the need to achieve sustainable development by, inter alia, promoting sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, creating greater opportunities for all, reducing inequalities, fostering equitable social development and inclusion and promoting integrated and sustainable management of natural resources and ecosystems,

Noting the successes and challenges in recent years in promoting a new global human order at national and international levels,

Recognizing the need to strengthen national capacities for robust data collection and effective data utilization in support of policy formulation, implementation and monitoring,

Recognizing also the need to encourage coherent and complementary policies to reduce inequality, to mainstream them into the activities of United Nations organizations and programmes and more effectively to integrate the three dimensions of sustainable development,

Recognizing further the action already under way by all Member States, the United Nations system and other international, regional and national forums and organizations and the progress made to implement the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, including its recommendations for promoting a new global human order;

2. Underlines the continued relevance of the outcomes of all major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields and the commitments set out therein, including the Millennium Development Goals, which have raised awareness and continue to generate real and important development gains, have played a vital role in shaping a broad development vision and constitute the overarching framework for the development activities of the United Nations, and strongly reiterates its determination to ensure the timely and full implementation of those outcomes and commitments;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the convening by the President of the General Assembly of the informal thematic debate on 8 July 2013 to address the issue of inequality;

4. Recognizes that attention must be focused on the particular needs of the people in developing countries and on the large and increasing economic and social inequality that exists, and further recognizes that disparities both within and among countries, including between developed and developing countries, and inequality between the rich and the poor and between rural and urban populations, inter alia, remain persistent and significant and need to be addressed;

5. Emphasizes the need to accelerate efforts to promote human well-being and the full realization of human potential;

6. Notes that the new global human order is premised on a spirit of partnership that puts the needs, rights and aspirations of people at the centre of decisions and joint actions and is about making equitable and inclusive improvements in human well-being and establishing a cooperative and integrated approach to achieving this in a fair and balanced manner;

7. Reaffirms that national ownership and leadership are indispensable in the development process and that there is no one-size-fits-all approach, and reiterates that each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and that the role of national policies, domestic resources and development strategies cannot be overemphasized; domestic economies are now interwoven with the global economic system and, therefore, the effective use of trade and investment opportunities can help countries to fight poverty, and development efforts at the national level need to be supported by an enabling national and international environment that complements national actions and strategies;

8. Also reaffirms that the eradication of poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today, particularly in Africa, in the least developed countries and in some middle-income countries, and underlines the importance of accelerating sustainable, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, including full, productive employment generation and decent work for all;

9. Stresses the critical need for the expansion of and access to education and training, and encourages programmes to promote universal access to secondary education and to expand access to quality higher education, which is relevant to the needs of the labour market, in accordance with each country's specific realities and development challenges;

10. Invites Member States to adopt a multisectoral approach and to work on determinants of health within sectors including, as appropriate, through the health-in-all-policies approach, while taking into consideration the social, environmental and economic determinants of health, with a view to reducing health inequities and enabling sustainable development, and stresses the urgent need to act on social determinants for the final push towards the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

11. Encourages Member States, in collaboration with other stakeholders where applicable, to plan or pursue the transition of their health systems towards universal coverage, while continuing to invest in and strengthen health-delivery systems to increase and safeguard the range and quality of services and to adequately meet the health needs of their populations;

12. Urges Governments, with the cooperation of relevant entities, to develop systems of social protection that support labour-market participation and address and reduce inequality and social exclusion, and to extend or broaden, as appropriate, their effectiveness and coverage, including for workers in the informal economy, invites the International Labour Organization to strengthen its social protection strategies and policies on extending social security coverage, and urges Governments, while taking account of national circumstances, to focus on the needs of those living in or vulnerable to poverty and to give particular consideration to universal access to basic social security systems, including the implementation of social protection floors which can provide a systemic base for addressing poverty and vulnerability, and in this regard takes note of Recommendation No. 202 concerning national floors of social protection, adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 101st session, on 14 June 2012;

13. Reaffirms the commitment to sound policies, good governance at all levels and the rule of law, to mobilizing domestic resources, fostering international financial flows, assuring long-term investment in human capital and infrastructure, promoting international trade as an engine for economic growth and development and increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development, sustainable debt financing and external debt relief, and to enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems;

14. Recognizes that inequality within and among countries is a concern for all countries regardless of their level of development and that it represents a growing challenge with multiple implications for the realization of economic and social potential and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

15. Also recognizes the need to continue and intensify efforts to enhance the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems, and reiterates the importance of ensuring their openness, fairness and inclusiveness in order to complement national development efforts to ensure sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

16. Emphasizes the importance of efforts to address all aspects and dimensions of inequality, and calls upon Member States to pursue ambitious efforts to address inequality;

17. Recognizes the efforts of many countries in addressing inequality, and acknowledges the need for strengthened international efforts to complement national efforts in this area;

18. Encourages Member States in their efforts to address inequality and in partnership with relevant stakeholders to consider as appropriate, inter alia, programmes to promote the participation and empowerment of all members of society, implementing social protection floors or extending the scope of existing social protection programmes;

19. Encourages greater consideration of the impact of inequalities in development, including in the design and implementation of development strategies, and in this regard also encourages further analytical and empirical research, in particular by the relevant institutions of the United Nations system, as well as the regional commissions and other national and international organizations;

20. Also encourages giving due consideration to the need to reduce inequality in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

21. Recognizes that regional, subregional and inter-regional cooperation can facilitate the exchange of knowledge and experience and promote the most effective use of resources aimed at achieving human development and reducing inequality;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, highlighting the efforts of the United Nations system to reduce inequality and promote human development globally, in particular in the context of the post-2015 development agenda;

23. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventy-first session the item entitled "The role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order".

Human security

The Helsinki Citizen's Assembly hosted a conference entitled "Humanizing Security" (Istanbul, Turkey, 31 January–1 February) to raise awareness of local and regional human security issues, including social inclusion, inter-communal reconciliation and good governance. The conference marked the launch of the "Crossborder Citizens' Network on Human Security" project, intended to build a citizens' network for peace, reconciliation and human security across Turkey and Balkans.

On 18 June, the General Assembly President convened a thematic debate on human security entitled "Responding to the opportunities and challenges of the 21st century: Human security and the post-2015 development agenda" to exchange views on the third report of the Secretary-General on human security [YUN 2013, p. 779] and to discuss how human security might be included in the post-2015 development framework (see p. 960). On 21 July, the United Nations Human Security Unit announced the release of its Strategic Plan for the period 2014–2017, which laid out the strategies to mainstream the concept in UN activities and extend its global awareness over the next four years.

The Human Security Network held its annual high-level meeting (New York, 26 September) that focused on how the human security approach could be included in the next development framework, and on efforts to continue mainstreaming the approach into other areas of the UN system.

The fourth Istanbul Conference on Human Security (Istanbul, Turkey, 23–24 October), entitled "Twenty Years On: Human Security at Crossroads" was held to explore the development of the human security approach, while reflecting on and examining how human security had evolved, both within theory and practice.

Sustainable development

In 2014, various UN bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the high-level political forum on sustainable development considered the implementation of the outcomes of the 2012 United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780], the 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development [YUN 2002, p. 821], particularly the Johannesburg Declaration and Plan of Implementation, which outlined actions and targets for stepping up implementation of Agenda 21—a programme of action for sustainable development worldwide, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]—and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the Assembly at its nineteenth special session in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

High-level political forum on sustainable development

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 67/290 [YUN 2013, p. 782] and Economic and Social Council decision 2014/202 (see p. 1603), the first meeting of the high-level political forum on sustainable development was convened (New York, 30 June–9 July) under the auspices of the Council [E/HLPF/2014/2]. The theme for the high-level forum for 2014, as decided by the Council in decision 2014/208, was “Achieving the Millennium Development Goals and charting the way for an ambitious post-2015 development agenda, including the sustainable development goals.” The high-level forum held 11 moderated dialogues on the following themes: From the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development to the post-2015 period: towards an integrated and universal sustainable development agenda; means of implementation for sustainable development; how sustainable consumption and production could contribute to the SDGs; scope and methodology for a global sustainable development report; ideas and trends; promoting genuine and durable partnerships; countries in special situations: building resilience; from silos to integrated policymaking; reviewing progress and implementation: making the most of the forum’s reviews after 2015; unlocking and reshaping development and enhancing implementation: the regional context; and shaping the forum for the post-2015 period. The forum also held a dialogue with the Chair of the Board of the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production. It also held six ministerial dialogues on the following: A universal integrated policy agenda to implement the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780] and realize the future we want; weaving regional realities and regional priorities into the post-2015 development agenda; long-term measures to make poverty eradication irreversible and reduce inequalities; international cooperation for sustainable development; multi-stakeholder partnerships and voluntary commitments for sustainable development: ensuring accountability for all; preparing the high-level political forum for the post-2015 period: steering implementation of the development agenda and reviewing progress; and charting pathways to the future we want.

The forum had before it reports of the Secretary-General on options for the scope and methodology for a global sustainable development [E/2014/87] and on mainstreaming of the three dimensions of sustainable development throughout the UN system [A/69/79-E/2014/66] (see p. 947). It also considered inputs from the Economic Commission for Europe [E/2014/CRP.1], the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean [E/2014/CRP.2], the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia [E/2014/CRP.3], and the Economic Commission for Asia and the Pacific [E/2014/CRP.4].

On 9 July, the forum adopted the ministerial declaration of the high-level political forum on sustainable development [E/HLS/2014/1] at its first meeting (below), and the theme for its 2015 session: “Strengthening integration, implementation and review: the high-level political forum after 2015”.

Ministerial declaration. Ministers welcomed what had been achieved through implementation of the MDGs, and expressed their determination to address the remaining unevenness and gaps in achievement and the challenges that remained, in particular, for the most off-track MDGs, and those where progress had stalled. They declared their commitment to establish a strong, ambitious, inclusive and people-centred post-2015 development agenda that would build on the foundations laid and experiences gained during the MDGs process, and complete the unfinished business and respond to new challenges. They reaffirmed that poverty eradication should be central to the post-2015 development agenda.

Ministers acknowledged the processes mandated in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 782] being undertaken, in particular, the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals (see p. 945); the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing; and the process to develop options for a technology facilitation mechanism, as well as the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in July 2015. The Ministers looked forward to the submission of the Secretary-General’s report before the end of 2014 synthesizing the full range of available inputs to the intergovernmental negotiations that would culminate in a high-level summit in September 2015. The Ministers reiterated that, starting in 2016, the high-level political forum on sustainable development should conduct regular reviews on the follow-up to, and implementation of sustainable development commitments and objectives, including those related to implementation within the context of the post-2015 development agenda. The reviews should be voluntary, while encouraging reporting, and include developed and developing countries, as well as relevant UN entities; be State-led, involving ministerial and other relevant high-level participants; provide a platform for partnerships; and replace the national voluntary presentations held in the context of the Council's annual ministerial-level substantive reviews, as well as experiences and lessons learned in that context. The reviews should take into account the lessons learned from and the experiences of relevant review mechanisms, including the national voluntary presentations held in the context of the annual ministerial reviews. Acknowledging the importance of the regional dimension for sustainable development, the Ministers invited the UN regional commissions to contribute to the work of the Council and the forum through, inter alia, annual regional meetings with other relevant regional entities, major groups and other relevant stakeholders.

Follow-up to UN Conference on Sustainable Development

Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals

The Open Working Group of the General Assembly on Sustainable Development Goals, established by Assembly resolution 66/288 [YUN 2012, p. 782] to develop a set of SDGs for consideration and action by the Assembly at its sixty-eight session, held its seventh (6–10 January), eighth (3–7 February), ninth (3–5 March), tenth (31 March–4 April), eleventh (5–9 May), twelfth (16–20 June) and thirteenth (14–19 July) sessions.

The Working Group report, submitted by its Co-Chairs in August [A/68/970 & Corr.1], contained 17 SDGs and targets: Goal 1. End poverty in all its forms everywhere; Goal 2. End hunger, achieve food security and improved nutrition and promote sustainable agriculture; Goal 3. Ensure healthy lives and promote well-being for all at all ages; Goal 4. Ensure inclusive and equitable quality education and promote lifelong learning opportunities for all; Goal 5. Achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls; Goal 6. Ensure availability and sustainable management of water and sanitation for all; Goal 7. Ensure access to affordable, reliable, sustainable and modern energy for all; Goal 8. Promote sustained, inclusive and sustainable economic growth, full and productive employment and decent work for all; Goal 9. Build resilient infrastructure, promote inclusive and sustainable industrialization and foster innovation; Goal 10. Reduce inequality within and among countries; Goal 11. Make cities and human settlements inclusive, safe, resilient and sustainable; Goal 12. Ensure sustainable consumption and production patterns; Goal 13. Take urgent action to combat climate change and its impacts; Goal 14. Conserve and sustainably use the oceans, seas and marine resources for sustainable development; Goal 15. Protect, restore and promote sustainable use of terrestrial ecosystems, sustainably manage forests, combat desertification, and halt and reverse land degradation and halt biodiversity loss; Goal 16. Promote peaceful and inclusive societies for sustainable development, provide access to justice for all and build effective, accountable and inclusive institutions at all levels; and Goal 17. Strengthen the means of implementation and revitalize the global partnership for sustainable development.

The goals and targets would be further elaborated through indicators focused on measurable outcomes, and would take into account different national realities, capacities and levels of development and build on the foundation laid by the MDGs. Targets were defined as aspirational global targets, with each Government setting its own national targets.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 September [meeting 108], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/309 [draft: A/68/L.61] without vote [agenda item 14].

Report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 66/288

The General Assembly,

Recalling the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want", contained in resolution 66/288 of 27 July 2012, in which Heads of State and Government, inter alia, resolved to establish an inclusive and transparent intergovernmental process on sustainable development goals open to all stakeholders, with a view to developing global sustainable development goals to be agreed by the General Assembly,

1. Acknowledges the conclusion of the work of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, and welcomes its report;

2. Decides that the proposal of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly.

Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing

The Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing, established by General Assembly decision 67/559 [YUN 2013, p. 781] to develop options for a sustainable development financing strategy to facilitate the mobilization of resources and their effective use in achieving sustainable development objectives, held its third (3–7 March), fourth (12–16 May) and fifth (4–8 August) sessions [A/69/315], all in New York. On 5 March, it held a joint meeting with the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals.

The Committee assessed sustainable development financing needs, financing flows and potential sources of financing. It found that needs were huge and the challenges in meeting them were enormous, but surmountable. Yet, it was clear that the financing and investment patterns would not deliver sustainable development. The solution included better aligning private incentives with public goals and creating a policy framework that encouraged for-profit investment in those areas, while also mobilizing public resources for essential sustainable development activities. Efforts to reduce corruption and adopt more economically and socially effective public sector policies were thus important, as well as policies that would better match investor preference with investment needs. The Committee concluded that there was no one simple policy solution. Instead, a basket of policy measures would be necessary, encompassing a toolkit of policy options, regulations, institutions, programmes and instruments. The Committee recommended a cohesive approach, with national financing strategies as an integral part of national sustainable development strategies. While the design and implementation of policies would be at the national level, achieving sustainable development would require international support and cooperation. The Committee found that a concerted effort that drew on all actors and mobilized all resources would allow the Committee to finance the investments necessary to achieve sustainable development for all. Specifically, it considered policy options to strengthen the four basic categories of financial resource mobilization available for financing sustainable development, namely, domestic public, domestic private, international public and international private finance, with an additional focus on means for blending official and private resources and collaboration between various actors. It further addressed international policy imperatives for a strong international economic environment and its governance, and concluded with a discussion of options for the way forward.

On 8 December [A/69/PV.65], the General Assembly held a meeting which provided an opportunity for Member States to express views and make statements on the contents of the report and the options contained therein.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 65], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/108 [draft: A/69/L.32] without vote [agenda item 13 (a) and 115].

Report of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 66/288

The General Assembly,

Recalling the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”, contained in resolution 66/288 of 27 July

2012, in which Heads of State and Government agreed, inter alia, to establish an intergovernmental process under the auspices of the General Assembly, to assess financing needs, consider the effectiveness, consistency and synergies of existing instruments and frameworks and evaluate additional initiatives, with a view to preparing a report proposing options on an effective sustainable development financing strategy to facilitate the mobilization of resources and their effective use in achieving sustainable development objectives,

Recalling also resolution 68/279 of 30 June 2014 on modalities for the third International Conference on Financing for Development in its entirety,

1. Welcomes the conclusion of the work of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing, and takes note with appreciation of its report;

2. Notes the holding of a meeting of the General Assembly, on 8 December 2014, to take action on the report of the Committee, which provided an opportunity for Member States to express views and make statements on the contents of the report and the options contained therein, without prejudice to further discussions on the report in the forthcoming processes;

3. Reaffirms that the report of the Committee, the outcome of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, as mandated in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want,” and the synthesis report of the Secretary-General, as mandated by its resolution 68/6 of 9 October 2013, will serve as important inputs for the preparations for the third International Conference on Financing for Development, the outcome of which should constitute an important contribution to and support the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda.

The 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns

The 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns was established by General Assembly resolution 67/203 [YUN 2012, p. 811]. The 10-member board governing the framework held meetings in New York on 2 October 2013 and 30 March 2014. The board adopted its terms of reference; guided development of the 10-year framework programmes; set up criteria and processes for the adoption of new programme areas; approved the establishment of a sixth programme; and guided the operationalization of the framework trust fund. A third meeting was planned to take place in Santiago, Chile (15–16 October). After its first meeting in October 2013, key milestones for the next year were to accelerate the consultation process and launching of the five initial framework programmes; hold the first five regional consultations; and undertake fundraising activities to secure resources for the 10-year framework trust fund. Financial support for the framework, amounting to $4.4 million, was provided in the period 2012–2014 by Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden and the European Commission. Further official pledges totalling $3.5 million were made at the United Nations Environment Assembly in June (see p. 1170), comprised of $2.5 million from Japan and $1 million from Brazil. The United Nations Environment Programme served as the secretariat of the 10-year framework, while the Inter-Agency Coordination Group provided inputs for the development of the framework.

Board membership. In response to Assembly resolution 67/203 [YUN 2012, p. 811], the Secretary-General, in a September note [A/69/379], proposed that for the duration of the subsequent terms of the board of the 10-year framework, members serve for a period of two years, effective 16 September of every second year. UN regional groups might wish to re-nominate one of their existing two board members, in which case they should be able to do so for one further consecutive term, taking into account the importance of ensuring continuity in the board's work. No Member State might be eligible to serve more than two consecutive terms.

On 19 December, (decision 69/545), the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on the term of the board of the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns (see above).

Progress report. By a September note [E/2014/93], the Secretary-General transmitted the progress report on the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns (see p. 1171), prepared in response to Assembly resolutions 67/203 [YUN 2012, p. 811] and 68/210 [YUN 2013, p. 787]. According to the report, the adoption of the 10-year framework created important momentum for the shift to sustainable consumption and production patterns, placing the topic on the agenda of global and regional ministerial meetings, as well as at the sessions of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals. The nomination of over 110 national focal points for the framework and the engagement of six major groups signalled widespread interest in engaging in framework implementation. While progress had been achieved, there was still the challenge to communicate and demonstrate the added value of sustainable consumption and production and its potential contributions to competitiveness, social development, poverty eradication and climate change mitigation. Attracting funding and enhancing the participation of the private sector and financial institutions were additional related challenges. It was recommended that the Economic and Social Council call upon all countries and other stakeholders to secure predictable and adequate financial contributions to the 10-year framework trust fund. Among the recommendations to the Economic and Social Council were for the UN system to ensure that the development of the 10-year framework and its programmes was consistent with and supportive of the post-2015 development agenda; and to strengthen communication to facilitate the exchange of best practices and share the progress made on the implementation of 10-year framework programmes through the sustainable consumption and production global clearinghouse and the framework website.

On 17 November, (decision 2014/254), the Economic and Social Council took note the Secretary-General's note.

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/210 [YUN 2013, p. 787], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [A/69/79-E/2014/66] on mainstreaming the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development in UN work. The report examined processes and tools that could boost mainstreaming; pointed to the creation of the high-level political forum on sustainable development as an important development; and analysed whether sustainable development approaches were guiding the strategic plans of funds, programmes and specialized agencies, and their operational activities for development in developing countries. It reviewed developments in quality assurance and safeguard mechanisms as a tool for mainstreaming the three dimensions of sustainable development; and considered the role of inspections and independent evaluations in the UN system.

The Secretary-General found that strengths, challenges and gaps identified in his previous report [YUN 2013, p. 786] remained relevant to the discussion on mainstreaming the three dimensions of sustainable development. While there was some progress in updating the strategic plans of the funds, programmes and agencies, more work remained to be done to mainstream sustainable development in United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks and the "Delivering as one" programmes at the country level. The Secretary-General recommended that Member States welcome efforts by the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination to continue promoting policy coherence and system-wide coordination for accelerating the integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development in the work of the UN system; call upon the UN system to accelerate efforts to mainstream sustainable development into strategic plans and programmes at the country level; encourage efforts by the United Nations Evaluation Group to study how evaluation could best contribute to mainstreaming sustainable development in the work of the UN system; call upon the UN system to establish a common repository of environmental and social assessments and related lessons learned; and request the Secretary-General to report on progress on sustainable development.

On 17 November (decision 2014/250), the Economic and Social Council took note of the report on the mainstreaming of the three dimensions of sustainable development throughout the United Nations system.

In August, the Secretary-General provided a report [A/69/312] on the progress made in implementing Assembly resolution 68/210 [YUN 2013, p. 787] on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 780]. The report focused on the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals (see p. 945); the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing (ibid.); the General Assembly process to identify options for a facilitation mechanism that promoted the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies (see p. 964); and the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States (see p. 995). The report also highlighted the role of the high-level political forum on sustainable development in reviewing the overall follow-up to the Conference in the context of the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda; and examined how coherence and synergies across the different functions of the forum could be achieved in order to best support the agenda. In particular, the report looked at agenda-setting; follow-up and review of progress in the implementation of the outcomes of the major UN conferences and summits; national voluntary reviews; increasing transparency and strengthening civil society participation; strengthening the science-policy interface; promoting the coordination of sustainable development policies; and improving cooperation and coordination within the UN system on sustainable development programmes and policies.

The report attested that the 2014 session of the forum had proved its potential to fulfil the mandates of the outcome document of the UN Conference on Sustainable Development [YUN 2012, p. 783] and Assembly resolution 67/290 [YUN 2013, p. 782]. It also proved capable of helping to set the agenda of the entire UN system and the international community in relation to sustainable development, and was expected to be the main platform for reviewing and monitoring the SDGs in the context of the post-2015 development agenda. The Assembly could consider calling upon relevant actors, including Governments, UN system organizations, other relevant intergovernmental organizations, including WTO, major groups and other relevant stakeholders to fully engage in and support the work of the forum; fully implement relevant resolutions and enhance the forum as a dedicated platform for leadership and implementation of sustainable development commitments; ensure that the forum maintained a focused, relevant and flexible agenda; ensure also that the forum followed up on the processes launched at the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development and bring cohesion and complementarity among them; and propose possible themes and areas, including new and emerging issues, for discussion at the high-level political forum. The Assembly could also call upon the UN system to make further efforts to integrate the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development in its work and invite the Secretary-General to continue reporting on further progress in that regard. The forum could provide detailed guidance on that topic at its 2015 meeting. The UN system should be invited to discuss the best ways to conduct reviews of its implementation of the post-2015 development agenda in the context of the forum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468/Add.1], adopted resolution 69/214 without vote [agenda item 19 (d)].

Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/199 of 20 December 2000, 56/226 of 24 December 2001, 57/253 and 57/270 A of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 64/236 of 24 December 2009, 65/152 of 20 December 2010, 66/197 of 22 December 2011, 66/288 of 27 July 2012, 67/203 of 21 December 2012, 68/210 of 20 December 2013, 68/309 of 10 September 2014, 68/310 of 15 September 2014 and 69/108 of 8 December 2014 and all other relevant resolutions on the implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development,

Recalling also its resolutions 67/290 of 9 July 2013 on the format and organizational aspects of the high-level political forum on sustainable development and 68/1 of 20 September 2013 on the review of the implementation of General Assembly resolution 61/16 of 20 November 2006 on the strengthening of the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling further the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development and the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation) and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want", as well as the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the outcome document of the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020 (Istanbul Programme of Action),

Recalling also the outcome of the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries, held in Vienna from 3 to 5 November 2014, the Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024 and the Vienna Declaration,

Recalling further the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Declaration and state of progress and initiatives for the future implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, the outcome document of the High-level Review Meeting on the Implementation of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States and the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, held in Apia from 1 to 4 September 2014, the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway,

Reaffirming the commitment to implementing Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, including the time-bound goals and targets, and the other internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and reaffirming also other internationally agreed goals in the economic, social and environmental fields since 1992, as well as the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development,

Recognizing that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, in particular for developing countries, and that although each country has the primary responsibility for its own sustainable development and poverty eradication and that the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized, concerted and concrete measures are required at all levels to enable developing countries to achieve their sustainable development goals related to the internationally agreed poverty-related targets and goals, including those contained in Agenda 21, the relevant outcomes of United Nations conferences and the United Nations Millennium Declaration,

Reaffirming the need to further mainstream sustainable development at all levels, integrating economic, social and environmental aspects and recognizing their interlinkages, so as to achieve sustainable development in all its dimensions, and reiterating that sustainable development is a key element of the overarching framework for United Nations activities,

Recognizing that eradicating poverty, changing unsustainable and promoting sustainable patterns of consumption and production and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are the overarching objectives of and essential requirements for sustainable development,

Reaffirming the importance of freedom, peace and security, respect for all human rights, including the right to development and the right to an adequate standard of living, as well as the right to food, the rule of law, gender equality and women's empowerment, and the overall commitment to just and democratic societies for development,

1. Reaffirms the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want", and urges its speedy implementation;

2. Recalls its resolution 68/309, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly;

3. Also recalls its resolution 69/108 on the report of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing established pursuant to its resolution 66/288;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Welcomes the adoption, at the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, the theme of which was "The sustainable development of small island developing States through genuine and durable partnerships", of the outcome document, the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway (Samoa Pathway), which represents the renewed political commitment of the international community to support the efforts of small island developing States to achieve sustainable development and in which Heads of State and Government and high-level representatives, inter alia, reaffirmed that small island developing States remain a special case for sustainable development in view of their unique and particular vulnerabilities, also welcomes the partnerships discussed at the Conference, which are critical for the implementation of the sustainable development of small island developing States, and in this regard calls for the implementation of the Samoa Pathway and highlights the need to continue to give due consideration to the priorities of small island developing States in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

6. Reaffirms its resolution 68/1, recalls the commitment made at the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development to strengthen the Economic and Social Council within its mandate under the Charter of the United Nations as a principal organ in the integrated and coordinated follow-up of the outcomes of all major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social, environmental and related fields, and recognizes its key role in achieving a balanced integration of the three dimensions of sustainable development;

7. Also reaffirms its resolution 67/290 on the format and organizational aspects of the high-level political forum on sustainable development, and welcomes the inaugural meeting of the forum, held under the auspices of the General Assembly on 24 September 2013, as well as the meeting of the forum held under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council from 30 June to 9 July 2014;

8. Takes note of the report on the meeting of the high-level political forum on sustainable development held under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council, and affirms that the forum, at its 2015 meeting, to be held under the auspices of the Council, shall discuss its role and ways to implement its functions in following up on and reviewing the implementation of the post-2015 development agenda, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 61/16, 67/290 and 68/1, taking account of and in order to contribute to the intergovernmental negotiations on the post-2015 development agenda;

9. Acknowledges the importance of the regional dimension of sustainable development, and invites the United Nations regional commissions to continue to contribute to the work of the high-level political forum on sustainable development, including through annual regional meetings, with the involvement of other relevant regional entities, major groups and other relevant stakeholders, as appropriate;

10. Recognizes the need to consider the realignment of the current cycle of the high-level political forum on sustainable development under the auspices of the General Assembly in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda to ensure an integrated and coherent follow-up to and review of progress made in the implementation of sustainable development commitments, taking into account all relevant processes, including the quadrennial comprehensive policy review;

11. Requests the President of the General Assembly and the President of the Economic and Social Council to continue to coordinate with the bureaux of the relevant committees of the Assembly and with the Bureau of the Council to organize the activities of the high-level political forum on sustainable development so as to benefit from the inputs and advice of the United Nations system, the major groups and other relevant stakeholders, as appropriate, and encourages broad consultations on the organization of the meeting of the forum under the auspices of the Council in 2015;

12. Recalls its resolution 68/310, in which it took note of the summary prepared by the President of the General Assembly of the discussions and recommendations that emerged from the four one-day structured dialogues held during the sixty-eighth session of the Assembly to consider possible arrangements for a facilitation mechanism to promote clean and environmentally sound technologies, and in this regard stresses its resolve to continue consultations based on the above-mentioned recommendations contained in the summary prepared by the President of the Assembly, with the aim of reaching a conclusion during its sixty-ninth session in the context of the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

13. Also recalls paragraph 5 of its resolution 67/203, in which it decided to review the arrangement to designate the Economic and Social Council as the ad interim Member State body to receive reports from the board and the secretariat of the 10-year framework of programmes, as elaborated in the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns, as well as its resolution 68/210 in this regard, also recalls the interactive discussions on sustainable consumption and production at the July 2014 meeting of the high-level political forum on sustainable development, held under the auspices of the Council, requests the board and the secretariat to submit updated reports, through the Council, for the consideration of the forum in 2015, and decides that such an ad interim arrangement shall be reviewed at the seventieth session of the General Assembly with a view to establishing a permanent arrangement;

14. Reaffirms its resolution 67/203, and decides that the duration of subsequent terms for members of the board of the 10-year framework of programmes on sustainable consumption and production patterns shall continue to be two years, starting on 16 September of every second year, and that the United Nations regional groups may renominate one of their existing two members of the board for one consecutive term, while ensuring that no Member State may be eligible to serve more than two consecutive terms and taking into account the importance of ensuring continuity and rotation in the work of the board;

15. Recalls its decision that the high-level political forum on sustainable development shall strengthen the science-policy interface, also recalls the interactive discussions at the forum under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council held in July 2014 on the scope and methodology of a global sustainable development report, takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the options for such a report, and affirms that the forum shall further consider the scope and methodology of a global sustainable development report at its next meeting under the auspices of the Council, taking account of and in order to contribute to the intergovernmental process of the post-2015 development agenda;

16. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the mainstreaming of the three dimensions of sustainable development throughout the United Nations system, reiterates the call of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development for the further mainstreaming of the three dimensions throughout the United Nations system, and in this regard invites the Secretary-General to continue to report to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on progress made, including for the consideration of the high-level political forum on sustainable development;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its seventieth session;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development".

On 29 December (decision 69/554), the Assembly decided that the agenda item on sustainable development—Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development—would remain for consideration during its sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Facilitation mechanism for clean and environmentally sound technologies

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/210 [YUN 2013, p. 787], four structured dialogues (New York, 29–30 April, 4 June, 23 July) [A/69/554] were convened by the Assembly President to consider possible arrangements for a facilitation mechanism to promote the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies.

At the first two dialogues (29–30 April), participants took stock of the consideration by the United Nations of a possible technology facilitation mechanism; reviewed developments in existing mechanisms and processes; and discussed the scope and extent of fragmentation among them and options for enhancing synergy and coherence. It was agreed that, while a wide range of activities regarding the development, dissemination and transfer of clean and environmentally sound technologies existed, more needed to be done to address fragmentation and strengthen synergies of efforts in that area.

The third dialogue (4 June) identified possible functions that could be undertaken by technology facilitation and options for the way forward. Proposals by Member States included improving synergy and coherence, improving data and information, and the analysis of needs and gaps.

At the fourth dialogue (23 July), participants discussed concrete options regarding the possible functions, modalities and organization of a technology facilitation mechanism that included better information on and mapping of existing facilitation activities; improving coherence and synergy between existing facilitation activities; conducting analyses of technology needs and gaps in addressing them; and promoting the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies through a technology facilitation mechanism. Participants recommended that the next step was to facilitate the launch of the technology bank and science, technology and innovation supporting mechanism for the least developed countries, as mandated in Assembly resolution 68/224 [YUN 2013, p. 822]. The Secretary-General should make a proposal to the Assembly with regard to developing an online platform to undertake a thorough mapping of existing technology facilitation mechanisms, frameworks and processes for clean and environmentally sound technologies; improving coordination within the UN system on clean and environmentally sound technologies; analysing technology needs and gaps in addressing them; and including certain elements for continued discussions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 September [meeting 109], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/310 [draft: A/68/L.62] without vote [agenda item 19 (a)].

Four one-day structured dialogues on possible arrangements for a facilitation mechanism to promote the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the convening of four structured dialogues on possible arrangements for a facilitation mechanism to promote the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies, on 29 and 30 April, 4 June and 23 July 2014, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 68/210 of 20 December 2013,

Taking note of the summary prepared by the President of the sixty-eighth session of the General Assembly of the discussions and recommendations that emerged from the four one-day structured dialogues to consider possible arrangements for a facilitation mechanism to promote clean and environmentally sound technologies, held during the sixty-eighth session of the Assembly,

Noting the views expressed by and the active participation of Member States and other stakeholders, as well as experts and panellists, during the dialogues,

1. Requests the President of the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly to continue consultations based on the above-mentioned recommendations prepared by the President of the sixty-eighth session, with the aim of reaching a conclusion during the sixty-ninth session in the context of the post-2015 development agenda;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to take into account the recommendations that emerged from the structured dialogues on possible arrangements for a facilitation mechanism to promote the development, transfer and dissemination of clean and environmentally sound technologies, contained in the summary prepared by the President of the sixty-eighth session of the General Assembly, when preparing his synthesis report.

International cooperation for sustainable development

On 8 August, the Secretary-General announced the membership of a High-level Advisory Group on Sustainable Transport to provide recommendations on sustainable transport actionable at global, national, local and sector levels. The Advisory Group was established for a period of three years to work with governments, transport providers, businesses, financial institutions, civil society and other stakeholders to promote sustainable transport systems and their integration into development strategies and policies, including in climate action; and promote sustainable transport in line with inclusive and equitable growth, social development, protection of the global environment and ecosystems, and addressing climate change.

Communication. On 9 September [A/68/991], Turkmenistan transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ashgabat Declaration on the Role of Transport and Transit Corridors in Ensuring International Cooperation, Stability and Sustainable Development, which was adopted at the High-level International Conference on the Role of Transit Transport Corridors in Ensuring International Cooperation, Stability and Sustainable Development (Ashgabat, Turkmenistan, 3–4 September).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee

[A/69/468 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/213 without vote [agenda item 19].

Role of transport and transit corridors in ensuring international cooperation for sustainable development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation) and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Taking note of the Ashgabat Declaration, adopted at the High-level International Conference on the Role of Transit Transport Corridors in Ensuring International Cooperation, Stability and Sustainable Development, held in Ashgabat on 3 and 4 September 2014, in cooperation with the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and the International Road Transport Union,

Noting the establishment of the Secretary-General’s High-level Advisory Group on Sustainable Transport,

Noting also the initiative to establish the global partnership for sustainable transport, as announced by the participants in the conference entitled “Sustainable Transport as a Driver of Economic Development in the Post-2015 Development Agenda”, organized jointly by the United Nations Global Compact and the International Road Transport Union and held in New York on 10 October 2014,

Recognizing the important role of environmentally sound, safe, efficient, reliable and affordable transport and transit corridors for the efficient movement of goods and people in supporting sustainable economic growth, improving the social welfare of people and enhancing international cooperation and trade among countries,

Highlighting the role of international roads and railways, intermodal logistics centres and dry ports, global logistics and supply chains, the integration of transport modes, appropriate technologies and the maintenance and upgrading of infrastructure in promoting seamless international transit transport,

Emphasizing the need to harmonize and improve transport and border-crossing infrastructure and facilities and services along the international transport and transit corridors,

Noting the importance of United Nations Development Account projects focused on developing broader transport corridors, which are being implemented by the five United Nations regional commissions, and identifying the physical and institutional infrastructure requirements that would be needed to make them operational,

Recalling its resolutions 57/309 of 22 May 2003, 58/9 of 5 November 2003, 58/289 of 14 April 2004, 60/5 of 26 October 2005, 62/244 of 31 March 2008, 64/255 of 2 March 2010, 66/260 of 19 April 2012 and 68/269 of 10 April 2014, on improving global road safety, and the need to develop plans to improve road safety along international road transit corridors in line with the Global Plan for the Decade of Action for Road Safety 2011–2020,

Welcoming, in this regard, the second High-level Global Conference on Road Safety, to be held in Brasilia on 18 and 19 November 2015, to review progress in implementing the Global Plan for the Decade of Action and in meeting the goal of the Decade of Action,

Recognizing the importance of addressing the special needs of landlocked developing countries, inter alia, by establishing and promoting efficient transit transport systems that link them to international markets, and in this regard underlining the importance of partnerships between landlocked and transit developing countries and their development partners at the national, bilateral, sub-regional, regional and global levels,

1. Recognizes the need for continued international cooperation to address the issues relating to transport and transit corridors as an important element of sustainable development;

2. Welcomes the efforts of the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, other international organizations, in particular the World Bank, the regional development banks, the World Customs Organization, the World Trade Organization, the International Road Transport Union, the International Union of Railways, regional economic integration organizations and other relevant regional and subregional organizations, within their respective mandates, to develop and operationalize international transport and transit corridors;

3. Calls for efforts to promote regional economic integration and cooperation, including by improving cross-border transportation infrastructure, enhancing regional connectivity and facilitating regional trade and investment;

4. Calls upon Member States and international and regional organizations to further encourage enhanced networking and periodic consultation among related stakeholders involved in the development and operation of international transport and transit corridors;

5. Invites all States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the United Nations conventions and agreements on transport and transit facilitation;

6. Underscores the need to mobilize, as appropriate, additional financial resources for the development of transport infrastructure and services, including through the promotion of public-private partnerships, so as to achieve inclusive and sustainable development;

7. Encourages the United Nations system organizations, related international financing institutions, multilateral and bilateral donors, the private sector and international organizations to further coordinate their efforts and collaborate in mobilizing financial and technical assistance to countries for the sustainable and inclusive development of transport and transit corridors;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States, relevant regional and international organizations and entities of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, on issues relating to the development of transport and transit corridors and to communicate such views in a summary report to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

Education for sustainable development

In an August note [A/69/76], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a letter from the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), forwarding the Global Action Programme on Education for Sustainable Development as follow-up to the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development after 2014. The Global Action Programme was developed in consultation with all education for sustainable development stakeholders, with particular focus on actions on the ground and on the identification of policymakers, institutional leaders, youth, educators and local authorities as priority target and participating groups. The Programme was to be the major contribution of UNESCO to the implementation of paragraph 233 on education for sustainable development contained in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 66/288 [YUN 2012, p. 782]. The Global Action Programme focused on five priority action areas: policy support, whole-institution approaches, educators, youth, and local communities.

UNESCO World conference. The World Conference on Education for Sustainable Development (Aichi-Nagoya, Japan, 10–12 November) marking the end of the UN Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005–2014), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 57/254 [YUN 2002, p. 826], endorsed the Global Action Programme on Education for Sustainable Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/211 without vote [agenda item 19].

Follow-up to the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development (2005–2014): Global Action Programme on Education for Sustainable Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 65/163 of 20 December 2010 and other previous resolutions on the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development,

Recalling also that at the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Brazil from 20 to 22 June 2012, Heads of State and Government and high-level representatives resolved to promote education for sustainable development and to integrate sustainable development more actively into education beyond the Decade of Education for Sustainable Development,

Noting the organization by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of the World Conference on Education for Sustainable Development in Aichi-Nagoya, Japan, from 10 to 12 November 2014, hosted by the Government of Japan,

1. Takes note of the Global Action Programme on Education for Sustainable Development, as a follow-up to the United Nations Decade of Education for Sustainable Development after 2014, as endorsed by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its thirty-seventh session and transmitted by the Secretary-General;

2. Invites Governments to take steps to implement the Global Action Programme;

3. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as the lead agency for education for sustainable development, to continue to provide coordination for the implementation of the Global Action Programme, in cooperation with Governments, United Nations organizations, funds and programmes, non-governmental organizations and other stakeholders;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include the World Conference on Education for Sustainable Development in the review of the implementation of the Decade of Education for Sustainable Development, for submission to the General Assembly at its seventieth session.

Sustainable tourism

In August [A/69/223 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO) on the promotion of ecotourism for poverty eradication and environment protection, submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 67/223 [YUN 2012, p. 813].

The report updated the previous report on the subject [ibid.] to assist in the promotion of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, as an element of sustainable livelihoods to fight poverty and promote environment protection. It was based on the responses received and information acquired through a follow-up survey among UN Member States, conducted, early in 2014, to monitor implementation of resolution 67/223. Seventy-nine per cent of respondents indicated that they had strengthened environmental protection and natural and cultural heritage frameworks, while four countries reported the adaptation of new frameworks or the enhancement of policies and programmes that had a direct impact on local community and small tourism entrepreneurs in order to assure the sustainable development of tourism. Eighty-five per cent of respondents reported conducting impact assessments or evaluations of the impact of sustainable tourism. Aside from integrating sustainable tourism into national legislation and policies, a majority of the countries highlighted initiatives targeting the increased participation of indigenous and local communities and women. According to many Member States, a key challenge in the promotion of sustainable tourism for poverty eradication and environment protection was facilitating access by small- and medium-sized enterprises to financial capital.

The report concluded that progress in promoting ecotourism had resulted in its incorporation into national policy and priorities. States and international development institutions were increasingly recognizing the importance of cooperation in ecotourism as a means to achieve economic growth, reduce inequalities and improve livelihoods in developing countries. A majority of countries were engaged in cooperative initiatives and some States responded that they wanted regional and international institutions to prioritize the provision of adequate support to programmes and projects relating to ecotourism, which included both financial and technical assistance. The Assembly might wish to recommend that all Member States review their current tourism frameworks and policies; invite governments and relevant stakeholders to consider using tourism to engage indigenous and local communities in order to preserve indigenous knowledge and know-how; establish and join the framework of the UNWTO Global Observatory of Sustainable Tourism; encourage all relevant stakeholders to provide more evidence-based information on how women were integrated into the planning of and decisions on tourism development; and encourage governments, the tourism sector and relevant organizations to adopt policies and practices to promote the full participation and involvement of local and indigenous communities, in addition to the full empowerment of women, in all tourism operations and development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/472], adopted resolution 69/233 without vote [agenda item 23].

Promotion of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, for poverty eradication and environment protection

The General Assembly,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development, the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, the report of the eleventh meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, entitled “SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway”,

Recalling further its resolutions 53/200 of 15 December 1998, entitled “Proclamation of 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism”, 65/148 of 20 December 2010, entitled “Global Code of Ethics for Tourism” and 68/207 of 20 December 2013, entitled “Sustainable tourism and sustainable development in Central America”,

Recalling its resolution 67/223 of 21 December 2012, entitled “Promotion of ecotourism for poverty eradication and environment protection”,

Stressing that poverty is a multifaceted problem that requires a multifaceted and integrated approach in addressing its economic, political, social, environmental and institutional dimensions at all levels,

Stressing also that sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, is a cross-cutting activity that can contribute to the fight against poverty, the protection of the environment and the promotion of sustainable development,

Stressing further the role of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, in promoting rural development and better living conditions for sustainable rural populations,

Welcoming the efforts of the World Tourism Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity to promote ecotourism and sustainable tourism worldwide,

Welcoming also the efforts of the Marrakech Process on sustainable consumption and production, the achievements of the International Task Force on Sustainable Tourism Development and the objectives of the Global Partnership for Sustainable Tourism, which was launched in 2011 as a permanent successor to the International Task Force,

Noting the initiatives launched and the events organized at the subregional, regional and international levels in the field of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, and sustainable development,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization transmitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations;

2. Recognizes that sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, represents an important driver of sustainable economic growth and decent job creation, that it can have a positive impact on income generation and education, and thus on the fight against poverty and hunger, and that it can contribute directly to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

3. Also recognizes the potential of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, to reduce poverty by improving individual livelihoods in local communities and to generate resources for community development projects;

4. Emphasizes the need to optimize the economic, social, cultural and environmental benefits stemming from sustainable tourism, including ecotourism activities, in all countries, particularly developing countries, including African countries, the least developed countries and small island developing States;

5. Also emphasizes that sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, can contribute to sustainable development, in particular environment protection, and can improve the well-being of indigenous peoples and local communities;

6. Recognizes that sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, creates significant opportunities for the conservation, protection and sustainable use of biodiversity and of natural areas by encouraging indigenous peoples and local communities in host countries and tourists alike to preserve and respect the natural and cultural heritage;

7. Underlines, in this regard, the importance of establishing, at the national level, where necessary, appropriate policies, guidelines and regulations, in accordance with national priorities and legislation, for promoting and supporting sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, and minimizing any potential negative impact;

8. Invites Governments, international organizations, other relevant institutions and other stakeholders, as appropriate, to encourage and support best practices in relation to the implementation of relevant policies, guidelines and regulations in sustainable tourism, including the ecotourism sector, and to implement and disseminate existing guidelines;

9. Encourages Governments at all levels to use sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, as a tool to support poverty eradication, environmental protection and/or conservation and the sustainable use of biodiversity and to base tourism components on clear evidence of market demand and on a sound economic and environmental foundation;

10. Encourages Member States to promote investment in sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, in accordance with their national legislation, which may include creating small and medium-sized enterprises, promoting cooperatives and facilitating access to financing through inclusive financial services, including microcredit initiatives for the poor, for indigenous peoples and for local communities in areas, including rural areas, with high potential for sustainable tourism, including ecotourism;

11. Encourages Governments, the United Nations and the specialized agencies to support the coordination of regional and/or international sustainable tourism development frameworks, as appropriate, in order to assist countries in promoting sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, for poverty eradication and environmental protection;

12. Underlines the importance of conducting an environmental impact assessment, in accordance with national legislation, for the development of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism opportunities;

13. Stresses that indigenous cultures, traditions and knowledge, in all their aspects, are to be fully considered, respected and promoted in policy development for sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, and underlines the importance of promoting the full and early participation and involvement of indigenous peoples and local communities in decisions that affect them and of integrating their knowledge, heritage and values in sustainable tourism, including ecotourism initiatives, as appropriate;

14. Emphasizes the need for effective measures, in the context of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism initiatives, to ensure the full empowerment of women, including the equal participation of women and men at all levels and in decision-making processes in all areas;

15. Also emphasizes the need for effective measures, in the context of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism initiatives, to help ensure the equal participation of youth, persons with disabilities and older persons at all levels and in decision-making processes in all areas and to promote the effective economic empowerment, including through international cooperation, of women, youth, persons with disabilities and older persons, in sustainable tourism, including ecotourism activities, mainly through decent job and income creation;

16. Calls upon the United Nations system, in the context of the global campaign for the Millennium Development Goals, to promote sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, as an instrument that can contribute to achieving those Goals, in particular the Goals of eradicating extreme poverty and of ensuring environmental sustainability, and to support the efforts and policies of developing countries in this field;

17. Encourages the regional and international financial institutions to provide adequate support to programmes and projects related to sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, taking into account the economic, social, cultural and environmental benefits of such activities;

18. Invites relevant specialized agencies, in particular the World Tourism Organization, United Nations bodies and other organizations, to provide technical assistance to Governments, upon request, and to assist, as appropriate, in strengthening legislative or policy frameworks for sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, including those for environment protection and the conservation of natural and cultural heritage;

19. Invites relevant specialized agencies, United Nations bodies, other organizations and multilateral financial institutions to provide technical assistance to Governments, upon request and as appropriate, in identifying needs as well as opportunities to improve the contribution of sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, to poverty eradication, including through securing wider community benefits from sustainable tourism, including ecotourism activities, as a viable and sustainable economic development option;

20. Encourages all stakeholders to cooperate in supporting, as appropriate, the participation of indigenous peoples and local communities in sustainable tourism, including ecotourism activities;

21. Encourages the public and private sectors and relevant stakeholders to provide, upon request, assistance for capacity-building, the development of specific guidelines and awareness-raising materials and training for people involved in sustainable tourism, including ecotourism activities, such as language training and training in specific skills in tourism services, as well as to develop or strengthen partnerships, especially in protected areas;

22. Invites relevant stakeholders to provide, upon request and as appropriate, technical assistance to assist in building the capacity, including for marketing and product positioning, of local communities, cooperatives and small and medium-sized businesses involved in sustainable tourism, including ecotourism activities;

23. Recognizes the role of North-South cooperation in promoting sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, as a means to achieve economic growth, to reduce inequalities and to improve living standards in developing countries, and also recognizes that South-South and triangular cooperation, as complements to North-South cooperation, have the potential to promote sustainable tourism, including ecotourism;

24. Invites Governments and other stakeholders to consider joining the framework of the Global Observatory of Sustainable Tourism of the World Tourism Organization as a way to promote socioeconomic and environmentally sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, and to support better informed sustainable tourism policies around the world, mainly through the identification and dissemination of best practices and enhanced awareness of and capacity-building for sustainability among tourism stakeholders;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session, in collaboration with the World Tourism Organization and other relevant United Nations agencies and programmes, a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including recommendations on ways and means to promote sustainable tourism, including ecotourism, as a tool for fighting poverty and promoting sustainable development, taking into account relevant reports prepared by the World Tourism Organization in this field.

Eradication of poverty

Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty

As requested in General Assembly resolution 68/226 [YUN 2013, p. 795], the Secretary-General, in August [A/69/204], submitted a report on the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 62/205 [YUN 2007, p. 847]. The report discussed progress and challenges to poverty eradication, presented some policy considerations, and highlighted the latest UN system activities in that area. According to the report, while progress in reducing poverty was remarkable in some regions and countries, the uneven progress across regions and within countries remained a major concern. Much more had to be done to ensure that the goal of poverty eradication was linked to the formulation of social, economic and environmental policies at all decision-making levels. To eliminate extreme poverty, policy efforts at all levels had to go beyond addressing its symptoms to building the physical, social, economic and political infrastructure needed to sustain eradication efforts. Macroeconomic policies had to be consistent with other policies to address social and environmental realities as part of an integrated effort towards inclusive, equitable and sustainable growth that generated decent and productive employment. Public spending should prioritize investment in human development, improving access to social services and building universal systems of social protection. The ongoing deliberations on the SDGs and the post-2015 development agenda provided an opportunity to reframe the approach to poverty eradication in a way that fostered more balanced and inclusive progress at national and international levels. The multidimensional nature of poverty should be adequately reflected in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda, with full employment and decent work being an essential element of that holistic approach. Countries, in pursuing poverty eradication might consider setting national strategies for achieving full and productive employment and decent work for all, especially women, young people, persons with disabilities, indigenous people and other marginalized and vulnerable groups; continuing the pursuit of sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth that supported the structural transformation of economies towards progressively higher levels of productivity in all sectors and activities; reducing inequality of opportunity and outcomes among social and populations groups, including economic, social and environmental inequalities; ensuring that all people were empowered through access to quality education, skills development and vocational training aligned with labour market needs; and creating a culture of sustainable lifestyles, including through consumer awareness-raising, tax incentives and other behaviour-changing policies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/472/Add.1], adopted resolution 69/234 without vote [agenda item 23 (a)].

Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 68/226 of 20 December 2013 and all other resolutions related to the eradication of poverty,

Recalling also the United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by Heads of State and Government on the occasion of the Millennium Summit, as well as the international commitment to eradicate extreme poverty and to halve, by 2015, the proportion of the world's people whose income is less than one United States dollar a day and the proportion of people who suffer from hunger,

Recalling further the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020, adopted in May 2011 at the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, with a main aim of enabling half of the least developed countries to meet the criteria for graduation by 2020,

Recalling also its resolution 60/265 of 30 June 2006 on the follow-up to the development outcome of the 2005 World Summit, including the Millennium Development Goals and the other internationally agreed development goals, and its resolution 63/303 of 9 July 2009, entitled “Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development”,

Taking note with appreciation of the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2006 of the Economic and Social Council on creating an environment at the national and international levels conducive to generating full and productive employment and decent work for all, and its impact on sustainable development and also of Economic and Social Council resolution 2011/37 of 28 July 2011, entitled “Recovering from the world financial and economic crisis: a Global Jobs Pact”,

Recalling the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling also the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, held in 2010, and its outcome document, and the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, held on 25 September 2013, and its outcome document,

Recalling further its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Acknowledging the importance of the eradication of poverty as an overarching objective of ongoing processes in follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, and also acknowledging the central imperative of poverty eradication in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda,

Recognizing the need to better understand the multidimensional nature of development and poverty,

Expressing concern about the ongoing adverse impacts of the global financial and economic crisis on development, including on the capacity of developing countries to mobilize resources for development, recognizing that there is a need to promote recovery, and acknowledging that an effective response to the impacts of the crisis requires the timely implementation of all development commitments, including existing aid commitments,

Concerned that, midway into the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), while there has been progress in reducing poverty, especially in some middle-income countries, such progress has been uneven and that the number of people living in poverty in some countries continues to increase, with women and children constituting the majority of the most affected groups, especially in the least developed countries and particularly in sub-Saharan Africa,

Recognizing that rates of economic growth vary among countries and that these differences must be addressed by, among other actions, promoting pro-poor growth and social protection,

Recognizing also that corruption at all levels, including the illicit transfer of funds and assets, is an obstacle to development, and stressing the need for the return of such funds and assets to their countries of origin,

Concerned at the global nature of poverty and inequality, and underlining the fact that the eradication of poverty and hunger is an ethical, social, political and economic imperative of all humankind,

Reaffirming that eradicating poverty is the greatest global challenge facing the world today, particularly in Africa, in the least developed countries and in some middle-income countries, and underlining the importance of accelerating sustainable, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, including full, productive employment generation and decent work for all,

Reaffirming also that women make significant contributions to the economy, that they are key contributors to the economy and to combating poverty and inequality through both remunerated and unremunerated work at home, in the community and in the workplace and that gender equality and the empowerment of women are critical factors in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing the importance of supporting countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty and promote empowerment of the poor and people in vulnerable situations, including women, children and youth, indigenous peoples, older persons and persons with disabilities,

Recognizing also that the difficult socioeconomic conditions that exist in many developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, have contributed to the feminization of poverty,

Recognizing further that mobilizing financial resources for development at the national and international levels and the effective use of those resources are central to a global partnership for development in support of the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Expressing concern that aggregate official development assistance fell in 2012 for the second consecutive year, cognizant of the increase in aggregate official development assistance in 2013, and calling upon those Member States that have made commitments to fulfil their commitments and continue this positive momentum,

Acknowledging that South-South cooperation is not a substitute for but rather a complement to North-South cooperation, and recognizing the contributions of South-South and triangular cooperation to the efforts of developing countries to eradicate poverty and pursue sustainable development,

Acknowledging also that good governance at the national and international levels and sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, supported by full employment and decent work for all, rising productivity and a favourable environment, including public and private investment and entrepreneurship, are necessary to eradicate poverty, achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and realize a rise in living standards, and that corporate social responsibility initiatives play an important role in maximizing the impact of public and private investment,

Underlining the priority and urgency given by Heads of State and Government to the eradication of poverty, as expressed in the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields,

Recalling the inter-agency system-wide plan of action for poverty eradication, involving more than 21 agencies, funds, programmes and regional commissions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017), under the item entitled “Eradication of poverty and other development issues”;

2. Reaffirms that the objective of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017) is to support, in an efficient and coordinated manner, the follow-up to the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, relating to the eradication of poverty and to coordinate international support to that end;

3. Also reaffirms that poverty eradication is the greatest global challenge facing the world today and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, and in this regard commits itself to freeing humanity from poverty and hunger as a matter of urgency;

4. Further reaffirms that each country must take primary responsibility for its own development and that the role of national policies and strategies for the achievement of sustainable development and poverty eradication cannot be overemphasized, and recognizes that increased effective national efforts should be complemented by concrete, effective and supportive international programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of developing countries, while taking into account national conditions and ensuring respect for national ownership strategies and sovereignty;

5. Calls upon the international community, including Member States, to urgently take measures to address the root causes of extreme poverty and hunger because of their negative impacts on sustainable development;

6. Emphasizes the need to accord the highest priority to poverty eradication within the United Nations development agenda, while stressing the importance of addressing the causes and challenges of poverty through integrated, coordinated and coherent strategies at the national, intergovernmental and inter-agency levels, in accordance with the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields;

7. Reiterates the need to strengthen the leadership role of the United Nations in promoting international cooperation for development and its role at the regional level, which is critical for the eradication of poverty;

8. Emphasizes that the promotion of regional, sub-regional and interregional cooperation can have a catalytic impact on poverty eradication efforts and offers many benefits, including the exchange of best policies, experiences and technical expertise, the mobilization of resources and the expansion of economic opportunities and conditions favourable to job creation;

9. Calls upon the international community to continue to accord the highest priority to poverty eradication within the United Nations development agenda, addressing the root causes and challenges of poverty through integrated, coordinated and coherent strategies at all levels, and calls upon donor countries in a position to do so to support effective national efforts of developing countries in this regard through adequate, predictable financial resources on bilateral and multilateral bases;

10. Stresses the importance of public-private partnerships in a wide range of areas, with the aim of eradicating poverty and promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all and social integration, as appropriate;

11. Acknowledges the complexity of the challenge of poverty eradication, emphasizes that, in accelerating poverty eradication, the organizations of the United Nations development system must be driven by national priorities and be operated in an integrated, coordinated and coherent manner, within their respective mandates, making full use of the interlinked and mutually reinforcing pillars of the United Nations development system, and encourages the use of diverse strategies;

12. Recognizes the role of the specialized agencies and United Nations funds and programmes, including the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Development Programme, in contributing to international advocacy for eradicating poverty, including through education and training;

13. Reaffirms the need to fulfil all official development assistance commitments, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015 and to reach a level of at least 0.5 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance by 2010, as well as a target of 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to the least developed countries;

14. Notes that a few developed countries have fulfilled the commitment made by many countries to achieve the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance, and in this regard calls upon these countries to urgently fulfil those commitments;

15. Welcomes the increasing efforts to improve the quality of official development assistance and increase its development impact, recognizes the Development Cooperation Forum of the Economic and Social Council, notes other initiatives, such as the high-level forums on aid effectiveness, which produced, inter alia, the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, the Accra Agenda for Action and the Busan Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation, which make important contributions to the efforts of the countries that have made commitments to them, including through the adoption of the fundamental principles of national ownership, alignment, harmonization and managing for results, and bears in mind that there is no one-size-fits-all formula that will guarantee effective assistance and that the specific situation of each country needs to be fully considered;

16. Recognizes the urgent need to address poverty, hunger and food security, and encourages the international community to enhance international cooperation in support of agricultural and rural development and food production and productivity, including of smallholder producers, in developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries;

17. Encourages Member States, international organizations, the private sector, relevant institutions, foundations and individuals to strengthen United Nations funding for the eradication of poverty through voluntary contributions to existing poverty-related system-wide funds;

18. Recognizes that sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth is essential for eradicating poverty and hunger, in particular in developing countries, and stresses that national efforts in this regard should be complemented by an enabling international environment and by ensuring greater coherence among macroeconomic, trade and social policies at all levels;

19. Reaffirms the importance of the eradication of poverty as an overarching objective of ongoing follow-up processes to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development;

20. Also reaffirms that, as the greatest global challenge and an indispensable requirement for sustainable development, poverty eradication shall be central to the post-2015 development agenda;

21. Stresses the resolve to end poverty, including eradicating extreme poverty, currently measured as living on less than 1.25 dollars a day, for all people everywhere, and the efforts to reduce by at least half the proportion of men, women and children of all ages living in poverty in all its dimensions, according to national definitions;

22. Takes note of proposed goal 1, contained in the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals, entitled "End poverty in all its forms everywhere", and all of its targets;

23. Recognizes that poverty is multidimensional, invites national Governments, supported by the international community, to consider developing complementary measurements that better reflect this multidimensionality, and emphasizes the importance of developing a common understanding among national Governments and other stakeholders of the multidimensional nature of poverty and giving it due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

24. Calls upon Member States to continue their ambitious efforts to strive for more inclusive, equitable, balanced, stable and development-oriented sustainable socioeconomic approaches to overcoming poverty, and, in view of the negative impact of inequalities on poverty, emphasizes the importance of improving access to quality education, health care and social protection;

25. Acknowledges that the eradication of poverty through the development of national capacities in developing countries should continue to be a core area of focus for the United Nations development system and that its development programmes and projects should attempt to address this greatest global challenge as their underlying objective;

26. Invites all stakeholders, including Member States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and civil society organizations, to share good practices relating to programmes and policies that address inequalities for the benefit of those living in extreme poverty and promote the active participation of those living in extreme poverty in the design and implementation of such programmes and policies, with the aim of accelerating progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals and informing the discussions on the way forward after 2015, and requests the Secretary-General to include in his annual report on progress in the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals a compilation of such good practices;

27. Reiterates its call upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to consider activities to implement the Second Decade, in consultation with Member States and other relevant stakeholders;

28. Notes with concern the continuing high levels of unemployment and underemployment, particularly among young people, as a consequence of the global financial and economic crisis, recognizes that decent work for all remains one of the best routes out of poverty, and in this regard invites donor countries, multilateral organizations and other development partners to continue to assist Member States, in particular developing countries, in adopting policies consistent with the Global Jobs Pact adopted by the International Labour Conference at its ninety-eighth session as a general framework within which each country can formulate policy packages specific to its situation and national priorities in order to promote a job-intensive recovery and sustainable development;

29. Urges Member States to address the global challenge of youth unemployment by developing and implementing strategies that give young people everywhere a real chance to find decent and productive work, and in this context stresses the need for the development of a global strategy on youth employment, building upon, inter alia, the Global Jobs Pact and the call for action of the International Labour Organization;

30. Encourages the international community to support developing countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty and promote empowerment of the poor and people in vulnerable situations, with a view to achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, improving access to finance, microfinance and credit, removing barriers to opportunity, enhancing productive capacity, developing sustainable agriculture and promoting full and productive employment and decent work for all, complemented by national efforts on effective social policies, including social protection floors, and in this regard takes note of International Labour Organization Recommendation No. 202 concerning national floors of social protection;

31. Stresses the importance of implementing nationally appropriate social protection systems and measures for all, including social protection floors, and of achieving substantial coverage of the poor and the vulnerable, and encourages Member States to continue developing and implementing social protection floors based on national priorities, paying particular attention to women, children, older persons and persons with disabilities;

32. Notes the reference in the proposal of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals to the need to ensure significant mobilization of resources from a variety of sources, including through enhanced development cooperation, in order to provide adequate and predictable means for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, to implement programmes and policies to end poverty in all its dimensions;

33. Calls upon Member States to ensure that the eradication of poverty is duly reflected in the deliberations of the third International Conference on Financing for Development, to be held in Addis Ababa from 13 to 16 July 2015;

34. Urges the international community, including the United Nations system, to implement the outcome documents relating to the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

35. Also urges the international community, including the United Nations system, to implement the Outcome of the Conference on the World Financial and Economic Crisis and Its Impact on Development in support of the objectives of the Second Decade;

36. Stresses that the impacts of natural disasters and conflicts are severely hampering efforts to achieve poverty eradication, in particular in developing countries, and calls upon the international community to give priority to addressing them;

37. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations development system, including the funds, programmes and specialized agencies, in accordance with their mandates, to assign the highest priority to poverty eradication, and stresses that efforts in this area should be scaled up to address the root causes of extreme poverty and hunger;

38. Calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates and resources, to support Member States, at their request, in strengthening their macroeconomic policy capacity and national development strategies so as to contribute to achieving the objectives of the Second Decade;

39. Encourages greater inter-agency convergence and collaboration within the United Nations system in sharing knowledge, promoting policy dialogue, facilitating synergies, mobilizing funds, providing technical assistance in the key policy areas underlying the decent work agenda and strengthening system-wide policy coherence on employment issues, including by avoiding duplication of efforts;

40. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session, under the item entitled “Eradication of poverty and other development issues”, the sub-item entitled “Implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008–2017)”, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Millennium Development Goals and the post-2015 development agenda

The Millennium Development Goals Report 2014, published by DESA [Sales No. E.14.I.10], evaluated the progress made on MDG indicators. The report stated that important progress had been made across all goals set out in the Millennium Declaration [YUN 2000, p. 51], and some targets had been met well ahead of the 2015 deadline. The world had reduced extreme poverty by half, reducing the number of people living in extreme poverty by 700 million in 2010. Progress on poverty reduction nevertheless was uneven. While some regions, such as Eastern and South-Eastern Asia, had met the target, others, such as sub-Saharan Africa and Southern Asia, still lagged behind. According to World Bank projections, sub-Saharan Africa was not expected to meet the target by 2015. With regard to employment, the weak and uneven global economic recovery continued to take its toll on labour markets, particularly in the developing world. That was reflected in limited progress in the reduction of low-quality employment, which was widespread in most developing countries. Hunger continued to decline, but major efforts were needed to achieve the hunger target globally by 2015. Efforts in the fight against malaria and tuberculosis had shown results, and access to an improved drinking water source had become a reality for 2.3 billion people.

Substantial gains were made towards reaching gender parity in school enrolment at all levels of education in all developing regions. The political participation of women continued to increase, with 46 countries having more than 30 per cent female members of parliament in at least one chamber. Official development assistance stood at $134.8 billion in 2013, the highest level ever recorded; however, aid was shifting away from the poorest countries. The debt burden of developing countries remained stable at three per cent of export revenue.

The report concluded that much had been accomplished through the concerted efforts of all, saving and improving the lives of many people, but the agenda remained unfinished. Continued progress towards the MDGs in the remaining year was essential to provide a solid foundation for the post-2015 development agenda.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with the outcome document of the General Assembly 2010 High-level Plenary Meeting on the MDGs, adopted by the Assembly in resolutions 65/1 [YUN 2010, p. 815] and 65/10 [ibid., p. 829], the Secretary-General, in July, submitted the annual report [A/69/201] on accelerating progress towards the MDGs: options for sustained and inclusive growth and issues for advancing the UN development agenda beyond 2015.

The Secretary-General stated that remarkable progress had been made in achieving the MDGs, particularly regarding the targets related to poverty reduction, improved drinking water sources, primary education and health. Nevertheless, significant shortfalls remained in the targets related to the reduction of hunger and child and maternal mortality, gender equality, environmental sustainability and the delivery of global partnership commitments. Progress was uneven across countries and among different population groups and regions within countries. In the world's poorest countries in particular, progress often failed to keep up with rapidly changing demographics. Many initiatives and actions to accelerate the achievement of the MDGs had been taken at the national, regional and global levels, involving a large number of different stakeholders; and while they had produced encouraging results, efforts needed to be redoubled. Policy options for supporting sustained, inclusive and equitable growth were proposed, including advancing the reforms in financial regulation to reduce risks of financial and economic crisis; strengthening countercyclical policy space; incentivizing long-term investment for sustainable development; enhancing international policy coordination and cooperation; promoting employment with decent wages, and in particular, the employment of women and young people; reducing inequality through social protection and other redistributive measures; and sharing the benefit derived from natural resources more inclusively among the population.

Annual ministerial review. From 7 to 9 July, during the high-level segment of its 2014 substantive session [A/69/3/Rev.1] (see p. 1028), the Economic and Social Council held its annual ministerial review on the theme “Addressing ongoing and emerging challenges for meeting the Millennium Development Goals in 2015 and for sustaining development gains in the future”, in accordance with decision 2011/208 [YUN 2011, p. 791].

It also had before it a report [E/2014/61] of the Secretary-General on the topic, which addressed ongoing and emerging challenges for meeting the MDGs in 2015 and for sustaining development gains in the future. It highlighted opportunities for accelerating the achievement of the goals through key facilitators and enablers of development at all levels, including effective leadership and conducive policy frameworks. The report stated that although significant and substantial progress had been made in meeting many of the targets, progress had also been unequal, and new challenges had emerged. A new development agenda would need to take into account an international environment that had changed dramatically since 2000. It will need to contain a vision that integrated a broader scope of issues and the three dimensions of sustainable development with universal applicability, while taking into account the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities. Overcoming the significant challenges to meeting the MDGs in 2015 and sustaining development gains in the future would require addressing some of the main facilitators and enablers of development; promoting inclusive development; and enhancing measurement, monitoring and review. International cooperation and coordination would be essential to the success of that approach. Among the recommendations made were that the international community should design a unified and universal post-2015 development agenda that was guided by the intrinsic linkage between poverty reduction and sustainable development. The post-2015 framework should include an intergenerational approach towards inclusive development, addressing equally the needs of children, their parents, those in the labour force and ageing populations, in order to combat inequalities that could become cumulative over time. The international community should undertake global economic and financial coordination to reduce macroeconomic volatility and risks, many of which inordinately affected developing countries and made it very difficult for them to integrate successfully into the global economy.

Communication. On 14 May [E/2014/74], Nepal, in its capacity as Chair of the Commission for Social Development, forwarded to the President of the Economic and Social Council the summary of the discussion held during the fifty-second session of the Commission on the theme “Promoting empowerment of people in achieving poverty eradication, social integration and full employment and decent work for all” (see p. 1228), which was closely linked to the main theme of the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council for 2014.

On 29 December, by decision 69/554, the Assembly decided that the agenda item on follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit would remain for consideration during its resumed sixty-ninth (2015) session.

Organization of UN summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda

On 29 December, (decision 69/550), the General Assembly decided on the dates in 2015 for the meetings of the process of intergovernmental negotiations on the post-2015 development agenda (19–21 January; 17–20 February; 23–27 March; 20–24 April; 18–22 May; 22–25 June; 20–24 and 27–31 July 2015); invited all Member States and other potential donors to consider contributing generously to all relevant UN trust funds to support the travel and participation of the representatives from developing countries, in particular Least Development Countries (LDCs), in those meetings; requested the Secretary-General to provide timely and regular updates on the availability of financial resources from the relevant trust funds; and stressed the need for flexibility in convening meetings of the process of intergovernmental negotiations on the post-2015 development agenda, and noted the possibility of convening additional meetings of up to five days duration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/244 [draft: A/69/L.43] without vote [agenda items 13 (a) & 115].

Organization of the United Nations summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 55/2 of 8 September 2000, 60/1 of 16 September 2005 and 65/1 of 22 September 2010, by which it adopted the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the 2005 World Summit Outcome and the outcome of the 2010 United Nations summit on the Millennium Development Goals, respectively,

Recalling also its resolution 66/288 of 27 July 2012, by which it endorsed the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled “The future we want”,

Recalling further the outcome document of the special event of the President of the General Assembly to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, held on 25 September 2013, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 68/6 of 9 October 2013, including the decision to launch a process of intergovernmental negotiations, which will lead to the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, and the request to the Secretary-General to synthesize the full range of inputs then available and to submit a synthesis report before the end of 2014, as an input to intergovernmental negotiations,

Recalling its resolution 68/279 of 30 June 2014, by which it decided to convene the third International Conference on Financing for Development in Addis Ababa, from 13 to 16 July 2015,

Mindful of the processes mandated in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, in particular the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts on Sustainable Development Financing, as well as the process to develop options for a technology facilitation mechanism,

Taking note of other relevant inputs received and under way from United Nations intergovernmental bodies, the United Nations system and relevant United Nations meetings and processes, which could serve as useful inputs to the deliberations on the post-2015 development agenda,

Bearing in mind that the summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda coincides with the seventieth anniversary of the United Nations,

1. Decides that the United Nations summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda will be held from 25 to 27 September 2015, in New York, and convened as a high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly;

2. Also decides that the rules of procedure and established practices of the General Assembly shall apply for the summit unless otherwise decided in the present resolution and the annexes thereto;

3. Further decides that the general debate of the General Assembly at its seventieth session will begin on 28 September 2015, on the understanding that these arrangements shall in no way create a precedent for the general debate at future sessions;

4. Decides that the summit will be composed of plenary meetings concurrent with interactive dialogues;

5. Invites, owing to the importance of the summit, the Head of State of the country of the President of the General Assembly at its sixty-ninth session and the Head of State or Government of the country of the President of the Assembly at its seventieth session to jointly preside over the summit;

6. Reiterates that the 2015 summit will be held with the participation of Heads of State or Government, and encourages all Member States to be represented at that level;

7. Invites the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as well as the Bretton Woods institutions, including the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization, the regional development banks, the regional commissions of the United Nations and other relevant stakeholders, including parliamentarians, academia, non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations, major groups and the private sector, to participate in the summit, including in its interactive dialogues and preparatory process, according to the modalities specified in the annexes to the present resolution, and encourages them, as well as Member States and observers, to consider initiatives and activities in the preparation and the lead up to the summit;

8. Reiterates that, to arrive at an inclusive and people-centred post-2015 development agenda, the summit should engage all relevant stakeholders;

9. Invites the Inter-Parliamentary Union, including through the Fourth World Conference of Speakers of Parliament, to develop and submit a contribution to the summit;

10. Requests the President of the General Assembly to organize, with early preparations and in the most effective and efficient way, and to preside over two days of informal interactive hearings, before June 2015, with representatives of non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations, major groups and the private sector, and requests the President of the Assembly to prepare a summary of the hearings, to be made available prior to the summit;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to use the existing United Nations trust funds established prior to the high-level meetings of 2005 and 2010, as appropriate, to enhance the participation of representatives of non-governmental organizations and civil society organizations and major groups from developing countries in the hearings and the summit itself, and encourages Member States and others, as appropriate, to provide further support to the trust funds;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to enhance the active participation in the summit of representatives from developing countries, particularly from the least developed countries, to make efforts to use, in an efficient and effective manner, the limited available resources for that purpose;

13. Reaffirms the decision to consider at its sixty-ninth session the need to convene a meeting of the high-level political forum under the auspices of the General Assembly in 2015 in relation to the launch of the post-2015 development agenda, with a view to reaching agreement by the end of 2014 in this regard;

14. Requests the President of the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly to hold open, inclusive and transparent intergovernmental consultations with all Member States through the appointment, by the end of September 2014, of two co-facilitators, one from a developing country and one from a developed country, with a view to reaching agreement on all remaining issues relating to the intergovernmental negotiation process, including the summit;

15. Requests that the organization and modalities for the intergovernmental negotiations be established by the end of December 2014, keeping in mind the need for effective coordination and coherence in order to build synergies with other relevant United Nations intergovernmental processes.

ANNEX I

Organization of the plenary meetings and establishment of the list of speakers for the United Nations summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda

1. The summit will consist of plenary meetings as follows:

25 September 2015, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 9 p.m.

26 September 2015, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 9 p.m.

27 September 2015, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

2. The podium in the General Assembly Hall will have three seats to accommodate the two Co-Chairs and the Secretary-General.

3. The list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the summit will be established in accordance with the rules of procedure and established practices of the General Assembly. The initial list of speakers for the summit will be available in May 2015.

4. At the opening plenary meeting, on Friday morning, 25 September 2015, the initial speakers will include the two Co-Chairs, the Secretary-General and the head of the delegation of the host country of the Organization.

5. A representative from civil society of appropriate stature and level will be included in the list of speakers as keynote speaker after the opening statements.

6. Representatives of the intergovernmental groupings, the President of the World Bank Group, the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, the Director-General of the World Trade Organization and the heads of the United Nations system may also be included in the list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the summit.

7. Without prejudice to other organizations which have observer status in the General Assembly, a representative of each of the following may also be included in the list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the summit:

League of Arab States

African Union

Organization of Islamic Cooperation

World Conference of Speakers of Parliament of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

8. In order to accommodate all speakers at the summit, statements will be limited to five minutes, on the understanding that this will not preclude the distribution of more extensive texts.

9. Other than for Member States, the list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the summit will be closed on Monday, 3 August 2015.

10. The arrangements set out above shall in no way create a precedent.

ANNEX II

Organization of the interactive dialogues for the United Nations summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda

1. The summit will hold six interactive dialogues, as follows:

25 September 2015, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

26 September 2015, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

27 September 2015, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

2. The six dialogues will be co-chaired by two Heads of State or Government.

3. The interactive dialogues will be guided by the rules of procedure and established practices of the General Assembly.

4. The chairs of the interactive dialogues will be from the African States, the Asia-Pacific States, the Eastern European States, the Latin American and Caribbean States and the Western European and other States. The chairs will be selected by their respective regional groups in consultation with the President of the General Assembly.

5. Following the selection of chairs of the dialogues, participation will be determined on a first-come, first-served basis, ensuring that equitable geographical distribution is maintained, allowing for some flexibility. Member States are encouraged to be represented at the interactive dialogues at the level of Head of State or Government.

6. While retaining the intergovernmental character of the interactive dialogues, the United Nations system and other stakeholders, in accordance with annex IV below, are also invited to participate in the interactive dialogues. Arrangements will be made through existing and appropriate United Nations information and communications technology platforms to facilitate in this regard.

7. The themes for the interactive dialogues will be decided through the intergovernmental negotiation process for the summit.

8. The list of participants in each interactive dialogue will be made available prior to the meeting.

9. Summaries of the deliberations of the interactive dialogues will be presented orally by the chairs of the interactive dialogues or their representatives during the concluding plenary meeting of the United Nations summit.

ANNEX III

Organization of the informal interactive hearings

1. The President of the General Assembly will preside over two days of informal interactive hearings to be held before June 2015. The hearings will include participation from non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations, the private sector and major groups and an exchange of views with Member States.

2. The hearings will be attended by representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations, the private sector, major groups and Member States and observers.

3. The President of the General Assembly will determine the list of invited participants and the exact format and organization of the hearings, in consultation with Member States and representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations, the private sector and major groups.

4. The themes of the hearings will be informed by the synthesis report of the Secretary-General and decided on by the President of the General Assembly in consultation with Member States.

ANNEX IV

Other participants

1. Representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, including those on the roster through the list of the Commission on Sustainable Development, representatives of non-governmental organizations and civil society organizations that have participated in previous United Nations summits and non-governmental organizations and other major groups that were accredited to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and the World Summit on Sustainable Development held in 1992 and in 2002, respectively, will be invited to participate in the plenary meetings and interactive dialogues of the summit.

2. The President of the General Assembly will draw up a list of other relevant representatives of relevant non-governmental organizations, civil society organizations, academic institutions and the private sector who may participate in the plenary meetings and interactive dialogue of the summit, taking into account the principle of transparency and the principle of equitable geographical representation, and submit the proposed list to Member States for their consideration on a non-objection basis.

