CDP stated that the prospects for development and alleviation of poverty in the short and medium term remained bleak for most developing countries even though per capita GDP growth was expected to continue at a modest pace in the developed market economies. That bleak picture was primarily the result of the assumption of unchanged policies. To improve the situation at the international level, co-ordinated policy measures could reduce the level of interest rates and accelerate a resolution of the international debt problem, and a successful conclusion to the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART THREE, Chapter IV) could lead to a more open trading system. There was considerable scope, especially in the middle-income developing countries, for effective economic policies that would encourage entrepreneurship, increase domestic investment and expand exports. The dismal prospect for Africa in the medium term presented a challenge for African Governments and for the developed market economies, which needed to improve the volume and quality of their aid.

Addressing the question of emerging trading blocs and the multilateral trading system, CDP concluded that the maintenance of an open global trading framework was of utmost importance to all nations, but particularly to developing countries, especially to the smaller and less developed among them and to the centrally planned economies seeking to enter the world market system. All countries had an interest in ensuring that regional trade arrangements were part of the global trend towards openness and trade liberalization, since global welfare would be increased more through non-discriminatory than discriminatory reductions in protectionism. Further multilateralization was essential and, because of the changes in their relative economic weights in the world economy, many more developed market, developing and formerly centrally planned economies had major responsibilities in that regard than in the past. All countries should intensify their efforts to achieve a successful conclusion to the Uruguay Round. However, with regard to proposals for strengthening regional trading arrangements among developing countries, a careful analysis of actual and potential costs and benefits to those within a bloc and those not included should be undertaken by countries considering joining such arrangements. Concerning private direct foreign investment, CDP stated that if the host country environment was open and oriented towards world market prices, the benefits of such investments were likely to exceed the costs by a substantial margin; in a protected environment the costs might well exceed the benefits.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/266 of 26 July, took note of CDP's report on its twenty-sixth session.

Public administration

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/287 of 9 November, decided that the Tenth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance, scheduled for 30 January to 8 February 1991, would be held in September 1991, with the exact dates and venue to be decided at the Council's 1991 organizational session.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

The special problems of the officially designated LDCs were considered in several United Nations forums during 1990. Following the General Assembly's addition of Liberia in December, the number of countries on the United Nations list of LDCs rose to 43: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen.

Identification of LDCs

By decision 1990/206 of 9 February, the Economic and Social Council requested CDP to examine the eligibility of Liberia for inclusion in the list of LDCs and to submit its recommendation to the Council in July.

At its 1990 session [E/1990/27], CDP concluded that Liberia met existing criteria based on current procedures for their application and could be included in the list.

CDP reiterated its reluctance to apply the existing criteria (per capita GDP, the share of manufacturing in GDP and the rate of adult literacy), which it had deemed inadequate for some time. The Committee reviewed progress on proposals for a new set of criteria and requested the Secretariat to continue collecting the data necessary to complete its evaluation, which it would undertake at its 1991 session.

The Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris, France, 3-14 September) [A/CONF.147/18] (see below) considered that Namibia should be given special consideration in support of its economic and social development and invited the General Assembly to consider including Namibia in the list of LDCs.

Concerning the criteria for designating LDCs, the Conference recommended that CDP avail itself of the expertise of the UNCTAD secretariat to complete its review, which should introduce a dynamic element into the application of the criteria.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1990/261 of 19 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the CDP conclusion and recommendation regarding Liberia's inclusion in the list of LDCs and recommended that the General Assembly approve that inclusion. The Secretary-General was requested to take measures for Liberia's participation in the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 45/437 of 21 December, the General Assembly included Liberia in the list of LDCs.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/198.

Inclusion of Namibia in the list of least developed countries

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the resolution adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990, in which the Conference recommended that Namibia should be given special consideration in support of its economic and social development and invited the General Assembly to consider, in accordance with established procedures, the question of the inclusion of Namibia in the list of least developed countries,

Taking note also of the Declaration of the Heads of State and Government of the Least Developed Countries, issued at the end of their meeting in New York on 1 October 1990, in which, inter alia, the General Assembly was invited to consider the matter,

1. Requests the Committee for Development Planning at its twenty-seventh session to consider the question of the inclusion of Namibia in the list of least developed countries, to report on its findings to the Economic and Social Council for consideration at its second regular session of 1991 and to report on the matter to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

2. Decides to give Namibia special consideration in support of its economic and social development, in accordance with the resolution on economic assistance and least developed country status for Namibia adopted at the Second United Nations Conference of the Least Developed Countries;

3. Encourages all members of the international community and all organizations of the United Nations system to provide all possible support to the fledgling economic and social structures of the new nation of Namibia and to its development aspirations.

Second UN Conference on LDCs

Pursuant to 1987 General Assembly resolution 42/177 [YUN 1987, p. 392], the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries took place in Paris from 3 to 14 September [A/CONF.147/18]. The first UN Conference on LDCs was held in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 406]. The Conference, known as the Paris Conference, was attended by 150 countries as well as by the Pan African Congress of Azania, representatives of United Nations offices and bodies and specialized and related agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Having considered national and international policies and measures for accelerating the development process in LDCs during the 1990s, the Conference finalized and adopted the Paris Declaration and Programme of Action of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

In his inaugural address to the Conference, the President of France, François Mitterand, said that the international community had gained a better understanding of the main characteristic of LDCs: their extreme vulnerability. There was also a convergence of views on the policies to be followed. Agreement should be reached on a contract of solidarity between LDCs and donor countries and adequate financial resources must be made available to them; the Conference should affirm the objective of 0.15 per cent of GNP for OM, to be reached within five years.

The Secretary-General, in his opening statement, said that LDCs were facing severe problems due to structural handicaps, which comprised poorly diversified economies, fragile natural environments, and geographical situations hampering trade activities. However, the dismal record of the 1980s which had produced increased indebtedness, a decline in public and private finance, a drop in the price of raw materials, inflationary pressures and natural calamities, was not due solely to LDCs' structural weaknesses, but was also attributable to the fact that the responsibilities undertaken at the 1981 Conference had not been fully implemented. The draft programme of action that the current Conference had before it pointed to the necessity for greater participation of LDCs to ensure the full and efficient mobilization of their human and financial resources.

The Conference was preceded by the meeting of the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries acting as the Preparatory Committee for the Conference (Geneva, 26 March-6 April) [A/CONF.147/2], which formulated and transmitted to the Conference a draft programme of action, together with a provisional agenda and rules of procedure and recommendations for the organization of the Conference's work.

Among other documents before the Conference were the declaration by the Ministers of the Least Developed Countries adopted at a meeting on 10-12 February in Dhaka, Bangladesh [A/CONF.417/PC/6 & Add.1]; proposals by France to assist LDCs [A/CONF.147/PC/7 & Corr.1]; elements for a programme of action for the 1990s for LDCs, prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat [A/CONF.147/PC/5]; the report of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries (Geneva, 22-31 May) [A/CONF.147/PC/2]; and contributions from United Nations organizations and other international and regional organizations. Individual LDCs also submitted country presentations to the Conference.

On 3 September, the Conference established two sessional committees to consider various sections of the draft programme of action. On 14 September, the Conference adopted the texts submitted by the Chairmen of the sessional committees and included them in the Programme of Action. On the same date, the Conference adopted its draft report containing the Paris Declaration and a Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s.

The Conference also adopted resolutions on economic assistance and LDC status for Namibia and on the criteria for designating the least developed among the developing countries.

Paris Declaration and Programme of Action

ference on the Least Developed Countries stated that the Programme of Action to revitalize the development of those countries demonstrated their unanimous determination to promote an ambitious development policy and that its success rested on the effectiveness of national policies, a favourable international economic climate and a strengthened partnership based on mutual commitments. They defined five priority areas in the Programme: to conduct a macro-economic policy, taking account of market signals and aimed at accelerating long-term growth and development, showing concern for the most vulnerable groups of the population; to develop human resources; to reverse the trend towards environmental degradation, to manage the environment with a view to the effective and durable utilization of natural resources and to reinforce action to deal with disasters; to promote an integrated rural development policy; and to develop a diversified productive sector based on private initiative, efficient public enterprises, regional co-operation, increased access to the international market and international action in the field of commodities. To help achieve those priorities, participants agreed on the need to reinforce the efforts of LDCs with external support measures, recognized the need to increase ODA substantially, and expressed their determination to implement measures in the context of the international debt strategy to ensure that the activities to revitalize growth in LDCs were fully effective, and to contribute to the improvement of the international economic climate and the integration of LDCs into the international trading system. To monitor the implementation of their commitments, they agreed on a system of national, regional and global follow-up.

The Programme of Action outlined a number of principles that were intended to constitute the basis for action for LDCs, their development partners, including international organizations, financial institutions and development funds, to help a fundamental growth-oriented transformation of their economies. Those principles dealt with the need for a shared responsibility and strengthened partnership for the growth and development of LDCs; the fact that LDCs had the primary responsibility for formulating and implementing policies and priorities for their growth and development; the requirement for adequate external support from LDCs' development partners; and the need for the commitments undertaken to be measurable and sufficiently transparent to enable monitoring and assessment of the Programme of Action. The global framework identified the following broad areas in which LDCs, their development partners and international organizations needed to take urgent and concrete action: macro-economic policy; financing growth and development; external indebtedness of LDCs; external trade; and strengthening economic and technical co-operation between LDCs and other developing countries. As to sectoral policies and measures, the Programme identified two main areas: mobilizing and developing human capacities in LDCs; and development, particularly expansion and modernization of the economic base.

Target areas under mobilizing and developing human capacities in LDCs included: the improvement of institutional capabilities; the role of public enterprises and of the LDC private-enterprise sector; the full participation of women in the development process; the role of NGOs; and the strengthening of human capital in the population, education and training and health and sanitation sectors. Concerning the development, expansion and modernization of the economic base, the Programme of Action addressed rural development, modernization of agricultural production and food security; the development of the industrial, service, scientific and technological base; infrastructure; and environmental and disaster mitigation, preparedness and prevention. It also made proposals for coping with the problems of land-locked and island developing countries.

In a section on arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring and review, the Programme recommended that UNCTAD should continue to serve as the focal point for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action and the follow-up at the global level and to provide support at the regional level. The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries should conduct a comprehensive mid-term review and report to the General Assembly on progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action and on new measures. At the end of the 1990s, the Assembly might consider a third conference to make a comprehensive appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action and to decide on subsequent action. Each session of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board should review implementation progress, and sectoral reviews should be undertaken at regular intervals. The Secretary-General should ensure the full mobilization and co-ordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system for the implementation and follow-up of the Programme of Action. LDC focal points should be established in each United Nations agency and strengthened where they already existed. UNCTAD's Special Programme for LDCs should be provided with sufficient capacity and resources to implement its mandate for the Programme on a timely basis and the Secretary-General should make proposals to that end. The UNCTAD Secretary-General should continue to expand technical assistance activities for LDCs, in consultation with the UNDP Administrator and other concerned organizations and agencies.

