State obligations to protect the rights of LGBTI defenders*

The International Service for Human Rights makes this submission in collaboration with organisations working to promote and protect human rights on the basis of sexual orientation, gender identity and expression, and sex characteristics (SOGIESC), including ARC International, FORUM-ASIA, COC Netherland, GATE International, ILGA, Intersex Human Rights Australia, Outright International, Stonewall UK and RFSL.

This submission outlines the legal framework underpinning the rights of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender and Intersex (LGBTI) rights defenders (LGBTI defenders), and the State obligations that if implemented, would ensure the protection of the rights of LGBTI defenders.

Risks faced by LGBTI defenders

As set out in the joint submission to the 35th session of the Human Rights Council¹, LGBTI defenders have been identified as a group of defenders most at risk.² In addition to risks defenders are commonly subject to; LGBTI defenders face greater and more specific challenges than others; because of their identity and work that challenges social, religious and cultural norms, they are targeted by States, non-State actors, and members of their own community, even other defenders. LGBTI defenders suffer stigmatization, lack of recognition and support from civil society, criminalization, legal barriers to freedom of association, smear campaigns, arbitrary arrest, detention and killings.³

International legal framework for the protection of LGBTI defenders

Everyone is born free and equal in dignity and in rights.⁴ Sexual orientation and gender identity are impermissible bases for discrimination regarding the application of these rights.⁵

Everyone has the right to defend human rights and fundamental freedoms.⁶ Further, States must respect, protect and give effect to the right of every one, ‘individually and in association with others, to promote the protection and realisation of human rights [...], without discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity’.⁷

Everyone has the right, individually and in association with others, to develop and discuss new human rights ideas and principles and to advocate their acceptance.⁸ This takes into account the evolving nature of the development and strengthening of human rights norms, and allows for LGBTI defenders to advocate on areas such as legal gender recognition, non-consensual surgeries & procedures, and gender inclusive laws and policies.

7 Principle 27, Yogyakarta Principles on the Application of International Human Rights Law in relation to Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity (Yogyakarta Principles).

8 Article 7, Declaration on human rights defenders. This right can be considered an elaboration of the right to freedom of expression, the right to freedom of assembly and the right to freedom of association which are contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) and other international legal instruments, see: <http://www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Defenders/CommentarytoDeclarationondefendersJuly2011.pdf> (p. 83f.)

State obligations required for the protection of LGBTI rights defenders

The State obligations detailed below are set out in the Yogyakarta Principles (YPs) and the YPs plus 10.

The Right to Information

States must take legislative, administrative and other measures to ensure all persons have access to information about civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, including how these rights apply in relation to SOGIESC.⁹ States must make available international and regional instruments, national laws and regulations and all other information necessary to enable the exercise of any human rights or fundamental freedoms.¹⁰

The right to participate in public life

States should develop and implement affirmative action programmes to promote public and political participation for persons marginalised on the basis of SOGIESC.¹¹

The right to promote human rights

States should enact a law including to establish, designate or maintain an adequately resourced mechanism, for the protection of LGBTI rights defenders.¹² States should ensure the participation of individuals and organisations working on human rights issues related to SOGIESC in public and political decision-making processes that affect them.¹³

The Right to State Protection from violence, discrimination and other harm by government officials or any individual/group

States must:

- Exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate, prosecute, punish and provide remedies for discrimination, violence and other harm on the basis of SOGIESC, whether committed by State or non-State actors.¹⁴
- Take appropriate measures to eradicate all forms of violence, discrimination and other harm, including advocacy of hatred that constitutes incitement to violations on grounds of SOGIESC.¹⁵
- Compile statistics and research on the extent, causes and effects of violence, discrimination and other harm and on the effectiveness of measures to prevent, prosecute and provide reparation for such harm on the basis of SOGIESC.¹⁶
- Develop, implement and support education programmes to promote human rights and to eliminate prejudices on grounds of SOGIESC.¹⁷
- Ensure sensitivity training of judicial and law enforcement officers and other officials on issues relating to SOGIESC.¹⁸

- Ensure that restriction of right to access and the use of information and to the right to privacy are reasonable, necessary and proportionate as required by law.³¹

Calls on the Independent Expert

The actions above are essential requirements for full State compliance with international human rights law obligations. Therefore, we call on the Independent Expert on violence and discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity to:

1. Use the authoritative interpretations contained in the YPs and YPs plus 10 in engagement with States on issues relating to LGBTI defenders.
2. Engage with other relevant Special Procedures mandate holders and LGBTI defenders to identify specific protection needs of these individuals and organisations.

*GATE International, Intersex Human Rights Australia, Stonewall UK, NGOs without consultative status, also share the views expressed in this statement.
