Foreword

THE YEAR 1990 MARKED A WATERSHED in United Nations history, with the end of the cold war signalling a significant opportunity for the Organization to tackle new tasks and fresh challenges, some unprecedented.

Among the year's historic achievements was the attainment of Namibia's independence, which had a positive impact on the situation in South Africa, where some progress was made towards dismantling the apartheid system. In Central America, United Nations involvement was instrumental in leading the countries of the region towards peace. After years of upheaval, the parties in Cambodia accepted a framework for a settlement drawn up by the five permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly devoted a special session to international co-operation on issues related to narcotic drugs, and another to the discussion of global economic issues. Among other highlights on the United Nations agenda during the year were the World Summit for Children, attended by leaders from 159 countries, the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, and the Second World Climate Conference.

At the same time, new problems arose, as the Security Council was called upon to deal with the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq. Tension and violence also escalated in the Israeli-occupied territories, and developments in the Horn of Africa and western Africa led to unprecedented increases in refugees and displaced persons. The Organization also faced new obstacles to a thriving world economy, based on deceleration and the need to transform and integrate Eastern European societies into the global trading and financial systems.

Having been able to contribute to solutions to some long-standing conflicts and pressing problems on the international agenda made this, my last year as Secretary-General of the United Nations, a particularly rewarding one. Yet many unmet challenges remain as the Organization moves towards a new millennium. I extend my best wishes to my successors as Secretary-General as they rise to the challenges of this important period in the history of the United Nations.

About the 1990 edition of the Yearbook

The 1990 YEARBOOK OF THE UNITED NATIONS is the third and last backlog edition (1988, 1989, 1990) to be published. As the publication of Yearbook volumes had been falling behind over a period of time, it was decided to focus on the production of current volumes, with the backlog editions to be done concurrently through the provision of funds by the publisher. The 1988 edition was published in 1994 and the 1989 edition in 1997. The scope, content and breadth of coverage of these volumes have been restructured and redefined to enhance the presentation of the main activities and events of each year. As in previous volumes, this volume has been designed to serve as the most comprehensive reference tool for use by the research community and those interested in the activities of the United Nations and its related organizations.

Structure and scope of articles

The Yearbook is subject-oriented, divided into seven major parts: political and security questions, regional questions, economic and social questions, trusteeship and decolonization, legal questions, administrative and budgetary questions, and intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations.

Information includes summaries of major reports, Secretariat activities and, in selected cases, the views of States in written communications.

Activities of United Nations bodies. All resolutions, decisions and other major activities of the principal organs and, on a selective basis, those of subsidiary bodies are either reproduced or summarized in the respective articles. The texts of all resolutions and decisions of substantive nature adopted in 1990 by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council and the Economic and Social Council are reproduced or summarized under the relevant topic. These texts are followed by the procedural details giving date of adoption, meeting number and vote totals (in favour-against-abstaining); information on their approval by a sessional or subsidiary body prior to final adoption, approved amendments and committee reports; and information on sponsors. Also given are the document symbols of any financial implications and relevant meeting numbers. In addition, details are provided of any recorded or roll-call vote on the resolution/decision as a whole.

Major reports. Most reports of the Secretary-General, in 1990, along with selected reports from other UN sources, such as seminars and working groups, are summarized briefly.

Secretariat activities. The operational activities of the United Nations for development and humanitarian assistance are described under the relevant topics. For major activities financed outside the UN regular budget, selected information is given on contributions and expenditures.

Views of States. Written communications sent to the United Nations by Member States and circulated as documents of the principal organs have been summarized in selected cases, under the relevant topics. Substantive actions by the Security Council have been analysed and brief reviews of the Council's deliberations given, particularly in cases where an issue was taken up but no resolution was adopted.

Related organizations. The Yearbook also briefly describes the 1990 activities of the specialized agencies and other related organizations of the UN system.

Terminology

Formal titles of bodies, organizational units, conventions, declarations and officials are given in full on first mention in an article or sequence of articles. They are also used in resolution/decision texts, and in the SUBJECT INDEX under the key word of the title. Short titles may be used in subsequent references.

How to find information in the Yearbook

The reader may locate information on the United Nations activities contained in this volume by the use of the TABLE OF CONTENTS, the SUBJECT INDEX and the INDEX OF RESOLUTIONS AND DECISIONS. The volume also has five appendices: APPENDIX I comprises a roster of Member States; APPENDIX II reproduces the Charter of the United Nations, including the Statute of the International Court of Justice; APPENDIX III gives the structure of the principal organs of the United Nations; APPENDIX IV provides the agenda for each session of the principal organs in 1990; and APPENDIX V gives the addresses of the United Nations information centres and services world wide.

EXPLANATORY NOTE ON DOCUMENTS

References in square brackets in each chapter of Parts One to Six of this volume give the symbols of the main documents issued in 1990 on the topic. The following is a guide to the principal document symbols:

A/- refers to documents of the General Assembly, numbered in separate series by session. Thus, A/45/- refers to documents issued for consideration at the forty-fifth session, beginning with A/45/1. Documents of special and emergency special sessions are identified as A/S- and A/ES-, followed by the session number.

A/C.- refers to documents of the Assembly's Main Committees, e.g. A/C.1/- is a document of the First Committee, A/C.6/-, a document of the Sixth Committee. A/BUR/- refers to documents of the General Committee. A/AC.- documents are those of the Assembly's ad hoc bodies and A/CN.-, of its commissions; e.g. A/AC.105/- identifies documents of the Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/CN.4-, of its International Law Commission. Assembly resolutions and decisions since the thirty-first (1976) session have been identified by two arabic numerals; the first indicates the session of adoption; the second, the sequential number in the series. Resolutions are numbered consecutively from 1 at each session. Decisions of regular sessions are numbered consecutively, from 301 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 401 for all other decisions. Decisions of special and emergency special sessions are numbered consecutively, from 11 for those concerned with elections and appointments, and from 21 for all other decisions.

E/- refers to documents of the Economic and Social Council, numbered in separate series by year. Thus, E/1990/- refers to documents issued for consideration by the Council at its 1990 sessions, beginning with E/1990/1. E/AC.-, E/C.- and E/CN.-, followed by identifying numbers, refer to documents of the Council's subsidiary ad hoc bodies, committees and commissions. For example, E/CN.5/- refers to documents of the Council's Commission for Social Development, E/C.7/- to documents of its Committee on Natural Resources. E/ICEF/- documents are those of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Symbols for the Council's resolutions and decisions, since 1978, consist of two arabic numerals: the first indicates the year of adoption and the second, the sequential number in the series. There are two series: one for resolutions, beginning with 1 (resolution 1990/1); and one for decisions, beginning with 201 (decision 1990/201).

S/- refers to documents of the Security Council. Its resolutions are identified by consecutive numbers followed by the year of adoption in parentheses, beginning with resolution 1(1946).

ST/-, followed by symbols representing the issuing department or office, refers to documents of the United Nations Secretariat.

T/- refers to documents of the Trusteeship Council.

Documents of certain bodies bear special symbols, including the following:

ACC/-	Administrative Committee on Coordination
CD/-	Conference on Disarmament
CERD/-	Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
DC/-	Disarmament Commission
DP/-	United Nations Development Programme
HS/-	Commission on Human Settlements
ITC/-	International Trade Centre
TD/-	United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
UNEP/-	United Nations Environment Programme

Many documents of the regional commissions bear special symbols. These are sometimes preceded by the following:

E/ECA/-	Economic Commission for Africa
E/ECE/-	Economic Commission for Europe
E/ESCAP/-	Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
E/ESCWA/-	Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia
LC/G.-	Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean

"L" in a symbol refers to documents of limited distribution, such as draft resolutions; "CONF." to documents of a conference; "INF." to those of general information. Summary records are designated by "SR.", verbatim records by "PV.", each followed by the meeting number.

United Nations sales publications each carry a sales number with the following components separated by periods: a capital letter indicating the language(s) of the publication; two arabic numerals indicating the year; a Roman numeral indicating the subject category; a capital letter indicating a subdivision of the category, if any; and an arabic numeral indicating the number of the publication within the category. Examples: E.90.II.A.2; E/F/R.90.II.E.7; E.90.X.I.

Report of the Secretary-General

Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

Following is the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization, presented to the General Assembly on 16 September 1990. The Assembly took note of it on 16 October (decision 45/404).

I

The period we have entered is Janus-faced. It wears both the aspect of hope and the countenance of dangerous unrestraint. In one major segment of world affairs, we have witnessed political change of a phenomenal character. In large parts of the globe, however, the scene continues to be one of simmering resentments, violent collisions and at best a precarious peace. The question whether the more beneficial developments of 1989-1990 will have a healthy impact on the totality of the world situation is still unanswered.

The ending of the cold war has meant the abandonment of the many assumptions that throttled progress in international affairs, bred chronic suspicion and fear and polarized the world. The lessons it conveys both for social thought and for purposes of practical policy are manifold. From the viewpoint of the United Nations, however, three of its characteristics have a global significance.

First, the revolutionary developments in Eastern and Central Europe have given powerful expression to two of the cardinal principles of the Charter of the United Nations: self-determination of peoples and respect for human rights.

Second, it has been strikingly demonstrated that a status quo based primarily on the military factor is bound to prove fragile.

Third, the larger-and saner-concept of security, encompassing all its dimensions, which has begun to emerge is precisely the one the United Nations has been expounding all through the years. It has been a stable theme at the United Nations that an obsession with military security results in a self-perpetuating arms race, distorts priorities, hampers social and economic progress, constrains political dialogue, affects the institutions of the State to their long-term detriment, and aggravates the sense of insecurity in all nations. What often sounded a voice in the wilderness has now gained a volume and resonance it lacked before.

Thus, the very change that has rendered obsolete the whole architecture of the cold war serves to reveal afresh the design for peace which the United Nations is meant to execute. Nothing in the constructive refashioning that has taken place in Europe nor in the destructive trends exploding elsewhere requires a modification of the purposes and principles of the Organization as laid down in its Charter. In fact, in this respect, the Charter gains richer meaning as political evolution progressively enlarges and clarifies the scope of its principles.

The United Nations, therefore, enters the post-cold war era as a central point of constancy in the midst of flux. Through years of patient effort, it has achieved a complementarity in the working of its different organs which makes it far better fitted to fulfil its onerous tasks. The exercise of the authority of the Security Council in the manner envisaged in the Charter, the many instances of the General Assembly and the Council reinforcing each other's efforts, the close co-operation between the Council as a whole and the Secretary-General, the growing role of the Secretariat as represented by the Secretary-General in undertaking increasingly diversified missions of peace, and the revitalized role being contemplated for the Economic and Social Council—all these testify to a strengthening of the institutions embodied in the Organization.

With its ability thus enhanced and its relevance emphasized by the process of change, three broad objectives define its mandate. It has to try to eliminate the seeds of war in all areas of the globe and, in so doing, squarely face the fact that new sources of conflict are emerging in our age. It has to serve as the prime instrument for extending the spirit of co-operation to those spheres--economic relations between nations and humanity's social problems—which are seemingly non-political but have profound political implications. It has to strive unrelentingly to ensure that international affairs are governed by the rule of law and universal respect for human rights.

This is an ambitious agenda but a rapidly changing world asks for nothing less.

II

As we survey the political scene, we see the dawn of a new era in Europe, streaks of light in some regions and the darkness of old animosities and new hatreds enveloping others.

The unification of the two German States and the changes in Eastern Europe have signalled the end of the entrenched division from which Europe suffered ever since the Second World War. A remarkable feature of the whole process, which has transformed the political shape of the continent in the span of less than one year, has been the high level of understanding, far-sightedness and respect for popular will that has been exhibited by all the parties concerned, including the global Powers. Nothing could better reflect a fundamental change in relations between those Powers and promise to open a more constructive chapter of world history. It is noteworthy that, in a different region, this year also witnessed the establishment of the new Republic of Yemen when the two Yemeni States decided peacefully to unite.

Indeed, in a climate created by palpable signs of new attitudes and perceptions, the expectation grew that the quality of openness pervading Europe now and the choice for peace that Europe has made would prevail elsewhere as well. However, recent developments, like the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq, remind us of the danger of underestimating the political density of the globe and the variety of factors behind the current situations of tension in other continents. An optimistic view can be sustained only when the peaceful settlement of disputes becomes a consistent practice all over the world and when the anxieties and the causes of unrest in the international community as a whole are fully addressed.

This report is being written at an extraordinary point in time when developments are taking place so rapidly that today's perspective on a situation may have shifted tomorrow. While this inevitably makes some observations tentative, I propose to look first at the brighter side of the picture.

During the year under review, the United Nations has had remarkable success in conducting a variety of operations aimed at managing peaceful transitions in societies which were the scenes of conflicts or had suffered upheavals. Given such a purpose, these operations have so many different facets and have so combined elements of peace-keeping and peace-making as to have radically altered traditional concepts of the arrangement between the two. Formerly, peace-keeping was understood to mean essentially to control or contain conflicts while peace-making was meant to resolve them. A deeper and more active involvement of the United Nations has over time, however, increasingly shown that peace-making itself determines, as it should, the size, scope and duration of peace-keeping as conventionally understood and that it is often by a fusion of the two in an integral undertaking that peace can genuinely be brought to troubled areas. I am referring here in particular to the complex operation mounted in Namibia and several others conducted in Central America. All of them have yielded new insights which can be most useful as the United Nations is called upon to deal with other and even more complicated situations in future. Whatever political obstacles to the solution of thorny problems may be encountered in other places, the practicability of physically putting a solution in place through the management of the United Nations, given the requisite support of Member States, need no longer be in question.

Namibia has shown the reward of perseverance in the quest of just solutions to international disputes. Nearly a quarter century after the General Assembly first adopted a resolution on the territory's status and a dozen years after the Security Council laid out a settlement plan for its independence, through a tortuous process which went through alternating phases of hope and frustration, the United Nations reached its goal this year. The time span between the formulation and the achievement of the aim could, and should, have been shorter, but the result could not have been more convincing. Personally, it brought to me gratifying fulfilment of a priority I had set myself when I assumed my present responsibilities.

The Namibian experience was a striking demonstration of the results that can be achieved by multilateral effort, by the active engagement of the principal organs of the United Nations and by the members of the Security Council and other States undertaking a crucial role in negotiations conducted with the parties. It was a focus on the prime objective that ensured the convergence of the diplomatic efforts launched from several fronts. The United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia (UNTAG) turned out to be something far more than its somewhat pedestrian name implied. It established the workability of democratic procedures even in a terrain which at first looked most unpromising. It also proved the executive ability of the United Nations in successfully managing a complex operation, which brought together 8,000 men and women from more than 100 nations, all united in the aim of peacefully bringing a country to independence through modalities set out by the Security Council.

The settlement of the question of Namibia has had a healthy impact on the situation in southern Africa. The official United Nations team which I sent in June to South Africa, with the agreement of the South African Government, observed that the country had reached the threshold of a new era. The political process towards dismantling the apartheid system is yet at an early stage and difficulties are still caused by the continuance of apartheid structures, questionable police practices, repressive laws and politically related violence. Nor can the fear and anxiety which accompany the fundamental transformation of a society be underestimated.

However, progress has been made towards establishing an atmosphere conducive to negotiations. The situation was recently given an impetus by the joint declaration of the South African Government and the African National Congress that aimed at accelerating the political process towards a negotiated settlement through various measures, including the release of political prisoners and reviewing current security legislation. The announcement by the African National Congress of the suspension of all armed actions has also been a significant development. Unfortunately, these promising events have been marred in recent weeks by a marked increase in the incidence of violence, resulting in innumerable casualties and jeopardizing political dialogue. This issue needs to be addressed urgently at the highest level by all concerned.

The prospect of a non-racial democracy in South Africa in the not-too-distant future is no longer unrealistic. This would carry a significance far beyond that of profound and beneficial change in a large and pluralistic society. It would mean the realization of one of the objectives of the United Nations which goes to the root of the justice and stability of international relations envisaged in the Charter.

The United Nations has undertaken a wide range of endeavours pertaining to peace in Central America in the past year, in pursuance of the goals of the agreement known as Esquipulas II. The Organization's involvement in the region is very complex and varied and demands on it have required versatility and constant adaptation, using a variety of frequently innovative means. Last October I appointed a personal representative for the Central American peace process in order to assist me in co-ordinating the discharge of these many-faceted endeavours.

The Organization played a major part in resolving the conflict in Nicaragua. A United Nations Observer Mission (ONUVEN) monitored the preparation and holding of free and fair elections in February, the first such operation authorized and conducted by the Organization internally in a Member State. The success of this endeavour led to a central role for the Organization in the peaceful transfer of power in a region where in the past such transfers have been the exception rather than the rule.

In the context of the International Support and Verification Commission (CIAV), the United Nations assumed a key role in the voluntary demobilization of the members of the Nicaraguan Resistance. The Commission, which I together with the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States (OAS) established in response to a request by the Central American Presidents, was instrumental in obtaining the agreement by the Nicaraguan Resistance to demobilize. With the operational support of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, CIAV is assisting in their resettlement in Nicaragua.

The task of receiving and destroying the weapons of the members of the Nicaraguan Resistance and of verifying the cease-fire which made possible their demobilization inside Nicaragua was discharged by the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA), the first United Nations peace-keeping operation in the region, whose original mandate was to verify compliance by the five Central American Governments with their security commitments entered into in Esquipulas II.

Late last year the five Central American Presidents requested me to engage more actively in diplomatic efforts in search of solutions to conflicts in the region, specifically in El Salvador. I was asked to find ways for Powers from outside the region to support these efforts. With my assistance, the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Marti para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) agreed in April to launch a negotiating process under my auspices for the purpose of speedily ending through political means the armed conflict which has torn that nation for a decade as well as to promote the democratization of the country, guarantee unrestricted respect for human rights and reunify Salvadorian society.

The initial goal set for the negotiation is to achieve political agreements on a number of issues in order to secure a cease-fire, to be verified by the United Nations. With the full and active participation of my representative, a partial accord has to date been reached on a text regarding respect for human rights, which provides for an unprecedented scheme for long-term, nationwide monitoring by the United Nations. The Organization is also expected to play a role in overseeing the process which is to lead to elections in March 1991.

The issues involved, however, are deeply rooted and complex. They touch upon the structure of the State and the fabric of society. In addition to human rights, the judicial and electoral systems and economic and social questions, the central issue is that of the armed forces, including their relationship with the civilian authorities and the role of the military apparatus in society. As elsewhere in Latin America, the issue of how to deal with the past is also at the forefront of the agenda. The negotiation in progress holds the potential of leading to a positive transformation of Salvadorian society, which would strengthen the link, embodied in Esquipulas II, between the establishment of peace and the consolidation of democracy.

It is thus understandable that it has not yet been possible to reach the initial goal and that the war consequently goes on in El Salvador. I remain convinced that this process can succeed if the parties unswervingly adhere to their April undertakings and there is strong support from outside Powers that are in a position to provide it. Without such adherence and support, however, there is no end to the war in sight.

In March, a process was launched with the ultimate purpose of seeking a political solution to the internal armed confrontation in Guatemala. This effort, under the auspices of the Guatemalan National Reconciliation Commission, a body established in conformity with Esquipulas II, has to date involved the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) and political parties as well as social forces of that country, and in due course is to lead to conversations between the Government and the Armed Forces and URNG. An observer appointed by me is attending the talks. It is my hope that this effort, which has begun auspiciously, will usher in a process leading to peace and national reconciliation in this long-suffering nation.

Encouraging progress continues to be made towards resolving the problem of Western Sahara. We have now not only an agreed set of proposals and a timetable for their implementation, but also a plan approved in June by the Security Council. This plan provides for holding a referendum which will enable the people of Western Sahara to determine their future without military or administrative constraints.

In July, I dispatched a technical mission to the Territory and to neighbouring countries to refine the administrative aspects of the implementation of the plan and to obtain the necessary data for an estimate of the cost of the operation. I am in the process of submitting a further report to the Security Council in this regard.

Contacts with the parties concerned, Morocco and the Frente Polisario, as well as with the observers to the peace process, Algeria and Mauritania, have continued throughout. Close contact has also been maintained with the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity. In March, I visited the region and renewed discussions with the leaders of Morocco and the Frente Polisario whose continued support and co-operation has been essential to the progress of our efforts.

A critical element in the organization of the referendum will be the problem of identifying those eligible to vote. Taking into account the social structure of Western Sahara, the acknowledged tribal leaders will have a particularly important role to play in the process. In this context, a representative group of tribal leaders from Western Sahara was invited to meet with the Identification Commission in Geneva so that they could be briefed on the Commission's terms of reference and the methods of work it would adopt. I have also endeavoured to ensure that the actual process of such identification, and of the referendum itself, should be clear and fully understood by the people directly involved.

Without wishing to minimize the complexity and dimensions of the task before us, I am of the view that, given the co-operation and political will displayed by the parties, a solution to this long-standing problem is well within our grasp.

There is now a widely shared belief that a solution to the conflict in Cambodia may be within reach. The agreement on a framework for a comprehensive political settlement based on an enhanced role of the United Nations, which was reached by the five permanent members of the Security Council at the end of August, and the recent decision of the Cambodian parties in Jakarta to accept this framework and to form a Supreme National Council represent major steps forward in the negotiating process. I earnestly hope that all parties concerned will pursue this process vigorously, so that the Paris Conference on Cambodia can be reconvened to finalize and conclude a comprehensive peace agreement. The time has come to put an end to the fighting and to the long suffering endured by the Cambodian people. The establishment of a durable peace will ultimately depend, however, on a genuine national reconciliation among the Cambodians, as well as on the full support and co-operation of all the parties directly or indirectly involved in this tragic conflict.

Over the past year, I have continued to work closely with the parties concerned and to make my good offices available as needed, in order to contribute to the negotiating process. In early February, I established a Secretariat task force on Cambodia. Since then, I have dispatched four fact-finding missions to the country, in order to gather information and data relevant to an eventual United Nations operation in Cambodia. The United Nations will, of course, be prepared to assume in Cambodia any appropriate role which is agreed by the parties and approved by the Security Council. However, I cannot over-emphasize the need to ensure that the mandate that may ultimately be entrusted to the United Nations is realistic, clearly defined and practicable in operational terms. It is also essential that the Organization be provided with sufficient resources, in a timely and assured manner, so that an efficient operation can be implemented with a reasonable chance of success.

My efforts concerning the Cyprus problem have focused last year on finding a way to complete the outline of an overall agreement, as the leaders of the two communities had agreed in June 1989. As I have reported to the Security Council, it has not yet been possible to achieve this goal, and I am concerned by the lack of movement in the negotiating process and the deteriorating situation on the island.

At the same time, I have been encouraged by the active involvement of the Security Council, which on several occasions during the past year was unanimous in stressing the importance it attached to an early negotiated settlement of the Cyprus problem. In resolution 649(1990), the Council confirmed and clarified the lines along which a solution is to be sought, and in its statement of 19 July 1990 it endorsed my plan of action for completing the outline and launching the negotiations for an overall agreement. These developments offer a basis for progress, provided both sides heed the Council's call to co-operate with me, promote reconciliation, and are willing to deal with the issues in a manner amenable to compromise.

Over the last 12 months, the suffering of the Afghan people has continued and the number of refugees in Pakistan and Iran has remained basically unchanged. At the international level, however, there has been progress in the direction of a consensus among the Guarantor Powers and the countries neighbouring Afghanistan.

Such an international consensus is necessary, in my view, in order to encourage an Afghan political process which in turn would enable the Afghan people to exercise, unhindered, their right of self-determination. In my recent efforts, I have particularly focused on promoting such a consensus and the responses I have received so far from the Governments concerned clearly indicate a desire to achieve a settlement through political means. During my contacts with all segments of the Afghan leadership, I made clear the readiness of the United Nations to assist them, in whatever way they would deem appropriate, to begin a political process leading to the establishment of a broad-based government. The opportunity now exists for collective and concerted efforts, both at the national and international levels, to achieve a resolution of the conflict.

While a spirit of conciliation prevails in many areas of the world today, new and alarming dangers have arisen in the Middle East in recent weeks. Throughout my tenure as Secretary-General, I have repeatedly underscored the need for a comprehensive settlement of the complex issues facing this region, pointing out that a deterioration of the situation in one area almost invariably has repercussions elsewhere. The events that began on 2 August 1990, and the developments that were set in motion as a result, illustrate this point vividly.

The invasion and purported annexation of the State of Kuwait by Iraq has evoked an historic response from the Security Council. In a series of resolutions without precedent, the Council has established that such actions, which are in direct contravention of the principles of the Charter and international law, cannot be committed with impunity. The Council promptly condemned the invasion, demanded that Iraq withdraw immediately and unconditionally all its forces, called upon Iraq and Kuwait to begin immediately intensive negotiations for the resolution of their differences and expressed support of all efforts in this regard, especially those of the League of Arab States. When the demand was not complied with, the Council imposed economic sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter in order to bring the invasion and occupation of Kuwait by Iraq to an end and restore the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kuwait. The Council further declared the annexation of Kuwait by Iraq as null and void. As regards the situation of the nationals of third countries in Kuwait and Iraq, the Council demanded that Iraq permit and facilitate their immediate departure and take no action to jeopardize their safety, security or health. It also demanded that Iraq rescind its orders for the closure of diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait and the withdrawal of the immunity of their personnel. The continuing non-compliance by Iraq with the Security Council's demands led to the Council's call upon "those Member States co-operating with the Government of Kuwait which are deploying maritime forces to the area to use such measures commensurate to the specific circumstances as may be necessary under the authority of the Security Council... to ensure strict implementation" of the provisions laid down in the resolution relating to economic sanctions. In this connection, States were requested to co-ordinate their actions, using, as appropriate, mechanisms of the Military Staff Committee. The Council has emphasized that it alone, or acting through its Committee, can determine whether humanitarian circumstances have arisen in which it will be necessary for foodstuffs to be supplied to the civilian population in Iraq or Kuwait in order to relieve human suffering. Though the outcome of this crisis may not be predictable at the moment, these resolutions are bound to remain of definitive importance in the application of the rule of law in safeguarding the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Member States.

The invasion of Kuwait has also caused a human tragedy of immense proportions, the dimensions of which are still incalculable. Hundreds of thousands of third-country nationals residing in the area have been rendered destitute overnight; many of them have been left without the means to support their families, much less to return to their countries of origin, which are themselves staggering under the economic effects of this crisis. International relief efforts have begun to respond to the enormous demands that have been created, not only in providing temporary shelter and sustenance to a displaced population now spread throughout five countries, but also in making transport available for those seeking to leave the area. I have appointed a personal representative to assist me in these efforts. Meanwhile, the decision by Iraq to restrict the movement of nationals of certain countries has heightened tension, and continues to be a source of profound concern to the international community.

It is clear that progress cannot be made on the overall situation in the region, including the Arab-Israeli conflict, until the present crisis is set on the way to solution in accordance with the position taken by the Security Council. It is disappointing to note that an impasse has been reached in the effort to promote a dialogue between Israelis and Palestinians. The intifadah will soon enter its fourth year and, regrettably, the situation in the occupied territories remains bleak, with little hope of early progress. I continue to believe that, in addition to the efforts to promote a dialogue, the Security Council could make an important contribution to the process by renewing its commitment to resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) which, in my view, together with the legitimate political rights of the Palestinian people, including self-determination, can constitute the basis of a just and lasting peace in the area.

Since my last report, relations between Iran and Iraq have improved and it has thus been possible to implement important aspects of Security Council resolution 598(1987), with the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group fulfilling the role assigned to it. In this connection, withdrawal to the internationally recognized boundaries has taken place and prisoners of war are now being repatriated and are rejoining their families-in accordance with the Treaty and conventions to which Iran and Iraq are parties. It is worth recalling, however, that resolution 598(1987) is a comprehensive peace plan, and certain of its elements have yet to be fulfilled, including its paragraph 8 which envisages the search for measures to enhance the stability and security of the region. This remains most relevant at this stage.

The Middle East as a whole continues to be the most explosive region of the world today. Long-standing grievances, which have festered for years, have been aggravated by an escalating arms race throughout the area, which has spawned a deadly arsenal of weapons of mass destruction. In the long run, lasting peace will come to the Middle East only when the principles of international law govern the relations between States, when disputes are resolved through peaceful means, when the aspirations of those deprived of their rights have been fulfilled, and regional security and economic arrangements-which take into account the concerns of all the parties in the area-have been established.

III

It has been said that, twice in this century, after two devastating wars, the possibilities of building a peaceful global order were not fully realized. There is, of course, no doubt that the establishment of the world Organization, the adoption of its Charter, the liquidation of colonialism and the acceptance in principle of universal standards of human rights have been nothing less than new departures in history. However, the fact remains that no coherent strategy of peace was put in place. The reasons for this failure need hardly be recapitulated. What is beyond controversy is that we are now presented with a unique opportunity to work out such a strategy.

A refreshed political will and long-term thinking that is not overwhelmed by the perceptions and concerns of the moment is an absolute essential for seizing the opportunity. So is a clear understanding of the means that can be employed for making, keeping and building the peace. These three overlapping lines of endeavour need to be pursued with equal determination. As I have said earlier, it is the effort of peace-making or conflict resolution that sets the stage for, and determines, peace-keeping or conflict control. To gain time, and establish an environment, for the settlement of the dispute underlying a conflict is, of course, always an immediate necessity-this is the rationale of peace-keeping operations as traditionally understood. But it can sometimes result in temporizing if it is not accompanied by, or does not directly lead to, a negotiated solution of the dispute and, where necessary, an operation implementing that solution. Both these are to be seen as part of the wider effort of creating conditions in which the opposite claims or interests of States are purged of the character of violent hostility.

There has been a variety of situations over four decades in which the mounting of operations by the United Nations has been found indispensable. In essence, a United Nations peace-keeping operation is one which, mounted with the consent of the parties concerned, involves the deployment of international military personnel under an integrated command combined with civilian elements, all acting under the authority and discipline of the Organization, in order to stop or avert fighting and help facilitate or implement a settlement. As the consent of the parties concerned is crucial to their mandate, such operations are to be distinguished from measures under Chapter VII of the Charter.

From 1948 onwards, the United Nations has launched 18 operations, five of them during 1988 and 1989. Indeed, in recent years, the Organization's role in combinations of peace-keeping and peace-making has expanded impressively. The composite nature of these recent operations means that the tasks assigned to them have multiplied. The United Nations Transition Assistance Group in Namibia provides a standing example of important civilian and police components working together with military elements to secure the implementation of a complex peace plan under its supervision and control. The delicate mission accomplished in Nicaragua also illustrated the versatile forms that undertakings assigned to the Secretariat by the competent organs of the United Nations can take.

The conditions for the success of these operations remain what they have always been: a precise and workable mandate, the consent and co-operation of the parties involved, the consistent support of the Security Council, the readiness of Member States to volunteer personnel and adequate financial arrangements. The presupposition in meeting all these conditions is freedom from uncertainty: doubts with regard to any one of them can jeopardize an operation, threaten the security of the personnel employed, imperil peace, cost human lives and, indeed, subvert the purpose of the undertaking. Moreover, a large and complex operation, such as the ones conducted in Namibia and likely to be decided upon in Cambodia, El Salvador and Western Sahara, takes long planning and preparation, while the implementation of a settlement acquires an urgency as soon as it is agreed upon. It is extremely difficult to reconcile these two requirements in the Organization's existing administrative and financial situation. We are being asked to do more with fewer resources and even those are sometimes provided too late.

The disparity between responsibilities and resources can nowhere be as crippling-and dangerous-as in this matter. I call upon Member States to review again my proposals for the establishment of a reserve stock of basic peace-keeping equipment and supplies, earmarking of military personnel, assurance of the necessary logistical and technological support, increase in the working capital fund and dependable contributions of cash. It is also foreseeable that, in some cases, advance authority will need to be given to the Secretary-General to commit funds in order to enable him to set up the operation within a politically acceptable time-frame. The whole point is that we have reached a stage where limits to improvisation have come glaringly into view.

From the administrative point of view, peace-keeping operations have to be very closely coordinated, both at Headquarters and in the field. I have, for this purpose, set up a Senior Planning and Monitoring Group within the Secretariat.

The growing urge to resolve situations of conflict, the striking success of the operations in Namibia and Nicaragua and the prospect of those in Cambodia, El Salvador and Western Sahara have all encouraged reflections on the possible extension of the principles of United Nations operations to other situations not identical with those in which they have been mounted so far. I believe that some caveats are necessary on this point. Apart from the fact that United Nations operations require authorization by the competent organ, they are suitable only in cases which meet certain criteria. First, they are called for primarily in situations with a clear international dimension. Second, should they involve the monitoring of an election or referendum, they should cover the entire electoral process in order to secure conditions of fairness and impartiality. Where the induction of a United Nations presence in the electoral process of a State at a critical point in its political life is sought by the Government concerned and approved by the competent organ of the United Nations, it is necessary that there is broad public support in the State for the United Nations assuming such a role. Third, United Nations operations can be mounted only at clearly defined points in location and strategy, and not in situations of an indeterminate character.

Encouraging though the successes of operations mounted by the United Nations are and large though the range of their possible applications might be, the responsibility of negotiating settlements of international disputes or the obligation of accepting the terms laid down for them by the Security Council rests on the parties concerned. In a recent statement, the Security Council has stressed that a peace-keeping operation is essentially a temporary measure and that its mandate is not automatically renewable. Experience has shown that the mere continuance of a peace-keeping operation does not by itself generate movement towards a settlement. This is not a comforting thought, but it cannot be dismissed on that account.

To organize peace-making efforts in all situations of unresolved conflict is a primary challenge at the stage we have reached in the evolution of global society. There is now a manifest need to harness all available diplomatic capabilities for bringing about just and lasting resolution of conflicts that threaten or endanger the peace. These capabilities are not, and need not always be, employed solely through the United Nations.

Voluntary mediation outside the United Nations by Member States is, and will always remain, one of the means for the pacific settlement of disputes and also one of the ways in which Governments articulate their foreign policies and use or enhance their influence. What, however, needs to be carefully considered is how far the exertions made independently of the United Nations to resolve major regional conflicts have succeeded in cutting through the tangles and in narrowing the differences between the disputants to the degree necessary for meaningful negotiations. The question involved here bears upon the potentialities of a focused and systematic multilateral effort as compared to its alternatives.

There seems to be a lingering impression that a diplomatic initiative by a Member State or regional organization, dispensing with the procedures of the United Nations, is tidier, quicker and likely to be more fruitful than one made through the United Nations. The evidence so far is at least ambiguous, if not altogether discouraging.

What distinguishes the handling of a dispute by the United Nations is that it permits full expression to all the relevant interests and viewpoints and does not seek to abridge any vital aspect of a situation, including the aspect of justice and human rights, for the sake of speedy disposal. Then again, in recent years, the United Nations has increasingly used methods—in the consultations of the Security Council and in the exercise of good offices by the Secretary-General—that have the effect of avoiding unproductive argument and of discerning the lines along which just solutions can be sought. It should now be evident that the United Nations is more than a forum of debate; it is also a place or vehicle of purposeful negotiations.

Here, a wider understanding is required from Member States, especially the most influential ones. Even with all its recent successes in the resolution of conflicts and its pronounced role in crisis management, the United Nations will still remain in danger of being bypassed and sidelined if, in pursuance of their interests, Member States individually or in regional groupings choose to undertake efforts which are not in harmony with those of the United Nations or the principles of the Charter. This is less a matter of upholding the prestige of the Organization than of avoiding incoherence, dispersal and fragmentation in the peace effort. The emergence of a collegial spirit among the permanent members of the Security Council provides an indispensable safeguard against this danger but, as I said in my report last year, agreement among the major Powers must carry with it the support of a majority of Member States if it is to make the desired impact on the world situation. It is the willing endorsement of the decisions of the Security Council by the international community that can best counter any impression, likely to create anxiety, of world affairs being run by a directorate.

Apart from this, I believe that the peace-making capacity of the United Nations would be considerably strengthened if the Security Council had a peace agenda that is not confined to items formally inscribed at the requests of Member States, and if it held periodic meetings to survey the political scene and identify points of danger at which preventive or anticipatory diplomacy is required. Since the proceedings of such meetings need not necessarily be published, they would encourage candid discussions without making parties to disputes harden their positions. Nor would the reports of the Secretary-General to such meetings amount to an invocation by him of Article 99 of the Charter. There is little use in encumbering the peace effort with formal procedures when such procedures are not likely to lead to results conducive to peace. Other ways to strengthen the Council's role in dealing with incipient disputes lie in improving fact-finding arrangements, in establishing a United Nations presence in unstable areas and in instituting subsidiary bodies, where appropriate, for preventive diplomacy.

In this context, it needs to be stressed again that the means at present at the disposal of the Secretary-General for gathering the timely, accurate and unbiased information that is necessary for averting violent conflicts are inadequate. I made suggestions in this regard in my report last year and I would urge Member States to consider afresh ways of enabling the Secretariat to monitor potential conflict situations from a clearly impartial standpoint. The strategy of peace must reflect a better regard for timing than has been the case so far. The Organization's mediatory or investigative capacity should not be kept in reserve until it is too late to avert hostilities.

Once a dispute or a situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute is investigated and considered by the Security Council, it becomes the responsibility of the Council to recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment. The divisive and distracting factors that operated in the past and made the Council indecisive have now largely disappeared and we are faced with the question how to ensure that parties to disputes abide by the Council's resolutions.

This, in turn, raises the question of how best a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression can be countered through the resources of persuasion, influence or concerted pressure at the disposal of the Security Council. The essentiality of the provisions of Chapter VII to the system of collective security envisaged in the Charter is, of course, beyond doubt or dispute. Peace-making would lack the firmness and authority it needs if the Council were not in a position to issue salutary and credible warnings of enforcement measures and to resort to such measures when its warnings went unheeded. As the swift response to the challenge thrown by Iraq's invasion of Kuwait has shown, the new atmosphere prevailing in the Security Council has for the first time enabled the Council to exercise the authority vested in it by the Charter.

Any situation calling for action under chapter VII of the Charter is certain to have its own peculiarities. However, it seems to be widely recognized that such action is a measure of last resort, which should not mean the abandonment of the necessary diplomatic effort to negotiate a solution in conformity with the principles of the Charter. Indeed, recourse to the provisions of enforcement must itself be consistently based on principle and a sense of equity and perceived to be so.

Moreover, the conditions of our time clearly suggest some of the requirements for enforcement action to succeed. In the economic sphere, the special problems arising for one or more States from the carrying out of measures under Chapter VII must be comprehensively foreseen and speedy remedies envisaged for them. Article 50 recognizes this need. In today's vastly more complicated and interdependent conditions as compared to those of four decades ago, this entails addressing the chain effects of economic action. In the political sphere, all measures of enforcement must be seen to issue from a collective engagement, which requires complete unity of aim as defined by the Council and which imposes a discipline all its own. The role of the Military Staff Committee in the making of plans for the application of armed force is clearly laid down in Articles 46 and 47 of the Charter. Then again, enforcement measures must be so applied that they do not cause an unintended economic or political fall-out which can outspread the specified area of involvement and defeat the original purpose of the action taken by the Council.

The rule of law in international affairs should also be promoted by a greater recourse to the International Court of Justice not only in adjudicating disputes of a legal nature but also in rendering advisory opinion on the legal aspects of a dispute. Article 96 of the Charter authorizes the General Assembly and the Security Council to request such an opinion from the Court. I believe that the extension of this authority to the Secretary-General would greatly add to the means of peaceful solutions of international crisis situations. The suggestion is prompted by the complementary relationship between the Security Council and the Secretary-General and by the consideration that almost all situations bearing upon international peace and security require the strenuous exercise of the good offices of the Secretary-General.

IV

To build peace and create conditions of stability in the world of the 1990s will require innovative responses to security challenges of a type radically different from those encountered in the past. The effort, however, will be adrift unless it is firmly anchored in the principles of the Charter and is perceived to be so. While some old models can no longer be used and some traditional categories of thought are now inadequate, the principles of international ethics and human rights articulated by the Charter still hold.

Today, in a growing number of cases, threats to national and international security are no longer as neatly separable as they were before. In not a few countries, civil strife takes a heavy toll of human life and has repercussions beyond national borders. The disintegration of the institutions of government and society in one country and senseless slaughter in another are two appalling instances. Separatism, by no means a rare phenomenon, causes strains on both the country directly affected and its immediate neighbours. Anarchy in one State means mass migrations which unsettle another. Then again, terrorism and drug trafficking cut across frontiers. So do environmental disasters. Furthermore, the rising consciousness of ethnic, linguistic or religious identities destabilizes some existing national formations while social breakdown in the wake of economic inequalities and the twin evils of poverty and repression tear apart the fabric of peace.

It seems that the era we are entering now may witness the institution of the nation-state being put on a harsher trial than any it has had to face in its history. Diverse forces are pulling it in diverse directions. In a politically stable environment, States are forming larger functional wholes; the outstanding example is the expected integration of the economies of the 12 industrial nations of Western Europe in 1992. Bearing in mind the trail of recurrent and internecine war blazed by nationalism in Europe until the middle of this century, this reformation carries a significance for the political evolution of the entire global community. On the opposite side, however, not a few States face the danger of decomposition as the sense of national affiliation is eroded by a variety of factors-political, economic or those relating to human rights. In many a case, fragile state structures are made even more vulnerable by lack of democratic accountability or by over-centralization. Extreme nationalism, violent ethnic rivalry, xenophobia and racial or cultural prejudice tend to fill a psychological void created by a perceived want of legitimacy or social justice. We cannot in this context forget that these destabilizing elements are not confined to any particular region of the world. Indeed, in the first half of this century, they led to cataclysmic consequences in Europe. Now, unless they are handled through ways implied in the Charter, they might ravage larger parts of the globe.

On a different level, economic forces make the nation-state more and more dependent on international co-operation. They do not permit that sense of self-sufficiency on which nationalism can thrive and isolationism take a stand. This is true both in settings of affluence and in conditions of deprivation. In the former case, with investment becoming increasingly transnational and horizontal alliances between corporations in different countries exerting greater weight on production, pricing, flow of resources and, to some extent, employment, it becomes more and more difficult for Governments to stabilize national economies without concerting policies with one another. Nor can the disruptive effects of hostile economic competition be dismissed. As for the less privileged countries, the very fact 'of dependence on external economic assistance entails profound political consequences. More often than not, the conditions on which it is rendered have an immediate impact on social situations.

How these processes will affect the world's political structure, whether the nation-state will be able to absorb the new pressures and, in so doing, undergo a change and how far into the future the present configuration of States will endure are questions that are difficult to answer, yet unwise to ignore. It is, however, plain that nationalism will become incapable of supporting State structures if it runs counter to international co-operation and becomes insensitive to the global concern for human rights.

Some people believe that the United Nations could develop an integrated plan for responding to these challenges. While such a plan might be conceivable in theory, it would be unworkable in practice as situations of diverse character arise. Moreover, not all the afflictions of societies can be remedied by multilateral action. The operative principles for such action derive from the full meaning of security in our time, from the relevance of economic and social developments to the issues of security and from the necessity to anticipate and prevent problems, help mitigate them should they occur and stimulate corrective measures to prevent them from recurring. This means maintaining a prompt, comprehensive and effective global watch rather than laying down a blueprint. It means monitoring transnational trends and developing the authority of the United Nations to the commensurate level.

For dealing with the new kinds of security challenges, regional arrangements or agencies can render assistance of great value. This presupposes the existence of the relationship between the United Nations and regional arrangements envisaged in Chapter VIII of the Charter. The defusion of tensions between States and the pacific settlement of local disputes are, in many cases, matters appropriate for regional action. The proviso, however, is that the efforts of regional agencies should be in harmony with those of the United Nations and in accordance with the Charter. This applies equally to regional arrangements in all areas of the globe, including those which might emerge in Europe. Moreover, the requirement stipulated in Article 54 of the Charter needs to be viewed not merely as a matter of form and procedure but as relating to the substance of the peace effort. If regional responses to situations affecting the maintenance of international peace and security and regional initiatives in dealing with them are supportive of the lines of policy indicated by the United Nations and do not sidetrack the United Nations, howsoever unwittingly, not only the coherence but also the effectiveness of a peace strategy would be greatly enhanced. Here again, it is the totality of the Charter rather than isolated elements of it that need to be brought to bear on the world situation.

There are many intangibles involved in the effort of building a just and stable order of peace that the world's statesmanship can discern. Some priorities have, however, been clearly identified through the work of the United Nations. The reduction of the level of weaponry and armed forces at the disposal of States, a universal human rights regime, a concerted response to the challenge posed by the deterioration of the environment and the population explosion, more equitable economic relations between nations and addressing the world's social problems are the main imperatives of the present situation. All bear upon peace.

A new security situation is being shaped at the global level by the rapid improvements in the relationship between East and West. Measures of disarmament, a long-sought goal of the international community, have finally moved into the realm of the possible.

We are witnessing a situation in which political developments have fast overtaken the cautious pace of negotiations to limit arms and armaments. The doctrines which dominated military thought and planning throughout the decades following the Second World War have suddenly lost their relevance and applicability. Appropriate security structures need to be found to replace the adversarial strategies of the past.

The significance of the current process goes far beyond the sheer numbers of arms and armed forces involved. It is now widely recognized that the process of creating a system of confidence-building measures is indispensable in removing the mistrust and misjudgements that have been the root causes of the arms race. This recognition has given new meaning to, and validated, the principle of seeking undiminished security at progressively lower levels of armaments and armed forces.

But to claim that we have navigated the rough waters and are now sheltered from the unexpected would be naive and dangerous. As the explosive developments in the Persian Gulf region have sharply demonstrated in the past few weeks, many challenges have to be squarely addressed before the present positive trend can be deemed irreversible and indeed world wide. A number of long-standing concerns still hinder peaceful relations, while new ones are added to the international agenda. The early 1990s provide an opportunity for arms limitation and disarmament that we cannot afford to squander.

The overarching question of nuclear weapons continues to pose a complex issue in the strategic equation. Three concerns, however, deserve to be underscored in this context.

The first is the vital importance of progress in the bilateral negotiating process between the United States and the Soviet Union for deep cuts in their strategic arsenals. This process should eventually be expanded to incorporate all other types of nuclear weapons, including those of the other nuclear-weapon States. As long as the declared policies of some States do not contemplate a nuclear-free world it is difficult to foresee the elimination of all nuclear weapons. However, the fostering of a moral and political climate in which such weapons are stigmatized and fore-sworn is no longer utopian.

The second concern pertains to the cessation of nuclear-weapon tests about which differences still persist. The achievement of a comprehensive test-ban treaty must remain the prime objective, but pending its attainment the number of tests conducted each year and their respective yields should and can be significantly reduced.

The third concern focuses on the crucial need to maintain a viable regime for the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. Since the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons was concluded in 1968, experience has revealed its shortcomings. It can be acknowledged that, in some ways, the Treaty imposes asymmetrical obligations. However, since no better arrangements have yet been devised, its basic aim of preventing nuclear proliferation must be upheld and promoted.

As we welcome the reduction of the nuclear stockpiles and hope that further reductions will follow, leading eventually to their elimination, it would be beyond reason to condone the emergence of any new nuclear-weapon State, potential or undeclared. The legitimate national security concerns of Member States must no doubt be fully met, but the acquisition of nuclear weapons by additional States would be as dangerous as the continuation of the nuclear-arms race among the nuclear-weapon States. Building effective barriers against nuclear-weapon proliferation, in all its aspects, must be a foremost priority. In this context I welcome the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in regions in which the interests of the States concerned coincide and where there is wide international support for their establishment.

The primacy of the issue of nuclear weapons cannot, and should not, deflect attention from other weapons of mass destruction, which continue to be a cause of deep and widespread anxiety. Chemical weapons have proliferated alarmingly and there is appalling danger of their actual use in conflicts. The basic issues involved have been brought to the forefront of multilateral negotiations this year. However, the breakthrough that all of us had hoped for has not yet occurred. The remaining obstacles could be overcome by judicious compromise combined with a focus on the main goal. The meeting of the Conference on Disarmament that has been proposed at ministerial level could, with adequate preparation, contribute to this aim. The work necessary for presenting the convention for urgent adherence by all Member States needs to be completed expeditiously. This would be the most effective way to end the menace that the possession of chemical weapons poses to humanity.

At long last, the industrialized countries that dispose of the largest concentration of conventional weapons have come near to reaching agreements in Vienna about a major reduction of such weapons. However, this positive trend is not mirrored in other parts of the globe. The military expenditures of the developing countries have been estimated recently to be nearly one fifth of the budgets of central Governments. During the period when, owing to chronic tensions, the major Power blocs were engaged in an unending arms race, it was difficult to argue that developing countries should institute the process of real disarmament. Now that the global situation has taken a turn for the better, it should be feasible for countries to seek their security at the lowest possible levels of armed forces and armaments.

Since almost all developing countries are largely importers of arms, the decreasing arms transfers in recent years could be construed as a positive trend. However, this decline in weapons imports is primarily due to the current economic difficulties experienced by developing countries rather than substantive changes in their defence postures. The basic prerequisite for reductions in military outlays and weapon purchases will be a change in the political climate marked by reduction of local tensions and the peaceful settlement of disputes as well as the development of regional confidence-building measures.

With significant arms reductions in prospect in Europe, the transfer of surplus weaponry to other parts of the world becomes a disturbing possibility. This gives added urgency to the quest for ways of restraining such transfers; all arms-supplying countries need to be mindful of their responsibility in this respect. I would urge earnest consideration to be given to establishing an international arms transfer register as a step towards curbing what has been a burgeoning trade.

It is, of course, vitally important to provide developing countries unimpeded access to the benefits of modern science and technology. This, however, should not mean that the quantitative arms race is replaced by a qualitative one and high-technology weapons are introduced that would destabilize regional and even global security. I would suggest that the international community make a special effort to clarify the important issues involved and produce clear and fair guidelines acceptable to all. This would remove a great deal of apprehension in a large number of countries that are affected by the supply policies currently applied by exporters of technology.

The process of transition from military to civilian economies may be unsettling and cause some economic disruptions in the short run, but apprehensions on that score must be allayed by considerations of the long-term benefits. A wider exchange of experiences and international co-operation in the area of conversion could help the adjustment process. I believe that the modalities and forms of such exchanges and co-operation will need to be elaborated. Recently, the Secretariat has organized several forums at which high-level discussions have deepened awareness of the issues involved.

The turn for the better in the field of arms limitation provides an impetus and a fresh sense of purpose to the disarmament machinery within the framework of the Organization. The United Nations Disarmament Commission has been reinvigorated by the recent rationalization of its work. The time is ripe to consider streamlining the work of other disarmament bodies as well. This is necessary for enabling the Organization to cope with issues requiring a concerted international effort.

Resolution of conflicts, observance of human rights and the promotion of development together weave the fabric of peace; if one of these strands is removed, the tissue will unravel.

This has been a motif of the thought and work of the United Nations over the years. Current experience strongly confirms the truth that respect for the organs and institutions of the State, national cohesion, the viability of political systems or social ideologies, sustained economic development and the stability of the international order all greatly depend on the observance and promotion of human rights.

The past year has seen the conversion of human rights from a subsidiary theme of the international discourse to a dominant concern. All over the world, there is a resurgent awareness that no social or political dispensation can, or should, endure that does not respect the dignity and worth of the human person, the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small.

From its very inception, the United Nations has engaged itself in elaborating human rights instruments and establishing bench-marks against which standards of behaviour can be measured. It has provided the world community with the International Bill of Human Rights, consisting of the Universal Declaration and the two International Covenants, under which the protection of fundamental rights is accepted as a permanent obligation. Under the Organization's auspices, many other legal instruments have been adopted to define these rights in various contexts. The 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development laid a basis for the integration of human rights concepts into the planning, execution and evaluation of development projects so that respect for human rights and the effectiveness of these projects are both strengthened and secured. The process of incorporating human rights in international conventions is a continuous one. This year, a proposal before the international community is the convention to protect the rights of migrant workers and their families—a group that is among the weakest and most vulnerable in society.

Legal instruments, however, provide but the foundation on which the structure of human rights can be based. It needs initiative, tact, opportunity and co-operation to secure their implementation. Very often, for instance, the Secretary-General has to exercise his good offices in this regard with the utmost confidentiality lest they prove counter-productive. There can be little doubt, however, of the faith and expectations that peoples all over the world place in the efforts of the United Nations to restore human rights where they are denied or violated.

The promising advances of the past year in democracy and human rights should not, however, let us forget the remorseless realities of the world in which we live. Hardly a day passes without bringing news of torture, killings, disappearances of individuals, firing on unarmed demonstrators, of violent suppression of dissidence, of discrimination and deprivation, which point up the gulf between our legal instrumentation and the conditions in which so many of our fellow human beings are condemned to live.

Our aim must be to narrow the gulf between aspiration and fact. Strong and effective international norms are essential, but they are not sufficient. At the national level, a deep-rooted and persuasive human rights culture and the means for its implementation must be nurtured and developed. The World Campaign for Human Rights launched by the United Nations seeks to create a focused awareness of the importance and content of human rights. Another programme for rendering services and technical assistance seeks to fur-

In striving to meet the human rights aspirations of all regions, the United Nations relies upon the commitment of non-governmental organizations and the courage and self-sacrifice of individuals throughout the world. They at times put their lives at risk to promote and secure human rights and they deserve our admiration and support. Our Organization should give its close attention to ways and means of assisting and protecting them in their tasks and of stimulating popular association with our ceaseless effort to make a human rights regime encompass the whole world.

The responsibility of the United Nations to monitor human rights situations has also become easier through the ability of the mass media, particularly through the work of conscientious correspondents, to report infringements of the norms of conduct. In many cases, if not all, gross violations of human rights are rapidly flashed around the globe and arouse moral outrage and protest. This, however, does not always act as an effective deterrent against the flouting of standards agreed to by the international community. The Organization's vigilance should ensure that the human wrongs committed are exposed and condemned so as to prevent their recurrence.

As progress is achieved, demands and expectations rise and the challenges before us continue to grow. I believe that much is at stake in our ability to meet them.

The Charter of the United Nations governs relations between States. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights pertains to relations between the State and the individual. The time has come to devise a covenant regulating relations between humankind and nature.

At present, human beings in their many activities have turned into nature's foes. Now nature is sending us a message: protect nature and survive or destroy nature and perish.

Nearly two decades have passed since the United Nations first put the question of the environment on the global agenda. Although the deterioration of the environment has not yet been arrested, there has been a universal awakening to the profound dangers involved. The solidarity of nations in resolving to meet this unprecedented challenge has been one of the most reassuring phenomena of recent years. The emergence of an "earth patriotism" has led to co-operative efforts at the national and the international levels to ensure that future generations inherit a revived planet. It is now generally acknowledged that both greed and waste, among the economically privileged, and the desperate struggle for survival, among the poor, have despoiled the resources of the earth.

While much has been done in the last few years, the campaign to restore the ecological health of our planet has only just begun. It is obviously necessary to develop an approach which addresses the interrelated issues of environment and economic development in a balanced way, taking into account the legitimate concerns of the developing countries. Indeed, now that the gulf between East and West has closed and there is a sense of common concern, the world community is provided with a long-sought opportunity to refocus its attention on the economic, social and environmental agenda and to adopt a blueprint for concerted action towards environmentally sound and sustainable development. The questions involved bring into sharp relief the interdependence of nations, rich and poor. By their very nature, therefore, they can stimulate perceptions and attitudes which should narrow the gulf between the North and the South.

The Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992, will consider conventions on such critical issues as climate change and biological diversity. It will endeavour to draw up agreements on basic principles to guide international behaviour and co-operation in respect of environment and development and address the complex issues involved in a comprehensive and integrated manner. It will also set an agenda for action into the twenty-first century, and consider the strengthening of relevant institutional mechanisms and processes. As we prepare for it, we must step up our efforts at all levels to prevent further environmental degradation. In this context, I welcome the results achieved at the World Climate Conference in London and at the meeting at Bergen held this year as part of the overall effort, in association with the United Nations system, to create better understanding of the problem and promote the search for solutions.

The initiative for halting environmental damage must no doubt lie, in the first place, with each country, and efforts are indeed being undertaken at the national and regional levels. New partnerships will need to be forged between Governments, the scientific community, industry, media and non-governmental and grass-roots organizations, to ensure the widest possible participation in this effort. Much work has also been done at the multilateral level. Last year, the Montreal Protocol on ozone depletion, adopted in 1987, came into force. An important step was taken when additional measures were subsequently agreed upon to meet the special needs of developing countries and a fund was established to facilitate transfer of ozone non-depleting technology to them.

A study has been under way, again under the auspices of the United Nations, of the pace, nature and impact of climatic change, and a conference scheduled to take place later this year will constitute another step forward in framing measures to halt the dangerous development of the greenhouse effect. These efforts will culminate, I hope, in the adoption of an international convention on climate change that is expected to be ready for signature at the Conference in 1992.

The increasing support being given to the Convention on the transboundary movement and disposal of hazardous wastes, which was adopted in Basel last year, has been encouraging. Additional guidelines on international trade in certain chemicals have been elaborated, and international codes of conduct, such as the one on the distribution and use of pesticides, expanded and refined. Other measures before the international community focus on building a network of monitoring, research and exchange of data on issues such as transboundary air pollution. An information exchange system continues to expand globally, responding to queries on environmental problems.

We do not have the excuse of ignorance now. The road towards environmental improvement is long, but the journey began with the recognition of our common vulnerability. It is nothing but a movement for survival.

VIII

The forces and pressures of economic life can pull nations together or they can drive them apart. One of the great challenges of the new era is to realize the possibilities of genuine co-operation to the maximum extent that the world's resources and capacities will permit. Lasting peace will necessarily require an improvement in the human condition. This, in turn, can only be achieved through productive patterns of interaction among all members of the international community. For this a renewed commitment and more focused efforts are required to stimulate and achieve economic development and social progress, particularly in the developing countries.

For over 40 years, tension between two ideological blocs influenced and shaped not only political systems but also economic relations. The world invested enormous resources, financial and human, in developing ingenious means for its own destruction. Now, in the post-cold war world, we have the opportunity to evolve a framework for equitable economic relations as well as security arrangements. This need assumes even greater importance as East-West ideological differences are replaced by the threat of global and regional tensions due to economic and social factors. An aspect of the present crisis in the Middle East is a grim reminder of the disruptive effects of disagreement on the price and supply of a crucial commodity.

The 1980s showed how elusive was the promise of the 1960s and the 1970s for economic betterment and social progress. Although a few countries, most of them in Asia, have made notable progress, three continents, by and large, are no better off today, and a disconcertingly large proportion of their populations are worse off than they were before those decades of hope and high aspirations. The great advances made in science and technology convince us further that it is both possible and necessary to ensure a better future for that large segment of humanity whose constant companion is hunger and disease.

We seem to forget that it is people who must be at the centre of all development and that their well-being cannot be assessed in monetary terms alone. A recent report prepared by the United Nations Development Programme analyses how economic growth translates-r fails to translate-into improving human lives. There has been encouraging progress in some countries in basic human development indicators such as life expectancy, literacy, nutrition and child mortality. But overall there has been an increase in poverty, disease and deprivation. Over-population and rapid urbanization not only create economic and social problems but also endanger security. Every year, they add millions to the poorest of the world, stifling development efforts and causing alarming increases in social ills such as crime and drug addiction.

If not addressed effectively, the cycle of poverty, population growth, low commodity prices, debt, economic stagnation, destruction of the environment, arms expenditure and the erosion of the social structures in many developing countries will undermine the stability of a global order of peace. Without concerted international action this could cause political, economic and social disorder across the globe. No nation can expect to remain unaffected. There is no room for complacency.

Development must, of course, rest on national efforts to build the necessary institutions and frame the policies through which it can flourish and be shared by all. If the will to do so is lacking or distracted, there are very narrow limits to what the international community can do to promote it. But where those national efforts have been seriously embarked upon they need external support and help. Unfortunately, the international economic environment has often frustrated what years of arduous development effort and foreign aid tried to achieve.

Almost 10 years of depressed commodity prices, increasing debt-servicing burden and under-funded structural adjustment programmes have seriously weakened the economies of a large number of developing countries and dangerously eroded the social cohesion in these societies.

Development has especially suffered in African countries. Their terms of trade have worsened more than those of any other continent and their infrastructure continues to be inadequate and is eroding in many countries. The international community needs to act speedily to augment support for Africa, particularly through increases in financial flows, debt forgiveness, trade liberalization and appropriate measures to deal with the commodity problem, including the stabilization of commodity prices.

The least developed countries, most of which are in Africa, face acute problems and remain marginalized in the fundamental transformations that are taking place in the world economy. At the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries efforts are under way to identify impediments to their development, and agree on urgent and far-reaching measures to reverse the present trends.

The distortions in the international economy are also reflected at the national level where parallel societies are growing apart, one rich and privileged and the other poor and dispossessed. In developing countries, it means the emergence of two societies, one having access to the levers of power and the other lacking it; the result is political and social instability. In industrialized societies, it manifests itself in tension and crime. National economic policies must address these contradictions and ensure that economic and social progress is shared by all.

At the present time, a number of short-term exigencies present themselves to the international community as the result of the crisis in the Middle East. The ability of the United Nations to cope with man-made disasters is once again being put to the test. It is apparent that the repercussions of this crisis will aggravate the economic problems of the international community and can wreak havoc on the economies of certain countries. The severity of these costs will depend on whether the conflict can be contained and how it is resolved. This notwithstanding, serious efforts need to be urgently made to mitigate the economic and social consequences of this crisis and to see how to provide a safety net for developing countries ill-equipped to cope with such situations.

Whatever the outcome of the present crisis, some issues of longer standing seem particularly important, all of them calling for far-sightedness and imagination in finding an adequate international response that would enable the developing countries to renew the process of growth and development.

The first is the problem of external indebtedness of the developing countries. It is now obvious that the magnitude and seriousness of this problem demands a comprehensive and truly decisive approach. The progressive deepening of the debt crisis, since 1982, constitutes a grave threat to the political, social and economic order in many of the affected countries. It is also a burdensome constraint on the international economy with adverse consequences even for creditor countries.

The most debilitating consequence of the debt problem is the large net transfers of financial resources from debtor countries to their creditors. Developing countries, which need to supplement their meagre internal savings with external finance, have now for over 10 years been providing the world economy with resources which they themselves urgently require for their own development. In 1989 alone, this net outflow of resources amounted to $US26 billion. These negative transfers must be eliminated quickly and eventually reversed. Debt and debt-service reduction have a central role to play in this regard. The ongoing efforts by private and official creditors as well as by multilateral financial institutions to address the debt problem need urgently to be broadened and intensified. A number of new and practical ideas for addressing commercial as well as official debt are now available, and I welcome the interest elicited by the report on external debt recently submitted by my personal representative.

Second, but equally critical, is the question of the international trade regime and the soon to be concluded Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations. The declared commitment of the industrialized countries to achieve substantial results is encouraging. However, the negotiations so far reveal that the interests and concerns of the economically weaker developing countries are not being fully taken into consideration. A balanced outcome that benefits all nations and that secures access for developing countries to the existing trading blocs as well as to the emerging big markets should be the main objective of the Uruguay Round. The vulnerability of the developing countries in these negotiations must not be used to extend or impose the national interests of major trading countries in ways detrimental to the functioning of the international trade and payments system over the long run.

Third, the instability and the continued depressed prices for commodities, which are the prime source of export earnings for most of the developing countries in Africa and Latin America, and to some extent Asia, are further impeding their efforts to diversify and revitalize their economies. Policies for diversification of these economies will need to be pursued and supported in a variety of ways, including the promotion of greater stability and higher commodity prices. To a large extent, existing commodity agreements have suffered and indeed failed to achieve their objectives because of inadequate financial resources. There is need to examine anew the modalities and functioning of international commodity agreements with a view to ensuring their effectiveness for both producers and consumers.

Fourth, the process of integration of the Soviet and the Eastern European economies into the international financial and trading regimes needs to be supported to ensure a smooth transition. The opening of this region to international trade presents a great opportunity for the world economy as a whole. Our common objective must be to ensure a positive transformation of Eastern European countries concurrently with the development of the developing countries. The commitment of the industrialized countries not to weaken their support for the developing nations is therefore central to this objective.

The complexity of international global economic problems, their interrelationships and their close links with social and political issues dictate a sounder management of the global economy. Already, the economic integration of Western Europe and the creation of trading blocs are raising apprehensions about access to these markets. It is also feared that these developments may lead to a fragmentation of the international trading system, exacerbate existing trade tensions and further marginalize the majority of the developing countries. I am also concerned about the increased reliance on bilateral and plurilateral arrangements rather than on multilateral rules for trade liberalization.

Conditions at the end of the Second World War influenced the shaping of international institutional arrangements for political and economic relations in the post-war period. For the past 25 years, major industrialized countries have periodically sought to co-ordinate their macro-economic policies outside the framework of existing multilateral institutions with varying degrees of success. Now, the more complex challenges of a new era such as preserving the health of our planet and combating drug abuse demand a global response. Systematic and institutionalized co-ordination of the global economy within these institutions would help achieve greater coherence in national and international strategies for eco-conomic and social development and ensure more disciplined economic behaviour by all.

We must utilize the experience of the past to develop a vision for our common future. The weaknesses and the strengths not only of the competing ideologies but also of a world order reflecting tension between them have become quite apparent. We know that the restructuring of economic systems will not by itself satisfy popular aspirations for social justice and equity. Indeed, the fundamental principles of social welfare and services, such as education, medical care, social security, housing and employment, will remain valid whatever the orientation of the ideology pursued.

A process of serious evaluation and a subtle transformation of international institutions has already begun. A more equitable and efficient system of economic relations should benefit from their strengths and advantages. At its special session on international co-operation last April, the General Assembly reaffirmed the special role of the Organization as a forum where central issues of importance to humanity can be addressed in an integrated manner. The renewal of multilateralism will enhance the capacity of the United Nations to respond to the challenges and opportunities of the post-cold war international order.

The transition to that order will inevitably be fraught with difficulties. During this period, we may witness intense competition among economic super-Powers or blocs not only to gain economic advantage but also to influence the shaping of the new rules of the game. The consequences for the global economy could be serious. The economic tension will affect prospects of a more peaceful international atmosphere where objectives of development and social progress could be pursued with greater determination. In these circumstances, how the United Nations, and particularly the Economic and Social Council, effectively addresses economic concerns and promotes legitimate aspirations in order to forestall conflict and reduce tensions assumes particular urgency.

The growing international consensus is contributing to a greater awareness of the close relationship between political and security considerations and economic and social issues. As the work of the Security Council demonstrates a new sense of purpose and a fresh determination to protect and promote peace, one should like to see a similar development in the Economic and Social Council. In this context, I welcome the decision of the Council to consider the implications of the evolution of the East-West relations for the world economy, and in particular the developing countries, at a high-level special meeting next year. I have consistently maintained that high-level and more focused meetings of the Council on important policy questions and developments will have a positive impact on the role and functioning of this body. A revitalized Council, meeting at ministerial level, could provide the framework for evolving economic and social policy guidelines which contribute to the process of promoting stability based on balanced economic development and social justice.

There is, however, a need for the United Nations, including its intergovernmental structures in the economic and social sector, to be more responsive to the emerging needs of, and new challenges faced by, the international community. As political rhetoric recedes, a higher degree of specialization will be needed to strengthen the technical underpinnings for the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

The sources of disorder and potential conflict in the world today are not confined to political tensions and economic disparities. An equal cause of derangement is the social crisis that has crossed all frontiers, regional or cultural. Now that common sense is beginning to replace the ideological obsessions of yesterday, sustained attention must be devoted to the ills that afflict society at present. Neither can diagnosis be attempted nor remedies prescribed in terms of one nation or group of nations alone; both approach and action need to be global.

The scourge that has been caused by widespread psychological and social dislocation takes its most pronounced form in drug abuse and trafficking. This inflicts damage at all levels: in addition to the strain on familial and social relations, there is the high cost to society in general—in terms of health care, in increased risk of accidents, in lost industrial productivity, and in the higher incidence of crime and threats to the civic order which have been the cause of so much misery in so many countries. Another danger associated with intravenous drug abusers is the high risk of spreading the AIDS pandemic.

The General Assembly, at its last session, took drug-abuse control as one of its main themes. This was followed by the convening of the seventeenth special session of the General Assembly, concentrating specifically on drugs. It led to the adoption of a political declaration and a global programme of action which will entail an improvement and widening of our existing efforts to combat drug abuse.

As with so many other programmes requiring priority attention, the resources currently available to the United Nations for drug abuse control are paltry compared to the magnitude of the problem. In order to make a tangible impact on drug abuse and trafficking world wide, very considerable additional funding would be necessary. Moreover, our existing institutional arrangements need to be streamlined and made more effective—a matter under serious consideration at present.

Comprehensive legal instruments have been drawn up over the years within the framework of the United Nations, culminating in the Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. The Convention will enter into force later this year. I would urge States that have not done so to ratify it without further delay and, even before this, to implement its provisions rigorously in order to fight this pestilence.

One of the darker aspects of the rapid societal change of the recent past is the upsurge in crime in many countries, particularly in its organized and transnational forms. This year, the Organization convened the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders at Havana. The Congress adopted important operational guidelines, standards and model agreements, which aim at intensifying the fight against crime at the national, regional and international levels and further improving the performance of criminal justice systems.

The growing world-wide recognition of the need to strengthen the rule of law in international relations was crystallized, at the last session of the General Assembly, in the declaration of the 1990s as the Decade of International Law. A notable achievement in this context, after nine years of negotiations, was the adoption by the General Assembly of the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries. This Convention will outlaw the activities of soldiers of fortune who so often were employed to destabilize the countries in which they operated and who indulged in plunder with impunity.

The campaign against grave afflictions is only one part of the global social strategy. Equally important is constructive action to revive basic social institutions and to end discrimination against, or ill-treatment of, some of society's major segments.

At the root of the problems confronting us is the breakup of basic social structures, leaving the individual shelterless against violent social pressures and disruptions. As the family is the basic unit of society, an agent of development as well as a support for the individual, the General Assembly last year decided to observe 1994 as the International Year of the Family. Fundamentally important in this context is the role of women. The recent activities of the world Organization on their behalf have included an appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, five years after their adoption, and the decision taken to convene a World Conference on Women in 1995. The tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women was another milestone: 103 Member States have ratified or acceded to the Convention.

It is children, however, who are the most vulnerable segment of society. The United Nations Children's Fund supported the initiative of Heads of State to hold a World Summit for Children here at United Nations Headquarters this year in order to promote commitment, at the highest political level, to goals and strategies for ensuring the survival, protection and well-being of children as key elements in social development. The occasion is remarkable for being the first summit of leaders from the North, the South, the East and the West and thus facilitating dialogue on a universal scale. Further efforts will have to be planned to address those issues that will most critically affect children in the decades ahead.

Last year, a landmark was reached when the General Assembly adopted the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which is the first legal instrument to define and lend content to children's rightful status in society. The emergence of an international consensus for strengthened multi-lateral co-operation focusing on children can be a development of far-reaching significance. It is particularly encouraging that this Convention came into force earlier this month, which was less than a year after its adoption—a very rapid pace indeed for an international treaty.

It is, however, chastening to observe that much of the progress we are making in repairing social structures and protecting the rights of women and children is threatened, and often reversed, by the explosion in population. The global population, now standing at 5.3 billion, increases by 250,000 every single day, or almost 1 billion in the span of 10 years. Well over 90 per cent of that growth will occur in the poorest countries. There is thus an unmanageable increase in the numbers to be fed, clothed and sheltered. This has over-strained the capacity of developing countries to provide employment, housing, infrastructure and related services. Unless this trend is arrested, there will be social chaos in large parts of the world.

Experience has shown that population and family planning programmes, working in unison with other social and economic development efforts, are effective in leading to the desired result.

The freedom of choice that flows from improved access to family planning, education and health care and enhanced status for women is crucial.

Efforts in this field need to be strengthened. The International Meeting on Population, planned for 1994, will provide a much-needed opportunity to review progress at the mid-point of the decade. At the same time, the world Organization will need to implement the provisions of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and deal with the increasing environmental degradation in order to provide the most basic needs for the world's peoples.

Forty years ago, the hope was entertained that the refugee problem would be temporary and easily manageable. The fact that the United Nations, through the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees, has to cope with refugee situations in undiminished numbers testifies to the frequency, persistence and severity of conflicts in the world today.

Regional conflicts continue to cause mass migrations. The exodus caused by the current crisis in the Persian Gulf is a most painful example of the disruptions in the lives of human beings, which are due to political upheavals. Some refugee situations have persisted and durable solutions have to be found for them. The international environment has become generally less receptive for refugees, asylum-seekers and displaced persons.

In Africa, civil strife continues to take a mounting toll of human lives. Grave social problems have developed with increasing numbers of internally and externally displaced people, the destruction of towns and villages and the isolation by war of communities from sources of essential supplies. The result has been destitution, homelessness and famine on a large scale.

In most cases, the Governments concerned have sought the help of the United Nations system. I have repeatedly emphasized that the cardinal principle of humanitarian programmes is that such help is neutral in nature and must be made available without discrimination to all in need and regardless of their location. It is equally vital that relief operations are assured of the full support and co-operation of the parties to the conflict, and that United Nations relief convoys and relief workers are given safe and secure access to the intended beneficiaries.

The settlement of political issues in some areas has brought immediate relief. In Namibia, for example, thousands of Namibians were repatriated as part of the independence plan for that country. Significant progress is also being made in South Africa, giving rise to the hope that a political settlement will bring an end to the conditions that have caused several thousand South Africans to seek refuge outside their country. This could also have a beneficial impact on an even larger number of Mozambicans who have been uprooted and displaced. In Central America, members of the Nicaraguan Resistance and their families were voluntarily demobilized and are being repatriated, and their safety upon return monitored. Voluntary repatriation of Salvadorians increased in late 1989 and early 1990.

Contrasted with these encouraging developments, however, are instances where initial expectations of settlement have not yet been fulfilled. Stalled by the difficult political situation in Afghanistan, over 3 million refugees remain in Pakistan, and over 2 million in Iran. The situation in Cambodia also awaits a political agreement, making the repatriation of hundreds of thousands of Cambodian refugees and displaced persons currently impossible. This means that the situation of refugees in South-East Asia, including Vietnamese and Lao asylum-seekers and refugees, continues to be a serious problem for the international community.

In Africa, despite progress in the southern part of the continent, the numbers of refugees are increasing. Malawi, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda, and, most recently, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone, all experienced additional or new influxes. Events in Mauritania and Senegal caused large-scale displacement of people from both countries. The biggest influx has been of nearly 500,000 Liberians escaping civil strife in their country.

To partially alleviate the human suffering, emergency assistance is rendered in difficult geographical conditions, marked by a desperate lack of resources and infrastructure. In co-operation with other agencies, the World Food Programme acts promptly to relieve hunger to the extent its resources permit.

Natural disasters also cause death, suffering and displacement on a large scale. It is a preoccupation of the Organization to provide help through the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator. The United Nations has taken a new approach to mitigate their catastrophic effects. The declaration by the General Assembly of the 1990s as the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction embodies a significant conceptual move from post-disaster response to pre-disaster preparedness. Too often in recent years the world has experienced huge population losses and immense economic plight due to endemic weaknesses in housing, infrastructure and other resources essential for rehabilitation. Considering recent earthquakes in the Soviet Union and Mexico, and this year in Iran and the Philippines, it is plain that the advances made by science and technology in our age could be utilized to minimize the devastation caused by such occurrences in vulnerable areas.

X I

It is clear from the foregoing that the past year has brought new tasks and fresh challenges, some unprecedented, to the Organization. Many new initiatives are already in prospect, and we enter the decade with greater capability to fulfil the enlarged role that is being assigned to the Organization. Additional responsibilities, however, mean new administrative and financial requirements.

Following the reform programme instituted by General Assembly resolution 41/213, the Secretariat has undergone a major internal restructuring and considerable reduction in staff. At the same time, new procedures have enhanced mutual confidence between Member States and the Secretariat in administrative and financial matters. By adopting all relevant resolutions without a vote, the last session of the General Assembly showed greater convergence of views on questions related to administration, budget and management. Equally encouraging were the consensus votes on revised estimates and the programme budget for 1990-1991.

The reforms in the budgetary process have thus concluded the first cycle and, I believe, have largely achieved their purpose. They have brought about a better awareness among Member States and within the Secretariat of the way in which the United Nations utilizes its resources, and encouraged their more judicious use. They have also largely allayed the concerns of the major contributors. This is the result of fruitful co-operation between all Member States and the Secretariat.

A fundamental requirement for enhanced organizational effectiveness is the availability of relevant and accurate information to managers. The creation of an integrated management information system that I proposed will facilitate decentralized management, while providing centralized access world wide. This system, which is scheduled to become operational in 1993, will enable us to analyse, plan and allocate resources in the most efficient manner.

The extraordinary expansion in field operations combining peace-making and peace-keeping has stretched both our human and financial resources. This is evident at the planning and preparatory as well as the executory stages.

Early and sound planning is essential to promote the chances of success, especially in cases of complex, multi-functional operations working within a narrow time-frame of which the Namibia undertaking was a prime example.

Unfortunately, such thorough advance preparation has become increasingly difficult because of the overall depletion in the Organization's resources. I find it inexplicable that many Member States of the United Nations fail to fulfil their financial obligations on time and in full, thus endangering the Organization's financial stability. To date this year, only 57 Governments have fully paid their assessed contributions for the regular budget. Currently, the Organization is owed about $660 million by its Members for the regular budget, which means that we have funds for only 24 further days of operation. Moreover, peace-keeping assessments unpaid by Member States now total an additional $436 million.

This is the bleak picture at a time when many hopes and expectations are being placed in the work of the United Nations. Day by day, new initiatives are brought to its legislative bodies: in peace-making or peace-keeping, in such matters as human rights, environmental protection and narcotics control, as well as in many other areas wherein co-ordination through the United Nations is vital. The weakness of the Organization's finances jeopardizes the desired projects, despite all the economies and the reforms we have effected. If all Governments do not meet their financial obligations fully, and within the proper time-frame, the Organization will not be able to play the role expected of it by the Governments and peoples of the world. That dismaying moment could be close at hand.

These circumstances of inability and constraint provide an ironical contrast to the impressive dedication and the skills demonstrated by the Organization's staff, often under extremely trying circumstances, in field operations and missions. Equally, staff at Headquarters have admirably shouldered increased responsibilities due to post reductions and to the absence of key personnel serving in missions abroad. The high standard of performance expected of United Nations staff has again pointed to the need to employ men and women of the highest calibre, with the widest geographical distribution and range of skills. Unfortunately, the United Nations has fallen seriously behind in the level of remuneration it offers and is, in many fields, no longer financially competitive. This fact is well known to Member States and I would urge them to earnestly consider remedial action. It should be recognized that the present situation affects the Organization's capacity to deliver results and it weakens the morale of the staff, which is so highly important at a time when the Organization is undergoing rapid change and when such heavy demands are being placed on its human resources.

Public perceptions of the United Nations, of its essentiality and its work have radically changed during the last two years. While earlier it was regarded in some circles as a tower of Babel and at best avenue for often fruitless diplomatic parleys, it is now seen as a centre of agreement and decision, a barrier against chaos in international relations and the one institution which can best assure that the actions of nations are governed by international law and respond to the demands of justice.

I believe this carries important policy implications for the Governments of Member States. They can draw strength from the widening peace constituency which exists in all countries-and whose concerns are so well articulated by non-governmental organizations, especially in the fields of disarmament, human rights and the environment. However, to do this and to be able in difficult situations to adjust their attitudes and policies to the Charter of the United Nations, Governments need to regard the Organization as a source of unique assistance to them in unravelling issues which touch other nations, in settling international disputes and in responding to the emerging challenges confronting the global society. The Charter needs to be viewed not as an external and onerous appendage but as a body of principles which must govern the life of every nation.

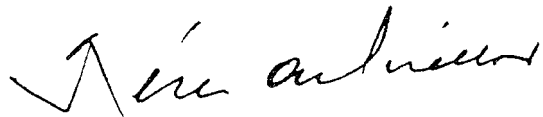

There is not, and there cannot be, an adversarial relation between the United Nations and any Member State. In situations of conflict, only the procedures of multilateralism as developed and employed by the United Nations can offer justice and dignified disengagement to the parties involved and to their supporters.

If there is anything plain from the evolution of international affairs, it is that neither in the current nor in any foreseeable situation can there be any Power or group of Powers which will have a limitless freedom of manoeuvre and the political capability to impose its own values or world view on others. This, however, does not detract in the slightest degree from the position of respect that a Power or group of Powers can command at the United Nations through its resources of knowledge and experience and its ability to take a lead in shaping the universal agenda. A changing, turbulent world may not sustain hegemonies, global or regional, but it is receptive to influence, especially the influence that comes from statesmanship and consistent conformity with international law. The greater the Power, the higher is the responsibility to act and to be seen to act with justice. This is true as much of States as of the Organization as a whole and of its organs.

I believe that it has been a wholesome development of recent years that the international discourse has been disburdened of excessive ideological or rhetorical baggage. It is far easier to accommodate contentious interests or claims, honestly stated, than to reconcile opposing doctrines. If the new mood of pragmatism which has released us from the thraldom of the cold war is to spread all over the world, nations need to shed the vestigial prejudices of former times and couch their dialogue in terms of common sense and plain justice. International morality should not be confused with moralistic stances which can conceal the truth of a situation. Since notions of legitimacy are sometimes bound to clash, the only safeguard against issues becoming intractable is recourse to the principles stated in the Charter and accepted by all nations.

A formative point has been reached in the world's struggle towards stability and well-being. Stability will not mean stasis. Peace will not bring the cessation of all conflict. It will only make conflicts manageable through means other than force or intimidation. In the words of one of the intellectual progenitors of the United Nations, Immanuel Kant, peace will mean "equilibrium in liveliest competition". The United Nations seeks to train our vision towards that end.

Political and security questions

Chapter I

International peace and security

The United Nations in 1990 continued efforts to help resolve persistent conflicts and to address new situations in various parts of the globe deemed to pose a threat to international peace and security.

The General Assembly stressed the need for further strengthening the role of the Organization in the maintenance of peace and security and in promoting respect for international law. In that regard, it encouraged the Secretary-General to continue to examine all aspects of peace-keeping operations to ensure that they were conducted in an efficient and cost-effective manner. Noting that those operations had become a valuable instrument in facilitating the settlement of international disputes, the Security Council affirmed its readiness to launch new peace-keeping operations as necessary in the interest of international peace and security in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

With respect to regional security problems, the Assembly urged co-operation with the Mediterranean States with a view to reducing tension, promoting peace and security and ensuring stability, prosperity and support for democratic processes. It called for co-operation in the promotion of the objectives of the 1986 declaration of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic and for ensuring the protection of the region from environmental damage.

Peace-keeping operations

The General Assembly in 1990 asserted that the increasing activities in the field of United Nations peace-keeping operations—which it considered an integral component of enhancing the effectiveness of the Organization in the maintenance of international peace and security—required greater human, financial and material resources for the Organization.

Over the course of the year, there were a total of 10 UN peace-keeping operations, two of which were terminated in March—the UN Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG), in Namibia, and the UN Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan (UNGOMAP). The remaining eight were: the UN Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP); the UN Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM); the UN Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA); the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL); the UN Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF); the UN Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO); the UN Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIIMOG); and the UN Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan (UNMOGIP). (See PART ONE, Chapter IV, and PART TWO, Chapters I, II, III and IV, for further information on these peace-keeping operations.)

The United Nations in 1990 established and dispatched to Haitian observer group for the verification of the December elections in that country. In addition, it had under consideration the possible establishment of a survey mission in Cambodia (formerly Democratic Kampuchea), an observer mission in El Salvador and a mission for the planned referendum for self-determination in the Territory of Western Sahara.

In the light of the significant increase in peace-keeping and related missions, the Secretary-General, on 4 January, established within the Secretariat a Senior Planning and Monitoring Group for Peace-keeping Operations to advise him on peace-keeping and related matters and on budget formulation and the monitoring and control of regular and extrabudgetary funds related to peace-keeping activities.

At its 1990 session, held from 7 to 10 May and on 29 June [A/45/330], the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations had before it a March report by the Secretary-General, with later addenda [A/AC.121/37 & Add.1-4]. Prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/49 [YUN 1989, p. 27], the report contained the replies from 15 Member States to his request for their observations and suggestions on all aspects of peace-keeping operations, in particular proposals to make those operations more effective. As a result of its consideration of those suggestions, the Committee adopted a series of conclusions and recommendations for transmittal to the Assembly.

Responding to further requests in the same resolution, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a number of other reports, among them one issued in May [A/45/217] providing a broad indication to Member States of the military personnel, material and technical resources and services required for UN peace-keeping operations. By means of a questionnaire based on that report, Member States were invited to identify which of those resources they would be prepared to contribute so that an indicative registry of available resources could be established. The remaining reports, prepared in September and October, concerned the use of civilian personnel in peace-keeping operations [A/45/502], model guidelines for the preparation of national training programmes for UN peace-keeping service [A/45/572], a model of status-of-forces agreement for peace-keeping operations [A/45/594], to serve as a basis for the drafting of individual agreements between the United Nations and host countries, and progress made in the preparation of standard operating procedures for peace-keeping operations [A/45/602], expected to be completed in early 1991.

The Secretary-General also reported on certain administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of peace-keeping operations (see PART SIX, Chapter I), specifically on measures taken to establish a support account [A/45/493] and on the feasibility and cost-effectiveness of a reserve stock of equipment and supply items for UN peace-keeping activities [A/45/493/Add.1].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council considered the item on UN peace-keeping operations on 30 May, when it authorized its President to make the following statement [S/21323] on its behalf:

The members of the Council note with satisfaction that the United Nations has in recent years played an increasingly important and active role in restoring and maintaining international peace and security. The peace-keeping operations of the United Nations have become a valuable instrument facilitating the settlement of international disputes. Recent successful peace-keeping operations have, for their part, contributed to the enhanced standing and effectiveness of the United Nations.

The members of the Council express their deep satisfaction with the growing support of the international community for United Nations peace-keeping and, in particular, with the participation of a growing number of Member States in the operations. They pay tribute to the Secretary-General and his staff for their tireless efforts in the conduct of those operations. They also commend States which have provided resources for such operations. Furthermore, they commend the peace-keeping forces for their exemplary and dedicated service in the cause of international peace and security.

The members of the Council consider it of vital importance that adequate resources are available for the preparation, deployment and maintenance of the United Nations peace-keeping operations. This must be underlined all the more in view of the new challenges in prospect. They urge Member States to respond positively and rapidly to requests from the Secretary-General for contributions of financial, human and material resources for the operations. They emphasize that the operations must be launched and maintained on a sound and secure financial basis and stress the importance of full and timely payments of assessed contributions. At the same time, they underscore that the operations must be planned and conducted with maximum efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

The members of the Council also emphasize the importance of political support by all Member States, and in particular by the parties concerned, for United Nations peace-keeping and for the action of the Secretary-General in conducting the operations. They stress that a peace-keeping operation is essentially a temporary measure, intended to facilitate the resolution of conflicts and disputes. Its mandate is not automatically renewable. Peace-keeping should never be construed as a substitute for the ultimate goal: an early negotiated settlement. In the light of this, the members of the Council will continue to examine carefully the mandate of each operation and, when necessary, vary it in response to prevailing circumstances.

The members of the Council, while recognizing the principle that 'peace-keeping should only be undertaken with the consent of the host countries and the parties concerned, urge the host countries and all parties involved to assist and facilitate in every way the successful and safe deployment and functioning of the United Nations peace-keeping operations in order to enable the fulfilment of their mandates, including the early conclusion of status-of-forces agreements with the United Nations and the provision of appropriate infrastructure support.

The members of the Council are encouraged by recent achievements of United Nations peace-keeping. Bearing in mind the primary responsibility of the Council under the Charter of the United Nations, they express their determination to continue to work jointly and in co-operation with the Secretary-General for the prevention and resolution of international conflicts. The members of the Council remain ready to consider launching new peace-keeping operations as and when necessary in the interest of international peace and security, in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter.

Meeting number. SC 2924.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/75.

Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects

Recalling its resolutions 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, 2006(XIX) of 18 February 1965, 2053 A (XX) of 15 Deember 1965, 2249(S-V) of 23 May 1967, 2308(XXII) of 13 December 1967, 2451(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2670(XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2835(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, 2965(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3091(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3239(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3457(XXX) of 10 December 1975, 31/105 of 15 December 1976, 32/106 of 15 December 1977, 33/114 of 18 December 1978, 34/53 of 23 November 1979, 35/121 of 11 December 1980, 36/37 of 18 November 1981, 37/93 of 10 December 1982, 38/81 of 15 December 1983, 39/97 of 14 December 1984, 40/163 of 16 December 1985, 41/67 of 3 December 1986, 42/161 of 8 December 1987, 43/59 A of 6 December 1988 and 44/49 of 8 December 1989,

Welcoming the progress made by the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations during its session in 1990 and, in particular, the agreement reached on a number of conclusions and recommendations,

Convinced that the United Nations peace-keeping operations are an integral component of enhancing the effectiveness of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security,

Taking into account that increasing activities in the field of United Nations peace-keeping require increasing human, financial and material resources for the Organization,

Aware of the extremely difficult financial situation of the United Nations peace-keeping forces and of the heavy burden on the troop contributors, especially those from developing countries,

Emphasizing that the current political atmosphere is propitious for achieving further progress in the work of the Special Committee.

Bearing in mind the fact that constructive exchanges of views on various practical aspects of peace-keeping operations can contribute favourably to the smooth and effective functioning of these operations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations;

2. Notes with appreciation the preparation by the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/49, of his report on requirements for United Nations peace-keeping operations and of a questionnaire on that subject;

3. Invites Member States to complete the questionnaire as soon as possible, in order to facilitate the early preparation by the Secretary-General of a registry, indicative in nature, of potential contributions by Member States of personnel, material and technical resources and services;

4. Looks forward to the completion by the Secretary-General of the other studies and documents requested in resolution 44/49;

5. Emphasizes again the need to ensure a secure and sound financial basis for United Nations peace-keeping operations;

6. Reiterates its call upon all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time and encourages again those States which can do so to make voluntary contributions that are acceptable to the Secretary-General;

7. Stresses the importance of the need to reimburse outstanding dues of troop-contributing countries;

8. Decides to consider, in the competent bodies, as a matter of priority, practical means of adequately securing the financing of the start-up phases of peace-keeping operations;

9. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to examine all aspects of peace-keeping operations in order to ensure that they are conducted in an efficient and cost-effective manner;

10. Welcomes the initiative of the Secretary-General in preparing a model agreement between the United Nations and Member States contributing personnel to peace-keeping operations, while maintaining the flexibility needed to encompass different possible circumstances;

11. Reiterates its appeal to host countries of any United Nations peace-keeping operations and all directly interested parties to extend all possible support in order to facilitate the deployment and functioning of such operations, and urges them to respect and safeguard the security of United Nations peace-keepers;

12. Urges again host countries to conclude status-of-forces agreements with the United Nations as soon as possible upon the establishment of a peace-keeping operation;

13. Considers that the composition of United Nations peace-keeping operations, taken as a whole, should be on a wide geographical basis, while the composition of each operation would be consistent with particular requirements thereof;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a detailed report on the successfully concluded operation of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group;

15. Welcomes the seminars and other exchanges of views on peace-keeping operations among Member States and interested organizations, with the participation of Secretariat officials, that have taken place and encourages the holding of regional and international seminars, in consultation with the Secretariat, as appropriate, in the future;

16. Again encourages Member States to establish training programmes for personnel for peace-keeping operations and looks forward to the completion by the Secretary-General, in accordance with resolution 44/49, of training manuals, which Member States might wish to use as guidelines for their training programmes;

17. Encourages those Member States with national or regional training programmes to give access to those programmes, as appropriate, to other interested Member States;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for Member States a factual report describing the responsibilities, functions and structures of the various Secretariat units dealing with peace-keeping operations, including details of overload posts;

19. Encourages studies on the possible application of high technology to peace-keeping operations, where it would enhance their efficiency;

20. Considers it useful to have further discussions, in the appropriate forums, including the Special Committee, on the possible fields for peace-keeping and on the further development of peace-keeping operations;

21. Invites the Secretary-General to consider appropriate ways of honouring the services of United Nations peace-keepers, bearing in mind that the United Nations peace-keeping forces were awarded the Nobel Prize for Peace in 1988;

22. Stresses the importance of maintaining the flow of information between the Secretariat and Member States, and encourages the Secretariat to continue its practice of providing regular informal briefings on current and potential peace-keeping operations;

23. Encourages States contributing personnel and other interested States to hold informal consultations, as appropriate, on operational and technical matters relating to the practical aspects of peace-keeping operations;

24. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the Secretariat to the work of the Special Committee, and encourages the further development of this co-operation;

25. Encourages the contribution to the Special Committee's work of experts and bodies having specialized expertise in peace-keeping and the conduct of peace-keeping operations;

26. Urges the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate, to continue its efforts for a comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects with a view to strengthening the role of the United Nations in this field, taking into account the difficult financial situation of peace-keeping operations and the need for maximum cost efficiency;

27. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States, including in the meetings of its working groups;

28. Invites Member States to submit any further observations and suggestions on peace-keeping operations to the Secretary-General by 1 March 1991, outlining proposals on specific items in order to allow for more detailed consideration of the Special Committee, with particular emphasis on practical proposals to make these operations more effective;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, within existing resources, a compilation of the above-mentioned observations and suggestions and to submit it to the Special Committee by 30 March 1991;

30. Requests the Special Committee to consider authorizing its Bureau to prepare, in advance of the commencement of the session in 1991, a draft working document based on the submissions of Member States to the Secretary-General, containing specific items and elements for possible consideration by the Special Committee;

31. Also requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

32. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects".

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/824 & Corr.1) without vote, 28 November (meeting 27); 6-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.26); agenda item 76.

Sponsors: Argentina, Canada, Egypt, Japan, Nigeria, Poland.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 5th Committee 42; SPC 17, 19, 21, 27; plenary 65.

By decision 45/455 of 21 December, the Assembly decided to retain on the agenda of its forty-fifth session the items on the comprehensive review of the whole question of peace-keeping operations in all their aspects and on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of those operations.

Special Committee membership

In 1990, the General Assembly, by decision 45/326 of 21 December, took note of the appointment of Germany as a member of the Special Committee on Peace-keeping Operations to fill the vacancy brought about by the accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany.

Security issues

Enhancing international peace and security

At its 1990 session [A/45/33], held in New York from 12 February to 2 March, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization considered two revised working papers on proposals for fact-finding by the United Nations in the field of the maintenance of international peace and security: one sponsored by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand and Spain [A/AC.182/L.60/Rev.1]; and the other by Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic [A/AC.182/L.62/Rev.1]. On the basis of the joint discussion of those two working papers, a unified text was subsequently prepared and presented to the Committee by the eight sponsors [A/AC.182/L.66]. Also examined was the Secretary-General's progress report [A/AC.182/L.64] on the preparation of a draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States.

On 28 November, the General Assembly, by resolution 45/44, requested the Special Committee to endeavour to complete consideration of the proposal on fact-finding and to submit its conclusions to the Assembly in 1991; as well as to consider the final text of the draft handbook with a view to recommending its publication to the Assembly in 1991. The Assembly thus requested the Secretary-General to complete preparation of the draft handbook for submission in final form to the February 1991 session of the Special Committee. By decision 45/412 of 28 November, the Assembly decided that the peaceful settlement of disputes between States should be examined within the framework of the programme for the United Nations Decade of International Law and in the Special Committee on the Charter.

In a related action, the Assembly, by decision 45/413, also of 28 November, requested the Secretary-General to circulate, for comments and suggestions, the document [A/45/143 & Corr.1] relating to the draft rules of the United Nations for the conciliation of disputes between States.

On 3 October, the USSR and the United States issued a joint statement [A/45/598-S/21854] on responsibility for peace and security in a changing world, involving promoting peace and security in all its aspects and a unitary United Nations, assuring needed financial resources and establishing a new sense of responsibility for peace.

(See also PART FIVE, Chapter II, for peaceful settlement of disputes, and Chapter IV, for UN Decade of International Law.)

Implementation of 1970 Declaration on Strengthening of International Security

The Secretary-General, in an October report [A/45/516], transmitted the replies from seven States to General Assembly resolution 44/126 [YUN 1989, p. 23] requesting Member States to submit their views on the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security [GA res. 2734(XXV)].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/80.

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

The General Assembly,

Conscious that the present stage of mankind's development is distinctive for its technological, economic and political changes, making overall progress possible towards the building of a more peaceful, secure, just, equitable, democratic and humane world,

Stressing that disarmament, the relaxation of international tension, respect for international law and for the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, especially the principles of the sovereign equality of States and the peaceful settlement of disputes and the injunction to refrain from the use or threat of use of force in international relations, respect for the right to self-determination and national independence: economic and social development, the complete eradication of colonialism, apartheid and all other forms of racism and racial discrimination, aggression and occupation, and respect for human rights are closely related and provide the basis for international peace and security.

Welcoming the recent positive changes in the international order, characterized by the end of the cold war and the relaxation of tensions on the global level and the emergence of a new spirit governing international relations,

Welcoming also, in this context, that a number of conflicts and hostilities are being resolved through negotiations in an atmosphere of understanding and co-operation,

Welcoming further the wide-ranging dialogue between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, with its positive effects on world developments, and expressing its hope that this process will continue and expand with a view to promoting further international peace and security and co-operation,

Expressing the hope that the positive trends that started in Europe, where a new system of security and co-operation is being built through the process of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, will continue and will encourage similar trends in other parts of the world,

Expressing at the same time its serious concern over the persisting conflicts and problems and the new threats to international peace and security and its support for all efforts towards a peaceful and just resolution of hotbeds of crisis in the world, including further military disengagement,

Stressing the need for the strengthening of international security through disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament leading up to the elimination of all nuclear weapons, and restraints on the qualitative and quantitative escalation of the arms race,

Stressing also the growing importance of the relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

Considering that there can be no stable and lasting peace and security in the world without the resolution of grave economic problems, particularly the requirements of economic development of developing countries,

Considering also in this context that the economic situation in the developing countries has deteriorated dramatically, widening further the gap between developed and developing countries, especially in the least developed ones,

Considering further that the protection of the environment has emerged as a major global concern, dramatically emphasizing the growing interdependence of the world, which calls for urgent co-operative measures ensuring sustainable and environmentally sound development,

Stressing that the promotion of freedom and human rights is one of the basic objectives of the world community,

Deeply concerned that racism and discrimination based on colour, creed, ethnic origin, culture or way of life are still practised,

Strongly emphasizing that apartheid is a particular and repugnant form of institutionalized racism, which civilized nations have rightly condemned as a crime against humanity,

Reaffirming that the United Nations is the fundamental instrument for regulating international relations and resolving international problems and that its main organs, particularly the Security Council, are responsible for the maintenance and effective promotion of international peace and security,

1. Reaffirms the continuing validity of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, and calls upon all States to contribute effectively to its implementation;

2. Reaffirms also that all States must abide strictly, in their international relations, by their commitment to the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Emphasizes that, until an enduring and stable universal peace based on a comprehensive, viable and readily implementable structure of international security is established, peace, the achievement of disarmament and the settlement of disputes by peaceful means continue to be the first and foremost task of the international community;

4. Calls upon all States to refrain from the use or threat of use of force, intervention, interference, aggression, foreign occupation and colonial domination or measures of political and economic coercion which violate the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of other States, as well as the permanent sovereignty of peoples over their natural resources;

5. Also calls upon all States to seek, through utilization of the means provided for in the Charter, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the elimination of the focal points of crisis and tension, which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

6. Stresses the need for further strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of peace and security and promoting respect for international law, as well as in economic and social development and progress for the benefit of mankind;

7. Welcomes the recent active involvement of the Security Council, in pursuance of its primary responsibility in the maintenance of international peace and security, and expresses the hope that it will continue in this spirit to address other threats to international peace and security;

8. Urges all States, in particular the nuclear-weapon States and other militarily significant States, to take further immediate steps aimed at promoting and using effectively the system of collective security as envisaged in the Charter, as well as halting effectively the arms race with the aim of achieving general and complete disarmament under effective international control, and implementing the recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

9. Emphasizes that the sustained growth and development of the world economy, particularly that of the developing countries, and the solution of their economic problems, are basic prerequisites for the strengthening of international peace and security;

10. Stresses the need for a balanced development of the world economy and for redressing the present asymmetry and inequality in economic and technological development between the developed and developing countries through, inter alia, a more broad-based management of the world economy to reflect the interests of all countries;

11. Considers that respect for and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all aspects and the strengthening of international peace and security mutually reinforce each other;

12. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist regimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

13. Reaffirms also the responsibility of the United Nations on the question of the dismantling of apartheid, and calls for the full implementation of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly at its sixteenth special session;

14. Reaffirms further that the democratization of international relations is an imperative necessity, and stresses its belief that the United Nations offers the best framework for the promotion of this goal;

15. Invites Member States to submit their views on the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, particularly in the light of recent developments in the field of international security and co-operation, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the basis of the replies received;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Implementation of the 1978

Declaration on societies and peace

As requested by General Assembly resolution 42/91 [YUN 1987, p. 116], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/45/575] on implementation of the 1978 Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace [GA res. 33/73]. The report contained the replies from 10 Member States to his request for information on progress in their implementation efforts, as well as a summary of the relevant activities of the Secretariat and two of the specialized agencies of the UN system.

In considering plans for future action, the Secretary-General noted that the Declaration provided an important guideline for international and national activities, and that the process of preparing societies for life in peace was a continuing one, which could not be accomplished through a single programme or initiative, but rather through a variety of projects and orientations. He also stated that further review of the process should be conducted in the context of UN action for the promotion of peace.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/81.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace The General Assembly,

Aware of the overwhelming desire to maintain peaceful and secure conditions for the social and economic development of all nations,

Recalling the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, contained in its resolution 33/73 of 15 December 1978,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Recognizes the impact that the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace has exerted in efforts designed to promote international peace and security and to raise public awareness of their importance for the future of nations;

2. Commends all Governments, the United Nations and the concerned organizations of its system and other international as well as national organizations—both governmental and non-governmental—for their valuable contribution to the implementation of the principles and objectives of the Declaration;

3. Invites all States to guide themselves in their activities by principles enshrined in the Declaration aimed at establishing, maintaining and strengthening a just and durable peace for present and future generations;

4. Appeals to all States to continue utilizing the United Nations potential to strengthen international peace and security, confidence and understanding as well as mutually beneficial co-operation among States in the common interest of all mankind.

Regional issues

Security and co-operation in the Mediterranean

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/125 [YUN 1989, p. 29], the Secretary-General submitted a November 1990 report

[A/45/713] on strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region. Besides presenting a summary of the debate on the question during the Assembly's forty-fourth session, the Secretary-General also included six replies from Member States in response to his request for their views.

In related developments, the Third Ministerial Conference of the Mediterranean Non-Aligned Countries (Algiers, Algeria, 25-26 June) [A/45/357] adopted a declaration on the prospects of global dialogue on security and co-operation in the Mediterranean. By the declaration, the Ministers stated, among other things, their conviction that an open and sustained dialogue as well as intensive contacts and co-operation would increase mutual understanding and trust, thus promoting stability, security and peace in the region. They further asserted their will to explore all possibilities likely to help achieve those common objectives of the region's non-aligned and European countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/79.

Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including its resolution 44/125 of 15 December 1989,

Recognizing the importance of intensifying and promoting peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and of strengthening further the economic, commercial and cultural links in the region,

Reaffirming the primary role of the Mediterranean countries in the promotion of peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region,

Expressing concern at the persistent tension and continuing military operations and activities in parts of the Mediterranean region and the consequent threat to peace and security,

Welcoming the favourable developments in international political relations, and expressing the hope that the enhancement of security and co-operation, particularly in Europe, will also have a positive impact on the Mediterranean region,

Reaffirming the responsibility of all States to conform in their actions to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as to the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing the efforts realized so far and the determination expressed by the Mediterranean countries to intensify the process of dialogue and consultations aimed at promoting peace, security and co-operation in the region,

Recognizing also the desire of the Mediterranean countries that the needs of their region be taken into account in ongoing and future negotiations relating to international security and disarmament, particularly on the enhancement of security and co-operation in Europe,

Recognizing further the indivisible character of security in the Mediterranean and the need to ensure that all actions are aimed towards the promotion of peace, security and co-operation in the region,

Noting with satisfaction the greater awareness in Europe of the need for interdependent action in the Mediterranean with the aim of contributing to reducing tension, improving good-neighbourly relations and fostering political, cultural and economic progress in the region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on this item,

1. Reaffirms that security in the Mediterranean is closely linked to European security as well as to international peace and security;

2. Welcomes the determination expressed by Mediterranean countries to intensify their efforts to promote dialogue and co-operation in the region in order to achieve through peaceful settlement just and lasting solutions to those crises which still threaten regional peace and stability, thus ensuring the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and the right of peoples under colonial or foreign domination to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Takes note of the conclusions of the Third Ministerial Conference of the Mediterranean Non-Aligned Countries, held at Algiers in June 1990, and of the expressed conviction that an open and 'sustained dialogue as well as intensive co-operation would increase mutual understanding and trust, thus promoting stability, security and peace in the region;

4. Express satisfaction at the progress achieved within the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, which has increased substantially the possibilities of implementing the commitment made by the States participating in the Conference to intensify political dialogue and co-operation with all Mediterranean countries in order to strengthen security and work towards the relaxation of tensions and the settlement of crises and conflicts, as well as towards the development of co-operation in the Mediterranean;

5. Takes note of the report of the Meeting on the Mediterranean of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held at Palma de Mallorca in September and October 1990, which, inter alia, reaffirmed the commitment of the States participating in the Conference to, and stressed the continuing relevance of, the provisions of the Conference concerning security and co-operation in the Mediterranean;

6. Notes the widespread support among Mediterranean countries for the proposal to convene a conference on security and co-operation in the Mediterranean and their willingness to open regional consultations with a view to creating the appropriate conditions for the initiation of such a process;

7. Notes also the progress already achieved in other initiatives promoting security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region, in particular, the 83rd Inter-parliamentary Conference, held at Nicosia in April 1990, the first Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Western Mediterranean, held at Rome in October 1990, the Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Balkan States, held at Tirana in October 1990, and the meetings of the Arab Maghreb Union;

8. Emphasizes the need for just and peaceful settlement of persistent problems in the region, for respecting and safeguarding the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all countries and peoples of the Mediterranean and for full adherence to the principles of non-use of force or threat of use of force and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

9. Urges all States to co-operate with the Mediterranean States in the intensification of existing forms of co-operation in various fields, with a view to reducing tension, promoting peace and security and ensuring stability, prosperity and support for democratic processes, economic reforms and development in the countries of the region in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter;

10. Encourages efforts to eliminate the economic and social disparities in levels of development and to promote durable growth of the Mediterranean States, particularly the developing States of the region, which are displaying sustained efforts to adjust and which are making sacrifices in a still unfavourable environment;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to pay close attention to the question of peace, security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region and, if requested to do so, to render advice and assistance to Mediterranean countries in their concerted efforts in promoting peace, security and co-operation in the region;

12. Invites all Member States, as well as the relevant regional organizations and subregional groupings, to communicate to the Secretary-General concrete ideas and suggestions concerning this issue, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled 'Strengthening of security and co-operation in the Mediterranean region'.

South Atlantic zone of peace

In furtherance of actions aimed at fulfilling the goals of the "Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic", declared as such by General Assembly resolution 41/11 [YUN 1986, p. 369], the States of the zone held their second meeting in 1990 (Abuja, Nigeria, 25-29 June) [A/45/474], at the end of which they issued a final document.

By that document, the States reaffirmed that the questions of peace and security and of development were interrelated and that co-operation among them was essential to promoting the objectives of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic. The States urged all zone members, particularly those with relevant capabilities, to co-operate to establish joint monitoring mechanisms in the South Atlantic, including coastal watch, and stressed the need for peaceful and legitimate maritime transactions in the South Atlantic Ocean that excluded outside foreign interference, military rivalry and nuclear weapons competition. They called for co-operation and co-ordination of policies in such activities as trade fairs, foreign investment promotions, exchanges of commercial and trade intelligence information and of information on investment opportunities, and provision of other relevant basic data; and agreed that increased trade and commercial co-operation would be facilitated through the setting up of ad hoc groups of experts in key areas of interest. The States further decided to strengthen the mechanism for monitoring, collating and disseminating information and data on the movement in the region of vessels suspected of carrying hazardous, toxic and nuclear wastes and reiterated their preoccupation that neighbouring Antarctica be safeguarded from environmental pollution. They emphasized the need to strengthen the links in the fields of culture, education and public information and to promote tourism. The States additionally welcomed Namibia-which had recently acceded to independence and membership of the United Nations-as a member of the zone.

Also during the year, the group of experts on law of the sea of the States members of the zone held its first meeting (Brazzaville, Congo, 12-15 June). The group attached particular importance to problems related to the implementation in the region of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea [YUN 1982, p. 181], as well as to areas of co-operation, including a review of national maritime policies of the States of the zone and harmonization of national legislation.

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/20 [YUN 1989, p. 30], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/45/653] containing the views of seven Governments on implementation of the declaration of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 27 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/36.

Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/11 of 27 October 1986, in which it solemnly declared the Atlantic Ocean, in the region situated between Africa and South America, the "Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic",

Recalling also its resolution 42/16 of 10 November 1987, in which it urged States of the region to continue their actions aiming at fulfilling the goals of the declaration, especially through the adoption and implementation of specific programmes for this purpose, its resolution 43/23 of 14 November 1988, in which it commended initiatives by States of the zone to promote peace and regional co-operation in the South Atlantic, and its resolution 44/20 of 14 November 1989, in which it noted with appreciation the efforts of States of the zone towards fulfilling the goals of the declaration,

Reaffirming that the questions of peace and security and those of development are interrelated and inseparable, and considering that co-operation among all States, in particular those of the region, for peace and development is essential to promote the objectives of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic,

Also reaffirming the determination of the States of the zone to accelerate their co-operation in political, economic, scientific, technical, cultural and other spheres,

Aware of the importance that the States of the zone attach to the preservation of the region's environment and recognizing the threat that pollution from any source poses to the marine and coastal environment, its ecological balance and its resources,

Also aware of the importance of the South Atlantic to global maritime and commercial transactions, and determined to preserve the region for all activities enshrined in relevant international law, including the freedom of navigation in the high seas,

Noting with satisfaction the various initiatives of the States of the zone to contribute to the achievement of the objectives of the zone,

1. Takes note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 44/20;

2. Calls upon all States to co-operate in the promotion of the objectives of peace and co-operation established in the declaration of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic and to refrain from any action inconsistent with those objectives, as well as with the Charter of the United Nations and relevant resolutions of the Organization, particularly actions which may create or aggravate situations of tension and potential conflict in the region;

3. Welcomes the holding of the second meeting of the States of the zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic at Abuja, Nigeria, from 25 to 29 June 1990, and takes note of the final document of the meeting;

4. Also welcomes the independence of Namibia, its admission as a member of the community of the States of the zone and its participation in the activities of the zone, and calls upon the international community to render necessary assistance to Namibia in the areas of its defined needs in order to consolidate its independence and sovereignty;

5. Urges all States to abstain from transferring into and disposing within the region hazardous, toxic and nuclear wastes and notes the determination of the States of the zone to establish a mechanism aimed at monitoring, collating and disseminating information and data on the movement of hazardous, toxic and nuclear wastes within the region;

6. Emphasizes the imperative need to preserve the environment of the region and urges all States to take the necessary measures in order to ensure its protection from environmental damage;

7. Welcomes with appreciation the assistance that the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme have extended towards the convening by the States of the zone of a seminar of a group of experts held at Brazzaville, from 12 to 15 June 1990, which was devoted to the review of the development and implementation of the legal regime established by the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, and looks forward to the convening of the second seminar on the subject in Uruguay in 1991, particularly with a view of its indication of specific areas for co-operation by the States of the zone, on all common marine programmes;

8. Expresses support for the determination of the States of the zone that technical co-operation among developing countries be recognized as activities that can be financed by the United Nations Development Programme, and requests the United Nations as well as other relevant international bodies to assist the States of the zone in the realization of their needs in this regard, at their request;

9. Also expresses support for the aspirations of the States of the zone to make it an active instrument for fostering human rights, fundamental freedoms, racial equality, justice and liberty as integral elements of peace, development and co-operation at national and regional levels;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the implementation of resolution 41/11 under review and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, taking into account, inter alia, the views expressed by Member States;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Zone of peace and co-operation of the South Atlantic".

Other issues

Right of peoples to peace

The Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 43/22 [YUN 1988, p. 31], submitted an October report with a later addendum [A/45/546 g. Add.1], reviewing measures taken by eight Member States and six UN bodies and international organizations to implement the 1984 Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace [GA res. 39/11].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/14.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace

Recalling the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace, adopted in its resolution 39/11 of 12 November 1984,

Stressing that the emerging new positive trends and events in international relations are becoming increasingly conducive to strengthening universal peace and security and to implementing the spirit and letter of the Declaration,

Noting with satisfaction the renaissance of the peace-keeping and peace-making potential of the United Nations,

Having in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which emphasizes that recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Having in mind also its resolution 44/21 of 15 November 1989, which, inter alia, calls upon all States to intensify their practical efforts towards ensuring international peace and security in all its aspects through co-operative means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace;

2. Reaffirms the lasting importance of the objectives of the Declaration;

3. Emphasizes the importance of the efforts at the national and international levels towards the implementation of the Declaration, having in view, especially, the need for all States to abide by the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, to respect the principles of sovereign equality, political independence and territorial integrity of States and non-intervention in internal affairs, to refrain from the threat or use of force inconsistent with the Charter, to settle disputes peacefully, to adhere to the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and co-operation among States, and to comply in good faith with their obligations assumed in accordance with the Charter;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the implementation of the Declaration under review and report on this matter as required.

Science and peace

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 43/61 [YUN 1988, p. 32] proclaiming the week of 11 November each year "International Week of Science and Peace", the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/45/601] describing the highlights of the 1989 observance of the Week. He noted that several Member States had informed the Secretariat of plans for the 1990 observance and that the Peace Studies Unit of the Secretariat's Department of Political and Security Council Affairs was exploring the feasibility of organizing a meeting of scientists who composed the international co-ordinating committee for the Week. The Secretary-General concluded that the annual observance of the Week was making an important contribution to the promotion of peace and encouraged greater academic exchange on a subject of universal importance while also generating greater awareness of the relationship of science and peace among the general public.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/70.

Science and peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/61 of 6 December 1988, in which it proclaimed the "International Week of Science and Peace", which would take place each year during the week in which 11 November falls.

Recognizing that this celebration has generated a series of activities and initiatives leading to the study and dissemination of information on the links between progress in science and technology and the maintenance of peace and security,

Considering that progress in science and technology profoundly affects international peace and security, economic and social development, respect for human rights and many other aspects of civilization and culture,

Considering also that political and economic decisions have a decisive effect on the direction of scientific research and the use of the results obtained thereby,

Affirming that it is necessary to promote greater awareness among scientists world wide of the usefulness of science to increase international peace, security and co-operation, the social and economic development of mankind, the promotion of human rights and the protection of the environment,

Affirming in particular, the need for scientists to establish a free and open dialogue between one another, and with political leaders and the public in general, with regard to scientific developments and their present and potential implications for our civilization,

Considering the importance of encouraging scientists to work towards constructive objectives, to improve the climate for arms control and disarmament, and to promote a dialogue on important topics in connection with the positive contributions that scientific knowledge can make to peace, security and ecological balance,

Considering also that the celebration each year of a special week of action devoted to the topic "Science and peace" is an important means of generating and increasing public interest in this topic,

Noting with appreciation the joint efforts made by scientists and members of other professional groups to promote the achievement of those aims through the holding of the First International Week of Scientists for Peace from 10 to 16 November 1986 and every year since then during the week in which 11 November falls,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the observance of the International Week of Science and Peace in 1989 and the wide variety of activities that took place in connection with this event;

2. Urges Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to encourage universities and other institutions of advanced study, scientific academies and institutes, and professional associations and individuals in the scientific community to hold, during that Week, lectures, seminars, special debates and other activities conducive to the study and dissemination of information on the links between progress in science and technology and the maintenance of peace and security;

3. Urges Member States to promote international co-operation among scientists by facilitating exchanges of experts and information;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of Member States and interested organizations to the importance of the International Week of Science and Peace and invite them to report to him on their activities and initiatives in connection with this event, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Chapter II

Disarmament

The United Nations in 1990 continued to play a major role in global and regional efforts to achieve disarmament. In December, the General Assembly declared the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade, stressing its desire that the current momentum in the disarmament process be maintained, and its conviction that the Third Decade would accelerate that process.

Nuclear disarmament and related topics were the subject of many of the resolutions and decisions adopted by the world body at its forty-fifth session, including those related to bilateral negotiations, cessation of nuclear tests, a nuclear freeze, and strengthening the security of non-nuclear-weapon States, among others. In August, the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons was convened in Geneva. The General Assembly, in December, stating its conviction that the existence and use of nuclear weapons posed the greatest threat to the survival of mankind, urged that agreement be reached on the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons.

Both the Conference on Disarmament and the Disarmament Commission also met during the year. The 40-member Conference, the world's only multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, continued negotiations on a chemical weapons ban and considered a comprehensive programme of disarmament, among other things. The General Assembly, in reviewing the work of the Conference, stated that in the current international climate, it was more than ever imperative to give a new impetus to the immediate future negotiations on disarmament at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in this area.

The Disarmament Commission, in addition to recommending approval of the Third Disarmament Decade, dealt with the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament; South Africa's nuclear capability; conventional disarmament; and naval armaments and disarmament. It also dealt with various aspects of the nuclear-arms race and ways to eliminate the dangers of nuclear war.

Other disarmament topics under United Nations scrutiny in 1990 included: various aspects of conventional weapons disarmament, confidence-building, prevention of an arms race in outer space, technological change and global security, and disarmament and development.

Regional centres for disarmament, nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace were also considered. Expert disarmament studies reviewed by the General Assembly included one on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification.

General aspects

UN disarmament bodies

The United Nations continued its disarmament efforts in 1990 mainly through the General Assembly and its First Committee (Disarmament and Related International Security Questions), the Disarmament Commission (a deliberative body) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum which met in Geneva).

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, composed of all UN Member States, held eight plenary meetings at its 1990 session (New York, 7-29 May) [A/45/42].

The Commission's agenda included items on various aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, in order to expedite negotiations aimed at effective elimination of the danger of nuclear war; elaborating a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament; South Africa's nuclear capability; naval armaments and disarmament; issues related to conventional disarmament; review of the United Nations role in disarmament; consideration of the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade; and objective information on military matters.

The Commission established a Committee of the Whole, four working groups and a consultation group to deal with its agenda items. Working Group I dealt with South Africa's nuclear capability and adopted conclusions and recommendations on the subject, which were included in the Commission's report to the General Assembly. Working Group II reviewed the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament and adopted the text on the subject which was also included in the report of the Commission to the Assembly, while Working Group III continued discussion on conventional disarmament. Working Group IV adopted a draft Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade. The consultation group on objective information on military matters also reported to the Commission. The item on naval armaments and disarmament was discussed in open-ended consultations, the findings and recommendations of which were contained in a working paper by the Chairman, which was annexed to the Commission's report.

On 7 May, the Commission adopted a document on ways and means to enhance its functioning, which was elaborated by the General Assembly in 1989 and adopted in its resolution 44/119 C [YUN 1989, p. 35].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/62 B.

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the annual report of the Disarmament Commission,

Emphasizing again the importance of an effective follow-up to the relevant recommendations and decisions contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Taking into account the relevant sections of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament,

Also taking into account widespread views expressed during the fifteenth special session of the General Assembly, the third special session devoted to disarmament,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions of the tenth special session,

Recalling its resolutions 33/71 H of 14 December 1978, 34/83 H of 11 December 1979, 35/152 F of 12 December 1980, 36/92 B of 9 December 1981, 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, 38/183 E of 20 December 1983, 39/148 R of 17 December 1984, 40/152 F of 16 December 1985, 41/86 E of 4 December 1986, 42/42 G of 30 November 1987, 43/78 A of 7 December 1988 and 44/119 C of 15 December 1989,

1. Takes note of the annual report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Notes with appreciation that the Disarmament Commission has concluded its consideration of all substantive items on its agenda, except the item on objective information on military matters;

3. Commends the Disarmament Commission for its adoption by consensus of the specific recommendations on the following subjects on its agenda: (a) South

Africa's nuclear capability, (b) the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, (c) conventional disarmament and (d) the draft Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade;

4.. Notes that the findings and recommendations contained in the report of the Chairman of the Disarmament Commission on the item regarding naval armaments and disarmament are endorsed by all participants in his consultations;

5.. Also notes that no consensus could be reached on specific recommendations for the item regarding various aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, as well as a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament;

6. Recalls the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

7. Stresses the importance for the Disarmament Commission of working on the basis of a relevant agenda of disarmament topics, thereby enabling the Commission to concentrate its efforts and thus optimize its progress on specific subjects in accordance with resolution 37/78 H;

8. Notes with satisfaction that the Disarmament Commission adopted by consensus a set of "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission" at its 1990 substantive session;

9. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of resolution 37/78 H, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items on its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

10. Recommends that the Disarmament Commission, as a result of consultations, adopt at its 1990 organizational session the following substantive items for inclusion in the working agenda of the 1991 session of the Commission:

(1) Objective information on military matters;

(2) Process of nuclear disarmament in the framework of international peace and security with the objective of the elimination of nuclear weapons;

(3) Regional approach to disarmament within the context of global security;

(4) The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields;

11. Also requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1991 and to submit a substantive report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the annual report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages, and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services to this end:

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

General Assembly resolution 45/62 B

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/782) without vote, 16 November (meeting 39); 18-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.12/Rev.1); agenda item 60 (a). Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 38, 39; plenary 54.

UN role in disarmament

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/116 Q [YUN 1989, p. 37], the Disarmament Commission continued its consideration of the role of the United Nations in the area of disarmament. Working Group II, established on 7 May to deal with the topic, held nine meetings between 8 and 18 May. The Group decided that the 1989 Chairman's working paper and the proposals and amendments to it, as contained in annexes to the Commission's 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 34], should constitute the basic documents on the subject.

Working Group II recommended that the effectiveness of the United Nations in the field of disarmament should be strengthened and the work of its bodies improved. The Organization should support and facilitate all disarmament efforts and be informed of developments in disarmament efforts outside of its aegis, without prejudice to the progress of negotiations. All States should give due account and consideration to its recommendations and act in accordance with their obligations. It was important that the Conference on Disarmament continue to discharge its substantive responsibilities, while the Security Council should continue to ensure the effectiveness of its central role with regard to the maintenance of international peace and security, keeping in mind its interrelationship with disarmament. The General Assembly should continue to promote disarmament and to facilitate the achievement of disarmament agreements among States by means of special sessions, its First Committee and the Disarmament Commission. States should give the Secretary-General maximum support, and he should be assisted by an adequately staffed and funded Department of Disarmament Affairs, whose role should be strengthened. The Secretary-General should continue to serve as depositary of the legal instruments of multilateral disarmament agreements. His Advisory Board could benefit from wider contacts with prominent persons and institutions with expertise relevant to the Board's work. The work of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) should continue to be independent-research-oriented, of a high academic standard and of practical value. It should strengthen its co-operation with national and regional research institutes. More financial contributions would ensure a greater viability and the development of the Institute. Member States and other entities were encouraged to broaden the financial base of the World Disarmament Campaign and co-operate to increase its effectiveness, and to continue to mark the observance of Disarmament Week to promote the objectives of the World Disarmament Campaign. The Disarmament Commission should encourage Member States and other entities to make contributions to the regional centres for peace and disarmament to ensure their effective functioning and viability. The United Nations Disarmament Fellowship, Training and Advisory Services programme should be continued, taking into account in the yearly annual selection of fellows, the adequate representation of developing countries and the need for rotation among States.

Second Disarmament Decade (1980s)

In its review and appraisal of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, declared by the General Assembly in its resolution 35/46 [YUN 1980, p. 102], the Assembly, in 1985, had requested the Secretary-General to report annually on the Declaration's implementation [SUN 1985, p. 22].

In a September report with later addendum [A/45/510 & Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted the views and suggestions of Governments on the implementation of the Declaration.

Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade

The General Assembly in 1988 declared the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade [GA res. 43/78 L] and in 1989 directed the Disarmament Commission to finalize a draft resolution entitled "Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade" [YUN 1989, p. 40]. In 1990, the Commission [A/45/42] established Working Group IV on the subject, which held 11 meetings between 9 and 24 May. The Group concluded consideration of the item and on 24 May adopted by consensus the text of the draft Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade, which was subsequently adopted by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/62 A.

Declaration of the 1990s as the
Third Disarmament Decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, in which it declared the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade,

Recalling also its resolution 34/75 of 11 December 1979, in which it directed the Disarmament Commission to prepare elements of a draft resolution entitled "Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade" for submission to the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session for consideration and adoption,

Bearing in mind that the Second Disarmament Decade declared by its resolution 35/46 has come to an end,

Reaffirming its resolution 43/78 L of 7 December 1988, in which it decided to declare the decade of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade,

Recalling further its resolution 44/119 H of 15 December 1989, in which it directed the Disarmament Commission, at its 1990 substantive session, to finalize the preparation of elements of a draft resolution to be entitled "Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade" and to submit them to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session for consideration and adoption,

Reaffirming also the responsibility of the United Nations in the attainment of disarmament,

Noting the progress in the arms limitation and disarmament talks between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as well as other general recent positive developments in international relations and their positive impact on the attainment of global peace and security,

Desirous of maintaining the current momentum in the disarmament process,

Convinced that a third disarmament decade will accelerate the disarmament process,

1. Welcomes with satisfaction the work of the Disarmament Commission at its 1990 session, at which it successfully concluded a draft Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade;

2. Adopts the text of the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade adopted by the Disarmament Commission, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Declares the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade;

4. Calls upon all States to support the objectives of the Decade and to pursue the activities elaborated in the Declaration of the Third Disarmament Decade;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report as and when necessary to the General Assembly on progress made in the implementation of the Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade.

ANNEX

Declaration of the 1990s as the
Third Disarmament Decade

1. The present Declaration of the 1990s as the Third Disarmament Decade is addressed to the global community and deals with the hopes and aspirations of people for lasting peace and security.

2. After a period of heightened tensions, the latter part of the decade of the 1980s saw a noticeable improvement in the way many States conducted their relations with one another. Despite this favourable trend, the specific goals of the Second Disarmament Decade were not fully realized.

3. In a world of growing interdependence, it is essential for the international community to stimulate and deepen awareness of the common interests of the global society and of the universal interest in achieving disarmament and strengthening international peace and security. The challenges facing the international community today are enormous. Accordingly, the solution of these difficult and complex issues will require the political will of States in conducting dialogue and negotiations and in promoting international co-operation, including confidence-building measures aimed at reducing tensions and the risk of military confrontation among States, bearing in mind specific conditions prevailing in the region concerned. It will also require acknowledgement of the profound interrelationship of questions relating to disarmament, social and economic development and environmental protection.

4. The international community stands on common ground in determining to make progress in the 1990s by resolutely pursuing disarmament along with other efforts necessary for attaining genuine peace and security. As members of the international community, we have identified the following common goals. In the nuclear field, we must continue urgently to seek early reductions in, and the eventual elimination of, nuclear weapons and work towards a comprehensive nuclear-test ban. To achieve the objective of non-proliferation in all its aspects, all States are encouraged to make every effort further to strengthen the non-proliferation regime and other measures to halt and prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons. The aim of the international community should be to promote co-operation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy on a non-discriminatory basis and under agreed and appropriate international safeguards. The prevention of an arms race in outer space remains an important area to be further addressed. Many States also see the need to address naval confidence-building measures and disarmament issues. In the conventional field, we must seek reductions in arms and armed forces in all areas of the world and, in particular, where levels of concentrations of armaments are highest. In this regard, we urgently seek the successful conclusion of the negotiations on conventional forces in Europe. We aim for continued consideration of arms transfers in all their aspects. In the chemical field, we must work for the earliest conclusion of a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction. The international community also calls for strict compliance with the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925. As further steps forward, openness and transparency on all appropriate military matters should be developed, the scope and techniques of verification advanced, the use of science and technology for peaceful purposes promoted and non-military threats to security addressed. All other initiatives to halt and reverse the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, in both its qualitative and quantitative aspects deserve careful consideration. Such initiatives include the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among States of the region concerned and the creation of zones of peace under appropriate conditions defined and determined freely by the States concerned in the zone. In the pursuit of the foregoing goals, the international community acknowledges the particular responsibility of countries with the largest military arsenals. Resources freed through disarmament could be used for the benefit of a balanced world development. These goals should be included in a comprehensive programme of disarmament, which should be concluded at an appropriate time.

5. The United Nations will continue to foster multilateral co-operation for disarmament, wherein bilateral and regional efforts can be complementary and mutually supportive in attaining the purposes and principles of the United Nations. The international community can further promote disarmament through the United Nations by building upon its achievements in this field, including the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which was adopted by consensus.

6. The international community affirms the positive role that an informed public can play in the process of disarmament by promoting a constructive and realistic dialogue on issues related to disarmament. In this regard, the pursuit of the World Disarmament Campaign and the observance of Disarmament Week will continue to play a useful role. Reflecting a growing understanding and commitment in dealing with the global problems of peace and security, it recognizes that non-governmental organizations play an invaluable role. It also supports an enhanced role for women in developing the conditions for enduring peace.

7. As the world moves towards the twenty-first century, it is evident that future generations will need increasing knowledge and understanding of the interdependent nature of life on the planet. Education on international peace and security issues will play a fundamental part in allowing every individual to realize his or her role as a responsible member of the world community.

General Assembly resolution 45/62 A

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/782) without vote, 9 November (meeting 33); 2-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.2/Rev.1); agenda item 60 (k).

Sponsors: Costa Rica, Nigeria.

Naval armaments and disarmament

The Disarmament Commission continued consideration of naval armaments and disarmament, on the basis of the 1985 study on the naval arms race [YUN 1985, p. 30], working papers submitted in previous years and two new papers by Sweden [A/CN.10/141] and by Finland, Indonesia and Sweden [A/CN.10/139].

The Chairman of the Commission entrusted a group with holding substantive open-ended consultations on the topic. The group held 13 meetings to consider various aspects of the question, including measures of naval arms limitation and disarmament and the desirability of applying confidence-building measures at sea. The findings and recommendations of the group were incorporated into a working paper by the Chairman, which was annexed to the report of the Commission to the General Assembly [A/45/42].

In November, Sweden submitted to the First Committee a memorandum [A/C.1/45/8 & Rev. 1] dealing with nuclear arms at sea, the need for increased transparency and confidence-building measures and naval nuclear disarmament measures.

By decision 45/416 of 4 December, the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session the item on naval armaments and disarmament.

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, the 40-member multilateral negotiating body, met twice in 1990 at Geneva (6 February-24 April and 12 June-24 August) [A/45/27], holding 45 formal meetings and 23 informal meetings. The Conference considered the issue of a nuclear-test ban; cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; chemical weapons; prevention of an arms race in outer space; security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States; radiological weapons; and a comprehensive programme of disarmament.

The Conference re-established ad hoc committees on effective international agreements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons and radiological weapons; chemical weapons; prevention of an arms race in outer space; and a nuclear-test ban. (Details of those questions are discussed elsewhere in this chapter.) It continued to consider, but did not take action on, the possibility of increasing its membership by not more than four States. It also held informal consultations on the improved and effective functioning of the Conference and agreed to the arrangements by the Secretary-General for reducing the number of weekly meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/62 D.

Report of the Conference on Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/83 B of 11 December 1979, 35/152 J of 12 December 1980, 36/92 F of 9 December 1981, 37/78 G of 9 December 1982, 38/183 I of 20 December 1983, 39/148 N of 17 December 1984, 40/152 M of 16 December 1985, 41/86 M of 4 December 1986, 42/42 L of 30 November 1987, 43/78 M of 7 December 1988 and 44/119 D of 15 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Convinced that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, should have the primary role in substantive negotiations on priority questions of disarmament,

Expressing its regret that the Conference on Disarmament was not able in 1990 to commence negotiations on the nuclear issues on its agenda,

Expressing its expectation that the Conference on Disarmament, in view of the positive current process in some fields of disarmament, will be in a position to reach concrete agreements on disarmament issues to which the United Nations has assigned the greatest priority and urgency and which have been under consideration for a number of years,

Considering that in the present international climate it is more than ever imperative to give a new impetus to negotiations on disarmament at all levels and to achieve genuine progress in the immediate future,

Taking note with satisfaction of the relevant paragraphs of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on the progress towards improved and effective functioning of the Conference and expressing the hope that the process will continue in all aspects of its work,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community;

2. Notes the progress in the negotiations on the elaboration of a draft convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction, and urges the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its work with a view to completing negotiations on such a draft convention as soon as possible;

3. Also notes the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban;

4. Calls upon the Conference on Disarmament to strengthen its work, to further its mandate through substantive negotiations, within the framework of ad hoc committees as the most appropriate mechanism, and to adopt concrete measures on the specific priority issues of disarmament on its agenda, in accordance with the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

5. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to provide negotiating mandates to ad hoc committees on all agenda items, in keeping with the fundamental role of the Conference as identified in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

In 1990, the Conference on Disarmament continued consideration of a comprehensive programme of disarmament, first envisaged in the Final Document of the General Assembly's first special session on disarmament in 1978 [GA res. S-10/2] and considered annually since 1980.

The Conference considered the subject in plenary from 9 to 13 April and from 6 to 10 August. During the discussions, the Group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States (Algeria, Argentina, Brazil, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire) expressed the belief that the improvement in East-West relations provided the appropriate scenario for a renewed effort towards a conclusion of the comprehensive programme of disarmament. The Group of 21 proposed that the Conference re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on the programme at the beginning of its 1991 session. The Group of East European and Other States felt that the Conference should discuss the future activity of the Ad Hoc Committee before its re-establishment.

The Conference agreed that the organizational framework to deal with the item should be considered at the beginning of the 1991 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/62 E.

Comprehensive programme of disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2602 E (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it declared the decade of the 1970s as a Disarmament Decade and requested, inter alia, the then Conference of the Committee on Disarmament to work out "a comprehensive programme, dealing with all aspects of the problem of the cessation of the arms race and general and complete disarmament under effective international control, which would provide the Conference with a guideline to chart the course of its further work and its negotiations",

Recalling also its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, by which it adopted the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, which, inter alia, called for the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament with the utmost urgency,

Recalling further its resolution 44/119 A of 15 December 1989, in which it called upon the Conference on Disarmament to consider, at the beginning of its 1991 session, the resumption of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament with the aim of resolving the outstanding issues in order to conclude the elaboration of the programme,

Having examined the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament which contains the agreement that the organizational framework to deal with the comprehensive programme of disarmament, as in the case of other of its agenda items, shall be considered at the beginning of the 1991 session,

Bearing in mind the conclusions reached by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament in its report of 1989 to the effect that "it should resume work with the view to resolving the outstanding issues in the near future, when circumstances are more conducive to making progress in this regard",

Considering that the present improvement in East-West relations provides the appropriate scenario for a renewed effort towards the conclusion of the comprehensive programme of disarmament,

Considering also that the conclusion of the elaboration of the comprehensive programme of disarmament would constitute an important contribution to the success of the Third Disarmament Decade and to the role of the United Nations in the field of disarmament,

1. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish, at the beginning of its 1991 session, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament;

2. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Comprehensive Programme of Disarmament continue its work, building on the texts already agreed to, with the view to resolving the outstanding issues and thus concluding negotiations on it;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Comprehensive programme of disarmament".

*Redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Abstaining: Australia, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

In the Committee, paragraph 1 was adopted by a recorded vote of 96 to 13, with 20 abstentions. A separate vote was also requested in the Assembly; the paragraph was adopted by a recorded vote of 116 to 13, with 20 abstentions.

Other issues

Defensive security concepts and policies

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/116 P [YUN 1989, p. 42], requesting that Member States initiate or intensify the dialogue on defensive security concepts and policies at the bilateral, regional or multilateral level, the Secretary-General, in an October note [A/45/556], transmitted to the Assembly a communication on the subject that he had received from the USSR.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly resolution 45/58 O.

Defensive security concepts and policies

The General Assembly,

Recalling the principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the obligation to maintain international peace and security in conformity with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the reports of the Secretary-General transmitting the study on the relationship between disarmament and international security and the study of concepts of security submitted to the General Assembly in 1981 and 1985, respectively,

Recognizing that since then a number of important developments have taken place in the areas of disarmament and security and that new opportunities have emerged for arms control and disarmament, for ending regional conflicts and for developing among States constructive and co-operative relations,

Proceeding from the need for mutual confidence, reducing the risk of misunderstanding and making the military-political situation more transparent and predictable,

Noting the ongoing international dialogue on matters of security, including the renewed search for common security as well as for common approaches to the security requirements in different regions,

Noting also the exchange of views on military doctrines among the States participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe,

Believing that security concepts and policies should be aimed at enhancing security and stability at progressively lower and balanced levels of armed forces and armaments,

Seeking to ensure that the armed forces of all States exist only to prevent war, as well as for individual and collective self-defence and for collective action in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression, and that defensive capabilities reflect true defensive requirements,

Bearing in mind the specific political and security requirements in different regions,

1. Considers the development of an international dialogue on defensive security concepts and policies to be of great importance for promoting the process of achieving disarmament and strengthening international security;

2. Invites Member States to initiate or intensify the dialogue on defensive security concepts and policies at the bilateral level, particularly at the regional level and, where appropriate, at the multilateral level;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts and taking into account the views of Member States and other relevant information, to undertake a study of defensive security concepts and policies to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Defensive security concepts and policies".

Disarmament agreements

Parties and signatories

In November, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report [A/45/705] on the status of multilateral disarmament agreements, based on information received from the depositaries of those instruments. It listed the parties to and signatories of those agreements as at 31 July 1990.

As at 31 December 1990, the following numbers of States had become parties to the multilateral agreements covered by the Secretary-General's report (listed in chronological order, with the years in which they were initially signed or opened for signature).

(Geneva) Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare (1925): 123 parties

The Antarctic Treaty (1959): 39 parties

Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (1963): 117 parties

Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1967): 90 parties

Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) (1967): 31 parties

Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (1968): 141 parties

Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor and in the Subsoil Thereof (1971): 82 parties

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1972): 111 parties

Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques (1977): 54 parties

Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (1979): 7 parties

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which

May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (1981): 31 parties
 South Pacific Nuclear-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) (1985): 13 parties Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (1990): (not yet in force)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 45/417 of 4 December, invited the Secretary-General to compile and make available information on multilateral and bilateral arms control and disarmament agreements, with the aim of providing an easily available source of texts and measures used in such agreements.

Nuclear disarmament

Nuclear-arms limitation

During 1990, the Disarmament Commission [A/45/42] discussed various aspects of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, in order to expedite negotiations aimed at the effective elimination of the danger of nuclear war, a general approach to negotiations on nuclear and conventional disarmament, and South Africa's nuclear capability. It established a contact group within the framework of the Committee of the Whole, and the group held 10 meetings between 9 and 23 May. The group based its work on the compilation of proposals for recommendations contained in the report of the Commission to the General Assembly in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 34]. The contact group updated some of the texts and made some progress towards narrowing areas of disagreement. However, it was unable to reach a consensus on a complete set of recommendations.

The Conference on Disarmament [A/45/27] considered the prevention of nuclear war in five informal meetings held between 17 April and 31 July 1990. As in previous years, no consensus was reached on a mandate proposed by the Group of 21 neutral and non-aligned States for an ad hoc committee that would consider all proposals before the Conference. The Conference also considered the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament in five informal meetings between 10 April and 31 July and was again unable to agree on the establishment of an ad hoc committee under the item.

(For General Assembly action on cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and prevention of a nuclear war, see resolution 45/62 C below.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 D.

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/59 F of 3 December 1986, 42/38 H of 30 November 1987, 43/75 E of 7 December 1988 and 44/116 D of 15 December 1989,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war as expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations.