Preparations for the Conference

The Conference was preceded by a comprehensive preparatory process, in which Governments, from both LDCs and other Member States, took an active part. At the regional level, the following meetings were held in 1990: the Intergovernmental Meeting of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Pacific LDCs in Preparation for the United Nations Conference on LDCs (Bangkok, Thailand, 19-23 February) [A/CONF.147/PC/3/Add.10]; the ninth Meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts of African LDCs (Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 3-5 May) preparatory to the tenth meeting of the Conference of Ministers of African LDCs (Tripoli, 14-15 May); and the Ministerial Meeting of LDCs (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 10-12 February) [A/CONF.147/PC/6 & Add.1], which adopted a statement on the draft programme of action and proposals for a programme of action. Other preparatory meetings included the High-level Experts' Meeting on the Role of Women in the Development of LDCs (Niamey, Niger, 29-31 January) [UNCLDC II/5], and the Symposium on Trade, Technical and Economic Co-operation between LDCs and the Countries of Eastern Europe (Moscow, 28 February-2 March).

Other preparatory meetings had taken place in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 296].

UNDP action. In response to a 1989 request [YUN 1989, p. 296], the UNDP Administrator submitted a report to the Governing Council's special session (20-23 February 1990) on its participation in the preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs [DP/1990/6 & ADD.1]. The report also reviewed the Special Measures Fund for LDCs, which was administered by UNDP.

By a 23 February decision [E/1990/29 (res. 90/2)], the Governing Council requested UNDP to co-operate with UNCTAD and other agencies in assisting LDCs in the analytical aspects of their preparation for the Conference to enable them to assess progress made in implementing the Substantial New Programme of Action for LDCs [YUN 1981, p. 406] and to identify problems to be addressed in the 1990s. It also requested UNDP to assist LDCs' efforts towards economic recovery and development with appropriate programmes and resources; the Administrator was asked to submit proposals to the Council's thirty-seventh (1990) session with a view to making a significant contribution to the Conference. The Council requested UNDP, using resources of the Special Measures Fund, to compensate for the shortfall in funding the preparation of the Conference and to ensure the full participation of LDC delegations to the Conference, including high-level missions of LDC Governments aimed at enhancing international support in favour of LDCs. Noting with regret that the Special Measures Fund for LDCs had not accomplished its original mandate, the Council asked the Administrator to redefine that mandate in the light of the outcome of the Conference and to submit in 1991 specific proposals aimed at mobilizing contributions.

In response to the Council's February request, the Administrator submitted a May report [DP/1990/89] on UNDP's participation in the preparations for the Conference. It contained UNDP's views of the priority needs of LDCs and proposals for UNDP programmes and resources for LDCs in the 1990s.

By a 22 June decision [E/1990/29 (res. 90/51)], the Council requested the Administrator to submit to the Conference proposals on ways to support and strengthen the development process of LDCs in the 1990s and report in 1991 on UNDP's role in the follow-up and implementation of the Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s to be adopted by the Conference.

ACC action. At its first regular session of 1990 (Vienna, 2-4 May) [ACC/1990/DEC/1-14 (dec.1990/1)], the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) stated that the international community should seize the opportunity provided by the Conference and agree on a realistic and effective programme of action for the next decade that could reverse the present trend of deteriorating living standards, lay the foundation for international co-operation for accelerated development and alleviate poverty in LDCs.

ACC agreed that the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system should actively participate in the Conference, bring its results to the attention of their governing bodies and make arrangements for follow-up action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At its eighteenth special session, the General Assembly, by decision S-18/23 of 1 May, deferred consideration of a draft resolution [A/S-18/AC.1/L.3/Rev.1] entitled "Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries" to a meeting of its forty-fourth resumed session to be convened on 17 May.

The Assembly, having considered the text, adopted resolution 44/241 on 17 May.

Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/177 of 11 December 1987, by which it decided to convene the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in 1990, and all other relevant resolutions,

1. Decides that the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to be held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990, should be preceded by a two-day meeting for consultations among senior officials on 30 and 31 August 1990;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Government of France for its generous offer to host the Conference;

3. Notes with appreciation the decisions of the Governments of Bangladesh, Finland, Nepal, the Netherlands, the Niger and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to host preparatory meetings for the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the following to the Conference:

(a) All States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies;

(b) Representatives of organizations that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly to participate, in the capacity of observers, in the sessions and the work of all international conferences convened under its auspices to participate in the Conference in that capacity, in accordance with Assembly resolutions 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 43/177 of 15 December 1988;

(c) Representatives of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity in its region to participate in the Conference in the capacity of observers, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974;

(d) All executive heads of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as well as other organs of the United Nations;

(e) Inter governmental organizations in consultative status with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which should be represented by observers at the Conference;

(f) Non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Economic and Social Council, which should be represented by observers at the Conference;

5. Welcomes decision 88/30 of 1 July 1988 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to provide assistance, through the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries, to finance the expenses of representatives of least developed countries to enable them to participate in the preparatory process of the Conference and in the Conference itself, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure the participation of representatives of least developed countries in the Conference and the two-day meeting for consultations by financing from the above-mentioned fund the travel expenses of three representatives from each least developed country.

Implementation of the Programme of Action

By a 2 October letter [A/c.2/45/5], Bangladesh transmitted to the Secretary-General a Declaration adopted by the Heads of State and Government of LDCs, at their first meeting (New York, 1 October) [A/c.2/45/5], expressing their conviction that the international community, particularly developed partners of LDCs, would fully implement the international support measures identified in the Programme of Action to complement the efforts of LDCs. They appealed to the international community to enhance its contribution to the development of the economies of LDCs in the form of an enhanced flow of external resources for development, including foreign direct investment, effective and comprehensive debt relief, greater market access and new initiatives to compensate for the shortfall in the export earnings of LDCs due to commodity price fluctuations. The Heads of State and Government urged the Secretary-General to mobilize all resources and undertake measures, in collaboration with relevant organs, bodies and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, to enable the system to live up to its challenge of meeting the Programme of Action's goals and objectives. UNCTAD's Special Programme on LDCs should be strengthened and upgraded to enable it to discharge its mandate as the focal point for global review and monitoring of the implementation of the Programme of Action. The Heads of State and Government urged multilateral financial institutions, regional banks and other development funds to help LDCs, taking into account their special needs.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to 1989 General Assembly resolution 44/220 [YUN 1989, p. 296], the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/45/695] on the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs. The report discussed the outcome of the Conference and described its preparatory process. The Secretary-General stated that the Conference was an occasion to draw world attention to and bring into political focus the problems of the weakest and poorest members of the international community. The Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action reflected a strong commitment of the international community to arrest and reverse the deterioration in the socio-economic situation in LDCs and to revitalize their growth and development, based on the principle of shared responsibility and strengthened partnership. It could be seen as making a qualitative step forward beyond the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs, adopted by the first Conference in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 406].

The recognition of effective follow-up and monitoring as key to the successful implementation of the Programme of Action was one of its significant features. Effective mechanisms to implement the Programme must be an immediate result of the Conference. Moreover, linkages between different levels of follow-up must secure that the global context was borne in mind in planning and undertaking action at the national level and provide flexible responses to changes in the international economic environment.

The report went on to set out the main features of the new Programme of Action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/206.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/177 of 11 December 1987, in which it decided to convene the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, as well as its resolutions 43/186 of 20 December 1988 and 44/220 of 22 December 1989,

Deeply concerned at the continuing deterioration in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries as a whole,

Reaffirming the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, in which it was stated, inter alia, that it would be essential to stem the increasing marginalization of the least developed countries and to reactivate their growth and development through comprehensive national action and international support measures,

Affirming the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, in which Member States stressed, inter alia, the need for full implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990,

Recalling that the Prime objective of the Programme of Action is to arrest the further deterioration in the socio-economic situation of those countries, to reactivate and accelerate their growth and development and, in the process, to set them on the path of sustained growth and development,

Reaffirming the basic principles outlined in the Programme of Action as the basis for action by the least developed countries and their development partners, including international organizations, financial institutions and development funds, to promote fundamental, growth-oriented transformation of the economies of those countries,

Recalling the solemn commitment of the international community, as contained in the Paris Declaration, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, to implement the Programme of Action throughout the 1990s.

Stressing that successful implementation of the Programme of Action will depend on shared responsibility and strengthened partnership for the growth and development of the least developed countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the outcome of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

2. Endorses the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Government and the people of France for acting as host to the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, as well as for their gracious hospitality, excellent arrangements and important contribution to the outcome of the Conference;

4. Calls upon all Governments, international and multilateral organizations, financial institutions and development funds, the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and all other organizations concerned to take immediate, concrete and adequate steps to implement the Programme of Action;

5. Reaffirms that the least developed countries have the primary responsibility for the formulation and effective implementation of national policies and priorities for their growth and development;

6. Strongly urges all donor-countries to implement fully and expeditiously their commitments in all areas, as set out in the Programme of Action, so as to provide adequate external support to the least developed countries;

7. Decides that regular review and monitoring of the progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action at the national, regional and global levels should be undertaken as envisaged in the Programme and, to that end, decides also that:

(a) The Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development shall meet in 1995 to carry out the mid-term review of the situation of those countries, report to the General Assembly on progress made in the implementation of the Programme of Action and consider new measures as necessary;

(b) The Trade and Development Board shall consider, during each of its annual spring sessions, the review of progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

(c) Towards the end of the 1990s, the General Assembly shall consider holding a third United Nations conference on the least developed countries to make a comprehensive appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action and to decide on subsequent action;

(d) The organizations of the United Nations system shall undertake sectoral appraisals at regular intervals;

8. Notes that mechanisms such as United Nations Development Programme round tables and World Bank consultative groups will continue to constitute the backbone of the country review process and, in that context, recommends that:

(a) The country review groups should be organized on a more systematic basis and at regular intervals and include all donors concerned;

(b) Least developed countries that do not have regular country review groups should consider adopting a country review process;

(c) Development partners should assist in strengthening the capacity of the Governments of the least developed countries to ensure the leadership role of those Governments in the country review process;

(d) Necessary links should be established between the follow-up at the national, regional and global levels;

9. Decides that the Conference, as part of its ongoing work, shall continue to serve as the focal point for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action and its follow-up at the global level, and shall continue to provide support at the national and regional levels, in co-operation with other concerned organs, organizations and agencies of the United Nations system;