3. Representatives of non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, civil society organizations, major groups and the private sector, one from each grouping, selected through a transparent and inclusive process during the informal interactive hearings, may also be included in the list of speakers for the plenary meetings of the summit, in consultation with the President of the General Assembly.

4. In addition, interested non-governmental organizations that are not in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and private sector representatives may apply to the General Assembly following the procedures detailed in this annex. The complete list of applicants will be circulated to Member States.

5. The arrangements set out above shall in no way create a precedent.

Entrepreneurship for development

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 67/202 [YUN 2012, p. 820], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/320] on entrepreneurship for development, prepared by UNCTAD, with inputs from DESA, UN agencies and relevant stakeholders. The report assessed progress in the implementation of resolution 67/202, taking stock of policy trends, good practices and lessons learned. It was structured around six priority areas: formulating a national entrepreneurship strategy; optimizing the regulatory environment; enhancing entrepreneurship education and skills development; facilitating technology exchange and innovation; improving access to finance; and promoting awareness and networking. The report highlighted efforts to develop entrepreneurship policy through a bottom-up approach, building on inputs from subnational regions, cities and all types of communities, as well as on institution-building and the participation of a broad spectrum of stakeholders in policymaking. The report proposed measures to leverage national and regional policy networks in order to scale up and transfer their experiences, and encouraged the adoption of common impact indicators. It also suggested measures to enhance access to finance and to develop entrepreneurship promotion among women, youth and minorities—offering guidance on how to establish national centres of excellence in entrepreneurship, and encouraging networking and the sharing of good practices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/468 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 69/210 by recorded vote (133-30-7) [agenda item 19].

Entrepreneurship for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 67/202 of 21 December 2012,

Reaffirming the commitments to development and poverty eradication emanating from the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the commitments made at the 2005 World Summit, the 2010 high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and other major United Nations summits, conferences and special sessions,

Recalling the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, held on 25 September 2013, and its outcome document,

Recalling also the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, entitled “The future we want”, and recognizing the potential of entrepreneurship to contribute to specific sustainable development objectives,

Reaffirming the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development in its holistic approach and the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus,

Recalling the Istanbul Declaration and Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020,

Recalling also the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its fifty-eighth session, and stressing that women, particularly in developing countries, are important drivers of entrepreneurship,

Taking note of the ministerial declaration adopted at the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2012 of the Economic and Social Council, entitled “Promoting productive capacity, employment and decent work to eradicate poverty in the context of inclusive, sustainable and equitable economic growth at all levels for achieving the Millennium Development Goals”,

Welcoming the contribution of all relevant stakeholders, including the private sector, non-governmental organizations and civil society, to the implementation of the outcomes of the United Nations conferences and summits and their reviews in the economic, social, environmental and related fields, as well as the realization of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Recognizing the important contribution entrepreneurship can make to sustainable development by creating jobs and driving economic growth and innovation, improving social conditions and contributing to addressing environmental challenges, and stressing the importance of giving appropriate consideration to the promotion of entrepreneurship in the context of the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda,

Recognizing also the importance of developing comprehensive and comparable data to monitor progress in the implementation of entrepreneurship policies,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Emphasizes the need for improved regulatory environments and policy initiatives that promote entrepreneurship and foster small and medium-sized enterprises, as well as microenterprises, and stresses the positive role entrepreneurship plays in driving job creation and expanding opportunities for all, including for women and youth;
3. Encourages Governments to take a coordinated and inclusive approach to promoting entrepreneurship involving all stakeholders, while noting initiatives of civil society, academia and the private sector as important entrepreneurship drivers, and to develop policies, taking into account national priorities and circumstances, that address the legal, social and regulatory barriers to equal, effective economic participation, and stresses the need for a comprehensive approach to entrepreneurship that includes support from development partners in the areas of technology transfer on favourable terms, including on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, finance and capacity-building, with a focus on education and skills development;
4. Acknowledges the important role trade plays in enhancing the capacity of enterprises, and reaffirms in this regard the critical role that a universal, rules-based, open, non-discriminatory and equitable multilateral trading system can play in stimulating economic growth and development worldwide, thereby benefiting all countries at all stages of development as they advance towards sustainable development;
5. Emphasizes that partnerships with the private sector play an important role in promoting entrepreneurship, generating employment and investment, increasing revenue potential, developing new technologies and innovative business models and enabling high, sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth while protecting workers' rights;

6. Invites Member States to strengthen the capacity of national financial institutions to reach out to those who have no access to banking, insurance and other financial services, and encourages them to adopt regulatory and supervisory frameworks that facilitate the safe and sound provision of services to such populations, increase access to information and promote financial literacy, particularly for women;

7. Encourages Member States to expand alternative sources of financing and diversify the retail financial service system to include non-traditional providers of financial services, such as microcredit and microfinance, stresses the value of a sound regulatory framework in this regard, and also encourages the provision of incentives to microfinance institutions that meet national standards for delivering sound financial services to the poor, with a particular emphasis on women;

8. Emphasizes the important role of national efforts aimed at bringing informal workers into the formal economy and integrating them into national social security systems;

9. Recognizes that technological improvement, particularly through the diffusion of technology, can provide new opportunities for businesses to improve their competitiveness, and in this regard encourages Member States to increase cooperation in support of technology exchange and transfer, innovation and capacity-building programmes for promoting entrepreneurship;

10. Also recognizes the value of teaching entrepreneurial skills at all levels of education, ensuring the full and equal participation of women and girls, and encourages entrepreneurship education through skills development, capacity-building, training programmes and business incubators;

11. Acknowledges the role of entrepreneurship in enabling youth to turn their creativity, energy and ideas into business opportunities by helping to facilitate their entry into the labour market;

12. Encourages the United Nations system, in cooperation with Member States, to identify indicators that can be used to evaluate the success of entrepreneurship policies;

13. Recognizes that democratic political institutions, transparent and accountable public and private entities, effective anti-corruption measures and responsible corporate governance are key conditions for making market economies and enterprises more responsive to the values and long-term goals of society;

14. Acknowledges that the private sector can contribute to the achievement of sustainable development and support national regulatory and policy frameworks that enable business and industry to advance sustainable development initiatives, taking into account the importance of responsible business practices and corporate social responsibility;

15. Encourages the international community to support the efforts of countries in promoting entrepreneurship and fostering the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, as well as microenterprises, taking into account the challenges and opportunities of increased trade liberalization;

16. Encourages countries to consider establishing or strengthening national centres of excellence in entrepreneurship and similar bodies, and also encourages cooperation and networking and the sharing of best practices between them;

17. Calls upon the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to further recognize and integrate entrepreneurship in its various forms into their policies, programmes and reports and to support national efforts in this regard, as appropriate;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the progress made in implementing the present resolution, highlighting indicators based on existing work, as well as identifying best practices and possible measures that could be taken at all levels in support of entrepreneurship.

Industrial development cooperation

In an August note [A/69/331], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 67/225 [YUN 2012, p. 822]. The report reviewed the most recent trends in industrial development, including manufacturing value added and growth in countries, the universal demand for innovative industrial policies and strategies and the relationship of industrialization with the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development. It also analysed the importance of industrial development in the context of the emerging development agenda beyond 2015; and described the role and recent contributions of UNIDO, as the UN specialized agency mandated to promote inclusive and sustainable industrial development and international industrial cooperation.

UNIDO statistics demonstrated that the global industrial landscape had changed dramatically, with industrial growth figures in the fourth quarter of 2013 indicating a boost in the manufacturing sector of emerging industrial countries, and more sustained growth among industrialized markets. Industry in developing countries had undergone major structural changes, which were expected to significantly benefit the industrial performance of those countries in terms of productivity and competitiveness in the medium and longer term. According to UNIDO, major efforts would be needed to ensure the increased inclusiveness of the benefits of industrialization and to achieve a more equitable distribution of those benefits among women and men and across all groups, countries and regions. In considering the development agenda beyond 2015, Member States should consider adopting a goal on inclusive and sustainable industrialization, resilient infrastructure and innovation. Technology transfer and knowledge networking should be supported as key means of achieving inclusive and sustainable industrialization. The Green Industry Platform, the Accelerated Agribusiness and Agro-Industry Development Initiative, the Institute for Capacity Development, the Networks for Prosperity initiative and the global forums on inclusive and sustainable industrial development could serve as valuable models in that regard. UNIDO should strengthen its work in advancing industry-related innovation networks and systems; support Governments in addressing key determinants for future industrial growth and prosperity; and further strengthen all four enablers: technical cooperation, analytical and policy advisory services, normative activities and convening for knowledge transfer and networking.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/472/Add.2], adopted resolution 69/235 without vote [agenda item 23 (b)].

Industrial development cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/108 of 19 December 1994, 51/170 of 16 December 1996, 53/177 of 15 December 1998, 55/187 of 20 December 2000, 57/243 of 20 December 2002, 59/249 of 22 December 2004, 61/215 of 20 December 2006, 63/231 of 19 December 2008, 65/175 of 20 December 2010 and 67/225 of 21 December 2012,

Recalling also the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”, and the outcome document of the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals,

Recalling further the fifteenth session of the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, held in Lima from 2 to 6 December 2013, and the Lima Declaration: towards inclusive and sustainable industrial development, in which the General Conference notably reaffirmed the unique mandate of the Organization and laid the foundation for its upcoming work to support Member States in achieving inclusive and sustainable industrial development,

Recalling the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, held in Apia from 1 to 4 September 2014, and its outcome document, entitled “SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway”,

Recalling also its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting that inclusive and sustainable industrial development can effectively contribute to the achievement of a transformative agenda, integrating, in a balanced manner, the three dimensions of sustainable development,

Acknowledging the industrial development reports prepared by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, which examine structural change and policies in relation to industrial development to improve the contribution of industry to sustainable development, social inclusion, decent work, productivity growth and energy efficiency,

Emphasizing the essential role of inclusive and sustainable industrial development as part of a comprehensive strategy of structural economic transformation in eradicating poverty and supporting sustained economic growth, and thus in contributing to achieving sustainable development in developing countries, including the most vulnerable countries, and in particular African countries, least developed countries, landlocked developing countries and small island developing States, while recognizing the specific challenges facing middle-income countries, and emphasizing further that countries in situations of conflict also need special attention,

Recognizing the diversity of ways to achieve inclusive and sustainable industrial development and, in this connection, that each country has the primary responsibility for its own development and the right to determine its own development paths and appropriate strategies,

Stressing the importance of international industrial cooperation to promote inclusive and sustainable industrialization and to address major challenges and issues such as poverty eradication, growth and decent jobs, resource efficiency, energy, pollution and climate change, shifting demographics, knowledge networking and the narrowing of growing inequalities,

Underscoring the importance of using science, technology and innovation to build and maintain resilient industrial infrastructure and achieve inclusive and sustainable industrial development,

Recognizing the role of the business community, including the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the industrial sector, underlining the importance of the benefits of foreign direct investment in that process, and recognizing also in this regard that an enabling national environment is vital for mobilizing national resources, increasing productivity, reducing capital flight, encouraging the private sector and making effective use of international investment and assistance and that efforts to create such an environment should be supported by the international community,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

2. Notes with appreciation the adoption, on 2 December 2013, of the Lima Declaration: towards inclusive and sustainable industrial development;

3. Encourages giving due consideration to the issue of inclusive and sustainable industrial development in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

4. Recognizes the unique mandate of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, within the United Nations system, to promote inclusive and sustainable industrial development and the critical contribution made by that Organization;

5. Also recognizes that the mobilization of national and international resources and an enabling national and international environment are key drivers for sustainable development;

6. Underlines the potential benefits, for developing countries, of stepping up their efforts to finance their own development by improving domestic resource mobilization and promoting financing, spurred by a robust and vibrant industrial sector, in order to achieve a long-term impact through local, national and regional ownership;

7. Emphasizes that each country must take the primary responsibility for its own industrial development, that national ownership and leadership are indispensable in the development process and that the role of national policies, resources and development strategies cannot be overemphasized;

8. Recognizes that ensuring inclusive and sustainable industrial development requires consistent industrial policies and institutional frameworks that are duly supported by the necessary investment in industrial infrastructure, innovation, environmental technologies and skills development;

9. Also recognizes that inclusive and sustainable industrial development can play a crucial role in the realization of other major development objectives since, through inclusive and sustainable approaches to industrial development, countries can achieve self-sustaining economic and social development in an environmentally sustainable framework;

10. Emphasizes the need to promote, in the context of industrial development, gender equality and the empowerment of women at all levels, including in decision-making processes;

11. Also emphasizes that national efforts should be supported by development partners, as appropriate, and need to be complemented by a rules-based multilateral trading system that facilitates trade and provides opportunities for developing countries to broaden their competitive export base by strengthening their capacities and facilitating the structural transformation and diversification of their economies, which can help to promote economic growth and development;

12. Further emphasizes the need for the international community and the private sector, as appropriate, to contribute to creating an enabling environment for sustainable industrial development;

13. Underlines the importance of strengthening existing and forging new partnerships and networks at the global, regional and subregional levels, including South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation, and the full involvement of all relevant stakeholders towards achieving inclusive and sustainable industrial development;

14. Stresses that the lack of a dynamic industrial and manufacturing sector is one of the factors that can lead to a widening of the income gap between rich and poor and to the erosion of social protection systems;

15. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to promote dialogue and multi-stakeholder partnerships in order to monitor and foster progress towards the achievement of inclusive and sustainable industrial development;

16. Notes with appreciation the role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in leveraging the private sector as a partner for development, including through the organization of global dialogues;

17. Notes the continuing cooperation of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization with the entities of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, funds and programmes;

18. Underscores the continuing work of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as a global forum to disseminate knowledge and provide advice on industrial policies and strategies, successful industrialization experiences and best practices;

19. Recognizes the key role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in promoting sustainable industrial development and industrial innovation and mainstreaming science and technology into national productive systems;

20. Encourages regional, subregional and interregional cooperation as a platform for international industrial cooperation aiming to promote investments and technology transfer on mutually agreed terms, to disseminate good policies and practices as well as to foster decent work, including for youth and women;

21. Calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to play an active role in implementing the quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development and General Assembly resolution 64/289 of 2 July 2010 on system-wide coherence;

22. Also calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue, upon request, to support developing countries in achieving enhanced levels of inclusive and sustainable industrial development, notably in building productive capacities in an inclusive manner, building trade capacities in industries and building institutional capacities for making industries sustainable through cleaner production technologies and resource efficiency methodologies;

23. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to assist developing countries, including the least developed countries and African countries, in participating in productive activities through, inter alia, the development of sustainable agro-industry and agribusiness that improves food security, eradicates hunger and is economically viable, the promotion of South-South cooperation and the transfer, diffusion and adoption of technology on mutually agreed terms, in building their engagement in international trade through the development of micro, small and medium-sized enterprises and in supporting, as appropriate, the meeting of international product and process standards and the integration of women and youth into the development process;

24. Also encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to support developing countries, upon request, in achieving sustainable development, including through support for policies in the context of sustainable development and poverty eradication, and to promote environmentally sound and sustainable production, including through programmes on cleaner production, industrial water management, industrial energy efficiency and the utilization of efficient, modern and affordable forms of energy for productive use, especially in rural areas, and through continued cooperation with United Nations organizations and other organizations in order to support the achievement of multilateral environmental agreements and promote global goals on access to modern forms of energy, on energy efficiency and on renewable energy;

25. Further encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to strengthen its role in assisting developing countries to create and disseminate knowledge by, inter alia, making use of its global network of centres for investment and technology promotion, resource-efficient and cleaner production and South-South cooperation, as well as through its Institute for Capacity Development and its Networks for Prosperity initiative;

26. Reiterates the importance of promoting the creation and development of micro, small and medium-sized enterprises as a strategy for achieving industrial development, economic dynamism and poverty and hunger eradication, including through the mobilization of resources and measures to foster sustainable and inclusive development, and in this regard recalls International Labour Organization recommendation No. 189 concerning job creation in small and medium-sized enterprises;

27. Acknowledges the importance of reporting on corporate sustainability, encourages companies, where appropriate, especially publicly listed and large companies, to consider integrating sustainability information into their reporting cycle, and encourages industry, interested Governments and relevant stakeholders, with the support of the United Nations system, as appropriate, to develop models for best practices and to facilitate action for the integration of sustainability reporting, taking into account experiences gained from already existing frameworks and paying particular attention to the needs of developing countries, including for capacity-building;

28. Welcomes the ongoing support of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the New Partnership for Africa's Development, the African (Accelerated) Agribusiness and Agro-industries Development Initiative, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturing Plan for Africa and other programmes of the African Union aimed at further strengthening the industrialization process in Africa;

29. Stresses the importance of the activities of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, within its mandate, to support the efforts of middle-income countries to eradicate poverty, reduce inequalities and achieve sustainable development;

30. Encourages the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to develop its effectiveness in each of its four capacities of technical cooperation, research and analysis, normative assistance and global forum activities, with the aim of enhancing the quality of the services it provides to developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

31. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Science, technology and innovation for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development

At its seventeenth session (Geneva, 12–16 May) [E/2014/31-E/CN.16/2014/4], the Commission on Science and Technology for Development (CSTD) reviewed the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society (WSIS) [YUN 2003, p. 857 & YUN 2005, p. 933] at the regional and international levels. It also considered two priority themes: science, technology and innovation for the post-2015 development agenda; and information and communications technologies (ICTs) for inclusive social and economic development. The session included a segment on science, technology and innovation policy, and two ministerial round tables on the review of progress made in the implementation of WSIS outcomes; and on science, technology and innovation for the post-2015 development agenda.

CSTD had before it the Secretary-General's report on the priority themes and on progress made in implementing and following up to the outcomes of WSIS at the regional and international levels (see below); and reports by UNCTAD on the meeting of the Commission's intersessional panel on science, technology and innovation for the post-2015 development agenda (Washington, D.C., 2–4 December 2013) [E/CN.16/2014/CRP.1]; the secretariat of the Internet Governance Forum (IGF) on the ongoing implementation of the recommendations of the working group on improvements to the Forum [E/CN.16/2014/CRP.2] (see p. 977); and the Chair of the working group to examine the mandate of WSIS regarding enhanced cooperation as contained in the Tunis Agenda [E/CN.16/2014/CRP.3] (see below).

The Secretary-General, in his report [E/CN.16/2014/2 & Corr.1] on the priority theme of CSTD related to science, technology and innovation for the post-2015 development agenda, provided an overview of how science, technology and innovation (STI) could address key challenges for the post-2015 development agenda. He examined the two subthemes: a decade of CSTD contributions to the MDGs; and science, technology and innovation prospects for the post-2015 development agenda. The report highlighted the work of CSTD during the past decade towards achieving the MDGs and provided a forward-looking insight into the next set of developmental challenges and policy implications surrounding STI applications beyond 2015.

The Secretary-General encouraged CSTD to help articulate the important role of STI in the post-2015 development agenda by acting as a forum for horizon scanning and strategic planning on ways and means to use STI to tackle future challenges, and where practitioners and experts could exchange best practices in using STI for inclusive and sustainable development; and increase communication and cooperation among countries on STI and sustainable development. He also invited Member States, especially developing countries, to consider promoting local innovation capabilities to meet basic needs; encourage local entrepreneurship, eliminating any roadblocks to its operation; and promote the linkages between STI and sustainable development.

The Commission recommended two draft resolutions and one draft decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council. It adopted and brought to the attention of the Council a decision by which it took note of the report of the Secretary-General on science, technology and innovation for the post-2015 development agenda.

On 16 July (decision 2014/237), the Council took note of the Commission's report on its seventeenth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its eighteenth (2015) session.

On 17 November, by resolution 2014/35 (see p. 1156), the General Assembly endorsed the establishment of an intergovernmental committee on technology for development in the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/2014/31], adopted resolution 2014/28 without vote [agenda item 16 (b)].

Science, technology and innovation for development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development as the United Nations torch-bearer for science, technology and innovation for development,

Recognizing also the critical role and contribution of science, technology and innovation in building and maintaining national competitiveness in the global economy, addressing global challenges and realizing sustainable development,

Recognizing further the seminal role that information and communications technologies play in promoting and empowering science, technology and innovation for development,

Recalling the 2005 World Summit Outcome, in which it was recognized that science and technology, including information and communications technologies, are vital for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, and reaffirming the commitments contained therein,

Recalling also that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development is the secretariat of the Commission,

Recognizing that the General Assembly, in its resolution 68/220 of 20 December 2013 on science, technology and innovation for development, encouraged the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to undertake science, technology and innovation policy reviews, with a view to assisting developing countries and countries with economies in transition in identifying the measures that are needed to integrate science, technology and innovation policies into their national development strategies,

Recalling Economic and Social Council decision 2011/235 of 26 July 2011 providing for the extension, until 2015, of the mandate of the Gender Advisory Board of the Commission,

Recognizing the instrumental role of science, technology and innovation in the achievement of a number of Millennium Development Goals, and highlighting the role of science, technology and innovation as a cross-cutting theme of the post-2015 development agenda to continue to address global challenges,

Welcoming the work of the Commission on its two current priority themes, "Science, technology and innovation for the post-2015 development agenda" and "Information and communications technologies for inclusive social and economic development",

Noting the need for new approaches that embed science, technology and innovation policies and capacity-building as crucial components of national development plans, inter alia through collaboration between sectoral ministries, science, technology and innovation and information and communications technology agencies and a range of regulatory bodies,

Recognizing the increased regional integration efforts throughout the world and the associated regional dimension of science, technology and innovation issues,

Noting the significant achievements and continuing potential contribution of information and communications technologies to human welfare, economic prosperity and employment,

Noting also that the success of using technology and innovation policies at the national level is facilitated by, among other things, the creation of policy environments that enable education and research institutions, businesses and industry to innovate, invest and transform science, technology and innovation into employment and economic growth incorporating all interrelated elements, including knowledge transfer,

Recommends the following for consideration by national Governments, the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development:

(a) Governments, individually and collectively, are encouraged to take into account the findings of the Commission and to consider taking the following actions:

- (i) To closely link science, technology, innovation and strategies of sustainable development by prominently featuring capacity-building in information and communications technologies and science, technology and innovation in national development planning;
 - (ii) To promote local innovation capabilities for inclusive and sustainable economic development by bringing together local scientific, vocational and engineering knowledge, including through collaboration with and among national programmes;
 - (iii) To undertake systemic research on new trends in information and communications technologies and science, technology and innovation and their impact on development, particularly in the context of the post-2015 development agenda;
 - (iv) To promote information and communications technologies through a capability-based approach that rests on the foundations of learning, innovation and competence-building systems, rather than a needs-based approach, and by establishing a conducive environment that attracts and supports private investment, innovation and entrepreneurship;
 - (v) To seek international cooperation opportunities in information and communications technologies, particularly in terms of identifying good practices, for example in e-learning—especially massive open online courses—e-government, e-science, e-health, management of electronic waste and disaster resilience, through existing and new cooperation platforms;
 - (vi) To address the ongoing and persistent gender gap in the fields of science, technology and innovation as a whole, and science, technology, engineering and mathematics education in particular, by encouraging mentoring and supporting other efforts to attract and retain women and girls in those fields;
 - (vii) To support the policies and activities of developing countries in the fields of science and technology through North-South and South-South cooperation by encouraging financial and technical assistance, capacity-building and technical training programmes or courses;
- (b) The Commission is encouraged:
- (i) To continue its role as a torch-bearer for science, technology and innovation and to provide high-level advice to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on relevant science, technology, engineering and innovation issues;
 - (ii) To help to articulate the important role of information and communications technologies and science, technology, innovation and engineering in the post-2015 development agenda by acting as a forum for horizon scanning and strategic planning, providing foresight about critical trends in science, technology and innovation in areas such as food security, the management of water and other natural resources, urbanization, advanced manufacturing and related education and vocational needs, and drawing attention to emerging and disruptive technologies that can potentially affect the achievement of that agenda;

- (iii) To raise awareness among policymakers about the process of innovation and to identify particular opportunities for developing countries to benefit from such innovation, with special attention being placed on new trends in innovation that can offer novel possibilities for developing countries;
 - (iv) To discuss and explore innovative financing models as a means to attract new sources of investment capital for science, technology, engineering and innovation-based solutions, in particular smaller scale, off-grid renewable energy technologies, to address pressing challenges and needs for sustainable development, in collaboration with other organizations where appropriate;
 - (v) To provide a forum for sharing best practices, successful local innovation models, case studies and experiences on the use of science, technology and engineering for innovation, in symbiotic relationship with information and communications technologies, for inclusive and sustainable development;
 - (vi) To play an active role in creating awareness of the potential contribution of science, technology and innovation to the post-2015 development agenda through substantive inputs to relevant processes and bodies of the United Nations and to share findings and good practices on science, technology and innovation among Member States and beyond;
 - (vii) To provide a forum for sharing good practices and experiences to identify and recommend ways and appropriate measures to promote innovation, research and development, creation of new knowledge and transfer of technology, as well as information and communications technologies for capacity-building in science, technology and engineering education, research and entrepreneurship for the benefit of developing countries and, in this context, to explore ways to expand cooperation among all countries, with particular attention to addressing pollution problems in order to protect the environment and share available resources;
 - (viii) To highlight the importance of the work of the Commission related to the implementation of and follow-up to the areas of information and communications technologies and science, technology and innovation related to the Millennium Development Goals and in the post-2015 development agenda, with the Chair of the Commission to report at appropriate reviews and meetings of the Economic and Social Council, including those related to the Millennium Development Goals review and the post-2015 development agenda;
 - (ix) To discuss the establishment of a systematic approach for strategy development related to science, technology and engineering for innovation;
- (c) The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development is encouraged:
- (i) To seek funding proactively for the expansion of science, technology and innovation policy reviews, with an emphasis on the critical role of information and communications technologies in empowering science, technology and innovation and engineering capacity-building and utilization, and the implementation of the recommendations on those reviews, as appropriate, in close cooperation with United Nations agencies and international organizations;

- (ii) To plan for periodic updates on progress made in countries for which science, technology and innovation policy reviews have been performed and to invite those countries to report to the Commission on progress made, lessons learned and challenges encountered in implementing recommendations.