Convinced that removing the threat of a world war—a nuclear war—remains the most acute and urgent task of the present day,

Recalling and reaffirming the statements and provisions on nuclear disarmament set forth in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and, in particular, provisions that “effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority”, contained in paragraph 20, and that “in the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament, all the nuclear-weapon States, in particular those among them which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility”, contained in paragraph 48,

Also recalling that paragraph 55 of the same document states that “Real progress in the field of nuclear disarmament could create an atmosphere conducive to progress in conventional disarmament on a world-wide basis”,

Bearing in mind that the ultimate goal of nuclear disarmament is the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting that the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America agreed in their joint statement issued at Geneva on 21 November 1985 that “a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought” and the common desire they expressed in the same statement calling for early progress in areas where there is common ground, including the principle of a 50 per cent reduction in the nuclear arms of the Soviet Union and the United States appropriately applied, as well as the joint statement made by the leaders of the two countries on 1 June 1990 in Washington,

Noting also that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have conducted intensive negotiations on various disarmament issues and made progress in these negotiations,

Noting further that the Conference on Disarmament has not played its due role in the field of nuclear disarmament,

Believing that the qualitative aspect of the arms race needs to be addressed along with its quantitative aspect,

Bearing in mind that the Governments and peoples of various countries expect that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America will reach agreement on halting the nuclear-arms race and further reducing nuclear weapons,

1. Welcomes the continued implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles;

2. Also welcomes the negotiations by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, on the reduction of their nuclear arsenals and the progress made in these negotiations, and urges them further to discharge their special responsibility for nuclear disarmament, to take the lead in halting the nuclear-arms race and to effect drastic reductions of their nuclear arsenals at an early date;

3. Invites the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep, by appropriate means, the other States Members of the United Nations duly informed about their negotiations, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Reiterates its belief that bilateral and multilateral efforts for nuclear disarmament should complement and facilitate each other;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

General Assembly resolution 45/58 D

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/778 & Corr.1) without vote, 12 November (meeting 34); draft by China (A/C.1/45/L.7); agenda item 56 (e). Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 31, 34; plenary 54.

Bilateral negotiations

Following the signing in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 47] and the entry into force in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 56] of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, the two parties continued to negotiate a 50 per cent reduction in their strategic arms.

On 1 June 1990, President George Bush of the United States and President Mikhail S. Gorbachev of the USSR issued joint statements [CD/1004 & CD/1005] at their summit meeting (Washington, D.C.) expressing satisfaction with the progress made in the negotiation of a treaty on the reduction and limitation of strategic offensive arms (START) and reaffirming their determination to have it completed and ready for signature by the end of the year. They agreed to pursue new talks on strategic offensive arms and on the relationship between offensive and defensive arms to reduce the outbreak of war, particularly nuclear war, and to ensure strategic stability, transparency and predictability through further stabilizing reductions in the strategic arsenals of both countries. That would be achieved by agreements that improved survivability and removed incentives for a nuclear first strike and by implementation of an appropriate relationship between strategic offences and defences.

Bilateral discussions between the USSR and the United States continued also on the subject of missile technology proliferation. In June, the two sides issued a joint statement [CD/1001] in which they detailed steps to stem the proliferation of missiles and missile technology.

Other developments

By the Argentine-Brazil Joint Declaration on Nuclear Policy [A/45/809], signed at Foz do Iguaçu, Brazil, on 28 November by the President of Argentina, Carlos Saúl Menem, and the President of Brazil, Fernando Collor, the two leaders noted the efforts made by their Permanent Bilateral Committee on Nuclear Co-operation to enhance co-operation between the two countries in the areas of research, the exchange of information, industrial complementarity, the exchange of nuclear material, and the development of joint projects and policy co-ordination. In addition, they decided to adopt the joint accounting and control system agreed on by the Committee, which would apply to all their nuclear activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 B.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 43/75 A of 7 December 1988 and 44/116 K of 15 December 1989.

Stressing the importance of the strengthening of international security through disarmament and the halting of the qualitative and quantitative escalation of the arms race,

Mindful that it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to speed up the emerging process of relaxation of international tension and to channel it in a direction that would benefit all and that lasting peace and security can be achieved only by pooling the efforts of the international community and with all States participating and contributing on the basis of equality,

Stressing also that general and complete disarmament under effective international control is by its very nature unattainable unless all States join in its implementation,

Emphasizing that nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war remains one of the principal tasks of our times,

Concerned, however, that the world is still threatened by the massive nuclear arsenals, which are being further refined and augmented, and that the way for nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war lies in the nuclear-weapon Powers' embracing the objective of the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

Aware of the fact that the disarmament process cannot be carried out without a contribution by all States and especially by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America and by military alliances, which have the greatest responsibility in that regard,

Stressing that the co-operation between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America contributes to the process of general and complete disarmament and the strengthening of international security,

Noting that, in a joint statement of 1 June 1990, the two Presidents reaffirmed their determination to have the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms completed and ready for signature by the end of 1990 and, following the signature of that Treaty, to pursue further negotiations on nuclear and space arms and to give these future negotiations the highest priority,

Affirming that bilateral and multilateral negotiations on disarmament should facilitate and complement each other,

1. Welcomes the positive developments in the bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on disarmament issues, including those relating to the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, as well as the signing of the Protocols to the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests, signed on 3 July 1974, and the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, signed on 28 May 1976, and their ratification;

2. Calls upon the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to exert every effort to achieve the reduction in strategic offensive arms by signing the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms by the end of 1990 as part of the process leading to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons and, as a matter of urgency, to intensify their efforts to achieve agreements in other areas, in particular, the issues of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban and agreement to ensure that outer space is kept free of all weapons;

3. Invites the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their negotiations, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

4. Encourages and supports the bilateral negotiations and expects them to be successfully concluded.

Bilateral nuclear-arms negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at their meeting at Geneva in November 1985 the leaders of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America committed themselves to the objective of working out effective agreements aimed at preventing an arms race in space and terminating it on Earth,

Believing that, through negotiations pursued in a spirit of flexibility and with full account taken of the security interests of all States, it is possible to achieve far-reaching and effectively verifiable agreements,

Firmly convinced that early agreement in these negotiations, in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest possible level of armaments, would be of crucial importance for the strengthening of international peace and security,

Noting that, in a joint statement of 1 June 1990, the two Presidents reaffirmed their determination to have the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms completed and ready for signature by the end of 1990,

Noting also that in a further statement of the same date the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America agreed to pursue, following the signature of the Treaty, new negotiations on nuclear and space arms and further enhancing strategic stability and to give these future negotiations the highest priority,

Convinced that the international community should encourage the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America in their endeavours, taking into account both the importance and the complexity of their negotiations,

1. Welcomes the fact that the provisions of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Nuclear Missiles are being implemented by the Soviet Union and the United States;

2. Also welcomes the prospect of an agreement on the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms in the near future;

3. Further welcomes the agreement between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue new negotiations on nuclear and space arms and on further enhancing strategic stability, following the signature of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Government of the United States of America to spare no effort in seeking, in accordance with the security interests of all States and the universal desire for progress towards disarmament, the attainment of all the agreed objectives in the negotiations;

5. Invites the two Governments concerned to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their negotiations, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

6. Expresses its firmest possible encouragement and support for the bilateral negotiations and their successful conclusion.

Cessation of nuclear-arms race

The Conference on Disarmament considered the prevention of nuclear war, including all related matters, from 12 to 16 March and from 9 to 13 July. It also held five informal meetings between 17 April and 31 July. The Group of 21 expressed regret at the inability of the Conference to set up an ad hoc committee on the item.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/62 C.

Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and prevention of nuclear war

The General Assembly,

Believing that all nations have a vital interest in negotiations on nuclear disarmament because the existence of nuclear weapons jeopardizes the vital security interests of both nuclear- and non-nuclear-weapon States alike,

Recalling its resolution 44/119 E of 15 December 1989,

Recalling also that the international community, through the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, has agreed that the nuclear-arms race, far from contributing to the strengthening of the security of all States, increases the danger of the outbreak of a nuclear war,

Noting the reaffirmation by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, that nuclear disarmament is a process in which all nations should participate, and its view that the ongoing process of disarmament could be accelerated and its coverage widened through the common endeavour of the entire international community,

Taking into account that all nuclear-weapon States, in particular those with the most important nuclear arsenals, bear a special responsibility for the fulfilment of the task of achieving the goals of nuclear disarmament,

Convinced that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are matters of the highest priority and of vital interest to all people of the world,

Encouraged by the continued recognition by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Aware of the fact that the prevention of nuclear war and the reduction of the risk of nuclear war are inextricably linked with the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament, and that consequently they should be viewed in their interrelationship as essential elements of a process of general and complete disarmament,

Convinced also that all avenues should be explored to ensure that progress is made in these two vital fields, and convinced further of the imperative need to take constructive multilateral action to complement and reinforce the bilateral process under way,

1. Reaffirms that multilateral and bilateral negotiations on nuclear questions should complement and facilitate each other;

2. Believes that efforts should be intensified in order to initiate multilateral negotiations in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly;

3. Reiterates that, in view of the importance of the matter, it is equally necessary to devise suitable steps to expedite effective action for the prevention of nuclear war;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to establish ad hoc committees at the beginning of its 1991 session on both the cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war with adequate mandates in order to allow a structured and practical analysis of how the Conference can best contribute to progress on these two urgent matters;

5. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on its consideration of those subjects;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the items entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament” and “Prevention of nuclear war”.

Non-proliferation Treaty

New parties to the Treaty

In 1990, Albania and Mozambique became parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [YUN 1968, p. 17], bringing the number of States parties to 141 at year's end. The Treaty entered into force on 5 March 1970.

Fourth NPT Review Conference

The fourth quinquennial Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons was held from 20 August to 14 September at Geneva to review the operation of the Treaty [NPT/Conf.IV/45/I]. Previous review conferences were held in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 27], 1980 [YUN 1980, 51] and 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 56].

The Preparatory Committee to the Conference held its third and final session (Geneva, 23 April-2 May) in 1990 to discuss substantive and organizational matters. Previous sessions were held in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 66].

Eighty-four States parties participated in the Conference. Representatives of the United Nations and IAEA also participated, as well as a number of States non-parties, intergovernmental organizations and agencies, research institutes and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

The Conference established three Main Committees, a General Committee and a Drafting Committee. The Main Committees reviewed the operation of the provisions of the Treaty allocated to them, with Main Committee I focusing on the implementation of Treaty provisions relating to non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, disarmament and international peace and security and to security assurances; Main Committee II, on provisions relating to the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, safeguards and nuclear-weapon-free zones; and Main Committee III, on provisions relating to the peaceful application of nuclear energy, as it related to acceptance of the Treaty, and on other provisions of the Treaty. The Conference took note of the reports of the three Main Committees and its Drafting Committee.

The Conference, notwithstanding extensive consultations, was unable to adopt a final declaration because of differences regarding convening a separate conference to negotiate legally binding assurances, the question of the extension of the Treaty and the controversy over the degree to which the Treaty's provisions regarding disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, were being implemented.

Non-use of nuclear weapons

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/59 B.

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the existence and use of nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to the survival of mankind, Conscious that the nuclear-arms race increases the danger of the use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced also that nuclear disarmament is the only ultimate guarantee against the use of nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that a multilateral agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons should strengthen international security and help to create the climate for negotiations leading to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Conscious also that the recent steps taken bilaterally by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in East-West relations and the international climate can contribute towards this goal,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that the use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1990 session, was not able to undertake negotiations with a view to achieving agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the text annexed to General Assembly resolution 44/117 C of 15 December 1989,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, as a matter of priority, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons annexed to the present resolution;

2. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to this Convention,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Convinced that this Convention would be a step towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons leading to general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The States Parties to this Convention solemnly undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances.

Article 2

This Convention shall be of unlimited duration.

Article 3

1. This Convention shall be open to all States for signature. Any State that does not sign the Convention before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article may accede to it at any time.

2. This Convention shall be subject to ratification by signatory States. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention shall enter into force on the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-five Governments, including the Governments of the five nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of the Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of the entry into force of this Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. This Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send duly certified copies thereof to the Government of the signatory and acceding States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at — on the day of — one thousand nine hundred and A

Strengthening of security of non-nuclear-weapon States

The Conference on Disarmament [A/45/27] considered effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons. The Conference re-established an ad hoc committee on the subject, which held five meetings between 13 March and 2 August.

In its conclusions and recommendations [CD/1028], the Ad Hoc Committee reaffirmed the need for assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons pending effective measures of nuclear disarmament. Agreement on a common formula of assurance could not be reached due to the persistence of specific difficulties relating to differing perceptions of security interests of nuclear-weapon States and non-nuclear-weapon States and the complex nature of the issues involved. It was agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee should be re-established in 1991 to continue to pursue ways of overcoming those difficulties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/54.

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Deeply concerned at the arms race, in particular the nuclear-arms race, and the possibility of the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Also convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Taking into account the principle of the non-use of force or threat of force enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing also that effective measures and arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the annual report of the Conference on its 1990 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament' urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communique of the Nineteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Cairo from 31 July to 5 August 1990, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations on the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons made by all nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Noting also the greater willingness to overcome the difficulties encountered in previous years,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of its resolutions 44/110 and 44/111 of 15 December 1989,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. 'Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to demonstrate the political will and flexibility necessary to reach agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

*Redesignated the Conference on Disarmament as from 7 February 1984.

Abstaining: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Also on 4 December, the Assembly, by decision 45/414, took note of the report of the First Committee [A/45/773] containing a draft text submitted by Bulgaria on which no action was taken.

Cessation of nuclear-weapon tests

At its 1990 session, the Conference on Disarmament [A/45/27] considered the topic of a nuclear-test ban in plenary meetings. The bulk of its work took place in the Ad Hoc Committee on the item, which was re-established on 6 February.

The Ad Hoc Committee agreed that it had carried out a preliminary examination of specific and interrelated test-ban issues and prepared the ground for further consideration of the issue. It noted the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on the seismic verification of a comprehensive test ban (see below). The Group of Scientific Experts, Technical Test Two (GSETT-2) was considered to be of particular importance, and it was recommended that more States participate in the test. It was agreed that the Ad Hoc Committee be re-established.

The Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events held two sessions at Geneva in 1990 (twenty-ninth session, 19-29 March [CD/981]; thirtieth session, 30 July-9 August [CD/1032]). The Group reviewed the initial results of experimental activities of phase 2 of GSETT-2 and confirmed that the main focus in GSETT-2 would be the exchange of seismic waveform segments and the analysis of those data at Experimental International Data Centres (EIDCs). The Group reviewed results from a meeting of EIDC co-ordinators (United States, 3-8 June) and discussed evaluation criteria for GSETT-2, based on draft guidelines worked out by a study group.

Note by Secretary-General. By a February note [A/45/129] prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 42/38 C [YUN 1987, p. 54], the Secretary-General reported that New Zealand had submitted notifications of nuclear-test explosions carried out by France at Fangataufa and Mururoa Atolls in the South Pacific in 1989. In May [A/45/359], France transmitted information on those nuclear tests, which totalled 2 at Fangataufa Atoll and 6 at Mururoa Atoll. In a later addendum to his note [A/45/129/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported the notification by Australia of presumed underground nuclear explosions detected from April 1989 to June 1990. In November [A/45/129/Add.2], the USSR reported that it had conducted a nuclear explosion on 24 October 1990.

In an October note [A/45/561], the Secretary-General submitted the annual register of the information provided on nuclear explosions from April 1989 to June 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/49.

Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the highest priority which, in the sphere of disarmament, it has repeatedly assigned to the attainment of the complete cessation of nuclear-weapon tests,

Recalling that for over thirty years it has been examining this question, on which it has adopted more than seventy resolutions,

Taking into account the undertakings by the three depositary States of the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time, as well as the reiteration of this commitment in the Treaty on Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Recalling that the Secretary-General, addressing a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 12 December 1984, after appealing for a renewed effort towards a comprehensive test-ban treaty, emphasized that no single multilateral agreement could have a greater effect on limiting the further refinement of nuclear weapons and that a comprehensive test-ban treaty is the litmus test of the real willingness to pursue nuclear disarmament,

Recalling also that the leaders of the States associated with the Six-Nation Initiative on peace and disarmament affirmed in the Stockholm Declaration, adopted on 21 January 1988, that "Any agreement that leaves room for continued testing would not be acceptable",

Recalling further the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, which underlined that the immediate suspension of and comprehensive ban on nuclear tests remained one of the highest priorities of nuclear disarmament,

Taking note with satisfaction of the continuing progress made in the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events on the seismic verification of a comprehensive test ban,

Taking note of the re-establishment, without a negotiating mandate, of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban by the Conference on Disarmament at its summer session in 1990,

1. Reiterates once again its grave concern that nuclear testing continues unabated, against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of Member States;

2. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States for all time is a matter of the highest priority;

3. Reaffirms also its conviction that such a treaty would constitute a contribution of the utmost importance to the cessation of the nuclear-arms race;

4. Urges once more all nuclear-weapon States, in particular the three depositary States of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapons Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water and of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, to seek to achieve the early discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time and to expedite negotiations to this end;

5. Appeals to all States members of the Conference on Disarmament to promote the re-establishment by the Conference at the beginning of its 1991 session of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban with the objective of carrying out the multilateral negotiation of a treaty on the complete cessation of nuclear-test explosions;

6. Recommends to the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee should comprise two working groups dealing, respectively, with the following interrelated questions: contents and scope of the treaty, and compliance and verification;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Cessation of all nuclear-test explosions".

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 127-3-17 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/45/768) by recorded vote (10-3-18), 16 November (meeting 39); 14-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.30), orally revised; agenda item 46.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 38, 39; plenary 54.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

/n favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: France, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Turkey.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/51.

Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty

The General Assembly,

Convinced that a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought,

Convinced also of the consequent urgent need for an end to the nuclear-arms race and the immediate and verifiable reduction and ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that an end to nuclear testing by all States in all environments for all time is an essential step in order to prevent the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear weapons and their further proliferation and to contribute, along with other concurrent efforts to reduce nuclear arms, to the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons,

Noting concerns expressed about the environmental and health risks associated with underground nuclear testing,

Recognizing the agreement on and signature of, in Washington on 1 June 1990, the verification protocols to the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests, signed on 3 July 1974, and to the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes, signed on 28 May 1976, and looking forward to the conclusion of all ratification processes,

Welcoming the ongoing implementation of the Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles and the agreement in principle on and further progress made towards a first treaty on significant reductions in their strategic nuclear forces, and urging the earliest possible conclusion of such a treaty,

Recalling the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,

Recalling also the proposals by the leaders of the Six-Nation Initiative to promote an end to nuclear testing,

Convinced that the most effective way to achieve the discontinuance of all nuclear tests by all States in all environments for all time is through the conclusion, at an early date, of a verifiable, comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty that will attract the adherence of all States,

Reaffirming the particular responsibilities of the Conference on Disarmament in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, and in this context welcoming the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban in the Conference on Disarmament,

Taking note of the work being undertaken within the Conference on Disarmament by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events and the conduct of the second technical test concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data,

Noting that the Amendment Conference of States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water will be held in January 1991 to consider an amendment to extend the scope of the Treaty to include underground nuclear testing,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that a treaty to achieve the prohibition of all nuclear-test explosions by all States in all environments for all time is a matter of fundamental importance;

2. Urges the Conference on Disarmament, in order that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty may be concluded at an early date, to re-establish the Ad Hoc Committee on a Nuclear Test Ban at the beginning of its 1991 session to carry forward the work begun in the Conference in 1990, focusing on substantive work on specific and interrelated test-ban issues, including structure and scope as well as verification and compliance;

3. Also urges the Conference on Disarmament:

(a) To take into account, in this context, the progress achieved by the Ad Hoc Group of Scientific Experts to Consider International Co-operative Measures to Detect and Identify Seismic Events, including work on the routine exchange and use of wave-form data, and other relevant initiatives or experiments by individual States and groups of States;

(b) To encourage the widest possible participation by States in the technical test that is now under way concerning the global exchange and analysis of seismic data;

(c) To take immediate steps for the establishment, with the widest possible participation, of an international seismic monitoring network with a view to developing further a system for the effective monitoring and verification of compliance with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(d) To initiate detailed investigation of other measures to monitor and verify compliance with such a treaty, including on-site inspections and an international network to monitor atmospheric radioactivity;

4. Urges:

(a) The nuclear-weapon States, especially those which possess the most important nuclear arsenals, to agree promptly to appropriate verifiable and militarily significant interim measures, with a view to concluding a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

(b) Those nuclear-weapon States which have not yet done so to adhere to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water;

5. Culls upon the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on progress made;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty".

Amendment Conference of States parties to the partial test-ban Treaty

Meeting of States parties. A meeting of States parties to the 1963 Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water (also known as the partial test-ban Treaty) [YUN 1963, p. 137] was convened (New York, 29 May-8 June) to make arrangements for an amendment conference to be held in New York from 7 to 18 January 1991. The amendment to the Treaty, proposed by Indonesia, Mexico, Peru, Sri Lanka, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, comprised an additional article to the Treaty and two protocols: the first, prohibiting nuclear explosions underground, and the second, dealing with verification.

Attended by 74 States parties, the Meeting for the Organization of the Amendment Conference decided to transmit to the Conference the provisional agenda, draft rules of procedure and background documentation. It invited States parties to the Treaty, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to submit their views regarding the verification of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban. The report [PTBT/CONF/1] of the meeting was transmitted to the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/50.

Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water

Recalling its resolution 44/106 of 15 December 1989,

Reiterating its conviction that a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is the highest-priority measure for the cessation of the nuclear arms race and for the achievement of the objective of nuclear disarmament,

Recalling also its resolution 1910(XVIII) of 27 November 1963, in which it noted with approval the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water, signed on 5 August 1963, and requested the Conference of the Eighteen-Nation Committee on Disarmament to continue with a sense of urgency its negotiations to achieve the objectives set forth in the preamble to the Treaty,

Recalling further that more than one third of the parties to the Treaty have requested the Depositary Governments to convene a conference to consider an amendment that would convert the Treaty into a comprehensive test-ban treaty,

Reiterating also its conviction that such a conference will facilitate the attainment of the objectives set forth in the Treaty and thus serve to strengthen it,

Noting with satisfaction that the meeting for the organization of the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water was held in New York from 29 May to 8 June 1990, and taking note of the report of that meeting,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the Amendment Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water will be held in New York from 7 to 18 January 1991;

2. Calls upon all parties to the Treaty to participate in, and to contribute to the success of, the Amendment Conference for the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear-test ban at an early date, as an indispensable measure towards implementation of their undertakings in the preamble to the Treaty;

3. Reiterates its conviction that, pending the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty, the nuclear-weapon States should suspend all nuclear-test explosions through an agreed moratorium or unilateral moratoria;

4. Recommends that arrangements be made to ensure that intensive efforts continue, under the auspices of the Amendment Conference, until a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty is achieved;

5. Recommends also that the Amendment Conference establish a working group, or other means it deems appropriate, to study, inter alia, the organization of control, institutional mechanisms and legal aspects of a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty and to report its conclusions to the Conference;

6. Stresses the importance of ensuring adequate coordination among the various negotiating forums dealing with a comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Amendment of the Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and under Water".

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 116-2-28 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/45/769) by recorded vote (98-2-28), 16 November (meeting 39); 50-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.31); agenda item 47.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 35, 39; plenary 54.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Turkey.

France indicated that it did not participate in the vote because it was not a party to the 1963 Treaty. It wished that action to be reflected in the record.

Nuclear-arms freeze

Since 1982, the General Assembly had annually called for a freeze on nuclear arms but no action had been taken by the nuclear-weapon States. In 1990, the Assembly again considered the issue of a nuclear-arms freeze.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/59 D.

Nuclear-arms freeze

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, adopted in 1978 and unanimously and categorically reaffirmed in 1982 during the twelfth special session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, the Assembly expressed deep concern over the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race,

Convinced that, in this nuclear age, lasting world peace can be based only on the attainment of the goal of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the new trends that have led to an improvement in the international security environment,

Convinced also of the urgency further to pursue negotiations for the substantial reduction and qualitative limitation of existing nuclear arms,

Considering that a nuclear-arms freeze, while not an end in itself, would constitute an effective step to prevent the continued increase and qualitative improvement of existing nuclear weaponry during the period when the negotiations take place, and that at the same time it would provide a favourable environment for the conduct of negotiations to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons,

Convinced further that the undertakings derived from the freeze can be effectively verified,

Welcoming the cessation by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of the production of highly enriched uranium for nuclear weapons and the beginning of the process of shutting down its reactors producing weapons-grade plutonium,

Noting with deep concern that all nuclear-weapon States have not so far taken any collective action in response to the call made in the relevant resolutions on the question of a nuclear-arms freeze,

1. Urges once more both the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, as the two major nuclear-weapon States, to reach agreement on an immediate nuclear-arms freeze, which would, inter alia, provide for a simultaneous total stoppage of any further production of nuclear weapons and a complete cut-off in the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;

2. Calls upon all nuclear-weapon States to agree, through a joint declaration, to a comprehensive nuclear-arms freeze, whose structure and scope would be the following:

(a) It would embrace:

- (i) A comprehensive test ban on nuclear weapons and on their delivery vehicles;
- (ii) The complete cessation of the manufacture of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iii) A ban on all further deployment of nuclear weapons and of their delivery vehicles;
- (iv) The complete cessation of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes;
- (b) It would be subject to appropriate and effective measures and procedures of verification;

3. Requests once again the nuclear-weapon States to submit a joint report, or separate reports, to the General Assembly, prior to the opening of its forty-sixth session, on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Nuclear-arms freeze".

4 December 1990 - Meeting 54 126-14-12 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/45/779) by recorded vote (107-14-12), 12 November (meeting 34); 7-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.33); agenda item 57 (c).

Prohibition of fissionable materials

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 L.

Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/91 H of 16 December 1978, 34/87 D of 11 December 1979, 35/156 H of 12 December 1980, 36/97 G of 9 December 1981, 37/99 E of 13 December 1982, 38/188 E of 20 December 1983, 39/151 H of 17 December 1984, 40/94 G of 12 December 1985, 41/59 L of 3 December 1986, 42/38 L of 30 November 1987, 43/75 K of 7 December 1988 and 44/116 H of 15 December 1989, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of the implementation of the Programme of Action set forth in section III of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to consider urgently the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration,

Noting that the agenda of the Conference on Disarmament for 1990 included the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects" and that the programme of work of the Conference for both parts of its 1990 session contained the item entitled "Cessation of the nuclear-arms race and nuclear disarmament",

Recalling the proposals and statements made in the Conference on Disarmament on those items,

Considering that the cessation of production of fissionable material for weapons purposes and the progressive conversion and transfer of stocks to peaceful uses would be a significant step towards halting and reversing the nuclear-arms race,

Considering also that the prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other explosive devices would be an important measure in facilitating the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and explosive devices,

Requests the Conference on Disarmament, at an appropriate stage of its work on the item entitled "Nuclear weapons in all aspects", to pursue its consideration of the question of adequately verified cessation and prohibition of the production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices and to keep the General Assembly informed of the progress of that consideration.

Nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace

In 1990, the international community continued to discuss the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace in various regions of the world. The General Assembly considered the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, in particular a study on the nuclear capability of South Africa; the existing nuclear-weapon-free zone in Latin America; and the desirability of establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Middle East and South Asia. Preparations continued for the convening of the United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean.

Africa

Since 1964, when the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa was adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) [YUN 1964, p. 69], the General Assembly had annually called for its implementation. In 1990, as in previous years, the Assembly adopted two resolutions—one on the implementation of the Declaration and the other on the nuclear capability of South Africa.

The Disarmament Commission [A/45/42] continued consideration in 1990 of South Africa's nuclear capability, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 42/34 B [YUN 1987, p. 61]. The Commission established Working Group I, which had before it, among other documents, a preliminary May report of the Secretary-General [A/CN.10/138] in response to a 1989 Assembly request [YUN 1989, p. 58] that he investigate reports that collaboration between Israel and South Africa had resulted in the development by South Africa of a nuclear-tipped ballistic missile. He reported that he had appointed three experts to assist him in carrying out the mandate.

Included in the Group's conclusions and recommendations on the nuclear capability of South Africa were: that the Commission recommend that the General Assembly bring to the Security Council's attention the grave consequences of the development of any sort of nuclear-weapons capability by South Africa and its implications for the security of African States, the proliferation of nuclear weapons, and the denuclearization of Africa; that States should cease all military and nuclear collaboration with South Africa that might contribute to the development of that country's nuclear-weapons capability, and the Assembly should urge States to observe their obligations concerning the arms embargo against South Africa; that States should consider and respect Africa as a nuclear-weapon-free zone, and the Secretary-General should assist OAU in advancing the realization of those objectives; that the Commission should call upon South Africa to place its nuclear facilities and installations under IAEA safeguards and allow for full assessment of its activities in the military and nuclear fields by the international community and in particular by its neighbouring States; and that the Secretary-General should follow closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and report to the General Assembly. The Commission adopted the report of the Group for submission to the General Assembly.

Reports of Secretary-General. In an 18 October report [A/45/569] on the nuclear capability of South Africa, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that he had continued to follow nuclear developments in South Africa and had obtained information for his report from IAEA and OAU. The Director General of IAEA had informed him that the General Conference of the Agency, in September, had adopted a resolution concerning South Africa's nuclear capability, which was annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/113 B [YUN 1989, p. 58], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly on 29 October the report of the group of qualified experts [A/45/57] & corr.1] on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability.

In his introduction to the report, the Secretary-General stated that in the light of developments in South Africa (see PART TWO, Chapter I), the country might no longer wish to pursue vigorously its programme of nuclear-weapon capability or ballistic missiles but to gear its efforts towards the peaceful application of nuclear energy. In that context, its long-standing co-operation with Israel, particularly in the military field, might no longer have the same significance as it had in the past. A tangible proof of South Africa's determination to abandon the policy of military intimidation would be its expeditious accession to NPT and the opening of all nuclear facilities to international inspection.

The report reviewed South Africa's nuclear capability, its long-range missile programme, and the possible prospects of South Africa's current and future policies and their implications for peace in the region. It concluded that South Africa had a long-range rocket programme, and its missile programme relied on foreign technology from various sources, much of which was acquired clandestinely and illegally. Although the number of long-range rockets and the amount of relevant technology it possessed were not known, South Africa could possibly build a ballistic missile within 10 to 15 years, or sooner with foreign assistance. The country could encounter a long and difficult development effort in adapting nuclear weapons for long-range missile delivery. However, the country would rely on manned aircraft for long-range attack, including possible delivery of weapons of mass destruction. Current negotiations regarding majority rule in South Africa might change many dimensions of the definition of security in South Africa (see PART TWO, Chapter I). Those changes provided an opportunity for a foreign policy that complemented domestic changes and could greatly inhibit the possible acquisition of nuclear warheads for missile delivery. At the same time, it would provide reassurance about the management, techniques and safety of the civil programme as well as serve as an earnest of peaceful intentions. South Africa in time could become the regional centre for technology and research and benefit from its infrastructure and expertise in nuclear energy as well as in propulsion and missile technology.

Communications. In a 30 October letter [A/C.1/45/9] to the Secretary-General, South Africa, referring to the Secretary-General's 18 October report, stated that the report contained no reference to any formal statement made by the South African authorities nor any indication that they might have been approached. In addition, it was not clear how information provided by OAU on the subject could be considered authoritative. As to the Secretary-General's report of 29 October, South Africa stated that the report did not quote remarks made by the authorities in respect of the country's intended accession to NPT. South Africa added that its efforts in the nuclear field had always been aimed at the peaceful application of nuclear energy. Annexed to the letter was a statement of 18 September 1990 from the South African Minister for Foreign Affairs indicating South Africa's willingness to accede to NPT.

On 19 November [A/C.1/45/11], Argentina, referring to the mention in the Secretary-General's 29 October report on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability of the possible acquisition of Exocet missiles by South Africa from Argentina, stated that it had implemented and continued to implement scrupulously Security Council resolutions 418(1977) [YUN 1977, p. 161] and 558(1984) [YUN 1984, p. 143] imposing embargoes on South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/56 A.

Implementation of the Declaration

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964, in which they solemnly declare their readiness to undertake, through an international agreement to be concluded under United Nations auspices, not to manufacture or acquire control of atomic weapons.

Recalling its resolution 1652(XVI) of 24 November 1961, its earliest on the subject, as well as its resolutions 2033(XX) of 3 December 1965, 31/69 of 10 December 1976, 32/81 of 12 December 1977, 33/63 of 14 December 1978, 34/76 A of 11 December 1979, 35/146 B of 12 December 1980, 36/86 B of 9 December 1981, 37/74 A of 9 December 1982, 38/181 A of 20 December 1983, 39/61 A of 12 December 1984, 40/89 A of 12 December 1985, 41/55 A of 3 December 1986, 42/34 A of 30 November 1987, 43/71 A of 7 December 1988 and 44/113 A of 15 December 1989, in which it called upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Recalling also that in its resolution 33/63 it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind also the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.1 on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, as well as of the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Noting the actions taken by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields,

Noting with satisfaction that the Disarmament Commission at its 1990 substantive session concluded its deliberations and adopted by consensus the recommendations on the question of South Africa's nuclear capability,

Recognizing the threat that South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa,

1. Strongly renews its call upon all States to consider and respect the continent of Africa and its surrounding areas as a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

2. Reaffirms that the implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity would be an important measure to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security;

3. Expresses once again its grave alarm at South Africa's possession and continued development of nuclear-weapon capability;

4. Condemns South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime that enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa, which seeks to keep Africa free from nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist regime that may enable it to frustrate the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa;

6. Demands once again that the racist regime of South Africa refrain from manufacturing, testing, deploying, transporting, storing, using or threatening to use nuclear weapons;

7. Appeals to all States and organizations that have the means to do so to monitor South Africa's research on and development and production of nuclear weapons and to publicize any information in that regard;

8. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the convening, at Addis Ababa during 1991, of a meeting of experts to examine the modalities and elements for the preparation and implementation of a convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa".

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 145-0-4 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/45/776) by recorded vote (124-0-5), 16 November (meeting 38); draft by Sierra Leone for African Group (A/C.1/45/L.39); agenda item 54.

Financial implications: 5th Committee, A/45/812; S-G, A/C.1/45/L.58, A/C.5/45/49.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 27, 38; Fifth Committee 39; plenary 54.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

In the First Committee, preambular paragraph eight was approved by a recorded vote of 109 to 3, with 17 abstentions. A separate vote was also requested in the Assembly, which adopted the paragraph by a recorded vote of 128 to 3, with 17 abstentions.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/56 B.

Nuclear capability of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability,

Having also considered the Secretary-General's report on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability,

Recalling its resolutions 34/76 B of 11 December 1979, 35/146 A of 12 December 1980, 36/86 A of 9 December 1981, 37/74 B of 9 December 1982, 38/181 B of 20 December 1983, 39/61 B of 12 December 1984, 40/89 B of 12 December 1985, 41/55 B of 3 December 1986, 42/34 B of 30 November 1987, 43/71 B of 7 December 1988 and 44/113 B of 15 December 1989,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its first ordinary session, held at Cairo from 17 to 21 July 1964,

Recalling that, in paragraph 12 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it noted that the massive accumulation of armaments and the acquisition of armaments technology by racist regimes, as well as their possible acquisition of nuclear weapons, presented a challenging and increasingly dangerous obstacle to a world community faced with the urgent need to disarm,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 33/63 of 14 December 1978, it vigorously condemned any overt or covert attempt by South Africa to introduce nuclear weapons into the continent of Africa and demanded that South Africa refrain forthwith from conducting any nuclear explosion in the continent or elsewhere,

Bearing in mind also the provisions of resolution CM/Res.1101(XLVI)/Rev.I on the denuclearization of Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 20 to 25 July 1987,

Noting with regret once again the non-implementation by apartheid South Africa of resolution GC(XXX)/RES/468 adopted on 3 October 1986 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency during its thirtieth regular session,

Having taken note of the report of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research entitled "South Africa's nuclear capability", undertaken in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat and in consultation with the Organization of African Unity,

Bearing in mind further the threat that South Africa's nuclear capability constitutes to international peace and security and, in particular, to the realization of the objective of the Declaration on the Denuclearization of Africa,

Noting with satisfaction that the Disarmament Commission at its 1990 substantive session concluded its deliberations and adopted by consensus the recommendations on the question of South Africa's nuclear capability,

Alarmed that South Africa's nuclear facilities, particularly those which remain unsafeguarded, enable it to develop and acquire the capability of producing fissionable material for nuclear weapons,

Also alarmed that, by its own public admission at Vienna on 13 August 1988, the apartheid South African regime has acquired nuclear-weapon capability,

Deeply concerned about reports of apartheid South Africa's active military collaboration with Israel in the production of nuclear-tipped medium-range missiles with completed testing facilities and the consequences for the peace and security of African States,

Gravely concerned that the South African racist régime has not renounced its policy of aggression and subversion against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of neighbouring countries,

Expressing its grave disappointment that, despite appeals by the international community, certain Western States and Israel have continued to collaborate with the racist regime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields and that some of these States have, by a ready recourse to the use of veto, consistently frustrated every effort in the Security Council to deal decisively with the question of South Africa,

Recalling its decision taken at the tenth special session that the Security Council should take appropriate effective steps to prevent the frustration of the implementation of the decision of the Organization of African Unity for the denuclearization of Africa,

Stressing the need to preserve peace and security in Africa by ensuring that the continent is a nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear capability;

2. Condemns the massive buildup of South Africa's military machine, in particular its frenzied acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability for repressive and aggressive purposes and as an instrument of blackmail;

3. Also condemns all forms of nuclear collaboration by any State, corporation, institution or individual with the racist regime of South Africa, in particular the decision by some Member States to grant licences to several corporations in their territories to provide equipment and technical and maintenance services for nuclear installations in South Africa;

4. Takes note with great concern of recent reports that collaboration between Israel and South Africa has resulted in the development by South Africa of a nuclear-tipped missile;

5. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability, submitted in accordance with paragraph 6 of its resolution 44/113 B;

6. Requests all Member States to submit to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions with respect to the above-mentioned report, and further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

7. Reaffirms that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime constitutes a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardizes the security of African States and increases the danger of the proliferation of nuclear weapons;

8. Expresses its full support for the African States faced with the danger of South Africa's nuclear capability;

9. Commends the actions taken by those Governments which have taken measures to restrict co-operation with South Africa in nuclear and other fields;

10. Calls upon all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate forthwith all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist régime;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance that the Organization of African Unity may seek regarding the modalities and elements for the preparation and implementation of the relevant convention or treaty on the denuclearization of Africa;

12. Commends the adoption by the Security Council of resolutions 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 and 591(1986) of 28 November 1986 on the question of South Africa, with a view to blocking the existing loopholes in the arms embargo so as to render it more effective and to prohibiting, in particular, all forms of co-operation and collaboration with the racist regime of South Africa in the nuclear field;

13. Demands once again that South Africa submit forthwith all its nuclear installations and facilities to inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to follow very closely South Africa's evolution in the nuclear field and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

15. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the military assistance that apartheid South Africa is receiving from Israel and any other sources in advanced missile technology as well as the supporting technical facilities.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against France, Israel, United Kingdom, United States,

Latin America

The General Assembly considered the item on the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco), which concerned the application of the Treaty to territories in the region of which outside States had de jure or de facto responsibility. Three of the four States (Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States) to which the Protocol was open were already parties to it. France, the fourth State, had signed Additional Protocol I but had not yet ratified it.

On 28 November, President Carlos Saúl Menem of Argentina and President Fernando Collor of Brazil signed at Foz do Iguaçu, Brazil, the Argentina-Brazil Joint Declaration on Nuclear Policy [A/45/809], by which they decided, among other things, to take action to permit the full entry into force for the two countries of the Treaty of Tlatelolco, including action to update and improve its wording.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/48.

Implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/104 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967 it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America as an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Recalling also its various resolutions concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America (Treaty of Tlatelolco),

Taking into account that within the zone of application of the Treaty, to which twenty-three sovereign States are already parties, there are some territories that, in spite of not being sovereign political entities, are nevertheless in a position to receive the benefits deriving from the Treaty through its Additional Protocol I, to which the four States that de jure or de facto are internationally responsible for those territories may become parties,

Considering that it is not fair that the peoples of some of those territories are deprived of such benefits without being given the opportunity to express their opinion in this connection,

Recalling further that three of the States to which Additional Protocol I is open—the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America—became parties to the Protocol in 1969, 1971 and 1981 respectively,

1. Deplores once again that the signature of Additional Protocol I by France, which took place on 2

March 1979, has not yet been followed by the corresponding ratification, notwithstanding the time elapsed and the pressing invitations that the General Assembly has addressed to it;

2. Once more urges France not to delay any further such ratification, which has been requested so many times and which appears all the more advisable, since France is the only one of the four States to which the Protocol is open that is not yet party to it;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Implementation of General Assembly resolution 45/48 concerning the signature and ratification of Additional Protocol I of the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

Middle East

Reports of Secretary-General. In August, in response to General Assembly resolution 44/108 [YUN 1989, p. 60], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/388] containing the views of Member States on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

In response to General Assembly resolution 43/65 [YUN 1988, p. 70], the Secretary-General transmitted in October the study [A/45/435] on effective and verifiable measures that would facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. The report examined the concept of nuclear-weapon-free zones, a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East and measures facilitating the establishment of such a zone. The study proposed measures to build mutual confidence and prepare the way for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone. It suggested that to get the process moving forward, Governments could unilaterally or jointly initiate action on those measures they considered most useful and establish a regional understanding that there would be no test explosion of a nuclear device, nor any moves towards such a test. Annexed to the report were the elements of a possible agreement on a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East.

Communication. In April [A/45/219-S/21252], Egypt had submitted its views to the Secretary-General on the subject, stating that it would continue to work with States in the region, and beyond, towards declaring the Middle East a zone free from all weapons of mass destruction, and towards the establishment of requisite international verification measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/52.

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474 XXX of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988 and 44/108 of 15 December 1989 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place all their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing also the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly at its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Emphasizing further the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General which contains the study on effective and verifiable measures which would facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of the report of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the implementation of paragraph 2 of resolution GC(XXXIII)/RES/506, which is contained in document GC(XXXIV)/926;

4. Also takes note of the request made by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the Director General in paragraph 2 of resolution GC(XXXIV)/RES/526 "to deploy further efforts in continuing the consultation with the States concerned in the Middle East area with a view to applying Agency safeguards to all nuclear installations in the area, keeping in mind the relevant recommendations contained in paragraph 75 of the report attached to document GC(XXXIII)/887, as well as various proposals and opinions referred to in the Governments' replies contained in document GC(XXXIV)/926 and the situation in the area of the Middle East";

5. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

6. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

7. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

8. Welcomes the completion of the study undertaken by the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 8 of resolution 43/65 and contained in his report, on effective and verifiable measures which would facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East;

9. Requests all parties of the region and other parties concerned, in particular the nuclear-weapon States, to submit to the Secretary-General their views and suggestions with respect to the above-mentioned study, as well as on follow-up measures which would facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

Israeli nuclear armament

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/121 [YUN 1989, p. 61], the Secretary-General reported in October 1990 [A/45/574] that he had followed closely Israeli nuclear activities. Other than the text of a resolution of 21 September 1990 adopted by the IAEA General Conference on Israel's nuclear capabilities and nuclear threat, which was annexed to his report, no information had been transmitted to him.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/63.

Israeli nuclear armament

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its previous resolutions on Israeli nuclear armament, the latest of which is resolution 44/121 of 15 December 1989,

Recalling its resolution 44/108 of 15 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it called for placing all nuclear facilities in the region under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 487(1981) of 19 June 1981, in which, inter alia, the Council called upon Israel urgently to place all its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Noting that only Israel has been specifically called upon by the Security Council to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards,

Noting with grave concern Israel's persistent refusal to commit itself not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons, despite repeated calls by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Taking note of resolution GC(XXXIV)/RES/526, adopted on 21 September 1990 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, Taking into consideration the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, in paragraph 12 of which Israel was condemned for continuing to develop its nuclear military programmes and weapons of mass destruction and for its refusal to implement the resolutions of the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency in this regard,

Deeply alarmed by the information with regard to the continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons by Israel and its testing of their delivery systems in the Mediterranean, thus threatening the peace and security of the region,

Aware of the grave consequences that endanger international peace and security as a result of Israel's development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and Israel's collaboration with South Africa to develop nuclear weapons and their delivery systems,

Deeply concerned that Israel has not committed itself to refrain from attacking or threatening to attack safeguarded nuclear facilities,

1. Reiterates its condemnation of Israel's refusal to renounce any possession of nuclear weapons;
2. Reiterates also its condemnation of the co-operation between Israel and South Africa in the military field;
3. Expresses its deep concern regarding the information on Israel's continuing production, development and acquisition of nuclear weapons and testing of their delivery systems;
4. Reaffirms that Israel should promptly apply Security Council resolution 487(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, requested it to place all nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to refrain from attacking or threatening to attack nuclear facilities;
5. Calls upon all States and organizations that have not yet done so not to co-operate with or give assistance to Israel that could enhance its nuclear-weapons capability;
6. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to inform the Secretary-General of any steps Israel may take to place its nuclear facilities under Agency safeguards;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to follow closely Israeli nuclear activities and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;
8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Israeli nuclear armament".

South Asia

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/109 [YUN 1989, p. 63], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/45/462] summarizing the views of Governments on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/53

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3265 B (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3476 B (XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/73 of 10 December 1976, 32/83 of 12 December 1977, 33/65 of 14 December 1978, 34/78 of 11 December 1979, 35/148 of 12 December 1980, 36/88 of 9 December 1981, 37/76 of 9 December 1982, 38/65 of 15 December 1983, 39/55 of 12 December 1984, 40/83 of 12 December 1985, 41/49 of 3 December 1986, 42/29 of 30 November 1987, 43/66 of 7 December 1988 and 44/109 of 15 December 1989 concerning the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia,

Reiterating its conviction that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world is one of the measures that can contribute effectively to the objectives of non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, as in other regions, will assist in the strengthening of the security of the States of the region against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note with appreciation of the declarations issued at the highest level by Governments of South Asian States that are developing their peaceful nuclear programmes, reaffirming their undertaking not to acquire or manufacture nuclear weapons and to devote their nuclear programmes exclusively to the economic and social advancement of their peoples,

Welcoming the recent proposal for the conclusion of a bilateral or regional nuclear-test-ban agreement in South Asia,

Taking note of the proposal to convene, under the auspices of the United Nations, a conference on nuclear non-proliferation in South Asia as soon as possible, with the participation of the regional and other concerned States,

Bearing in mind the provisions of paragraphs 60 to 63 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly regarding the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, including in the region of South Asia,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms its endorsement, in principle, of the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

2. Urges once again the States of South Asia to continue to make all possible efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia and to refrain, in the mean time, from any action contrary to that objective;

3. Calls upon those nuclear-weapon States that have not done so to respond positively to this proposal and to extend the necessary co-operation in the efforts to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to communicate with the States of the region and other concerned States in order to ascertain their views on the issue and to promote consultations among them with a view to exploring the best possibilities of furthering the efforts for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia".

Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean held two sessions in 1990 (New York, 16-21 April and 2-13 July) [A/45/29] as it continued consideration of practical measures for achieving the implementation of the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace [YUN 1971, p. 34, GA res. 2832(XXVI)].

During its 1990 sessions, the Ad Hoc Committee, acting as the preparatory body for the United Nations Conference on the Indian Ocean, considered the programme of work of the Conference and decided, on 20 April, that members of the Committee should submit to the Chairman their views on the holding of the Conference. Pursuant to that decision, replies were received from India, Maldives, Pakistan, Panama and the USSR [A/AC.159/L.103]. The Ad Hoc Committee also considered draft provisional rules of procedure and adopted a provisional agenda for the Conference. It considered a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly, which was submitted by Sri Lanka on behalf of the States members of the Committee that were members of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and decided to annex the draft resolution to its report for further consideration.

In April, France [A/45/213], the United Kingdom [A/45/215] and the United States [A/45/214] informed the Secretary-General of their withdrawal from the Ad Hoc Committee. Sri Lanka, on behalf of the States members of the Committee that were members of the Non-Aligned Movement, issued a statement regretting that action [A/AC.159/L.102].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/77.

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolutions 2992(XXVII) of 15 December 1972, 3080(XXVIII) of 6 December 1973, 3259 A (XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3468(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/88 of 14 December 1976, 32/86 of 12 December 1977, S-10/2 of 30 June 1978, 33/68 of 14 December 1978, 34/80 A and B of 11 December 1979, 35/150 of 12 December 1980, 36/90 of 9 December 1981, 37/96 of 13 December 1982, 38/185 of 20 December 1983, 39/149 of 17 December 1984, 40/153 of 16 December 1985, 41/87 of 4 December 1986, 42/43 of 30 November 1987, 43/79 of 7 December 1988, 44/120 of 15 December 1989 and other relevant resolutions,

Reaffirming that the establishment of zones of peace in various regions of the world under appropriate conditions, to be clearly defined and determined freely by the States concerned in the zone, taking into account the characteristics of the zone and the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in conformity with international law, can contribute to strengthening the security of States within such zones and to international peace and security as a whole,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, during its preparatory session in July 1989, commemorated the tenth anniversary of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, which took place on 13 July 1979,

Recalling further paragraph 22 of the final document on international security and disarmament adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,

Reaffirming its conviction that concrete action for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace would be a substantial contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security, as well as to the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and peaceful development of the States of the region,

Convinced that agreement on such action should be facilitated by encouraging developments in international relations that could have beneficial effects on the region,

Also convinced that the continued military Presence of the great Powers in the Indian Ocean area, conceived in the context of their confrontation, gives urgency to the need to take practical steps for the early achievement of the objectives of the Declaration,

Considering that the creation of the zone of peace requires co-operation and agreement among the States of the region to ensure conditions of peace and security within the area, as envisaged in the Declaration,

Noting with appreciation the offer made by the Government of Sri Lanka to host the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo, in 1192,

Regretting the decision of some members to withdraw from the Ad Hoc Committee, and expressing the hope that they would reconsider their position,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Reaffirms full support for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace;

3. Reiterates and emphasizes its decision to convene the Conference on the Indian Ocean at Colombo, as a necessary step for the implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, adopted in 1971;

4. Renews the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee as defined in the relevant resolutions, and requests the Committee to intensify its work with regard to the implementation of its mandate;

5. Notes with satisfaction that, in the implementation of the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee, including the preparatory work for the convening of the Conference, as called for in the relevant resolutions recommended by the Committee and adopted by the General Assembly by consensus, significant progress has been made in the preparatory work, in particular in the preparation of the draft agenda and the draft rules of procedure of the Conference;

6. Also notes with satisfaction that the Working Group of the Ad Hoc Committee has made considerable progress in identifying substantive elements at the 1989 session of the Committee, and urges the Ad Hoc Committee to intensify its discussions on substantive issues and principles, with the aim of elaborating elements that might be taken into consideration during the subsequent preparation of a draft final document of the Conference;

7. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to hold two preparatory sessions during 1991, the first with a duration of one week and the second with a duration of two weeks, for completion of the remaining preparatory work relating to the Conference on the Indian Ocean to enable the convening of the Conference at Colombo in 1992 in consultation with the host country;

8. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his consultations on the participation in the work of the Committee by States Members of the United Nations that are not members of the Committee, with the aim of resolving this matter at the earliest possible date;

9. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a full report on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records, in recognition of its preparatory functions.

Prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 J.

Prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities

The General Assembly,

Considering that attacks or threats of attack on nuclear facilities devoted to peaceful purposes could jeopardize the development of nuclear energy,

Recalling resolution GC(XXIX)/RES/444 adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on 27 September 1985,

Recalling also resolution GC(XXXI)/RES/475 of 25 September 1987, in which the General Conference states, inter alia, that it is:

“Aware of the fact that an armed attack on a nuclear installation could result in radioactive releases with grave consequences within and beyond the boundaries of the State which has been attacked, and

“Convinced of the need to prohibit armed attacks on nuclear installations from which such releases could occur and of the urgency of concluding an international agreement in this regard”,

1. Recognizes that an armed attack or a threat of armed attack on a safeguarded nuclear facility, operational or under construction, would create a situation in which the Security Council would have to act immediately in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including measures under Chapter VII;

2. Encourages all States to be ready to provide immediate peaceful assistance in accordance with international law to any State, if it so requests, whose safeguarded nuclear facilities have been subjected to an armed attack, and calls upon all States to abide by any decisions taken by the Security Council in accordance with the Charter in relation to the attacking State;

3. Appeals to States that participate in the Conference on Disarmament to overcome their differences, and urges the co-operation of all States for the successful resolution of this issue in the near future;

4. Calls upon all States that have not done so to become parties to Additional Protocol I of 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and upon all States parties to that Protocol to consider, in the context of a possible diplomatic conference, how to improve the present regime with regard to the protection of nuclear facilities;

5. Notes that States, in their mutual interest, have adopted confidence-building measures, in a bilateral or regional framework, designed to promote the aim of protecting nuclear facilities, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, and recognizes that other States may adopt similar measures, where appropriate;

6. Appeals to all States to take into account, when reviewing their military policies, the danger of radioactive releases potentially resulting from an attack on a nuclear facility;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Comprehensive study on nuclear weapons

In response to General Assembly resolution 43/75 N [YUN 1988, p. 97], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly an updated version [A/45/373] of the 1980 Comprehensive Study on Nuclear Weapons [Sales No. E.81.I.11]. The study, conducted by a group of 12 experts, reviewed technical data and statistics on existing nuclear weapons and examined: trends in the technological development of nuclear-weapon systems, doctrines and strategies, development, the production and testing of nuclear weapons, the effects of their use and consequences of nuclear war, nuclear weapons and international security and nuclear-arms limitation and disarmament.

In its conclusions, the group stated that the qualitative improvements of nuclear weapons had continued. Nuclear tests were still being carried out, though at a reduced rate, and the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes had been reduced. Most countries considered that an early end to nuclear testing by all States would be a step towards preventing qualitative improvements and the development of new nuclear weapons and would contribute to the goal of non-proliferation. However, most nuclear-weapon States did not agree that a comprehensive test ban was an urgent necessity. To strengthen the international non-proliferation regime and achieve wider participation in it, further efforts were necessary to prevent the acquisition or manufacture of nuclear weapons by additional States. The regime would also be strengthened if parties to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons that had not already done so concluded the requisite safeguard agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The right of States to develop nuclear technology for economic benefit had to be reconciled with the need to ensure against the further spread of nuclear weapons. To achieve the objectives of non-proliferation, global and regional efforts were needed, including further strengthening the non-proliferation regime in all its aspects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 E.

Comprehensive United Nations study on nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/75 N of 7 December 1988, by which it requested the Secretary-General to carry out, with the assistance of qualified governmental experts, a comprehensive update of the Comprehensive Study on Nuclear Weapons,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General containing the update of the Study,

1. Takes note of the comprehensive study on nuclear weapons contained in the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the group of experts who assisted him in the preparation of the study;
3. Commends the study and its conclusions to the attention of all Member States;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for the reproduction of the study as a United Nations publication and to give it the widest possible distribution;
5. Encourages interested Governments to distribute and publish the report in their respective languages.

Other aspects of disarmament

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

Chemical weapons ban

In 1990, the Conference on Disarmament [A/45/27] continued negotiations on a convention banning chemical weapons. The Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, re-established by the Conference on 15 February, held 15 meetings between 21 February and 10 August as well as informal consultations.

The Committee was mandated to continue the process of negotiations on a multilateral convention on the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons and on their destruction and to ensure the preparation of the convention. It set up three working groups to deal with verification, technical, and legal and institutional issues. The Chairman of the Committee held consultations on undiminished security and universal adherence to the convention; the functions, composition and decision-making of the Executive Council; and economic and technological development. Three Friends of the Chair were appointed to deal with assistance and protection against chemical weapons; old chemical weapons; and jurisdiction and control. The Ad Hoc Committee re-established the Technical Group on Instrumentation to deal with the issue of verification by instruments and other technical means in the absence of a facility agreement, with special emphasis on detection devices, sampling equipment, types of samples, transport of samples to an off-site laboratory, on-site analyses, use of a mobile laboratory, novel agents, non-destructive measurement technology and instrumental data bases. The Committee continued the practice of convening meetings with representatives of the chemical industry on subjects related to the convention. Among the new documents presented in 1990 were a report [CD/1026] by the Federal Republic of Germany on a chemical weapons workshop (Münster, 14-15 June) and a discussion paper on the ad hoc verification arrangements by examining the issue of national registers [CD/984]. Research papers on verification methods in relation to the use of chemical weapons were submitted by Canada [CD/99], Finland [CD/100] and Norway [CD/1008 & CD/1019]. Canada submitted a document on the role and function of a national authority in the implementation of the convention [CD/994], and Austria elaborated its offer to host the future organization for the prohibition of chemical weapons [CD/972]. Peru submitted two proposals, one suggesting a new article relating to the environment [CD/1024] and another dealing with the duration of the convention [CD/1025].

The report of the Committee, with its two appendices, was adopted by the Conference on 24 August. Appendix I, the rolling text, represented the present stage of development of the provisions of the draft convention, appendix II contained papers reflecting the results of work undertaken so far on various issues; and both were included as a basis for future work. The Committee recommended that its work on the convention should continue in a session of limited duration from 8 to 18 January 1991 and that, in preparation for the resumed session, consultations should be held between 26 November and 21 December 1990. It also recommended that it be re-established at the outset of the 1991 session, at which time a decision would be made on its mandate.

In April [A/44/561/Add.3], the Secretary-General submitted the replies received from Member States in response to his request for the names of qualified experts and laboratories that might be in a position to assist him in the investigation of reports on the possible use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, as requested in General Assembly resolution 42/37 C [YUN 1987, p. 70].

USSR-United States chemical weapons agreement

On 10 February [CD/973 & 974], the USSR and the United States issued a joint statement indicating their determination to conclude a multilateral chemical weapons convention and, towards that end, they undertook to expedite negotiations in Geneva to resolve outstanding issues and to finalize the draft convention. In the meantime, they would work out a bilateral agreement to be signed at the June summit meeting between the two countries. The two sides also agreed to further reduce their chemical weapons stock when the international convention entered into force.

At their summit meeting in Washington on 1 June [CD/100], Presidents Bush of the United States and Gorbachev of the USSR signed the Agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Destruction and Non-Production of Chemical Weapons and on Measures to Facilitate the Multilateral Convention on Banning Chemical Weapons. By that Agreement, the two countries undertook to co-operate regarding technologies for the safe and efficient destruction of chemical weapons. They agreed not to produce chemical weapons, to reduce their chemical weapons stockpiles, to co-operate in developing, testing and carrying out inspections and procedures, and to encourage all chemical weapons-capable States to become parties to the multilateral convention. In addition, the Agreement provided for the destruction of chemical weapons to begin no later than 31 December 1992, for 50 per cent of stocks to be destroyed by no later than 31 December 1999, and for reduction to the level of 5,000 agent tons by the year 2003.

In a joint statement [CD/100] issued at the Washington summit, the two countries reaffirmed their commitment to a global, verifiable ban as the best long-term solution to the threat to security posed by chemical weapons proliferation and undertook to expedite the multilateral negotiations with a view to finalizing the draft convention at the earliest date.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/57 A.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of all chemical weapons and to their destruction,

Reaffirming the urgent necessity, particularly in the light of the past use of and recent threats to use chemical weapons, of strict observance by all States of the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925,

Welcoming again in this regard the reaffirmation in the Final Declaration of the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States, held in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989, of the importance and continuing validity of the 1925 Protocol,

Reaffirming also the urgent necessity of the adherence by all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, signed in London, Moscow and Washington on 10 April 1972,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament, which incorporates, inter alia, the report of its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons, and expressing the hope that the consultations scheduled for the inter-sessional period will move the negotiations forward,

Convinced of the necessity that every effort be exerted for the successful conclusion of negotiations on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of all chemical weapons and on their destruction,

Emphasizing the importance of the widest possible participation of States in the negotiations on the draft convention in order to ensure universal adherence on its conclusion, and, in this regard, commending the ever growing number of States participating in those negotiations,

Conscious of the need to share data relevant to the negotiations on a future convention banning all chemical weapons on a global basis and of the fact that the provision of such data would be an important confidence-building measure,

Noting the bilateral and other discussions, including the on going exchange of views between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America in the framework of the multilateral negotiations, on issues related to the prohibition of chemical weapons.

Welcoming, in this regard, the fact that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have agreed to cease the production of chemical weapons and to begin destroying their chemical weapons stockpiles,

Welcoming also the efforts made at all levels by States to facilitate the earliest conclusion of a convention for the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction and, in particular, the concrete steps designed to promote confidence and to contribute directly to that goal,

Noting with appreciation the increasing number of States that have declared their intention to be among the original signatories to the convention,

Recognizing that the effectiveness of such a convention will benefit from the support and co-operation of the chemical industry,

1. Renews its call to all States to observe strictly the principles and objectives of the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, and to abide by the commitments undertaken in the Final Declaration of the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States, held in Paris in January 1989;

2. Notes the progress made in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons of the Conference on Disarmament during its 1990 session, and the results recorded in the Committee's report;

3. Expresses its regret and concern that a convention on the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction has not yet been concluded;

4. Strongly urges the Conference on Disarmament, as a matter of highest priority, to intensify during its 1991 session its efforts to resolve outstanding issues, and to conclude its negotiations on a convention, taking into account all existing proposals and future initiatives, and to re-establish its Ad Hoc Committee on Chemical Weapons for that purpose;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the results of its negotiations;

6. Stresses the particular significance and importance of declarations made by States on whether or not they possess chemical weapons and of further international exchanges of data and other relevant information in connection with the negotiations on such a convention;

7. Encourages all States to take further initiatives, measures and steps to promote confidence and openness in order to contribute to an early agreement on, and universal adherence to, such a convention;

8. invites all States to make every effort to ensure its early entry into force and its effective implementation;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons".

Approved by First Committee (A/45/777) without vote, 14 November (meeting 36); 44-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.21/Rev.1); agenda item 55. Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 34, 36; plenary 54.

Also on 4 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/57 C.

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons:
measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, and those adopted by the Security Council, on the use of chemical weapons,

Reaffirming its resolution 44/125 B of 15 December 1989 on measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and to support the conclusion of a chemical weapons convention,

Bearing in mind the reaffirmation in the Final Declaration of the Conference of States Parties to the 1925 Geneva Protocol and Other Interested States, held in Paris from 7 to 11 January 1989, of the importance and the continuing validity of the 1925 Protocol,

Deploping the use and threat of use of chemical weapons,

1. Condemns vigorously all actions that violate or threaten to violate the obligations assumed under the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and other relevant provisions of international law;

2. Renews its call to all States to observe strictly the principles and objectives of the 1925 Geneva Protocol, and reaffirms the vital necessity of upholding its provisions;

3. Endorses the proposals of the group of qualified experts established in pursuance of its resolution 42/37 C of 30 November 1987 concerning technical guidelines and procedures to guide the Secretary-General in the conduct of timely and efficient investigation of the reports of use of chemical and bacteriological (biological) or toxin weapons;

4. Notes the continuing significance of the Security Council decision to consider immediately, taking into account the investigations of the Secretary-General, appropriate and effective measures in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, should there be any future use of chemical weapons in violation of international law.

Convention on biological weapons

The Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (1971) [GA res. 2826(XXVI), annex, 16 Dec. 1971] opened for signature on 10 April 1972 and entered into force on 26 March 1975. At the end of 1990, there were 111 States parties to the Convention.

The first review conference was held in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 70] and the second in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 64]. States parties requested that a third conference be held in 1991 and that a preparatory committee for that purpose be formed, which would meet in April 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/57 B.

Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and preparations for the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2826(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, in which it commended the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction,

Bearing in mind the confidence-building measures agreed upon by the Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, held at Geneva from 8 to 26 September 1986, for further strengthening the authority of the Convention and for enhancing confidence among States,

Acknowledging that the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference expressed the need to give further consideration to, inter alia, the implementation of the Convention in all its aspects,

Confirming the common interest in strengthening the authority and the effectiveness of the Convention to promote confidence and co-operation among Member States as well as the necessity to comply with the obligations set forth in the Convention,

1. Notes that, at the request of the States parties, a Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction will be held at Geneva in 1991, that, following appropriate consultations, a preparatory committee for that Conference has been formed, open to all parties to the Convention, and that the committee will meet at Geneva from 8 to 12 April 1991;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be required for the Third Review Conference and its preparation;

3. Recalls in that regard the decision taken at the Second Review Conference that the Third Review Conference should consider, inter alia, the issues set out in article XII of the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference;

4. Reiterates its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference and to provide such information and data in conformity with the standardized procedure to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and not later than 15 April;

5. Also recalls its request in resolution 44/115 C of 15 December 1989 that the Secretary-General should render the necessary assistance and should provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the relevant parts of the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference;

6. Further recalls its request in resolution 44/115 C that the Secretary-General should circulate to the States parties to the Convention not later than four months prior to the convening of the Third Review Conference a report on the implementation of these confidence-building measures;

7. Calls upon all States that have not ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so without delay, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention and to the strengthening of international confidence.

New weapons of mass destruction, including radiological weapons

In 1990, the Conference on Disarmament continued consideration of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons. Some progress was made concerning the prohibition of radiological weapons, with the relevant Ad Hoc Committee reviewing draft articles for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons.

The Conference on Disarmament [A/45/27] considered the item "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons". It re-established the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons on 6 February with a view to reaching agreement on a convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons. The Ad Hoc Committee held four meetings between 1 March and 3 August; a number of informal consultations also took place.

The Ad Hoc Committee re-established contact group A to continue considering the prohibition of radiological weapons in the "traditional" sense and contact group B, the prohibition of attacks against nuclear facilities. The reports of the two groups were annexed to the Committee's report [CD/1027]. The Committee concluded that its work had contributed further to clarifying the different approaches to the two subjects under consideration.

The Conference on Disarmament recommended that the Ad Hoc Committee be re-established at the beginning of its 1991 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 F.

Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/116 T of 15 December 1989,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament on its 1990 session that deals with the question of radiological weapons, in particular the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons;

2. Recognizes that in 1990 the Ad Hoc Committee made a further contribution to the clarification and better understanding of different approaches that continue to exist with regard to both of the important matters under consideration;

3. Takes note also of the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament that the Ad Hoc Committee on Radiological Weapons should be re-established at the beginning of its 1991 session;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue its substantive negotiation on the subject with a view to the prompt conclusion of its work, taking into account all proposals presented to the Conference to this end and drawing upon the annexes to the report of the Ad Hoc Committee as a basis of its future work, the result of which should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all relevant documents relating to the discussion of all aspects of the issue by the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling and use of radiological weapons".

Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons,

Taking note of paragraph 77 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Determined to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction that have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of weapons of mass destruction identified in the definition of weapons of mass destruction adopted by the United Nations in 1948,

Noting that in the course of its 1989 and 1990 sessions the Conference on Disarmament considered the item entitled "New types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons",

Taking into account the sections of the reports of the Conference on Disarmament relating to this question,

1. Reaffirms that effective measures should be undertaken to prevent the emergence of new types of weapons of mass destruction;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, in the light of its existing priorities, to keep under review, with expert assistance, as appropriate, the questions of the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons with a view to making, when necessary, recommendations on undertaking specific negotiations on the identified types of such weapons;

3. Calls upon all States, immediately following the recommendation of the Conference on Disarmament, to give favourable consideration to these recommendations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Conference on Disarmament all documents relating to the consideration of this item by the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

5. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue the practice of reporting the results of its consideration of these questions in its annual report to the General Assembly;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons: report of the Conference on Disarmament".

Dumping of radioactive wastes

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 K.

Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind resolution CM/Res.1153(XLVIII) concerning the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa, adopted on 25 May 1988 by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-eighth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 19 to 23 May 1988,

Bearing in mind also resolution CM/Res.1225(L) adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fiftieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 17 to 22 July 1989,

Welcoming resolution GC (XXXIII)/RES/509 on the dumping of nuclear wastes, adopted on 29 September 1989 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-third regular session,

Considering its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, inter alia, to consider effective methods of control against the use of radiological methods of warfare,

Aware of the potential hazards underlying any use of nuclear wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and its implications for regional and international security and in particular for the security of developing countries,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Aware also of the consideration of the question of dumping of radioactive wastes in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1989 session,

Recalling its resolution 44/116 R of 15 December 1989, in which it requested the Conference on Disarmament to include in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session the developments in the ongoing negotiations on this subject,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to the dumping of radioactive wastes;

2. Expresses grave concern regarding any use of nuclear waste that would constitute radiological warfare and have grave implications for the national security of all States;

3. Calls upon all States to take appropriate measures with a view to preventing any dumping of nuclear wastes that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States;

4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to continue to take into account, in the ongoing negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, the deliberate employment of nuclear wastes to cause destruction, damage or injury by means of radiation produced by the decay of such material;

5. Requests the International Atomic Energy Agency to continue keeping the subject under active consideration and to intensify efforts to conclude a legally binding instrument under its auspices on the effective prohibition of any dumping of radioactive or nuclear wastes to complement a multilateral convention on its prohibition in the Conference on Disarmament;

6. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to include in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session the developments in the ongoing negotiations on this subject;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes".

Conventional weapons

Conventional disarmament

The Disarmament Commission continued consideration of the question of conventional disarmament to facilitate the identification of possible measures in the field of conventional arms reduction and disarmament [A/45/42]. The Commission established Working Group III, which held 16 meetings between 8 and 29 May as well as informal consultations.

The Group identified several issues and possible measures in the field of conventional arms reduction and disarmament. It concluded that conventional disarmament should continue to be actively pursued in the United Nations as a contribution of the international community towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control. The Conference on Disarmament should also address the topic of conventional disarmament.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 C.

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war as expressed in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and particularly its paragraph 81, which provides that, together with negotiations on nuclear disarmament measures, the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons should be resolutely pursued within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament, and which stresses that States with the largest military arsenals have a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional armaments reductions,

Also recalling that in the same document it is stated, inter alia, that priorities in disarmament negotiations shall be: nuclear weapons; other weapons of mass destruction, including chemical weapons; conventional weapons, including any which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects; and reduction of armed forces, and that it stresses that nothing should preclude States from conducting negotiations on all priority items concurrently,

Further recalling that in the same document it is stated that effective measures of nuclear disarmament and the prevention of nuclear war have the highest priority, and that real progress in the field of nuclear disarmament could create an atmosphere conducive to progress in conventional disarmament on a world-wide basis,

Aware of the dangers to world peace and security originating from, and the loss in human life and property caused by, wars and conflicts fought with conventional weapons, as well as of their possible escalation into a nuclear war in regions with a high concentration of conventional and nuclear weapons,

Also aware that with the advance in science and technology, conventional weapons tend to become increasingly lethal and destructive and that conventional armaments consume large amounts of resources,

Believing that resources released through disarmament, including conventional disarmament, can be used for the social and economic development of people of all countries, particularly the developing countries,

Noting with satisfaction that the ongoing conventional disarmament negotiations in Europe have achieved progress,

Also noting with satisfaction that the Disarmament Commission concluded at its 1990 session its recent consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament,

Bearing in mind its resolution 36/97 A of 9 December 1981 and the Study on Conventional Disarmament conducted in accordance with that resolution, as well as its resolutions 41/59 C and 41/59 G of 3 December 1986, 42/38 E and 42/38 G of 30 November 1987, 43/75 D and 43/75 F of 7 December 1988 and 44/116 C and 44/116 F of 15 December 1989.

Bearing in mind also the efforts made to promote conventional disarmament and the related proposals and suggestions, as well as the initiatives taken by various countries in this regard,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the efforts aimed at resolutely pursuing the limitation and gradual reduction of armed forces and conventional weapons within the framework of progress towards general and complete disarmament;

2. Believes that the military forces of all countries should not be used other than for the purpose of self-defence;

3. Welcomes the continued intensive negotiation on conventional armaments and the progress achieved therein by the countries with the largest military arsenals, which bear a special responsibility in pursuing the process of conventional arms reductions, and by the States members of the two major military alliances, and urges them to make further progress towards the early establishment of a stable and secure balance of conventional armaments and forces, the achievement of increased security at lower levels of forces and the elimination of the capability for surprise attack and large-scale offensive action in Europe, a region with the largest concentration of armaments and forces in the world;

4. Encourages and calls upon all States, while taking into account the need to protect security and maintain necessary defensive capabilities, to intensify their efforts and take, either on their own or by agreement, appropriate steps in the field of conventional disarmament to promote progress in conventional disarmament, to enhance peace and security in their regions as well as globally and to contribute to overall progress towards the goal of general and complete disarmament;

5. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Disarmament Commission at its 1990 substantive session on issues related to conventional disarmament, and recommends that States take them into due consideration in their efforts to promote progress in conventional disarmament;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament"

Conventional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/116 F of 15 December 1989,

Noting with satisfaction the adoption by consensus by the Disarmament Commission of the report on the agenda item entitled "Substantive consideration of issues related to conventional disarmament",

1. Welcomes the substantive and comprehensive report of the Disarmament Commission with regard to the question of conventional disarmament;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Disarmament Commission contained in the report;

3. Commends the report to the attention of Member States;

4. Takes note of the recommendation of the Disarmament Commission that, taking into account the priorities in disarmament set out in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the subject of conventional disarmament should continue to be actively pursued in the United Nations as one significant contribution to the endeavours of the international community towards general and complete disarmament under effective international control;

5. Notes that the Disarmament Commission in its report expressed the view that, in addition to its deliberations on how to facilitate the process of conventional disarmament, it would be welcome if the Conference on Disarmament were to address the issue of conventional disarmament when practicable;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Conventional disarmament".

International arms transfers

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 44/116 N [YUN 1989, p. 75], the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in August [A/45/363 & Add.1] the replies from Member States to his request for their views on international arms transfers. The Secretary-General also informed the Assembly that he had appointed a group of governmental experts to carry out a study on international arms transfers.

The General Assembly, by decision 45/415 of 4 December, taking note of the study of the group of governmental experts to consider aspects of international arms transfers, decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session.

In a letter of 13 August [A/45/413], the USSR communicated its views on the limitation of international sales and transfers of conventional weapons.

Confidence-building measures

In September [A/45/397 & Add.1], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 43/78 H [YUN 1988, p. 45], transmitted information received from 12 States on implementation of the guidelines for confidence-building measures adopted by the Disarmament Commission in May 1988 and endorsed later that year by the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/62 F.

Implementation of the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/78 H, adopted without a vote on 7 December 1988,

Reiterating its support for the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures and for the implementation of such measures on a global or regional level, as endorsed in that resolution,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on experience reported by Member States with the implementation of confidence-building measures,

Bearing in mind that confidence-building is a dynamic process over time, and an interim assessment taking account of the experience gained may be valuable,

Noting with satisfaction the encouraging results of specific confidence-building measures agreed upon and implemented in some regions,

Bearing in mind also the particular need for confidence-building measures at times of political tension and crises as well as their potential to prevent such situations from arising,

Bearing in mind further that confidence-building measures pursued at the regional level can contribute to the development of global security,

Considering that confidence-building measures, especially when applied in a comprehensive manner, can be conducive to achieving structures of security based on co-operation and openness,

Pointing to the example of progress in the implementation of confidence- and security-building measures adopted at Stockholm in 1986 that has contributed to more stable relations and increased security, reducing the risk of military confrontation in Europe,

Aware that there are situations peculiar to specific regions that have a bearing on the nature of the confidence-building measures feasible in those regions,

1. Recommends the guidelines to all States for implementation, taking fully into account the specific political, military and other conditions prevailing in a region, on the basis of initiatives and with the agreement of the States of the region concerned;

2. Also recommends to all States that have started to implement confidence-building measures to pursue further and strengthen this process;

3. Appeals to all States to consider the widest possible use of confidence-building measures in their international relations, including¹ bilateral, regional and global negotiations, especially in times of political tension and crises;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to collect relevant information from all Member States;

5. Appeals to all Member States that have not yet done so to make their contribution to the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Implementation of the guidelines for appropriate types of confidence-building measures".

General Assembly resolution 45/62 F

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/782) without vote, 9 November (meeting 33); 40-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.36); agenda item 60 (g).

UN role in the field of verification

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 43/81 B [YUN 1988, p. 51], the Secretary-General, by an August note [A/45/372 & Corr.1], transmitted the report of the Group of Qualified Governmental Experts to Undertake a Study on the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Verification. The Group examined the definition and functions of verification provisions; verification approaches, methods, procedures and techniques; and the activities of the United Nations in verification, their improvement and possible additional activities.

The Group presented proposals for enhancing the UN role in verification in areas such as the UN capability for data collection; the promotion of exchanges between experts and diplomats; possible expansion of the Secretary-General's fact-finding activities; possible uses of aircraft and satellites for verification purposes; and the possible creation of an international verification system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/65.

Study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/152 O of 16 December 1985, 41/86 O of 4 December 1986, 42/42 F of 30 November 1987 and 43/81 B of 7 December 1988,

Underlining the important role that the United Nations, in accordance with its Charter, has to play in the sphere of disarmament,

Recalling also that all the peoples of the world have a vital interest in the success of disarmament negotiations and that, consequently, all States have the duty to contribute to efforts in the field of disarmament,

Noting that the critical importance of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is universally recognized,

Stressing that the issue of verification of and compliance with arms limitation and disarmament agreements is a matter of concern to all nations,

Recognizing that the United Nations, in accordance with its role and responsibilities established under the Charter, can make a significant contribution, in the field of verification, in particular of multilateral agreements,

Reiterating its view that:

(a) Disarmament and arms limitation agreements should provide for adequate and effective measures of verification satisfactory to all parties concerned in order to create the necessary confidence and to ensure that they are being observed by all parties;

(b) The form and modalities of the verification to be provided for in any specific agreement depend upon and should be determined by the purposes, scope and nature of the agreement;

(c) Agreements should provide for the participation of parties directly or through the United Nations system in the verification process;

(d) Where appropriate, a combination of several methods of verification as well as other compliance procedures should be employed,

Recalling that:

(a) In the context of international disarmament negotiations, the problem of verification should be further examined and adequate methods and procedures in this field should be considered;

(b) Every effort should be made to develop appropriate methods and procedures that are non-discriminatory and that do not interfere unduly with the internal affairs of States parties or other States or jeopardize their economic, technological and social development.

Taking note of all proposals that had been put forward in the field of verification by Member States, including those by Canada and the Netherlands, France and the countries of the Six-Nation Initiative,

Affirming its support for the sixteen principles of verification drawn up by the Disarmament Commission,

Noting that recent developments in international relations have underscored the importance of effective verification of existing and future arms limitation and disarmament agreements,

Recalling that by resolution 43/81 B it requested the Secretary-General to undertake, with the assistance of a group of qualified governmental experts, an in-depth study of the role of the United Nations in the field of verification that would:

(a) Identify and review existing activities of the United Nations in the field of verification of arms limitation and disarmament;

(b) Assess the need for improvements in existing activities as well as explore and identify possible additional activities, taking into account organizational, technical, operational, legal and financial aspects;

(c) Provide specific recommendations for future action by the United Nations in this context; and to submit a comprehensive report on this subject to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes that the report was approved by the Group of Qualified Governmental Experts to Undertake a Study on the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Verification;

3. Commends the report to the attention of Member States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to give the report the widest possible circulation;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate action within available resources on the recommendations of the Group;

6. Encourages Member States to give active consideration to the recommendations contained in the concluding chapter of the report and to assist the Secretary-General in their implementation where appropriate;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on actions taken by Member States and by the United Nations Secretariat to implement these recommendations;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session an item entitled "Verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification".

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/788) without vote. 15 November (meeting 37); 41-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.42); agenda item 66.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 26, 37; plenary 54.

Information on military matters

The Disarmament Commission in 1990 continued consideration of objective information on military matters. It established a consultation group for consideration of the subject at the preliminary stage, not engaging in any negotiation of a text on the subject. The group considered working papers by the USSR [A/CN.10/142 & Add.1] and the United Kingdom [A/CN.10/140]. It adopted its report to the Commission, which formed part of the Commission's report to the General Assembly [A/45/42].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to a 1989 General Assembly request [YUN 1989, p. 85], the Secretary-General issued in 1990 a report with later addendum [A/45/354 & Add.1] containing the views of Governments on objective information on military matters.

On 12 October [A/C.1/45/4], the USSR submitted to the Secretary-General information on the categories of weapons of its armed forces as at 1 January 1990.

In an October report with later addendum [A/INF/45/5 & Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on military expenditures in standardized form as reported by 25 States. Annexed to the report was the standard reporting instrument consisting of a matrix designed to show how much each force group (land, naval and air) spent in each resource category (personnel, procurement and operations).

Regional approach to conventional disarmament

In October [A/45/428], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 44/116 S [YUN 1989, p. 76], submitted the views of Member States on ways of strengthening regional and subregional disarmament and arms limitation efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 p.

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of smaller States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and non-proliferation measures at regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Regional disarmament".

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 142-0-10 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/45/778 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (120-0-10). 13 November (meeting 35); 38-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.51); agenda item 56.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 35; plenary 54.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bhutan, Brazil, Cuba, Ethiopia, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mauritius, Viet Nam.

The Assembly, by decision 45/418 of the same date, welcomed the Secretary-General's report on conventional disarmament on a regional scale, invited Member States that had not yet done so to convey their views on the matter to the Secretary-General and decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session.

Also on that date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 M.

Regional disarmament, including confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/116 S, 44/116 U and 44/117 B of 15 December 1989,

Welcoming the report of the Disarmament Commission adopted at its substantive session of 1990,

Recognizing that regional disarmament measures can contribute effectively to the general process of arms reduction and disarmament,

Convinced that disarmament can be carried out only in a climate of confidence based on mutual respect and aimed at ensuring better relations founded on justice, solidarity and co-operation,

Recognizing also the importance and effectiveness of measures of regional disarmament taken at the initiative and with the participation of all States concerned and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, in that they can contribute to universal security and stability, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Conscious of the importance of confidence-building measures to ensure the success of this process,

Noting with satisfaction the important progress made in various regions of the world through the conclusion of peace, security and co-operation agreements and following from the implementation of measures intended to enhance confidence in the fields of political, economic and military co-operation,

Noting that the consumption of resources for potentially destructive purposes is in stark contrast to the need for social and economic development but that reduction in military expenditure following, inter alia, the conclusion of regional disarmament agreements could entail benefits in both the social and economic fields,

1. Reaffirms that the regional approach to disarmament is one of the essential elements in global efforts;

2. Encourages all States to recognize the value of confidence-building measures-military or non-military-taken in the framework of initiatives of regional disarmament;

3. Invites all States to contribute, in appropriate forums, to the consideration of the question of regional disarmament, including the confidence-building measures likely to contribute thereto, taking into account the specific characteristics of the regions concerned.

Europe

Talks within the framework of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) regarding the adoption of a new set of confidence- and security-building measures, which had been initiated in Vienna in 1989, ended successfully in 1990 with the adoption on 17 November of the Vienna Document 1990.

Soon after, negotiations on a stable and secure balance of conventional armed forces in Europe, held within the framework of CSCE, concluded with the signing on 19 November of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe. Once ratified, the Treaty would commit the parties to ensuring that the numbers of conventional armaments and equipment did not exceed the agreed limits for five categories of weapons within its area of application.

The heads of State or Government of 22 CSCE States signed the Treaty and issued a Declaration in Paris expressing their conviction that the developments in Europe and the Treaty must form part of a continuing process of co-operation in building a more united document. On 21 November, they also adopted the Charter of Paris for a New Europe [A/45/859].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 I.

Confidence- and security-building measures and conventional disarmament in Europe

The General Assembly,

Determined to achieve progress in disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 43/75 P of 7 December 1988 and 44/116 I of 15 December 1989,

Recalling also the text adopted by consensus on 29 May 1990 within the framework of the Working Group on agenda item 8 of the Disarmament Commission,

Reaffirming the need for continued efforts to build confidence, to lessen the risk of military confrontation and to enhance mutual security,

Reaffirming also the great importance of increasing security and stability in Europe through the establishment of a stable, secure and verifiable balance of conventional armed forces at lower levels, as well as through increased openness and predictability of military activities,

Considering that the negotiations in the field of confidence- and security-building measures, as well as those on conventional armaments and forces, both within the framework of the process of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, have already helped to promote confidence and to move towards improved security and co-operation in Europe, thereby contributing to international peace and security,

1. Notes with satisfaction the progress achieved so far in the process of disarmament and the strengthening of confidence and security in Europe;

2. Welcomes, as important steps towards enhanced stability and security in Europe, the signing of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe by twenty-two States participating in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe in Paris on 19 November 1990, as well as the adoption of a substantial new set of confidence- and security-building measures by all States participating in the Conference, which was endorsed by the heads of State or Government of those States in Paris on 21 November 1990;

3. Invites all States to consider the possibility of taking appropriate measures with a view to reducing the risk of confrontation and strengthening security, taking due account of their specific regional conditions.

Excessively injurious conventional weapons

As of 31 December 1990, the number of parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and its three Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; and incendiary weapons) [YUN 1980, p. 76] stood at 31. There were no new ratifications, acceptances, approvals or accessions in 1990. The Convention and Protocols had entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 66].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/64.

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/152 of 19 December 1977, 35/153 of 12 December 1980, 36/93 of 9 December 1981, 37/79 of 9 December 1982, 38/66 of 15 December 1983, 39/56 of 12 December 1984, 40/84 of 12 December 1985, 41/50 of 3 December 1986, 42/30 of 30 November 1987 and 43/67 of 7 December 1988,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, ten years ago, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III),

Reaffirming its conviction that general agreement on the prohibition or restriction of use of specific conventional weapons would significantly reduce the suffering of civilian populations and of combatants,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Notes with satisfaction that an increasing number of States have either signed, ratified, accepted or acceded to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, which was opened for signature in New York on 10 April 1981;

2. Also notes with satisfaction that, consequent upon the fulfilment of the conditions set out in article 5 of the Convention, the Convention and the three Protocols annexed thereto entered into force on 2 December 1983;

3. Urges all States that have not yet done so to exert their best endeavours to become parties to the convention and the Protocols annexed thereto as early as possible, so as ultimately to obtain universality of adherence;

4. Stresses that, under article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to consider amendments to the Convention or any of the annexed Protocols, to consider additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing annexed Protocols or to review the scope and operation of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to consider any proposal for amendments to the Convention or to the existing Protocols and any proposals for additional protocols relating to other categories of conventional weapons not covered by the existing Protocols;

5. Requests the Secretary-General as depositary of the Convention and its three annexed Protocols to inform the General Assembly from time to time of the state of adherence to the Convention and its Protocols;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The Conference on Disarmament considered the prevention of an arms race in outer space from 5 to 9 March and from 2 to 6 July [A/45/27].

The Ad Hoc Committee, re-established by the Conference, held 16 meetings between 13 March and 14 August to examine and identify issues relevant to the subject, existing agreements and proposals and future initiatives.

New documents submitted under the item included proposals by Argentina for strengthening the regime established by the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space [CD/1015-CD/OS/WP.42]. In its report to the Conference [CD/1034], the Ad Hoc Committee concluded that its work had advanced and further developed the examination and identification of issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space. It considered that the legal regime applicable to outer space did not by itself guarantee the prevention of an arms race, and recognized the need to enhance the effectiveness of the regime and for strict compliance with existing bilateral and multilateral agreements. There was also recognition of the importance of paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the first special session (1978) devoted to disarmament [GA res. S-10/2], which called for further measures and international negotiations to be held. The Committee continued to examine existing proposals and gave preliminary consideration to new proposals and initiatives to prevent an arms race in outer space and to ensure its exploration for peaceful purposes.

The Committee recommended that it be re-established at the beginning of the Conference's 1991st session with an adequate mandate, taking into account all relevant factors, including the work of the Committee since 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/55 A.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Reaffirming also provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies.

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming further paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this issue and of the Declaration adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing the grave danger for international peace and security of an arms race in outer space and of developments contributing to it,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Noting that bilateral negotiations between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America have continued since 1985 with the declared objective of working out effective agreements aimed, inter alia, at preventing an arms race in outer space,

Welcoming the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space at the 1990 session of the Conference on Disarmament, in the exercise of the negotiating responsibilities of this sole multilateral negotiating body on disarmament, to continue to examine and identify, through substantive and general consideration, issues relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Noting also that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from these efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Recognizes, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, the need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and the importance of the strict compliance with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international co-operation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a matter of priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space;

7. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify its consideration of the question of the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects, building upon areas of convergence and taking into account relevant proposals and initiatives, including those presented in the Ad Hoc Committee at the 1990 session of the Conference and at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

8. Recognizes, in this regard, the relevance of considering measures on confidence-building and greater transparency and openness in space as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee;

9. Further requests the Conference on Disarmament to re-establish an ad hoc committee with an adequate mandate at the beginning of its 1991 session and to continue building upon areas of convergence with a view to undertaking negotiations for the conclusion of an agreement or agreements, as appropriate, to prevent an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

10. Urges the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to pursue intensively their bilateral negotiations in a constructive spirit with a view to reaching early agreement for preventing an arms race in outer space, and to advise the Conference on Disarmament periodically of the progress of their bilateral sessions so as to facilitate its work;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Also on 4 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/55 B.

Confidence-building measures in outer space

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space,

Recalling that, in accordance with the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind,

Aware of the fact that more and more States are taking an active interest in outer space or participating in important space programmes for the exploration and exploitation of that environment,

Recognizing, in this context, the relevancy space has gained as an important factor for the socio-economic development of many States, in addition to its undeniable role in security issues,

Emphasizing that the growing use of outer space has increased the need for more transparency as well as confidence-building measures,

Recalling that the international community has unanimously recognized the importance and usefulness of confidence-building measures, which can significantly contribute to the promotion of peace and security and disarmament, in particular through General Assembly resolutions 43/78 H of 7 December 1988 and 44/116 U of 15 December 1989,

Noting the important work being carried out by the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space of the Conference on Disarmament, which contributes to identifying potential areas of confidence-building measures,

Aware of the existence of a number of different proposals and initiatives addressing this subject, which attests to a growing convergence of views,

1. Reaffirms the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space;

2. Recognizes their applicability in the space environment under specific criteria yet to be defined;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out, with the assistance of government experts, a study on the specific aspects related to the application of different confidence-building measures in outer space, including the different technologies available, possibilities for defining appropriate mechanisms of international co-operation in specific areas of interest and so on, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Technological change and global security

In 1990, a high-level conference on "New trends in science and technology: implications for international peace and security" (Sendai, Japan, 16-19 April) [A/45/56] addressed issues of technological change and global security, new technologies and the search for security in the post-cold-war era, and national policy-making and international diplomacy in an era of rapid technological change. General approaches to technology assessment and technology trends in selected areas were also discussed. The results of those discussions were included in the Secretary-General's report on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security (see below).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 43/77 A [YUN 1988, p. 43], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/45/568] on scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security. The report gave an overview of new technologies and international security and examined trends in nuclear, space, materials and information technology and in biotechnology.

The Secretary-General concluded that additional mechanisms for controlling the military applications of technology could be unilateral measures of restraint, preclusive arrangements for banning qualitative innovations intended for destructive purposes and regional and sub-regional dialogues on military restraint and the removal of uncertainties over the intended use of technological advances. To develop a more realistic set of criteria for technology assessment, the international community needed to be better equipped to follow the nature and direction of technological change and the United Nations could serve as a catalyst and a clearing-house of ideas in technology assessment. The report also set out criteria for an illustrative framework for assessment of new technologies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/60.

Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security

The General Assembly,

Recalling that at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament, it unanimously stressed the importance of both qualitative and quantitative measures in the process of disarmament,

Noting with concern the potential in technological advances for application to military purposes, which could lead to more sophisticated weapons and new weapon systems,

Recognizing that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Stressing the interests of the international community in the subject and the need to follow closely the scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on the security environment and on the process of arms limitation and disarmament and to channel scientific and technological developments for beneficial purposes,

Emphasizing that the proposal contained in its resolution 43/77 A of 7 December 1988 is without prejudice to research and development efforts being undertaken for peaceful purposes,

Noting the results of the United Nations conference on New Trends in Science and Technology: Implications for International Peace and Security, held at Sendai, Japan, from 16 to 19 April 1990, and recognizing, in this regard, the need for the scientific and policy communities to work together in dealing with the complex implications of technological change,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security";

2. Fully agrees that:

(a) The international community needs to position itself better to follow the nature and direction of technological change;

(b) The United Nations can serve as a catalyst and a clearing-house for ideas for this purpose;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to follow scientific and technological developments in order to make an assessment of emerging "new technologies" and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a framework for technology assessment guided, inter alia, by the criteria suggested in his report;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security".

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/61.

Science and technology for disarmament

The General Assembly,

Convinced that science and technology can profoundly contribute to solving the problems of mankind, especially to promoting its social and economic development,

Noting the interest of the international community in disarmament-related applications of scientific and technological achievements,

Recognizing the contributions that may be offered by scientific and technological progress for implementing arms control and disarmament agreements, inter alia, in the fields of verification and of compliance, by parties, with agreements on arms control and disarmament as well as of weapons disposal,

Welcoming related international activities undertaken so far in this area,

Considering the need for intensified international co-operation, with a view to using scientific and technological achievements for disarmament-related purposes, inter alia, in the fields of verification of compliance with agreements on arms control and disarmament, application of technologies for improved means of verification and weapons disposal,

Noting the United Nations conference on New Trends in Science and Technology: Implications for International Peace and Security, held at Sendai, Japan, in April 1990, and the United Nations conference on Conversion: Economic Adjustments in an Era of Arms Reductions, held in Moscow in August 1990, which contributed to promoting international co-operation in this field,

1. Welcomes national and international activities to use scientific and technological achievements for disarmament-related purposes;

2. Calls upon Member States and relevant intergovernmental organizations to intensify and extend such activities and to keep the United Nations informed about progress in this field;

3. Invites all Member States and relevant international organizations to develop international co-operation in this area, with a view to using scientific and technological achievements for disarmament-related purposes, inter alia, in the fields of verification and of compliance, by parties, with agreements on arms control and disarmament and application of technologies for improved means of verification and for weapons disposal;

4. Recommends that the United Nations should give appropriate attention to the collection and dissemination of information on scientific and technological developments in these fields;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Science and technology for disarmament".

Disarmament and development

As requested in General Assembly resolution 44/116 L [YUN 1989, p. 86], the Secretary-General reported in October [A/45/592] on the relationship between disarmament and development, and particularly on the priorities for the period 1990-1993 as determined by the High-Level Secretariat Task Force, established pursuant to the Final Document adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development [YUN 1987, p. 82].

The Secretary-General reported that the Task Force met on 10 May to review ongoing activities and determine priorities for the period 1990-1993. It decided to undertake the following activities in determining the 1990-1993 priorities: continuation of the establishment of a mechanism to monitor trends in military spending by the United Nations Department for Disarmament Affairs; continuation of the establishment of a benchmark study on economic indicators of military spending by the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs; continuation on the work on conversion from military to civilian production and follow-up by the Department for Disarmament Affairs; intensification of contacts with research institutes; a new project on the impact of arms reductions on the world economy; and a publicity and information strategy within the United Nations.

The Task Force also reported on activities that took place in 1990, including the organization by the Department for Disarmament Affairs, in co-operation with the Soviet Peace Fund, of a major international conference on "Conversion: Economic Adjustments in an Era of Arms Reductions" (Moscow, 13-17 August); the establishment by the United Nations Statistical Office of a theoretical framework of indicators for measuring military expenditures; establishment by the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of a departmental task force to examine the post-cold-war developments in the field of international co-operative arrangements for maximizing the benefits from arms reduction; and the compilation by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR), in co-operation with the Department for Disarmament Affairs, of a bibliographical survey of recent publications on military expenditures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 A.

Relationship between disarmament and development
The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly related to the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Stressing the growing importance of the relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and actions undertaken in accordance with the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through the appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/778 & Corr.1) without vote, 9 November (meeting 33); draft by Yugoslavia on behalf of Non-Aligned Movement (A/C.1/45/L.4); agenda item 56 (h).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 31, 33; plenary 54.

By resolution 45/62 G, adopted on the same date, the Assembly requested UNIDIR to prepare, with the assistance of independent experts, a research report on the economic aspects of disarmament and to report to the Assembly at its forty-seventh (1992) session. (For the full text of the Assembly's resolution, see below, under "Disarmament studies, information and research".)

Reallocation of military resources

The General Assembly, in its Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries [A/S-18/15], adopted at its eighteenth special session (23 April-1 May) (see PART THREE, Chapter I), stated that countries should seek to reduce expenditures for military purposes, thereby opening up the possibility of enhanced spending on social and economic development for the benefit of all countries, in particular the developing countries. In that context, the feasibility of channelling some of those reductions through financial mechanisms for development should be explored.

At its 1990 regular session, the Assembly, in resolution 45/58 N, requested the Secretary-General to carry out a study of potential uses of resources such as know-how, technology, infrastructure and production currently allocated to military activities for promoting civilian endeavours to protect the environment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/58 N.

Charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment

The General Assembly,

Encouraged by the positive developments in the field of disarmament,

Deeply concerned by the continuing degradation of the environment,

Bearing in mind the interrelationship of questions relating to disarmament, social and economic development and environmental protection,

Recalling its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989, in which it decided to convene in 1992 the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Desirous of benefiting from progress in disarmament in the endeavours to protect the environment,

Recognizing the potential, in an immediate or a longer-term perspective, of using resources currently allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out, making use of existing resources and with the assistance of qualified experts, a study of potential uses of resources such as know-how, technology, infrastructure and production currently allocated to military activities for promoting civilian endeavours to protect the environment;

2. Recommends that the study be based on open information and take into account relevant national and international studies and such further information as Member States may wish to make available for the purposes of the study;

3. Invites all Governments to co-operate with the Secretary-General so that the objectives of the study may be achieved;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the final report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session and, in the interim, to make relevant results of the study available, as appropriate, to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

In October [A/45/573], the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the activities of the three UN regional centres for peace and disarmament-in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean.

The activities of the UN Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, inaugurated in 1986 at Lomé, Togo [YUN 1986, p. 85], included conferences, training programmes on confidence-building and on the peaceful settlement of disputes, research and study, and the dissemination of information within the framework of the World Disarmament Campaign. It held a workshop (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 5-16 March) for senior African military and civilian officials on conflict resolution, crisis prevention and management, and confidence-building among African States. A documentation/reference library was established to disseminate information relating to peace, security and development within the African context. Efforts were under way to publish a newsletter on relevant developments.

As decided by the Assembly in resolution 41/60 J [YUN 1986, p. 86], the Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean was established on 1 January 1987 and inaugurated at Lima, Peru, on 9 October of that year [YUN 1987, p. 88]. The Centre continued to serve as a resource centre and expanded its contacts in the region to secure specialized publications and materials. It continued to publish its quarterly newsletter Boletín and to provide assistance and support to Governments and NGOs in the areas of peace and disarmament. It hosted a meeting of the Latin American Research Conference (Lima, Peru, 22 and 23 March). Under the auspices of the Centre, a seminar on alternatives for common security in South America (Lima, 27-30 November) was held as well as a symposium (Lima, 6 June) on regional security in Latin America for military attaches of the region accredited in Lima, Peruvian military officers and Peruvian Foreign Ministry officials. In co-operation with the Argentine Council for Foreign Relations and the United Nations Information Centre at Buenos Aires, the Centre organized a seminar (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 25 and 26 July) on disarmament and arms limitation issues.

The UN Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, established in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 89], was inaugurated on 30 January 1989 at Kathmandu, Nepal [YUN 1989, p. 88]. Since its inauguration, the Centre had carried out its activities on a regular basis. However, because of resource constraints, its activities were limited to disseminating information on UN activities in the area of arms limitation and disarmament, answering public inquiries, and organizing the Regional Meeting on Confidence-Building Measures in the Asia-Pacific Region (Kathmandu, 29-31 January).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/59 E.

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific and United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/151 G of 16 December 1985, 41/60 D of 3 December 1986, 42/39 I of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 D of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, 41/60 J of 3 December 1986, 42/39 K of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 H of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, 42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 43/76 G of 7 December 1988 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia, and 44/117 F of 15 December 1989 on the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean,

Reaffirming its resolutions 37/100 F of 13 December 1982, 38/73 J of 15 December 1983, 39/63 F of 12 December 1984, 40/94 A of 12 December 1985, 41/59 M of 3 December 1986, 42/39 E of 30 November 1987 and 44/117 B of 15 December 1989 on regional disarmament,

Recalling the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, and noting in particular the importance placed by the heads of State or Government on the activities of the United Nations regional centres in Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean,

Convinced that the initiatives and activities mutually agreed upon by Member States of the respective regions aimed at fostering mutual confidence and security, as well as the implementation and co-ordination of regional activities under the World Disarmament Campaign, would encourage and facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament in these regions,

Expressing its gratitude to the Member States and international governmental and non-governmental organizations that have contributed to the trust funds of the three regional centres,

Welcoming the activities carried out by the centres since the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly, which have contributed substantively to understanding and co-operation among the States in each particular region and have thereby strengthened the role assigned to each regional centre in the areas of peace, disarmament and development,

Bearing in mind the need to provide the centres with financial stability so as to facilitate the planning of their activities,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the three regional centres, and of his efforts in providing the necessary administrative measures to permit the effective functioning of the three centres,

1. Encourages the regional centres to continue their efforts in promoting regional co-operation among the States in their respective regions with a view to contributing to the implementation and co-ordination of regional activities under the World Disarmament Campaign and to facilitate the development of effective measures of confidence-building, arms limitation and disarmament;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for all the efforts he has made in favour of the centres, and requests him to continue to provide all the necessary support to their activities and in particular to pursue the full implementation of the provisions of resolution 44/117 F;

3. Appeals once again to Member States, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations, to make voluntary contributions in order to strengthen the effective operational activities of the centres;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/59 E

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/779) without vote, 99 November (meeting 33); draft by 17 nations, Brazil for Latin American and Caribbean Group, and Tunisia for African Group (A/C.1/45/L.54); agenda item 57 (e).

Disarmament studies, information and research

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, at its twenty-first session (New York, 19-24 July) [A/45/49], discussed the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign (see below) and its implications for the United Nations in the area of security, arms limitation and disarmament. The Board was informed of the status of a number of completed and ongoing studies on disarmament issues carried out by groups of experts on behalf of the Secretary-General. In its capacity as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, it considered and approved the report of the UNIDIR Director on the Institute's activities for 1989-1990 (see below) and the research programme and proposed budget for 1991. It recommended a subvention from the regular UN budget amounting to $220,000 for 1991.

The General Assembly, by resolution 45/248 A, section IV, approved the subvention, as recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions [A/45/7/Add.5].

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

UNIDIR, which was established by General Assembly resolution 34/83 M [YUN 1979, p. 101] and had been in existence since 1 October 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 113], observed its tenth anniversary on 1 October 1990. In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly UNIDIR's report covering the period July 1989 to June 1990 [A/45/392]. The report described UNIDIR's completed and ongoing research projects and described its external relations. UNIDIR continued to issue its quarterly newsletter. It also continued its fellowship and internship programme for scholars from developing countries to undertake research in disarmament. Among the research projects completed were those relating to the security of third world countries, verification and outer space. Current activities focused on national concepts of security, disarmament and development; research guides to proceedings of the Conference on Disarmament; verification; prevention of an arms race in outer space; the United Nations in disarmament and security; economic aspects of disarmament; non-military aspects of security; the computerized information and documentation data base service; and chemical weapons.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/62 G.

Tenth anniversary of the United Nations
Institute for Disarmament Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/83 M of 11 December 1979, in which it requested the Secretary-General to establish the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on the basis of the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General,

Reaffirming its resolution 39/148 H of 17 December 1984, in which it approved the Statute of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, renewed the invitation to Governments to consider making voluntary contributions to the Institute and requested the Secretary-General to continue to give the Institute administrative and other support,

Recalling also its resolution 42/42 J of 30 November 1987, in which it took note with appreciation of the report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Studies and noted that the establishment of the Institute offered new opportunities regarding research in the field of disarmament,

Noting that the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, expressed in its final document on international security and disarmament their appreciation for the research work conducted by the Institute and stressed the need to ensure its continued viability by assured financial support from the regular budget of the United Nations and through voluntary contributions,

Considering the need for the international community to have access to independent and in-depth research on disarmament, in particular on emerging problems and the foreseeable consequences of disarmament,

Noting also in this regard the importance of research on the economic aspects of disarmament,

Having considered the annual report of the Director of the Institute and the report of the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters acting in its capacity as Board of Trustees of the Institute,

1. Notes the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research;
2. Recognizes the increased importance and high quality of the work of the Institute in the execution of its mandate under its Statute;
3. Reiterates the conviction that the Institute should continue to conduct independent research on problems relating to disarmament and should be further encouraged to undertake specialized research or research requiring a high degree of expertise;
4. Calls upon all Member States and public or private institutions to consider making contributions to the Institute in order to ensure its long-term viability and to fulfil the objectives set out in section IV of General Assembly resolution 44/201 B of 21 December 1989;
5. Recommends the continued implementation of the Statute of the Institute;
6. Invites the Director of the Institute and the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters to continue to report annually to the General Assembly on the activities conducted by the Institute;
7. Requests the Institute to prepare, with the assistance of independent experts, a research report on the economic aspects of disarmament and to report to the General Assembly, through the Secretary-General, at its forty-seventh session, the costs of this research project being shared between the regular budget of the United Nations and voluntary contributions.

General Assembly resolution 45/62 G

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/782) without vote, 16 November (meeting 39); 32-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.53/Rev.1); agenda item 60 (e). Financial implications: ACABQ A/45/7/Add.5; 5th Committee, A/45/814; S-G, A/C.1/45/L.62, A/C.5/45/6, A/C.5/45/51.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23,32,39; 5th Committee 39; plenary 54.

UN disarmament studies programme

In 1990, five studies were completed: a comprehensive study on nuclear weapons (see above, under "Nuclear arms limitation and disarmament") [A/45/373]; a study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification (see above, under "Comprehensive programme of disarmament") [A/45/372 & Corr.1]; a study on effective and verifiable measures that would facilitate the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East (see above, under "Nuclear-non-proliferation") [A/45/435]; scientific and technological developments and their impact on international security (see above, under "Advanced technology") [A/45/568]; and the study on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability (see above, under "Nuclear weapon-free zones and zones of peace") [A/45/571 & Corr.1]. Four new studies were requested by the General Assembly in 1990 on: confidence-building measures in outer space (resolution 45/55 B); charting potential uses of resources allocated to military activities for promoting civilian endeavours to protect the environment (resolution 45/58 N); defensive security concepts and policies (resolution 45/58 O); and the economic aspects of disarmament (resolution 45/62 G). In addition, one study was in progress during the year on international arms transfers.

Fellowship, training and advisory services programme

In October [A/45/604], the Secretary-General submitted his annual report on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, stating that 24 fellows had been selected to participate in 1990. The programme—comprising lectures, seminars and panel discussions, research projects on peace and disarmament, simulation exercises and study visits—began on 23 July at Geneva and ended in New York on 23 November. During the first part of the programme participants made study visits to IAEA headquarters at Vienna and, at the invitation of the States concerned, to offices and institutions of Finland, Germany, Japan, Sweden, the USSR and the United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/59 A.

United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme,

Recalling its decision, contained in paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, to establish a programme of fellowships on disarmament, as well as its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly, the second special session devoted to disarmament, in which it decided, inter alia, to continue the programme and to increase the number of fellowships from twenty to twenty-five as from 1983,

Noting with satisfaction that the programme has already trained an appreciable number of public officials selected from geographical regions represented in the United Nations system, most of whom are now in positions of responsibility in the field of disarmament affairs in their respective countries or Governments,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/100 G of 13 December 1982, 38/73 C of 15 December 1983, 39/63 B of 12 December 1984, 40/151 H of 16 December 1985, 41/60 H of 3 December 1986, 42/39 I of 30 November 1987, 43/76 F of 7 December 1988 and 44/117 E of 15 December 1989,

Noting also with satisfaction that the programme, as designed, has enabled an increased number of public officials, particularly from the developing countries, to acquire more expertise in the sphere of disarmament,

Believing that the forms of assistance available to Member States, particularly to developing countries, under the programme will enhance the capabilities of their officials to follow ongoing deliberations and negotiations on disarmament, both bilateral and multilateral,

1. Reaffirms its decisions contained in annex IV to the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly and the report of the Secretary-General approved by resolution 33/71 E of 14 December 1978;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Finland, Germany, Japan, Sweden, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America for inviting the 1990 fellows to study selected activities in the field of disarmament, thereby contributing to the fulfilment of the overall objectives of the programme;

3. Notes that, within the framework of the programme, the Secretary-General organized a regional disarmament workshop for Africa in April 1989 at Lagos and that preparations are under way to organize a similar disarmament workshop for the Asia and Pacific region in the early part of 1991, to be held at Bandung, Indonesia;

4. Commends the Secretary-General for the diligence with which the programme has continued to be carried out;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the implementation of the programme within existing resources and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

World Disarmament Campaign

The World Disarmament Campaign—launched by the General Assembly in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 31]—continued to inform, educate and generate public understanding and support for the disarmament objectives of the United Nations.

The Eighth Pledging Conference for the Campaign was convened in New York on 25 October.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/45/555 & Corr.1], in his annual report on implementing the Campaign's objective, the Secretary-General informed the Assembly of activities carried out by the United Nations system, including information material, consultations, conferences, seminars, training, special events and publicity programmes. The Department for Disarmament Affairs held a conference on "New Trends in Science and Technology: Implications for International Peace and Security" (Sendai, Japan, 16-19 April); a symposium on "Transparency in International Arms Transfers: Initiatives of Governments and Possible Multilateral Action" (Florence, Italy, 25-28 April); a seminar on "African Disarmament and Security" (Cairo, Egypt, 6-10 May); a seminar on "Confidence-building Measures in the Maritime Domain" (Helsingör, Denmark, 13-15 June); a conference on "Conversion: Economic Adjustments in an Era of Arms Reductions" (Moscow, USSR, 13-17 August); and a seminar on confidence-building measures in the maritime environment (Varna, Bulgaria, 4-6 September). The Department of Public Information continued to publicize UN activities and to help further the goals of the Campaign in printed form, through radio, film, television and photo coverage, and through interpersonal contacts.

The Eighth Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign was held in New York on 25 October [A/CONF.155/1]

The pledges made at the Conference and subsequently until 31 March 1991 were earmarked for the Campaign as follows: Austria ($10,000), Canada ($Can 25,000), Cyprus ($1,000), Finland (50,000 markkaa), Greece ($5,000), Indonesia ($5,000), Mexico ($5,000), New Zealand ($1,800), Philippines ($500), Saudi Arabia ($5,000), Sri Lanka ($5,000), Sweden (200,000 kronor); for UNIDIR: Canada ($Can 25,000), China ($10,000), Finland (80,000 markkaa), France (1,313,000 French francs), Germany (20,000 deutsche mark), Iran ($1000), New Zealand ($4,441), Nigeria ($10,000), Republic of Korea ($5,000), Spain (1,500,000 pesetas), Switzerland (60,000 Swiss francs); for the United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services Programme: Norway ($50,000), Republic of Korea ($3,000); for the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa: France (50,000 French francs), Norway ($10,000); for the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific: Iran ($1000), Nepal ($7,000), New Zealand ($6,000), Norway ($10,000), Republic of Korea ($2,000); for the United Nations Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean: Norway ($10,000), Spain (575,000 pesetas); for the 1991 seminar on confidence- and security- building measures (Vienna): Austria ($96,572); for the 1990 seminar on confidence-building measures in the maritime environment (Varna, Bulgaria): Bulgaria (20,000 leva); for the 1991 regional meeting on confidence-building measures in Asia and the Pacific (Kathmandu, Nepal): New Zealand ($1,800); for the 1990 seminar on disarmament and security (Cairo): Egypt (11,144 Egyptian pounds); for the UN regional disarmament training programme for Latin America and the Caribbean: Norway ($15,000); for the 1991 expert meeting on the UN disarmament data base Budapest: Hungary (700,000 forint); for an international conference on disarmament (Tehran): Iran (10,000 rials); for the production of a television documentary on chemical weapons: Australia ($8,000), Austria ($10,000), Canada ($8,650), Finland ($10,000), Germany ($15,000), Norway ($9,565), Sweden ($6,000); for a Lomé/UNIDIR project: France (50,000 French francs).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/59 C.

World Disarmament Campaign

The General Assembly,

Recalling the decision taken by the General Assembly in 1982 at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, by which the World Disarmament Campaign was launched,

Recalling also its various resolutions on the subject, including resolution 44/117 A of 15 December 1989,

Having examined the reports of the Secretary-General of 15 October 1990 on the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, and of 2 October 1990 on the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters relating to the implementation of the World Disarmament Campaign, as well as the Final Act of the Eighth United Nations Pledging Conference for the campaign, held on 25 October 1990,

Taking note with appreciation of the contributions that Member States have already made to the Campaign,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the World Disarmament Campaign of 15 October 1990 and the assessment of its achievements and shortcomings;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his efforts to make effective use of the resources available to him in disseminating as widely as possible information on arms limitation and disarmament to elected officials, the media, non-governmental organizations, educational communities and research institutes, and in carrying out an active seminar and conference programme;

3. Notes with appreciation the contributions to the efforts of the Campaign by the United Nations information centres and the regional centres for disarmament;

4. Recommends that the Campaign, as a global information programme, should further focus its efforts:

(a) To inform, to educate and to generate public understanding of the importance of aid support for multilateral action, including by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner;

(b) To facilitate unimpeded access to and an exchange of information on ideas between the public sector and public interest groups and organizations, and to provide an independent source of balanced and factual information that takes into account a range of views to help further an informed debate on arms limitation, disarmament and security;

(c) To organize meetings to facilitate exchanges of views and information between governmental and non-governmental sectors, and between governmental and other experts in order to facilitate the search for common ground;

5. Invites all Member States to contribute to the World Disarmament Campaign Voluntary Trust Fund;

6. Decides that at its forty-sixth session there should be a ninth United Nations Pledging Conference for the World Disarmament Campaign, and expresses the hope that on that occasion all those Member States which have not yet announced any voluntary contributions will do so, bearing in mind the objectives of the Third Disarmament Decade and the need to ensure its success;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report covering both the implementation of the programme of activities of the Campaign by the United Nations system during 1991 and the programme of activities contemplated by the system for 1992;

8. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "World Disarmament Campaign".

4 December 1990 Meeting 54 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (A/45/779) without vote, 9 November (meeting 33); 20-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.29); agenda item 57 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 3-23, 29, 33; plenary 54.

Disarmament Week

Disarmament Week, an annual event fostering the objectives of disarmament, was observed on 25 October at a special meeting of the General Assembly's First Committee, where statements were made by the President of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the First Committee. The Department for Disarmament Affairs and the NGO Committee on Disarmament co-sponsored the annual NGO Forum at Headquarters. The Department also organized a series of lectures and an exhibition of disarmament activities.

Chapter III

Peaceful uses of outer space

The United Nations continued in 1990 to promote international co-operation in the use of outer space for peaceful purposes through the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Sub-Committees.

The General Assembly in December endorsed the Committee's decisions and recommendations, as contained in its report to the Assembly, and invited States that had not become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties.

Science, technology and law

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on outer space) held its thirty-third session in New York from 4 to 14 June 1990, during which it continued to consider ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes. Its report [A/45/20] reviewed in detail the results of the sessions of its two subsidiary bodies--the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and the Legal Sub-Committee--outlined the future work of those bodies and indicated a tentative timetable for their and the Committee's 1991 sessions. In addition, the report described the current status of the spin-off benefits of space technology and noted the participation in the Committee's work of a number of governmental and non-governmental organizations.

Annexed to the report was the Committee Chairman's statement at the opening of the session, which gave an overview of the most recent and outstanding achievements in the field of outer space, highlighted the activities of the two Sub-Committees, and noted the long-term repercussions on the Committee's work of the remarkable developments in international politics during the past year. Also annexed was the text of the seventh revision of the draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space.

The 1990 reports on the specific activities and actions undertaken by the Committee and its subsidiary bodies, as well as other related reports, were in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/46 [YUN 1989, p.98].

Other efforts to broaden international co-operation in outer space included International Space Year in 1992, the international project for satellite-aided search and rescue known as COSPAS-SARSAT and other initiatives taken through regional and international conferences, notably the regional space conference hosted by Costa Rica (see below).

Implementation of the recommendations of the 1982 Conference on outer space

In October 1990, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/589] on progress in the implementation of the recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82) [YUN 1982, p. 162]. He summarized the categories of activities contributing to that implementation, including inter-agency and regional co-operation, various relevant studies, the United Nations Programme on Space Applications (see below), technical advisory services, the International Space Information Service and voluntary contributions. Principal among the many implementing entities mentioned was the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82, reconvened during the year by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee.

The Working Group met for its fourth session (New York, 27 February-6 March) with a view to improving the execution of activities relating to international co-operation, particularly those included in the UN Programme on Space Applications, and to proposing steps to increase co-operation and make it more efficient. The Group put forward a series of proposals, among them that the Programme's emphasis should be on long-term, project-oriented on-the-job training in space technology, that Member States and international organizations should contribute to that end so that the number of fellowships offered could be increased, and that the number of trainees from each country should be sufficient to create a national core group of experts. States and international organizations, particularly those with space-related activities, should inform the Secretary-General annually concerning those activities that could be the subject of greater international co-operation, with particular emphasis on the needs of developing countries. To facilitate the exchange of consultants at the international level, the Outer Space Affairs Division of the Secretariat should compile a list of experts in space technology and applications, to be updated periodically and circulated among Member States. The Secretariat should prepare an annual report on arrangements with other organs, bodies and organizations of the UN system to utilize resources fully and to secure additional financial support for the continued implementation of the Programme. Also called for were the sharing of human and technical resources, information exchange, co-ordination of the space activities of scientific organizations, preparation of reports on the resources and technological capabilities of States, provision of financial and technical assistance to developing countries and ensuring the availability of data on a continuing basis.

The Working Group further proposed that the Outer Space Affairs Division should report on the economic aspects of the creation of an international space information service, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 44/46 [YUN 1989, p. 89], for the Group's consideration at its next session; that the United Nations should lead an international effort to establish regional centres for space science and technology education in developing countries; and that, to permit a better assessment of the implementation of the UNISPACE-82 recommendations, separate reports should be prepared on the implementation of the recommendations addressed to specialized agencies and other international organizations, and of those addressed to Member States.

The Working Group's report was adopted by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee and included as annex II to its own report [A/4/AC.105/456] to the Committee on outer space. In endorsing the Group's proposals, the Committee [A/45/20] recommended that the Group be reconvened in 1991 to continue its work.

As a follow-up to one of those proposals, the Secretary-General subsequently requested all Member States for information on experts in space technology and applications. By 22 May, 11 States had replied, on the basis of which the Secretariat prepared a list [A/AC.105/460] of such experts for transmittal to the Committee.

UN Programme on Space Applications

The United Nations Programme on Space Applications continued to focus in 1990 on: providing long-term fellowships for in-depth training and technical advisory services to Member States and regional institutions upon request; organizing a series of training courses and expert workshops; assisting in developing indigenous capability at the local level and in the acquisition and dissemination of space-related information systems; and promoting greater co-operation between developed and developing countries, as well as among developing countries, in space science and technology. Activities in those areas were described by the United Nations Expert on Space Applications in a December report [A/AC.105/478] to the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, for consideration in 1991.

According to the report, the Programme received 39 long-term fellowship offers for 1990/91, as follows: two from Austria for training in microwave technology; 10 from Brazil for research and application in remote-sensing technology; two from China for research and training in geodesy, photogrammetry and remote sensing; 21 from the USSR in geodesy, cartography and aerial photography, and in space science and technology research; and four from the European Space Agency (ESA) in space antennae and propagation, remote-sensing information systems, satellite meteorology and communications systems at various ESA institutions. In addition, five new fellowships were established by the USSR for training in optical-electronic instruments for remote sensing and monitoring of the Earth's resources and its environment.

The Programme assisted Costa Rica in organizing the Space Conference of the Americas: Prospects of Co-operation for Development (San Jose, 12-16 March). It conducted a survey leading to the selection of specific sites in those African countries in the Atlantic coast region that were within the perimeter of ESA's Fucino and Maspalomas ground receiving stations. The Outer Space Affairs Division continued to offer technical advisory services to the Indian Ocean Marine Affairs Co-operation to study the use of remote sensing for mapping, monitoring and managing coastal resources. The Programme also assisted the Economic Commission for Africa and the Governing Council of the Regional Centre for Services in Surveying, Mapping and Remote Sensing to carry out a fact-finding mission at the Centre.

Under the Programme's auspices, the United Nations conducted one training course, the UN International Training Course on Remote Sensing Education for Educators (Stockholm and Kiruna, Sweden, 14 May-15 June); and two workshops: the UN Workshop on Space Communications for Development (Havana, Cuba, 16-30 March) and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/ESA Workshop on Microwave Remote Sensing Technology (São José dos Campos, Brazil, 19-23 November). In addition, the Programme financially supported and co-sponsored a UN/FA(Z) International Training Course on Agricultural Applications of Remote Sensing (Prague, Czechoslovakia, 18-29 June) and the UN/FAO/ESA International Workshop on Remote Sensing (Rome, Italy, 7-16 November).

The 1990 Programme activities benefited from voluntary contributions from Austria, Brazil, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Pakistan, Spain, Sweden and the USSR, as well as from a variety of other support sources, including the United Nations, FAO and ESA.

The Expert's 1989 report [A/AC.105/446] was considered by the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee in 1990. The report set out the activities scheduled for implementation in 1990 and 1991 and contained, among other information, a proposal that the United Nations should lead an international effort to establish regional centres for space and technology education in existing national and regional educational institutions in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, and the Middle East. That would complement the fellowship programmes and thus enhance the capabilities of developing countries in space science and technology and its applications. The Sub-Committee [A/AC.105/456] took particular note of the proposal and called for voluntary contributions towards that effort. It further took note of the status of the 1990 training courses and workshops and recommended for approval those proposed for 1991. As to the reported contributions in support of the Programme's 1989 activities, the Sub-Committee again expressed concern over the meagre financial resources available for carrying out the Programme and appealed to Member States for support through voluntary contributions.

The Committee on outer space [A/45/20] took note of the Programme on Space Applications and of the progress being made in the implementation of activities planned for 1990. It recommended that, in all its activities, the Programme should highlight the cost-effective nature of the use of space applications, particularly in the area of remote sensing.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/72 of 11 December 1990, endorsed the Programme for 1991 and urged all States to make voluntary contributions to enhance its effectiveness.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee [A/AC.105/456] continued to stress the need to ensure effective consultations and co-ordination in outer space activities within the UN system and to avoid duplication. In that connection, it took note of the results of the eleventh Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities [YUN 1989, p. 95], indicating the extent of co-ordination achieved. The Meeting's report to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination was subsequently taken note of by the Committee on outer space.

The Sub-Committee also took note of the Secretary-General's 1989 report [A/AC.105/444 & Corr.1] on co-ordination of outer space activities within the UN system with regard to the work programmes for 1990, 1991 and future years. With regard to a proposal to organize two workshops jointly by the Outer Space Affairs Division and the Centre for Science and Technology for Development-as the input to a publication on space technology and applications in the series of Advanced Technology Alert Bulletins-the Sub-Committee pointed out that those workshops would be subject, not only to the concurrence of the Governments and organizations concerned, but also to the availability of funds from the Centre. It moreover drew attention to the role of the Committee on outer space and its subsidiary bodies as the focal point for co-ordinating UN space-related activities.

The twelfth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting (Rome, 26-28 September), in its report [ACC/1990/PG/9], described inter-agency co-ordination efforts and recommended major agenda items for consideration at the next Meeting. They included co-ordination of plans and programmes and exchange of views on current activities in the practical applications of space technology and related areas, an in-depth review of the co-operation in remote-sensing activities within the UN system, and planning and co-ordination of activities on International Space Year within that system.

The Secretariat, in a note of 23 January 1990 with later addenda [A/AC.105/445 & Add.1,2], submitted to the Committee on outer space the proposed programme for UN participation in International Space Year (1992) (ISY). The initiative of international scientific organizations and bodies to so designate 1992 had been endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 44/46 [YUN 1989 p. 91]. The scope of the proposed activities, which took account of the Year's objectives and the needs of developing countries, included management of the resources of the Earth and its environment, long-term education programmes and public education. The goal was to contribute to the demystification of space science and technology world wide and encourage countries, particularly the developing ones, not only to participate in the applications of the technology, but also to undertake programmes that could contribute to its understanding, growth and development at the local level. The proposed programme was to be implemented by voluntary contributions from Member States.

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee [A/AC.105/456], observing that 1992 would also be the tenth anniversary of UNISPACE-82, urged Member States and international organizations to consider supporting additional scientific and technical activities in co-operation with the United Nations as part of ISY. It also noted that it was important to increase voluntary contributions for ISY activities under the UN Programme on Space Applications. The Sub-Committee considered that the ISY activities of the UN system should be complementary to those of the Committee on Space Research (COSPAR), the International Astronautical Federation (IAF) and the Space Agency Forum for International Space Year. As the primary focus of the proposed activities was on the use of space technology for studying and monitoring the environment, the Sub-Committee recommended that Member States consider ways in which their planned activities could complement efforts under way for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

The Committee on outer space [A/45/20] agreed that ISY provided an opportunity to strengthen and expand co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space and noted the importance of including all countries in the Year's activities. It took note of: national and international activities being planned and the role of the Space Agency Forum in organizing for the Year; the proposal, in the context of the international geosphere-biosphere programme, for a series of polar-orbiting satellites called "PEACE" (protection of environment for assuring cleaner Earth) with sensors for continuous global monitoring of the Earth's environment; and the plans by COSPAR and IAF, with a joint World Space Congress to be held in Washington, D.C., and a major programme on "Mission to Planet Earth". The Committee further took note of the proposal that it and the Assembly each hold a special meeting to mark the Year and endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that Member States plan their ISY activities to complement those for UNCED.

The Secretariat, in further addenda [A/AC.105/445/Add.3,4] to its January note, advised that the previous document on UN participation in ISY had been recast in a new publication entitled "Guide to the Participation of the United Nations in the International Space Year—1992" and annexed a list, updated to 19 December 1990, of the planned ISY activities to be undertaken by the United Nations.

Science and technology aspects

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-seventh session in 1990 (New York, 26 February-9 March), at which it examined the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the co-ordination of its activities, as well as the implementation of the UNISPACE-82 recommendations. The Sub-Committee also examined matters relating to: remote sensing of the Earth by satellites; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; space transportation systems; the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit; life sciences, including space medicine; progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; planetary exploration; astronomy; the theme "The use of space technology in terrestrial search and rescue and in disaster relief activities", fixed for special attention at the current session; ISY; and space and Earth environment (see below).

During the session, in addition to a COSPAR/IAF symposium, special scientific and technical presentations were made by representatives of a number of expert bodies and programmes in science and space-related technology. The Working Group of the Whole was also reconvened with a view to improving the execution of activities relating to international co-operation, particularly those of the Programme, and to propose steps to increase such co-operation.

Following consideration of the various items before it, the Sub-Committee adopted its report [A/AC.105/456] to the Committee on outer space. Annexed to that report were a list of the documents before the Sub-Committee (annex I), the report of the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of UNISPACE-82 (annex II) and the report of the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space (annex III).

Remote sensing of the Earth by satellites

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee reiterated the view that remote sensing from outer space should be carried out taking into account the need to assist the developing countries. It emphasized the importance of making available to all countries remote-sensing data and analysed information, at reasonable cost and in a timely manner, as well as the need for free access to data from operational meteorological satellites. The Sub-Committee felt that international co-operation in the use of remote-sensing satellites should be encouraged through co-ordination of ground-station operations and regular meetings between satellite operators and users. It noted the importance of compatibility of data formats between different satellite systems, of sharing experiences and technology among developing countries and of satellite remote sensing for monitoring and protecting the Earth's environment, and in particular for studying and monitoring global climate change.

The Committee on outer space [A/45/20] recognized the importance of continued international efforts to ensure the continuity, compatibility and complementarity of systems for remote sensing of the Earth and urged all countries to continue the practice of free distribution of meteorological information. It took note of three working papers by the USSR: two entitled "Remote sensing of the Earth: OKEAN Programme" and "The Priroda package for remote sensing of the Earth (international project)", providing information on the development of two multi-purpose space platforms for continuing investigation of Earth resources and for monitoring the environment; and a third proposing an international environmental monitoring space laboratory. It endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendations that discussion on remote-sensing activities should be conducted in accordance with the 1986 Principles relating to Remote Sensing of the Earth from Space [YUN 1986, p. 95] and that the item be retained as a priority one on the agenda of the next Sub-Committee session.

Nuclear power sources and safety in spacecraft

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee examined the report of the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space on its eighth session (New York, 5-8 March), which the Sub-Committee later included as annex III to its own report [A/AC.105/456] to the Committee on outer space.

At the session, the Working Group completed the elaboration of agreed recommendations on nuclear power sources used in space aimed at minimizing and protecting against radiation hazards to individuals, the general population, the biosphere and outer space itself. The recommendations set out in detail design measures to use nuclear power sources in space missions as a last resort, to contain adequately those that must be used from accidents that could disrupt the integrity of the space vehicle, and, in planning missions, to ensure that the space vehicle itself be kept at a safe distance from Earth, space debris and other space vehicles. The Group agreed that States concerned could consult with the International Atomic Energy Agency on elaborating recommendations concerning the organization and conduct of operations for emergency planning and preparedness in case of accidental re-entry of nuclear power sources into the Earth's atmosphere.

The Committee on outer space [A/45/20] noted the Working Group's agreed recommendations, stating that they had provided a basis for agreement also in the Legal Sub-Committee on a text for draft principle 3 relating to guidelines and criteria on the same subject (see below).

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

The Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee [A/AC.105/456] continued its consideration of the utilization and technical aspects of the geostationary orbit, in which satellites maintained an altitude of about 36,000 kilometres above the equator. Views were expressed to the effect that the Sub-Committee should contribute to the Legal Sub-Committee's consideration of the issue and that it was important to continue considering the question, taking into account the geostationary orbit's characteristics as a limited natural resource, requiring a special regime to guarantee access by all States, in particular by equatorial States, and to take account of developing countries' needs. Also reviewed were recent developments in national and international space communications programmes, including technical developments that would contribute to ensuring access by all countries to satellite communications. In that connection, attention was drawn to various current and planned satellite communications programmes of Member States and international organizations, such as INTEL-SAT (International Telecommunications Satellite Organization) and INTERSPUTNIK (International Organization for Space Communications).

With regard to the claim that questions relating to the geostationary orbit were already being addressed effectively by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), it was pointed out that, without ignoring ITU's technical role and functions, those questions were, in a global and political context, one of the principal responsibilities of the Committee on outer space and its sub-committees.

The Committee on outer space [A/45/20] endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that it continue consideration of the item at its next session.

Spin-off benefits of space technology

The Committee on outer space reviewed the current status of spin-off benefits of space technology, during which it heard special presentations by United States and USSR experts. The Committee agreed that such spin-offs were yielding substantial benefits in medicine (new techniques for diagnosis and treatment, including the electronic "temperature pill", portable X-ray device, surgical instruments), in safety (anti-glare filters, heat-resistant materials, protective systems for firefighters), in manufacturing and construction (new materials, high-performance machines, protective coatings, optical instruments, electronics), and in art preservation, environmental protection and agriculture.

The Committee agreed on the need to enhance international co-operation in developing such spin-off benefits, with particular attention to those which could address the social and economic needs of developing countries. It was suggested that a seminar to that end should be organized as part of the Programme on Space Applications. The Committee recommended that the Outer Space Affairs Division undertake a study of spin-offs on the basis of information from Member States and that space agencies in those States consider allocating a small portion of their resources to encourage spin-off applications of space technology through technology transfer to developing countries and exchange of technical information on promotional terms. The view was advanced that the United Nations should contribute to the development of procedures for the dissemination of those benefits.

Other questions

The Committee on outer space and its Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee dealt with various other space-related questions, such as life sciences, including space medicine; progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; matters relating to planetary exploration and astronomy; and the theme "The use of space technology in terrestrial search and rescue and in disaster relief activities", fixed for special attention in 1990.

The Sub-Committee [A/AC.105/456] noted that: studies of human physiology under conditions of manned space flight had led to important advances in medical knowledge in such areas as blood circulation, heart function and metabolism; products of space biotechnology, such as pharmaceuticals, could have a profound impact on health care on Earth; and telemedicine techniques developed for the treatment of astronauts during space flight were also applicable for improving health care in remote and disaster-stricken areas. It therefore suggested that efforts be made to promote international co-operation to enable all countries to benefit from those advances.

The Committee on outer space [A/45/20] endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendations that COSPAR and IAF be invited to report on progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, that COSPAR arrange a special presentation on progress in the geosphere-biosphere programme and that the item on that programme be changed to "Progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, in particular progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme". The Committee requested the Sub-Committee, when discussing activities related to the geosphere-biosphere, to highlight those scientific activities in which developing countries could play a meaningful role, and the Outer Space Affairs Division to arrange for training and support for those countries in that regard.

The Committee further noted that COSPAR and IAF had conducted a symposium (27-28 February) on the theme fixed for 1990 and endorsed the Sub-Committee's recommendation that all Member States and relevant international organizations consider utilizing to the maximum extent possible the highly successful COSPAR-SARSAT system for global search and rescue activities.

As to the General Assembly's recommendation in resolution 44/46 [YUN 1989, p. 98] that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and preservation of the outer space environment, especially those affecting the Earth's environment, the Committee agreed that space debris was an issue of concern to all nations and could be an appropriate subject for future Committee discussion.

In addition, the Committee recommended that the Secretariat invite Member States to submit annual reports on their space activities, including information in response to requests from the Working Group of the Whole, on spin-off benefits of space activities, and on other topics requested by the Committee and its subsidiary bodies. It noted the participation in its work and that of its sub-committees of ESA, INTELSAT, INTERSPUTNIK, the Council on International Co-operation in the Study and Utilization of Outer Space, COSPAR and IAF.

Legal aspects

The Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on outer space held its twenty-ninth session in 1990 (New York, 2-20 April), at which it continued to consider three agenda items: the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, without prejudice to the role of ITU; and the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries.

Annexed to the Sub-Committee's report [A/AC.105/457 & Corr.1] were the report of its working group on the first item mentioned above (annex I) and three related working papers considered by the group (annex III). Also annexed was the report of the Sub-Committee's working group on the second item (annex II).

Nuclear power sources in outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee's working group on the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space considered, at its 1990 session (3-11 April), a working paper previously submitted by Canada containing the fifth revision of a set of 11 draft principles. The texts of draft principles 1, 5, 6, 7 and 10—on the applicability of international law, notification of re-entry, consultations, assistance to States and settlement of disputes, respectively—had already been agreed to by the Sub-Committee. A new text for draft principle 3, on guidelines and criteria for the safe use of nuclear power sources and on which the working group recorded consensus, had been proposed by its Chairman, following extensive informal consultations on the basis of a working paper submitted by Canada, France and the Federal Republic of Germany.

The working group carried out readings on the provisions of draft principles 2,4,8,9 and 11, dealing, respectively, with notification of the presence on board a space object of a nuclear power source, safety assessment, responsibility, compensation and relations with international treaties and agreements. The working group heard an exchange of views on each of those draft principles and discussed a proposed reformu-lated text for draft principle 4, without reaching consensus on any of them, however.

Following discussions on the working group's report, the Legal Sub-Committee agreed to the newly revised draft principle 3, bringing the number of agreed principles to six (principles 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 10). To reflect those discussions, Canada, on 17 April, submitted a sixth revision, containing draft principles 2, 4, 8, 9, 11 and a new draft principle 12 providing for a revision of the set of principles no later than 10 years after their adoption. The Sub-Committee reproduced the sixth revision as annex III to its report [A/AC.105/457] to the Committee on outer space.

The Committee welcomed [A/45/20] the consensus reached on the text of draft principle 3. As a result of informal consultations held on the outstanding draft texts, some progress was made, in particular on draft principles 9 and 12. A basis for consensus was also provided on a text for draft principle 8 and on the deletion of draft principle 11. On 20 June, Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany submitted a seventh revision updating the status of the outstanding draft principles, including a new draft principle 1A on the definition of "launching State", and principles 2,4,8,9 and 12. That revision was subsequently included as annex II in the Committee's report.

Geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

On 3 April 1990, the Legal Sub-Committee re-established its working group charged with addressing matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of ITU. During its meetings (3-18 April), the working group had before it the 1989 report of the Legal Sub-Committee [A/AC.105/430], annexing the group's report for that year, as well as the 1990 report of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee [A/AC.105/456], describing the results of its consideration of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit. Each aspect of the agenda item, namely, the definition and delimitation of outer space, on the one hand, and the geostationary orbit, on the other, was discussed separately, in the course of which some 10 'related documents submitted at previous sessions of the Legal Sub-Committee and of the Committee on outer space were referred to.

The working group's draft report, which summarized the positions and views expressed during its deliberations on the item, was taken note of by the Sub-Committee and set out as annex II in its own report [A/AC.105/457] to the Committee on outer space.

Concerning the question of the definition and delimitation of outer space, the Committee [A/45/20] noted the proposal that in 1991 the Legal Sub-Committee should begin a preliminary exchange of views on the international legal issues relating to prospective flights of aerospace vehicles. With regard to the geostationary orbit, the Committee noted that an exchange of views had taken place on the item, particularly on three of the five general ideas formulated in the "working non-paper" circulated at the 1989 session of the Legal Sub-Committee (namely, that "the geostationary orbit is a limited natural resource and, therefore, its utilization should be rational and equitable and for the benefit of all mankind, taking into account the special needs of the developing countries and the geographical situation of particular countries"; that "the development of space science and technology applied in the utilization of the geostationary orbit is of fundamental importance for the economic, social and cultural development of the peoples of all States, in particular those of developing countries"; that "the geostationary orbit should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes for the benefit of all mankind through promoting international co-operation and understanding").

The view was expressed that, as a way of helping future work on the subject, the Secretariat should elaborate a study, based on previous reports and statements, to identify areas where consensus and agreement existed among the majority of Member States, and areas where differences of views had not appeared. The Committee recommended that the Legal Sub-Committee continue consideration of the item in 1991.

Benefits from the exploration of outer space

The Legal Sub-Committee [A/AC.103/457] continued in 1990 to consider the agenda item on the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries. Before it were the replies from Member States to the Secretary-General's note of 26 September 1988 requesting their views as to the priority of specific subjects under the item and information on their national legal frameworks, if any, relating to the application of the principle as contained in article 1 of the 1966 Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies (Outer Space Treaty) [GA res. 2222(XXI)], which entered into force in 1967 [YUN 1967, p. 27]. Also before the Sub-Committee were replies to a 20 December 1989 note of the Secretary-General, inviting Member States to submit their views on international agreements they had entered into that were relevant to the principle.

The Sub-Committee established a working group to commence work on the item in 1991, which, it was suggested, might be considered in the light of: the common interests principle enshrined in article 1 of the Outer Space Treaty; the principle of international co-operation, important for the realization of the common interests principle; the provision of services by international multilateral agencies and international co-operation fostered through bilateral international agreements; and the final goal of the Sub-Committee, namely, the elaboration of a legal instrument to develop and improve the common benefit principle. The Sub-Committee recommended that the Secretary-General reissue his request to Member States for information on their national legal frameworks and international agreements. It decided that it would be useful to have a readily available compilation of the multilateral agreements, together with a list of the States parties to them, as identified in the responses to the Secretary-General's request.

The Committee on outer space [A/45/20] endorsed the recommendation of the Sub-Committee and recommended that it continue consideration of the item at its next session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/72.