10. Decides, in this regard, to strengthen the Special Programme for the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and to provide that Programme with sufficient resources to enable the Conference to discharge effectively its mandate concerning the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s on a timely basis and provide the secretariat services specified in the report of the Secretary-General;

11. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to take the necessary and appropriate measures for effective implementation and follow-up of the Programme of Action within their respective spheres of competence and according to their mandates;

12. Invites the preparatory bodies for all major forthcoming meetings and conferences of the United Nations system to take into account the outcome of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in conformity with paragraph 142 of the Programme of Action, to ensure the full mobilization and co-ordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in the implementation and follow-up of the Programme of Action, in close collaboration with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the secretariats of the regional commissions and the lead agencies for the aid groups;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind the role of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation in the United Nations development system and his mandate concerning the implementation of the Programme of Action, to provide the office of the Director-General with the necessary support for activities related to the least developed countries;

15. Calls upon all organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to establish focal points for the least developed countries, where they do not already exist, and to strengthen the existing ones in order to involve them actively in the implementation tasks throughout the 1990s;

16. Invites all Governments, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to assist the least developed countries in undertaking consultations among themselves on matters of common interest in the context of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

17. Urges all Governments, international and multi-lateral organizations, regional economic integration organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations to continue to pay special attention to the problems of the least developed countries and, in this regard, welcomes the initiative of the Government of Japan to hold a seminar, in collaboration with the United Nations Capital Development Fund, on the development problems of the least developed countries in the 1990s at Tokyo in May 1991;

18. Emphasizes the importance of economic and technical co-operation between the least developed countries and other developing countries and, in that regard, highly recommends mechanisms of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries to strengthen the development efforts of the least developed countries and urges the development partners to assist in such activities;

19. Calls upon the inter-national community to assist the landlocked and island least developed countries in coping with their special problems, in line with the relevant recommendations contained in the Programme of Action;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution and also to report, on a continuing basis, on the implementation of the provisions of the Programme of Action.

Island developing countries

In accordance with 1988 General Assembly resolution 43/189 [YUN 1988, p. 330], the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations was held in New York from 25 to 29 June 1990 [A/CONF.147/5] to review the problems of island developing countries and to propose appropriate action.

The Meeting of Experts was preceded by the Preparatory Meeting of Island Developing Countries of the Caribbean (Castries, Saint Lucia, 28-30 March) [A/45/299], which identified elements of island developing countries' problems requiring special attention. The Meeting of Experts had before it an UNCTAD secretariat note

[TD/B/AC.46/2] on problems of island developing countries and proposals for concrete action: issues for consideration! contributions of international and intergovernmental organizations [TD/B/AC.46/3 & Adds. 1-4] and other background documents.

The Meeting adopted "Challenges and Opportunities: A strategic framework", which stated that island developing countries suffered handicaps because of their smallness; remoteness; geographical dispersion; vulnerability to natural disasters; the fragility of their ecosystems; constraints on transport and communications; great distances from market centres; a limited internal market; lack of natural resources; weak indigenous technological capacity; the problem of obtaining fresh water supplies; heavy dependence on imports and a small number of commodities; depletion of non-renewable resources; migration; particularly of personnel with high-level skills; shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens. The strategy for addressing their vulnerabilities should be based on enhanced economic management at the national, regional and international levels. Planning mechanisms should be strengthened and donors should take full account of the particular constraints of each country. Comprehensive development plans for assisting each island developing country should be based upon an integrated approach to development, including human resource development, infrastructure needs, resource exploitation and diversification of the productive base. The long-term costs and benefits of each activity should be assessed and environmental concerns taken into account in development activities. Additional national, bilateral or multilateral resources should be applied to areas where those countries enjoyed a comparative advantage. Island developing countries should improve institutions dealing with production and marketing and receive assistance in identifying and attracting domestic and foreign investment and markets for products and services. Activities which might improve the investment climate and trade should be identified and pursued. Special market arrangements could play a helpful role, but such schemes must take into account the special needs of island developing countries. Programmes to enhance capabilities in environmental impact assessment and measures to foster the rehabilitation of areas damaged by past resource exploitation should be promoted and supported. Special attention should be accorded to disaster preparedness and management and policies adopted to mitigate the impact of future disasters. Regional co-operation should be intensified and donor countries and organizations should remain responsive to the needs of island developing countries, including providing concessional assistance over a longer time-frame, flexible interim assistance programmes and simplifying conditions of official development assistance and assistance procedures. The donor community should also support the efforts of island developing countries to address their constraints. UNCTAD should convene periodic meetings of governmental experts, donors and organizations to review developments in respect of island developing countries; the next meeting should be held within the next four years.

The Programme of Action for LDCs for the 1990s [A/CONF.147/18], adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs (see above), contained a section on coping with the special problems of certain groups of LDCs. It stated that Governments of island developing countries would have to promote sectors such as fisheries and services to generate income and develop their internal and external transport links to improve access to world markets. Donors should provide greater local recurrent costs support for development projects and programmes and the international community should assist island developing countries to finance infrastructure projects.

Implementation of action for island developing countries

In response to 1988 General Assembly resolution 43/189 [YUN 1988, p. 330], the Secretary-General submitted a September 1990 report [A/45/453 & Add.1] on progress in the implementation of specific action related to the particular needs and problems of island developing countries, in which he drew attention to the meeting of governmental experts (see above). He also informed the Assembly of relevant action taken by the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (see below).

UNCTAD action. The UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, at the first part of its thirty-seventh session (1-12 and 17 October) [TD/B/1277/Vol. II], considered the report of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations. Delegations welcomed the report but stated that additional human and financial resources were necessary to address the problems of island developing countries and to undertake the studies requested in the report of the meeting. The report would serve also as the basis for follow-up action. The proposal for the UNCTAD secretariat to be the focal point for specific action was reiterated. It was also proposed that the problem of sea-level rise associated with climate change be added to the problems listed in the report and that priority be given to studies on: a periodic review of socio-economic performance of island developing countries; indicators of social and economic progress taking into account the level of GNP and factors that related to the high vulnerability of those countries; and policies and measures to mitigate the impact of natural disasters.

On 12 October, the Board took note of the report of the meeting of governmental experts on island developing countries and decided to transmit the comments made thereon to the Assembly [A/45/453/Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/202 without vote.

Specific measures in favour of island developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the requests for specific action in favour of island developing countries contained in its resolutions 41/163 of 5 December 1986 and 43/189 of 20 December 1988 and in resolution 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 111 (V) of 3 June 1979 and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as well as decision 86/33 of 27 June 1986 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on the special needs of island developing countries,

Recognizing that, in addition to the general problems of development, many island developing countries experience specific problems arising from the interplay of such factors as their smallness, remoteness, geographical dispersion, vulnerability to natural disasters, the fragility of their ecosystems, constraints on transport and communications, great distances from market centres, a highly limited internal market, lack of natural resources, weak indigenous technological capacity, the acute problem of obtaining fresh water supplies, heavy dependence on imports and a small number of commodities, depletion of non-renewable resources, migration, particularly of personnel with high-level skills, shortages of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens,

Recognizing also that many of these factors occur concurrently in many island developing countries, resulting in socio-economic vulnerability and dependence, particularly in those countries which are small and/or geographically dispersed,

Noting that many island developing countries are also least developed countries and, in that context, taking note of the relevant provisions contained in the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990,

Recognizing that many of the problems facing island developing countries require a strengthened partnership between the countries concerned and other members of the international community,

Concerned about the adverse effects on island developing countries of sea-level rise resulting from climate change,

Taking note of the report of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations, held in New York from 25 to 29 June 1990,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 43/189 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and calls for their immediate and effective implementation;

2. Expresses its appreciation to States and to organizations and bodies within and outside the United Nations system that have responded to the special needs of island developing countries;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for convening the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations, as called for in paragraph 11 of resolution 43/189;

4. Takes note of the text entitled "Challenges and opportunities: A strategic framework", which was adopted unanimously by the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations;

5. Welcomes the efforts made by island developing countries to adopt policies that address their specific problems, including efforts to promote regional co-operation and integration, and calls upon those countries to pursue additional measures, in accordance with their national objectives, policies and priorities, to make their economies less vulnerable to the adverse consequences of their specific situations;

6. Calls upon the island developing countries to continue to adopt suitable development policies designed to overcome their specific vulnerabilities, in particular through the promotion of an integrated approach to their development process in such areas as development of human resources, expansion of physical and institutional infrastructure, exploitation of resources and diversification of the production base;

7. Also calls upon island developing countries to adopt measures aimed at protecting and rehabilitating their fragile environment and ecosystems;

8. Urges the island developing countries to promote regional co-operation arrangements in such areas as disaster prevention, inter-island transport feeder services and security;

9. Appeals to the international community:

(a) To maintain and, if possible, increase the level of concessional financial and technical assistance provided to island developing countries;

(b) To maximize access of island developing countries to concessional financial and technical assistance by taking into account the specific development needs and problems facing those countries;

(c) To consider reviewing the mechanisms of existing procedures used in providing concessional resources to island developing countries, taking into account their situations and development potential;

(d) To ensure that assistance conforms to the national and, as appropriate, regional priorities of island developing countries;

(e) To provide support to island developing countries over a mutually agreed and, where appropriate, longer time-frame to enable them to achieve economic growth and development;

(f) To continue to ensure that a concerted effort is made to assist the island developing countries, at their request, in improving their institutional and administrative capacities and in satisfying their overall needs with regard to the development of human resources;

(g) To consider improving existing arrangements for assisting island developing countries in addressing the adverse effects on their export earnings;

10. Recommends that the relevant organizations of the United Nations system take adequate measures to respond positively to the particular needs of island developing countries and report on such measures, as appropriate;

11. Urges the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to strengthen its role as the focal point for specific action at the global level in favour of island developing countries and to act as a catalyst in this regard, inter alia, by organizing and facilitating the cross-regional interchange of information and experience in full co-operation with regional and sub-regional organizations, both within and outside the United Nations system, as appropriate;

12. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue to carry out activities to identify specific problems and recommend specific measures for island developing countries, taking into account the work already done on this issue within the inter-agency framework called for in paragraph 10 of resolution 43/189, in particular in areas such as the applicability of current socio-economic indicators to island developing countries, transport and the impact of natural disasters;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide, from existing or from extra budgetary resources, technical advisory services to the island developing countries in the following areas:

(a) Periodic review of their socio-economic performance;

(b) Assessment and exploitation of marine potential;

(c) Development of inter-island transport services;

(d) Development of the statistical socio-economic data base to improve planning capacities;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to consider the convening of periodic meetings of governmental experts and donor countries and organizations in order to facilitate a review of developments in respect of island developing countries;

15. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to monitor, in co-operation with the appropriate international organizations, especially the relevant regional institutions, the progress made in the implementation of measures taken at the national and international levels;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

21 December 1990 General Assembly resolution 45/202 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.3) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54): draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.56/Rev.1); agenda item 79 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 19-21, 49, 54; plenary 71.