Information and communications technologies

During 2014, the United Nations continued to consider how the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communications technologies (ICTs) could be made available to all, in keeping with recommendations contained in the ministerial declaration adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its 2000 high-level segment [YUN 2000, p. 799], the Millennium Declaration [ibid., p. 49] and the Geneva Declaration of Principles and Plan of Action [YUN 2003, p. 857] adopted at the first phase of WSIS [ibid.], and the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda adopted at its second phase [YUN 2005, p. 933].

Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development

The Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development, at its thirteenth session (Rome, Italy, 16–18 September), hosted by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, focused on the theme “Mainstreaming communication for development in policies and programmes: enabling social inclusion to support food and nutrition security, resilient rural livelihoods and family farming”. The recommendations from the meeting were presented to the General Assembly.

On 19 December (decision 69/541), the General Assembly took note of the note [A/69/217] by the Secretary-General on communication for development programmes in the UN system, transmitting the report of the UNESCO Director-General on the implementation of Assembly resolution 50/130 [YUN 1995, p. 1438] regarding communication for development programmes in the UN system.

Follow-up to World Summit on the Information Society

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 2006/46 [YUN 2006, p. 1001], the Secretary-General, in March [A/69/65-E/2014/12], reported on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the WSIS outcomes at the regional and international levels.

According to the report, the economic and social impacts of ICTs were widespread and profound. Governments were increasingly recognizing the importance and potential of ICTs in their national social and economic objectives by developing national ICT policies. The fastest growth in Internet usage was in developing countries where people were increasingly becoming “Internet creators”, with around 150,000 Internet-related start-ups on an annual basis. Nevertheless, sizeable gaps in ICT development remained between and within regions. Internet governance was an important aspect of the ICT ecosystem, where all stakeholders had important roles to play. A multi-stakeholder model marked a good first step towards integrating the different kinds of structures—formal and informal, corporate and technologist, and hierarchical and decentralized—that Internet governance comprised. The United Nations and international agencies had begun preparations towards the WSIS+10 review to be undertaken by the General Assembly in 2015, alongside discussions on the post-2015 developmental agenda. To that end, a substantive session on WSIS+10 was to be organized by CSTD during its seventeenth session (see above). According to the Secretary-General, it was essential for the WSIS+10 review to inform the post-2015 development agenda on the complex interlinkages between ICTs and sustainable development, ensuring rights-based development, creating jobs and entrepreneurial opportunities, improving education, empowering women and other key benefits.

In his report [E/CN.16/2014/3] on the priority theme of CSTD regarding ICTs for inclusive social and economic development, the Secretary-General summarized developments in the ICT sector and ICT for development (ICT4D) since WSIS, identifying significant trends, experiences and challenges; and considered the implications of five emerging trends in ICTs for development, namely, datafication, big-data analysis, cloud computing, the Internet of things, and smart systems.

The report stated that the digital divide was changing its nature, from ICT access to how ICTs could be used to promote development outcomes. The constant emergence of new applications was creating a rift between those with the ability to benefit from them, and those who were excluded. Although ICTs provided huge benefits to human welfare, only part of their potential had been realized, and spaces of exclusion remained. Moreover, there was unevenness in the production and dissemination of information on the Internet, and zones of exclusion in the world were being amplified.

The Secretary-General recommended that CSTD play an active role in creating awareness on the potential contribution of ICTs to the post-2015 development agenda through substantive inputs to relevant UN processes and bodies, and continue to share findings and best practices on ICTs among member States and beyond. Member States, especially developing countries, were encouraged to consider conducting systematic research on new ICT trends and their impact on development; promoting ICTs through a capability-based approach rather than a needs-based approach; and seeking international cooperation opportunities in ICTs.

CSTD working group report. The CSTD working group to examine the wsis mandate regarding enhanced cooperation, as contained in the Tunis Agenda, was established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 67/195 [YUN 2012, p. 832]. The working group held four meetings (May 2013–May 2014) [E/CN.16/2014/CRP.3], during which it examined the mandate of enhanced cooperation through seeking, compiling and reviewing inputs from all Member States and other stakeholders, as stipulated by the Assembly. Even though consensus emerged in some issues, there was significant divergence of views in others. The complexity and the political sensitivity of the topic did not allow the group to finalize a set of recommendations on fully operationalizing enhanced cooperation.

WSIS high-level event. The wsis+10 high-level event, organized by the International Telecommunication Union, UNESCO, UNCTAD and the United Nations Development Programme as an extended version of the wsis Forum, was held in Geneva from 10 to 13 June. Participants reviewed progress made in the implementation of the wsis outcomes under the mandates of participating agencies and took stock of achievements in the preceding 10 years based on reports of wsis stakeholders. The event resulted in the wsis+10 Statement on the Implementation of the wsis Outcomes and wsis+10 Vision for wsis Beyond 2015.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development [E/2014/31], adopted resolution 2014/27 without vote [agenda item 16 (b)].

Assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the outcome documents of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Recalling also its resolution 2006/46 of 28 July 2006 on the follow-up to the World Summit and review of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the mandate that it gave to the Commission,

Recalling further its resolution 2013/9 of 22 July 2013 on the assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 68/198 of 20 December 2013 on information and communications technologies for development,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit at the regional and international levels,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled “Information and communications technologies for inclusive social and economic development”,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for his role in helping to ensure completion of the aforementioned reports in a timely manner,

Taking stock: reviewing the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society

1. Notes the ongoing implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society emphasizing, in particular, its multi-stakeholder nature, the roles played in this regard by leading agencies as action line facilitators and the roles of the regional commissions and the United Nations Group on the Information Society, and expresses its appreciation for the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in assisting the Economic and Social Council as the focal point in the system-wide follow-up to the World Summit;

2. Takes note of the reports of many United Nations entities, with their respective executive summaries, submitted as input for the elaboration of the annual report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to the Commission and published on the website of the Commission as mandated in Council resolution 2007/8 of 25 July 2007, and recalls the importance of close coordination among the leading action line facilitators and with the secretariat of the Commission;

3. Notes the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit at the regional level facilitated by the regional commissions, as observed in the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit at the regional and international levels, including the steps taken in this respect, and emphasizes the need to continue to address issues of specific interest to each region, focusing on the challenges and obstacles that each may be facing with regard to the implementation of all goals and principles established by the World Summit, with particular attention to information and communications technology for development;

4. Reiterates the importance of maintaining a process of coordinating the multi-stakeholder implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit through effective tools, with the goal of exchanging information among action line facilitators, identifying issues that need improvement and discussing the modalities of reporting on the overall implementation process, encourages all stakeholders to continue to contribute information to the stocktaking database maintained by the International Telecommunication Union on the implementation of the goals established by the World Summit, and invites United Nations entities to update information on their initiatives in the stocktaking database;

5. Highlights the urgent need for the incorporation of the recommendations contained in the outcome documents of the World Summit in the revised guidelines for United Nations country teams on preparing the common country assessments and United Nations Development Assistance

Frameworks, including the addition of an information and communications technology for development component;

6. Recalls General Assembly resolution 60/252 of 27 March 2006, in which the Assembly requested the Council to oversee the system-wide follow-up to the Geneva and Tunis outcomes of the World Summit and, to that end, requested the Council, at its substantive session of 2006, to review the mandate, agenda and composition of the Commission, including considering strengthening the Commission, taking into account the multi-stakeholder approach;

7. Notes with satisfaction the holding in Geneva, from 13 to 17 May 2013, of the World Summit on the Information Society Forum 2013, organized by the International Telecommunication Union, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Development Programme, as a multi-stakeholder platform for the coordination of implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit and to facilitate the implementation of the World Summit action lines;

8. Calls upon all States, in building the information society, to take steps to avoid and to refrain from taking any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that impedes the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries and that hinders their well-being;

9. Welcomes the progress highlighted in the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit, in particular the fact that the rapid growth in access to mobile telephony since 2005 has meant that more than half of the world's inhabitants have access to information and communications technologies within their reach, in line with one of the World Summit targets, the value of this progress being enhanced by the advent of new services and applications, including m-health, m-agriculture, mobile transactions, m-government, e-government, e-business and development services, which offer great potential for the development of the information society;

10. Notes with great concern that many developing countries lack affordable access to information and communications technologies and that, for the majority of the poor, the promise of science and technology, including information and communications technologies, remains unfulfilled, and emphasizes the need to effectively harness technology, including information and communications technologies, to bridge the digital divide;

11. Recognizes that information and communications technologies present new opportunities and challenges and that there is a pressing need to address the major impediments that developing countries face in accessing the new technologies, such as an appropriate enabling environment, sufficient resources, infrastructure, education, capacity, investment and connectivity, as well as issues related to technology ownership, standards and flows, and in this regard calls upon all stakeholders to provide adequate resources, enhanced capacity-building and transfer of technology and knowledge to developing countries, particularly the least developed countries;

12. Also recognizes the rapid growth in broadband access networks, especially in developed countries, and notes with concern that there is a growing digital divide in the availability, affordability, quality of access and use of broadband between high-income countries and other regions, with the least developed countries and Africa as a continent lagging behind the rest of the world;

13. Further recognizes that the transition to a mobile-led communications environment is leading to significant changes in operators' business models and that it requires significant rethinking of the ways in which individuals and communities make use of networks and devices, of government strategies and of ways in which communications networks can be used to achieve development objectives;

14. Recognizes that, even with all the developments and the improvement observed in some respects, in numerous developing countries information and communications technologies and their applications are still not available to or affordable for the majority of people, particularly those living in rural areas;

15. Also recognizes that the number of Internet users is growing and that, in some instances, the digital divide is also changing in character from one based on whether access is available to one based on the quality of access, information and skills that users can obtain and the value that they can derive from it, and recognizes in this regard that there is a need to prioritize the use of information and communications technologies through innovative approaches, including multi-stakeholder approaches, within national and regional development strategies;

16. Takes note of the global report of the Broadband Commission for Digital Development on the state of broadband in 2013 and universalizing broadband, and notes with interest the continuous efforts of the Broadband Commission in promoting high-level advocacy for the establishment of an enabling environment for broadband connectivity, in particular through national broadband plans and public-private partnerships for ensuring that the development agenda challenges are met with appropriate impact and in conjunction with all stakeholders;

17. Notes that, while a solid foundation for capacity-building in information and communications technology has been laid in many areas with regard to building the information society, there is still a need for continuing efforts to address the ongoing challenges, especially for developing countries and the least developed countries, and draws attention to the positive impact of broadened capacity development that involves institutions, organizations and entities dealing with information and communications technologies and Internet governance issues;

18. Recognizes the need to focus on capacity development policies and sustainable support to further enhance the impact of activities and initiatives at the national and local levels aimed at providing advice, services and support with a view to building an inclusive, people-centred and development-oriented information society;

19. Notes that topics continue to emerge, such as e-environment applications and the contribution of information and communications technologies to early warning, mitigating climate change, social networking, virtualization and cloud computing and services, mobile Internet and mobile-based services, the protection of online privacy and the empowerment and protection, especially against cyberexploitation and abuse, of vulnerable groups of society, in particular children and young people;

20. Reiterates the importance of information and communications technology indicators as a monitoring and evaluation tool for measuring the digital divide among countries and within societies and in informing decision makers when formulating policies and strategies for social, cultural and economic development, and emphasizes that the standardization and harmonization of reliable and regularly updated indicators capturing the performance, efficiency, affordability and quality of goods and services are essential for implementing information and communications technology policies;

Internet governance

21. Reaffirms that the outcomes of the World Summit related to Internet governance, namely, the process towards enhanced cooperation and the convening of the Internet Governance Forum, are to be pursued by the Secretary-General through two distinct processes, and recognizes that the two processes may be complementary;

22. Also reaffirms paragraphs 34 to 37 and 67 to 72 of the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society;

Enhanced cooperation

23. Recognizes the importance of enhanced cooperation in the future, to enable Governments, on an equal footing, to carry out their roles and responsibilities in international public policy issues pertaining to the Internet, but not in the day-to-day technical and operational matters that do not impact on international public policy issues;

24. Also recognizes that the process towards enhanced cooperation, to be started by the Secretary-General, involving all relevant organizations by the end of the first quarter of 2006, will involve all stakeholders in their respective roles, will proceed as quickly as possible, consistent with legal process, and will be responsive to innovation; that relevant organizations should commence a process towards enhanced cooperation involving all stakeholders, proceeding as quickly as possible and being responsive to innovation; and that the same relevant organizations shall be requested to provide annual performance reports;

25. Recalls that, in its resolution 67/195 of 21 December 2012, the General Assembly invited the Chair of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development to establish a working group on enhanced cooperation to examine the mandate of the World Summit regarding enhanced cooperation as contained in the Tunis Agenda, through seeking, compiling and reviewing inputs from all Member States and all other stakeholders, and to make recommendations on how to fully implement that mandate, and requested the working group to report to the Commission at its seventeenth session, in 2014, as an input to the overall review of the outcomes of the World Summit;

26. Also recalls that, in its resolution 67/195, the General Assembly requested the Chair of the Commission to ensure that the Working Group on Enhanced Cooperation had balanced representation between Governments, from the five regional groups of the Commission, and invitees from all other stakeholders, namely, the private sector, civil society, technical and academic communities and intergovernmental and international organizations, drawn equally from developing and developed countries;

27. Notes that the Working Group held four meetings between May 2013 and May 2014, at which it examined the mandate of enhanced cooperation by issuing a questionnaire and seeking, compiling and reviewing inputs from all Member States and other stakeholders for the purpose of developing draft recommendations, as stipulated by the General Assembly in its resolution 67/195;

28. Takes note of the report of the Chair of the Working Group on Enhanced Cooperation of the Commission, and expresses its gratitude to the Chair and members and other stakeholders that submitted inputs and contributed to the work of the Working Group;

29. Notes that consensus emerged on certain issues while a wide divergence of opinions persisted in a number of other issues that prevented the Working Group from making recommendations on how to fully implement enhanced cooperation as contained in the Tunis Agenda, as stipulated in the mandate given to the Working Group by the General Assembly in resolution 67/195;

30. Also notes the work initiated by the Working Group to review the identified international public policy issues pertaining to the Internet, list where there are existing international mechanisms addressing these issues, identify the status of mechanisms, if any, and whether they are addressing the issues, and attempt to identify gaps in order to ascertain what type of recommendations may be required;

31. Recommends that this work may be further continued by the secretariat of the Commission with a view to the submission of findings to the Commission at its intersessional meeting for further discussion and their integration into the 10-year review of the progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit, to be prepared for consideration by the Commission at its eighteenth session;

Internet Governance Forum

32. Recognizes the importance of the Internet Governance Forum and its mandate as a forum for multi-stakeholder dialogue on various matters, as reflected in paragraph 72 of the Tunis Agenda, including discussion on public policy issues related to key elements of Internet governance;

33. Also recognizes that national and regional Internet Governance Forum initiatives have emerged, taking place in all regions and addressing Internet governance issues of relevance and priority to the organizing country or region;

34. Recalls General Assembly resolution 67/195, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit, as part of his annual reporting on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit, information on the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Working Group on Improvements to the Internet Governance Forum of the Commission, in particular on enhancing participation of developing countries;

35. Notes the holding of the eighth meeting of the Internet Governance Forum, hosted by the Government of Indonesia in Nusa Dua, Bali, from 22 to 25 October 2013, under the main theme, entitled "Building Bridges—Enhancing Multi-stakeholder Cooperation for Growth and Sustainable Development";

36. Welcomes the holding of the ninth meeting of the Internet Governance Forum, to be hosted by the Government of Turkey and scheduled to take place in Istanbul from 2 to 5 September 2014, and notes that, in the preparatory process for the meeting, recommendations from the report of the Working Group on Improvements to the Internet Governance Forum have been taken into consideration;

37. Also welcomes the offer of Brazil to host the tenth meeting of the Internet Governance Forum in 2015 and, subject to the decision by the General Assembly on the renewal of the mandate of the Internet Governance Forum, further welcomes the offer of Mexico to host a meeting in 2016;

The road ahead

38. Notes the substantive discussion on the progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit during the seventeenth session of the Commission, held from 12 to 16 May 2014, and the ongoing work of the Commission of collecting input from all facilitators and stakeholders as part of the preparations for its 10-year review report on the progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit, and requests the Commission to report thereon, through the Council, to the General Assembly as it makes an overall review of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit in 2015;

39. Also notes the holding of the event, coordinated by the International Telecommunication Union, entitled “wsis+10 High Level Event” as an extended version of the World Summit on the Information Society Forum in Geneva, from 10 to 13 June 2014;

40. Further notes the holding of a 10-year review event of the World Summit entitled “Towards knowledge societies for peace and sustainable development”, coordinated by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in Paris, from 25 to 27 February 2013, and the final statement of the event;

41. Notes the holding of the fifth World Telecommunication/Information and Communication Technology Policy Forum on international Internet-related public policy matters in Geneva, from 14 to 16 May 2013, and its output opinions;

42. Also notes the holding of the BYND 2015 Global Youth Summit, organized by the International Telecommunication Union and hosted by the Government of Costa Rica in San José, from 9 to 11 September 2013, and its declaration;

43. Urges United Nations entities still not actively cooperating in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit through the United Nations system to take the necessary steps and commit to a people-centred, inclusive and development-oriented information society and to catalyse the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration;

44. Calls upon all stakeholders to keep the goal of bridging the digital divide, in its different forms, an area of priority concern, to put into effect sound strategies that contribute to the development of e-government and to continue to focus on pro-poor information and communications technology policies and applications, including access to broadband at the grass-roots level, with a view to narrowing the digital divide among and within countries;

45. Urges all stakeholders to prioritize the development of innovative approaches that will stimulate the provision of universal access to affordable broadband infrastructure for developing countries and the use of relevant broadband services in order to ensure the development of an inclusive, development-oriented and people-centred information society, and to minimize the digital divide;

46. Calls upon international and regional organizations to continue to assess and report on a regular basis on the universal accessibility of nations to information and communications technologies, with the aim of creating equitable opportunities for the growth of the information and communications technology sectors of developing countries;

47. Urges all countries to make concrete efforts to fulfil their commitments under the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development;

48. Calls upon United Nations organizations and other relevant organizations and forums, in accordance with the outcomes of the World Summit, to periodically review and modify the methodologies for information and communications technology indicators, taking into account different levels of development and national circumstances, and therefore:

(a) Notes with appreciation the work of the Partnership on Measuring Information and Communication Technology for Development;

(b) Also notes the holding, in Mexico City, from 4 to 6 December 2013, of the eleventh World Telecommunication/Information and Communications Technology Indicators Symposium;

(c) Encourages Member States to collect relevant data at the national level on information and communications technologies, so as to be able to respond satisfactorily to surveys such as the World Summit targets survey, to share information about country case studies and to collaborate with other countries in capacity-building exchange programmes;

(d) Encourages United Nations organizations and other relevant organizations and forums to promote assessment of the impact of information and communications technologies on poverty and in key sectors to identify the knowledge and skills needed to boost impacts;

(e) Calls upon international development partners to provide financial support to further facilitate capacity-building and technical assistance in developing countries;

49. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the special trust fund established by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to support the review and assessment work of the Commission regarding follow-up to the World Summit, while acknowledging with appreciation the financial support provided by the Governments of Finland and Switzerland to this fund;

50. Recalls paragraph 111 of the Tunis Agenda, in which the General Assembly was requested to make an overall review of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit in 2015, and paragraph 106, according to which the World Summit implementation and follow-up should be an integral part of the United Nations integrated follow-up to major United Nations conferences;

51. Also recalls paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 67/195, in which the Assembly reaffirmed its role in the overall review of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit, to be held by the end of 2015, as recognized in paragraph 111 of the Tunis Agenda;

52. Further recalls paragraph 22 of General Assembly resolution 68/198, in which the Assembly decided to finalize the modalities of the overall review as early as possible, and invited the President of the Assembly to appoint two co-facilitators to convene open intergovernmental consultations for that purpose;

53. Recommends that, consistent with the World Summit process and subject to the decision by the General Assembly, an appropriate preparatory process be launched, drawing from the experience of the two phases of the World Summit;

54. Notes the role of the Commission, set forth in Council resolution 2006/46, in assisting the Council as the focal point in the system-wide follow-up, in particular the review and assessment of progress made in implementing the outcomes of the World Summit;

55. Takes note with appreciation of the report on the stocktaking of activities related to the World Summit, which serves as one of the valuable tools for assisting with the follow-up, beyond the conclusion of the Tunis phase of the World Summit;

56. Reiterates the importance of sharing best practices at the global level, and, while recognizing excellence in the implementation of the projects and initiatives that further the goals of the World Summit, encourages all stakeholders to nominate their projects for the annual World Summit project prizes as an integral part of the World Summit stocktaking process, while taking note of the report on the World Summit success stories;

57. Requests the Commission to invite further inputs from Member States and all facilitators and stakeholders and to organize, during its eighteenth session, in 2015, a substantive discussion on the 10-year review report on the progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit, and to report thereon, through the Council, to the General Assembly as it makes an overall review of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit in 2015;

58. Recalls further paragraph 48 of Council resolution 2013/9, in which the Council requested the Commission to submit, after its eighteenth session, the results of its 10-year review of progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit, through the Council, to the General Assembly as it makes an overall review of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit in 2015;

59. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission, on a yearly basis, a report on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the present resolution as well as in the other Council resolutions on the assessment of the quantitative and qualitative progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit;

60. Emphasizes the importance of promoting an inclusive information society, with particular attention to bridging the digital and broadband divide, taking into account considerations of gender and culture, as well as youth and other underrepresented groups;

61. Also emphasizes the importance of information and communications technologies for development, and considers that it should be reflected as appropriate in the post-2015 development agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 105], the General Assembly adopted resolution 68/302 [draft: A/68/L.54] without vote [agenda item 16].

Modalities for the overall review by the General Assembly of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society at its first phase, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and endorsed by the General Assembly, and the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society adopted by the Summit at its second phase, held in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005, and endorsed by the Assembly,

Recalling also paragraph 111 of the Tunis Agenda, in which the General Assembly was requested to undertake the overall review of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society in 2015, and in this regard reaffirming the centrality of the General Assembly to this process,

Recognizing that the overall review will be undertaken on the basis of and with full respect for the Tunis Agenda,

Recalling its resolution 68/198 of 20 December 2013 and, in particular, paragraph 22 thereof in which it decided to finalize the modalities for the overall review by the General Assembly of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, to be held in 2015 in accordance with paragraph 111 of the Tunis Agenda,

Recognizing the role of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in assisting the Economic and Social Council as the focal point in the system-wide follow-up, in particular the review and assessment of the progress made in implementing the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, while at the same time maintaining its original mandate concerning science and technology for development, and the work carried out by the Commission to that effect,

Reaffirming that science, innovation and technology, including information and communications technologies, are essential enablers and drivers for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals and the promotion of the economic, social and environmental components of sustainable development and should be given due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda,

Noting that the Commission on Science and Technology for Development should submit after its eighteenth session, by June 2015, its report on the 10-year review of progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly,

1. Decides that the overall review will be concluded by a two-day high-level meeting of the General Assembly, to be preceded by an intergovernmental preparatory process that also takes into account inputs from all relevant stakeholders of the World Summit on the Information Society;

2. Also decides to convene the high-level meeting of the General Assembly, at the highest possible level, in December 2015, in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

3. Further decides that the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States, will invite, in addition to all Member and observer States and observers, representatives of all relevant stakeholders of the World Summit on the Information Society to speak during the high-level meeting, and in this regard also encourages the participation of those stakeholders in the meeting;

4. Decides that the overall review by the General Assembly shall take stock of the progress made in the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society and address potential information and communications technology gaps and areas for continued focus, as well as addressing challenges, including bridging the digital divide, and harnessing information and communications technologies for development;

5. Requests the President of the General Assembly, in June 2015, to appoint two co-facilitators to lead, on the basis of, among other relevant inputs, submissions from Member and observer States and observers and the final report of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, an intergovernmental negotiation process, which will include preparatory meetings, resulting in an intergovernmentally agreed outcome document, for adoption at the high-level meeting of the General Assembly;

6. Decides that during the preparatory process for the high-level meeting, the President of the General Assembly will organize informal interactive consultations with all relevant stakeholders of the World Summit on the Information Society, in order to collect their inputs for the intergovernmental negotiation process.

Internet Governance Forum

The Internet Governance Forum (IGF) held its ninth meeting (Istanbul, Turkey, 2–5 September) on the theme “Connecting Continents for Enhanced Multistakeholder Internet Governance”. The forum was attended by more than 2,000 representatives of governments, intergovernmental organizations, the private sector, civil society and the technical community. Topics of discussion ranged from the digital divide to digital trust, from management of critical Internet resources to network neutrality, and from cybersecurity to jurisdictional issues, among others. Participants also discussed the continuing value of IGF, the overall evolution of the multi-stakeholder Internet governance arrangements, and the 2015 ten-year review of the WSIS outcome. The IGF Open Consultations and Multi-stakeholder Advisory Group Meeting was held in December.

Broadband Commission for Digital Development

In 2014, the Broadband Commission for Digital Development [YUN 2011, p. 818] published its report The State of Broadband 2014: Broadband for All, which sought to raise awareness and enhance understanding of the importance of broadband networks, services, and applications to guide international broadband policy discussions and support the expansion of broadband where it was most needed. The report, which included a special focus on the importance of integrating ICT skills into education to ensure that the next generation was able to compete in the digital economy, was structured around four main themes: policies and policy leadership; education and ICT skills; business models; and broadband for development.

According to the report, countries should use appropriate policies and strategies to make broadband available, affordable and accessible, as a vital development enabler for building inclusive, resilient and sustainable modern-day knowledge societies. It was increasingly essential to integrate everyone into modern life, with access to digital education services, culture, entertainment, healthcare, financial and commercial services. To achieve that, the public and private sectors had to work together in close partnership. The report showed that broadband for all could transform policy, social and development outcomes around the world; and stated that the world was on the cusp of fulfilling the potential of high-speed broadband.

The Commission recommended that governments—to help empower their populations and to cope with the challenges of capacity—should initiate and prioritize their National Broadband Planning process and invest in ICTs and digital e-skills as an engine of economic growth and development, taking into account both supply and demand. As regulation was not keeping pace with the changes in the market, governments and policy-makers had to review and update their regulatory frameworks. It was also crucial to evaluate the alternatives to be implemented in order to encourage private sector investment. A “one size fits all” policy to broadband roll-out could have negative implications for the ICT market. A detailed cost-benefit approach should be adopted when evaluating different public policies and regulatory options to promote the growth and development of broadband in different countries around the world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/465], adopted resolution 69/204 without vote [agenda item 16].