International co-operation in the peaceful uses of outer space

Recalling its resolution 44/46 of 8 December 1989,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and of the importance of international co-operation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international co-operation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law and their important role in international co-operation for the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Gravely concerned at the extension of an arms race into outer space,

Recognizing that all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, should contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international co-operation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Aware of the need to increase the benefits of space technology and its applications and to contribute to an orderly growth of space activities favourable to the socio-economic advancement of mankind, in particular that of the peoples of developing countries,

Considering that space debris is an issue of concern to all nations,

Noting the progress achieved in the further development of peaceful space exploration and application as well as in various national and co-operative space projects, which contribute to international co-operation in this field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the work of its thirty-third session,

1. Endorses the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;

2. Invites States that have not yet become parties to the international treaties governing the uses of outer space to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to those treaties;

3. Notes that, at its twenty-ninth session, the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, in its working groups, continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in resolution 44/46;

4. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Legal Sub-Committee, at its thirtieth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Continue, through its working group, the elaboration of draft principles relevant to the use of nuclear-power sources in outer space with the aim of finalizing the draft set of principles;

(b) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including consideration of ways and means to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union;

(c) Continue, through its working group, its consideration of the legal aspects related to the application of the principle that the exploration and utilization of outer space should be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all States, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries;

5. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee concerning the organization of work in the Legal Sub-Committee;

6. Notes that, at its twenty-seventh session, the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space continued its work as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/46;

7. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, at its twenty-eighth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Consider the following items on a priority basis:

- (i) United Nations Programme on Space Applications and the co-ordination of space activities within the United Nations system;
- (ii) Implementation of the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space;
- (iii) Matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites including, inter alia, applications for developing countries;
- (iv) Use of nuclear-power sources in outer space;
- (b) Consider the following items:
 - (i) Questions relating to space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space;
 - (ii) Examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit; examination of its utilization and applications, including, inter alia, in the field of space communications, as well as other questions relating to space communications developments, taking particular account of the needs and interests of developing countries;
- (iii) Matters relating to life sciences, including space medicine;
- (iv) Progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, in particular progress in the geosphere-biosphere (global change) programme; the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation should be invited to present reports and arrange a special presentation on this subject;
- (v) Matters relating to planetary exploration;
- (vi) Matters relating to astronomy;
- (vii) The theme fixed for special attention at the 1991 session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee: "Applications of airborne and satellite remote sensing for prospecting mineral and ground-water resources and for monitoring and managing biological resources, with emphasis on agriculture, taking into particular account the needs of developing countries": the Committee on Space Research and the International Astronautical Federation should be invited to arrange a symposium, with as wide a participation as possible, to be held during the first week of the Sub-Committee's session, at the end of its meetings, to complement discussions within the Sub-Committee;

8. Considers, in the context of paragraph 7 (a) (ii) above, that it is particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations:

(a) All countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space;

(b) Data banks at the national and regional levels should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established to function as a centre of co-ordination;

(c) The United Nations should support the creation of adequate training centres at the regional level, linked, whenever possible, to institutions implementing space programmes: necessary funding for the development of such centres should be made available through financial institutions;

(d) The United Nations should organize a fellowship programme through which selected graduates or post-graduates from developing countries should get in-depth, long-term exposure to space technology or applications; it is also desirable to encourage the availability of opportunities for such exposure on other bilateral and multilateral bases outside the United Nations system;

9. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee should reconvene, at its twenty-eighth session, the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, with a view to improving the execution of activities relating to international co-operation, particularly those included within the United Nations Programme on Space Applications, and to proposing concrete steps to increase such co-operation, as well as to make it more efficient;

10. Also endorses the recommendations of the Working Group of the Whole of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, as endorsed by the Committee and as contained in paragraphs 4.5 and 6 of the report of the Working Group of the Whole;

11. Decides that, during the twenty-eighth session of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee, the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space shall be reconvened;

12. Endorses the United Nations Programme on Space Applications for 1991, as proposed to the Committee by the Expert on Space Applications, and urges all States to make voluntary contributions to the Programme in order to enhance its effectiveness;

13. Emphasizes the urgency and importance of implementing fully the recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space as early as possible;

14. Reaffirms its approval of the recommendation of the Conference regarding the establishment and strengthening of regional mechanisms of co-operation and their promotion and creation through the United Nations system;

15. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments that have made or expressed their intention to make contributions towards carrying out the recommendations of the Conference;

16. Invites all Governments to take effective action for the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

17. Requests all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or on space-related matters to co-operate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

19. Urges Member States and international organizations to consider supporting the efforts of the United Nations in connection with International Space Year, 1992;

20. Endorses the recommendation of the Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee that Member States, in planning their activities for International Space Year, consider ways in which those activities could complement the efforts under way for the United Nations

Conference on Environment and Development planned for 1992;

21. Recommend that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

22. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions with space debris and other aspects of space debris, and calls for the continuation of national research on this question;

23. Also considers that space debris could be an appropriate subject for discussion by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space in the future;

24. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international co-operation in the exploration and uses of outer space for peaceful purposes;

25. Takes note of the views expressed and documents circulated during the thirty-third session of the Committee and during the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly concerning ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes;

26. Requests the Committee to continue to consider, as a matter of priority, ways and means of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

27. Also requests the Committee to continue to consider, at its thirty-fourth session, its agenda item entitled "Spin-off benefits of space technology: review of current status";

28. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their co-operation with the Committee and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

29. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/821) without vote, 26 November (meeting 22); draft by Austria for SPC Working Group (A/SPC/45/L.17); agenda item 73.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 13-16, 22; plenary 65.

In resolution 45/55 A of 4 December, the Assembly called on all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space. It requested the Conference on Disarmament to consider as a priority the question of preventing an arms race in outer space.

Spacecraft launchings

In 1990, eight countries (China, France, Germany, India, Japan, United Kingdom, United States, USSR) [ST/SG/SER.E/214-234] provided information to the United Nations on the launching of objects into orbit or beyond, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1721 B (XVI) [YUN 1961, p. 35] and article IV of the 1974 Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space [GA res. 3235(XXIX)], which entered into force in 1976.

Convention on registration of launchings

As at 31 December 1990, there were 36 States parties to the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space. In 1979, the European Space Agency had declared its acceptance of the rights and obligations of the Convention.

Chapter IV

Other political questions

The public information policies and activities of the United Nations remained under review in 1990 by its Committee on Information, the better to promote a freer, wider and better balanced dissemination of information and thereby strengthen international understanding. To that end, the General Assembly called for co-operation and interaction in the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities of developing countries in order to increase their participation in the communication process.

The Assembly requested the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation to continue its work aimed at increasing knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources and to analyse its effects on man and his environment; it also requested the United Nations Environment Programme to continue supporting that work.

In view of Antarctica's importance to the global environment and ecosystems, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive study on the establishment of a United Nations-sponsored station in Antarctica to promote international co-operation in scientific research for the benefit of mankind and to act as an early-warning system on climate change and accidents. It appealed again for the exclusion of South Africa from the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties until its system and practices of apartheid were eliminated.

The Secretary-General pursued his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus with a view to achieving an overall agreement between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities. In the meantime, the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), which the Security Council kept in place in the island throughout the year, continued to discharge its peace-keeping and humanitarian tasks.

During the year, two new States were admitted to the United Nations, while four Member States announced their continued membership as two unified States; as a result, United Nations membership remained at 159.

The Security Council held a total of 69 meetings and adopted 37 resolutions. The Assembly resumed and concluded its forty-fourth (1989) session and held the major part of its forty-fifth (1990) session; in addition, it held its seventeenth and eighteenth special sessions, on international co-operation against illicit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and on international economic co-operation, respectively.

The Assembly requested expanded co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference. It invited the International Committee of the Red Cross to participate in its work in the capacity of observer.

Information

The public information activities of the United Nations remained focused on two broad objectives: publicizing the Organization's goals and work, and enhancing the information capabilities of developing countries. Those activities were carried out by the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC)

Information activities and policies were considered by the General Assembly's Committee on Information at its twelfth session, held in New York from 5 April to 2 May 1990. To help in its deliberations on three substantive questions (see below), the Committee established a working group that conducted further informal consultations through the spokesmen for the regional groups and China. In its report [A/45/21] to the Assembly, the Committee set out its recommendations in two draft resolutions that were later adopted by the Assembly as resolutions 45/76 A and B. The Committee's recommendations that its membership be increased from 74 to 78 and that the seats created be filled by the appointment of Czechoslovakia, Iran, Jamaica and Uruguay were adopted by Assembly decisions 45/422 and 45/316 A, respectively; a vacancy in the Committee was also filled by Assembly decision 45/316 B.

Mass communication

At its 1990 session, the Committee on Information continued to address the promotion of the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order intended to strengthen peace and international understanding and based on the free circulation and wider and better-balanced dissemination of information. It examined UN public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations, particularly during the past two decades, and of the imperatives of the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order. It further pursued the evaluation and follow-up of the efforts made and the progress achieved by the UN system in the field of information and communications.

Proposed new world information and communication order

In its deliberations on the question of the establishment of a new world information and communication order, the Committee on Information sought to overcome the differences in arriving at a common approach towards promoting not only the free flow of information and its wider and more balanced dissemination, but also towards strengthening communication capacities in developing countries so as to increase their participation in the communication process. That meant improving the practical possibilities of developing countries to participate more fully in information exchange, as well as improving their media infrastructure and communications technology, especially in the training of journalists and other communication professionals, thus assuring them of the full benefits of freedom of information.

It was hoped that the favourable political climate created in the past year, the new strategy for "communication in the service of humanity" adopted by UNESCO in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 103], and its International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC) would help promote the desired new world information and communication order. An appeal was made for Committee members to demonstrate the necessary political will to reach a consensus so that, once achieved, the Committee should be able to devote itself to analysing DPI's work and providing it with a practical and flexible mandate, in particular for the benefit of developing countries.

Following its deliberations, the Committee decided, by consensus, to recommend to the General Assembly adoption of its recommendations as contained in a draft resolution on information in the service of humanity, which took account also of IPDC (see below).

International Programme for the Development of Communication

The Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication continued to support projects aimed at meeting the needs of developing countries in the fields of communication, information and mass media infrastructures. At its eleventh session (Paris, 19-23 March) [CC/MD/13], the Council decided that the IPDC priorities and criteria to be used in considering project submissions should be regrouped under development, endogenous capacity, and information flow and exchange. In the pre-selection process, five priority orientations should be met by national, regional and interregional projects. The orientations included relevance to: development; cultural identity and educational needs; endogenous capacity to produce, receive and transmit information; professional and technical training of human resources in research, planning, management and technology of communication systems; and the free flow of information and balanced dissemination of news and cultural products. Other decisions concerned the number of regional and national projects to be approved, the introduction of a system for confidential rating of submissions and a modification of the rules and practices for project submission.

For 1990, the Council approved 23 projects to be financed from the Special Account and eight from special fund allocations. It further approved seven projects for priority funding when financial resources became available and another eight for which funding would be sought.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/76 A.

Information in service of humanity

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Urges that all countries, organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, deeply concerned by the disparities existing between developed and developing countries and the consequences of every kind arising from those disparities that affect the capability of the public, private or other media and individuals in developing countries to disseminate information and communicate their views and their cultural and ethical values through endogenous cultural production, as well as to ensure the diversity of sources of and their free access to information, recognizing the call in this context for what in the United Nations and at various international forums has been termed "a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process", should:

(a) Co-operate and interact with a view to reducing existing disparities in information flows at all levels by increasing assistance for the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with due regard for their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by those countries, and in order to enable them and the public, private or other media in developing countries to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and increase the participation of media and individuals in the communication process, and to ensure a free flow of information at all levels;

(b) Ensure for journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and condemn resolutely all attacks against them;

(c) Provide support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from public, private and other media in developing countries;

(d) Enhance regional efforts and co-operation among developing countries, as well as co-operation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communication capacities and to improve the media infrastructure and communication technology in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information;

(e) Aim, in addition to bilateral co-operation, at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and the media, public, private or other, in the developing countries, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including:

- (i) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;
- (ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;
- (iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;
- (f) Provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media.

UN public information

DPI activities

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 44/50 [YUN 1989, p. 104], the Secretary-General submitted a report in October 1990 [A/45/533] on questions relating to information, describing the special activities and products of DPI. They included its co-operation with UNESCO and the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries; its activities pertaining to international peace and security, the World Disarmament Campaign, decolonization and the situation in Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTS), human rights, the advancement of women and their role in society, economic and social development problems, African recovery and development, the environment and the campaign against illicit trafficking in narcotics and drug abuse; and its activities against apartheid, and those relating to the Middle East situation and Palestine in particular and to Namibia. Also described were DPI activities relating to the strengthening of the UN information centres (UNICS) and to DPI participation in the work of JUNIC for the co-ordination of UN information activities (see below).

As part of its information programme for International Literacy Year (1990) (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), DPI released an educational video and study guide on literacy highlighting the work of UNESCO and the Year. It organized a seminar at UN Headquarters on ways of introducing UN-related issues into the classroom for some 200 educators and organizers of scholastic model UN conferences. In efforts to enhance its co-operation with the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and to strengthen its working relations with the News Agencies Pool of those countries, DPI sent news dispatches to more than 90 news agencies of the Pool and participated in the Third Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries (Havana, Cuba, 24-29 September).

To highlight UN peace-keeping and peace-making activities, DPI produced feature articles in UN Focus on the role of the United Nations in the Central American peace process and in the demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance, as well as on the ongoing role of the Secretary-General in the negotiating process in Cambodia. It issued an updated version of The Blue Helmets and of the pamphlet United Nations Peace-keeping for distribution world wide. In the field of disarmament, DPI prepared a comprehensive press kit on the occasion of the Fourth Review Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (see PART ONE, Chapter II). It also produced several special radio programmes on the ban on nuclear-weapon tests and signed a contract with a non-governmental organization (NGO) to co-produce a one-hour documentary on chemical weapons and warfare.

DPI developed a comprehensive information programme to publicize the thirtieth anniversary, on 12 October, of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and peoples (see PART FOUR, Chapter I) and prepared a booklet profiling the remaining NSGTs entitled Decolonization: The Task Ahead and another entitled Teaching about Decolonization. In the area of human rights, DPI focused on promoting the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child IGA res. 44/251 by publicizing its entry into force on 2 September 1990 and producing its full text in the six UN official languages for world-wide distribution. It assisted in the media coverage of the World Summit for Children (New York, 29-30 September) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV) and convened the annual conference for NGOs (New York, 12-14 September) on the theme "A World Safe for Children: Meeting the Challenge in the 1990s". It also produced a special feature on the United Nations and the human rights situation in South Africa in the "One South Africa" radio series and was in the process of preparing, as part of the series "About the United Nations", an educational video and teaching guide on human rights-related issues and a 30-minute documentary film on the work of the United Nations in human rights.

DPI prepared a comprehensive information kit for the media on the Assembly's eighteenth special session (see PART THREE, Chapter I) devoted to issues relating to international economic co-operation and organized special briefings prior to that session. It developed, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, a comprehensive information strategy for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I). As part of its information programme for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I), DPI also developed a feature article on regional trading blocs.

The Africa Recovery Unit of DPI continued to produce the quarterly Africa Recovery. In addition, a series of articles dealing with African economic development was published in major newspapers and a multi-media kit was prepared for the report of the Secretary-General's Expert Group on African Commodity Problems. Assistance in extensive media planning was provided to the United Nations Steering Committee for the Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development for the convening of a conference on Africa (London, 6 June). In preparation for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development scheduled for 1992 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII), the first backgrounder on the Conference was produced and distributed in time for the first session of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference (Nairobi, Kenya, 6-31 August 1990). DPI produced, in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Programme, two special radio documentaries on the theme of children and the environment in connection with World Environment Day 1990.

On 26 June, DPI organized a special theatrical presentation at UN Headquarters for the third International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking. It provided press coverage and media liaison for the World Ministerial Summit (London, 9-11 April) to reduce drug demand and to combat the cocaine threat. Public service announcements carrying the message "The United Nations Fights Drug Abuse World Wide" continued to be placed in major international news magazines.

DPI assisted in preparations for and provided full media coverage of the first visit to Headquarters of the African National Congress leader, Nelson Mandela, on 22 June. It continued to implement its comprehensive information programme to promote the ideas and issues embodied in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa. In addition to a variety of special features produced in weekly radio and television programmes, DPI produced 24 special editions in English, Sesotho, Setswana, Xhosa and Zulu as part of the "One South Africa" radio series. Coverage was given to efforts to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East under UN auspices and a number of updated booklets and brochures on issues relating to the question of Palestine continued to be distributed. DPI provided full media coverage of the admission of Namibia on 23 April to UN membership and produced a 30-minute video entitled "Namibia Independence: A Nation Is Born". To highlight the international donors' meeting on assistance to Namibia, DPI organized a journalists' tour (23 April-4 May) to that country.

Report of Committee on Information. During its review of the Secretary-General's report on DPI activities [A/AC.198/1990/2], which included his account of the measures taken to strengthen UNICs, the Committee on Information [A/45/21] noted that, through structural reform and technological innovation, DPI had substantially improved the quality and delivery of its multi-faceted information products and scored commendable successes in bringing the United Nations to the peoples of the world in a more expeditious and comprehensive fashion. Additional improvements were suggested, however, which included calls for closer attention to the concerns of developing countries, further efforts at tackling the backlog in certain DPI publications, notably the Yearbook of the United Nations, providing the necessary technical and financial assistance to those States willing to broadcast to South Africa as an effective way of reaching all South Africans, highlighting the environmental plight of Africa, the further upgrading of UNICs and filling the Director post of the UNIC in Dhaka, Bangladesh, vacant for more than three years. It was pointed out that demands were often placed on DPI without regard to its real capabilities so that, to meet those demands, the necessary resources should be secured.

On the basis of the Secretary-General's report, the Committee decided, by consensus, to recommend to the General Assembly adoption of a draft resolution containing its recommendations relating to UN public information policies and activities. The Committee similarly decided to take note of the Secretariat's note [A/AC.198/1990/5] concerning the programme on public information of the proposed 1992-1997 medium-term plan [A/45/6 (Prog. 38)], and to recommend to the Assembly adoption of the proposed medium-term plan for the programme.

UN information centres and services

In his October report [A/45/533] on questions relating to information, the Secretary-General also gave an account of measures taken to strengthen UN information centres and services. He stated that the network of 67 UNICs continued to make every effort to intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local media, information and educational institutions and NGOs, undertaking numerous activities with them on occasions of special UN events. New contacts and co-operative endeavours with local media had been established in most countries and additional regular time-slots for audio-visual programmes of DPI had been secured. UNICs continued to issue information materials-photographs, wallsheets, teaching guides on selected topics and other publications produced by the UN system-for distribution by UN stands at book fairs and to schools, and for display at airports, subways, and main bus and train terminals of major cities.

To strengthen ties between Headquarters and the field, DPI organized: a meeting of UNIC directors in Arabic-speaking countries (Tunis, Tunisia, 21-23 March) to discuss ways of enhancing co-operation with other UN offices to promote public understanding of the role of the United Nations in tackling global issues and regional problems, and to mobilize public support for it; a five-day meeting of directors serving in Asia and the Pacific (Manila, May); and a four-day seminar in Geneva, which brought together 14 reference assistants from UNICs in Europe, 10 UN depository librarians and a senior library assistant from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to discuss programmes, documentation and technological innovation.

To enhance DPI and UNDP co-operation in the field and to maximize their joint skills and resources, the two bodies agreed on the text of an understanding for rationalizing UN field representation; both were also in agreement that co-operation could be further enhanced through closer ties between their respective regional desk officers, participation of senior staff in regional meetings and briefings of UNDP resident representatives and co-ordinators on public information matters. To accelerate the process of linking the network of UNICs with Headquarters and UN offices in all regions, facsimile machines had been installed in 56 centres, as had new computer equipment in several of them.

In a September report [A/C.5/45/2], the Secretary-General submitted revised estimates for the 1990-1991 programme budget. Prepared in response to section II of General Assembly resolution 44/50 [YUN 1989, p. 106], he projected resource requirements of $259,700 (net of staff assessment) for the establishment in 1991 of an information centre in Windhoek, following Namibia's accession to independence and admission to the United Nations (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

Co-ordination within the UN system

The Joint United Nations Information Committee, the inter-agency co-ordinating body for information activities in the UN system, held its sixteenth session in Geneva on 21 and 22 June [ACC/1990/11]. DPI, as the secretariat of the Committee, had organized the session and continued to participate in its work.

JUNIC considered the scope of inter-agency co-operation in the audio-visual field and established an open-ended working group of Geneva-based UN agencies to draw up an in-house inventory of audio-visual equipment and staff available among Geneva-based UN agencies, consider ways of pooling resources in order to meet their audio-visual needs, assess the possibility of establishing a storage-retrieval system for the increasing number of audio-visual materials, and formulate recommendations on scheduling of audio-visual services, staffing requirements, and access to and maintenance of the audio-visual equipment in Geneva, for consideration by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

With regard to joint activities on topical issues of global concern, JUNIC endorsed the proposed programme for co-production of an international television series entitled "Agenda for a small planet IV Blueprint for the future-challenge and response", as well as the DPI recommendations relating to the electronic distribution of print materials. There was support for the suggestion that a given UN agency, in its budget allocated for any planned project or activity, should include money to cover dissemination, public information and other assistance provided by one or more UNICs. Expressing concern about the decline in the financial support for the DPI publication Development Forum, the system-wide publication devoted to development issues, JUNIC decided to set up an editorial group to look into the situation and to recommend possible options to the publication.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly, having considered the comprehensive reports of the Committee on Information and the Secretary-General, adopted resolution 45/76 B.

United Nations public information policies and activities

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in respect of United Nations public information policies and activities, to implement the following recommendations, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions:

(a) The United Nations system as a whole should co-operate in a concerted manner, through its information services and the co-ordination of the Joint United Nations Information Committee, in promoting a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system in all its endeavours, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, with particular emphasis on the creation of a climate of confidence, the strengthening of multilateralism and the promotion of the development activities in the United Nations system;

(b) Reaffirming the primary role of the general Assembly in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information, the Secretary-General is requested to ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, are strengthened and improved, keeping in view the purposes and principles of the Charter, the priority areas defined by the Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information, so as to ensure an objective and more coherent coverage of, as well as better knowledge about, the United Nations and its work. The Secretary-General should ensure that the Department of Public Information:

- (i) Co-operates more regularly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, especially at the working level, with a view to maximizing the contribution of the Department to the efforts of that organization;
- (ii) Enhances its co-operation with news agencies of and in the developing countries, in particular, the News Agencies Pool of Non-Aligned Countries, the Eco-Pool of the News Agencies of Non-Aligned Countries and the Broadcasting Organization of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as with other news agencies and intergovernmental and regional organizations;
- (iii) Continues to disseminate, in co-ordination with the information services of other relevant agencies, information about United Nations activities pertaining, inter alia, to:
 - a. International peace and security;
 - b. Disarmament;
 - c. Peace-keeping operations;
 - d. Decolonization and the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories;
 - e. The elimination of foreign occupation;
 - f. Human rights;
 - g. The elimination of all forms of racial discrimination;
 - h. The advancement of the status of women and their role in society;
 - i. Problems of economic and social development, as well as international economic co-operation aimed at resolving external debt problems;
 - k. The least developed countries;
 - l. The environment and development;
 - m. The campaign against terrorism in all its forms, bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 40/61 of 9 December 1985;
 - n. The international fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking;
- (iv) Does its utmost to disseminate widely and to publicize the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 and the tremendous efforts of the African countries towards recovery and development, as well as the positive response by the international community to alleviate the serious economic situation prevailing in Africa;

- (v) Enhances the effectiveness of its activities and the dissemination of information on United Nations activities against the policies and practices of apartheid, giving due attention to the unilateral measures and official censorship imposed on the local and international media with regard to all aspects of that issue;
 - (vi) Continues to disseminate information about activities of the United Nations directed at a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of international conflicts by exclusively peaceful means, as highlighted in the Secretary-General's report on the work of the Organization;
 - (vii) Continues to cover all United Nations activities pertaining to the situation in the Middle East and the question of Palestine in particular, and current developments in that region, and reports thereon to the Committee on Information at its thirteenth session, in 1991;
- (c) The Department of Public Information should continue its efforts in promoting an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations system among the peoples of the world and in strengthening the image of the United Nations system as a whole and, in this connection, it is recommended that the Secretary-General should ensure that the Department:
- (i) Continues to maintain consistent editorial independence and accuracy in reporting all the material that it produces, taking necessary measures to ensure that its output contains adequate, objective and equitable information about issues before the Organization, reflecting divergent opinions where they occur;
 - (ii) Continues to apply, in the context of the review of its role, performance and methods of work, appropriate modern technologies for the collection, production, storage, dissemination and distribution of information materials, including the use of satellite facilities;
 - (iii) Considers expanding the programme of telephone news bulletins that are paid for by its users;
 - (iv) Continues its co-operation with those countries which have expressed readiness to assist the United Nations in resuming short-wave broadcasts through their respective national networks free of charge and encourage expansion of such a type of co-operation with those developed and developing countries having recognized capabilities in this field;
 - (v) Takes adequate measures to resume taped radio programmes, which it has temporarily curtailed, if so requested by broadcasting stations;
 - (vi) Continues its briefing, assistance and orientation programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries focused on United Nations-related issues;
 - (vii) Provides, on the basis of its activities, information to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization about new forms of co-operation, at the regional and sub-regional levels, for the training of media professionals and for the improvement of the information and communication infrastructure of developing countries;
 - (viii) Co-operates with educational institutions of Member States and with educators and education policy makers, informing them about United Nations activities;
 - (ix) Ensures adequate daily coverage of United Nations open meetings in the two working languages of the Secretariat, reflecting the views of all delegations with accuracy and objectivity. The Department should also continue to co-operate closely with and provide assistance to members of the United Nations Correspondents Association, taking into account their needs and requirements, especially in the area of press releases, press conferences and briefings, which provide them with basic information for reporting;
 - (x) Uses the official languages of the United Nations adequately in its written and audio-visual materials and makes balanced use of the two working languages of the Secretariat;
 - (xi) Ensures timely distribution of its materials to subscribers and to United Nations information centres;
- (d) The Department of Public Information should produce and distribute its publications in a timely manner. In particular, the Secretary-General is requested to make further efforts regarding the timely appearance of the Yearbook of the United Nations. The improvement in format and printing of the UN Chronicle is welcome. The Department is encouraged to continue to consider the interests of specific target audiences as it formulates its editorial policies;
- (e) The Secretary-General is requested to expedite his consultations regarding the provision of appropriate technical and financial assistance to those States which are broadcasting or willing to broadcast to South Africa in order to enable their radio transmitters to be heard inside South Africa, as identified in his report, in fulfilment of the mandate of the General Assembly reflected in paragraph 1 of that report, and to report to the Committee on Information at its thirteenth session;
- (f) The Secretary-General is urged to continue his efforts to secure a sound and stable financial basis for the publications Development Forum and Africa Recovery;
- (g) It is recognized that United Nations information centres constitute an important means of disseminating information about the United Nations among the peoples of the world. In this regard, the centres should intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local media, information and educational institutions and non-governmental organizations. The Department should arrange for periodic evaluation of the activities of the centres in this regard. It should continue to co-ordinate closely with other field offices of the United Nations system, particularly those of the United Nations Development Programme, in order to avoid duplication of work, taking into account the functional autonomy that the United Nations information centres should have. The Department should provide open and unhindered access by all people to all United Nations information centres and to all materials distributed through the centres. It is also urged to pursue the process of linking the remaining United Nations information centres that have not been linked with electronic mail;

(h) Stressing the need for co-ordinating the information activities of the United Nations system and recognizing the important role that the Joint United Nations Information Committee plays in that regard, the Department of Public Information is encouraged to continue its active participation in the work of the Committee;

(i) It is recognized that free distribution of materials is necessary in the public information activities of the United Nations. However, as demands increase and whenever it is desirable and possible, the Department of Public Information should actively encourage the sale of its materials;

(j) In view of the importance of radio programmes in developing countries, the Secretary-General is requested to enhance the efficiency of and to ensure full programme delivery by all regional radio units, namely, the African, Asian, Caribbean, European, Latin American and Middle Eastern Units and the Anti-Apartheid Programmes Section, including production of radio programmes called for by the General Assembly in resolution 38/82 B of 15 December 1983;

(k) All reports of the Secretary-General, as well as reports by representatives of the Department of Public Information, to the Committee on Information and to the General Assembly, in particular on new programmes or on the expansion of existing programmes, should contain:

- (i) Detailed information on the output of the Department on each topic included in its work programme, which forms the basis of its programme budget;
- (ii) The costs of the activities undertaken on each topic;
- (iii) Adequate information on target audiences, end-use of the products of the Department and analysis of feedback data received by it;
- (iv) A statement detailing the priority level that the Secretary-General has attached to current or future activities of the Department in documents dealing with such activities;
- (v) Evaluation by the Department of the effectiveness of its different programmes and activities, with particular reference to the need constantly to review internal programme elements and activities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations relating to the activities of the Department of Public Information in accordance with the budgetary procedures as approved by the General Assembly in its resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986, 42/211 of 21 December 1987, 43/213 of 21 December 1988 and 44/200 B of 21 December 1989, and taking into account the priorities set by the Assembly;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its thirteenth session, in 1991, on the activities of the Department of Public Information and on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the present resolution;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/825 & Corr.1) without vote, 12 November (meeting 12); draft by Chairman of Committee on Information (A/SPC/45/L.9); agenda item 77.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 8-12, 16, 26; plenary 65.

On 21 December, the Assembly, in resolution 45/248 B, section I, took note of the Secretary-General's proposal [A/C.5/45/2] and of the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions [A/45/7/Add.2] on the financing of a new information centre, in Windhoek, and urged the Secretary-General to facilitate and expedite its establishment.

A draft resolution sponsored by Poland [A/SPC/45/L.12] and another by Yemen [A/SPC/45/L.13/Rev.2], each inviting DPI to establish a UNIC in its capital, were not acted upon at the sponsors' request.

The Assembly adopted other resolutions relating to information issues: resolution 45/35, requesting the Secretary-General to continue to give widespread and continuous publicity to the decolonization work of the United Nations; resolution 45/67 C, requesting DPI to continue its special information programme on the question of Palestine for the remainder of the 1990-1991 biennium, with emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America; and resolution 45/99, on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights.

Effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its thirty-ninth session in Vienna from 14 to 18 May 1990 [A/45/319]. As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 44/45 [YUN 1989, p. 109], the Committee continued its work, including its co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources, and to review the major problems of radiation.

The Committee considered recent information on sources of radiation, exposures and their effects, based on 12 documents prepared by the Secretariat on topics selected by the Committee: natural, man-made environmental, medical and occupational radiation exposures; radiation effects on the environment and on the developing human brain; epidemiological evaluations of radiation effects; dose and dose-rate effects on radiation response; mechanisms of radiation oncogenesis; hereditary effects of radiation; stimulation effects from low-level radiation; and perception of radiation risks. The Committee made suggestions for the further development of those topics, pointing out new and additional information to be considered. From its review, the Committee concluded that natural sources of radiation were the main contributor to the collective dose.

In efforts to obtain more extensive data for exposure evaluations, the Committee distributed a questionnaire on medical radiation usage to the Ministries of Health of all Member States. Further data on natural radiation exposures, in particular levels of radon indoors, and on occupational radiation exposures were also required.

The Committee noted the potential and perceived effects caused by natural sources of radiation and by man-made practices. Of concern to it was the number of unproven claims relative to the radiobiological effects of the 1986 Chernobyl accident in the Ukrainian SSR (see PART THREE, Chapter III, and PART SEVEN, Chapter I). In that regard, it was continuing its work on the document on radiation effects on the environment, realizing the need for timely and authoritative scientific reports and studies in order to avoid misrepresentations of radiation effects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/71.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 44/45 of 8 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and his environment,

Bearing in mind the decision of the Scientific Committee to submit, as soon as the relevant studies are completed, shorter reports with supporting scientific documents on the specialized topics mentioned by the Committee,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past thirty-five years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the intentions and plans of the Scientific Committee for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Also requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the work of the Scientific Committee and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their co-operation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly.

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/687) without vote, 16 October (meeting 4); 30-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.2); agenda item 72.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 3, 4; plenary 65.

Antarctica

Antarctica and the environment

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/124 B [YUN 1989, p. 110], the Secretary-General, on 8 September 1990, submitted a report [A/45/459] on the question of Antarctica. The report reproduced a communication of 30 April received from Australia, acting on behalf of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties (then 25 States), in reply to the Secretary-General's note verbale of 19 March to those Parties regarding their implementation of the resolution.

Australia, commenting on the resolution's reference to the significant impact that Antarctica exerted on the global environment and ecosystems, pointed out that the Parties were aware of the need for concerted international action to protect the Antarctic environment from external environmental disturbances that could accelerate serious global environmental change. Australia assured the Secretary-General that the Parties, as the countries active in the region, would continue to develop measures to protect the fragile Antarctic environment and dependent associated ecosystems from the impact of human activity within the region. They would also continue to make freely available the results of their Antarctic research bearing upon the global environment. Australia added that any State Member of the United Nations could participate in that work by acceding to the Antarctic Treaty.

Australia further recalled its statement before the First Committee at the 1989 Assembly session, which reflected the views of the States parties to the Antarctic Treaty (numbering 39) and noted, inter alia, that most of the parties had decided not to participate in the vote on the draft text of resolution 44/124 B in the continued belief that consideration of Antarctica by the Assembly should proceed only on the basis of consensus. Australia stated that that remained the conviction of the Antarctic Treaty parties.

As to the resolution's reiteration of its call on the Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to their meetings, the Secretary-General reported that, not having received such invitation, he was in no position to provide any evaluation of the Parties' meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/78 A.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983, 39/152 of 17 December 1984, 40/156 A and B of 16 December 1985, 41/88 A and B of 4 December 1986, 42/46 A and B of 30 November 1987, 43/83 A and B of 7 December 1988 and 44/124 A and B of 15 December 1989,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the final documents adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, the second meeting of States of the Zone of Peace and Cooperation of the South Atlantic, held at Abuja, Nigeria, from 25 to 29 June 1990, and the Nineteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Cairo from 31 July to 5 August 1990,

Taking into account the debates on this item held since its thirty-eighth session,

Reaffirming the principle that the international community is entitled to information covering all aspects of Antarctica and that the United Nations should be made the repository for all such information in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 41/88 A, 42/46 B, 43/83 A and 44/124 B,

Conscious of the particular significance of Antarctica to the international community in terms, inter alia of international peace and security, environment, its effects on global climatic conditions, economy and scientific research,

Conscious also of the interrelationship between Antarctica and the physical, chemical and biological processes that regulate the total Earth system,

Welcoming the increasing recognition of the significant impact that Antarctica exerts on the global environment and ecosystems and of the need for a comprehensive agreement on the protection and conservation of the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems,

Sharing the concern over the environmental degradation of Antarctica and its impact on global environment expressed at the first substantive session of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Nairobi from 6 to 31 August 1990,

Welcoming also the increasing support for the establishment of Antarctica as a nature reserve or world park to ensure the protection and conservation of its environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems for the benefit of all mankind,

Welcoming further the increasing support within the international community for the banning of prospecting and mining in and around Antarctica,

Welcoming the initiative taken by some Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties in promoting Antarctica as a nature reserve or world park and the banning of prospecting and mining in and around Antarctica,

Welcoming also the ongoing trend in acknowledging the need for internationally co-ordinated scientific research stations in Antarctica in order to minimize unnecessary duplication and logistical support facilities,

Welcoming further the increasing awareness of and interest in Antarctica shown by the international community, and convinced of the advantages to the whole of mankind of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming its conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue for ever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Reaffirming that the management and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international cooperation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Convinced of the need to prevent or minimize any negative impact of human activity resulting from the large number of scientific stations and expeditions in Antarctica on the environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems,

Taking into account all aspects pertaining to all areas covered by the Antarctic Treaty,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the question of Antarctica of 6 September 1990 and 8 September 1990,

1. Expresses its regret that, despite the numerous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General or his representative has not been invited to the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, including the special session of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting at Santiago from 19 November to 7 December 1990, and urges once again the Consultative Parties to invite the Secretary-General or his representative to their future meetings;

2. Culls upon the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to deposit information and documents covering all aspects of Antarctica with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on his evaluations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

3. Expresses the conviction that any move to draw up a comprehensive environmental convention on the conservation and protection of Antarctica and its dependent and associated ecosystems as well as establishing a nature reserve or world park must be negotiated with the full participation of the international community, and in this regard stresses that this should be pursued within the context of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

4. Urges all members of the international community to support all efforts to ban prospecting and mining in and around Antarctica and to ensure that all activities are carried out exclusively for the purpose of peaceful scientific investigation and that all such activities ensure the maintenance of international peace and security in Antarctica and the protection of its environment and are for the benefit of all mankind;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake a comprehensive study with the help of relevant United Nations programmes and specialized agencies such as the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme, using available data and resources, on the establishment of a United Nations-sponsored station in Antarctica with a view to promoting co-ordinated international co-operation in scientific research for the benefit of mankind, particularly the importance of Antarctica to the global environment and ecosystems, as well as to act as an early-warning system on climate change and accidents, and submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Urges all States Members of the United Nations to co-operate with the Secretary-General and to continue consultations on all aspects relating to Antarctica;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, using available data and resources, on the state of the environment in Antarctica and its impact on the global system to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

12 December 1990 Meeting 66 98-0-7 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/45/789) by roll-call vote (75-0-8), 28 November (meeting 47); 26-nation draft (A/C.1/45/L.63/Rev.2); agenda item 67.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 40-43, 47; plenary 66.

Roll-call vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Djibouti, Dominica, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Granada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Fiji, Ireland, Liechtenstein, Malta, Portugal, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR.

During the roll-call vote in plenary, the following 45 States announced that they were not participating: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Romania, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Viet Nam.

Participation of South Africa

In a report on Antarctica dated 6 September 1990 [A/45/458], the Secretary-General reproduced a communication of 30 April from Australia, acting on behalf of the States parties to the Antarctic Treaty. The communication was in response to the Secretary-General's note of 19 March regarding the implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/124 A [YUN 1989, p. 1121, appealing to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to take urgent measures to exclude, at the earliest possible date, the racist apartheid regime of South Africa from continued participation in their meetings.

Australia recalled its previous communication on the subject, as reproduced in a 1987 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1987, p. 357]. Australia stated that that communication-reflecting the Parties' majority decision in that year not to vote for the resolution calling for South Africa's exclusion, based on their support for the principle of universality in the United Nations and on the view that there was no valid basis under international law for limiting a Party's rights under the Antarctic Treaty--continued fully to reflect the Parties' position.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/78 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/83 B of 7 December 1988 and 44/124 A and B of 15 December 1989,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Noting with regret that the racist apartheid régime of South Africa, which has been suspended from participation in the General Assembly of the United Nations, has continued to participate in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties,

Recalling the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fiftieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 17 to 22 July 1989,

Recalling also the final document on Antarctica adopted by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,

Recalling further that the Antarctic Treaty is, by its terms, intended to further the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting that the policy of apartheid practised by the racist minority régime of South Africa, which has been universally condemned, constitutes a threat to regional and international peace and security,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and expresses deep concern that no concrete measures have been taken in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 44/124 A;

2. Views with concern the continuing participation of the apartheid regime of South Africa in the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties;

3. Appeals once again to the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to take urgent measures to exclude the racist apartheid régime from participation in the meetings of the Consultative Parties at the earliest possible date, and invites them to inform the Secretary-General of the measures taken regarding the provisions of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report in this regard to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, taking into account the concern expressed in paragraph 1 of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

12 December 1990 Meeting 66 107-0-7 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/45/789) by roll-call vote (84-0-6), 28 November (meeting 47); draft by Tunisia for African Group (A/C.1/45/L.64/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 67.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 1st Committee 40-43, 47; plenary 66.

During the roll-call vote in plenary, the following States announced that they were not participating: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Botswana, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Romania, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Cyprus question

Under the mandate entrusted to him by the Security Council, the Secretary-General continued in 1990 his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus with the objective of preserving the State of Cyprus and establishing a new constitutional arrangement between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities. He held further meetings with the leaders of both sides, together and separately, and proposed a plan of action towards the achievement of that objective. He was assisted in that endeavour by his Special Representative in Cyprus, Under-Secretary-General Oscar Héctor Camilión.

Pending achievement of an overall solution to the Cyprus problem, the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP), stationed in the island since 1964, continued to discharge its peace-keeping and humanitarian tasks.

Although the General Assembly, by decision 44/471, included the item on the question of Cyprus in the agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session, it did not discuss the item. In suspending the session on 21 December, however, the Assembly, by decision 45/455, retained the item on the agenda of its resumed forty-fifth session in 1991.

Throughout the year, Cyprus and Turkey addressed communications to the Secretary-General on various aspects of the situation in the country. Those from Turkey forwarded letters from the Turkish Cypriot community signed by Rauf R. Denktas as "President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" or by Ozer Koray as the "representative" of that "Republic".

Secretary-General's good offices

The Security Council, in drawing up its mandate for the Secretary-General's good offices in Cyprus, posited a solution based on the existence of one State of Cyprus comprising two communities. In line with that mandate, the objective of the exercise of good offices was a new constitution for the State of Cyprus that would regulate relations between its two communities on a federal, bi-communal and bi-zonal basis. Each community would participate on an equal footing and would also have the opportunity to express separately its consent to the arrangements reached.

In pursuance of his mandate and of his proposal for an early continuation of the 1989 high-level talks [YUN 1989, p. 1141], the Secretary-General informed the Council on 22 February 1990 that the leaders of the two communities, President George Vassiliou of Cyprus and Mr. Denktas, had accepted the Secretary-General's invitation to hold meetings for an indefinite period, beginning on 26 February, and to make a determined effort to arrive at an agreed outline of an overall agreement.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 22 February, after consultations with the members of the Council, the President made the following statement [S/21160] on behalf of the Council:

The members of the Council recall the statement made on their behalf by the President on 14 December 1989. They express their appreciation to the Secretary-General for his briefing on the current situation about his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus and give their full support to his efforts to assist the two communities to reach a just and lasting solution.

The members of the Council stress the importance they attach to an early negotiated settlement of the Cyprus problem.

The members of the Council are pleased that the leaders of the two sides in Cyprus have accepted the Secretary-General's invitation to meet with him for an extended session beginning on 26 February 1990 to complete the work on an outline of an overall agreement, as agreed in June 1989.

The members of the Council call upon the leaders of the two sides to demonstrate the necessary goodwill and flexibility and to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General so that the talks will result in a major step toward the resolution of the Cyprus problem.

The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to report to the Council at the conclusion of the forthcoming meeting to inform them of the results achieved and of his assessment of the situation at that time.

Report of Secretary-General (March). Pursuant to the foregoing Security Council request, the Secretary-General, on 8 March, reported [S/21183] on the outcome of his talks with the leaders of the two communities in New York, from 26 February to 2 March. According to the report, the talks began with the Secretary-General indicating that the task of arriving at an agreed outline of an agreement could be facilitated if at the outset the two sides reflected upon the understandings that underlay a solution to the Cyprus problem.

Those understandings, which the Secretary-General read out to the two leaders, were that Cyprus was the common home of the Greek Cypriot community and of the Turkish Cypriot community, whose relationship was not one of majority and minority but of two communities in the State of Cyprus. The Secretary-General's mission of good offices as mandated by the Council was with the two communities, whose participation in the process to achieve an agreed solution to the Cyprus problem was on an equal footing. Thus the solution sought had to be decided upon by the two communities, had to be acceptable to both and had to be found within the framework set out by the 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 344] and 1979 [YUN 1979, p. 421] high-level agreements between them, as well as by the Secretary-General's mandate. The two communities and the Council had committed themselves to a solution that would ensure the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and non-alignment of Cyprus. Both communities had, in the 1979 high-level agreement, specifically rejected as options union in whole or in part with any other country and any form of partition or secession; they had stated their wish to establish a federation that was bi-communal as regards its constitutional aspects and bi-zonal as regards its territorial aspects.

The Secretary-General then suggested that the headings that had emerged from earlier meetings lent themselves to the consideration of all the issues and concerns expressed by each side and should be used as the basis for organizing the talks. Those headings included the overall objectives of the agreement; the guiding principles of the federation-federal union, bi-communality, bi-zonality; the federation's constitutional aspects-powers and functions to be vested in the federal Government, its structure, composition and functioning, and fundamental rights; security and guarantees; territorial adjustments; displaced persons; economic development and safeguards; and transitional arrangements. The Secretary-General further suggested that the first part of the talks should be devoted to a discussion of the issues under each of the headings and the second to the preparation of an outline.

In the course of discussions, however, conceptual difficulties arose when Mr. Denktas stated that the term "communities" should be used in a manner synonymous with the term "peoples", each having a separate right to "self-determination", and proposed certain other terms for the word "communities". The introduction of terminology different from that used by the Council, the Secretary-General pointed out, posed more than a semantic problem and, unless acceptable to both sides, any change in terminology could alter the conceptual framework to which all had thus far adhered. In the circumstances, he concluded that they faced an impasse of a substantive kind, which raised questions regarding the essence of the mandate of good offices given to him by the Council and, therefore, the basis of the talks.

For those reasons, certain substantive comments regarding the outline of an overall agreement made by the leaders could not be pursued. In his concluding statement, the Secretary-General indicated his intention to inform the Council of the current status of the talks and to seek its guidance on how to proceed. On 4 March, Mr. Denktas wrote that the difficulties relating to the terms "communities" or "peoples" had not been correctly reflected in the Secretary-General's statement. He pointed out that the insistence on the use of "community" in a restrictive sense and the refusal to accept any other proposed alternative was tantamount to a rejection of the right of the Turkish Cypriots and the Greek Cypriots—two distinct and separate peoples—freely to determine their political status.

The report noted that, despite the current impasse and his disappointment that it did not prove possible to advance towards drafting the outline of an overall agreement, the Secretary-General stressed the importance that the negotiating process not be allowed to collapse. He remained of the view that a basis for effective negotiations existed provided both leaders were prepared to take into account each other's concerns and were willing to proceed within the framework of the 1977 and 1979 high-level agreements. He stated his intention to continue to spare no effort to assist the two communities to find ways of harmonizing their respective interests and concerns.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 12 March, the Security Council adopted resolution 649 (1990).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 8 March 1990 on the recent meeting between the leaders of the two communities in Cyprus and on his assessment of the current situation,

Recalling its relevant resolutions on Cyprus,

Recalling also the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 22 February 1990 calling upon the leaders of the two communities to demonstrate the necessary goodwill and flexibility and to co-operate with the Secretary-General so that the talks will result in a major step forward toward the resolution of the Cyprus problem,

Expressing its regret that, in the more than twenty-five years since the establishment of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, it has not been possible to achieve a negotiated settlement of all aspects of the Cyprus problem,

Concerned that, at the recent meeting in New York, it was not possible to achieve results in arriving at an agreed outline of an overall agreement,

1. Reaffirms in particular its resolution 367(1975) of 12 March 1975 as well as its support for the 1977 and 1979 high-level agreements between the leaders of the two communities in which they pledged to establish a bi-communal Federal Republic of Cyprus that will safeguard its independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-alignment, and exclude union in whole or in part with any other country and any form of partition or secession;

2. Expresses its full support for the current effort of the Secretary-General in carrying out his mission of good offices' concerning Cyprus;

3. Culls upon the leaders of the two communities to pursue their efforts to reach freely a mutually acceptable solution providing for the establishment of a federation that will be bi-communal as regards the constitutional aspects and bi-zonal as regards the territorial aspects, in line with the present resolution and their 1977 and 1979 high-level agreements, and to co-operate, on an equal footing, with the Secretary-General in completing, in the first instance and on an urgent basis, an outline of an overall agreement, as agreed in June 1989;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue his mission of good offices in order to achieve the earliest possible progress and, toward this end, to assist the two communities by making suggestions to facilitate the discussions;

5. Calls upon the parties concerned to refrain from any action that could aggravate the situation;

6. Decides to remain actively seized of the situation and the current effort;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Security Council, in his report due by 31 May 1990, of the progress made in resuming the intensive talks and in developing an agreed outline of an overall agreement in line with the present resolution.

Meeting 2909 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21184).

Report of Secretary-General (July). In keeping with the Security Council resolution above, the Secretary-General reported on 12 July [S/21393] that further consultations with the two sides had been held in Nicosia, Cyprus, during

May and June. Acting on his behalf at the consultations was Gustave Feissel. Both leaders confirmed their commitment to all aspects of resolution 649(1990), in accordance with which they affirmed their full co-operation with the Secretary-General and their agreement with the understandings he had read to them at the February/March meeting.

The Secretary-General conveyed his view that, while it was important for the two leaders to meet with him as soon as possible in a renewed attempt to agree on an outline and to launch the negotiation of an overall agreement, it should first be ensured that such a meeting would yield the intended results. To that end, he proposed a plan of action involving separate discussions with the leaders in Nicosia to prepare the ground. He would again submit to the two leaders the headings that had emerged from their talks as a basis for organizing the task of arriving at an agreed outline. He went on to say that, in separate discussions, both sides would be asked, in line with their stated commitment to all aspects of resolution 649(1990) and agreement with the understandings, to indicate their positions on each of those headings and sub-headings, with a view to completing an outline as had been agreed in 1989. He also stated that he intended to make suggestions, as necessary, to assist the two sides so that, once an agreed outline was within reach, he would invite the two leaders to meet with him personally to complete that task and to launch negotiations on an overall agreement.

The Secretary-General noted with concern a general deterioration of the atmosphere and an increasing sense of frustration owing to the lack of progress. He stated that the two communities should make a conscious effort to promote mutual confidence. He urged both leaders to help that process by comments and suggestions that were moderate and amenable to serious negotiations and to give special attention to promoting greater contact between Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots without seeking political advantage for either side. The time had come, he said, to stop mutual recriminations and to concentrate efforts on promoting reconciliation, and for all concerned to give proof that they truly wanted to contribute to a solution of the Cyprus problem.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

At its meeting on 19 July, the Security Council authorized its President to make the following statement [S/21400] on behalf of the Council members:

The members of the Council have considered the Secretary-General's report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus. They are unanimous in giving their full support to the Secretary-General's current effort to assist the two communities to reach a just and lasting solution. They agree with his assessment of recent developments, share his concern about the lack of progress, and endorse his plan of action.

The members of the Council reaffirm resolution 649(1990) of 12 March 1990, which was accepted by both sides, and reiterate the importance they attach to an early negotiated settlement of the Cyprus problem.

The members of the Council call on the leaders of the two communities to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General on the basis of his plan of action and to arrive, on an urgent basis, at an agreed outline of an overall agreement. In line with resolution 649(1990), they request the Secretary-General to make suggestions, as necessary, to assist the two communities arriving at an agreed outline.

The members of the Council again call on the parties concerned to refrain, especially at this sensitive stage in the process, from any action or statement that could aggravate the situation. They express their concern over any action which contravenes paragraph 5 of resolution 550(1984) of 11 May 1984 and paragraph 5 of resolution 649(1990). They call upon both communities to concentrate their efforts on promoting mutual confidence and reconciliation.

The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to inform the Council by 31 October 1990 about the implementation of his plan of action.

Report of Secretary-General (November). On 7 November, the Secretary-General reported [S/21932] that, during the period under review, the negative attitude on both sides persisted. Each side objected to actions and statements by the other, all of which detracted from his effort. Following a number of meetings with each leader, his Special Representative in Cyprus went to New York at the end of September for a review of the situation and to discuss the continuation of the Secretary-General's effort.

The Secretary-General went on to say that he had written to both leaders, on 4 October, to stress once more the need to ensure that any future meeting would yield concrete results and to advise them that his Special Representative and Mr. Feissel would meet separately with each leader to implement his plan of action. He reaffirmed that resolution 649(1990) confirmed and clarified the lines along which a solution was to be sought and provided the basis for proceeding with the work agreed to in 1989. Accordingly, since mid-October, his two representatives had had a number of meetings with each leader in Nicosia to explore, in line with his plan of action, the possibility of bringing together the elements of an outline with which the two sides could agree. The representatives had also visited Athens and Ankara, where they had discussed his current effort with the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministers and other officials, and had considered issues and possible solutions relating to some of the outline headings.

Pending his submission of another progress report within three months, the Secretary-General again appealed to the parties to lend him their full co-operation and to avoid taking any action or making any public statement that could further complicate his effort.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 9 November, after consultations with the members of the Security Council, the President issued the following statement [S/21934] on their behalf:

The members of the Council have considered the Secretary-General's report on his mission of good offices in Cyprus. They reiterate their full support of the Secretary-General's current effort and reaffirm their endorsement of his plan of action to complete an outline of an overall agreement covering the critical substantive issues specified in paragraph 7 of his report to the Council of 8 March 1990.

The members of the Council reaffirm resolution 649(1990) of 12 March 1990.

The members of the Council stress the urgent need to arrive at a negotiated settlement of the Cyprus problem and express their regret that an outline of an overall agreement has not yet been completed. They call for renewed political will and commitment by all parties to facilitate a process of negotiations.

The members of the Council request the parties concerned to extend to the Secretary-General during the coming period their full co-operation and to refrain from taking any action or making any public statement that could further complicate his efforts.

The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to report to the Council by 15 February 1991 on the outcome of his effort to arrive at an agreed outline of an overall agreement and to provide the Council with his assessment of the situation at that time. They will examine closely the Secretary-General's report and assessment, particularly as they relate to resolution of the substantive issues in the outline.

Varosha

On 18 July, Cyprus transmitted two letters [S/21399] to the Security Council President requesting that the Council convene to take urgent measures concerning the fenced area of Varosha (a community near the port of Famagusta, just inside the cease-fire line of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces). The first, dated 17 July, drew attention to information that the military status quo in that fenced area would be altered to facilitate its settlement by people other than its inhabitants, in contravention of Council resolution 550(1984) [YUN 1984, p. 243]. The second letter, dated 18 July, gave notice that the threatened change had taken place earlier that day, making Council action to restore the status quo ante imperative.

In his report of 7 December on the UN operation in Cyprus (see below), the Secretary-General noted that Turkey's transfer of responsibility for the security of the area in question to the Turkish Cypriot security forces on 19 July heightened political tension in the island. In that connection, he recalled his 1987 report [YUN 1987, p. 239] stating that on several occasions he had reiterated to the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot authorities that the United Nations considered the Government of Turkey responsible for maintaining the status quo in the fenced area of Varosha—a position which UNFICYP continued to maintain.

UNFICYP

The United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, established by Security Council resolution 186(1964) [YUN 1964, p. 165], continued in 1990 to use its best efforts to prevent a recurrence of the fighting between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities by supervising the cease-fire lines of the Cyprus National Guard and of the Turkish and Turkish Cypriot forces, to contribute to the maintenance and restoration of law and order, to promote a return to normal conditions and to discharge its humanitarian functions.

The stationing of UNFICYP in the island was twice extended by the Council during the year, each extension for a six-month period: to 15 December 1990 (resolution 657(1990)) and to 15 June 1991 (resolution 680(1990)).

As at 30 November, UNFICYP, under the command of Major-General Clive Milner, had a strength of 2,132 all ranks, contributed by Austria, Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Sweden and the United Kingdom. Of that number, 2,094 were military personnel and 38 were civilian police.

Report of Secretary-General (May). Pursuant to Security Council resolution 646(1989) [YUN 1989, p. 114], the Secretary-General, on 31 May, submitted a report [S/21340] on the UN operation in Cyprus, covering developments from 1 December 1989 to 31 May 1990 and updating the record of activities of UNFICYP. Annexed to the report was an 11 April press communique issued by the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus, outlining the Committee's activities and the difficulties it faced in accomplishing its task.

According to the report, UNFICYP continued to maintain the cease-fire and the status quo on the island by keeping the UN buffer zone between the cease-fire lines under constant surveillance through a system of 149 observation posts, 52 of them permanently manned. UNFICYP conducted mobile and standing patrols within a patrol track spanning the length of the buffer zone, using high-powered binoculars and night-vision devices to monitor the cease-fire lines on a continuous basis. It initiated a mine-clearing project covering certain parts of the buffer zone due to the explosion of an anti-tank mine on 3 April that injured two UNFICYP personnel on car patrol. During the period under review, the number of cease-fire violations remained at a very low level. Overflights of the buffer zone included 12 by Turkish forces aircraft and two by National Guard aircraft, two from the north and six from the south by civilian aircraft, and five by civilian or military aircraft of other countries. Two incidents of cease-fire line crossings into the Turkish Cypriot sector occurred: in February, by five Greek Cypriots whom the Turkish Cypriot police arrested, and, in April, by two others on a motorcycle, apparently by accident. UNFICYP assisted in the release of the latter and was given access to the five who had been given gaol terms.

As part of its efforts to promote a return to normal conditions, UNFICYP facilitated economic and other civilian activities, in particular farming, in the areas between and adjacent to the cease-fire lines. It used its good offices in regard to the supply of electricity and water from one part of the island to the other, to the completion of the desilting of the Marathasa dam and repair of the Lefka-Kafizes pipeline, and to the replacement of old water pipes in the buffer zone. It launched an anti-mosquito programme in March and continued to facilitate normal contacts between Greek and Turkish Cypriots. The UN civilian police maintained close co-operation and liaison with the Cyprus and Turkish Cypriot police on matters having intercommunal aspects.

In the discharge of its humanitarian functions, UNFICYP continued to deliver foodstuffs and other supplies provided by the Cyprus Government and Red Cross, 403 tons for the Greek Cypriots living in the north of the island (593 in the Karpass peninsula and four in Kyrenia) and 238 tons for the 269 Maronites there, as well as social welfare and pension cheques. It continued to facilitate the voluntary transfer or visit of Greek Cypriots from the north to the south, effecting five transfers and 608 visits during the reporting period. It periodically visited Turkish Cypriots living in the south of the island, arranged 22 reunions with their relatives in the north and continued to distribute pension cheques to Turkish Cypriots there who were former government employees. It continued to provide emergency medical services, including medical evacuation, to both communities.

In addition, UNFICYP co-operated with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, UNDP and specialized agencies in the execution of their projects in the island.

The Secretary-General, concluding that the continued presence of UNFICYP remained indispensable to the achievement of the objectives set by the Council, recommended that it extend the UNFICYP mandate for a further six months beyond 15 June 1990. In making that recommendation, he underlined the chronic and ever-deepening financial crisis facing UNFICYP and suggested that the UN portion of its cost be financed from assessed contributions.

In a 13 June addendum [S/21340/Add.1] to his report, the Secretary-General informed the Council that Cyprus, as well as Greece and the United Kingdom, had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension. Turkey had indicated its concurrence with and supported the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, which was that the text of the draft resolution on the proposed extension was unacceptable as a basis for extending the stationing of UNFICYP; that position would be expounded at the Council's meeting to consider the draft.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

The Security Council met on 15 June to consider the Secretary-General's report and recommendation. At their request, Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion. At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 657(1990).

The security Council

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 31 May and 13 June 1990,

Taking note also of the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 June 1990,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 December 1990;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 30 November 1990;

3. Calls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 657(1990)

15 June 1990 Meeting 2928 Adopted unanimously

At the same meeting, the Council, following consultations among its members, authorized the President to make the statement [S/21361] below on behalf of the Council members:

The members of the Council recall Security Council resolution 649(1990) of 12 March 1990 and other relevant resolutions. They express again their regret that, in the more than 25 years since the establishment of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus, it has not been possible to achieve a negotiated settlement for all aspects of the Cyprus problem. They reiterate their full support for the current effort of the Secretary-General in carrying out his mission of good offices concerning Cyprus.

The members of the Council also recall the statement made by the President on 30 May 1990 on United Nations peace-keeping operations. They reiterate their view expressed in that statement that peace-keeping operations must be launched and maintained on a sound and secure financial basis. They therefore express their concern at the chronic and ever-deepening financial crisis facing the Force, as described in the Secretary-General's report and in his letter of 31 May 1990 addressed to all States Members of the United Nations, and they support his appeal for financial contributions which would enable the Force to continue to carry out the functions for which it was established.

Report of Secretary-General (December). As requested by Security Council resolution 657(1990), the Secretary-General submitted a further report on 7 December [S/21981] covering the activities of UNFICYP from 1 June to 30 November. He informed the Council that, in accordance with his decision, a review team had been sent to Cyprus in November to examine, in co-operation with the Special Representative and the Force Commander, the organization and operations of UNFICYP. The Secretary-General stated that he found the team's recommendations to be sound and would discuss their implementation with troop-contributing countries (see below).

As reported, the number of cease-fire violations increased slightly during the reporting period. UNFICYP continued its efforts to extend the 1989 agreement concerning the unmanning of certain positions in Nicosia, which currently held, but, in other parts of the city and its suburbs, the troops of both sides remained in dangerous proximity to each other. Overflights of the UN buffer zone increased to 23 by Turkish forces aircraft and to 12 by National Guard aircraft. Overflights by civilian aircraft from the north rose to 11 and to 16 from the south; those by civilian or military aircraft of other countries rose to nine. The National Guard's construction programme to improve its defensive positions along its cease-fire line remained viewed by the Turkish forces as provocative and a change to the status quo. Near Kokkina and Famagusta, violations persisted of the seaward extension of the buffer zone known as the "maritime security line", established by UNFICYP for security purposes; UNFICYP continued to report each crossing of the line to the authorities concerned, warning of the dangers involved and of the need for restraint.

The report noted the Secretary-General's concern about the strength and development of the military forces on both sides, which heightened tension and increased possible risks of serious incidents. It also recorded a renewed complaint by Cyprus about the reported destruction of Cypriot cultural heritage in the north.

Through a variety of ongoing economic and humanitarian activities, as recorded in the Secretary-General's May report, UNFICYP continued to promote a return to normal conditions, including fostering relations in the mixed Greek Cypriot/Turkish Cypriot village of Pyla, the only mixed village out of five situated in the buffer zone. The goodwill and understanding generated through these activities facilitated UNFICYP's task in the military area.

The Secretary-General observed that UNFICYP continued to perform its functions in an exemplary manner, often under difficult circumstances, and he had no doubt regarding the indispensability of its continued presence in the island. He thus recommended to the Council an extension of UNFICYP's mandate for a further six months beyond 15 December.

In a 14 December addendum [S/21981/Add.1] to his report, the Secretary-General informed the Council that Cyprus, as well as Greece and the United Kingdom, had indicated their concurrence with the proposed extension. Turkey had indicated that it concurred with and supported the position of the Turkish Cypriot side, which was that the text of the draft resolution on the proposed extension was unacceptable as a basis for extending the stationing of UNFICYP; that position would be expounded during the Council's consideration of the draft.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (December)

The Security Council met on 14 December to consider the foregoing report and recommendation of the Secretary-General. At their request, Cyprus, Greece and Turkey were invited to participate in the discussion. Also invited was Mr. Koray, under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure (stating that the Council may invite Secretariat members or other persons to supply it with information or give other assistance). At the same meeting, the Council adopted resolution 680(1990).

The Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations operation in Cyprus of 7 and 14 December 1990,

Taking note also of the recommendation by the Secretary-General that the Security Council extend the stationing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for a further period of six months,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions in the island it is necessary to keep the Force in Cyprus beyond 15 December 1990,

Reaffirming the provisions of resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Extends once more the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force established under resolution 186(1964) for a further period ending on 15 June 1991;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his mission of good offices, to keep the Security Council informed of the progress made and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution by 31 May 1991;

3. Culls upon all the parties concerned to continue to co-operate with the Force on the basis of the present mandate.

Security Council resolution 680(1990)

14 December 1990 Meeting 2969 14-0-1

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22000).

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Malaysia, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yemen, Zaire.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Canada.

Review of organization and operations

In accordance with the Secretary-General's decision, a Secretariat review team visited Cyprus from 11 to 21 November 1990 to undertake, in co-operation with the Special Representative and the Force Commander, a review of all aspects of the organization and operations of UNFICYP. Led by Mr. Feissel and accompanied at the beginning by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs, Marrack Goulding, the team was asked in particular to consider the continued relevance of the functions entrusted to UNFICYP by Security Council resolution 164(1964) [YUN 1964, p. 165], possible changes in its method of operation, such as the use of military observers, the possible reduction of its strength and making other economies.

Preparatory work, carried out by UNFICYP and by relevant units at UN Headquarters, included a description of the detailed organizational arrangements of UNFICYP; an examination of military, international civilian and local staffing trends over the last five years; UNFICYP cost and financing since 1980; the extra and extraordinary costs claimed by troop-contributing Governments over the past 10 years; and a survey of incidents along the buffer zone over the past five years. In addition to reviewing the report of the 1980 survey team [YUN 1980, p. 455], which had covered similar ground, the review team consulted the Secretary-General's reports on UNFICYP and on his mission of good offices in Cyprus.

The review team's report was submitted to the Council by the Secretary-General on 7 December [S/21982]. Section I examined the functions of UNFICYP as mandated by the Council and the conditions under which they had to be carried out. The current situation was compared with that of 1980, when the last review had been undertaken, and UNFICYP's current strength and organization were examined in the light of its functions and the prevailing conditions. Section II, on the cost and financing of UNFICYP, examined the cost to the troop-contributing Governments and to the United Nations, described the cost-cutting efforts in past years and assessed the current situation. Section III set out the team's overall evaluation and recommendations.

The team concluded that the current functions of UNFICYP remained valid; the status quo and the prevention of a recurrence of fighting were not self-sustaining and therefore the continued deployment of UNFICYP all along the buffer zone remained necessary; the number of on-line troops could not be further reduced without impairing the effectiveness of the Force; and the cost-cutting measures carried out over the past 10 years had exhausted most possibilities for further reductions. The prevailing situation on the ground did not make converting UNFICYP into an observer mission a viable option. The lack of agreement between UNFICYP and the two sides on the complete delineation of the cease-fire lines, as recorded by UNFICYP, and the lack of agreement on the use and control of the buffer zone made it imperative for UNFICYP to retain both a reactive and a preventive capability. It would be feasible, however, to reduce the number of infantry battalions from four to three without reducing the current level of on-line personnel; that would permit a better ratio of line troops to support troops, resulting in an overall reduction of some 200, all ranks. The team underlined that continued reliance on voluntary contributions to finance the UN portion of the costs would jeopardize the future of UNFICYP. It also expressed the view that the recommended organizational change could be implemented only if the method of financing was changed to assessed contributions.

Financing

In his May report [S/21340] on the UN operation in Cyprus, the Secretary-General noted that the portion of UNFICYP costs borne by the United Nations was dependent entirely on voluntary contributions from Governments. In that regard, only $2.4 million had been contributed by Member States, against anticipated expenditures of some $13.8 million for the mandate period ending 15 June 1990. The Secretary-General drew attention to a joint letter of 7 May [S/21294] from the troop contributors—Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ireland, Sweden and the United Kingdom—expressing their grave concern at the growing deficit in the UNFICYP Special Account. He also took note of their joint letter of 14 May [S/21301] in which they expressed the view that, in the absence of adequate voluntary contributions, there could be no alternative to the provision of funding through assessed contributions by all Member States. The Secretary-General stated that he fully shared their concern, adding that an important step towards alleviating the situation would be for the UN portion of the cost to be financed from assessed contributions. He hoped the Security Council would come to accept that measure.

In his December report [S/21981], the Secretary-General further stated that, as at 30 November, only $4.1 million had been received against anticipated expenditures of some $13.8 million for the current mandate period ending 15 December 1990. On average, the contributions received per mandate period approximated 59 per cent of UNFICYP costs to the United Nations. As a result, reimbursement claims from troop-contributing countries had been met only up to December 1980. Unless additional contributions were received, the Secretary-General warned, the accumulated deficit in the UNFICYP Special Account was expected to be $171.6 million from the inception of the Force in 1964 to the end of the current mandate period.

In a 12 December letter [S/21996] to the Council President, Australia, Austria, Denmark, Ireland and Sweden reiterated their concern at the continuing massive shortfall in voluntary contributions towards the funding of the Force and their belief that there could be no alternative to funding through assessed contributions by Member States. They supported the efforts of those troop contributors who were also Council members—Canada, Finland and the United Kingdom—to have the Council adopt a resolution that would give effect to that overdue reform and urged the Council to adopt the relevant draft text before it without delay.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 December, the Security Council adopted resolution 682(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964 establishing the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus for an initial period of three months,

Recalling also its subsequent resolutions extending the stationing in Cyprus of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force, most recently its resolution 680(1990) of 14 December 1990,

Reaffirming the statement of the President of the Council of 30 May 1990, in which the members emphasized that United Nations peace-keeping operations must be launched and maintained on a sound and secure financial basis,

Concerned about the chronic and ever-deepening financial crisis facing the Force, as described in the report of the Secretary-General and as expressed in the statement of the President of the Council of 15 June 1990,

1. Decides to examine the problem of the costs and financing of the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus in all its aspects, bearing in mind the financial crisis facing the Force and the report of the Secretariat Review Team of 7 December 1990, and to report by 1 June 1991 on alternative arrangements for meeting the costs of the Force for which the United Nations is responsible, in order to place the Force on a sound and secure financial basis;

2. Also decides to consider, not later than early June 1991, comprehensively and favourably the results of the examination mentioned in paragraph 1 above, with a view to putting into effect an alternative method of financing the Force which could, inter alia, include the use of assessed contributions, simultaneously with the extension of the mandate on or before 15 June 1991.

21 December 1990 Meeting 2971 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/2/1988/Rev.2), orally amended.

Institutional questions

Admission to UN membership

In 1990, the Security Council unanimously recommended the granting of membership in the United Nations to the Republic of Namibia and to the Principality of Liechtenstein. Acting on that recommendation, the General Assembly admitted them on 23 April and on 18 September, respectively, bringing the membership of the United Nations to 159 Member States.

Namibia

On 17 April, the Security Council referred the application [S/21241] of the Republic of Namibia for membership in the United Nations to the Committee on the Admission of New Members. (See also PART FOUR, Chapter III.) The Council met again on the same date to discuss the Committee's report [S/21251] on that application. At their request, the Council invited Brazil, Mali and South Africa to participate without vote in the discussion; it also invited the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, under rule 39 of the provisional rules of procedure (stating that the Council may invite Secretariat members or other persons to supply it with information). The Council adopted resolution 652(1990).

The Security Council,

Having examined the application of the Republic of Namibia for admission to the United Nations.

Recommends to the General Assembly that the Republic of Namibia be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

Security Council resolution 652(1990)

17 April 1990 Meeting 2918 Adopted unanimously

Meeting numbers. SC 2917, 2918.

Also on 17 April, the Council submitted the resolution above to the Secretary-General for transmittal to the General Assembly at its eighteenth special session, with a request [A/S-18/3] that an item entitled "Admission of new Members to the United Nations" be included in that session's agenda.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At a meeting on 23 April, the General Assembly, which had before it Namibia's membership application [A/S-18/5], adopted resolution S-18/1.

Admission of the Republic of Namibia to membership in the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having received the recommendation of the Security Council of 17 April 1990 that the Republic of Namibia should be admitted to membership in the United Nations,

Having considered the application for membership of the Republic of Namibia, Decides to admit the Republic of Namibia to membership in the United Nations.

General Assembly resolution S-18/1

23 April 1990 Meeting 1 Adopted without vote

152-nation draft (A/S-18/L. 1 & Add 1); agenda item 10.

Liechtenstein

On 13 August, the Security Council referred the application [S/21486] of the Principality of Liechtenstein for membership in the United Nations to the Committee on the Admission of New Members. The Council met again on 14 August to consider the Committee's report [S/21506] on that application, following which it adopted resolution 663(1990).

The Security Council,

Having examined the application of the Principality of Liechtenstein for admission to the United Nations, Recommends to the General Assembly that the Principality of Liechtenstein be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

Security Council resolution 663(1990)

14 August 1990 Meeting 2936 Adopted unanimously

Meeting numbers. SC 2935/2936.

Also on 14 August, the Council wrote to the Secretary-General requesting transmittal of the above resolution to the General Assembly [A/45/419].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At a meeting on 18 September, the General Assembly, which had before it Liechtenstein's membership application [A/45/408-S/21486], adopted resolution 45/1.

Admission of the Principality of Liechtenstein to membership in the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having received the recommendation of the Security Council of 14 August 1990 that the Principality of Liechtenstein should be admitted to membership in the United Nations,

Having considered the application for membership of the Principality of Liechtenstein, Decides to admit the Principality of Liechtenstein to membership in the United Nations.

18 September 1990 Meeting 1 Adopted without vote

69-nation draft (A/45/L.1 & Add.1); agenda item 19.

By decision 45/455 of 21 December, the Assembly decided to retain on the agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session one sub-item and 13 items, among them the item on the admission of new Members to the United Nations.

Single membership in the UN

Yemen

In a note verbale of 21 May [A/44/946], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a 19 May letter from the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen informing him that on 22 May 1990 the two States would merge in a single sovereign State called the "Republic of Yemen", with Sana'a as its capital. The Republic of Yemen would have a single membership in the United Nations and be bound by the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. All treaties and agreements concluded between either the Yemen Arab Republic or the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and other States and international organizations in force on that date would remain in effect, and international relations existing between those two States and other States would continue.

The Ministers requested the Secretary-General to circulate the contents of their letter to all UN Member States, organs and specialized agencies, and related organizations.

The Secretary-General stated that he would take action, within the limits of his administrative responsibilities, to give effect to the declaration by the two States, without prejudice to and pending such action as other organs of the United Nations might take.

Germany

In a note verbale of 28 September [A/45/557], the Secretary-General notified Member States of the information received on 27 September from the German Democratic Republic concerning its accession, as of 3 October 1990, to the scope of the Basic Law of the Federal Republic of Germany so as to unite Germany in a single State. With that accession the prerequisites under international law for continued membership of the German Democratic Republic in the United Nations and in other intergovernmental organizations ceased to apply. Consequently, it would be for the united Germany as a member of the United Nations to remain committed thenceforth to the Charter.

In a further note verbale of 3 October [A/45/567], the Secretary-General transmitted to Member States, UN organs and specialized agencies, and other UN-affiliated organizations the information received from the Federal Republic of Germany that, through the accession on 3 October of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany, the two German States had united to form one sovereign State, which, as a single Member of the United Nations, remained bound by the Charter. As from the date of unification, the Federal Republic of Germany would act in the United Nations under the designation "Germany".

The Secretary-General stated that he would take action to give effect, from 3 October 1990, to the notification.

Institutional machinery

Security Council

The Security Council held 69 meetings in 1990 and adopted 37 resolutions. One meeting was devoted to each of the following: Afghanistan, Cambodia, Cuba, Nicaragua, Western Sahara, the termination of the applicability of the Trusteeship Agreement to the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands, UN peace-keeping operations, and the Council's annual report to the General Assembly (held privately). Four meetings were devoted to the Middle East and 21 to the occupied Arab territories, 6 to Central America, 5 to Cyprus, 4 to the Iran-Iraq situation, 15 to the Iraq-Kuwait situation, 4 to the admission of new UN members, and 2 to elections to fill vacancies in the International Court of Justice.

Agenda

The Security Council considered 15 agenda items during 1990 (see APPENDIX IV). It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting.

By a note of 14 September [A/45/501], the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter, of 14 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed during the period since his previous annual notification. He listed another 134 matters not discussed during the period but of which the Council remained seized.

By decision 45/411 of 27 November, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note.

Report for 1989/90

At a meeting held in private on 23 November, the Security Council considered its draft report covering the period from 16 June 1989 to 15 June 1990 [A/45/2] and adopted it unanimously. An official communiqué [S/PV.2958] to that effect was issued and circulated in place of a verbatim record.

On 10 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/420, took note of the Council's report.

Membership

Although the item entitled "Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council" was inscribed on the agenda of the General Assembly's forty-fifth (1990) session, it was not considered. (Draft resolutions proposing an increase in membership from 15 to 21 had been put forward in 1979 [YUN 1979, p. 435] and in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 461] but were not acted upon.)

By decision 45/421 of 10 December, the Assembly decided to include that item in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in four sessions during 1990: to resume and conclude its forty-fourth (1989) session, for the major part of its forty-fifth (1990) session, and for its seventeenth and eighteenth special sessions.

The first part of the forty-fourth session, held from 19 September to 29 December 1989, resumed in 1990, from 20 February to 17 September. The seventeenth special session, on international co-operation against the illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, was held from 20 to 23 February. The eighteenth special session, on international economic co-operation, in particular the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, ran from 23 April to 1 May.

Credentials

At its first meeting on 24 October, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day from the Secretary-General indicating that credentials had been submitted by 134 Member States for their representatives to the General Assembly's forty-fifth session. The Legal Counsel explained that the memorandum related solely to the Member States that had submitted formal credentials.

At its second meeting on 17 December, the Committee examined a further memorandum by the Secretary-General, as orally updated by the Legal Counsel, reporting that, since the Committee's first meeting, formal credentials from 14 other Member States had been received. In addition, information concerning the appointment of their representatives to the session had been communicated to the Secretary-General by six Member States by means of a facsimile communication, letter or note verbale. The Committee Chairman proposed that the Committee accept the credentials of those Member States, on the understanding that the six that had communicated by facsimile, letter or note verbale would submit formal credentials as soon as possible.

At each meeting, the Committee, acting without vote on a proposal by the Chairman, adopted a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received. The Committee also recommended the adoption of two draft resolutions by which the Assembly would approve the Committee's first [A/45/674] and second [A/45/674/Add.1] reports. The Assembly took no action on those draft resolutions.

The Assembly, by decision 45/455 of 21 December, decided to retain on the agenda of its forty-fifth session the item on the report of the Credentials Committee.

Organization of the 1990 session

By decision 45/401 of 21 September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee as set forth in its first report [A/45/250], adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the forty-fifth (1990) session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned the rationalization of the Assembly's work, the closing date of the session, the scheduling of meetings, the general debate, explanations of vote, right of reply and length of statements, meeting records, concluding statements, questions related to the programme budget, documentation, resolutions, special conferences, and meetings of subsidiary organs.

Subsidiary organs

By decisions 45/403 A, B, C and D, adopted on the recommendation of the Committee on Conferences as set out in its letters of 30 August, 5 September, 18 October and 2 November [A/45/475 & Add1-3], the General Assembly authorized the following subsidiary organs to hold meetings during its 1990 session: Committee for Programme and Co-ordination; Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade; Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Special Committee against Apartheid; Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East; International Civil Service Commission; Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa.

Agenda

At its resumed forty-fourth session, the General Assembly, on the proposals of the Secretary-General, adopted decisions 44/402 B and C on 2 April and 28 June 1990, by which it reopened for plenary consideration, respectively, the agenda item on the pattern of conferences and the sub-item on special programmes of economic assistance. By decision 44/402 D of 20 July, the Assembly, on the proposal of its President following a request of the Bahamas, Colombia and Haiti [A/45/965 & Corr.1 & Add.1], also reopened consideration, in plenary, of the item on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections. In the light of Namibia's independence, the Assembly, by decision 44/469 of 11 September, changed the title of item 115 to read "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa".

At its forty-fifth session, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first and second reports [A/45/250 & Add.1], the Assembly, by decision 45/402, adopted the agenda and allocation of agenda items for that session on 21 and 28 September. Under the same decision, on 21 September, it deferred consideration of the item "Judgment of the International Court of Justice of 27 June 1986 concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua: need for immediate compliance". On 15 October, it decided: that the debate on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries should be held directly in plenary, on the understanding that appropriate action on that sub-item would be taken by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee; and to include in the agenda the item on the prohibition of the development and manufacture of new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons. On the proposals of the Secretary-General, the Assembly further decided to include in its current agenda, on 11 and 21 December, respectively, additional sub-items: on the election of a member of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and on the appointment of a member of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women; and on the election of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, as well as to amend the elections item to read "Elections to fill vacancies in subsidiary organs and other elections".

On 21 December, by decision 45/455, the Assembly retained 13 items and one sub-item on the agenda, for consideration at its resumed forty-fifth session in 1991.

At its forty-fifth session, the General Assembly adopted a number of decisions by which it included items in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session. Three items were on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India, the question of East Timor, and development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States-all on the recommendation of the General Committee (decision 45/402); another three were on the questions of equitable representation on and an increase in the membership of the Security Council (decision 45/421), the Falklands Islands (Malvinas) (decision 45/424) and peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia (decision 45/425).

Other items, consideration of which had been deferred, were also included: declaration of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the aerial and naval military attack against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the present United States Administration in April 1986 (decision 45/429); armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security (decision 45/430); launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development (decision 45/435); and implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations (decision 45/454).

The items on international arms transfers (decision 45/415), naval arms and disarmament (decision 45/416), and conventional disarmament on a regional scale (decision 45/418) were included on the recommendation of the First Committee. The question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations (decision 45/423) was included on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee.

Co-operation with other organizations

League of Arab States

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/7 [YUN 1989, p. 118], the Secretary-General reported in September 1990 [A/45/481] on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States (LAS). He described consultations and exchanges of information that had taken place between the two organizations since 1989 and summarized follow-up action on proposals for co-operation in accordance with their 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 394] and 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 126] agreements.

In an addendum [A/45/481/Add.I] to his report, the Secretary-General further gave an account of a joint meeting between the two organizations in Geneva, from 18 to 20 July, to review co-operation and appraise progress, with particular reference to their 1988 agreements, and to consider proposals for a two-year programme of co-operation. He set out the six sectoral areas established by the meeting—international peace and security; food and agriculture; labour, trade, industry and environment; social affairs; education, science, culture and information; and communications—and detailed the specific activities agreed upon under each sector.

The Secretary-General also indicated other areas of co-operation as identified by the meeting, namely, between the Arab Monetary Fund and UN specialized agencies; between the Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and LAS regarding increasing the numbers of experts from the region's developing countries to serve in UN programmes of technical assistance; and between the World Intellectual Property Organization and LAS in the field of intellectual property systems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/82.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, in particular resolution 44/7 of 17 October 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling also the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional arrangements for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire of the League of Arab States to consolidate and develop the existing ties with the United Nations in all areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to co-operate in every possible way with the United Nations in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to Lebanon and to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Aware of the vital importance for the countries members of the League of Arab States of achieving a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict,

Realizing that the strengthening of international peace and security is directly related, inter alia, to disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Taking note with satisfaction of the conclusions and recommendations adopted at the joint meeting of the representatives of the organizations of the United Nations system and the representatives of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, held at Geneva from 18 to 20 July 1990,

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted by the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 25 to 27 November 1980,

Having heard the statement of the Acting Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States of 25 October 1990 on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, and having noted the emphasis placed therein on follow-up actions and procedures on the recommendations in the political, social and cultural fields adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis from 28 June to 1 July 1983, at Geneva from 29 June to 1 July 1988 and from 18 to 20 July 1990, as well as on the recommendations relating to political matters contained in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him to implement the proposals adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations held at Tunis, Amman and Geneva;

3. Expresses its appreciation also to the Secretary-General for his efforts to implement Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and commends the League of Arab States and its Tripartite High Committee for their endeavours to resolve the crisis in Lebanon;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen co-operation with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for the purpose of implementing United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East in order to achieve a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict;

5. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, further to intensify their co-operation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to co-ordinate the follow-up action to facilitate the implementation of the proposals of a multilateral nature adopted at the Tunis meeting in 1983, and to take appropriate action regarding the multilateral proposals adopted at the Amman meeting in 1985, and at the Geneva meetings in 1988 and 1990, including the following:

(a) Promotion of contacts and consultations between the counterpart programmes of the United Nations system;

(b) Setting up joint sectoral inter-agency working groups;

8. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the programmes, organizations and agencies concerned within the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding co-operation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and consultations with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects of a bilateral nature, in order to facilitate their implementation;

(c) To associate whenever possible with organizations and institutions of the League of Arab States in the execution and implementation of development projects in the Arab region;

(d) To inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 May 1991, of the progress of their co-operation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in particular the follow-up action taken on the multilateral and bilateral proposals adopted at the Tunis, Amman and Geneva meetings;

9. Decides that, in order to intensify co-operation and for the purpose of review and appraisal of progress as well as to prepare comprehensive periodic reports, a general meeting between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States should take place once every two years and inter-agency sectoral meetings should be organized annually on areas of priority and wide importance in the development of the Arab States and the meeting of the sectoral co-ordinators should be held during 1991, the time and place to be determined by consultations between the United Nations and the League of Arab States;

10. Recommends that the United Nations and the other organizations of the United Nations system should utilize Arab expertise to the extent possible in projects undertaken in the Arab region;

11. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to encourage periodic consultations between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States to review and strengthen co-ordination mechanisms with a view to accelerating implementation and follow-up action of multilateral projects and proposals adopted by the general meeting of the two organizations;

12. Recommends that a joint meeting between representatives of the organizations of the United Nations system and of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations should be organized in 1992 in order to review the progress achieved in the implementation of the two-year plan of action adopted at the 1990 meeting;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/8 [YUN 1989, p. 120], the Secretary-General submitted a report in September 1990 [A/45/526] on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC).

The report described consultations which had taken place between representatives of the two organizations and their representation at meetings of the Security Council and of the Assembly and summarized follow-up action on the recommendations in the priority sectors agreed upon by the third United Nations/OIC meeting [YUN 1988, p. 128]. The sectors were development of science and technology, outer space, development of trade, technical co-operation among Islamic countries, assistance to refugees, food security and agriculture, education and eradication of illiteracy, and investment mechanisms and joint ventures.

The report further described co-operation in economic, social and cultural development with a number of bodies, programmes and specialized agencies of the UN system, giving details of the contacts they maintained with OIC, as well as their ongoing and new technical co-operation projects and other forms of assistance to OIC members. The UN entities involved were the Departments of International Economic and Social Affairs and of Technical Co-operation for Development, the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the World Food Programme, the International Labour Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

In an addendum [A/45/526/Add.1] to his report, the Secretary-General submitted the conclusions and recommendations of the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the UN system and OIC held in Vienna from 12 to 14 September aimed at enhancing co-operation.

On 19 September [A/45/421-S/21797], Egypt transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the final communique and of other documents adopted by the Nineteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Cairo, Egypt, 31 July-5 August).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/9.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to co-operate more closely in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional co-operation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of co-operation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions,

Noting with satisfaction the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions, held in Vienna from 12 to 14 December 1989, as called for in General Assembly resolution 44/8 of 18 October 1989,

Noting also the encouraging progress made in the seven priority areas of co-operation as well as in the identification of other areas of co-operation,

Convinced that the strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference 'contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the desire of both organizations to strengthen further the existing co-operation by developing specific proposals in the designated priority areas of co-operation,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions in the implementation of the proposals adopted at the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the two organizations,

Recalling its resolutions 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983, 39/7 of 8 November 1984, 40/4 of 25 October 1985, 41/3 of 16 October 1986, 42/4 of 15 October 1987, 43/2 of 17 October 1988 and 44/8 of 18 October 1989,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Approves the conclusions and recommendations of the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

3. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to continue co-operation in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order;

5. Encourages the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to expand their co-operation with the Organization of the Islamic Conference, particularly by negotiating co-operation agreements, and invites them to multiply the contacts and meetings of the focal points for co-operation in priority areas of interest to the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

6. Recommends that a general meeting between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions, as called for in resolution 44/8, be organized in 1991 at a date and place to be determined through consultations with the concerned organizations;

Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, especially the lead agencies, to provide increased technical and other forms of assistance to the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions in order to enhance co-operation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

9. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to arrange for the holding of consultations, as and when appropriate, between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the Organization of the Islamic Conference on the implementation of projects and follow-up action;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, to encourage the convening of sectoral meetings on the priority areas of co-operation, including the areas of human resources development, environment and disaster relief, as recommended by the 1989 and 1990 meetings of the focal points of the two organizations;

11. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanisms of co-operation between the two organizations;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

25 October 1990

Meeting 35

Adopted without vote

Draft by Egypt (A/45/L.8); agenda item 26.

Observer status for ICRC

In a letter of 16 August [A/45/191 & Add.1], 21 Member States requested that the General Assembly include in the agenda of its forty-fifth session an item on observer status for the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), in consideration of its special role and mandate conferred upon it by the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims. Annexed to the letter was an explanatory memorandum stating that the tasks of ICRC and the United Nations increasingly complemented one another and co-operation between the two institutions was closer, both in their field activities and in efforts to enhance respect for international humanitarian law. ICRC and the United Nations also co-operated on legal matters, as reflected in resolutions of the Security Council, the Assembly and its subsidiary bodies, and in the Secretary-General's reports. Participation of ICRC as an observer at Assembly proceedings would further enhance co-operation between the two organizations and facilitate the work of ICRC.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/6.

Observer status for the International Committee of the Red Cross, in consideration of the special role and mandates conferred upon it by the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949

The General Assembly,

Recalling the mandates conferred upon the International Committee of the Red Cross by the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Considering the special role carried on accordingly by the International Committee of the Red Cross in international humanitarian relations,

Desirous of promoting co-operation between the United Nations and the International Committee of the Red Cross,

1. Decides to invite the International Committee of the Red Cross to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

Other institutional questions

Composition of UN organs

In 1990, as in every year since 1979, consideration of the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations was deferred, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which reported on 19 November [A/45/725] that, as none of its members had requested to speak on the substance of the item, consideration of it should be deferred until the General Assembly's forty-sixth (1991) session. Acting on that recommendation on 11 December, the Assembly adopted decision 45/423, by which it included the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session.

Implementation of UN resolutions

On 21 December, by decision 45/454, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item on the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations and included it in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session.

PART TWO

Regional questions

Chapter I

Africa

During the year, United Nations efforts to secure the end of apartheid in South Africa continued to dominate the Organization's activities regarding the continent of Africa.

In 1990, South Africa entered into a process of change that the Special Committee against Apartheid stated might lead to the end of that institutionalized system of racial discrimination. Among positive developments were the lifting of the ban on political opposition organizations; the release of some political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela, leader of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC), after decades of imprisonment on 11 February 1990; and talks between ANC and the Pretoria regime. The ANC leader visited the United Nations in June, when he addressed a special meeting of the Special Committee against Apartheid. A United Nations team which visited South Africa concluded that it had reached the threshold of a new era with the current political process holding encouraging prospects, leading to the dismantling of apartheid. Despite these advances, there was limited political activity and most pillars of apartheid remained.

The General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions aimed at strengthening international pressure on South Africa while promoting the new dialogue.

Despite some problems early in 1990, the 1988 agreements between Angola, Cuba and South Africa were being implemented and the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola was on schedule. The United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM) had operated successfully, the Secretary-General said, demonstrating what could be achieved by a UN peace-keeping operation when it received full co-operation from the parties concerned.

Namibia, the former territory of South-West Africa under South African control for decades and since 1976 under the legal administration of the United Nations, became an independent nation on 21 March 1990 (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). During the year, the United Nations continued its efforts to implement the 1988 settlement plan for Western Sahara (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

In other areas, the Secretary-General remained informed about developments regarding the conflict in Liberia and of the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States to resolve it. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Chad and the Sudan exchanged charges of military action. Libya in December requested a Security Council meeting regarding allegations that the United States had transported Libyan detainees from Chad to an unknown destination. The General Assembly again reaffirmed the sovereignty of the Comoros over the Indian Ocean island of Mayotte. Increasing co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations resulted in a meeting of the two secretariats to draw up a specific recommendation for future co-operation in priority fields.

South Africa

In 1990, South Africa made further tentative steps towards the dismantling of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society. On 2 February, the South African President, F. W. de Klerk, announced a series of measures aimed at the creation of a climate conducive to negotiations. These included a request to the South African Law Commission to identify models of democratic constitutions to support negotiations towards a new constitution; reform of the death penalty to limit its use to extreme cases and with the automatic right to appeal; rescinding of the prohibition of the African National Congress (ANC), the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) and the South African Communist Party (SACP) and release of those imprisoned because of their membership in those parties; abolition of the media and education emergency regulations; removal of emergency regulations on 33 organizations and the 374 persons released from prison; and limitation to six months of the period of detention under emergency regulations. Mr. de Klerk also announced the termination of the state of emergency as soon as circumstances justified it and the unconditional release of Nelson Mandela. He repeated his invitation for all sides to take their place at the negotiating table. In keeping with Mr. de Klerk's announcement, Mr. Mandela was released on 11 February after 27 years of imprisonment.

Other important developments followed. At Groote Schuur, from 2 to 4 May, South African authorities and ANC leaders held the first talks in 78 years in what was considered as the beginning of a process to clear all obstacles to negotiations. Following the talks, the two sides agreed on the Groote Schuur Minute, which stated among other things their commitment towards a resolution of the climate of violence and intimidation, and to stability and peaceful negotiations. The two parties agreed to establish a joint working group to make recommendations on political prisoners, their release and indemnity. Also, temporary indemnity was granted for members of the ANC National Executive Committee and others outside South Africa to permit them to return for talks with the authorities.

On 4 May, the end of racial segregation in public hospitals was announced and the authorities declared that the Group Areas Act and the Land Acts were to be repealed early in 1991. A 12-point plan on the constitutional future of the country was introduced in Parliament, which included State support for racially separate schools, the holding of regular elections, a bill of individual human rights, the preservation of the free market system and an independent judiciary. On 7 June, the state of emergency was lifted in all areas of the country, except Natal province. Also in June, the Parliament adopted the Discriminatory Legislation Regarding Public Amenities Repeal Act, which abolished the Reservation of Separate Amenities Act of 1953. The measure came into effect on 15 October. Further talks between the South African authorities and ANC resulted on 6 August in the Pretoria Minute, a salient feature of which was the ANC decision to suspend all armed actions and related activities with immediate effect. The regime undertook, among other things, to begin a phased release of political prisoners and to continue reviewing security legislation with a view to its amendment. On 18 October, President de Klerk announced the lifting of the state of emergency in Natal province, including the KwaZulu bantustan.

Against that background, violence continued at all levels and was a major cause of concern. The number of persons killed and injured as a result of police action increased. On 16 July, ANC sent a report to President de Klerk on police violence, demanding an end to the "shocking inhumanity" of police action in rural areas. It also criticized the search and seizure sweeps in the townships known as "Operation Watchdog". Attacks by hit-squads, allegedly run by the South African Police and the South African Defence Force against anti-apartheid activists and organizations, seriously hindered political activity. Attacks by extreme-right groups escalated dramatically after President de Klerk's speech of 2 February. Those groups announced plans to form an army of 30,000 in Pretoria "to protect white property, women and children against blacks". The violent confrontation between political organizations (mainly between the Inkatha Freedom Party and the supporters of the United Democratic Front and the Congress of South African Trade Unions) in Natal province worsened in 1990, spreading to the black townships of the Transvaal province. By April, more than 12,000 people had fled their homes as a result of the wave of violence. The violence posed a serious threat to the process towards negotiations.

The lifting of the ban and restrictions on political organizations and individuals allowed national liberation movements to emerge into open political activity and to focus their efforts on rebuilding their structures and creating the political space for debate and consultation on the future South Africa.

Concerning negotiations to end apartheid, even though Pretoria had invited PAC to join the talks on negotiations, PAC stated that it would not be part of the pre-bargaining stage. ANC began discussion of constitutional proposals as well as a post-apartheid economy. While progress was being made towards negotiations, struggles continued at the mass level, whether against municipalities, apartheid education or intransigent employers.

In November, the National Conference of Church Leaders in South Africa adopted the Rustenburg Declaration in which they stated their unequivocal rejection of apartheid and the need for restitution to its victims. In December, PAC held its first national conference in South Africa since 1959. It called for a constituent assembly to devise a new constitution and for the creation of a climate conducive to negotiations. During the same month, ANC held a national consultative conference, which concluded that internal and external pressure needed to be maintained on South Africa until a new constitution was adopted. The conference decided that ANC would suspend the entire negotiation process if all obstacles, including violence, were not removed by 30 April 1991. The Azanian Peoples' Organization (AZAPO) also held its congress in December.

Efforts to eliminate apartheid

On 20 July, the General Assembly, by decision 44/468, decided to meet from 12 to 14 September 1990 to consider the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to its resolution S-16/1 [YUN 1989, p. 129].

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to that resolution, the Secretary-General submitted a July 1990 report with later addenda [A/44/960 & Add.1-3] on progress made in the implementation of the 1989 Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa [GA res. S-16/1]. The Declaration laid down internationally agreed steps towards a negotiating climate and principles for a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa, prescribing a programme of work to achieve that end.

As requested by the Assembly, the Secretary-General personally transmitted copies of the Declaration on 12 January 1990 to the Permanent Representative of South Africa to the United Nations and on 7 February to the Permanent Observers of ANC and PAC. Since it was important for the Secretary-General's report to be as factual as possible, the Secretary-General, while in Windhoek, Namibia, on 20 March 1990, sought the agreement of the South African President for a team of senior UN officials to visit the Republic. While agreeing to that suggestion, the President made it clear that acceptance was without prejudice to his Government's position on the question of non-interference in South Africa's internal affairs. A UN team visited South Africa from 9 to 19 June, to obtain first-hand information on the latest developments and to meet with government ministers and representatives of political parties and movements and concerned organizations. The Secretary-General himself, at other times, met with President de Klerk and Mr. Mandela, the former informing him of the new policy that the South African Government had begun to implement to dismantle the apartheid system, and the latter giving an assessment of the situation and his movement's position on some of the Declaration's salient features.

In its report to the Secretary-General, the UN team said it had met eight Cabinet Ministers and representatives of 39 political parties, movements and organizations. It reported in detail on progress made towards creating a climate conducive to negotiations, views relating to the question of negotiations for a new constitution and matters enhancing or obstructing the process of ending apartheid. The team concluded that South Africa had reached the threshold of a new era. The political process on which it had embarked held encouraging prospects of leading to the dismantling of apartheid. There was a general perception that the path taken by the Government offered real promise for constructive political discussions, representing a significant change from the position of its predecessors. Yet, there was also a widespread belief that a number of additional steps were required to establish an atmosphere favourable to free political activity. Apartheid laws, repressive security regulations and persistent violence, including that prevailing in Natal, continued to affect adversely domestic tranquility, as well as the sense of security and well-being of the people. So long as racial attitudes persisted and apartheid structures at local levels remained, the process for change would encounter difficulties. Those matters needed urgent attention.

In his own conclusions, the Secretary-General said he had been greatly encouraged by the positive developments that had taken place in 1990 within South Africa. The bold and courageous policy to which President de Klerk had committed his Government opened up distinct possibilities for the dismantling of the apartheid system. Equally encouraging and statesmanlike had been the vision and forbearance displayed by the black leadership, which, despite long years of injustice and oppression, had renewed its commitment to a peaceful process for ending apartheid and building a non-racial and democratic society.

Among the measures outlined in the Declaration to create a climate for free political activity, the lifting of the ban on political parties and movements had been implemented in full. Other measures had been implemented in part. While it was evident that an important process had been set in motion, many believed the Government should implement all measures in their totality.

The issue of violence, not least in Natal, urgently needed addressing at the highest level since, if it were allowed to continue unrestrained, the consequences could well present serious difficulties for the political process. The Secretary-General appealed to all parties to end the violence and to work together to build a peaceful South Africa. He said that he would strongly endorse any measure aimed at redressing the social and economic imbalances, particularly in housing, education, employment and health, noting that grave injustice had been inflicted by apartheid on the black population.

The Secretary-General's report also contained information provided by Governments relating to progress made in implementing the Declaration; excerpts from President de Klerk's address to Parliament on 2 February; and a statement by Mr. Mandela, Deputy President of ANC, to a meeting of the Special Committee against Apartheid on 22 June.

Communication. In an 11 September letter [A/44/976] to the Secretary-General, the South African Minister for Foreign Affairs reiterated his Government's position that the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa constituted intervention in South Africa's internal affairs and had no validity. The current debate in the General Assembly was incongruous in the light of the initiatives and irreversible changes introduced by President de Klerk since 2 February. The Secretary-General's report on the implementation of the Declaration had acknowledged the positive signs as a step in the right direction. The Foreign Minister also referred to the agreements reached with ANC as outlined in the Pretoria Minute of 6 August. Since then, the joint Government/ANC working group had completed its report on the release of prisoners and the granting of indemnity and the Minister of Justice had announced a further release of prisoners as from 1 September. A second joint working group was appointed to resolve outstanding questions arising from ANC's decision to suspend armed action. The Government and ANC had created communication structures to curb violence in the townships. On 29 August it was announced that the Government was prepared to consider an interim arrangement which would allow ANC and other parties an opportunity to influence decisions of Parliament while negotiations were under way. A meeting was held on 10 August between the Government and First and Second Tier Governmental Institutions to address questions relating to the future of regional government, ways of participation in the future negotiating process and the level of violence in the country. The meeting set up a working group to explore further the principles and concepts concerning regional government.

The Government on 24 August restated its preference for all political groups with recognized support to be represented at the negotiating table and had invited PAC and AZAPO to do so. Other action taken by the Government included the removal of more than a hundred discriminatory laws and regulations, and the last three major ones were to receive Parliament's attention in 1991. Security legislation was to be reviewed, and membership of the National Party had been opened to all South Africans. Strenuous efforts were being made to control violence in the townships. Ending the violence between ANC and Inkatha was a major priority, and it had been announced that a meeting between the two organizations would take place to discuss the issue. The Foreign Minister said that it was not the time to speak of a continuation of sanctions since, with a depressed economy and a shortage of investment capital, South Africa would be faced with an explosive situation which would have serious consequences for the negotiation process. There was no turning back on the road to a new and just South Africa. What was at issue was the economic future of South Africa and in fact the African continent.

The General Assembly had a historic opportunity to recognize the changes that had taken place in South Africa and to reaffirm that it was for South Africans to determine their future. To continue to interfere would be counter-productive and risk upsetting the serious efforts to get negotiations under way.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 September, the General Assembly adopted resolution 44/244.

Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by consensus on 14 December 1989 at the sixteenth special session of the General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the Declaration called upon the South African régime, inter alia, to undertake certain measures in order to create a climate suitable for negotiations in South Africa,

Recalling that the Declaration called upon the international community not to relax existing measures aimed at encouraging the South African régime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration,

Noting that the States Members of the United Nations and the members of the international community have generally adhered to the programme of action contained in the Declaration and expressing its concern over any departures that have occurred from the international consensus reflected in the Declaration,

Taking careful note of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of the Declaration and welcoming his contributions,

Taking note of the report of the Monitoring Group of the Ad Hoc Committee on Southern Africa of the Organization of African Unity,

Taking note also of other statements and reports from Member States and regional groups on this issue,

Noting that while some significant measures in the right direction have been undertaken by the South African régime, such as the unbanning of the African National Congress of South Africa, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania and other political organizations and the release of some political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela, and the régime's declared commitment to abolish the apartheid system, continued efforts are needed to establish a climate fully conducive to negotiations and free political activity,

Welcoming the ongoing talks between the African National Congress of South Africa and the South African régime aimed at eliminating obstacles to the commencement of negotiations towards a peaceful settlement in South Africa, and the results achieved thus far as set out in the Groote Schuur Minute of 4 May 1990 and the Pretoria Minute of 6 August 1990,

Gravely concerned with the escalating 'violence in South Africa resulting largely from continued existence of the apartheid policies, practices and structures, and actions of those opposed to the democratic transformation of South Africa,

1. Reaffirms the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa and the need for their full and immediate implementation;

2. Determines that further steps need to be undertaken by the South African régime to implement the profound and irreversible changes called for in the Declaration;

3. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental organizations to adhere strictly to the programme of action contained in the Declaration by maintaining existing measures aimed at encouraging the South African regime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration;

4. Calls upon the South African regime to proceed without delay to establish a climate fully conducive to negotiations by taking all the steps stipulated in the Declaration, in particular, to implement its commitment to repeal all legislation, such as the Internal Security Act, designed to circumscribe political activity;

5. Calls for an immediate end to violence and urges the South African authorities to take urgent action to end it, specifically by dismantling the apartheid structures as well as ensuring effective and impartial action by the security forces and calls upon all parties concerned to contribute to the establishment of a climate free of violence;

6. Welcomes the fact that the African National Congress of South Africa and the South African régime have engaged in talks which have thus far resulted in the Groote Schuur and the Pretoria minutes aimed at facilitating the commencement of substantive negotiations;

7. Commends the African National Congress of South Africa for having taken the initiative in calling for talks with the South African regime and for its landmark decision to suspend the armed struggle;

8. Urges the international community and the Secretary-General, through the relevant United Nations agencies, to provide all possible assistance to facilitate the re-establishment of previously banned political organizations in South Africa as well as the reintegration of released political prisoners;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, through the relevant United Nations agencies, to provide all necessary assistance for the voluntary repatriation of the South African refugees and political exiles in safety and dignity, and requests the South African régime, the liberation movements and other organizations in South Africa and the international community to extend their full support to this endeavour;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to remain actively seized of developments in South Africa and to submit by 30 June 1991 to the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly a report on further progress in the implementation of the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 A.

International efforts to eradicate apartheid

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, contained in the annex to its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989, and its resolution 44/244 of 17 September 1990,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, and the report of the Secretary-General on progress made in the implementation of the Declaration,

Convinced that the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment, through broad-based negotiations, of a non-racial democracy based on a new constitutional order providing for universal, equal suffrage under a non-racial voters' roll can lead to a peaceful and lasting solution to the problems facing the people of South Africa,

Also convinced that the policy and practice of apartheid breeds violence and its continuation would be detrimental to the vital interests of all the people of South Africa,

Gravely concerned at the continuing repression of the majority population in South Africa through the apartheid system, manifested, inter alia, by detentions without trial, continued possibility of executions of political prisoners, absence of full implementation of agreements regarding the return of political exiles without restrictions and repressive provisions in the Internal Security Act,

Noting that, while some significant measures in the right direction have been undertaken by the South African authorities, including the recent repeal of the Separate Amenities Act and the lifting of the state of emergency throughout the country, continuing effort is needed to facilitate free political activity and to foster a climate fully conducive to negotiations,

Welcoming the ongoing talks between the African National Congress of South Africa and the South African authorities aimed at facilitating the commencement of substantive broad-based negotiations,

Noting that the African National Congress, in an effort to contribute to an atmosphere free of violence, which is in accordance with the guidelines of the Declaration, and further to the agreements set out in the Pretoria Minute of 6 August 1990, has suspended its armed activities,

Gravely concerned that the recurring violence resulting largely from the persistence of apartheid and other factors, including actions of those opposed to the democratic transformation of South Africa, poses a threat to the negotiating process,

Noting with serious concern the continuing effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization that have been committed by South Africa against neighbouring independent African States, in particular against Angola and Mozambique,

Noting that the international community has generally adhered to the programme of action contained in the Declaration, and expressing its concern over any departures that have occurred from the international consensus reflected in the Declaration,

Recognizing the responsibility of the United Nations and the international community to take all necessary measures aimed at the eradication of apartheid through peaceful means, in particular by adhering to the programme of action contained in the Declaration by maintaining the measures aimed at encouraging the South African authorities to eradicate apartheid and to promote profound and irreversible change,

1. Reaffirms its support for the legitimate struggle of the South African people for the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic society in South Africa in which all its people, irrespective of race, colour, sex or creed, will enjoy the same fundamental freedoms and human rights;

2. Takes note of Pretoria's declared commitment to abolish the apartheid system;

3. Reaffirms the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa and the need for their full and immediate implementation;

4. Fully supports the efforts of the South African people to arrive at a peaceful settlement of the problems in their country through genuine negotiations, and welcomes the fact that the African National Congress of South Africa and the South African régime have engaged in talks that have thus far resulted in the Groote Schuur Minute of 4 May 1990 and in the Pretoria Minute, aimed at facilitating the commencement of substantive negotiations;

5. Calls upon the South African authorities to continue their efforts to foster a climate fully conducive to negotiations and free political activity, in particular by repealing all repressive legislation, such as provisions in the Internal Security Act, by ending detentions without trial, by allowing the return of all political exiles without restrictions and by fully implementing all agreements reached so far with the African National Congress, including the release of all remaining political prisoners;

6. Calls for a speedy and full implementation of the agreements reached so far between the South African régime and the African National Congress;

7. Welcomes the progress made thus far aimed at facilitating the commencement of substantive broad-based negotiations and encourages all parties concerned, taking into account the guidelines to the process of negotiations contained in the Declaration, to participate fully in future negotiations, in order to secure the adoption of a new constitution and the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa;

8. Calls for an immediate end to violence, which has resulted largely from the continued existence of the apartheid policies, practices and structures;

9. Calls upon the South African authorities to redouble their efforts to end recurring violence by ensuring effective and impartial actions by all branches of government and all competent authorities against all those responsible for violence, including vigilante groups, and calls upon all parties concerned to contribute to the establishment of an atmosphere free of violence;

10. Considers that while the South African authorities have declared their intention to eradicate apartheid and embark on negotiations for a new constitution, the process of change in South Africa remains at an early stage and further substantive progress needs to be made to promote the profound and irreversible changes called for in the Declaration;

11. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental organizations to adhere strictly to the programme of action contained in the Declaration by maintaining the measures aimed at applying pressure on the South African régime to eradicate apartheid and to promote profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration, namely, the speedy eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a united, democratic, non-racial South Africa;

12. Calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental organizations and financial institutions to use concerted and effective measures, particularly in the areas of economic and financial relations with apartheid South Africa, aimed at applying pressure to ensure a speedy end to apartheid;

13. Calls upon all Governments to observe fully the mandatory arms embargo and requests the Security Council to monitor effectively the strict implementation of the arms embargo;

14. Appeals to all Governments and organizations to render all possible assistance to the front-line States, particularly Angola and Mozambique, to enable them to reconstruct their economies, which have been devastated from years of destabilization;

15. Appeals to all States, organizations and institutions to increase economic, humanitarian, legal, educational and other assistance and support to the victims of apartheid and to all those, including previously banned organizations, who oppose apartheid and promote a united, non-racial, democratic society in South Africa;

16. Urges the international community and the Secretary-General, through the relevant United Nations agencies, to provide all possible assistance to facilitate the re-establishment of previously banned political organizations in South Africa as well as the reintegration of released political prisoners and returning South African refugees and exiles;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the coordination of activities of the United Nations system in the implementation of the Declaration and report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, and to continue monitoring the implementation of the Declaration as well as pursuing appropriate initiatives to facilitate all efforts leading to the peaceful eradication of apartheid.

Special Committee against Apartheid

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report [A/45/22 & Add.1] covering the period from September 1989 to mid-October 1990, reviewed the political developments and economic and social conditions in South Africa and international action against apartheid. Developments later in the year were described in the Committee's 1991 report [A/46/22].

During the period under review, the Special Committee continued to monitor and analyse the important developments taking place in South Africa and the response of the international community. In promoting the maintenance of pressure on the regime, the Committee focused on activities that could have potential for influencing decision-making. It gave special emphasis to targeted action against apartheid and to the promotion of a peaceful solution of the conflict through negotiations. It organized, sponsored and co-sponsored conferences, seminars and other meetings, promoted contacts with the opponents of apartheid and assisted the anti-apartheid movements within and outside South Africa. It welcomed the lifting of the ban on ANC, PAC, SACP and other anti-apartheid organizations, the release of certain political prisoners and the decision to lift partially the four-year-old state of emergency. The Committee expressed deep concern at the continuing violence in the townships. It convened a special meeting on 16 February to mark the release of Nelson Mandela and another on 22 June to welcome him to the United Nations.

In its conclusions, the Special Committee noted that a process of change had been set in motion in South Africa; however, continued efforts were necessary to ensure the realization of the eradication of apartheid. Despite the significant break with the past by lifting the ban and restrictions on political organizations and persons, and by ending the state of emergency, a climate conducive to negotiations had not yet been fully established. It was fundamental that conditions for a debate be created and that organizations be allowed the freedom to define further their political and economic programme for a post-apartheid South Africa. The support of the international community for the anti-apartheid forces in South Africa was therefore indispensable, and premature relaxation would be detrimental to the process of change.

The Special Committee recommended that the General Assembly reaffirm the 1989 Declaration; note the positive measures taken so far; call on South Africa to create a climate fully conducive to negotiations as set out in the Declaration; call on the South African regime to repeal repressive legislation and remove the pillars of apartheid; reaffirm full support for the current process towards negotiations in which the South African authorities and ANC were engaged; call for an immediate end to violence and urge the South African authorities to end it, specifically by dismantling the apartheid structures, as well as by ensuring effective and impartial action by the security forces; and reiterate that pressure must be maintained on South Africa, particularly with regard to restrictive measures on trade, investment and finance, until the General Assembly determined that there was clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the Declaration's objectives.

The Special Committee also recommended an appeal for increased all-round support and assistance to the national liberation movements and other organizations engaged in the struggle against apartheid and for increased assistance to the front-line States, particularly Angola and Mozambique.

Committee work programme

In its 1990 report [A/45/22 & Add.1], the Special Committee against Apartheid recommended that the General Assembly authorize it to continue as a focal point in monitoring the situation in South Africa, particularly the need for maintaining pressure on South Africa, and to continue mobilizing international action against apartheid. That mobilization would include collection, analysis and dissemination of information, liaison and consultation with Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and relevant individuals and groups able to influence public opinion and decision-making, as well as hearings, conferences, missions, publicity and other relevant activity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 E.

Programme of work of the Special Committee against Apartheid

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

1. Commends the Special Committee against Apartheid for the diligent manner in which it has discharged its responsibilities in monitoring the situation in South Africa and promoting international action against apartheid;

2. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee and endorses its recommendations relating to its programme of work;

3. Authorizes the Special Committee, in accordance with its mandate and acting, with the support services of the United Nations Centre against Apartheid, as the focal point for the international campaign against apartheid and the promotion of the implementation of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa:

(a) To continue monitoring closely developments in South Africa and the actions of the international community, particularly regarding the need for maintaining pressure on South Africa as called for in the Declaration;

(b) To continue mobilizing international action against apartheid, inter alia, through collection, analysis and dissemination of information, through liaison and consultations with Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and relevant individuals and groups, both inside and outside South Africa, able to influence public opinion and decision-making, and through missions, hearings, conferences, publicity and other relevant activities;

(c) To publish an interim annual report during the first half of 1991 on developments in South Africa and on the international response thereto and, in this context, undertake, as appropriate, consultations with the parties concerned;

4. Appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to increase their co-operation with the Special Committee and the Centre in the discharge of their mandates;

5. Requests all United Nations bodies, organs and agencies to co-operate with the Special Committee and the UN Centre in their activities in order to ensure consistency, improve co-ordination and efficient use of available resources and avoid duplication of efforts in the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

6. Requests Governments and organizations to provide financial and other assistance for the special projects of the Special Committee and to make generous contributions to the Trust Fund for Publicity against Apartheid;

7. Appeals to all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, information media and individuals to co-operate with the Centre and the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in their activities relating to apartheid and, in particular, in disseminating information on the evolving situation in South Africa;

8. Decides to continue the authorization of adequate financial provision in the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania to maintain offices in New York in order to participate effectively in the deliberations of the Special Committee and other appropriate bodies;

9. Decides to make a special allocation of 480,000 United States dollars to the Special Committee for 1991 from the regular budget of the United Nations to cover the cost of special projects to be decided upon by the Committee.

On 17 September 1990, by decision 44/407 B, the Assembly took note of a report [A/44/709/Add.I] of the Special Political Committee on hearings of organizations and individuals in connection with South Africa's apartheid policies. The Committee heard statements by six persons.

On 4 December, the Assembly, by decision 45/419, took note of the Special Political Committee's report [A/45/815] on hearings of 12 persons.

Political prisoners and detainees

The Special Committee against Apartheid stated that the South African regime's response to the call for the release of all political prisoners had been fraught with ambiguities. The release of political prisoners announced by President de Klerk on 2 February 1990 covered only a small proportion of those prisoners, namely, those persons serving prison sentences for membership in those organizations which were no longer banned or for offences which were illegal only because of such bans, and it excluded those sentenced for other offences such as murder, terrorism or arson. The Human Rights Commission of South Africa, in a special report published at the end of May 1990, noted that, while the official figure released in Parliament concerning "security prisoners" was 347, its own records indicated that there were still between 2,500 and 3,000 political prisoners in the country's jails. The report included a list of 1,522 names of political prisoners, imprisoned as a direct result of opposition to apartheid.

The issue of the release of political prisoners had been central to the discussions held by ANC and the authorities in Groote Schuur from 2 to 4 May and in Pretoria on 6 August 1990. A joint working group was established to make recommendations on the definition of political offences and to consider mechanisms for their release and indemnity. The working group's report included a plan for the phased release of prisoners and the granting of indemnity for political offences to all exiles. According to the plan, the Special Committee said, only a narrow range of political exiles would likely be granted unconditional indemnity in the near future, while thousands of future returnees would have to submit to a process of individual scrutiny in which President de Klerk would make the final decision. Between 2 February and 22 October 1990, 177 political prisoners were released. The Human Rights Commission pointed out that, between January and August 1990, a further 69 persons were convicted for political offences. Under the Internal Security Act, a senior member of the ANC National Executive Committee was arrested on 25 July and had been detained incommunicado since then. During 1990, seven persons died while in police custody.

Trade union rights

The Special Committee against Apartheid said that the enforcement of apartheid laws, in particular those regulating labour relations, had had a distorting effect on the labour market. In 1990, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) estimated that there were 4.5 million unemployed, nearly all black. Enforcement of the Labour Relations Act remained a cause of militant confrontation between workers and employers throughout 1990. The two largest trade union federations—the Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU) and the National Council of Trade Unions (NACTU)—pointed out that the Act curtailed freedom of association, entrenched racial unionism and limited further the freedom to withhold labour, all of which contravened international labour standards recognized by ILO.

In May 1990, COSATU, NACTU and the South African Employers' Consultative Committee on Labour Affairs (SACCOLA) reached an agreement recognizing that all workers were entitled to basic rights, including collective bargaining, freedom of association and the right to withhold labour, and suggesting specific amendments to the Act. The agreement marked the first time that workers and employers had jointly proposed labour legislation. Nevertheless, the authorities refused to enact the accord during 1990. However, an agreement between COSATU, NACTU, SACCOLA and the Ministry of Manpower was reached on 20 September, clearing the way for several 1988 amendments to the Act to be removed and setting in motion a process of extending basic trade union rights to all workers.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1990/44, demanded the abolition of legislation impeding trade union rights in contravention of international labour standards, the immediate unconditional release of all trade unionists imprisoned for exercising legitimate trade union rights and cessation of the persecution of trade unionists and repression of the independent black trade union movement.

In decision 1990/228 of 25 May, the Council agreed that the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa should continue to investigate and study violations of human rights in South Africa as well as infringements of trade union rights.

(See also PART THREE, Chapter X.)

Women and children under apartheid

In resolution 1990/13 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council commended the tenacity and bravery of South African women, both inside and outside the country, resisting oppression; demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees, among whom were many women and children; unequivocally condemned the South African regime for imposing the state of emergency, the forcible separation of black families and detention and imprisonment of women and children; appealed for support for educational, health and social welfare programmes and for increased assistance for women and children refugees; and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report in 1991 on achieving the goals of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women with regard to women and children living under apartheid.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/615] regarding the torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa, in response to General Assembly resolution 44/143 [YUN 1989, p. 497]. The report contained relevant excerpts from the latest report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X). On 23 February 1990, the Commission condemned South Africa in that regard [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/11)].

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/144, condemned the apartheid racist regime for the continued detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa; reiterated its demand for their unconditional release; and called on UN bodies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to intensify the world-wide campaign to monitor and expose those practices.

Economic developments

In an overview of the economic situation in South Africa, the Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report [A/45/22 & Add.1], said South Africa's economic situation in 1990 continued to be precarious. As new capital inflows in the form of bank loans and foreign investment had virtually stopped, largely as a consequence of sanctions and the unfavourable climate for business in the country, South Africa had become a capital-exporting nation. The rate of economic growth had declined to 2.1 per cent in 1989 compared to 3.7 per cent in 1988, and a growth of gross domestic product of approximately 0.2 per cent was forecast for 1990, indicating that a modest recession had begun. Inflation continued to grow, while the rand's exchange rate declined. It was generally estimated that a real economic growth rate of 5 per cent a year was required to absorb new entrants to the labour market, let alone reduce existing unemployment, yet the 1990-1991 budget projected a growth rate of just 1 per cent.

Direct foreign investment

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in its annual report, said the weakening trend in fixed investment in South Africa underlined the prevailing climate of low business confidence. In view of the uncertain political situation, business seemed to be less interested in investing its capital in new factories and new machinery and more in exporting its capital overseas. The external debt burden remained a serious constraint in the South African economy and was regarded as a significant factor influencing political change.

The 1989 Third Interim Agreement with major creditor banks [YUN 1989, p. 138] had eased the situation, but the quantities of new trade credit being extended to South Africa were limited. The Agreement came into force on 1 July 1990, with South Africa committed to repaying a further 20.5 per cent of the outstanding capital. Under the Agreement, creditors continued to receive the slightly higher interest rate. South Africa proposed that any creditor opting to convert debt into a 10-year loan would be paid until the end of 1993 (the end of the Agreement) at the same rate as for holders of frozen debt. Some $6 billion would still be frozen at 31 December 1993 and would require further rescheduling. Withdrawal of transnational corporations (TNCs) continued in 1990, although the number withdrawing decreased sharply. As of mid-1990, 209 TNCs based in the United Kingdom, 127 based in the United States and 106 based in the Federal Republic of Germany retained equity interests in South Africa. Disinvestment had been most pronounced in the case of United States-based corporations.

In October, the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 44/27 E [YUN 1989, p. 139], reported [A/45/539] on financial links of Governments and private financial institutions with South Africa. The report concluded that South Africa's ability to engage in international trade had not been seriously inhibited by trade credit restrictions, since its main trading partners in Europe and Japan had continued credit or trade had been facilitated by other means, such as open accounts. Also, the structure of the South African economy was such as to make it relatively impervious to trade credit restrictions, since the export sector was highly corporatized and the small number of firms involved had often acquired banking connections abroad or were themselves subsidiaries of international corporations. An international embargo on credits for trade with South Africa, while not preventing trade, would add to South Africa's economic difficulties, making trade credit finance more expensive and thus leading to higher, less competitive export prices, and cash transactions would involve building up reserves of foreign exchange, thus limiting necessary imports.

On the question of whether the rescheduling agreements of international banks had reduced pressure for meaningful political reform, the report said opinion varied, but the recent progress in political dialogue appeared to confirm the analysis that the pressure of debt repayment in the absence of new capital inflow had become progressively more onerous year by year.

Transnational corporations

Among the documents considered at the April 1990 session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations [E/1990/26] was the report and recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the second public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia [A/44/576-S/20867], and a report by the Secretary-General [E/c. 10/1990/8] concerning measures relating to trade, finance, investment and responsibilities of home countries with respect to technology transfers to South Africa.

In July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1990/70, condemned the United Kingdom decision to lift unilaterally the ban of the Commission of the European Communities on new investments in South Africa and Hungary's reprehensible decision to initiate commercial, economic and political links with the apartheid regime, calling on both Governments to rescind the decisions involved. All TNCs were urged to stop immediately any operations in South Africa and all forms of trade and economic links with the racist minority regime.

Sanctions and boycotts

Sanctions restricting exports to South Africa were less successful than those restricting imports from that country, according to the Special Committee. The five major trading partners of South Africa, each with a total trade of more than $3 billion in 1989, were, in order of magnitude, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Italy, the United States and the United Kingdom. Italy had emerged as the leading customer of South African goods, with an import growth of 27.5 per cent over the previous year, predominantly gold, importing at least one third of all South African gold exports. African countries having or about to establish trade and transport links with South Africa were Côte d'Ivoire, Madagascar, Morocco and Zaire. Commercial relations with Eastern Europe were growing, including those with Hungary, Poland and the USSR. Shipping companies based in Hong Kong, Greece and the United Kingdom had been oil carriers to South Africa, while Amsterdam, Netherlands, was reportedly the major channel for delivery of petroleum products.

It was concluded that without sanctions South Africa's economy would be 20 to 35 per cent more than it was in 1990. The oil embargo alone had cost the South African economy an estimated $22.1 billion in 1979-1988. When that was added to the cost of evading the arms embargo and the virtual exclusion since 1985 from international loans, the total cost of economic sanctions could be estimated at $27 billion. Sanctions were explicitly cited as the crucial factor leading to the legalization of the banned political opposition and the freeing of Nelson Mandela.

In November, the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 44/27 D [YUN 1989, p. 140], submitted a report [A/45/670] on measures to monitor sanctions against South Africa undertaken by the United Nations system, Governments and NGOs. He concluded that monitoring of the implementation of sanctions by Governments was, overall, limited. Intelligence data were not readily available. However, NGOs were generally a useful source of information about sanctions violations, being in many cases the prime source of such information. A rather weak co-ordination in the application of sanctions and the different approaches to their implementation by Governments had created a number of loopholes used to evade sanctions and reduce their effect. As for UN system monitoring, despite shortcomings, the combined initiatives provided an important response mechanism to the objective of monitoring. However, since the great majority of States had not replied to the General Assembly request for information on monitoring, it was not possible to provide a global picture. The monitoring process would be enhanced if States adopted enforcement mechanisms. There was, moreover, a need for periodic reports on progress made in the implementation of sanctions.

Oil embargo

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/27 H [YUN 1989, p. 137], the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa, established in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 137], submitted in November 1990 its fourth report to the General Assembly [A/45/43], expressing the belief that the positive developments that had taken place in South Africa since its last report could not have been achieved without international pressure, including the oil embargo. The Group earlier submitted, in June 1990, an addendum to its third report [A/44/44/Add.1] on the status of its inquiry into monitoring calls of ships with petroleum-bearing capabilities at South African ports. Continuing its work on the same lines as previous years, the Group considered information received on alleged violations. It also considered those port calls which had come to its attention since its 1989 survey and adopted a draft model law regarding imposition of the oil embargo, which it annexed to its report.

The Group remained of the view that the most effective way of enforcing the oil embargo was still the Security Council's option of invoking the mandatory provisions of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. Until such time as profound and irreversible change had been effected in South Africa, and pending Security Council mandatory action, the General Assembly should call on Member States to adhere strictly to the oil embargo; commend the draft model law to States; request all States to co-operate fully with the Intergovernmental Group, particularly in its investigation of alleged violations of the oil embargo or of port calls of ships capable of carrying oil or petroleum products; and call on all Governments to discourage ships capable of carrying oil or petroleum products from engaging in activities giving rise to violations of the embargo.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 F.

Oil embargo against South Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa, as well as its interim report, which was adopted unanimously on 12 June 1990,

Recalling its resolution 44/244 of 17 September 1990, in which it reaffirmed the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, which was adopted by consensus on 14 December 1989 by the General Assembly at its sixteenth special session,

Recalling also its resolutions on the oil embargo against South Africa, in particular resolution 44/27 H of 22 November 1989,

Recognizing the importance of the oil embargo and other existing measures imposed by the international community on the apartheid regime towards the elimination of apartheid through negotiations, as well as the importance of maintaining these measures until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes, bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration,

Noting that, while oil-exporting States have committed themselves to an oil embargo against South Africa, very few major shipping States have done so,

Concerned that the oil embargo against South Africa is still being violated and that South Africa, because of loopholes in the embargo, such as lack of effective legislation, has been able to acquire oil and petroleum products,

Convinced that an effective oil embargo against South Africa would contribute to the efforts of the international community to bring about a negotiated settlement and the establishment of a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group to Monitor the Supply and Shipping of Oil and Petroleum Products to South Africa and endorses its recommendations;

2. Commends the proposed model law for the effective enforcement of the oil embargo against South Africa annexed to the annual report of the Intergovernmental Group to States for their attention, including consideration of the adoption of the general principles of the draft within the context and framework of their own legal practices;

3. Urges the Security Council to take action under appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations to ensure an effective embargo on the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa in order to effect a speedy and peaceful eradication of apartheid;

4. Requests all States, pending such decisions, to adopt effective measures and/or legislation to broaden the scope of the oil embargo in order to ensure the complete cessation of the supply and shipping of oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly, and in particular:

(a) To apply strictly the "end users" clause and other conditions concerning restriction on destination to ensure compliance with the embargo;

(b) To compel the companies originally selling or purchasing oil or petroleum products, as appropriate to each nation, to desist from selling, reselling or otherwise transferring oil and petroleum products to South Africa, whether directly or indirectly;

(c) To establish strict control over the supply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by intermediaries, oil companies and traders by placing responsibility for the fulfilment of the contract on the first buyer or seller of oil and petroleum products who would, therefore, be liable for the actions of these parties;

(d) To prevent access by South Africa to other sources of energy, including the supply of raw materials, technical know-how, financial assistance and transport;

(e) To prohibit all assistance to apartheid South Africa, including the provision of finance, technology, equipment or personnel for the prospecting, development or production of hydrocarbon resources, the construction or operation of oil-from-coal or oil-from-gas plants or the development and operation of plants producing fuel substitutes and additives such as ethanol and methanol;

(f) To prevent South African corporations from maintaining or expanding their holdings in oil companies or properties outside South Africa;

(g) To terminate the transport of oil and petroleum products to South Africa by ships flying their flags, or by ships that are ultimately owned, managed or chartered by their nationals or by companies within their jurisdiction;

(h) To develop a system for registration of ships, registered or owned by their nationals, that have unloaded oil or petroleum products in South Africa in contravention of embargoes imposed, and to discourage such ships from calling at South African ports;

(i) To impose penal action against companies and individuals that have been involved in violating the oil embargo, and to publicize cases of successful prosecutions in conformity with their national laws;

(j) To gather, exchange and disseminate information regarding violations of the oil embargo, including ways and means to prevent such violations, and to take concerted measures against violators;

(k) To discourage ships capable of carrying oil or petroleum products in their national registries or owned or managed by companies or individuals within their jurisdiction from engaging in activities that give rise to violation of the oil embargo against South Africa, taking into account legislative and other measures already adopted;

5. Authorizes the Intergovernmental Group to take action to promote public awareness of the oil embargo against South Africa, including, when necessary, sending missions and participating in relevant conferences and meetings;

6. Requests the Intergovernmental Group to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Requests all States to extend their co-operation to the Intergovernmental Group in the implementation of the present resolution, including submission of proposals for strengthening the mechanism to monitor the supply and shipment of oil and petroleum products to South Africa;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Intergovernmental Group with all necessary assistance for the implementation of the present resolution.

Sports and cultural embargo

The Special Committee against Apartheid released in June 1990 the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa containing information on such contacts during 1989. Some 3,515 sports persons from 57 different countries were mentioned, compared with 3,404 on the 1989 Register. The increase was due to a greater number of athletes competing in minor sports in South Africa, often for lucrative pay. Of those on the 1990 Register, 498 had participated in sports activities in South Africa. The highest numbers of those on the Register came from the United States (1,029) and the United Kingdom (672).

During 1989, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) had announced that any athlete competing in South Africa would be disqualified from taking part in the Olympic Games. In January, a meeting was held between advisers of IOC and the South African National Olympic Committee. IOC said it could not consider reviewing South Africa's position until there were genuine non-racial sports federations in that country, covering all Olympic disciplines. A consultative meeting of the IOC Commission on Apartheid and Olympism met on 19 and 20 February. The Commission proposed to IOC that it study the possibility of providing technical assistance to the less-favoured South African sports persons to help prepare them to address sports issues they might face in the future.

The Fourth International Conference against Apartheid in Sports met in Stockholm (4-6 September 1990), organized by the Special Committee in co-operation with the Swedish Sports Federation, the Swedish National Olympic Committee, the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee and the International Campaign against Apartheid in Sports, with 190 participants from more than 40 countries attending. The Conference focused on assistance for the disadvantaged section of South African sport and on action to counter apartheid propaganda: assessment of the isolation campaign and a future strategy.

The International Cricket Conference and the International Motorcycle Federation banned sports contacts with South Africa. At the same time, however, a British rebel cricket tour took place in 1990, but was interrupted by protests and a proposed follow-up tour was cancelled.

The Commission against Apartheid in Sports, in a report on its 1990 session (New York, 27 August) [A/45/45], said the 1985 International Convention against Apartheid in Sports [GA res. 40/64 G], which entered into force on 4 April 1988, had been ratified or acceded to by 47 States and signed by 32. The Commission concluded that the sports boycott and other sanctions must be maintained until profound and irreversible changes took place in South Africa, as should the Register of Sports Contacts. It appealed for material support and technical assistance to non-racial South African sports organizations and athletes sponsored by them and for support for the efforts of IOC to strengthen the structural, administrative and other organizational aspects of black sports organizations in South Africa. The Commission recommended that the General Assembly urge all States which had signed the Convention but not ratified it to do so and all States which had not signed it to accede to it, while urging States, organizations and individuals to maintain the sports boycott.

With respect to the cultural boycott, the Special Committee said it remained an essential component of the concerted international action aimed at isolating the apartheid regime. The long tradition of cultural resistance to apartheid had burgeoned in virtually every artistic field to become one of the most dynamic forms of creative expression in South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 G.

Support for the work of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the boycott of apartheid in sports and in particular resolution 32/105 M of 14 December 1977 by which it adopted the International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports, resolution 40/64 G of 10 December 1985, the annex to which contains the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports, and resolution 44/27 L of 22 November 1989,

Having considered the report of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports and the relevant sections of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Reiterating that the sports boycott of South Africa should be maintained until profound and irreversible changes aimed at the total eradication of apartheid take place in that country,

1. Takes note of the report of the Commission against Apartheid in Sports;

2. Calls upon the States that have signed the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports to ratify it and also calls upon other States to accede to it as soon as possible;

3. Commends those Governments, organizations and individual sportsmen and sportswomen who have taken action in accordance with the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa with a view to achieving the total isolation of apartheid in sports;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue issuing the Register of Sports Contacts with South Africa;

5. Calls upon those international sports organizations and federations which have not yet expelled South Africa or suspended its membership to do so without further delay;

6. Calls upon all Governments and sports organizations to maintain the sports boycott of South Africa until profound and irreversible changes take place in that country;

7. Urges Governments and the international sporting community to assist the non-racial sports movement in South Africa to redress the structural inequalities created and sustained by the apartheid State;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Commission against Apartheid in Sports with all needed assistance.

The Assembly in resolution 45/176 B appealed to all Governments, organizations and individuals to refrain from any sports relations with South Africa and not entertain any cultural or academic links unless any particular activity in the cultural and academic fields had the intent and effect of opposing apartheid in line with UN policy, and to assist anti-apartheid forces and the disadvantaged sections of South African society.

Other international action

In June, at its twenty-seventh session, the International Labour Conference reiterated its appeal to Governments to bring about an embargo on South African coal, effective financial sanctions, appropriate legislation to prevent the sale and transportation of oil to South Africa and the effective severance of air links. In that regard, the Conference called for special target campaigns, with the fullest participation by all International Labour Organisation (ILO) members. In addition, the Committee on Discrimination reviewed, at the May/June 1990 session of the ILO Governing Body, the most recent information supplied by Governments and employers' and workers' organizations regarding their action against apartheid.

In May, the Commonwealth Committee of Foreign Ministers on Southern Africa adopted the Abuja Commitment, welcoming the developments that had taken place in South Africa but reiterating that sanctions should remain until there was clear evidence of irreversible change. The Committee agreed to convey its views to other Governments, particularly in the European Community (EC) and the Group of Seven industrialized nations, as well as in Eastern Europe, urging them not to reduce their pressure on South Africa before changes in substance had occurred.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Nordic countries (Norway, 11-12 September) pledged to maintain pressure on the South African Government, including economic sanctions, until there was clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes in South Africa. At their summit (Dublin, Ireland, 25-26 June), the EC leaders agreed to maintain sanctions despite an effort by the United Kingdom to have them relaxed. They agreed also to consider a gradual relaxation of the punitive measures when there was clear evidence that the process of change initiated continued.

A gradual change of policy occurred in some EC States. The United Kingdom, in particular, stated in February that the changes in South Africa vindicated a policy of contact rather than isolation. It did not see that cultural, scientific or academic boycotts made sense or contributed to the weakening of apartheid. In future, it would not discourage artists, scientists or academics from going to South Africa or from joining in meetings with South Africans. The British Foreign Secretary also announced the unilateral decision of the Government to end voluntary restraint on new investment in effect since 1986.

The ANC leader, Mr. Mandela, visited several countries and the United Nations advocating, among other things, that pressure should be maintained on South Africa. Anti-apartheid movements and NGOs also campaigned world wide against the relaxation of sanctions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 B.

Concerted and effective measures aimed at eradicating apartheid

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by consensus on 14 December 1989 at its sixteenth special session, and its resolution 44/244 of 17 September 1990,

Recalling also its resolution 44/27 K of 22 November 1989 and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and of the reports of the Secretary-General on international financial pressure on the apartheid economy of South Africa and measures to monitor sanctions undertaken by the United Nations system, Governments and non-governmental agencies,

Gravely concerned that, in spite of recent positive developments in South Africa, the system of apartheid and most of its main pillars, namely, the Land Acts, the Group Areas Act, the Population Registration Act, the Bantu Education Act and the acts establishing the tricameral Parliament and the bantustan system, still remain intact,

Convinced that sanctions and other restrictive measures have had a significant impact on recent developments in South Africa and remain a most effective and necessary instrument of pressure towards the peaceful resolution of the conflict in that country,

Strongly convinced that the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations remains the most appropriate and effective means to bring about a peaceful end to apartheid,

Noting that the States Members of the United Nations and the members of the international community have generally adhered to the programme of action contained in the Declaration and expressing its concern over any departures that have occurred from the international consensus reflected in the Declaration,

Gravely concerned that some Member States and transnational corporations have continued economic relations with South Africa, while others continue to undermine the sanctions imposed by other States, by establishing and/or increasing their trade with that country, as borne out in the report of the Special Committee,

Noting with concern that sanctions and other measures adopted by the General Assembly, as well as measures introduced unilaterally by a number of States, lack co-ordination, monitoring and enforcement mechanisms,

Considering that measures taken by States individually or collectively, while commendable, vary in coverage and degree of monitoring and enforcement, and are not always addressed to those areas of the South African economy which are responsive to international pressures,

Noting with concern the recent talks between the International Monetary Fund and representatives of the South African regime and any consideration by the Fund of loans to South Africa,

Commending those States which have not relaxed their existing measures and maintained their commitment to the international consensus expressed in the programme of action contained in the Declaration, whereby Member States of the United Nations decided that the international community should not relax existing measures,

1. Reaffirms that apartheid is a crime against the conscience and dignity of humankind and a threat to international peace and security, and that it is a primary responsibility of the United Nations to assist in efforts to eliminate it without further delay;

2. Calls upon all States, especially those States which have increased or initiated trade, financial and other links with South Africa, in particular the leading trading partners of South Africa, as indicated in the annual report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, to adhere fully to the programme of action contained in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa;

3. Calls upon all States to maintain existing measures aimed at applying pressure on apartheid South Africa, particularly in the following areas:

(a) Supply of all products, in particular computer and communications equipment, technologies, skills and services, including military intelligence, that can be used for the military and nuclear industry of South Africa;

(b) Import of coal, gold and other minerals and agricultural products from South Africa;

(c) Effective withdrawal of transnational corporations, banks and financial institutions from South Africa by ceasing equity investment and by cutting off non-equity links, particularly those involving transfer of high technology and know-how;

(d) Provision of new credits and loans;

(e) Double taxation agreements with South Africa and any form of tax relief in respect of income from investments in that country;

(f) Landing and port rights to South Africa, air and sea carriers and direct air, sea and other transport links with South Africa;

4. Appeals to all Governments, organizations and individuals to refrain from any sports relations with South Africa and not entertain any cultural or academic links unless any particular activity in the cultural and academic fields has the intent and effect of opposing apartheid in line with United Nations policy on this matter, and to give appropriate assistance in these fields to the anti-apartheid forces and to the disadvantaged sections of South African society;

5. Urges Governments and private financial institutions, as well as the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, not to extend loans and credits to South Africa, whether to the public or private sector, until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes in South Africa, bearing in mind the objectives of the Declaration;

6. Urges all States to close existing loopholes in their existing measures, monitor strictly their implementation and adopt and apply, when necessary, legislation providing for penalties on individuals and enterprises violating those measures;

7. Requests the Special Committee to continue to monitor the implementation of existing measures aimed at the eradication of apartheid, and to report thereon to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Military and nuclear collaboration

The Special Committee against Apartheid continued to monitor the implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa. It reported that for the first time in many years South Africa was reducing its budget allocation for defence expenditures. While in 1989 defence expenditures accounted for 15.4 per cent of the total budget, or 4.2 per cent of gross national product, in 1990 they represented 14 per cent and 3.7 per cent respectively, resulting in an overall 15 per cent reduction in military expenditures in 1990. Nevertheless, the defence budget remained larger than the allocation for social welfare.