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1990, organizations of the United Nations system continued their work to advance the development of the world's nations, providing a total of $8.5 billion in grants ($4.7 billion) and concessional loans ($3.8 billion). These figures represented a 16 per cent increase against a net decline in 1989.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)-the central funding body of the United Nations for technical assistance-celebrated the fortieth anniversary of its establishment on United Nations Day-24 October. During its anniversary year, the Programme clarified its mandate and priorities for the new decade and adopted a new funding strategy to increase voluntary contributions and improve programme quality. It also launched the first Human Development Report. UNDP spent a total of $1 billion on field programme activities in 1990 and approved 1,256 new projects with a value of $850 million. Regionally, the largest proportion of field programme expenditures went to Africa (36 per cent), followed by Asia and the Pacific (34 per cent).

At the Pledging Conference for Development Activities in November, some $1.6 billion was pledged for 1991 to UN funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance. Of the total, some $906 million was for UNDP.

During the year, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly reviewed progress in implementing the Assembly's 1989 comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development, including mobilization of financial resources. The UNDP Governing Council took a number of decisions in preparation for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996), including the resources to be made available, their allocation, and other related issues.

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development had 997 projects under execution in 1990 with a total delivery of $181.6 million. The natural resources and energy sector, which included work in minerals, energy, water and infrastructure, remained the largest programme, with $70.7 million in expenditures.

The United Nations Capital Development Fund continued to provide small-scale capital assistance to the least developed countries to stimulate income-generating activities and help people to meet basic needs. In 1990, commitments to new projects, along with grant increases to those under way, totalled $78.1 million.

General aspects

The Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC), in his 1990 annual report [A/45/273-E/1990/85 & Corr.1] on operational activities for development, discussed issues related to General Assembly resolution 44/211 [YUN 1989, p. 302] on the comprehensive triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system, including mobilization of financial resources, progress in implementing the resolution and national programme frameworks and integrated operational response by the UN system. The Director-General said that resolution 44/211 was a landmark in many respects, departing from a protracted pattern of iterating the desirable and calling for prompt implementation of adjustments and improvements under a three-year schedule on a system-wide basis. It concentrated on the country level and decentralization at that level was seen as strengthening national development capacities and enabling Governments to assume responsibility for execution of system-funded programmes and projects.

Commenting on the initial responses of the UN system to implementation of the resolution, the Director-General stated that the overall picture was very positive and promising. The number of references to aspects of provisions on which organizations were already working was a good reflection of the UN system's recent increased responsiveness to evidence and expression of need for change and re-adjustment. He believed that all partner organizations and agencies of the UN system would agree on the need for collaboration to refine the three-year schedule of implementation, so that a wider, timed range of actions on the resolution could be incorporated in it and effectively monitored.

As an appendix to his report, the Director-General set out an initial three-year schedule for system-wide implementation of the new approach outlined in resolution 44/211. He sought additional guidance from Member States on a number of matters relating to the new approach, including common understanding of concepts and terms, training of UN system staff, training of personnel of developing countries, information systems at the country level, development information flows, the regional dimension and food aid. In each case, the Director-General made recommendations for the attention of Member States, which included: proposed system-wide consultations on concept understandings; the possibility of establishing a staff college network for training and reorientation for the UN development system; the establishment of task forces on the training of developing countries' personnel and on common country-level information systems; carrying out a study of a UN system capacity for global provisions of information on development models, techniques and experience; and the need for steps to bring about the greater integration of food aid with the other assistance provided by the UN system.

In five addenda to his report, the Director-General provided: information on the representation of developing countries at the executive management and other central decision-making levels of secretariat structures in the area of operational activities for development [A/45/273/Add.1-E/1990/85/Add.1]; the text of a study on the integrated operational response of the UN system at the country level to national programme frameworks of recipient Governments and appraisal mechanisms aimed at transferring responsibility for resource management effectively to the recipient countries [A/45/273/Add.2-E/1990/85/Add.2]; the texts of inter-agency agreements to facilitate adjustments and improvements called for in Assembly resolution 44/211 [A/45/273/Add.3-E/1990/85/Add.3]; statistical data for 1989 [A/45/273/Add.4-E/1990/85/Add.4]; and, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/82 (see below), the Director-General's preliminary three-year schedule for implementing Assembly resolution 44/211 (see below) [A/45/273/Add.5-E/1990/85/Add.5].

ACC action. At its first regular session of 1990 (Vienna, Austria, 2-4 May [ACC/1990/DEC/1-14 (dec.1990/3)]), the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) recognized that various provisions of resolution 44/211 would require consideration by governing bodies of specialized agencies and UN funds, which would inform the Director-General of the conclusions reached and further actions taken or envisaged for inclusion in his annual report to the Economic and Social Council on the resolution's implementation. Changes and improvements outlined in the resolution would require extensive attention within and between the organizations concerned, and collaborative action on their part. ACC undertook to address their implementation in the 1990-1992 period.

Economic and Social Council action. On 9 February (decision 1990/201), the Economic and Social Council, pursuant to decision 1989/186 [YUN 1989, p. 301], decided to conduct its annual policy review of operational activities for development for 1990 and to focus on ways to ensure the implementation of Assembly resolution 44/211, including the proposed three-year schedule for implementation by the UN system.

On 27 July 1990, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the Director-General's report on the operational activities of the UN system [A/45/273-E/1990/85 & Corr.1 & Add.1-4], adopted resolution 1990/82.

Operational activities for development

The Economic and Social Council,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on the operational activities of the United Nations system, the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund, the extract from the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its organizational meeting for 1990, its special session and its thirty-seventh session, the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund on the implications for population programmes of the Amsterdam Declaration and on efforts to develop further the analysis of resource requirements for international population assistance and the fifteenth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, and decides to transmit them to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session for its consideration;

2. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a precise and comprehensive schedule for the implementation of all the provisions of Assembly resolution 44/211 of 22 December 1989 that require action by the United Nations system, concentrating on those activities that in his view require priority attention.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/82

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/115) without vote, 24 July (meeting 17); 3-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.20), orally revised; agenda item 9.

Sponsors: Canada, Netherlands, United Kingdom.

In response to the Council's request, the DICE Director-General submitted to the General Assembly in October a revised implementation schedule of resolution 44/211 [A/45/273/Add.5-E/1990/85/Add.5]. He noted that, in 1990, the UN system was largely in a preparatory phase for implementation. It was also a year of major transition for UNDP as it made preparations for its fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) and the elaboration of successor agency support costs arrangements (see below). Nevertheless, organizations were preparing detailed plans for decentralization. Decisions had been taken on the use of national capacities and for the acceleration of national execution. Individual organizations and inter-agency mechanisms were addressing the issues of more coherent and sustainable programming and there had been a Joint Consultative Group on Policy instruction calling for the harmonization of programme cycles. System-wide agreements on enhancing the role of the resident co-ordinator and on more substantive collaboration among country teams of the system had been issued. In addition, new staff training programmes had been developed. In 1991, the responses of governing bodies to resolution 44/211 would be translated into implementation plans and 1990 action plans not needing governing body decisions would begin to be implemented. Also in 1991, the new programme for orientation of country teams would begin a series of workshops. The third year of the schedule (1992) should see decisive actions either fully under way or being initiated across the full range of resolution 44/211. The launching of UNDP's fifth programming cycle in 1992 would bring into play many features of the resolution in a wide range of the operational activities of the system.

In his conclusion, the Director-General stated that as part of the information to be provided to the Assembly, and in order to facilitate monitoring of progress in key areas, appropriate benchmarks would be utilized, covering such topics as the degree of decentralization and delegation of authority, the extent of national execution, the range and scope of improved programming approaches, the number of shared and common premises, and the number of steps taken by governing bodies to give effect to the Assembly resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 45/449 of 21 December, took note of the DIEC Director-General's report on operational activities for development.

By decision 45/448 of the same date, the Assembly transmitted to its forty-sixth (1991) session for consideration a draft resolution on operational activities for development of the UN system [A/C.2/45/L.75], which had been submitted to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee by Bolivia on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries.

By that draft, the Assembly, among other things, would have requested the Director-General, in co-operation with the executive heads of the organizations of the UN system, to institute greater country focus in their activities. It would also have requested the UN development system, particularly the funding agencies, to continue to show maximum flexibility to recipient countries facing financial difficulties in meeting their counterpart financial contributions for ongoing projects.

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures

In his report providing statistical data on UN operational activities in 1990 [A/46/206/Add.4-E/1991/93/Add.4], the DIEC Director-General stated that of the $62.1 billion in official development assistance in 1990, some $8.5 billion in grants and concessional loans was provided to developing countries through the UN system.

Expenditures on operational activities through the UN system totalled $7.7 billion in 1990. The total comprised: development grants, $3.8 billion; concessional loans, $3.8 billion; non-concessional loans, -$0.8 billion; and grant-financed refugee, humanitarian, special economic and disaster relief activities, $0.9 billion. About half of all concessional development assistance, including grants, was provided to the least developed countries (LDCs); about a third to countries where the gross national product (GNP) per capita was $250 or below; and three quarters to those countries where GNP per capita did not exceed $500. Net transfers of the International Development Association (IDA) amounted to $3.7 billion, representing over a half of total concessional assistance to individual countries.

Total grant assistance in support of development activities, which totalled $3.8 billion in 1990, was distributed as follows: UNDP and UNDP-administered funds, $1,134 million; the World Food Programme (WFP), $956 million; the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), $584 million; and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), $180 million. Extra budgetary assistance, including agency trust funds and government "self-supporting" funds, totalled $686 million and regular budget assistance amounted to $234 million. UNDP continued to play a central funding and co-ordinating role for development grant assistance within the UN system. Twenty-four organizations of the UN system were executing agencies for UNDP in 1990. Five of those agencies, plus Governments and UNDP, delivered at least $67 million of UNDP main programme resources during the year. UNDP and UNDP-administered funds financed 42 per cent of the technical co-operation expenditure of 23 organizations of the UN system in 1990, excluding UNDP itself.

