The situation in Myanmar

International Educational Development, Inc. and the Association of Humanitarian Lawyers have worked closely with the successive special rapporteurs on the situation in Myanmar since the term of the first one, Yozo Yokota. We note, however, that the current special rapporteur is less welcoming of the work of non-governmental organizations.

In our work on Myanmar we have submitted numerous written statements and oral interventions and have twice been invited to submit testimony to the US Congress on human rights there.

Our attention to Myanmar has mainly focused on the situation of the ethnic nationalities. In the documents ending the rule of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the ethnic nationalities were given the option to opt out of what was to become the Union of Burma. However, the first Burman government unilaterally cancelled that option, and the ethnic nationalities have, for the most part, been seeking their autonomy or independence ever since. Most of them have their own military forces, and the government authorities are unable to enter into some of their territories. We have defended the right of the ethnic nationalities to pursue what they were promised in the decolonization documents. While there have been cease-fires called over the years, including one at the present time, most of these have ultimately failed.

We have called attention to the violence against Rohingya Muslims in Myanmar in several written statements and raised it in the interactive dialogue with Special Rapporteur Lee at earlier sessions. We continue to follow the Council's specific actions on this situation.

We note that the Special Rapporteur Lee provides limited discussion about other ethnic nationalities in her work, and in her report at the 40th session indicated that she was not allowed into Myanmar to investigate herself. We indicated in our oral statements at the 40th and 41st sessions that we were able to enter Shan State and visit several other areas of the ethnic nationalities. We again have been able to enter these areas and with photographic evidence to prove it.

At present time, there continue to be considerable problems with the situation in Shan State. Shan State has a population of about 5 million, has had its own military forces for many years, and functions in relative autonomy. While the government forces periodically seek to overtake the Shan forces, they have been unable to do so. However in the process, they have engaged in serious violations of human rights, including torture, rape and disappearances of Shan people at the border and attempted confiscation of their lands. In our recent photographs taken at the border of Shan State we show government forces amassed but not entering the territory. We also note the problems in Shan State indicated by the Fact Finding Mission's statement of 5 August 2019 relating to private company's jade and ruby mining operations with a recommendation for Security Council and Member State targeted sanctions against the companies involved.

The officials of Shan State are currently forming a more complete government and are contemplating other acts to consolidate their traditional territory. They seek international recognition of their rights, including the right of self-determination. They are also engaged in talks with other ethnic nationalities, especially the Kachin.

The ethnic Burman government has always disregarded the rights of the ethnic nationalities, and continues this under the leadership of Aung San Suu Kyi's party. Although she has indicated she wants to undertake peace processes with the ethnic nationalities, these have been feeble and have not forwarded sustainable peace. We urge the international community follow the recommendations of the Fact Finding Mission to ensure that States do not engage prematurely with the new authorities to the detriment of human rights and humanitarian law, especially relating to the ethnic nationalities.

Recommendations

- The Council should encourage the Special Rapporteur for Truth, Justice, Reparation, and Guarantee of Non-Recurrence to visit Myanmar to forward its national reconciliation.
- The Council should continue its actions regarding the Rohingya and other ethnic nationalities and should perhaps remove review of them from the mandate of the Special Rapporteur.
- All governments should recommit themselves to pressure the government of Myanmar to resolve its conflicts with ethnic nationalities peaceably and with deference to each group's sovereignty and limit any economic or military cooperation with the authorities of Burma/Myannar until the overall human rights condition has improved.