While the regime claimed it was no longer dependent on foreign markets for military hardware and technology, reports continued regarding the extent of military collaboration with other countries and companies, including those of Chile, the Federal Republic of Germany, Iraq, Israel (see below), the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Special Committee was informed that, owing to the efforts of the new Government of Chile, South Africa was unable to participate in the International Aeronautic Air Fair 1990. The Special Committee also reported that Chile had informed it that contracts with South Africa would not be renewed when they expired at the beginning of 1991. The Federal Republic of Germany had instituted formal proceedings against individuals from firms involved in the submarine blueprints affair breaking the arms embargo and Iraq denied relations of any kind with South Africa. It was reported that the United States and the United Kingdom were investigating the activities of certain companies alleged to be involved in sanctions-busting, such as International Signal and Control and the Ferranti Corporation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 C.

Military collaboration with South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by consensus on 14 December 1989 at its sixteenth special session, and its resolution 44/244 of 17 September 1990,

Recalling its resolutions and those of the Security Council on the arms embargo, as well as other resolutions on collaboration with South Africa,

Taking note of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the report of the Security Council Committee established by Council resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 concerning the question of South Africa on its activities during the period 1980-1989,

Noting with grave concern that the mandatory sanctions imposed by the Security Council in its resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977 lack an effective monitoring and enforcement mechanism,

Noting with appreciation the resolve and coerciveness of the Security Council in its handling of questions relating to the preservation of international peace and security,

Reiterating that the full implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa is an essential element of international action against apartheid,

Expressing serious concern at the increasing number of violations of the mandatory arms embargo, particularly by those countries which surreptitiously continue to trade in arms with South Africa and allow South Africa to participate in international arms exhibitions,

Gravely concerned at the practice carried out by certain oil-producing States whereby oil is exchanged for South African arms,

Noting concern that South Africa's external military relations, especially in the area of military technology and, in particular, in the production and testing of nuclear missiles, continue unabated,

1. Strongly deplores the actions of those States which, directly or indirectly, continue to violate the arms embargo and collaborate with South Africa in the military, nuclear, intelligence and technology fields, and calls upon those States to terminate forthwith such hostile acts and honour their obligations under Security Council resolution 421(1977);

2. Urges all States to adopt strict legislation relating to the implementation of the arms embargo and prohibit the supply to South Africa of all products, in particular computers and communications equipment, technologies, skills and services, including military intelligence, that can be used for the military and nuclear industry of that country;

3. Urges the Security Council to consider immediate steps to ensure the scrupulous and full implementation and the effective monitoring of the arms embargo imposed by Council resolutions 418(1977) and 558(1984) of 13 December 1984, to consider strengthening the monitoring and the reporting of violations of the arms embargo and to provide information on a regular basis to the Secretary-General for general distribution to Member States;

4. Also urges the Security Council to implement the recommendations of the report of the Committee established under Council resolution 421(1977) concerning appropriate measures against those States violating the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

5. Request the Special Committee against Apartheid to keep the matter under constant review and to report thereon to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Israel-South Africa relations

The Special Committee against Apartheid, in the second part of its report (A/45/2 Add.1) responding to General Assembly resolution 44/27 F [YUN 1989, p. 144], examined recent developments concerning relations between Israel and South Africa. It concluded that despite repeated Israeli statements that its relations with South Africa had been curtailed, reports still pointed to on going collaboration, especially in the military and nuclear fields. The Special Committee was deeply concerned that Israel had not yet revealed its existing secret agreements and arrangements with South Africa for the supply of weapons and military technology and that all such arrangements had not been abrogated. The provision of Israeli arms and arms technology, especially the persistent reports about Israeli collaboration with South Africa in developing the latter's missile technology, with its nuclear implications, constituted a very grave danger to international peace and security and, in particular, jeopardized the security of African States. The Special Committee was also concerned that trade relations were increasing between the two countries, contrary to Israeli claims. It recommended that the General Assembly call on Israel to cease its continuing collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields, and authorize the Special Committee to continue monitoring relations between Israel and South Africa and to report as appropriate.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 44/113 B [YUN 1989, p. 58], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/57] & Corr.1] in October on reports that collaboration between Israel and South Africa had resulted in South Africa's development of a nuclear-tipped missile. The report was prepared with the assistance of a panel of three experts.

The Secretary-General said that the preparation of the report coincided with critical and potentially far-reaching developments within South Africa with the Government, for the first time, providing hope for real change. Those developments had significantly affected previous motivations of South Africa's reliance on force and military might to preserve the status quo. South Africa might no longer wish to pursue vigorously its programmes of nuclear-weapons capability or ballistic missiles and instead might wish to gear its efforts towards the peaceful application of nuclear energy. In that context, South Africa's long-standing co-operation with Israel, particularly in the military field, might not have the same significance and relevance as it had in the past. A tangible proof of South Africa's determination to abandon the policy of military intimidation against neighbouring States would be expeditious accession to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons [GA res. 2373(XXII)] and the opening of all its nuclear facilities to international inspection. Recent statements in that regard were most encouraging, but until implemented fully the concerns would not be completely put to rest. (See PART ONE, Chapter II, for more details.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 D.

Relations between South Africa and Israel

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the relations between South Africa and Israel and, in particular, its resolution 44/27 F of 22 November 1989,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid on recent developments concerning relations between South Africa and Israel, and the report of the Secretary-General on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability,

Noting with concern that the military relations between South Africa and Israel, especially in the area of military technology and in particular the collaboration in the recent production and testing of nuclear missiles, continue unabated,

1. Condemns the collaboration of Israel with the South African regime in the military and nuclear fields;

2. Reiterates its demand that Israel desist from and terminate forthwith all forms of collaboration with South Africa, particularly in the military and nuclear fields;

3. Urges the Security Council to take appropriate measures against Israel for its violation of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

4. Requests the Special Committee against Apartheid to continue to monitor the relations between South Africa and Israel and keep them under constant review and report to the General Assembly and the Security Council as appropriate.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Namibia, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Fiji, Grenada, Honduras, Japan, Kenya, Malawi, Malta, Myanmar, Nepal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Uruguay.

In resolution 45/56 A, the Assembly condemned South Africa's continued pursuit of a nuclear capability and all forms of nuclear collaboration; called on States, corporations, institutions and individuals to desist from further collaboration with the racist regime; and appealed to those States and organizations with the ability to do so to monitor South Africa's research on and development and production of nuclear weapons and to publicize any information in that regard.

In resolution 45/56 B, the Assembly welcomed the report on South Africa's nuclear-tipped ballistic missile capability and called on all States, corporations, institutions and individuals to terminate all forms of military and nuclear collaboration with the racist regime.

Aid programmes

United Nations aid to victims of apartheid was provided through national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and directly to individuals for education and training. Legal assistance, relief and education grants were given by the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory South African legislation. The United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa offered additional educational assistance.

UN Trust Fund for South Africa

In September 1990 [A/45/550], the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa had made four grants totalling $1,850,000 during the preceding 12 months and had extended two grants of $1,350,000. It had received contributions totalling $3,376,876. Since its inception in 1965 [GA res. 2054 B (XX)], the Fund's total income was $40,617,461, with grants awarded for legal assistance, relief and education of refugee victims of South Africa and Namibia amounting to $39,121,560. Pledges of $280,617 were outstanding.

The Committee of Trustees of the Fund continued to encourage direct contributions to voluntary organizations providing assistance to victims of apartheid. While noting the positive measures taken by the South African Government to create a climate conducive to negotiation, the Committee was concerned that the pillars of apartheid remained in place and continued to create havoc in the lives of the black majority. Of equal concern was the increasing application of criminal proceedings to cases that were clearly of a political nature, while many political trials were still in progress and political imprisonment continued. At the same time, the Committee welcomed Nelson Mandela's release and that of some other political prisoners, the unbanning of 36 political organizations, including ANC and PAC, the repeal of certain emergency regulations and the non-renewal of the country-wide state of emergency, with the exception of Natal province.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/176 H.

United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, in particular resolution 44/27 J of 22 November 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, to which is annexed the report of the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund,

Taking note of resolution 44/244 adopted by consensus by the General Assembly on 17 September 1990, and in particular of its paragraph 8 relating to the reintegration of released political prisoners into the South African society,

Welcoming the release of Nelson Mandela and some other political prisoners; the suspension of executions and the unbanning of a number of political organizations, including the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, and the lifting of the nation-wide state of emergency and the repeal of certain emergency regulations,

Remaining seriously concerned by the continued existence of basic laws sustaining the apartheid system and other discriminatory and repressive laws, rules and regulations in South Africa,

Concerned by the large number of political trials in 1990 and the continued application of criminal proceedings to cases that are clearly of a political nature,

Reaffirming that continued humanitarian and legal assistance by the international community is necessary to alleviate the plight of those persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa and to facilitate the reintegration of released political prisoners,

Strongly convinced that continued contributions to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies concerned are necessary to enable them to meet the extensive needs for humanitarian, legal and relief assistance in this crucial period,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa;

2. Decides, in view of the independence of Namibia, to delete paragraph (e) of the terms of reference of the Trust Fund;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have contributed to the Trust Fund and to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering humanitarian and legal assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa;

4. Appeals for generous contributions to the Trust Fund;

5. Also appeals for direct contributions to the voluntary agencies engaged in rendering assistance to the victims of apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa;

6. Commends the Secretary-General and the Committee of Trustees of the Trust Fund for their persistent efforts to promote humanitarian and legal assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, as well as assistance to their families and to refugees from South Africa.

UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

Scholarships awarded under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa totalled 1,200 in 1989/90, according to the Secretary-General's September report [A/45/553]. The Programme was administered by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Advisory Committee on the Programme and was financed from a Trust Fund made up of voluntary contributions from States, organizations and individuals. For the 1989/90 period, there were 361 scholarship holders from Namibia and 839 from South Africa. Assistance to Namibian students was provided for a transitional period, of one year following Namibia's independence.

For the period 1 September 1989 to 31 August 1990, a total of $3,737,895 was received from 22 countries. In addition, pledges for 1990 amounted to $1,103,149, bringing contributions and pledges for 1990 to $4,841,044, an increase from $4,699,374 in the previous period.

In view of the increasing interest of tens of thousands of South African students for educational and training opportunities abroad, as well as the growing cost of such education and training, the Secretary-General appealed to all States, institutions, organizations and individuals to offer the Programme continued generous financial and other support. It was generally recognized that a large trained cadre of black South Africans would play a critical role in facilitating a smooth transition to a post-apartheid society.

In accordance with its 1989 decision [YUN 1989, p. [58], the Advisory Committee re-evaluated the Programme, further developing its co-operation with scholarship agencies, educational institutions, foundations and government agencies, and starting some new co-sponsored programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/19.

United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, in particular resolution 44/86 of 11 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing an account of the work of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the administration of the Programme for the period from 1 September 1989 to 31 August 1990,

Noting with satisfaction that the recommendations of the evaluation of the Programme undertaken in 1989 as endorsed by the Advisory Committee are being implemented,

Recognizing the valuable assistance rendered by the Programme to the peoples of South Africa and Namibia,

Also noting with satisfaction that educational and technical assistance for southern Africa has become a growing concern of the international community,

Fully recognizing the need to provide continuing educational opportunities and counselling abroad to a greater number of students from South Africa and, during a transitional period, to students from Namibia, in a wide variety of professional, cultural and linguistic disciplines, as well as opportunities for vocational and technical training and for advanced studies at graduate and postgraduate levels in priority fields of study,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and steady expansion of the Programme is essential in order to meet the ever-increasing demand for educational and training assistance to students from South Africa and, during a transitional period, to students from Namibia,

1. Endorses the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Commends the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa for their continuing efforts to develop the Programme and further to promote generous contributions to the Programme and to enhance co-operation with governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies involved in educational and technical assistance to southern Africa;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all those that have supported the Programme by providing contributions, scholarships or places in their educational institutions;

4. Appeals to all States, institutions, organizations and individuals to offer greater financial and other support to the Programme in order to secure its continuation and steady expansion.

National liberation movements

In June 1990, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) decided [E/ 1990/29 (dec. 90/28) that technical co-operation provided by UNDP to national liberation movements during the remainder of the fourth programming cycle (1987- 1991) should continue to be guided by its 1987 decision (YUN 1987, p. 159] It requested the Administrator to continue the projects benefiting ANC and PAC members, and to report on trends, developments and the effectiveness of that assistance, as well as relevant issues pertaining to management, including proposals for the establishment of a fifth cycle indicative planning figure.

The Council decided [dec. 90/34] that that figure should be established at $12 million.

Information programmes

In 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 156], the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to expand UN anti-apartheid broadcasts to South Africa, as well as the production of audio-visual material, and to provide technical and financial assistance to radio stations of those States broadcasting or willing to broadcast to South Africa. In March 1990, he submitted a report [A/45/162] containing a study of existing and potential interest in broadcasting UN anti-apartheid radio programmes and the extent to which audiences in selected urban centres in South Africa listened to them. It appeared that all UN radio programmes in English that were targeted to South Africa had an audience ranging from 0.1 per cent of blacks to 2 per cent of whites. Three programmes had audiences in other languages. Only four countries-Angola, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe-had expressed total readiness to transmit UN anti-apartheid radio programmes to South Africa. The Secretary-General recommended, among other things, that: programmes in English, Zulu and Setswana be continued; Radio Lesotho be persuaded to resume the use of programmes in Sesotho; the United Nations explore why only one programme in Xhosa had an audience; an attempt be made to persuade major broadcasting organizations heard in South Africa to use at least the English programmes; and the Department of Public Information implement the recommendations regarding the dissemination of information against apartheid and how to make it more effective.

Angola

In 1990, the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola continued, in accordance with the 1988 agreement [YUN 1988, p. 159] involving Angola, Cuba and South Africa and between Cuba and Angola. Cuba said [S/21113] that by 24 January 1990 Cuba had withdrawn over half its forces in Angola, from which 31,179 combatants had returned. By 1 April 1990, 33,000 troops were scheduled to have been withdrawn, testifying to the seriousness and rigour with which Cuba had been complying with its commitments. However, on 21 January in Angola four Cuban soldiers were killed and five wounded in an attack by forces of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). As a result, the Governments of Angola and Cuba had decided to suspend temporarily the withdrawal of Cuban military personnel until such time as Cuba received a satisfactory explanation of the incident and was convinced that continuing reduction of its forces would not be misused by terrorist bands, armed and advised by the United States, sabotaging the agreements so laboriously arrived at between Angola, Cuba and South Africa.

On 20 February, Angola and Cuba, in a joint declaration [S/21158], announced the resumption, as of 25 February, of the withdrawal of Cuban troops, the original schedule of withdrawal having been delayed 30 days following the UNITA action against Cuban troops. The joint declaration said that the decision on the resumed withdrawal took account that the United States would adopt appropriate measures to prevent the repetition of such acts. It also welcomed with seriousness and confidence the efforts of the President of Côte d'Ivoire, before whom UNITA pledged not to attack or to carry out any bombings against Cuban troops.

In April [S/21246 & Add.1], the Secretary-General reported on developments relating to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM), established in 1988 [SC res. 626(1988)] to verify the re-deployment northwards and the total withdrawal of Cuban troops from the territory of Angola.

He said that the Mission was composed of 60 military observers, 6 each from 10 countries, with 20 international and 15 local civilian staff. After the suspension of Cuban withdrawals in January, he had undertaken a number of initiatives with the parties directly concerned, and with others in a position to influence events, in order to obtain the earliest possible resumption of withdrawal. While the reduction target of 33,000 troops by 1 April 1990 had not been achieved, the Cuban authorities in Angola stated that the scheduled net reduction of 38,000 would be achieved by the end of the next phase of the withdrawal agreement, i.e., 30 September 1990. UNAVEM later confirmed the scheduled reduction of 33,000 Cuban troops by 25 April, with net departures at 33,261 since withdrawals began 10 January 1989.

In addition to withdrawal of military personnel, armoured vehicles, guns, artillery pieces, other military vehicles, engineering equipment, aircraft including helicopters, ammunition and other war-like stores belonging to the Cuban forces in Angola had been withdrawn. Since 9 November 1989, UNAVEM had received no reports of the presence or suspected presence of Cuban troops at any location south of the adjusted 13th parallel.

In October [S/21860], the Secretary-General said UNAVEM observer strength was 59, together with 19 international and 15 local civilian staff. Net departure of Cuban military personnel between 1 April and 30 September 1990 was 6,262, giving a total net withdrawal since commencement of 38,643, thus achieving the agreed schedule of 38,000 troops (or 76 per cent of the 50,000-strong Cuban force) by 1 October 1990.

Financing of UNAVEM

In November, the Secretary-General, reporting [A/45/718] on the financing of UNAVEM, noted that in 1989 the General Assembly had appropriated $9,193,000 gross ($8,962,000 net) for UNAVEM's operation from 3 January 1989 to 2 January 1990 [GA res. 43/231] and a further $5,826,400 gross ($5,616,400 net) for 33 January 1990 to 2 January 1991 [GA res. 44/190]. Out of approved assessments totalling $14,713,910, contributions totalling $11,333,895 had been received by 31 October 1990, with unpaid assessments amounting to $3,380,015. As at 31 October, revised expenditure was $8,193,000 gross ($8,012,500 net) for the period ending in January 1990, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $1,000,000 gross ($949,500 net). Estimated costs from 3 January to 2 August 1991 were $4,613,800 gross ($4,455,800 net). Based on the recorded and projected expenditures for the period from UNAVEM's inception to 2 January 1991, it was currently estimated that there would be a cash deficit of $2,168,000 unless outstanding contributions were received by 2 January 1991.

In December, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended reductions of $231,900 to the Secretary-General's estimate of $4,613,800 gross for the seven-month period 3 January to 2 August 1991, and that the Assembly approve an estimate of $4,381,900 gross for UNAVEM's last phase [A/45/827].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/246.

Financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 626(1988) of 20 December 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Angola Verification Mission for a period of thirty-one months,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Verification Mission are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Verification Mission, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations.

Noting with appreciation that voluntary Contributions have been made to the Verification Mission by a Government,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Verification Mission with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolution of the Security Council,

1. Concurs with the observations, recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Angola Verification Mission in full and on time;

3. Decides, taking into account the outstanding assessed contributions due to the Special Account for the United Nations Angola Verification Mission, to defer any action on the estimated unencumbered balance of the appropriations as may be called for until its forty-sixth session;

4. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of 4,381,900 United States dollars for the operation of the Verification Mission for the period from 3 January to 2 August 1991;

5. Decides further, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 4,381,900 dollars for the above-mentioned period among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 44/192 B of 21 December 1989 and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

6. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 158,000 dollars approved for the period from 3 January to 2 August 1991, inclusive;

7. Approves the request of the Secretary-General that he proceed with the disposition of the assets of the Verification Mission as proposed in paragraph 9 of his report and paragraph 12 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

8. Decides that Liechtenstein shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Verification Mission shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

9. Decides also that Namibia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Verification Mission shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the Verification Mission until 2 January 1991 of the Member States referred to in paragraphs 8 and 9 above shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments authorized in paragraph 5 above;

11. Invites voluntary contributions to the Verification Mission in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Verification Mission is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 45/246

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/882) without vote, 18 December (meeting 49); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/45/L.12); agenda item 131.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 5th Committee 42,49; plenary 72.

Liberia

On 9 August, Nigeria reported [S/21485] to the Secretary-General on the efforts of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to resolve the conflict in Liberia. Its Standing Mediation Committee on the conflict, in a statement issued at the end of its first session (Freetown, Sierra Leone, 5-20 July 1990), said that at the meeting the Government side, the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL), other political parties and interest groups made efforts to restore the country to normalcy. However, it was not possible to bridge the gap between the Government and the rebel forces. The carnage continued as no agreement could be reached on a cease-fire agreement.

The ECOWAS Authority of Heads of State and Government, at its first summit (Banjul, Gambia, 6-7 August), in an effort to end the Liberian tragedy, decided that there should be an immediate cease-fire: a cease-fire Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) would be established, comprising military contingents from member States of the ECOWAS Standing Mediation Committee, as well as from Guinea and Sierra Leone, to supervise implementation of the cease-fire; and a broad-based interim government would be set up to administer the country and to organize elections. A special emergency fund would be established to receive contributions for the $50 million projected to be needed for financing the military operations and for immediate humanitarian needs. The ECOMOG role was to stop the senseless killing of Liberian nationals and foreigners and to restore democratic institutions.

Guinea informed [S/21490] the Secretary-General that on 9 August rebel elements had broken into its diplomatic mission in Monrovia, Liberia, prompting the evacuation of some 5,000 persons taking refuge there.

The Organization of African Unity (OAU) Ad Hoc Committee of Heads of State and Government, at its fifth session (Kampala, Uganda, 8 September), issued a statement [A/45/496-s/21743] expressing concern at the continuing conflict and calling on the warring parties to put an immediate end to the killings. It noted the efforts of ECOWAS to end the conflict and called on all parties to observe the cease-fire and to co-operate with ECOWAS in normalizing the situation. It also expressed concern at the hundreds of thousands of refugees or displaced persons and the imminent mass starvation. The Ad Hoc Committee reiterated the appeal launched by ECOMOG for urgent humanitarian assistance.

In further efforts to resolve the conflict, the ECOWAS Authority of Heads of State and Government, at its first extraordinary session (Bamako, Mali, 27-28 November), endorsed [A/45/894-S/22025] the ECOWAS peace plan of 7 August, noting that the plan had received the widest support from Liberians and the international community. The Authority commended the two warring parties—the Armed Forces of Liberia and the Independent National Patriotic Front of Liberia—which had signed a cease-fire agreement at Banjul on 24 October. At the extraordinary session, the third party, NPFL, expressed readiness to join in the search for a peaceful solution. The Authority noted the acceptance by NPFL and the other parties of the ECOWAS peace plan and their declaration of a cease-fire to come into effect immediately. It urged that the details of the cease-fire be worked out as soon as possible. The Authority called on ECOWAS members to contribute troops to ECOMOG and to make contributions to the special emergency fund for the operations in Liberia; it also appealed for contributions from the international community. The Authority invited the parties to enter into talks within the framework of the ECOWAS peace plan, and called on its members to refrain from any action that might prejudice or undermine the smooth and speedy implementation of that plan. The Authority appealed to the international community to step up humanitarian relief efforts and to contribute generously to the efforts of the Interim Government in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the Liberian economy.

Other States

Libya-United States

In January [A/45/87-S/21094], the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya informed the Secretary-General that the United States had arbitrarily reimposed economic sanctions against it, alleging that it was encouraging terrorism and thus endangering United States security. It said that evidence had established the falsity of the allegations, called on the international community to take practical measures against the United States action and expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would take such measures as he was able. In March [A/45/163-S/21185], Libya transmitted a statement repudiating the United States charges that it was producing chemical weapons.

The Nineteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Cairo, Egypt, 31 July-5 August) condemned the continuing United States aggression, threats and plots against Libya, including the economic boycott and the shooting down of two Libyan aircraft on 4 January 1989 [A/45/421-S/21797].

In December, Libya said the United States Air Force had on 7 December transferred 200 Libyan prisoners from Chad to an unknown destination, against their will and against their wishes, under the protection of French forces stationed in N'Djamena [A/45/834-S/21991]. On 8 December, Libya requested the Security Council to meet on the United States action in abducting Libyan prisoners of war in Chad [S/21989].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/429, decided to defer consideration of an item on the 1986 Declaration [YUN 1986, p. 257] of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU on the aerial and naval military attack against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya by the United States in April of that year and to include it in the provisional agenda of the forty-sixth (1991) session.

Chad-Libya

On 26 January, Chad submitted to the Security Council a memorandum [S/21114] in which it said that, despite a framework agreement on the peaceful settlement of the territorial dispute between Chad and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya of 31 August 1989 and direct talks between the two States, there was a widening gap between the public statements and actions on the Libyan side, in military terms and at the negotiating table. In reality, subsequent events had shown that Libya would never change its position. The situation was worrying, negotiations were not progressing, and the cease-fire was periodically violated by acts of aggression from the Sudanese territory of Darfour.

On 5 February, the Sudan sent [S/21126] a letter to the President of the Security Council, stating that there was total order and security in Darfour, where the Sudanese Government exercised full authority and sovereignty, and categorically refuting the Chadian allegations. The Chadian opposition used jumping-off bases inside Chad and had no presence on the Sudanese side of the frontier. The Sudan regretted that Chad was trying to involve the Sudan in the dispute between it and Libya and in the hostilities in Chad. On 19 February, Chad stated [S/21165] that the Islamic Legion, heavily equipped by Tripoli, was organizing itself in Darfour in the Sudan, under the new name of Green Force, for a further armed attack on Chad. Chad warned the Sudan regarding its support for Libya against Chad from Darfour. Chad charged that on 25 March it had once again been subjected to a Libyan act of aggression in a region adjacent to the Sudanese region of Darfour [S/21208]; Libya had not abandoned its plan to destabilize and dismantle Chad and the Sudanese leaders had chosen the camp of Chad's enemies.

On 29 March, Libya refuted the Chadian claims [S/21223] and reaffirmed its previous request that OAU send an investigative committee to visit the locations where Chad said fighting had taken place to ascertain and verify the unfoundedness of the Chadian allegations that there was Libyan intervention in the fighting. On 4 April, the Sudan categorically denied [S/21229] Chadian assertions regarding the role of the Sudan in the ongoing fighting in eastern Chad, and reaffirmed its unswerving support for the stability and territorial integrity of Chad and its will to work for the strengthening of the traditional relations of brotherliness between the two peoples. Libya and Chad in May made further charges of aggression against each other [S/21295, S/21299], the latter stating that Chad had undertaken an act of self-defence. The Sudan accused [S/21296] Chad of aggression, kidnapping of Sudanese and Libyan nationals and looting of properties inside the Sudan. On 23 May, Chad reported [S/21333] the release of 10 Libyan prisoners of war captured in the counter-offensive on the frontier between Chad and the Sudan, stating that it was a further example of the Chadian people's determination to achieve peace.

On 31 July, Chad stated [S/21421] that there were preparations for further Libyan-Sudanese aggression against Chad from the borders of the Sudan. Chad appealed to the United Nations, OAU, the Organization of the Islamic Conference and all countries that espoused the cause of peace and justice to assume their full responsibility in the face of the new war situation. Libya, on 6 August, replied [S/21442] that the allegations were groundless and Libya had no intention of ever engaging in aggression against Chad. It was in no way associated with the extension of the civil war waged by Chadian secessionists. Chad said [S/21474] there was no longer a civil war in Chad. The periodic violent fighting on the Chadian-Sudanese border was caused by the Islamic Legion, a Libyan creation operating in the Sudan.

Libya transmitted an International Committee of the Red Cross press communique of 10 December [S/21992], stating that it had not been able to carry out protection work as it would have wished regarding the transfer or repatriation of a number of prisoners of war in Chad, in particular not being able to interview them.

Mayotte

The question of the Comorian island of Mayotte—one of a group of four islands in the Indian Ocean Comoro Archipelago—was the subject of further consideration by the General Assembly in 1990. The Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros acceded to independence on 6 July 1975, following a referendum in 1974. France, the former colonial Power, had since continued to administer the island of Mayotte.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report to the General Assembly [A/45/540], the Secretary-General said he had addressed a note verbale to the Comoros and France, drawing attention to Assembly resolution 44/9 on the question of the island of Mayotte [YUN 1989, p. 154] and inviting them to provide him with any pertinent information for inclusion in his report. A similar communication had been sent to the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

France, in its response, reiterated that, since December 1976, Mayotte had had the status of a territorial collectivity of France, which did not preclude subsequent changes. The President of France had stated that his country was prepared actively to seek a solution in accordance with national and international law, France's Constitution and the wishes of the people concerned. A constructive ongoing dialogue was being conducted at the highest level with the Comoros, as reflected in the meeting of Presidents Said Mohamed Djohar of the Comoros and François Mitterrand of France in June 1990 in Moroni.

The Comoros, in its reply, said that the tragic events in the Comoros in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 155] had led to the convening of a round table at which representatives of all shades of political opinion in the country unanimously affirmed that Mayotte belonged to the Comoros and called for its reintegration into the body politic. President Djohar, following meetings in Paris and Moroni with the French President, announced a new approach comprising tripartite discussion involving the French and Comorian authorities, as well as the people of Mayotte. The demonstration of Comorian and French political will for a solution had to be supported by the international community, and the United Nations in particular, so that dialogue could be initiated between the parties aimed at finding a just and lasting solution to the Comorian claim. However, since scarcely any progress had been made, the Comorian Government once again called on the Secretary-General to continue his role as mediator with a view to bringing the parties together in the search for a just and equitable settlement that respected Comorian territorial integrity and sovereignty.

The OAU response quoted a resolution adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU, reaffirming the sovereignty of the Comoros over Mayotte; appealing to France to satisfy the Comoros legitimate claims; inviting OAU member States to extend utmost effort to inform and sensitize French and international public opinion about the Comorian island of Mayotte with a view to inducing France to end the situation; appealing for categorical rejection of any form of consultation organized by France on Mayotte regarding the legal international status of the island, since the 1974 self-determination referendum remained the only valid consultation applicable to the entire archipelago; and requesting the OAU Ad Hoc Committee of Seven on the question, as well as the OAU secretariat, to resume the dialogue with the French authorities with a view to restoring as early as possible Mayotte to the Comoros.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 November 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/11.

Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Recalling also its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3161(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3291(XXIX) of 13 December 1974, 31/4 of 21 October 1976, 32/7 of 1 November 1977, 34/69 of 6 December 1979, 35/43 of 28 November 1980, 36/105 of 10 December 1981, 37/65 of 3 December 1982, 38/13 of 21 November 1983, 39/48 of 11 December 1984, 40/62 of 9 December 1985, 41/30 of 3 November 1986, 42/17 of 11 November 1987, 43/14 of 26 October 1988 and 44/9 of 18 October 1989, in which, inter alia, it affirmed the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 3385(XXX) of 12 November 1975 on the admission of the Comoros to membership in the United Nations, in which it reaffirmed the necessity of respecting the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago: composed of the islands of Anjouan, Grande-Comore, Mayotte and Mohéli,

Recalling further that, in accordance with the agreements between the Comoros and France, signed on 15 June 1973, concerning the accession of the Comoros to independence, the results of the referendum of 22 December 1974 were to be considered on a global basis and not island by island,

Convinced that a just and lasting solution to the question of Mayotte is to be found in respect for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of the Comoro Archipelago,

Convinced also that a speedy solution of the problem is essential for the preservation of the peace and security which prevail in the region,

Bearing in mind the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to that problem,

Taking note of the repeated wish of the Government of the Comoros to initiate as soon as possible a frank and serious dialogue with the French Government with a view to accelerating the return of the Comorian island of Mayotte to the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind also the decisions of the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference on this question,

1. Reaffirms the sovereignty of the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte;

2. Invites the Government of France to honour the commitments entered into prior to the referendum on the self-determination of the Comoro Archipelago of 22 December 1974 concerning respect for the unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros;

3. Calls for the translation into practice of the wish expressed by the President of the French Republic to seek actively a just solution to the question of Mayotte;

4. Urges the Government of France to accelerate the process of negotiations with the Government of the Comoros with a view to ensuring the effective and prompt return of the island of Mayotte to the Comoros;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain continuous contact with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity with regard to this problem and to make available his good offices in the search for a peaceful negotiated solution to the problem;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on this matter to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte".

General Assembly resolution 45/11

1 November 1990 Meeting 36 118-1-30 (recorded vote)

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Malagasy islands

The item on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India was included in the provisional agenda of the General Assembly's 1990 regular session in accordance with a 1989 Assembly decision [YUN 1989, p. 157].

On 21 September, by decision 45/402, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included the item in the agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session.

Co-operation between OAU and the UN system

In a September report [A/45/364 & Add.1], prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 44/17 [YUN 1989, p. 159], the Secretary-General outlined the nature and extent of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) during 1990, as well as the UN response to the measures called for by the Assembly. Co-operation covered three major areas: consultations and exchange of information; the situation in southern Africa; and economic and social development.

A major development was a meeting between the secretariats of the two organizations in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 2 to 5 April 1990 to discuss ways of expanding and strengthening areas of co-operation in the social and economic sectors; the meeting was also attended by representatives of 15 specialized agencies. The meeting identified the following issues as areas of priority: economic co-operation and integration with special focus on the African economic community; food and agriculture; refugees, displaced persons and emergencies in Africa; environment and development; human resources and development; and science and technology. The meeting underlined the need to devise a mechanism for harmonizing and co-ordinating UN assistance to OAU.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/13.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the enhancement of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and the practical measures taken for their implementation,

Recalling also its resolutions S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, 43/12 of 25 October 1988 and 43/27 of 18 November 1988 on the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling further its resolution 44/17 of 1 November 1989 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity which, inter alia, called for the increased support of the United Nations and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system for the establishment of an African economic community,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions, decisions and declarations adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 3 to 8 July 1990, and by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization at its twenty-sixth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 9 to 11 July 1990,

Considering the important statement made by the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity before the General Assembly on 1 October 1990,

Mindful of the need for continued and closer co-operation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and the Organization of African Unity,

Also mindful of the current political development in South Africa and conscious of the need to provide increased assistance to the people of South Africa and to their national liberation movements in their legitimate struggle to eradicate the policies of apartheid,

Deeply concerned that the critical economic situation persists in Africa despite the policies of reform being implemented by African countries,

Also concerned that some constraints continue to pose critical obstacles to African economic growth and development, including those in the external arena, such as the collapse of prices of Africa's primary commodities, severe debt-servicing burdens and limited availability of finance,

Aware of the efforts under way by the Organization of African Unity and its member States in the area of economic integration and, in particular, towards the establishment of an African economic community,

Conscious of its responsibilities to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States in southern Africa to help them cope with the situation resulting from the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid regime of South Africa,

Deeply concerned at the gravity of the situation of the refugees and displaced persons in Africa and the urgent need for increased international assistance to help African countries of asylum,

Recognizing the important role that the United Nations information system could play in disseminating information to bring about a greater awareness of the grave situation prevailing in southern Africa as well as the social and economic problems and the needs of African States and their regional and subregional institutions,

Expressing its gratitude for the continued financial and other support extended to Africa by the international community and especially by the donor countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity and of his efforts to strengthen this co-operation;

2. Notes with appreciation the increasing and continued participation of the Organization of African Unity in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and its constructive contribution to that work;

3. Notes also with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General to implement General Assembly resolutions 43/12, 43/27 and 44/17 which, inter alia, led to the establishment of a group of experts to undertake an in-depth assessment of the question of commodities of interest to Africa and the scope for export diversification;

4. Notes further with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to reactivate the consultative mechanism between the two organizations;

5. Commends the continued efforts of the Organization of African Unity to promote multilateral co-operation among African States and requests the United Nations system to continue to lend its support;

6. Reaffirms that the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 is the responsibility of the international community as a whole and decides that the final review and evaluation of its implementation by the United Nations General Assembly at the forty-sixth session in 1991 should be prepared by an ad hoc committee of the whole of the General Assembly;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity in the preparation of the final review of the Programme of Action by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

8. Also calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, notwithstanding the competence of the multilateral financial institutions, to co-operate with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to contribute to the implementation of measures aimed at a lasting solution to Africa's debt and debt-servicing burden, taking into account Africa's common position on its external debt, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its third extraordinary session, held at Addis Ababa on 30 November and 1 December 1987;

9. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, to continue to extend maximum support to those projects and programmes undertaken by African countries within the framework of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990;

10. Requests all Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and all other relevant organs of the United Nations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to contribute to African economic integration and co-operation by reactivating and increasing financial and technical assistance to programmes and projects of regional economic integration and co-operation of African regional and sub-regional organizations such as the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States, Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, Economic Community of Central African States, Economic Community of West African States, Arab Maghreb Union as well as those for drought and desertification such as the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development;

11. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to mobilize international support for special programmes of economic assistance to African States facing grave economic difficulties, as well as to the front-line States and other independent States of southern Africa to help them to withstand the effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid regime of South Africa;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Organization of African Unity informed periodically of measures taken by the United Nations system and by the international community in support of the implementation of special programmes of economic assistance in Africa;

13. Also request the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the relevant agencies of the United Nations system to continue to extend their support and co-operation through the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to the member States of that organization in their efforts to enhance African economic integration by the establishment of an African economic community, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity;

14. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations system and the international community for the assistance so far rendered to the African States in dealing with the emergency situation as well as with the critical economic problems that exist on the African continent, and urges them to increase this assistance;

15. Urges all Member States and regional and international organizations, in particular those of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations to provide material and economic assistance to African countries of asylum to enable them to withstand the heavy burden imposed on their limited resources and weak infrastructure by the presence in their countries of large numbers of refugees;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to strengthen co-operation at the political, economic, cultural and administrative levels between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, particularly with regard to the provision of assistance to the victims of colonialism and apartheid in southern Africa;

17. Urges the international community to contribute generously to the Assistance Fund for the Struggle against Colonialism and Apartheid, established by the Organization of African Unity, and to the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund, established by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries;

18. Reiterates the determination of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to intensify its efforts to eliminate racial discrimination and apartheid in southern Africa;

19. Endorses the agreement reached between the organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity for the convening of a mid-term review meeting between the secretariats of those organizations, to be held at the headquarters of the Organization of African Unity during April 1991 in order to evaluate the progress achieved in the implementation of the proposals and recommendations agreed upon in April 1990 on the co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations system-for 1990/1991 and to adopt new measures for their effective implementation;

20. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity to continue to hold regular consultations, as and when appropriate, between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity on the implementation of the present resolution;

21. Calls upon the competent organs of the United Nations system to continue to ensure the just and equitable representation of Africa at senior and policy levels at their respective headquarters and in their regional and field operations;

22. Calls upon the United Nations organs-in particular the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Special Committee against Apartheid—to continue to associate closely the Organization of African Unity with all the activities concerning Africa;

23. Request the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue to invite the representative of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity to participate in the meetings of the United Nations Steering Committee and its Inter-Agency Task Force and working groups on the final review of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

24. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate facilities continue to be made available to enhance continued liaison and consultations on matters of common interest as well as the provision of technical assistance to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity, as required;

25. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution and on the development of co-operation between the Organization of African Unity and the organizations within the United Nations system.

General Assembly resolution 45/13

7 November 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Draft by Tunisia (A/45/L.14 & Corr.1,2); agenda item 30.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: plenary 15, 37.

Chapter II

Americas

During 1990, the United Nations continued to play a central role in assisting the Central American countries to achieve peace. UN peace-keeping operations in the region required adjusted mandates to cope with their expanding roles. The United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA), set up originally to promote compliance with agreements reached by the five Central American Presidents, was instrumental in the voluntary demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance. On five occasions during the year, the Security Council enlarged and extended ONUCA's mandate: on 27 March, 20 April, 4 May, 8 June and 5 November. The United Nations Observer Mission for the Verification of the Electoral Process in Nicaragua (ONUVEN) monitored preparations for and the holding of free and fair elections in February, the first such operation authorized and conducted by the Organization internally in a Member State. ONUVEN's success led to a central role for the Organization in the peaceful transfer of power in a region where, in the past, such transfers had been the exception rather than the rule.

In El Salvador, the Government and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) agreed in April to launch a negotiating process, under the Secretary-General's auspices, for the purpose of speedily ending, through political means, an armed conflict that had torn that nation apart for more than a decade, as well as to promote democratization of the country, guarantee unrestricted respect for human rights and reunify Salvadorian society. In June, the parties concluded an agreement on human rights, providing for an unprecedented scheme for long-term, nation-wide UN human rights monitoring.

At the end of March, a process was launched with the central purpose of seeking a political solution to the internal armed conflict in Guatemala. The Secretary-General appointed an observer to attend the talks among representatives of the Government and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca.

The General Assembly expressed strongest support for the peace agreements concluded by the five Central American Governments and requested the Secretary-General to continue to afford them his fullest support in their efforts to consolidate peace.

Haiti's first free and democratic elections in December were monitored by the United Nations Observer Group for the Verification of Elections in Haiti (ONUVEH), authorized by the General Assembly by consensus in October.

The Security Council met in January to consider Nicaragua's complaint about United States occupation of its Embassy in Panama and in February convened at Cuba's request regarding an alleged attack by the United States Coast Guard on a vessel manned by Cuban nationals. The Council took no action on either matter.

Central America

The United Nations undertook a wide range of endeavours pertaining to peace in Central America in 1990 in pursuance of the goals of the 1987 Agreement entitled "Procedure for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America", known as Esquipulas II [YUN 1987, p. 188]. In his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization [A/43/1], the Secretary-General said that UN involvement in the region was complex and varied and required versatility and constant adaptation, using frequently innovative means.

The Organization played a major role in resolving the conflict in Nicaragua, with a United Nations Observer Mission (ONUVEN) monitoring the preparation and holding of free and fair elections in February. In the context of the International Support and Verification Commission (CIAV), established jointly by the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) pursuant to the Tela accord of August 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 1621, the United Nations assumed a key role in the voluntary demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance. With the operational support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), CIAV was assisting in the resettlement of resistance members in Nicaragua, as well as the voluntary repatriation of refugees. The United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA)—the first UN peace-keeping operation in the region, whose original mandate was to verify compliance by the five Central American Governments with their security commitments entered into in Esquipulas II—received and destroyed the weapons of the resistance members and verified the cease-fire.

With the Secretary-General's assistance, the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Marti para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN) agreed in April to launch a negotiating process aimed at ending the armed conflict and promoting democratization of the country. With the full and active participation of the Secretary-General's representative, a partial accord was reached on a text regarding respect for human rights, which provided for an unprecedented scheme of long-term UN monitoring.

In March, a process was launched with the purpose of finding a political solution to the internal armed confrontation in Guatemala, with an observer appointed by the Secretary-General attending the talks between the Government and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNS).

On 31 July, in San Jose, Costa Rica, the five Central American countries—Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua—concluded the Security Commission Agreement, designed to create an equilibrium among the regional armies and to define a new model for security relations based on co-operation, co-ordination, communication and prevention. A copy of the Agreement was submitted to the UN Secretary-General [A/44/970-s/21504], who, together with the Secretary-General of OAS, was to provide the scales of equivalence for determining each country's military needs, terms for drawing up inventories of weapons and military personnel, verification and control mechanisms, and advisory services. The Commission was to meet at regular intervals. At its second meeting (San Salvador, El Salvador, 12-13 September), a technical sub-commission was established, which prepared a draft model for inventories.

Among other developments in the region, a Central American Economic Plan of Action was approved at a June summit in Antigua, Guatemala. In resolution 45/231, the General Assembly, reaffirming its conviction that peace, development and democracy were inseparable, stressed the importance of the new directions in regional development that had emerged from the summit meetings of the Central American Presidents, in particular from the Antigua summit.

A First International Meeting of the Follow-up Committee to the 1989 International Conference on Central American Refugees, at which contributions of $156.2 million were pledged, was held in June in New York (see PART THREE, Chapter XV). In resolution 45/141, the General Assembly reaffirmed its conviction that the voluntary repatriation of refugees and the return of displaced persons to their countries or communities of origin was one of the most positive signs of the progress of peace in the region.

Report of Secretary-General. Responding to Security Council resolution 637(1989) and General Assembly resolution 44/10 [YUN 1989, pp. 163 & 164], the Secretary-General presented in November 1990 a report [A/45/706-S/21931] on the situation in Central America, stating that in the past 10 months the pace of events and UN involvement in the region had accelerated considerably. In his report, the Secretary-General covered developments relating to ONUVEN, ONUCA and CIAV (for details, see below), as well as the overall situation.

With the peaceful transfer of power in Nicaragua following UN-monitored Presidential elections, the task of ONUVEN was completed. In the post-electoral atmosphere, the demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance, an essential element in the Central American peace process, became a high priority. To that end, the Secretary-General, in early March, reached an agreement with the OAS Secretary-General on the modus operandi of CIAV in the demobilization and voluntary repatriation of members of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families. ONUCA's mandate was enlarged in March to enable it to play a part in the voluntary demobilization and in April to allow it to monitor the cease-fire and separation of forces in Nicaragua. By the end of June, demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance was essentially completed, but the country still faced a daunting task of reconciliation and reconstruction, which, the Secretary-General said, deserved the international community's support.

Assistance to and repatriation of members of families of former combatants, as well as thousands of Nicaraguan refugees and "indocumentados" living in Honduras and Costa Rica, was a wider task awaiting the United Nations, the Secretary-General stated. Following his appeal to support that task to be undertaken by CIAV/UN, a pledging conference took place on 25 April, and on 1 May CIAV/UN initiated its activities in Honduras, assisting, with the help of UNHCR and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), over 60,000 people. Assistance to former members of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families was taken over from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) in co-ordination with Honduran authorities and the Honduran Red Cross. The voluntary repatriation of 36,684 registered former combatants and their families began on 5 July, and was scheduled to conclude by the end of 1990. In addition, CIAV/UN conducted a census of 23,463 Nicaraguan refugees, 20,385 of whom were repatriated as at the beginning of November. Assistance and follow-up activities continued to be provided in Nicaragua by UNHCR on behalf of CIAV/UN.

The Secretary-General pursued his efforts to find a negotiated settlement to the conflict in El Salvador where, under his auspices, the two parties signed in April an agreement to end the armed conflict as speedily as possible (see below) and in July concluded an agreement on human rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X). However, considerable problems continued to be encountered in the ensuing negotiations, particularly with regard to the issue of the armed forces.

An observer appointed by the Secretary-General was present at the meetings convened pursuant to a "Basic Agreement for the Search for Peace by Political Means" concluded in March, with a view to initiating a process to bring about a peaceful solution in Guatemala (see below). That Agreement was annexed to the Secretary-General's report, as were a general agenda and schedule for the comprehensive negotiation process in El Salvador, issued in Caracas, Venezuela, on 21 May, and a press communique issued following the April Geneva meeting presided over by the Secretary-General between the Government of El Salvador and FMLN.

The Central American Presidents, and the President of Panama as an observer, attended a summit meeting in Antigua, Guatemala, in June. In the Antigua Declaration of 17 June [A/44/958], they agreed to pursue negotiations on security, verification and control and limitation of weapons, in accordance with the Esquipulas II agreement, and to seek technical advice from the secretariats of the United Nations and OAS. In order to provide such advice, UN Secretariat officials participated as observers in the meetings of the Security Commission, established under Esquipulas II, held in San Jose on 31 July and in San Salvador on 12 and 13 September.

At the San Jose meeting, the members of the Security Commission agreed that its objectives were to ensure the defensive nature of armed forces of the countries of the region, establish a reasonable balance among them, define a new model for security relations and secure commitments with respect to the foreign military presence in the region [A/44/970]. At its second meeting [A/45/642], the Commission established a technical sub-commission for the purpose of drawing up a draft format or model for conducting inventories of the military installations, personnel and weapons of the military and security forces of the Central American countries. The sub-commission, at a meeting held in Guatemala City in mid-October, prepared, with the assistance of Secretariat representatives, such a model, to be considered by the Security Commission at its next meeting scheduled for November in Honduras.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1990/7 on Central American women, expressed its satisfaction at the progress made in implementing the commitments made in the Esquipulas II agreement and in subsequent agreements. It again called on the Central American Presidents to persevere in their joint efforts to reach peace in Central America and urged all States to support the peace process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/15.

The situation in Central America:
threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 530(1983) of 19 May 1983, 562(1985) of 10 May 1985, 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, 650(1990) of 27 March 1990, 653(1990) of 20 April 1990, 654(1990) of 4 May 1990, 656(1990) of 8 June 1990 and its resolutions 38/10 of 11 November 1983, 39/4 of 26 October 1984, 41/37 of 18 November 1986, 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 43/24 of 15 November 1988, 44/10 of 23 October 1989 and 44/44 of 7 December 1989,

Aware that the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987 by the Presidents of the Republics of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, is the outcome of the decision by Central Americans to take up fully the historical challenge of forging a peaceful destiny for Central America,

Welcoming the joint declarations adopted by the Central American Presidents at Alajuela, Costa Rica, on 16 January 1988, Costa del Sol, El Salvador, on 14 February 1989, Tela, Honduras, on 7 August 1989, Montelimar, Nicaragua, on 3 April 1990 and Antigua, Guatemala, on 17 June 1990,

Convinced that the peoples of Central America wish to achieve peace, reconciliation, development and justice, without outside interference, in accordance with their own decision and their own historical experience, and without sacrificing the principles of self-determination and non-intervention,

Aware also of the political will which inspires them to settle their differences by means of dialogue, negotiation and respect for the legitimate interests of all States, establishing commitments to be fulfilled in good faith, through the verifiable performance of actions aimed at achieving peace, democracy, security, co-operation and respect for human rights,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 December 1989 and 8 November 1990 submitted in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 44/10.

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General on the verification of the electoral process in Nicaragua at each and every stage by the United Nations Observer Group in Central America carried out at the request of the Government of Nicaragua and in particular the conclusion by the Group that the electoral process as a whole was orderly, free and fair,

Taking note with satisfaction of the work carried out in the region by the Group in verifying the security commitments entered into by the Central American Governments under the agreement signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, and the successful demobilization of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance, and by the International Support and Verification Commission in their repatriation and relocation with the co-operation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme,

Convinced that the National Conciliation Agreement on Economic and Social Matters reached in Nicaragua on 26 October 1990 constitutes a positive and promising contribution to strengthening the process of democratization, development and peace in Nicaragua and in the region.

Observing with satisfaction the agreements signed by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional in Geneva on 4 April and at Caracas on 21 May 1990, on the basis of which a negotiating process has been initiated under the auspices of the Secretary-General directed towards the conclusion of political agreements in accordance with an agreed agenda, with a view to putting an end to the armed conflict by political means in the shortest possible time, as well as promoting the democratization of the country, guaranteeing unrestricted respect for human rights and reunifying Salvadorian society,

Taking note with interest of the progress of the talks between the various sectors of Guatemalan society and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, which have taken place pursuant to the agreement signed at Oslo on 30 March 1990 and under the auspices of the National Reconciliation Commission of Guatemala, in the presence of a representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and with the support of the Guatemalan Government,

Recognizing the unfailing determination of the Rio Group to achieve peace in Central America and the valuable contribution made by its member States throughout the regional peace effort,

Bearing in mind the particular importance which the implementation of its resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988 concerning the special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America and other relevant resolutions has for improving the living standards of the Central American people,

1. Commends the effort made by the Central American countries to achieve peace through the implementation of the agreement on "Procedures for the establishment of a firm and lasting peace in Central America" signed at Guatemala City on 7 August 1987, as well as of the agreements adopted at subsequent summit meetings;

2. Expresses its strongest support for these agreements and urges the Governments to continue their efforts to consolidate firm and lasting peace in Central America;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to afford the fullest possible support to the Central American Governments in their efforts to consolidate peace, especially by taking the measures necessary for the maintenance, establishment and effective functioning of the appropriate verification machinery;

4. Welcomes the National Conciliation Agreement on Economic and Social Matters reached in Nicaragua and endorses, in particular, the provision concerning exceptional circumstances and the invitation it makes to the international community and the international funding agencies to provide effective and efficient support for the implementation of the Agreement;

5. Commends the efforts of the Secretary-General to bring about peace in Central America and, in particular, to encourage a negotiated political settlement of the Salvadorian conflict;

6. Fully endorses the active role being played by the Secretary-General as an intermediary in the context of the mandate which was conferred upon him by the Security Council and which, pursuant to the agreements signed in Geneva and at Caracas, was emphasized on 31 October 1990 by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional in order to strengthen and accelerate the negotiation process;

7. Requests the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to make every possible effort to carry out all the political agreements drawn up in Geneva and Caracas, bearing in mind, especially, the proposals of the Secretary-General in order to expedite the negotiation process and achieve as soon as possible a just and lasting peace in El Salvador;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it during the forty-fifth session on the conduct of the tasks that the United Nations may undertake as a result of negotiations on El Salvador;

9. Encourages the Government of Guatemala to continue to support the national reconciliation process by pursuing its dialogue with the various sectors in order to achieve a peaceful settlement of the lengthy confrontation which has been taking place in Guatemala;

10. Welcomes with satisfaction the agreements reached at the meetings of the Security Commission, established under the agreement signed at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, held at San Jose in July 1990 and at San Salvador in September 1990, as well as the meeting of the technical sub-committee, held at Guatemala City in October 1990;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support the negotiation process and the verification of any agreements that may be adopted on the basis of the work of the Security Commission;

12. Appeals to the countries which are outside the region but which have links with and interests in it to facilitate the process of peace and democratization in the region and to refrain from any action that might hinder that process;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on progress made in implementing the present resolution;

14. Urges the international community and international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with the Central American countries for the implementation of the goals and objectives of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, as stipulated in General Assembly resolution 42/231, and as a way of assisting the efforts being made by the countries of the region to achieve peace and development;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives".

20 November 1990 Meeting 43 Adopted without vote

24-nation draft (4/45/L.19 & Add.1); agenda item 28.

Further progress was reported by the five Central American Governments on joint security matters during November and December, including requests for UN assistance in creating an inventory-verification mechanism and mine clearance [A/45/946-S/22175].

Between 15 and 17 December, the Presidents of the five Central American countries met in Puntarenas, Costa Rica, issuing a Declaration [A/45/906-S/22032] on a firm and lasting peace in the region, by strengthening relations of friendship, co-operation and good-neighbourliness, and reaffirming their determination to improve democratic systems in the region through Governments elected by universal, equal, free and secret suffrage. Recognizing that peace in Central America was indivisible, they committed themselves to a new model of regional security, as well as to developing education for peace, to establishing a new regional ecological order and to economic integration.

UN Observer Group in Central America

In 1990, the Security Council enlarged the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America (ONUCA), established under Security Council resolution 644(1989) [YUN 1989, p. 167] originally as part of impartial machinery to verify implementation of the security provisions of Esquipulas II [YUN 1987, p. 188] and the commitments made by the Central American Governments in subsequent declarations. In a 15 March report (see below), the Secretary-General sought urgent approval from the Council for an enlargement, on a contingency basis, of ONUCA's mandate and additional armed personnel in order to enable it to play a part in the voluntary demobilization of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance.

Report of Secretary-General (March). Shortly after the elections in Nicaragua on 25 February 1990, the Secretary-General reported [s/21194], he had been asked by the Government and the Nicaraguan Opposition National Union to consult with them about the manner in which ONUCA could assist in the transition process. Agreement on modalities had been reached in principle, subject to Council approval.

Under those modalities, ONUCA would be responsible for implementing the military aspects of the 1989 Tela accord [YUN 1989, p. 1621, taking delivery of the weapons, materiel and military equipment of the Nicaraguan resistance, while CIAV would be responsible for civilian aspects, such as repatriation or relocation of members of the resistance and their resettlement and material assistance. Members of the Nicaraguan resistance in Honduras would be demobilized there, handing over weapons and equipment to ONLCA and then becoming the responsibility of CIAV. Members of the resistance in Nicaragua would be demobilized at ONUCA-established temporary assembly points or nearby in Costa Rica, under the same conditions as those in Honduras. ONUCA would hold the military material until the five Central American Presidents decided on their final disposal in accordance with the Tela accord, destroying on the spot items considered in dangerous condition.

The full strength of 260 military observers originally envisaged would be needed for ONUCA to fulfil the original verification mandate and to assist in its new duties. The Secretary-General envisaged that those observers would not only assist in demobilization but, through constant patrolling, would maintain a sense of confidence and security in those areas of Nicaragua to which the demobilized members of the resistance would return. Implementation of that recommendation would require an additional 119 military observers; given the inability of existing contributors to make more officers available, an enlargement of the operation's composition was necessary and the Secretary-General had begun consultations to that effect with certain Member States.

The Secretary-General estimated that demobilization would be completed within four to six weeks, provided that the five Central American Presidents took a rapid decision on the final disposal of weapons and equipment and assuming that the process was voluntarily accepted by the leaders and members of the Nicaraguan resistance.

The Secretary-General estimated that demobilization would be completed within four to six weeks, provided that the five Central American Presidents took a rapid decision on the final disposal of weapons and equipment and assuming that the process was voluntarily accepted by the leaders and members of the Nicaraguan resistance.

As for the additional ONUCA troops required for the exercise, he envisaged needing 800 men or more for about two months in the form of a lightly armed infantry battalion of at least four rifle companies. Venezuela had agreed in principle to supply the troops. A rough cost estimate of reinforcement by the infantry battalion was $7 million to $9 million, excluding costs of helicopter support.

In that context, the Secretary-General drew the Council's attention to the fact that, of the $40.4 million apportioned among Member States for ONUCA under General Assembly resolution 44/44 [YUN 1989, p. 168], only $5.4 million, or less than 14 per cent, had so far been received.

The Secretary-General considered the voluntary demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance to be an essential element of the Central American peace process. Specific provision had been made for it in the Tela accord, whose objectives had been reaffirmed in the Declaration signed by the five Central American Presidents at San Isidro de Coronado, Costa Rica, in December 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 162]. In recent days, the Secretary-General said, it had become clear that both the current Government as well as the Government-elect in Nicaragua attached importance to voluntary demobilization as part of the process of transferring power following the 25 February 1990 elections. If it proved possible for all parties to reach early agreement on a plan for demobilization based on the modalities described in his report, the United Nations would have to move quickly to deploy the additional personnel and material resources for ONUCA to carry out its envisaged role.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (March)

On 27 March, the Security Council, following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, adopted resolution 650(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 637(1989) of 27 July 1989 and 644(1989) of 7 November 1989,

Reiterating its support for the Central American peace process and commending the efforts made by the Central American Presidents, represented by the agreements they have concluded,

Urging all parties to comply with their undertakings under those agreements, including in particular the commitments relating to regional security, and reiterating its full support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices in the region,

Noting with appreciation the efforts undertaken to date by the Secretary-General in support of the Central American peace process, including his continuing efforts to promote voluntary demobilization, resettlement and repatriation, as reflected in his report of 15 March 1990,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Decides to authorize, on a contingency basis in accordance with that report, an enlargement of the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the addition of armed personnel to its strength, in order to enable it to play a part in the voluntary demobilization of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments regarding the implementation of the present resolution.

Security Council resolution 650(1990)

27 March 1990 Meeting 2913 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21207).

Letter and statement of Secretary-General (April). On 19 April, the Secretary-General reported [S/21257] to the Security Council that a series of agreements had been signed by the Government of Nicaragua, representatives of the President-elect and of the northern, central and Atlantic fronts of the Nicaraguan resistance, and the Archbishop of Managua, Cardinal Obando y Bravo, relating to the voluntary demobilization of the resistance members. As a consequence of those agreements, the parties had requested that ONUCA monitor both the cease-fire, which had come into effect on 19 April at noon local time, and the separation of forces resulting from the withdrawal of the Government's forces from the security zones to be established in Nicaragua in order to facilitate the demobilization of the resistance. Those tasks would add to ONUCA's mandate, the Secretary-General stated, and therefore required the Council's approval.

In a statement made in informal consultations of the Council held the same day [S/21259], the Secretary-General gave details of the agreements reached, which provided for the establishment of a cease-fire, security zones and a timetable for voluntary demobilization.

The main points relating to the northern and central fronts were the following: a cease-fire, monitored by ONUCA in co-operation with Cardinal Obando y Bravo; the establishment of five security zones, to which the members of the Nicaraguan resistance would move immediately, with that movement to be completed by 25 April; withdrawal of the military and security forces of the Government from the security zones and from locations within 20 kilometres of their boundaries, monitored by ONUCA and the Cardinal and to be completed by 21 April; provision of humanitarian aid by CIAV to the resistance members as soon as they reached the security zones; and complete demobilization of the resistance by ONUCA between 25 April and 10 June.

The provisions of the agreements relating to the Atlantic front were broadly speaking the same, except that only two security zones were to be established there and demobilization was to be carried out between 8 and 18 May. It was hoped, said the Secretary-General, that a similar agreement would be signed shortly with the southern front, thus covering all main elements of the resistance.

In the Secretary-General's view, the agreements reached constituted an important step forward and were practicable and acceptable. However, they differed in certain respects from those envisaged in his 15 March report (see above), the main differences pertaining to the formal cease-fire and separation of forces; the fact that the security zones were considerably larger than the temporary assembly points originally pictured; and the fact that CIAV would provide humanitarian assistance to the resistance members as soon as they arrived in the security zones and before demobilization was complete.

While taking delivery of and destroying weapons and military equipment was already included in the expanded ONUCA mandate as approved by the Council in resolution 650(1990), monitoring the cease-fire and the separation of forces would constitute a further addition which required the Council's approval, the Secretary-General explained. Pending such approval, he had instructed the ONUCA Chief Military Observer to make the necessary preparations for deploying as many as possible of ONUCA's existing strength of military observers to Nicaragua. To assist in the demobilization in Nicaragua, he had instructed the Chief Military Observer to move there as many as he could spare of the Venezuelan infantry company currently deployed in Honduras, where demobilization had been carried out on 16 and 18 April as planned.

The Secretary-General reiterated that the voluntary demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance was an essential element in the Central American peace process. He believed that the agreements reached provided a means of achieving that long-awaited goal.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (April)

On 20 April, the Security Council adopted resolution 653(1990).

The Security Council,

Having examined the letter addressed to the President of the Council by the Secretary-General on 19 April 1990 concerning the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, as well as his statement of the same date to the members of the Security Council in which he briefed them on the agreements signed at Managua that day, which envisage the complete demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance by the Observer Group during the period from 25 April to 10 June 1990,

Reaffirming its resolutions 644(1989) of 7 November 1989 and 650(1990) of 27 March 1990,

1. Approves the proposals concerning the addition of new tasks to the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America contained in the letter of the Secretary-General of 19 April 1990 and in his statement;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on all aspects of the operations of the Observer Group before the expiry of the current mandate period on 7 May 1990.

Security Council resolution 653(1990)

20 April 1990 Meeting 2919 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21258).

Reports of Secretary-General (April/May). In a 27 April report [S/21274], the Secretary-General gave an account of ONUCA operations and related developments since the arrival of the advance party in Honduras on 2 December 1989 and the establishment of a temporary headquarters in Tegucigalpa.

Under the command of the Chief Military Observer, Major-General Agustín Quesada Gómez of Spain, ONUCA's strength stood at 995, as of 27 April, including 169 military observers from Canada, Colombia, Ecuador, Ireland, Spain and Venezuela, an air unit from Canada, and other military personnel contributed by Venezuela. Six civilian medical officers, seven medical assistants and three pilots from the Federal Republic of Germany assisted ONUCA from the beginning of its mission. There were 174 staff members—85 international and 89 locally recruited—in the mission area, plus 10 civilian aircrew and maintenance personnel for four medium helicopters chartered from a commercial firm. Further military observers and personnel were expected in the near future.

ONUCA headquarters was established in the Honduran capital and five liaison offices were set up in the capitals of the five Central American countries. Verification centres, each with a strength of up to 10 observers, were set up in 13 localities, including the five capitals. Two operational posts were established in Honduras and one in Nicaragua.

From the verification centres, mobile teams of observers patrolled the terrain to verify compliance by the five Central American Governments with the security undertakings in the Esquipulas II agreement. Patrolling was carried out daily by land and air and occasionally by river, concentrated in those areas where activities that might be contrary to the Esquipulas II agreement were most frequently alleged to occur; those areas were adjacent to the borders between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, between Honduras and Nicaragua, between Honduras and El Salvador, and between Guatemala and El Salvador, together with the north-eastern part of Nicaragua and the south-western part of Honduras. The nature of the terrain in many of those areas was such that it was very difficult for local authorities to prevent, and for international observers to detect, clandestine movement of armed personnel and military supplies across the borders. Nevertheless, while specific breaches of the security undertakings had not been directly observed by ONUCA patrols, cross-border movements had undoubtedly taken place, the Secretary-General noted, especially a major movement of members of the Nicaraguan resistance from Honduras into Nicaragua during March and early April.

ONUCA maintained informal contacts with the Nicaraguan resistance and FMLN of El Salvador, which had expressed reservations about ONUCA's original mandate, seeing it as directed against their interests. Only in March had ONUCA been able to begin obtaining access to Nicaraguan resistance camps in Honduras, but problems had been resolved following the April agreement on voluntary demobilization. In April, 260 members of the Nicaraguan resistance remaining in Honduras were demobilized and large quantities of weapons and military equipment destroyed. While FMLN had given orders to refrain from hostile action against ONUCA, the continuing hostilities in El Salvador had limited ONUCA's ability to patrol in that country and no verification centre had been set up outside the capital.

ONUCA received and investigated complaints from two of the five Governments about alleged violations of the security undertakings in the Esquipulas II agreement. In January, Nicaragua complained about the alleged presence of Nicaraguan resistance members on Costa Rican territory close to the border between the two countries. Costa Rica informed ONUCA that during its own investigation no evidence had been found to substantiate the complaint. In March, Salvadorian authorities alleged the presence on Nicaraguan territory of an FMLN command post, a radio transmitter used by FMLN for military purposes, a printing press used for FMLN propaganda, and a garage used for the construction of secret compartments in vehicles for smuggling arms into El Salvador. ONUCA found nothing to substantiate that or another complaint made by El Salvador in April alleging the existence of two FMLN "safe houses" in Managua, one of which was supposedly a command post. With regard to another incident, also in April, ONUCA learned from the media that Honduran authorities had intercepted, close to the border with El Salvador, a truck in which arms and explosives had been hidden. Honduras had been asked to ensure that in any future such incident ONUCA be given immediate access to enable it to verify whether or not a breach had occurred of the undertakings in the Esquipulas II agreement.

In his observations, the Secretary-General stated that, although ONUCA had initially been established with the limited mandate of verifying only one aspect of the Central American peace process, it had been his hope from the beginning that it would evolve incrementally and its very presence would encourage the five Central American Governments to ask the Council to entrust ONUCA with additional functions as the peace process developed. During the first six months of its existence, ONUCA's mandate had been enlarged twice to enable it to play a part in assisting the parties to control and resolve the complex of conflicts that had plagued the region for so long. The Secretary-General hoped to approach the Council before long regarding the monitoring of a cessation of the armed confrontation in El Salvador.

The Secretary-General noted that the view had been expressed that recent and prospective developments in Central America, notably the elections in Nicaragua, the imminent demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance and the early start of talks between the Government of El Salvador and FMLN, under his auspices, had rendered obsolete ONUCA's original mandate to verify the five Governments' compliance with their undertakings to cease aid to irregular forces and insurrectionist movements and not to allow their territory to be used for attacks against neighbouring States. Although sharing the hope that that task would soon become unnecessary, he hesitated to recommend that the Council delete it from ONUCA's mandate at the current stage, as he believed that developments needed to be followed up and consolidated and that more time was required to assess the consequences of what had happened and was happening in Central America. The Secretary-General was strengthened in his belief by recent consultations with the five Governments. He therefore recommended that the Council extend ONUCA's mandate for a further six months, on the understanding that, in accordance with the agreements signed by the Nicaraguan parties, its task of monitoring the cease-fire and separation of forces in Nicaragua and demobilizing members of the Nicaraguan resistance would lapse with the completion of demobilization not later than 10 June.

In an addendum of 2 May [S/21274/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported that, in accordance with the cease-fire agreement of 19 April, a separation of forces in Nicaragua had been achieved.

Few problems had occurred in that connection and ONUCA carried out patrols by road and air to monitor the continuing separation.

However, it was a matter of grave concern that the demobilization of the resistance did not begin in the afternoon of 25 April, as stipulated in the Managua agreements. The Secretary-General believed that serious efforts had to be made in order to get the demobilization process quickly back on track and to honour scrupulously the commitments made in those agreements.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (May)

On 4 May, the Security Council adopted resolution 654(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, 650(1990) of 27 March 1990 and 653(1990) of 20 April 1990, as well as the statement made by the President of the Council on its behalf on 7 November 1989,

Recalling the initial agreement reached at Geneva on 4 April 1990 by the parties to the conflict in El Salvador, under the auspices of the Secretary-General,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 27 April and 2 May 1990;

2. Decides to extend, under its authority, the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America as defined in resolutions 644(1989), 650(1990) and 653(1990), for a further period of six months, that is until 7 November 1990, on the understanding as expressed by the Secretary-General in his report, that the tasks of the Observer Group of monitoring the cease-fire and separation of forces in Nicaragua and demobilizing members of the Nicaraguan resistance will lapse with the completion of the demobilization process, not later than 10 June 1990, and bearing in mind the need to continue to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources;

3. Welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General to promote the achievement of a negotiated political solution to the conflict in El Salvador;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments and to report on all aspects of the operations of the Observer Group before the expiry of the current mandate period and in particular to report to the Council not later than 10 June 1990 concerning the completion of the demobilization process.

Security Council resolution 654(1990)

4 May 1990 Meeting 2921 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21286).

After consultations with members of the Council, the President, on 23 May, made the following statement on behalf of the Council [S/21331]:

The members of the Council recall that the Council, in conformity with its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, has supported the Central American peace process from the outset. This has resulted in its decision to set up the United Nations Observer Group for Central America, whose mandate it subsequently enlarged and reaffirmed on two occasions.

The members of the Council also recall the decision taken by the Council in its resolution 654(1990) of 4 May 1990 to extend the mandate of the Observer Group until 7 November 1990 on the understanding that its tasks of monitoring the cease-fire and separation of forces in Nicaragua and demobilizing members of the resistance would lapse with the completion of the demobilization process, not later than 10 June 1990.

The members of the Council, taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and fully supporting his efforts, express their concern at the slow pace of the demobilization process during its first two weeks. It is clear that the process must be accelerated if the deadline of 10 June set for its completion is to be met.

In the light of the foregoing, the members of the Council call on the resistance to meet fully and urgently the commitments it made in agreeing to demobilize. They also support the Government of Nicaragua in its efforts to facilitate, by taking the necessary steps, timely demobilization and urge it to continue such efforts. They also call on all others with influence in this matter to take action to ensure that demobilization now proceeds in accordance with the agreements entered into by the Nicaraguan parties, and in particular to ensure that the 10 June deadline is respected.

The members of the Council request the Secretary-General, through a senior representative, to continue to observe the situation on the ground first-hand and to report to the Council by 4 June.

The members of the Council request the Secretary-General to convey the Council's position to the five Central American Presidents.

The members of the Council also request the Secretary-General to convey the Council's concerns about the situation described above to the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, who shares responsibilities with the Secretary-General of the United Nations as regards the operations of the International Support and Verification Commission.

Meeting number. SC 2922.

Reports of Secretary-General (June). In response to the Security Council's request, the Secretary-General on 4 June submitted a further report on ONUCA [S/21341]. He informed the Council that various complaints had been received from both the Nicaraguan resistance and the Government charging each other with violations of the April Managua agreements. Most of the complaints by the resistance related to the continuing presence of civilian and militia personnel in security zones and in the demilitarized zones, while the Government alleged the presence of armed resistance members outside the security zones, charging that they had stolen cattle and committed other criminal acts. By 30 May, however, most of the complaints had been resolved by ONUCA through negotiations with both sides. The few unresolved complaints arose mostly from a difference of opinion about the precise boundaries of the security zones and the demilitarized zones.

In general, the Secretary-General reported, there had been no serious violations of the cease-fire, although there had been some breaches of the separation-of-forces agreement in certain areas, attributable largely to lack of trust following eight years of hostilities. Almost all were quickly resolved by ONUCA. However, implementation of the Managua agreements encountered a set-back on 25 May when the leadership of the resistance issued a statement suspending indefinitely the demobilization process, alleging a Nicaraguan army attack against a large number of demobilized resistance members and their families, killing or injuring many. After an investigation, the ONUCA Chief Military Observer reported that there was no evidence to support the allegation of a massacre.

On the night of 29/30 May, the President of Nicaragua and "Commander Franklyn" of the resistance concluded the "Managua Protocol", which was annexed to the Secretary-General's report. The Protocol responded to a number of the resistance's concerns, notably through the establishment of so-called development areas in which demobilized members would be resettled. It also foresaw economic assistance to former resistance members; creation of a police force for the development areas, in which former resistance members would participate; various security measures; and full implementation of the Managua agreements. For its part, the resistance reaffirmed its commitment to demobilize by 10 June at the latest, with at least 100 combatants being demobilized daily in each of the security zones. The Secretary-General noted that the Protocol referred to a possible enlargement of ONUCA's mandate, but he had not received any communication from the Government in that respect. The Chief Military Observer had informed him, however, that the resistance had proposed that ONUCA be given the additional tasks of collecting weapons remaining in civilian hands, training a new national police force and verifying the proposed reduction in the strength of the Nicaraguan army.

After the signing of the Protocol, the pace of demobilization had shown a marked increase. In the five days since the signing, from 30 May to 3 June, there had been an average demobilization of 377 daily in the five non-Atlantic area zones, bringing to 3,726 the total of demobilized resistance members in those zones since the beginning of the process on 8 May. As at 3 June, ONUCA estimated that 9,800 members covered by the Managua Protocol remained to be demobilized. Regarding the Atlantic front, covered under a separate agreement, 187 members had so far been demobilized. The southern front, claiming 2,000 combatants under arms outside the security zones, had so far failed to sign an agreement to demobilize, as talks between the front and government representatives broke down on 22 May and had not resumed. While there had thus been a welcome increase in the rate of demobilization, the leaders of the resistance had still not achieved the minimum target committed to in the Managua Protocol. If there was no improvement, the Secretary-General said, less than half the members of the resistance covered in the Protocol would be demobilized by 10 June and large numbers would remain under arms in the security zones. He had therefore instructed the Chief Military Observer and his Alternate Personal Representative to persuade those concerned to increase substantially the pace of demobilization. The resistance needed to demonstrate convincingly that it was doing everything possible to facilitate completion of demobilization by the agreed target date. If demobilization was not largely achieved by then, the Security Council would need to consider decisions to deal with the dilemma.

The Secretary-General reported again to the Council on 8 June [S/21349] that, while it was doubtful whether it would be possible to complete demobilization by 10 June, it was clear that rapid progress had been made in the week preceding his report, as far as the northern and central fronts of the resistance were concerned. As at 7 June, 6,538 members of those groups had been demobilized, with ONUCA estimating that about 6,700 remained to be demobilized, including several thousand unarmed support personnel. A major ceremony was scheduled for 9 June, during which 2,000 or more combatants would hand over their weapons to ONUCA. Demobilization of the Atlantic front had proceeded at a less satisfactory rate, mainly because of logistical difficulties in concentrating the combatants at demobilization areas in the large security zones concerned. As at 7 June, 305 members had been demobilized, with at least another 1,000 yet to be demobilized.

Under the circumstances, the Nicaraguan Government wished the Secretary-General to recommend that the Council extend ONUCA's mandate, related to monitoring the cease-fire, separation of forces and demobilization, to permit complete demobilization, estimated to take between two and three weeks. Accordingly, the Secretary-General recommended that the relevant part of ONUCA's mandate be extended to 29 June 1990 at the latest.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (June)

On 8 June, the Security Council adopted resolution 656(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 654(1990) of 4 May 1990 and the statement made by the President of the Council on its behalf on 23 May, concerning the United Nations Observer Group in Central America,

Expressing its concern that the process of demobilization has not yet been fully completed, although progress is now being made after the removal of obstacles that prevented the conclusion of the demobilization process on 10 June 1990, as stipulated in resolution 654(1990),

Having studied the report submitted by the Secretary-General on 4 June 1990 as well as his statement of 8 June to the members of the Council,

1. Decides that the tasks of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America of monitoring the cease-fire and separation of forces in Nicaragua and demobilizing members of the Nicaraguan resistance shall be extended, on the understanding, as recommended by the Secretary-General, that those tasks will lapse with the completion of the demobilization process, not later than 29 June 1990;

2. Urges all those directly involved in the demobilization process to take all necessary measures to maintain and, if possible, increase the rate of demobilization so as to complete it at the latest, on the date specified in paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments and in particular to report to it not later than 29 June 1990 concerning the completion of the demobilization process.

Security Council resolution 656(1990)

8 June 1990 Meeting 2927 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21350).

Reports of Secretary-General (June, October). On 29 June, the Secretary-General reported [S/21379] to the Security Council that at 19:00 hours local time on 28 June demobilization had been completed at all locations, except for one in Nicaragua where a handful of members of the resistance remained deployed; their demobilization was expected to be completed that day. ONUCA's Chief Military Observer had received from the commander of each of the four fronts (northern, central, southern, Atlantic) a document certifying that all combatants under his command had been demobilized; that all arms, ammunition and military equipment had been handed over to ONUCA and no such material had been hidden; and that either the military structure had been dissolved (Atlantic and central), or the front had definitively abandoned the armed struggle (northern), or had converted itself into a political force (southern). The Government had notified the Chief Military Observer that it was fully satisfied with the demobilization carried out by ONUCA. In Honduras, a total of 2,607 armed and unarmed members of the resistance had been demobilized. As the process of demobilization neared its close, the withdrawal of the Venezuelan battalion had already begun, more than half of its strength already repatriated to Venezuela, with complete withdrawal to be achieved by 4 July.

By enlarging ONUCA's mandate and later extending the deadline for the completion of demobilization, the Council had enabled ONUCA to play a role in helping end a tragic war that had inflicted many casualties and much hardship in the region, in particular on the Nicaraguan people, the Secretary-General concluded.

On 26 October, he presented a further report [S/21909] on ONUCA operations. Following the successful completion of demobilization, it was decided, after consultation with the Nicaraguan Government, that ONUCA would continue, as a temporary measure, to maintain a presence in those areas where large numbers of demobilized resistance members were being resettled. The temporary verification centres established in the first half of July were gradually phased out during September and all were closed by 15 October. As another confidence-building measure, ONUCA monitored the repatriation of relatives of former members of the resistance from Honduras to Nicaragua under CIAV auspices.

With demobilization completed, ONUCA reverted to its original mandate-to verify compliance by the five Central American Governments with the security undertakings in the Esquipulas II agreement, which included to cease aid to irregular forces and insurgent movements in the region and to prevent the use of their territory for attacks on other States. It quickly became clear, the Secretary-General stated, that ONUCA's capacity to detect violations was very limited, partly because of the nature of the terrain, climatic conditions and similar factors, but mainly due to the fact that an international peace-keeping operation could not undertake the detection of clandestine activities without assuming functions that properly belonged to the security forces of the countries concerned. Nevertheless, ONUCA's regular and visible presence in those parts of the region where breaches of the security undertakings were most likely to occur enabled it to play an important part in ensuring compliance with Esquipulas II. Its presence also provided a means for Governments to take up with each other, through an impartial third party, complaints about violations. During the current mandate period, that facility was used only once, reflecting a welcome improvement in intergovernmental relations in the region.

The five Governments in September communicated their wish to the Secretary-General that ONUCA's mandate be extended for another six months. On the basis of recommendations from the Chief Military Observer, the Secretary-General arrived at the conclusion that ONUCA should maintain its current method of operation, with an Observer Group in each of the five countries and verification centres to undertake regular patrols. However, following the end of the conflict in Nicaragua and demobilization of the resistance, it would be possible to close some of those centres whose tasks had been primarily related to the Nicaraguan conflict; that, the Secretary-General believed, would permit a reduction of approximately 40 per cent in the number of military observers currently assigned to ONUCA, without impairing its ability to carry out its mandate.

The Secretary-General considered it possible that, as the Central American peace process developed, other tasks might emerge which the Governments concerned might wish ONUCA to undertake. A potential verification role for ONUCA had been mentioned during current discussions between the Central American countries that could lead to an eventual agreement on regional arms control and disarmament.

Should the Council approve his recommendation for another six-month extension, the Secretary-General said his intention would be to reduce ONUCA's strength to 158 by mid-December, with its liaison offices and verification centres in each of the five capitals merging to form in each case an Observer Group headquarters and a reduced number of verification centres outside the capitals. As a result of the reduction, the level of the Chief Military Observer's post would be reduced to Brigadier-General.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (November)

On 5 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 675(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 637(1989) of 27 July 1989 and 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, as well as the statement made by the President of the Council on its behalf on 7 November 1989,

1. Approves the report of the Secretary-General of 26 October 1990;

2. Decides to extend, under its authority, the mandate of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America, as defined in resolution 644(1989), for a further period of six months, that is, until 7 May 1991, bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General and the need to continue to monitor expenditures carefully during this period of increasing demands on peace-keeping resources;

3. Request the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council fully informed of further developments and to report on all aspects of the operations of the Observer Group before the expiry of the new mandate period.

Security Council resolution 675(1990)

5 November 1990 Meeting 2952 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21927).

Composition

In his March 1990 report on ONUCA [S/21194], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that there was a shortfall of 21 military observers because of the inability of some of the existing contributors to provide the full complement of officers requested. A further 98 were required for the last phase—phase IV—of ONUCA's deployment and to provide for the full strength of 260 observers needed to enable the Group both to fulfil its original verification mandate and to assist in the new duties resulting from the recommended enlargement of its mandate.

By a letter of 29 March [S/21232], the Secretary-General stated that, as the Council was aware, the military personnel of ONUCA were currently contributed by Canada, Colombia, Ireland, Spain and Venezuela, with civilian elements from the Federal Republic of Germany. He had received an offer from Argentina to contribute four fast patrol boats, with crews, required by ONUCA for duty in the Gulf of Fonseca. Having completed his consultations with the Governments of the five countries in which ONUCA was deployed, he proposed to accept Argentina's offer. By a letter of 5 April [S/21233], the Council President informed the Secretary-General that the Council members agreed to his proposal.

By a letter of 19 April [S/21261], the Secretary-General indicated that he had asked certain Member States to contribute the 119 additional military observers needed to allow for full deployment of ONUCA. He stated that, in addition to an offer of 13 additional observers from one of the contributing Governments, he had received offers from Brazil, Ecuador, India and Sweden to contribute a total of 85 observers and the decision of a fifth Member State was awaited. Having consulted the Governments of the five countries in which ONUCA was deployed, he proposed to accept the offers. On 20 April [S/21262], the Council President conveyed to the Secretary-General the Council members' agreement to his proposal.

As of October 1990, ONUCA, under the command of Major-General Agustín Quesada

Gómez of Spain, totalled 254 military observers from Brazil (21), Canada (45), Colombia (12), Ecuador (21), India (21), Ireland (31), Spain (59), Sweden (21) and Venezuela (23). There was also a naval squadron from Argentina with 29 personnel and an air unit from Canada of 130 personnel, resulting in a total strength of 413. In addition, five civilian medical officers, five medical assistants and four pilots provided by Germany assisted the mission.

The naval squadron, consisting of four fast patrol boats, began operating in the Gulf of Fonseca on 29 June.

Ninety international and 93 locally recruited civilian staff served with ONUCA. In addition, there were 12 civilian aircrew and maintenance personnel for four helicopters chartered from a commercial firm.

A Venezuelan infantry battalion was temporarily attached to ONUCA to handle the additional responsibilities of the demobilization process. It was repatriated between 19 June and 4 July.

Financing

In a 10 December report on ONUCA financing [A/45/833], the Secretary-General stated that $56,908,988 had been apportioned among Member States in respect of ONUCA from its inception on 7 November 1989 to 7 November 1990, of which $51,805,172 had been received by 30 November 1990, resulting in unpaid assessed contributions of $5,106,816. In response to the General Assembly's appeal in resolution 44/44 [YUN 1989, p. 168] for voluntary contributions, services and supplies were received from one Government amounting to $2,640,000, while two others provided services and supplies budgeted for $138,000, amounts which were included in the Secretary-General's cost estimates. Revised cost estimates for the period from 7 November 1990 to 7 May 1991 amounted to $19,421,200 gross ($18,829,600 net), taking into account a reduction of approximately 40 per cent—from 260 to 158—in the number of military observers beginning 15 December 1990. Should the Security Council decide to renew ONUCA's mandate beyond 7 May 1991, the cost would be in the order of $2,730,000 gross ($2,633,000 net) a month.

As noted by the Secretary-General, it was projected that there would be an unencumbered balance of $7,032,900 gross ($6,824,900 net) as of 30 November from the resources provided to ONUCA since its inception, after taking into account credits of $10,219,300 gross ($9,989,800 net) given to Member States against their assessments for the mandate period from 7 May to 7 November 1990. With assessed contributions of $5,106,816 remaining unpaid as at 30 November for the mandate period ending on 7 November 1990, and no assessment having been made for the current period, the Secretary-General recommended that no action be taken for the time being with respect to the unencumbered balance.

In connection with the past and future financing of ONUCA, the Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly appropriate $27,144,600 gross ($26,377,000 net), already authorized and apportioned under resolution 44/44, and offset $10,219,300 gross ($9,989,800 net) as credits to Member States against their assessments; and appropriate $19,410,200 gross ($18,829,600 net) for the mandate period from 7 November 1990 to 7 May 1991 and apportion the amount among Member States. With regard to the period after 7 May 1991, the Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly provide by means of appropriation and/or commitment authorization for ONUCA's maintenance and for the apportionment of such amounts, should the Security Council decide to renew ONUCA's mandate beyond that date.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) reported on 14 December [A/45/867], stating that, since 90 per cent of assessed contributions had been received and assessments for the mandate period beginning 7 November 1990 would be made at the current Assembly session, it saw no reason to retain the entire unencumbered balance, but recommended that not more than $5,106,816 be retained to meet the shortfall in contributions and that $1,718,000 be credited to Member States against assessed contributions for the mandate period from 7 November 1990 to 7 May 1991. ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's estimates for the above mandate period and recommended commitment authority up to $2,730,016 gross ($2,633,016 net) per month for the six-month period beginning 7 May 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/247.

Financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 644(1989) of 7 November 1989, by which the Council established the United Nations Observer Group in Central America and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Group, the latest of which was resolution 675(1990) of 5 November 1990,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Group, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations.

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Group by certain Member States,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Group with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Concurs with the observations, recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Observer Group in Central America in full and on time;

3. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Observer Group in Central America the amount of 27,144,600 United States dollars gross (26,377,000 dollars net) authorized and apportioned by the General Assembly in paragraph 5 of its resolution 44/44 of 7 December 1989 for the operation of the Group for the period from 7 May to 7 November 1990, inclusive;

4. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States for the period 7 May to 7 November 1990, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 10,219,300 dollars gross (9,989,800 dollars net) in respect of the period from 7 November 1989 to 7 May 1990, inclusive;

5. Decides further to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of 19,410,200 dollars for the operation of the Group for the period from 7 November 1990 to 7 May 1991, inclusive;

6. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 19,410,200 dollars for the above-mentioned period among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

7. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 of the present resolution, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 1,718,000 dollars for the period from 7 November 1989 to 7 November 1990, inclusive;

8. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 6 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 591,600 dollars approved for the period from 7 November 1990 to 7 May 1991, inclusive;

9. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Group at a rate not to exceed 2,730,000 dollars gross (2,633,000 dollars net) per month, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, for the period from 7 May to 7 November 1991, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Group beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 675(1990), the said amount to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

10. Decides that Liechtenstein shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Group shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

11. Decides also that Namibia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Group shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

12. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the Group until 7 November 1990 of the Member States referred to in paragraphs 10 and 11 of the present resolution shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments authorized in paragraph 6 of the present resolution;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Group in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Group is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 45/247

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/892) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/45/L.13); agenda item 133.

El Salvador

During the year, the Secretary-General pursued his efforts, with the full support of the Security Council, to find a negotiated settlement to the conflict in El Salvador, having been re-requested by the five Central American Presidents, in the Declaration of San Isidro de Coronado, Costa Rica, in December 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 162], to do everything in his power to ensure the resumption of the dialogue between the Salvadorian Government and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional (FMLN). Those efforts intensified following a visit to UN Headquarters by President Alfredo F. Cristiani in January 1990, and after receiving assurances from both the Government and FMLN that they were seriously intent on seeking an end to the armed conflict in the country through negotiations. The Secretary-General's Personal Representative, Alvaro de Soto, held a series of consultations with both parties in order to agree on the format, mechanism and pace of a negotiating process.

At a joint meeting in Geneva on 4 April, the Government and FMLN signed, in the Secretary-General's presence, an agreement on such a process, under the Secretary-General's auspices, to end the armed conflict by political means as speedily as possible, promote democratization, guarantee unrestricted respect for human rights and reunify Salvadorian society. The initial objective was to achieve political agreements for arranging a halt to the armed confrontation and any acts that infringed on the rights of the civilian population, which would have to be verified by the United Nations subject to the approval of the Security Council. Once that had been achieved, the process was to lead to the establishment of necessary guarantees and conditions for reintegrating the members of FMLN into civil, institutional and political life. The parties agreed to a negotiation method by means of two complementary activities: direct dialogue between the negotiating commissions of the two parties, with the active participation of the Secretary-General or his representative, and an intermediary role of the Secretary-General or his representative to ensure that both parties were committed at the highest level.

The Security Council, in resolution 654(1990) of 4 May, welcomed the Secretary-General's efforts to promote the achievement of a negotiated political solution to the conflict in El Salvador.

Following a second round of direct talks held in Caracas in May, the parties agreed to an agenda and schedule for negotiations, with mid-September being set as a target for achieving the initial objective of reaching political agreements on a halt to the armed confrontation and any acts that infringed on the rights of the population. The issues on which political agreements were to be achieved related to the following: armed forces, human rights, judicial system, electoral system, constitutional reform, economic and social issues, and verification by the United Nations.

Two substantive rounds of negotiations were held in Mexico (19-25 June) and Costa Rica (19-26 July), at the end of which the parties concluded an agreement on human rights [A/44/971-S/21541] (see PART THREE, Chapter X), which contained detailed commitments to guarantee unrestricted respect for human rights and provided for the establishment of a one-year, renewable UN verification mission with the powers to take whatever legally permissible action it might deem appropriate for promoting and protecting human rights. Implementation of the verification mission was conditioned on a halt to the armed confrontation, but the parties agreed later that it need not await the fulfilment of that condition.

On 3 August [S/22031, annex], the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that, in the context of achieving the initial objective as outlined in the April Geneva agreement, the United Nations might be requested to carry out certain tasks relating to verification of a cease-fire, monitoring of the forthcoming electoral process and human rights verification.

By a letter of 29 August to the President of the Security Council [S/21717], the Secretary-General stated that, from the most recent round of direct talks, it emerged that the parties wished preparations to be initiated at the earliest possible date for carrying out envisaged UN responsibilities relating to those tasks. His representative had ascertained that a broad spectrum of the Salvadorian society, as well as all political parties, widely shared that wish of the Government and of FMLN. The Secretary-General added that while in the absence of a formal and verifiable cessation of combat there was no certainty that conditions existed for carrying out those tasks in a systematic fashion throughout El Salvador, he believed that the time had come to take steps which would put the United Nations in a position to assess the local situation and initiate preparations so as to undertake the monitoring tasks as soon as circumstances permitted. He therefore sought the Council's concurrence with his making the necessary arrangements, including the possible establishment of a small preparatory office for the UN verification mission. Verification would await further consultation with Council members. The Council President relayed the Council members' concurrence on 6 September [S/21718].

The human rights agreement arrived at on 26 July was followed by two direct meetings held in San Jose in August and September. The Secretary-General's Personal Representative also undertook frequent trips to meet with President Cristiani and senior commanders of FMLN, and was in frequent contact with leaders and representatives of a wide array of political parties, social organizations and church leaders in El Salvador. The Secretary-General himself met with President Cristiani and a high-level FMLN delegation and, as he reported, the question of El Salvador had come up frequently with leaders of Member States who were in a position to assist his efforts.

While significant progress was made, considerable problems were encountered in the negotiations, particularly on the most difficult, sensitive and complex issue of the armed forces. In an effort to reinvigorate the negotiating process, at a direct meeting in Mexico City (29-31 October), the two parties reached consensus on the need to make adjustments in the negotiation mechanics, placing greater emphasis on the active role of the Secretary-General's Representative and his role as intermediary, and on the confidential character of future direct meetings.

In October, the Presidents of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua issued a statement of support [A/45/647-S/21885] for the Salvadorian Government's preparedness to declare a unilateral cease-fire taking effect as soon as FMLN took a similar decision. They called on FMLN to declare a cease-fire as soon as possible, so as to create an atmosphere conducive to a peaceful and democratic settlement.

On 21 November [A/45/737-S/21956], Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua requested the Secretary-General, in exercise of the duties conferred on him by the April Geneva agreement, to make personal representations to FMLN in order to ensure early cessation of hostilities launched the previous day, a request supported by the United States [A/45/799-S/21967], which deplored FMLN's callous disregard of commitments.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In a report of 8 November on the situation in Central America [A/45/706-S/21931], the Secretary-General also gave an account of the developments related to the situation in El Salvador up to that date and his endeavours to advance negotiations. While noting that significant progress had been recorded, he pointed out that it had not been possible to reach agreement on the most complex issues of the armed forces. However, he remained persuaded that, given the necessary will, coupled with perseverance and flexibility on both sides, and with support from outside Powers in a position to provide such support, the goal of peace in El Salvador could be achieved in the not too distant future.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 45/172, the General Assembly, noting that the Secretary-General had continued to provide his good offices for the holding of talks between the Government and FMLN and voicing deep concern about the persistence of the armed conflict in El Salvador and the recent escalation of violence, expressed satisfaction with the signing of the April agreement which, it said, set in motion a negotiating process under the Secretary-General's auspices, with a view to ending the armed conflict as speedily as possible, promoting democratization, guaranteeing unrestricted respect for human rights, and reunifying the Salvadorian society. The Assembly noted that the two parties, when adopting the general agenda for the negotiating process in Caracas on 21 May, had agreed that the initial objective would be, first, to secure political agreements on the armed forces, human rights, the judicial and the electoral systems, constitutional reform, the economic and social problems, and verification by the United Nations and, secondly, to achieve agreements for arranging a halt to the armed confrontation and any acts that infringed the rights of the civilian population, all of which would have to be verified by the United Nations subject to Security Council approval.

Voicing full support for the work of intermediation by the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative in the search for a negotiated political solution, the Assembly urged the Government and FMLN to make the greatest possible effort to implement all the political agreements announced in Geneva and Caracas, particularly taking into account the Secretary-General's proposals for facilitating the negotiating process and achieving a just and lasting peace in the shortest possible time. It requested both parties to continue their dialogue and foster agreements with a view to a firm and lasting peace.

Report of Secretary-General (December). In a 21 December report [S/22031], the Secretary-General updated the account of his efforts to promote a negotiated political solution to the conflict in El Salvador. While significant progress had been accomplished, as exemplified in the 26 July agreement on human rights, considerable problems had been encountered in reaching agreement on the armed forces, the most sensitive issue on the agenda. Given the pervasive character of that question, it had not been possible to make substantive progress on other items, the Secretary-General stated.

To reinvigorate the negotiating process, the parties, with the participation of the Secretary-General's Representative, agreed on 31 October to make adjustments in the negotiations mechanism.

According to the Secretary-General, both parties had signified their desire to have the human rights mechanism in place as soon as possible without waiting for other agreements to be concluded, and, at their recent meeting in Puntarenas, Costa Rica, the five Central American Presidents had urged him to deploy the human rights verification mechanism without delay. He therefore informed the Council of his intention shortly to request authorization to establish a United Nations Observer Mission in El Salvador (ONUSAL), with the task of monitoring agreements concluded between the Government and FMLN. Pending conclusion of other agreements, the Secretary-General recommended, as a first step towards establishing such an integrated operation, that its human rights verification component be set up as soon as the necessary preparations had been made on the ground and the extent to which its tasks could be conducted in the absence of a cease-fire had been determined. Also, it would be necessary to determine the personnel required for the operation, for which no precedent existed, and to work out satisfactory arrangements with the parties to ensure safe deployment and effective functioning. To that end, the Secretary-General would dispatch to El Salvador, as early as practicable in 1991, a technical mission to assist him in preparing an operational plan for submission to the Council. Thereafter, he would urge early Council action.

Noting that at the moment no agreement existed between the parties for UN observation of the process leading up to the legislative and municipal elections scheduled for March 1991, the Secretary-General said he was not in a position to recommend that such observation be carried out under the circumstances. It was his understanding that OAS had decided to observe the elections, although the criteria involved were different from those applying to the United Nations.

At the appropriate time, the Secretary-General added, he would seek the Council's authorization for the deployment of the other components of ONUSAL, to cover verification of other political agreements that might be arrived at, as well as of a cease-fire, in keeping with the concept of a single, integrated operation. Meanwhile, he had taken steps to establish a preparatory office in El Salvador which was concentrating in particular on planning human rights verification, preparing procedures, establishing contacts with government agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and carrying out a public information programme.

Guatemala

On 30 March 1990, a delegation of the National Reconciliation Commission of Guatemala, acting with the full support of the Government, and a delegation of the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG), with the full support of its General Command, signed in Oslo, Norway, a Basic Agreement for the Search for Peace by Political Means, with a view to initiating a serious process and seeking ways to bring about a peaceful solution as well as functional and participatory democracy in Guatemala. To that end, the National Reconciliation Commission and URNG agreed to carry out a series of activities and, by mutual agreement, appointed as Conciliator Monsignor Rodolfo Quezada Toruño in his capacity as Chairman of the National Reconciliation Commission, a body established by the Government in accordance with the Esquipulas II agreements [YUN 1987, p. 188]. On 21 May, the Secretary-General, with the express support of the President of the Republic, accepted the two parties' request that he observe the activities to be carried out, bearing in mind that the March agreement fell within the framework of the Esquipulas II agreements, as endorsed by Security Council resolution 637(1989) [YUN 1989, p. 163].

Pursuant to the March agreement, five meetings were held, under the auspices of the National Reconciliation Commission and in the presence of the Conciliator and the Secretary-General's appointed Observer, between representatives of URNG and of political parties, private enterprises, religious and popular groups, and of a mixed sector representing academics, professionals and small- and medium-sized businesses. Those meetings took place in El Escorial, Spain (27 May-1 June); Ottawa, Canada (31 August-1 September); Quito, Ecuador (24-26 September); and Metepec, Mexico (23-25, 27-28 October). The next phase envisaged under the March agreement would be the holding of talks between the Government, the Guatemalan Army and the General Command of URNG with a view to achieving a political solution to the internal armed confrontation. In an 8 November report [A/45/706-S/21931], which covered the above developments, as well as those in other Central American countries, the Secretary-General expressed the hope that the process initiated would continue and pave the way for a process of reconciliation and peace in Guatemala.

Taking note with interest of the progress of the talks between the various sectors of Guatemalan society and URNG pursuant to the March agreement, the General Assembly, in resolution 45/15, encouraged the Guatemalan Government to continue to support the national reconciliation process by pursuing its dialogue with the various sectors in order to achieve a peaceful settlement of the lengthy confrontation which had been taking place in the country.

Nicaragua

The Central American peace process took a big step forward with the successful conclusion of the UN-supervised elections in Nicaragua on 25 February 1990. It was the first time the United Nations had been called upon to verify an election in an independent sovereign State. Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, who headed the National Opposition Union coalition, was elected President with 54.7 per cent of the total ballots cast. Both she and outgoing President Daniel Ortega Saavedra, the candidate of the Sandinista Front of National Liberation (Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional (FSLN)), who had been in power since 1979, requested a UN presence in Nicaragua until the 25 April inauguration, to facilitate a peaceful and orderly transition.

In the post-electoral atmosphere, charged with uncertainty, demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance became a high priority. To that end, the UN Secretary-General at the beginning of March reached agreement with the OAS Secretary-General on the modus operandi of CIAV in relation to the two organizations' responsibilities in the demobilization and voluntary repatriation of members of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families in Honduras and Costa Rica and in providing assistance to former combatants once inside Nicaragua. Of the 36,684 former Nicaraguan combatants and their families registered in Honduras, 15,124 had been repatriated by mid-October. Of the 23,463 Nicaraguan refugees, 20,385 had also been repatriated.

At the Secretary-General's request, the Security Council, by resolution 650(1990) of 27 March, authorized an enlargement of the mandate of ONUCA to enable it to play a part in the demobilization process (see above). On the same date, the two transition teams designated by the President and the President-elect of Nicaragua signed a Protocol of Procedure for the Transfer of Executive Power which, inter alia, considered demobilization before 23 April as essential in creating the climate for a peaceful transfer. The Protocol was annexed to the fifth and final report of the United Nations Observer Mission to verify the electoral process in Nicaragua (see below).

The demobilization of the Nicaraguan resistance was essentially completed on 28 June. In a letter to the Chief Military Observer of ONUCA, the Nicaraguan Government stated its full satisfaction with the process carried out by ONUCA.

The demobilization of over 22,400 resistance members and the destruction of their weapons, including small arms, grenade launchers and missiles, appeared to close a chapter of a conflict with 30,000 casualties which had taken a toll on every Nicaraguan family, the Secretary-General said in his November report on the situation in Central America [A/45/706-S/21931]. He added that all the problems, however, were not solved by the demobilization itself, as the country still faced a daunting task of reconciliation and reconstruction which deserved all possible assistance from the international community.

UN Observer Mission for electoral verification

The 25 February Presidential elections were observed by the United Nations Observer Mission for the Verification of the Electoral Process in Nicaragua (ONUVEN), established in August 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 169]. Elliot L. Richardson, as the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, oversaw the Mission's activities, while Iqbal Riza served as Chief of Mission and Horatio Boneo as Deputy Chief. More than 1.5 million Nicaraguans—or 86 per cent of the electorate—went to the polls in the first UN-monitored elections in an independent country.

The final task of ONUVEN, to verify the fairness of the polling and counting of votes, was carried out by over 240 observers representing more than 50 different nationalities. To those drawn from the UN Secretariat as well as from UN organizations and agencies were added poll-watchers from over 20 Member States. The voting was evaluated by ONUVEN as "free and fair". On election day, observers visited 2,155 voting stations in 141 of the 143 municipalities.

On 26 February, the accurate projection of the voting results made the previous night by ONUVEN was confirmed by the results officially announced by the Supreme Electoral Council. President Ortega publicly accepted the results and declared the readiness of FSLN to transfer power on 25 April to the new Government to be formed by the National Opposition Union through a peaceful and orderly transition process. Both the President and the President-elect requested the Secretary-General, through his Personal Representative, to maintain a UN presence in Nicaragua to ensure a peaceful and orderly transition. For that purpose, the Secretary-General assigned a small team of 12 UN officers, headed by the ONUVEN Chief of Mission, to remain in the country, to assist both in outstanding electoral issues as well as in the political aspects of the transition.

ONUVEN reports. From its establishment in August 1989 to its termination in March 1990, ONUVEN issued five reports on the electoral process in Nicaragua—two in 1989 and three in early 1990. ONUVEN's third report, of 31 January 1990 [A/44/917], covered the period from the beginning of the electoral campaign in early December 1989 to the end of January 1990. By the beginning of December, the core group of observers had been enlarged by 20 additional personnel and ONUVEN regional offices had been opened in eight of the country's nine regions. The report described the administration of the electoral process; the conduct of the electoral campaign, including financing; electoral strategies of the different parties; military actions in conflict areas; and the role of the mass media in the campaign.

The fourth ONUVEN report [A/44/921] was timed to appear on the day following the closing of the electoral campaign on 21 February. It covered the events during the last three weeks of the campaign and gave an overall assessment of the electoral process since its inception up to the close of the campaign. In ONUVEN's opinion, the people of Nicaragua were in a position to decide between alternatives which had been given a reasonable chance to be aired and would be free to determine their future government at the ballot boxes on 25 February.

In the early morning of 26 February, the Secretary-General was informed by his Personal Representative of the preliminary assessment of ONUVEN that the voting had been conducted under normal conditions without intimidation or violence and could be considered free and fair. The fifth and final ONUVEN report [A/44/927] of 30 March confirmed the preliminary assessment by stating that the electoral process had been impartial and fair throughout. The election data, voting returns, trend projections and other information was appended to that report, as was the text of the Protocol on the Procedure for the Transfer of Executive Power.

Economic and social reconciliation

On 27 September 1990 [A/45/PV.10], newly elected President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro addressed the UN General Assembly and appealed to other nations that Nicaragua be accorded preferential treatment befitting a nation which had just emerged from a major fratricidal war, with a toll of thousands dead, wounded and orphaned and material damage unprecedented in Latin American history. In order to help resolve the country's economic and social crisis, guarantee a stable environment and demonstrate clearly to the international community that external assistance would contribute significantly to a solution, representatives of the Government and of 35 employers' and workers' organizations, invited by the President, participated in an economic and social conciliation process which resulted in a National Conciliation Agreement on Economic and Social Matters signed on 26 October that was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 29 November [A/45/818, annex I]. A permanent Verification and Follow-up Commission for the Agreement was to meet at intervals required by the situation; it was to be responsible for drawing up the agenda and recommending the necessary action for expanding the climate of social stability.

The National Assembly welcomed with satisfaction the fact that all political, social and economic forces had asserted that only through concerted efforts would Nicaragua be able to begin to overcome its problems [A/45/818, annex II]. The leaders of the various regional councils of demobilized members of the Nicaraguan resistance, meeting on 27 and 28 October, declared their firm support and complete adherence to the Conciliation Agreement [A/45/818, annex III].

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/15, welcomed the Agreement and endorsed, in particular, the provision concerning exceptional circumstances and the invitation to the international community and international funding agencies to provide effective and efficient support for implementation of the Agreement.

The Caribbean

Haiti

Jean-Bertrand Aristide was elected President of Haiti on 16 December 1990 in that nation's first free and democratic elections. The largely violence-free electoral process and voting were closely monitored by the United Nations Observer Group for the Verification of Elections in Haiti (ONUVEH), established by the Secretary-General following the adoption by consensus on 10 October of resolution 45/2, by which the General Assembly approved a plan for electoral assistance to Haiti at a cost of up to $6.5 million. Agreement was reached following extensive consultations among Member States, four months after the President of Haiti's Interim Government, Ertha Pascal-Trouillot, officially requested aid.

The 1990 elections-and ONUVEH's work-took place in a difficult and complex social, political and material context. After Jean-Claude Duvalier, who had inherited the title "President for Life" from his father, left the country in 1986, Haiti had had a succession of governments, each the product of either a coup d'état or apparently questionable elections. With democratic tradition almost non-existent, Haiti had no permanent electoral body or voter registry and civil registry records were unreliable. Nearly four fifths of the population were illiterate and lived in conditions of extreme poverty. Many roads were barely passable and communications networks were tenuous.

Mr. Aristide, the candidate of the Front national pour le changement et la démocratie, won by a landslide, with 67.5 per cent of the vote. Marc Bazin of the Alliance nationale démocratique populaire obtained 14.2 per cent of the total. The remaining 18.3 per cent was distributed among nine other candidates.

By election day, a total of 193 ONUVEH observers from 43 countries were deployed throughout the country, visiting 1,800 of the 14,000 polling places. A core group of 39 observers had been operating since mid-October in Haiti's nine departments, including the capital city. The chief of electoral operations was Horatio Boneo, Deputy Chief of the UN Observation Mission for the Verification of Elections in Nicaragua (see above). General G. Zuliani was chief of security observers, and João Augusto de Medicis was the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, whose appointment became effective on 19 June.

The success of the elections was attributed widely to the determination and discipline of the Haitian people, the professional behaviour of the Haitian army, which kept its promise to guarantee the security of the elections, and ONUVEH's crucial security and electoral work. Hundreds of observers from OAS and NGOs were also present on election day.

On 21 December, shortly after the elections, the General Assembly, in resolution 45/257 A, asked the Secretary-General to consult the Government of Haiti as soon as possible concerning the launching of a special emergency assistance programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/2.

Electoral assistance to Haiti

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the letters dated 23 June and 9 August 1990 from the President of the Provisional Government of the Republic of Haiti to the Secretary-General, in which the President requested assistance from the United Nations in order to achieve the peaceful and efficient development of the coming electoral process,

Reaffirming the sovereign right of the people of Haiti to choose and participate freely in the determination of their own destiny without any external interference,

Aware of the efforts of the people of Haiti to consolidate their democratic institutions in the face of the potential for destabilization,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with regional organizations and Member States, to provide the broadest possible support to the Government of Haiti in meeting, to the extent possible, the following requests:

(a) A nucleus of some fifty observers that would arrive in Haiti prior to voter registration and would leave only after the elections;

(b) Reinforcement of the nucleus at the time of elections and voter registration, bringing the total to a few hundred observers;

(c) Assistance to the Co-ordinating Committee for the security of the elections, to be provided by two or three advisers;

(d) Observation of the implementation of the electoral security plans by specialized staff, that is, by observers, the number of whom remains to be determined, with solid experience in the public order field;

2. Urges the international community and relevant international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with Haiti, in order to support the economic and social development efforts of the country;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Observer Group for the Verification of Elections in Haiti

A first group of four international staff arrived in Haiti on 4 October 1990 to establish a presence in the country and begin to set up the communications system. The group was originally sent on mission under an ongoing technical assistance project financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and was later incorporated into ONUVEH. Following the adoption of the General Assembly resolution above authorizing the establishment of ONUVEH, the first six members of the mission proper arrived in Haiti on 13 October; they were joined by other groups on 14 and 15 October and by the Secretary-General's Personal Representative on 16 October. Other electoral and administrative officials arrived between 17 and 23 October, while the first members of the security subdivision arrived on 24 October.

Starting on 17 October, the first teams of electoral observers, headed by the eight regional coordinators, were deployed to the departments; those teams were later supplemented as the remaining observers arrived in Port-au-Prince. Despite the initial lack of vehicles, the deployment of security observers began on 1 November. Manning was complete by 27 November.

ONUVEH'S assignment was to observe the electoral process and to ascertain that it was conducted in a fair manner and in a climate of security and freedom. The task of the electoral observers was to observe the different electoral operations and to assess, in particular, whether the political parties had been free to organize and allowed to mobilize the voters, whether the candidates had equal access to the media, whether voters had been able to register and cast their ballots freely and whether the votes had been counted honestly. ONUVEH's security component, secondary to the electoral verification component, comprised security observers whose role was to see that the security plans were effectively implemented throughout the country. Their task, therefore, was to establish contacts with the Haitian military, which had exclusive responsibility for ensuring the country's security, to point out shortcomings and to make an overall assessment of the safeguards provided for those who wished to vote. Two security advisers were assigned to the Co-ordinating Committee for the Security of Electoral Activities (CCSAE).

The Haitian body responsible for organizing the elections was the Interim Electoral Council (CEP) which, since its inception, had had to draft a new electoral law, rebuild the virtually non-existent apparatus for administering elections and train civil servants with no experience in such matters, all in difficult social and financial conditions. Beginning in May 1990, UNDP provided technical assistance to CEP in the form of consultants.

ONUVEH reports. On 14 December 1990, the Secretary-General transmitted the first report of ONUVEH [A/45/870], giving an account of the Haitian authorities' request for UN assistance, the context in which the electoral process was taking place, the evolution of that process up to 14 December—two days before the first round of the elections—and the installation and activities of ONUVEH, including co-ordination with other observer missions.

In a country traumatized by the experience of the elections of 29 November 1987—which had been cancelled after a campaign of terror during which a presidential candidate and a leading political figure had been assassinated and which culminated on election day with the massacre of some 80 persons throughout the country, with 200 more injured—the first task of ONUVEH was to help create a psychological climate conducive to the holding of democratic elections, the report stated. The voter registration drive began on 5 October and the election campaign commenced officially on 7 November. In all, 11 candidates were standing for election to the presidency, 131 for the Senate and 382 for the Chamber of Deputies. More than 3.2 million individuals registered to vote. On the whole, the election campaign reportedly proceeded in conditions of calm, despite a few isolated incidents, the most tragic among them a hand-grenade attack on the night of 5 December, at the end of a pro-Aristide rally in Port-au-Prince, which killed seven people and seriously injured more than 50 others, including women and children. However, the climate of confidence in the elections was not seriously affected, nor was the electoral process itself hampered by the attack.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General's Personal Representative stated that the aspects of the electoral process most open to criticism—such as certain irregularities during voter registration and exclusion of many candidates owing to rigorous application of very detailed provisions of the electoral law—should not overshadow its highly positive ones. After years of dictatorship and censorship, there was complete freedom of expression throughout the election campaign, with no restrictions on the broadcast or written press and no reported personal intimidation of journalists. Despite some minor, inconsequential incidents, the election campaign had been virtually violence-free, the events of 5 December, at the end of the campaign, being the one notable exception. The fairness of the electoral race was evidenced by the visible absence of abuse of State property in favour of any given candidate.

The impartiality of CEP and of the executive branch and the armed forces towards political figures also deserved to be mentioned, the Personal Representative said. Party coalitions, for instance, were definitely sought after and encouraged by CEP, but did not result in an imbalance between the various competing forces. Although many candidates were rejected for failing to meet the formal requirements of the complex electoral law that was strictly applied, the candidates allowed to run for office represented, in the Personal Representative's opinion, the entire spectrum of the country's social and political life, incontestably enabling the Haitian people to make a genuine electoral choice in order to determine their future freely.

On the eve of the first round of the elections, he concluded, it could be said that the electoral process took place under favourable conditions, with the international community's support having helped to achieve that result. He further hoped that the campaign would culminate in fair, peaceful and credible elections.

The conduct of the first round of the elections on 16 December was described in the second and final report of ONUVEH [A/45/870/Add.I], together with certain supplementary elections held in some districts on 6 January 1991 and the second and final round, which took place in most districts on 20 January. ONUVEH's activities at various stages of the electoral process were also highlighted.

ONUVEH estimated that between 62.5 per cent and 71.4 per cent of the 3,227,155 registered voters had cast their ballots. Although marked by irregularities, the first round of general elections was reported to have taken place without violence or intimidation. In its overall evaluation of the elections, ONUVEH stated that most of the irregularities observed had been caused by the difficulties in organizing the balloting in a country which suffered bitterly from a lack of transport and communication facilities and had scarcely any electoral experience. The ONUVEH observers did not detect any sign of fraudulent intent or any trace of planned action. In the case of the presidential election, the report said, the irregularities were not of a kind likely to cast doubt on the final result, Aristide's triumph being so overwhelming.

In spite of the problems involving logistics, organization and calculation of results, ONUVEH did not doubt the impartiality of the electoral authorities, and, despite the fact that the members of CEP were lacking in experience, it felt that they showed great courage in assuming responsibility for a delicate mission and in carrying it out without being intimidated by threats.

At the outset, ONUVEH said, security of the elections had been the principal unknown, but it was provided beyond reproach by the Haitian Armed Forces. CCSAE discharged its heavy responsibilities by devising, with the assistance of the two ONUVEH experts, a national security plan for the election days, which was supplemented by local measures. With the assistance of the ONUVEH security observers who, by their presence, helped to reassure the population and encouraged the dialogue between the civil, especially the electoral, authorities and the military, the army largely regained the confidence of the Haitians, who were not afraid to cast their ballots and congratulated the army on its professionalism.

The report stated a need to establish a sound electoral system, as the Haitian authorities would soon face the necessity of training the staff of the Permanent Electoral Council to be established, preparing a permanent electoral register linked to an improved civil file, providing each voter with a suitable civil-electoral document, and launching a civil education campaign. The international community could not but share their concern for building an effective electoral system, the report concluded.

ONUVEH financing

In his statement [A/C.5/45/13] on the programme budget implications of the draft text on electoral assistance to Haiti, which was adopted by the General Assembly as resolution 45/2, the Secretary-General estimated requirements of ONUVEH for the period from early October 1990 to January 1991 to be $9,368,300, of which $5,681,500 was for personnel costs and $3,686,800 for operational costs. In the opinion of the Chairman of ACABQ, as expressed in an oral report to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 10 October [A/C.5/45/SR.6], the net additional amount for ONUVEH during that time should not exceed $6.5 million, to be appropriated eventually under the regular programme budget for 1990-1991. The actual amount, within the $6.5 million ceiling, should be reflected in a special performance report to be submitted to the Assembly near the close of the current session; Pending that report, the Secretary-General should be authorized to enter in commitments not exceeding $5 million. The Fifth Committee informed the Assembly that, should it adopt the text, the net additional amount required should not exceed the ceiling set by ACABQ.

As requested, the Secretary-General on 10 December presented a report on ONUVEH [A/C.5/45/67], noting that, in view of the run-off elections scheduled for 16 January, the mission was being extended until 28 January 1991. The costs for that extension had been more than offset by a number of factors, he said, such as delays in fielding staff and security experts and anticipated vacancies. Overall, he estimated requirements at $5,867,000—comprising $4,352,000 for personnel costs and $1,515,000 for operating costs—which would make an additional appropriation under the 1990-1991 budget necessary.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/248 B, section III.

Electoral assistance to Haiti

[The General Assembly . . .]

1. Decides to appropriate an amount of 5 million dollars to be placed provisionally under the custody of the Secretary-General under section 1 of the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991, on the understanding that such a decision does not imply any judgement on the nature of the activities of the United Nations Observer Group for the Verification of Elections in Haiti;

2. Also decides that this amount is to be financed as a revised estimate arising from extraordinary expenses;

3. Further decides that this should not prejudice the way to treat revised estimates arising from extraordinary expenses as referred to in paragraph 11 of annex I to its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986;

Other questions relating to the Americas

Cuba-United States

Alleged attack on merchant ship

On 2 February, Cuba requested the convening of the Security Council to consider an alleged armed attack on a Cuban merchant ship in the Gulf of Mexico, in international waters, by a United States Coast Guard vessel [S/21120].

According to a note from Cuba dated 31 January [S/21121, annex II], the vessel Herman was leased by a Cuban firm and had a 12-member Cuban crew on board when it was attacked that day, en route from the Cuban port of Moa to the Mexican port of Tampico, under the pretext that it might be carrying illicit narcotics.

Cuba said the attack on a peaceful merchant ship seriously endangered the lives of 12 Cuban citizens, violated their human rights, and violated the rules of international law and freedom of navigation in international waters. The United States had been given due warning of the decision by the captain and the crew of the Herman that their attempt to detain and board the vessel would not be tolerated; due to the skills and expertise of its crew, the Herman was able to evade the repeated attempts to board and sink it, Cuba maintained.

In another note, dated 1 February [S/21121, annex I], Cuba demanded that the United States desist from all acts of provocation and accept responsibility for the damage caused to the Herman and for the risks to which its crew was exposed.

Giving its account of the incident, the United States, by a letter of 3 February [S/21122], said that a United States Coast Guard cutter had encountered the Herman in international waters in the Gulf of Mexico on the morning of 30 January. Coast Guard authorities had requested permission to board and inspect the vessel, as there was reason to suspect that it was carrying narcotics or other contraband. The captain denied permission and proceeded towards Mexico.

Subsequently, the Coast Guard confirmed the vessel's Panamanian registry and obtained permission from Panama to inspect the vessel; after consultations with United States and Panamanian authorities, the Coast Guard advised the Herman that it would use necessary force if the vessel did not stop and permit it to board.

Cuba informed the United States that the crew was Cuban and insisted that the vessel be allowed to continue unimpeded. United States authorities advised Cuba that they would defer enforcement action for several hours so as to allow Cuba to instruct its nationals aboard the ship to cooperate with that lawful exercise pursuant to the instructions of the flag State.

The United States said that Cuba then inexplicably ordered the crew of the Herman to resist any attempt to board by the Coast Guard. After pursuing the ship all night in international waters and exhausting all internationally accepted alternative means to stop it, the Coast Guard cutter fired small-calibre rounds at its engines in an attempt to disable it. The vessel still ignored orders to stop and proceeded into Mexican territorial waters, which the cutter did not enter, terminating pursuit approximately 15.5 miles from the Mexican coast.

The Coast Guard was engaged in a normal and routine law enforcement activity, the United States asserted, and its action was fully consistent with international maritime law and practice. The cutter had resorted to authorized and appropriate force only after the captain's continued refusal to stop and after exhausting all internationally recognized means to get him to do so.

By instructing the crew of the Herman to resist an authorized boarding, Cuba jeopardized the lives and safety of its citizens and demonstrated blatant disregard for legitimate law enforcement efforts to investigate and interdict illicit narcotics trafficking in the region, the United States alleged, and its active endeavours to thwart the Coast Guard search of the ship called into question its publicly stated claim of actively combating such trafficking.

By a letter of 5 February [S/21127], Panama stressed that the vessel in question flew the Panamanian flag and the Government had given express permission for United States authorities to board and inspect it. Panama accepted that all necessary measures might be taken, in such cases, including the use of force.

The Security Council met on 9 February [S/PV.2907]. Citing rule 20 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure, the President (Cuba) yielded the Chair, for the purpose of the consideration of the item currently on the agenda, to the member next in English alphabetical order (Democratic Yemen). After hearing statements by Cuba and the United States in which both in principle reiterated their positions, the President announced that the next meeting would be fixed in consultation with Council members. No further action was taken.

Television broadcasts and other issues

By a letter of 17 January [S/21091], Cuba complained about the planned installation on United States territory of a television station designed exclusively to transmit to Cuba in Spanish. According to revelations of its promoters, that plan was based on the compulsive occupation of one or more television channels in Cuban territory; it was clearly an attempt, Cuba alleged, to mutilate Cuba's national sovereignty and prevent it from administering its radio-electric spectrum, in violation of the 1982 Convention of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), to which both the United States and Cuba were parties; of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)]; and of conventions and agreements of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) relative to the use of satellites for television services. Cuba reiterated its readiness to negotiate with the United States on a mutual medium-wave interference and reciprocity of radio transmissions on that frequency band, including the exchange of radio and television programmes; it would also be ready to submit any complaints arising in that respect to international arbitration.

Following the first transmission by Television Martí on 27 March, Cuba charged [S/21210 & Corr.1] the United States with committing an act of aggression by usurping a Cuban broadcast channel, and warned that it had intercepted the signals and would block any new forcible attempt to occupy its broadcasting spectrum. On 11 April [S/21249], Cuba transmitted to the Security Council President objections raised by the ITU International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB), stating that establishment by the United States of the broadcasting station in question, considering its location, relative power, high antenna height and antenna directivity, was in contravention of No. 2666 of the radio regulations annexed to the 1982 ITU Convention. On 20 June [S/21365], Cuba transmitted a further communication reaffirming the IFRB view.

By a letter of 30 April [S/21278], Cuba alleged that preparations for large-scale war manoeuvres were being taken by the United States, involving simulated aggression against Cuba, thus heightening tension in the region.

Nicaragua-United States

On 3 January 1990, Nicaragua complained [S/21066] to the Security Council that, on 29 December 1989, United States military forces had temporarily occupied the residence of the Ambassador of Nicaragua in Panama and, on 31 December, forced entry into the apartment of two other Nicaraguan diplomats. The incident had occurred, Nicaragua declared, in the context of the invasion and occupation of Panama by United States troops [YUN 1989, p. 172], which not only violated the purposes and objectives of the Charter of the United Nations, but also constituted a serious threat to peace and security in the region.

In a communiqué [A/44/913-S/21067] issued a day earlier, on 2 January, the Office of the President of the Republic of Nicaragua charged that, according to preliminary reports, mercenary elements of the counter-revolution, financed by the United States, on 1 January ambushed the members of a religious commission in the Atlantica Norte region, causing the deaths of two nuns and seriously wounding another, as well as wounding Bishop Paul Schmidt. That incident, Nicaragua said, was part of the escalation of violence by the United States, which had invaded Panama and made a military incursion into the residence of the Nicaraguan Ambassador there.

The Council met on 17 January [S/PV.2905] to consider the complaint of 3 January, with Nicaragua's Ambassador to Panama providing a detailed account of the incident. He claimed that at least 30 United States soldiers had searched his residence damaging much of its contents and removing cash, clothing, household appliances and other items. In a 31 December incident, United States soldiers, he claimed, had entered and robbed the apartment of two Nicaraguan diplomatic officials, adding that that action demonstrated that the United States had a plan to provoke Nicaragua in order to justify a warlike escalation against the Nicaraguan people.

The United States said that its Government had clearly expressed regret for the incident in a formal note to Nicaragua and, in addition, the highest levels of the United States Government, including the President, had voiced regret in public and stressed the continuing commitment fully to abide by the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512].

The United States stated that incidents had occurred against the backdrop of a situation in which armed bands, with large caches of weapons hidden all over Panama City and the country, seriously threatened law and order, life and liberty. United States forces had received what they considered a reliable report of a weapons cache at the house in question and United States military units arriving at the residence announced over a loudspeaker their intention to conduct a search. A man identifying himself as the Ambassador arrived at the scene, but was unable to produce official diplomatic documentation, and the United States soldiers were unable to confirm that the residence was his.

After entry, the United States said, a large weapons cache was found and removed. Once the United States soldiers determined that the premises were those of the Nicaraguan Embassy, they immediately returned the arms and left the area. No one was arrested or detained, nor was the residence itself damaged in any way. That same night, the United States Government formally expressed its regret to Nicaragua through diplomatic channels.

The United States said that the number and kinds of weapons found clearly were not intended for protecting the mission, but were the types used by the so-called Dignity Battalions, a group of marauding bands said to constitute the private army of General Manuel Antonio Noriega. Their presence was inconsistent with the diplomatic functions protected by the Vienna Convention and clearly violated article 41 thereof. While United States actions in the incident were regrettable, they did not pose any threat to international peace and security; therefore, there was no reason for the Council to adopt a resolution in response to the Nicaraguan complaint.

A draft resolution [S/21084] submitted by Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Ethiopia, Malaysia and Zaire, which would have declared the event a violation of the privileges and immunities recognized under international law and called for steps to avoid the recurrence of such measures, received 13 votes in favour to 1 against (United States), with 1 abstention (United Kingdom). The text was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

Co-operation with OAS

Report of Secretary-General. In September 1990, in response to General Assembly resolution 43/4 [YUN 1988, p. 174], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/499] on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS). Both organizations continued to co-operate on issues related to the situation in Central America and on other matters of mutual interest. Of major importance was the co-ordination of the activities of the missions of both organizations in the verification of the electoral process in Nicaragua, as well as in the voluntary demobilization, repatriation or relocation of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance (see above). In addition, OAS was represented on the Support Committee and the Policies and Projects Committee of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America and participated in arrangements for implementation of the Special Plan throughout 1990.

Throughout 1989 and 1990, consultations were held on projects, measures and procedures which would facilitate and broaden co-operation between the two organizations. At consultations in February 1990, the following observations and conclusions were highlighted: (a) Political matters, including peace-making and peace-keeping activities, had a high priority in both organizations; co-operation and co-ordination in those areas were the direct responsibilities of the offices of both Secretaries-General. (b) Differences existed in the level of delegated authority between the resident representatives of the United Nations and their OAS counterparts; as those differences could interfere with the level of co-ordination at the local level, future co-operation, taking that into account, had to be at the headquarters level. (c) It was noted that whereas activities of OAS and its executive agencies in education, science and culture were regional, its economic and social programmes were predominantly national. (d) Co-operation and co-ordination particularly in the technical co-operation area could be more effective with the participation of Member States concerned; the importance was stressed of establishing adequate co-ordination mechanisms between the two organizations, beginning with the planning stages of technical co-operation projects and including timely exchanges of information necessary for budget preparation. (e) Greater interaction between the two organizations could be developed, including the use of OAS facilities by UN officials and missions; a further suggestion was joint utilization of the development co-ordination report by UNDP, which in the future would include an assessment of the economic situation and technical assistance needs of each country. (f) Attention was drawn to the enhanced role of the resident co-ordinator, within the UN system, for the integration of sectoral inputs and for effective and coherent co-ordination; General Assembly resolution 44/211, on a comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [YUN 1989, p. 302], would provide closer co-operation of field representation of the UN system at the country level with the resident co-ordinator. (g) The co-ordination of activities between the United Nations and OAS, in both technical and non-technical areas, would make it possible to avoid duplication and overlapping and to make fuller use of the co-operation possibilities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/10.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/4 of 17 October 1988, relating to the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States,

Recalling that the purposes of the United Nations are, inter alia, to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends,

Bearing in mind that the Charter of the United Nations provides for the existence of regional arrangements and agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, and whose activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling also that the Charter of the Organization of American States reaffirms these purposes and principles, and provides that that organization is a regional agency under the terms of the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the initiative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States in the peace process in the Central American region,

Recalling further the document entitled "Co-operation between the Organization of American States and the United Nations", submitted to the General Assembly of the Organization of American States on 4 June 1990 in connection with resolution AG/RES.941(XVIII-0/88), adopted on 19 November 1988,

Bearing in mind the adoption by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States on 8 June 1990 of resolution AG/RES.1063(XX-0/90) recommending the establishment of a centre for the promotion of democracy to assist member States that are seeking to preserve and strengthen their democratic processes and institutions,

Convinced of the need for more efficient and co-ordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote the common objectives of the two organizations,

Aware that the effective consolidation of a new international order requires regional action in harmony with that of the United Nations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States, as well as his efforts to strengthen that co-operation;

2. Expresses its satisfaction the close co-operation between the two organizations in the verification of the electoral process in Nicaragua from August 1989 to February 1990;

3. Recognizes the effectiveness of the co-operation between the two organizations with respect to the procedures established by the Central American Presidents within the context of the subregional peace process;

4. Welcomes the results of the work of the International Support and Verification Commission, established by the Secretary General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of American States, as a machinery for the purposes of the execution and implementation of the Joint Plan for the voluntary demobilization, repatriation or relocation in Nicaragua or third countries of the members of the Nicaraguan resistance and their families, as well as assistance for the demobilization of all those involved in armed actions in the countries of the region when such persons voluntarily request it;

5. Recognizes the importance of the participation of the International Support and Verification Commission in the demobilization of the irregular forces of the Nicaraguan resistance and takes note with satisfaction of the fundamental role of the United Nations Observer Group in Central America in the military aspects of the process and of the activities of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the operational area;

6. Welcomes the participation of the Organization of American States in the Support Committee and the Policies and Projects Committee of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, established by General Assembly resolution 42/231 of 12 May 1988;

7. Takes note of the agreement of 6 April 1989 between the two organizations on the implementation of resolution 43/4, and of the consultations held at United Nations Headquarters on 14 February 1990;

8. Recommends that there should be an intensification of the preparations for the general meeting between representatives of the Organization of American States and of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, for the purpose of holding consultations on projects, measures and procedures which will facilitate and broaden co-operation between those organizations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States".

Chapter III

Asia and the Pacific

Never before in the 45-year history of the United Nations had the Security Council reacted with such unanimity to an invasion, occupation and purported annexation, said the Secretary-General in commenting on Council action following Iraq's early morning invasion of Kuwait on 2 August 1990. By the end of the year, the Council had adopted 10 resolutions on the crisis, including those unanimously condemning the invasion and demanding immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Iraqi forces. Comprehensive, mandatory sanctions were imposed against Iraq, the annexation of Kuwait was declared null and void, and a naval blockade to enforce the sanctions was endorsed. In November, the Council authorized the use of "all necessary means" to uphold and implement all relevant Security Council resolutions and to restore international peace and security in the area if Iraq had not fully implemented those resolutions on or before 15 January 1991.

With tensions increasing in 1990 in one area of Asia, significant progress was being made towards defusion and even final settlements in other parts. During the year, the Cambodian parties accepted a framework for a settlement drawn up by the five permanent members of the Security Council, which involved a major United Nations role through the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) to oversee United Nations-supervised elections and the installation of a temporary UN administration. The General Assembly and the Security Council endorsed the plan. On 3 February, Democratic Kampuchea reverted to the name Cambodia.

Another UN operation—the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan (UNGOMAP)—ended in March, and was immediately succeeded by the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan. The Secretary-General's efforts were particularly focused on promoting an international consensus to encourage an Afghan political process, which in turn would enable the Afghan people to exercise, unhindered, their right to self-determination.

Relations between Iran and Iraq in 1990 improved to the extent that it was possible to implement important aspects of the Security Council's 1987 cease-fire resolution. Withdrawal to internationally recognized boundaries took place in August and the repatriation of prisoners of war began.

The United Nations Command continued to report violations of the 1953 Armistice Agreement between the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea. As both countries, for the first time in 45 years, began a dialogue, the question of their membership in the United Nations was raised.

On 12 December 1990, the General Assembly, by decision 45/425, included the item entitled "Question of peace, stability and co-operation in South-East Asia" in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session.

Iraq-Kuwait

In the early morning of 2 August 1990, troops from Iraq crossed their country's eastern border into Kuwait, with Iraq claiming that Kuwait had been an integral part of Iraq until the First World War, when Kuwait had been severed from Iraq due to acts of British colonialism. This position was the same as that propounded by Iraq in 1961 [YUN 1961, pp. 168-169] when Kuwait first applied for United Nations membership and in 1963 [YUN 1963, p. 91] when it was admitted to the United Nations.

Following the invasion, the Security Council met almost immediately, unanimously adopting its first resolution on the crisis the same day, condemning the Iraqi invasion and demanding an immediate and unconditional withdrawal to positions held on 1 August. Nevertheless, Iraq continued to tighten its control over Kuwait, culminating in its complete annexation as well as restrictions on the movement of foreign diplomats and third-country nationals. Accusations were also made against Iraq of gross human rights violations against the Kuwaiti people.

The Council subsequently imposed economic sanctions and an arms embargo on Iraq to ensure compliance with its resolutions. An international consensus emerged opposing the Iraqi annexation and demanding its withdrawal and the restoration of Kuwaiti independence and sovereignty, and was manifested in the deployment of international military forces in the Persian Gulf area to enforce the Security Council sanctions. Recognizing the serious economic and social effects those sanctions could have on some other countries, especially Jordan, which had close trading relations with Iraq and Kuwait, the Council took action to alleviate the resulting economic hardships on those States.

In December, with Iraq still not having complied with the Security Council resolutions, the Council stated that unless Iraq complied by 15 January 1991, Member States would be authorized to use all necessary means to uphold those resolutions and to restore international peace and security in the area. The year ended on an ominous note, with the situation still unresolved.

Post-invasion developments

On 2 August, following Iraq's military invasion, Kuwait [S/21423] and the United States [S/21424] requested an immediate meeting of the Security Council to consider Iraq's invasion of its neighbour Kuwait. Speaking before the Council, Kuwait said that it had been occupied by Iraq at dawn, with Baghdad Radio announcing that the aim of the military takeover was to overthrow the régime and establish a Government friendly to Iraq. Kuwait assured the Council that its Government remained in control and was defending the country's security. It said that the invasion had come less than a day after high-level talks between Iraq and Kuwait in Saudi Arabia, at which Kuwait said it had expressed its willingness to continue bilateral negotiations to reach a just and honourable solution that would take into account the legitimate rights of both countries. Kuwait requested that the Council demand the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all Iraqi forces to the positions they had occupied on 1 August.

Responding, Iraq said that the events taking place in Kuwait were internal matters. It stated that the "Free Provisional Government of Kuwait" had requested Iraqi assistance in establishing security and order and Iraq had decided to provide such assistance solely on that basis. It was pursuing no goal or objective in Kuwait, and its forces would withdraw as soon as order was restored. Iraq rejected what it called the flagrant intervention by the United States in the matter.

The United States said its policy was to support every diplomatic effort to resolve the crisis. There should be an end to Iraq's unprovoked military aggression. The Council had seldom faced a more blatant use of force, and should act immediately. The United States had been in touch with many States in the region to seek their support for the action of the international community and was asking the Council to accept its full responsibilities and support Kuwait in its hour of need.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (2 August)

On 2 August, the Security Council adopted resolution 660(1990).

The Security Council,

Alarmed by the invasion of Kuwait on 2 August 1990 by the military forces of Iraq,

Determining that there exists a breach of international peace and security as regards the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait,

Acting under Articles 39 and 40 of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait;
2. Demands that Iraq withdraw immediately and unconditionally all its forces to the positions in which they were located on 1 August 1990;
3. Calls upon Iraq and Kuwait to begin immediately intensive negotiations for the resolution of their differences and supports all efforts in this regard, and especially those of the League of Arab States;
4. Decides to meet again as necessary to consider further steps to ensure compliance with the present resolution.

Before the vote was taken, the representative of Yemen said that it would not participate in the vote because it had not received instructions.

Call for withdrawal

The Secretary-General issued a statement on 2 August welcoming the Security Council's prompt convening and important decision, noting that the events of the past hours were of the gravest consequence to the United Nations and Member States. On 3 August, the Secretary-General met in New York with Iraq's Permanent Representative and appealed for full implementation of the Council's resolution. He also met with the Ambassador of Kuwait, who informed him of the latest developments.

Iran, in a statement of the same date [S/21428], said that it could not remain indifferent to the developments in the Persian Gulf that threatened its national security and the stability of the region. It called on Iraq to withdraw all its forces immediately to the internationally recognized boundaries and to settle its disputes peacefully.

Japan [A/45/367-S/21427] and the European Community (EC) [A/45/368-S/21426], also on 2 August, called for the withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwaiti territory. The EC considered the use of force an unacceptable means for solving international differences and fully supported the resolution adopted by the Security Council.

The USSR, in a 3 August statement [A/45/387-S/21451], declared that the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kuwait must be fully restored and protected. It was convinced that the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Iraqi troops from Kuwaiti territory would help eliminate the dangerous tension in the Persian Gulf.

Statements of condemnation of Iraq and calls for a peaceful settlement of the conflict and withdrawal of Iraqi troops were also made by a number of other States.

Also on 3 August [A/45/399-S/21472], the United States Secretary of State and the Soviet Foreign Minister, following a meeting in Moscow, issued a joint statement calling for the full implementation of Security Council resolution 660(1990) and announcing actions their countries had taken, including the Soviet suspension of arms deliveries and the American freezing of Iraqi assets. They called on the League of Arab States, all Arab Governments, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to ensure that the UN resolution was carried out.

Also meeting in Cairo on the same day, at the request of Kuwait, the League of Arab States condemned [S/21434] the aggression by Iraq and called for its withdrawal. It asked Arab heads of State to consider convening an emergency summit to discuss the Iraqi aggression and rejected any foreign intervention or attempt to intervene in Arab affairs. The Ministerial Council of the Gulf Co-operation Council, meeting on 3 August, called upon [S/21430] the League of Arab States to adopt a unified stance with a view to bringing the aggression to an end.

In the face of the mounting international pressure for withdrawal from Kuwait, Iraq announced [S/21436] on 3 August that a withdrawal plan would be put into effect on 5 August as long as there was no threat to the security of Kuwait or Iraq. The following day, Kuwait, rejecting [S/21437] Iraq's reasons for the invasion, said that the aggression was directed at the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kuwait and its system of government. The sole conditions for withdrawal were those contained in resolution 660(1990). Kuwait said that it had adhered to the international agreements concluded with Iraq, including the 1932 exchange of notes and the 1963 Agreement, which confirmed the boundary lines agreed upon in 1932.

On 5 August, Kuwait informed [S/21443] the Secretary-General that the date fixed for the withdrawal of Iraqi forces had passed, and said there was absolutely no truth in Iraq's statement that its forces had begun to withdraw. What had been removed were captured Kuwaiti military mechanized units, which were in the process of being transported to Iraq. Repression had been stepped up as a result of the increasing popular resistance to the aggressor. A large number of Kuwaiti civilians had been transferred to Baghdad. Also on that date, Kuwait's Permanent Mission to the United Nations rejected [S/21440] the so-called new Government of Kuwait set up by the Iraqi regime, reaffirmed its loyalty to the Amir of Kuwait, Sheikh Jaber Al-Ahmad Al-Jaber Al-Sabah, and warned against any dealings with the so-called free Government.

Also on 5 August, the nineteenth Ministerial Conference of the Organization of the Islamic Conference condemned [S/21448] the Iraqi aggression, declaring null and void the consequences stemming therefrom, and expressed its support for the lawful Government of Kuwait. It said that it would monitor Iraq's unconditional compliance with its commitment to withdraw its forces from Kuwait.

On 4 August, Kuwait expressed [S/21438] the need for the commitment of all the parties concerned to the immediate implementation of the Council's resolution.

Three days later, the Twelfth Extraordinary Ministerial Council Meeting of the Gulf Co-operation Council (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 7 August) issued a statement [S/21468] reaffirming the 3 August resolution of the League of Arab States and the Security Council's resolutions, and called on Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait in accordance with those resolutions.

Imposition of sanctions

On 3 August [A/45/339-S/21472], in a joint statement, the USSR and the United States called on the international community to join in an international cut-off of all arms supplies to Iraq. The USSR had already suspended arms deliveries, and the United States had frozen Iraqi assets.

On 4 August, the EC imposed [A/45/383-S/21444] an embargo on oil imports from Iraq and Kuwait and agreed to stop selling arms and military equipment to Iraq. Iraqi assets were to be frozen. It suspended technical and scientific co-operation and application of the Generalized

System of Preferences. The following day, Japan took similar action [A/45/386-S/21449].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION {6 August}

On 6 August, in the light of Iraq's non-compliance with resolution 660(1990) of 2 August, the Security Council adopted resolution 661(1990).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 660(1990) of 2 August 1990,

Deeply concerned that that resolution has not been implemented and that the invasion by Iraq of Kuwait continues with further loss of human life and material destruction,

Determined to bring the invasion and occupation of Kuwait by Iraq to an end and to restore the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kuwait,

Noting that the legitimate Government of Kuwait has expressed its readiness to comply with resolution 660(1990).