Contributions

In 1990, contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities of the UN system totalled $8,538.5 million, compared to $8,535.8 million in 1989. Contributions to UN funds and programmes (UNDP and its trust funds, UNFPA, UNICEF, WFP and others) totalled $3,430.8 million, compared to $3,144.9 million in 1989. Contributions for operational activities of specialized agencies totalled $4,252.2 million, compared to $3,928.2 million in 1989. Contributions to the World Bank Group (the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development), IDA and the International Finance Corporation) and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) totalled $4,286.3 million, compared to $4,607.6 million in 1989.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1990 Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held in New York from 1 to 2 November [A/CONF.154/1 & Corr.1,2] to receive government pledges for 1991 to UN funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

In a note to the General Assembly [A/CONF.154/2], the Secretary-General listed contributions pledged or paid as at 30 June 1991 to UN funds and programmes at the 1990 pledging conference, totalling some $1.6 billion, of which some $906 million was for UNDP.

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/208 [YUN 1989, p. 307], the Secretary-General submitted a May 1990 report [A/45/281-E/1990/66 & Corr.1] containing proposals for future administrative arrangements for the Pledging Conference. They included the limitation of the Conference to one day in November; greater use of written pledges, to be communicated to the Secretary-General three weeks before the Conference; and limiting statements by participants to five minutes. The adoption and signing of the Final Act of the Conference would be replaced by adoption of a Conference report, thus dispensing with the process of signing a Final Act.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/80.

Future administrative arrangements for the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities

Reaffirming the importance of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on future administrative arrangements for the Conference,

1. Recommends to the General Assembly that the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities remain the principal forum for Member States and others to pledge their contributions to United Nations operational activities for development, that it continue to be convened early in November and that its basic format remain unchanged;

2. Recommend further if possible commencing in 1990, that:

(a) The Conference be limited to one day and continue to be opened by the Secretary-General;

(b) Greater use be made of written pledges, delegations being given an opportunity to make pledges in writing before the Conference takes place, these pledges to be announced at the Conference in the President's opening statement;

(c) As a general rule, statements by participants in the Conference be limited to five minutes each;

(d) A speakers' list be established for Member States and others wishing to pledge, the only other statements to be an opening and closing statement by the President of the Conference, should he or she wish, and short closing statements by executive heads of United Nations programmes and funds or their representatives;

(e) The adoption and signing of the Final Act of the Conference be replaced by the adoption of a report of the Conference.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/80 27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/115), 24 July (meeting 17); draft by United Kingdom (E/1990/C.3/L.18), orally revised; agenda item 9.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/215.

United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance of the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on future administrative arrangements for the Conference,

Recalling its resolution 44/208 of 22 December 1989 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/80 of 27 July 1990,

1. Decides that the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities should remain the principal opportunity for Member States and others to pledge their contributions to United Nations development activities, that it shall continue to be convened early in November and that its basic format should remain unchanged;

2. Decides also that:

(a) The Conference shall be limited to two working sessions;

(b) The Conference shall continue to be opened by the Secretary-General;

(c) Greater use should be made of written pledges and that delegations should be given an opportunity to make pledges in writing before the Conference takes place and to have them circulated during the Conference;

(d) As a general rule, statements by participants in the Conference shall be limited to five minutes each;

(e) A speakers' list shall be established for Member States and others wishing to speak; the only other statements will be an opening and closing statement by the President of the Conference, should he or she wish, and short closing statements by executive heads of the United Nations programmes and funds or their representatives;

(f) Delegations which are not in a position to make a definitive pledge should make known their pledges as soon as possible;

(g) The adoption and signing of the Final Act of the Conference shall be replaced by the adoption of a procedural report of the Conference;

3. Urges Member States to consider increasing their financial contributions to United Nations development activities.

Inter-agency co-operation

The operational activities of the UN system, including the role and functioning of the development system in the 1990s, was discussed at two sessions of ACC's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (CCSQ) (Operational Activities).

At its first session (Geneva, 2-5 April) [Acc/1990/7], the Committee made recommendations to ACC with regard to enhancing the role and effectiveness of the resident co-ordinator system and agreed that their spirit and content, which constituted guidelines, would be incorporated by each organization into the terms of reference of their respective field representatives.

CCSQ also forwarded to ACC its views and recommendations on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/211 (see above) and on the question of UNDP successor arrangements for support costs (see below).

At its second session (New York, 2-4 October) [ACC/1990/14], CCSQ forwarded to ACC its views on giving operational effect to goals and strategies of the UN development system in the 1990s. It also drew to ACC's attention its further recommendations on enhancing the role and effectiveness of the resident co-ordinator system, and its views on local and recurrent costs.

Technical co-operation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1990 [DP/1991/10 & Add.1-4], the UNDP Administrator observed that 1990 was significant for the Programme as it celebrated its fortieth anniversary and saw an important affirmation and clarification of its mandate and priorities. The year also marked the beginning of a new decade and a new sense of urgency in the international community, driven by the awareness of the magnitude and complexity of the social, economic and environmental challenges facing the world. The Administrator said that there was reason to believe that, with the thawing of the Cold War, the 1990s would witness a shift from ideological conflict and the threat of military annihilation towards a global effort to bring about peace, social justice and a sustainable world ecology.

The Administrator noted an important June Governing Council decision [E/1990/29(dec.90/34)], which affirmed and clarified UNDP's mandate and priorities and put UNDP in the forefront of thinking on technical co-operation. Consequently, the Programme's efforts were to be focused on six areas for promoting human development for the attainment of self-reliance in developing countries, through building and strengthening national capacity: poverty eradication and grass-roots participation in development; environmental problems and natural resource management; management development; technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC); transfer and adaptation of technology for development; and women in development. The challenge was to put into practice the UNDP mandate in the context of the Fourth International Development Strategy (see previous chapter).

The launching by UNDP in 1990 of the first Human Development Report had reasserted UNDP's guiding principle that human beings were at the heart of the development process. The Report attempted to measure progress by a human development index (HDI) rather than by per capita GNP. Although human development had always been a main aim of UNDP, it had been placed under sharper focus and, in addition to economic growth, it would include access to education, health, employment, shelter, nutrition and human rights and a special emphasis on women.

Over the four decades of UNDP's existence, a number of countries had moved closer to the goal of self-reliance through acquisition and absorption of skills and technologies, often with UNDP assistance. In recent years, UNDP had embarked on a number of initiatives directed to promoting the private and informal sectors with the aim of enabling them to play their rightful role in development and contribute to the strengthening of national capacity. Support to governments included entrepreneurship development and the design of supportive policies and institutional and regulatory frameworks that encouraged the growth of small and medium-sized enterprises. It also included the increase of financial flows through investment promotion and capital market development, as well as the provision of other technical support services.

UNDP, with the World Bank and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), was a partner in the Global Environment Facility (GEF), established in 1990, which aimed to raise more than $1 billion over the first three years (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). The issues to be addressed by GEF were global warming, biodiversity losses, international water pollution and ozone depletion.

UNDP had received a growing number of requests for assistance in helping governments to co-ordinate external co-operation. The round-table mechanism and national technical co-operation assessments and programmes (NATCAPS) had been found effective for that purpose. In 1990, 5 round-table meetings were held and 12 sectoral follow-up meetings were organized. NATCAPS were under way or planned in some 30 countries, mostly in Africa and increasingly in Latin America and the Caribbean.

In 1990, UNDP's estimated income was $1.2 billion, of which $1 billion came from voluntary contributions. Other major sources included cost-sharing contributions from recipient Governments ($169.2 million); trust funds established by the Administrator ($27.8 million); contributions to local office costs ($17 million); the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (SMF/LDCs) ($12.8 million); Government cash counterpart contributions ($8 million); and extra budgetary activities ($2.6 million). In addition, UNDP administered eight funds during 1990 which received contributions of $90 million, bringing UNDP total income for 1990 to $1,329.8 million. The eight funds UNDP administered were: the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF); the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE); the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development

(UNFSTD); the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO); the United Nations Volunteers (UNV); the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM); the UNDP Energy Account; and the UNDP Study Programme.

Based on the results of the United Nations Pledging Conference held in November (see above), it appeared that five countries had raised their contributions from the previous year—Finland, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. The developing countries that had pledged more than $1 million to UNDP were China, Colombia, Cuba, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Sri Lanka and Thailand.

In 1990, expenditures from UNDP core resources totalled some $1.4 billion, with $1 billion spent on field programmes. About half of that amount was spent on project personnel, 20 per cent on equipment, 15 per cent for subcontracts, 13 per cent for training and the remainder for miscellaneous expenses such as maintenance and operation costs.

The largest share of field programme expenditures came from indicative planning figure (IPF) resources—81 per cent in 1990. Cost-sharing contributions made up 13 per cent, Special Programme Resources (SPR) about 3 per cent, SMF/LDCs 2 per cent and Special Industrial Services 1 per cent.

Regionally, 36 per cent of field programme expenditures were spent in Africa, 34 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 15 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean, 10 per cent in the Arab States and Europe, and 5 per cent by UNDP's global and inter regional programmes. In terms of sectoral distribution, 22 per cent was allocated to general development issues; 19 per cent to agriculture, forestry and fisheries; 12 per cent to industry; 11 per cent to natural resources; and 8 per cent to transport and communications.

A total of 1,256 new projects were approved during 1990, with a value of $850 million, compared to $589.6 million in 1989. Of the $850 million, $160 million represented cost-sharing from Governments and third-party donors. The three sectors receiving the largest funding shares were: general development issues, policies and planning (28 per cent); agriculture, forestry and fisheries (13 per cent); and industry (11 per cent). UNDP also helped to attract more than $14 billion in follow-up investments from other donors in 1990, up from $9 billion in 1989; that was used mainly for capital works and infrastructural improvement.

By a 23 February decision [E/1990/29(dec.90/8)], the Governing Council postponed consideration of the annex to its 1989 decision [YUN 1989, p. 310] on the annual report of the Administrator to the thirty-seventh (May/June 1990) session and to consider the matter together with the annual report of the Administrator for 1989.

In a 22 June decision [dec.90/52], the Council took note of the annual report of the Administrator for 1989 [DP/1990/17 & Add.1-7].

Fortieth anniversary of multilateral technical co-operation

On 23 February, UNDP's Assistant Administrator and Director of the Bureau for Special Activities told the special session of the Governing Council that three main events had been scheduled to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of multilateral technical co-operation for development within the UN system: the plan to commemorate the anniversary on United Nations Day, 24 October; launching in May of the Human Development Report; and a celebration within the framework of the June session of the Governing Council in Geneva. The suggestions of resident representatives on ways to commemorate the anniversary in recipient countries were under consideration and the participation of donor countries was welcomed. He recommended that the Council request Governments to plan appropriate celebrations in their countries on 24 October. Consideration was also being given to the sponsoring by the United Nations of various initiatives.

The Governing Council, by a 23 February decision [dec.90/7], took note of the Assistant Administrator's statement and those of UNDP member States.