Information and communications technologies for development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 56/183 of 21 December 2001, 57/238 of 20 December 2002, 57/270 B of 23 June 2003, 59/220 of 22 December 2004, 60/252 of 27 March 2006, 62/182 of 19 December 2007, 63/202 of 19 December 2008, 64/187 of 21 December 2009, 65/141 of 20 December 2010, 66/184 of 22 December 2011, 67/195 of 21 December 2012 and 68/198 of 20 December 2013,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 2006/46 of 28 July 2006, 2008/3 of 18 July 2008, 2009/7 of 24 July 2009, 2010/2 of 19 July 2010, 2011/16 of 26 July 2011 and 2012/5 of 24 July 2012, and taking note of Council resolution 2013/9 of 22 July 2013 on the assessment of the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society,

Recalling further its resolution 68/302 of 31 July 2014 on the modalities for the overall review by the General Assembly of the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, and welcoming the high-level meeting of the General Assembly for the overall review to be held in December 2015,

Recalling the Declaration of Principles and the Plan of Action adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society at its first phase, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and endorsed by the General Assembly, and the Tunis Commitment and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society adopted by the Summit at its second phase, held in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005, and endorsed by the Assembly,

Recalling also the 2005 World Summit Outcome,

Recalling further the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals and its outcome document, as well as the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, convened by the President of the General Assembly on 25 September 2013, and its outcome document,

Recalling the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, and its outcome document, entitled “The future we want”, and General Assembly resolution 68/310 of 15 September 2014,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society at the regional and international levels,

Noting the holding of the World Summit on the Information Society Forum, jointly organized annually by the International Telecommunication Union, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Development Programme, the first 10-year review event of the World Summit on the Information Society, coordinated by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris from 25 to 27 February 2013, and the high-level event on the 10-year review of the World Summit coordinated by the International Telecommunication Union in Geneva from 10 to 13 June 2014,

Noting also the hosting by the Republic of Korea of the Information and Communication Technologies Ministerial Meeting, held in Busan on 19 October 2014,

Noting further the Connect 2020 Agenda for Global Telecommunication/ICT Development, adopted by the 2014 Plenipotentiary Conference of the International Telecommunication Union, held in Busan from 20 October to 7 November 2014,

Noting the establishment of the Broadband Commission for Digital Development, at the invitation of the Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union and the Director General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, taking note of the “Broadband targets for 2015”, which sets targets for making broadband policy universal and for increasing affordability and uptake in support of internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, taking note also of the report of the Broadband Commission entitled The State of Broadband 2014: Broadband for All, which provides a country-by-country evaluation of those targets and the state of broadband deployment worldwide, as well as the report of the Broadband Commission Working Group on Broadband and Gender entitled “Doubling digital opportunities: enhancing the inclusion of women and girls in the information society”, which identifies a digital gender gap of approximately 200 million fewer women online than men, noting that without further action to increase access to broadband for women and girls, this digital gender gap could grow to 350 million by 2015, and taking note of the report of the Broadband Commission Task Force on Sustainable Development entitled “Means of transformation: harnessing broadband for the post-2015 development agenda”,

Noting also the holding of the seventeenth session of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development in Geneva from 12 to 16 May 2014,

Recognizing the need for respect for national sovereignty and applicable international law in the consideration of information and communications technologies for development, noting the importance of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in the use of information and communications technologies, and reaffirming that the same rights that people have offline must also be protected online, including the right to privacy, as set out in its resolution entitled “The right to privacy in the digital age”,

Noting that cultural diversity is the common heritage of humankind and that the information society should be founded on and stimulate respect for cultural identity, cultural and linguistic diversity, traditions and religions and foster dialogue among cultures and civilizations, and noting also that the promotion, affirmation and preservation of diverse cultural identities and languages, as reflected in relevant agreed United Nations documents, including the Universal Declaration on Cultural Diversity of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, will further enrich the information society,

Acknowledging the positive trends in the global connectivity and affordability of information and communications technologies, in particular the steady increase in Internet access to one third of the world’s population, the rapid diffusion of mobile telephony and mobile Internet, the increased availability of multilingual content and the advent of many information and communications technologies services and applications, which offer great potential for the development of the information society,

Noting that progress and many innovations in the field of information and communications technologies, such as mobile Internet, social networking and cloud computing, contribute to a dynamic landscape that requires that all stakeholders continuously adapt to such innovations,

Recognizing ongoing efforts by relevant international and regional organizations and other stakeholders to conceptualize and articulate the impact of information and communications technologies on development, and encouraging the international community and relevant stakeholders to support the efforts of developing countries in harnessing the benefits of information and communications technologies for achieving the eradication of poverty as an overarching objective for sustainable development,

Stressing, however, that, in spite of recent progress, an important and growing digital divide between countries remains in terms of the availability, affordability and use of information and communications technologies and access to broadband, and stressing also the need to close the digital divide, including with regard to such issues as Internet affordability, and to ensure that the benefits of new technologies, especially information and communications technologies, are available to all,

Reaffirming the need to more effectively harness the potential of information and communications technologies to promote the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, through sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Noting the references to information and communications technologies contained in the proposal of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals,

Expressing deep concern about the ongoing adverse impacts, particularly on development, of the world financial and economic crisis, recognizing evidence of an uneven and fragile recovery, cognizant that the global economy, notwithstanding significant efforts that helped to contain tail risks, improve financial market conditions and sustain recovery, still remains in a challenging phase, with downside risks, including high volatility in global markets, high unemployment, particularly among youth, indebtedness in some countries and widespread fiscal strains that pose challenges for global economic recovery and reflect the need for additional progress towards sustaining and rebalancing global demand, and stressing the need for continuing efforts to address systemic fragilities and imbalances and to reform and strengthen the international financial system while implementing the reforms agreed upon to date,

Expressing concern about the ongoing adverse impacts of the world financial and economic crisis on the positive trends in the diffusion of information and communications technologies and the investment needed to ensure universal access to those technologies and efforts to bridge the digital divide,

Expressing concern also about the growing gap in broadband provision between developed and developing countries, as well as about the new dimensions that the digital divide has taken on,

Recognizing that the lack of capacity-building for the productive use of information and communications technologies needs to be addressed in order to overcome the digital divide,

Recognizing also that the number of Internet users is growing and that the digital divide is also changing in character from one based on whether access is available to one based on the quality of access, information and skills that users can obtain and the value they can derive from the Internet, and recognizing further in this regard that there is a need to prioritize the use of information and communications technologies through innovative approaches, including multi-stakeholder approaches, within national and regional development strategies,

Recognizing further the fact that information and communications technologies are critical enablers of economic development and investment, with consequential benefits for employment and social welfare, and that the increasing pervasiveness of information and communications technologies within society has had profound impacts on the ways in which Governments deliver services, businesses relate to consumers and citizens participate in public and private life,

Recognizing the immense potential that information and communications technologies have in promoting the transfer of technologies in a wide spectrum of socioeconomic activity,

Reaffirming paragraphs 4, 5 and 55 of the Declaration of Principles adopted in Geneva in 2003, and recognizing that freedom of expression and the free flow of information, ideas and knowledge are essential for the information society and are beneficial to development,

Conscious of the challenges faced by States, in particular developing countries, in combating the use of information and communications technologies for criminal purposes, including by terrorists, and emphasizing the need to reinforce technical assistance and capacity-building activities, upon their request, for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of such use in accordance with international law,

Acknowledging that the Internet is a central element of the infrastructure of the information society and is a global facility available to the public,

Noting the hosting by Brazil of the NETMundial Global Multistakeholder Meeting on the Future of Internet Governance in São Paulo on 23 and 24 April 2014,

Acknowledging the need to continue to improve the existing Internet governance framework,

Recognizing that the international management of the Internet should be multilateral, transparent and democratic, with the full involvement of Governments, the private sector, civil society, academic and technical communities and international organizations, as stated in the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society,

Recognizing also the importance of the Internet Governance Forum and its mandate as a forum for multi-stakeholder dialogue on various matters, as reflected in paragraph 72 of the Tunis Agenda, including discussion on public policy issues related to key elements of Internet governance, while acknowledging the calls for improvements in its working methods, and taking into account the recommendations of the Working Group on Improvements to the Internet Governance Forum of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development,

Reiterating the significance of the process towards enhanced cooperation in full consistency with the mandate provided in the Tunis Agenda, and noting the ongoing work of the Working Group on Enhanced Cooperation of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development,

Reaffirming that the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society related to Internet governance, namely, the process towards enhanced cooperation and the convening of the Internet Governance Forum, are to be pursued by the Secretary-General through two distinct processes, and recognizing that the two processes may be complementary,

Reaffirming also paragraphs 35 to 37 and 67 to 72 of the Tunis Agenda,

Welcoming the efforts undertaken by the host countries in organizing the meetings of the Internet Governance Forum, held in Athens in 2006, in Rio de Janeiro in 2007, in Hyderabad, India, in 2008, in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt, in 2009, in Vilnius in 2010, in Nairobi in 2011, in Baku in 2012, in Bali, Indonesia, in 2013 and in Istanbul, Turkey, in 2014,

Taking note of the successful meetings of the Internet Governance Forum held to date, and welcoming with appreciation the offer of Brazil to host the next meeting of the Forum in 2015,

Recognizing the unique role, challenges and opportunities for youth in a deeply interconnected world, and taking note of the celebration of the "BYND 2015" Global Youth Summit, hosted by the Government of Costa Rica and organized by the International Telecommunication Union together with other organizations of the United Nations system as well as partners from government, industry, the media and civil society from 9 to 11 September 2013, as a contribution to the discussions on the post-2015 development agenda in the field of information and communications technologies for development,

Recognizing also the pivotal role of the United Nations system in promoting development, including with respect to enhancing access to information and communications technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with all relevant stakeholders,

Welcoming, in view of the existing gaps in information and communications technologies infrastructure, the Connect Africa summits held in Kigali in 2007 and in Cairo in 2008, the Connect the Commonwealth of Independent States summit held in Minsk in 2009, the meeting of Commonwealth countries held in Colombo in 2010, the first and second Digital Agenda Assemblies of the European Union, held in 2011 and 2012, the Connect Americas summit held in Panama City in 2012, the Connect Arab States summit held in Doha in 2012, the Connect Asia-Pacific summit and the International Telecommunication Union Telecom World 2013 held in Bangkok in 2013, the Transform Africa summit held in Kigali in 2013, the various national and regional Internet governance forums that are held annually around the globe, the Mesoamerican Information Highway, the Trans-Eurasian Information Superhighway, the Asia Broadband and Universal Service Leaders Forum to be held in India in October 2015, the events of the Alliance for Affordable Internet and the many other regional initiatives aimed at mobilizing human, financial and technical resources to accelerate the implementation of the connectivity goals of the World Summit on the Information Society,

1. Recognizes that information and communications technologies have the potential to provide new solutions to development challenges, particularly in the context of globalization, and can foster sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth and sustainable development, competitiveness, access to information and knowledge, poverty eradication and social inclusion that will help to expedite the integration of all countries, especially developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, into the global economy;

2. Also recognizes the rapid growth in broadband access networks, especially in developed countries, and expresses concern about the growing digital divide in the availability, affordability, quality of access and use of broadband between high-income countries and other regions, with the least developed countries and Africa, as a continent, lagging behind the rest of the world;

3. Expresses concern regarding the digital divide in access to information and communications technologies and broadband connectivity between countries at different levels of development, which affects many economically and socially relevant applications in such areas as government, business, health and education, and also expresses concern with regard to the special challenges faced in the area of broadband connectivity by developing countries, including the least developed countries, small island developing States and landlocked developing countries;

4. Acknowledges the importance of investing in closing the gender gap in information and communications technologies by making them affordable and accessible, including in regard to access to broadband as a tool for the empowerment of women and girls and the exercise of their full range of human rights, access to information, access to markets, networking and increased opportunities;

5. Notes with concern the gender gap in women's access to the Internet, and in this regard affirms the need to empower women and girls, in particular in developing countries, through the use of information and communications technologies in education, health care, agriculture, clean drinking water, energy and public services, to enable women entrepreneurs to access services, grow businesses and develop new innovations, to strengthen women's ability to access high-value-added jobs and to increase women's economic, civil and political participation;

6. Stresses that, for the majority of the poor, the development promise of science and technology, including information and communications technologies, remains unfulfilled, and emphasizes the need to effectively harness technology, including information and communications technologies, to bridge the digital divide;

7. Also stresses the important role of Governments in the effective use of information and communications technologies in their design of public policies and in the provision of public services responsive to national needs and priorities, including on the basis of a multi-stakeholder approach, to support national development efforts;

8. Further stresses the important role played by private sector, civil society and technical communities in information and communications technologies;

9. Recognizes that, in addition to financing by the public sector, financing of information and communications technologies infrastructure by the private sector has come to play an important role in many countries and that domestic financing is being augmented by North-South flows and complemented by South-South cooperation, and also recognizes that South-South and triangular cooperation can be useful tools for promoting the development of information and communications technologies;

10. Also recognizes that information and communications technologies present new opportunities and challenges and that there is a pressing need to address the major impediments that developing countries face in accessing the new technologies, such as insufficient resources, infrastructure, education, capacity, investment and connectivity and issues related to technology ownership, standards and flows, and in this regard calls upon all stakeholders to provide adequate resources, enhanced capacity-building and technology transfer, on mutually agreed terms, to developing countries, particularly the least developed countries;

11. Further recognizes the immense potential that information and communications technologies have in promoting the transfer of technologies in a wide spectrum of socioeconomic activity;

12. Encourages strengthened and continuing cooperation between and among stakeholders to ensure the effective implementation of the outcomes of the Geneva and Tunis phases of the World Summit on the Information Society through, inter alia, the promotion of national, regional and international multi-stakeholder partnerships, including public-private partnerships, and the promotion of national and regional multi-stakeholder thematic platforms in a joint effort and dialogue with developing countries, including the least developed countries, development partners and actors in the information and communications technologies sector;

13. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by Tunisia, host of the second phase of the World Summit on the Information Society, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the International Telecommunication Union and other relevant international and regional organizations, for organizing the annual ICT 4 All Forum and technological exhibition as a platform within the framework of the follow-up to the Summit for promoting a dynamic business environment for the information and communications technologies sector worldwide;

14. Notes the progress that has been made by United Nations entities in cooperation with national Governments, regional commissions and other stakeholders, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the implementation of the action lines contained in the outcome documents of the World Summit on the Information Society, and encourages the use of those action lines for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals;

15. Also notes the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society at the regional level, facilitated by the regional commissions, as observed in the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit at the regional and international levels;

16. Encourages the United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, within their respective mandates and strategic plans, to contribute to the implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, and emphasizes the importance of allocating adequate resources in this regard;

17. Welcomes with appreciation the offer made by Mexico to host the meeting of the Internet Governance Forum in 2016, and recommends that the extension of the mandate of the Forum be considered in the context of the overall review in 2015;

18. Recognizes the urgent need to harness the potential of knowledge and technology, and in this regard encourages the United Nations development system to continue its efforts to promote the use of information and communications technologies as a critical enabler of development and a catalyst for the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

19. Also recognizes the role of the United Nations Group on the Information Society as an inter-agency mechanism of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for Coordination designed to coordinate United Nations implementation of the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society;

20. Takes note of the report of the Working Group on Improvements to the Internet Governance Forum, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit, as part of his annual reporting on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society, information on the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the Working Group, particularly on enhancing the participation of developing countries;

21. Stresses the need for the enhanced participation of all developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, in all meetings of the Internet Governance Forum, and in this regard invites Member States, as well as other stakeholders, to support the participation of Governments and all other stakeholders from developing countries in the Forum itself, as well as in the preparatory meetings;

22. Recognizes the need to harness the potential of information and communications technologies as critical enablers of sustainable development and to overcome the digital divide, and stresses that capacity-building for the productive use of such technologies should be given due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session, through the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the Economic and Social Council, a report on the status of the implementation of and follow-up to the present resolution, as part of his annual reporting on the progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the World Summit on the Information Society at the regional and international levels;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its seventieth session the item entitled "Information and communications technologies for development".

Development policy and public administration

Committee for Development Policy

The Committee for Development Policy (CDP), at its sixteenth session (New York, 24–28 March) [E/2014/33], addressed the following themes: global governance and global rules for development in the post-2015 era as its contribution to the discussions on the 2014 annual ministerial review; review and fine-tuning of the criteria for the identification of least developed countries (LDCs); monitoring of countries that were graduating and had graduated from the list of LDCs; and the role of country groupings for development.

The Committee considered how intergovernmental cooperation could be reformed and strengthened to better manage the increasing interdependence among countries, reduce large inequalities among and within countries, and contribute to the fulfilment of internationally recognized social and environmental standards, while preserving the necessary policy space for government action at the country level. It proposed four main principles in that regard: common but differentiated responsibilities and respective capabilities; subsidiarity; inclusiveness, transparency and accountability; and coherence. In preparation for the 2015 triennial review of the list of LDCs, the Committee re-examined the criteria for the identification of LDCs and their application procedures, and introduced refinements, particularly strengthening the measurement of health-related structural impediments. Thresholds for inclusion in and graduation from the category would be set at absolute rather than relative levels, focusing on the notion of development progress in overcoming absolute structural impediments.

CDP reviewed the development progress of Maldives, which had graduated from the LDC category in 2011 [YUN 2011, p. 826], and emphasized the importance of phasing out specific support measures to LDCs and the active participation by graduated countries in monitoring the implementation of their transition strategy. The Committee acknowledged the sustained development progress of Samoa, which graduated in 2014 (see p. 986), and welcomed the country's efforts towards the preparation of its transition strategy. It also noted the continued development progress of Equatorial Guinea and Vanuatu, both scheduled to graduate in 2017, and recommended that both countries initiate the preparation of their smooth transition strategy. CDP stressed the urgency of further attention to human development in Equatorial Guinea.

In its analysis of country classifications, CDP noted the proliferation of country groupings based on weak analytical foundations with low levels of effectiveness of interventions, but affirmed that among existing groupings, the LDC category had particularly strong analytical foundations and broad legitimacy. Development partners should consider allocating aid and other measures of support based on sound and objective socioeconomic criteria, preferably without creating new groups of countries. The Committee suggested that that could be achieved by considering the LDC indicators as part of the criteria used by development partners in determining the allocation of assistance. Recommendations were made in support of future discussions related to the creation of new categories.

For its seventeenth session, CDP would follow up on its work on the post-2015 UN development agenda.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 24], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/9 [draft: E/2014/L.15] without vote [agenda item 16 (a)].

Report of the Committee for Development Policy

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 59/209 of 20 December 2004 and 67/221 of 21 December 2012, both on a smooth transition strategy for countries graduating from the category of least developed countries, and resolution 65/280 of 17 June 2011, by which the Assembly endorsed the Istanbul Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 68/18 of 4 December 2013, by which the Assembly took note of the endorsement by the Economic and Social Council of the recommendation of the Committee for Development Policy that Equatorial Guinea and Vanuatu be graduated from the least developed country category,

Recalling further that graduation becomes effective three years after the date on which the General Assembly takes note of the recommendation of the Committee and that, during the three-year period, the country remains on the list of least developed countries and maintains the advantages associated with membership on that list,

Reiterating its conviction that no country graduating from the least developed country category should have its development progress disrupted or reversed,

Recalling its resolutions 1998/46 of 31 July 1998, 2007/34 of 27 July 2007 and 2013/20 of 24 July 2013,

Bearing in mind the importance of maintaining stability in the criteria and in the application of the established procedures for inclusion in and graduation from the least developed country category so as to ensure the credibility of the process and, consequently, of the category of least developed countries, while giving due consideration to the specific challenges and vulnerabilities and the development needs of countries potentially graduating or being considered for graduation from the least developed country category,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee for Development Policy on its sixteenth session;

2. Notes the work done by the Committee on global governance and global rules for development in the post-2015 era, in accordance with the theme of the annual ministerial review of the Economic and Social Council in 2014, on the role of country groupings for development cooperation, on the monitoring of countries graduating and graduated from the least developed country category and on the review and refining of the criteria for classifying countries as least developed in preparation for the triennial review of the least developed country category in 2015;

3. Requests the Committee, at its seventeenth session, to examine and make recommendations on the annual theme of the programme of work of the Council and the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2015;

4. Welcomes the decision of the General Assembly to take note of the endorsement by the Council of the recommendation of the Committee that Equatorial Guinea and Vanuatu be graduated from the least developed country category;

5. Requests the Committee to monitor the development progress of countries graduating and graduated from the category of least developed countries, in accordance with paragraph 21 of General Assembly resolution 67/221;

6. Reiterates the invitation by the General Assembly for Equatorial Guinea and Vanuatu to prepare their national transition strategy with the support of the United Nations system and in cooperation with their bilateral and multilateral development and trading partners and to report annually to the Committee on the preparation of that strategy;

7. Acknowledges with satisfaction the contributions made by the Committee to various aspects of the programme of work of the Council, reiterates its invitation for increased interactions between the Council and the Committee, and encourages the Chair and, as necessary, other members of the Committee to continue this practice, as specified in Council resolution 2011/20 of 27 July 2011, within existing resources and as appropriate.

Public administration

The Committee of Experts on Public Administration, at its thirteenth session (New York, 7–11 April) [E/2014/44], considered the main theme of transforming public administration for sustainable development, and three sub-themes: strengthening national and local capacities for sustainable development management; promoting leadership, innovation and risk management for sustainable development; and invigorating the professionalism and morale of the public service. For its consideration, the Committee had before it notes of the Secretariat on the sub-themes [E/C.16/2014/2, E/C.16/2014/3, E/C.16/2014/4].

The Committee concurred with the view that governance, the rule of law and capable institutions were both outcomes and enablers, advancing all three pillars of sustainable development and the post-2015 development agenda. It stressed that the means of implementation was integral in achieving sustainable development, and any future sustainable development goals should be translated and adapted at the national level in accordance with the conditions and priorities of each country. The Committee recommended that coordination of capacity-building activities at both international and national levels be strengthened; and capacity-building be monitored, benchmarked, audited and evaluated against declared objectives. In providing assistance to countries in developing public administration and public service capacities, particular attention should be paid to the special needs of LDCs, countries emerging from conflict, those in transition, and those with limited resources. The Committee further recommended that the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and conferences of the parties to UN conventions should include in all resolutions and requests for commitments from parties specifications as to the means of implementation, including identification of the means and sources of finance, requisite transfer of technology, such as information and communications technology and capacity-building needs, including in the areas of leadership, innovation and risk management.

For its review of the UN Programme in Public Administration and Finance, the Committee had before it a report [E/C.16/2014/5] of the Secretariat on the topic. The Committee discussed its role in addressing public administration and capacity-building and the need for authoritative and insightful advice on governance and public administration, through building strategic partnerships and networks and emphasizing a regional approach to capacity development. There was a need to reach out to Member States to improve awareness of the programme and, with regard to online training services, to pursue partnerships with prestigious universities and public administration institutes. The Committee emphasized the importance of standardization of practices, promotion of partnerships, information and communications technology and e-libraries. It noted that key international issues pertaining to information and communications technology—including big data, open government, cybersecurity, the data revolution, and the growing gap between policy and implementation—would increase in importance, and governments needed to advance policies to facilitate handling those challenges at the global, national and subnational levels as a matter of priority. The Committee recommended that the Secretariat raise awareness of how the implementation of e-government practices could help in the achievement of national goals and internationally agreed development goals; pursue a public accountability agenda; provide advisory services on a range of participatory mechanisms; and continue its work on the United Nations Public Administration Country Studies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 November [meeting 53], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/38 [draft: E/2014/L.30/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 16 (g)].