Mindful of its responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security,

Affirming the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence, in response to the armed attack by Iraq against Kuwait, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Determines that Iraq so far has failed to comply with paragraph 2 of resolution 660(1990) and has usurped the authority of the legitimate Government of Kuwait;

2. Decides, as a consequence, to take the following measures to secure compliance of Iraq with paragraph 2 of resolution 660(1990) and to restore the authority of the legitimate Government of Kuwait;

3. Decides that all States shall prevent:

(a) The import into their territories of all commodities and products originating in Iraq or Kuwait exported therefrom after the date of the present resolution;

(b) Any activities by their nationals or in their territories which would promote or are calculated to promote the export or trans-shipment of any commodities or products from Iraq or Kuwait; and any dealings by their nationals or their flag vessels or in their territories in any commodities or products originating in Iraq or Kuwait and exported therefrom after the date of the present resolution, including in particular any transfer of funds to Iraq or Kuwait for the purposes of such activities or dealings;

(c) The sale or supply by their nationals or from their territories or using their flag vessels of any commodities or products, including weapons or any other military equipment, whether or not originating in their territories but not including supplies intended strictly for medical purposes, and, in humanitarian circumstances, foodstuffs, to any person or body in Iraq or Kuwait or to any person or body for the purposes of any business carried on in or operated from Iraq or Kuwait, and any activities by their nationals or in their territories which promote or are calculated to promote such sale or supply of such commodities or products;

4. Decides that all States shall not make available to the Government of Iraq, or to any commercial, industrial or public utility undertaking in Iraq or Kuwait, any funds or any other financial or economic resources and shall prevent their nationals and any persons within their territories from removing from their territories or otherwise making available to that Government or to any such undertaking any such funds or resources and from remitting any other funds to persons or bodies within Iraq or Kuwait, except payments exclusively for strictly medical or humanitarian purposes and, in humanitarian circumstances, foodstuffs;

5. Calls upon all States, including States non-members of the United Nations, to act strictly in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution notwithstanding any contract entered into or licence granted before the date of the present resolution;

6. Decides to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of the provisional rules of procedure, a Committee of the Security Council consisting of all the members of the Council, to undertake the following tasks and to report on its work to the Council with its observations and recommendations:

(a) To examine the reports on the progress of the implementation of the present resolution which will be submitted by the Secretary-General;

(b) To seek from all States further information regarding the action taken by them concerning the effective implementation of the provisions laid down in the present resolution;

7. Calls upon all States to co-operate fully with the Committee in the fulfilment of its tasks, including supplying such information as may be sought by the Committee in pursuance of the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Committee and to make the necessary arrangements in the Secretariat for that purpose;

9. Decides that, notwithstanding paragraphs 4 to 8 above, nothing in the present resolution shall prohibit assistance to the legitimate Government of Kuwait, and calls upon all States:

(a.) To take appropriate measures to protect assets of the legitimate Government of Kuwait and its agencies;

(b) Not to recognize any regime set up by the occupying Power;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the progress of the implementation of the present resolution, the first report to be submitted within thirty days;

11. Decides to keep this item on its agenda and to continue its efforts to put an early end to the invasion by Iraq.

Abstaining: Cuba, Yemen.

Kuwait [S/21452], while welcoming the Security Council's resolution imposing sanctions on Iraq, on 7 August reported to the Secretary-General that Iraq continued to conduct air raids against residential areas in Kuwait and had arrested Kuwaiti nationals and transferred them to Iraq.

The President of Cuba, in a letter of 8 August [S/21465] to the heads of State of the Arab countries, said that the United States and its allies were increasing and accelerating their preparations for direct military intervention in the crisis and were taking steps to establish a multinational force whose composition reflected a new alignment of forces world wide that would tip the balance against the interests of the Arab peoples. He urged the leaders of the Arab world to put aside differences and achieve a unity of views and action to face the dangers involved.

On 13 August, Iraq described [S/21503] the Security Council's action in resolution 661(1990) as unjust, precipitous and iniquitous, and stated that the objective of the embargo was that of starving the Iraqi people. It said that the Security Council had in a matter of days adopted a series of resolutions against it with a dispatch unprecedented in UN history, leaping to sanctions in total disregard of Iraq's position. While the Council sanctions in resolution 661(1990) had made exception for medical supplies and foodstuffs, the United States had from the outset intended to prevent the delivery of such supplies, to starve and intimidate the Iraqi people. The United States had also incited a number of other States to impose a blockade of Iraq's exports and imports. Iraq said that from the humanitarian aspect, the Security Council should have allowed a certain amount of oil to be exported to provide for humanitarian needs, principally foodstuffs and medicine.

Annexation of Kuwait

On 8 August, Kuwait stated that, in the light of the purported annexation of Kuwait by Iraq, it was requesting that the Security Council immediately resume consideration of the item "The situation between Iraq and Kuwait" [S/21469].

On the same day, the Gulf Co-operation Council also requested [S/21470] an immediate meeting of the Security Council in the light of the declaration of the Iraqi Revolution Command Council annexing the State of Kuwait to Iraq.

Speaking before the Security Council on 9 August, Kuwait said that the motive for the Iraqi aggression had become clear to the world as seen in the usurpation and total annexation of Kuwait by military force. It called on the Council and the international community to reject the annexation and consider it null and void, with no legal validity.

In explaining its action, Iraq told the Council that to weaken the region, foreign colonizers carved up its territory, transforming the Arab nation into 22 countries. In that way, a part of the region cherished by Iraq and its area of strategic access had been separated from it. That was why the Iraqi Revolutionary Council had decided to restore to the country the portion taken away from it, thus re-establishing the unity of the country.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION {9 August}

On 9 August, the Security Council adopted resolution 662(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990 and 661(1990) of 6 August 1990,

Gravely alarmed by the declaration by Iraq of a "comprehensive and eternal merger" with Kuwait,

Demanding once again that Iraq withdraw immediately and unconditionally all its forces to the positions in which they were located on 1 August 1990,

Determined to bring the occupation of Kuwait by Iraq to an end and to restore the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kuwait,

Determined also to restore the authority of the legitimate Government of Kuwait,

1. Decides that annexation of Kuwait by Iraq under any form and whatever pretext has no legal validity, and is considered null and void;

2. Calls upon all States, international organizations and specialized agencies not to recognize that annexation, and to refrain from any action or dealing that might be interpreted as an indirect recognition of the annexation;

3. Demands that Iraq rescind its actions purporting to annex Kuwait;

4. Decides to keep this item on its agenda and to continue its efforts to put an early end to the occupation.

Security Council resolution 662(1990)

9 August 1990 Meeting 2934 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members {S/21471}.

Kuwait, in a 16 August statement [S/21546 & Corr.1] referring to Iraq's claims to its territory, said that the Kuwaiti people had elected their first Amir in 1756, long before the emergence of modern Iraq as a State in the 1920s. With respect to an Iraqi claim that Kuwait had been linked with the Turkish administration in Iraq, Kuwait said that contacts with the Amir and Turkey had been made directly and had not passed through Iraq. When Kuwait was harassed by the Ottoman Empire, it made its own choice and signed the Treaty of 1899 with Great Britain. Iraq could not claim that Kuwait had been detached from Iraq following the First World War, which ended in 1918. If Iraq rejected its boundaries with Kuwait as being colonialist, Kuwait asked how it could accept those boundaries with one neighbour and reject them with another.

On 28 August, Kuwait informed [S/21663] the Secretary-General of reports that Iraq had decided to regard Kuwait as one of its own governorates and to change the name of the State of Kuwait. That demonstrated that Iraq did not wish to negotiate with regard to withdrawal and the restoration of legitimacy to Kuwait. The day before, Kuwait promulgated the Amiri Decree [S/21666], which stated that the temporary headquarters of the Government of Kuwait should be convened in Saudi Arabia or at any other location to be chosen by the Amir, Sheikh Jaber Al-Ahmad Al-Jaber Al-Sabah, and that any legislation, arrangement or measures issued by any authority or body claiming to exercise jurisdiction over the territory of Kuwait or any issue affecting its sovereignty and independence should be void, the only applicable legislation being that issued by the legitimate Government of Kuwait.

On 30 August, Kuwait issued a statement [S/21683] affirming the nullity of Iraq's decision to designate the State of Kuwait as a nineteenth governorate within its administrative structure. On 8 October, it informed [S/21853] the Secretary-General that on 2 September the Iraqi authorities had issued a decree abolishing the Kuwait civil status document, replacing it, subject to punishment, with the Iraqi personal identity card.

Sanctions implementation

On 15 August, the Secretary-General submitted an interim report [S/21536 & Corr.1] on implementation of Security Council resolution 661(1990) regarding sanctions. He stated that as of 15 August, 31 countries had responded to his request for information on the implementation of that resolution. He had also received a communication on behalf of the States members of the EC. He noted that the Security Council Committee established under resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait (the Sanctions Committee) had met on 9 August and elected its officers.

Kuwait on 16 August proposed [S/21545] to the Council President that the Council pay attention to all the loopholes that were and might be used by Iraq to circumvent the embargo measures.

On the same day, the United States informed [S/21537] the President of the Security Council that, at Kuwait's request, it had joined that country and other Governments in taking actions to intercept vessels seeking to engage in trade with Iraq or Kuwait in violation of mandatory Council sanctions. That was in accord with Article 51 of the Charter and resolution 661(1990). Force would only be used if necessary, and then only in a manner proportionate to prevent vessels from violating the sanctions.

Turkey on 20 August gave information [S/21577] on measures taken to facilitate the transit of non-commercial goods belonging to diplomatic and consular missions and third-country companies and staff from Iraq and Kuwait through Turkey. Earlier, on 14 August, Turkey had reported [S/21514] on its compliance with resolution 661(1990), including a shut-down of the oil pipeline between Iraq and Turkey.

Saudi Arabia on 22 August stated [S/21596] that there had been a halt in the exportation of Iraqi oil through pipelines across Saudi Arabian territory. Jordan on 23 August told [S/21614] the Secretary-General that it had informed Iraq it would prevent the transport of goods imported from Iraq through the Jordanian port of Aqaba, with the exception of pharmaceutical preparations, medical products and foodstuffs for humanitarian purposes. The exportation ban would include petroleum and its derivatives. Foodstuffs that had arrived at Aqaba by ship before 6 August would be allowed to cross Jordanian territory to Iraq in Jordanian and foreign trucks. Despite the ban on Iraqi goods and products, Jordan would continue to import heavy oil from Iraq because of the lack of any immediate or foreseeable alternative and in view of Jordan's total dependency on it for the production of energy. It would consider halting such imports if an alternative became available.

On 21 August, the Western European Union, after its ministerial session in Paris, issued a communique [A/45/439-S/21603] calling on the Security Council to take any further useful measures to render sanctions effective.

In a 25 August report [S/21641], the Secretary-General said that as of 24 August a further 61 replies had been received regarding the application of sanctions, bringing the total number of replies to 100.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION {25 August}

On 24 August, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and Spain requested [S/21634-21638] a Security Council meeting to consider the deteriorating situation between Iraq and Kuwait and the effective implementation of resolution 661(1990). On the same day, the six States members of the Gulf Co-operation Council (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates) also requested [S/21639] a meeting to consider the measures required to implement resolutions 660(1990), 661(1990) and 662(1990).

On 25 August, the Security Council adopted resolution 665(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 662(1990) of August 1990 and 664(1990) of 18 August 1990 and demanding their full and immediate implementation,

Having decided in resolution 661(1990) to impose economic sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Determined to bring to an end the occupation of Kuwait by Iraq which imperils the existence of a Member State, and to restore the legitimate authority and the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kuwait, which requires the speedy implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions,

Deploing the loss of innocent lives stemming from the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait and determined to prevent further such losses,

Gravely alarmed that Iraq continues to refuse to comply with resolutions 660(1990), 661(1990), 662(1990) and 664(1990) and in particular at the conduct of the Government of Iraq in using Iraqi flag vessels to export oil,

1. Calls upon those Member States co-operating with the Government of Kuwait which are deploying maritime forces to the area to use such measures commensurate to the specific circumstances as may be necessary under the authority of the Security Council to halt all inward and outward maritime shipping, in order to inspect and verify their cargoes and destinations and to ensure strict implementation of the provisions related to such shipping laid down in resolution 661(1990);

2. Invites Member States accordingly to co-operate as may be necessary to ensure compliance with the provisions of resolution 661(1990) with maximum use of political and diplomatic measures, in accordance with paragraph 1 above;

3. Requests all States to provide, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, such assistance as may be required by the States referred to in paragraph 1 above;

4. Also requests the States concerned to co-ordinate their actions in pursuit of the above paragraphs of the present resolution using, as appropriate, mechanisms of the Military Staff Committee and, after consultation with the Secretary-General, to submit reports to the Security Council and the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait, in order to facilitate the monitoring of the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

During the Council meeting, Kuwait said that by calling for the use of all possible means, including the military option, to tighten the sanctions against Iraq, the resolution closed the loopholes in resolution 661(1990) that had been exploited by Iraq.

Iraq said the resolution was illegal, was void in substance and detail, and undermined the Council's authority, since there were no real boundaries ensuring the proper use of force on the high seas.

Sanctions enforcement

On 9 August, the USSR reported [A/45/400-S/21479] that its efforts, through an exchange of messages between its President and the President of Iraq, had regrettably not led to implementation of Security Council resolution 660(1990) calling for Iraq's withdrawal. However, the USSR remained opposed to force and unilateral solutions; collective efforts and full use of UN mechanisms were the surest and best way to act in conflict situations. The Security Council should deal with the critical situation in question on a permanent basis, and the Soviet Union would accept immediate consultations within the Military Staff Committee of the Council. Arab countries could also play a special role in preventing the situation from developing into an even greater military conflict.

On the same date, the United States informed [S/21492] the Security Council President that, in accordance with Article 51 of the Charter, it had deployed military forces in the Persian Gulf region, in exercise of the inherent right of self-defence and in response to requests from Kuwait and Saudi Arabia for assistance. Iraq had threatened Saudi Arabia and other States neighbouring Kuwait.

Kuwait on 12 August informed [S/21498] the Security Council President that it had requested some nations to take military and other steps to ensure effective and prompt implementation of resolution 661(1990). On 13 August, the United Kingdom also informed [S/21501] the Council President of requests by Bahrain, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia and an agreement with Oman regarding the deployment of its forces to the Gulf. Iraq accused [S/21503] the United States on 13 August of preventing the delivery of humanitarian supplies and said the United States had incited a number of other States to follow its example in imposing a blockade on Iraq's exports and imports.

The United States on 16 August reported [S/21537] that, at the request of Kuwait and in the exercise of its right of self-defence, its military forces had joined Kuwait and other nations in intercepting vessels seeking to engage in trade with Iraq or Kuwait. United States military forces would use force only if necessary to prevent vessels from violating the trade sanctions.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 15 August had, in a letter from its head of State to the Secretary-General, stated [S/21529] that the blockade in the Gulf beginning on 14 August was an act of aggression; it requested the Security Council to meet in Geneva; it repeated that request on 17 August [S/21560].

On 18 and 19 August [S/21563, S/21564], Iraq complained that United States warships had fired on, intercepted, harassed and boarded Iraqi oil tankers. Iraq said that this proved that the United States had arrogated to itself the right to commit acts of piracy and armed aggression at sea against Iraq. It warned of the consequences of such actions and urged the international community to register a strong protest.

The Sudan on 19 August [S/21574] and Jordan on 20 August [S/21571] complained about a confrontation between United States military ships and a Sudanese liner in the vicinity of the Aqaba strait. The Sudan asked the Security Council to give an explicit interpretation of whether Security Council resolution 661(1990) had delegated powers to any country to impose a naval blockade on ships of other countries travelling to countries not involved in the conflict. Jordan said that, because of the incident of 19 August, companies were refusing to send their ships to Aqaba, Jordan's only maritime outlet, accounting for 80 per cent of its imports of foodstuffs. At the same time, the process of transporting thousands of Iraqi and Kuwaiti refugees from Jordan back to their countries of origin had been held up, creating a heavy burden on Jordan. The Secretary-General was asked to use his good offices with the Government of the United States to prevent the recurrence of an incident violating international law, since resolution 661(1990) did not give any State the right to take unilateral action to apply it.

On 21 August, the Western European Union instructed [A/45/439-S/21603] an ad hoc group of foreign and defense ministry representatives to ensure the most effective co-ordination regarding overall operational concepts and specific guidelines between forces in the region, including areas of operation, sharing of tasks, logistical Support and exchange of intelligence. The Union reported that a meeting of chiefs-of-defence staffs would be held in the next few days. Co-ordination should also facilitate co-operation with other countries deploying forces in the region, including those of the United States.

On 25 August, the Security Council, in resolution 665(1990), called on those Member States co-operating with Kuwait and deploying military forces in the area to use such means to halt all naval and other shipping in order to inspect and verify cargoes and destinations (see full text under "Sanctions implementation").

Argentina on 19 September announced [S/21791] that, at the request of Kuwait, it was sending to the Gulf region a contingent of its forces to contribute to the strict enforcement of the mandatory measures.

Iraq complained [S/21861] about a tanker being boarded by forces of British and Americans on 8 October, and of a similar incident involving British and Australian forces which had taken place sometime between 8 and 11 October [S/21874]. On 28 October, Iraq again complained [S/21910] of an act of aggression against its vessels.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION {25 September}

On 25 September, the Council adopted resolution 670(1990).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 662(1990) of 9 August 1990, 664(1990) of 18 August 1990, 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, 666(1990) of 13 September 1990, and 667(1990) of 16 September 1990,

Condemning Iraq's continued occupation of Kuwait, its failure to rescind its actions and end its purported annexation and its holding of third-State nationals against their will, in flagrant violation of resolutions 660(1990), 662(1990), 664(1990) and 667(1990) and of international humanitarian law,

Condemning also the treatment by Iraqi forces of Kuwaiti nationals, including measures to force them to leave their own country and mistreatment of persons and property in Kuwait in violation of international law,

Noting with grave concern the persistent attempts to evade the measures laid down in resolution 661(1990).

Noting also that a number of States have limited the number of Iraqi diplomatic and consular officials in their countries and that others are planning to do so,

Determined to ensure by all necessary means the strict and complete application of the measures laid down in resolution 661(1990),

Determined also to ensure respect for its decisions and the provisions of Articles 25 and 48 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Affirming that any acts of the Government of Iraq which are contrary to the above-mentioned resolutions or to Articles 25 or 48 of the Charter, such as Decree No. 377 of 16 September 1990 of the Revolutionary Command Council of Iraq, are null and void,

Reaffirming its determination to ensure compliance with its resolutions by maximum use of political and diplomatic means,

Welcoming the Secretary-General's use of his good offices to advance a peaceful solution based on the relevant resolutions of the Council and noting with appreciation his continuing efforts to this end,-

Underlining to the Government of Iraq that its continued failure to comply with the terms of resolutions 660(1990), 661(1990), 662(1990), 664(1990), 666(1990) and 667(1990) could lead to further serious action by the Council under the Charter, including under Chapter VII,

Recalling the provisions of Article 103 of the Charter, Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Calls upon all States to carry out their obligations to ensure strict and complete compliance with resolution 661(1990) and in particular paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 thereof;

2. Confirms that resolution 661(1990) applies to all means of transport, including aircraft;

3. Decides that all States, notwithstanding the existence of any rights or obligations conferred or imposed by any international agreement or any contract entered into or any licence or permit granted before the date of the present resolution, shall deny permission to any aircraft to take off from their territory if the aircraft would carry any cargo to or from Iraq or Kuwait other than food in humanitarian circumstances, subject to authorization by the Security Council or the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait and in accordance with resolution 666(1990), or supplies intended strictly for medical purposes or solely for the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group;

4. Decides also that all States shall deny permission to any aircraft destined to land in Iraq or Kuwait, whatever its State of registration, to overfly their territory unless:

(a) The aircraft lands at an airfield designated by the State outside Iraq or Kuwait in order to permit its inspection to ensure that there is no cargo on board in violation of resolution 661(1990) or the present resolution, and for this purpose the aircraft may be detained for as long as necessary; or

(6) The particular flight has been approved by the Security Council Committee; or

(c) The flight is certified by the United Nations as solely for the purposes of the Military Observer Group;

5. Decides further that each State shall take all necessary measures to ensure that any aircraft registered in its territory or operated by an operator who has his principal place of business or permanent residence in its territory complies with the provisions of resolution 661(1990) and the present resolution;

6. Decides moreover that all States shall notify in a timely fashion the Security Council Committee of any flight between its territory and Iraq or Kuwait to which the requirement to land in paragraph 4 above does not apply and the purpose for such a flight;

7. Calls upon all States to co-operate in taking such measures as may be necessary, consistent with international law, including the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation of 7 December 1944, to ensure the effective implementation of the provisions of resolution 661(1990) or the present resolution;

8. Also calls upon all States to detain any ships of Iraqi registry which enter their ports and which are being or have been used in violation of resolution 661(1990), or to deny such ships entrance to their ports except in circumstances recognized under international law as necessary to safeguard human life;

9. Reminds all States of their obligations under resolution 661(1990) with regard to the freezing of Iraqi assets, and the protection of the assets of the legitimate

Government of Kuwait and its agencies, located within their territory and to report to the Security Council Committee regarding those assets;

10. Further calls upon all States to provide to the Security Council Committee information regarding the action taken by them to implement the provisions laid down in the present resolution;

11. Affirms that the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other international organizations in the United Nations system are required to take such measures as may be necessary to give effect to the terms of resolution 661(1990) and of the present resolution;

12. Decides to consider, in the event of evasion of the provisions of resolution 661(1990) or of the present resolution by a State or its nationals or through its territory, measures directed at the State in question to prevent such evasion;

13. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, applies to Kuwait and that, as a High Contracting Party to the Convention, Iraq is bound to comply fully with all its terms and in particular is liable under the Convention in respect of the grave breaches committed by it, as are individuals who commit or order the commission of grave breaches.

On 5 November, Iraq requested the inclusion of an additional item in the agenda of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly, entitled "United States military concentrations in the Arabian Gulf region: threats to Arab and international peace and security". In an explanatory memorandum [A/45/236 & Corr.1], Iraq said that since 7 August, the United States had been engaged in an unprecedented build-up of enormous military force in the Arabian Peninsula and the Arabian Gulf, which confirmed that its objectives were offensive rather than defensive. That was supported by statements made by American officials, Iraq alleged. The escalation was being conducted in isolation from Security Council resolutions and the international community's desire to avoid war. The United States was imposing a comprehensive sea, land and air embargo against Iraq. It was inhumane and deprived the Iraqi people of the simplest basic human right, the right to life.

On 9 November, the General Committee of the General Assembly decided to take no action on the Iraqi request.

Further action

On 10 August [S/21500], in a resolution adopted at the end of the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference (Cairo, Egypt, 9-10 August), Arab leaders condemned threats made by Iraq against the Gulf States; censured Iraq's concentration of its armed forces along Saudi Arabia's borders; and supported measures taken by Saudi Arabia and other Gulf States in exercise of their rights of self-defence, on the understanding that such measures would cease immediately on the full withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwait and the restoration of the legitimate authority in that country. The Summit Conference decided to comply with the request of Saudi Arabia and other Gulf States that Arab forces be deployed to assist its armed forces in defending its soil and territorial integrity against external aggression.

Iraq on 13 August said [S/21499] that allegations that it had engaged in a military action against Saudi Arabia were groundless. Iraq officially stated it had no intention of initiating any military action against Saudi Arabia.

On 12 August, the President of Iraq said [S/21494] that the United States had begun to mobilize its naval and air forces and was calling for war against Iraq under the pretext of combating the Iraqi threat to Saudi Arabia. He proposed that alleged questions of occupation in the region be dealt with on the same basis as others, and include the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Arab territories in Palestine, the Syrian Arab Republic and Lebanon, as well as the withdrawal of Syria from Lebanon and withdrawals relating to Iraq and Iran. As a first step, the plan must be applied initially to prior cases of occupation by implementation of all United Nations resolutions until the most recent case was reached. Also, the United States and other forces should be immediately withdrawn from Saudi Arabia and replaced by Arab forces, in accordance with a mandate to be defined by the Security Council.

Saudi Arabia on 17 August said [S/21554] that, with the Iraqi Government concentrating large military forces in combat formation near the border between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, it had been obliged to take all precautionary measures required to defend its security, to protect its citizens and to preserve its economic foundations, in exercise of its rights under Charter Article 51. Arab, Islamic and friendly forces had joined the Saudi Arabian armed forces in defending Saudi Arabia against aggression. The presence of those forces was temporary and would end once the reasons for the threats confronting Kuwait were removed. Their mission was entirely defensive, and the use of those forces for an act of aggression against any State would not be permitted in any circumstances. If Iraq wished to prove it did not have any aggressive intentions, Saudi Arabia said, it had only to withdraw immediately from Kuwait and allow the legitimate Government once again to exercise its functions in the State of Kuwait.

Commenting on the "parallel withdrawals" suggestion of the President of Iraq, Kuwait said [S/21546] on 16 August that Arab occupation of an Arab neighbour deprived the Arab call for Israel's departure from the occupied territories of the substance of its credibility.

Sanctions exemptions

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (13 September)

Iraq accused the United States on 13 August [S/21503] of preventing the delivery of humanitarian supplies in order to starve the people of Iraq. The United States, it went on, had also incited a number of other States to follow its example in imposing a blockade on Iraq's exports and imports. The Council should have allowed a certain amount of oil to be exported to provide for humanitarian needs, principally foodstuffs and medicine.

On 13 September, the Security Council adopted resolution 666(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, paragraphs 3 (c) and 4 of which apply, except in humanitarian circumstances, to foodstuffs,

Recognizing that circumstances may arise in which it will be necessary for foodstuffs to be supplied to the civilian population in Iraq or Kuwait in order to relieve human suffering,

Noting that in this respect the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait has received communications from several Member States,

Emphasizing that it is for the Security Council, alone or acting through the Committee, to determine whether humanitarian circumstances have arisen,

Deeply concerned that Iraq has failed to comply with its obligations under Security Council resolution 664(1990) of 18 August 1990 in respect of the safety and well-being of third-State nationals, and reaffirming that Iraq retains full responsibility in this regard under international humanitarian law including, where applicable, the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides that in order to make the necessary determination whether or not, for the purposes of paragraphs 3 (c) and 4 of resolution 661(1990), humanitarian circumstances have arisen, the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait shall keep the situation regarding foodstuffs in Iraq and Kuwait under constant review;

2. Expects Iraq to comply with its obligations under resolution 664(1990) in respect of third-State nationals and reaffirms that Iraq remains fully responsible for their safety and well-being in accordance with international humanitarian law including, where applicable, the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 AUGUST 1949;

3. Requests for the purposes of paragraphs 1 and 2 above, that the Secretary-General seek urgently, and on a continuing basis, information from relevant United Nations and other appropriate humanitarian agencies and all other sources on the availability of food in Iraq and Kuwait, such information to be communicated by the Secretary-General to the Committee regularly;

4. Also requests that in seeking and supplying such information particular attention be paid to such categories of persons who might suffer specially, such as children under 15 years of age, expectant mothers, maternity cases, the sick and the elderly;

5. Decides that if the Committee, after receiving the reports from the Secretary-General, determines that circumstances have arisen in which there is an urgent humanitarian need to supply foodstuffs to Iraq or Kuwait in order to relieve human suffering, it will report promptly to the Council its decision as to how such need should be met;

6. Directs the Committee that in formulating its decisions it should bear in mind that foodstuffs should be provided through the United Nations in co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross or other appropriate humanitarian agencies and distributed by them or under their supervision, in order to ensure that they reach the intended beneficiaries;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to use his good offices to facilitate the delivery and distribution of foodstuffs to Kuwait and Iraq in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution and other relevant resolutions;

8. Recalls that resolution 661(1990) does not apply to supplies intended strictly for medical purposes, but in this connection recommends that medical supplies should be exported under the strict supervision of the Government of the exporting State or by appropriate humanitarian agencies.

In a statement of 16 September [S/21790], Iraq commented that resolution 666(1990) was biased and insulting. The form of control established had no other intention than to tighten the stranglehold of a free people and to cause humiliation and famine. However, Iraq promised to co-operate with foreign Governments and the Iraqi Red Crescent Society to meet the needs of foreign residents in Kuwait and to ensure that their requirements for food and medical supplies were met.

Effects of sanctions

Jordan

On 20 August, Jordan wrote [S/21620] to the President of the Security Council requesting, under Article 50 of the Charter, consultations with the Council concerning the effects on Jordan of carrying out resolution 661(1990). Jordan pointed out that while it was cognizant of its Charter obligations and would comply with the resolution's mandatory nature, its geographical location and economic interdependence with Iraq and Kuwait would result in special economic problems. Restrictions on Jordan's exports to the two countries would amount to 30 per cent of Jordan's national exports; 90 per cent of its oil was imported from Iraq and Kuwait, and the fuel oil imports from Iraq were at concessionary rates not exceeding 60 per cent of the international price of crude oil. A minimum of 100,000 Jordan expatriates worked in Kuwait. The direct financial loss to Jordan in implementing the embargo decision would be not less than $1.5 billion a year, and Jordan would require further funding of $500 million dollars to cover indirect consequences and the repercussions of reduced economic activity and external imbalances. On 18 September, the Sanctions Committee submitted to the Council a special report [S/21786] on the communication from Jordan with regard to special economic problems arising from carrying out the sanctions imposed on Iraq. The Committee recommended that the Secretary-General undertake a full assessment, with suggestions for appropriate remedies to the problem, including especially the question of the supply of petroleum and its derivatives. He should also develop methods for receiving information from States about their contribution to relieve the hardships faced by Jordan and should appoint a Special Representative to co-ordinate assistance to Jordan by UN agencies.

Report of Secretary-General. On 22 October, in response to the recommendations of the Sanctions Committee, the Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the Security Council a report [S/21938] by Jean Ripert, former United Nations Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, regarding problems that had arisen from measures

Jordan had undertaken to comply with the sanctions.

Mr. Ripert had visited Jordan from 10 to 15 October. He concluded that, as a result of the Gulf crisis, Jordan was in an extremely difficult position, compounded by the interruption in the usual trade and financial relations with Saudi Arabia. The overall economic burden on Jordan relative to its total economic activity was much larger than any other country except Kuwait; its current economic outlook could only be described as grave, warranting emergency financial assistance from the international community for as long as resolution 661(1990) remained in force. Assistance should be through a combination of official bilateral grants, concessional loans, waivers of interest payments and additional multilateral flows. Special trade concessions and assistance should be rendered to allow Jordan to divert more of its exports to third markets rather than shut down much of the domestic economy that had been struggling in recent years to build up and diversify its export base.

Mr. Ripert's overall estimate was that Jordan would lose almost $730 million in 1990 as a result of sanctions, and almost $160 million a month in 1991 should the embargo continue. Those losses assumed that Jordan continued to take its petroleum supplies from Iraq; if it switched to another supplier, losses would rise to almost $1 billion in 1990 and about $200 million a month in 1991. Those would not be the full costs to Jordan, which were estimated at $1.5 billion in 1990 and up to $300 million a month in 1991 if Iraqi oil purchases were discontinued.

The Secretary General, in submitting Mr. Ripert's report, requested Member States to provide the necessary immediate assistance to Jordan to mitigate the consequences of the difficulties faced by it as a result of the crisis. He called on the agencies, organs, organizations and bodies of the UN system to intensify their programmes of assistance in response to Jordan's pressing needs, which required an urgent response.

Other countries

During August and September, a number of countries, in addition to Jordan, requested the Sanctions Committee to consider their circumstances in regard to the application of sanctions under Article 50 of the Charter. Among others, Yugoslavia [S/21618, S/21642] said that alternative oil supplies and deferred payments by Iraq for various projects would mean that the negative effects of implementing sanctions would amount to nearly $3 billion, and Romania [S/21643] would have increased oil costs, interrupted contracts and deferred Iraqi payments amounting to $2.9

billion. Disruption of trade with Iraq represented 4 per cent of Tunisia's external trade [S/21649]. Lebanon [S/21737, S/21686] stood to lose remittances from 40,000 Lebanese working in Kuwait and 20,000 in Iraq, and incur extra oil costs and a loss of 45 per cent of the value of the Lebanese currency since the invasion of Kuwait. The Sudan [S/21695, S/21930] estimated a direct adverse financial impact of $1,185 million. Sri Lanka [S/21710] would experience disruption of its major export commodity, tea, of which Iraq and Kuwait imported about one eighth of the country's total exports, and a loss of remittances and oil price rises would result in an immediate short-term revenue loss of $100 million. Increased oil prices and export losses would account for more than 60 per cent of India's project exports, as well as losses from deferred Iraqi payments and a lack of remittances from 200,000 Indians employed in Iraq and Kuwait [S/22013]. The Philippines [S/21712] reported potential trade losses and a loss of remittances of 65,000 Filipino workers in Iraq. Yemen [S/21748] would lose oil refining revenues at Aden, budgetary support from both Iraq and Kuwait, export markets, and remittances from 35,000 nationals whose compulsory return from Kuwait had added to Yemen's costs.

Pakistan [S/21776] and Poland [S/21808] also asked for assistance under Article 50: Pakistan cited costs of more than $1 million in evacuation and rehabilitation of Pakistanis, loss of home remittances, loss of exports and increased oil prices; Poland cited losses of $2.4 billion, including the suspension of payment of Iraqi debts, lost exports, and the loss of rolling contracts at the signature stage for which contractors had assembled equipment and ordered supplies. Viet Nam requested [S/21810] an urgent international relief operation to rush food to its 17,000 nationals working in Iraq, stating that more than half were sick or facing hunger and, with Iraq ending food supplies to them on 1 October, that starvation could occur in a matter of days. For the immediate future, some 500 tons of food were urgently needed, as well as international assistance to transport people home, with up to 5,000 persons needing repatriation. Turkey [S/21806] said it would end the transit of foodstuffs to Iraq and Kuwait through Turkey, as long as the Security Council had not determined that humanitarian circumstances had arisen. Mauritania [S/21818] sought relief amounting to $63 million, possibly rising to $100 million. Czechoslovakia [S/21837] estimated its overall losses at $2 billion, including the freezing of outstanding claims, suspension of contracts and increased oil prices. Bangladesh [S/21856] estimated losses at $1.5 billion, including repatriation of 100,000 nationals, some of whom were stranded in Jordan, Turkey and Saudi Arabia, and cited also the loss of aid and exports and the rise in oil prices.

Because of greater oil costs, Pakistan [S/21875] later revised its estimate of losses from $1 billion to $2.1 billion. Seychelles [S/21891] said that it had previously been entirely dependent on Kuwait for oil and now had to buy oil on the spot market for cash, and its fisheries and tourism activities were also affected. The Palestine Liberation Organization [A/45/639-S/21882] estimated losses in remittances and aid for one year at $1.3 billion, stating that the figure did not include huge losses of capital and personal belongings and losses from increased unemployment.

Sanctions Committee. On 14 September, the Sanctions Committee, meeting in closed session, authorized the Indian authorities to send one Indian ship to carry foodstuffs to Iraq and Kuwait to meet the immediate needs of Indian nationals there; and adopted a working paper by the non-aligned caucus concerning emergency international relief to assist Asian and other foreign nationals stranded in Kuwait and Iraq.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (24 September)

On 24 September, the Security Council President informed [S/21826] the Secretary-General that the Council had decided to bring to his attention the recommendations in a special report relating to Jordan, which the Council approved, and to ask that he implement the actions and recommendations contained in the report.

On the same date, it adopted resolution 669(1990).

The Security Council,
Recalling its resolution 661(1990) of 6 August 1990,
Recalling also Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Conscious of the fact that an increasing number of requests for assistance have been received under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter,

Entrusts the Security Council Committee established by resolution 661(1990) concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait with the task of examining requests for assistance under the provisions of Article 50 of the Charter, and making recommendations to the President of the Security Council for appropriate action.

Security Council resolution 669(1990)

24 September 1990 Meeting 2942 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21811).

Further requests. Further communications regarding relief under Article 50 were received from Sri Lanka, revising [S/21984] its estimate of losses to well beyond $1 billion for the period from August 1990 to the end of 1993. Romania [S/21990] stated that its losses were now estimated at $2.9 billion, representing almost one third of its total trade exchanges in hard currency for 1989 and resulting in a negative impact on its gross national product (GNP) of 14 per cent. Viet Nam [S/22004] itemized losses of more than $377 million in exports, and from the termination of contracts for more than 16,000 workers in Iraq, the suspension of Kuwaiti loans and credits, the additional costs of oil imports, and the additional import costs of goods. The Philippines [S/22011] cited increased oil costs, fewer remittances, repatriation costs for 65,000 Filipinos and exacerbated unemployment. Tunisia [S/22015] cited export losses, investment interruptions and remittance losses, with repercussions on the balance of payments of losses of 1.7 per cent of the gross domestic product (GDP) for 1990 and 2.5 per cent for 1991. Czechoslovakia [S/22019] revised its losses to $1,581 million for 1990, and to a minimum of $1,000 million for 1991. India presented [S/22013] its revised losses of $3,045 million in 1990, and estimated losses of $2,860 million in 1991. Yugoslavia [S/22014] put its total losses for 1990 at $1.3 billion. Seychelles [S/22023] reported that its oil cost losses for the last quarter of 1990 were $2 million and estimated losses of $4.1 million for 1991, together with $2 million in trade tax losses. Uruguay [S/22026] estimated losses in trade of $53.8 million in 1990 and $112 million in 1991, with the latter figure amounting to 1.3 per cent of GNP or 5 per cent of estimated exports.

Sanctions Committee. On 19 December, the Chairman (Finland) of the Sanctions Committee submitted a report [S/22021] regarding the examination of requests for assistance under the provisions of Article 50, in response to the Council's request of 24 September. The Committee had on 27 September decided to set up an open-ended working group to examine requests for assistance and advise on appropriate action. On 11 October the Committee appointed Canada as Chairman of the Group. By 17 December, 18 States (excluding Jordan, whose special case was considered earlier-see above) had requested consultations in terms of Article 50: Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, India, Lebanon, Mauritania, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Seychelles, the Sudan, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, Uruguay, Viet Nam, Yemen and Yugoslavia. Botswana had indicated its intention to consult in due course. On 12 December, the Sanctions Committee adopted recommendations submitted by the Working Group regarding Bulgaria, India, Lebanon, the Philippines, Romania, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. Recommendations concerning the remainder of the requests were to be submitted once they were approved. The Committee commended the Governments concerned for the measures taken to comply with sanctions; urgently appealed to all States to provide immediate technical, financial and material assistance to mitigate the adverse economic effects of applying sanctions; invited the UN system to review assistance programmes with a view to alleviating the special economic problems; and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on actions taken by States and the UN system to alleviate the problems.

On 21 December, the Chairman of the Committee submitted to the President of the Security Council recommendations [S/22021/Add.1] on the same lines regarding Bangladesh, Czechoslovakia, Mauritania, Pakistan, Poland, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Uruguay, Viet Nam and Yemen.

On 21 December, the President of the Security Council informed [S/22033] the Secretary-General of the Council's request that he implement the actions contained in the Sanctions Committee's recommendations.

Escalating crisis

As the crisis continued to escalate, international opposition to Iraq's invasion and subsequent annexation of Kuwait strengthened. On 19 August, the President of Iraq proposed [S/21651] that the Security Council ensure that the United States withdraw its forces from the region, and that Iraq and Saudi Arabia should undertake not to attack each other. Alternatively, the Council could guarantee peace and security throughout the region, in accordance with Iraq's previous initiative of 12 August (see p. 198). If neither initiative was carried out, the President of the United States should confirm his commitment to withdraw his forces and those of his allies from Arab territories and Muslim holy places, undertake not to use force against Iraq, and lift the embargo. The question of Kuwait should be left to the Arabs, as an Arab issue, the Iraqi President declared.

Kuwait, commenting [S/21566] on the latest Iraqi initiative, said that Iraq was beginning to feel its international isolation and sought to use innocent foreigners working in Iraq and Kuwait as a means of putting pressure on the international community to lift sanctions. Iraq was now speaking of the issue as an Arab issue, Kuwait said, but previously it had rejected a Kuwait proposal that an Arab committee be created to resolve outstanding issues, stating that the issue was a bilateral affair.

At the end of August, the Secretary-General, concerned over the situation in the Persian Gulf, launched his own diplomatic initiative to find a means to solve what he considered "this extremely dangerous problem". He held extensive talks on 30 August in Amman, Jordan, with the Iraqi Foreign Minister. On 3 September, the Secretary-General met in Paris with the King of Jordan to discuss their respective diplomatic efforts, and he subsequently reported to the Council on those talks on 6 September.

In its initiative [S/21706] of 4 September, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya proposed that: UN forces should take the place of Iraqi forces in Kuwait and that NATO forces withdraw from the Gulf; the economic blockade of Iraq should be lifted; Arab and Islamic forces should replace United States and Western forces in the Arabian peninsula; Iraq should be given possession of Bubiyan Island as a means of access to the Gulf; the Rumaila oil field should be restored to Iraq; Kuwait's internal affairs were to be left exclusively to the Kuwaitis; a single Arab oil policy should be established; debts incurred by and compensation due to any Arab parties that had suffered as a result of the problem should be settled; an Arab summit should be held in Libya to confirm the plan for Arab union; and the initiative should be put into practice under the supervision of the Secretaries-General of the United Nations and of the League of Arab States.

Kuwait on 7 September stated [S/21723] that the Libyan initiative was incompatible with Security Council resolutions calling for unconditional withdrawal from Kuwait territory and appeared to reward the aggressor by proposing to give it the Kuwaiti island of Bubiyan and the Kuwaiti oil-field of Rutqah. Kuwait said that no initiative outside the framework of Security Council resolutions could be accepted or discussed.

Earlier, on 25 August, the USSR had reported [S/21650] that it had advised the leaders of Iraq to draw appropriate conclusions from the unanimity with which the Security Council had been acting. France and the USSR, in a joint statement [A/45/468-S/21675] issued on 26 August, urged Iraq to show realism and reason by complying with the will of the international community, as expressed in the resolutions adopted by the Security Council. They reaffirmed the Security Council's demand that Iraq permit foreign nationals detained in Iraq and Kuwait to return to their countries of origin, and expressed their conviction that the crisis once again highlighted the need for more intensive efforts to resolve other crisis situations in the Near East, particularly the question of Palestine.

On 27 August, Egypt commented [S/21664] on a statement [S/21569] by Iraq that the Arab League Summit Conference resolution of 10 August was incompatible with the Pact of the League of Arab States. Iraq had asserted that that meeting was to give an Arab veneer to the presence of foreign forces in Arab territory and to provide cover for the aggression being planned by the United States. Egypt refuted the Iraqi comments, stating that the dispatch of Arab forces in response to Saudi Arabia's request was a bilateral matter, and that the resolution was in full conformity with the international consensus condemning Iraq, and in accordance with decisions of the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

The Council of the League of Arab States met in an extraordinary session on 30 and 31 August in Cairo, Egypt. The participants, in a decision [S/21693] on the implementation of the 10 August resolution of the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference, reaffirmed the League's commitment to Security Council resolutions relating to the Iraqi aggression against Kuwait, and the League's support for the Secretary-General in his mission undertaken to implement them. It stressed that any Arab resolution of the crisis in the Arabian Gulf arising from the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait must emanate from the Pact of the League, be based on the resolution of 10 August, and be adopted by the Arab Summit Conference of the Council of the League. It called on those States that might have proposals for a resolution of the crisis to present them to the Arab League Council.

On 5 September, on the eve of the summit meeting between the Presidents of the Soviet Union and the United States in Helsinki, Finland, to discuss the situation in the Persian Gulf, Kuwait sent a letter [S/21729] to the Soviet President, stating that Kuwait and the world expected from their meeting a decisive position that would restore right and defeat the forces of injustice and aggression by the adoption of effective measures to compel Iraq to respect the international will and implement without delay the resolutions of the Security Council.

On 23 September, Iraq complained [S/21812] to the Secretary-General about the refusal of the United States to allow a special aircraft to land in New York to bring its Foreign Minister and others to participate in the work of the General Assembly, stating that the United States suggestion that a commercial aircraft be used was tantamount to preventing Iraqis from attending the General Assembly, given the exigencies of safety. Iraq would not participate in the current Assembly session unless the United States lifted the restrictions. At the same time, Iraq protested the successive resolutions of the Security Council which, it said, had blocked all paths towards dialogue to deal with the situation on the basis of justice and equity, and added that Iraq would not yield to United States and Western terrorism.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said [S/21785] on 17 September that it respected Security Council decisions on the Gulf crisis and opposed the Iraqi intervention in Kuwait. It also demanded the immediate withdrawal of Iraqi forces and urged that the crisis be tackled within the framework of the League of Arab States, while at the same time it supported continuing efforts to find a peaceful solution. Among other things, Libya asked for clarification on the determination of the nature and size of forces empowered to enforce the blockade and stated that forces inspecting cargoes should be expressly authorized to do so and operate under the sole auspices of the Security Council.

Kuwait said [S/21804] it had never asked, directly or indirectly, any Arab or non-Arab official to conduct any initiatives or mediation, and rejected any efforts that fell short of full implementation of the 10 August Arab Summit resolution, as well as those of the Security Council.

On 28 September, during the General Assembly session, the Secretary-General held a meeting with the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of China, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, the permanent members of the Security Council, after which they issued a statement [S/21835] in which they said that particular attention had been paid to the most serious crisis currently facing the international community, that caused by Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. They affirmed that aggressive action could not be tolerated, condemned the continued occupation and the increasing persecution of Kuwaitis and welcomed the firm and decisive role played by the United Nations and the Secretary-General's good offices. They demanded that Iraq withdraw unconditionally and without delay from Kuwait, free all hostages, allow all foreign nationals wishing to do so to leave and respect the immunity of diplomatic personnel and the inviolability of diplomatic premises.

In a joint statement, the EC and the USSR expressed [S/45/558-S/21834] satisfaction at the high degree of consensus among all Security Council members and the international community as a whole concerning the need to put an end, as soon as possible, to the invasion and to restore international legality, while they at the same time expressed determination to multiply efforts to resolve other conflicts in the region.

At a meeting of 5 October of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and heads of delegation of non-aligned countries, a statement was issued [A/45/585-S/21849] demanding immediate and unconditional Iraqi withdrawal; the restoration of the legitimate Government of Kuwait and of its independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty; and release of detained citizens of third countries. The statement also expressed deep concern over the increased danger of further escalation, which might lead to military conflict. They mandated the Chairman (Yugoslavia) of the Non-Aligned Movement to convey those sentiments to the Iraqi leaders, and expressed its readiness to lend its good offices for the resolution of the problem between Iraq and Kuwait by peaceful means, upon full implementation by Iraq of relevant Security Council resolutions.

On 17 October, the heads of State and Government of Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Malaysia, Maldives and Pakistan called upon [S/21884] President Saddam Hussein to withdraw Iraqi troops from Kuwait so that the legitimate Government of His Highness Sheikh Jaber Al-Ahmad Al-Jaber Al-Sabah could be restored. They committed themselves to efforts to settle peacefully any outstanding contentious issues between Iraq and Kuwait that might underline the dispute, and hoped that, in the true Islamic spirit and for the unity and solidarity of the Ummah, their call would receive a positive response from the Iraqi President.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (29 November)

On 29 November, the Security Council held its final meeting in 1990 on the Iraq-Kuwait situation.

Speaking before the Council, Kuwait paid tribute to those countries that had contributed to the multinational force as their commitment to the supremacy of the rule of law, and to the consolidation of peace. The force was a translation of the will of the international community that aggression stood to lose. It said that the Iraqi regime had disregarded the appeals in the resolutions passed by the Council; therefore, the international community should feel free, at this stage, to use all necessary means available to implement its resolutions.

Iraq told the Council that it advocated peace on the basis of the implementation of all Security Council resolutions, in a just manner and in keeping with a single standard based on justice and fairness. However, if the United States imposed war upon it, the people would measure up to their responsibilities, for Iraq was demanding and defending its right against injustice and tyranny.

On the same day, the Council adopted resolution 678(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 662(1990) of 9 August 1990, 664(1990) of 18 August 1990, 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, 666(1990) of 13 September 1990, 667(1990) of 16 September 1990, 669(1990) of 24 September 1990, 670(1990) of 25 September 1990, 674(1990) of 29 October 1990 and 677(1990) of 28 November 1990,

Noting that, despite all efforts by the United Nations, Iraq refuses to comply with its obligation to implement resolution 660(1990) and the above-mentioned subsequent relevant resolutions, in flagrant contempt of the Security Council,

Mindful of its duties and responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance and preservation of international peace and security,

Determined to secure full compliance with its decisions,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Demands that Iraq comply fully with resolution 660(1990) and all subsequent relevant resolutions, and decides, while maintaining all its decisions, to allow Iraq one final opportunity, as a pause of goodwill, to do so:

2. Authorizes Member States co-operating with the Government of Kuwait, unless Iraq, on or before 15 January 1991 fully implements, as set forth in paragraph 1 above, the above-mentioned resolutions, to use all necessary means to uphold and implement resolution 660(1990) and all subsequent relevant resolutions and to restore international peace and security in the area;

3. Requests all States to provide appropriate support for the actions undertaken in pursuance of paragraph 2 above;

4. Requests the States concerned to keep the Security Council regularly informed on the progress of actions undertaken pursuant to paragraphs 2 and 3 above;

5. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Security Council resolution 678(1990)

29	November	1990	Meeting	2963	12-2-1
----	----------	------	---------	------	--------

B-nation draft (S/21969).

Sponsors: Canada, France, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Canada, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Malaysia, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

Against: Cuba, Yemen.

Abstaining: China.

Following the vote, the USSR stated that there was justice and a large measure of generosity in the resolution. It was giving the side that had breached the peace time to think again and the victim of the crisis a firm pledge that its rights would be fully restored. The countdown of the "pause of goodwill" had started, and the Soviet Union was hopeful that the pause would usher in a transition to a political settlement.

The Secretary-General said that the resolution envisaged at least 45 days of earnest effort to achieve a peaceful solution to the crisis. The situation required that diplomatic efforts be made with renewed determination to put the crisis on the road to a peaceful outcome.

On 11 December, Kuwait informed [S/21997] the Secretary-General that reports of secret negotiations between Kuwait and Iraq were entirely unfounded. Kuwait maintained that there was no alternative to implementation of all the provisions of the Security Council's resolutions, including the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Iraq from Kuwait, restoration of its legitimate authority and functions, and full compensation for the heavy losses of public and private property.

The EC and the European Council, meeting in Rome on 14 and 15 December [A/45/888-S/22018], expressed the hope that implementation of the Security Council's resolutions could be peacefully secured and supported the dialogue of the sort President George Bush of the United States had offered, as well as the action of the Secretary-General and the five permanent members of the Council. They wished that Arab countries would continue to play an important role in efforts for a peaceful solution and underlined the value of contacts with the Foreign Minister of Iraq.

The Revolution Command Council of Iraq and the Arab Baath Socialist Party issued a communiqué [S/22016] on 17 December declaring their desire for dialogue for the sake of peace. However, they rejected submission and the unilateral imposition of deadlines regarding the dialogue to which the President of the United States had agreed. Iraq insisted on its rights as a sovereign State.

On 20 December, Iraq entered a reservation [A/45/891 & Add.1] with respect to the credentials of the Kuwaiti delegation to the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly and requested that it be officially recorded. Kuwait on 26 December said [A/45/909-S/22036] that the Iraqi reservation regarding the report of the Credentials Committee was an act of defiance of the will of the international community, as represented by the Security Council. Iraq's claim to represent the State of Kuwait rendered the credentials of the Iraqi delegation itself legally invalid. Accordingly, Kuwait was entering an official reservation with respect to the credentials of the Iraqi delegation.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/455, retained on the agenda of its forty-fifth session the item on Iraqi aggression and the continued occupation of Kuwait in flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations.

On 27 and 31 December, Iraq requested [S/22035, S/22038] the Secretary-General to take urgent measures to secure the safety of the women and children aboard the peace ship Ibn Khaldun, which it complained was the object of aggression by United States and United Kingdom warships, and to ensure its safe arrival in Iraq.

Human rights violations

On 5 August, Kuwait charged [S/21439] that Iraqi forces had adopted inhuman measures and practices against the Kuwaiti people and were attempting to compel them to co-operate with the puppet government installed by occupation. Examples cited were desecration of houses of worship; ransacking of homes; looting of the Central Bank and other banks; removal of foodstuffs with the aim of causing starvation; and the theft of vehicles and their removal to Iraq. The goal of these activities was to replace Kuwaiti citizens with Iraqi citizens. The following day, Kuwait informed [S/21450] the Secretary-General that Iraq was terrorizing Kuwaiti civilians, a large number of whom had been transferred to Baghdad. They were ransacking residential neighbourhoods in search of Iraqi dissidents resident in Kuwait.

On 7 August, Kuwait stated [S/21452] that Iraq continued to conduct air raids against residential areas in Kuwait and to arrest Kuwaiti nationals and transfer them to Iraq. Another letter [S/21548] transmitted United States press reports regarding the massive destruction of property in Kuwait by Iraqi forces, the looting of public and private assets, and terrorization aimed at undermining the economic, social and security situation so as to destroy Kuwait's basic foundations.

Safety of diplomatic personnel and third-country nationals

In a 17 August letter to the Secretary-General, Kuwait stated [S/21559] that, after the invasion, Iraq had imprisoned the Kuwaiti Ambassador in Iraq, as well as his staff and their families, and their fate remained unknown. Kuwait asked the Secretary-General to intervene with the Iraqi authorities and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) with a view to securing their immediate release.

Also on 17 August, Kuwait provided [S/21548] press reports of the inhumane activities of the Iraqi occupation forces against Kuwaiti citizens and foreign residents. Those reports indicated that selected Westerners were being picked up by Iraqi forces as part of a deliberate policy.

Italy on 18 August requested [S/21561] a Security Council meeting on the situation between Iraq and Kuwait, particularly on the question of foreign nationals in the two countries.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (18 August)

On 18 August, the Security Council adopted resolution 664(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling the Iraqi invasion and purported annexation of Kuwait, and its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990 and 662(1990) of 9 August 1990.

Deeply concerned for the safety and well-being of third-State nationals in Iraq and Kuwait,

Recalling the obligations of Iraq in this regard under international law,

Welcoming the efforts of the Secretary-General to pursue urgent consultations with the Government of Iraq following the concern and anxiety expressed by the members of the Council on 17 August 1990.

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations;

1. Demands that Iraq permit and facilitate the immediate departure from Kuwait and Iraq of third-State nationals and grant immediate and continuing access of consular officials to such nationals;

2. Also demands that Iraq take no action to jeopardize the safety, security or health of such nationals;

3. Reaffirms decision in resolution 662(1990) that annexation of Kuwait by Iraq is null and void, and therefore demands that the Government of Iraq rescind its orders for the closure of diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait and the withdrawal of the immunity of their personnel, and refrain from any such actions in the future;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on compliance with this resolution at the earliest possible time.

Security Council resolution 664(1990)

18 August 1990 Meeting 2937 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21562).

Speaking after the vote, the United States said that Baghdad continued to deny consular access to United States nationals and other nationals in Kuwait and Iraq. The Speaker of the Iraqi Parliament had also announced that foreign nationals were being detained and sent to camps and other housing, either inside or close to military and other strategic installations in Iraq. Iraq had also singled out infants and the aged among this group for special food restrictions. The lives of hundreds of thousands of foreign nationals from countries all over the world were being put at risk. Kuwait said that Iraq's threat to deprive foreigners of food was hideous blackmail. Its threats to use innocent, defenceless citizens as human shields to protect its military installations required that the international community respond resolutely and unhesitatingly to stop the aggressor.

In response, Iraq said that the United States, supported by the United Kingdom, had arrogated to itself the right to impose a maritime blockade against Iraq. That constituted aggression against Iraq. While stressing the importance of ensuring the safety and well-being of all foreign nationals, their departure depended on the cessation of armed acts of aggression by the United States and the United Kingdom and on the unhindered and guaranteed delivery of food and medicine to Iraq. It would share with foreign nationals whatever food and medicine entered the country. Foreign and Arab nationals in Iraq were not hostages; their security and safety were guaranteed if the United States and its allies did not attack Iraq. Whatever the Iraqi people would be subjected to would be applied to its foreign guests. The responsibility therefore rested with the aggressor and its allies.

Further developments

On 20 August, the Secretary-General dispatched two United Nations emissaries—Virendra Dayal and Kofi Annan—to Baghdad to look into the situation of foreign nationals, as well as that of some 300 UN staff members in the region. They had met with Tariq Aziz, the Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs, and officials of ICRC. Some 80 internationally recruited UN staff were able to leave Kuwait on 21 August. The two envoys were also allowed to visit privately with some foreign nationals who had been relocated outside Baghdad.

The EC on 21 August issued a statement [A/45/433-S/21590] rejecting the Iraqi demand for closure of its members' missions, and reiterated a resolve to keep them open, while warning the Iraqi Government that any attempt to jeopardize the safety of any EC citizen would be regarded as a most grave offence against the Community and all its member States and would provoke a united response from the whole Community.

On 22 August, Kuwait commented [S/21586] on Iraq's ultimatum demanding closure of accredited diplomatic missions in Kuwait on 24 August, stating that what was required was a consensus decision by friendly and fraternal countries to reject and oppose the Iraqi ultimatum. On 26 August, Kuwait complained [S/21654] about the continued detention of its Ambassador in Iraq, and his forced appearance on Iraqi television on 20 August in a staged interview. Kuwait appealed to ICRC to intervene and to meet with the Ambassador and Kuwaiti diplomats to ascertain their physical and mental well-being.

On 27 August, Egypt stated [S/21674] that under international law and practice, the Iraqi authorities in Kuwait had a responsibility to ensure the safety of all Egyptian diplomatic personnel and to maintain the inviolability of its premises. It urged Iraq to refrain from breaching those provisions.

Further violations

Kuwait on 2 September complained [S/21694] of organized looting and plundering by Iraqi authorities which, it said, were on a scale that amounted to armed robbery by a State, including the taking of all matériel of the Kuwaiti army, confiscation of the Kuwait Airways fleet and its transport to Iraq, looting of financial institutions and banks, removal of port facilities, and many other instances of theft, including that of equipment from hospitals, large lampposts on highways and electronic traffic lights.

The Council of the League of Arab States, meeting in Extraordinary Session (Cairo, Egypt, 30-31 August), condemned [S/21693] the violation by the Iraqi authorities of international law relative to the treatment of civilians in the Kuwaiti territory. It urged the Iraqi authorities to ensure the protection of all civilians, public and private establishments and movable and immovable property in Kuwait. It called on them not to tamper with the demographic composition of Kuwait, declared that it held Iraq responsible for damage caused by the invasion, and affirmed the right of Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who had suffered damage to receive just compensation.

Kuwait on 5 September said [S/21713] that it had been reliably informed that the Iraqi occupying forces had removed to Iraq delicate hospital equipment and supplies from the intensive care unit of many Kuwaiti hospitals and had released mentally ill and disabled patients. There were also later reports [S/21730] of killings on the streets in the presence of the victims' families; other summary executions; massive, random arrests; and burning and destruction of homes. Kuwait sent a series of communications [S/21777, S/21778, S/21784, S/21798, S/21815] regarding torturing and execution of Kuwaitis by Iraq and other actions against the civilian population.

On 17 September, Kuwait complained [S/21778] that its entire population, as well as third-country nationals, were being subjected to a reign of terror, systematically planned and relentlessly pursued. The harsh and inhumane circumstances had led people to leave Kuwait on 15 September across the southern border. On 24 September, Kuwait informed [S/21815] the Secretary-General of a new set of instructions and measures imposed by the Iraqi occupying forces, including the execution of any Kuwait military personnel who failed to surrender, or of any person in possession of weapons; the burning of houses if the corpse of an Iraqi soldier was found in the vicinity; punishment for having pictures in any form of the Amir of Kuwait, the crown prince and members of their family and of the Government; or punishment for anyone storing more food than appropriate for their circumstances. The Iraqi forces were arresting large numbers of Kuwaitis and non-Kuwaitis and transporting them to Iraqi jails. Kuwait requested that the Secretary-General intervene to halt those practices and to allow ICRC to enter Kuwait to provide protection.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (16 September, 29 October)

On 15 September, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, and Sweden requested that the Council meet regarding the holding of foreign nationals and diplomatic personnel by Iraq.

The following day the Council adopted resolution 667(1990).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 662(1990) of 9 August 1990, 664(1990) of 18 August 1990, 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, 666(1990) of 13 September 1990,

Recalling the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 18 April 1961 and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 24 April 1963, to both of which Iraq is a party,

Considering that the decision of Iraq to order the closure of diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait and to withdraw the privileges and immunities of these missions and their personnel is contrary to the decisions of the Security Council, the international conventions mentioned above and international law,

Deeply concerned that Iraq, notwithstanding the decisions of the Council and the provisions of the conventions mentioned above, has committed acts of violence against diplomatic missions and their personnel in Kuwait,

Outraged at recent violations by Iraq of diplomatic premises in Kuwait and at the abduction of personnel enjoying diplomatic immunity and foreign nationals who were present in these premises,

Considering also that these actions by Iraq constitute aggressive acts and a flagrant violation of its international obligations which strike at the root of the conduct of international relations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling that Iraq is fully responsible for any use of violence against foreign nationals or against any diplomatic or consular mission in Kuwait or its personnel,

Determined to ensure respect for its decisions and for Article 25 of the Charter,

Considering further that the grave nature of Iraq's actions, which constitute a new escalation of its violations of international law, obliges the Council not only to express its immediate reaction but also to consult urgently in order to take further concrete measures to ensure Iraq's compliance with the Council's resolutions,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns aggressive acts perpetrated by Iraq against diplomatic premises and personnel in Kuwait, including the abduction of foreign nationals who were present in those premises;

2. Demands the immediate release of those foreign nationals as well as all nationals mentioned in resolution 664(1990);

3. Also demands that Iraq immediately and fully comply with its international obligations under resolutions 660(1990), 662(1990) and 664(1990), the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 18 April 1961, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 24 April 1963 and international law;

4. Further demands that Iraq immediately protect the safety and well-being of diplomatic and consular personnel and premises in Kuwait and in Iraq and take no action to hinder the diplomatic and consular missions in the performance of their functions, including access to their nationals and the protection of their person and interests;

5. Reminds all States that they are obliged to observe strictly resolutions 666(1990), 662(1990), 664(1990), 665(1990) and 666(1990);

6. Decides to consult urgently to take further concrete measures as soon as possible, under Chapter VII of the Charter, in response to Iraq's continued violation of the Charter of the United Nations, of resolutions of the Security Council and of international law.

Security Council resolution 667(1990)

16 September 1990 Meeting 2940 Adopted unanimously

6-nation draft (S/21774).

Sponsors: Canada, Côte d'Ivoire, Finland, France, United Kingdom, Zaire.

On 29 October, the Council adopted resolution 674(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 661(1990) of 6 August 1990, 662(1990) of 9 August 1990, 664(1990) of 18 August 1990, 665(1990) of 25 August 1990, 666(1990) of 13 September 1990, 667(1990) of 16 September 1990, and 670(1990) of 25 September 1990,

Stressing the urgent need for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all Iraqi forces from Kuwait and for the restoration of Kuwait's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and of the authority of its legitimate Government,

Condemning the actions by the Iraqi authorities and occupying forces to take third-State nationals hostage and to mistreat and oppress Kuwaiti and third-State nationals, and the other actions reported to the Council, such as the destruction of Kuwaiti demographic records, the forced departure of Kuwaitis, the relocation of population in Kuwait and the unlawful destruction and seizure of public and private property in Kuwait, including hospital supplies and equipment, in violation of the decisions of the Council, the Charter of the United Nations, the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 18 April 1961, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 24 April 1963 and international law,

Expressing grave alarm over the situation of third-State nationals in Kuwait and Iraq, including the personnel of the diplomatic and consular missions of such States,

Reaffirming that the above-mentioned Geneva Convention applies to Kuwait and that, as a High Contracting Party to the Convention, Iraq is bound to comply fully with all its terms and in particular is liable under the Convention in respect of the grave breaches committed by it, as are individuals who commit or order the commission of grave breaches,

Recalling the efforts of the Secretary-General concerning the safety and well-being of third-State nationals in Iraq and Kuwait,

Deeply concerned at the economic cost and at the loss and suffering caused to individuals in Kuwait and Iraq as a result of the invasion and occupation of Kuwait by Iraq,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Reaffirming the goal of the international community of maintaining international peace and security by seeking to resolve international disputes and conflicts through peaceful means,

Recalling the important role that the United Nations and the Secretary-General have played in the peaceful solution of disputes and conflicts in conformity with the provisions of the Charter,

Alarmed by the dangers of the present crisis caused by the Iraqi invasion and occupation of Kuwait, which directly threaten international peace and security, and seeking to avoid any further worsening of the situation,

Culling upon Iraq to comply with the relevant resolutions, in particular resolutions 660(1990), 662(1990) and 664(1990),

Reaffirming its determination to ensure compliance by Iraq with its resolutions by maximum use of political and diplomatic means,

A

1. Demands that the Iraqi authorities and occupying forces immediately cease and desist from taking third-State nationals hostage, mistreating and oppressing Kuwaiti and third-State nationals and any other actions, such as those reported to the Council and described above, that violate the decisions of the Council, the Charter of the United Nations, the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 18 April 1961, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 24 April 1963 and international law,

2. Invites States to collate substantiated information in their possession or submitted to them on the grave breaches by Iraq as per paragraph 1 above and to make this information available to the Council;

3. Reaffirms its demand that Iraq immediately fulfil its obligations to third-State nationals in Kuwait and Iraq, including the personnel of diplomatic and consular missions, under the Charter, the above-mentioned Geneva Convention, the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, general principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the Council;

4. Also reaffirms its demand that Iraq permit and facilitate the immediate departure from Kuwait and Iraq of those third-State nationals, including diplomatic and consular personnel, who wish to leave;

5. Demands that Iraq ensure the immediate access to food, water and basic services necessary to the protection and well-being of Kuwaiti nationals and of third-State nationals in Kuwait and Iraq, including the personnel of diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait;

6. Reaffirms its demand that Iraq immediately protect the safety and well-being of diplomatic and consular personnel and premises in Kuwait and in Iraq, take no action to hinder these diplomatic and consular missions in the performance of their functions, including access to their nationals and the protection of their person and interests, and rescind its orders for the closure of diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait and the withdrawal of the immunity of their personnel;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the continued exercise of his good offices concerning the safety and well-being of third-State nationals in Iraq and Kuwait, to seek to achieve the objectives of paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 above, in particular the provision of food, water and basic services to Kuwaiti nationals and to the diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait and the evacuation of third-State nationals;

8. Reminds Iraq that under international law it is liable for any loss, damage or injury arising in regard to Kuwait and third States, and their nationals and corporations, as a result of the invasion and illegal occupation of Kuwait by Iraq;

9. Invites States to collect relevant information regarding their claims, and those of their nationals and corporations, for restitution or financial compensation by Iraq, with a view to such arrangements as may be established in accordance with international law;

10. Requires that Iraq comply with the provisions of the present resolution and its previous resolutions, failing which the Council will need to take further measures under the Charter;

11. Decides to remain actively and permanently seized of the matter until Kuwait has regained its independence and peace has been restored in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council.

B

12. Reposes its trust in the Secretary-General to make available his good offices and, as he considers appropriate, to pursue them and to undertake diplomatic efforts in order to reach a peaceful solution to the crisis caused by the Iraqi invasion and occupation of Kuwait, on the basis of Security Council resolutions 660(1990), 662(1990) and 664(1990), and calls upon all States, both those in the region and others, to pursue on this basis their efforts to this end, in conformity with the Charter, in order to improve the situation and restore peace, security and stability;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council on the results of his good offices and diplomatic efforts.

On 9 October, Kuwait submitted reports of Amnesty International [S/21865] for the period 3 August to 3 October concerning Iraqi practices against nationals and residents of Kuwait. These practices included arbitrary arrests, torture and ill treatment, use of the death penalty, and extra-judicial killings. On 31 October, Iraq issued a declaration [S/21921] regarding the situation of foreigners in Iraq. It reiterated that all foreign citizens, including Americans, who had been placed at strategic sites were being well treated. It also reiterated that the safety of the buildings and persons of the United States Embassy in Baghdad and Kuwait was guaranteed and nothing constituted a danger to them.

On 18 December, the United Kingdom informed [S/22020] the Secretary-General that it was temporarily withdrawing its Ambassador and his remaining staff from Kuwait but that its Embassy had not been closed.

Also on 18 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 45/170, condemned the invasion of Kuwait by Iraqi forces and their serious human rights violations against the Kuwaiti people and third-State nationals. It urged Iraq to treat all prisoners of war and detained civilians in accordance with the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law and to protect them from all acts of violence.

Demographic changes

Kuwait on 4 October protested [S/21843] Iraq's actions to change its demographic character by expelling Kuwaitis from their homes and bringing in Iraqi nationals to take their place. Iraq had also seized some 1,500 homes under construction. Kuwait said that that action was in contravention of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (28 November)

On 28 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 677(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 660(1990) of 2 August 1990, 662(1990) of 9 August 1990 and 674(1990) of 29 October 1990,

Reiterating its concern for the suffering caused to individuals in Kuwait as a result of the invasion and occupation of Kuwait by Iraq,

Gravely concerned at the ongoing attempt by Iraq to alter the demographic composition of Kuwait and to destroy the civil records maintained by the legitimate Government of Kuwait,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Condemns the attempts by Iraq to alter the demographic composition of Kuwait and to destroy the civil records maintained by the legitimate Government of Kuwait;

2. Mandates the Secretary-General to take custody of a copy of the population register of Kuwait, the authenticity of which has been certified by the legiti-mate Government of Kuwait and which covers the registration of the population up to 1 August 1990;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to establish, in co-operation with the legitimate Government of Kuwait, an order of rules and regulations governing access to and use of the said copy of the population register.

Security Council resolution 677(1990)

26 November 1990 Meeting 2962 Adopted unanimously

8-nation draft (S/21966).

Other developments

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), at its twenty-eighth session (Montreal, Canada, 22-26 October), responding to a complaint [S/21796] by Kuwait, adopted a resolution [S/21923] condemning the violation of sovereignty of the airspace of Kuwait and the plunder of Kuwait International Airport, including the seizure and removal of 15 aircraft of Kuwait Airways and their purported registration by Iraq, which it declared null and void. It also demanded that Iraq return the aircraft to their legitimate owners, and requested those countries in which the aircraft were found to hand them over to Kuwait. All States were not to supply Iraq with spare parts, equipment or supplies or services to enable it to use those aircraft. ICAO also called upon Iraq to facilitate the recovery by their owners of foreign registered aircraft stranded in Kuwait.

On 28 November, Kuwait informed [S/21975] the Secretary-General that all amenities in the agricultural sector had been subject to widespread destruction, with losses amounting to more than $1 billion.

In a statement [S/21998] issued on 10 December, Human Rights Day, the Amir of Kuwait called for increased cohesion by countries that supported their just case in challenging tyranny in all its forms, and demanded an immediate halt to all the savage acts perpetrated by the Iraqi regime against the Kuwaiti people. Those countries should strive for the full and unconditional withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwait, the restoration of the legitimate Government and compensation for losses suffered, he declared.

Humanitarian and economic assistance

In September, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO), in a report on the situation in Jordan, especially at the Jordanian-Iraqi border, said that the influx of displaced persons continued at the steady rate of 15,000 to 20,000 daily, with increasing numbers of women and children.

Japan, in response to an appeal by UNDRO and ICRC, informed [A/45/467-S/21673] the Secretary-General of its 29 August decision to provide emergency aid totalling $10 million as a fund for evacuee relief activities in Jordan, and to extend 98 million yen in material assistance to the Government of Jordan. On 4 September, UNDRO reiterated an "urgent appeal" to the international community to help the displaced persons currently attempting to leave Kuwait and Iraq. It said that some 105,000 displaced people were in Jordan and another 60,000 at the border between Jordan and Iraq and that initial relief supplies were virtually exhausted.

Japan on 7 September informed [A/45/485-S/21722] the Secretary-General that in response to a request from the International Organization for Migration (IOM), it had decided to extend additional emergency aid of $12 million to enable Asian evacuees in Jordan and other countries to return to their home countries. On 12 September, the Secretary-General announced the appointment of Sadruddin Aga Khan as his Personal Representative for Humanitarian Assistance relating to the crisis between Iraq and Kuwait. The Secretary-General said that since the crisis, a number of UN agencies, ICRC, the League of Red Crescent Societies, IOM and a number of non-governmental organizations had worked to deal with the situation along the borders of the countries neighbouring Iraq and Kuwait.

On 14 September, the Chairman of the Security Council Sanctions Committee said [SC/5210] that the situation concerning thousands of Asians and other foreign nationals stranded in Kuwait and Iraq was exceptionally difficult and appealed for emergency international relief to assist in their evacuation. It also considered favourably appeals for such assistance from India, the Philippines and Sri Lanka.

On the same day, Japan informed [S/21753] the Secretary-General that it would extend $2 billion in economic assistance to Egypt, Turkey and Jordan, which had incurred serious economic losses due to the current situation. As part of this assistance, $600 million would immediately be extended in untied emergency commodities loans on the extremely favourable terms of 1 per cent interest payable over 30 years. Japan would also dispatch a medical team to Saudi Arabia.

On 19 September, the World Food Programme (WFP) announced that it was providing more than 6,000 tons of emergency food aid worth $2.4 million for evacuees from Kuwait and Iraq in transit through Jordan. UNDRO also warned of a new influx of third-country nationals from Kuwait into Jordan, as it was reported that the Iraqi authorities had asked all foreigners still in Kuwait to leave within the coming weeks. An influx of some 40,000 evacuees was therefore anticipated.

On 16 October, UNDRO announced that, since 5 August, some 708,970 third-country nationals had been assisted to return to their countries of origin. A human tragedy of immense proportions had thus been averted. International donors and the affected countries had responded generously to the 27 August appeal launched by UNDRO. Pledges and donations included over $100 million by Saudi Arabia and EEC for the repatriation of Egyptians, as well as other pledges and donations amounting to $100 million. UNDRO received cash contributions of $35 million, including $22 million from Japan. Jordan disbursed some $50 million for the evacuation process.

The Secretary-General chaired a meeting (Paris, 17 November) of 20 eminent persons, called at his initiative, to discuss informally the consequences of the Persian Gulf crisis on the world economy. The meeting outlined the scope for future action. The Secretary-General said that he would form a group of "friends of the Secretary-General", numbering five of the meeting's participants as well as the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and EEC.

Cambodia

A solution to the conflict in Cambodia came closer within reach during the year, thanks to intensified efforts inside and outside the United Nations. The four Cambodian parties accepted a framework for a comprehensive political settlement drawn up by the five permanent members of the Security Council ("the Five") in August, and agreed to form a Supreme National Council (SNC) in which, throughout the transition period (from the signing of a settlement agreement to the formation of a new Cambodian Government following free and fair elections), Cambodia's independence, national sovereignty and unity would be embodied and which would represent Cambodia at the United Nations. SNC met for the first time in September, but differences among its 12 members persisted. Both the Security Council and the General Assembly, endorsing the framework for a comprehensive settlement elaborated by the Five, urged the parties to create a peaceful climate that would allow for its implementation.

Pursuant to calls by both the Council and the Assembly, the Co-Presidents of the Paris International Conference on Cambodia, initiated by France in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 178], and the Five completed in November draft agreements on a comprehensive political settlement, based on the August framework. The draft, which also foresaw an enhanced role for the United Nations, was formally presented to the SNC members in December, who concurred on most of its fundamental points, opening the way for a future reconvening of the Paris Conference.

Meetings of the Five (January to August)

The five permanent members of the Security Council—China, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States—held six meetings between January and August to discuss the situation in Cambodia.

At their first meeting (Paris, 15-16 January), the Five set out guiding principles [A/45/91-S/21087] for a resolution of the conflict, including non-use of armed force and a comprehensive political settlement, verification by the United Nations of the withdrawal of foreign forces, a cease-fire and cessation of outside military assistance. The goal would be self-determination for the Cambodians through free, fair and democratic elections, and all parties would accept an enhanced UN role in the process.

During the transitional process, an SNC might be the repository of Cambodian sovereignty, and questions relating to that sovereignty should be resolved with the agreement of the Cambodian parties. An effective UN presence would be required during the transition in order to assure internal security. The Five committed themselves to honouring the results of free and fair elections, supported all responsible efforts by regional parties to achieve a comprehensive political settlement and agreed to remain in close touch with them with a view to reconvening the Paris Conference.

Following their second meeting (New York, 11-12 February), the Five issued a press statement [A/45/127-S/21149] declaring that they were building on the principles agreed on in Paris in January, focusing on: the modalities of peace-keeping, including military aspects, and the administrative structure during the interim period. The objective, they said, was to ensure a comprehensive political settlement leading to an early restoration of peace, to create a neutral political climate for elections and to preserve the unity of Cambodia during the transition period and beyond. They agreed that essential to an effective UN operation were verified withdrawal of foreign forces, a cease-fire, cessation of outside military assistance and cantonment of the armed forces of the factions into designated areas. A number of options related to the establishment of SNC were discussed, as were the functions of a UN administration and the question of existing regimes. Consultations were held with the Secretary-General and other senior Secretariat officials on the enhanced role envisaged for the United Nations. The Five welcomed the establishment of an inter-Secretariat task force to facilitate contingency planning and noted the value of further UN fact-finding missions to Cambodia for a UN role to facilitate planning. The Five called on all concerned parties to protect and preserve the historical monuments at Angkor. In view of the progress made, they agreed to meet at the vice-ministerial level in the first half of March.

Prior to the third meeting of the Five (Paris, 12-13 March) [A/45/167-S/21196], discussions were held among the Cambodian parties and at an informal meeting on Cambodia in Jakarta, Indonesia, within the framework of the Paris International Conference on Cambodia. The Five, in the summary of their third meeting, noted that while no text was formally adopted at the Jakarta meeting, common understanding was reached among all concerned, notably the Cambodian parties, on the need for an enhanced UN role in dealing with the various aspects of the Cambodian settlement process and for the establishment of an SNC. The Five agreed on the following principles for the electoral process: an impartial system and procedures; the same rights, freedoms and opportunities for all Cambodian participants in the election process; commitment of all parties to honouring the results; and that the electoral process should lead to a single election of a constituent assembly to approve a constitution and transform itself into a legislative assembly.

The Five invited the four Cambodian parties to agree that SNC should be established as the unique legitimate body and source of authority in which, throughout the transition period, national sovereignty and unity would be enshrined. Its composition should be decided by the parties themselves and could include representatives of all shades of opinion among the Cambodian people. From its creation, SNC would delegate to a United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) all necessary powers, including those to conduct free and fair elections. As the enshrinement of Cambodian sovereignty, SNC would occupy Cambodia's seat at the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other international bodies. As for UNTAC, it would be created by the UN Security Council, under the direct authority of the Secretary-General, who could appoint a Special Representative. UNTAC should exercise all powers necessary over the entire Cambodian territory to assure the Cambodians freedom from intimidation and the threat of force and corruption, protect them from economic and social discrimination, and guarantee human and civil rights for all.

During their fourth meeting (New York, 25-26 May) [A/45/293-S/21318], the Five were briefed on the results of visits by UN fact-finding teams to Cambodia seeking information on technical questions raised at their March meeting in Paris. The Five reaffirmed the principles and modalities previously agreed to, including the modalities of a settlement involving an enhanced UN role and the creation of UNTAC. They reaffirmed that a comprehensive political settlement had to provide for the following: ensure the verification of the withdrawal of all foreign forces and cessation of external military assistance, a durable cease-fire, and the regrouping of the armed forces of the factions into designated areas, all under an effective UN peace-keeping operation; establish formally an SNC; ensure free and fair elections for a constituent assembly under UN auspices; enshrine fundamental human rights and freedoms for the Cambodian people, together with the necessary protections and guarantees; and provide a system of guarantees for Cambodia's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and inviolability, neutrality and national unity.

Noting recent positive steps towards peace, the Five welcomed the prospect of a June meeting in Tokyo, Japan, to bring together representatives of Cambodian parties, hoping it would lead to a continuous process, in particular through agreement to the formation of SNC.

They remained firmly convinced that only a comprehensive political settlement would bring lasting peace and stability and that all efforts should be designed to create conditions to reconvene the Paris Conference. The Five discussed alternative transitional arrangements involving varying degrees of exercise of authority by SNC and considered their implications for a UN role. Those indispensable requirements would be set out in more detail in working papers under preparation, to serve as a basis of discussion with the Cambodian parties whose representatives would be invited to discussions with the Five at their next meeting, to take place in Paris before the middle of July.

At their fifth meeting (Paris, 16-17 July) [A/45/353-S/21404], the Five reviewed developments, including the results of the 4-5 June Tokyo meeting that brought together representatives of the Cambodian parties. Joining the meeting, Under-Secretary-General Rafeeuddin Ahmed advised the Five on practical aspects of a

UN operation, in the light of recent fact-finding missions. The Five stated that they made significant progress on two key elements of a solution based on an enhanced UN role: transitional arrangements regarding Cambodia's administration during the pre-election period, and military arrangements. The Five agreed to accelerate their work on the remaining three areas-free and fair elections, safeguarding human rights and international guarantees. They made clear their belief that the time was past due for the Cambodian parties to turn from the battlefield to the negotiating table. The parties were called upon to agree to the establishment of SNC composed of representative individuals with authority among the Cambodians, to help create conditions for a meeting of all the parties with the Five.

Framework for a comprehensive settlement

At their sixth meeting (New York, 27-28 August), the Five reached final agreement on a framework for a comprehensive settlement of the Cambodian conflict based on an enhanced UN role. The framework document, which was attached to a statement [A/45/472-S/21689] at the end of their meeting, was composed of five sections comprising the indispensable requirements for such a settlement: transitional arrangements for Cambodia's administration during the pre-election period; military arrangements during the transitional period; elections under UN auspices; human rights protection; and international guarantees. Together with the two documents elaborated by the 1989 International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 707], the framework document outlined a settlement process based on national reconciliation and involving an enhanced UN role that would ensure a just and lasting political solution. According to the statement, the basic approach of the Five was to enable the Cambodian people to determine their own political future through free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations in a neutral political environment, with full respect for Cambodia's national sovereignty. The Five called on the Cambodian parties to commit themselves to the process and to form SNC as soon as possible on the basis outlined in the framework document. To that end, they supported Indonesia's efforts to convene in Jakarta a meeting of the Cambodian parties (see above), and urged the two Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference (France and Indonesia) to commend the framework to the Cambodian parties and persuade them to form SNC. Once that was accomplished, the Paris Conference, which included all interested parties and the Secretary-General, should be reconvened to adopt the elements of the comprehensive political settlement and draw up a detailed plan of implementation. The Conference would then invite the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council, transmitting the Conference's recommendation that the Council adopt a resolution endorsing the final agreement and enabling the Secretary-General to implement it. The Five agreed to convene another meeting before mid-October.

Jakarta informal meeting (September)

In exercise of the mandate conferred on them by the Paris Conference in 1989, the Conference Co-Presidents convened an informal meeting of the Cambodian parties (Jakarta, Indonesia, 9-10 September 1990) to ascertain their views on the framework of a comprehensive settlement as agreed on by the five permanent Security Council members, as well as to finalize the formation of SNC on 28 August. In a joint statement [A/45/490-S/21732] issued at the close of the meeting, the Co-Presidents reported that the parties accepted the framework in its entirety as a basis for settling the Cambodian conflict and committed themselves to elaborating it into a comprehensive political settlement through the processes of the Paris Conference. The parties agreed on the nature and functions of SNC as the legitimate organ and source of authority in which, throughout the transition period, Cambodia's independence, sovereignty and unity would be embodied. SNC would be composed of representative individuals and would reflect all shades of opinion and represent Cambodia externally, occupying the country's seat at the United Nations, in specialized agencies and in other international institutions and conferences. At the time of signature of the comprehensive settlement, it would delegate to the United Nations all powers necessary to implement that agreement, including the conduct of free and fair elections and the relevant aspects of the administration of Cambodia. The parties agreed to form SNC with 12 members and to elect a Chairman who would be its thirteenth member. The Council was to hold its first meeting as soon as possible and all its decisions were to be made by consensus.

The Co-Presidents agreed to consult with the other participating countries with a view to reconvening the Paris Conference at the earliest opportunity.

By a press communique [A/45/519-S/21788] issued by the Permanent Mission of Cambodia to the United Nations on 18 September, those agreements were confirmed and it was stated that preparations were being made to elect the Chairman of SNC and complete its formation.

According to the communique, the Cambodian people wished Samdech Norodom Sihanouk to be elected Chairman and he had expressed his willingness to do so. Pending his election, it had been decided to keep the seat of Cambodia at the United Nations temporarily unattended. A new phase had begun leading to a fair, reasonable and comprehensive settlement, the communique stated, and efforts should continue to ensure that the problem was settled expeditiously on the basis of the framework document so that Cambodian independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty could be restored at an early date.

Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea

The Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea, established by the Conference in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 239], acted as an advisory body to the Secretary-General between Conference sessions and advised the Conference President, after consultations with the Secretary-General, as to when the Conference should be reconvened. Its members were Belgium, Japan, Malaysia, Nepal, Peru, Senegal, Sri Lanka, the Sudan and Thailand. In a number of resolutions, the latest being 44/22 [YUN 1989, p. 180], the General Assembly had requested the Committee to continue its work pending the reconvening of the Conference.

In a September 1990 report [A/CONF.109/16] covering its meetings with representatives of States active in the search for a settlement of the Cambodian problem, the Ad Hoc Committee welcomed those efforts, including those of the five permanent Security Council members, noting that they were consistent with the principles contained in the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted by the Conference in 1981. The Committee expressed the belief that the progress achieved provided a basis for furthering dialogue and negotiation among the Cambodian parties and for the early establishment of SNC.

Meeting of SNC

The first meeting of the Supreme National Council was held on 17 and 18 September at the Cambodian Embassy in Bangkok, Thailand. The SNC members from the Cambodian National Resistance (CNR), in pursuance of the Jakarta Joint Statement of 10 September, called on all SNC members to accept Norodom Sihanouk as Council Chairman. However, the members of Hun Sen's delegation rejected the proposal.

On 19 September, the Democratic Kampuchea party, a component of the National Government of Cambodia, in a press statement [A/45/521-S/21794], said that it deeply regretted that the meeting of the 12 SNC members (in alphabetical order, Chau Sen Coosal, Chem Snguon, Hor Nam Hong, Hun Sen, Ieng Mouly Khieu Samphan, Kong Som Ol, Prince Norodom Ranariddh, Sin Song, Son Sann, Son Sen, Tea Banh) was unable to produce positive results.

To refuse to accept Norodom Sihanouk as Chairman could be only construed as an attempt to kill the framework for a comprehensive settlement elaborated by the Five and the Jakarta Joint Statement and therefore to prolong the war in Cambodia.

Peace proposals by the parties and other communications (January-August). As the five permanent members of the Security Council continued their efforts to elaborate the principles of a peace settlement to the Cambodian conflict, the parties to the conflict, between January and June, outlined their own proposals and their reactions to those proposed by the Five.

On 10 January [A/45/80-S/21081], Prince Sihanouk, prior to the holding of the first meeting of the Five to discuss the situation in Cambodia, set out the positions of the four Cambodian factions on the possible setting up of a UN trusteeship in the country. He agreed that a trusteeship should be established for one or two years, replacing the current administrations, and a UN international control mechanism and a UN international peace-keeping force should be created to control the departure of all Vietnamese forces, disarm the four Cambodian factions and destroy their weapons and ammunition, protect the Cambodian people, and organize and supervise general elections. They should remain in Cambodia for five years after the elections. The seat of Cambodia at the United Nations should not be vacated until both the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea and the illegal "State of Cambodia" were simultaneously dismantled.

Prince Sihanouk explained that the Khmer Rouge abided by that five-point plan and had particularly asked for the formation of a provisional quadripartite government, while Hun Sen and his group were totally against the plan.

On 17 January, following the meeting of the Five at which principles were elaborated for a resolution of the Cambodian problem, Prince Sihanouk reiterated [A/45/85-S/21090] his position demanding the complete dismantling of the Hun Sen regime in Cambodia and all other factions. He declared that he would not participate in any peace conference among the four Cambodian factions alone, but would in the context of a Cambodia-Vietnam or international conference.

The Democratic Kampuchea party on 4 April [A/45/208-S/21239] reiterated its view that the five-point proposal of Prince Sihanouk was an equitable and feasible peace plan. It also supported the principles for a settlement elaborated by the Five at their January meeting and shared the Secretary-General's view that the mandate to be entrusted to the United Nations should be well defined, realistic and practicable.

On 9 April [A/45/209-S/21240], Prince Sihanouk made new proposals, whereby the Five, the Secretary-General and the two existing Cambodian Governments—the National Government of Cambodia, recognized by the United Nations, and the Government of the State of Cambodia of Heng Samrin-Hun Sen, installed in Phnom Penh by Viet Nam—would proclaim an immediate cease-fire with the (provisional) maintenance in their positions of the four armies of the Khmer warring factions and of the Vietnamese army units still inside Cambodia. Prior to that, the Five would send a strongly armed contingent under UN command to implement the cease-fire. Later, the United Nations would compel the Khmer factions to regroup and restrict them to barracks. An international control mechanism (ICM) would be established by the Paris Conference to assist the UN military command in neutralizing the armies in Cambodia, and to prepare for and monitor general elections. The two Governments could be maintained, in conformity with the demand of Hun Sen, on condition that all administrative powers be transferred, pending general elections, to a UN Administering Authority (UNAA) and their foreign policy powers transferred to a Supreme Council of the Cambodian State, composed of six members each of CNR and of the Phnom Penh régime. General elections would be jointly organized by the Supreme Council and UNAA and monitored by ICM. and would not take place until: there was control and dismantling of arms caches of the Vietnamese and Khmer factions and other armed groups, Cambodian or foreign; repatriation of armed Vietnamese elements and illegal immigrants had taken place under the aegis of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR); a census of the population of Cambodian and non-Cambodian nationality had been held; and the borders of Cambodia internationally recognized until 17 March 1970 (the eve of Lon Nol's putsch) had been verified in conformity with official maps prevailing in 1969. Given those tasks, general elections should not take place before two or three years after proclamation of the cease-fire.

On the same day [A/45/212-S/21244], Son Sann, Prime Minister of the National Government of Cambodia and President of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front (KPNLF), declared his support for all the international initiatives so far taken to resolve the Cambodian crisis, including that of the Secretary-General to organize general elections. He urged the Cambodian parties to come up with a compromise solution in order to allow the Cambodian people to determine freely the regime of their choice. In that context, he welcomed Prince Sihanouk's proposal for convening a meeting of the four Cambodian parties at Bangkok, Thailand, with the relevant Thai authorities.

On 30 May [A/45/315-S/21364], the three components of the National Government of Cambodia informed the Secretary-General that they fully supported the summary of conclusions of the Five at their fourth meeting (New York, 25 and 26 May) [A/45/293-S/21318], considering them as the basis for a comprehensive political settlement.

According to a 17 June memorandum [A/45/322-S/21373] of the Council of Ministers of the National Government of Cambodia, the efforts of the Five were flatly rejected by Viet Nam, which instead tried to impose a cease-fire without a comprehensive political settlement, thus preventing the Cambodians from carrying out their national liberation struggle. By opposing UN supervision and trying to keep the Phnom Penh regime in place, Viet Nam wanted to conceal its forces in Cambodia and pursue its occupation. With a view to contributing to an early restoration of peace and to promoting national reconciliation, the three components of the National Government and CNR renewed their full support of the May 1990 conclusions of the Five and expressed their readiness to participate in the work of the Five at their next meeting scheduled for July.

By another memorandum of the same date [A/43/320-S/21371], the Council of Ministers said it considered the Vietnamese regime installed in Phnom Penh as a party to peace negotiations. However, Viet Nam and its Phnom Penh regime opposed negotiations among the four Cambodian parties, and had demanded that the talks in Tokyo (4-5 June) only be held between two parties, the National Government of Cambodia and the Vietnamese-installed regime. Therefore, only the three components of CNR took part in the Tokyo meeting, which had been proposed by Prince Sihanouk in April. The three components of the National Government of Cambodia and CNR said that they were ready to participate in the work of the Five to which the four Cambodian parties would be invited at the forthcoming meeting scheduled for July.

On 8 July, the Vice-President of Cambodia in charge of foreign affairs said [A/45/3 -S/21392] in an interview with Xinhua News Agency that the three parties of CNR, headed by Prince Sihanouk, had agreed to participate in the fifth round of talks of the Five, scheduled for July, according to what was known as the "Five plus Four" (i.e., the four Cambodian parties) formula. However, the Hanoi authorities were hindering the process by putting forward a "Five plus Two" formula, aimed at preserving the Phnom Penh régime. The difference between both formulas was in substance a difference between a comprehensive political settlement with UN verification and control of the whole settlement process and a partial solution of a cease-fire without UN verification and control.

On 29 June, the Democratic Kampuchea party presented to the Secretary-General proposals [A/45/332-S/21381] for a comprehensive political settlement, within the framework of the 26 May summary of conclusions of the Five and under the control of a UN peace-keeping force, which would verify all aspects of the settlement process, from the signing of the initial agreement on a settlement, through the elections, the convening of the Constituent Assembly and the adoption of the Constitution, to the formation of a new national Government. The proposal aimed at ending the Vietnamese war of aggression and occupation, it was stated, securing the withdrawal of all Vietnamese forces from Cambodia and allowing the four Cambodian conflicting parties to sit together and through their common efforts try their best to solve the problems.

In a 19 July declaration, Prince Sihanouk stated [A/45/362-S/21413] that the decision of the United States and the European Community to abandon CNR and expel the National Government of Cambodia from the United Nations and declare Cambodia's seat vacant was a very grave injustice and constituted a formidable reward to the Phnom Penh regime and Viet Nam, which maintained more than 40,000 forces in Cambodia. He appealed to all peoples and Governments to prevent the unjust deprivation of the-UN seat. The National Government and CNR would never accept a pax Vietnamica, nor a so-called peace solution dictated by foreign Powers which were working for a de facto partition of Cambodia.

In a 23 July joint statement, the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) Foreign Ministers [A/45/355-S/21408] asserted that all parties had hardened their positions and retreated from previous areas of agreement. The military conflict had intensified and there was a pressing need for a cease-fire. The Foreign Ministers fully supported an enhanced UN role, stressing that there were several possible avenues towards a comprehensive political settlement, including a UN interim administration pending elections, and an SNC administering in the interim period through existing administrative structures in conjunction with the United Nations. Those avenues were acceptable if they allowed the Cambodians to make a choice through credible, free and fair elections under UN supervision. Changing the representation of Cambodia in the United Nations at the present, in the absence of an SNC, would set back the search for a comprehensive political solution, they said; SNC should occupy the UN seat once it was formed. In working towards a political settlement, they were convinced Prince Sihanouk would continue to play a key role. The Foreign Ministers, with whom they would co-ordinate, encouraged the Five to continue and intensify their own efforts.

In a statement [A/45/471-S/21687] issued in Beijing on 31 August, Prince Sihanouk said that the National Government of Cambodia and the tripartite CNR fully supported, without reservation, the most recent proposals of the Five-the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodian situation issued on 28 August (see above)-and were committed to implementing it.

Viet Nam, on 31 August [A/45/477-S/21702], welcomed the efforts of the Five in working out the five documents regarding the Cambodian issue, saying that they were going in the right direction in the search for a comprehensive, fair and reasonable solution and that their agreements were basically in conformity with the contents agreed on by the countries participating in the 1989 Paris Conference. The Cambodian parties had already agreed that a solution should include a cease-fire, establishment of SNC, an important role for the United Nations, and free, democratic and fair elections. Questions relating to Cambodian sovereignty should be discussed and decided by the Cambodian people, and Viet Nam would respect those decisions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 September the Security Council adopted resolution 668(1990).

The Security Council,

Convinced of the need to find an early, just and lasting peaceful solution of the Cambodia conflict,

Noting that the Paris Conference on Cambodia, which met from 30 July to 30 August 1989, made progress in elaborating a wide variety of elements necessary for reaching a comprehensive political settlement,

Taking note with appreciation of the continuing efforts of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, which have resulted in the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict,

Also taking note with appreciation of the efforts of the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations and other countries involved in promoting the search for a comprehensive political settlement,

Further taking note with appreciation of the efforts of Indonesia and France as Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference on Cambodia and of all participants in this Conference to facilitate the restoration of peace to Cambodia,

Noting that these efforts are aimed at enabling the Cambodian people to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination through free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations in a neutral political environment with full respect for the national sovereignty of Cambodia,

1. Endorses the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict and encourages the continuing efforts of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America in this regard;

2. Welcomes the acceptance of this framework in its entirety by all the Cambodian parties, as the basis for settling the Cambodia conflict, at the informal meeting of the Cambodian parties at Jakarta on 10 September 1990 and their commitment to it;

3. Also welcomes the commitment of the Cambodian parties, in full co-operation with all other participants in the Paris Conference on Cambodia, to elaborating this framework into a comprehensive 'political settlement through the processes of the Conference;

4. Welcomes, in particular, the agreement reached by all Cambodian parties at Jakarta to form a Supreme National Council as the unique legitimate body and source of authority in which, throughout the transitional period, the independence, national sovereignty and unity of Cambodia is embodied;

5. Urges the members of the Supreme National Council, in full accord with the framework document, to elect the Chairman of the Council as soon as possible, so as to implement the agreement referred to in paragraph 4 above;

6. Notes that the Supreme National Council will therefore represent Cambodia externally and it is to designate its representatives to occupy the seat of Cambodia at the United Nations, in the United Nations specialized agencies and in other international institutions and international conferences;

7. Urges all parties to the conflict to exercise maximum self-restraint so as to create the peaceful climate required to facilitate the achievement and the implementation of a comprehensive political settlement;

8. Calls upon the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference to intensify their consultations with a view to reconvening the Conference, whose task will be to elaborate and adopt the comprehensive political settlement and to draw up a detailed plan of implementation in accord with the above-mentioned framework;

9. Urges the Supreme National Council, all Cambodians and all parties to the conflict to co-operate fully in this process;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue, within the context of preparations for reconvening the Paris Conference and on the basis of the present resolution, preparatory studies to assess the resource implications, timing and other considerations relevant to the United Nations role;

11. Calls upon all States to support the achievement of a comprehensive political settlement as outlined in the above-mentioned framework.

Security Council resolution 668(1990)

20 September 1990 Meeting 2941 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21800).

Meeting of the Five (October)

The five permanent members of the Security Council held further consultations on Cambodia in New York on 15 and 16 October. They noted [A/45/671-S/21908] with concern the continuing difficulties over the SNC chairmanship and the consequent inability to form a delegation to occupy Cambodia's UN seat. They recalled their statement in the framework agreement that they would welcome the election of Prince Sihanouk as Chairman and urged the Cambodian parties to resolve at an early date the outstanding questions related to that matter. They reiterated their appeal to the parties to co-operate fully in the settlement process, as they committed themselves during the September Jakarta meeting. Successful reconvening of the Paris Conference required a properly functioning SNC and a peaceful situation in Cambodia. They called for its reconvening before the end of 1990 to adopt the comprehensive settlement agreement.

On 10 October, the three components of CNR called [A/45/620-S/21866] for a further meeting of SNC, possibly with the presence of the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference, to elect the Council Chairman.

Report of Secretary-General. In a 10 October report on the situation in Cambodia [A/45/605], the Secretary-General said that during 1990 he had actively continued efforts, within the framework of his good offices, towards a negotiated settlement of the Cambodia problem. He and his Special Representative, Rafeeuiddin Ahmed, maintained regular contacts with the parties and countries concerned and followed closely the various initiatives and diplomatic exchanges. He had had discussions with the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the five permanent Security Council members, the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference and the leaders of other member countries of the Conference. He had created a task force on Cambodia in February, composed of senior Secretariat officials, to develop ideas regarding a potential UN role in Cambodia during the transition period. The task force conducted five fact-finding missions to Cambodia between March and October to gather information and data relevant to the eventual deployment of an integrated UN operation. Following the endorsement by the Security Council on 20 September of the framework for a comprehensive political settlement, the Secretary-General had instructed the task force to identify practical ways in which the United Nations could discharge its tasks outlined in the framework. In April, a voluntary fund for the Cambodian peace process was established on the suggestion of Australia, to facilitate the planning aspects of a comprehensive political settlement.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/22 [YUN 1989, p. 180], the Secretary-General continued to co-ordinate humanitarian relief assistance to the Cambodian people along the Thai-Cambodian border and within Cambodia and Thailand. At the end of September, there were some 298,000 Cambodians in evacuation sites under the care of the United Nations Border Relief Operation (UNBRO) and some 15,000 Cambodian refugees under the care of UNHCR. Efforts to assist the Cambodian border population were hampered by the insufficiency of resources to meet the needs of that population, forcing UNBRO to reduce programmes in 1990 by some $5.4 million.

The Secretary-General expressed concern over reports of the movement of displaced persons at the border inside Cambodia prior to a peacesettlement, without sufficient preparation or consultation. In January, some 4,400 persons were relocated to unknown locations across the border under extremely poor conditions. The plight of those people underscored the dangers for those who attempted to return outside a UN-assisted voluntary repatriation programme. To prepare for orderly repatriation, a skills-training programme was being carried out with assistance from the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO). UNHCR, which had assumed the lead role in repatriation, had prepared a planning framework for a repatriation operation, and the Secretary-General's Special Representative for the co-ordination of humanitarian assistance, S. A. M. S. Kibria, convened inter-agency workshops also involving non-governmental organizations (NGOs), to co-ordinate a joint programme of assistance for the returnees. UNHCR was working closely with UNBRO to ensure a smooth transition between border relief and repatriation operations. In the meantime, voluntary repatriation of individual cases continued with the parties. A serious problem deserving urgent attention was, according to the Secretary-General, the presence of land-mines and other anti-personnel devices, particularly in the western provinces of Cambodia to which most of the refugees and displaced persons were expected to return. A mine-awareness programme for the civilian population living in the vicinity of the Thai-Cambodian border had begun.

With the agricultural sector of the Cambodian economy remaining fragile and in anticipation of possible food shortages, the World Food Programme had taken steps to increase buffer stocks throughout the country, the Secretary-General reported. Humanitarian assistance also continued to be provided by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNHCR, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, ICRC and an increasing number of NGOs.

The Secretary-General concluded that considerable progress had been achieved in the negotiating process and a solution to the tragic conflict in Cambodia might be within reach. The establishment of a durable peace would require the full support and continued co-operation of all involved, and would ultimately depend on the Cambodian parties' willingness to overcome their long-standing differences and achieve a genuine national reconciliation. He hoped that they would resolutely meet that challenge and, as a first step, reach the necessary compromises for SNC to assume its role in the settlement process. He also hoped that the Cambodian parties would heed the Security Council's call for maximum self-restraint and that SNC would be able to agree, as soon as possible, to a voluntary cease-fire and moratorium on arms supplies, so as to establish a climate conducive to the successful completion of the negotiating process in the framework of the Paris Conference and to the rapid deployment of a UN operation, following the conclusion of a comprehensive peace accord.

The Secretary-General regarded as gratifying that the international community and the Cambodians were planning to entrust the United Nations with wide-ranging responsibilities in the process leading to the restoration of peace. That, however, would only be possible on the basis of a specific, realistic and practicable mandate. He intended to continue to work closely with all concerned to ensure that such a mandate was formulated and the Organization was provided with the human and financial resources indispensable to an effective operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/3.

The situation in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in Cambodia",

Convinced that an early, just and durable solution of the Cambodia conflict achieved through national reconciliation among the Cambodian parties free from external interference, within the framework for a comprehensive political settlement, will contribute to regional and international peace and security,

Noting that the Jakarta informal meetings on Cambodia have made a significant contribution towards achieving a comprehensive settlement,

Also noting that the Paris Conference on Cambodia, which met from 30 July to 30 August 1989, made progress in elaborating a wide variety of elements necessary for reaching a comprehensive political settlement,

Welcoming Security Council resolution 668(1990) of 20 September 1990,

Welcoming also an enhanced role for the United Nations in Cambodia and the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General within the framework for a comprehensive political settlement,

Recognizing that international humanitarian assistance has alleviated the suffering of the Cambodian people, particularly those who have sought temporary refuge in neighbouring countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the progress towards a comprehensive political settlement,

1. Reiterates the urgent need for a comprehensive political settlement as outlined in the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict, which has been endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 668(1990) and which the Paris Conference on Cambodia is called upon to elaborate and adopt;

2. Welcomes the acceptance of this framework in its entirety by all the Cambodian parties, as the basis for settling the Cambodia conflict, at the informal meeting of the Cambodian parties in Jakarta on 10 September 1990 and their commitment to it;

3. Further welcomes the commitment of the Cambodian parties, in full co-operation with all other participants in the Paris Conference on Cambodia, to elaborating this framework into a comprehensive political settlement through the processes of the Conference;

4. Welcomes, in particular, the agreement reached by all Cambodian parties in Jakarta forming a Supreme National Council as the unique legitimate body and source of authority in which, throughout the transitional period, the independence, national sovereignty and unity of Cambodia is embodied;

5. Notes that the Supreme National Council will therefore represent Cambodia externally and occupy the seat of Cambodia at the United Nations, in the United Nations specialized agencies and in other international institutions and international conferences;

6. Urges that, in working towards the goal of a comprehensive political settlement, the Cambodian leaders should co-operate in assuming their responsibilities in order to achieve national reconciliation;

7. Also urges all parties to the conflict to exercise maximum self-restraint so as to create the peaceful climate required to facilitate the achievement and the implementation of a comprehensive political settlement;

8. Calls upon the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference on Cambodia to intensify their consultations with a view to reconvening the Conference, whose task will be to elaborate and adopt the comprehensive political settlement and draw up a detailed plan of implementation in accordance with the framework for a comprehensive political settlement;

9. Stresses that an enhanced role for the United Nations in Cambodia, charged with a clear and practical mandate, would help achieve the goal of the exercise of the right to self-determination for the Cambodian people through free and fair elections organized and conducted by the United Nations in a neutral political environment with full respect for the national sovereignty of Cambodia;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue, within the context of preparations for reconvening the Paris Conference on Cambodia and on the basis of the present resolution, preparatory studies to assess the resource implications, timing and other considerations relevant to the role of the United Nations;

11. Reiterates its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts in co-ordinating humanitarian relief assistance and in monitoring its distribution, and requests him to intensify such efforts as necessary;

12. Expresses its deep appreciation once again to donor countries, the United Nations and its agencies and other national and international humanitarian organizations that have rendered assistance to the Cambodian people and appeals to them to provide financial and material resources for the speedy repatriation and rehabilitation of Cambodian displaced persons as well as for the economic and social reconstruction of Cambodia;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Cambodia".

General Assembly resolution 45/3

15 October 1990 Meeting 30 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/45/L.5); agenda item 32.

Meeting of the Five (November)

The five permanent Security Council members met in Paris (23-26 November) to assist the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference in their efforts to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodian conflict. Building on the results of a working group meeting in Jakarta (9-10 November) [A/45/719-S/21940] under the co-chairmanship of the two Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference, the Five reached consensus on a draft comprehensive political settlement developed directly from the 28 August framework agreement, as endorsed by the Security Council in September (resolution 668(1990) above) and the General Assembly in October. In a communique [A/45/829-S/21985] issued on 26 November, the Five stated that the Co-Presidents had thus fulfilled the first necessary condition for reconvening the Paris Conference and were in a position to present to the Co-ordinating Committee a draft agreement which could be submitted for adoption by the Conference, meeting at the ministerial level. In the light of the positive results, it was now urgent that the Cambodians made their contribution through SNC. The Co-Presidents and the Five strongly urged the Cambodians to ensure that the Council was fully functioning so that the Conference could be reconvened. The Five reaffirmed that Prince Sihanouk should be elected SNC Chairman. Related questions, including the possible expansion of SNC and the vice-chairmanship, should be decided by the Cambodians.

At a meeting in Paris (21-23 December), the Co-Presidents of the Paris Conference presented to the 12 SNC members the draft agreements they had prepared with the five permanent Security Council members. The UN Secretary-General's Special Representative also attended the meeting. In the course of the discussions, the SNC members reiterated their acceptance of the August framework document formulated by the Five in its entirety as the basis for settling the Cambodia conflict. They concurred on most fundamental points of the November draft agreement. The remaining questions were to be further discussed by the Co-ordinating Committee and among the SNC members. It was agreed that the draft agreements should be transmitted, together with an explanatory note concerning certain provisions in the texts, to the Co-ordinating Committee, which should be reconvened at an early date. The two Co-Presidents, the SNC members and the Secretary-General's Special Representative agreed that for the Paris Conference to be reconvened in an atmosphere propitious to national reconciliation, one important condition would be for all parties to the conflict to exercise genuine restraint on the battlefield.

The draft agreement on a comprehensive political settlement covered arrangements during the transition period, and in its annexes dealt with the proposed mandate of UNTAC; withdrawal, cease-fire and related measures; elections; repatriation of refugees and displaced persons; and principles for a new constitution. The draft agreement, as well as a draft agreement concerning the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and inviolability, neutrality and national unity of Cambodia, and a declaration on the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Cambodia, were transmitted [A/46/61-S/22059] to the Secretary-General together with the final statement issued at the end of the Paris meeting.

Other aspects

Military aspects

By a communique [A/45/124-S/21146] of 14 February, issued at the end of talks held on 11 and 12 February in Phnom Penh, the Foreign Ministers of Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam acclaimed that the total withdrawal of Vietnamese army volunteers from Cambodia 15 months ahead of schedule was a decisive factor for an overall political solution. The pivotal matter was to prevent the Khmer Rouge from re-establishing the genocidal regime in Cambodia.

On 17 June, the National Government of Cambodia stated [A/45/321-S/21372] that there was no effective withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Cambodia as claimed by Viet Nam. Some 100,000 Vietnamese soldiers remained in the country, as well as in regular units, wearing the uniforms of the Phnom Penh regime's army and militia. They continued to fight against the National Government and the Cambodian National Resistance of Norodom Sihanouk. The return of Vietnamese forces to Cambodia was also widely reported in the international press.

Given those conditions, it would be unjust to impose a cease-fire, thus preventing the Cambodian people from carrying out their struggle for national liberation. Viet Nam and the Phnom Penh regime were trying to impose a cease-fire without UN monitoring. It was the National Government's view that a cease-fire should be part of a comprehensive solution, effective only when an interim administration was in place and a UN international control mechanism and peace-keeping force were operational.

In another 17 June statement [A/45/323-S/21375], the National Government, referring to the destruction caused by Viet Nam to the Angkor Wat and other centuries-old monuments, reiterated its call for the establishment of the Angkor peace zone based on the withdrawal of all armed forces, including the Vietnamese occupying forces, and the deployment of a UN international mechanism to verify that the area remained neutral.

By a communique [A/45/432-S/21591] of 15 August, the High Command of the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea informed the Secretary-General that between 20 July and 9 August Viet Nam had dispatched some 5,000 fresh Vietnamese forces to Cambodia, together with heavy artillery, tanks and other war materials. This was clear proof that Viet Nam was unwilling to reach a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodian problem created by its invasion and occupation. In a memorandum of 12 October [A/45/661-S/21900], CNR stated that from August to early October another 8,000 Vietnamese troops were sent to Cambodia and there had been increasing activities to recruit Cambodian civilians into the Heng Samrin-Hun Sen army, which was trying to capture liberated zones controlled by the resistance forces.

On 18 October, the National Government of Cambodia reported [A/45/660-S/21899] that since September, Viet Nam and the Hun Sen-Heng Samrin party had stepped up their military operations throughout Cambodia, particularly in Battambang province, as well as in Kompong Cham and Kompong Thorn. The National Government condemned what it called the escalation of Viet Nam's invasion and occupation and called on friendly countries to prevent Viet Nam and the Phnom Penh party from sabotaging the peace process.

Sino-Vietnamese talks

In early June, talks were held between China and Viet Nam aimed at contributing to a solution to the Cambodian conflict. On 21 June, the Vietnamese Deputy Foreign Minister, reporting [A/45/331-S/21380] on the outcome of those talks, stated that both Viet Nam and China had reached consensus on some fundamental points and agreed that the Cambodia issue had to be solved through an overall political solution, including the total and internationally verified withdrawal of Vietnamese troops; a cease-fire; cessation of foreign military aid to all Cambodia parties; holding free, fair and democratic elections under international control; and the establishment of a peaceful, independent, neutral and non-aligned Cambodian State, having friendly relations with all other countries, particularly with close neighbours such as Viet Nam, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand. Differences existed, however, with regard to Cambodia's internal affairs, with China favouring agreement on the functions and powers of SNC and on measures to deal with the armed forces of all Cambodian parties after the enforcement of a cease-fire. Viet Nam stated that it was ready to join China and other countries in respecting the Cambodians' decision in accepting China's view. While the Chinese side demanded that SNC be the only supreme authority organ in the transition period, Viet Nam held that this should be arranged among the Cambodian factions themselves.

Reporting on the informal talks between China and Viet Nam, a leading member of the Asian Department of China's Foreign Ministry on 28 June said [A/45/337-S/21388] his country favoured a situation in which SNC either should be the sole legal interim organ of the highest authority in Cambodia with temporary legislative powers and administrative authority or should authorize the United Nations to execute administration during the transition period. Viet Nam opposed a UN administration in Cambodia, and objected to the transfer of temporary legislative and administrative authority to SNC, while insisting that power be left in the hands of the Phnom Penh regime, and SNC's power and functions be limited to a co-ordinating role between the two existing Governments of Cambodia. Viet Nam also opposed the cantonment of the armed forces of the Cambodian factions and their complete disarming or drastic reduction and objected to the sending of international peacekeeping forces into Cambodia. Viet Nam thus stood for keeping the Phnom Penh regime and its armed forces intact so as to maintain the fait accompli created by the Vietnamese invasion and to continue its control over Cambodia, China alleged.

Human rights

The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution of 19 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/9)] 1, reiterated its condemnation of the persistent gross and flagrant human rights violations in Cambodia and emphasized that the Cambodians should be enabled to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination through free, fair and democratic elections under UN supervision. The Commission reiterated its conviction that the following were the principal components of any just, lasting and comprehensive political settlement: the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Cambodia under UN supervision; the cessation of all outside military assistance; the creation of an interim administering authority; the promotion of national reconciliation under the leadership of Prince Sihanouk; the non-return to policies and practices of a recent past; the restoration of Cambodia's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status; the reaffirmation of the right of the Cambodians to determine their own destiny; and the commitment by all States not to interfere or intervene in Cambodia's internal affairs.

The Commission called on all parties to intensify efforts towards assuring that the Cambodian problem be resolved through such a settlement in order to end human rights abuses and enable the Cambodians to determine their own future. It expressed its strong conviction that genuine and lasting peace could be achieved only through the exercise by the Cambodians of their rights and fundamental freedoms.

The Commission resolution was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1990/256 of 25 May. By that decision, the Council affirmed that a complete withdrawal of foreign forces must be verified by the United Nations; called on all parties to engage in negotiations for a comprehensive settlement, including elections under UN administration; and expressed grave concern over Cambodian civilians stranded in Thailand as a result of continuing hostilities in Cambodia and over continued violations of human rights, particularly the shelling of Cambodian civilian camps along the border. The Council stressed that any Government elected through free, fair and democratic elections should take effective measures to guarantee the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Cambodians. (For further details on the human rights situation in Cambodia, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

Afghanistan

In 1990, the United Nations continued to pursue the implementation of the 1988 Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan [YUN 1988, p. 184]. Referred to as the Geneva Agreements, they comprised four instruments: a bilateral agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the principles of mutual relations; a declaration on international guarantees; a bilateral agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the return of refugees; and an agreement on the interrelationships for the settlement of the situation in Afghanistan. They were also signed by the USSR and the United States as State guarantors. The withdrawal of forces from Afghanistan was monitored by the United Nations Good Offices Mission in Afghanistan and Pakistan (UNGOMAP), which was established under the Geneva Agreements and whose mandate ended on 15 January 1990.

UNGOMAP was temporarily extended until 15 March. On that date, the Office of the Secretary-General in Afghanistan and Pakistan (OSGAP) was established, headed by the Secretary-General's Personal Representative, Benon Sevan.

During the year, UN activities were significantly expanded, through the efforts of the United Nations Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan (UNOCA) and others.

In October, the Secretary-General reported on UN humanitarian and economic assistance programmes and his own endeavours, as well as those of his Personal Representative, to achieve a comprehensive political settlement. In his report on the work of the Organization [A/45/1], the Secretary-General expressed the view that the opportunity now existed for collective and concerted efforts, both at the national and international levels, to achieve a resolution of the Afghan conflict.

The General Assembly, in November, called on all parties concerned to work urgently towards a settlement, the cessation of hostilities and the creation of peace and normalcy.

Letter of Secretary-General. By a letter [S/21071] of 9 January, the Secretary-General, recalling his earlier indication that more still needed to be done to implement the Geneva Agreements, and after consultation with the parties, requested the concurrence of the Security Council with his proposal to extend the temporary detachment of military officers to Afghanistan and Pakistan, as the concurrence of the countries supplying the military personnel had already been obtained.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 January, the Security Council adopted resolution 647(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling the letters dated 14 and 22 April 1988 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council concerning the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, signed at Geneva on 14 April 1988,

Recalling also the note by the Secretary-General of 15 February 1989 and his report of 20 October 1989,

Recalling further its resolution 622(1988) of 31 October 1988,

Taking note of the letter dated 9 January 1990 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

1. Confirms its agreement to the measures envisaged in the Secretary-General's letter of 9 January 1990 concerning the arrangements for the temporary deployment in Afghanistan and Pakistan of military officers from existing United Nations operations to assist in the mission of good offices for a further period of two months;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Security Council informed of further developments in accordance with the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, signed at Geneva on 14 April 1988.

Security Council resolution 647(1990)

11 January 1990 Meeting 2904 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21073).

On 12 March, the Secretary-General reported [S/21188] to the Council President that his consultations with the signatories to the Geneva Agreements indicated that another extension of the temporary deployment of the military officers beyond 15 March would not meet the necessary consensus. He would therefore redeploy a limited number of military officers as military advisers to his Personal Representative to assist him in the further implementation of the responsibilities entrusted to him by General Assembly resolution 44/15 [YUN 1989, p. 183], particularly with regard to the request for him to encourage and facilitate early realization of a comprehensive political settlement.

The Council President informed [S/21218] the Secretary-General on 28 March that the Council members had no objection to the proposed action. The arrangements for UNGOMAP accordingly came to an end on 15 March.

Report of Secretary-General. In a 17 October report [A/45/635-S/21879], presented pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/15 [YUN 1989, p. 1831, the Secretary-General stated that up to 15 March, when the arrangements for UNGOMAP came to an end, the mission continued to discharge its mandate, monitoring the implementation of all aspects of the Geneva Agreements and providing good offices to parties. UNGOMAP continued to receive numerous complaints from each party against the other, of alleged violations of the first instrument of the Geneva Agreements, i.e., the bilateral agreement between Afghanistan and Pakistan on the principles of mutual relations, in particular non-interference and non-intervention.

By the end of its mandate, UNGOMAP had received 1,168 notes verbales from Afghanistan containing 7,545 complaints of alleged violations by Pakistan and 211 notes verbales from Pakistan containing 1,317 complaints of alleged violations by Afghanistan. UNGOMAP had submitted to the two parties 102 reports on numerous inspections regarding the complaints, and the two parties had held 15 joint meetings under UNGOMAP auspices to consider the inspection reports. Since the end of the arrangements for UNGOMAP, Afghanistan continued submitting complaints of alleged violations of the Geneva Agreements to OSGAP, copies of which OSGAP submitted to Pakistan.

To further intensify his efforts for a comprehensive political settlement, the Secretary-General on 15 March established OSGAP, headed by his Personal Representative, Benon Sevan, and organized into two small headquarters units— one in Islamabad, with a sub-office in Peshawar, and one in Kabul. OSGAP's Military Advisory Unit comprised 10 military advisers, one each from Austria, Canada, Denmark, Fiji, Finland, Ghana, Ireland, Nepal, Poland and Sweden. The Unit maintained a continued assessment of the security situation in Afghanistan and elaborated and updated plans for military support to a possible increased UN involvement. The military advisers were organized in two small units in Islamabad and Kabul. OSGAP's expenses were met from the UN regular budget, with local operating costs, as with UNGOMAP, borne by Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Despite the set-back in establishing the formal mechanisms foreseen in the Geneva Agreements, measures were taken to provide direct assistance to a significant number of refugees already returning voluntarily to Afghanistan, with assistance programmes being implemented by UNHCR, in close co-operation with UNOCA and the World Food Programme (WFP). By the end of September, some 50,000 refugees along Pakistan's border with Afghanistan had benefited from a voluntary repatriation project that had started in July and was extended to February/March 1991. UNHCR had also been providing direct and individual support to an estimated 15,000 Afghan returnees passing through reception and transit centres established by the Afghan Government. Progress was also being made by UN agencies in providing assistance to internally displaced persons who were beginning to return to their villages of origin in increasing numbers.

UN humanitarian and economic assistance programmes were significantly expanded during the year. Through the efforts of UNOCA, aid commodities reached needy Afghans in practically every province in spite of logistic and other difficulties. Currently, the Secretary-General reported, there were over 400 UN projects and sub-projects—ranging from mine clearance activities to agriculture, health, education and restoration of physical infrastructure—inside the country, of which 121 had been completed, 246 were under implementation and over 50 were in the pipeline.

According to the Secretary-General, the problem of acute food shortages in some areas, noted in 1989, was now in large measure under control. In addition to UN offices in Iran, Pakistan and the USSR, the UN presence had been considerably strengthened within Afghanistan to facilitate aid delivery, monitor distribution and initiate rehabilitation projects. The response to the appeal for assistance, launched by the Secretary-General in October 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 396], stood at $1,029 million, but the imbalance between contributions in cash and in kind, as well as the high proportion of contributions earmarked for specific projects, continued to affect operational flexibility.

In order to move closer to the realization of a comprehensive political settlement, the Secretary-General intensified consultations with all segments of the Afghan people, the two parties and the two guarantors of the Geneva Agreements as well as the Governments of neighbouring and other countries. During the reporting period, he held discussions with the Foreign Minister of Afghanistan and, in September, with President Najibullah in Paris. His Personal Rep-representative met with the Afghan Foreign Minister almost on a monthly basis and also had several substantive discussions with the President. The Personal Representative also maintained close contacts with the leaders of opposition groups and other prominent Afghans in Peshawar and Tehran and outside the region. In April and September the Secretary-General met with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan and had been in touch, through his Personal Representative, with the President and Prime Minister. He met with the President of the USSR in Moscow in January, and had several meetings with the Soviet Foreign Minister. He held discussions with the United States President in June, as well as with the Secretary of State. He discussed the Afghan situation several times with the Foreign Minister of Iran, who had also met with his representatives in Tehran.

The Secretary-General reported that a number of specific proposals and suggestions had been put forward by the Government of Afghanistan, the opposition leaders, prominent Afghans currently residing outside the region and the guarantors. The basic aim of all the proposals and suggestions was to bring about the establishment of a Government in Afghanistan that would be supported by the majority of the Afghan people and thus end the fighting and suffering. Most recommended free and fair elections, bearing in mind the Afghan traditions as a means to achieve that objective. Most proposals, however, had been put forward not as a result of dialogue among the opposing parties but, rather, unilaterally. There had been progress towards consensus among the guarantors and the countries neighbouring Afghanistan, which, the Secretary-General emphasized, was necessary to encourage an Afghan national consensus and Afghan political process; that in turn would enable the Afghan people to exercise, unhindered, their right to self-determination. Responses received so far from the Governments concerned clearly indicated a desire to achieve a settlement through political means.

In the Secretary-General's view, the time had come to define in a more concrete manner the emerging international consensus, which should comprise the recognition of the right of the Afghan people to determine their own future, free from outside interference, as well as the necessity for a credible and impartial transition mechanism with appropriate powers and authority, as might be agreed, that would allow the Afghans to participate in a free and fair election process, taking into account their traditions. The consensus should further indicate the need for a cessation of hostilities and a halt to the arms supply to all sides, as well as the necessity for the implementation of all other transitional arrangements. The Secretary-General also believed that the need for international economic assistance would be recognized. Far from imposing a solution on the Afghan people, an international consensus would free the Afghan question from its external constraints and allow the Afghan people to exercise, unhindered, their right to self-determination; but even with such consensus achieved, a long and difficult road lay ahead for the Afghan people, and it would then be up to them to reach agreement on the transition period and the transition mechanism.

Concluding, the Secretary-General appealed to all Afghan leaders and the Afghan people as a whole to place the interest of their nation above all others in order to achieve a comprehensive political settlement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/12.

The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security",

Recalling its resolutions 43/20 of 3 November 1988 and 44/15 of 1 November 1989,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligation of all States to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of any State,

Reaffirming also the inalienable right of all peoples to determine their own form of government and to choose their own economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever,

Gravely concerned at the situation in Afghanistan, which resulted from the violation of principles of the Charter and of the recognized norms of inter-State conduct,

Noting the conclusion at Geneva, on 14 April 1988, of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan and the completion of the withdrawal of foreign troops in accordance with those Agreements,

Aware of the continuing concern of the international community at the sufferings of the Afghan people and the magnitude of the social and economic problems posed to Pakistan and Iran by the presence on their soil of millions of Afghan refugees,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need for a comprehensive political solution of the situation in respect of Afghanistan,

Conscious that a successful final political settlement of the Afghanistan problem would have a favourable impact on the international situation and provide an impetus for the resolution of other acute regional conflicts,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative for their efforts to bring about peace and security,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the status of the process of political settlement,

1. Emphasizes the importance of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, hereinafter referred to as the "Geneva Agreements", concluded at Geneva on 14 April 1988 under United Nations auspices, which constitute an important step towards a comprehensive political solution of the Afghanistan problem;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative for their constant efforts to achieve a political solution of the Afghanistan problem;

3. Calls for the scrupulous respect for and faithful implementation of the Geneva Agreements by all parties concerned, who should fully abide by their letter and spirit;

4. Reiterates that the preservation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and non-aligned and Islamic character of Afghanistan is essential for a peaceful solution of the Afghanistan problem;

5. Reaffirms the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention, subversion, coercion or constraint of any kind whatsoever;

6. Calls upon all parties concerned to work urgently for the achievement of a comprehensive political solution, the cessation of hostilities and the creation of the necessary conditions of peace and normalcy that would enable the Afghan refugees to return voluntarily to their homeland in safety and honour;

7. Emphasizes the need for an early start of the intra-Afghan dialogue for the establishment, through democratic procedures acceptable to the Afghan people, including free and fair elections, of a broad-based government to ensure the broadest support and immediate participation of all segments of the Afghan people;

8. Calls upon all parties concerned to exert every effort to promote a political settlement acceptable to the Afghan people in order to bring to an end the protracted conflict that has prevailed in Afghanistan for the past several years;

9. Requests the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative to continue to encourage and facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement in Afghanistan in accordance with the provisions of the Geneva Agreements and of the present resolution;

10. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees aimed at providing humanitarian assistance to the Afghan refugees and facilitating their voluntary return, and appeals to the parties concerned to take all necessary measures to ease their lot;

11. Renews its appeal to all States and national and international organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance with a view to alleviating the hardship of the Afghan refugees, in co-ordination with the High Commissioner;

12. Also expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and calls upon all States to provide to the Co-ordinator adequate financial and material resources for the purposes of achieving the speedy repatriation and rehabilitation of the Afghan refugees, as well as for the economic and social reconstruction of the country;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to keep Member States and the Security Council informed of progress towards the implementation of the present resolution and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the situation in Afghanistan and on progress achieved in the implementation of the Geneva Agreements and the political settlement relating to Afghanistan;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "The situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security".

General Assembly resolution 45/12

7 November 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Draft by President (A/45/L.3); agenda item 29.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/45/7/Add.4: 5th Committee, A/45/710; S-G, A/C.5/45/25 & Corr.1.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 5th Committee 21, 23; plenary 37.

In a statement [A/C.5/45/25] to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Secretary-General indicated that the draft resolution, if adopted, would entail additional requirements ($6,742,100). The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) reduced [A/45/7/Add.4] those estimates to $6,150,000, and based on the Advisory Committee's comments and observations, the Fifth Committee informed [A/45/710] the Assembly that adoption of the text would require an additional appropriation in the amount specified by ACABQ.

Other situations

Iran-Iraq

Relations between Iran and Iraq improved in 1990 as important aspects of Security Council resolution 598(1987) [YUN 1987, p. 223], which established the basic framework for a settlement, were implemented, with the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group (UNIIMOC) fulfilling the role assigned to it. Resolution 598(1987) provided for discontinuance of military activities, observance of a cease-fire and withdrawal of the parties' troops to the internationally recognized boundaries as described in the 1975 Treaty concerning the State Frontier and Neighbourly Relations between Iran and Iraq, and its protocols and annexes. UNHMOG was set up in 1988 [SC res. 619(1988)] to verify, confirm and supervise the implementation of resolution 598(1987). In 1990, its mandate was extended three times, first for a six-month period until 30 September, then twice for two months each, until 31 January 1991. Concurrent with the withdrawal to the internationally recognized boundaries, which started on 17 August, the exchange and repatriation of prisoners of war began. In addition, a new phase of direct talks between the two countries was initiated. However, certain elements of resolution 587(1987) still remained to be implemented. On 17 September, the General Assembly, by decision 44/472, included the item "Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq" in the draft agenda of its forty-fifth (1990) session. By decision 45/431 of 14 December, the Assembly decided to conclude consideration of the item "Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq" since there was no request for discussion of the item during the forty-fifth session.

New phase of direct talks

The Secretary-General, in a 22 March 1990 report on UNHMOG [S/21200], stated that during the reporting period (23 September 1989 to 22 March 1990) he had explored the positions of Iran and Iraq on those provisions of resolution 598(1987) that had not yet been implemented. The visits of his Personal Representative, Jan Eliasson, in November 1989 to the region were aimed at encouraging the two nations to focus on an agenda for a new phase of direct talks. In his presentation to both sides at the conclusion of his visits, Ambassador Eliasson made specific suggestions on how to finalize a concrete programme of work. In particular, he put forward a specific list of issues to be implemented as an integrated whole. The presentation made clear that direct talks between the Foreign Ministers of both countries under the Secretary-General's auspices had been recognized as the appropriate vehicle for developing a common understanding on the implementation of resolution 598(1987). Such talks, appropriately structured, should permit finalization of the understanding with a view to implementation.

In December 1989, the Secretary-General held separate discussions with the Foreign Ministers of both countries, emphasizing the need for appropriately structured direct talks based on a specific agenda.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (February)

On 27 February 1990, the Security Council President issued the following statement [S/21172] of behalf of the Council.

The Council expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his briefing on the situation between Iran and Iraq and on his integrated approach to the format, agenda and timetable for direct talks between the parties aimed at achieving the full implementation of resolution 598(1987) of 20 July 1987.

Accordingly, the Council fully supports the efforts of the Secretary-General aimed at the holding of appropriately structured direct talks between both parties under his auspices, for a period of two months and with a specific agenda, the elements of which he outlined to the members of the Council, that he would propose to the parties, on the basis of the concluding observations contained in his report of 22 September 1989.

The Council calls upon both parties to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in his ongoing efforts, considering that 18 months after the cease-fire between Iran and Iraq, resolution 598(1987) has not yet been fully implemented.

The Council requests the Secretary-General to report to it at the conclusion of this stage of his efforts and to inform it on the results achieved and on the further steps he envisages for the full implementation of resolution 598(1987).

Meeting number. SC 2908.

On 6 March, the Secretary-General met with representatives of Iran and Iraq, respectively, and suggested, for acceptance by their Governments, a draft agenda for those talks. Since then, his Personal Representative continued contacts with both sides with the aim of arranging those talks. As at 22 March, no final answer had been received from either Government. The Secretary-General believed it was time for the leadership of the two nations to notify him of their acceptance of the proposed agenda and to give added political impetus to the talks by indicating their sincerity and determination to implement resolution 598(1987).

In a 23 November report on UNHMOG, the Secretary-General said [S/21960] it was evident that while both sides would favour the convening of a meeting of appropriately structured direct talks, their expectations of what such a meeting would entail were at variance. In late April, Iran and Iraq exchanged letters at the Presidential level and a series of direct bilateral contacts between the two Governments commenced in Geneva. In July, the Secretary-General met in Geneva, separately, with the Foreign Ministers of both countries and, on the afternoon of 3 July, was able to convene a joint meeting of the two Ministers. Both sides reaffirmed their commitment to implementing resolution 598(1987) as the framework within which all contacts between them were taking place, as well as their support for the Secretary-General's role in that connection. Immediately after the meeting, the Secretary-General's Personal Representative held follow-up discussions with officials from both sides. Bilateral contacts continued in July and August. Communications [S/21528, S/21556] exchanged between them at the Presidential level indicated that implementation of resolution 598(1987) would be carried out in accordance with the 1975 Treaty concerning the State Frontier and Neighbourly Relations between Iran and Iraq and conventions to which both were parties. In October, the two Governments resumed diplomatic relations.

The Secretary-General pointed out that while implementation of important parts of resolution 598(1987) had taken place, the fundamental change in the relations between the two countries had come at a time of new crisis for the region. As contacts continued between the two Governments to put their relations on a normal footing, it appeared that the part of resolution 598(1987) requesting the Secretary-General to examine, in consultation with the two countries and other States of the region, measures to enhance the security and stability of the region should at an appropriate time be looked at anew. It seemed to the Secretary-General that full implementation of resolution 598(1987) could well contribute to a marked improvement of the situation in the region as a whole, and he therefore intended to remain in close touch with the Governments concerned with regard to the yet unimplemented paragraphs of the resolution.

UN Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

Report of Secretary-General (March). As requested in Security Council resolution 642(1989) [YUN 1989, p. 185], the Secretary-General submitted a 22 March 1990 report [S/21200] on UNIIMOG's activities since 23 September 1989. The report provided information on the Group's deployment and structure and described steps to monitor compliance with the cease-fire, which came into effect on 20 August 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 1931, and to investigate alleged violations of it. According to the Secretary-General, there was a general calm along the cease-fire lines through the mandate period and a significant and encouraging decline in major violations. UNIIMOG's new standing operating procedures for violations went into effect and helped simplify the system of reporting, processing and resolving violations. The flooding of no man's land by Iran persisted, and efforts to persuade the Iraqi authorities to allow the fires in the three oil and gas wells in that area to be extinguished were unsuccessful. In February 1990, Iran moved heavy machinery, civilian workers and troops into no man's land at the southernmost well and started preliminary work to cap it. UNIIMOG persuaded the Iranian authorities to withdraw all personnel and equipment.

The mixed military working group, the establishment of which was agreed to in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 184], had so far not been convened. However, the Chief Military Observer continued to pursue measures to ease tension between the parties. A total of 168 Iranian and 252 Iraqi war dead were repatriated during the reporting period. UNIIMOG continued efforts for the release of Iranian soldiers and other prisoners captured since August 1988, including, most recently, three Iraqi soldiers captured in December 1989. In January 1990, Iran released a limited number of prisoners and Iraq responded on a proportional basis. On 13 March, 20 non-Iraqi prisoners of war were released by Iran.

UNIIMOG continued to play an indispensable part in ensuring the maintenance of the cease-fire and in furthering progress towards full implementation of Security Council resolution 598(1987), the Secretary-General said. He therefore recommended extension of its mandate for six months, until 30 September 1990.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 March, the Security Council adopted resolution 651(1990).

The Security Council,
Recalling its resolutions 598(1987) of 20 July 1987, 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, 631(1989) of 8 February 1989 and 642(1989) of 29 September 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group of 22 March 1990, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Decides:

(a) To call once again upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 598(1987):

(b) To extend the mandate of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for a further period of six months, that is, until 30 September 1990:

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 598(1987).

Security Council resolution 651(1990)

29 March 1990 Meeting 2916 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21217).

Report of Secretary-General (September). In a report [S/21803] covering the period 23 March to 21 September 1990, submitted pursuant to Security Council resolution 651(1990), the Secretary-

General stated that on 17 August Iraq started withdrawing its troops. Although UNIMOG had been made aware of Iraq's intention to withdraw only two days before, it was able to respond immediately and efficiently to the new operational requirements. It monitored the withdrawal of all forces to the internationally recognized boundaries as mandated by the Council. Withdrawal of Iraqi forces took place to those boundaries described in the 1975 Treaty concerning the State Frontier and Neighbourly Relations between Iran and Iraq and its protocols and annexes. UNIMOG was able to confirm that, within the five-day withdrawal period announced by Iraq (17-21 August), almost all Iraqi forces were withdrawn to the Iraqi side of the internationally recognized boundaries. On the basis of its own interpretation of the internationally recognized boundaries, UNIMOG requested both Iraq and Iran to withdraw from certain positions. Each side had assured UNIMOG that it had no intention to occupy territory of the other and both had survey teams visiting the entire length of the border. The main problem during the withdrawal process had been mines. UNIMOG proposed to both parties the establishment of areas of separation and of arms limitations along the internationally recognized boundaries, with neither side deploying military forces closer than one kilometre to the boundaries. One side had agreed in principle to the proposal, subject to further negotiations; the other was studying it. But in practice both sides had already established some positions within the proposed area of separation. Iran agreed to UNIMOG's proposal for the creation of a mixed military working group, which could negotiate such matters as areas of separation and limitations. While Iraq had agreed in principle, a final decision was still awaited. Together with the commencement of the withdrawal of forces, both countries started repatriation of prisoners of war.

The withdrawal being almost complete, the Secretary-General said he would report shortly to the Security Council on other aspects of the settlement under resolution 598(1987), after further contacts with the parties. In the meantime, he recommended extension of UNIMOG's mandate for a limited period of two months, until 30 November, to permit it to complete its tasks related to the withdrawal of all forces to the internationally recognized boundaries and to allow time for the parties and the Council to judge whether there was a continuing requirement for an impartial third party to monitor the cease-fire. During the extension phase, UNIMOG would continue to verify, confirm and supervise the remaining withdrawal stages; help the parties resolve any local tensions; and assist in establishing an area of separation into which each party would agree not to deploy military forces. Only about 60 per cent of the current military observer strength would be required to perform those tasks.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 September, the Security Council adopted resolution 671(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 598(1987) of 20 July 1987, 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, 631(1989) of 8 February 1989, 642(1989) of 29 September 1989 and 651(1990) of 29 March 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group of 21 September 1990, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for a further period of two months, that is, until 30 November 1990, as recommended by the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, during November, a report on his further consultations with the parties about the future of the Military Observer Group, together with his recommendations on this matter.

Security Council resolution 671(1990)

27 September 1990 Meeting 2944 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21822).

Report of Secretary-General (November). In a 23 November report [S/21960] covering the period 22 September to 20 November, presented pursuant to Security Council resolution 671(1990), the Secretary-General stated that the two sides had almost completed the process of withdrawal to the internationally recognized boundaries. Despite some cases of local tension, there were no serious incidents. Difficulties occurred because of the presence of unmarked minefields in the areas from which the forces were to withdraw, especially on the Iranian side of the border. UNIMOG continued to supervise the withdrawal of the forces of the two sides and their assumption of new positions on or close to the border. On 20 November, there were still 18 Iraqi positions that UNIMOG judged to be on the Iranian side of the border and 24 Iranian positions that were judged to be on the Iraqi side.

Concurrent with the commencement of the 17 August withdrawal of forces (see above), both sides began to repatriate their prisoners of war. While a substantial number of prisoners were exchanged, the repatriation came to a halt on 15 September. The parties, however, indicated that the issue was being discussed bilaterally and it was hoped that repatriation would soon be resumed. Following discussions between the parties, it was agreed that such resumption would begin on 21 November.

UNIIMOG continued to promote the idea of an area of separation and an area of limitation of armaments on either side of the border as a means of building confidence and reducing the risk of incidents. The Chief Military Observer, on 20 and 21 August, transmitted proposals to that effect. Both sides stated that they accepted the principle of an area of separation and were ready to discuss arrangements for its establishment. The first meeting of the mixed military working group was scheduled for 28 October, but had to be cancelled due to political difficulties that could not be resolved at the technical and military levels. UNIIMOG continued to promote the repatriation of war dead. During the reporting period, 10 Iraqi and 3 Iranian war dead were repatriated.