UNDP Governing Council

In 1990, the UNDP Governing Council held its organizational meeting from 20 to 23 February and a special session from 20 to 23 February, both in New York. The Council's thirty-seventh session took place from 28 May to 23 June in Geneva [E/1990/29]. At the organizational meeting, the Council adopted decisions on its schedule of meetings in 1990 and other organizational matters, including allocation of items to its Committees [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/1)]. At the special session to consider pending issues, the Council adopted 10 decisions. Those not covered in this chapter dealt with: preparations for the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I); and the role of UNDP in combating the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) (see PART THREE, Chapter XI). In procedural action, the special session, by a 23 February decision [dec. 90/11, took note of the report of the President on the work of the Committee of the Whole [DP/1990/L.7] and, by another decision of the same date [dec. 90/10], decided to review the preparation of documentation within the informal consultations for further improving the working methods of the Governing Council.

During the thirty-seventh session, the Governing Council adopted 43 decisions. Those not covered in this chapter dealt with: human development (see PART THREE, Chapter XII); women in development (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII); UNDP's role in combating the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and AIDS (see PART THREE, Chapter XI); environment (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); refugees, displaced persons and returnees (see PART THREE, Chapter XV); UNDP's role in the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter III); the African Transport and Communications Decade (see PART TWO, Chapter V); the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America (see PART THREE, Chapter III); Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III); science and technology (see PART THREE, Chapter VII); natural resources exploration (see PART THREE, Chapter VI); the Sudano-Sahelian Office (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); and UNFPA (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

On 28 May, the Governing Council approved the agenda and organization of work for its thirty-seventh session [dec. 90/12]. On 23 June, the Council agreed on the schedule of its future sessions and those of its subsidiary bodies [dec. 90/53] and approved the provisional agenda for its thirty-eighth (1991) session [dec. 90/54].

Governing Council working methods

Pursuant to a 1989 Governing Council decision [YUN 1989, p. 312], the Council President submitted his report [DP/1990/82 & Add.1] on the outcome of informal consultations held on 13 February on the working methods of the Council. The consultations dealt with the overall functioning of the Council and resulted in a number of proposals concerning the duration and number of meetings, matters related to the agenda, decisions and documentation.

By a 23 June decision [dec. 90/23], the Council merged the Committee of the Whole and its Working Group into a Standing Committee for Programme Matters to deal with the programme aspects of UNDP activities. The Standing Committee would report to the Council plenary and prepare decisions for plenary adoption. The mechanism would be reviewed in 1997. The Standing Committee would meet during and between sessions of the Council and, in consultation with host Governments, would organize regular field visits to look into and report on specific aspects of UNDP's field programme. The Council requested the Administrator to examine and submit proposals to reduce the number and length of documents and to biennialize or even triennialize specific items and the high-level debate of the Council. He was also asked to indicate in his reports to the Council any actions proposed, including their financial and administrative implications. The Council further decided to keep to a minimum preambular paragraphs in its decisions.

In accordance with the Council's decision, the Administrator held informal consultations with Council members on 2 November on the reduction of documentation and the biennialization of items on the Council's agenda.

UNDP operational activities

Policy review

Funding strategy

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 311], the Administrator, in a May 1990 report [DP/1990/20], proposed elements for a UNDP funding strategy. The purpose of such a strategy would be to assist in determining: the comparative advantages and strengths of UNDP in acting as intermediary between donors and recipient countries in meeting certain technical co-operation needs; the quantitative and qualitative dimensions of the resource needs to be met and the related desirable and realistic funding levels and growth rates; and the prospects for mobilizing the required amount and type of resources.

The Administrator recommended measures for regularly assessing the prospective demand for UNDP resources; highlighted the importance of a UNDP development profile in the 1990s; and set forth principles for determining needed increases in core programme resources. He further suggested that, in order to maintain existing programme levels, core resources during the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) should be increased by at least 10 per cent and proposed principles to guide the mobilization and programming of non-core resources within the context of expanded country programmes to ensure that their additionality supported Governmental policies and expenditure priorities.

The Administrator said three development challenges directly related to the overall UNDP objective of human development were emerging as top priorities on the development agenda for the 1990s: strategies for poverty alleviation and investment in people; more efficient economic management; and combining economic growth, human development concerns, and the objectives of natural resource management into an integrated concept of longer-term sustainable development. UNDP intended to equip itself to assist Governments to respond to the challenges that attainment of those three objectives posed.

The Governing Council also had before it a report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [DP/1989/56] concerning the importance of maintaining an appropriate balance between core and non-core resources.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/14], the Governing Council requested the Administrator, with a view to increasing voluntary contributions, to improve programme quality and effectiveness, including improved management, by taking the following steps: concentrate resources in areas where UNDP could maximize its advantages compared to other development co-operation programmes so as to improve programme focus and quality and reduce administrative costs; increase integration into the country programming process of resources available from funds under the Administrator's authority; streamline UNDP operations through the merger of trust funds, services and programmes to simplify administration and provide a clearer focus to the programme; and strengthen monitoring and evaluation mechanisms to ensure that evaluation results had retroactive effects on ongoing programmes and improved future programming. The Administrator was asked to report to the Council in 1991 on the implementation of the decision.

Also before the Council was a note by its President [DP/1990/19] on the outcome of informal consultations of an ad hoc group on the role of UNDP in the 1990s. The Group, which held its first meeting on 12 February, was established in response to a 1989 Council decision [YUN 1989, p. 312]. It discussed issues relating to general resource levels, central funding and core and non-core funding and other issues. The informal consultations were considered to be a useful exercise, permitting delegations to exchange views on matters affecting the future funding of UNDP. The Group agreed to hold further informal consultations on the subject.

Country and Inter country programmes

The Administrator submitted to the Governing Council's special session in February an overview of mid-term reviews of country and inter-country programmes carried out in the first half of 1989 [DP/1990/12]. During the period, 22 reviews were completed and the rest were scheduled to be completed by early 1990. Addenda to the report contained mid-term reviews of Algeria, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Brazil, Madagascar and Zambia and of the inter country programme for Europe [DP/1990/12/Add.1-7].

By a 23 February decision [dec. 90/6], the Governing Council took note of the mid-term reviews of country and regional programmes under the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991).

The Administrator submitted a further overview of mid-term reviews to the Council at its May/June session [DP/1990/38]. Addenda to the report contained an evaluation of the mid-term review process and the mid-term reviews of Egypt, Ghana, Myanmar, Viet Nam, Zaire, the multi-island programme for the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, the regional programme for Africa, and inter regional and global programmes [DP/1990/38/Add.1-10].

In his evaluation of the process [DP/1990/38/Add.1], the Administrator said that the guidelines for mid-term reviews needed to be improved and revised ones were being developed.

In a 20 June decision [dec. 90/33], the Governing Council stated that it considered the mid-term review process to be a useful management tool for guiding the fourth cycle (1987-1991) and planning fifth cycle (1992-1996) programmes. It requested UNDP to increase efforts to ensure the involvement of those UN agencies executing UNDP projects and asked the Administrator to complete the series of mid-term reviews for consideration at its next session. It also requested the Administrator to include in his report on programme implementation of selected country programmes information on steps taken and those intended to be taken to follow up on the recommendations of the country and regional mid-term reviews. He was urged to consider the recommendations of the evaluations of the mid-term review process, including an issues paper preceding each exercise and a substantive overview paper to be submitted to the Council. The Council also approved country programmes for Fiji, India and Tonga and took note of the extension of programmes for Argentina, Indonesia, Kuwait and Venezuela.

Country programmes by region

Africa

More than 30 African countries had initiated structural adjustment programmes in recent years and continued to implement reforms, including the liberalization of external trade, devaluation of overvalued currencies, tight fiscal and monetary policies and a reduction in the size of the public sector. Economic growth in sub-Saharan Africa slowed to roughly 3 per cent in 1990, compared with the approximate 3.25 per cent growth in gross domestic product (GDP) in 1989. The sharp increase in crude oil prices was a contributing factor to the slow-down, said the UNDP Administrator in his annual report for 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1]. However, the performance of African economies in 1990 varied from country to country, with Botswana, Ghana, Madagascar and Mauritius registering positive growth rates of 5 per cent, while domestic conflict and drought resulted in economic decline and food shortages for Angola, Ethiopia, Liberia and Mozambique.

In 1990, UNDP laid the groundwork for launching two new initiatives: the National Long-Term Perspective Studies for follow-up initiatives to structural adjustment programmes; and the African Capacity Building Initiative, which would establish a core of African experts to help manage the development process in the region. UNDP was also helping Governments participating in the Social Dimensions of Adjustment projects to reduce the hardships resulting from structural adjustment and was working with the World Bank, the African Development Bank and the Carter Center, through Project Africa, to develop long-term strategies for food security and to mobilize vital international resources. Programmes were under way in eight countries, with UNDP playing a major role in Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Together with UNEP, UNDP was assessing the impact of development on the environment in several countries. In Zimbabwe, preparations were being made for the first Sustainable Network for Development Project in the region, the purpose of which was to help the Government to incorporate environmental concerns into long-term development plans. In the face of the rapid spread of the AIDS pandemic in Africa, UNDP, in collaboration with the World Health Organization (WHO), had launched 23 AIDS-related projects, some of which were providing institutional support and others assistance in prevention and control programmes.

Environmental disasters and famine continued to affect a large number of people on the African continent. In 1990, an estimated 4 million refugees placed increasing pressure on the already strained resources of host Governments such as Burundi, Ethiopia, Malawi, Mozambique, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe. UNDP continued to identify and implement projects designed to assist both the displaced populations and host countries. It approved $4.3 million for the establishment of an emergency unit in Angola and the emergency unit in Mozambique continued to play an important co-ordinating role.

In a report on the implementation of selected country programmes [DP/1991/21], the Administrator stated that a number of initiatives were launched in the Africa region in 1990 that mirrored the priorities established with the six programming themes mandated by the Governing Council in its June 1990 decision on the fifth programming cycle (see below). Highlights of UNDP's programme in 1990 included the launching of a regional project entitled Support to Development Planning in Africa, which aimed to make development planning an effective instrument for growth; implementation in 26 countries of NATCAPS, 11 of which were planned to provide the centrepiece to forthcoming country programming exercises; UNDP-organized round-table meetings in Chad and the Gambia and follow-up sectoral meetings in eight countries; and implementation of management development programmes. Twenty country programmes and the programme for national liberation movements were subject to mid-term review in 1990, thus completing the cycle of such reviews. A number of recommendations were made for the remainder of the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) based on the findings of the reviews. Nine steering committee meetings, 23 tripartite reviews and 30 in-depth evaluations were undertaken to ensure that the objectives of the fourth regional programme for Africa were fulfilled and that sufficient facts on the impact of the programme were available at the end of the cycle. A separate thematic evaluation of regional programme assistance to intergovernmental organizations was carried out from September to November and a comprehensive evaluation of the fourth regional programme as a whole was also organized in November-December, the results and recommendations of which provided an important input into the preparations for the fifth cycle regional programme.