Report of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration on its thirteenth session

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 2012/28 of 27 July 2012, 2013/23 of 24 July 2013 and other related resolutions on public administration and development,

Referring to General Assembly resolution 66/209 of 22 December 2011 on promoting the efficiency, accountability, effectiveness and transparency of public administration by strengthening supreme audit institutions,

Recalling the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 20 to 22 June 2012, entitled “The future we want”, and recognizing that effective governance at the local, subnational, national, regional and global levels representing the voices and interests of all is critical for advancing sustainable development,

Referring to General Assembly resolution 68/1 of 20 September 2013 on the review of the implementation of Assembly resolution 61/16 on the strengthening of the Economic and Social Council, in the annex to which it is stipulated that the Council shall invite, inter alia, its subsidiary bodies to contribute, as appropriate, to its work in keeping with the agreed annual theme,

Recognizing the support being provided by the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance to countries on public governance and public administration,

Recognizing also the key role of information and communications technologies and e-government in providing effective platforms to facilitate public service delivery, citizen engagement, knowledge-sharing, transfer of innovative solutions and capacity-building for sustainable development among countries,

Underlining the centrality of transparent, accountable, efficient, effective, citizen-oriented, professional and ethical public administration to the successful implementation of national development policies and the management of development programmes,

Recognizing the work of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration in providing policy advice and programmatic guidance to the Council on issues related to governance and public administration in development,

Noting the acceleration of the implementation of the Millennium Development Goals, the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda and the relevance of the work of the Committee in this respect,

1. Requests the Committee of Experts on Public Administration, at its fourteenth and fifteenth sessions, in 2015 and 2016, to consider emerging issues in public administration that are related to the annual main themes and the integration segments of the Economic and Social Council and to support the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda, as appropriate;

2. Invites the Committee to enhance its interaction and coordination with the Council and other subsidiary bodies of the Council with a view to addressing cross-cutting areas through the established working methods of the Council;

3. Takes note of the conclusions of the Committee on transforming public administration for sustainable development, contained in the report on its thirteenth session;

4. Underlines that service to citizens should be at the centre of transforming public administration, requiring appropriate institutional frameworks, professional and ethical leadership, a focus on diversity and gender equality, harnessing information and communications technologies, innovation, responsibility and public sector capacity-building;

5. Notes that political and administrative leadership at all levels is essential to inspire, engage and motivate public servants to achieve the highest quality of performance;

6. Reaffirms that the foundations of sustainable development at all levels include transparent, participatory and accountable governance and a professional, ethical, responsive and information and communications technology-enabled public administration;

7. Also reaffirms paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 65/1 of 22 September 2010, in which the Assembly reaffirmed that good governance and the rule of law at the national and international levels were essential for sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, sustainable development and the eradication of poverty and hunger, and encourages Member States to continue to support capacity development in public governance and institution-building at all levels, with a view to accelerating progress towards the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;

8. Further reaffirms the need for the effective use of information and communications technologies in designing, planning, delivering and monitoring public services that are responsive to international, national and local needs and priorities;

9. Stresses that the governance challenges of sustainable development are characterized by growing complexity and dynamism in decision-making and implementation mechanisms, and encourages Member States and international organizations undertaking reforms aimed at promoting an innovative environment, agile approaches and a culture of collaboration, openness and knowledge-sharing to use scientific, technological and analytical tools as instruments to support innovative decision-making and implementation in the public sector and reduce risks to public accountability and trust arising from the governance complexity of public administration;

10. Reiterates the need to coordinate capacity-building activities at the international, national and local levels, and encourages all stakeholders to renew efforts to raise awareness and expand the application of the principles of the Paris Declaration on Aid Effectiveness, the Accra Agenda for Action and the outcome document of the Fourth High-level Forum on Aid Effectiveness, held in Busan, Republic of Korea, from 29 November to 1 December 2011, to focus on effective and efficient aid and resource allocation;

11. Acknowledges the indispensable role of supreme audit institutions and related capacity-building in holding Governments accountable for the use of resources and their performance in achieving development goals, and calls upon Member States to give due consideration to the importance of the independence of supreme audit institutions in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

12. Requests the Secretariat to continue:

(a) To address gaps in research, monitoring, capacity development and implementation in governance and public administration and, in particular, to further develop its public administration country studies, to continue to address emerging issues in public administration through the United Nations E-Government Survey and the World Public Sector Report and to continue to increase the scope and depth of its capacity-development activities with the aim of better assisting countries, according to their specific contexts and needs, in strengthening participatory governance and citizen engagement, managing development, public accountability and anti-corruption activities, including promoting the independence and strengthening the capacity of supreme audit institutions, strengthening institutional and human capacities in public administration, advancing public-private partnerships, promoting innovation and knowledge transfer in the public sector and better defining e-government strategies and policies;

(b) To promote transformative government and innovation in public governance so as to achieve sustainable development by further promoting advocacy and the transfer of knowledge on good governance at the global, regional, national and local levels, through, inter alia, United Nations Public Service Day, the United Nations

Public Service Awards and the United Nations Public Administration Network;

(c) To further strengthen governance and public administration capacity development through the provision of advisory services, training, including self-assessment and awareness-raising, and technical projects, such as the United Nations Project Office on Governance;

(d) To assist in the implementation of the Plan of Action adopted by the World Summit on the Information Society at its first phase, held in Geneva from 10 to 12 December 2003, and the Tunis Agenda for the Information Society adopted by the Summit at its second phase, held in Tunis from 16 to 18 November 2005, on issues related to e-government, e-participation, mobile government, open government data and the use of information and communications technologies;

(e) To continue its work on supporting the reconstruction of governance and public administration in post-conflict countries for quick recovery and sustainable development.

Also on the same date, by decision 2014/257, the Council decided that the fourteenth session of the Committee of Experts on Public Administration would be held at United Nations Headquarters from 20 to 24 April 2015, and approved the provisional agenda for that session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/470], adopted resolution 69/228 without vote [agenda item 21].

Promoting and fostering the efficiency, accountability, effectiveness and transparency of public administration by strengthening supreme audit institutions

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 66/209 of 22 December 2011,

Recalling also the commitments in the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and environmental fields, including the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development entitled “The future we want”, the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the outcome document of the special event to follow up efforts made towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,

Recalling further its resolutions 67/290 of 9 July 2013 and 68/1 of 20 September 2013, and the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the 2014 session of the Economic and Social Council and the high-level political forum on sustainable development,

Recalling its resolution 68/309 of 10 September 2014, in which it welcomed the report of the Open Working Group on Sustainable Development Goals and decided that the proposal of the Open Working Group contained in the report shall be the main basis for integrating sustainable development goals into the post-2015 development agenda, while recognizing that other inputs will also be considered, in the intergovernmental negotiation process at the sixty-ninth session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the need to improve the efficiency, accountability, effectiveness and transparency of public administration,

Emphasizing also that efficient, accountable, effective and transparent public administration has a key role to play in the implementation of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals,

Stressing the need for capacity-building as a tool to promote development, and welcoming the cooperation of the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions with the United Nations in this regard,

1. Recognizes that supreme audit institutions can accomplish their tasks objectively and effectively only if they are independent of the audited entity and are protected against outside influence;

2. Also recognizes the important role of supreme audit institutions in promoting the efficiency, accountability, effectiveness and transparency of public administration, which is conducive to the achievement of national development objectives and priorities as well as the internationally agreed development goals;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the work of the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions in promoting greater efficiency, accountability, effectiveness, transparency and efficient and effective receipt and use of public resources for the benefit of citizens;

4. Also takes note with appreciation of the Lima Declaration of Guidelines on Auditing Precepts of 1977 and the Mexico Declaration on Supreme Audit Institutions Independence of 2007, and encourages Member States to apply, in a manner consistent with their national institutional structures, the principles set out in those Declarations;

5. Encourages Member States and relevant United Nations institutions to continue and to intensify their cooperation, including in capacity-building, with the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions in order to promote good governance at all levels by ensuring efficiency, accountability, effectiveness and transparency through strengthened supreme audit institutions, including, as appropriate, the improvement of public accounting systems;

6. Acknowledges the role of supreme audit institutions in fostering governmental accountability for the use of resources and their performance in achieving development goals;

7. Takes note of the interest of the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions in the post-2015 development agenda;

8. Encourages Member States to give due consideration to the independence and capacity-building of supreme audit institutions in a manner consistent with their national institutional structures, as well as to the improvement of public accounting systems in accordance with national development plans in the context of the post-2015 development agenda;

9. Stresses the importance of continuing international cooperation to support developing countries in capacity-building, knowledge and best practices related to public accounting and auditing.

Groups of countries in special situations

On 19 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/69/471], included in the agenda of its sixty-ninth session the item entitled “Groups of countries in special situations”, covering the follow-up to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries [YUN 2011, p. 827], and the follow-up to the second United Nations conference on landlocked developing countries (see p. 1012). The Assembly allocated the agenda item to the Second Committee.

On 19 December (decision 69/547), the General Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on the subject.

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated least developed countries (LDCs) were considered in several UN forums in 2014, particularly through implementation of the Istanbul Declaration and Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020 (Istanbul Programme of Action) [YUN 2011, p. 828], adopted at the Fourth United Nations Conference on LDCs [ibid., p. 827]. In addition to the Office of the High Representative for Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States (OHRLLS), the Committee for Development Policy (CDP) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) also dealt with LDC-related issues.

The Least Developed Countries Report 2014 [Sales No. E.14.II.D.7], published by UNCTAD, addressed growth with structural transformation—a post-2015 development agenda, and examined the linkages between structural transformation, economic growth and human development. The report also considered what LDCs could do to transform their economies to foster economic growth and achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and the sustainable development goals (SDGs), and what the international community could do to support LDCs in their structural transformation.

In 2013, LDCs maintained high economic growth, although they began to show signs of an economic slowdown. Sluggish global economic growth, which translated into lower international demand for commodities and a consequent decline in their prices, adversely affected the economic growth and export performance of several LDCs, most notably the fuel exporters. That resulted in a substantial deterioration of their current account and merchandise trade. Although foreign direct investment (FDI) reached a record high and inflows of remittances continued unabated, official development assistance (ODA) started to show signs of stagnation and savings rates fell, leading to a greater need of external finance.

The report stated that given that the proposed SDGs were even more ambitious than the MDGs—meeting those goals would require nothing short of a revolution in the economic performance of LDCs. More specifically, it would necessitate their structural transformation on a scale unprecedented for those countries. Employing targeted, selective and more ambitious government policies to modify their economic structure and boost economic dynamism was of critical importance. According to the report, a one-size-fits-all model of development and policymaking was not practical. Rather, a pragmatic approach needed to be considered, based on a mix of policies selected to suit specific conditions. The types of policy instruments that might help foster structural transformation and enable the achievement of the SDGs were related to resource mobilization, industrial policy, macroeconomic framework and international measures. The report’s analysis reinforced the need for concerted efforts by the LDCs and the international community to take effective and coherent policy measures aimed at the structural transformation necessary for enabling LDCs to tackle their enormous development challenges in the post-2015 period.

LDC list

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/20 [YUN 2013, p. 817], CDP at its sixteenth session (see p. 981) monitored the development progress of countries graduating from the LDC category, namely Equatorial Guinea and Vanuatu, both scheduled to graduate in 2017; and Samoa, which graduated from the LDC category on 1 January 2014, after a long transition period that was extended by the General Assembly in resolution 64/295 [YUN 2010, p. 843]. The Committee stressed that proper international support measures needed to be provided to Samoa to address vulnerabilities specific to small island developing States (SIDS).

In response to Assembly resolution 67/221 [YUN 2012, p. 842], CDP further reviewed the development progress of Maldives, which had graduated in 2011 [YUN 2011, p. 826]. The Committee noted the abrupt termination of trade-related support measures provided to Maldives by its main trading partners after the graduation, or after the end of a transition period; and urged them to implement a gradual phasing out of support measures specific to LDCs for graduated countries. It recommended that Maldives submit its report on the implementation of the transition strategy for the next monitoring exercise.

At year's end, the list of LDCs comprised the following 48 countries: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Sudan, Sudan, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zambia.

Follow up to the Fourth UN Conference on LDCs

In response to General Assembly resolution 67/220 [YUN 2012, p. 844], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/69/270] on strengthening investment promotion regimes for FDI in LDCs. The report focused on policies to attract and retain FDI as essential components of national development strategies; provided a brief overview of recent trends and patterns in FDI flows to LDCs; took stock of the policies, programmes and measures pursued by host and home countries and by international organizations to stimulate FDI flows to and increase their benefits for LDCs; and outlined options for strengthening such efforts.

The report concluded that promising trends in FDI flows to LDCs and the nascent shifts in their sectoral distribution towards manufacturing and service activities suggested scope for further efforts by LDCs, home countries, the international community and others for promoting FDI flows that contributed to those countries' productive capacity-building. The international community should consider launching an action plan for promoting FDI in LDCs and strengthening host-country benefits. Greater coordination of such efforts could be achieved through a one-stop arrangement, such as an international investment support centre dedicated to LDCs. Such a facility, as recommended in the Cotonou Agenda for productive capacity-building in LDCs (see below), could provide interrelated services, such as a common information depository containing all relevant information; contract preparation and negotiating support; advisory support in dispute resolution; and risk insurance. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly consider the establishment of a voluntarily funded international investment support centre for LDCs under the auspices of the United Nations and the related institutional and other matters.

Communications. On 17 September [A/69/392], Benin transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ministerial Declaration entitled "Cotonou Agenda for productive capacity-building in the least developed countries," adopted at the ministerial meeting (Cotonou, Benin, 28–31 July) on new partnerships for productive capacity-building in LDCs. The meeting was held on the initiative of the Government of Benin, in its capacity as Chair of the group of LDCs, in close cooperation with the United Nations, represented by OHRLS. In the Declaration, participants invited the Assembly to include an agenda item entitled "New partnerships for building productive capacities in least developed countries" during its sixty-ninth session.

On 8 October [A/C.2/69/2], Benin transmitted to the Secretary-General the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the Annual Ministerial Meeting of the Least Developed Countries (New York, 26 September). Participants called for the early operationalization of the International Migrant Remittances Observatory for least developed countries without further delay, and invited UN system organizations, including the World Bank Group, to undertake a feasibility study, in collaboration with OHRLS, with the aim of introducing "diaspora bonds" for least developed countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December [meeting 75], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/69/471/Add.1], adopted resolution 69/231 without vote [agenda item 22 (a)].

Follow-up to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Istanbul Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020, adopted at the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 65/280 of 17 June 2011, in which the Assembly called upon all the relevant stakeholders to commit to implementing the Istanbul Programme of Action,

Reaffirming the overarching goal of the Istanbul Programme of Action of overcoming the structural challenges faced by the least developed countries in order to eradicate poverty, achieve internationally agreed development goals and enable graduation from the least developed country category,

Recalling its resolutions 68/18 of 4 December 2013 and 68/224 of 20 December 2013,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2014/29 of 25 July 2014 on the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020,

Expressing its deep concern over the most severe and complex outbreak of Ebola that has ruthlessly affected three least developed countries, namely Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, which exposes the fact that, while all countries are at risk of such outbreaks, the least developed countries are particularly vulnerable to public health emergencies, with severe impacts on lives and livelihoods and on the economies of those countries,

Emphasizing the need for coordinated implementation and coherent follow-up and monitoring of the Istanbul Programme of Action, and noting the key role of the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States in this regard, as set out in paragraph 155 of the Programme of Action,

Recalling its resolutions 59/209 of 20 December 2004 and 65/286 of 29 June 2011 on the importance of a smooth transition for countries graduating from the list of least developed countries, and reaffirming the aim of enabling half of the least developed countries to meet the criteria for graduation by 2020,

Recalling also its invitation to development partners to consider the least developed country indicators, gross national income per capita, the human assets index and the economic vulnerability index as part of their criteria for allocating official development assistance,

Noting the conclusion of the Secretary-General's Climate Summit, and welcoming its contribution to the existing political momentum, with a view to galvanizing action to address climate change,

Taking note of the ministerial declaration adopted at the Ministerial Meeting of the Least Developed Countries, held in New York on 26 September 2014,

Taking note also of the report of the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, entitled "State of the Least Developed Countries, 2014", with the special theme "Extreme poverty eradication in the least developed countries and the post-2015 development agenda",

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020 and on strengthening investment promotion regimes for foreign direct investment in the least developed countries;

2. Welcomes the progress made by many of the least developed countries in implementing the Istanbul Programme of Action, including by mainstreaming it into relevant planning documents and development strategies, calls upon the least developed countries, with the support of their development partners, to fulfil their commitments and to promote the implementation of the Programme of Action, including by integrating its provisions into their national policies and development frameworks and conducting regular reviews with the full involvement of all key stakeholders, and in this regard invites the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council, including United Nations regional and functional commissions, the United Nations resident coordinator system and the United Nations country teams, to actively support the integration and implementation of the Programme of Action;

3. Also welcomes the progress in, and stresses the importance of, mainstreaming the Istanbul Programme of Action into the development cooperation frameworks of development partners, and calls upon the development partners to further integrate the Programme of Action into their respective national cooperation policy frameworks, programmes and activities, as appropriate, to ensure enhanced, predictable and targeted support to the least developed countries, as set out in the Programme of Action, and the delivery of their commitments, and to consider appropriate measures to overcome shortfalls or shortcomings, if any;

4. Calls upon the international community to act urgently and decisively to address the outbreak of Ebola in some West African least developed countries, which has highlighted the fundamental need to strengthen national health systems and increase resilience and coordinated responses to public health challenges and emergencies, particularly in the least developed countries, as laid out in priority areas (e) and (f) of the Istanbul Programme of Action, in order to prevent, detect and rapidly respond to infectious diseases and other health emergencies, and calls upon all development partners to continue to provide financial and technical support for the risk mitigation strategies of the least developed countries in order to strengthen their capacity to respond to public health challenges and emergencies;

5. Expresses its concern that all countries, particularly the least developed countries, are vulnerable to the adverse impacts of climate change and are already experiencing increased impacts, including persistent drought and extreme weather events, sea-level rise, coastal erosion, glacial lake outburst floods and ocean acidification, which further threaten food security and efforts to eradicate poverty and achieve sustainable development;

6. Welcomes the fact that bilateral net official development assistance to the least developed countries is estimated to have increased by 12.3 per cent in 2013, according to the preliminary estimate of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, while noting a decrease of 9.4 per cent in real terms in 2012, reiterates that official development assistance continues to be the largest source of external financing for the development of the least developed countries, that it plays an important role in their development and that progress has been made during the past decade in increasing the flow of official development assistance to the least developed countries, underlines that the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieving the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015, as well as the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to the least developed countries, and urges developed countries that have not yet done so to fulfil their commitments for official development assistance to the least developed countries;

7. Recalls the commitment, contained in the Istanbul Programme of Action, that donor countries should review their official development assistance commitments in 2015 and consider further enhancing the resources for the least developed countries, and in this regard urges donor countries to give high priority to the least developed countries in terms of their allocation of official development assistance, taking into account their needs, complex challenges and the resources gap;

8. Reaffirms the commitments made at the Fourth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization relating to the least developed countries, takes note of the decisions taken at the Ninth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization, held in Bali, Indonesia, from 3 to 7 December 2013, in particular the decision on duty-free and quota-free market access for the least developed countries, preferential rules of origin for the least developed countries and operationalization of the waiver concerning preferential treatment to services and service suppliers of the least developed countries, calls upon developed countries, and developing countries declaring themselves in a position to do so, to take steps towards the goal of realizing the timely implementation of duty-free and quota-free market access, on a lasting basis, for all least developed countries, consistent with the Hong Kong Ministerial Declaration, and in this regard notes with appreciation the realization by some developed and developing countries of duty-free and quota-free market access for all products from all least developed countries;

9. Underscores that the ownership, leadership and primary responsibility for development in the least developed countries rests with themselves, and also underscores that good governance, inclusiveness and transparency, as well as domestic resource mobilization, are central to the development process of the least developed countries and that these efforts need to be given concrete and substantial international support, in a spirit of shared responsibility and mutual accountability, through renewed and strengthened global partnership;

10. Calls upon the least developed countries, their development partners, the United Nations system and all other actors to fully and effectively implement, in a coordinated, coherent and expeditious manner, the commitments that have been made in the Istanbul Programme of Action in its eight priority areas, namely (a) productive capacity, (b) agriculture, food security and rural development, (c) trade, (d) commodities, (e) human and social development, (f) multiple crises and other emerging challenges, (g) mobilizing financial resources for development and capacity-building, and (h) good governance at all levels;

11. Calls upon the developing countries, guided by the spirit of solidarity and consistent with their capabilities, to provide support for the effective implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action in mutually agreed areas of cooperation, within the framework of South-South cooperation, which is a complement to, but not a substitute for, North-South cooperation;

12. Reiterates the importance of continuing to mainstream South-South cooperation, particularly for the benefit of the least developed countries, through the United Nations development system, including the United Nations Office for South-South Cooperation, in line with decision 18/1 of the High-level Committee on South-South Cooperation and relevant General Assembly resolutions, including resolutions 67/226 and 67/227 of 21 December 2012 and 68/230 of 20 December 2013, and the strategic plans of the United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, as appropriate;

13. Invites the private sector, civil society and foundations to contribute to the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action in their respective areas of competence, in line with the national priorities of the least developed countries;

14. Takes note with appreciation of the work undertaken thus far by the Secretary-General to constitute a high-level panel of experts to carry out a feasibility study for a technology bank and science, technology and innovation supporting mechanism dedicated to the least developed countries, welcomes the announcement by the Secretary-General regarding the composition of the panel, and looks forward to the conclusion of the panel's work in line with its resolution 68/224;

15. Reaffirms its decision that the special needs and development priorities of the least developed countries, including the eight priority areas of the Istanbul Programme of Action, such as productive capacity-building, including through rapid development of infrastructure and energy, should be given appropriate consideration in relation to the post-2015 development agenda, and in this regard invites the Office of the High Representative to continue to extend the necessary substantive support to the least developed countries in preparing their positions on these matters as part of its ongoing work;

16. Underlines the need to ensure the mutual accountability of the least developed countries and their development partners for delivering the commitments undertaken under the Istanbul Programme of Action, reiterates that the Development Cooperation Forum should continue to take into consideration the Istanbul Programme of Action when it reviews the trends in international development cooperation, as well as policy coherence for development, and stresses the need for providing appropriate space and platforms for structured dialogue between the least developed countries and their development partners;

17. Stresses that the least developed countries should receive a special focus throughout the United Nations Decade of Sustainable Energy for All (2014–2024), with a view to ensuring the realization of the objective of ensuring access to energy for all by 2030, as well as other energy goals and targets set out in the Istanbul Programme of Action, requests that, in the Secretary-General's coordination of the Decade, within existing resources, the least developed countries receive such special focus throughout, with a view to ensuring the successful realization of the Decade, and in this regard welcomes the renewed focus on least developed countries within the Sustainable Energy for All initiative;

18. Recalls paragraph 157 of the Istanbul Programme of Action, in which the General Assembly was invited to consider conducting a comprehensive high-level midterm review of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

19. Welcomes the generous offer of the Government of Turkey to host the comprehensive high-level midterm review;

20. Decides that the comprehensive high-level midterm review:

(a) Shall be held, on an exceptional basis, in Antalya, Turkey, for a period of three days in June 2016, consisting of opening and closing plenary meetings and four additional plenary meetings, as well as four parallel thematic round-table meetings;

(b) Shall be held at the highest possible political level;

(c) Shall result in an intergovernmentally negotiated and agreed outcome in the form of a political declaration;

(d) Shall ensure that the summaries of the plenary meetings and other deliberations of the review are included in the report of the review;

21. Requests the President of the General Assembly at its seventieth session to appoint two co-facilitators, one from a developed country and one from a developing country, to oversee and direct informal intergovernmental consultations on all issues relating to the review and its preparatory process;

22. Requests the co-facilitators to present a draft outcome document in the form of a political declaration, no later than March 2016 and in advance of the preparatory meeting of experts, prepared on the basis of inputs from the national and regional preparatory meetings, the report of the Secretary-General and other inputs, including those from Member States;

23. Requests the President of the General Assembly to organize a four-day preparatory meeting of experts, to be chaired by the co-facilitators, with interpretation services on an “as available” basis, in March 2016, with a view to considering the draft outcome document;

24. Decides that all negotiations on the outcome document shall be held at United Nations Headquarters in New York, and strongly encourages Member States to conclude negotiations on the draft outcome document in advance of the comprehensive high-level midterm review;

25. Also decides that the comprehensive high-level midterm review and its preparatory process shall be open to participation by all States Members of the United Nations or States members of the specialized agencies and observers in the General Assembly, and that the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, as well as the supplementary arrangements established for the Commission on Sustainable Development by the Council in its decisions 1993/215 of 12 February 1993 and 1995/201 of 8 February 1995, shall apply;

26. Invites the host country to consider hosting, with the assistance of the Office of the High Representative, within its existing mandate and resources, and with the support of extrabudgetary resources, as available and appropriate, a private sector forum on investment opportunities in least developed countries, and encourages relevant representatives of Member States and the private sector to support and participate in the forum;

27. Underlines that there will be two regional-level preparatory meetings, taking advantage of the biennial regional meetings already scheduled for 2015, one in collaboration with the Economic Commission for Africa, which will include Haiti, and the other in collaboration with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, which will include Yemen, with the regional-level meetings to be supported by broad-based and inclusive country-level preparations, and that the outcomes of the regional-level preparatory meetings should be considered in the comprehensive high-level midterm review;

28. Decides that the scope of the midterm comprehensive global review shall be as follows:

(a) To undertake a comprehensive review of the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action by the least developed countries and their development partners, share best practices and lessons learned and identify obstacles and constraints encountered and actions and initiatives needed to overcome them, as well as new challenges and emerging issues;

(b) To reaffirm the global commitment to address the special needs of the least developed countries made at the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and to further strengthen the global partnership for development for least developed countries in all priority areas of the Istanbul Programme of Action in order to ensure the timely, effective and full implementation of the Programme of Action during the remainder of the Decade, while taking into account the post-2015 development agenda as it relates to the least developed countries;

29. Underlines that the Office of the High Representative, as the focal point, in accordance with mandates given by the General Assembly in its resolution 56/227 of 24 December 2001, has the responsibility for ensuring that the preparations are carried out effectively and efficiently and for mobilizing and coordinating the active involvement of the organizations of the United Nations system;

30. Invites the Secretary-General to convene a United Nations system high-level event during the comprehensive high-level midterm review, with a view to ensuring the full mobilization of the United Nations system in support of the least developed countries and the coordinated and timely implementation by the United Nations system of the Istanbul Programme of Action and the outcome of the review;

31. Requests the President of the General Assembly to organize, early in 2016, a one-day special thematic event, with the participation of Member States, non-governmental organizations, civil society, the private sector and academic institutions, in order to provide input to the comprehensive high-level midterm review;

32. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider the issue of the comprehensive high-level midterm review as part of its coordination and management meetings in 2016;

33. Requests the organs, organizations, funds and programmes of the United Nations system to undertake sectoral appraisals in their respective fields of competence on the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action, with special emphasis on areas where implementation has remained insufficient, and to make proposals for new measures, as necessary, as further inputs to the preparation for the comprehensive high-level midterm review, and in this regard affirms that appropriate inter-agency meetings should be convened in order to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of the entire United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions;

34. Emphasizes the importance of country-level preparations as a critical input to the preparatory process for the comprehensive high-level midterm review and to the implementation of and follow-up to its outcome, in this context calls upon the least developed countries to undertake their national reviews on the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action, with a particular focus on progress, obstacles, constraints, actions and measures necessary to further its implementation, in close collaboration with the Office of the High Representative and the United Nations country teams, as part of their existing workplans, and in this regard invites the United Nations country teams to support the least developed countries in the preparation of their national reports, in close collaboration with the Office of the High Representative;

35. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in her capacity as Chair of the United Nations Development Group, to ensure the full involvement of the United Nations resident coordinators and country teams in the least developed countries in the preparations for the comprehensive high-level midterm review, in particular at the country level, including in the preparation of national reports;

36. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report, by the first quarter of 2016, on the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action, in lieu of his report to the General Assembly at its seventy-first session and to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2016;

37. Reiterates the critical importance of the full and effective participation of the least developed countries in the comprehensive high-level midterm review at the national, regional and global levels, stresses that adequate resources should be provided, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to mobilize extrabudgetary resources in order to cover the cost of the participation of two government representatives from each least developed country in the review and the preparatory meeting of experts;

38. Urges Member States, and invites other multilateral development partners, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund established by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 59/244 of 22 December 2004;

39. Calls upon all Member States to take a positive interest in the preparation of the comprehensive high-level midterm review and to be represented at a high level in the plenary meeting of the review, with a view to reaching a successful outcome;