Concerning the future of UNIIMOG, both sides expressed the view that during a renewed mandate period its tasks should be to resolve the remaining problems on the border; arrange an exchange of information between the parties about unmarked minefields; and assist the parties in negotiating and implementing an area of separation and, thereafter, an area of limitation of armaments. However, they did not share the same views as to the length of the mandate period and the strength of UNIIMOG's forces. Iran favoured an extension of the mandate period for two months, while Iraq preferred six months. As to the strength of the forces, Iraq wanted UNIIMOG to remain at its current strength, whereas Iran favoured a reduction to about half. The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of UNIIMOG for two months, until 31 January 1991, with a strength not exceeding 120 military observers, plus the necessary support personnel.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 November, the Security Council adopted resolution 676(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 598(1987) of 20 July 1987, 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, 631(1989) of 8 February 1989, 642(1989) of 29 September 1989, 651(1990) of 29 March 1990 and 671(1990) of 27 September 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group of 23 November 1990 and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group for a further period of two months, that is, until 31 January 1991, as recommended by the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, during January 1991, a report on his further consultations with the parties about the future of the Military Observer Group, together with his recommendations on this matter.

Security Council resolution 676(1990)

28 November 1990 Meeting 2952 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21970).

Composition

As at 22 March 1990 [S/21200], UNIIMOG personnel, including headquarters staff at Baghdad and Tehran, totalled 403: 354 military observers from 25 countries (Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Malaysia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Poland, Senegal, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay, Yugoslavia, Zambia), plus 17 in an air unit from New Zealand; 28 military police from Ireland; and 4 military medical personnel from Austria. There were 104 international staff and 98 local civilian staff members. Command was exercised by Major-General Slavko Jovic of Yugoslavia as Chief Military Observer.

After September, UNIIMOG's military staff was reduced to about 60 per cent of its previous strength, and its civilian staff to about 80 per cent. As of 20 November, UNIIMOG personnel, including headquarters staff in Tehran and Baghdad, was composed of 184 military observers drawn from the same 25 countries as at the beginning of the year, a 17-member air unit, 25 military police, and a 4-member medical section. Command continued to be exercised by Major-General Jovic until 14 November when he returned to his country's service. Brigadier-General S. Anam Khan of Bangladesh, Assistant Chief Military Observer on the Iraqi side, then took command as Acting Chief Military Observer.

Financing

Following the March 1990 extension of UNIIMOG's mandate, the Secretary-General on 16 April [A/45/847] requested ACABQ's concurrence for entering into commitments in the amount of $38,408,000 gross ($37,424,000 net) for the period 1 April to 30 September 1990, and for crediting $5 million against the assessments to be levied against Member States, while indicating that the projected expenditure for the mandate period from 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1990 would amount to approximately $29.8 million gross ($29 million net), with potential savings of about $4.4 million gross ($4.8 million net). The Chairman informed the Secretary-General on 20 April of the Advisory Committee's concurrence to entering into commitments of $29.8 million gross ($29 million net) and to the crediting of $5 million to Member States against their assessments for that period. Following the extension of UNII-MOG's mandate from 1 October to 30 November, the Secretary-General requested and obtained ACABQ's concurrence to enter into commitments in an amount of $9,823,000 gross ($9,503,000 net), to be financed from the unencumbered balance remaining from previous appropriations and authorizations made available to UNII-MOG. The Advisory Committee also agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal that, instead of crediting Member States with only the $5 million remaining from the $10 million called for by General Assembly resolution 44/189 [YUN 1989, p. 1871, the full assessments to Member States for the two-month mandate period in the amount of $9,503,000 net be offset against credits to them from the unencumbered balance. By doing so, Member States were credited with $14,503,000 net. Subsequent to the extension of UNII-MOG's mandate for a further two months (1 December 1990-31 January 1991), the Secretary-General estimated costs for that period at $7,274,000 gross ($6,946,000 net), to be financed from the unencumbered balance remaining. He estimated that from 1 February 1991, should the Security Council renew the mandate, financing of UNII-MOG would be at a rate of $3,475,000 gross ($3,269,000 net) per month.

The Advisory Committee Chairman, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee on 18 December, concurred with the Secretary-General's estimates for the two-month extension and noted that, should UNII-MOG's mandate be extended beyond 31 January 1991, the Assembly could authorize the Secretary-General into commitments up to the proposed level subject to ACABQ's prior concurrence.

As at 30 November 1990, assessments totalling $172,924,713 had been apportioned among Member States for the period from UNII-MOG's inception (9 August 1988) to 30 September 1990. Contributions received for the same period amounted to $163,147,999, representing a shortfall of $9,776,714. Assessments that would have been apportioned among Member States for the period from 1 October to 30 November were not made in the light of ACABQ's concurrence that the requirements for maintaining UNII-MOG for those two months, i.e., $9,823,000 gross ($9,503,000 net), be financed from unencumbered balances, thus in effect crediting Member States with that amount. Voluntary contributions for the period from 1 October 1989 to 30 September 1990 amounted to $2,217,956, the equivalent of 2,893,600 Swiss francs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/245.

Financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, and the related oral report of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 619(1988) of 9 August 1988, by which the Council established the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Military Observer Group, the latest of which was resolution 676(1990) of 28 November 1990,

Recalling its resolution 42/233 of 17 August 1988 on the financing of the Military Observer Group and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 44/189 of 21 December 1989,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Military Observer Group are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Military Observer Group, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Military Observer Group by certain Governments,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Military Observer Group with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Concur with the observations, recommendations and conclusions made by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Urges all Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the United Nations Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group in full and on time;

3. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in General Assembly resolution 42/233 the amount of 29.8 million United States dollars gross (29 million dollars net) authorized by the Assembly and apportioned in accordance with paragraphs 5 and 7 of its resolution 44/189 for the operation of the Military Observer Group for the period from 1 April to 30 September 1990;

4. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 5 million dollars gross for the period from 1 April to 30 September 1990, inclusive;

5. Decides further to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 9,823,000 dollars gross (9,503,000 dollars net) authorized by the Assembly and apportioned in accordance with paragraphs 6 and 7 of its resolution 44/189 for the operation of the Military Observer Group for the period from 1 October to 30 November 1990;

6. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 5 of the present resolution, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 9,823,000 dollars gross (9,503,000 dollars net) for the period from 1 October to 30 November 1990, inclusive;

7. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account the amount of 7,274,000 dollars gross (6,946,000 dollars net) authorized by the General Assembly and apportioned in accordance with paragraphs 6 and 7 of its resolution 44/189 for the operation of the Military Observer Group for the period from 1 December 1990 to 31 January 1991;

8. Decides further that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 of the present resolution, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 7,274,000 dollars gross (6,946,000 dollars net) in respect of the period from 1 December 1990 to 31 January 1991, inclusive;

9. Decides to defer any action on the estimated unencumbered balance of the appropriations as may be called for until its forty-sixth session;

10. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Military observer Group at a rate not to exceed 3,475,000 dollars gross (3,269,000 dollars net) per month, subject to the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, for the period from 1 February 1991 to 31 January 1992, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Group beyond the period of two months authorized under its resolution 676(1990), the said amounts to be apportioned among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

11. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amounts referred to in paragraph 10 of the present resolution among Member States in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

12. Decides also that Liechtenstein shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Military Observer Group shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

13. Decides further that Namibia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Military Observer Group shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

14. Decides that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the Military Observer Group until 30 September 1990 of the Member States referred to in paragraphs 12 and 13 of the present resolution shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments authorized in paragraph 11 of the present resolution;

15. Approves the following special arrangements for the Military Observer Group with regard to the application of article IV of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, whereby appropriations required in respect of obligations owed to Governments providing contingents and/or logistic support to the Group shall be retained beyond the period stipulated under financial regulations 4.3 and 4.4:

(a) At the end of the twelve-month period provided in regulation 4.3, any unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question relating to goods supplied and services rendered by Governments for which claims have been received or which are covered by established reimbursement rates shall be transferred to accounts payable; such accounts payable shall remain recorded in the Special Account until payment is effected;

(b) (i) Any other unliquidated obligations of the financial period in question owed to Governments for goods supplied and services rendered, as well as other obligations owed to Governments, for which required claims have not yet been received shall remain valid for an additional period of four years following the end of the twelve-month period provided for in regulation 4.3;

(ii) Claims received during this four-year period shall be treated as provided under subparagraph (a) above, if appropriate;

(iii) At the end of the additional four-year period any unliquidated obligations shall be cancelled and the then remaining balance of any appropriations retained there for will be surrendered;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Advisory Committee proposed guidelines for setting limits to the period within which Governments are required to submit their claims;

17. Invites voluntary contributions to the Military Observer Group in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Military Observer Group is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

Korean question

The annual report of the United Nations Command (UNC) concerning the maintenance of the 1953 Korean Armistice Agreement was submitted to the Security Council on 14 June 1990 [S/21358] by the United States on behalf of the Unified Command established pursuant to Council resolution 84(1950) [YUN 1950, p. 230]. The report provided background information on UNC and its mission, as well as on the Armistice mechanism and its procedures.

Of 16 UN Member States that provided military forces to UNC, 8-Australia, Canada, Colombia, France, the Philippines, Thailand, the United Kingdom and the United States-were still represented in UNC. Officers from those Member States participated not only in the Military Armistice Commission (MAC), but also in multinational investigations of Armistice violations.

The report stated that the North Korean side continued to misuse MAC as a forum for disseminating political propaganda and for presenting non-Armistice-related political overtures clearly outside MAC's purview and the Armistice Agreement, thereby subverting the true purpose of MAC and converting it into a propaganda forum. Set up to supervise the Agreement's implementation and settle any violations of it through negotiations, MAC held eight meetings in 1989. A major, serious Armistice violation, a fourth infiltration tunnel constructed by North Korea across the Military Demarcation Line in the demilitarized zone (DMZ), which apparently extended from the North Korean portion of the DMZ over 1,000 metres into the UNC portion of the DMZ, was intercepted on 3 March. Three tunnels had been discovered previously, in 1974, 1975 and 1978.

Other issues considered were the misuse of the joint security area (Panmunjom)- the conference area for MAC, the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and south-north dialogue-for political rallies and illegal transit by unauthorized individuals.

On the question of Korean war remains, UNC reminded the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) of its obligations under the Armistice Agreement to return the remains of two UNC soldiers, members of the United States Army, it had admitted were in its possession.

The DPRK reiterated its demand that UNC cease its annual joint military training exercise "Team Spirit", conducted jointly by the United States and the Republic of Korea. UNC, in its report, pointed out that such exercises were not addressed by the Armistice Agreement and thus could not constitute a violation of it, as the DPRK maintained. On the other hand, UNC noted, the secret exercises routinely held by the DPRK were a cause of serious concern. To demonstrate its good faith, UNC on 3 March 1989 notified the DPRK of "Team Spirit 89" to be conducted in mid-March, with an invitation to observe.

Among other confidence-building measures proposed by UNC were restoration of the Joint Observer Team to investigate serious Armistice violations; removal of propaganda signs in the DMZ; and establishment of a viable verification system in the DMZ and the joint security area (Panmunjom). The DPRK, however, did not respond positively to most of UNC's initiatives.

The report concluded that for more than 36 years, MAC had served as the only official channel of communication between the opposing military commanders in Korea, its most positive aspect being that it was still operative and used to defuse serious incidents and prevent the resumption of hostilities.

The opposing military commanders, however, had no mandate to resolve political issues, such as the question of the withdrawal of foreign forces or turning the Armistice Agreement into a peace treaty. Therefore, UNC would continue to perform its important peace-keeping role in the Republic of Korea, particularly in maintaining the Armistice, until an effective and enduring mechanism was established through political dialogue between the two parties directly concerned to ensure a more durable peace on the Korean peninsula.

In his New Year Address on 1 January 1990, and a statement of 27 February [S/21171], transmitted to the President of the Security Council, the President of the DPRK proposed [S/21063], as a step towards reunification, that the wall built in the area south of the Military Demarcation Line be dismantled and that there be free travel between the two countries as well as exchanges in all spheres, including politics, the economy and culture. It undertook to promote many-sided talks, including between the authorities of the north and the south. The first north-south high-level talks in 45 years, led by the Prime Ministers of the two countries, were held from 4 to 7 September in Seoul, the second from 16 to 19 October in Pyongyang and a third in December.

During the year, the question of UN membership for Korea was raised. On 24 May, the DPRK proposed [S/21787] joint admission of the north and the south with a single seat, providing for alternating representation between the two sides on a monthly basis or at mutually agreed intervals and joint action on matters of agreement, but abstentions on issues they could not agree upon. The Republic of Korea, on 26 September, rejected [S/21827] that idea and proposed [S/22024] instead on 20 December that both Koreas seek separate UN membership pending unification and that they develop a special mode of co-operation to facilitate and strengthen that process. If the DPRK was unwilling or not yet ready to join the United Nations with the south, the Republic of Korea would exercise its sovereign right to seek UN membership independently.

Myanmar

On 18 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/432, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) committee, decided to defer until its forty-sixth session consideration of a draft resolution entitled “Respect for the will of the people of Myanmar” [A/C.3/45/L.58].

Chapter IV

Middle East

During 1990, the United Nations continued its efforts to support the search for a peaceful settlement to the situation in the Middle East, which remained a serious threat to international peace and security. In December, the General Assembly reaffirmed the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law. It also reaffirmed its call for convening an international peace conference on the Middle East.

The Security Council in 1990 met on numerous occasions to discuss developments in the Middle East, particularly in the occupied territories. In October, after a violent incident at the Haram al-Sharif (Al-Aqsa) Mosque, resulting in more than 20 Palestinian deaths and the injury of more than 150 persons, the Council welcomed the decision of the Secretary-General to send a mission to the region to look into the circumstances surrounding those events. Israel's subsequent refusal to accept the mission was deplored by the Council.

The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) continued to keep under review the question of Palestine-reaffirmed by the General Assembly as the core of the Middle East problem-and to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations. In its 1990 report, the Committee concluded that, in the 15 years since its establishment, an international consensus had gradually been achieved on the essential principles for a solution of the question and that developments since the beginning of the intifadah, the Palestinian uprising, had led to an even wider consensus.

The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) in 1990 reported a further escalation of tension in the occupied territories, which, in its opinion, had reached a very dangerous level.

Economic and social developments in the occupied territories were monitored by the Economic and Social Council, which in 1990 adopted resolutions on the situation of Palestinian women, Israeli economic practices in the occupied territories, and assistance to the Palestinian people.

Various UN organizations and agencies continued to provide assistance to Palestinians in 1990, notably the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), which provided education, health and relief services to 2.4 million Palestinian refugees in Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

During 1990, the Council extended the mandates of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), and the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO).

On 17 September, by decision 44/470, the General Assembly included in the draft agenda of its forty-fifth session the item "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security". By decision 45/430 of 14 December, the Assembly deferred the item to a later date during the forty-fifth session, and included it in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session. The subject had been on its agenda since 1981, following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear facility near Baghdad [YUN 1981, p. 275].

Overall situation

In his annual report on the work of the Organization [A/45/1], the Secretary-General stated that the Middle East as a whole continued to be the most explosive region of the world and that long-standing grievances, which had festered for years, had been aggravated by an escalating arms race throughout the area. Lasting peace would come to the Middle East only when the principles of international law governed the relations between States, when disputes were resolved through peaceful means, the aspirations of those deprived of their rights had been fulfilled, and regional security and economic arrangements-which took into account the concerns of all the parties in the area-had been established.

The Secretary-General noted with disappointment that an impasse had been reached in the effort to promote a dialogue between Israelis and Palestinians, and the situation in the occupied territories, where the intifadah soon entered its fourth year, remained bleak, with little hope of early progress. In addition to efforts to promote a dialogue, the Security Council could make an important commitment to resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 2571 and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213] which, in the Secretary-General's view, together with the legitimate political rights of the Palestinian people, including self-determination, could constitute the basis of a just and lasting peace in the area.

In December, the General Assembly expressed its grave concern that the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories still remained under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations had not been implemented and that the Palestinian people was still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law. The Assembly also reaffirmed its conviction that the question of Palestine was the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region would be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories.

During the year, the Security Council met on numerous occasions to discuss the situation in the Middle East and in the occupied Arab territories. In October, the Council adopted resolution 672(1990), by which it expressed alarm at the violence that took place at the Haram al-Sharif and other Holy Places of Jerusalem resulting in over 20 Palestinian deaths and the injury of more than 150 people. By resolution 673(1990), the Council deplored Israel's refusal to receive the mission of the Secretary-General to the region and urged it to reconsider its decision. In December, the Council adopted resolution 681(1990) expressing grave concern over the rejection by Israel of its two October resolutions and deploring Israel's decision to resume the deportation of Palestinian civilians in the occupied territories. In a Presidential statement prior to the vote, the members of the Council reaffirmed their determination to support an active negotiating process in which all relevant parties would participate, and which should take into account the right to security of all States in the region, including Israel, and the legitimate political rights of the Palestinians.

Reports of Secretary-General. In pursuance of General Assembly resolution 44/40 A [YUN 1989, p. 1901, the Secretary-General presented on 26 November a comprehensive report [A/45/726-S/21947] covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects. The report addressed such issues as UN peace-keeping activities, the situation in the occupied territories, the Palestine refugee problem, the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East.

In his report, the Secretary-General observed that the prospects for progress in the Arab-Israeli peace process appeared regrettably to have stalled and efforts to achieve an Israeli-Palestinian dialogue had reached an impasse in the early months of 1990. Since then, the situation in the occupied territories had worsened, causing the Security Council to focus increasingly on the question of safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians residing there. He, however, pointed out that the implementation of steps by the international community to ensure the Palestinians' safety and protection would not alone bring an end to the conflict between Israelis and Palestinians, which, he said, was essentially political in nature and was central to the broader Arab-Israeli dispute with its many complex and interrelated issues.

Underlining the unanimity within the Security Council that efforts must be continued on an urgent basis to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the situation in the Middle East, particularly a solution of the Palestinian problem in all its aspects, the Secretary-General believed that such a settlement could best be achieved through a negotiating process that involved all the parties concerned.

Under the agenda item on the Middle East situation, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly two further reports. A 15 October report [A/45/595] contained replies from two Member States-Senegal and the Syrian Arab Republic-to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged concerning implementation of the provisions of Assembly resolutions 44/40 B and C [YUN 1989, pp. 223 & 199], which dealt, respectively, with Israeli policies in the Syrian territory occupied by Israel and the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem. The Assembly, by those two resolutions, had called on States to adopt a number of measures concerning their relations with Israel and on the States concerned to abide by the relevant Assembly resolutions.

In a report of 12 November [A/45/709-S/21929] dealing mainly with the proposed convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East (see below), the Secretary-General noted a sense of urgency among the international community to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, underscored also by the members of the Security Council who remained deeply preoccupied by the lack of progress in achieving peace in the Middle East and by the increasingly serious situation facing the occupied territories and their inhabitants. He shared the Council's view that a prolonged delay in settling the Middle East problem posed a grave threat to peace and security in the region as well as the world, a situation aggravated by the high level of armaments in many Middle Eastern countries.

The Secretary-General felt encouraged by the unanimity within the Council that efforts must urgently continue to achieve a comprehensive settlement, particularly a solution of the Palestinian problem in all its aspects. He believed that a negotiating process would be effective only if it involved all the parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), and aimed at just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict based on Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973) and the legitimate political rights of the Palestinian people, including self-determination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/83 A.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 F of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 38/180 A to D of 19 December 1983, 39/146 A to C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 A to C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 A to C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 A to D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 A to C of 6 December 1988 and 44/40 A to C of 4 December 1989.

Recalling Security Council resolutions 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, 497(1981) of 17 December 1981, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982, 659(1990) of 31 July 1990, and other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 15 October 1990, 12 November 1990 and 26 November 1990,

Reaffirming the need for continued collective support for the decisions adopted by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, which were confirmed by subsequent Arab summit conferences, including the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 23 to 26 May 1989,

Reiterating its previous resolutions on the question of Palestine and its support for the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people,

Considering that the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/42 of 6 December 1989 and other resolutions related to the question of Palestine, would contribute to the promotion of peace in the region,

Welcoming all efforts contributing towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, in accordance with the United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and to the situation in the Middle East,

Welcoming also the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation in order to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights, as affirmed by previous resolutions of the General Assembly on the question of Palestine and on the situation in the Middle East,

Gravely concerned that the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories still remain under Israeli occupation, that the relevant resolutions of the United Nations have not been implemented and that the Palestinian people is still denied the restoration of its land and the exercise of its inalienable national rights in conformity with international law, as reaffirmed by resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Reaffirming also all relevant United Nations resolutions which stipulate that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law and that Israel must withdraw unconditionally from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Reaffirming further the imperative necessity of establishing a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region, based on full respect for the Charter and the principles of international law,

Gravely concerned also at the continuing Israeli policies involving the escalation and expansion of the conflict in the region, which further violate the principles of international law and endanger international peace and security,

Stressing once again the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve an early comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories;

2. Reaffirms that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people;

3. Declares once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem, under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of its relevant resolutions, which ensures the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and which enables the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to exercise its inalienable rights, including the right to return and the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of its independent sovereign State in Palestine, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations relating to the question of Palestine, in particular General Assembly resolutions ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 36/120 A to F of 10 December 1981, 37/86 A to D of 10 December 1982, 37/86 E of 20 December 1982, 38/58 A to E of 13 December 1983, 39/49A to D of 11 December 1984, 40/96 A to D of 12 December 1985, 41/43 A to D of 2 December 1986, 42/66 A to D of 2 December 1987, 43/54 A to C of 6 December 1988, and 43/175 A to C, 43/176, 43/177 of 15 December 1988 and 44/42;

4. Considers the Arab peace plan adopted unanimously at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, Morocco, on 25 November 1981 and from 6 to 9 September 1982, which was confirmed by subsequent Arab summit conferences, including the Extraordinary Arab Summit Conference held at Casablanca, Morocco, from 23 to 26 May 1989, as well as relevant efforts and action to implement the Fez plan, as an important contribution towards the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people through the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East;

5. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967 including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and demands the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the territories occupied since 1967;

6. Rejects all agreements and arrangements which violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and contradict the principles of a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem to ensure the establishment of a just peace in the area;

7. Deplores Israel's failure to comply with Security Council resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980 and General Assembly resolutions 35/207 of 16 December 1980 and 36/226 A and B of 17 December 1981; determines that Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and to declare it as its "capital" as well as the measures to alter its physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and status are null and void and demands that they be rescinded immediately; and calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and all other international organizations to abide by the present resolution and all other relevant resolutions and decisions;

8. Condemns Israel's aggression, policies and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory and outside this territory, including expropriation, establishment of settlements, annexation and other terrorist, aggressive and repressive measures, which are in violation of the Charter and the principles of international law and the relevant international conventions;

9. Strongly condemns the imposition by Israel of its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, its annexationist policies and practices, the establishment of settlements, the confiscation of lands, the diversion of water resources and the imposition of Israeli citizenship on Syrian nationals, and declares that all these measures are null and void and constitute a violation of the rules and principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel, signed on 30 November 1981, and the continued supply of modern arms and matériel to Israel, augmented by substantial economic aid, including the Agreement on the Establishment of a Free Trade Area between the two Governments, have encouraged Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and have had adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and pose a threat to the security of the region;

11. Calls once more upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic, financial and technological aid, as well as of human resources, aimed at encouraging it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

12. Strongly condemns the continuing and increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist regime of South Africa, especially in the economic, military and nuclear fields, which constitutes a hostile act against the African and Arab States and enables Israel to enhance its nuclear capabilities, thus subjecting the States of the region to nuclear blackmail;

13. Reaffirms its call for convening the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of the five permanent members of the Security Council and all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, on an equal footing, and that the Conference should be effective with full authority, in order to achieve a comprehensive and just solution based on the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, and the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people in accordance with the United Nations resolutions relevant to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East;

14. Endorses the call for setting up a preparatory committee, within the framework of the Security Council, with the participation of the permanent members of the Council, to take the necessary action to convene the Conference;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Security Council periodically on the development of the situation and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a comprehensive report covering the developments in the Middle East in all their aspects.

General Assembly resolution 45/83 A

Proposed peace conference

As requested by General Assembly resolution 44/42 [YUN 1989, p. 197], the Secretary-General continued his efforts in 1990 with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, to facilitate the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. On 12 November, he submitted to the Assembly a progress report [A/45/21929] setting out the results of the Security Council President's consultations with the Council members and positions of concerned parties, as well as his own observations.

The Council President stated that the Council members remained deeply preoccupied by the lack of progress in achieving peace in the Middle East and by the increasingly serious situation facing the occupied territories and their inhabitants, and they were convinced that efforts must continue on an urgent basis to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Middle East situation, particularly a solution to the Palestinian problem in all its aspects. In that regard, several members underlined the necessity to step up efforts to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East under the aegis of the United Nations and requested the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts and consultations in that regard.

Several members indicated that the Council should begin urgent consideration of the Middle East situation with a view to reaching early agreement, in particular on the establishment of a preparatory committee for a conference. Others felt that the parties directly concerned must reach agreement on the exact form of a conference, which should not prejudice the outcome of the negotiations. Another said the proposal failed to address the centrality of direct negotiations. Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic and PLO supported the conference's convening.

Israel continued to advocate direct negotiations as the most promising framework to advance the Middle East peace process.

The Secretary-General observed that sufficient agreement did not exist, either within the Security Council or among the parties to the conflict, to permit the convening of an international Middle East peace conference. He expressed his deep concern at the absence of any diplomatic process aimed at overcoming the obstacles to an effective negotiating process, and shared the view of the Security Council that a prolonged delay in the settlement of the Middle East problem posed a grave threat to peace and security in the region as well as the world. While there was a willingness of the parties to achieve a settlement throughout negotiations, there were divergent views as to the framework of such negotiations and the context within which they should take place; in that connection, the parties' positions with respect to an international conference had evolved in recent years. Concluding, the Secretary-General reiterated the need to revive efforts aimed at ensuring a just and lasting settlement of the conflict.

In its 1990 annual report to the General Assembly [A/45/35 & Corr.1], the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed deep regret over the decision of the United States to suspend its dialogue with PLO, as such dialogue was a positive step which could lead to the removal of obstacles to the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. The Committee called on those States that had thus far prevented the implementation of resolution 44/42 to reconsider their position and to join the international consensus. The Committee expressed its support for every effort by the permanent members of the Security Council to bring the position of the parties to the conflict closer to each other, to create a climate of confidence between them, and to facilitate in that way the convening and successful outcome of an international peace conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/68.

International Peace Conference on the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 12 November 1990,

Having heard the statement made on 3 December 1990 by the chairman of the observer delegation of Palestine,

Stressing that achieving a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine, will constitute a significant contribution to international peace and security,

Aware of the over whelming support for the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East,

Noting with appreciation the endeavours of the Secretary-General to achieve the convening of the Conference,

Preoccupied by the increasingly serious situation in the occupied Palestinian territory as a result of persistent policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, and by the continuing lack of progress in achieving peace in the Middle East,

Aware of the ongoing uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987, aimed at ending Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory occupied since 1967,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, the core of which is the question of Palestine;

2. Calls Once again for the convening of the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, with the participation of all parties to the conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, on an equal footing, and the five permanent members of the Security Council, based on Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people, primarily the right to self-determination;

3. Reaffirms the following principles for the achievement of comprehensive peace:

(a) The withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and from the other occupied Arab territories;

(b) Guaranteeing arrangements for security of all States in the region, including those named in resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947, within secure and internationally recognized boundaries;

(c) Resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees in conformity with General Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and subsequent relevant resolutions;

(d) Dismantling the Israeli settlements in the territories occupied since 1967;

(e) Guaranteeing freedom of access to Holy Places, religious buildings and sites;

4. Notes the expressed desire and endeavours to place the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, under the supervision of the United Nations for a limited period, as part of the peace process;

5. Once again invites the Security Council to consider measures needed to convene the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, including the establishment of a preparatory committee, and to consider guarantees for security measures agreed upon by the Conference for all States in the region;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the parties concerned, and in consultation with the Security Council, to facilitate the convening of the Conference, and to submit progress reports on developments in this matter.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

In the context of its consideration of the situation in the occupied Arab territories (see below), the President of the Security Council, on 20 December, made the following statement on behalf of the Council members [S/22027]:

The members of the Council reaffirm their determination to support an active negotiating process in which all relevant parties would participate leading to a comprehensive, just and lasting peace to the Arab-Israeli conflict through negotiations which should be based on Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and should take into account the right to security of all States in the region, including Israel, and the legitimate political rights of the Palestinian people.

In this context, they agree that an international conference, at an appropriate time, properly structured, should facilitate efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement and lasting peace in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

However, they are of the view that there is not unanimity as to when would be the appropriate time for such a conference.

In the view of the members of the Council, the question of the Arab-Israeli conflict is important and unique and must be addressed independently, on its own merits.

Jerusalem

Report of Secretary-General. In an October 1990 report [A/45/595], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly replies he received from two Member States--Senegal and the Syrian Arab Republic--to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement General Assembly resolution 44/40 C [YUN 1989, p. 1991 dealing with the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) [YUN 1980, p. 426].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/83 C.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 C of 6 December 1988 and 44/40 C of 4 December 1989, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which had altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States that had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 15 October 1990,

1. Determines that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980), and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Truce Supervision Organization

In his November report on the Middle East [A/45/726-S/21947] the Secretary-General provided information on the activities of three UN peace-keeping operations in the region: two peace-keeping forces, the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), and one observer mission, the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) (see pp. 286-295).

UNTSO in 1990 continued to assist UNDOF and UNIFIL in the performance of their tasks and maintained two of its own observer groups, in Beirut and in Egypt. Set up by the Security Council in August 1982 following the occupation of West Beirut by Israeli troops, the activities of the UNTSO Observer Group at Beirut had been reduced since the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the Beirut area in September 1983 and in 1990 it comprised eight observers. The Observer Group in Egypt, which was established in 1979 after withdrawal of the second United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF II), had a total strength of about 50 observers. The Group maintained liaison offices in Cairo and Ismailia, and six outposts in the Sinai.

Question of Palestine

Having been first considered by the General Assembly at its second session in 1947, the question of Palestine was one of the most difficult and persistent issues facing the United Nations. It had been identified as the core of the Arab-

Israeli conflict in the Middle East, which periodically resulted in armed hostilities in the region, thereby imperilling international peace and security.

The Assembly repeatedly reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, national independence and sovereignty. It emphasized that full respect for and realization of those inalienable rights were indispensable for the solution of the question of Palestine, and recognized that the Palestinian people was a principal party in the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

According to the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 [A/45/6 (Prog.5)], the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people had been recognized as a condition sine qua non for a just solution to the Palestine question. Although regularly endorsed since 1976 by the Assembly, the relevant recommendations of the Committee on Palestinian Rights had neither been acted upon by the Security Council nor otherwise implemented. However, the Palestinians remained committed to the exercise of their legitimate national and political rights, and the Palestinian uprising, which had started in December 1987, continued as an expression of their determination to bring to an end the Israeli occupation. The Assembly and the Council had repeatedly expressed concern at the tragic loss of life and violations of human rights of the Palestinian people. The situation created by the uprising and the subsequent political developments had made it imperative to renew efforts to break out of the prevailing impasse and to make concrete progress towards a peaceful, negotiated settlement.

Committee on Palestinian Rights

As mandated by General Assembly resolution 44/41 A [YUN1989,p.195], the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, established in 1975 [GA res. 3376(XXX)], continued to keep under review the situation relating to the question of Palestine, promote implementation of its recommendations endorsed by the Assembly, and extend its co-operation to non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in their contribution towards heightening international awareness of the facts relating to the question. In response to urgent developments affecting the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, the Chairman of the Committee, on a number of occasions, brought such developments to the attention of the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council.

In October, the Committee submitted to the Assembly an annual report on its activities [A/45/35 & Corr.1], which also contained its recommendations. The Committee noted that the intifadah, the uprising of the Palestinian people, which had entered its third year, had led to a process of irreversible psychological and political transformation that had affected not only the Palestinian people but also the Israeli political system itself. The process of economic disengagement from Israel had been strengthened, as international groups and foreign Governments had increased their financial commitment to the occupied Palestinian territory.

According to the report, Israel, in its efforts to suppress the uprising, had continued to resort to often excessive and indiscriminate force, including shooting at demonstrators, intensive use of tear-gas and severely beating detainees. Israeli occupation authorities continued to apply a variety of harsh measures and collective punishment, including deportations, large-scale arrests, detentions, raids on homes and villages, prolonged curfews, confiscation of property and destruction of trees and crops. The Committee was particularly concerned at the lawless and violent actions of Israeli settlers.

While noting the formal steps taken by the Israeli authorities for the gradual reopening of primary and secondary schools as a positive gesture, the Committee deplored that they persisted in seriously disrupting the normal functioning of the schools as a form of collective punishment. It also noted with concern that all Palestinian universities and institutions of higher education had been closed since the beginning of the uprising.

The Committee further noted with concern that the health situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, particularly in Gaza, remained deplorable and had continued to deteriorate since the beginning of the uprising. Also, there had been no improvement in the conditions of work and life there. According to the Committee, almost 40 per cent of Palestinians of the occupied territory went to work in Israel, but the majority of them enjoyed no legal or social protection. The Committee believed that recognition by Israel of Palestinian trade union organizations would ensure respect for the fundamental principles of freedom of association and lead to the Palestinian workers' being better defended.

In order to promote international awareness of the Palestine question and create conditions favourable for the implementation of its recommendations, the Committee and, under its guidance, the Division for Palestinian Rights, continued to organize regional seminars with the participation of prominent political personalities, parliamentarians, policy makers and other experts, including Israelis and Palestinians. The Committee expressed satisfaction that the seminars had made a positive contribution to peace efforts by providing a forum for a balanced and constructive discussion of the issues involved.

In 1990, regional seminars were held for Latin America and the Caribbean (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 5-9 February), Africa (Freetown, Sierra Leone, 2-6 April), Europe (Stockholm, Sweden, 7-11 May) and North America (New York, 25-26 June).

The Committee continued to extend its co-operation to NGOs active on the question of Palestine and expand its contacts with them. To that end, the Division for Palestinian Rights, in consultation with the Committee and under its guidance, organized in 1990 a number of regional NGO symposia, held jointly with or after the regional seminars: a European regional NGO symposium in Geneva (27-28 August), followed by an international NGO meeting (29-31 August). The conclusions, recommendations and declarations of the various forums were annexed to the report.

The Committee was represented at a number of conferences and meetings, including the twenty-sixth Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 9-11 July), and the nineteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Cairo, Egypt, 31 July-4 August). The Committee noted with satisfaction the increased awareness and mobilization of international public opinion in support of the attainment of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and of UN recommendations for a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the question of Palestine.

In its 1990 recommendations, the Committee considered that international attention must remain focused on the imperative necessity to overcome the political and diplomatic stalemate that had hitherto blocked progress towards a settlement of the Palestine question. Pending progress towards such a settlement, the Committee urged that all necessary measures be taken immediately to protect the Palestinian people in the occupied territory. The Committee called on the Security Council to establish urgently an effective UN presence in the occupied territory with a legal mandate to protect the Palestinians there and, in that regard, endorsed the proposed establishment of a UN observer force. The Committee also reaffirmed that the United Nations had a duty and responsibility to render all assistance necessary to promote the social and economic development of the occupied Palestinian territory, and called on the organizations of the UN system, as well as on Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to sustain and increase their economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people, in close co-operation with PLO.

The Division for Palestinian Rights, in accordance with its mandate, continued to prepare monthly bulletins covering action by the Committee and other UN bodies, reports of regional seminars, NGO symposia and international meetings, and monthly and bi-monthly reports on developments relating to the question of Palestine, monitored from the Arabic, English and Hebrew press for the use of the Committee. In 1990, the Division published two studies: on Palestinian children in the occupied Palestinian territory, and on the origins and evolution of the Palestine problem (1917-1988). In February and June, the Division issued an updated information note on the work of the Committee and the Division. An updated information note on the United Nations and NGO activities on the question of Palestine was issued in February.

The International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People was observed on 29 November 1990 at UN Headquarters in New York and at the UN Offices at Geneva and Vienna and was commemorated in many other cities throughout the world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, the General Assembly adopted, on 6 December 1990, three resolutions on the Palestine question, including resolution 45/67 A.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 181(II) of 29 November 1947, 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 3236(XXIX) of 22 November 1974, 3375(XXX) and 3376(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/20 of 24 November 1976, 32/40 of 2 December 1977, 33/28 of 7 December 1978, 34/65 A and B of 29 November 1979 and 34/65 C and D of 12 December 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/169 of 15 December 1980, 36/120 of 10 December 1981, ES-7/4 of 28 April 1982, 38/58 A of 13 December 1983, 39/49 A of 12-December 1984, 40/96 A of 12 December 1985, 41/43 A of 2 December 1986, 42/66 A of 2 December 1987, 43/175 A of 15 December 1988 and 44/41 A of 6 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

2. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee contained in paragraphs 93 to 102 of its report and draws the attention of the Security Council to the fact that action on the Committee's recommendations, as repeatedly endorsed by the General Assembly at its thirty-first session and subsequently, is still awaited;

3. Requests the Committee to continue to keep under review the situation relating to the question of Palestine as well as the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights and to report and make suggestions to the General Assembly or the Security Council, as appropriate;

4. Authorizes the Committee to continue to exert all efforts to promote the implementation of its recommendations, including representation at conferences and meetings and the sending of delegations, to make such adjustments in its approved programme of seminars and symposia and meetings for non-governmental organizations as it may consider necessary, to give special emphasis to the need to mobilize public opinion in Europe and North America, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session and thereafter;

5. Also requests the Committee to continue to extend its co-operation to non-governmental organizations in their contribution towards heightening international awareness of the facts relating to the question of Palestine and creating a more favourable atmosphere for the full implementation of the Committee's recommendations, and to take the necessary steps to expand its contacts with those organizations;

6. Requests the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, established under General Assembly resolution 194(111), as well as other United Nations bodies associated with the question of Palestine, to continue to co-operate fully with the Committee and to make available to it, at its request, the relevant information and documentation which they have at their disposal;

7. Decides to circulate the report of the Committee to all the competent bodies of the United Nations and urges them to take the necessary action, as appropriate, in accordance with the Committee's programme of implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Committee with all the necessary facilities for the performance of its tasks.

Public information activities

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/41 C (UN 1989, p. 1991, the Department of Public Information (DPI) of the Secretariat, in full co-operation and co-ordination with the Committee on Palestinian Rights, continued its special information programme on the question of Palestine during the biennium 1990-1991. DPI actively disseminated information through press releases, publications and audio-visual material. It provided full coverage of all UN meetings relevant to the question, as well as of seminars and symposia held by the Committee. In 1990, the Department focused increasingly on news items and information concerning the situation in the occupied territories as well as on efforts to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East under UN auspices (see above).

DPI continued to distribute its publications on the subject, including a revised version of the booklet entitled The United Nations and the Question of Palestine, issued in Arabic, English, French, German and Spanish.

In addition to short items in news and current affairs radio programmes, DPI produced special feature radio programmes and distributed them to hundreds of radio stations world wide. A 15-minute educational video for high-school-age students, with an accompanying study pamphlet for teachers on the question of Palestine, was produced in three languages for distribution world wide.

In 1990, the Department again organized activities to acquaint the media with the facts and developments pertaining to the Palestine question. In May, a team of 14 high-level journalists participated in the news mission to the Middle East organized by DPI. The team visited Tunis (Tunisia), Damascus (Syrian Arab Republic), Amman (Jordan) and Cairo (Egypt). A formal request to Israel for the news mission to visit the country and the West Bank went unanswered. DPI also organized two regional encounters for journalists on the Palestine question: in Buenos Aires (12-14 February) and in Singapore (26-28 March). Three series of national encounters were organized: in Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City; Santiago, Chile; and Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 2-15 February), in Europe (Oslo, Norway; London; and Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 9-16 March) and in Asia (Tokyo; Manila, Philippines; Bangkok, Thailand; and New Delhi, India, 19-30 March).

UN information centres throughout the world disseminated newsletters, press releases and leaflets on the various aspects of the Palestine question.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/67 C.

The General Assembly,

Having Considered the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People,

Taking note, in particular, of the information contained in paragraphs 79 to 92 of that report,

Recalling its resolutions 44/41 C and 44/42 of 6 December 1989,

Convinced that the world-wide dissemination of accurate and comprehensive information and the role of non-governmental organizations and institutions remain of vital importance in heightening awareness of and support for the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent sovereign Palestinian State,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the action taken by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in compliance with General Assembly resolution 44/41 c;

2. Requests the Department of Public Information, in full co-operation and co-ordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue its special information programme on the question of Palestine for the remainder of the biennium 1990-1991, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America and, in particular:

(a) To disseminate information on all the activities of the United Nations system relating to the question of Palestine, including reports of the work carried out by the relevant United Nations organs;

(b) To continue to issue and update publications on the various aspects of the question of Palestine, including Israeli violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people and other Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories as reported by the relevant United Nations organs;

(c) To expand its audio-visual material on the question of Palestine, including the production of such material;

(d) To organize and promote fact-finding news missions for journalists to the area, including to the occupied territories;

(e) To organize regional and national encounters for journalists.

Assistance to Palestinians

Various UN organizations and agencies continued in 1990 to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people. An overview of their activities, obtained by the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), which was entrusted with supervising the development of the programme of assistance, was contained in an October report [A/45/503] transmitted by the Secretary-General in response to General Assembly resolution 44/235 [YUN 1989, p. 202].

Earlier, in July [E/1990/71/Rev.I], the Secretary-General had briefly reported on the assistance programme to the Economic and Social Council.

The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) maintained in 1990 an extensive programme of education, health and relief services as well as other humanitarian assistance to Palestine refugees. In response to additional needs created by the uprising and its consequences, UNRWA extended its programme of emergency measures and expanded its welfare services to assist the families of those killed, disabled or detained. (For a full account of UNRWA activities, see below, under "The work of UNRWA".)

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), whose economic and social assistance was primarily for non-refugee Palestinian population in the occupied territory, continued to increase its assistance to the Palestinians with emphasis on job creation and self-sufficiency, according to a report of the UNDP Administrator [DP/1991/65]. The projects relating to the construction of a citrus processing plant, a cement factory, a commercial port, a poultry hatchery and a vegetable grading and packing facility were high on the UNDP agenda. The Business Development Centre, designed to provide Palestinian entrepreneurs with services, training and credit, became fully operational, and several management and technical training sessions and feasibility studies for new business ventures were carried out. In spite of rising tension in the region and various complications, UNDP programme delivery in 1990 jumped to a record level of $11.7 million, more than three times the level for 1989.

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) during 1990 concentrated its Palestinian-related activities in four main areas: monitoring and analysing policies and practices of Israeli occupation authorities that hampered economic development in the occupied Palestinian territory; investigating the impact of such policies and practices on key economic sectors; developing the data base for the dissemination of information on the economy of the occupied Palestinian territory; and contributing to the relevant activities of the organizations of the UN system pursuant to General Assembly resolutions. A 1990 UNCTAD report on economic developments in the occupied Palestinian territory [TD/B/1266] provided an update of aggregate and sectoral developments in the Palestinian economy during 1988-1990, including the impact of the Palestinian uprising and related Israeli policy measures. In 1990, UNCTAD continued substantive work on an intersectoral study on prospects for sustained economic and social development in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Based on the results of the analysis of the potentials of the Palestinian economy's development, a consolidated substantive frame of reference outlining development projects, strategy guidelines and policy options for action at various levels would be formulated. UNCTAD's project proposal for establishing an investment projects evaluation centre in the occupied Palestinian territory, aimed at initiating and developing Palestinian capabilities in resource allocation and management at both the entrepreneurial and institutional levels, received increasing support.

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) provided, through the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, regional advisory services and training in demographic data collection and analysis. In 1990, UNFPA also funded two 3-year fellowships in demography aimed at upgrading the educational level of faculty staff for teaching at universities.

Assistance to Palestinian children and mothers in Jordan, Syria, Lebanon and the West Bank and Gaza Strip was provided by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Major emphasis was placed on the reduction of infant mortality rates through improvements in primary health care and through the health education of mothers and primary school children, as well as immunization, oral rehydration therapy, and upgrading of water and sanitation infrastructure. The most notable of the many UNICEF activities in the occupied territory was the joint UNICEF/UNRWA physiotherapy programme, set up to provide emergency medical treatment to children suffering from limb fractures. Since its inception in 1988, the programme had reached over 3,600 children.

Pursuant to a 1989 decision by its Executive Board, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) established within the secretariat an intersectoral co-ordination mechanism to strengthen progressively UNESCO assistance to the Palestinians, and the Permanent Observer of Palestine was entitled to make direct requests under UNESCO's Participation Programme. In conformity with the Executive Board's decisions, 10 projects, representing a total cost of $22,365,000, had been identified to respond to the education and training needs of the Palestinians. In May 1990, the Executive Board invited the UNESCO Director-General to pursue his action by circulating widely the study of those needs to multilateral and bilateral funding sources and by preparing project documents.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1990, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/59.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/235 of 22 December 1989,

Recalling also its own resolution 1989/96 of 26 July 1989,

[For remainder of text, see General Assembly resolution 45/183 below.]

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/59

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 52-1 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/113) by roll-call vote (42-1-1). 19 July (meeting 13); 18-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.1); agenda item 12.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Portugal, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR; United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: United States.

Explaining its vote, the United States-the largest single donor to UNRWA which had contributed $1.5 billion to the Agency between 1950 and 1989 and would disburse $57 million to it in 1990 said that it had voted against the text because it failed to reflect the situation accurately and contained impractical ideas, while the United States preferred practical ways to increase investment, employment, production and income in the occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/183.

Assistance to the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/235 of 22 December 1989,

Taking into account the intifadah of the Palestinian people & the occupied Palestinian territory against the Israeli occupation, including Israeli economic and social policies and practices,

Rejecting Israeli restrictions on external economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Aware of the increasing need to provide economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people,

Affirming that the Palestinian people cannot develop their national economy as long as the Israeli occupation persists,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the Palestinian people;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the States, United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have provided assistance to the Palestinian people;

3. Requests the World Food Programme to provide food assistance to the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory;

4. Requests the international community, the organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to sustain and increase their assistance to the Palestinian people, in close co-operation with the Palestine Liberation Organization;

5. Calls for treatment on a transit basis of Palestinian exports and imports passing through neighbouring ports and points of exit and entry;

6. Also calls for the granting of trade concessions and concrete preferential measures for Palestinian exports on the basis of Palestinian certificates of origin;

7. Further calls for the immediate lifting of Israeli restrictions and obstacles hindering the implementation of assistance projects by the United Nations Development Programme, other United Nations bodies and others providing economic and social assistance to the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory;

8. Reiterates its call for the implementation of development projects in the occupied Palestinian territory, including the projects mentioned in its resolution 39/223 of 18 December 1984;

9. Calls for facilitation of the establishment of Palestinian development banks in the occupied Palestinian territory, with a view to promoting investment, production, employment and income therein;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report in full to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/183

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 135-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/848) by recorded vote (125-2). 7 November (meeting 35): 13-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.12); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 13-16, 22, 35; plenary 71.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe. Against: Israel, United States.

Educational institutions

In its annual report [A/45/35&Corr.1], the Committee on Palestinian Rights, with reference to reports of UNESCO, noted with great concern that the entire Palestinian educational system was in a state of paralysis owing to the prolonged closure of educational institutions since the beginning of the Palestinian uprising. While noting the formal steps taken for the gradual reopening of primary and secondary schools as a positive gesture, the Committee deplored that the Israeli occupation authorities persisted in seriously disrupting the normal functioning of schools as a form of collective punishment, as interference by soldiers, including shootings and arrests of students, raids on schools or surrounding them with barbed-wire fencing, arbitrary closure of schools or closure due to curfews continued to be reported.

The Committee strongly deplored that, due to the closure of all Palestinian universities and institutions of higher education since the beginning of the intifadah, 25,000 Palestinian students had been denied their right to education for three years and thousands of high school graduates had been barred from continuing their education. However, in 1990, some community colleges were reopened, as well as Bethlehem University.

The Committee on Israeli Practices also reported [A/45/576] on measures affecting freedom of education, which, according to the Committee, had been severely restricted as a result of prolonged closures of academic institutions which had caused the deterioration of academic standards and psychological stress in the educational process, as had been emphasized by several witnesses before the Committee. The lack of adequate equipment and material and financial constraints, as well as taxes imposed on educational institutions, were also denounced in some testimonies.

Report of Secretary-General. In October 1990, the Secretary-General informed [A/45/614] the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his March request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1989 Assembly demand in resolution 44/48 G [YUN 1989, p 226] that it rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure their freedom and refrain from hindering their effective operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/74 G.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned at the continued and intensified harassment by Israel, the occupying Power, directed against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 673(1990) of 24 October 1990,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/79 G of 15 December 1983, 39/95 G of 14 December 1984, 40/161 G of 16 December 1985, 41/63 G of 3 December 1986, 42/160 G of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 G of 6 December 1988, 44/2 of 6 October 1989 and 44/48 G of 8 December 1989,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 October 1990 and 31 October 1990,

Taking note also of the relevant decisions adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization concerning the educational and cultural situation in the occupied Palestinian territory,

1. Reaffirms the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculty members in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory especially the opening of fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Also condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities, schools and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territory, in large numbers and for prolonged periods, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in flagrant contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures taken against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities, schools and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/74 G

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 145-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/823 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (120-2), 28 November (meeting 27); 12-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.33); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 18,20,22,24,26,27; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byeloryssian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Before the vote in the Committee, the United States, in spite of its strong concern over the current situation with respect to education in the territories, voiced its objection to the text because of unjustified and counter-productive sweeping condemnations of Israeli policies and practices.

Norway expressed reservations on some of the text's wording.

Economic and social conditions of Palestinians

The Committee on Palestinian Rights noted [A/45/35 & Corr.1] that the Director-General of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), in his annual report, stated that there had been no improvement in the conditions of work and life of the workers of the occupied Arab territories and their families. Continued military occupation and massive constraints placed on agriculture, industry and other sectors prevented the endogenous economic development of the territories. The development of human resources was in jeopardy as long as schools and universities remained closed. A dual legal system that was the source of serious inequality and tension had created a discriminatory situation with regard to social benefits and had a detrimental effect on the Palestinian economy. The report stressed that almost 40 per cent of Palestinians in the occupied territories went to work in Israel, but the majority of them enjoyed no legal or social protection. Recognition by Israel of the recently unified Palestinian trade union organizations would ensure respect for the fundamental principles of freedom of association and lead to the Palestinian workers' interests being better defended.

The Committee on Israeli Practices also reported [A/45/576] on the economic and social situation in the occupied territories, stating that prolonged curfews and economic sanctions brought an additional burden to a population already living under very harsh economic and social conditions.

By a 13 July note [E/1990/83], the Secretary-General informed the Economic and Social Council that owing to the need to undertake consultations with the relevant UN entities, it had not been possible to finalize the comprehensive report on Israeli land and water policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, which had been requested by the Council in resolution 1989/86 [YUN 1989, p. 228]. He expected the report to be completed in time for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/53.

Israeli economic practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly decision 40/432 of 17 December 1985,

Recalling also its own resolution 1989/86 of 26 July 1989,

Expressing concern that the report requested in its resolution 1989/86 was not presented,

Requests the Secretary-General to prepare the report on Israeli land and water policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, taking into account Israeli settlement practices, and to submit that report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/53
24 July 1990 Meeting 34

Meeting numbers. ESC 30, 32, 34.

Speaking after the vote, the United States said it had cast a negative vote, as it had done in 1989, because the text did not serve any practical purpose. It would have supported the adoption of practical measures that could offer a solution to the situation in the occupied territories.

Palestinian women

In response to Economic and Social Council resolutions 1988/25 [YUN 1988, p. 634] and 1989/34 [YUN 1989, p. 663], the Secretary-General sent in December 1989 a mission of experts to obtain information on the situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied territories. In February 1990, he submitted the report of the mission [E/CN.6/1990/10] containing its findings on the living conditions of Palestinian women, in particular the impact of the intifadah on their families, education, health, economy and employment. The report also presented recommendations aimed at the long- and short-term improvement of the living conditions of Palestinian women.

In May, the Economic and Social Council, after consideration of the report, adopted resolution 1990/11, expressing alarm at the critical situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied Palestinian territory and reaffirming that the basic improvement of their living conditions, their advancement, full equality and self-reliance could only be achieved through an end of the occupation. The Council requested the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of the recommendations contained in the mission's report (see also PART THREE, Chapter XIII).

The work of UNRWA

More than 2.4 million refugees were registered with UNRWA, as at 30 June 1990, in five areas: in and outside camps in the Israeli-occupied West Bank (414,298) and Gaza Strip (496,339); Jordan (929,097); Lebanon (302,049); and the Syrian Arab Republic (280,731).

The General Assembly addressed the Palestine refugee problem and UNRWA activities in 11 resolutions adopted in December 1990. The resolutions dealt with: assistance to Palestine refugees (45/73 A) and to displaced persons (45/73 C); the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA (45/73 B); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (45/73 D); a proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees (45/73 J); protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions and safeguarding of UNRWA facilities in the occupied Palestinian territory (45/73 K); Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 (45/73 E); resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees (45/73 F); return of population and refugees displaced since 1967 (45/73 G); revenues derived from Palestine refugees' properties (45/73 H); and protection of Palestine refugees (45/73 I).

UNRWA activities

In 1990, UNRWA, with a staff of 18,000, one of the largest single employers in the region, continued to provide education, health and social services to over 2 million Palestinian refugees, two thirds of whom no longer lived in refugee camps. The Agency maintained its own schools, training institutions, clinics and health and women's centres. UNRWA operations were co-ordinated from its headquarters in Vienna and Amman, Jordan, and from five field offices, with liaison offices in New York and Cairo, Egypt.

A total of 357,706 Palestine refugee children studied in the 631 UNRWA elementary and preparatory schools, served by 10,503 teachers. An additional 63,354 Palestinian pupils attended government and private schools. During the 1989/90 school year, vocational, technical and pre-service teacher training was provided in eight UNRWA training centres, with a total enrolment of 4,386 trainees and 497 instructors. The Institute of Education provided in-service training courses to 818 teachers through the Education Development Centres in each of the five fields of the operation. At the university level, 540 scholars benefited from the Agency's scholarship programme. Total expenditure in 1990 on the educational programme amounted to $126.9 million, against a budgeted $131.3 million, representing 51 per cent of UNRWA's total regular budget.

The Agency's health programme covered curative and preventive medical services, which were provided through 104 health clinics. In 1990, 3,877,313 visits were paid to those clinics by refugee patients for medical consultations. Hospitalization was provided at heavily subsidized rates in 35 hospitals with which UNRWA had special agreements. In 1990, the number of bed/days utilized by refugees in those hospitals amounted to 225,068. Sanitation was also part of the health programme, as was the supplementary feeding programme through which about 27,100 pre-school and schoolchildren received a full midday meal six days a week served in 102 supplementary feeding centres. Total 1990 expenditure on the health programme amounted to $48.2 million, out of a budgeted $50.4 million, which was 20 per cent of the Agency's regular budget.

UNRWA relief and social services provided socio-economic support for the most disadvantaged of the Palestine refugees, facilitating their self-reliance. By the end of 1990, 36,216 families, or some 7.6 per cent of the registered refugee population, were receiving special hardship assistance, consisting of food, clothing, blankets, repair of shelters, selective cash grants in extreme distress, preferential access to vocational and teacher training, and small grants to establish self-support projects. The social services comprised case work, income-generating programmes and related skill-training, women's programmes, community-based rehabilitation of the disabled and projects to develop community facilities. In 1990, total expenditure on relief and social services amounted to $27 million, against a budgeted $28.9 million, or 11 per cent of UNRWA's regular budget.

The Agency's expanded programme of assistance, launched in 1988 and intended to improve the living conditions in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, covered also shelter rehabilitation, expansion of health services, environmental sanitation, improved water supply, employment, self-support projects, improvement of Agency installations and some education projects. Against the target of $65 million, $30 million had been received or pledged for the programme by mid-1990.

UNRWA took an active part in the international relief effort to assist thousands of evacuees from Iraq and Kuwait who passed through Jordan in August and September 1990, the majority of them of Palestinian origin. At the transit camp established in Amman, UNRWA set up a health clinic and provided daily food rations to the evacuees at the request of Jordan. Food was also provided to evacuees at the Andalus reception point near Amman airport, as well as logistic support to the government, UN bodies and NGOs. UNRWA assisted in establishing proper sanitary facilities at a number of reception points in Jordan, provided health teams in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic and made loans of food commodities to a number of national and international humanitarian agencies. The Agency absorbed 2,500 additional children in its schools in Jordan.

Detailed information on all aspects of UNRWA activities in 1990 was contained in two reports of its Commissioner-General, covering the periods from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990 [A/45/13] and 1 July 1990 to 30 June 1991 [A/46/13].

Jordan. The 197 UNRWA schools in Jordan, with a total of 133,810 pupils, functioned normally throughout the 1989/90 school year. The Amman and Wadi Seer Training Centres operated successfully and trained a total of 1,168 students in 27 vocational and technical courses. In addition to teacher training, the Amman Centre provided courses in the paramedical and commercial areas. The Wadi Seer Centre offered courses in the mechanical, electrical and building trades, as well as a range of technician courses.

Health facilities in Jordan, serving about 850,000 refugees, included 18 health centres and points, 14 dental clinics, 10 laboratories, 8 specialist clinics, 12 diabetes clinics and 5 hypertension clinics.

The socio-economic situation of Palestinian refugees in Jordan was relatively stable and more comfortable than elsewhere. Nevertheless, rising unemployment affected refugees and the number of those living in poverty increased. In June, 30,687 refugees, or 3.7 per cent of the eligible population, were registered as special hardship cases. The women's programmes expanded over the year and were run from 10 women's programme centres, four of which moved into new or renovated premises with upgraded equipment. Courses were conducted in dressmaking, machine-knitting, artificial flower-making, hair-dressing and typing. UNRWA also provided the premises for a new wool-spinning project initiated in the spring of 1990.

The programme of community-based rehabilitation of the disabled also developed further at the four established centres in Jordan, and considerable progress was reported in the change of attitude of the community towards the disabled.

Lebanon. Apart from occasional interruptions due to strikes, the 76 UNRWA schools in Lebanon continued to function and 33,300 pupils attended them during the 1989/90 school year. However, some schools in central Lebanon were closed in February for security reasons. The Siblin Training Centre with 640 training places provided a total of 18 vocational and technical courses.

Despite the prevailing conditions in the country, UNRWA's health programmes improved during 1989/90. With the opening of four diabetes clinics and two hypertension clinics, the total number of UNRWA specialized clinics reached 11. Three additional dental units were established at Wavel, Saida Town and Rashidieh health centres, as well as a clinical laboratory at Ein el-Hilweh health centre. The health centre at Shatila camp was reconstructed, and major renovation of Rashidieh health centre was completed.

The need for material assistance for the destitute continued to be higher in Lebanon than in any other area of operation. By the end of June 1990, 35,350 persons were registered as special hardship cases, amounting to 13.8 per cent of the refugees eligible for services. However, due to heavy continuous fighting in east Beirut, many special hardship families were unable to collect their food rations. At a June meeting, representatives of UNRWA, UNICEF and local and international NGOs drew up proposals for a co-ordinated programme of assistance. In view of limited employment opportunities for Palestinians, UNRWA, within its income-generating programme for special hardship cases, supported 93 small enterprises and offered courses in dressmaking, artificial flower-making and hairdressing in its five women's programme centres.

The Agency's emergency operations-at a 1990 budget of $10 million-were directed especially to alleviating the plight of refugees displaced by the fighting. Emergency health assistance and supplementary feeding were also extended to refugees not normally eligible for such services. Around $2 million was spent on food aid. Four emergency general ration distributions of food, sugar and rice to approximately 230,000 beneficiaries were carried out in 1989/90. During that same period, 1,265 and 463 shelters, respectively, were repaired or reconstructed in the Burj el-Barajneh and Shatila camps.

Syrian Arab Republic. The 111 UNRWA schools in the Syrian Arab Republic, with a student population of 55,550, were open without interruption during the 1989/90 school year. Unfortunately, inadequate and insufficient school premises continued to pose a great problem for the Agency, which continued to experience difficulty in securing funds to carry out a sustained programme of construction at the desired speed. However, owing to an improved exchange rate available to UNRWA and the savings resulting therefrom, $2 million were allocated to a number of projects, including construction of a school, renovation of sanitary facilities at 15 schools and construction of nine new classrooms. The Damascus Training Centre with a total of 768 training places also needed reconstruction and replacement of equipment.

The construction of a health and feeding centre at Hama and the extension of the Yarmouk health centre were completed, and work started on a health centre in Latakia and a maternal and child health sub-centre in Yarmouk. To meet the increased demand on out-patient services in the southern area, an additional medical team was established to operate in Dera'a and Mazereeb health centres on a full-time basis. For eligible Palestinian refugees, UNRWA reserved 55 beds in private hospitals. The Agency also funded and implemented a water supply project for installations in Horns camp and continued to provide water to Damascus camps through its water tankers because of the low ground-water level there.

Through UNRWA's special hardship assistance programme, 14,454 Palestinians, or 6 per cent of the total number of eligible refugees, in the country received material help. The Agency also supported 32 disabled youngsters; however, the number of those in need was much higher.

West Bank and Gaza Strip. Of the 98 UNRWA schools in the West Bank, with a student population of 39,460, 90 schools with 36,700 pupils suffered severe disruptions during the 1989/90 academic year due to curfews, strikes and closure orders, which seriously affected the prescribed education curriculum. Under those circumstances, UNRWA paid special attention to the production of self-learning written materials which provided supplementary assistance to pupils. Two training centres in Ramallah and one in Kalandia offered 944 vocational and technical training places and 550 teacher-training places. While permitted to reopen in stages between March and May 1990 after two years of closure, the centres suffered occasional disruption caused by strikes, curfews and disturbances.

Similar disruptions occurred in the 149 UNRWA schools with 95,600 pupils in the Gaza Strip; however, there was no prolonged general closure of schools. Although by mid-May 1990 40 per cent of teaching time had been lost, the Agency was not allowed to extend the school year; thus contingency plans, including the distribution of self-learning materials, had to be put into effect. The Gaza Training Centre with 650 training places and 15 vocational and technical courses operated with general regularity during the 1989/90 academic year, but was also affected by strikes, curfews and closure orders.

The joint UNRWA-UNICEF physiotherapy programme continued to function in five health centres in the Gaza Strip and was extended to the West Bank where clinics were opened in Jenin and Doura in April. In order to cope with the increased number of patients and casualties, UNRWA contributed to the expansion of Al Ahli hospital in Gaza, where it already subsidized 40 beds. With UNRWA's assistance, the health centres at Arrub, Kalandia and Jenin were renovated and upgraded.

In the area of environmental health, work on an internal sewerage scheme at Amari camp was completed, while a similar scheme at Dheisheh camp proceeded slowly owing to obstacles created by the Israeli security forces. Funds were allocated to implement internal sewerage systems at four other camps. In Gaza, emphasis was placed on upgrading water and liquid waste disposal in the Strip's eight congested camps. Despite certain improvements, refuse collection and disposal in camps throughout the occupied territories continued to suffer operational difficulties, especially during curfews and strikes.

By June, UNRWA was providing special hardship assistance to almost 71,400 refugees under the normal programme and to another 4,400 as a supplementary measure. Of refugees eligible for services, 13.4 per cent in Gaza and 9.1 per cent in the West Bank were registered by the Agency as special hardship cases. Those percentages were higher than the previous year and exceeded the Agency-wide average of 7.8 per cent. UNRWA paid special attention to promoting self-support projects. Agency social workers succeeded in establishing 45 small businesses in the West Bank and 25 in the Gaza Strip. In May, UNRWA provided a garment factory in Gaza with a $25,000 loan, which allowed it to employ 60 workers, including 20 women. By June, the Agency's loan programme supported 105 projects in Gaza and 62 in the West Bank. Since the number of disabled refugees in the occupied territory increased during the Palestinian uprising, UNRWA supported community-based rehabilitation programmes.

To cope with the effects of the intifadah and Israeli countermeasures, the Agency instituted a programme of extraordinary measures, which included health, relief and social services, and general assistance. The 1990 budget for that programme in both the West Bank and Gaza was approximately $29 million. The Agency instituted training programmes and provided medical supplies and equipment for its clinics to deal with large numbers of wounded and to evacuate casualties to hospitals. Most UNRWA clinics operated an additional shift for emergencies and five in Gaza remained open 24 hours a day. The provision of supplementary food to children and pregnant and nursing women was extended to more registered, as well as to non-registered, refugees at a cost of $1.8 million. Cash assistance, at a budgeted $1.2 million, was provided to those in immediate distress, and needy families received food commodities at an expected cost of $12 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 A.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/47 A of 8 December 1989 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for The reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that; therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the Agency should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

4. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1991;

5. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

6. Notes with Profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the Agency is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

7. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

General Assembly resolution 45/73 A

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 146-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/822) by recorded vote (123-0-1), 26 November (meeting 22); draft by United States (A/SPC/45/L.5); agenda item 74.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7, 22; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel.

Following the vote in the Committee, Israel said it welcomed the humanitarian assistance given through UNRWA to refugees; in addition, between 1 July 1989 and 1 July 1990, Israel had contributed over $20 million towards education, welfare, health and housing for Palestine refugees and had made many good-will gestures, such as the release of detainees, the opening of schools and assistance with agricultural exports.

Speaking on behalf of the European Community (EC) members, Italy reaffirmed their full support for UNRWA's work but wondered, while in principle being in favour of the development of the various services the Agency could provide, about the advisability of confronting the Commissioner-General with unrealistic demands.

Iran explained that it had voted for all resolutions relating to the agenda item on UNRWA as they could only help alleviate the suffering of the Palestinians. The ultimate solution, however, would lie in the restoration of their right to self-determination and the establishment of a Palestinian State.

Other UNRWA matters

Humanitarian assistance to displaced and other persons

In addition to relief services, which included the provision of basic food commodities, blankets, clothing, shelter repair and cash grants, UNRWA continued to provide in 1990 a small measure of humanitarian assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities but who were not registered with UNRWA as refugees. In Jordan, the Agency distributed rations on the Government's behalf to some 190,000 persons. It also administered community-based rehabilitation centres for the disabled in Jordan and initiated their extension to the other fields.

UNRWA remained concerned about the future of the Palestine refugees stranded at so-called Canada camp on the Egyptian side of the international border when Israel withdrew from the Sinai in April 1982, and who, under an agreement between Israel and Egypt, were to return to the Gaza Strip to reunite with their families. However, as at June 1990, UNRWA continued to provide food rations to some 4,000 Palestinians in the camp who were mostly unemployed and living in poverty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 C.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities

The General Assembly;

Recalling its resolution 44/47 C of 8 December 1989 and all its previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 44/47 C and all its previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

General Assembly resolution 45/73 C

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/822) without vote, 26 November (meeting 22); 22-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.7); agenda item 74. Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7, 22; plenary 65.

Repatriation of refugees

In September 1990, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/466] on Israel's reply to the General Assembly's call in resolution 44/47 G [YUN 1989, P. 235] that it take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants and desist from measures obstructing their return. Israel stated that its position on the matter had been detailed fully in successive annual replies, the most recent contained in a 1989 report by the Secretary-General [YUN 1989, P. 234]. Israel also said that as a result of its continued effort to review individual cases of resettlement based on each case's merit, approximately 76,750 persons had already returned to the administered territories.

The Secretary-General stated that UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for the return of refugees or displaced persons; therefore, it would not necessarily be aware of the return of those who did not request provision of services. According to Agency records, between 1 July 1989 and 30 June 1990, 188 refugees registered with UNRWA had returned to the West Bank and 25 to the Gaza Strip. Some of them might not have been displaced in 1967, but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they had accompanied on return or later joined. About 11,700 displaced refugees were known by UNRWA to have returned to the occupied territory since June 1967. The Agency was unable to estimate the total number of displaced inhabitants who had returned, as it kept records only 'of registered refugees and even those records, particularly with respect to the location of registered refugees, might be incomplete.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 G.

Return of population and refugees displaced since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2452 A (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 B (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 D (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 E (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C and D (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 D of 23 November 1976, 32/90 E of 13 December 1977, 33/112 F of 18 December 1978, 34/52 E of 23 November 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/13 E of 3 November 1980, 36/146 B of 16 December 1981, 37/120 G of 16 December 1982, 38/83 G of 15 December 1983, 39/99 G of 14 December 1984, 40/165 G of 16 December 1985, 41/69 G of 3 December 1986, 42/69 G of 2 December 1987, 43/57 G of 6 December 1988 and 44/47 G of 8 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right to return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and is inadmissible;

2. Considers any and all agreements embodying any restriction on, or condition for, the return of the displaced inhabitants as null and void;

3. Strongly deplores the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

4. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants;

(b) To desist from all measures that obstruct the return of the displaced inhabitants, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-sixth session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 4 above.

Approved by Special Political Committee [A/45/822] by recorded vote [96-25], 26 November {meeting 22}; 14-nation draft [A/SPC/45/L.211] agenda item 74.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7. 22; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Speaking before the vote in the Committee, the United States objected to the text on the grounds that it made no reference to necessary direct negotiations among all parties.

Food aid

In compliance with General Assembly resolution 44/47 F [YUN 1989, P. 235], the Secretary-General reported in September 1990 [A/45/465] that UNRWA continued to distribute rations to the most needy sector of the refugee population—special hardship cases—who numbered 146,271 persons in December 1989. Two emergency distributions, including commodities such as flour, sugar, skim milk and corned beef, were made in 1989 to about 203,000 refugees in Lebanon, and about 20,000 tons of food commodities were distributed by the Agency to needy families in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. However, it had not been possible to resume general distribution of basic food rations to all refugees due to the lack of additional resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 F.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 37/120 F of 16 December 1982, 38/83 F of 15 December 1983, 39/99 F of 14 December 1984, 40/165 F of 16 December 1985, 41/69 F of 3 December 1986, 42/69 F of 2 December 1987, 43/57 F of 6 December 1988, 44/47 F of 8 December 1989 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

Deeply concerned at the interruption by the Agency, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields,

1. Regrets that its resolutions 37/120 F, 38/83 F, 39/99 F, 40/165 F, 41/69 F, 42/69 F, 43/57 F and 44/47 F have not been implemented;

2. Calls once again upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

The United States, before the vote in the Committee, opposed the text, saying that it attempted to usurp the authority of the UNRWA Commissioner-General.

Education and training

Protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/47 K [YUN 1989, P. 233] condemning Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties, especially the opening of fire on students, causing many casualties, and calling on Israel to open immediately all closed educational institutions, the Secretary-General in February 1990 requested Israel to inform him of steps it had taken or envisaged taking to implement the relevant provisions of that resolution. In its June reply, Israel stated that the resolution was unbalanced, distorting its role and policy, which remained to encourage the improvement and development of the educational system in Judea, Samaria and the Gaza District. During the period of Israeli administration, the level of education and literacy in those territories had improved markedly and many new institutions of learning were established. Since December 1987, however, the schools were frequently exploited as centres for organizing and launching violent activities, and unrest was caused by masked extremists, affiliated with PLO and other groups, who forcefully entered classrooms during school hours and compelled students to join violent demonstrations. Measures taken by the authorities as a direct result of, and in reaction to, activities of those extremist elements had had some degree of success and had enabled the reopening of primary and secondary schools. Extremist elements had, however, continued to disrupt the school system, both through violent agitation and frequent strikes, while the Assembly resolution ignored those facts, Israel said. On its side, Israel would continue to make every effort to normalize the educational environment within the framework of the difficult security situation caused by violent agitation and intimidation by PLO and other extremist affiliates.

The Secretary-General's report [A/45/646] also contained information on Israel's compliance with Assembly resolution 44/47 K, based on the UNRWA Commissioner-General's reports.

During the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990, there were 112 cases of unauthorized entry by Israel into UNRWA schools in the West Bank and 295 into schools in the Gaza Strip. UNRWA had taken up those cases with the Israeli authorities who, in a number of instances, claimed that Agency premises were entered because stones had been thrown from within, or stone-throwers were being chased into the premises. During the same period, UNRWA reported nine fatalities and 3,795 cases of injury among students and trainees at its educational institutions in the West Bank, and four fatalities and 3,768 injuries in Gaza, attributable to beatings, tear-gas inhalation, rubber bullets and live ammunition. In addition, a total of 371 students and trainees in the West Bank and 111 in the Gaza Strip were detained, of whom 148 and 79, respectively, were released by 30 June 1990.

UNRWA training centres in the West Bank, closed by military order from the beginning of 1988, reopened in the spring of 1990, while the training centre in the Gaza Strip operated without protracted closures during the 1989/90 academic year. The 1989/90 UNRWA school year was shortened from 210 to 141 days, on account of general closure orders affecting all schools. The 141 operating days were further reduced by various factors such as intrusions by Israeli military personnel, individual school closures, strikes, curfews and local disturbances, resulting in an overall loss of 48 per cent of a normal school year. The most seriously affected in the West Bank were the five schools in Tulkarm camp serving 2,363 pupils, which were closed by military orders from 11 February to 22 May 1990 and again during several curfews in May and June. UNRWA scheduled those schools to reopen on 10 July for one month to make up for lost time, but the authorities insisted that they remain closed. In the Gaza Strip, the 1989/90 school year was shortened by 10 days to 200 days, on account of general closure orders affecting all schools. Various other factors contributed to the overall loss of 39 per cent of a normal school year.

The loss of teaching time affected the level of curriculum coverage and forced all UNRWA schools, other than the eight in East Jerusalem to which the general closure order did not apply, to concentrate only on basic subjects, the Secretary-General reported. The Israeli authorities also took the position that the Agency should conform to the school opening and closure dates of schools run by the Civil Administration, which did not help UNRWA in its efforts to try to make up for lost time.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 K.

Protection of Palestinian students and educational institutions and safeguarding of the security of the facilities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East in the occupied Palestinian territory

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 605(1987) of 22 December 1987,

Recalling its resolutions 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/57 I of 6 December 1988, 44/2 of 6 October 1989 and 44/47 K of 8 December 1989,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 January 1988, submitted in accordance with Security Council resolution 605(1987), and the report dated 31 October 1990, submitted in accordance with Council resolution 672(1990),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

Taking note, in particular, of paragraph 114 of that report, in which it is stated that during the reporting period "unauthorized entry by the Israeli authorities into Agency premises increased" and that "555 intrusions into Agency premises were recorded in the Gaza Strip and 191 in the West Bank" and furthermore "in the month of June 1990 alone, 22 incursions into health centres were registered" and that "on 12 June 1990, Israeli soldiers pursuing stone throwers threw two tear-gas grenades into the Rimal health centre in Gaza Town affecting patients including 66 registered infants awaiting treatment",

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Condemns the repeated Israeli raids on the premises and installations of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, and calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to refrain from such raids;

2. Deplores the policy and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which have led to the prolonged closure of educational institutions, a large number of which are operated by the Agency, and the repeated disruption of medical services;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to open immediately all closed educational institutions and to refrain from closing them thereafter;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/73 K

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 145-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/822) by recorded vote (121-2), 26 November (meeting 221; 13-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.25); agenda item 74.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7, 22; plenary 65.

Recorded Vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said that, despite its concerns over school closures and disruption of UNRWA activities, it did not support the text because of the harsh condemnation of Israel. With respect to raids on UNRWA installations, addressed in the resolution, Israel stated that the Agency was employing residents of the occupied territories who had been sentenced for security violations; the Palestinians were taking advantage of UNRWA and exploiting it to further their political goals.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al Quds"

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 44/47 J [YUN 1989, P. 236], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/530] in September 1990 on efforts to establish a university for Palestine refugees in Jerusalem. The proposed university, first considered by the Assembly in 1980 [YUN 1980, p.444], had since been the subject of nine further Assembly resolutions and annual reports of the Secretary-General on measures taken towards its establishment, including a functional feasibility study. In order to assist in completing the study, the Rector of the United Nations University, at the Secretary-General's request, made available the services of an expert to visit the area and meet with Israeli officials.

On 5 June 1990, the Secretary-General requested Israel to facilitate the visit of the expert. In a reply of 29 June, Israel referred to its previous statements, adding that it had voted consistently against the resolution on the subject, that its position remained unchanged and that the sponsors of the resolution sought to exploit higher education in order to politicize issues totally extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Accordingly, Israel was unable to assist in taking the matter further.

In view of that position, the Secretary-General concluded, it had not been possible to carry out the study as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 J.

University of Jerusalem "Al Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 G of 16 December 1981, 37/120 C of 16 December 1982, 38/83 K of 15 December 1983, 39/99 K of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D and K of 16 December 1985, 41/69 K of 3 December 1986, 42/69 K of 2 December 1987, 43/57 J of 6 December 1988 and 44/47 J of 8 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General

Having also considered report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1

1 Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 5 June 1967 including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2 Requests the Secretary-General continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" in accordance with Assembly resolution 35/19 B of 3 November 1980 giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3 Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to co-operate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

4 Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/73 J

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 145-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/822) by recorded vote (121-21), 26 November (meeting 22): 15-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.24); agenda item 74.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7, 22; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Though strongly supporting practical efforts to promote higher educational opportunities for Palestinian refugees, the United States said it opposed the text as an unreasonable and unworkable approach to the problem. Israel pointed out that before 1967 there had been no single functioning university in the territories, while since then six universities had been established, all enjoying academic freedom.

Scholarships

The Secretary-General reported [A/45/463] in September 1990 on responses to the appeal of the General Assembly in resolution 44/47 D [YUN 1989, P. 237] for special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

During the academic year 1989/90, a total of 68 awards were made available by Japan, which had contributed $1 million to be spent over a period of five years. Scholarships were also granted by the Federal Republic of Germany, Kuwait and Switzerland. Fellowships were offered by UN agencies, including the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), the International Maritime Organization (IMO), UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the Universal Postal Union (UPU) and the World Health Organization (WHO). According to UNRWA [A/45/13], a total of 539 Palestine refugees were scholarship holders during the academic year 1989/90.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 D.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, 36/146 H of 16 December 1981, 37/120 D of 16 December 1982, 38/83 D of 15 December 1983, 39/99 D of 14 December 1984, 40/165 D of 16 December 1985, 41/69 D of 3 December 1986, 42/69 D of 2 December 1987, 43/57 D of 6 December 1988 and 44/47 D of 8 December 1989,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestine refugees have, for the last four decades, lost their homes, lands and means of livelihood,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

1. Urges all States to respond to the appeal contained in General Assembly resolution 32/90 F of 13 December 1977 and reiterated in subsequent relevant resolutions in a manner commensurate with the needs of Palestine refugees for higher education, including vocational training;

2. Strongly appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations that responded favourably to its resolutions 41/69 D, 42/69 D, 43/57 D and 44/47 D;

4. Invites the relevant specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue, within their respective spheres of competence, to extend assistance for higher education to Palestine refugee students;

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees;

6. Also appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

7. Requests the Agency to act as the recipient and trustee for the special allocations for grants and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestine refugee candidates;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel.

Speaking before the vote in the Committee, the United States said it supported the practical approach to meeting the needs of refugees for higher education; it had reservations, however, with regard to the proposed University "Al-Quds".

Property rights

Report of Secretary-General. In August 1990, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/429] on revenues derived from Palestine refugee property, as requested by General Assembly resolution 44/47 H [YUN 1989, P. 238] which he had brought in February 1990 to Israel's attention, requesting information on its implementation. He also had brought the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolutions 44/47 A-K to the attention of the Chairman of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine and to all Member States, requesting information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel.

Israel, in its reply of 29 June, stated that its position had been set out in statements to the Special Political Committee and in a 1989 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1989, P. 238], adding that there was no legal basis for taking the steps proposed by the Assembly resolution, as property rights within the borders of a sovereign State were exclusively subject to that State's domestic laws. The right of States to regulate and dispose of property within their territory (and income derived from that property) was a generally accepted principle. Significantly, the resolution's sponsors had not suggested that similar steps be taken concerning the confiscated Jewish property in Arab countries. As a result of the 1948 war, approximately 800,000 Jewish refugees from Arab countries were resettled in Israel. The property they had left behind, estimated to be worth billions of dollars, was expropriated by the Arab countries in which they had lived. There could be no difference in law, justice or equity between the claims of Arab and Jewish property owners, Israel asserted.

With regard to the Assembly's request for information from other Member States, no replies had been received, the Secretary-General reported.

Report of Conciliation Commission. In its forty-fourth annual report [A/45/382] covering the period from 1 September 1989 to 31 August 1990, the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine stated that the circumstances that had limited its possibilities of action regarding compensation for Palestine refugee properties remained unchanged. The events that had occurred in the area had further complicated an already very complex situation. Nevertheless, the Commission continued to hope that the situation and related circumstances in the region would improve towards a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, thus enabling it to carry forward its mandate as defined by General Assembly resolution 194(III) [YUN 1948-49, P. 174].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 H.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugees' properties

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/ 13 A to F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981, 37/120 H of 16 December 1982, 38/83 H of 15 December 1983, 39/99 H of 14 December 1984, 40/165 H of 16 December 1985, 41/69 H of 3 December 1986, 42/69 H of 2 December 1987, 43/57 H of 6 December 1988, 44/47 H of 8 December 1989 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, covering the period from 1 September 1989 to 31 August 1990,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her private property,

Considering that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners;

2. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Calls upon the Governments of all the other Member States concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, which would assist the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Deplores Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the implementation of the resolutions on the question;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7, 22; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Before the Committee vote, the United States objected to the text on the grounds that it made no reference to necessary direct negotiations among all parties.

Refugee protection

In October 1990, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/641] on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/47 I [YUN 1989, P. 239] holding Israel responsible for the security of Palestine refugees in the occupied territory and calling on it to compensate UNRWA for the damage to Agency property and facilities resulting from its 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

Responding in June to the Secretary-General's February request for information on steps taken or envisaged to comply with the resolution, Israel stated that the adoption of the resolution was hypocritical, anachronistic and out of place. Despite its withdrawal from Lebanon in 1985, Israel was still being blamed for the suffering of the Palestinians in Lebanon and for Arab persecution of Palestinian refugees. Thousands of Palestinians had been killed and wounded in Lebanese refugee camps in vicious fighting totally unconnected with Israel. Likewise, Palestinian refugee camps in Syria and Jordan were the scenes of considerable human misery. The selective and distorted presentation of the Palestinian refugees' situation in Arab countries, Israel said, clearly illustrated the resolution's double standards and blatant disregard for the refugees' general welfare.

The Secretary-General cited the UNRWA Commissioner-General's report for the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990 [A/45/13], stating that, in consultation with the Secretary-General, he had continued his efforts in support of the safety and security of the Palestine refugees. In that connection, UNRWA international staff, in particular refugee affairs officers, assigned to the occupied territory had helped to lower tensions and prevent maltreatment of the refugees, especially of women and children. The Commissioner-General protested to the Israeli authorities against excessive use of force, collective punishment, punitive demolitions, sealing of shelters and other such measures, as a failure on Israel's part to uphold standards required under international humanitarian law.

Following Israel's withdrawal from the Saida and Tyre areas in 1985, there was nothing further to state in the context of the current report regarding the Palestine refugees in Lebanon, the report said.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 I.

Protection of Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling, in particular, recent Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989, 641(1989) of 30 August 1989, 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 673(1990) of 24 October 1990,

Also recalling its resolutions ES-7/5 of 26 June 1982, ES-7/6 and ES-7/8 of 19 August 1982, ES-7/9 of 24 September 1982, 37/120 J of 16 December 1982, 38/83 I of 15 December 1983, 39/99 I of 14 December 1984, 40/165 I of 16 December 1985, 41/69 I of 3 December 1986, 42/69 I of 2 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/57 I of 6 December 1988 and 44/47 I of 8 December 1989,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General dated 21 January 1988, submitted in accordance with Security Council resolution 605(1987), and the report dated 31 October 1990, submitted in accordance with Council resolution 672(1990),

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

Gravely concerned and alarmed by the deteriorating situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Taking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of the Palestinian civilian population under Israeli occupation,

Referring to the humanitarian principles of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to the obligations arising from the regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907,

Deeply concerned at the marked deterioration in the security situation experienced by the Palestine refugees as stated by the Commissioner-General in his report,

Deeply distressed at the suffering of the Palestinian and Lebanese population which has resulted from continuing Israeli acts of aggression against Lebanon and other hostile acts,

1. Holds Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon it to fulfil its obligations as the occupying Power in this regard, in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

2. Calls upon all the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention in all circumstances in conformity with their obligation under article 1 thereof;

3. Strongly urges the Security Council to consider the current situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, taking into account the recommendations contained in the reports of the Secretary-General dated 21 January 1988 and 31 October 1990;

4. Urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to continue his efforts in support of the upholding of the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees in all the territories under Israeli occupation in 1967 and thereafter;

5. Culls once again upon Israel to desist forthwith from acts of aggression against the Lebanese and Palestinian population in Lebanon;

6. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, release forthwith all arbitrarily detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

7. Calls once again upon Israel to compensate the Agency for damages to its property and facilities resulting from the invasion of Lebanon by Israel in 1982, without prejudice to the latter's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion, as well as for other damages to the Agency resulting from the policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-sixth session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/73 1

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 145-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/822) by recorded vote (120-2), 26 November (meeting 22); 14-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.23/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 74.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7, 22: plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

/n favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Speaking before the Committee vote, the United States said it believed that Israel, as the occupying Power, had the authority and responsibility to maintain security in the West Bank and Gaza, and must carry out those obligations in strict accordance with the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention).

Removal and resettlement of refugees

In September 1990, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/464] in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/47 E [YUN 1989, P. 241] demanding that Israel desist from resettling Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by it since 1967 and from destroying their shelters. In reply to the Secretary-General's February request for information regarding implementation of the resolution, Israel considered the resolution unbalanced and distorted in that it intentionally ignored the improved living conditions in the Gaza District, including the considerable increase of pupils attending schools, the significant drop in the illiteracy rate, the extensive development of medical care and the improvement of environmental services.

Since 1967, Israel had initiated community development projects in the Gaza District, enabling some 20,000 families-i.e., approximately 150,000 persons-to leave the refugee camps on a voluntary basis and relocate to nearby residential areas. That figure represented over one third of the total refugee population in Gaza.

Notwithstanding subversive efforts to the contrary, Israel stated that it was determined to pursue the task of improving the refugees' living conditions through projects such as the refugee housing programmes and would welcome all assistance from the international community in that regard.

The Secretary-General's report also contained information on the subject provided by the UNRWA Commissioner-General [A/45/13]. According to that information, shelter demolitions continued as punitive actions and on the grounds that they had been built without proper authority on State land outside camp boundaries. Israeli authorities had, to date, allocated approximately 3,914 plots of land in the Gaza Strip for housing projects. A total of 2,605 had been built on by 3,714 refugee families comprising 22,946 persons, buildings on 236 plots were under construction, 936 were still vacant and 137 had been built on by non-refugees. In addition, 3,034 refugee families, consisting of 18,823 persons, had moved into 2,666 completed housing units consisting of 5,893 rooms. Refugee families were continuing to purchase plots of land at subsidized rates for the construction of houses in projects developed by the Israeli authorities in the Beit Lahiya, Nazleh and Tel-es-Sultan areas. The construction of Israeli-sponsored multi-storey apartment blocks in Sheikh Radwan continued, but was slowed down considerably due to the prevailing situation.

With regard to the request to the Commissioner-General in resolution 44/47 E that he address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the occupied territory and extend all Agency services to them, the report noted that UNRWA had been providing emergency food, medical and other assistance to those in need in the territory and that it had begun a longer-term programme to upgrade infrastructure, especially in the camps, and to improve economic and social conditions (for details, see above).

The Secretary-General regretted that he was currently unable to comply with the Assembly's request that he resume issuing identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied territory, irrespective of whether they were recipients of UNRWA rations and services. Under an arrangement that had been followed for 40 years, he reported, all refugee families registered with UNRWA were in possession of Agency-issued registration cards, which indicated the number of family members and their eligibility for services but were not identification cards. The Commissioner-General did not have the means to issue identity cards as such, the Secretary-General added, but would keep the situation under review to see whether appropriate documentation regarding the registration status of individual members of refugee families could be issued.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 E.

Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also its resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3689 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979, 35/13 F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 A of 16 December 1981, 37/120 E and I of 16 December 1982, 38/83 E and J of 15 December 1983, 39/99 E and J of 14 December 1984, 40/165 E and J of 16 December 1985, 41/69 E and J of 3 December 1986, 42/69 E and J of 2 December 1987, 43/57 E of 6 December 1988 and 44/47 E of 8 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 away from their homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of Israel's obligation under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Strongly reiterates its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine

Refugees in the Near East to address the acute situation of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967 and accordingly to extend all the services of the Agency to those refugees;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commissioner-General, to resume issuing identification cards to all Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied Palestinian territory, irrespective of whether or not they are recipients of rations and services of the Agency;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-sixth session, on the implementation of the present resolution and in particular on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

General Assembly resolution 45/73 E

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 145-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/822) by recorded vote (121-21, 26 November (meeting 22); 14-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.19); agenda item 74.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7, 22; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

The United States explained that it could not support the text as it referred to an "inalienable right of return" while making no reference to negotiations for a comprehensive and lasting peace among the parties, which would be necessary to resolve the underlying issues. The Commissioner-General should retain the authority to administer UNRWA's programmes with regard to such matters as issuance of identification cards without outside interference. Also, while opposing such measures as the destruction of dwellings in the territories, the United States did not object in principle to the concept of voluntary relocation of refugees.

UNRWA financing

In 1990, UNRWA's income under its General Fund amounted to $237.9 million. Of that amount, the Agency reallocated $4.6 million to fund a shortfall in income in funded ongoing activities and $0.3 million partially to fund the emergency-related programmes in Lebanon and the occupied territory, leaving the General Fund with a net income of $233 million. Total General Fund expenditure amounted to $229.9 million, leaving a surplus of income over expenditure of $3.1 million. After extraordinary adjustments, the Agency in 1990 was able to increase its working capital reserve by $2.7 million, to a level of $31.6 million. Capital and special projects were budgeted at $15 million, of which $3.9 million was funded through special contributions and $9.2 million from the General Fund.

Separate from the regular operations covered by the Agency's budget, UNRWA continued in 1990 to operate a supplementary budget for emergency operations in Lebanon, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Total 1990 expenditure for those activities amounted to $33.5 million, against a total income of $19.4 million.

According to the audited financial statements and the report of the Board of Auditors [A/45/Add.3], UNRWA's 1990 budget totalled $314.3 million, of which $257.8 million was for the regular budget and the rest for the emergency budgets of extraordinary character, i.e., $35.4 million for all funds of the Extraordinary Measures in Lebanon and the Occupied Territory (EMLOT), and $21.1 million for the Expanded Programme of Assistance (EPA).

Total expenditure in 1990 on the education programme amounted to $126.9 million, on the health programme $48.2 million, and on the relief and social services programme $27 million.

Working Group on UNRWA financing

In 1990, the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA, established by the General Assembly in December 1970 [YUN 1970, P. 280], to study all aspects of the financing of the Agency, held two meetings, on 14 September and 11 October.

In its report to the Assembly [A/45/645], the Working Group noted that in 1989 UNRWA had received sufficient funding to enable it to deliver its regular programme as budgeted, except for construction. Expenditure on the regular programme amounted to some $222 million, but only $1.7 million had been received for construction out of a budgeted total of $11.3 million. In addition, the Agency continued to deliver emergency-related programmes in Lebanon, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip costing some $35 million a year from funds specifically contributed for those purposes. At the end of 1989, there was a balance of $29 million in the General Fund, slightly less than at the beginning of 1988, representing an operational reserve sufficient to maintain regular operations for about six weeks. The fund to finance ongoing emergency operations showed a balance at the end of 1989 of only $10 million.

According to current indications, it appeared that UNRWA would receive sufficient income to finance the essential part of its regular programme throughout 1990. As previously, however, the construction budget remained largely unfunded. By October, only one single contribution of $317,000 had been received out of a total budgeted expenditure of $12 million. Therefore, once again, much-needed construction had to be postponed. In addition, the Agency maintained three emergency-related programmes, financed from the EMLOT Fund, the EPA Fund and the Gaza Hospital Fund, respectively. The EMLOT Fund, for the financing of emergency operations such as the provision of food and additional medical and relief services, was seriously underfunded, and an additional $10 million was urgently needed to finance operations until the end of 1990. The EPA Fund, established in 1988 to finance a $65 million programme on infrastructural improvements, especially in the camps, was still short of about $35 million. Contributions to the Gaza Hospital Fund, set up in 1990 to finance a much-needed general hospital of 200 beds in Gaza and running costs for three years, thus far amounted to only $7 million out of the total of $35 million required.

The Agency's budget for its regular programme in 1991 provided for a total expenditure of $254.6 million, approximately 5 per cent over the projected expenditure of $242.3 million for 1990. That increase reflected the need to provide services for a larger number of beneficiaries, especially in education, and to meet unavoidable salary and price increases. In addition to obtaining contributions to finance the regular programme in 1991, the Agency required $35 million to maintain its emergency measures, a further $35 million to finance its programme of infrastructural improvements and $28 million for the Gaza Hospital.

The Working Group expressed concern over the difficulties in maintaining the required level of contributions and strongly urged that Governments that did not contribute to UNRWA start doing so, those that had contributed only relatively small amounts should increase their contributions and those that had contributed generously should continue to do so and strive to increase their contributions. The Working Group also urged Governments to consider making special additional contributions in support of the emergency-related programmes and construction projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/73 B.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 44/47 B of 8 December 1989 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, whereby it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and adopted the recommendations contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990,

Deeply concerned at the critical financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of the necessary Agency services to the Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at the present minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

General Assembly resolution 45/73.B

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 Adopted without vote

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/822) without vote. 26 November (meeting 22); 14-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L6); agenda item 74. Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 5-7,22; plenary 65.

Accounts for 1989

Following the audit of the UNRWA financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1989, the Board of Auditors made several recommendations [A/45/5/Add.3]. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACAQ) commented [A/45/570 & Corr.1] on the Board's report in October.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/235, accepted the financial report and audited financial statements and the Board's audit opinion, and requested the Commissioner-General to report to it in 1991 on the measures taken to rectify the shortcomings identified by the audit of the Area Staff Provident Fund.

Legal matters

UNRWA staff

The Commissioner-General reported that the total number of staff arrested or detained without charge or trial in the occupied territories between 1 July 1989 and 30 June 1990 continued to increase, while in Lebanon the number of staff kidnapped or detained decreased. The Agency remained unable to obtain adequate and timely information on the reasons for the arrest and detention of its staff members, and thus was not in a position to ascertain whether the staff members' official functions were involved.

The treatment of staff in detention continued to cause considerable concern. Staff members, both local and international, were subjected to beatings and various other forms of physical abuse. In the Gaza Strip alone, more than 170 instances of alleged mistreatment of UNRWA staff were recorded and four local staff members were killed as alleged collaborators.

The Agency experienced more difficulties than during the previous year in visiting detained staff members, but had access to 13 staff members from the West Bank, including 9 held in detention centres in Israel. UNRWA also had access to 47 staff members from the Gaza Strip who were held in the Kitziot detention camp in the Negev and for the first time to two staff members held in the Beach detention camp, Gaza Town. However, the Agency had no access to staff members from the Gaza Strip detained elsewhere or to one of the two staff members from Canada camp in the Sinai before their deportation from Egypt. The Agency also had no success in visiting staff in detention in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic.

There were difficulties in the travel of staff into and out of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip due to delays in the clearance of staff for travel, which was refused in some cases. The movement of staff within the West Bank and Gaza Strip was affected by frequent curfews and the designation of areas as closed military zones. In the Gaza Strip, local staff were allowed to move during curfews only if in possession of permits; the Israeli authorities, however, did not renew a substantial number of permits issued at the beginning of 1990, as a result of which UNRWA operations were impeded and even stopped in many areas during three periods of general curfew.

In resolution 45/73 I, the General Assembly demanded that Israel release all arbitrarily detained Palestine refugees, including UNRWA employees.

UNRWA services and premises

In addition to other activities, the Agency continued to support the upholding of the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the refugees. The major component of the programme of general assistance and protection was the assignment of 13 international staff members in the West Bank and 10 in the Gaza Strip as refugee affairs officers. By their presence, they helped lower tensions and prevent maltreatment of the refugees. In performing their functions, they sometimes succeeded in establishing a dialogue with Civil Administration officials and were able to assist on the spot in numerous matters affecting the welfare of the population.

As reported by the Commissioner-General, during the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990, there were 555 intrusions into UNRWA premises by Israeli security forces in the Gaza Strip and 191 such intrusions in the West Bank. In several cases, such intrusions resulted in injury to staff or damage to property. The Agency noted with concern an increasing number of intrusions into health centres in the Gaza Strip, where in June 1990 alone 22 such intrusions were registered.

There were also some incidents reported in which Israeli soldiers occupied Agency installations, using them as observation posts. In Jordan, despite the Agency's protest, authorities used some UNRWA installations, including the Wadi Seer Training Centre, as polling stations during the elections.

UNRWA also experienced difficulties in carrying out urgently needed construction in the occupied territory since Israel demanded that it first obtain permits. Thus, many projects were delayed or stopped.

The Commissioner-General reported that no progress had been made with regard to the Agency's various claims against Governments. Those included: claims against Israel for compensation for loss of and damage to UNRWA property during the 1967 hostilities and the invasion of Lebanon in 1982 and its military action before then; claims against Jordan arising from the 1967 hostilities and the disturbances in 1970 and 1971; and claims against the Syrian Arab Republic relating mainly on the levy of certain taxes from which UNRWA believed it was exempt.

In resolution 45/73 I, the General Assembly called again on Israel to compensate UNRWA for damages to its property and facilities resulting from the 1982 invasion of Lebanon, as well as for other damages to the Agency resulting from Israeli policies and practices in the occupied territory.

Occupied territories

Territories occupied by Israel as a result of armed conflicts in the Middle East comprised the West Bank of the Jordan River, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights in the Syrian Arab Republic. The United Nations continued in 1990 to monitor and take action with regard to the situation.

In December, after consideration of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices), the General Assembly adopted seven resolutions condemning different types of human rights violations in the occupied territories. In another December resolution on the uprising of the Palestinian people, the Assembly also condemned those Israeli policies and practices which violated the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied territory and demanded that Israel abide scrupulously by the fourth Geneva Convention.

The Security Council discussed the situation in the occupied Arab territories at meetings in March, May, October, November and December. By resolution 681(1990) of 20 December, the Council, expressing grave concern at the dangerous deterioration of the situation in all the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and at the violence and rising tension in Israel, called on the High Contracting Parties to the fourth Geneva Convention to ensure respect by Israel for its obligations under the Convention.

The Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) continued to monitor the developments in the occupied Palestinian territory on an ongoing basis through different sources, drawing the attention of the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council to the Israeli policies and practices there. In its annual report [A/45/35 & Corr.1], the Committee urgently appealed to the Security Council and to all concerned to take all necessary measures to ensure the safety and international protection of the Palestinians in the occupied territory pending the withdrawal of Israeli forces and the achievement of a just settlement.

The Committee on Israeli Practices also continued to collect from various sources, including oral testimony and written communications, information on the situation in the occupied territories and to assess the human rights situation there. On that basis, the Committee, in its twenty-second annual report [A/45/576], noted an alarming trend towards a hardening of Israeli repression and deterioration of the already precarious human rights conditions of the Palestinian and other Arab civilian population in the occupied territories.

The Commission on Human Rights adopted four resolutions related to the territories. In the first, affirming that the settlement of Israeli civilians there was illegal and contravened the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention, it called on Israel to refrain from settling immigrants in the territories. In two resolutions, the Commission condemned Israeli policies and practices violating human rights in the occupied territories. By the fourth resolution, it declared once more that the continued Israeli occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan and Israel's 1981 decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration there were null and void and had no international legal effect.

Report of Palestinian Rights Committee. In its annual report [A/45/35&-Corr.1], the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed deep concern that in its efforts to suppress the Palestinian uprising, Israel had continued to resort to the use of often excessive and indiscriminate force, including the shooting of demonstrators, intensive use of tear-gas and severe beating of detainees. As at 31 August 1990, according to the Data Base Project on Palestinian Human Rights, 856 Palestinians had been killed since the beginning of the uprising. Out of that number of identified cases, 704 had died from gunfire, 63 from beatings and other actions, and 89 in tear-gas-related incidents.

The Committee noted an alarming and rapid deterioration of the situation of children under 16, the casualty toll among whom was extremely high, reaching 25 per cent of the total number of victims. The Committee reported that Israeli occupation authorities continued to resort to a variety of harsh measures and collective punishment, including deportations, large-scale arrests, detention, raids on homes and villages, prolonged curfews, confiscation of property and destruction of trees and crops.

While noting as a positive gesture the formal steps taken by the Israeli authorities for gradual reopening of primary and secondary schools, the Committee deplored that they persisted in seriously disrupting the normal functioning of the schools as a form of collective punishment. The Committee also expressed concern that all Palestinian universities and institutions of higher education had been closed since the beginning of the uprising; however, some community colleges were allowed to reopen in the spring and Bethlehem University in the autumn of 1990.

The Committee voiced concern over the health situation in the occupied territory, particularly in Gaza. The availability of medical care, water, sewage disposal and other needed services was subject to restrictive controls by the occupation authorities, and the situation had been further aggravated by the repeated and extensive imposition of curfews. The Committee deplored that Israel had again refused to co-operate with the Special Committee of Experts set up by the World Health Assembly to study the health conditions of the inhabitants of the occupied territories; but it noted with appreciation that a number of international organizations, NGOs and private institutions had provided humanitarian assistance and had implemented projects dealing with sanitation, training of medical manpower, establishment of rehabilitation and primary health-care centres, medical laboratories and others.

The Committee, taking into account the continuing intolerable situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, drew once again the most urgent attention of the General Assembly and the Security Council to Israel's policies and practices, which, it said, were in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention, and appealed for all necessary measures to ensure the safety and international protection of the Palestinians pending the withdrawal of Israeli forces and the achievement of a just settlement.

Report of Israeli Practices Committee. In September 1990, the Committee on Israeli Practices, established by the General Assembly in 1968, presented to the Secretary-General its twenty-second report covering the period from 25 August 1989 to 31 August 1990 and containing information on the Committee's activities and its conclusions. The report was transmitted to the Assembly in October by the Secretary-General [A/45/576]. Earlier, in January and June, the Committee submitted two periodic reports [A/45/84 & A/45/306] containing factual information about developments that affected the human rights of the civilian population in the occupied territories.

The Committee held a series of meetings in Geneva (8-10 January, 21-22 May, 10-13 September), Damascus, Syria (24-26 May), Amman, Jordan (27-31 May) and Cairo, Egypt (2-4 June) to examine information on developments in the territories, as well as to consider information addressed to it by Governments, organizations and individuals in connection with its mandate. During its meetings from 21 May to 4 June, the Committee heard the testimony of 54 persons having first-hand knowledge of the human rights situation in the territories. The Committee worked in close co-operation with Egypt, Jordan and Syria, while Israel continued to withhold its co-operation.

On the basis of the information and evidence before it, the Committee drew an overall picture, which indicated an alarming trend towards the hardening of repression and a worsening of the already precarious human rights conditions of the Palestinian and other Arab civilian population in the occupied territories.

In the Committee's opinion, the Israeli authorities had persisted and become even more determined in their will to quell the Palestinian uprising. In addition to physical hardship caused by the indiscriminate resort to violence resulting in numerous losses of life, severe beatings, the use of tear-gas, the denial of adequate medical care to the injured and other forms of harassment, very serious psychological damage affected the population, which was daily confronted with fear and humiliation.

The Committee illustrated its reports with particular cases of various measures against the civilian population, including harassment, prolonged curfews and economic sanctions. It reported a new punitive measure approved by the Israeli Defence authorities against persons alleged to be leading activists of the uprising, under which such persons would be banished from their region of residence to another region in the occupied territories for a fixed period, without their families. The Committee considered that, if implemented, that measure would constitute a serious human rights violation, as reprehensible as the arbitrary expulsion of Palestinians from the occupied territories, which had been brought by Israeli authorities to a temporary halt.

The Committee's annual and periodic reports contained information on measures affecting the enjoyment by Palestinians of various other fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of movement, education, religion and expression. Continuing acts of violence and large-scale aggression by Israeli settlers against the civilian population were also reported.

The Committee concluded that the period under review had been marked by a further escalation of the tension in the territories, which had reached a very dangerous level and could result in a major explosion in the area if urgent measures were not taken to remedy the grave human rights violations and ensure an effective protection of basic rights and freedoms. In view of the extreme gravity of the situation and the dangerous threat it represented to international peace and security, the Committee again stressed the need to arrive through negotiations at a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict that would take into account the rights of all peoples in the area, including the national rights of the Palestinian people. In the mean time, the Committee recommended once again the implementation of a number of urgent measures which, in its opinion, would safeguard the basic human rights of the Palestinians and other Arabs in the territories.

Such measures could include: full application by Israel of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention; full compliance with all UN resolutions pertinent to the Palestine question; convening of an international conference under UN auspices, with the participation of all parties; full co-operation by Israel with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to protect detained persons; full support by Member States of ICRC activities and positive response to appeals for additional assistance; full support of UNRWA activities; and total Israeli co-operation with UNRWA.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/48 A [YUN 1989, p. 212], the Secretary-General requested in March that Israel inform him of any steps taken or envisaged to implement the relevant provisions of that resolution, by which the Assembly had demanded that Israel desist from a number of policies and practices in the territories. In October, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/608] that Israel had not replied at the time of the preparation of the report. The Assembly resolution also had called on all States not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the occupied territories and to avoid actions that might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any part of the other policies and practices referred to in the resolution. Also in March, the Secretary-General had requested all States to inform him of any measures they had taken or envisaged taking in implementation of the resolution. Replies were received from Chad, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, the Holy See, New Zealand, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR. In pursuance of the same resolution, the Secretary-General also reported on the activities of DPI in response to the Assembly's request to ensure widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information on its activities and findings (see above, under "Public information activities").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/74A.

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and by the principles and provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Aware of the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987 against Israeli occupation, which has received significant attention and sympathy from world public opinion,

Deeply concerned at the alarming situation in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, as well as in the other occupied Arab territories, as a result of the continued occupation by Israel, the occupying Power, and of its persistent policies against the Palestinian people,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as of other relevant conventions and regulations,

Taking into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of the Palestinian people under Israeli occupation,

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989, 641(1989) of 30 August 1989, 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 673(1990) of 24 October 1990,

Recalling also all its resolutions on the subject, in particular resolutions 32/91 B and C of 13 December 1977, 33/113 C of 18 December 1978, 34/90 A of 12 December 1979, 35/122 C of 11 December 1980, 36/147 C of 16 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 C of 10 December 1982, 38/79 D of 15 December 1983, 39/95 D of 14 December 1984, 40/161 D of 16 December 1985, 41/63 D of 3 December 1986, 42/160 D of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 A of 6 December 1988, 44/2 of 6 October 1989 and 44/48 A of 8 December 1989,

Recalling further the relevant resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights, in particular its resolutions 1983/1 of 15 February 1983, 1984/1 of 20 February 1984, 1985/1 A and B and 1985/2 of 19 February 1985, 1986/1 A and B and 1986/2 of 20 February 1986, 1987/1, 1987/2 A and B and 1987/4 of 19 February 1987, 1988/1 A and B and 1988/2 of 15 February 1988 and 1988/3 of 22 February 1988, 1989/1 and 1989/2 of 17 February 1989 and 1989/19 of 6 March 1989, 1990/1, 1990/2 and 1990/3 of 16 February 1990 and 1990/6 of 19 February 1990,

Having Considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories, which contain, inter alia, self-incriminating public statements made by officials of Israel, the occupying Power,

Having also considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 October 1990 and 31 October 1990,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly and for its impartiality;

2. Deplores the continued refusal by Israel to allow the Special Committee access to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

3. Demands that Israel allow the Special Committee access to the occupied territories;

4. Reaffirms the fact that occupation itself constitutes a grave violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

5. Condemns the continued and persistent violation by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and other applicable international instruments, and condemns in particular those violations which the Convention designates as "grave breaches" thereof;

6. Declares once more that Israel's grave breaches of that Convention are war crimes and an affront to humanity;

7. Reaffirms, in accordance with the Convention, that the Israeli military occupation of the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories is of a temporary nature, thus giving no right whatsoever to the occupying Power over the territorial integrity of the occupied territories;

8. Strongly condemns the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) Annexation of parts of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

(b) Imposition of Israeli laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

(c) Illegal imposition and levy of taxes and dues;

(d) Establishment of new Israeli settlements and expansion of the existing ones on private and public Palestinian and other Arab lands, and transfer of an alien population thereto;

(e) Eviction, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Palestinians and other Arabs from the occupied territories and denial of their right to return;

(f) Confiscation and expropriation of private and public Palestinian and other Arab property in the occupied territories and all other transactions for the acquisition of land by Israeli authorities, institutions or nationals;

(g) Excavation and transformation of the landscape and the historical, cultural and religious sites, especially at Jerusalem;

(h) Pillaging of archaeological and cultural property;

(i) Destruction and demolition of Palestinian and other Arab houses;

(j) Collective punishment, mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment of Palestinians and other Arabs;

(K) Torture of Palestinians and other Arabs;

(l) Interference with religious freedoms and practices, as well as family rights and customs;

(m) Interference with the system of education and with the social and economic development and health of the Palestinians and other Arabs in the occupied territories;

(n) Interference with the freedom of movement of individuals within the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

(o) Illegal exploitation of the natural wealth, resources and labour of the occupied territories;

9. Also strongly condemns, in particular, the following Israeli policies and practices:

(a) Implementation of an "iron-fist" policy against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory;

(b) Escalation of Israeli brutality since the beginning of the uprising (intifadah) on 9 December 1987;

(c) Ill-treatment and torture of children and minors under detention and/or imprisonment;

(d) Closure of headquarters and offices of trade unions and social organizations and harassment of their leaders, including through expulsion, as well as attacks on hospitals and their personnel;

(e) Interference with the freedom of the press, including censorship, detention or expulsion of journalists, closure and suspension of newspapers and magazines, as well as denial of access to international media;

(f) Killing and wounding of defenceless demonstrators;

(g) Breaking of bones and limbs of thousands of civilians;

(h) House and/or town arrests;

(i) Use of toxic gas, which has resulted, inter alia, in the killing of many Palestinians;

10. Condemns Israeli repression against and closing of the educational institutions in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, particularly prohibiting Syrian textbooks and the Syrian educational system, preventing Syrian students from pursuing their higher education in Syrian universities: denying the right of return to Syrian students receiving their higher education in the Syrian Arab Republic, forcing Hebrew on Syrian students, imposing courses that promote hatred, prejudice and religious intolerance, and dismissing teachers, all in clear violation of the Geneva convention;

11. Strongly condemns arming of Israeli settlers in the occupied territories to perpetrate and commit acts of violence against Palestinians and other Arabs, causing deaths and injuries;

12. Requests the Security Council to ensure Israel's respect for and compliance with all the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and to initiate measures to halt Israeli policies and practices in those territories;

13. Urges the Security Council to consider the current situation in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, taking into account the recommendations contained in the reports of the Secretary-General, and with a view to securing international protection for the defenceless Palestinian people until the withdrawal of Israel, the occupying Power, from the occupied Palestinian territory;

14. Reaffirms that all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or legal status of the occupied territories, or any part thereof, including Jerusalem, are null and void, and that Israel's policy of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those occupied territories constitutes a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention and of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

15. Demands that Israel desist forthwith from the policies and practices referred to in paragraphs 8, 9, 10 and 11 above;

16. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to allow the reopening of the Roman Catholic Medical Facility Hospice at Jerusalem in order to continue to provide needed health and medical services to the Palestinians in the city;

17. Also calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to take immediate steps for the return of all displaced Arab and Palestinian inhabitants to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, in implementation of Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967;

18. Urges international organizations, including the specialized agencies, in particular the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, to continue to examine the educational and health conditions in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

19. Reiterates its call upon all States, in particular those States parties to the Geneva Convention, in accordance with article 1 of that Convention, and upon international organizations, including the specialized agencies, not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied territories and to avoid actions, including those in the field of aid, that might be used by Israel in its pursuit of the policies of annexation and colonization or any of the other policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

20. Requests the Special Committee, pending early termination of the Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure that the welfare and human rights of the peoples of the occupied territories are safeguarded and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

21. Also requests the Special Committee to submit regularly to the Secretary-General periodic reports on the present situation in the occupied Palestinian territory;

22. Further requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of prisoners in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

23. Condemns Israel's refusal to permit persons from the occupied Palestinian territory to appear as witnesses before the Special Committee and to participate in conferences and meetings held outside the occupied Palestinian territory;

24. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide all necessary facilities to the Special Committee, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, so that it may investigate the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available such additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To circulate regularly and periodically the reports mentioned in paragraph 21 above to the States Members of the United Nations;

(d) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee which are no longer available;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present resolution;

25. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

General Assembly resolution 45/74 A

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 101-2-43 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/823) by recorded vote (80-2-36). 28 November (meeting 27); 12-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.27); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 27; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In Favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malta, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, Togo, United Kingdom, Uruguay.

Both the Assembly and the Special Political Committee adopted paragraph 6 separately, by recorded votes of 75 to 24, with 37 abstentions, and of 63 to 20, with 32 abstentions, respectively.

Before the vote in the Committee, the United States said it objected strongly to the text which, in its view, contained sweeping condemnations of a long list of unsubstantiated Israeli practices. Also, it could not support language urging the Security Council to consider measures to secure "international protection" for the Palestinians, which was impractical and did not address the underlying problems. It further wished to record again its objection to the expense the Committee on Israeli Practices posed on the UN budget, particularly at a time of scarce financial resources.

Incidents

The Security Council convened on several occasions throughout 1990 to consider the situation in the occupied Arab territories. In March, it met to look at the question of Israeli settlements (see below). The series of Council meetings in May was convened at the request of Bahrain [S/21300], on behalf of the Arab Group, to consider what was termed "the crime of collective murder committed by Israel against the Palestinian people". The Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, in a letter to the Secretary-General [A/44/947-A/21303], referred to media reports that on 20 May a former Israeli soldier, in army trousers and armed with an assault rifle, shot to death seven Palestinians and wounded 11 others in the Tel Aviv suburb of Rishon Le-Zion. Defying a curfew imposed by the Israeli army, Palestinians had taken to the streets in great numbers throughout the occupied territory to protest the massacre. In ensuing confrontations, Israeli troops shot and killed seven more Palestinians and wounded at least 650 more.

On 22 May, the Security Council President was asked [S/21306] by the Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations to invite PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat to participate in the Council debate. Simultaneously, PLO requested an entry visa to the United States for Mr. Arafat. However, before the United States took any decision on that request, the Council, after day-long consultations on 22 May, decided to hold its first meeting on the matter in Geneva on 25 May [S/21309]. For the first time in Council history, the locale of its meeting was shifted to Geneva.

The Palestinian Observer's request that Mr. Arafat be invited to participate in the debate under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure (which would confer on PLO the same rights of participation as those granted a Member State) was approved by 11 votes to 1 (United States), with 3 abstentions (Canada, France, United Kingdom). The United States, which had requested the vote, took the position that the Council did not have before it a valid request to speak and that PLO should be given permission to speak only if the request complied with Council rule 39 (concerning Secretariat members or other persons whom the Council may invite to supply it with information or give other assistance).

Leading off the Council debate, PLO Chairman Arafat said the request for a meeting stemmed from the realization that the situation had reached an "extremely dangerous and explosive point" and required urgent international action. The Palestinian people expected the Security Council to shoulder its responsibility to protect their lives and end occupation. He proposed the designation by the Secretary-General of a permanent envoy to work full-time on the peace process and engage in the contracts necessary to secure a peaceful, just and lasting solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict, as well as the adoption of a Council resolution providing international protection to the Palestinian people under the UN flag and by means of international force. He also proposed adoption of another resolution to stop settler immigration to the occupied territories in order to prevent completely the construction and expansion of Israeli settlements there.

Israel stated that the Council had been convened not to advance peace and security, but to retard it. After two recent bus attacks in which over 16 people died and 42 were wounded, PLO had hailed the killers as heroes and promised more "such heroic actions". In Israel's view, having incited, promoted, fanned and spread the violence in the territories, PLO now had the Council convened to condemn Israel for putting down that violence. The Council's convening was bound to foment more violence, as there could be only one message to the perpetrators from such a meeting.

Israel was committed to peace which relied on two foundations: non-belligerency pacts between Israel and the Arab States, and the path Israel had offered towards a political solution for the territories, which included free elections, the rehabilitation of refugee camps and a period of autonomy followed by negotiations over the territories' final status.

After Council consultations, it was decided to continue consideration of the item on the agenda at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May, the Council voted on a draft resolution [S/21326] sponsored by Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Yemen and Zaire, by which the Council would have established and dispatched immediately a commission of three Council members to the occupied territories in order to examine the situation relating to Israel's policies and practices there. It would have requested the commission to submit to the Council by 20 June its recommendations on ways and means for ensuring the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation.

The vote was 14 to 1, as follows:

In favour: Canada, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Malaysia, Romania, USSR, United Kingdom, Yemen, Zaire.

Against: United States.

The draft was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

Speaking after the vote, the United States said that the draft resolution did not focus on the real needs of moving the peace process forward and might be misused to generate more needless controversy and dispute. The United States remained committed to working with the parties for a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East. It would support practical steps that responded to the spiral of troubling events, but those steps must not hinder the peace process.

Meeting numbers. SC 2923, 2926.

After an incident at an UNRWA clinic on 12 June, the Council President on 19 June, following consultations, issued a statement on behalf of the Council members [S/21363]:

The members of the Council strongly deplore the incident which occurred on 12 June 1990 in a clinic belonging to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, located near Shati' camp in Gaza, in which several innocent Palestinian women and children were wounded by a tear-gas grenade thrown by an Israeli officer.

They are dismayed to find that the penalty imposed on that officer has been commuted.

They reaffirm that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and request the High Contracting Parties to ensure respect for the Convention.

The members of the Council call upon Israel to abide by its obligations under that Convention.

Refugee camp incident

By a letter of 21 September [A/45/532-S/21809], the Permanent Observer of Palestine called the Secretary-General's attention to the situation in Gaza where, he said, during the past two days alone, 180 Palestinians had been injured, 200 in the age group of 12 to 45 had been detained, 50 homes had been demolished and more than half of the Palestinian inhabitants of a refugee camp had been evicted. The camp was still under siege by the Israeli occupying army and a curfew had been imposed in the area. Further, Israel had prevented ICRC, UNRWA and the media from entering the area. Such a situation should no longer be tolerated, the Observer stated, and Palestine called on the world community to take immediate action; it particularly called on the Security Council to invoke the powers vested in it by the Charter and to demand that Israel respect and carry out the Council's decisions.

Starting on 5 October, at the request of Yemen [S/21830], the Council held further meetings on the situation in the occupied territories.

Approval of the request by the Palestine Observer [S/21844] to participate was by the same vote as in May, after the United States had restated its negative position on such participation.

Speaking before the Council, Israel stated that convening the Council as a primer for the General Assembly November debates on the Middle East was an inveterate PLO ritual, as every October and early November without fail PLO and its supporters unearthed one flimsy excuse or another. According to Israel, there had been no massacre at the refugee camp, just as there was no worsening of the situation in the territories to speak of and therefore no justifiable reason to convene the Council. As told by Israel, an Israeli civilian called up for his annual reserve duty had been burned alive on 20 September by a lynch mob, after he had taken a wrong turn into the camp. Following his murder, the Israel Defence Forces decided to expedite plans to broaden the road on which the incident had occurred in order to ensure that such lynchings were not repeated. The camp had long been a hotbed of agitation, Israel added, while the portion of the road at the camp entrance had been the scene of numerous attacks in the past. Israel stressed that it continued to pursue a policy of utmost restraint, even in the wake of the incident.

Haram al-Sharif (Al-Aqsa) Mosque and Western Wall incidents

Following a violent incident on 8 October at the Haram al-Sharif (Al-Aqsa) Mosque in Jerusalem, during which Palestinians were killed and wounded, the Council reconvened on 9 October. It did not act on a draft resolution tabled that same day by Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Yemen and Zaire [S/21851]. By that text, the Council would have decided to establish and immediately dispatch a commission of three of its members in order to examine the current situation in Jerusalem; requested the commission to present a report by 20 October, containing recommendations on ways to ensure the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians; and decided to meet again in the light of the commission's findings.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, on 12 October, adopted resolution 672(1990).

The Security Council,
Recalling its resolutions 476(1980) of 30 June 1980 and 478(1980) of 20 August 1980,

Reaffirming that a just and lasting solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict must be based on its resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973, through an active negotiating process which takes into account the right to security for all States in the region, including Israel, as well as the legitimate political rights of the Palestinian people,

Taking into consideration the statement of the Secretary-General relative to the purpose of the mission he is sending to the region and conveyed to the Council by the President on 12 October 1990,

1. Expresses alarm at the violence which took place on 8 October at the Haram al-Sharif and other Holy Places of Jerusalem resulting in over twenty Palestinian deaths and the injury of more than one hundred and fifty people, including Palestinian civilians and innocent worshippers;

2. Condemns especially the acts of violence committed by the Israeli security forces resulting in injuries and loss of human life;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to abide scrupulously by its legal obligations and responsibilities under the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, which is applicable to all the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

4. Requests, in connection with the decision of the Secretary-General to send a mission to the region, which the Council welcomes, that he submit a report to the Security Council before the end of October 1990, containing his findings and conclusions and that he use as appropriate all of the resources of the United Nations in the region in carrying out the mission.

Meeting numbers. SC 2945-2948.

Before the voting, the President of the Council made the following statement in connection with the draft resolution:

In the informal consultations of members of the Council which led up to the consideration of this draft resolution, the Secretary-General explained that the purpose of the mission which he would be sending to the region would be to look into the circumstances surrounding the recent tragic events in Jerusalem and other similar developments in the occupied territories, and to submit by 24 October 1990 a report containing findings and recommendations to the Council on ways and means for ensuring the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation. He recalled, however, that under the fourth Geneva Convention the principal responsibility for ensuring the protection of the Palestinians rested with the occupying Power, namely Israel.

Following the adoption of the resolution, Israel expressed regret, saying the text failed to condemn the cause of the tragic events in Jerusalem—an unprovoked Arab attack on Jewish worshippers at the holiest site of the Jewish people: the Western Wall. In its opinion, the resolution could not contribute to the efforts to restore tranquillity, normalcy and peace. It was also regrettable that the Council fell into the trap laid by Saddam Hussein and his PLO supporters, who inspired the riots in order to divert attention from Iraq's aggression.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 October, the Council resumed its consideration of the item.

Following debate, the Council adopted resolution 673(1990).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming the obligations of Member States under the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also its resolution 672(1990) of 12 October 1990,

Having been briefed by the Secretary-General on 19 October 1990,

Expressing alarm at the rejection of resolution 672(1990) by the Israeli Government, and its refusal to accept the mission of the Secretary-General,

Taking into consideration the statement of the Secretary-General relative to the purpose of the mission he is sending to the region and conveyed to the Council by the President on 12 October 1990,

Gravely concerned at the continued deterioration of the situation in the occupied territories,

1. Deplores the refusal of the Israeli Government to receive the mission of the Secretary-General to the region;

2. Urges the Israeli Government to reconsider its decision and insists that it comply fully with resolution 672(1990) and permit the mission to proceed in keeping with its purpose;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Security Council the report requested in resolution 672(1990);

4. Affirms its determination to give full and expeditious consideration to the report.

Security Council resolution 673(1990)

24 October 1990 Meeting 2949 Adopted unanimously

4-nation draft (S/21893).

Sponsors: Colombia, Cuba, Malaysia, Yemen.

Preceding adoption of the resolution, Israel informed the Council that it had appointed an independent commission of inquiry consisting of three prominent public figures, which was investigating the incident of 8 October—hearing both Arab and Jewish witnesses and would shortly present its findings and conclusions on the chain of events, their causes and the actions of Israel's security forces. Israel had expressed its readiness to assist the Secretary-General in the preparation of his report, requested by the Council on 12 October; yet, like any sovereign State, Israel was the exclusive authority in the territory under its control, even under the terms of reference of resolution 672(1990).

Report of Secretary-General (31 October). In accordance with Security Council resolution 672(1990), the Secretary-General, on 31 October, presented the report requested [S/21919 & CORR.1 & ADD.1-3]. He informed the Council that, following the adoption of that resolution, he had met several times with the Acting Permanent Representative of Israel who conveyed to him a copy of the statement adopted by the Israeli Cabinet on 14 October. In that statement, Israel declared that both resolution 672(1990) and the statement of the President of the Security Council before its adoption were totally unacceptable to it. In Israel's view, the Council had completely disregarded the attack against Jewish worshippers on the holiday of Succot at the Western Wall and did not condemn those who had attacked them. Israel expressed regret over the loss of life that occurred as a result of events on the Temple Mount and informed that it had appointed an independent commission of inquiry. Israel further emphasized that Jerusalem was not, in any part, "occupied territory" but the sovereign capital of the State of Israel; therefore, there was no room for any involvement on the part of the United Nations in any matter related to Jerusalem. Given the above, Israel stated that it would not receive the delegation of the Secretary-General. On 31 October, Israel reiterated its position.

Thus, the Secretary-General said, he had been unable to secure independent information, on the spot, about the circumstances surrounding the events in Jerusalem and similar developments in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In his observations, the Secretary-General recalled his principal recommendation of January 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 235] that, with respect to ensuring the safety and protection of the Palestinian population, the international community should make a concerted effort to persuade Israel to accept the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories and to correct its practices in order to comply fully with that Convention. In addition, the number of international staff serving with UNRWA in the territories had been increased from 15 to 51, as had the international delegation of ICRC increased from 15 to 45. Those additional staff members had helped defuse tense situations, avert maltreatment of vulnerable groups, reduce interference with the movement of ambulances, and facilitate the provision of food and medical aid during curfews. However, Palestinians considered that far more was required on the part of the international community to ensure the safety and protection of the civilian population in the occupied territories. Palestinians had expressed a profound feeling of vulnerability at all times, whether in the workplace, at school, in places of worship or simply walking down the street. They felt unsafe even inside their homes, which were frequently subjected to midnight searches, during which arrests were common, and a wide range of collective punishments became routine, such as curfews, the demolition of homes and administrative detention. According to the Secretary-General, Palestinians had inquired whether UNTSO military observers stationed in Jerusalem could be assigned to monitor the situation in the occupied territories.

Over the past three years, the Secretary-General reported, he had frequently voiced his concern about the situation to senior Israeli officials. They maintained that measures such as administrative detention, curfews and the closure of schools and universities had been carried out in order to restore calm and put an end to the unrest. They pointed out that Israel retained exclusive control over the territories it administered and, even under the fourth Geneva Convention, it would be up to Israel to maintain law and order there. The officials also noted that the security forces were adhering to strict regulations determined by the Minister for Defence, violations of which were punishable. With regard to the need for the safety and protection of the Palestinians, the Israeli authorities pointed out that the many Palestinians who had been killed by other Palestinians should be a matter of equal concern to the international community.

Towards the end of June, reported the Secretary-General, he had sent a Personal Representative to the area to look into the question of protection in the occupied territories and to report back to him personally. On 13 July, in a statement to the Council in informal consultations, the Secretary-General had said that he intended to pursue his initiative with the Israeli authorities in an effort to persuade them to comply fully with their obligations under the fourth Geneva Convention. At the same time, he had stressed that if the High Contracting Parties felt that further measures-such as the designation of a Protecting Power-were required, then it was up to them to take such a decision under procedures carefully spelt out in the Convention.

Had it been possible for him to send a mission to the area at the current time, said the Secretary-General, it would have followed up on the discussions begun earlier with the Israeli authorities and the Palestinian leadership, when the former had indicated that they would be implementing new measures in the territories. The Secretary-General noted that, in the subsequent months, there had been a decreased military presence in the territories and a decline in casualties resulting from actions involving the Israeli security forces, and certain academic institutions had been reopened. Nevertheless, he felt that the essential facts of the occupation had not changed and the potential for friction and confrontation between Israelis and Palestinians had remained very high, as evidenced by the tragic events of 8 October. The spate of violent attacks since then, bringing with it more bloodshed on both sides, had generated further mistrust and bitterness.

For any measure of protection of Palestinians in the occupied territories to be ensured, the co-operation of the Israeli authorities was absolutely essential, the Secretary-General stated. With regard to the Palestinians' appeals for an impartial presence, properly mandated by the United Nations, he said that was a matter for the Security Council to decide; the mandate for the UN personnel in the area, whether civilian or military, derived from the competent UN bodies and he did not have the competence to act on his own.

Concluding, the Secretary-General underlined that it was a political conflict that was at the heart of the tragic events that had led to the adoption of resolutions 672(1990) and 673(1990). The determination of the Palestinians to persevere with the intifadah was evidence of their rejection of the occupation and their commitment to exercise their legitimate political rights, including self-determination. Under the circumstances, he considered it essential that progress be made soon to ensure an effective negotiating process, acceptable to all, that could secure the interests of both Israelis and Palestinians and enable them to live in peace with each other. For his part, he declared, he would do whatever he could to be of help.

Further developments

On 7 November, the Security Council resumed its consideration of the situation in the occupied territories. Lebanon, at its request, was invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote.

On 15 November, Colombia, Cuba, Malaysia and Yemen submitted a draft resolution, subsequently revised by the sponsors [S/21933/Rev.3], by which the Council would have deplored Israel's refusal to comply with resolutions 672(1990) and 673(1990), as well as its decision to resume deportations of Palestinian civilians in the territories, and would have welcomed the idea of convening a meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the fourth Geneva Convention. The Council took no action in the text. On 16 November, at the request of Egypt, as Chairman of the Islamic Group at the United Nations, an invitation to participate in the debate was extended to the Organization of the Islamic Conference.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Council held several meetings in December, which were adjourned four times in response to motions by the USSR and the United Kingdom before adopting, on 20 December, resolution 681(1990).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming the obligations of Member States under the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war, set forth in resolution 242(1967) of 22 November 1967,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with resolution 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 on ways and means of ensuring the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation, and taking note in particular of paragraphs 20 to 26 thereof,

Taking note of the interest of the Secretary-General to visit and to send his envoy to pursue his initiative with the Israeli authorities, as indicated in paragraph 22 of his report, and of their recent invitation extended to him,

Gravely concerned at the dangerous deterioration of the situation in all the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and at the violence and rising tension in Israel,

Taking into consideration the statement made by the President of the Security Council on 20 December 1990 concerning the method and approach for a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Arab-Israeli conflict,

Recalling its resolutions 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989 and 641(1989) of 30 August 1989, and alarmed by the decision of the Government of Israel to deport/four Palestinians from the occupied territories in contravention of its obligations under the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report;

2. Expresses its grave concern over the rejection by Israel of its resolutions 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 673(1990) of 24 October 1990;

3. Deplores the decision by the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, to resume the deportation of Palestinian civilians in the occupied territories;

4. Urges the Government of Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention;

5. Calls upon the High Contracting Parties to the said Convention to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for its obligations under the Convention in accordance with article 1 thereof;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, to develop further the idea, expressed in his report, of convening a meeting of the High Contracting Parties to the said Convention to discuss possible measures that might be taken by them under the Convention and, for this purpose, to invite the Parties to submit their views on how the idea could contribute to the goals of the Convention, as well as on other relevant matters, and to report thereon to the Council;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to monitor and observe the situation regarding Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation, making new efforts in this regard on an urgent basis, and to utilize and designate or draw upon the United Nations and other personnel and resources present there, in the area and elsewhere, needed to accomplish this task, and to keep the Security Council regularly informed;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a first progress report to the Security Council by the first week of March 1991 and every four months thereafter, and decides to remain seized of the matter as necessary.

Security Council resolution 681(1990)

20 December 1990 Meeting 2970 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/22022).

Meeting numbers. SC 2953, 2957, 2966-2968, 2970.

Before adoption of the resolution, the Council President made a statement on behalf of the Council members [S/22027], by which they reaffirmed their determination to support an active negotiating process, with the participation of all relevant parties and leading to a comprehensive, just and lasting peace to the Arab-Israeli conflict, which should be based on Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213] and take into account the right to security of all States in the region and the legitimate rights of the Palestinians. In that context, the Council members agreed that an international conference should facilitate efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement, but expressed the view that there was no unanimity as to the appropriate time for such a conference. In their view, the question of the Arab-Israeli conflict was important and unique and had to be addressed independently, on its own merits. (For full text, see above, under "Proposed peace conference".)

Speaking after the vote, the United States said that its positive vote in no way indicated a change in its policy on any issue related to the Arab-Israeli conflict. The process of negotiations between the parties was the only way to advance the cause of peace in that conflict. Urging Israel to ensure respect for the fourth Geneva Convention and immediately and permanently cease deportations, the United States condemned the increasing attacks on Israelis and the deaths which had resulted, just as it condemned attacks on Palestinians.

In Israel's view, the Council's request to the Secretary-General to make renewed efforts to monitor and observe the situation regarding Palestinian civilians was another instance of singling out Israel. The idea of convening a meeting of the parties to the fourth Geneva Convention to discuss possible measures against Israel was unprecedented. No time was appropriate for the convening of a so-called international peace conference, referred to in the Council President's statement preceding adoption of the resolution, but any time was appropriate for bilateral and direct negotiations between Israel and its neighbours. With regard to its decision to issue expulsion orders against four leaders of the Hamas organization, Israel said it had the right in the appropriate circumstances to expel terrorists.

In the opinion of PLO, the Council had made substantial progress towards protecting the Palestinians under Israeli occupation, towards a solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict, including the Palestine question, and towards the achievement of a just and comprehensive peace in the region. However, the resolution did not reflect the position the Council should have adopted in view of the current situation in the territories, including Jerusalem, and in view of the volatile situation in the Middle East in general. The Palestinians, he said, differed with certain parts of the resolution and in particular with portions of the preceding presidential statement. Nevertheless, they hoped that the resolution would be a step followed by other steps.

The Palestinian uprising (intifadah)

In its annual report [A/45/35 & CORR.1], the Committee on Palestinian Rights stated that the intifadah, which was about to enter its fourth year, had affirmed clearly the determination of the Palestinians to bring the occupation of their land to an end and achieve the exercise of their inalienable rights, and had also affirmed that PLO was the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. According to the Committee, there was an international consensus that the participation of PLO on an equal footing with the other parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict was indispensable in any efforts and deliberations aimed at achieving lasting peace in the Middle East. The Committee noted with satisfaction that the intifadah had helped the progressive forces in Israel to intensify their efforts for a just peace; however, the Government of Israel remained adamant. In the Committee's opinion, the continuing denial of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and independence was entirely unacceptable and a major danger to peace. The Committee noted with deep concern that, in its efforts to suppress the intifadah, Israel had continued to resort to often excessive and indiscriminate force; it called on Israel to recognize and respect the national aspirations and rights of the Palestinian people.

The Committee on Israeli Practices also reported [A/45/576] that the Israeli authorities had persisted and become even more determined in their will to quell the Palestinian uprising by hardening their policy and resorting to increasingly harsh measures. One of the consequences of such means of repression was the heavy toll of casualties among civilians. The indiscriminate use of violence to counter the uprising had caused the death of hundreds of civilians of all ages and injuries to several thousand Palestinians. Particularly preoccupying were the increasing casualties among children and stricter procedures against minors involved in activities such as stone-throwing or putting up road-blocks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 6 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/69.

The uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people

The General Assembly,

Aware of the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people since 9 December 1987 against Israeli occupation, which has received significant attention and sympathy from world public opinion,

Deeply concerned at the alarming situation in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, as a result of the continued occupation by Israel, the occupying Power, and of its persistent policies and practices against the Palestinian people,

Reaffirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and to the other occupied Arab territories,

Expressing its profound shock at the continued measures by Israel, the occupying Power, including the killing and wounding of Palestinian civilians, and at the recent acts of violence committed by the Israeli security forces, which took place on 8 October 1990 at the Haram al-Sharif in Jerusalem, resulting in injuries and loss of human lives,

Stressing the need to promote international protection to the Palestinian civilians in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Recognizing the need for increased support to, aid for and solidarity with the Palestinian people under Israeli occupation,

Having considered the recommendations contained in the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988 and 31 October 1990,

Recalling its relevant resolutions as well as the relevant Security Council resolutions,

1. Condemns those policies and practices of Israel, the occupying Power, which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and, in particular, such acts as the opening of fire by the Israeli army and setters that result in the killing and wounding of defenceless Palestinian civilians, the beating and breaking of bones, the deportation of Palestinian civilians, the imposition of restrictive economic measures, the demolition of houses, the ransacking of real or personal property belonging individually or collectively to private persons, collective punishment and detentions, and so forth;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, abide scrupulously by the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and desist immediately from those policies and practices which are in violation of the provisions of the Convention;

3. Calls upon all the High Contracting Parties to the Convention to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention in all circumstances, in conformity with their obligation under article 1 thereof;

4. Strongly deplores the continuing disregard by Israel, the occupying Power, of the relevant decisions of the Security Council;

5. Reaffirms that the occupation by Israel of the Palestinian territory since 1967, including Jerusalem, and of the other Arab territories in no way changes the legal status of those territories;

6. Requests the Security Council to examine with urgency the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory with a view to considering measures needed to provide international protection to the Palestinian civilians in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

7. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and the mass communications media to continue and enhance their support for the Palestinian people;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to examine the present situation in the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, by all means available to him and to submit periodic reports thereon, the first such report as soon as possible.

General Assembly resolution 45/69

6 December 1990 Meeting 59 141-2-3 (recorded vote)

16-nation draft (A/45/L.28 & Add.I); agenda item 23.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: plenary 49-53, 59.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Costa Rica, Dominica, Honduras.

Following the vote, Australia said it voted in favour of the text because it was consistent with its own concern over the continued violence in the territories and the human rights violations resulting from Israeli measures against the intifadub. Nevertheless, there were less balanced aspects of the resolution and, in that regard, Australia considered that a comprehensive settlement to the Arab-Israeli dispute was best served by balanced and non-provocative resolutions which reflected and constructively promoted that objective. Austria said it voted in favour based on its concern for the conditions in the territories.

In the opinion of the Observer of Palestine, in the resolution the Assembly took a clear stand uis-à-vis the intifadah.

Canada placed on record that it understood the terms "the Palestinian territory" and "the occupied Palestinian territory" used in the resolution to refer to the West Bank, Gaza and East Jerusalem, under Israeli occupation since 1967; its vote in favour of the resolution did not signify a change in its view on the status of those territories.

Iran expressed strong reservations about any paragraph that, explicitly or implicitly, rendered recognition to the Zionist régime.

Fourth Geneva Convention

In 1990, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights (see PART THREE, Chapter X) again reaffirmed that the (fourth) Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, applied to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel. The Convention's applicability to the territories was also reaffirmed by the Security Council in resolutions 672(1990) and 673(1990). Continuing disregard by Israel of that main international instrument in humanitarian law was reported throughout the year, by the Committee on Israeli Practices, among others.

Israel, itself a High Contracting Party to the Convention, had consistently taken the position that it did not accept formally the de jure applicability of the Convention, but that it had since 1967 decided to act in de facto accordance with the Convention's "humanitarian provisions". The Israeli position was not accepted by ICRC, which was the guardian of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, nor was it endorsed by the other High Contracting Parties.

In an October report [S/2t919], the Secretary-General stated that the numerous appeals to Israel to abide by its obligations under the Convention had been ineffective, yet for any measure of protection of the Palestinians under Israeli occupation to be ensured, Israel's co-operation was absolutely essential. Nevertheless, given the special responsibility of the High Contracting Parties for ensuring respect for the Convention, the Security Council might wish to call for a meeting of them to discuss possible measures that might be taken by them under the Convention.

In resolution 681(1990) of 20 December, the Security Council urged Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Convention to all the territories occupied by it and to abide scrupulously by the Convention provisions. The Council requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with ICRC, to develop further the idea of convening a meeting of the High Contracting Parties and to invite the Parties to submit their views on how the idea could contribute to the goals of the Convention.