Three Regional Programme Officers were appointed in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire; Libreville, Gabon; and Lusaka, Zambia. Country programming exercises for the fifth programming cycle were conducted in almost all countries.

By a 20 June decision [dec. 90/28], the Governing Council, having considered the Administrator's report on assistance to national liberation movements [DP/1990/29], requested him to complete the transfer of those projects for which Namibians were the sole beneficiaries, as an integral part of the country programme for Namibia, and to continue projects benefiting African National Congress (ANC) and Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) members. He was also asked to report in 1991 on trends, developments and the effectiveness of assistance, including proposals for a fifth cycle indicative planning figure for national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity.

Asia and the Pacific

The downturn of economic performance in Asia and the Pacific, which began in 1989, persisted in 1990, with growth dropping to 5.4 per cent, largely due to declining exports earnings and cut-backs in worker remittances as a result of the situation between Iraq and Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III), said the Administrator in his annual report for 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1].

Over 2,000 country and regional projects were being implemented in Asia and the Pacific. Of the estimated $303 million in project expenditures, 20 per cent was directed to the industrial sector. Agriculture, forestry and fisheries accounted for 18 per cent, natural resources for 15 per cent and development planning for 13 per cent. A shift in programme emphasis to human development was expected to result in a rise in expenditures in the social sectors, which so far accounted for 11 per cent. Efforts to promote national execution were reflected in the rise in expenditures for nationally executed projects, which rose to $26 million in 1990 from $19 million in 1987. To boost national execution, training was provided to government staff in several countries, including China, Indonesia and Myanmar. UNDP field offices were also conducting studies to identify technical and management needs at the national level.

Several initiatives were taken to formulate human development strategies, including missions to Bangladesh, India, Indonesia, Pakistan and Viet Nam. New initiatives were also taken to address issues concerning women, particularly in Bangladesh and India. The spread of AIDS had become an urgent priority in some countries. All UNDP field offices conducted national workshops to increase awareness of the disastrous consequences of AIDS. Resident representatives consulted with Governments on the formulation of immediate and long-term plans to address AIDS-related problems and how UNDP could assist in their implementation.

The Management Development Programme (MDP) assisted Governments in the region to move from centrally planned to market-oriented economies. Large-scale projects to improve management capabilities were approved for Laos, Mongolia, Myanmar, Papua New Guinea and Viet Nam. Of 200 projects in the region that directly or indirectly involved private sector development, 20 per cent promoted entrepreneurship. A project in Laos, conducted in collaboration with the World Bank, was helping the Government to privatize public enterprises, develop new economic and business legislation and promote foreign investment.

In his report on the implementation of selected country programmes [DP/1991/21], the Administrator stated that country programmes in Asia and the Pacific continued to emphasize programmes and projects that promoted environmental sustainability and sound development. The Asian Ministerial Conference on the Environment (Bangkok, Thailand, October 10-16) endorsed the key role of UNDP as co-ordinator and implementor of environmental follow-up activity in the region. Several new UNDP initiatives were endorsed by the Conference, including assistance to Governments on the preparation of national strategies for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII). Efforts continued to maximize the benefits of the inter country programme, which was directed towards human development, the management of sustainable environment and natural resources, and economic reform. In preparation for the fifth programming cycle, a regional symposium on co-operation in Asia and the Pacific, held in Honolulu, United States, identified the special needs of subregions and recommended programme responses. UNDP continued to organize round-table meetings for LDCs and for those countries without mechanisms for donor consultation. Meetings were convened for the Cook Islands, Fiji and Western Samoa.

Mid-term reviews of eight country programmes were conducted in 1990. They revealed that the programmes generally remained relevant to the overall priorities of governments and that most of the areas of focus specified in Governing Council decision 90/34 on the fifth programming cycle (see below) were already being addressed at the country level. Common implementation problems identified by the reviews included lengthy project formulation and start up, delays in the recruitment of experts and inadequate counterpart staff and funding.

Arab States and Europe

In 1990, the situation between Iraq and Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III) inflicted economic and social hardship on the Arab States, particularly Egypt, Jordan, Turkey and newly unified Yemen, as a result of lost revenues from trade, tourism and worker remittances and the problem of reintegrating hundreds of thousands of returnees. The Sudan braced for impending famine, while fighting in Somalia continued to cause grave concern, said the Administrator in his annual report covering 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1]. Those events affected regional co-operation and programme implementation. However, a more positive picture emerged in Lebanon, where Greater Beirut was brought under the authority of the central Government and there was hope for reconstruction and development following 15 years of civil strife. In addition, there were moves in North Africa to reinforce integration within the Arab Maghreb Union through an economic common market. In Eastern Europe, assistance focused on the transition from centrally planned to market economies.

In 1990, the Arab and European programmes supported major new initiatives in key areas, including the environment, women in development and the private sector. Many projects continued to forge strong links between the Arab and European regions. Programme delivery was adversely affected by the emergency situation prevailing in many countries as a result of the situation between Iraq and Kuwait. Nevertheless, it was estimated that IPF expenditures, which totalled $91 million, had increased by some 15 per cent over 1989.

UNDP addressed environmental concerns in many of the regional projects for the Arab States and Europe. Environmental activities ranged from small national to major regional projects, including a $295,000 project in Tunisia, and a $15 million Mediterranean Environmental Technical Assistance Programme to assist countries to strengthen national capacity in environmental management, prepare innovative projects and develop policies in the areas of water resources and waste-water management, marine oil pollution, solid and hazardous waste and coastal zone management. UNDP also proposed the creation of a centre for the environment and development for the Arab Region and Europe to ensure that environmental concerns were integrated into development efforts. The Centre would concentrate initially on management of freshwater resources and the utilization of land resources.

In the area of women in development, UNDP organized a major regional conference (Cairo, Egypt, 20-23 May) to identify obstacles to Arab women's full integration in development. In order to address some of the areas of concern highlighted by the conference, UNDP was formulating an operational programme and had organized a workshop for field-office women-in-development focal points.

Eastern Europe was a major focus of activity in 1990, especially with regard to private sector development. UNDP co-sponsored a regional privatization conference in Yugoslavia in November, which brought together leaders of privatization agencies from Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania and Yugoslavia.

UNDP fielded a high-level mission to the newly unified Yemen in June to discuss the implications of unification for development priorities. A subsequent mission in July assessed the country's development needs and a unified UNDP field office to address those needs was opened in Sana'a.

Many Arab countries faced emergency situations caused by drought, famine and conflict. As one of the front-line countries in the Persian Gulf crisis, Jordan had to cope with some 700,000 people who passed through the country on their way home from Iraq and Kuwait, and received assistance from the UN system in that regard. UNDP managed a United States Agency for International Development-financed project for the economic integration of Bulgarian ethnic Turks who arrived in Turkey as refugees in 1989.

In his note on implementation of selected country programmes [DP/1991/21], the Administrator stated that, during 1990, UNDP conducted nine Arab and European country programme mid-term reviews, a number of which recommended that resources focus increasingly on the environment, human development and specific issues such as export promotion and employment relating to economic adjustment programmes. The mid-term review for the fourth regional programme for Arab States was held in October. The participants at the review welcomed the role played by the regional programme in breaking new development ground in the areas of technology, environment and women in development, and in pushing ahead with national implementation.

Programme delivery was affected by internal emergency situations, the Persian Gulf crisis and the evolving economic and political structures within Central and Eastern Europe. Nevertheless, there was an estimated IPF expenditure of $91 million in 1990, an increase of some 15 per cent over 1989.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The structural adjustment programmes adopted by most countries in the region had harsh social consequences and often contributed to economic and social regression. There was, however, room for cautious optimism as the region could look forward to improved prospects and a resumption of growth as long as it maintained the pace of policy reforms and harnessed its resources more effectively. However, more stable terms of trade and an increase in net financial transfers were essential if the countries were to achieve sustained economic growth, said the Administrator in his annual report for 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1]. The key to a strategy for durable recovery was investment in human resources development. In that context, the renewal of the democratic process in the region was clearly associated with increased expectations of a more decent life. The main areas of focus for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) included environment, poverty, public sector management, women in development, transfer of technology and technical co-operation among developing countries.

UNDP undertook a number of environmental initiatives at the regional and national levels. The Amazonian Botanical Research Programme established a network to share information on existing plant species; another programme assisted Brazil in implementing a World Bank loan for improving management of national parks, biological reserves and ecological stations. UNDP approved a new project for Peru to assist in the design of a tropical forest plan. Poverty continued to receive priority in various country programmes. A group of 17 projects in Colombia supported the national strategy for the alleviation of poverty. One of the projects, the National Plan for Rehabilitation, helped to mobilize over $1.1 billion in donor funding and investments to improve conditions in the poorest areas of the country. In Bolivia, an emergency fund brought new jobs and improvements in health and education, and similar efforts were under way in El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama. UNDP also supported structural adjustment programmes being implemented in the region by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, paying special attention to efforts to mitigate the adverse social consequences of those programmes, especially in Guyana and Jamaica. UNDP initiated a series of projects addressing public sector and social concerns in Guyana, while in Jamaica it supported negotiations between the Government and the World Bank, which led to the first loan to be used exclusively for the social sector. Similar initiatives were under way in Ecuador and Paraguay.

In his report on the implementation of selected country programmes [DP/1991/21], the Administrator stated that the democratic governments of the region had assigned high priority to the issue of human development, including political freedom and guaranteed human rights. With UNDP support, Paraguay had established a Centre for Human Rights and Colombia was co-ordinating activities with international organizations in preparing educational and promotion activities in human rights. In Haiti, UNDP's role was critical in helping to promote the widest possible participation in the 1990 elections, as well as in attracting resources from bilateral donors.

In the area of public sector management, UNDP undertook several initiatives, one being the Management Development Programme, which supported 19 Governments in building the capacity to address issues of state restructuring, decentralization and policy management. In the Eastern Caribbean, UNDP was closely involved with the process of economic co-operation and political unity. The first Management Development Programme mission in support of public sector management requirements of a regional political grouping was launched in co-operation with the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States. In the area of technology transfer, the fourth country programme for Cuba supported the creation and development of the national capacity to undertake applied research, while in Chile a concentrated effort to support the establishment of a technological capacity focused on the private sector. In Mexico, a project on technology transfer to the productive sector was aimed at strengthening the Centre for Technological Innovation at the National University of Mexico, enabling it to meet the technological demands of the productive sector. In Brazil, UNDP assisted the National Telecommunications Research and Development Centre in absorbing state-of-the-art telecommunications technology, developing and transferring it to the private sector to strengthen the domestic telecommunications industry. In Uruguay, a project for the development of basic services helped 80 Uruguayan scientists to resettle in their home country, prepared a data base of those willing to offer services through the Transfer of Knowledge Through Expatriate Nationals (TOKTEN) modality and created master's and doctoral degrees in science at the University of Montevideo.