40. Stresses the importance of the effective participation of all relevant stakeholders, including parliamentarians, civil society and the private sector, in the comprehensive high-level midterm review and its preparatory process, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996;

41. Notes with appreciation that several least developed countries have expressed their intention to reach the status of graduation by 2020, invites them to start the preparations for their graduation and transition strategy, and reiterates its request to all relevant organizations of the United Nations system, led by the Office of the High Representative, to extend the necessary support in this regard in a coordinated and coherent manner;

42. Invites the Committee for Development Policy to continue to give due consideration to the specific constraints and vulnerabilities faced by each least developed country, including small island and landlocked least developed countries, the least developed countries with mountains and fragile ecology, low-lying coastal least developed countries and the least developed countries with large segments of the population living in extreme poverty, high dependency on primary commodity exports, low agricultural productivity and food insecurity, climate, environmental and natural disaster vulnerability, public health insecurity and energy insecurity, as well as those least developed countries caught in and emerging from conflict;

43. Notes the offer of the Government of Nepal to host a ministerial meeting of the Asia-Pacific least developed countries on graduation and the post-2015 development agenda, which was held in Kathmandu from 16 to 18 December 2014, and looks forward to a successful outcome, agreed upon by the ministers of those countries, which reflects their various issues and concerns;

44. Recognizes that private capital flows, particularly foreign direct investment, play a complementary and catalytic role in building and strengthening productive capacity in the least developed countries, also recognizes that many

least developed countries have made strong efforts to improve investment climates to attract increased foreign direct investment flows and enhance the benefits of these flows for their economies, which have been complemented by actions by their development partners, which appear to have had a positive impact, as indicated by a significant rise in foreign direct investment flows to the least developed countries in recent years, and expresses its concern that levels of investment, both foreign and domestic, in the least developed countries have yet to reach their potential, underscoring that much more needs to be done;

45. Underlines the need for stronger and more focused policies and strategies by the least developed countries, the home countries of foreign direct investment, international organizations and other stakeholders, as appropriate, to substantially increase foreign direct investment flows to the least developed countries in the coming years, and in this regard decides to consider those needs in the context of the comprehensive high-level midterm review of the Istanbul Programme of Action, focusing on, inter alia, the potential importance to the least developed countries of:

(a) Access to information on existing investment facilities and foreign direct investment support programmes;

(b) Technical support to assist the least developed countries in negotiating complex large-scale contracts;

(c) Access to and further strengthening of advisory support in investment-related dispute resolution;

(d) Risk insurance and guarantees, in close collaboration with the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development;

(e) Regulatory and legal frameworks that can attract foreign direct investment by improving investment climates and promoting enabling environments at all levels;

46. Recognizes the importance of building productive capacity as a critical enabler for the development and graduation of the least developed countries, as defined in priority area (a) of the Istanbul Programme of Action, and calls upon the least developed countries and their development partners to ensure enhanced focus on policies and means to address productive capacity-building, takes note in this regard of the Cotonou Agenda for productive capacity-building in the least developed countries, adopted by the ministers of the least developed countries at the ministerial meeting held in Cotonou, Benin, from 28 to 31 July 2014, and invites all stakeholders to give due consideration to productive capacity-building in the annual review of the Programme of Action by the Economic and Social Council;

47. Also recognizes that the activities relating to the least developed countries carried out within the Secretariat need to be further coordinated and consolidated in order to ensure effective monitoring and follow-up of the Istanbul Programme of Action, led by the Office of the High Representative, and to provide well-coordinated support for the realization of the goal of enabling half of the least developed countries to meet the criteria for graduation by 2020;

48. Takes note of the work of the Inter-Agency Consultative Group for least developed countries, led by the Office of the High Representative, reiterates its invitation to the Secretary-General to appropriately integrate it within the framework of the High-level Committee on Programmes of the United Nations System Chief Executives Board for

Coordination, notes the steps taken by the Chief Executives Board and the High-level Committee in supporting the coordination and follow-up of the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action on a system-wide basis, reiterates its invitation to the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chair of the Chief Executives Board, to include the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action in the agenda of the Board, encourages the Office of the High Representative, in close cooperation with the secretariat of the Board, to finalize a toolkit for mainstreaming the Programme of Action into the work programmes of the organizations of the United Nations system, and requests the Secretary-General to report on further progress made in this regard;

49. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a progress report on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020 and on the implementation of the present resolution.

Programme of Action (2011–2020)

As requested in General Assembly resolution 68/224 [YUN 2013, p. 822] and Economic and Social Council resolution 2013/46 [ibid., p. 825], the Secretary-General, in May, submitted a progress report [A/69/95-E/2014/81] on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020 [YUN 2011, p. 828]. The report assessed the performance and prospects of LDCs; and provided an analysis of progress made with respect to the goals and targets of the Istanbul Programme of Action, and an overview of measures deployed by LDCs, development partners and other stakeholders, including the UN system, in advancing implementation of the Programme of Action. It also included measures related to graduation and smooth transition, as well as South-South cooperation.

The report concluded that LDCs continued to make progress towards achieving the goals and targets agreed upon in Istanbul; however, many of them were unlikely to reach the MDGs and the targets of the Programme of Action. It was important that the Istanbul Programme of Action be firmly integrated into the post-2015 development agenda and the SDGs. The focus on building robust and sustainable productive capacity in agriculture, manufacturing and services in LDCs had to continue and development partners needed to strengthen their support for LDCs in that area. The trends of increasing government revenues in LDCs, as well as the actions of those countries to combat corruption and increase transparency, had to be strengthened. More priority needed to be given to LDCs in the allocation of ODA and other resources at a level commensurate with their needs and complex challenges. With respect to mutual accountability, more structured dialogue between LDCs and their development partners on the roles and responsibilities of each stakeholder in the aid relationship was vitally important, and providing appropriate space and platforms for such dialogue was essential. Given the deepening relationships between LDCs and emerging economies and the significant potential for further expansion, South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation should be strengthened in all areas of the Istanbul Programme of Action. Continued coordinated support for LDCs, led by OHRLLS, remained critical in order for those countries to effectively articulate their needs and concerns in the process of formulating the post-2015 development agenda and the SDGs. The midterm review of the Istanbul Programme of Action, scheduled for 2016, was expected to be a central element of mutual accountability with respect to the Programme of Action and would help guide the UN system towards its effective implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 2014/29 [draft: E/2014/L.28] without vote [agenda item 9 (b)].

Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Istanbul Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020, adopted by the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Istanbul, Turkey, from 9 to 13 May 2011, and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 65/280 of 17 June 2011, in which the Assembly called upon all the relevant stakeholders to commit to implementing the Programme of Action,

Reaffirming the overarching goal of the Istanbul Programme of Action of overcoming the structural challenges faced by the least developed countries in order to eradicate poverty, achieve the internationally agreed development goals and enable graduation from the least developed country category,

Recalling its resolution 2013/46 of 26 July 2013 on the Istanbul Programme of Action,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 68/18 of 4 December 2013 and 68/224 of 20 December 2013,

Emphasizing the need for coordinated implementation and coherent follow-up and monitoring of the Istanbul Programme of Action, and noting the key role of the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States in this regard, as set out in paragraph 155 of the Programme of Action,

Recognizing that, over the years, the responsibilities of the Office of the High Representative have increased considerably in their scope and complexity,

Noting the theme of the 2014 annual ministerial review, “Addressing ongoing and emerging challenges for meeting the Millennium Development Goals in 2015 and for sustaining development gains in the future”, and the theme of the high-level political forum on sustainable development convened under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council, “Achieving the Millennium Development Goals and charting the way for an ambitious post-2015 development agenda, including the sustainable development goals”;

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020;

2. Reaffirms the commitment, made by the international community in the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, to assist the least developed countries in their efforts to achieve sustainable development, and also reaffirms the agreement to effectively implement the Istanbul Programme of Action and to fully integrate its priority areas into the framework for action contained in the outcome document, the broader implementation of which will contribute to the overarching goal of the Programme of Action of enabling half the least developed countries to meet the criteria for graduation by 2020;

3. Reaffirms that building a critical mass of viable and competitive productive capacity in agriculture, manufacturing and services is essential if the least developed countries are to benefit from greater integration into the global economy, increase their resilience to shocks, sustain inclusive and equitable growth and eradicate poverty, achieve structural transformation and generate full and productive employment and decent work for all;

4. Recognizes that the least developed countries have made some progress on many of the goals and targets in the Istanbul Programme of Action, leading to structural change in a few of them, expresses its concern that most least developed countries continue to face pervasive poverty, serious structural impediments to growth, low levels of human development, inequality and high exposure to shocks and disasters, and also expresses its concern that the challenges presented by the global economic environment are putting at risk the hard-won gains achieved so far and the ability to expand those gains to all least developed countries;

5. Welcomes the progress made by many least developed countries in implementing the Istanbul Programme of Action, including by mainstreaming it into relevant planning documents and development strategies, calls upon the least developed countries, with the support of their development partners, to fulfil their commitments and to promote implementation of the Programme of Action, including by integrating its provisions into their national policies and development frameworks and conducting regular reviews with the full involvement of all key stakeholders, and in this regard invites the Office of the High Representative for the Least Developed Countries, Landlocked Developing Countries and Small Island Developing States, the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council, including United Nations regional and functional commissions, the United Nations resident coordinator system and the United Nations country teams to actively support the integration and implementation of the Programme of Action;

6. Also welcomes the progress in, and stresses the importance of, mainstreaming the Istanbul Programme of Action into the development cooperation frameworks of development partners, and calls upon the development partners to further integrate the Programme of Action into their respective national cooperation policy frameworks, programmes and activities, as appropriate, to ensure enhanced, predictable and targeted support to the least developed countries, as set out in the Programme of Action, and the delivery of their commitments, and to consider appropriate measures to overcome shortfalls or shortcomings, if any;

7. Invites all organizations of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations, including the Bretton Woods institutions and international and regional financial institutions, to contribute to the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action, including by implementing enhanced substantive and technical assistance to the least developed countries in a timely manner, and to integrate the Programme of Action into their programmes of work, as appropriate and in accordance with their respective mandates, and to participate fully in its review at the national, subregional, regional and global levels, and in this regard invites them to report on their contribution to the implementation of the Programme of Action as part of their annual reporting to their respective governing bodies;

8. Welcomes the fact that the bilateral net official development assistance to the least developed countries is estimated to have increased by 12.3 per cent in 2013, according to the preliminary estimate of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, while noting a 9.4 per cent decrease in real terms in 2012, reiterates that official development assistance continues to be the largest source of external financing for the development of the least developed countries and plays an important role in their development and that progress has been made during the past decade in increasing the flow of official development assistance to the least developed countries, underlines that the fulfilment of all official development assistance commitments is crucial, including the commitments by many developed countries to achieving the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to developing countries by 2015, as well as the target of 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national income for official development assistance to the least developed countries, and urges developed countries that have not yet done so to fulfil their commitments for official development assistance to the least developed countries;

9. Also welcomes steps to improve the effectiveness and quality of aid in the least developed countries, and underlines the need for enhancing the quality of aid to the least developed countries by strengthening national ownership, alignment, harmonization, predictability, mutual accountability and transparency, and results orientation;

10. Recalls the commitment, contained in the Istanbul Programme of Action, that donor countries should review their official development assistance commitments in 2015 and consider further enhancing the resources for the least developed countries, and in this regard urges donor countries to give high priority to the least developed countries in terms of their allocation of official development assistance, taking into account their needs, complex challenges and resources gap;

11. Calls upon the least developed countries, their development partners, the United Nations system and all other actors to further intensify their efforts to fully and effectively implement, in a coordinated, coherent and expeditious manner, the commitments that have been made in the Istanbul Programme of Action in its eight priority areas, namely, (a) productive capacity, (b) agriculture, food security and rural development, (c) trade, (d) commodities, (e) human and social development, (f) multiple crises and other emerging challenges, (g) mobilizing financial resources for development and capacity-building, and (b) good governance at all levels;

12. Calls upon the least developed countries, in cooperation with their development partners, to broaden their existing country review mechanisms, including those for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, the implementation of poverty reduction strategy papers, common country assessments and United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks, and the existing consultative mechanisms to cover the review of the Istanbul Programme of Action;

13. Calls upon the developing countries, guided by the spirit of solidarity and consistent with their capabilities, to provide support for the effective implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action in mutually agreed areas of cooperation within the framework of South-South cooperation, which is a complement to, but not a substitute for, North-South cooperation;

14. Invites the private sector, civil society and foundations to contribute to the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action in their respective areas of competence in line with the national priorities of the least developed countries;

15. Welcomes with appreciation the decisions taken by various entities of the United Nations system to mainstream the Istanbul Programme of Action and integrate its relevant provisions into their programmes of work, and in this regard reiterates its invitation to the governing bodies of all other United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies to do the same in an expeditious manner, as appropriate and in accordance with their respective mandates;

16. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to include the issues of concern to the least developed countries in all relevant reports in the economic, social, environmental and related fields, in order to support the implementation of the goals set out in the Istanbul Programme of Action;

17. Underlines the need to give particular attention to the issues and concerns of the least developed countries in all major United Nations conferences and processes;

18. Recalls the request made by the General Assembly in its resolution 68/224 to the Secretary-General to constitute a high-level panel of experts to carry out a feasibility study on a technology bank and science, technology and innovation supporting mechanism dedicated to the least developed countries, with secretariat support provided by the Office of the High Representative, in order to examine its scope, functions, institutional linkage with the United Nations and organizational aspects, and requests the Secretary-General to constitute the panel at the earliest possible date, to facilitate the conclusion of its work within the time frame and to transmit its report and recommendations to the Assembly for its consideration, with a view to operationalizing the technology bank during the seventieth session of the Assembly, if so recommended by the panel;

19. Underlines the need to ensure the mutual accountability of the least developed countries and their development partners for delivering the commitments undertaken under the Istanbul Programme of Action, reiterates that the Development Cooperation Forum should continue to take into consideration the Programme of Action when it reviews the trends in international development cooperation, as well as policy coherence for development, and stresses the need for providing appropriate space and platforms for structured dialogue between the least developed countries and their development partners;

20. Reaffirms its decision to include in its annual ministerial review, in 2015, a review of the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action, invites the organizations of the United Nations system, including the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization, the regional commissions, the functional commissions and other relevant subsidiary bodies and follow-up mechanisms, as well as regional development banks, to contribute to the review of progress made in the implementation of and follow-up to the Programme of Action and to contribute substantively to the discussions and decisions of the Council on the specific priorities of the least developed countries in the context of the post-2015 development agenda, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to submit a programme to the Council for its consideration at its 2015 session;

21. Expresses its concern that, although the least developed countries have made some progress in social and human development, including in primary school enrolment and gender parity in primary education, many of the goals and targets of the Millennium Development Goals have yet to be achieved, and calls upon the international community to give special priority to the least developed countries in order to accelerate the progress in attaining the Goals in the least developed countries by 2015;

22. Recalls the decision of the General Assembly in paragraph 24 of its resolution 68/224 that the special needs and development priorities of the least developed countries, including the eight priority areas of the Istanbul Programme of Action, such as productive-capacity-building, including through rapid development of infrastructure and energy, should be given appropriate consideration in the processes devoted to the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

23. Notes the biennial reviews of the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action undertaken by the relevant United Nations regional commissions in 2013, and invites them to continue to carry out such reviews in close coordination with the global-level and country-level follow-up processes and in cooperation with subregional and regional development banks and intergovernmental organizations;

24. Notes with appreciation that several least developed countries have expressed their intention to reach the status of graduation by 2020, invites them to start the preparations for their graduation and transition strategy, and requests all relevant entities of the United Nations system, in particular the Office of the High Representative, to extend the necessary support in this regard;

25. Recognizes that the activities relating to the least developed countries carried out within the Secretariat need to be further coordinated and consolidated in order to ensure effective monitoring of and follow-up to the Istanbul Programme of Action led by the Office of the High Representative and to provide well-coordinated support for realizing the goal of enabling half of the least developed countries to meet the criteria for graduation by 2020;

26. Strongly encourages Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, major groups and other donors to contribute in a timely manner to the Trust Fund in support of the activities undertaken by the Office of the High Representative to support the implementation, follow-up and monitoring of the Istanbul Programme of Action and the participation of representatives of the least developed countries in the annual review meeting on the implementation of the Programme of Action, held by the Council, as well as in other relevant forums, and in this regard expresses its appreciation to those countries that have made voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund;

27. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Benin to host a ministerial conference on new partnerships for productive-capacity-building in the least developed countries, which will be held in Cotonou from 28 to 31 July 2014, and looks forward to its successful outcome;

28. Invites the General Assembly to consider conducting a comprehensive high-level midterm review of the implementation of the Istanbul Programme of Action, in accordance with the Programme of Action, encourages the Assembly to take a decision at its sixty-ninth session, and in this regard notes with appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Turkey to host a midterm review meeting;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council at its substantive session of 2015, under the sub-item entitled “Review and coordination of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020” of the item entitled “Implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits”, a progress report on the implementation of the Programme of Action.

Small island developing states

During 2014, UN bodies continued to review progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Barbados Programme of Action), adopted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 783]. Member States also reviewed the Mauritius Strategy for Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted by the 2005 International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action [YUN 2005, p. 946].

Third International Conference on Small Island Developing States

The third International Conference on Small Island Developing States was held (Apia, Samoa, 1–4 September) [A/CONF.223/10], in accordance with General Assembly decision 67/558 [YUN 2013, p. 828] and resolutions 67/207 [YUN 2012, p. 849] and 68/238 [YUN 2013, p. 828]. The Conference was attended by representatives of Member States and the European Union, intergovernmental organizations and other entities, associate members of the regional commissions, specialized agencies and related organizations, and a number of UN organs. On 4 September, on the recommendation of its Credentials Committee [A/CONF.223/6], the Conference adopted a resolution on the credentials of representatives to the Conference. The Conference elected its President and Vice-Presidents and Rapporteur-General, and adopted its rules of procedure, agenda [A/CONF.223/1] and organization of work [A/CONF.223/4].

The Conference had before it the summaries of the Chairs of the multi-stakeholder partnership dialogues [A/CONF.223/11], and the draft outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States [A/CONF.223/3].

It also received communication from Argentina [A/CONF.223/7], rejecting the identification of representatives of the Malvinas Islands in the official list of participants of the delegation of the United Kingdom; communication from Nauru [A/CONF.223/8], forwarding the Alliance of Small Island States Leaders’ Declaration 2014, endorsed by the leaders of the Alliance on 1 September; and communication from the United States [A/CONF.223/9], transmitting to the Conference a statement for the record on the outcome document of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States.

The Conference held eight plenary meetings and six multi-stakeholder partnership dialogues on sustainable economic development; climate change and disaster risk management; social development in small island developing States, health and non-communicable diseases, youth and women; sustainable energy; oceans, seas and biodiversity; and water and sanitation, food security and waste management.

On 4 September, the Conference adopted its outcome document, “The Small Island Developing States Accelerated Modalities of Action (Samoa Pathway)”, and recommended it to the Assembly for endorsement. It also adopted a resolution on expression of thanks to the people and Government of Samoa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 69/15 [draft: A/69/L.6] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 66/288 of 27 July 2012, in which it decided to organize, in 2014, the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States at the highest possible level, as well as its resolutions 67/207 of 21 December 2012 and 68/238 of 27 December 2013 and its decision 67/558 of 17 May 2013,

1. Expresses its profound gratitude to the Government and the people of Samoa for hosting the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States in Apia from 1 to 4 September 2014 and for providing all the necessary support;

2. Endorses the outcome document of the Conference, entitled “SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway”, which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) PathwayPreamble

1. We, the Heads of State and Government and high-level representatives, having met in Apia from 1 to 4 September 2014 at the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States, with the full participation of civil society and relevant stakeholders, reaffirm our commitment to the sustainable development of small island developing States. This can be achieved only with a broad alliance of people, governments, civil society and the private sector all working together to achieve the future we want for present and future generations.

2. We reaffirm the commitments we made at United Nations conferences and summits on sustainable development: the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, the Plan of Implementation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development (Johannesburg Plan of Implementation), including chapter VII, on the sustainable development of small island developing States, and the Johannesburg Declaration on Sustainable Development, the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Barbados Programme of Action) and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (Mauritius Strategy), and the outcome document of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, entitled "The future we want". We further underscore that these processes are still being implemented and that there is a need for a more integrated approach to the sustainable development of small island developing States, with the support of the international community and all stakeholders.

3. We recall as well our commitments in the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and environmental fields, including the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the 2005 World Summit Outcome, the Monterrey Consensus of the International Conference on Financing for Development, the Doha Declaration on Financing for Development: outcome document of the Follow-up International Conference on Financing for Development to Review the Implementation of the Monterrey Consensus, the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the key actions for the further implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action.

4. We reaffirm that we continue to be guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, with full respect for international law and its principles.

5. We reaffirm that small island developing States remain a special case for sustainable development in view of their unique and particular vulnerabilities and that they remain constrained in meeting their goals in all three dimensions of sustainable development. We recognize the ownership and leadership of small island developing States in overcoming some of these challenges, but stress that, in the absence of international cooperation, success will remain difficult.

6. We recognize that poverty eradication, changing unsustainable and promoting sustainable patterns of consumption and production and protecting and managing the natural resource base of economic and social development are the overarching objectives of and essential requirements for sustainable development. We also reaffirm the need to achieve sustainable development by promoting sustained, inclusive and equitable economic growth, creating greater opportunities for all, reducing inequalities, raising basic standards of living, fostering equitable social development and inclusion and promoting the integrated and sustainable management of natural resources and ecosystems that supports, inter alia, economic, social and human development while facilitating ecosystem conservation, regeneration, restoration and resilience in the face of new and emerging challenges.

7. We reaffirm the importance of freedom, peace and security, respect for all human rights, including the right to development and the right to an adequate standard of living, including the right to food, the rule of law, gender equality, women's empowerment, reducing inequalities and the overall commitment to just and democratic societies for development.

8. We reaffirm the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as other international instruments relating to human rights and international law. We emphasize the responsibilities of all States, in conformity with the Charter, to respect, protect and promote human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth, disability or other status.

9. We reaffirm our commitment to move the sustainable development agenda forward, and in this regard we urge all parties to take concrete measures to expeditiously advance the sustainable development of small island developing States, including through the internationally agreed development goals, in order for them to eradicate poverty, build resilience and improve the quality of life. We recognize the need to implement expeditiously, through genuine and durable partnerships, the global effort in support of the sustainable development of small island developing States through concrete, focused, forward-looking and action-oriented programmes.

10. We reaffirm all the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, including the principle of common but differentiated responsibilities, as set out in principle 7 thereof.

11. We recognize that sea-level rise and other adverse impacts of climate change continue to pose a significant risk to small island developing States and their efforts to achieve sustainable development and, for many, represent the gravest of threats to their survival and viability, including, for some, through the loss of territory.

12. With the theme of the third International Conference on Small Island Developing States being "The sustainable development of small island developing States through genuine and durable partnerships", we recognize that international cooperation and partnerships of various kinds and across a wide variety of stakeholders are critical for the implementation of the sustainable development of small island developing States. Such partnerships should be based on the principles of national ownership, mutual trust, transparency and accountability.

13. We acknowledge that the further implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy and the implementation of the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway (Samoa Pathway) in support of the sustainable development of small island developing States would require appropriate consideration in the post-2015 development agenda.

14. We recognize that, in spite of the considerable efforts of small island developing States and the mobilization of their limited resources, their progress in the attainment of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in implementing the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy has been uneven, and some have regressed economically. A number of significant challenges remain.

15. We recognize that the adverse impacts of climate change compound existing challenges in small island developing States and have placed additional burdens on their national budgets and their efforts to achieve the sustainable development goals. We note the views expressed by small island developing States that the financial resources available to date have not been adequate to facilitate the implementation of climate change adaptation and mitigation projects, and we also recognize that, at times, complex application procedures have prevented some small island developing States from gaining access to funds that are available internationally. In this regard, we welcome the recent Green Climate Fund Board decision to aim for a floor of 50 per cent of the adaptation allocation for particularly vulnerable countries, including small island developing States, and we note the importance of continued support to address gaps in the capacity to gain access to and manage climate finance.

16. We note that small island developing States consider that the level of resources has been insufficient to ensure their capacity to respond effectively to multiple crises and that, without the necessary resources, they have not fully succeeded in building capacity, strengthening national institutions according to national priorities, gaining access to and developing renewable energy and other environmentally sound technologies, creating an enabling environment for sustainable development or fully integrating the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy into national plans and strategies.

17. We underscore the need for adequate and coordinated support from the United Nations system and the importance of accessible and transparent support from the international financial institutions that take fully into account the specific needs and vulnerabilities of small island developing States for the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action, the Mauritius Strategy and the Samoa Pathway, and we call for a renewed dedication of United Nations system support for cooperation among small island developing States and national, regional and interregional coordination.

18. We recognize that small island developing States have made significant efforts at the national and regional levels to implement the Barbados Programme of Action and the Mauritius Strategy. They have mainstreamed sustainable development principles into national and in some cases regional development plans, policies and strategies, and undertaken political commitments to promote and raise awareness of the importance of sustainable development issues. They have also mobilized resources at the national and regional levels despite their limited resource base. Small island developing States have demonstrated strong leadership by calling for ambitious and urgent action on climate change, by protecting biodiversity, by calling for the conservation and sustainable use of oceans and seas and their resources and by adopting strategies for the promotion of renewable energy.

19. We recognize and call for the strengthening of the long-standing cooperation and support provided by the international community in assisting small island developing States to make progress in addressing their vulnerabilities and supporting their sustainable development efforts.

20. Mindful of the importance of ensuring that the graduation of a country from least developed country status does not disrupt the development progress which that country has achieved, we reaffirm the need for the smooth transition of small island developing States that have recently graduated, and emphasize that a successful transition needs to be based on the national smooth transition strategy elaborated as a priority by each graduating country, which can, inter alia, mitigate the possible loss of concessionary financing and reduce the risks of falling heavily into debt.

21. While the well-being of small island developing States and their peoples depends first and foremost on national actions, we recognize that there is an urgent need to strengthen cooperation and enable strong, genuine and durable partnerships at the subnational, national, subregional, regional and international levels to enhance international cooperation and action to address the unique and particular vulnerabilities of small island developing States so as to ensure their sustainable development.