Also in October, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/609] that, in pursuance of Assembly resolution 44/48 B [YUN 1989, p. 218], he had requested in March 1990 the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Israel to inform him of any steps his Government had taken or envisaged taking in implementation of the relevant provisions of that resolution relating to the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories, including Jerusalem. No reply had been received at the time of the preparation of the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/74 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, in which, inter alia, the Council affirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 673(1990) of 24 October 1990,

Recalling further its resolutions 3092 A (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3240 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 3525 B (XXX) of 15 December 1975, 31/106 B of 16 December 1976, 32/91 A of 13 December 1977, 33/113 A of 18 December 1978, 34/90 B of 12 December 1979, 35/122 A of 11 December 1980, 36/147 A of 16 December 1981, 37/88 A of 10 December 1982, 38/79 B of 15 December 1983, 39/95 B of 14 December 1984, 40/161 B of 16 December 1985, 41/63 B of 3 December 1986, 42/160 B of 8 December 1987, 43/58 B of 6 December 1988 and 44/48 B of 8 December 1989.

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 October 1990 and 31 October 1990,

Considering that the promotion of respect for the obligations arising from the Charter of the United Nations and other instruments and rules of international law is among the basic purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Geneva Convention,

Noting that Israel and the concerned Arab States whose territories have been occupied by Israel since June 1967 are parties to that Convention,

Taking into account that States parties to the Convention undertake, in accordance with article 1 thereof, not only to respect but also to ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances,

1. Reaffirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

2. Condemns once again the failure of Israel, the occupying Power, to acknowledge the applicability of the Convention to the territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly demands that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Convention and comply with its provisions in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

4. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Convention to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/74 B

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 145-1-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/823) by recorded vote (118-1-1). 28 November (meeting 27); 12-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.28); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 18,20,22,24,26,27; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: United States.

Paragraph 1 was adopted separately by both the Assembly and the Special Political Committee, by recorded votes of 146 to 1 and 119 to 1, respectively.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said it was firmly on record as supporting the applicability of the Convention to the Israeli-occupied territories; therefore, it had requested a separate vote on paragraph 1 which it supported, but would abstain on the text as a whole because its strident rhetoric did nothing to resolve the problems it sought to address.

Deportation of Palestinians

According to the annual report of the Committee on Israeli Practices [A/45/576], the wave of protests and the pressure of international public opinion had succeeded in bringing the expulsion of Palestinians for alleged security reasons to a temporary halt in recent months. However, the Committee noted new measures implemented by the Israeli occupation authorities and affecting women without valid residence permits and their children. In most cases, women born in the occupied territories, who had been abroad for a certain period of time, but had later married Palestinians in the territories, lived there for several years and given birth to children, had been denied the right to reside and were deported without prior warning.

At the same time, the Committee reported that, on 5 June, a new Israeli policy was announced under which women and children who were not residents of the West Bank, but related to such residents, would be permitted to live in the region without the previous requirement to leave for Jordan every three months and stay there for several months before being allowed to return for another visit. Non-resident women and children would receive all government services provided for residents, including education and health care. On 20 June, the first group of women that had been expelled were allowed to return with their children.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/74 E.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January 1988, 608(1988) of 14 January 1988, 636(1989) of 6 July 1989, 641(1989) of 30 August 1989, 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 673(1990) of 24 October 1990,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 October 1990 and 31 October 1990,

Alarmed by the continuing deportation of Palestinians from the occupied Palestinian territory by the Israeli authorities,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12

August 1949, in particular article 1 and the first paragraph of article 49, which read as follows:

“Article 1

“The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances.”

“Article 49

“Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive ...”,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

1. Strongly deplores the continuing disregard by Israel, the occupying Power, of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Security Council and resolutions of the General Assembly;

2. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by its authorities in deporting Palestinians and that it facilitate their immediate return;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease forthwith the deportation of Palestinians and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/74 E

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 145-1-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (45/823 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (120-1-1), 28 November (meeting 27); 12-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.31); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 18,20,22,24,26,27; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: United States.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said it considered Israel's deportation of Palestinian residents to be inconsistent with the fourth Geneva Convention's provisions; it was nevertheless obligated to abstain because the resolution's harsh polemical tone offered no realistic solution.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

Following new violence in the wake of the events in Jerusalem on 8 October (see above), Israel decided to deport four of the territories' inhabitants who, according to Israel's statement before the Security Council on 20 December [S/PV.2970 (Part II)], were leaders of Hamas, which Israel said was an extremist organization responsible for the recent murders of many Israelis, three of them during the past week.

The Security Council, in resolution 681(1990) of 20 December, deplored Israel's decision to resume the deportation of Palestinians.

Palestinian detainees

In its annual report [A/45/576], the Committee on Israeli Practices noted serious shortcomings in the administration of justice, such as flagrant violations of the fundamental right of all persons to equality before the courts and tribunals, arrest without charges for preventive or administrative detention, the extraction of confessions under duress, the denial of the right of lawyers to represent detainees, the denial of access of the accused or his lawyers to “secret” charges brought against him, and the arbitrary detention of family members of detained persons as a means of exerting psychological pressure. There were cases of dual punishment imposed on some Palestinians who, in addition to harsh sentences, had had their houses demolished.

According to the Committee, the large number of Palestinians detained as a result of the intifadah had further aggravated the situation in the territories and adversely affected the treatment of prisoners. According to the head of the military court of appeals in the territories, and as reported in the Israeli press on 18 June, there were at that time 10,416 Palestinian prisoners in 23 army detention facilities, of whom 1,031 were administrative detainees. Palestinian detainees continued to be held in prisons and detention camps inside Israel itself, in violation of the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention.

Report of Secretary-General. In October 1990, the Secretary-General informed [A/45/611] the General Assembly that Israel had not replied to his March request for information on steps taken or envisaged in implementation of Assembly resolution 44/48 D [YUN 1989, p. 221] calling on Israel to release all Palestinians and other Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/74 D.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 605(1987) of 22 December 1987,

Recalling also its resolutions 38/79 A of 15 December 1983, 39/95 A of 14 December 1984, 40/161 A of 16 December 1985, 41/63 A of 3 December 1986, 42/160 A of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 D of 6 December 1988, 44/2 of 6 October 1989 and 44/48 D of 8 December 1989,

Taking note of the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 October 1990 and 31 October 1990,

1. Deplores the arbitrary detention or imprisonment by Israel of thousands of Palestinians as a result of their resistance against occupation in order to attain self-determination;

2. Culls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to release all Palestinians and other Arabs arbitrarily detained or imprisoned;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible but not later than the beginning of its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/74 D

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 144-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Social Political committee (A/45/823 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (119-2), 28 November (meeting 271; 12-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.30): agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 18,20,22,24,26,27; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Although it had consistently opposed the practice of administrative detention, the United States, before the vote in the Committee, said it would vote against the resolution as it did not address the legitimate security problems as they existed in the territories.

Israeli settlements

The Committee on Israeli Practices, in its annual report [A/45/576], charged that Israel continued to annex Palestinian territory and establish settlements, in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention. Its policy had led to measures such as expropriation of property, transfer of Israelis to the territories and inducing Palestinians to leave. As a new trend, new immigrants to Israel were settled in the territories. The Committee also reported an increase in the population of already existing settlements.

According to Israeli press reports, the Knesset Finance Committee on 21 May had allocated $21 million for roads and settlements in the territories, $2.5 million for increasing existing settlements and $3 million for developing settlements in the Jordan Valley and the Golan.

The Committee on Palestinian Rights, in its annual report [A/45/35 & Corr.1], expressed deep concern over the Israeli colonization of the Palestinian territory, as manifested in the continued establishment of settlements, usurpation of land and water resources, and settler vigilantism. The Committee considered that the growing influx of new immigrants exacerbated the situation. The Committee called on the Security Council to consider the matter again urgently and undertake appropriate measures to deal with the situation.

In a February resolution [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/1)], the Commission on Human Rights affirmed that the settling of Israeli civilians in the occupied territories was illegal and contravened the relevant provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention. The Commission called on Israel to refrain from settling immigrants in the territories.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (March)

On 12 February, the USSR requested [S/21139] that the Security Council convene to consider what it termed unlawful Israeli moves to settle the occupied territories, which it said ran counter to the fourth Geneva Convention which precluded any changes in the demographic structure of the territories. In March and May, the Council held six meetings to consider the situation in the territories, focusing on the issue of Israeli settlements there. The request by the Palestinian Observer to participate was approved by a vote of 11 to 1, with 3 abstentions, held at the request of the United States, which restated its negative position on such participation.

Starting off the debate, the USSR said that the evolution of the situation in the Middle East had recently been viewed with some hope, but, unfortunately, the settlement of immigrants in the occupied territories was a new and serious obstacle-deliberately created by certain circles-to peace in the region. The Council's attention was drawn to a statement of the Israeli Minister of Housing on 8 March to the effect that his Ministry was working on plans for building 4,000 houses and apartments on the West Bank for immigrants. Such actions affected not only the vital national interests of the Arab people of Palestine, but also questions of security in the Middle East as a whole. As for appeals sometimes made to the USSR to prevent Soviet Jews from emigrating to Israel, the point was not that it should impose prohibitions, but that Israel should prohibit its citizens and others from settling in the occupied territories.

Israel charged that a campaign was being waged by Arab States to halt the immigration of Jews to Israel altogether. The accusations that Israel intended to displace Palestinians by the massive settlement of Jewish immigrants in their place were preposterous and were the latest manifestation of the long-standing campaign against the Jewish State. There were no grounds for allegations that Israel, as a matter of policy, was directing Jewish immigrants to the territories; more than 99 per cent of the immigrants had settled in Israel's main urban centres. There were many areas in Israel that were underpopulated and awaited reclamation and development; immigration coupled with peaceful coexistence would spur on that process. Far from displacing Palestinians, Israel had been the only party actively engaged in rehabilitating them. Since 1967, it had enabled tens of thousands of Palestinians to return to Judea, Samaria and Gaza, and since 1971 it had rehabilitated over 150,000 Palestinian refugees in Gaza in the face of strong opposition by the Arab States.

In the words of the representative of Palestine, the settlement of Soviet Jews in the occupied territories was an act of aggression against national Palestinian rights and a usurpation of Palestinian land in preparation for expelling the Palestinian people. Settlement and land expropriation remained Israel's dominant policy, thus perpetuating a crime that consisted first in terrorizing and evicting Palestinians and then in settling Jews to take their place in the Palestinians' own homeland. Since June 1967, more than 200 settlements had been built on the West Bank and in Gaza. The massive organized Jewish emigration from the USSR to Palestine was a continuation of the invasion of the Palestinian and Arab lands, and Palestinians would continue to oppose it. The members of the Council, all of which were also High Contracting Parties to the fourth Geneva Convention, were legally obligated to ensure respect for the Convention provisions, said the representative, and the Palestinian people demanded that the Council move in that direction.

Meeting numbers. SC 2910-2912, 2914, 2915, 2320.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/45/610], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his March request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the 1989 Assembly demand in resolution 44/48 c [YUN 1989, p. 222] that it desist from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status, geographic nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab occupied territories.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/74 C.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 673(1990) of 24 October 1990,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/5 of 28 October 1977, 33/113 B of 18 December 1978, 34/90 C of 12 December 1979, 35/122 B of 11 December 1980, 36/147 B of 16 December 1981, 37/88 B of 10 December 1982, 38/79 C of 15 December 1983, 39/95 C of 14 December 1984, 40/161 C of 16 December 1985, 41/63 C of 3 December 1986, 42/160 C of 8 December 1987, 43/58 C of 6 December 1988 and 44/48 C of 8 December 1989,

Expressing grave anxiety and concern at the serious situation prevailing in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General of 21 January 1988, 15 October 1990 and 31 October 1990,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967 are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, constitute a serious obstacle to the efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

3. Demand that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/74 C

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 144-1-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/823 & Corr.1) by recorded vote (120-1-1), 28 November (meeting 27); 12-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.29); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 18,20,22,24,26,27; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka & Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: United States.

Speaking before the vote, the United States reiterated its opposition to further Israeli settlement activity in the territories which, in its view, constituted an obstacle to peace. Israel's security did not require the establishment of new settlements, which could only diminish the confidence of the Arabs that a final outcome could be freely and fairly negotiated. However, the United States said, it would abstain in the vote on the text since it believed that unproductive debate over the legalities of the issue only diverted attention from the real task of promoting peace through direct negotiation.

Golan Heights

The three 1990 reports of the Committee on Israeli Practices [A/45/84, A/45/306, A/45/576] also contained information on the situation in the occupied Golan Heights where, as noted by the Committee, serious incidents continued to occur, such as the use of tear-gas to disperse demonstrators, beatings and breaking into houses. The Committee's annual report [A/45/576] also contained a statement by a representative of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic on Israeli practices in the Golan. The full statement was submitted separately to the General Assembly on 28 June [A/45/333 & Corr.1].

The Commission on Human Rights, in a 16 February resolution [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/3)1], condemned Israel's persistence in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan and determined that all Israeli measures purported to alter the character and legal status of the Golan were null and void. It strongly condemned Israel for its attempt to force Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the Golan and to impose a boycott on their agricultural products, and called on it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Golan. The Commission called on Member States not to recognize any of those measures and actions by Israel.

Report of Secretary-General. In October 1990, the Secretary-General informed [A/45/613] the General Assembly that no reply had been received from Israel to his March request for information on steps it had taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 44/48 F [YUN 1989, p. 224] which called on Israel to desist from its repressive measures against the Golan population.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/74 F.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983, 39/95 F of 14 December 1984, 40/161 F of 16 December 1985, 41/63 F of 3 December 1986, 42/160 F of 8 December 1987, 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/58 F of 6 December 1988, 44/2 of 6 October 1989 and 44/48 F of 8 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 15 October 1990,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 of 11 December 1980, in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Reaffirming the applicability of that Convention to the occupied Syrian Arab Golan,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts forcibly to impose Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan;

5. Deplores the violations by Israel of the Geneva Convention;

6. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/74 f

11 December 1990 Meeting 65 144-1-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/45/823) by recorded vote (119-1-1). 28 November (meeting 27); 12-nation draft (A/SPC/45/L.32), orally revised; agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: SPC 18,20,22,24,26,27; plenary 65.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Malawi, United States.

Before the vote in the Committee, the United States confirmed its position that the Golan was occupied Syrian territory and, therefore, the fourth Geneva Convention applied to it. It further opposed any unilateral action to alter the status of the Israeli-occupied territories because that was an issue to be resolved through negotiations in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. However, the Assembly resolution's harsh and unbalanced rhetoric mandated its abstention.

On 13 December, the General Assembly, under the agenda item on the Middle East situation, adopted resolution 45/83 B.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 15 October 1990,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 A of 16 December 1982, 38/180 A of 19 December 1983, 39/146 B of 14 December 1984, 40/168 B of 16 December 1985, 41/162 B of 4 December 1986, 42/209 C of 11 December 1987, 43/54 B of 6 December 1988 and 44/40 B of 4 December 1989,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting also that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/1, 37/123 A, 38/180 A, 39/146 B, 40/168 B, 41/162 B, 42/209 C, 43/54 B and 44/40 B;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and of the other occupied Arab territories to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Arab Golan are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to a ply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan since 1967 and its annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplores the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplores any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages it to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Arab Golan, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the other occupied Arab territories, which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls upon all Member States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic, financial and technological aid, as well as human resources, aimed at prolonging Israeli occupation of the Arab territories or encouraging Israel to pursue its aggressive policy against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people;

14. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

15. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its 'forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/83 B

13 December 1990 Meeting 67 84-23-41 (recorded vote)

14-nation draft (A/45/L.36); agenda item 35.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: plenary 60-63, 67.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Djibouti, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Brazil, Bulgaria, Central African Republic, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Fiji, Haiti, Jamaica, Liechtenstein, Malawi, Malta, Myanmar, Nepal, Papua New Guinea,* * Paraguay, Peru, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Spain, Suriname, Thailand, Togo, Uruguay, Venezuela.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said the text remained highly objectionable in tone, contained unbalanced and harsh condemnations of Israel, and its extreme language was harmful, in contrast to the balanced and helpful Security Council resolution 497(1981) [YUN 1981, p. 312], which the United States had supported.

On behalf of the EC members, Italy voiced serious reservations about the resolution, its lack of balance and the fact that it did not reflect basic principles which the EC considered essential for a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict. Furthermore, the EC members could not accept language criticizing a permanent Security Council member for having exercised its right in accordance with the Charter.

Both Iran and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stated strong reservations to any paragraph that directly or indirectly implied recognition of the Zionist entity.

Peace-keeping operations

Lebanon

In 1990, the situation in Lebanon continued to be of great concern to the international community and the United Nations. In July, the members of the Security Council reaffirmed their commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries, and reiterated their full support for the Taif Agreement and for the efforts of the Lebanese Government to extend its authority over all Lebanese territory.

In the search for a peaceful settlement and with the intention of ending the bloodshed, putting an end to the violence and facilitating the peace process, the Lebanese Government adopted in July a programme for the implementation of the Charter of National Reconciliation [A/45/349-S/21397]. The programme contained the prerequisites to be taken as a basis by all Lebanese parties in order to join in the process of reconciliation, security and peace and to participate in the current Government. According to the programme, the Lebanese Forces should withdraw from Beirut, hand over control of the army barracks located at Beirut, Kesrouane and Jbail and return weapons, ammunition and equipment to the legitimate army led by Emile Lahoud. The Lebanese Government reaffirmed that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities towards the south, in particular by liberating the occupied part of the country and implementing Security Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312], and called on the international community to support it in such efforts.

The situation in southern Lebanon remained tense and was marked by continued hostilities and violence throughout 1990. Israel continued to control an area manned by the Israel Defence

Forces (IDF) and the de facto forces (DFF) (the so-called South Lebanon Army), boundaries of which had not been clearly defined but were determined by the forward positions of IDF and DFF. The Israeli-controlled area (ICA) included territory adjacent to the armistice demarcation line, parts of the Fijian, Nepalese, Irish and Finnish battalion sectors and the entire Norwegian battalion sector, as well as sizeable areas to the north of the area of operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL). Within the UNIFIL area of operation, IDF and DFF occupied 70 military positions in January and 66 in July 1990. Resistance groups frequently attacked those positions with small arms, rocket-propelled grenades, rockets and mortars and used mines and roadside bombs against IDF/DFF vehicles and foot patrols. UNIFIL continued, to the best of its ability and in accordance with its mandate, to prevent its area from being used for hostile activities of any kind. In retaliation, IDF and DFF used heavy artillery, tanks and Israeli helicopter gunships. Such military confrontation had dire consequences for the civilian population, which was reflected in communications from Lebanon addressed to the Secretary-General during the year.

Israel continued its efforts to establish and strengthen civil administrations in different locations in the territory it controlled. However, in some towns, such as Chebaa, Kafr Hammam and Kafr Chouba, residents resisted attempts by IDF and DFF to establish civil administration offices, despite harassment and overt pressure on the local leaders. During the year, Israel also maintained an extensive programme of road construction in ICA, thus enhancing IDF's ability to deploy rapidly into Lebanese territory. During the earlier part of the year, there were renewed accusations that Israel was diverting water from Lebanese rivers, especially the Litani, into Israel. By a letter of 6 April [A/45/206-S/21237], Lebanon drew the Secretary-General's attention to the subject. However, the UNIFIL Force Commander, after carrying out a survey, reported that UNIFIL had not detected any evidence that water was being pumped or transported from Lebanon into Israel. Israel categorically denied that it was taking, or intended to take, water from Lebanon to Israel.

Israel maintained that its presence in Lebanon was a temporary arrangement, necessary for ensuring the security of northern Israel as long as the Lebanese Government was not able to exercise effective authority and prevent its territory from being used to launch attacks against Israel. Israel did not consider that UNIFIL, as a peace-keeping force, could assume that responsibility. Therefore, it continued to build up DFF and improve their ability to reinforce quickly IDF's strength inside Lebanon. As a consequence, ICA was becoming increasingly separated from the rest of Lebanon.

UNIFIL

During 1990, at the request of Lebanon and on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, the Security Council twice extended the mandate of UNIFIL, in January and July, each time for a six-month period.

Established under Security Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312], following Israel's invasion of Lebanon in March of that year, UNIFIL originally was entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory, restoring international peace and security, and re-establishing the Lebanese Government's effective authority in the area. A second Israeli invasion in June 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 428] radically altered the situation in which UNIFIL had to function. Shortly thereafter, the Council, by resolution 511(1982) [YUN 1982, p. 450], authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its mandate, the interim tasks of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population.

Composition and deployment

As of July 1990 [S/21406 & Corr.1 & Add.1], UNIFIL had a strength of 5,842 military personnel provided by nine countries: Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway and Sweden. The command of UNIFIL continued to be exercised by Lieutenant-General Lars-Eric Wahlgren of Sweden. During 1990, 65 unarmed military observers from the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), organized as Observer Group Lebanon (OGL), assisted UNIFIL under the operational control of the Force Commander. OGL maintained five observation posts along the Lebanese side of the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line and operated four mobile teams in that part of the UNIFIL area controlled by Israel. Two military observers were assigned to UNIFIL headquarters. The strength of the Lebanese army unit assigned to the UNIFIL area of operation remained during the year at 128, all ranks.

UNIFIL continued to experience difficulties in obtaining and using the land and buildings it required for its operations, except those lands made available by villages that had asked for UNIFIL protection. Those difficulties emanated from the increased demand for land and dwellings resulting from the influx of population into the area, for arrears in the payment of rent by the Lebanese Government to the landlords concerned and from the sharp depreciation of the real value of such rent payments as were made. The problem was raised with the Lebanese authorities on numerous occasions.

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a January 1990 report [S/21102], the Secretary-General provided the Security Council with an account of developments in the UNIFIL area of operation between 22 July 1989 and 25 January 1990. He also informed the Council on organizational and financial aspects of the Force and presented his observations.

The Secretary-General reported with regret that, during the period under review, seven members of the Force lost their lives from firing, accidents and natural causes, while eight others suffered injuries as a result of accidents. To improve the security of its personnel and positions, UNIFIL took certain measures, such as the relocation of the Norwegian battalion headquarters to a defensible compound, which was in progress during the period. The security and defence of the Naqoura camp and the Irish battalion headquarters also had been improved and more positions throughout the UNIFIL area of deployment had been reinforced with protective measures. Ten modern armoured personnel carriers financed by Japan were made available by Finland.

Following the announcement on 31 July 1989 by a group in Lebanon that it had killed Lieutenant-Colonel William Richard Higgins, a United States national who had been serving as an UNTSO observer with UNIFIL when kidnapped near Tyre in February 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 225], the Secretary-General said he had made every effort to ascertain the facts concerning his fate and to recover his body; however, there was not yet any conclusive evidence as to his fate despite extensive conversations with various parties.

The situation in the UNIFIL area of operation remained essentially unchanged, the Secretary-General said. The Force still was not able to extend its area of operation up to the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line, as envisaged in Council resolution 425(1978), while IDF and DFF continued to control in southern Lebanon its so-called security zone, maintaining 70 positions within the UNIFIL area of operation.

During the period under review, UNIFIL recorded a total of 47 operations by resistance groups against IDF and DFF, 6 alone in January, and 151 unprovoked firings from IDF and DFF positions or patrols close to UNIFIL positions. Indiscriminate fire from DFF positions on several occasions resulted in fatal injuries to civilians in the UNIFIL area.

UNIFIL continued to provide humanitarian assistance to the local population, mainly in the medical and hygiene areas and in support of welfare institutions, out of funds provided by the troop-contributing Governments. In addition, UNIFIL medical centres provided care to an average of 3,700 civilian patients per month. The Force's assistance during that period was of great importance due to the sudden influx of people fleeing the hostilities in Beirut.

In his observations, the Secretary-General noted with regret that UNIFIL remained unable to implement the mandate given to it by Council resolution 425(1978). Meanwhile, Israel had further strengthened its position in the area controlled by its forces, and had introduced there some elements of a civilian administration in which a leading role was given to DFF, which became a matter of growing concern in Lebanon. At the same time, attempts by armed elements to infiltrate Israel and air and ground attacks by the Israeli forces on targets in Lebanon to the north of the UNIFIL area of control continued.

The safety of UNIFIL personnel was a matter of continuing concern to the Secretary-General, who appealed once more to all parties to co-operate with UNIFIL with a view to ensuring the security of its members and helping them carry out the tasks entrusted to them by the Security Council.

Among the positive developments during the reporting period, the Secretary-General noted the election of Elias Hrawi as President of Lebanon in December 1989, following the assassination of his predecessor, René Moawad [YUN 1989, p. 203], and the appointment of the Lebanese Government led by Prime Minister Salim al Hoss. He also mentioned the Lebanese President's efforts to deploy government forces to restore central government authority over all Lebanese territory.

The Secretary-General also drew the Security Council's attention to UNIFIL's grave financial situation due to increased unpaid assessments, which amounted to some $318 million owed to the Member States that had voluntarily contributed troops. He expressed hope that the Governments concerned would re-examine their positions, both with regard to paying their assessed contributions and regarding effective support at the political level for his efforts to secure implementation of resolution 425(1978).

Taking into consideration the conviction of the Lebanese authorities that the restoration of constitutional authority in the country created new possibilities for making progress towards implementation of that resolution and their determination to take early steps to re-establish the central Government's authority in southern Lebanon, including the deployment there of units of the Lebanese army, the Secretary-General recommended extending the mandate of UNIFIL for a further six months, until 31 July 1990.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

The Security Council met on 31 January to consider the Secretary-General's report and, without debate, adopted resolution 648(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 25 January 1990, and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 11 January 1990 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1990;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 648(1990)

31 January 1990 Meeting 2906 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21117).

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a July report [S/21406 & Corr.1 & Add.1] on UNIFIL activities and developments in the area of its operation, covering the period from 26 January to 24 July 1990, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the situation in the UNIFIL area remained essentially unchanged, with IDF and DFF continuing to control the so-called security zone in southern Lebanon. However, there had been a slight decrease in the number of their positions, from 70 to 66.

The Secretary-General reported with regret that during the period under review two Nepalese members of UNIFIL lost their lives as a result of mortar fire, and 10 others suffered injuries as a result of hostile fire and accidents. Since UNIFIL's establishment in 1978, 173 military and civilian members of the Force had died, 67 as a result of firing or mine or bomb explosions, 75 in accidents and 31 from other causes. The number of those wounded by firing or mine or bomb explosions stood at 243.

UNIFIL recorded 42 operations by resistance groups against IDF and DFF, with a notable decrease during the last three months. IDF and DFF, either unprovoked or in retaliation for attacks by armed elements, opened fire daily using sometimes heavy artillery, tanks and helicopters. UNIFIL recorded 109 unprovoked firings close to its positions. A particularly serious incident occurred on 19 February, when a UNIFIL position came under heavy mortar fire from a DFF position to the south, as a result of which two Nepalese soldiers were killed and six wounded. The Secretary-General also reported that there had been a growing tendency during the last two years for IDF/DFF to undertake military operations in the Norwegian battalion sector, which lay wholly within ICA. Those incidents were protested to the Israeli authorities and a number of confrontations had occurred when UNIFIL used vehicles and other obstacles to try to block IDF/DFF activities in that sector. In an addendum to his report, the Secretary-General described the latest serious confrontation which took place on 25 July.

During the reporting period, Israel carried out an extensive programme of road construction in ICA. A number of paved roads, with tank tracks alongside, were built from gates in the fence along the armistice demarcation line to Israeli military positions, enhancing IDF's ability to deploy rapidly into Lebanese territory. Measures to establish some aspects of Israeli civilian administration in ICA continued, with a gendarmerie under DFF control being re-established in some major towns.

In accordance with its extended mandate, the Force continued to provide protection, security and assistance to the civilian population. UNIFIL troops detonated mines, roadside bombs and unexploded remnants of war and dismantled rockets in the area of deployment. A total of 37 controlled explosions were carried out during the period under review, compared to 10 during the previous period. The Force also extended humanitarian assistance to the civilian population in its area, providing water, food, fuel, electricity and escort for farmers. Medicines and equipment or services to schools were provided from resources made available by the troop-contributing Governments. UNIFIL medical centres took care of an average of 4,000 civilian patients per month.

The Secretary-General said that Israel continued to take the position that its presence in Lebanon was a temporary arrangement, necessary for ensuring the security of northern Israel so long as the Lebanese Government was not able to exercise effective authority and prevent its territory from being used to launch attacks against Israel. Israel continued to build up DFF and improve their ability to reinforce quickly IDF inside Lebanon. A consequence of that policy was that ICA was becoming increasingly separated from the rest of Lebanon. While hostile incidents in the UNIFIL area were fewer during the current mandate period, IDF and DFF carried out many air and artillery attacks on targets to the north of the UNIFIL area.

For its part, UNIFIL continued, to the best of its ability, to prevent its area from being used for hostile activities of any kind. Its efforts in that regard received the co-operation of the Amal movement, the Secretary-General said, and a high degree of calm and tranquillity had been achieved in those parts of its area that lay outside ICA. Recent months saw a noteworthy increase in economic activity in those parts, and, in order to foster the confidence necessary for such investment, UNIFIL established some new positions close to the edge of ICA. The Force also continued to press Israel to end the shelling of civilian targets by DFF and to withdraw DFF from certain positions that were most frequently responsible for such firing and attracted attacks by armed elements.

In carrying out their duties, UNIFIL personnel were exposed to many dangers, the Secretary-General underlined. The Force again suffered fatalities and it still proved impossible to establish with certainty the fate of Colonel Higgins. The Secretary-General, therefore, appealed to all the parties to co-operate with the Force, respect its international and neutral status and avoid exposing its members to danger.

The Secretary-General concluded that, although it had not been possible for UNIFIL to carry out its full mandate, it continued to make an important contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security in a volatile area. He accordingly recommended that the Council accept Lebanon's request and extend the Force's mandate for a further six months, until 31 January 1991.

In making his recommendation, the Secretary-General once again drew the Council's attention to the continuing gravity of the Force's financial situation. Although there had been a slight reduction in total unpaid assessments, he said, they were still at the high level of $307 million. His concern was heightened by the fact that, after 12 years in the field, UNIFIL was facing a growing need to replace equipment that had become obsolete or unserviceable. He considered it, therefore, all the more important that all arrears be cleared and that Member States pay their assessments promptly and in full.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 31 July 1990, the Security Council, having considered the Secretary-General's report, adopted resolution 659(1990).

The Security Council, Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon of 24 and 26 July 1990 and taking note of the observations expressed therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 16 July 1990 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1991;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to co-operate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

Security Council resolution 659(1990)

31 July 1990 Meeting 2931 Adopted unanimously
Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21411)

After the vote, following consultations among members of the Council, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council [S/21418]:

The members of the Security Council have noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, submitted in conformity with resolution 648(1990) of 31 January 1990.

They reaffirm their commitment to the full sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, they assert that any State shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

As the Security Council extends the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, the members of the Council again stress the need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. They express their appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard. They reiterate their full support for the Taif Agreement and for the efforts of the Lebanese Government to extend its authority over all Lebanese territory.

The members of the Security Council take this opportunity to commend the troops of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances.

In informal consultations held on the same day, the Council members agreed to request the Secretary-General to review, during the current mandate period, the scale and deployment of UNIFIL in the light of the performance by the Force of its functions since its establishment in 1978 and with a view to implementing resolution 425(1978). That request was confirmed in a 24 September letter [S/21833] by the Council President to the Secretary-General. In his November report on the situation in the Middle East [A/45/726-S/21947], the Secretary-General informed that the review was under way and he intended to report on its results in January 1991 in his next report to the Council on the operation of UNIFIL.

Financing

The Secretary-General reported [A/45/802] to the General Assembly in November 1990 that, as at 31 October, contributions totalling $1,476.4 million had been received for the operation of UNIFIL, out of $1,834.1 million apportioned among Member States for the period from the inception of the Force on 19 March 1978 to 31 January 1991. Of the balance of $357.7 million due, only $151.2 million might be considered collectible at that time, which left a shortfall of $206.5 million, including $19.6 million transferred to a special account in accordance with General Assembly resolution 36/116 A [YUN 1981, p. 1299]. As a consequence, UNIFIL had been unable to meet its obligations on a current basis, particularly those due to the troop-contributing countries, payments to which had never been made on a current and full basis in accordance with the rates established by the Assembly. The UNIFIL Suspende

Account, established under Assembly resolution 34/9 D [YUN 1979, p. 352] to facilitate reimbursement for equipment and supplies, had not achieved its purpose of alleviating the financial burden on troop contributors. As at 31 October 1990, voluntary contributions to the Suspense Account totalling $4.6 million had been received from Governments, of which $1.7 million, received during the financial period from 1 February 1990 to 31 January 1991, was contributed by Switzerland.

The actions required from the Assembly in connection with UNIFIL financing were: for the period from 1 February 1990 to 31 January 1991, appropriation of $144,672,000 gross ($141,672,000 net) as authorized under Assembly resolution 44/188 [YUN 1989, p. 207]. For the twelve-month period beginning on 1 February 1991, should the Security Council decide to continue the operation of UNIFIL, the Secretary-General estimated monthly costs of $12,789,000 gross ($12,557,000 net) based on an average troop strength of 5,850.

Although ACABQ approved such a commitment, it expressed in a December report [A/45/832] concern about the substantial and continued increase in costs for civilian staff, as well as for premises and accommodation for UNIFIL. It recommended that the Secretary-General pursue his negotiations with the host country to obtain more preferential conditions for the construction and rental of premises and accommodation, as well as a more favourable exchange rate in respect of all UNIFIL requirements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/244.

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 659(1990) of 31 July 1990,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 44/188 of 21 December 1989,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraph 13 of the report of the Advisory Committee,

Recalling its resolution 34/9 E of 17 December 1979 and the subsequent resolutions in which it decided that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations should be suspended, the latest of which was resolution 44/188,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States, resulting from the withholding of contributions by certain Member States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to the full extent to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Force,

Concerned further that the application of the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations would aggravate the already difficult financial situation of the Force,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section I-paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution S-8/2 the amount of 144,012,000 United States dollars gross (141,672,000 dollars'net) authorized and apportioned by the Assembly in paragraphs 2 and 3 of its resolution 44/188 for the operation of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon from 1 February 1990 to 31 January 1991, inclusive;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the operation of the Force at a rate not to exceed 12,789,000 dollars gross (12,557,000 dollars net) per month for the twelve-month period beginning 1 February 1991, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 659(1990);

3. Decides, as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amounts referred to in paragraph 2 above among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

4. Decides also that Liechtenstein shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

5. Decides further that Namibia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

6. Decides that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the Force until 31 January 1991 of the Member States referred to in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the present resolution shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments authorized in paragraph 3 of the present resolution;

7. Decides also that the provisions of regulations 5.2 (b), 5.2 (d), 4.3 and 4.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations shall be suspended in respect of the amount of 21,897,147 dollars, which otherwise would have to be surrendered pursuant to those provisions, this amount to be entered in the account referred to in the operative part of General Assembly resolution 34/9 E and held in suspense until a further decision is taken by the Assembly;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to ensure that the Force shall be administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

9. Renews its invitation to Member States and other interested parties to make voluntary contributions to the Force both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General and also to make voluntary contributions in cash to the Suspense Account established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/9 D of 17 December 1979.

Syrian Arab Republic

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF), established under Security Council resolution 350(1974) [YUN 1974, p. 205] and headquartered in Damascus, continued to supervise the observance of the cease-fire in the Golan Heights, as called for by the Agreement on Disengagement of Forces between Israel and the Syrian Arab Republic [YUN 1974, p. 198], and ensure that there were no military forces in the area of separation. Its mandate was renewed twice in 1990, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

The issue of the human rights of the population in the occupied Syrian Arab territory was continuously monitored by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the Commission on Human Rights (see above and PART THREE, Chapter X).

Composition

As of November 1990, UNDOF had a strength of 1,324 military troops from four countries—Austria, 531; Canada, 227; Finland, 410; Poland, 156—and seven UNTSO military observers. In addition, UNTSO observers assigned to the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission assisted UNDOF as needed. Command of the Force continued to be exercised by Major-General Adolf Radauer of Austria.

Activities

Reports of Secretary-General. Before the expiration the mandate of UNDOF on 31 May and 30 November 1990, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities during two six-month periods, from 22 November 1989 to 21 May 1990 [S/21305] and from 22 May to 23 November 1990 [S/21950 & Corr.1].

UNDOF continued to perform its functions effectively, with the co-operation of the parties. In accordance with its mandate, it continued to supervise the area of separation to ensure that there were no military forces within it; that was carried out by means of static positions and observations posts, which were manned 24 hours a day, and by foot and mobile patrols operating at irregular intervals on predetermined routes by day and night. In addition, temporary outposts were established and patrols conducted from time to time to perform specific tasks. Located within and close to the area of separation, UNDOF maintained 35 positions and 13 outposts and conducted daily 54 patrols.

Under a programme undertaken by the Syrian authorities, civilians continued to return to the area of separation, the population of which had doubled since the start of the mandate. The Syrian Arab Republic had stationed police in the area in exercise of its administrative responsibility. UNDOF adjusted its operations accordingly to take account of those developments and to continue to carry out effectively its supervisory tasks under the Agreement on Disengagement.

In accordance with the terms of the Agreement, the Force, accompanied by liaison officers from the parties, conducted fortnightly inspections of armament and force levels in the area of limitation. Although both parties co-operated with UNDOF in carrying out its tasks, especially in observance of limitations of armaments and forces, both sides placed restrictions on movement and inspection in certain areas; the Force continued to seek the lifting of those restrictions so as to guarantee its freedom of access to all locations on both sides. UNDOF also lent its assistance and good offices on request from the parties.

The safety of Syrian shepherds who grazed their flocks close to and west of the A-line continued to be of concern. The intensified patrolling of new mine-cleared paths and, from time to time, the establishment of standing patrols in those areas helped prevent incidents. The grazing security fence in the southern part of the area of separation continued to be effective in reducing the number of incidents. New patrol paths along the A-line and B-line were under construction in the area of separation.

UNDOF was continuing its efforts to make its patrol tracks inside that area safe from mines. During the two reporting periods, three Polish mine-clearing teams cleared a total area of 92,715 square metres. Since May, the Syrian authorities-under the constant observation of UNDOF escort patrols-undertook an intensive mine-clearing operation in the sector of the Austrian battalion in order to convert all suitable agricultural areas into new productive fields.

The Force also assisted the International Committee of the Red Cross with facilities for handing over parcels and mail and for the passage of persons and personal effects across the area of separation.

In his observations concluding both reports, the Secretary-General noted that the situation in the Israel-Syria sector had remained quiet and there had been no serious incidents during the reporting periods. Despite the quiet, he said, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. He hoped that determined efforts would be made by all concerned to tackle the problem in all its aspects, with a view to arriving at a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by the Security Council in resolution 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213].

In the prevailing circumstances, the Secretary-General considered the continued presence of UNDOF in the area to be essential and, therefore, recommended each time that the Council extend the Force's mandate for a further six months, until 30 November 1990 and 31 May 1991, respectively, Syria having given its assent and Israel having expressed agreement to the extensions.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 May, without debate, the Security Council adopted resolution 655(1990).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1990;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement Security Council resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 655(1990)

31 May 1990 Meeting 2925 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21325).

On 30 November, again without debate, the Council adopted resolution 679(1990).

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force.

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately its resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1991;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the developments in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

Security Council resolution 679(1990)

30 November 1990 Meeting 2964 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21972).

After the adoption of each resolution, the President of the Council made the following statement [S/21338, S/21974]:

In connection with the resolution just adopted on the renewal of the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, I have been authorized to make the following complementary statement on behalf of the Security Council:

As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in Paragraph 24 [23 in the November report]: "Despite the Present, Quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East as a whole continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached." The statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council.

Financing

In November 1990, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/716] that, as at 31 October, assessments totalling $918.9 million had been apportioned among Member States in respect of UNDOF since its inception on 31 May 1974 [SC res. 350(1974)] to 30 November 1990, and of the United Nations Emergency Force, established in 1973 [SC res. 340(1973)] and liquidated in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 361]. Contributions received for the same period amounted to $866.5 million. The unpaid assessed balance totalled $52.4 million, only $8.9 million of which could be considered collectible, leaving a shortfall of $43.5 million, including $36 million transferred to a special account in accordance with General Assembly resolution 36/116 A [YUN 1981, p. 1299].

By resolution 44/187 [YUN 1989, p. 209], the Assembly had appropriated $20,208,000 for UNDOF for the period from 1 December 1989 to May 1990, and authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for UNDOF at a rate not to exceed $3,368,000 gross ($3,283,000 net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1990. In his performance report for the period from 1 December 1989 to 30 November 1990, the Secretary-General noted that an unencumbered balance of $887,000 gross ($765,000 net) existed in respect of that period, as at 31 October 1990. He proposed that Member States be credited with that amount against their assessed contributions for mandate periods subsequent to 30 November 1990, should the Security Council decide to continue UNDOF.

The Secretary-General estimated the costs of UNDOF to be $3,446,500 gross ($3,366,500 net) per month from 1 December 1990 onwards. In December, ACABQ recommended [A/45/832] that the Assembly approve proposed commitment authority up to that level. ACABQ also recommended, as proposed by the Secretary-General, that Member States be credited with the unencumbered balance of $887,000 gross ($765,000 net), and that a further $2,017,408, representing the surplus balance in the UNDOF account as at 31 December 1989, be similarly credited to Member States.

ACABQ, as in the case of UNIFIL, expressed concern over the substantial and continued increase in costs for premises and accommodation and civilian staff costs. It recommended that the Secretary-General pursue his negotiations with the host country in order to obtain more preferential conditions for the construction and rental of premises and accommodation, as well as a more favourable exchange rate in respect of all UNDOF requirements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/243.

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 679(1990) of 30 November 1990,

Recalling its resolution 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 44/187 of 21 December 1989,

Reaffirming its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, a different procedure is required from the one applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such operations involving heavy expenditures,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force by one Government,

Having regard to the financial position of the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, as set forth in the report of the Secretary-General, and referring to paragraphs 16 to 18 and 27 of the report of the Advisory Committee,

Recognizing that, as a consequence of the withholding of contributions by certain Member States, the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have, in effect, been drawn upon to supplement the income received from contributions for meeting expenses of the Forces,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account referred to in section II, paragraph 1, of General Assembly resolution 3211 B (XXIX) the amount of 20,208,000 United States dollars gross (19,698,000 dollars net) authorized and apportioned by the Assembly in paragraph 6 of its resolution 44/187 for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1990, inclusive;

2. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account an amount of 20,679,000 dollars for the operation of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for the period from 1 December 1990 to 31 May 1991, inclusive;

3. Decides further; as an ad hoc arrangement, to apportion the amount of 20,679,000 dollars for the above-mentioned period among Member States, in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolution 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the years 1989, 1990 and 1991;

4. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 887,000 dollars gross (765,000 dollars net) for the period from 1 December 1989 to 30 November 1990, inclusive;

5. Decides also that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the estimated income of 7,000 dollars other than staff assessment income approved for the period from 1 December 1990 to 31 May 1991, inclusive;

6. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 3 of the present resolution, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 473,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 December 1990 to 31 May 1991, inclusive;

7. Decides that the surplus balance as at 31 December 1989 in the amount of 2,017,408 dollars shall be credited to Member States against their assessments in respect of such mandate periods as may be approved by the Security Council subsequent to 31 May 1991;

8. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the United Nations Disengagement

Observer Force at a rate not to exceed 3,446,500 dollars gross (3,366,500 dollars net) per month for the period from 1 June to 30 November 1991, inclusive, should the Security Council decide to continue the Force beyond the period of six months authorized under its resolution 679(1990), the said amount to be appropriated among Member States in accordance with the scheme set out in the present resolution;

9. Decides that Liechtenstein shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

10. Decides also that Namibia shall be included in the group of Member States set out in paragraph 3 (d) of General Assembly resolution 43/232 and that its contribution to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force shall be calculated in accordance with the provisions of the resolution to be adopted by the Assembly at its forty-fifth session regarding the scale of assessments;

11. Decides further that, in accordance with regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force until 30 November 1990 of the Member States referred to in paragraphs 9 and 10 of the present resolution shall be treated as miscellaneous income to be set off against the apportionments authorized in paragraph 3 of the present resolution;

12. Invites voluntary contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure established by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/192 A of 21 December 1989;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy.

General Assembly resolution 45/243

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

During 1990, the five United Nations regional commissions continued efforts to promote economic and social development in their respective regions, though the work of the commission concerned with Western Asia was severely disrupted by the repatriation of staff from their Baghdad headquarters in August when Iraq invaded Kuwait.

During the first half of the year, four of the commissions held their regular sessions. The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) decided to make far-reaching changes in both its work programme priorities and its organizational structure, based on consideration of proposals made by a Special Working Group. The Group based its recommendations on the new situation in Europe brought about by changes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) held their sessions in May and June. The Economic Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in 1990.

Among resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council concerning issues of interest to the regional commissions were those related to admission of Italy as a member of ECLAC; a special plan of economic co-operation for Central America (see PART THREE, Chapter III); and transforming and strengthening ECA's Multinational Programming and Operational Centres. The General Assembly adopted a resolution on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held its twenty-fifth session (sixteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers) at Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, from 15 to 19 May [E/1990/42].

The Conference considered progress in implementing the UN Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD) [GA res. S-13/2]; Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery, 1986-1990 (APPER); and the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation (AAF-SAP). The Conference also considered the report and recommendations of the eleventh meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole (Tripoli, 15-19 May) [E/ECA/CM.16/40], which dealt with a range of specific issues including food and agriculture, industrial development, natural resources and environment, international trade and development finance, transport and communications, and population.

The Conference of Ministers adopted resolutions related to such matters as: the future of African demographic training institutes; the Plan of Action for Statistical Development; women and apartheid; women in development; establishment of the Technical Advisory Committee regarding development of nuclear science and technology in Africa; strengthening African development of science and technology; making the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development (ACMAD) operational; the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation; hydrographic surveying and nautical charting; co-operation in fisheries; strengthening the African Institute for Higher Technical Training and Research; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) "Priority Africa" programme; proposed establishment of the African Economic Community; menace of the world screwworm fly; and emergency assistance to Namibia.

Eight resolutions were proposed for adoption by the Economic and Social Council relating to: improving information flows in the African region; the future of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP); improving ECA's technical facilities; the Abuja Declaration on Participatory Development: the Role of Women in Africa in the 1990s [YUN 1989, p. 2541; trade facilitation and EDIFACT; planning, programming, monitoring and evaluation; final review of UNPAAERD; and transforming and strengthening Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCS).

In a message to the Conference, the Secretary-General said that, despite encouraging developments, it was clear that peace and stability in Africa depended on the resolution of its economic and social problems. He stated that the General Assembly would review the achievements of UN-PAAERD) in 1991, but it was already more than evident that some of the important initiatives that it had given rise to could be used as the basis for achieving the long-term objective of Africa's development.

The Executive Secretary of ECA, in his statement, said Africa's development partners should avoid the unforgivable mistake of continuing to try to fit development into the adjustment process; structural adjustment should be fitted within the framework of development and transformation, not the other way around.

A number of ECA subsidiary bodies met during the year in Addis Ababa or Tripoli, including: the Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning, the Africa Regional Co-ordinating Committee for the Integration of Women in Development, the Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries, the Enlarged Ministerial Committee on the Establishment of an African Monetary Fund, and the special session of the Conference of African Ministers of Trade, which adopted the Strategies for Revitalization, Recovery and Growth of Africa's Trade in the 1990s. A summary [E/ECA/CM.16/25] of recommendations and resolutions of subsidiary and sectoral organs that met prior to the Commission's twenty-fifth session was prepared.

Economic and social trends

A summary of economic and social conditions in Africa 1989-1990 prepared for the Economic and Social Council [E/1991/70] reported a marked slow-down of economic activity in developing Africa. Output grew by only 2.6 per cent in 1990, nearly 1 per cent less than in 1989, when the growth rate reached 3.3 per cent. Main causes were a rather poor agricultural season, with drought in some areas of the Sahel, the Horn of Africa and southern Africa, and the rise of oil prices after the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. The population exposed to famine in developing Africa rose to 27 million. Output growth in oil-importing countries fell to 1.4 per cent, compared to 2.3 per cent in 1989. While oil prices rose, commodities prices fell by an average of 7.9 per cent, and tropical beverages prices were lower in 1990 by an average of 11.4 per cent, continuing the slide begun in 1986. Copper prices averaged 6.9 per cent lower than in 1989. The number of countries with a fall in output rose from 8 in 1989 to 15 in 1990.

There were wide variations in performance among the subregions and countries of the continent. North Africa, with three major oil producers, did well, with output growing 3.2 per cent. Sub-Saharan Africa suffered a near recession, with a growth rate of only 2 per cent. The most affected subregion was East Africa, where output growth was only 0.9 per cent, compared to 3.7 per cent in 1989. Though African exports had risen to their highest level since 1981, the current account deficit had increased to some $11 billion, or 3.3 per cent of gross domestic product (GDP), from $8.9 billion in 1989 (3 per cent of GDP), pointing to a probable worsening of the debt crisis. Total African debt had increased to $271.9 billion from $265.4 billion in 1989.

Agricultural production rose 1.5 per cent, compared to 0.5 per cent in 1989, but was only half the rate of population growth. Apart from the drought-stricken areas, the food situation was normal, but prompt action by Governments, international organizations and other donors would be essential to avert tragedy in the Sudan and northern Ethiopia.

Non-Fuel minerals production stagnated in 1990 due to lack of investment, deposit depletion, aging equipment and inadequate management. At the same time, mineral and ore prices fell by over 9 per cent. The African manufacturing industry remained in a depressed state. With few exceptions, all those countries that made important investments in industry had had disappointing results, and to survive their industrial sectors were in need of basic restructuring. The output of the manufacturing sector in 1990 was below the average for 1980-1989, value-added growing by a mere 1.6 per cent. In order to achieve the objectives of the Second Industrial Decade for Africa, proclaimed by the United Nations in 1989 [GA res. 44/237], substantial investment would be required to rehabilitate existing plants and to create new ones. Given the demand for capital world wide, prospects did not seem favourable, at least in the short term. The performance of agriculture, the report stated, would be crucial. It was also noted that African countries continued to undertake reform and adjustment programmes despite the social and political costs involved.

Activities in 1990

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

In a biennial report [E/ECA/CM.183], the Executive Secretary of ECA provided an overview of activities, programmes and events within the context of ECA's mandate. Stating that the 1980s had been a "lost decade" for Africa, during which industrialization had mostly failed and actual deindustrialization had occurred in some countries, he noted that there were new threats to Africa's external trade potential. ECA programme performance had, however, improved, despite budgetary restrictions and mounting expectations from member States. The Commission had intensified its efforts in jointly undertaking activities with other organizations.

In 1990, the Executive Secretary said, the Gulf crisis (see PART TWO, Chapter III) had a major negative impact because most African countries were oil importers. Also, Africa was affected by recession in the industrialized countries, a large drop in tourism and a poor crop year. There was no significant progress on the debt issue; the donor nations failed to follow up initiatives to cancel the debts of the poorest countries, he reported.

The key development issue, the Executive Secretary said, was how to master and spread the technological knowledge necessary for putting to good use Africa's considerable resources. The opening up of African economies to each other and the creation of a vast African economic market was also a condition for development.

In a May resolution [E/1990/42 (res. 698(XXV))], the Conference requested the Executive Secretary to mount special multisectoral missions to all ECA member States to collect up-to-date data on the implementation of UNPAAERD, for the final review and appraisal of the programme.

ECA activities in 1990, including advisory services and technological assistance, covered food and agriculture, marine affairs, socio-economic research and planning, human resources, environment, human settlements, industrial development, international trade and other sectors. The Secretariat mounted field missions to 25 African countries between September and November to collect data on economic and social conditions. Two missions visited six countries to evaluate implementation of UNPAAERD. ECA activities to combat drought and desertification included a mission to Lesotho in October, and participation in the seventeenth meeting of the Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification, convened in Rome in September. Other advisory services included: formulation of regional research programmes to solve common agricultural problems; establishment of a data base for the marine sector; and organization of an intergovernmental regional workshop on evaluation of rural development experiences (Addis Ababa, 19-24 November). A subregional workshop on the promotion of domestic trade (17-19 September) and a meeting of the intergovernmental group of experts on prospects for South-South trade promotion in processed and semi-processed products (2-5 October) were held in Addis Ababa. Educational activities included collaboration in organizing a regional conference on non-formal education and literacy programmes and adult education in Africa (Mauritius, 5-10 November) which was attended by 200 participants.

MULPOCs

In November, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/45/57] on the findings of a Secretariat review team which, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/216 [YUN 1988, p. 867], had examined the structure, mandate and operations of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres of ECA. He recalled that MULPOCs had been mandated in 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 597] to identify and provide assistance for activities and projects of a multinational and multisectoral character and national activities of a multinational character aimed at core development issues. The need for substantial and adequate financial and human resources to sustain MULPOC activities had been noted by the General Assembly in 1981 [GA res. 36/1781]. The five MULPOCs served from 3 to 19 countries, and were part of the ECA secretariat. They were based in Niamey, Niger; Tangier, Morocco; Gisenyi, Rwanda; Yaoundé, Cameroon; and Lusaka, Zambia.

The Secretary-General stated that there was general consensus among African States that MULPOCs had been successful in supporting institution-building efforts and in strengthening their operational framework, especially during the period when they had access to adequate United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) funding. They had assisted in the establishment of numerous intergovernmental organizations such as the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern Africa (PTA), the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development (IGADD), the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS) and the Eastern and Southern African Management Institute (ESAMI), as well as in the establishment of subsidiary organs of those intergovernmental organizations, such as the PTA Trade and Development Bank, the PTA Clearing Arrangement, the Eastern and Southern African Trade Promotion and Training Centre and the Central African Clearing House. The overall assessment led to the conclusion that the objectives and purpose for which MULPOCs were established 13 years earlier remained valid, and it was therefore intended to maintain them in their present structure, the Secretary-General said. However, the initial objectives had not been adequately met and programme delivery had been negatively affected by inadequate and unstable financing from extra-budgetary sources.

The review team's report [E/ECA/CM.16/13] was submitted to the ECA Conference of Ministers, which adopted a resolution [E/1990/42 (res. 702(XXV))] changing the terms of reference of MULPOCs, defining their role more clearly and providing a comprehensive policy and operational framework to enable them to act as catalysts for subregional economic co-operation and integration. The Secretary-General concurred with the new terms of reference.

To meet their new responsibilities adequately, the Secretary-General said MULPOCs needed to be strengthened both under the regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. He intended to propose regular budget financing in the context of the 1992-1993 programme budget for eight additional Professional posts and 10 General Service posts at a cost of $902,300. Each MULPOC would have two new General Service posts. The proposed Professional posts were two P-5 posts, for an agronomist (Niamey) and a transport economist (Yaoundé); two P-4 posts, for a mining engineer (Lusaka) and an agronomist (Tangier); and two P-2 posts, for an expert on women in development (Gisenyi) and an agronomist (Yaoundé).

On 21 December, by resolution 45/248 A, section XI, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/76.

Transforming and strengthening the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres of the Economic Commission for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 311(XIII) adopted on 1 March 1977 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa establishing the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres,

Recognizing that, over the years, the Centres have played a vital role in fostering subregional economic co-operation and integration and that the objectives for which they were established are more valid today than they were thirteen years ago,

Considering the imperative need for women to participate positively and effectively in the implementation of programmes aimed at their integration in the process of development in each subregion,

Concerned about the poor performance and achievements of the Centres during the past few years, mostly as a result of insufficient financial and human resources and their inadequacy to meet the new tasks that they are to perform towards economic recovery and transformation,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 43/216 of 21 December 1988, in which the Assembly, having considered the financial report and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 1987 and the report of the Board of Auditors, endorsed the recommendation of the Board and the concurring observation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the achievements of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres be thoroughly evaluated with a view to deciding whether that experiment should be continued or whether the mandate, number and structure of the Centres should be completely reorganized,

Noting with satisfaction the decision of the Secretary-General to appoint a review team whose mandate would be, inter alia, to examine the structure and organization of the Centres with a view to determining their suitability for the execution of their tasks, taking into account General Assembly resolution 43/216.

Noting that the current distribution and location of the Centres are in keeping with the spirit of the Final Act of Lagos in terms of the need to promote co-operation and integration within the framework of the subregional economic groupings,

1. Takes note of the report of the Review Team on the Structure, Organization and Operations of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres, in which it is concluded that the structure, Organization and operations of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres of the Economic Commission for Africa should be maintained, transformed and strengthened;

2. Warmly congratulates the Review Team on the thorough and objective manner in which it carried out its work and for its findings and recommendations;

3. Strongly supports the conclusions of the Review Team that the Centres' institutions should be transformed and strengthened to provide member States with the required technical assistance and advisory services for the execution of their joint projects within the framework of the intergovernmental organizations;

4. Adopts the new mandate of the Centres as proposed by the Review Team;

5. Strongly urges the General Assembly to provide the Centres with additional human and financial resources to enable them to respond more effectively to multinational and multisectoral programming requirements based on priorities identified by member states, and to provide immediately a minimum core of such resources;

6. Decides that, given the financial constraints and the need for better co-ordination between the Centres and intergovernmental organizations, the Centres should report directly to the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa through the committees of intergovernmental experts that will be responsible for supervising the activities of the Centres at the subregional level;

7. Urges the General Assembly and donor and technical assistance organizations to provide the Centres with sufficient resources for the formulation and implementation of programmes for the effective participation of women in the development process of their respective subregions;

8. Recommends that the current number and composition of the Centres should be maintained since they fit in with the structure of existing subregional economic groups; their distribution could, however, be reviewed in future to make for the rational use of available resources and to reflect developments in the subregional economic groupings;

9. Takes into consideration the memorandum on the strengthening and transformation of the Centres, submitted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa and annexed to the present resolution;

10. Appeals to member States to continue their support and assistance to the Centres through the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development and by any other appropriate means;

11. Urges technical assistance and funding agencies to assist in the implementation of the recommendations of the Review Team regarding the need to provide the Centres with sufficient financial and human resources for the effective execution of their mandate.

ANNEX

Memorandum of the Conference of Ministers of the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa on the Report of the Review Team on the Structures, Organization and Operations of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres

1. This memorandum is submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 43/216 of 21 December 1988 on financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors in which the Assembly endorsed the concurring recommendation and observation of the Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions with regard to the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres. The Assembly called for a thorough evaluation of the achievements of the Centres with a view to deciding whether the experiment should be continued or whether the mandate, number and structures of the Centres should be completely reorganized.

2. Pursuant to the above-mentioned resolution, an independent review team was commissioned by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, in collaboration with the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management, with the following terms of reference:

(a) To examine the original mandate of the Centres, with a view to ascertain&g its continued relevance;

(b) To examine the structure and organization of the Centres, with a view to determining their suitability for the execution of their tasks, taking into account the recommendation made in paragraph 91 of the report of the United Nations Board of Auditors;

(c) To review and report on all aspects of management of the Centres;

(d) To examine the adequacy of resources available and make recommendations aimed at strengthening the Centres for a more efficient execution of their mandate;

(e) To investigate the effectiveness of the linkages with the substantive and service organizational units of the Economic Commission for Africa;

(f) To examine any other relevant matters pertaining to the efficient and effective operations of the Centres;

(g) To report not later than 10 March 1989, or as soon as possible thereafter, to the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Under-Secretary-General for Administration and Management.

3. The Conference of Ministers expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General who, in accordance with the request contained in its resolution 659(XXIV) of 7 April 1989 on the review of the achievements of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres of the Commission, has enabled the Conference of Ministers to comment on the report of the Review Team. The Conference of Ministers wishes to reiterate that it welcomes the decision of the General Assembly on the review and evaluation of the Centres, as it believes that such a review is opportune. Finally the Conference of Ministers expresses its sincere appreciation to the Review Team for the quality of its work and for the recommendations which it has put forward.

4. The Conference of Ministers wishes in this memorandum to comment on these proposals and recommendations of the Review Team so that the General Assembly will have the benefit of its opinion. The views of the Conference of Ministers are a result of the extensive discussion that took place on the report of the twenty-fifth session of the Commission and sixteenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers, held at Tripoli from 5 to 19 May 1990, which was preceded by an equally extensive discussion at the level of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole.

5. In the light of its critical assessment of the proposals of the Review Team, the Conference of Ministers fully concurs with the findings of the Review Team that the objectives and purposes for which the Centres were established are more valid today than they were thirteen years ago, considering the socio-economic challenges that will confront the African countries in the 1990s. Member States argue strongly in favour of the maintenance, transformation and strengthening of an institution such as the Centres provided, with the additional human, technical and financial resources required for the execution of their joint projects within the framework of the intergovernmental organizations they have established.

6. The Conference of Ministers recommends that the number and membership of the Centres should be retained, since they correspond to the existing subregional economic groupings. It will continue to pay the necessary attention to the issue of the subregional distribution of the Centres with a view to ensuring the efficient utilization of available resources and in keeping with the evolution of subregional groupings.

7. The Conference of Ministers expresses its appreciation to the Centres for the services they have rendered and the role which they have played in supporting member countries' endeavours to promote subregional and regional economic co-operation and integration in providing technical assistance to intergovernmental organizations in the various subregions. In particular the Conference stresses the role of the Centres in the establishment of the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern Africa and the Economic Community of Central African States, and the co-ordinating role of the Centre among the more than forty intergovernmental organizations in West Africa.

8. The Conference of Ministers endorses the findings of the Review Team with regard to the relevance of the Centres as an institution to provide technical assistance in its efforts towards subregional groupings and the need to redefine the terms of reference of the Centres in the light of past experiences and the challenges that are ahead. Accordingly it supports the following terms of reference proposed by the Review Team:

(a) To provide member States and intergovernmental organizations with technical assistance (advisory services) in project identification, planning and the formulation of multisectoral programmes and projects for execution by the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres in association with intergovernmental organization secretariats and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system;

(b) To provide member States and intergovernmental organizations with short-term advisory services in development planning and to assist in the translation of those plans into multinational and multisectoral programmes and projects, including the identification and formulation of programmes and projects for execution by them or at their request by the Economic Commission for Africa-Subregional Technical Assistance Programmes (Multinational Programming and Operational Centres) themselves, in association with the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as required;

(c) To undertake pre-feasibility and feasibility studies, research on and analyses of priority areas identified by member States and intergovernmental organizations in order to enhance subregional co-operation and integration;

(d) To provide assistance and support in the development of human resources and in organizing training courses, seminars, lectures, workshops and round-tables, and to execute multinational development programmes and projects for socio-economic advancement with a view to strengthening the institutional and organizational capacity of member States;

(e) To develop, in the light of the above, effective working relationships with Governments, intergovernmental organizations, United Nations Development Programme offices and other international organizations, with a view to harmonizing the designing, programming and implementation of technical assistance programmes at the subregional level;

(f) To develop and execute programmes for the more effective participation of women in all aspects of development efforts at the subregional level;

(g) To collect and disseminate, at the subregional level, information and statistical data on macro-economic indicators in member States and to assist them in establishing compatible systems for exchanging information among themselves and with their development partners.

9. The Centres should continue to play the important role of co-ordination among intergovernmental organizations and should contribute to the establishment of the African economic community by undertaking studies for the harmonization and progressive linking of the various subregional economic groupings. They should also contribute to the implementation at the subregional level of strategies contained in global prospective studies carried out by the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa.

10. The Conference of Ministers realizes that the inadequacy of resources has been the major constraint in the ability of the Centres to fulfil their mandate. The build-up of their staff was severely affected by the financial crisis that the United Nations faced during most of the 1980s. Similarly, their operational activities were severely constrained by their lack of resources—financial and human. The Conference of Ministers is concerned about the resulting negative impact on the delivery of the Centres during the past few years. The capacity of the Economic Commission for Africa to decentralize staff and resources to the Centres was stretched to the limit in spite of its own severe resource constraints. It is not surprising that under such circumstances the impact of the Centres began to dwindle.

11. The Conference of Ministers fully endorses the proposal of the Review Team contained in chapter VI of its report that the financial and human resources of the Centres be significantly increased. It proposes that the Centres be provided with a cost-effective minimal core staff that will enable them to have an immediate impact on their respective subregions.

12. The Conference of Ministers does not preclude the possibility of changing the name “Multinational Programming and Operational Centres”, in the light of the evolution of their mandate and activities.

13. Finally, the Conference of Ministers reiterates its firm commitment to the Centres. As in the past, it will continue to make every possible effort to create the environment necessary to enhance their effectiveness.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/76

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/114) without vote, 23 July (meeting 101; draft by ECA (E/1990/84); agenda item 6.

African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

In May, ECA adopted a resolution [E/1990/42 (res. 680(XXV))] for action by the Economic and Social Council concerning the future of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP). The Conference of Ministers considered IDEP the only regional institute able to provide training and research services to all member States of the Commission in the area of economic development and planning, and was distressed that the shortfall in member contributions to IDEP would force its closure in 1990. It called upon member States to pay their contributions in a timely manner and for UNDP to continue its support of IDEP.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/72.

Future of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 669(XXIV) adopted on 7 April 1989 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa concerning the future funding of the activities of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning.

Recalling the Special Memorandum of the Governing Council of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning,

Considering the outstanding record of the Institute in the training of African planners and development specialists,

Considering also the continuing and growing need of African Governments for the services of the Institute in the fields of training, research and advisory services,

Considering further the possibility that the United Nations Development Programme may withdraw its financing of the Institute at the end of 1990 and that the Institute is the only regional institute able to provide training and research services to all States members of the Commission in the area of economic development and planning,

Noting with great distress that the persistent and substantial shortfall in the contributions of member States to the Institute will inevitably force its closure in 1990 if no remedial action is taken,

1. Urgent/y appeals to States members of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning:

(a) To pay immediately to the Institute their contributions for 1990 and their arrears for 1989;

(b) To pay back to the Institute all their remaining arrears according to a schedule to be arranged with the management of the Institute;

(c) To pay their regular annual contribution to the Institute in a timely manner under arrangements to be determined with the management of the Institute;

2. Calls upon the General Assembly, as a matter of urgency, to approve the inclusion of four key posts for the Institute in the United Nations regular budget, namely, the Director, the Chief of Administration and Finance and two senior lecturers, in line with the recommendation contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/62 of 26 July 1985, to enable the Institute to carry out its approved work programme and functions on a continued and sustained basis as stipulated in its Statute;

3. Appeals to the United Nations Development Programme to help the Institute to survive its present financial crisis and, in particular:

(a) To set up quickly the evaluation mission announced in October 1989;

(b) To give its full backing to the short-term training programme and the research and advisory activities of the Institute;

(c) To continue its support for the activities of the Institute in 1990 and beyond;

4. Commend the Governing Council of the Institute on the decisions taken to rationalize the use of resources and urges the management of the Institute to persevere in that endeavour.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/72

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/114) without vote, 23 July (meeting 10); draft by ECA (E/1990/84); agenda item 6.

In November, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) submitted a report on IDEP [E/1991/8]. JIU stated that since the Institute's establishment by ECA in 1962 [YUN 1962, p. 286], it had made its mark in Africa: more than a thousand men and women, having obtained their qualifications at the Institute, were working in the economic and planning areas of the public sector in various African countries. However, while enrolments had increased, financial resources had declined. UNDP's decision [YUN 1989, p. 247] to curtail its support, together with ever-increasing arrears of contributions by a large majority of African member States, had added to the Institute's ills. The JIU Inspector recommended appointment of a core staff from the UN regular budget; active collection of arrears; reassessment of the scale of contributions; rationalization of the duties of support staff; and a broadening of advisory services, catering mainly to the needs of African Governments.

In December [A/45/7/Add.8], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) noted that the 1990 budget of IDEP was $1,564,300, which should have been financed by a UNDP contribution of $735,300, $587,000 in assessed contributions of African countries and $242,000 from ECA trust funds and miscellaneous incomes. ACABQ stated that only UNDP had fully paid its contribution. Income from member States totalled $356,680, but arrears of contributions (1976-1989) were $9,853,841. ACABQ believed there was an urgent need to secure the Institute's continued operation, and recommended that the General Assembly request UNDP's Governing Council to urge the Administrator to fully implement Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/72 (see above). It recommended as an interim measure a subvention to the 1990-1991 budget in the amount of $392,200 to finance the four Institute posts called for in the Council's resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/248 A, section V.

African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

[The General Assembly. . .]

Concurring with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 14 of its report,

1. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to urge the Administrator of the Programme to implement fully Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/72 of 27 July 1990, as follows:

(a) To give its full backing to the short-term training programme and the research and advisory activities of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning;

(b) To continue its support for the activities of the Institute;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of its request to the Governing Council;

General Assembly resolution 45/248 A, section V
21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote
Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/900) without vote, 7 December (meeting 41); oral proposal: agenda item 118.

Least developed countries

The Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries held its tenth meeting in Tripoli from 14 to 15 May [E/ECA/CM.16/35], its final session before the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) held in September 1990 (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

The meeting reviewed the plight of African LDCs and noted that the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA), adopted by the first Conference in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 406], had not been a success. The meeting also dealt with matters related to commodity prices and debt alleviation, which had not been resolved by the ninth meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts of African Least Developed Countries (Tripoli, 3-5 May).

The Conference of Ministers of African LDCs adopted a statement on the draft Programme of Action for LDCs in the 1990s, which had been prepared for the Second UN Conference on LDCs.

Food and agriculture

Fisheries

Conscious of the immense contribution that fish resources could make to the region's food self-sufficiency, the ECA secretariat prepared a report for the 1990 Conference of Ministers on multinational co-operation in coastal, marine and inland fisheries. It also completed a technical publication on co-operation in development of coastal and marine fish resources for insular member States and conducted a seminar on living resources of the sea for the countries of the Yaoundé MULPOC. Problems addressed in the documents included marketing, evaluation and development of inland fisheries, improvement of port facilities and provision of equipment to small-scale producers. Also addressed were the selection and multiplication of fish species, improvement of extension services, identification of areas for multinational co-operation, analysis and co-ordination of activities performed by concerned intergovernmental organizations, mobilization of investment funds for expanded fish production, joint ventures in fish exploitation, acquisition of modern vessels for deep-sea fishing, development of aquaculture and improvement of related skills and institutions. ECA reported that it expected the publications to have substantial impact on the region's food and agricultural development strategies, and planned to produce a technical publication on measures to strengthen inter-State co-operation for optimizing marine fish resource exploitation and management in the region.

The Conference of Ministers in May adopted a resolution [E/1990/42 (res. 694(XXV))] urging African States to establish an intra-African information network on fishing vessels operating illegally and to propose measures to be instituted within the context of a regional legal framework to ban such vessels.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/77.

Co-operation in fisheries in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the abundant fishery and aquacultural resources of the African continent, particularly with the extension of national jurisdictions in the exclusive economic zones,

Considering the need for African countries to develop inter-State co-operation in order to promote the development of the fishery sector,

Convinced of the determination of African countries to overcome the difficulties they encounter in the development and acquisition of new technologies for the exploitation of fishery resources,

Recognizing the significant contribution that fishing can make to food self-sufficiency, the improvement of nutrition and the diversification of exports,

Considering the dynamism of the Indian Ocean Commission and the shared concerns of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Economic Commission for Africa and States members of the Indian Ocean Commission regarding multinational co-operation for the development of fishery resources,

Considering that the process set in motion by the Ministerial Conference on Co-operation in Fisheries Among the African States Bordering the Atlantic Ocean, held at Rabat from 30 March to 1 April 1989, encourages the countries of the South to join together in order to promote the fishery sector,

1. Calls upon African States to develop joint research programmes, in particular for the evaluation and monitoring of shared stocks;

2. Also calls upon African States to promote better integration of the fishery and aquaculture sector in their national economies in order to increase its contribution to development;

3. Urges African States to establish an intra-African information network on fishing vessels operating illegally and taking due account of existing international law, to propose measures to be instituted within the context of a regional legal framework to exclude such vessels;

4. Requests the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Development Programme, in association with the Economic Commission for Africa, to assist African countries to establish such a network;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Maritime Organization and the Economic Commission for Africa, to take fully into account the recommendations of the ministerial conference on co-operation in fisheries among the African States bordering the Atlantic Ocean, held at Rabat in 1989;

6. Calls upon African States to strengthen their co-operation in the implementation of projects for the management, exploitation and marketing of fishery and aquacultural products at the national, subregional and regional levels;

7. Requests the Economic Commission for Africa, in the interest of greater coherence and efficiency, to do its utmost to ensure the unification of policies in activities concerning inland and ocean fishery resources and the non-living resources of the sea and legal questions relating thereto;

8. Requests Member States:

(a) To make full use of advanced marine training centres in Africa and to strengthen their role;

(b) To promote the exchange of information, to make use of those centres with a view to the development and utilization of a standardized statistical system covering all aspects of fisheries at the subregional level;

(c) To promote the joint negotiation of fishery agreements concerning the high-sea fleets of non-African countries;

(d) To accord greater importance to the development of small-scale fishing whenever possible, because it can be better integrated into the African economy and has a greater capacity for adaptation to the socio-economic requirements of Africa;

(e) To improve the living conditions of African fishermen, particularly in the areas of education and health, which at present hinder development;

(f) To give priority to multinational co-operation in fish marketing and preservation, in order:

(i) To facilitate the access of African products to markets of the North, inter alia, through product promotion and the provision of market information and through export infrastructure;

(ii) To attain self-sufficiency in certain fishery resources through the development of intra-African trade, particularly the harmonization of taxation on fishery products;

9. Further requests Member States to promote the development of aquaculture in Africa and, to the extent feasible, pool their national human and financial resources within subregional bodies for applied research;

10. Exhorts Member States to explore the possibility of bringing national entrepreneurs and foreign enterprises together for the establishment of joint ventures on the basis of mutual advantageous co-operation.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/77

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/114) without vote, 23 July (meeting 101: 7-nation draft (E/1990/C.1/L.1), orally revised; agenda item 6. Sponsors: Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Ghana, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Morocco, Senegal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/184.

Co-operation in fisheries in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/225 of 18 December 1984, by which it endorsed the Strategy for Fisheries Management and Development and the associated programmes of action adopted by the World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development,

Recalling also its resolution 44/225 of 22 December 1989, entitled "Large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas",

Recognizing the significant contribution that fisheries can make to economic growth and development of the developing countries through food self-sufficiency, the improvement of nutrition and the diversification of exports,

Bearing in mind the significant capabilities that exist in developing countries in the field of fisheries, which provide opportunities for co-operation among those countries, and the importance of fostering the development of those capabilities to help developing countries realize their full potential in this regard,

Considering the need for African countries to develop inter-State co-operation in order to promote the development of the fishery sector,

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/77 of 27 July 1990, entitled "Co-operation in fisheries in Africa", as adopted;

2. Takes note of the Ministerial Conference on Co-operation in Fisheries Among the African States Bordering the Atlantic Ocean, held at Rabat from 30 March to 1 April 1989, and of the meeting of the follow-up committee, held also at Rabat, from 29 to 31 May 1990;

3. Requests Member States to make full use of advanced marine training centres in Africa, to promote the exchange of information and the joint negotiation of fisheries agreements concerning the high-sea fleets of non-African countries, to accord greater importance to the development of small-scale fishing, to improve the living conditions of African fishermen, to acknowledge the role of women in fisheries, to strengthen fish marketing and preservation facilities and to facilitate the access of African fishery products to the markets of developed countries;

4. Requests the relevant international organizations to contribute actively to the promotion of co-operation in fisheries in Africa, including participation in the preparations and work for the forthcoming ministerial conference on co-operation in fisheries among the African States bordering the Atlantic Ocean, which is scheduled to take place in 1991;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, in close consultation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1992, a report on co-operation in fisheries in Africa, including recommendations for its enhancement;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report ways and means to develop the potential capabilities of developing countries in fisheries, including economic and technical co-operation, particularly among developing countries;

7. Calls upon the international community, in particular the developed countries, to support the endeavours of developing countries to develop their fisheries infrastructures;

8. Decides to consider the issue of co-operation in fisheries in Africa at its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "Development and international economic co-operation".

Transport and Communications Decade

A March progress report [E/ECA/CM.16/21] on the preparation of the programme for the Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (UNTACDA II), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1988 [GA res. 43/179], summarized the finalized objectives, strategies and guidelines for the Decade. The goal of the Second Decade was to establish an efficient integrated transport and communications system as a basis for the physical integration of Africa and to facilitate national and international traffic so as to foster trade and self-sustained economic development.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 43/179 [YUN 1988, p. 276], the Secretary-General submitted a final progress report [A/45/185] in April regarding the Second Decade, in which he summarized the 10 global objectives approved by the Conference of Ministers. They were: implementing a phased and balanced programme of development and management of transport and communications infrastructure, taking into account particularly the needs and requirements of island and landlocked countries; rehabilitation, upgrading and maintenance of the most critical elements of existing infrastructure and equipment; improvement of human resource planning, development and utilization; improvement of operational efficiency, service quality and availability by increasing competitiveness, productivity and profitability; establishing information systems for analysis, better management and investment planning; developing manufacturing capabilities to cope with rapid technological and market changes, and reducing foreign exchange requirements; improvement of transport safety and security, including strengthening environmental protection measures; improvement of transport and communications in rural areas, where the majority of the population lived and the greatest percentage of economic production took place; improvement of urban transport; and establishment and strengthening of interregional liaisons. The report stated that the programme would be focused on key problem areas requiring regional and sub-regional co-operation for their solution. A general survey of African transport and communications would be conducted, with similar surveys at the mid-point and the end of the programme.

By decision 45/438 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's final report.

UNDP consideration

A March report [DP/1990/32] to UNDP's Governing Council reviewed progress made in the commitment of $5 million earmarked for the first Decade and provided an overview of UNDP's role in preparation for UNTACDA II, for which $2 million was earmarked. In March, the Steering Committee, composed of UNDP, ECA, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the African Development Bank, held its first meeting to select project personnel and to draw up a programme of activities leading to preparation of a programme for the Second Decade, to be submitted through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly in 1991.

In June [E/1990/30 (dec. 90/30)], the Governing Council took note of the report, and of the steps taken by the UNDP Administrator to ensure the effective contribution of UNDP to preparations for UNTACDA II. The Council called upon the Administrator to continue consultations with relevant UN bodies and African organizations involved in the first Decade, and to report in 1991 on UNDP's role in mobilizing resources for, and implementation of, the Second Decade.

Industrial development

In March, the ninth joint progress report [E/ECA/CM.16/16] was submitted by the secretariats of OAU, ECA and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) on implementation of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980 [GA res. 35/66 B]. The report stated that the first Decade's main objective was to promote self-reliant and self-sustained industrial development by creating a basis for bringing about structural transformation of industry, which involved a shift from external to internal engines of growth and the provision of a long-term perspective for sustained socio-economic development. A prerequisite was establishment of a minimum integrated structure of basic industries which would be mutually supportive and provide inputs to other industries and economic sectors.

According to the report, the mid-term evaluation had confirmed that almost no progress had been made in achieving the Decade's basic objectives. Major constraints included structural weaknesses; inadequate strategies and institutional infrastructure; lack of political commitment to market and resources pooling; shortage of skilled manpower and lack of entrepreneurship; limited financial resources, including foreign exchange, diminishing financial investment and technical assistance; collapsing export prices; and the strain created by the activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) and structural adjustment programmes. Proposals were advanced for the consideration of African Governments and organizations, including: according the highest priority to industry, especially those industries supporting food production and agricultural development; and shifting from the traditional project-by-project approach to an integrated programme approach involving linkages between the industrial and other sectors, especially agriculture, transport and communications, energy and environment, as well as support areas, particularly human resources development, technology, institutional framework and financing. The report also pointed to the need to prepare a core programme for the Second Decade (1991-2000) and to secure funding for it. Each Government would also need to undertake an agonizing and candid evaluation of the progress of industrialization in the country during the first Decade and compare the 1980 situation with that of 1990. Such a review should involve political leaders, administrators, enterprise managers, banks, the private sector, engineering and consulting firms, agents of distribution, and academics, and would be an essential starting point for the preparation of a national industrial plan for the Second Decade. A major effort was required to stimulate domestic private investment and to attract foreign capital. The recommendation of the first Decade that each country prepare a portfolio of industrial investment projects to develop the core sector and stimulate domestic factor outputs had yet to be translated into reality in most African countries. Regenerating existing industries would require identifying suitable enterprises for use of scarce financial resources, including foreign exchange, possibly leading to closure of some plants; combining plant rehabilitation with a restructuring programme entailing investment in new industrial capacities and infrastructure; and adjusting policy and administrative frameworks better to support the domestic and international efforts for industrial regeneration. Ministries of industry should be responsible for diagnostic studies and proposing remedial action, including privatization, as well as co-ordinating a repair and maintenance capabilities development programme, exploring possibilities of producing spare parts within the country.

The report also recommended development of a data and information base; regulation of foreign private enterprises and promotion of African multinational enterprises; determination of the role of and alternatives to TNCs; accelerating the production of indigenous inputs; development of local entrepreneurship to reduce the external overdependence of African countries on such manpower; taking African realities into full consideration in management training, rather than continuing to rely on foreign models; and intensification of intra-African industrial co-operation, especially in developing strategic core industries for a subregion or group of countries, and establishing African multinational enterprises. In that connection the African Industrial Development Fund should be strengthened, not only in financing pre-investment studies but in providing credits and guarantees, especially for multinational projects.

ECA, UNIDO and OAU consulted on preparation of the Second Decade and worked out a resource requirement of $1,345,890, out of which the United Nations earmarked $461,900, with the balance of $883,900 constituting the UNIDO contribution from the $8.6 million earmarked by UNIDO for the special programme for Africa for the biennium 1990-1991. The resources were to be used to assist African countries and sub-regional organizations in elaborating their national and subregional programmes.

Report of Secretary-General. In May the Secretary-General reported [A/45/257-E/1990/61] on preparations for the Second Decade, as requested by the General Assembly in 1989 [GA res. 44/237]. He summarized the joint OAU-ECA-UNIDO progress report (see above) and reported on subsequent developments. The Secretary-General said that in order to accelerate preparation of the Second Decade's programme, UNIDO, on behalf of the three secretariats, had informed all African countries of the availability of UNIDO and ECA technical assistance for preparation of programmes; by 10 April, 40 countries had indicated to UNIDO their interests and needs. ECA had further requested each country to nominate a local expert to work with UNIDO-provided international experts to assist Governments in preparing national programmes.

By decision 45/438 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Social development

Information

The ECA Conference of Ministers in May unanimously adopted a resolution on improving information flows in the African region [E/1990/42 (res. 679(XXV))]. After noting with concern the precarious situation of the bulk of Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS) funding for technical assistance, which was scheduled to end on 31 December, the Ministers strongly urged UNDP to ensure continuation of PADIS technical assistance activities on behalf of member States; exhorted African member States to include PADIS in their pledges to the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development; appealed to bilateral and multilateral donors to continue and upgrade support for PADIS; and urged the Secretary-General to provide PADIS with the necessary computer equipment to ensure its effective functioning.

Administrative questions

CPC consideration

Responding to a request made in 1989 by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) for an in-depth evaluation of ECA's programme on development issues and policies, the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/AC.51/1990/5] in which he pointed out that ECA intergovernmental bodies and General Assembly organs had recently conducted assessments of 80 per cent of regular budgetary expenditures and all of the extrabudgetary expenditures of the development programme. He recommended that further evaluation could best consist of an examination of the implementation of recent recommendations and intergovernmental decisions, and proposed that the examination be included in the triennial review of the development issues and policy programmes to be submitted to CPC in 1991.

Technical facilities of the Commission

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/73.

Improving the technical facilities of the Economic Commission for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the need for providing adequate equipment and training in the region in current information technology,

Concerned about the paucity of up-to-date office automation and computing equipment at the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa.

Also concerned about the constraints that such a situation imposes on the Commission to properly assist African member States in enhancing their planning and monitoring capacities,

Urges the Secretary-General to provide the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa with the office automation and computing equipment necessary to enable it to function efficiently and to provide better service to member States.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/73

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/114) without vote. 23 July (meeting 10); draft by ECA (E/1990/84); agenda item 6.

In a December report [A/45/7/Add.8] to the General Assembly, ACABQ said it had no objection to the estimate of $240,000 for making available to ECA financial resources required to collect up-to-date information on implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development (1986- 1990), as called for in Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/75.

Translation and interpretation services

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/201 B, section VIII [YUN 1989, p. 255], requesting a review of ECA translation and interpretation services, including the question of retention of trained personnel and the possibility of restoring the Training Centre, the Secretary-General submitted an October note [A/C.5/45/26] in which he said it would be premature to re-establish the translator training programme, discontinued in the biennium 1982-1983, before final results were known regarding competitive examinations for recruitment of candidates from ECA region countries. ECA did not have a permanent interpretation staff. He stated that it seemed uneconomical to establish a core interpretation unit owing to the pattern of distribution of meetings, and that ECA should continue to rely on freelance interpretation services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/248 B, section II.

Review of translation and interpretation services for all official languages in the Economic Commission for Africa

[The General Assembly ...]

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the review of the translation and interpretation services for all official languages in the Economic Commission for Africa;

1. Expresses its concern over the difficulties experienced by the Economic Commission for Africa, particularly in the area of conference services;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take action for the revival of a training programme for translators/précis-writers in all official languages of the Economic Commission for Africa and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on the measures taken;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that this training programme is comparable in quality with other similar United Nations training programmes and to make every effort to utilize existing facilities and expertise within the region;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to ensure the immediate recruitment of those candidates who, after completing their training, have passed the competitive translators/précis-writers examination;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to make proposals in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 on the improvement of conference services in the Economic Commission for Africa, including the provision of a permanent staff for interpretation;

6. Decides to consider again the question of conference services for the Economic Commission for Africa at its forty-sixth session, in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

General Assembly resolution 45/248 B, section II

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/900) without vote, 19 December (meeting 501; draft by Chairman (A/C.5/45/L.19), following informal consultations; agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 5th Committee 29, 50; plenary 72.

Asia and the Pacific

The forty-sixth session [E/1990/40] of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) met in Bangkok, Thailand, from 4 to 13 June. The session had originally been scheduled to take place in Kuala Lumpur. By a 1 February note [E/1990/L.12], the Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council that Malaysia had informed ESCAP that it was not in a position to host the session. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/203 of 9 February, decided to reschedule the session in Bangkok.

Eight resolutions were adopted by the Commission. Regarding strengthening ESCAP population activities in the 1990s [E/1990/40(res. 46/1)], the Commission requested the United Nations and other international donors to provide additional resources and greater assistance to that end and looked forward to the 1992 Fourth Asian and Pacific Population Conference. A resolution on urbanization strategies [res. 46/2] called for environmentally sound and sustainable development and management in urban areas, as well as a regional action plan to assist members, and the Commission decided to convene, subject to resource availability, a regional conference on the topic in 1992. ESCAP requested [res. 46/3] its Executive Secretary to continue to improve secretariat administrative and operational functioning, while noting with appreciation the Executive Secretary's efforts in that regard. Preparations for the 1990 Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries [res. 46/4](seePARTTHREE, Chapter I) were addressed and the support of member States, donors and financial institutions was called for. In regard to meeting basic learning needs [res. 46/5] and follow-up to the 1990 World Conference on Education for All, held in Jomtien, Thailand, in March, the Commission noted the General Assembly's proclamation of 1990 as International Literacy Year (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), and decided to convene later in the year a meeting of senior officials to formulate a regional programme on education for all. Recognizing the need for the integration of women in all aspects of development [res. 46/6], ESCAP decided to consider women in development as the theme of a Commission session in the near future and requested that a regional intergovernmental meeting on implementing the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women [YUN 1985, p. 937] be convened in 1993. Resolutions were also adopted on promotion of foreign investment in the region's least developed countries (LDCs) [res. 46/7], and on technical and economic co-operation among developing countries for least developed, land-locked and island developing countries [res. 46/8].

In a message to ESCAP, the Secretary-General said that although the region had led the world with relatively vigorous average economic growth rates throughout the 1980s, most of the region's least developed and Pacific island economies had achieved scant progress. The more disadvantaged countries continued to need special attention, including additional assistance from the international community. Despite substantial progress, poverty, hunger, disease and illiteracy remained the plight of hundreds of millions of Asians. Deficiencies in infrastructure and technology, aside from financial resources, also posed serious problems in many countries.

In a policy statement, the Executive Secretary of ESCAP observed that in the 1980s the region's developing countries had earned a world-wide reputation for dynamism and resilience, while elsewhere many developed and developing countries were experiencing a sharp economic decline. Average growth of the developing ESCAP region had accelerated from 5.3 per cent in the 1970s to almost 7 per cent in the 1980s, but growth had been sporadic and unevenly spread, and slowing growth in the late 1980s had raised some questions about the durability of the region's momentum. There were increasing signs that growth could slow further unless the region's developing economies underwent restructuring. Among the factors in faltering growth were mounting inflation, currency realignments, labour shortages and rising wages, diminished export competitiveness, social unrest, infrastructural constraints and environmental deterioration. Many developing countries of the region, in efforts to spur growth, had implemented adjustment measures with ill effects on the quality of life.

Regarding the regional co-operative framework, the Executive Secretary proposed formation of an ESCAP council for regional economic co-operation within the Commission's evolving organizational structure to perform deliberative and decision-making functions related to the promotion of economic co-operation and advantageous restructuring. Such a body could play a valuable catalytic role as the Governments' monitor of intraregional trade and investment. It would identify trends, opportunities and unnoticed complementarities, and establish task forces for implementing aspects of the work programme.

Economic and social trends

Notwithstanding the adverse developments in the world economic environment, the region's developing countries maintained their overall growth rate of 5.4 per cent in 1990, the same as in 1989, it was reported in the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1990 [Sales No. E.91.II.F.10] and a later summary [E/1991/45]. Slow growth of exports, however, affected the balance of payments and economic growth capacity, particularly of those economies that were highly trade oriented. Oil price rises since the Persian Gulf crisis added to the emerging trend of declining economic growth rates and accelerating inflation. Despite these difficulties, a large number of countries maintained high growth rates, if lower than in previous years, and quite a few improved their performance. Of the region's three developed countries, Japan remained strong with a gross national product (GNP) growth rate that was expected to exceed 5 per cent, compared with 1989's 4.9 per cent. Australia's economy was expected to grow at 3.3 per cent compared to 4.7 per cent the previous year, but New Zealand's economy continued to stagnate in 1990, after recovering somewhat in 1989 from a decline in 1988.

China and the Republic of Korea achieved higher growth rates, while Indonesia had an estimated 7 per cent growth rate (compared to 6.9 per cent in 1989), Malaysia 9.2 per cent (8.5 per cent in 1989), Singapore 8.3 per cent (9.2 per cent in 1989), and Thailand 9.5 per cent (12.2 per cent in 1989)—some of the highest rates in the region and the world. The Philippines' growth rate, however, deteriorated from 5.7 per cent in 1989 to 3.1 per cent. Growth prospects in 1990 remained weak in Viet Nam. India's growth remained the same at 4.5 per cent. Pakistan's was estimated to be higher at 5.2 per cent (4.8 per cent in 1989); Bangladesh and Sri Lanka improved markedly at 5.8 and 5.9 per cent, respectively, but Nepal, whose growth rate had fallen from 7.8 per cent in 1988 to 2.3 per cent in 1989, saw its growth fall to 2 per cent. Iran recovered from a decade of turmoil and war and low oil prices with estimated growth of 4 per cent in 1989 and over 7 per cent in 1990.

In sharp contrast to the generally high rates of growth in other developing countries, economic growth in the region's LDCs remained weak and unstable, lacking any definite trends. Bhutan's growth decelerated while Maldives sustained 12 per cent average growth in 1985-1989. Myanmar's GDP grew 7.5 per cent in 1989 after an 11.4 per cent decline in 1988; the Lao People's Democratic Republic growth had accelerated since 1989's 4 per cent rate; Afghanistan's growth prospects appeared to have improved following a 1.2 per cent annual decline in 1979-1986; and Samoa and Vanuatu had achieved moderate 1989 growth rates of 1.3 per cent and 2 per cent, respectively.

Like the LDCs, most Pacific island countries experienced unstable growth. Fiji vastly improved its performance, with a GDP growth rate of 12.1 per cent in 1989, compared to 0.2 per cent in 1988. Solomon Islands had a rate of 5.5 per cent in 1989 (5.3 per cent in 1988); Tonga 3.6 per cent (minus 2.1 per cent in 1988); and Papua New Guinea 1.4 per cent (3.1 per cent in 1988).

Agriculture remained the most important sector in most economies of the region. Among the major agricultural producers, Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan and Viet Nam achieved reasonably high agricultural production growth in 1989, and only in China, India and Thailand did production increase more slowly in 1989 than in 1988. Among the least developed and smaller economies, Fiji, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Solomon Islands achieved production rates in 1989 that far exceeded the previous two years. Among major producers, Thailand experienced a decline because of a large drop in rice production. Production also declined in Mongolia, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, the Republic of Korea and Sri Lanka. In recent years, livestock and fishery products had recorded higher growth rates than the crops sector, providing supplementary income to farmers, greater income stability and increased protein in the people's diet.

Industrial growth in 1987-1988 had reached 15 to 20 per cent in a number of countries, but recent performance was uneven. East and South-East Asia generally achieved much faster growth, but most of the region's least developed and other small economies performed poorly. During 1989 and 1990, however, even the fast-growing economies experienced sharp deceleration due to labour shortages, wage and cost increases, and lower demand and protectionist threats from abroad.

Much of the ESCAP region's economic dynamism had been attributed to its trade dynamism—many countries had shown a trade turnover of 60 per cent or more of GDP. However, exports grew at a much slower pace in 1989-1990. For the developing economies, growth in current dollar value of exports decelerated from 22.8 per cent in 1988 to 12.7 per cent in 1989, while for imports the rate fell from 26.7 per cent to 14.6 per cent. Available 1990 data indicated a further slow-down. The region's three developed countries made only a 4.6 per cent gain in exports in 1989, compared to 16.7 per cent in 1988. Australia made the largest export gain at 11.7 per cent, compared with 3.9 per cent in Japan and 0.7 per cent in New Zealand. Among developing countries, China's export rate fell to 4.8 per cent in 1989, from 20.5 per cent in 1988. Hong Kong's 1989 export growth was about half the 30.3 per cent rate of 1988, and the Republic of Korea had one of the sharpest export growth drops—3 per cent in 1989, compared to 28.4 per cent in 1988. Deceleration in trade growth also occurred in South-East Asia, but in South Asia—India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka—export growth rates accelerated. Iran also experienced a sharp export increase of 35.6 per cent in 1989 after a 1988 decline of 21.9 per cent, largely as a result of increases in both oil production and prices. Current account balance of payments worsened in 1989 for many countries and with the exception of net oil exporters (including China) were likely to be worse in 1990 as a result of slower export growth, higher import costs (particularly of oil) and the loss of remittances and tourist revenues.

Despite high economic growth, the region still continued to have deep-seated social problems, the most basic being poverty. The number of people below the poverty line, estimated at 800 million, equalled three quarters of the world's total poor in developing countries. Approximately a third of the adult population, or 640 million, were both poor and illiterate; hence eradication of illiteracy was of great significance in poverty alleviation. However, primary education might remain ineffective as enrolments were still far less than universal in many countries, drop-out rates remained high and the educational infrastructure was grossly inadequate to impart effective literacy and numeracy to the large and growing number of primary school-aged children, particularly in least developed and some other populous countries.

The development of social infrastructure—for education, health, urban housing and other facilities—had lagged considerably behind the physical and economic infrastructure. With few exceptions, the share of government spending on social infrastructure tended to rise slowly or remain constant in the developing ESCAP region during the last two decades. Allocations generally accounted for about one fifth of central government expenditure in the late 1980s, though in several countries, such as India and Pakistan, provincial and local government played a more important role than the central authorities. There were significant variations, with China and Iran being among the countries having the sharpest rise in social sector allocation. Several countries registered a marginal fall in social infrastructure funding. Malaysia and Thailand achieved high levels of coverage of social infrastructure by the late 1980s.

ESCAP activities in 1990

ESCAP continued its activities in 1990 in food and agriculture, environment, human settlements, industrial development, natural resources, population and other areas. During the year, the Committee on Population and Social Development held its second session (Bangkok, 19-23 November), and the Committee on Shipping, Transport and Communications, its thirteenth session (Bangkok, 17-21 December).

Regional co-operation

In 1990, the Commission prepared a study [E/ESCAP/703 & Corr.1,2] on restructuring the developing ESCAP economies in the 1990s, with special reference to regional economic co-operation. The study highlighted emerging issues at the national, regional and global levels that would have an impact on prospects for further growth and co-operation in the region in the coming decade. Closely related to the restructuring study was the preparatory work on the regional perspective for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I). Expert group meetings and seminars on the restructuring theme were held. The Commission generally agreed with the study's conclusions, including the need for regional co-operation in facilitating the future process of restructuring in developing economies, but felt that greater emphasis was needed on equity, alleviation of poverty, human resources development and environmental protection. The Commission cautioned against the creation of closed trading blocs, which could adversely affect the evolution of an open trading system through the negotiations in the Uruguay Round [YUN 1986, p. 1210] of multilateral trade negotiations, on which the hopes of many Asian and Pacific developing economies were based. The Commission recommended that the theme for its 1991 session should focus on industrial restructuring in the region, in particular with a view to promoting regional co-operation. Regarding the Executive Secretary's proposal for an ESCAP council for regional economic co-operation (see above), the Commission requested him to elaborate its objectives and terms of reference.

Implementation of Least Developed Country Action Programme

The Commission noted with concern that the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) [YUN 1981, p. 406] had failed to achieve its main targets. The Commission noted with satisfaction, however, the various restructuring measures adopted by the Governments concerned, including measures to reduce government deficits, increase export competitiveness, enhance the market's role and reduce the size of the subsistence sector, and urged continued efforts in those directions.

As part of the preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I), held in Paris in September, country studies and synthesis papers were prepared, and an expert group meeting and an intergovernmental meeting were held. The meetings reviewed the socio-economic situation of the LDCs of the ESCAP region during the 1980s and made recommendations for accelerating their growth in the 1990s.

Advisory assistance was also given to authorities in selected LDCs in the formulation of new development plans and programmes. Assistance was oriented mainly towards vital areas such as human resources development and institution-building.

Special problems of Pacific States

The Commission had before it a report [E/ESCAP/736 & Add.1] on the special problems faced by Pacific island countries. The Commission expressed concern at the unfavourable economic performance of most such countries in the 1980s, and took note of various constraints on them, including severe physical barriers, natural disasters, limited export base and less-than-favourable external trade environments, as well as grossly inadequate human resources and institutions. The annual ESCAP orientation programme for Pacific island officials continued in 1990. Several Governments provided support for the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre (EPOC). The Executive Secretary said all possible assistance would be provided to the Republic of the Marshall Islands regarding its expressed interest in becoming a full member of ESCAP.

Economic and technical co-operation

In 1990, ESCAP continued its activities related to technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC). At its annual meeting, it took note of the suggestion that priority be given to co-operation in trade, finance, technology, industry, entrepreneurial development and agriculture. The Commission suggested that co-operative efforts and expertise-sharing be carried out regarding prevention and mitigation of natural disasters. A multisectoral TCDC programming meeting was hosted by Indonesia (Jakarta, 30 July-3 August). The ESCAP secretariat supported 33 operational TCDC activities during the year. In addition, field study visits were increasingly undertaken on a TCDC basis on specific subjects, including water resources development, coconut intercropping, tribology techniques, entrepreneurship programmes for youth, and agricultural equipment and machinery.

International trade and development finance

At the Commission's 1990 session, particular interest was expressed in the outcome of the Uruguay Round [YUN 1986, p. 1210] of multilateral trade negotiations as a means to halt the retreat from multilateralism and establish a free multilateral trading system with transparent and enforceable rules. Concern was expressed that the textile trade, important to the region's developing countries, had not been properly addressed in the Uruguay Round.

Activities in 1990 centred around five subprogrammes related to trade expansion, promotion and development; the development of commodities of interest to the region; and the promotion of subregional, regional and interregional trade co-operation. Technical assistance and advisory services were provided to facilitate the formulation and application of appropriate strategies and policies related to restructuring, production and trade in the commodity sector, particularly the silk industry. Training in commodity policy formulation was also provided. Mongolia requested technical assistance to facilitate transition to a market-oriented economy with state regulation and to organize training programmes to acquaint officials with international trading practices and regulations.

Transnational corporations

The Joint Unit on Transnational Corporations of ESCAP and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations (UNCTC) published the Asia-Pacific TNC Review 1990, which included articles on TNC participation in particular sectors of the economy. The ESCAP/UNCTC Joint Unit also continued to strengthen its information activities, including activities related to the development of national information systems and the establishment of a regional information network. The Joint Unit also supported UNCTC advisory services, and provided services to Bangladesh, Nepal, Thailand and Viet Nam.

The Commission emphasized that TNC objectives should conform to those of host countries, particularly in relation to national development objectives, and that countries of the region should co-operate and exchange information regarding TNCs, including by creation of regional and subregional information networks.

Transport, shipping and communications

ESCAP intensified its support in 1990 for national efforts to pursue an integrated approach to medium- and long-term planning of the transport and communications sector, through national workshops and advisory services. It conducted a meeting of national experts on integrated transport planning, carried out national surveys in a number of countries and organized a meeting of senior experts. The secretariat contributed to the modernization of railways through the transfer of railway technology, including computerization and electrification. A survey mission to selected countries to assess telecommunications needs was undertaken and a report prepared for the thirteenth session of the Committee on Shipping, Transport and Communications in December.

A regional maritime strategy study [E/ESCAP/714] promoted the planning of national shipping policy and cost control within ports, and aimed to provide decision makers with assistance in planning maritime sector investments. The Commission expressed concern that the United Nations Statistical Office might soon discontinue statistics that were the basis of the regional maritime strategy study trade data base, and were also of considerable use to countries of the ESCAP region. A series of workshops and seminars on multimodal transport were held. Regional co-operation was further promoted through meetings of chief executives in the maritime sector.

Asian Highway network

The Commission reaffirmed the important role of the Asian Highway in facilitating transport of people and goods within and outside the region, in the promotion of trade and tourism and in bringing countries of the region closer economically, commercially and socially. It recognized that the decisions of China, Mongolia and Myanmar to join the project opened up the possibility of providing alternative road connections between Europe and Asia. It also noted with interest the construction project of the Mekong River bridge linking Thailand and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. The Commission felt that the main emphasis in the Asian Highway development should be on eliminating gaps in the network and upgrading the existing highways to ensure the safety and convenience of road users.

Transport and Communications Decade

ESCAP organized five intercountry missions in connection with the mid-term review of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994, declared by ESCAP in 1984 [YUN 1984, p. 623]. On the basis of the interim report [E/ESCAP/719], the Commission recommended that the Decade's second half focus on such matters as human resources development, technology transfer, TCDC promotion, strengthening of intraregional and interregional linkages, and optimum use of resources through integrated planning of transport and communications, with particular emphasis on the problems and needs of LDCs, land-locked and Pacific island countries and of developing countries in the region. The second session of the Inter-agency Consultative Group Meeting on the Transport and Communications Decade met in Bangkok in December, prior to a meeting later in the month of senior government representatives responsible for the Decade, also in Bangkok.

Tourism

ESCAP continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries with a view to securing greater socio-economic benefits from the sound development of tourism. Case-studies on the economic impact of tourism in Indonesia, Malaysia, Maldives and Thailand were conducted, as well as a study on the environmental aspects of mountain tourism in Nepal. To keep developing countries informed regarding the tourism sector, the ESCAP Tourism Review was issued.

Three regional meetings were held in 1990 in regard to tourism: the Seminar on the Promotion of Tourism in the ESCAP region; an Expert Group Meeting on the Measurement of the Economic Impact of Tourism by Input-output Analysis; and a Workshop on Human Resources Development in the Tourism Sector.

Industrial development

The ESCAP programme of work in the area of industrial development included the promotion of small- and medium-scale industries, investment promotion, privatization, special activities for LDCs and island developing countries and promotion of regional co-operation to accelerate economic growth. Advisory services were provided to Bangladesh, China, Malaysia and Viet Nam. Joint studies, meetings and seminars were organized with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). A symposium on business collaborations between entrepreneurs from Nepal and the Federal Republic of Germany took place in April and May.

Natural resources and energy

In the mineral sector, ESCAP's role in mineral resources exploration and development and the strengthening of co-operation and co-ordination with related international organizations received increasing international recognition. Activities focused on the compilation of regional thematic maps, preparation of publications on geology and an inventory of mineral resources, promotion of subregional co-operation, strengthening of national geological/exploration agencies through group training and advisory services and the appraisal of geology for planning purposes through various activities under the geology and urban development programme.

The ESCAP energy programme continued to contribute to regional co-operation through documentation provided for the Committee on Natural Resources and Energy as well as through intercountry projects and publications. Sectoral energy demand studies conducted under an intercountry project of ESCAP and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) were assessed, and were found to have enhanced the capability of the eight participating countries to conduct sectoral energy demand analysis, and to have fostered regional co-operation and the exchange of information. Six regional energy working groups were established. The first meeting of the Regional TCDC Working Group on Rural Energy Planning and Development took place in November. In December, the Working Group on Wind Energy Technology was formed.

As for water resources, guidelines were prepared for preparation of national water plans; a manual and guidelines were prepared for comprehensive flood-loss prevention management; and various publications were issued on water resources management. Work was undertaken on environmental considerations in water resources development; urban flood-loss prevention and mitigation; water quality management; and water-use statistics.

Marine affairs

An ESCAP study on the implications of the new régime established under the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea [YUN 1982, p. 178] highlighted the rights and obligations of coastal countries and reviewed sectoral policies and legislation. The Commission strongly urged that the secretariat provide advisory services to countries on request, as well as technical assistance and training in the various sectors of marine affairs and the law of the sea. Activities so far had concentrated on strengthening countries' assessing and management of non-living resources under national jurisdiction. There were also many requests regarding assistance in the legal aspects of marine affairs, including drafting legislation.

Food and agriculture

The Commission's activities continued to focus on three broad areas: improvement of agricultural policies, planning and information; increasing production and improving supply, distribution and marketing of critical farm inputs; and integrated rural development, emphasizing poverty alleviation. Assistance was provided through research studies, seminars, training workshops, information collection and dissemination and technical assistance. The Commission commended strategies such as crop diversification to mitigate the effects of low export prices for agricultural commodities resulting from the protectionist policies of developed countries.

The Fertilizer Advisory, Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific (FADINAP), a project of ESCAP, UNIDO and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), fostered fertilizer sector development through dissemination of information, multifarious training programmes and advisory services, and contributed greatly to increasing agricultural production, reducing marketing costs, and soil fertility maintenance. The Agricultural Requisites Scheme for Asia and the Pacific (ARSAP) continued its work on agro-pesticide safety and information, including the establishment of guidelines and their translation into local languages.

In co-operation with the United States National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) and the Asian Institute of Technology (AIT), ESCAP conducted a training course on satellite crop monitoring technology to improve drought early warning in participating countries.

Other ESCAP activities included publication of a training manual and training guidelines on farm broadcasting for agricultural extension workers and a regional seminar-cum-study tour in China and the Republic of Korea in September to exchange information on technologies related to gasification of rice husk and other biomass for electricity generation and substitution for fossil fuel.

Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery

The Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery (RNAM) continued to assist national institutes to develop appropriate agricultural machines both through the exchange of commercial machines among themselves and through dissemination of information on the latest developments in agricultural mechanization technologies. Two workshops and a training course were held, in Indonesia, Pakistan and the Republic of Korea. The Commission requested UNDP to reconsider its decision to terminate funding of RNAM programme support activities after 1991.

Science and technology

Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology

The Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) strengthened the technology absorption capabilities of developing countries and promoted technology utilization, despite serious financial problems. APCTT prepared a technology atlas which had achieved wide acceptance. Some countries had used the atlas methodologies for their technological needs assessment. The APCTT Governing Board had suggested establishing an endowment fund with capital of $5 million, the interest of which would be used to meet the Centre's institutional costs. The Commission recommended that the possibility of such a fund be explored. On 24 May, the foundation stone was laid in New Delhi for construction of a new building for the Centre's permanent headquarters.

Remote sensing

The ESCAP/UNDP Regional Remote Sensing Programme (RRSP) functioned as an effective co-ordination mechanism for interaction among the region's national centres and programmes. The network of national focal points established under RRSP, including the Regional Information Service contact points, acted as the co-ordinating linkages for regional efforts on enhanced TCDC collaboration in remote sensing development. Through RRSP meetings, training, pilot programmes and other activities, participating countries—particularly LDCs in the region—were assisted in broadening the base of their remote sensing manpower and in promoting the use of remote sensing in national socio-economic development activities. Workshops in 1990 dealt with the application of remote sensing to desertification and vegetation mapping, geotectonic mapping and mineral exploration, natural resources and environmental development projects and other topics. In June, the seventh session of the Intergovernmental Consultative Committee on RRSP was held in Kuala Lumpur.

Social and cultural development

The formulation of a regional social development strategy towards the year 2000 and beyond, to be presented at the Fourth Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development in 1991, was central to ESCAP activities in the area of social development.

In December, a seminar on co-operation between government agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the planning and delivery of social services took place in Hong Kong. Other meetings and workshops dealt with such issues as drug abuse prevention programmes, development policies and programmes for youth and quality-of-life surveys. The World Conference on Education for All was held in Jomtien, Thailand, in March. An inter-agency consultation on a Programme of Action in Support of Education for All was held in July, and a meeting of senior officials on the same subject was convened in October. The ESCAP secretariat contributed to national efforts to promote policies and programmes to stimulate greater participation of the entire population in the development process, with special emphasis on less advantaged groups such as women, youth, disabled persons and the elderly.

ESCAP undertook a number of activities for human resources development within the framework of the 1988 Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development [YUN 1988, p. 282]. While the requisite institutional mechanisms to support an integrated approach continued to be lacking in many countries, a network of national focal points for human resources development was activated to ensure co-ordination of the implementation of the Plan. ESCAP would serve as the regional co-ordinating body to ensure effective interaction among the national focal points and to promote TCDC through facilitating exchanges of experience, information and expertise.

In preparation for a survey of the quality of life in the region, background studies on methodological issues were undertaken. It was suggested that social welfare services could be added to the basic components of quality of life, which were education, health, employment, shelter, environment, social security and social defence. The Commission emphasized the link between improvement of the quality of life and the development of human resources, with effective planning and delivery of social services as a necessary prerequisite. The secretariat, in co-operation with France, established the ESCAP Human Resources Development Award to encourage exemplary research and other innovative achievements.

Population

Activities regarding population helped create greater awareness of major issues in the area of population aging, increased knowledge about the interrelationship of population and development variables and facilitated the development of a framework for research and planning. The award of fellowships greatly assisted the countries with limited or no training facilities in developing a cadre of manpower trained in demography. Improved utilization of population data at the national level was promoted through technical assistance, training and information services provided to 13 national population information centres in the Asia-Pacific Population Information Network (POPIN).

The population policies subprogramme contributed significantly to narrowing the gap between stated fertility goals and actual fertility levels through technical assistance on fertility-regulating policies.

The Commission reiterated the need for changing the orientation of family planning programmes to increase their effectiveness and redirect them towards the qualitative aspects of service delivery, with the key to improved quality of service being a wide choice of contraceptive measures duly reflecting national characteristics and cultural traditions, easy accessibility of services and proper counselling about various contraception methods.

Human settlements

The ESCAP human settlements programme addressed three main areas: integrated settlements policies and planning; development of shelter, infrastructure and land; and stimulation of institutional capabilities and public participation. Priority was accorded to TCDC activities in settlement planning and development; strengthening institutional capabilities through technical co-operation; and promotion of public participation in human settlements financing and development. Leaflets and guidelines were prepared to aid Governments in applying innovative schemes for building regulations and housing finance.

The Commission decided [E/1990/40 (res. 46/2)], subject to availability of resources, to convene a high-level regional conference in 1992 on "Urbanization strategies in the ESCAP region—towards environmentally sound and sustainable development and management of urban areas", with special reference to urban planning, development and management, which would review the state of urbanization in the region, consider the regional plan of action and develop a framework for formulation of national action plans.

Women in development

The ESCAP secretariat generated greater awareness in the region of women's legal rights. Policy guidelines were prepared in order to stimulate national action to eliminate discriminatory legislative provisions and practices that impeded the achievement of equal rights for women. National, subregional and regional women's information systems were strengthened through training, improvement of indicators of women's issues and more systematic information exchange. Directories and newsletters on the status and participation of women in development were issued. Meetings included a subregional workshop on the processing of information on women in development (Bangkok, October/November) and a meeting to evaluate guidelines on integrating women's concerns in development planning (Bangkok, November).

The Commission decided [res. 46/6] to consider "Women in development" as the theme of a Commission session in the near future to give special attention to policies and programmes at the national and regional levels regarding the advancement of women and their full participation in development. Subject to available resources, it requested an analytical study on progress and obstacles in implementing the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women [YUN 1985, p. 937], formulation of regional action proposals for improving the status of women and strengthening of secretariat capacity by an additional regular budget post for the sub-programme on women in development.

Environment

The ESCAP environment programme aimed at the achievement of environmentally sound and sustainable development. Activities included strengthening of desertification and deforestation control, development of coastal environmental management plans for Pakistan and Tonga and assistance to environmental impact analyses and related training for Bangladesh, the Pacific and the eastern seaboard of Thailand. A regional expert meeting was held on trade and the economic aspects of environmental sustainability. Another workshop formulated recommendations on protected area management training priorities as part of a joint ESCAP/UNDP/World Bank project on the management of critical ecosystems. A report entitled State of the Environment in Asia and the Pacific 1990 [ST/ESCAP/917] was prepared for the Ministerial-level Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, October).

The Commission noted with concern that adverse environmental effects were highly visible in the region and that, if current trends continued, it would not be possible to sustain the momentum of regional development. It stressed the need for increased regional and international co-operation to solve resource depletion and environmental pollution problems and recommended that the secretariat lay greater emphasis on an intersectoral approach to environment and development issues, particularly since industrial, urban and agricultural development had been creating most of the environmental problems. It recommended incorporating into the secretariat's work such programmes as monitoring of hazardous and toxic products and wastes and their transboundary movement, and transfer of environmentally benign technology.

Statistics

The statistics development work of ESCAP continued in 1990, with historically high levels of delivery maintained from the previous year. Advisory services were strengthened and missions were mounted to developing countries in the region. Workshops, seminars and training courses dealt with such topics as household survey methodology, economic classifications for population censuses, revision of the system of national accounts and electronic data processing. The Working Group of Statistical Experts held its seventh session in Bangkok in December.

The Commission stressed the need for the secretariat to promote government computerization further through advisory services and training opportunities, and supported in particular the convening of a working group of experts on government computerization.

Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific

The Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (SIAP), in Tokyo, expanded its training programmes as well as data processing. The fourth five-year phase of SIAP ended in September 1990, and the fifth began in October. The new phase incorporated the thrusts of various Commission suggestions, including human resources development and management skills, public sector management and problem-solving approaches in the use of statistics. The Commission reiterated that the Institute should place special emphasis in its programmes on statistical developments in LDCs and the Pacific island developing countries, with particular stress on the use of TCDC modalities.

Organizational questions

Venue of forty-seventh ESCAP session

By decision 1990/279 of 27 July, the Economic and Social Council decided that the forty-seventh (1991) session of ESCAP should be held in Seoul, Republic of Korea, in accordance with a 1985 General Assembly resolution on the pattern of conferences [res. 40/243].

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) held its forty-fifth session [E/1990/41] from 18 to 27 April in Geneva and held a resumed session on 14 December [E/1990/41/Add.1] to consider the report of a Special Working Group to define priority areas for the Commission in view of the profound changes that were taking place in Europe.

During the forty-fifth session, the Commission adopted one resolution and 14 decisions on: the work of ECE and future activities [E/1990/41 (res. 1(45))]; terms of reference of senior advisers on environmental and water problems [dec. B(45)]; code of conduct on accidental pollution of transboundary inland waters [dec. C(45)]; economies in transition in Eastern and Central Europe [dec. D(45)]; climate change [dec. E(45)]; statistical activities [dec. F(45)]; the ECE contribution to the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction [dec. G(45)] (see PART THREE, Chapter III); report of the World Commission on Environment and Development [dec. H(45)]; co-operation in environmental protection [dec. I(45)]; UN/EDIFACT [dec. J(45)]; transport co-operation [dec. K(45)]; economic co-operation in the Mediterranean [dec. L(45)]; standardization [dec. M(45)]; and engineering industries and automation [dec. N(45)].

The Commission decided [dec. A(45)] to create the Special Working Group at its forty-fifth session, to be chaired by the session's Bureau. The Group was mandated not only to define priority areas but to develop practical measures regarding those areas in order to improve the usefulness of the work of the Commission in accordance with the invitation addressed to ECE by the Bonn Conference on Economic Co-operation in Europe (19 March-11 April). At the resumed session, the Commission adopted two decisions on its future activities [E/1990/41/Add.1 (dec. O(45))] and its institutional arrangements [dec. P(45)]. The priority areas for future activity were environment, transport, statistics, trade facilitation and economic analysis. The institutional arrangements involved convening one-day ad hoc informal Commission meetings between annual sessions at least once every three months to monitor progress in work programmes, consult on policy matters and aid in preparations for the annual session. It was also decided to shorten annual sessions, with the target for the 1991 session set at seven days.

Economic trends

According to the summary [E/1991/64] of the Economic Survey of Europe in 1990-1991 [Sales No. E.91.II.E.1], the euphoria following the revolutionary changes in most of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union in 1989 had given way to a more sober appreciation of the economic and political problems in those countries. Transformation of centrally planned economies into decentralized market economies was seen more clearly as a task of enormous complexity, which could not be accomplished merely by a quick transfusion of technology and technicians from the West. That change in perception could be positive if facile optimism was replaced by carefully constructed policies designed to deal with the highly complex problems of transformation.

The Eastern European countries had embarked on radical economic transformation within the context of eight years of sustained growth in the Western market economies. Hungary and Poland had been able to take advantage of that favourable climate to boost considerably their exports to the West in 1990. However, the Gulf crisis led to a sharp fall in business and consumer confidence in the latter part of the year, with Western Europe's GDP likely to fall below 2 per cent for the first time since 1983.

The recession in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, already under way in a number of countries towards the end of 1989, spread throughout the region and deepened considerably in 1990. Net material product (NMP) fell by an average of 11 per cent in Eastern Europe and 4 per cent in the Soviet Union, while gross material product declined by more than 7.5 per cent in Yugoslavia. While the recession was general, its severity varied from an output fall of 3 to 5.5 per cent in Czechoslovakia, Hungary and the Soviet Union to more than 10 per cent in Bulgaria, Poland and Romania, and to nearly 20 per cent in the former German Democratic Republic. Industrial production fell more than NMP, by more than 18 per cent on average in Eastern Europe. The year 1990 was the worst in the last decade for Eastern European agricultural output, which fell 3.5 per cent.

Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland were following a coherent programme of stabilization and transformation, but economic deterioration in Bulgaria and the Soviet Union reflected loss of central control and the absence of coherent alternatives. Romania had begun in the latter half of 1990 to make considerable efforts to develop a framework of radical reform. Yugoslavia had had a clear reform programme at the end of 1989, but failed to maintain central control over monetary and fiscal policy in 1990. The fall in output in Eastern countries in 1990 had been much greater than expected, with the old command structure of the centrally planned economies collapsing much faster than expected and much faster than new, market economy factors could be put in place. Other developments were: effective disintegration of previous Eastern European community trade and payments systems; the unexpected pace of German reunification, leading to a fall in imports to the former German Democratic Republic; and disruptions in Soviet energy supplies to Eastern Europe, which were more than 20 per cent less than agreed. Altogether, trade among the Eastern European countries fell by about 20 per cent in volume in 1990, while the volume of trade between them and the Soviet Union, more than half consisting of fuels, dropped 13-15 per cent. Gross fixed investment, a principal instrument of structural change and economic transformation, fell by an average of 14 per cent in Eastern Europe, and by 4 per cent in the Soviet Union, where it was expected to fall 14 per cent in 1991. In the Eastern transition economies unemployment had risen sharply by the end of 1990, with total unemployed estimated at over 3.5 million in Eastern Europe and 2 million in the Soviet Union. Even so, the general unemployment rate was still below 2 per cent of the labour force. The inflation problem had worsened and it was unlikely to be solved quickly. Annual rates varied from 10 per cent in Czechoslovakia to more than 580 per cent in Poland and Yugoslavia. By the end of 1990, the month-to-month rate was above 5 per cent in the other Eastern countries. A major feature of 1990 was the increasing difficulty of obtaining new commercial credit from the West, as Western private creditors' perceptions of the credit risk of Eastern borrowers underwent a marked change.

Assistance to Eastern Europe

Western private investors continued to show great interest in Eastern Europe, though there was considerable hesitancy in actually investing there until market institutions had been constructed, which depended on official and technical assistance from Western countries. The number of foreign investment registrations in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union increased nearly sixfold, from 2,900 to 16,700, but the amount of foreign capital involved was very small, as Western companies were unwilling to commit large capital sums until reform was more advanced. Lending to Eastern Europe (excluding Yugoslavia) and the Soviet Union by the Bank for International Settlements reporting banks fell by nearly $7 billion in the first nine months of 1990, and the decline would have been even larger but for an accumulation of payments arrears in Bulgaria, Poland and the Soviet Union. In 1990, the value of debt relief far exceeded grants from the Group of 24 industrialized countries, and was about the same magnitude as new official credit to Eastern countries.

Activities in 1990

In 1990, ECE continued to promote multilateral co-operation in Europe against a background of historic changes in the region, which had altered the political, economic and social landscape. Commission activities included the facilitation of trade through such programmes as UN/EDIFACT and promotion of joint ventures and the development of small- and medium-sized enterprises; statistics, including the holding of the Seminar on Integrated Statistical Information Systems (ISIS 90) in May 1990; energy; science and technology; and agriculture, particularly standardization policies; timber; human settlements; and engineering and automation. At its resumed forty-fifth session, ECE adopted a new orientation which clearly reflected the changing interests and priorities of its member countries in the context of the new economic and political realities in the region, and identified five priority areas (environment, transport, statistics, trade facilitation and economic analysis).

The Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (twenty-sixth session, 28 May-1 June) [ECE/EC.AD/36] provided methods of work, themes, and a provisional list of topics that might be addressed in workshops in the ECE region. The programme of work was directed towards strengthening international economic co-operation in the region, and included an element on sustainable economic development.

International trade

The ECE Committee on the Development of Trade (thirty-ninth session, Geneva, 3-5 December) [ECE/TRADE/173] continued its activities to improve conditions for trade and industrial co-operation in the region. It revised its programme of work in the light of the Special Working Group's emphasis on trade facilitation as a priority area, particularly development of electronic data exchange, which would permit unprecedented increases in efficiency and financial savings. In adopting the proposals of the Special Working Group, the Commission stressed [E/1990/41/Add.1 (dec. O(45))] the importance of addressing the special problems in trade facilitation for countries changing to a market economy and those regarded as developing from an economic point of view. The Committee was asked by the Commission to continue working towards further development of mutually advantageous trade and commercial and industrial co-operation in the region [E/1990/41 (res. 1(45))].

The Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures met in March and September to consider harmonization of the description of freight costs, simpler shipping marks, legal or procedural issues hampering international trade and constituting obstacles to the introduction of electronic data exchange, pre-shipment inspection and development of UN/EDIFACT messages.

A meeting of experts in May considered the results of the secretariat survey of the impact of east-west compensation trade on small- and medium-sized enterprises in the region, and suggested updating and publishing the study and continuing research. In November, a joint meeting of experts of the Committee on the Development of Trade and the Conference of European Statisticians discussed disparities of foreign trade statistics and undertook a comprehensive review.

As the issue of privatization was a major concern for all countries in transition, in December the Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry began consideration of a guide on legal aspects of restructuring ownership forms in industry. The Working Party finalized work on the Guide on International Buy-back Contracts, which had to be reprinted within a few months due to demand. It accepted an invitation from Austria to host a workshop on management of joint ventures in Vienna in May 1991.

Regarding future work in the development of trade, the Commission identified the following subjects for workshops, symposia and similar activities: costs of protectionism and managed trade in terms of foregone output and employment; links between trade and investment; and encouraging small- and medium-sized enterprises to engage in international trade.

Industry

The Chemical Industry Committee held its twenty-third session in Geneva (3-5 October) [ECE/CHEM/77], its last session under that name, which was to be changed to the Working Party on the Chemical Industry. A seminar, Changes in Eastern Chemical Markets—the Role of Joint Ventures, Wholly-Owned Subsidiaries and Industry Federations, was held in Warsaw, Poland, in December. Preparations began for a future High-level Meeting on Co-operation and Sustainable Development in the Chemical Industry.

In October, the Meeting on Questions of Statistics concerning Engineering Industries and Automation reviewed sectoral developments, including aspects related to international trade. A Seminar on Air Pollution Control in Engineering Industries was held in Geneva in November. The first workshop on rehabilitation engineering was held in Washington, D.C., in June. An ad hoc meeting in October elaborated a programme for a seminar on new materials and their application to the engineering industries. A second ad hoc meeting to finalize the study of food-processing machinery, including packaging techniques, was held in October.

The Steel Committee held its fifty-eighth session in Geneva (24-26 October), its last session before changing its name to the Working Party on Steel. A review was made of the major trends in production, consumption and trade in steel and steel-making raw materials; investment and prices; and factors influencing steel consumption in the face of competitive materials. A Seminar on the Technical and Economic Aspects of the Manufacture of Coated Steel Products was held in Genoa, Italy, in May.

Regarding future work, the Commission identified [E/1990/41/Add.1 (dec. O(45))] the following issues: promotion of investment in industrial upgrading and new production technologies; promotion of sustainable industrial development, including creation of appropriate environmental standards and practices for industry; and upgrading the labour force and redeploying it from uncompetitive industries.

Transport

An informal group of high-level experts was set up by the Inland Transport Committee (fifty-second session, 29 January-2 February) to consider the implications of the recent political and economic developments in Europe, and the growing concern about the environmental impact of transport. An ECE-initiated, Europe-wide "Road Safety Week" (1-7 October) was held in conjunction with national campaigns. Regarding the Trans-European North-South Railway Project, a Project Central Office was established in Budapest in October.

The Commission endorsed [E/1990/41 (dec. K(45))] the importance of continuing multilateral efforts to reduce air pollution and noise by motor vehicles and invited ECE countries to make sufficiently available unleaded fuel of a satisfactory quality along international transit routes. It requested [dec. O(45)] the Committee to give priority to: standardization and administration of existing conventions; revision and development of those agreements, if necessary, to facilitate their extension to economies in transition; helping economies in transition and the member countries that were developing from an economic point of view with planning and advice on infrastructural developments needed to achieve a harmonized and coherent European transport network; promotion of Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (UN/EDIFACT); and promotion of environmentally sound modes of transport.

Energy

The seventh session of the Senior Advisors to ECE Governments on Energy (Geneva, 29 October-1 November) [ECE/ENERGY/15] reviewed the energy situation in the region from the point of view of sustainable development and examined the possibility of an information campaign entitled "Energy Efficiency 2000".

At its eighty-sixth session (Geneva, 25-28 September) [ECE/COAL/121], the Coal Committee emphasized the importance attached to future co-operation, particularly in the context of recent events in the Middle East, and identified as sectoral priorities environmental protection and safety, sustainability of coal conversion, transition of the coal industry to market conditions, standardization, classification and codification aiming at facilitating trade or enhancing safety, and co-operation on efficient, clean coal technologies. A Workshop on Market Adaptation of Coal Industries in Central and Eastern Europe was organized in the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and France in June. Task forces were set up on the elaboration of an international classification of coals and on the elaboration of an international classification of the dynamic phenomena in mines.

The Committee on Electric Power held its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 5-8 February) [ECE/EP/80]. It concentrated on such issues as medium- and long-term prospects, new technologies, impact on the environment of electric power stations, implications of climate change for electricity supply, and Central European interconnections. A Seminar on the National Use of Electricity was held in Iassi, Romania, in November.

The Committee on Gas held its thirty-sixth session (Geneva, 15-18 January) [ECE/GAS/97]. A Symposium on the Use of Computers in the Gas Industry was held in Budapest in October.

The Commission decided [(dec. O(45))] to change the Committees on Coal, Gas and Electric Power to Working Parties. A new Committee on Energy would take up the work programme of the Senior Advisors to ECE Governments on Energy. The changes were part of the ECE effort to adapt to new political and economic circumstances. The Commission identified the following areas to be addressed by workshops, symposia and similar activities: promoting efficient use of energy and its conservation; development of environmentally sound energy production, storage, distribution and consumption, including safety aspects; and policies to facilitate adjustment by enterprises and households to world market prices for energy.

Science and technology

The Senior Advisors to ECE Governments on Science and Technology held their eighteenth session (Geneva, 17-20 September) [ECE/SC.TECH/39]. They discussed the economic and social impact of biotechnology with a view to the public response and government policies to facilitate public involvement. Collection of information on safety guidelines in biotechnology continued, and summaries of submissions from 18 Governments were issued. The Seminar on the Role of Long-Term Forecasting in the Formulation of Science and Technology Policies was held in Prague in October.

Agriculture

The Committee on Agricultural Problems, which held its forty-first session (Geneva, 5-8 March) [ECE/AGRI/107], continued to monitor European markets for cereals, livestock and meat, milk and dairy products, as well as trade in agricultural produce and inputs. A symposium dealing with the use of computers in agriculture examined the impact of major developments such as policy deregulation, market liberalization, environmental factors and international product standardization on information needs and decision-making at the enterprise level, and the consequent increased need for computerization. At another symposium, on organic and chemical fertilizers, environmental questions figured prominently, including reduction of emissions into water supplies and the air, and the equilibrium between economic and ecological factors in ensuring long-term soil fertility and improving output quality.

The Timber Committee held its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 8-12 October) [ECE/TIM/54]. With the 1990 publication of Timber Trends and Prospects in North America, the series of studies covering the region was completed. Environmental concerns were at the forefront of two seminars, one in Germany (on forest site protection and conservation for sustained yield) and the other in the United Kingdom (on pesticide use in forestry).

The Commission identified [dec. O(45)] as topics for workshops, symposia and similar activities issues of agriculture and environment in a market-economy context, and economic analysis in the agri-food sector, emphasizing economies in transition, as discussed by the Ad Hoc Working Group on ECE-FAO Co-operation at its meeting in Berlin (18-19 September).

Environment

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental and Water Problems held their third session (Geneva, 26 February-2 March) [ECE/ENVWA/14]. The Senior Advisers completed work on the European Red List of Globally Threatened Animals and Plants, and made recommendations to ECE Governments on wastewater management and methods and techniques for the prediction of environmental impacts. They also issued a report on the relationship between economic development and the conservation of flora, fauna and habitat. The Senior Advisers took steps to strengthen co-operation with other international organizations, and considered possibilities for improving monitoring of the state of the environment throughout the ECE region.

The Executive Body for the Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution in November asked the Working Group on Abatement Strategies to take up work on nitrogen oxides, tropospheric ozone and sulphur dioxide, including preparation of a revised draft protocol on the latter. The Executive Body also established task forces on persistent organic pollutants and on emissions of heavy metals.

The Commission adopted [E/1990/41 (dec. C(45))] the Code of Conduct on Accidental Pollution of Transboundary Inland Waters [E/ECE/1225] and invited Governments to develop or strengthen methodologies, measures and practices regarding accidental pollution, at both the pre- and post-accident stages, and recommended that they apply the Code as an essential element of further co-operation among them as well as an input to national water-pollution control policies.

The environment was one of the five priority areas chosen by the Commission in adopting [dec. O(45)] the proposals of the Special Working Group. It attached special importance to ECE as a forum for elaborating legal instruments and follow-up action on the environment, and urged the Executive Secretary to take all possible steps for servicing activities in the framework of conventions currently under way. The Executive Body and the Senior Advisers on the environment were asked to initiate a continuing review of priorities and to give special attention to activities that could support development of environmentally sound economies in countries in transition as well as those that were developing economically, including the exchange of information and experience related to appropriate technologies.

Human settlements

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning held its fifty-first session (Geneva, 11-14 September) [ECE/HBP/80] and identified two primary concerns: assistance to countries in transition and sustainable human settlements development. It agreed to prepare a strategy for environmentally sound and sustainable development of human settlements in the region. The Committee recognized the need to ensure fast response to practical problems faced by countries in transition. In December, a first workshop was held in Romania. The Seminar on Distributional Aspects of Housing and Taxation Policies in October adopted recommendations concerning countries in transition.

The Commission proposed [dec. O(45)] as a subject for workshops, symposia and similar activities socio-economic issues of sustainable housing development in the context of a market economy.

Standardization

The eleventh Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for Standardization (Geneva, 7-11 May) [ECE/STAND/32] agreed on a new programme element to provide practical steps (workshops and seminars) to assist countries in transition to adopt new national standardization principles and practices. The meeting was the last under that name, which was to be changed to the Working Party on Standardization Policies [dec. O(45)].

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians, at its thirty-eighth plenary session (Geneva, 11-15 June) [ECE/CES/36], undertook an in-depth review of its work programme and set new priorities, emphasizing transition, integration and development projects. Highlights of the Conference's substantive work included seminars and meetings on demographic and economic consequences and implications of population age structures, disparities in foreign trade statistics, and labour statistics in countries in transition. The Working Party on Electronic Data Processing focused on new processing techniques and data base management systems, standards for electronic interchange of statistical data and the needs of transition countries in statistical information technology. Special attention was paid to supporting statistical offices in transition through seven workshops held in 1990.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) held its twenty-third session in Caracas, Venezuela (3-11 May) [E/1990/43]. In his message to ECLAC, the Secretary-General praised two documents of the session, Changing Production Patterns with Social Equity: The Prime Task of Latin American and Caribbean Development in the 1990s [Sales No. E.90.II.G.6] and a report on options to reduce the debt burden in Latin America and the Caribbean [LC/G.1605 (SES.23/5)], and hoped that the debate would help change the productive apparatus and relieve poverty in the region. He stated that tremendous changes under way at the world level, particularly in Eastern Europe, had caught Latin America at a time of great vulnerability. External debt, whose systemic nature had taken a long time to be identified, was the greatest barrier to the region's full participation in the restructuring of the world economy. Unless an effective solution was found, the globalization process could force the region to fall back on its own resources rather than seeking negotiated integration. Restructuring called for vigorous steps to promote a form of integration that would help reduce the debt burden, generate needed resources and consolidate democratic Governments. The changes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union and their integration into the world economy must not threaten the high priority of international co-operation with the countries of the South. The countries of the ECLAC region needed to unite their efforts in order to enhance their potential for positive participation in the emerging new international economic system. The Secretary-General also said there was an urgent need to protect the environment from hazards related to current development patterns.

The Executive Secretary of ECLAC proposed three main lines of approach for development: international competitiveness and the need to make changes in the production patterns of the region; a dynamic and creative interaction between public and private agents to enable the region to build its own road to development on the basis of the special features and circumstances of each country; and collective action and intraregional co-operation to increase the region's influence in international and economic relations. He said that developed countries could not elude their responsibilities in supporting internal efforts of development, for the eradication of poverty would benefit the whole world community.

The Commission adopted 15 resolutions which related to: support for Haiti [E/1990/43 (res. 503(XXIII))]; admission of Italy as an ECLAC member [res. 504(XXIII)]; admission of Puerto Rico as an associate member [res. 505(XXIII)]; economic co-operation between the Caribbean nations and the other countries of the region [res. 506(XXIII)]; changing production patterns, social equity and the international development strategy [res. 507(XXIII)]; co-operation among developing countries and regions [res. 508(XXIII)]; ECLAC calendar of conferences, 1990-1992 [res. 509(XXIII)]; ECLAC work programme, 1992-1993 [res. 510(XXIII)]; work guidelines for the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) [res. 511(XXIII)]; work priorities for the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE) [res. 512(XXIII)]; the role of women in the region's economic and social development [res. 513(XXIII)]; drinking-water supply and sanitation to the year 2000 [res. 514(XXIII)]; ECLAC activities in the fight against drug abuse [res. 515(XXIII)] and in the area of environment [res. 516(XXIII)]; and the venue and date of the next session [res. 517(XXIII)].

Economic trends

The summary [E/1991/56] of the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1990 [Sales No. E.91.II.6.2, vols. 1&2] stated that notwithstanding the bold efforts of Governments and their citizens to correct macro-economic disequilibria, the region's economic performance in 1990 was clearly unsatisfactory. Economic output, as measured by gross domestic product (GDP), fell by 0.5 per cent. As a result, GDP per capita declined, by 2.6 per cent, for the third year in a row, leaving it at the same level as in 1977. Nine countries had output falls and six more grew at rates equal or inferior to population growth rates. In some countries, which had in previous years experienced reduced inflationary pressure, price levels again showed an upward trend, and economic policy was once again strongly conditioned by the central objective of stabilizing prices.

Although most countries increased exports, those rises were partially offset by falls in primary commodity export prices, except for petroleum, whose sudden price rise again unsettled the regional scene. The region's total export value rose by 7 per cent, to almost $120 billion; even so, the rate of export growth declined for the second consecutive year. At the same time, the total value of imports increased 14 per cent, causing a fall in the merchandise trade surplus from almost $30 billion in 1989 to just over $26 billion in 1990.

Accrued interest payments and profit remittances fell slightly, due to lower international interest rates, while net capital inflows increased significantly due to two countries (Mexico and Chile) regaining partial access to voluntary capital markets, inflows of short-term capital and forced foreign financing associated with accumulation of arrears in foreign debt servicing. Consequently, the net transfer of financial resources from the region declined substantially in 1990, to nearly $19 billion.

In 1990, the region's total external debt increased by 3.5 per cent, to $423 billion, after having fallen slightly in 1989. There were some selective advances as well as set-backs regarding debt, with Costa Rica, Mexico, Uruguay and Venezuela implementing debt-reduction programmes. There were also some advances in the treatment of official debt, with seven official bilateral debt rescheduling exercises carried out, some of which included more favourable terms. The problem of arrears in debt servicing with multilateral bodies persisted, although in some cases new mechanisms emerged to regularize payments. All in all, the international debt strategy continued to show serious deficiencies regarding the elimination of debt overhang.

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

The activities of the various regional forums took on greater importance and dynamism as a result of the new momentum gained by the process of subregional integration. Economic and social problems were given prominence, and intensive work was undertaken in ministerial meetings and technical support provided by regional integration agencies. ECLAC supported those efforts and helped to develop a basic document and proposals on restructuring integration. It also collaborated with the organizations that were members of the Inter-Agency Commission on Implementation of the Decisions of the Central American Economic Co-operation Committee. Regarding economic relations between Mexico and Central America, ECLAC participated in the formulation of negotiation proposals, which were submitted for consideration to authorities in the subregion.

Although the Central American Economic Co-operation Committee did not meet, one of the most important tasks of the secretariat was participation in the elaboration of basic documents for discussion of the economic aspects of the agenda of the meeting of Central American presidents held in Antigua, Guatemala, in mid-1990.

The Committee of High-Level Government Experts (CEGAN) held its seventeenth session in La Paz, Bolivia (5-7 March) [LC/G.1617(CEG.17/4)]. Its main objective was to consider the changing of production patterns in Latin America and the Caribbean, which was to be the region's priority task in the 1990s.

The Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) held their thirteenth meeting (Santiago, Chile, 5-6 November). The report on activities carried out in 1990 was adopted by consensus and new guidelines were elaborated, incorporating suggestions and orientations linked to the themes of integration programmes and projects, government reforms, project banks, macroeconomic programming and leading indicators, and strengthening of regional co-operation, including relations with non-governmental organizations (NGOS).

Other activities included a seminar on stabilization and external debt (Santiago, 26 April); the Second Regional Seminar on Fiscal Policy, Stabilization and Adjustment (Santiago, 20-24 August); and national technical seminars on fiscal policy, organized in Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico and Venezuela.

A Commission resolution [res. 507(XXIII)] agreed with the secretariat emphasis on the need for systematic efforts to bring about changes in production patterns with social equity and to mitigate the problems of extreme poverty, which would require the combination of a consistent and stable form of macro-economic management with sectoral policies, as well as integration of short- and long-term policies and institutional changes or rearrangements to facilitate creative interaction between public and private agents. It recommended support for increased co-operation and mutual trade between countries of the region and Eastern Europe, and enumerated priority concerns for the region including reactivation of growth, reversal of the negative trend of financial resource transfer from the region's developing countries to developed countries, and improved market access, with particular attention to multilateral negotiations aimed at the roll-back of protectionism. Another Commission resolution [res. 511(XXIII)] provided guidelines to ILPES and recommended that it expand links with other actors in the economic process.

Industrial, scientific and technological development

Activities related to industry focused on industrial restructuring in Latin America and at the international level, support for small- and medium-scale industry and the capital goods industry.

The Joint ECLAC/UNIDO Industry and Technology Division offered a course on industrial planning and policies between October and December as part of the ILPES International Course on Development, Planning and Public Policies. Seminars and meetings held during the year included a symposium on the restructuring of production (Santiago, 8-9 November). ECLAC also co-operated in all technical aspects of the Latin American Symposium on Small- and Medium-sized Business, held in November.

International trade and development finance

The International Trade and Development Division addressed the major issues of: Latin America and the Caribbean and the proposed new international economic order; Latin American and Caribbean economic relations with other regions; economic integration and co-operation; and development finance. Regarding commodities, a Meeting on the Roles of Commodity Exchanges in the Expansion of Latin American and Caribbean Commodity Exports was held in Santiago (22-23 November). In the field of services, four studies on international trade in this area (insurance, construction, and professional services and tourism) were prepared and then examined at expert meetings in Caracas, Venezuela (10-15 September). In respect of the region's relations with developed market-economy countries, a seminar was conducted regarding relations with the European Economic Community in the 1990s (Santiago, 25-26 October). Two meetings of experts, both held in Santiago, concerned economic integration and regional co-operation: one on prospects for integration in Latin America and Europe regarding intraregional trade and for countries with insufficient markets (2-3 April) and the other on economic integration and changing production patterns with social equity (3-4 December). Another seminar (Santiago, 3-5 December) dealt with financial system regulation and pension system reform. Technical co-operation continued to be provided to a number of countries in the region.

Natural resources and energy

The Natural Resources and Energy Division, through the Water Resources Unit, contributed significantly to elaboration of management approaches and methods for development of high-altitude river basins in the Andean region and the integral management of water resources. A model programme of training courses on integrated water resource management was designed with the help of a working group of national experts (Santiago, 25-27 April). A seminar to discuss the proposed model programme was held in Petropolis, Brazil (2-5 October).

In the area of mining, documents were prepared for a technical meeting on intraregional trade and the mining and metallurgical sector, to be held in July 1991.

Regarding marine resources, a survey was taken of the efforts that had been made at the regional and subregional levels to promote protection of the marine environment and the incorporation of considerations relating to the oceans into strategies for the sustainable and equitable development of natural resources.

Transport

Support was provided to countries in the region in analysing aspects of the transport, distribution, marketing and competitiveness of their exports. Research on the relationship between structural changes in ports and the competitiveness of Latin America's foreign trade was published, showing how current port structures limited the region's export possibilities. Those results were widely disseminated through national seminars in most countries of the region.

Other activities included seminars on the procedure for the international transit of goods from Bolivia through Peru (La Paz, Bolivia, 15 January) and on subsidies, regulation and ownership of mass transport in the metropolitan region of Chile (Santiago, 29 March).

A seminar on the impact of telecommunications on the economic and social development of the region was organized in Santiago (22 and 25 May).

Social development

The Social Development Division made advances in several fields, including the analysis of social change, the formulation of social policies to reorient development styles and the design of social development strategies for several countries in the region. The Division participated in meetings and conferences on a variety of issues including youth, education, health care and the human dimension of global changes.

Integration of women

The Social Development Division attached great importance to activities related to the integration of women in development. Most of its efforts related to preparations for regional conferences and meetings. A meeting on changing production patterns and the integration of women in development was also held (Santiago, 13-14 November).

The tenth Meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 28-29 May) [LC/L.565(MDM.10/8)] analysed substantive and operative activities, and emphasized the need to link the work of ECLAC on women's issues to the proposal on changing production patterns with social equity, as well as to continue to enhance understanding of education, culture, gender relations, information and statistics, as well as the situations of specific groups of women, including young women, migrant women and women in the informal sector. The meeting also stressed the need to design regional projects to generate fresh resources to improve the living conditions of women.

The eleventh Meeting of the Presiding Officers (Varadero, Cuba, 19-20 November) [LC/L.605(MDM.11/9)] discussed regional activities and projects and preparations for the fifth session of the Regional Conference, to be held in September 1991.

A Commission resolution [res. 513(XXIII)] on the role of women endorsed the assessment and recommendations made by the fourth Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean [YUN 1988, p. 302] and by the ninth Meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Conference [YUN 1989, p. 270].

Environment

Activities were carried out under the joint programme of ECLAC and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP); they aimed to strengthen the incorporation of the environmental dimension in the work of the ECLAC system and to promote strategies for environmentally sustainable development, including through dissemination and training activities.

The first Meeting of High-level Government-designated Experts to review the draft Action Plan for the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean was held in Santiago (10-13 July). The third Meeting of the Latin American and Caribbean Commission on Development and Environment (Santiago, 2-3 August) was also organized. The Environmental Dimension in Development Planning [Sales No. E.90.II.G.14] was published in 1990.

Regional meetings and seminars dealt with the following topics: natural and cultural heritage inventories and accounts; environmentally sustainable development; development planning and coastal marine resources; and regulation and control of air pollution from fixed sources in the production and energy sectors.

A Commission resolution [res. 516(XXIII)] expressed grave concern at the increasing environmental degradation and contamination of ground and sea water, air and soil, as well as at the over-intensive use of natural resources and the rapid decline in biological diversity, frequently caused by policies and strategies failing to take environmental aspects into account.

Population

The Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE), the institution within the ECLAC system charged with the regional population programme, implemented its activities within the framework of three related subject areas: technical co-operation and applied research for the integration of population variables in development planning; population information and technology; and training. Close ties were established with national institutions concerned with economic and social development and countries were assisted in compiling data.

Technical assistance was provided to countries regarding processing of population and housing censuses, stressing the long-term use of the 1990 round of censuses by the public and private sectors at both the national and subnational levels. With respect to training, the third and final Postgraduate Course on Population Dynamics and Development Programmes and Policies was completed in Santiago, and the thirteenth intensive regional course on demographic analysis for development was held in San José, Costa Rica.

Seminars addressed the issues of fertility transition in Latin America, population dynamics and development, population and health, biodemographic aspects of population in certain indigenous reservations, updating indirect techniques for population measurement, and the global training programme in population and development.

Food and agriculture

Activities carried out by the Agriculture Division focused on analysis of agro-industries and the study of agro-industrial chains in selected countries. Seminars were held in each country with the participation of government authorities and officials and relevant economic agents such as producers, industrialists and technicians.

A seminar on the export of dairy products was held in Montevideo, Uruguay (19-20 July). The Division also organized a workshop on trade in organic products in Santiago (20 October), and a national seminar on the cultivation and transportation of fruit, held in Neuquén, Argentina (5-7 July). Collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) included organizing a round table on taxation and public spending on agriculture (Santiago, 3-5 October).

Statistics and economic projections

Activities of the Statistics and Projections Division included efforts to enlarge the regional framework of statistical information and dissemination of new computer technologies to ECLAC countries. In the field of regional co-operation, eight seminars were offered in support of the 1990 census round, including on the subjects of computer systems for census processing and post-census evaluation and the use of master samples. A meeting was held of representatives of central banks and national bureaux of statistics to discuss creation of a regional data base on the current economic situation of countries of the region (Santiago, 5-7 December). Other seminars covered microcomputer systems for processing statistical data, national accounts and computer data bases and dissemination.

Transnational corporations

The joint ECLAC/Centre on Transnational Corporations (TNCs) unit gave special attention to studying the role of foreign capital in the changing of production patterns or industrial restructuring under way in most of the countries of the region. It continued its previous work on studies of the four countries selected as pilot cases: Brazil, Chile, Colombia and Mexico. The joint unit also participated in the sixteenth session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations (New York, 2-11 April 1990).

Subregional activities

Caribbean

ECLAC's subregional headquarters for the Caribbean, at Port of Spain, Trinidad, organized a Conference on Young Women in Development, held in Curaçao (8-11 March) as part of its efforts to assist countries in working towards the goal of full integration of women into the national development process.

Other meetings organized by the subregional programme included: a preparatory meeting for Caribbean island developing States (Saint Lucia, 27-31 March); the ninth plenary session of the Caribbean Council for Science and Technology (Kingston, Jamaica, 9-10 September); a meeting on diesel and gas-based power generation (Port of Spain, 22-24 October); and a forum on higher-level human resource development strategies (Bridgetown, Barbados, 28-29 November).

Haiti

A Commission resolution [res. 503(XXIII)], considering that Haiti, the only country in the region on the list of least developed countries, was not part of any regional group in the preparatory activities for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I), decided to support any action that country took in the context of the Conference. It appealed to all official bilateral sources and other sources, including UN agencies and programmes, to intensify co-operation activities with Haiti, and urged ECLAC member countries to give tangible form to their support by providing technical co-operation to Haiti.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/4 [YUN 1989, p. 271], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/514] in September on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System (SELA). He concluded that co-operation had become stronger and broader in scope. The trend towards incorporating such co-operation into agreements and conventions had continued and a number of UN system organizations, programmes and agencies that had not yet initiated co-operative activities had expressed willingness to explore ways of doing so in the near future. An essential aspect was co-operation between ECLAC and SELA, which shared various areas of activity. Regarding the Assembly's request in its 1989 resolution that the Secretary-General arrange a meeting in 1990 of the secretariats of the United Nations and SELA to identify areas of possible broadened co-operation, he said that a number of working meetings had been held between SELA and various UN entities, and that consultations were being held to determine a date and place for a more general meeting to which all UN organizations would be invited. Consultations had also been initiated, he reported, to fulfil the Assembly's 1989 request regarding the drafting of an agreement of co-operation between the United Nations and SELA.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/5.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/4 of 17 October 1989 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System,

Taking into account decision 302 of 7 September 1990 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System, adopted at the sixteenth regular session of the Latin American Council, in which it approved the signature of an agreement between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System and it authorized the Permanent Secretary to sign the above-mentioned agreement on behalf of the Latin American Economic System,

Considering that the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean has developed close ties of co-operation with the Latin American Economic System which have improved the satisfactory co-ordination of their activities during the last year,

Bearing in mind that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System has carried out several programmes with the support of the United Nations Development Programme in areas that are considered of priority for the economic development of the region,

Considering also that the Latin American Economic System is developing joint activities with specialized agencies and other bodies and programmes of the United Nations system, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the International Telecommunication Union,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses satisfaction with decision 302 of the Latin American Council of the Latin American Economic System;

3. Urges the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to continue broadening and deepening its co-ordination and mutual support activities with the Latin American Economic System;

4. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen and broaden its support to the programmes that the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System is carrying out;

5. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their support for and co-operation with the activities of the Latin American Economic System;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to promote, in close collaboration with the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System, the holding of a meeting in 1991 between their respective secretariats, with the aim of identifying those areas in which it will be possible to broaden co-operation between the United Nations system and the Latin American Economic System;

7. Requests both the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Permanent Secretary of the Latin American Economic System to continue consultations with a view to signing, as soon as possible, an agreement of co-operation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/5

16 October 1990

Meeting 31

Adopted without vote

26-nation draft (A/45/L.6); agenda item 24.

Organizational questions

Membership

On 10 May [E/1990/43 (dec. 504(XXIII))] the Commission, considering the region's historical, cultural and economic links with Italy, welcomed that country's request for ECLAC membership and recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve Italy's admission. By decision 1990/277 of 27 July, the Council approved Italy's admission to ECLAC.

On 10 May, the Commission decided to admit Puerto Rico as an associate member [dec. 505(XXIII)]. It called upon the United States, taking into account the wishes expressed by Puerto Rico, to continue to take all necessary measures to guarantee to the Puerto Rican people their right to self-determination in accordance with pertinent provisions of the United Nations Charter as well as relevant General Assembly resolutions and decisions.

Venue

On 11 May, the Commission recommended [dec. 517(XXIII)] to the Economic and Social Council that it approve the holding of the twenty-fourth session of ECLAC in Chile in 1992. On 27 July, by decision 1990/278, the Council decided that the session should be held in Chile.

Western Asia

In accordance with a 1987 resolution [YUN 1987, p. 562] of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) to hold sessions biennially, the Commission did not meet in 1990. A report [E/ESCWA/1990/1] of the Executive Secretary reviewed ESCWA activities since the previous session [YUN 1989, p. 272]. According to the Executive Secretary, the cease-fire between Iran and Iraq (the Commission's host country) had allowed the Commission to work in an atmosphere of security, which had a positive effect on its activities and programmes; however, the repatriation of staff following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III) began on 2 August and continued throughout the year, causing serious disruption of the Commission's work.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the region in 1990 [E/1991/92], owing primarily to the adverse effects of the Gulf crisis, the gross domestic product (GDP) of the region contracted by more than 5 per cent in 1990, after having registered a 3.34 per cent growth in 1989.

Prior to the Gulf crisis, the Gulf Co-operating Council (GCC) countries (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates) had enjoyed favourable economic conditions with oil revenues for January-July 1990 estimated at $30 billion, generally maintaining the level of the same period in 1989. Oil production increases more than compensated for the oil price drop from $ 17.31 a barrel in 1989 to $ 15.04 in the second quarter of 1990. The GCC countries continued their policy of diversifying their economies with a view to reducing overwhelming dependence on crude oil exports. The petrochemical and fertilizer sectors increased output, and the construction industry improved. The services sector, considered the brightest sector after oil, showed steady growth, with banking and the stock market showing good performance in the first six months of the year, as did the trade sector. In countries with diversified economies the agricultural sector performed better in 1990, following drought in 1989, but overall the balance-of-payments position in the region worsened and unemployment increased. Repercussions of the drop in oil prices were prominent among the factors leading to a slow-down in economic activities. In Yemen, the least developed country in the region, the drop in remittances from expatriates, the major source of foreign exchange earnings, adversely affected economic conditions, though both the agricultural and manufacturing sectors appeared to perform better in 1990 than 1989. The mining sector was promising, with oil discoveries and oil exports expected to help reduce the overwhelming dependence of the Yemeni economy on external financial resources. During 1990, Yemen concluded several agreements with various oil companies for exploring and exploiting its oil. In May, the two parts of Yemen were reunified (see PART TWO, Chapter III), creating conditions conducive to accelerated economic growth and development. Aden was selected to become a free zone to encourage Yemeni and foreign private investment.

In addition to catastrophic damage to the environment, the Gulf crisis affected every aspect of economic and social life in Western Asia. The crisis had four major effects on the international oil market: loss of Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil exports; sharp price fluctuations; increased oil production by other exporters; and unusually high stockpiling by commercial users and Governments. For 1990 as a whole, the average spot price was $22.17 a barrel, a 28 per cent increase over 1989. Hence, with the exception of Kuwait, GCC countries enjoyed an increase in revenues from oil of 21.4 per cent, to $61 billion. However, the crisis caused increased governmental expenditures, and Saudi Arabia was estimated to have had expenses greater than its additional oil revenues of $10 billion. In the non-oil sectors of the GCC countries, industrial and construction projects were postponed, and trade activities were curtailed because of higher import prices (mostly caused by higher war-risk insurance premiums), commercial bank reluctance to provide credit lines, departure of expatriates, and a politically unstable environment. There was a large reduction in private bank deposits and capital flight, with deposits transferred to safe havens abroad. Many international banks rapidly withdrew from the Gulf area. The crisis put severe constraints on economic growth and development and aggravated pre-existing economic imbalances. The immediate effects were seen in the displacement of a large number of nationals from Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Yemen working in the GCC countries and Iraq, disruption of trade flows, loss of workers' remittances and decline in export earnings and financial assistance. Returnees included 700,000 to Egypt, 220,000 to Jordan, 60,000 to Lebanon, 170,000 to the Syrian Arab Republic and 800,000 to Yemen. In Jordan, the result was a sudden 6.9 per cent rise in the country's population and an unemployment increase from 16 to more than 30 per cent. Yemen's increase in population was 9 per cent and 15 per cent in the labour force. Remittances had been estimated to account for more than 40 per cent of Yemen's total foreign exchange earnings.

Social conditions in most countries in the region also underwent profound changes as a result of the Gulf crisis, and the negative effects were expected to last for a long time. They would affect the whole population, but with a much greater negative impact on vulnerable groups such as youth, women, the elderly, the disabled, delinquents and displaced persons and refugees. The Gulf crisis created additional social problems, especially regarding the forced migration of large numbers of people as a result of the wars and political disturbances prior to the crisis. The new difficulties were expected to intensify the negative effect of deteriorating social conditions, particularly with regard to mass poverty, unemployment, sharp contrasts in living standards, internal violence and social conflicts, weakened family cohesion, juvenile delinquency, increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons, and a rise in disruptive and self-damaging behaviour that was socially and morally unacceptable in all societies of the region. With worsening social conditions, many States would be forced to expend additional resources.

The sudden and unexpected migrations resulting from the Gulf crisis were expected to increase social deviance and misbehaviour, especially among young persons who had lost their incomes and were unable to find new sources. If the situation remained uncorrected there would likely be more political and socio-economic disturbances. The number of disabled caused by prolonged conflicts in the region was estimated at 10 per cent of the population, and the Gulf crisis would place additional restraints on the limited resources available to deal with the problem. The already rapid growth in crime and drug abuse might well be aggravated by the young unemployed seeking illegal arms and drugs. The ESCWA secretariat strongly recommended consideration of preventive measures including comprehensive methods for control and prevention of drug abuse and the treatment of offenders.

It was estimated that thousands of families lost their source of income from heads of families due to the Gulf crisis. Additional burdens would therefore be placed on women who would be forced to seek sources of income outside the home and possibly to behave in a manner socially unacceptable in their societies.

Activities in 1990

In his report [E/ESCWA/16/3 (Part I)] on the Commission's activities, the Executive Secretary pointed out that the Gulf crisis and consequent repatriation of staff seriously disrupted most of the Commission's work, with much of the 1990 work programme having to be postponed and in some cases terminated. A few staff members worked throughout the repatriation period at the ESCWA liaison office in Amman, Jordan, providing administrative and substantive support to the Executive Secretary and working on several outputs related to the Gulf crisis, its dimensions and its far-reaching implications for the region. A number of staff members carried out substantive assignments in their home countries when possible. Technical co-operation activities, advisory services and contacts with member States were sustained, though at a reduced rate. Some programmes were rescheduled for the following biennium.

During 1990, ongoing activities in the food and agricultural sectors continued. Programmes included work on the formulation of national plans of action to combat desertification in Bahrain and Yemen, and the development of desertification control projects in Jordan. A regional training workshop in agricultural planning and analysis was held in Amman (November/December).

In the area of industrial development, a pilot training programme on promoting entrepreneurship was held in Amman in May. In the trade sector, analytical reviews were begun of developments and issues in the external trade and payments situation of countries in Western Asia.

Work was begun on a technical publication on the population situation in the ESCWA region. Another document reviewing and appraising national policies and measures related to population distribution in selected ESCWA member countries and a bibliography of population literature in the Arab world were also begun.

The Commission's activities for the advancement of women focused on enhancing women's economic and social roles, identifying women's needs and collecting data and disseminating information. ESCWA participated in the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Arab Association for Women and Development (AWAD) in April. AWAD was created to mobilize educated Arab women and channel their collective efforts within an institutional framework. Work was also begun on a directory of Arab professional women in the field of technical co-operation among developing countries.

Work also began on technical publications on problems and issues of road maintenance in the region and on utilization of port capacities in Western Asia. Work on a technical publication on current developments and trends in the monetary and financial sectors in the economies of the region was completed.

Regional co-operation

The executive secretaries of the five regional commissions, under the chairmanship of the Director-General of Development and International Economic Co-operation, met in Baghdad in May. They reviewed the outcome of the General Assembly's eighteenth special session, devoted to international economic co-operation, and preparations for the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I); environmental issues, including preparations for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); preparations for the 1994 Conference on Population (see PART THREE, Chapter IX); agency support costs; the regional dimension of development in the 1990s; and interregional co-operation in such matters as transport, trade facilitation, reconstruction and rehabilitation of war-ravaged countries.

In June, the Secretary-General reported on regional co-operation [E/1990/84 & Corr.1 & Add.1-4], highlighting the work of the regional commissions. He submitted a draft proposal for interregional co-operation regarding trade facilitation and reviewed co-operation in monitoring and assessing traffic in toxic and dangerous products and waste (see below).

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 1990/280. On 26 July, the Council also took note of documents on international economic and social policy (decision 1990/266), including the summaries of: the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1988-1989 [E/1990/53]; the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1989 [E/1990/52]; the economic survey of Europe, 1989-1990 [E/1990/51]; the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1989 [E/1990/54]; and the survey of economic and social developments in Western Asia, 1989 [E/1990/56].

Trade facilitation

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/118 [YUN 1989, p. 244], the regional commissions, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), developed a draft proposal for interregional co-operation in trade facilitation, particularly the phased application of the Rules for Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (UN/EDIFACT). The project's ultimate objective was to improve the market position of exports from the developing countries. By simplifying, minimizing and standardizing those governmental and institutional procedures, formalities and requirements that constituted obstacles to the international free flow of goods, a reduction in costs of those goods would be achieved, thereby making them more competitive in world markets.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/74.

Proposal for interregional co-operation in the area of trade facilitation, and in particular the phased application of the Rules for Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Transport (EDIFACT), whenever appropriate

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/118 of 28 July 1989 on interregional co-operation for facilitation of international trade, in which it invited the regional commissions and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to prepare jointly a project proposal in this field,

Recognizing that African countries need to co-operate effectively with the rest of the world and to participate in international trade facilitation, including the use of electronic data interchange for the transmission of trade documentation,

Conscious of the urgent need in Africa to build up, strengthen and upgrade capacities to identify problems and requirements for the facilitation of international and i&a-African trade, including the analysis of practices, procedures, laws, regulations, policies and documentation governing international trade, and that such capacity-building would benefit government ministries and departments concerned with planning, trade, transport, customs administration, statistics and data processing,

Recognizing further the desirability of interregional co-operation among the regional commissions jointly with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in promoting the global application of agreed measures for the facilitation of international trade,

1. Decides fully to support the implementation by participating African States of the project proposal on interregional co-operation for the facilitation of international trade, prepared jointly by the regional commissions and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

2. Recommends the proposal for funding by donors;

3. Invites all States Members of the United Nations to support the project proposal;

4. Requests the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the regional development banks and bilateral donors to provide adequate financing to ensure the full realization of the project;

5. Also requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to report to the Commission at its twenty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in his annual report on regional co-operation, to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991, a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, as well as on the further consideration of Council resolution 1989/118 by the regional commissions for Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Asia and the Pacific and Western Asia.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/74

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/114) without vote, 23 July (meeting 10); draft by ECA (E/1990/84), orally revised by Committee following informal consultations; agenda item 6.

Traffic in toxic and dangerous material

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/226 [YUN 1989, p. 434], the Task Force on Environment, consisting of representatives of the regional commissions and the United Nations

Environment Programme (UNEP), under the chairmanship of the office of the Director-General, met in Geneva (22-23 March) to discuss the prevention of illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products. The Assembly had called for regional assessments, on a continuing basis, of such illegal traffic and its environmental and health implications. It was concluded that each regional commission should create an operational unit to develop guidelines for monitoring, collect data on illegal traffic and disseminate its information to the other regional entities as well as States of export and possible import.

PART THREE

Economic and Social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic co-operation

In 1990, against the background of a decelerating world economy and the transformation and integration of the economies of Eastern Europe into the world trading and financial systems, the United Nations General Assembly held its eighteenth special session to discuss global economic issues. On 1 May, the Assembly adopted the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of Developing Countries, stating that the most important challenge for the 1990s was the revitalization of economic growth and social development in the developing countries, which called for sustained growth of the world economy and favourable external conditions.

During the year global per capita output declined for the first time since 1982 and overall global output grew by only 1 per cent. Although the situation in the Persian Gulf was a serious shock to the world economy, the principal causes of the slow-down were the hesitant recession in the major industrialized countries, the transition problems in Eastern Europe and the stabilization efforts in Latin America. Nevertheless, the rise in oil prices and other consequences of the Gulf crisis reduced the growth of world output in 1990 by some 0.3 per cent.

In addition to the special session, the United Nations took other action to promote the economic and social development of the developing countries, including the Assembly's proclamation in December of the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000), to start on 1 January 1991, and its adoption of the International Development Strategy for the Decade. The principal aim of the Strategy was to ensure that the decade of the 1990s was one of accelerated development in the developing countries and that policies and measures were proposed to support and realize that goal.

The Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, which was held in Paris in September, adopted the Paris Declaration and Programme of Action. The Programme of Action-endorsed by the Assembly in December-outlined proposals for action for the least developed countries, their development partners, financial institutions and development funds to help a fundamental growth-oriented transformation of their economies.

Action was also taken to address the special problems of the island developing countries with the adoption, at the June Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations, of "Challenges and opportunities: A strategic framework". That document noted that the island developing countries suffered because of their smallness, remoteness, lack of natural resources and other handicaps and proposed strategies to address those vulnerabilities.

Other development and economic issues addressed by the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council during 1990 included entrepreneurship, industrial development co-operation and the eradication of poverty.

International economic relations

During 1990, several United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Development Planning, discussed various aspects of development and international economic co-operation. The Assembly, at its eighteenth special session, adopted the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries. Also, at its regular 1990 session, the Assembly adopted the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (see below).

The Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee considered issues of development and international economic co-operation during the 1990 regular session and made recommendations on a number of topics (see APPENDIX IV). By decision 45/440 of 21 December, the Assembly took note of Part One of the Committee's report [A/45/849]. In related action, by decision 45/435 of 19 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development and decided to include it in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session.

Economic and Social Council. At its July 1990 session [A/45/3], the Economic and Social Council, in its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, focused on resources for development and the external indebtedness of the developing countries (see PART TWO, Chapter IV). It also discussed developments in Eastern Europe and the USSR; the Declaration of the eighteenth special session of the General Assembly (see below); international trade (see PART TWO, Chapter IV); the human factor; and environment and development.

The Council had before it the World Economic Survey 1990: Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy [E/1990/55, Sales No. E.90.11.C.I], which discussed, among other things, the state of the world economy at the beginning of the 1990s and trends in global output and policies (see below).

Also before the Council were reports of the Secretary-General on the main research findings of the system in major global economic and social trends, policies and emerging issues [F/1990/81], on proposals to improve the work of the United Nations in early identification, analysis and forecasting of world economic developments [E/1990/80 & Corr.1], and on national entrepreneurs in economic development [A/45/292-E/1990/82] (see below for details of these reports).

By decision 1990/263 of 24 July, the Council took note of an oral report made on 11 July by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on strengthening multilateral co-operation in international economic affairs and decided to focus, at its 1991 second regular session, in its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, on the question of strengthening multilateral co-operation in international economic affairs, to be considered on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General.

Eighteenth special session

In accordance with a 1989 General Assembly decision [GA res. 43/460] to convene a special session devoted to international economic co-operation, in particular to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, the eighteenth special session took place in New York from 23 April to 1 May 1990. By decision 44/461 of 12 March, the Assembly had decided that its special session would be held from 23 to 28 April.

The special session concluded with the adoption, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Eighteenth Special Session, of the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries (see below).

In other action, the Assembly admitted the Republic of Namibia to membership in the United Nations (resolution S-18/1) and approved the report of the Credentials Committee (resolution S-18/2). With regard to procedural matters, the Assembly appointed the members of the Credentials Committee (decision S-18/11); elected the President of the forty-fourth Assembly (Joseph Nanven Garba, Nigeria) to serve in the same capacity at the eighteenth special session (decision S-18/12); elected the Chairmen of the Main Committees (decision S-18/13); elected the Vice-President of the Assembly (decision S-18/14); and elected the officers of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Eighteenth Special Session. The Assembly also adopted the agenda for the special session (decision S-18/15) (for list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV) and decided to allocate item 9 to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Eighteenth Special Session (decision S-18/22). By decision S-18/21, the Assembly endorsed the report of its Preparatory Committee and the recommendations contained therein (see below). Consideration of a draft resolution entitled "Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries" was deferred to a meeting of the Assembly's forty-fourth session to be convened on 17 May 1990 (see below).

In his statement, the Assembly President said that the object of the special session was to give an impulse to international economic co-operation in order to overcome the slowdown of the world economy in the 1980s and the dual-track development that had left the majority of developing countries with retarded economies. The developing countries had borne the brunt of the decline in growth during the 1980s and the gap between developed and developing countries had increased. The prospect of another decade of stagnation in most developing countries must therefore be a matter of grave concern for the international community.

Work of the Ad Hoc Committee

On 23 April, the General Assembly established the Ad Hoc Committee of the Eighteenth Special Session and allocated to it consideration of agenda item 9, entitled "International economic co-operation, in particular the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries.”

The Ad Hoc Committee held five meetings between 23 and 30 April [A/S-18/14] and had before it the report of the Preparatory Committee for the Eighteenth Special Session [A/S-18/7 (Parts I and II)]. The Preparatory Committee, which had held its organizational and first sessions in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 282], held its second (26 February-2 March) and third (16-20 April) sessions in New York in 1990. At those sessions, the Preparatory Committee discussed the main international economic developments in the 1980s and the challenges of the 1990s and an assessment of the obstacles and impediments to growth and development; the reactivation of economic growth and development in developing countries; and strengthening and enhancing international economic co-operation and multilateralism in international economic relations.

The Secretary-General presented to the Preparatory Committee a report on the state of international economic co-operation and effective ways and means of revitalizing the economic growth and development of developing countries [A/AC.223/5 & Corr.1]; a note by the Secretariat [A/AC.223/L.2 & Add.1] transmitting, in accordance with a 1989 General Assembly decision [GA res. 44/444], the text of the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee annexed to that decision; a proposal by Bolivia, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, for a draft declaration to be adopted by the special session [A/AC.223/L.3]; a proposal by Canada on elements for a declaration of the special session [A/AC.223/L.6]; and a proposal by Ireland, on behalf of the European Community, for a draft declaration [A/AC.238/V8].

The Preparatory Committee submitted a number of recommendations to the special session, including a text to be used as a basis for the preparation of the final document.

Having considered the Preparatory Committee's report, the Ad Hoc Committee recommended to the Assembly for adoption a draft resolution, annexed to which was the text of the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 May, the General Assembly adopted resolution S-18/3.

Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries

The General Assembly

Adopts the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries

We, the States Members of the United Nations,

Solemnly proclaim our strong commitment to a global consensus to promote urgently international economic co-operation for sustained growth of the world economy and, in particular, to the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries so as to realize the basic right of all human beings to a life free from hunger, poverty, ignorance, disease and fear. To that end, we adopt the present Declaration.

1. This is a time of positive transformation in international relations. The reduction in international political tensions, the increasing integration of the world economy and the broad movement towards economic and political reform will create an opportunity for strengthening international economic co-operation based on the need to provide just and equal opportunities to all peoples to enable them to develop their full potential.

2. We strongly affirm the need to revitalize growth and development in the developing countries and to address together the problems of abject poverty and hunger that continue to afflict far too many people in the world. The international community has a responsibility to give strong support to the efforts of the developing countries to solve their grave economic and social problems through the creation of a favourable international economic environment.

3. In an increasingly interdependent world, the developing countries should play an important role in the growth and expansion of the world economy for the progress and prosperity of all peoples.

4. Each country is responsible for its own economic policies for development, in accordance with its specific situations and conditions, and for the life and well-being of all its citizens. National policies also need to take fully into account the obligations of all countries to international economic co-operation.

I. Assessment of the 1980s

5. In the 1980s, progress in developed and developing countries was uneven. The decade was marked by a widening gap between those groups of countries as well as by relatively slow growth and large global financial and trade imbalances. Developed market-oriented countries have succeeded to a large extent in controlling inflation and in maintaining sustained, though modest, growth. However, many countries, particularly developing countries, have encountered serious difficulties in their attempt to adapt to structural changes, to benefit from the economic growth of the industrialized countries and to promote the well-being of their citizens.

6. External and fiscal imbalances in some of the countries whose economies have the largest impact on the world economy have contributed to international monetary instability and led to higher interest rates. In the late 1980s, such imbalances started to narrow; none the less, they remain large.

7. For many developing countries, the 1980s have been viewed as a decade lost for development. Living conditions in Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean, and in parts of Asia, deteriorated, and economic and social infrastructure eroded, impairing stability and prospects for growth and development. Other developing countries were able to achieve economic and social progress.

8. The position of developing countries in international trade and finance weakened substantially, further widening the gap between developing and developed countries. External indebtedness emerged as a main factor in the economic stalemate in the developing countries. Their capacity to service debt was seriously weakened as interest rates grew and terms of trade deteriorated. This problem has contributed to the fall in investment and the cessation of new financial flows. A long-term downward trend in the prices of commodities has had devastating effects for commodity-dependent developing countries.

9. As a result, there was a large net transfer of resources from the developing to the developed countries, depriving the former of much needed resources for development. This made the process of adjustment more difficult and complicated the tasks of coping with its social consequences and obtaining the necessary political support for reform.

10. Eastern European countries were not appropriately involved in the world economic system. Their need for comprehensive reform and transformation grew and, in the late 1980s, fundamental political and economic changes began to take place. These countries face problems of adaptation to the scientific, technological and structural changes taking place in the world economy.

11. As the world changes around us, we must respond positively. The 1980s marked the beginning of fundamental rethinking towards the achievement of economic development. A gradual convergence of views on economic policy, including the need for sound macro-economic policies and enhanced competition, is emerging. Flexibility, creativity, innovation and openness must be integral parts of our economic systems.

II. Challenges and opportunities for the 1990s

12. The most important challenge for the 1990s is the revitalization of economic growth and social development in the developing countries; which calls for sustained growth of the world economy and favourable external conditions. This major challenge has to be addressed in the context of increasing interdependence and integration in the world economy.

13. It will be essential to stem the increasing marginalization of the least developed countries and to reactivate their growth and development through comprehensive national action and international support measures.

14. Finding an early and durable solution to the international debt problems, meeting the increasing needs for development finance, creating an open and equitable trading system and facilitating the diversification and modernization of the economies of developing countries, particularly those that are commodity-dependent, are conditions for the revitalization of growth and development in the developing countries in the 1990s and require continued concerted efforts.

15. There is a pressing need to improve the international economic environment in order to ensure the success of national policies. Countries can then take advantage of the major advances in science and technology and the globalization of markets and thereby enhance their human capital and modernize their economies.

16. Economic development must be environmentally sound and sustainable. The deterioration of the environment is a cause of grave concern for all countries. Growing environmental problems, such as pollution, desertification, deforestation and climate change, increasingly pose a serious threat to the future growth of the world economy.

17. Countries have to adapt their national policies to facilitate open exchange and flexible responses to the changing world economy. Effective national policies have a critical role to play in achieving sustained, non-inflationary economic growth in all countries. Such policies should be supportive of investment as well as of efficient allocation and mobilization of resources in order to achieve durable growth.

18. The eradication of poverty and hunger, greater equity in income distribution and the development of human resources remain major challenges everywhere. Economic and social progress requires that growth be broadly based, offering equal opportunities to all people, both women and men, to participate fully in economic, social and political activities.

19. There is a need to integrate the Eastern European countries into the world economy and the international economic system. This should generate positive impulses for world trade and development.

20. The revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries will have to be undertaken against the backdrop of these opportunities and challenges. Our collective efforts will be needed to ensure that the rapidly changing realities result in a positive transformation in favour of the economic development of all countries, particularly the developing countries.

III. Commitments and policies for international development co-operation

21. Reactivation of economic growth and development in the developing countries will require a concerted and committed effort by all countries. The present opportunity to restore a long-term approach to development and move beyond short-term adjustment must be seized. The States Members of the United Nations will endeavour to take all necessary steps to reverse the adverse trends of the 1980s, address the challenges of the 1990s and move into a more productive decade. Such actions should take into account the responsibility of each country for its own development and should be in accordance with its capacity and its impact on the international economy.

22. The major industrialized countries influence world economic growth and the international economic environment profoundly. They should continue their efforts to promote sustained growth and to narrow imbalances in a manner that can benefit other countries. The co-ordination of macro-economic policies should take full account of the interests and concerns of all countries, particularly the developing countries. Efforts should be made to enhance the effectiveness of multilateral surveillance aimed at correcting existing external and fiscal imbalances, promoting non-inflationary sustainable growth, lowering real rates of interest and making exchange rates more stable and markets more accessible.

23. In accordance with their legislation, development objectives and national priorities, developing countries should continue to work towards keeping control over inflationary tendencies, promoting domestic savings, achieving favourable conditions for domestic and foreign investment, modernizing their economies and increasing their international competitiveness.

24. However, economic policies should have as their ultimate objective the betterment of the human condition and the enhancement of the contribution of all persons to development. The full utilization of human resources and the recognition of human rights stimulate creativity, innovation and initiative.

25. A primary objective must be to respond to the needs and maximize the potential of all members of society. Health, nutrition, housing, population policies and other social services are a key to both improving individual welfare and successful development. Education and training, which must be available to all, are essential for improving the quality of human resources and for sustaining economic growth. The international community should support efforts to arrest the current escalation of extreme poverty and hunger. It is essential to reverse the present deterioration of this grave situation.

26. A durable and broad solution of the external debt problems of the developing debtor countries should continue to be given urgent attention, and the serious debt-servicing problems of some other countries should be further addressed with a view to an early solution. Recent initiatives and measures to reduce the stock and service of debt or to provide debt relief for developing countries should be broadly implemented. Relief measures should aim at the resumption of vigorous growth and development in these countries and should address all types of bilateral debt of debtor developing countries. Serious consideration should be given to continuing to work towards a growth-oriented solution of the problems of developing countries with serious debt-servicing problems, including those whose debt is mainly to official creditors or to multilateral institutions.

27. Substantial concessional resources will be called for to enable developing countries, especially the least developed ones, to cope with the challenges of the 1990s. Developed countries should implement the undertakings they have made to attain the agreed international target of devoting 0.7 per cent of gross national product to official development assistance and 0.15 per cent to the least developed countries. Developed countries should enhance the quantity and quality of their aid. Appropriate additional resources for the least developed countries should be considered at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries. The special development problems and needs of the island and land-locked developing countries should also be addressed.

28. Scientific and technological capability is increasingly important in the development of developing countries. Developed countries and international organizations should support the efforts of developing countries to create and develop endogenous capacities in this area.

29. The current threat to the environment is the common concern of all. All countries should take effective actions for the protection and enhancement of the environment in accordance with their respective capacities and responsibilities and taking into account the specific needs of developing countries. As the major sources of pollution, the developed countries have the main responsibility for taking appropriate measures urgently. The economic growth and development of developing countries are essential in order to address problems of the degradation and protection of the environment. New and additional financial resources will have to be channelled to developing countries. Effective modalities for favourable access to, and transfer of, environmentally sound technologies, in particular to developing countries, including on concessional and preferential terms, should be examined.

30. Multilateral financial institutions should be in a position to respond to the increasing development needs of developing countries in the 1990s. They should be provided with adequate resources to support long-term development, to facilitate structural reform and to finance programmes to alleviate the adverse social consequences of adjustment for poor and vulnerable groups.

31. Countries should seek to reduce expenditures for military purposes, thereby opening up the possibility of enhanced spending on social and economic development for the benefit of all countries, in particular the developing countries. In this context, the feasibility of channelling some of these reductions through financial mechanisms for development should be explored.

32. An open and credible multilateral trading system is essential for the promotion of growth and development. Any present or future trends towards unilateralism, bilateralism and the erosion of the multilateral trading system must be arrested. Protectionism should be resisted everywhere; commitments to standstill and roll-back of protectionism should be honoured. It is vitally important that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations result in a balanced outcome, preserving and strengthening the multilateral trading system, enabling trade liberalization and increased market access for the exports of developing countries. The principles underlying the multilateral trading system should be reaffirmed, and international organizations active in multilateral trade should be strengthened as part of the process of attaining these objectives.

33. Commodity exports will continue to play a key role in the economies of most developing countries and to make a crucial contribution to export earnings and investment. There is a need for better functioning of commodity markets and more stability and predictable conditions. Diversification helps the developing countries to increase and stabilize their export earnings. All countries and multilateral institutions should undertake measures to support these endeavours.

34. Regional economic integration is important in expanding trade and investment in developing countries. Developing countries should strive to promote economic integration and strengthen economic and technical co-operation among themselves. These efforts should be encouraged and supported by the developed countries, as well as by the international organizations.

35. Eastern European countries should be supported in their efforts to integrate themselves into the international economy, including, as appropriate, their adhesion to international institutions. This will benefit their own people and the rest of the world; it must not detract from the high priority placed on international development co-operation with the developing countries. Their integration will strengthen the role of Eastern Europe as a dynamic trade partner and as a market and source of technology.

36. The United Nations system has a large role to play in international co-operation for revitalizing development in the 1990s. All its Member States have a responsibility for making it more effective and efficient. The United Nations is a unique forum in which the community of nations can address all issues in an integrated manner. Its many specialized agencies make an indispensable contribution to development. They have a major responsibility in the great task of revitalizing growth and development in the 1990s.

37. Member States agree to work for fruitful results at the forthcoming Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, in the elaboration of a new international development strategy, the World Summit for Children, the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in 1992, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in Brazil in 1992, and the international meeting on population in 1994.

38. The States Members of the United Nations pledge themselves solemnly to advance the multilateral dialogue, to respond to the challenge and commitments contained in the present Declaration through national policies and enhanced international co-operation and to keep the implementation of the Declaration under political review.

1 May 1990 Meeting 11 Adopted without vote

Approved by Ad Hoc Committee of the Eighteenth Special Session (A/S-18/14), 30 April (meeting 51; draft by Chairman (A/S-18/AC.1/L.2). orally revised; agenda item 9.

Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation

In accordance with decision 1990/259 of 4 July, the Economic and Social Council considered in plenary on 11, 16 and 24 July the question of the implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries [E/1990/SR.26, 30 & 34].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/54.

Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, containing the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Reaffirming the strong commitment to a global consensus to promote urgently international economic co-operation for sustained growth of the world economy and, in particular, the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries,

Fully convinced of the need to implement the policies and commitments expressed in the Declaration,

1. Decides to recommend to the General Assembly that an item entitled "Implementation of the commitments and policies for international development co-operation agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries", be included in the agenda of its forty-fifth session in order to accelerate steps to put into effect the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration and to ensure that those commitments and policies are translated into concrete measures;

2. Recommends to the governing bodies of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system that they include in their agenda the question of the implementation of the Declaration and invites them to report to the Council, at its second regular session of 1991, on steps taken by them and by Governments within their respective spheres of competence, with a view to ensuring the implementation of the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/234.

Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Convinced that the full and effective implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration would contribute to the strengthening of international economic co-operation, in particular the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries,

Noting with appreciation the results achieved by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and in the elaboration of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade: contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, as well as by the World Summit for Children in the light of the Declaration,

1. Takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/54 of 24 July 1990;

2. Calls upon States Members of the United Nations and States members of the specialized agencies to take appropriate measures to ensure the full and effective implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the steps taken by the Governments of developed and developing countries, individually and collectively, as well as by the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to fulfil those commitments and policies, taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/54;

4. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of the Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries";

3. Decides that, during consideration of the item mentioned in paragraph 4 above, the General Assembly should elaborate effective modalities to ensure action-oriented political review and follow-up processes for the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries and for the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, as provided for in paragraph 38 of the Declaration and paragraph 112 of the Strategy.

Impact of East-West relations on the world economy

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/205 on the implementation of resolutions 1958/77 [YUN 1988, p. 705] and 1989/114 [YUN 1989, p. 740], both of which dealt with the revitalization of the Council, decided to hold discussions in 1990 on the impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy, in particular on the growth and development of the developing countries, as well as on international economic co-operation. That subject would also be the major policy theme to be discussed in 1991 at a special meeting at an appropriately high level, not excluding the ministerial level.

Accordingly, the Council held an informal exchange of views on the subject on 12 July, following which the Council's President, in a statement annexed to the Council's annual report to the General Assembly [A/45/Rev.1], said that there was general agreement that the short-term consequences of the transition taking place in Eastern Europe and the demands made on resources worldwide would be negative for the developing countries and particularly severe for Africa and the least developed countries. While the negative effect on commercial bank lending and foreign direct investment might be modest, the picture was rather bleak with regard to official development assistance (ODA), and interest rates would rise, adding to the debt problem of developing countries. However, it was agreed that the long-term results of the transition from centrally planned to market economies should be beneficial for the global economy, including the developed countries.

The President mentioned several suggestions that had been made for dealing with the situation, including that the international community maintain ODA in real terms; that the industrialized world have separate budget heads for their assistance to Eastern and Central Europe; and that the international financial institutions assess the resources needed to finance the requirements of developing countries, as well as those of Eastern and Central Europe and the Soviet Union. Several delegations had noted that the United Nations should play a central role in the transition process, given its expertise and knowledge.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Council adopted resolution 1990/68.

Special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council in 1991

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, containing the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Recalling its own decision 1990/205 of 9 February 1990 on the implementation of Council resolutions 1988/77 of 29 July 1988 and 1989/114 of 28 July 1989, in particular paragraph 1 (b) regarding the convening of a special meeting of the Council on 4 and 5 July 1991 to discuss the impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy, in particular on the economic growth and development of the developing countries, as well as on international economic co-operation,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of the report of the Committee for Development Planning on its twenty-sixth session,

Fully convinced of the need to ensure adequate preparations for the special high-level meeting of the Council, which is the first of its kind and an important concrete step in the process of the revitalization of the Council,

1. Notes that during the second regular session of the Council a meeting was convened on 12 July 1990 devoted to an informal exchange of views on the subject of the special high-level meeting of the Council in 1991;

2. Invites the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the Council, to take all the necessary measures to ensure the adequate preparation of the special high-level meeting of the Council in 1991, and to prepare an analytical-report for that meeting, which should, inter alia, include complete information on patterns of trade, financial flows and investments in the context of the recent evolution of East-West relations and its consequences for the developing countries;

3. Invites the President of the Council to convene a one-day preparatory meeting of the Council before the special high-level meeting;

4. Invites the Committee for Development Planning, at its twenty-seventh session, to make a contribution to the special high-level meeting, taking into account its programme of work;

5. Calls upon all appropriate organs, organizations, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system to contribute to the success of the special high-level meeting;

6. Invites all Member States and observer States that are in a position to do so to be represented at the ministerial level.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/182.

Special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with ministerial participation

The General Assembly.

Recalling its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Taking into account Economic and Social Council decision 1990/205 of February 1990 on the implementation of Council resolutions 1988/77 of 29 July 1988 and 1989/114 of 28 July 1989, in particular paragraph 1 (b) thereof regarding the convening of a special meeting of the Council on 4 and 5 July 1991 to discuss the impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy, in particular on the economic growth and development of the developing countries, as well as on international economic co-operation,

Taking into account also Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/68 of 27 July 1990 on the special high-level meeting of the Council in 1991,

Fully convinced of the need to hold that meeting at a high level,

Fully convinced also of the need to ensure adequate preparations for the special high-level meeting, which is the first of its kind and an important concrete step in the process of the revitalization of the Council,

1. Takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/68 and decision 1990/205;

2. Invites all Member States and observer States that are in a position to do so to be represented at the ministerial level;

3. Invites the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the Economic and Social Council, to take all the necessary measures to ensure the adequate preparation of the special high-level meeting of the Council in 1991;

4. Culls upon all appropriate organs, organizations, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system to contribute to the success of the special high-level meeting of the Council in 1991;

5. Decides to discuss at its forty-sixth session, in the context of the examination of the report of the Economic and Social Council, the outcome of the special high-level meeting.

Development and economic co-operation

Strategy for the Fourth UN Development Decade

The Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1990-2000) was proclaimed by the General Assembly on 21 December 1990, to start on 1 January 1991. The Assembly also adopted the International Development Strategy for the Decade, which set out the goals and objectives for the 1990s and policy and measures for their support and realization. It also dealt with special situations, including those of the least developed countries (LDCs); identified the role of the United Nations system; and outlined a process for review and appraisal of the Strategy.

The Strategy's text had been drafted by the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000), established by Assembly resolution 43/182 [YUN 1988, p. 319].

Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole

The Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole held its third (13 January and 19 to 23 March) and fourth (4 and 6 June, 17 to 26 September, and 9 October) sessions in New York in 1990 [A/45/41]. The Committee's organizational, first and second sessions were held in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 284].

At its third session, the Committee had before it a summary of the Secretary-General's updated report [A/AC.232/7] on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000. The report discussed long-term trends in world economic development, presented quantitative scenarios for the world economy to the year 2000, and considered structural change in world production and trade; sectoral issues in agriculture and energy; new technologies; environmental issues; population and human settlements; and human resources development and social policy. The report concluded that the likely impacts of many changes in the world economy were difficult to assess, especially those modifying the relationships on which projections of the world economy were based. The outlook for the next decade depended on the progress made in national policy-making and in international co-operation.

The Ad Hoc Committee requested the Chairman to prepare a working document for consideration at its fourth session, taking into account the statements and views expressed by Member States, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system during the third session.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1990/10 of 24 May, recommended that the Ad Hoc Committee, in preparing the international development strategy, ensure that women's needs and their contribution to the development process were reflected in all aspects of the strategy and consider measures for their full and effective participation in development. It urged Member States to give special attention to the role of women in development when preparing their contributions to the Committee and to consult with national machinery and NGOs concerned with women in development.

By decision 1990/215 of the same date, the Council decided to transmit to the Ad Hoc Committee at its fourth session the text of resolution 1990/10.

By decision 1990/267 of 23 July, the Council took note of an oral report by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Committee's work.

At its fourth session, the Ad Hoc Committee had before it a Secretariat note [A/AC.232/9] containing suggestions for an international development strategy. At the resumed fourth session (September), it considered a working document

[A/AC.232/10], prepared by the Chairman, containing a proposed text of the strategy; the contribution of the European Community [A/AC.232/L.12] submitted by Italy; and a letter containing the views of Canada [A/AC.232/CRP.7]. Also before the Committee was a background note [A/AC.232/L.11] by the secretariats of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunication Union and the International Maritime Organization.

On 9 October, the Ad Hoc Committee, having considered a draft text of the strategy [A/AC.232/L.14/Rev.1], proposed by the Chairman on the basis of informal consultations, recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of the proposed text of the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 45/442, by which it took note of the report of Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade. On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/199.

International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade The General Assembly

1. Proclaims the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, starting on 1 January 1991;
2. Adopts the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade

I. Preamble

1. We, the States Members of the United Nations, adopt the following International Development Strategy and designate 1 January 1991 to 31 December 2000 as the Fourth United Nations Development Decade. The global consensus reached in the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-18/3, provides the basis for this Strategy. We pledge ourselves individually and collectively to undertake the measures necessary to implement the Strategy.

2. The goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade were for the most part unattained. Adverse and unanticipated developments in the world economy wiped out the premises on which growth had been expected. The early years of the 1980s witnessed a recession in the development market economy countries. Although growth in these countries resumed in 1983 and was sustained at a moderate tempo virtually without inflation over the remainder of the decade, the period was one of marked imbalances, external as well as fiscal, and of relatively high unemployment. Growth rates slowed down in the countries of Eastern Europe, where the need for structural transformation became increasingly manifest, resulting, by the end of the decade, in sweeping economic and political changes. World trade returned to a path of relatively rapid growth in the second half of the 1980s. But, for the developing countries, the external economic environment over the decade was generally characterized by shrinking resource flows, declining commodity prices, rising interest rates and increasing barriers to market access. During the 1980s, overall growth in the developing countries averaged 3 per cent annually and per capita growth 1 per cent. Over the 1960s and 1970s, by comparison, overall growth in these countries averaged 5.5 per cent and per capita growth 3 per cent.

3. Despite this background, some developing countries, among them some of the biggest and the poorest, succeeded in maintaining a relatively fast tempo of growth and transformation. For most others, however, the decade was one of falling growth rates, declining living standards and deepening poverty. The debt crisis that erupted in 1982 led to the virtual cessation of net commercial bank lending. There was a negative transfer of net financial resources to the indebted countries, whose debt-servicing capacity was further weakened as interest rates grew and terms of trade deteriorated. As a result, the overall growth of developing countries with debt-servicing difficulties was only 1.5 per cent during the period 1981-1990. The decade of the 1980s saw a widening of the gap between the rich and the poor countries. It also witnessed political tensions and conflicts, as well as natural and man-made disasters that were costly and disruptive.

4. If the 1990s are to be a decade of development, this record of unsatisfactory progress and performance needs to be changed. Projections by the agencies of the United Nations system unanimously suggest, however, that in the absence of major changes in policies, the coming decade will be much like the previous one. While relatively rapid growth is foreseen for some countries of Asia, the prospect is one of continued stagnation for others, particularly in Africa and Latin America.

5. Such a prospect is fraught with danger. Growing populations and young and expanding work forces, as well as rising aspirations associated with the spread of education and the impact of communications, are imposing intense pressures on the political and social fabric of developing countries. Unless these pressures are relieved by decisive improvements in the pace and character of development, economic distress and political and social instability may spread, not only within national boundaries but beyond them as well, and may affect the peace and stability of the world as a whole. In the many developing countries where economic conditions stagnated or declined in the 1980s, absolute poverty became more widespread and conditions deteriorated with regard to nutrition and food security, job creation and education, health care and infant mortality, housing and sanitation. The erosion of living standards and social services brought mounting political unrest to many countries.

6. The interdependence of nations is rapidly becoming far more than a matter of trade and finance links alone. There are strong trends towards greater openness in the movement of funds, people and ideas around the world. Over the past decade, violence, social disorder and terrorism have become more common. Conflicts and upheavals lead to the movement of refugees and international migrants and give rise to problems of border control, admission and assimilation in receiving countries. The illicit traffic in narcotics links the poverty and social problems of the rich countries to those of producers whose traditional crops no longer ensure them a living. Environmental threats and epidemics are often themselves of global scope. These and other related problems can only be aggravated by economic stresses and strains and by the failure of the development process in the developing countries. The entire international community, rich and poor countries alike, has thus a vital stake in ensuring that the decade of 1990s is truly one of economic and social progress throughout the world.

7. The prospects for the 1990s, assessed on the basis of the continuation of present policies, can and must be changed. The reactivation and acceleration of the development process is in the interest of all countries. The developing countries can provide a strong stimulus to world trade and investment and can contribute to the strength and stability of the world economy. They already account for a significant share of the markets of the developed countries. Far-reaching developments have taken place on the international scene that provide new opportunities for reversing the trends of the 1980s. The relaxation of international tensions offers an opportunity for reducing military spending worldwide, for a reduction of the strains on national economies and for the application of larger resources to the fight against world poverty. The waning of ideological conflicts is improving the climate of co-operation at all levels. There is no universal prescription for successful development, but a growing convergence of views is emerging with respect to effective approaches to economic and social development and with regard to the potential contributions to the development process of the private and public sectors, of individuals and enterprises and of democratic rights and freedoms.

8. A strong stimulus to global co-operation is provided by the consciousness of the global consequences of environmental problems and their interaction with both development and the lack of development and by a growing awareness of the threats to the security of nations that could arise from frustrations and tensions in developing countries. Closer integration, in both Europe and North America, in prospect of the 1990s, has the potential to strengthen major economies and their capacity to support global economic growth if accompanied by openness to the outside world. The reform and restructuring of the economies of Eastern Europe and their integration into the world economy can contribute to the strength and dynamism of world trade. Closer co-operation and integration among the developing countries themselves also offer an opportunity to enhance the vigour of the development process. No less important, the rapid advances in science and technology and in global communications are opening up new vistas for improvement of productivity, structural change and accelerated development.

9. These changes do not by themselves guarantee a reversal of the present trends or ensure that the development experience in the new decade will differ markedly from that of the 1980s. There are dangers, if the opportunities are not grasped, of increasing marginalization of many developing countries in the world economy and of a weakening of the focus on development as an objective of international economic co-operation. But the changes offer a new context for decision-making and policy formulation and for approaches that could reverse the experience of the 1980s. They provide an opportunity for the formulation and implementation of an International Development Strategy that is aimed at releasing the great potential for development that exists in the developing countries and in the world economy.

10. The Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-18/3 contains a pledge that Member States will endeavour to take all necessary steps to reverse the adverse u-ends of the 1980s, address the challenges of the 1990s and move into a more productive decade, recognizing that such actions should take into account the responsibility of each country for its own development and should be in accordance with its capacity and its impact on the international economy. As in the 1980s, events now unforeseen will undoubtedly put their stamp on the coming decade. This Strategy is flexible. It seeks above all to spell out an agreed understanding on the issues and challenges, the actions and commitments, on the basis of principles for national and international action that will remain valid.

11. Countries have to adapt their national policies to facilitate open exchange and flexible responses to the changing world economy. Effective national policies have a critical role to play in achieving sustained, non-inflationary economic growth in all countries. Such policies should be supportive of investment, as well as of efficient mobilization and allocation of resources in order to achieve durable growth.

12. It is against this background that Member States agree on the goals and objectives for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade Assistant as set out below.

II. Goals and objectives

13. The principal aim of the Strategy is to ensure that the 1990s are a decade of accelerated development in the developing countries and strengthened international co-operation. The decade should witness a significant improvement in the human condition in the developing countries and a reduction in the gap between rich and poor countries. It should be one in which ways are found for the world community to meet its needs without degrading the environment. The Strategy also has important social and political objectives. Development over the decade should enhance the participation of all men and women in economic and political life, protect cultural identities and assure to all the necessary means of survival. Each country is responsible for its own economic policies for development, in accordance with its specific situation and conditions, and for the life and well-being of all its citizens. The Strategy should help provide an environment that supports the evolution everywhere of political systems based on consent and respect for human rights, as well as social and economic rights, and of systems of justice that protect all citizens.

14. To achieve these fundamental aims six interrelated goals must be met. They are:

(a) A surge in the pace of economic growth in the developing countries;

(b) A development process that is responsive to social needs, seeks a significant reduction in extreme poverty, promotes the development and utilization of human resources and skills and is environmentally sound and sustainable;

(c) An improvement of the international systems of money, finance and trade so as to support the development process;

(d) A setting of strength and stability in the world economy and sound macro-economic management, nationally and internationally;

(e) A decisive strengthening of international development co-operation;

(f), A special effort to deal with the problems of the least developed countries, the weakest among the developing countries.

15. These goals and objectives pose a big challenge. They call for serious and committed efforts by all countries. The developing countries themselves have the responsibility for the great effort needed to mobilize the potential of their people, to modernize and diversify their economies and to set themselves ambitious targets to build the foundation on which development rests: technical and managerial skills, industrial and agricultural capability and effective government services. Human resources development, entrepreneurship and innovation, and the energetic application of science and technology, in a context of political freedom, respect for human rights, justice and equity, are all essential and relevant to growth and development. The Strategy has singled out a number of areas of special priority: the eradication of poverty and hunger, human resources and institutional development, population, the environment and food and agriculture. The pursuit of goals in these areas calls for resolute and vigorous action and for styles of development that establish a mutually reinforcing relationship between rapid economic growth and social objectives.

16. The efforts of the developing countries will, however, be easily thwarted by an unsupportive external environment. They will be thwarted if sudden external shocks decimate their national product and external revenues, as happened to many of them in the 1980s. All countries live in the international economic environment, but most developing countries remain imperfectly integrated into it and excessively vulnerable to its instability. Many are captives of external debt problems, of reduction in external resource flows, of sharply declining terms of trade and of mounting barriers to market access. Great obligations fall on the industrialized countries, which influence the international economic environment and the functioning of the international economy and are partners in international co-operation for development. Great obligations fall also on the system of international organizations to extend and fulfil their role in the promotion of development. Developing countries can prosper only in a stable and progressive world economy and, conversely, the world community can have a safe and prosperous future only if economic, social and political progress in the developing countries is assured.

17. The attainment of the aims of the Strategy calls for more than marginal increases of growth rates. The developing countries must be enabled to generate progressively the resources needed to ensure productive employment for a fast-growing labour force, to overcome hunger, disease and ignorance and to raise living standards. The negative trends of the 1980s need to be reversed and conditions created for a kind of development that signifies a genuine transformation and does more than keep a growing population from the brink of famine. The time has come to move beyond adjusting to the shocks of the 1980s and to lay the foundations for a new wave of development. For most developing countries, growth rates must accelerate significantly during the decade. Growth objectives will vary from country to country. For the relatively few countries where growth in the 1980s was satisfactory, the aim would be to consolidate progress and ensure that it is sustained. In the many countries where growth was interrupted, the first requirement is a return to a path of expansion where economic growth does not merely keep pace with, but well exceeds, the growth of population. In the second half of the decade, the foundations for higher rates of growth should have been established. On the basis of the experience of some countries, it is considered that sustained growth at a rate of the order of 7 per cent would provide the necessary conditions for a genuine transformation of the economy, with rapid increases in productive employment and poverty eradication, and would generate the resources needed for the protection of the environment.

18. Higher rates of growth in developing countries will reflect progress in several sectors of the economy and in the pursuit of social and other goals. Although the Strategy does not seek to establish comprehensive and interrelated sectoral targets to be attained by the developing countries as a whole, many of its elements have been addressed in the various parts of the United Nations system. They cover such areas, among others, as employment and health, women and children, industry and technology, agriculture and food, population, education and culture, shelter and settlement, telecommunications, transportation, including shipping, and the environment. Sectoral strategies and plans for significant achievements have been agreed upon by Governments. Translated into goals and objectives for both national and international efforts, ambitious and feasible targets of this kind have proved valuable in focusing policies and in monitoring progress. They also serve as reminders of the progress that can be achieved within a decade, with strong political commitment and dedicated efforts.

19. The Strategy must look beyond the constraints of the moment. A decade is not enough to work miracles, but a true decade of development would make a great difference to the world situation on the eve of the next century. Serious development problems would still persist, but the debilitating deadlock of the recent past would have been broken for many developing countries. Their living standards would be rising instead of falling, the younger generation would find employment instead of being condemned to a desperate scurry for survival, and poverty and hunger would be pushed back instead of advancing. Revived investment would lay the foundation for growth in the next century and the energies and talents of the people in the developing countries would be harnessed for building their own future. The world as a whole would be safer and more prosperous than it will if present trends continue. A continued development failure in the next decade would be an invitation to world-wide disorder.

III. Policies and measures

20. The policies and measures needed to support and realize the Strategy must reflect the urgency of its goals and objectives. They must aim at the acceleration of growth and give attention to issues of special priority in the development process and must respond to special situations, including those of the least developed countries. In each area, there are important policies and measures that need to be adopted in a national context by the developing countries themselves. There are equally important policies and measures that have to be adopted by the developed countries in the context of international co-operation for development. The international community as a whole must also strengthen the systems that support the sound workings of the world economy and the development process. The Strategy is thus of relevance to all countries, which must commit their best efforts to put-sue its goals within the limits of their abilities and responsibilities. The Strategy does not require unrequited sacrifices on the part of any countries. To the extent that public resources must be used in the pursuit of its goals, they represent investments in a better future world, investments that are strikingly modest by the standard of present defence budgets.

A. THE REACTIVATION OF DEVELOPMENT

1. Economic policy frameworks, external debt, development finance, international trade, commodities

21. The reactivation and acceleration of development requires both a dynamic and supportive international economic environment and determined policies at the national level. It will be frustrated in the absence of either of these requirements. The policies and measures needed for the 1990s must therefore cover both aspects. A supportive external economic environment is crucial. The development process will not gather momentum if the global economy lacks dynamism and stability and is beset with uncertainties. Neither will it gather momentum if the developing countries are weighed down by external indebtedness, if development finance is inadequate, if barriers restrict access to markets and if commodity prices and the terms of trade of developing countries remain depressed. The record of the 1980s was essentially negative on each of these counts and needs to be reversed. The policies and measures needed to create an international environment that is strongly supportive of national development efforts in the 1990s are thus a vital part of the Strategy. So too are national policies for development. Their main elements are set out below.

The economic policy framework

22. A surge in development during the decade of the 1990s can take place only within supportive frameworks of overall economic policy, both national and international. The sound macro-economic management of the world economy is of paramount importance. The major industrialized countries, which broadly determine the international economic environment by their policies, have a special responsibility to bring about a stable and predictable international economic environment in which development can succeed. The adverse development environment of the 1980s was in part a consequence of restrictive policies of the earlier years of the decade aimed at combating inflation at the expense of growth. The major industrialized countries influence world economic growth and the international economic environment profoundly. They should continue their efforts to promote sustained growth and to narrow imbalances in a manner that can benefit other countries. The co-ordination of macro-economic policies should take full account of the interests and concerns of all countries, particularly the developing countries. Efforts should be made to enhance the effectiveness of multilateral surveillance aimed at correcting existing external and fiscal imbalances, promoting non-inflationary sustainable growth, lowering real rates of interest and making exchange rates more stable and markets more accessible.

23. The macro-economic policies of the developed countries should take account of the interests and concerns of the developing countries. During the 1980s, the developing countries were seriously affected by increases in real rates of interest and by frequent fluctuations in key exchange rates.

24. The economic policy framework of developing countries helps to shape the national environment for development and will need to take account of the objectives, priorities and particular circumstances of each country. But the acceleration of development will require strenuous efforts on a number of fronts. There is a need for determined policies that aim at increasing domestic savings and raising investments, as well as at improving the returns to investment. National policies must succeed in containing inflationary pressures, which often have adverse economic and social consequences that prove disruptive of development. This calls for monetary and fiscal discipline to promote price stability and external balance and the maintenance of realistic exchange rates without the need for repeated currency depreciations that have often had adverse consequences on social stability and the terms of trade of developing countries.

25. National policies must also be directed at mobilizing all the latent energies and impulses for development within the developing countries, at promoting efficiency in the allocation of resources and at taking advantage of the opportunities for trade, investment and scientific and technological progress provided by a changing global economic environment. The role of the public sector in the development process is essential. Impediments to progress caused by bureaucratic inefficiencies, strains on administration, excessive controls and neglect of market conditions by public enterprises need to be removed. The policy environment should, within the context of national goals, encourage a creative contribution by the private sector, stimulate entrepreneurship and innovation and promote the participation of the people at all levels in the development process. It should provide scope for the operation of market forces and for realistic pricing as a means to greater efficiency and soundness in the allocation of resources. The national policy framework should also enable developing countries to take full advantage of the opportunities of international trade and foreign investment, as well as promote co-operation among themselves. The effectiveness and flexibility of national policy frameworks would be enhanced in a setting of improving political institutions and legal systems. This would be reinforced by conditions that would permit declining military expenditures and thus the channelling of resources released to social and economic development.

External debt

26. For many developing countries, the reactivation of development will not take place without an early and durable solution to the problems of external indebtedness, taking into account the fact that, for many developing countries, external debt burdens are a significant problem. The burden of debt-service payments on those countries has imposed severe constraints on their ability to accelerate growth and eradicate poverty and has led to a contraction in imports, investment and consumption. External indebtedness has emerged as a main factor in the economic stalemate in the developing countries; there has been a large net transfer of resources from the developing to the developed countries, depriving the former of much-needed resources for development. Development during the decade of the 1990s should not be hampered by prolonged failure to resolve the international debt problems. Accordingly, a durable and broad solution to these problems should continue to be given urgent attention as we begin the decade of the 1990s. Innovative solutions need to be found and relief obtained in the initial years of the decade.

27. Recent initiatives and measures to reduce the stock and service of debt or to provide debt relief for developing countries should be broadly implemented. Relief measures should aim at the resumption of vigorous growth and development in these countries and should address all types of bilateral debt of debtor developing countries. Serious consideration should be given to continuing to work towards a growth-oriented solution of the problems of developing countries with serious debt-servicing problems, including those whose debt is mainly to official creditors or to multilateral institutions.

28. Finding a solution to the debt problems is the joint responsibility of debtor and creditor countries, commercial banks and multilateral financial institutions. Debtor countries should continue their efforts to attain efficiency and return to a path of sustained growth by adopting appropriate national economic policies. The creditor countries are encouraged to continue reviewing their tax policies and regulatory and accounting practices in order to facilitate commercial debt and debt-service reduction operations. The multilateral financial institutions should continue to provide support for debt and debt-service reduction packages, with the necessary flexibility, under their established guidelines. Creditor countries should support growth-oriented policies of debtor countries in order to facilitate the resumption of growth and development, as well as the prompt restoration of creditworthiness of the debtor countries.

29. The measures agreed upon in the Paris Declaration and Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990, on the external debt problems of the least developed countries should be urgently and vigorously implemented.

30. The Paris Club is invited to consider increasing the flexibility of its negotiating mechanism and examining the current criteria of eligibility for debt relief, as well as the scope of the initiative taken at the Toronto Economic Summit, held in June 1988, for dealing with the debt problem, taking into account, inter alia the Economic Declaration adopted at the Houston Economic Summit, held in July 1990. Measures must continue to be taken to relieve the external debt burden of low-income and lower-middle-income countries whose debts are mainly to official creditors. Measures to address the external official debt problems of middle-income countries should also be seriously considered.

31. The external debt of the developing countries includes debts to multilateral financial institutions. These institutions must continue to find means to relieve the burdens that arise out of such debt in ways that safeguard the high standing of the institutions in financial markets, such as the World Bank Debt Reduction Facility of the International Development Association established in 1989 to provide debt relief to severely indebted low-income developing countries.

32. There is a close interrelationship between the external debt problem of the developing countries and the global economic environment. The debt-service burden is aggravated by rising interest rates, declining terms of trade, shrinking flows of external resources, protectionist barriers to trade and slow growth in the world economy, and would be lessened by an improvement in these factors. A marked improvement in the international economic environment, combined with appropriate national policies that take advantage of this improvement, is essential in order to solve these debt problems and to avoid their proliferation among countries that have hitherto avoided their disruptive consequences.

External development finance

33. Adequate resources, both domestic and external, are an essential condition for the reactivation of development. The developing countries need to mobilize domestic resources to the greatest extent possible and implement determined policies and measures to this end. In the case of most developing countries, domestic savings contribute by far the larger part of the resources utilized for investment.

34. However, the essence of the development problem is that countries that are poor have limited scope for increasing savings by restraining levels of consumption that are already low. The savings efforts of the developing countries need therefore to be supplemented by external resources so as to raise investment to the levels needed for adequate economic growth.

35. Furthermore, the development process is generally dependent on the flow of imported goods and services that are needed for the growth of the economy. Where export earnings fall short of import needs, the development process would be frustrated in the absence of supplementary flows of external resources.

36. The external economic environment of the 1980s did not favour the flow of external resources to developing countries. Falling commodity prices and protectionist trends weakened the export earnings from many countries, while the flow of development finance was impeded by constraints on aid budgets in the donor countries and, after the debt crisis of 1982, the end of net lending by commercial banks to developing countries. Because of this, developing countries became less attractive for foreign investors. By the middle of the 1980s, the net transfer of resources to developing countries on the aggregate turned negative because of the burden of debt-service payments. This trend was further compounded by losses incurred by developing countries on account of the deterioration in their terms of trade.

37. These trends have to be reversed in the 1990s if development is to be accelerated. A surge in the tempo of development is virtually unimaginable if the flow of external resources is from the poorer to the richer countries rather than vice versa. This would make meaningless the concept of a decade of development endorsed by the international community. The new consensus on the need for a reactivation of development and on the priorities of development policies calls for a new commitment on the part of the international community to augment the flow of development finance to the levels needed to attain these agreed goals.

38. A reduction in the burden of debt-service payments, as discussed earlier, is an essential requirement for reversing the negative trends relating to the flow of external resources to developing countries. But there must also be significant improvements in the flow of finance for development from the major sources of such finance, that is, official bilateral assistance, lending by commercial banks, direct private investment and multilateral financial institutions. Such improvements, when taken as a whole, should be adequate for the requirements of development finance in the 1990s. In order merely to restore a positive net transfer to the developing countries in a foreseeable future, during which no substantial flows or commercial credits can be expected, net official flows of loans and grants from all sources, which remained virtually constant at $35 billion in the 1980s, would have to grow substantially in the first half of the 1990s.

39. Economic reforms and the integration of Eastern Europe into the world market will generate substantial new demands for resources. This enlargement of the international division of labour will be to the benefit of all, but such needs should be met without diversion of the flows needed by developing countries.

40. Official development assistance must remain an essential source of concessional aid to the developing countries, particularly to the poorest and the least developed. Aid programmes of donor countries have in many cases remained at low levels and need to be substantially improved in the 1990s. Official development assistance has, on average, remained at only half of the internationally agreed target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product. Donor countries should, in the 1990s, implement such undertakings as they have made to reach or surpass this target, as well as the targets for the least developed countries as adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries. There should also be continued improvements in the quality of aid as well as in its utilization. The release of resources from any reductions in military spending and the recovery in the industrial countries should ease the budgetary constraints of donor countries, and rising concern about the environment and world poverty should provide new opportunities for development co-operation.

41. New possibilities for increasing the flow of development finance in the 1990s should also be explored. These include proposals for devoting part of the resources that may be released by the disarmament process and reduced military spending to development and for recycling to the developing countries, through suitable mechanisms and modalities, a part of the payments surpluses of major developed countries.

42. Lending by commercial banks, in the aftermath of the debt crisis, has ceased to be a major source of development finance. However, a resumption of such lending is relevant in the context both of solutions to the debt problem and of the needs of the developing countries, particularly those which are not recipients of significant concessional aid. The reactivation and acceleration of growth and an improvement in the global economic environment will help restore confidence in the creditworthiness of borrowing countries and facilitate the return of flight capital. None the less, innovative changes will also be needed to evolve instruments of lending that help cushion borrowing countries against a recurrence of debt-service problems.

43. Foreign direct investment, which is not generally debt creating, could play an increasingly important role as a source of development finance, particularly when international trade is growing, markets are expanding and new opportunities are opening up through scientific and technological developments. Transnational corporations are already channels for technology transfer, world trade and marketing. Many developing countries are seeking, to the extent compatible with national objectives, to establish a positive investment climate and to adopt appropriate investment codes.

44. The need for development finance is unlikely to be met exclusively through channels of official development assistance, lending by commercial banks and direct private foreign investment. The multilateral financial institutions could and should play a major role in the 1990s in development financing. Despite the efforts that have been made to enlarge the resources of the institutions in order to meet new needs, they will have to be considerably expanded in the 1990s. Their resources have been falling behind the growth of the world economy and especially behind that of the world capital markets. The net lending of the World Bank and regional development banks was, by the late 1980s, negligible or negative for a large number of developing countries. These institutions should be enabled to serve the role of intermediation between developing countries and the international capital market, for which they were designed. The conditionality associated with the use of resources should be realistic and in accordance with the need to ensure effective utilization by recipient countries.

45. The international monetary and financial system must evolve in the 1990s and respond to the needs of a changing world, which now calls for universal co-operation. It should become an increasingly important source of both development finance and international liquidity. It should provide greater stability and predictability in exchange rates. Developing countries should have greater influence in decisions that affect them vitally.

International trade

46. The goal of reactivating development requires a strongly supportive environment for international trade in general and for trade of the developing countries in particular over the decade of the 1990s. The international trading system is the pillar of an interdependent world economy and should establish conditions of openness and fairness in the interest of all countries. Growth and development and the solution of the pressing problems facing the developing countries are dependent on an open and credible multilateral trading system based on the principles of non-discrimination and transparency. Outward-looking development policies and export-based industrialization will not succeed if export markets are limited by restrictive barriers. The international trading system will function best in an environment of growth and dynamism in the world economy, an environment to which the system itself will contribute, but it needs to be strengthened further in the 1990s by specific actions and measures.

47. Policies and measures in the area of international trade must be directed, in the first place, at arresting and reversing trends, particularly apparent during the 1980s, towards the erosion of the multilateral trading system as a result of unilateralism, bilateralism and protectionism. The international organizations in the field of trade should be strengthened to play their part in the achievement of this objective. Many new issues that reflect the changing nature of the world economy are pertinent to the evolution of the international trading system. But the strengthening of the trading system also requires the resolution of a number of ongoing issues, some of which are of special interest to developing countries and are crucial to the development process.

48. The acceleration of development in the decade of the 1990s should, inter alia, be supported by the following actions and measures in the field of international trade:

(a) Full and effective implementation of the commitment to halt and reverse protectionism, as undertaken in the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. Protectionist trends of the 1980s have an adverse impact on the world economy and on the development process and performance of the developing countries and should not continue in the 1990s. Recourse to non-tariff barriers of various kinds, which has tended to increase in recent years, has affected the exports of developing countries;

(b) Trade liberalization and a sustained improvement in the access of developing country exports to the markets of both developing and developed countries through the reduction and removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers. Rapid structural adjustment in the developed countries in line with shifting comparative advantages will facilitate market access for the growing export capabilities of developing countries that arise in the course of their economic transformation. The rules of the international trading system recognize the need for differential and favourable treatment of developing countries in the context of the other principles set out in the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round. This need should be reflected in the functioning of the system;

(c) Liberalization of trade in tropical products and natural resource-based products. This should include ending the escalation in tariffs on processed primary products;

(d) Bringing trade in textiles under the normal rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade;

(e) Progressive and substantial reduction of support and protection in the field of agriculture;

(f) Effective implementation and appropriate improvement of the generalized system of preferences, expansion of product coverage, duty-free treatment and adherence to the principles of non-reciprocity and non-discrimination in its application;

(g) Measures to ensure that regional economic integration and the formation of trade blocs will not impede the growth of world trade and are in conformity with the rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. In particular, it is necessary to ensure that such developments do not result in additional barriers to developing country exports;

(h) Strict adherence to the rules and principles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade by all contracting parties.

49. Developing countries should endeavour to liberalize their trade régimes in ways consistent with their development objectives so as to improve the efficiency and flexibility of their economies and their participation in the world economy. They should create trade opportunities among themselves and promote more rapid industrialization, in particular through the effective implementation of the Global System of Trade Preferences. There is great potential for economic integration among developing countries and new efforts should be made during the 1990s to establish effective subregional and regional market arrangements among them.

50. The successful and balanced conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which aims at strengthening the international trading system, is crucial for progress in the 1990s. The treatment of new issues, hitherto outside the scope of the rules of the system, should take account of the development dimension and of the need for developing countries to build up their own capabilities. The dialogue and negotiations about required improvements in the international trading system should be continued and expanded in the 1990s. The dialogue should focus, inter alia, on an equitable balance of interest between developed and developing countries, the adaptation and reform of the system to ensure its relevance to the changing patterns of international trade, and the need to ensure greater co-ordination between international trade and financial policies.

Commodities

51. The terms of trade of the developing countries are an important aspect of the international economic environment for development. The depressed levels of commodity prices and earnings of developing countries from commodity exports were an important element in the slowing down of the development process in many developing countries in the 1980s. Technological change played some part in depressing the long-term trend of demand for certain commodities. But slow growth and instability in the world economy and persistently high supplies were factors of critical importance. Commodity exports will continue to play a key role during the 1990s in the economies of most developing countries and will remain crucial to their export earnings and livelihood. For these countries, the reactivation of development during the decade will prove difficult in the face of continued weakness in their commodity sectors and terms of trade and will require a flexible response on the supply side to changing market conditions. The Strategy must aim at better functioning of commodity markets with greater transparency and more stable and predictable conditions. There is scope for improving international commodity policies in a number of ways.

52. The Integrated Programme for Commodities sought to improve the functioning of commodity markets through commodity agreements between producers and consumers, with support from the Common Fund for Commodities. The negotiation and renegotiation of such agreements proved difficult in the rapidly changing world economy of the 1980s, and a number of existing agreements broke down. There has been hardly any lasting improvement in most commodity markets since then, and the need for remedial action remains urgent. Commodity agreements between producers and consumers that improve the stability, transparency and functioning of markets and reflect long-term market trends benefit both producers and consumers, and efforts should be made to negotiate or renegotiate agreements of this type in the 1990s. The first window of the Common Fund was established for the specific purpose of supporting such international commodity agreements.

53. The diversification of the economies of developing countries and their increased participation in the processing, marketing and distribution of their commodities is of the utmost importance. The second window of the Common Fund for Commodities should be effectively used in this regard, particularly for technical assistance and for commodity-specific programmes for horizontal and vertical diversification, especially for the least developed countries. The diversification process should also be supported through the provision of improved market access for primary and processed commodities. Co-operation among developing countries could also play a significant role in the processing, transportation and marketing of commodities.

34. Compensatory financing is an important means of cushioning developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, against commodity-related shortfalls in export earnings. Existing compensatory financing schemes, particularly the Compensatory and Contingency Financing Facility of the International Monetary Fund, should be strengthened as appropriate.

2. Science and technology, industrial policies and measures, agriculture

55. A solution to the debt problem, adequate resource flows and a supportive environment in the areas of international trade and commodity markets are among the prerequisites for the reactivation of development during the 1990s. But a sustained acceleration of the development process will not take place unless developing countries modernize and transform their industrial and agricultural sectors and participate in the progress made possible by advances in science and technology. National policies in these areas must reflect the particular situations. But many issues have strategic aspects that are widely relevant. These are set out in the sections that follow, as a guide both to national efforts and to the support that is possible and needed through international development co-operation. In virtually all areas of effort, there is scope and need for supportive financial and technical assistance from donor Governments, multilateral lending institutions and international agencies. There are also possibilities and requirements for co-operation among developing countries.

Science and technology

56. The reactivation of development in the decade of the 1990s on a sustained basis will be linked to the ability of the developing countries to participate in the rapid advances in science and technology that have characterized the global economy in recent years and will continue in the future. Knowledge is today a crucial determinant of economic progress. The knowledge gap between the developed and the developing countries has been widening, and policies and measures are needed to help narrow it over the coming decade. High priority must therefore be given by the developed and capabilities in this area.

57. Development and modernization in a setting of rapid advances in science and technology call for the establishment and strengthening of scientific cadres and for upgrading the skills of the work force. Developing countries, in their plans and policies, should emphasize policies and measures that enhance their scientific and technological capability and should devote adequate resources to that end. Such policies must range from the expansion and adaptation of their educational systems, including vocational education, to the building up of scientific and technological research and development capabilities.

58. Policies and measures in this field should seek to enhance the capacity of developing countries to utilize scientific and technological developments from abroad, as well as to modify and adapt them to suit local conditions. Such policies should also aim at traditional technologies that are capable of being developed as a means of raising productivity.

59. Building the scientific and technological capability of developing countries calls for external assistance in research and development, in the establishment and strengthening of institutions in the area of science and technology, in the diffusion of new technologies and in the training of scientific cadres. Developing countries should not be discriminated against with regard to commercial access to science and technology for development purposes. Commercial channels for the import of technology, including direct foreign investment, are especially relevant and should be utilized on suitable terms and conditions. In addition, with respect to access to and transfer of technology on concessional and preferential terms, in particular to developing countries, effective modalities should be examined with a view to implementing and enhancing such access and transfer as much as possible.

60. The international community should also review ways in which the intellectual property system can promote more effectively the economic and technological development of all countries, particularly the developing countries, and in which intellectual property can be effectively protected. Work on the international code of conduct on the transfer of technology should also be completed.

61. There is considerable scope for co-operation among developing countries in the development of science and technology. The developing countries could help each other through the establishment of common institutions and centres for research and training, the pursuit of joint projects for technological research and development, the offer of facilities for education in science and technology among themselves and the exchange of information. Science and technology must be given a prominent place in schemes for co-operation among developing countries at the global as well as at the regional and subregional levels.

Industrial policies and measures

62. An acceleration in the process of industrialization must be a central element in the economic transformation of most developing countries and in the reactivation of development in the 1990s. Given the limits to agriculture as a means of providing increased employment and additional external earnings, industrialization becomes indispensable for sustained economic growth and social development. It is also through industrialization that developing countries could make use of many of the opportunities provided by advances in science and technology and by international markets. Policies and measures to promote industrialization must thus be a major plank in the Strategy.

63. Some notable exceptions apart, manufacturing industry stagnated in many developing countries during the 1980s. These countries experienced a chronic underutilization of existing industrial capacity, a lack of maintenance, import constraints and technological obsolescence. These problems were at Limes Compounded by mismanagement. For these countries, the rehabilitation of their industrial sectors and an end to the underutilization of capacities must be objectives of priority. The rate of industrialization will obviously vary among countries, but for many countries, especially for those where manufacturing industry was set back in the 1980s, historical experience suggests that the objective should be to raise it significantly, say, to 8 to 10 per cent.

64. Industrial progress requires investments directly related to increasing manufacturing capacity. It is also dependent on an improved and modernized infrastructure in such areas as communications and transport, power and banking and finance. It is dependent, too, on a supportive policy framework in the fiscal and monetary fields. Not least, it is crucially dependent on managerial and technical skills and on a trained and efficient work-force. Industrial development must also make use of linkages with other sectors of the economy, particularly the rural sector, which could supply both materials and markets for industrial growth. These subjects must form an integral part of the policies and measures that developing countries need to take for industrial progress during the decade. But there are also certain other major issues of policy that are central to faster progress in industrialization and that may call for new orientations. These are outlined below.

65. One such issue concerns the relative roles of the public and private sectors. In the past, many developing countries, anxious to speed up industrialization and faced with a weak and inexperienced private sector, sought to establish manufacturing enterprises owned and run by governmental entities and enjoying a high degree of protection. Experience has shown that there can be limitations to such an approach, particularly when administrative capacities are strained. State-run enterprises can be hampered by bureaucratic rigidity and inefficiency, and lack flexibility, competitiveness and innovative power. The capabilities of the private sector have grown in many countries and there is considerable scope for enhancing the contribution that private enterprise can make to a dynamic process of industrialization. Entrepreneurship should be encouraged at all levels for the setting up of industries. There is usually a strong potential for the development of medium- and small-scale industries that could also contribute to enlarging both urban and rural employment opportunities. Where industries are under public ownership, efficiency should be improved through measures that increase their flexibility and their ability to respond to changing conditions.

66. Another issue is that of industrial production for exports as against production for the domestic market and import substitution. The establishment of industries supplying domestic markets is desirable because of market proximity, linkages with other sectors and reduced dependence. But there are often limits to the scope for import-substituting industries, particularly where markets are small. In these cases, policies based excessively on import substitution supported by highly protective barriers result in high cost and inefficiency. Production for export is a means of overcoming these limitations. It becomes a virtual imperative where the scope for additional agricultural exports is limited. It is also a means of keeping step with technological progress and of closer integration with global markets, since exports call for efficiency and competitiveness.

67. The goal of industrialization calls for the building up of domestic ownership and national managerial and technological capabilities. But, direct foreign investment can make an important contribution to industrialization. Such investment not only provides additional resources, but is also a means of having access to modern technologies, skills and markets. The rules and regulations of developing countries should encourage direct foreign investment in ways in which mutual interests are furthered. The constraints to the flow of external resources from other sources give added importance to direct foreign investment as a means of augmenting this flow.

68. The progress of industrialization in developing countries, and of outward-looking development in general, is closely related to openness and non-discrimination in international markets. The implementation of the measures needed in this area, as set out in the section on international trade, such as the lowering of tariff and non-tariff barriers and measures to further structural adjustment in the developed countries, form an important part of the strategy for industrialization.

69. Industrial progress in developing countries can also be significantly enhanced through co-operation among such countries at the global, regional and sub-regional levels. The integration of markets of developing countries, the setting up of joint ventures and programmes for training and upgrading skills must be among the objectives of policies and measures to promote industrialization during the 1990s.

Agriculture

70. For many countries, agriculture, with its large contribution to the national economy, will remain the principal means for the revitalization of economic growth during the 1990s. To the extent that countries depend on the export of agricultural commodities to world markets, progress will be closely related to the implementation of the measures outlined earlier for strengthening international trade in commodities. But agricultural production in the developing countries also meets the production requirements for the domestic market for food and other products of both the farming and the non-farming population. The acceleration of development calls, therefore, for a special focus on policies and measures aimed at raising agricultural output and at strengthening food security and self-reliance in food.

71. The transition from a traditional system of cultivation, sometimes at a subsistence level, to modernized agriculture should be the underlying aim of agricultural policy. In many developing countries, the pressures on available land are already high and there are limits to what can be achieved through an extension of the area under cultivation. Where such possibilities remain, measures could be taken to bring new land under cultivation through programmes of irrigation and land settlement, provided that adverse environmental consequences, such as could arise from excessive forest clearing, are avoided. In great part, however, progress in agriculture is heavily dependent on raising productivity on lands already under cultivation. The scope for this could be large given the gap, often wide, between current productivity and technical potential.

72. There are several important components of the policies and measures needed for raising agricultural production and productivity. An annual rate of growth of the order of 4 per cent on average in food production would make a major contribution to food security and support agro-industrial development. But the great diversity of country situations means that there is no single set of policies of general applicability. Success will often depend on the removal of key constraints, which vary greatly from country to country. However, policies and measures based on the considerations set out below will be of broad applicability.

73. Success in reaching the potential for raising agricultural productivity require a farming population possessed of the knowledge, the incentives and the means required for this purpose. Improving the knowledge and skills of farmers calls for the diffusion of technology relating to agricultural practices and the use of improved varieties, as well as for the continued development and adaptation of technology through research. This underlines the importance both of effective extension efforts and services and of measures to enhance the capabilities of research institutions. The successful adoption of better methods and technologies is crucially dependent on incentives that link the use of superior methods to prospects for farmers to improve their standard of living. The price incentive is especially important, particularly in the context of the transition from subsistence farming to modernized agriculture. Policies that depress the prices of farm output in order to protect or subsidize living costs for the population at large are often counter-productive. A policy framework that permits more realistic prices that better reflect market situations often yields better results. Such a framework must also remove the shortcomings in marketing, distribution and storage that lead to an excessive gap between retail and farm prices.

74. Farmers must also have access to the means of raising agricultural productivity. Economic units of land and secure systems of tenure are often prerequisites for agricultural progress. Facilities for irrigation and a strong infrastructure of transport, communications and power, as well as other services that overcome the remoteness of rural areas, are among the others. A strong network of rural banking and credit is also vital to help farmers procure inputs and make the investments needed for raising production.

75. Policies and measures aimed at raising agricultural production need to take account of the linkages between agriculture and other sectors of the economy. The link with the industrial sector is especially important, since industry is a source of farm inputs and of consumer goods for the rural population, as well as a source of demand for agricultural products. Agro-industries located in rural areas can provide both a stimulus to agriculture and a source of employment for underutilized labour. In a more general sense, there is also a close link between the productivity of farmers and the extent and quality of educational and health services and of housing available to the rural population.

76. There is often considerable potential for improving the contribution of women to agricultural progress. In most developing countries, women form an important part of the active farming population and of the agricultural labour force. Policies and measures to increase their productivity and involve them more in key decisions should raise their contribution to output and their incomes. Schemes for rural self-help and for the mobilization of labour for community development and for the upgrading and maintenance of the rural infrastructure can also play an important part in the drive for agricultural progress.

77. A number of steps are also needed at the international level. Finance for investments in the agricultural sector and technical assistance should form part of programmes for development co-operation, both bilateral and multilateral. Developing countries should have assured access to advances in such fields as biotechnology and genetic engineering, at appropriate costs. The removal of existing distortions in international trade in agriculture is also essential. In particular, the achievement of this objective requires that there be substantial and progressive reduction in support and protection of agriculture--covering internal régimes, market access and export subsidies--in order to avoid inflicting large losses on the more efficient producers, especially in developing countries. Special importance is attached to the successful outcome and effective follow-up of the Uruguay Round in the areas of agriculture, tropical products and natural resource-based products, taking account of the needs of the net food-importing developing countries.

B. PRIORITY ASPECTS OF DEVELOPMENT

78. An acceleration in the rate of economic growth is an essential objective for the 1990s. It is a condition for expanding the resource base of the developing countries and hence for economic, technological and social transformation. But economic growth by itself does not ensure that its benefits will be equitably distributed or that the physical environment will be protected and improved. Yet, if poverty persists or increases and there is neglect of the human condition, political and social strains will grow and endanger stability in the 1990s and beyond. Similarly, if environmental damage and degradation increases, the natural resource base of the developing countries and the welfare of populations will be harmed and progress in development itself will become unsustainable. The Strategy must therefore give special attention to the policies and measures needed in the areas of poverty alleviation, human resource development and the environment. It must also pay special attention to the related areas of population growth and the elimination of hunger. The decade of the 1990s must witness a significant improvement in the human condition everywhere and establish a mutually reinforcing relationship between economic growth and human welfare. The need to strengthen this relationship is, in fact, a principal theme of the present Strategy. It has not only to be reflected in national efforts but must also be promoted by the international community through financial and technical support.

1. Eradication of poverty and hunger

79. The international community, noting the severity of problems related to poverty in developing countries, agrees that the objective of eradicating poverty is of the highest priority. It is encouraging that a broad consensus is emerging on strategies to be pursued towards the achievement of this goal.

80. The goal of eradicating poverty calls for policies and measures on two broad fronts. It calls, in the first place, for a style of development in which economic progress is distributed as widely as possible and not concentrated excessively on a few localities and sectors or limited groups of the population. It also requires, to the extent that poor and vulnerable sections of the population are not reached by this process, special and supplementary programmes and actions that are directly targeted to bring benefits to these groups.

81. The generation of employment and income through productive occupation is a major means of eradicating poverty since the absence of adequate income owing to landlessness or the lack of opportunities for work is a prime cause of poverty. Development programmes and processes that provide employment on a large scale are thus an essential need. The sectors and the regions in which development takes place and the technologies adopted must be such as to have a significant impact on employment. This must be an important consideration in establishing the balance between growth in the agricultural, industrial, construction and other service sectors. The creation of employment and income through the activation of the informal sector of the economy and through the expansion of self-employment activities should also be an important part of policies to improve incomes and eradicate poverty.

82. Progress in development, even when occurring on a broad front, might still bypass significantly large sections of the population, particularly the poorest and most vulnerable. Special programmes and measures that are aimed directly at increasing their real income are thus likely to prove necessary. These could include the provision of cheap and subsidized food and other essentials, as well as income support for the poorest and the destitute. They could also include programmes of training and of mobilization of labour for local self-help and community development as well as for production. Such programmes establish a link between activities aimed at the eradication of poverty and productive activities. The provision of facilities at low cost in such areas as health, education and transport is also a means of raising the real income of the poor. Measures to relieve homelessness or poor housing should be another major aspect of poverty eradication programmes. The increase in the number of homeless people in many developing countries has been one of the serious manifestations of the deteriorating human condition, and the improvement of human settlements as agreed in the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 should be part of the crucial effort in this field.

83. Women and children are a particularly vulnerable group in situations of poverty. Policies and measures for poverty eradication should have a particular focus on their needs and give special attention to maternal and child health care and to nutrition. Food security is also a major aspect of the fight against hunger and poverty and calls for an integrated approach to food production and consumption.

84. Policies and measures that are specifically directed at poverty eradication must carefully target that part of the population which is in need. Subsidized facilities and services that are general in scope and bring benefits to groups that are not in need are normally costly and impose excessive strains on the limited resources available to developing countries. Subsidies of a general nature could also contribute towards distorting prices and may, as in the case of food, have adverse effects on incentives for domestic production.

85. Developing countries need not await the transformation in per capita income to do away with the extremes of poverty, particularly hunger and destitution. Some developing countries with low per capita incomes have succeeded in obtaining relatively good results in the social field. In the long run, however, economic growth is needed to raise living standards and eliminate poverty. Long periods of stagnation or low growth might make unsustainable the initial gains in the social area.

86. The struggle against poverty is the shared responsibility of all countries. The eradication of poverty, as well as broad humanitarian and social goals, such as advancement in the quality of development, broad participation, larger choice and better opportunities for all men and women, need and should have the full support of the international community. A substantial reduction in hunger and malnutrition is within reach. There is considerable scope for international food aid going beyond emergency situations. Member States must give effect to agreements already reached to make all efforts to meet four goals during the decade:

- (a) The elimination of starvation and death caused by famine;
- (b) A substantial reduction in malnutrition and mortality among children;
- (c) A tangible reduction of chronic hunger;
- (d) The elimination of major nutritional diseases.

2. Human resource and institutional development

87. Human resource development has the closest of interactions with the process of economic and technological transformation. In a broad sense, it covers a wide range of activities that release the creative potential of the individual and determine the style of development. Each country has to choose its approach to human resource and institutional development in accordance with its national priorities, values, traditions and cultures and stage of development. Education and health are, however, essential aspects of human resource development and must receive special attention.

88. Education is both a basic human need and a prerequisite for the achievement of the other objectives of development. The educational skills of the labour force determine to a large extent a country's competitive strength and its capacity to adjust to new and sophisticated technologies. In a number of developing countries, expenditure on education declined in absolute or relative terms during the 1980s against the background of a worsening economic situation, and there was a resulting deterioration in the quality of education. Attention needs to be given, in the light of country situations, to each of the aspects of the educational system. The eradication of illiteracy needs special emphasis, including its eradication among women. A target of reducing adult illiteracy by at least one half during the decade has already been set by the international community. But a sound base of primary and secondary education is a basic requirement. Policies and measures in this area must provide for the relatively rapid increase in the school-age population that accompanies the growth of population common to most developing countries. In fact, the goals for the decade of providing universal access to basic education and of the completion of primary education by at least 80 per cent of the school-age group have been internationally accepted. This calls for adequate resources, both financial and administrative, capital and current, for the provision of facilities and materials and for the recruitment of teachers. At the same time there is a need to ensure that the expansion of the educational base does not result in a deterioration of quality and is supported by policies to train and retain teachers. The content of education at the primary and secondary level must also be relevant to a country's need for economic, social and political progress. In the framework of action to meet basic learning needs, it is important to ensure the speedy implementation of the World Declaration on Education for All, adopted by the World Conference on Education for All.

89. The increasingly important role that knowledge plays in determining economic progress in a rapidly changing global environment of science and technology gives a new urgency to upgrading and transforming the scientific, technological, entrepreneurial and managerial aptitudes of the population. This calls for an emphasis on higher education and on the development of the institutional base for the training of skilled cadres as well as for vocational training. It also calls for policies and incentives that are conducive to retaining skilled personnel in their countries on a voluntary basis. The skills of the work force at all levels may well be the key to progress in the 1990s and beyond.

90. In the field of health services, special attention needs to be given to primary health care and the prevention of chronic diseases as well as to general development objectives such as sanitation, safe drinking water and nutrition. This will help relieve the strains on the curative medical system to which increasing numbers tend to have recourse as a result of population growth, education and social change. Policies and measures in the field of health need to give special attention to women and children. Several targets for the decade have already been agreed upon by the international community. These include the reduction of under-five mortality rates by one third or 70 per 1,000 live births (whichever saves more lives); the reduction of malnutrition among children under five by one half; and the halving of maternal mortality rates. The participatory and environmental aspects of health care should be emphasized in the design of programmes. There should also be a special focus on preventing the spread of epidemics and other diseases that are endemic in many developing countries. Urgent steps need also to be taken for the control and prevention of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDs).

91. As in the field of education, policies and measures for health must give increased attention to institution-building and the training of skilled health personnel at all levels. Here again, conditions have to be created that encourage the retention of skilled cadres.

92. Human resource development could also be promoted by co-operation among developing countries. Developing countries could benefit by opening to each other their centres of quality for higher education and training. They could benefit by the exchange of teachers and of personnel in the field of health and by the sharing of experiences. They could also profit from the joint operation and management of institutions for human resource development, particularly at the regional and subregional levels.

93. The developed countries have an important role to play in promoting human resource and institutional development. Apart from investment support and technical assistance for the supply and use of equipment and for curriculum development, a major contribution can be made by the developed countries through the provision of facilities for the training of skilled cadres. Education abroad has always played an important part in training in developing countries. But in the 1990s and thereafter, its role can be vastly enhanced because of rapid developments in the field of knowledge and the urgent need of the developing countries for larger cadres of skilled personnel. At the same time, the developing countries should be assisted in building up their own institutions for training and higher education. As development progresses, there is need for them to enhance their self-reliance in this field.

94. Human rights and human development are ends in themselves. All human resource activities are mutually reinforcing. Careful analysis, policy design and effective management in education and health programmes will be required, and the support of agencies of the United Nations system should play a vital role. Given the interrelated nature of human resource development activities, inter-agency co-ordination in education, health, nutrition, housing, employment, child welfare and the advancement of women requires close attention. There should be programmes to integrate the elderly in development.

3. Population

95. Population programmes should be integrated with economic goals and strategies. The 1990s will see the largest increase in the population of developing countries of any decade in history, an increase of well over 20 per cent. The decade will also witness the aging of the world population. The demographic situation varies among countries, but in most developing countries a lowering of the rate of population growth will relieve the strains on the social situation, economic growth, the environment and natural resources. Population growth rates are in fact beginning to decline in a number of developing countries. Over half of the developing countries are pursuing active policies to reduce the rate of population growth and important lessons have been learned from this experience. The education of women, improved maternity and child care and family-planning services suited to the socio-cultural environment of individual countries have proved to be effective and successful instruments of population programmes and should be further pursued and strengthened. Assistance to developing countries in the area of population should be substantially increased during the 1990s. Developing countries should also intensify their efforts to allocate adequate resources to population programmes.

4. Environment

96. The current threat to the environment is the common concern of all. All countries should take effective action for the protection and enhancement of the environment in accordance with their respective capacities and responsibilities and taking into account the specific needs of developing countries. As the major sources of pollution, the developed countries have the main responsibility for taking appropriate measures urgently. The economic growth and development of developing countries are essential in order to address problems of the degradation and protection of the environment. New and additional financial resources will have to be channelled to developing countries. Effective modalities for favourable access to, and transfer of, environmentally sound technologies, in particular to developing countries, including on concessional and preferential terms, should be examined.

97. The General Assembly, in its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989, has set important goals for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992. These goals need to be realized.

IV. Special situations including those of the least developed countries

98. Over two decades ago, the United Nations adopted criteria to identify the countries that were economically the weakest among the developing countries and that faced the most recalcitrant structural problems. It was recognized that these countries, designated the least developed countries, needed special support measures from the international community in their efforts to transform their economies and to improve their prospects for sustained development. In 1981, the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries adopted the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, in which a number of measures to support the development process in these countries were agreed upon. The measures included the setting of a target of 0.15 per cent of the gross national product of the developed countries for concessional aid to the least developed countries.

99. However, those very countries, and others that were among the poorest and the weakest, were the hardest hit by the difficulties that arose in the 1980s on the world economic scene. In terms of the criteria initially adopted, the number of countries falling into the category of "least developed countries"-instead of declining as a result of successful development-actually increased from 24 in 1972 to 41 in 1990. The measures taken by the international community, to support the least developed countries did not suffice to offset the adverse factors that affected their development experience in the 1980s. In the light of developments in the world economy there is a risk that these countries will become increasingly marginalized; this risk needs urgently to be avoided.

100. The Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries was held in Paris in September 1990. It underscored the principle of shared responsibility and strengthened partnership for the growth and development of the least developed countries and called for mutual commitments and strengthened joint efforts on the part of both the least developed countries and their development partners. The programme of action adopted by the Conference needs to be fully implemented. Broad requirements have been set out. The present official development assistance targets agreed on at the Conference, should, in the first instance, be met. Special attention is needed to facilitate increased access of exports of the least developed countries to major markets. Enhanced compensatory financing for export earnings shortfalls should be considered. Donors should take the necessary steps to provide further bilateral concessional debt forgiveness to the least developed countries. All donors are urged to implement Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978 as a matter of priority in such a way that the net flows of official development assistance should be improved for the recipient. The Paris Club should consider the application of the terms agreed upon at the Toronto Economic Summit to all the least developed countries in accordance with established procedures and criteria; the Toronto options should be reviewed, taking into account the communique of the Houston Summit Economic; and proposals for further debt relief should be examined urgently. Financial institutions, particularly those providing non-concessional credits, are invited to give serious attention to measures to alleviate the burden of the debt that least developed countries owe to them.

101. The special development problems of the land-locked developing countries and of the island developing countries also call for special attention. Measures are needed to lift the constraints on their development arising from the special transportation and communications problems they face, from their limited internal markets and from their high degree of vulnerability to environmental damage and natural disasters.

102. These measures should aim at reducing the cost to those countries of access to and from the sea and world markets, improving the quality, efficiency and reliability of transit-transport facilities and diversifying their economies.

V. Role of the United Nations system

103. The organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system have a special responsibility for the pursuit of the goals and objectives of the present Strategy. The system has played a unique role in bringing the development issue to the attention of the international community. Through its studies on the several aspects of the development problem, both national and international, through the international conferences it has convened on major issues, through the understandings, conventions and agreements it has helped to negotiate-some of them of a legal or quasi-legal character-and not least through the technical assistance it has provided to developing countries, it has made an invaluable contribution to ideas, policies and actions in the realm of development. This role must not only continue but must be strengthened and expanded in the 1990s with the support and encouragement of Member States.

104. Virtually every aspect of the Strategy falls within the areas of concern of the various parts of the United Nations system. In many such areas and sectors, goals and targets for the coming decade and the actions needed for realizing them have already been agreed upon by Member States and are crucial to the implementation of the Strategy. The Strategy also provides guidelines for further work on the evolution of policies and programmes and on seeking agreements for new actions. Major conferences of the United Nations system are already scheduled for the initial years and there will be others in the period beyond. These will be important occasions for reaching agreements that give more specific content to the actions and commitments needed to realize the goals of the Strategy.

105. The organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system thus have a vital role to play in furthering the analytical work of relevance to the elaboration and implementation of the Strategy, in promoting and securing the international co-operation needed and in providing technical assistance. The work of the international system should be given greater coherence by closer inter-agency co-operation and co-ordination and by organizational measures that strengthen the contribution of the system to development. The Strategy provides an initial framework for these objectives. The review of the functioning of the United Nations system should continue to be pursued with this aim in view; all of its Member States have a responsibility for making it more effective and efficient.

106. The Secretary-General is encouraged to continue, by such means as he deems appropriate, his efforts to facilitate the solution to the debt problems of developing countries, taking into account all relevant proposals. In addition, the relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations system should undertake follow-up measures pertaining to the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations.

107. The growing interdependence in the world economy and the increasing linkages between various issues, such as money and finance, trade and development, give a new urgency to the co-ordination of macro-economic policies and management at the international level. The United Nations should play its role in this area as envisaged in the provisions of the Charter relating to the functions of the Economic and Social Council.

VI. Review and appraisal

108. A process of review and appraisal should be an integral part of the Strategy so as to ensure its effective implementation. This process should be undertaken at the national level by the respective Member States. But it needs also to be undertaken within the United Nations system at the global, sectoral and regional levels. It should provide an opportunity to give the necessary political stimulus, in the light of evolving needs and developments. It must be expected that conditions in the course of the decade will change in ways that cannot now be foreseen, and there is thus a case for permanent monitoring and periodic review, allowing, when necessary, for amendments and revisions to the Strategy.

109. The recent events in the Gulf region are having repercussions on the immediate economic outlook of many countries, particularly in energy and trade balances. While it is not possible, in view of the uncertainties, to take account of them at present, it is important to keep the situation under review to determine whether in the context of the Strategy additional measures are required.

110. The organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system will play an important catalytic role in the implementation of the goals and objectives of the present Strategy in their respective areas of competence.

111. The machinery for continued monitoring exists: the various agencies of the United Nations system and the regional commissions issue annual reports, which, in effect, monitor the state of progress in virtually every area of international development. Governments participate in numerous debates in the specialized agencies, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, in which the state of progress in international development is a major theme. In this sense, review and appraisal is already built into the procedures of the United Nations system.

112. Nevertheless, review and appraisal relating directly to the progress of the Strategy as a whole is also needed on a periodic basis. This should be carried out biennially by the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council, with an item on the implementation of the Strategy included in their agendas. The Secretary-General should submit appropriate recommendations in order to assist in this process of review and appraisal.

Economic stabilization programmes

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/194.

Economic stabilization programmes in developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, containing the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Recalling also its resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Recalling further its resolution 44/24 of 17 November 1989 on the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation,

Recalling its resolution 44/212 of 22 December 1989 on international co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries,

Deeply concerned about the difficult economic situation facing most developing countries, which has severe political and social consequences,

Reaffirming that the reactivation of economic growth and development in the developing countries will require a concerted and committed effort by all countries and should be addressed in the context of the increasing interdependence and integration in the world economy,

Reaffirming also that a supportive international economic environment and appropriate national policies are crucial to the revitalization of economic growth and development of developing countries,

Recognizing that economic stabilization and structural adjustment programmes are necessary, in many cases, in order to strengthen economic growth and development,

Recognizing also the significant efforts being undertaken by many developing countries in order to achieve the revitalization of their economic growth and development,

1. Stresses that adequate measures should be taken at the international and national levels, as appropriate, to counteract the negative effects of the economic conditions that have prevailed in most developing countries during the past decade;

2. Stresses also the necessity of the integration of the human dimension in the formulation and implementation of structural adjustment programmes with the aim of protecting, in particular, the most vulnerable groups of the population in the processes of adjustment;

3. Stresses further that structural adjustment programmes, in the context of the attainment of macro-economic balance, should contribute to modernization, diversification and growth of the economies of the developing countries and, at the same time, to the fulfilment of the aim of improving the human condition, especially the standard of living and quality of life of people, in particular the most vulnerable groups of the population;

4. Calls upon appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to monitor and analyse further the relevant socio-economic indicators

General Assembly resolution 45/199

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.2) without vote, 10 December (meeting 53); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L72), based on informal consultations; agenda item 79 (a).

in order to assess closely the various socio-economic effects of the adjustment programmes;

5. Emphasizes that structural adjustment programmes should contain appropriate measures for long-term and sustained development and, thereby, contribute to the improvement of human and social conditions in developing countries;

6. Emphasizes also that the success of developing countries in stabilizing their economies will depend both on their own efforts and on a supportive international economic environment; in that regard, the international community should continue efforts to find a durable solution to the problems of external indebtedness, to increase the transfer of resources to developing countries, to develop a more open, durable and viable trading system and to enhance access to technologies; the co-ordination of macro-economic policies should take full account of the interests and concerns of all countries, particularly the developing countries;

7. Calls upon Governments, international organizations, multilateral financial institutions and bodies, organs and agencies of the United Nations system to take, within their mandates, appropriate measures designed to mobilize resources and increase financial flows to developing countries, with a view to ensuring that the resources available to them are commensurate with their efforts to stabilize their economies and their structural adjustment programmes, with particular reference to the need for protecting the most vulnerable groups of the population, through, inter alia, social compensatory programmes;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Entrepreneurship in economic development

In response to a Economic and Social Council request in resolution 1988/74 [YUN 1988, p. 321], the Secretary-General submitted in June a report on national entrepreneurs in economic development [A/45/292-E/1990/82]. The report analysed the role played by entrepreneurship in the economic development of developing countries, describing the enterprise culture and the components that encouraged entrepreneurship in some societies; education and training aimed at improving entrepreneurial skills; and sources of entrepreneurs and ways to attract special groups, particularly women and youth.

The main focus of the report was on the national policy environment and on policies that encouraged and inhibited entrepreneurship in developing countries. Successful examples and policies were cited and suggestions made for reducing the impediments to creating successful indigenous enterprises. Various forms of co-operation between national and foreign enterprises were highlighted, as were effective approaches employed by international organizations to encourage entrepreneurship in developing countries. The role of bilateral donors and the contribution of the United Nations system were stressed.

In its conclusion, the report summed up the impact of the international economic policy environment on the development of indigenous entrepreneurship and the prospects for developing countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1990/266, took note of the Secretary-General's report on national entrepreneurs in economic development.

On the same date, the Council adopted decision 1990/265.

Entrepreneurship as a means of attracting non-debt-creating flows of capital

At its 36th plenary meeting, on 26 July 1990, the Economic and Social Council decided to recommend that the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session consider and take appropriate action on the draft resolution contained in document E/1990/L.40/Rev.1, the text of which is annexed to the present decision, taking into account the informal consultations held on the draft resolution.

ANNEX

Entrepreneurship as a means of attracting non-debt-creating flows of capital

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 41/182 of 8 December 1986 on indigenous entrepreneurs in economic development and taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on national entrepreneurs in economic development (A/45/292-E/1990/82),

Recognizing that each country is responsible for its own economic policies for development and that the promotion of growth and development depends on appropriate domestic economic policies and a supportive international economic environment,

Acknowledging the need for effective and responsible governance for setting and implementing each country's national goals in the political, social and economic spheres,

Aware that as the world changes economically, societies must respond positively,

Appreciating that political pluralism and market-oriented economies together provide the optimal flexibility in responding to change in order to provide just and equal opportunities to all peoples to enable them to develop their full potential,

Noting the importance and relevance of private enterprise in the growth and development of countries and the need to provide the necessary incentives and environment to enable the spirit of entrepreneurship and competition to prosper,

Aware that higher domestic savings and inflows of capital, including new investment and the return of flight capital, depend upon free enterprise, a key component of which is entrepreneurship,

Realizing that capital secured by entrepreneurs from investors adds to the non-debt-creating flows of capital within the economy,

1. Encourages the development of entrepreneurship in societies seeking to develop or recuperate their economic vitality through free enterprise and market opportunities;

2. Agrees that entrepreneurship, in the context of a competitive market economy and supportive governmental policies, attracts non-debt-creating flows of private capital within and between countries and enhances the internationalization of financial markets and a more integrated world economy;

3. Urges States to enhance their legal and regulatory frameworks and to make more efficient their capital and credit markets to provide for sound private sector development and its positive benefits for employment opportunities and national wealth;

4. Looks forward to the meeting of the Joint Ministerial Committee of the Boards of Governors of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on the Transfer of Real Resources to Developing Countries, to be held in September 1990, in particular the deliberations on the issue of giving higher priority to private sector development, including the mobilization of domestic and foreign private capital, and institutionalizing this priority across the entire range of Bank operations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to incorporate in future issues of the World Economic Survey a chapter on the role of entrepreneurship as a key element of growth and development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to study measures at the national and international levels to promote the contribution of entrepreneurship to societies seeking to develop or regain their economic vitality through free enterprise and market opportunities; drawing upon the work already in progress in the United Nations system and bearing in mind the need to avoid duplication of effort and cost, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session through the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council decision 1990/265

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1990/L.55), based on informal consultations on draft by United States (E/1990/L.40/Rev.1); agenda item 2.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/188.

Entrepreneurship

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, bearing in mind the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade and taking note of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990,

Recalling also its resolution 41/182 of 8 December 1986 and Economic and Social Council resolution

1988/74 of 29 July 1988, and taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on national entrepreneurs in economic development,

Recognizing that there is no universal prescription for successful development and that each country is responsible for its own economic policies in accordance with its specific situation and conditions and that the promotion of growth and development depends on appropriate domestic economic policies that take into account specific national circumstances and requirements,

Acknowledging the importance of effective, efficient and accountable governance in all countries for setting and implementing national goals in the economic and social spheres,

Acknowledging also the need for an effective and efficient public sector in, inter alia, establishing or improving conditions favourable to private initiative, including sound infrastructure, appropriate policies for the development of human resources, including the expertise and capabilities of the business community, basic health care and the protection of vulnerable groups within society, where appropriate, with the support of the international community,

Recognizing the responsibility of the international community, in particular the developed countries, to promote and endeavour to provide an equitable and open international economic environment supportive of the development of developing countries,

Reaffirming that flexibility, creativity, innovation, political and economic openness, respect for human rights and market-oriented approaches, inter alia, provide opportunities to people to enable them to develop their potential in responding to change,

Acknowledging the important role of entrepreneurship, notably in small and medium-sized enterprises, in mobilizing resources and in promoting economic growth and socio-economic development,

Calling for international support for specific programmes for private enterprise development in the least developed countries, which should address, inter alia, the promotion of domestic and foreign direct investment, management training, promotion of small-scale ventures and micro-enterprises and the development of entrepreneurial skills, in accordance with relevant provisions of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s.

Cognizant of the importance of entrepreneurship in the growth and development of countries—specially those seeking to develop or revitalize their economies through free enterprise, decentralized decision-making, deregulation, demonopolization of economic activities, simplification of administrative procedures, market opportunities, structural adjustment and market-oriented reform—and of the need to provide the incentives, access to information and new technology and environment necessary to enable the spirit of entrepreneurship and competition to prosper,

Noting that higher domestic savings and inflows of capital, including new investment and the return of flight capital, depend, inter alia, upon sound micro- and macro-economic policies supportive of entrepreneurship,

Recognizing that public enterprises, in appropriate conditions, can help promote and can engage in the development of entrepreneurship,

Welcoming the contribution which the United Nations system makes in helping Member States promote entrepreneurship, including foreign direct investment, and encouraging the active participation of private enterprise, where appropriate,

1. Encourages the development of entrepreneurship in all countries, including those seeking to develop or revitalize their economies through free enterprise and market opportunities, and urges the international community, in particular the international financial institutions and the United Nations system, to support their efforts, as appropriate;

2. Agrees that entrepreneurship, especially in the context of a fair competitive economy, supportive government policies and an equitable and open international economic environment, contributes to a more efficient world economy and enhances the internationalization of trading markets and financial flows to the benefit of all;

3. Encourages Member States, in accordance with their national policy objectives, to enhance their institutional, legal and regulatory frameworks to ensure greater consistency with market approaches, to make their capital and credit markets more efficient, to foster the expertise and capabilities of the business community and to provide, inter alia, for sound private sector development and its positive benefits for employment opportunities and national wealth;

4. Calls upon Member States to facilitate, consistent with their national laws, the development of co-operation between domestic and foreign enterprises, particularly through contracting, business co-operation and joint ventures, which, inter alia, will facilitate market access and the transfer of technology;

5. Looks forward to the outcome of further deliberations of the Development Committee of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, the Interim Committee of the International Monetary Fund and the regional development banks on the issue of strengthening measures across the entire range of operations of the World Bank Group to promote entrepreneurship, including the mobilization of domestic and foreign private capital;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to incorporate in subsequent issues of the World Economic Survey a chapter regarding the role of entrepreneurship as a key element of growth and development and on measures being taken at the national and international levels to promote entrepreneurship, especially in countries seeking to develop or revitalize their economies through free enterprise, decentralized decision-making, market opportunities, structural adjustment and market-oriented reform, as well as suggestions on how the international economic community can support the development of entrepreneurship in the national economies;

7. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to include in his annual report on operational activities for development, submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council, a section on the activities being undertaken by the United Nations system to promote entrepreneurship in economic development, notably in small and medium-sized enterprises, as well as proposals for enhancing the role of entrepreneurship in the development process, in particular in developing countries;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session a sub-item entitled "Entrepreneurship" under the agenda item entitled "Development and international economic co-operation" and to include the sub-item in subsequent agendas on a biennial basis.

General Assembly resolution 45/188

Eradication of poverty

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/212 [YUN 1988, p. 461], the Secretary-General submitted in October 1990 a progress report on international co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries [A/45/398]. Although poverty issues were receiving increasing attention from policy makers in many developing countries, real progress had been scant due to the continuation of economic stagnation in a large number of those countries in 1989 and the first half of 1990, and a fall in per capita income that had adversely affected investment and resources for social programmes and reduced the chances for improvement among the poor. On the other hand, a higher growth rate in GDP in several of the populous countries of Asia suggested that the percentage of the poor in the total population continued to decrease in that region. The experience of developing countries in eradicating poverty was highly diversified because conditions and domestic policy mixes adopted were themselves highly variegated. There was no clear evidence that faster economic growth was always associated with poverty reduction and the adoption of effective policies designed to reduce poverty was essential. The report examined policies and measures for reducing poverty as well as international economic conditions and co-operation policies that could have a major influence on efforts to eradicate poverty.

The report concluded that recent events did not suggest an improvement of the international economic environment and aid policies. Much remained to be done to strengthen international co-operation to eradicate poverty in developing countries.

A comprehensive report, based on information provided by regional commissions and other UN entities, would be submitted to the Assembly in 1991.

CDP action. The Committee for Development Planning (CDP) (New York, 30 April-4 May) [E/1990/27], in a policy conclusion on the eradication of poverty, said that the primary requirement for poverty eradication was sustained political commitment. Given that commitment, a development strategy was needed that was centred on poverty elimination, including a general improvement of women's social, economic, cultural and legal status. A well-conceived strategy should aim at accelerating growth and eliminating poverty simultaneously. Such a strategy should include measures for the redistribution of land; greater provision of agricultural services and rural infrastructure; greater investment in human resources development; removal of bias against the poor in expenditures on infrastructure; social and legal reforms to enhance the participation of women in economic and social institutions; removal of constraints on urban industry, especially small-scale enterprises; family planning programmes; and greater democracy and participation of the poor in local politics and in creating organizations supporting their cause.

Although the major responsibility for eliminating poverty rested with the developing countries, international co-operation could create a global environment conducive to accelerated and sustained growth. Developing countries needed expanding markets for their products in developed countries, greater progress towards solving the international debt problem, and additional bilateral ODA that was more focused on poverty alleviation. The International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and regional banks could contribute by setting conditions for lending that took into account the impact on poverty of the programmes which their lending was meant to support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/213.

International co-operation for the eradication of poverty in the developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/195 of 20 December 1988 and 44/212 of 22 December 1989, Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/47 of 27 May 1988 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/10 of 2 March 1989 concerning extreme poverty,

Recalling also the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 43/199 of 21 December 1990, as well as the Paris Declaration adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990,

Recognizing that a broad consensus is emerging on strategies to be pursued towards the achievement of the goal of the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing also the severity of poverty problems in developing countries,

Agrees that the eradication of poverty in the developing countries is an objective of the highest priority, and consequently urges the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to formulate and implement forthwith, within their programmes and activities at all levels, necessary measures and actions to eradicate this distressing problem.

General Assembly resolution 45/213

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/852) without vote, 28 November (meeting 491; draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.41); agenda item 82.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 31, 32, 43, 49; plenary 71.

On the same date, by decision 45/446, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on international co-operation for the eradication of poverty in developing countries.

Rural development

The ACC Task Force on Rural Development (eighteenth meeting, Rome, Italy, 2-4 May) [ACC/1990/PG/2] considered a progress report by the lead agency in rural development, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, which included an overview of activities in certain areas of rural development undertaken by members of the Task Force in 1989. Also discussed were: people's participation in rural development; monitoring and evaluation; co-ordination and collaboration on rural development and agrarian reform activities and programmes for 1990-1991; the impact of national macro-economic policies on the rural poor; implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for rural women (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII); global consultation on agricultural extension; the report of the Working Group on Industrial Contribution to Rural Development (30 April, Rome); and the Task Force's programme of work and time-frame for 1990/1991.

By a 10 January note [A/45/76-E/1990/1], the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly a Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on the evaluation of rural development activities of the UN system in three African least developed countries (LDCs) (Burkina Faso, Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania). By a 27 April note [A/45/76/Add.1-E/1990/12/Add.1], I, he transmitted the comments of ACC on the JIU report.

By decision 45/449 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the JIU report and of the ACC comments thereon.

Industrial development co-operation

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/196.

Industrial development co-operation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation and the New Delhi Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrialization of Developing Countries and International Co-operation for their Industrial Development,

Recalling its resolutions 35/66 of 5 December 1980, 36/182 of 17 December 1981, 37/212 of 20 December 1982 and 38/192 of 20 December 1983, as well as other relevant resolutions in the field of industrial development co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 44/237 of 22 December 1989 on the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa, by which it proclaimed the period 1991-2000 the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa and proclaimed 20 November as Africa Industrialization Day, for the purpose of mobilizing the commitment of the international community to the industrialization of Africa,

Recalling further its resolutions 42/186 and 42/187 of 11 December 1987, 43/53 of 6 December 1988, 43/196 of 20 December 1988 and 44/228 and 44/229 of 22 December 1989, relating to environment and development, and reaffirming, inter alia, the need for assistance from developed countries and the appropriate organs and organizations of the United Nations system to developing countries in enhancing their capacity for identifying, analysing, monitoring, managing and preventing damage to the environment by industry in accordance with their national development plans, priorities and objectives,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution

S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, bearing in mind the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade and taking note of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990,

Concerned that, despite an increase in the overall industrial production of the developing countries, their share in world industrial production remains at a low level,

Convinced that the reactivation of economic growth and development of developing countries would be facilitated, inter alia, through their industrial development and the diversification and modernization of their productive activities,

Recognizing the necessity of properly assisting all developing countries at their different stages of industrialization, mainly through the development and strengthening of industrial infrastructures, the modernization of production capabilities and the improvement of training techniques,

Recognizing also the responsibility of developing countries for developing their industrial and technological capabilities, and stressing that their efforts should be adequately supported by the international community and that the transfer of technology, on appropriate terms, to developing countries and the training of national technical personnel are essential in this regard,

Recognizing further the importance of industrial development for strengthening science and technology and indigenous capacity-building in developing countries, including appropriate institutional infrastructure, such as research institutes, centres of standardization and metrology, and industrial and technological information centres,

Aware that, in selecting patterns of industrialization, the developing countries should take into account the need to generate employment and to incorporate new and emerging environmentally sound technologies,

Convinced that, in order to promote the industrial development of developing countries, their indigenous capabilities in such areas as entrepreneurship, management, technology, financing and marketing need to be built up or strengthened and that technical and financial assistance would need to be extended in support of the national efforts of the developing countries for this purpose,

Recognizing that any viable process of industrialization requires an adequately high and increasing level of demand, which can be substantially reinforced in respect of developing countries through trade liberalization and a sustained improvement in the access of developing countries' exports to the markets of both developed and developing countries,

Recognizing also that steady growth in agricultural productivity can be enhanced in particular through the application of industrial inputs and the mechanization of agriculture, which is possible only if a reasonable pace of industrialization is ensured,

Recognizing further that the promotion of agro-industries plays a key role in the industrialization of developing countries,

Convinced that industrial progress in developing countries can also be significantly enhanced through co-operation among such countries at all levels and by integrating markets and setting up joint ventures and human resources development programmes for training and upgrading skills and through the integration of women, which should be among the objectives of policies and measures to promote industrialization in developing countries,

Aware that foreign direct investment in an appropriate domestic context can make an important contribution to industrialization in developing countries, not only by providing additional financial resources, but also as a means of providing access to modern and environmentally sound technologies, skills and markets,

Convinced that entrepreneurship should be encouraged at all levels and in all sectors for the setting up of industries and that there is a strong potential for the development of small and medium-sized industries that could contribute to the expansion of both urban and rural employment opportunities and eradicate poverty,

Reaffirming the role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as the co-ordinating organ in the United Nations system having primary responsibility for promoting and accelerating industrial development and the transfer of industrial technology to developing countries,

1. Invites developed countries to take fully into account the broad implications of their policy decisions on the international economy and in particular their effects on the economies of the developing countries, including the industrial development of those countries;

2. Recognizes that developing countries need to provide adequate support to their infant industries, when appropriate, in order to enable them to build up competitive industrial capacities;

3. Emphasizes the need for more effective international co-operation through all appropriate mechanisms, including training, workshops, seminars, fellowships and international conferences, in order to facilitate access and transfer to the developing countries of environmentally sound technologies, including new and emerging ones;

4. Requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other international organizations to help developing countries evaluate and select industrial technologies suitable for their development;

5. Recognizes the need to support co-operation among developing countries in this regard, with a view to improving their capabilities in negotiating with technology suppliers;

6. Stresses the role of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in assisting developing countries in the formulation of programmes and plans for industrialization in their countries, and recognizes the contribution of the special trust fund schemes launched by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization in developing alternatives to traditional assistance programmes;

7. Recognizes that there are significant opportunities for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries with regard to their industrialization, and, in this context, recommends that developed countries and international organizations support such co-operative ventures;

8. Also recognizes that in promoting the industrial development of developing countries special emphasis should be placed on an appropriate mix of the agricultural, industrial and service sectors among small, medium-sized and large industries, depending upon the conditions obtaining in each developing country;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on ways and means of promoting the enhancement of United Nations activities with regard to the training of scientists, engineers and entrepreneurs from developing countries, with a view to promoting all t-elated sectors and disciplines supporting industrial development co-operation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries;

10. Recommends that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination examine ways and means of fostering United Nations system activities with regard to industrial development co-operation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries and report thereon, through the Secretary-General, to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

11. Recommends that the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in close co-operation with the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, make recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, with a view to strengthening effectively industrial development co-operation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to give priority in the medium-term plan to the issue of industrial development co-operation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries;

13. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Industrial development co-operation and the diversification and modernization of productive activities in developing countries" and subsequently to include this item in the agenda on a biennial basis.

South Commission report

By a 26 November letter [A/45/810 & Corr.1], Bolivia, on behalf of the Group of 77, transmitted to the General Assembly a document entitled "The Challenge to the South: An Overview and Summary of the South Commission Report". The South Commission started functioning in August as an independent body for a period of three years with its members serving in their personal capacities.

The Commission's secretariat was established in Geneva with assistance from the Government of Switzerland; former President of the United Republic of Tanzania Julius K. Nyerere was the Commission's Chairman. The Commission held ten plenary meetings between October 1987 and October 1990 and established a number of expert and working groups to deal with certain issues in depth.

The terms of reference of the Commission, whose work was supported by financial contributions from developing countries, were: to analyse national development experience in the South and elaborate an integrated perspective and vision of the future; to analyse the global environment; to assess the role of South-South co-operation for collective self-reliance; and to assess the state of South-North relations.

The South Commission report contained sections on: the South and its tasks; the national dimension: self-reliant and people-centred development; North-South relations and the international system; and towards the twenty-first century. It stated that although three quarters of all humanity lived in developing countries or the South, they existed on the periphery of the developed countries of the North. Their people were poor, their economies weak and defenceless and they were powerless in the world arena. Most of the countries of the South faced an acute and continuing development crisis, which was mainly the outcome of adverse turns in the world economy. The challenge to the nations of the South was to mobilize and deploy their resources more effectively to energize development, draw strength from joint undertakings, exploit global opportunities and make the international system more responsive to their needs. The Commission proposed a six-point programme for immediate action to combat world poverty in the interest of sustainable development worldwide and the promotion of global peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/195.

Report of the South Commission

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the report entitled The Challenge to the South: The Report of the South Commission and the overview and summary of the South Commission report, which are important contributions regarding the development process of the developing countries, assessing the achievements, analysing the failings and suggesting directions for reform,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the Economic and Social Council, to convene, within existing resources, not excluding voluntary contributions, during the second regular session of 1991 of the Council, a meeting devoted to an informal exchange of views on the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the South Commission, in particular in its overview and summary;

2. Invites Governments and the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to submit their views on the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the South Commission, in particular in its overview and summary, for consideration at the aforementioned meeting of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Invites the President of the Economic and Social Council to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the outcome of the informal exchange of views to be held during the second regular session of 1991 of the Council.

21 December 1990 General Assembly resolution 45/195 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.1), 10 December (meeting 53); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.80) following informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 and Canada and China (A/C.2/45/L.39); agenda item 79.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

During 1990, the United Nations continued to promote economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC), mainly through UNCTAD. Technical co-operation among developing countries received support from UNDP (see next chapter).

UNCTAD action. On 12 October [A./G/IS (res. 385 (XXXVII))], the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) called on the UNCLAD Secretary-General to enhance his support for ECDC by assisting developing countries and their groupings through technical assistance with the promotion of ECDC in general, and technical co-operation among developing countries and the expansion of intra-developing country trade in particular. UNDP and other funding institutions were invited to provide financial support to UNCTAD to carry out those projects. The UNCLAD Secretary-General was also called on to undertake an in-depth study on the main impediments and disincentives affecting the expansion of trade among developing countries and make recommendations for future consideration in TDB through the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1990: Current Trends and Policies in the World Economy [Sales: No. E.90.II.C.1] stated that global economic growth slowed down in 1989 after an unusual rapid expansion the previous year. World output grew by 3.1 per cent compared to 4.4 per cent in 1988. The slow-down was widespread, affecting all major groups of countries, but was most pronounced in China and Eastern Europe. Although the pace of growth was also slower in 1989 in the developed market economies and most developing regions, it was better than anticipated. Some countries of Eastern Europe recorded negative growth, partly due to problems associated with the changes being introduced in their economic systems. The overall result for the developing countries disguised the fact that the slow-down was concentrated mostly in a few countries, predominantly in Asia. The sharp deceleration in China from its recent rapid rate of expansion accounted for a substantial part of the overall results. West Asia performed better than in 1988, while there were lesser improvements in Africa and Latin America. Although none of the developing regions increased output sufficiently to keep pace with the population growth, there were signs that the deterioration and stagnation that had characterized those regions for most of the 1980s might be ending. In 1989, there was widespread acceleration in the rate of increase in prices, and inflation became of great concern to policy-makers around the world, although the magnitude and tolerance of the problem varied widely.

In a note giving an update of the world economy at the end of 1990 [E/1991/INF/1], the Secretary-General said that the per capita output of the world had declined for the first time since 1982; overall global output had grown by only 1 per cent during the year. Although many Asian economies stayed on a steep growth path, slow-downs occurred in North America and Europe, Africa remained stagnant, Latin America was in decline, and the economies of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union were in disarray. The crisis in the Persian Gulf and the United Nations embargo (see PART TWO, Chapter III) had an immediate impact on the region and on countries in Africa and Asia whose migrant labourers had been employed in Iraq and Kuwait. It also produced a shock that left no country untouched as the price of oil suddenly doubled and then moved nervously in response to the rumours of war. In Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, the central planning systems were being dismantled and the arrangements for trade and payments among those countries under the Council for Mutual Assistance (CMEA) collapsed. However, new institutions and practices of market-based economic systems did not emerge immediately. The inevitable disruption of production and distribution and the problems of inflation and unemployment remained severe. The failure to conclude the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations before the end of 1990 reinforced concerns about the formation of trading blocs, the trend towards bilateralism and the rule of economic power in international trade. The Secretary-General concluded that the system of international economic relations was in a process of fundamental transformation. The basic features of the international economic order that came into being after the Second World War had disappeared or eroded under the impact of the globalization of the world economy and the demise of central planning. However, the contours of a new system that could meet and reconcile the interests of all nations and promote international development remained unclear.

The Trade and Development Report, 1990 [Sales No. E.90.II.D.6] stated that the economic performance of developing countries continued to be governed by their capacity to secure command over foreign exchange and to foster investment through mobilizing external purchasing power and domestic resources. For many heavily indebted countries, the outward transfer of resources remained an important claim on both external purchasing power and domestic saving. For countries highly dependent on commodity exports, changes in the process of those exports largely accounted for changes in economic performance. For a small group of countries, the expansion of export earnings had been of such vigour that command over external purchasing power was no longer a constraint on the expansion of activity. It had now proved possible for those countries to rely more on domestic demand as an engine of growth and imports had risen sharply.

Main findings in global economic and social trends

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/51 [YUN 1986, p. 884] the Secretary-General submitted his second biennial report on the main research findings of the system in major global economic and social trends, policies and emerging issues [E/1990/81]. The report examined output, employment and trade, debt adjustment, growth and human resources development, population and human settlements, science and technology, environment and development, and social and political aspects of development.

The Secretary-General noted that the economic and social research findings of the UN system continued to generate a comprehensive view of the world intended to be of use in shaping the agenda for international action in virtually all economic and social areas. However, much information and data were missing, out of date, or otherwise inadequate.

The broadest conclusion to which the findings pointed was that of growing interdependence in the world system. Recent changes in the economic and political systems of several countries, especially in Eastern Europe, suggested that such interdependence would increase further in the 1990s, accompanied by increased emphasis on participation by all people in the activities and benefits of development and on other aspects of human rights. Environmental issues also had implications for international co-operation.

By decision 1990/266 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Forecasting of world economic developments

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/85 [YUN 1989, p. 293], the Secretary-General submitted a June 1990 report [E/1990/80 & Corr.1] containing proposals to improve the work of the United Nations in the early identification, analysis and forecasting of world economic developments. The report, which reviewed the role of the United Nations and presented proposals to improve existing analytical and forecasting activities on a co-ordinated basis and to strengthen the flow of information for such activities, both within the United Nations and between the United Nations and national research units, had earlier been reviewed by the ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives (Geneva, 26-29 March) [ACC/1990/8].

It was proposed that: all organizations and bodies engaged in analysing and forecasting world development should participate in the work of the ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives; agencies and units of the UN Secretariat should contribute to the work of the Committee for Development Planning, especially in working groups taking up themes in which they had specific competence; all agencies and units engaged in analysing, identifying and modelling developments in the world economy should participate actively in the work of the Expert Group on the World Economic Outlook (Project LINK); in the Technical working groups of the ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities and the ACC Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives, additional emphasis should be given to strengthening co-operation and linkages in the areas of statistical data base systems, data base transfer mechanisms, the harmonization of analytical tools and economic models and the improvement of information systems used for economic analysis and research purposes; agencies should increase efforts to improve existing mechanisms for disseminating socio-economic forecasts and projections in a comprehensive and readily accessible form; in order to improve the overall consistency and coherence of analytical and forecasting activities, standards and guidelines for the transfer of information among organizations and bodies should be elaborated by the Technical Working Group on Statistical Data Bases of the ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities; UN organizations and bodies should make their analytical frameworks and forecasting models more accessible to interested users through the use of more advanced communication facilities, better designed user interfaces, improved documentation, and special training in the use of those analytical tools; agencies should establish closer relationships with other UN-affiliated research centres, as well as with national research institutions engaged in the study of emerging economic and social developments; staff members engaged in the analysis and forecasting of economic and social developments should be invited to provide substantive support to the work of the UN Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and to the activities of the regional commissions that were devoted to developing national policy models; and organizations and bodies should intensify their efforts at long-term global modelling as a matter of priority and should attempt to establish means for the international community to explore alternative paths for world economic, environmental and social development.

Annexed to the report was an overview of the activities of the main intergovernmental and inter-agency bodies concerned with co-ordinating and providing inputs into early identification, analysis and monitoring of activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/52.

Role of the United Nations in the early identification, analysis and forecasting of world economic developments

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1988/75 of 29 July 1988 and 1989/85 of 26 July 1989,

Acknowledging that comprehensive analysis, modelling and forecasting of a wide range of global, regional, national and sectoral developments in the world economy is an important element in strengthening the capability of international organizations and national authorities for adequately addressing emerging problems,

Aware of the need for improvement, as appropriate, on a co-ordinated basis at both the international and national levels of the means and mechanisms for the systematic compilation, analysis and regular exchange of information relevant to the identification of emerging major economic trends which could have an impact on the short-term and longer-term prospects of world socio-economic development,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for the survey of activities to improve the work of the United Nations on the early identification, analysis and forecasting of world economic developments:

2. Agrees that, in order to improve analytical and forecasting activities on a co-ordinated basis, United Nations bodies and organizations, within available resources, should:

(a) Interact more closely by sharing common analytical data bases and on-line access to one another's modelling environments through the use of advanced communication facilities, appropriately designed user interfaces, improved documentation and, if appropriate, special training in the use of those analytical tools;

(b) Adjust their existing modelling frameworks to incorporate the impact of future change, thus enabling the international community to explore possible long-term trends and options for world socio-economic developments;

(c) Utilize to the fullest extent possible the capacities of the United Nations University and its World Institute for Development Economics Research and the United Nations research institutes engaged in the study of emerging economic and social developments;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to designate the Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination as the focal point for the mutual exchange among agencies of assessments of prospective developments in the economic and social fields in order to improve existing mechanisms for disseminating socio-economic forecasts and projections in a comprehensive and readily accessible form;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit periodically to the Economic and Social Council brief information on emerging trends and problems in the world economy as a part of his note on the state of the world economy, and to continue to analyse emerging economic and social issues and problems of global significance in periodic reports, including the world economic surveys and the regional surveys and on the overall socio-economic perspective to the year 2000.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/52

24 July 1990 Meeting 34 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1990/L.45) based on informal consultations on draft by USSR (E/1990/L.36); agenda item 2.

Meeting numbers, ESC 30, 34.

By decision 1990/266 of 26 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on proposals to improve the work of the United Nations in the early identification, analysis and forecasting of world economic developments.

Development planning and public administration

Development planning

At its twenty-sixth session (New York, 30 April-4 May 1990), the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) [E/1990/27] analysed the world economy at the beginning of the 1990s. It also discussed regional and multilateral trading arrangements (see PARTTHREE, Chapter IV) and international action to eradicate poverty (see above). The Committee also carried out an evaluation of its own work and recommended the addition of Liberia to the list of the least developed countries (see below).