UNDP resources for the region continued to decline, in particular for regional activities. That was likely to affect the continuation of activities in the fifth programming cycle and the development of new initiatives.

Global and inter regional programmes

The global programme supported research devoted mainly to agricultural and health problems, while the inter regional programme assisted such sectors as fisheries, water supply and sanitation, urban management, human resources and energy, stated the Administrator in his annual report covering 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1]. Both programmes received support from bilateral donors and international organizations, as well as from UNDP core resources.

Resources were provided to projects carrying out research on trypanosomiasis, improving the production of food staples in semi-arid regions, integrated pest management, safe water and sanitation and tropical diseases.

UNDP also joined with UNICEF, WHO and the Rockefeller Foundation to form a consultative group on the Children's Vaccine Initiative and, through the WHO/UNDP Alliance to Combat AIDS, supported AIDS prevention and care programmes.

Other sectors receiving UNDP assistance included debt management, environmental protection, the quality of primary education and urban management.

Programme planning and management

Preparations for the fifth programming cycle

Preparations began in 1990 for UNDP's fifth programming cycle (1992-1996). At its special session in February, the Governing Council had before it a note by the Administrator [DP/1990/8] that provided a number of specific simulations, including four resource scenario options. The scenarios projected annual growth rates of voluntary resources of 6, 8, 10, and 12 per cent, using the voluntary contributions base for 1991 of $980 million. Other assumptions underlying the four scenarios were: tentative fifth cycle allocations to Special Industrial Services and the sectoral support programme of $15 million and $25 million respectively; agency support costs of 13 per cent of programmable resources; a 5 per cent annual growth in core administrative and support costs; and the maintenance of the Operational Reserve at $240 million. The Administrator also outlined proposals on how to deal with other specific fifth cycle issues not reflected in the simulations, including issues related to net contributor countries and the level of the fifth cycle resources to be allocated to SPR. The Administrator's note served as background information for the Governing Council's substantive debate on resource allocation policies and methodologies for the fifth cycle.

By a 23 February decision [dec.90/4], the Governing Council reaffirmed the need for priority allocation of its scarce grant resources to programmes and projects in low-income countries, particularly LDCs. It requested the Administrator to prepare a synopsis of the views and proposals made during the debate on the issue, including comparable scenarios and detailed justifications for centrally managed resources, taking into consideration all the views expressed concerning the SPR and the question of net contributor status. He was asked to make recommendations and proposals thereon six weeks prior to the thirty-seventh (1990) session of the Council. The Council decided to convene informal consultations to further review issues pertaining to the fifth cycle, and requested the Administrator to include in the material for the Council meeting information on the availability and coverage of data on the factors that featured in the supplementary criteria, and factors such as GDP, GNP, output of manufacturing, availability of depletable and non-renewable resources, the latest data on economies in transition, external debt related to GNP, the relationship between debt-service payment and exports, net transfer of resources and any other appropriate indicators.

In response to that request, the Administrator submitted an April report [DP/1990/43] on resources available for the fifth programming cycle, the distribution of those resources, SPR and resources for other programmes. It also provided information on net contributor countries, administrative and programme support costs, the operational reserve, agency support costs and the issue of using special drawing rights (SDRs) and baskets of currencies as units of account. The report also showed the possible use of resources for the fifth cycle under six assumptions of growth in voluntary contributions with a base of $1 billion in voluntary contributions for 1991. An addendum to the report [DP/1990/43/Add.1] provided scenarios for distributing resources to IPFs based on assumed 4, 6, 8, and 10 per cent rates of annual growth in contributions. In addition, a resource level based on 12 per cent annual growth of contributions was used to calculate country IPFs.

By a 23 June decision [dec. 90/34], the Governing Council maintained the five-year planning period for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) and scheduled a mid-term review in 1994 of the programme planning aspects for the cycle, and the resources available and financial management of the cycle. For the purposes of forward planning, an 8 per cent annual rate of growth of total voluntary contributions on the basis of $1 billion in 1991 was assumed. The Council reaffirmed the exclusive responsibility of the recipient Government for formulating its national development plan, priorities or objectives and emphasized that the integration of UN system operational activities with national plans and objectives would enhance the impact and relevance of those activities. It also reaffirmed that national plans and priorities constituted the only viable frame of reference for the national programming of UN system operational activities for development. It stressed that in order to attain self-reliance in the developing countries through national capacity-building and strengthening, UNDP should promote human development.

The Council decided that UNDP should focus on building and strengthening national capacity in the following areas: poverty eradication and grass-roots participation in development; environmental problems and natural resource management; management development; technical co-operation among developing countries; transfer and adaptation of technology 'for development'; and women in development. Priority should be given to programmes in those areas, including inter country IPFs, and SPR should be used to strengthen and supplement activities funded through country IPFs. The Administrator should report, beginning in 1993, on those arrangements.

The Council further decided that UNDP's allocation of resources, including the distribution of country and inter country IPFs for the fifth cycle, should be carried out after provision had been made for the Operational Reserve, the core budget, programme support activities, Special Industrial Services, sectoral support costs and agency support costs. The field programme would be divided as follows: 77 per cent for country IPFs; 16 per cent to inter country IPFs (12 per cent regional IPFs, 1.5 per cent inter regional IPFs, 2.5 per cent global IPFs); and 7 per cent to SPR, which would cover thematic activities. Provisions under the core budget would amount to $1,158 million, representing anticipated 1991 expenditure with a 6 per cent annual inflation in each year of the cycle. Programme support activities would amount to $98 million, representing expected expenditure levels in 1991, with a compounded 6 per cent annual inflation in each cycle year. Provisions under the successor arrangements for support costs would be: 10 per cent of country IPFs to finance support services by recipient Governments; 2 per cent of programmable resources to support technical services; 14 per cent of inter-country IPFs and SPR to meet the cost of technical and indicative support for those programmes; and the addition of a 13 per cent provision of the estimated cost of fourth programming cycle projects to be implemented during the fifth cycle.

The allocation for Special Industrial Services was set at $15 million; sectoral support at $30 million; and the Operational Reserve at 20 per cent of contributions or expenditures for each year, whichever was higher, to be reviewed annually and during mid-term reviews. The methodology for the allocation of country IPFs would allow countries with per capita GNP of $750 or less to receive 87 per cent of IPF resources and those above $750, 13 per cent. The LDCs as a whole would receive 55 per cent of country IPFs.

Of the total amount of resources allocated to country IPFs, $100 million would remain unallocated to meet the needs of future programme participants. In calculating individual country IPFs, the basic criteria of per capita GNP and population as well as the weight of the corresponding coefficients applied in the fourth cycle were retained, with a ratio of 75 to 25 between basic and supplementary criteria. Based on a points system, the following supplementary criteria were established: whether the country was an LDC; was a land-locked developing country; was an island developing country; was an economically disadvantaged country in southern Africa; suffered from acute ecological or geographical disabilities or was disaster-prone; was classified by the World Bank as a severely or moderately indebted low- or medium-income country; had continuing deterioration in its terms of trade; had a large per capita GNP decline; or had an economy in transition or required World Bank structural adjustment lending during the fourth cycle (1987-1991). The World Bank data on population and per capita GNP for 1989 would be used to calculate country IPFs and, where that was not possible, the best estimates available would be used. Regional IPFs would be established in proportion to total country IPFs for each region. A maximum of 15 supplementary points would be accorded to any one country and supplementary criteria limited to 50 per cent, except for LDCs where 100 per cent would apply.

IPFs for national liberation movements would be established at $12 million, with ANC and PAC as beneficiaries. Multi-island co-operation IPFs were set at $7 million, divided equally between the Caribbean and Pacific Islands. The fourth cycle IPF for the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic was set at $1,656,000 and that country was included among those entitled to an IPF for the fifth cycle. The fifth cycle IPF for the Republic of Yemen was to be no less than the combined figures of Democratic Yemen and Yemen in the fourth cycle.

Countries with a 1989 GNP per capita of below $750 and small island countries with a population of 2 million or less and a 1989 per capita GNP between $750 and $1,500 would have a supplement to their IPFs for the fifth cycle so that they would receive no less than 100 per cent of their IPFs for the fourth cycle. Countries with a 1989

GNP of between $750 and $1,500 and small island countries with a population of 2 million or less and a 1989 GNP between $1,500 and $3,000 would receive no less than 90 per cent of their fourth cycle IPFs, and countries with a GNP between $1,500 and $3,000 and small island countries of 2 million or less with a GNP between $3,000 and $4,200 would receive 80 per cent.

The Council decided to review the net contributor issue in 1991 and invited the Administrator, in anticipation of the sixth programming cycle, to submit proposals in 1991 for revising the weight coefficients for per capita GNP and population, taking into account increased weight for LDCs and lower-income countries in the per capita GNP weighting and reduced weight for higher populations. It also decided to review at its special session in February 1991 the specific amounts for SPR programmes and authorized the Administrator to increase IPFs on a proportional basis should resources permit and to decrease IPFs and SPR on a proportional basis should fifth cycle resource growth prove insufficient to meet established IPFs. The Administrator was called on to consult with UN agencies on introducing system-wide SDRs as the unit of account and to report to the Council in 1991 on the potential cost. Annexed to the decision were the fifth cycle allocations for SPR.

Promotion of national capacity

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 319], the Administrator submitted an April report [DP/1990/22], in which he addressed the problems faced by recipient Governments in attracting and retaining qualified staff in their administrations. He analysed the difficulties faced by poorer countries in providing adequate civil service salaries, noting that developing countries, especially those in Africa and Latin America and the Caribbean, were facing serious crises in trying to maintain adequate salaries for their civil servants, resulting in the exodus of qualified nationals to the private sector or through emigration. Donors were increasingly paying incentives or salary supplements to government employees on an ad hoc basis as part of specific arrangements for project implementation. There was increasing pressure on UNDP to do the same and, although its policy in that regard was restrictive, exceptions were being made. The report concluded that the practice was detrimental to the Governments' own development efforts in the longer run, as it included weakened sustainability and the impossibility of building or strengthening institutions.

Three options were presented. The first was to maintain and strengthen existing UNDP policy of special compensation to government project personnel for periods not exceeding six months except if the Government agreed explicitly to take over the payment at a definite date. The second option would allow UNDP, in exceptional cases, to provide payments for the duration of the project rather than for six months. Those more liberal rules would apply only to poorer countries and the incentives would preferably be "in-kind" benefits such as housing, training, travel and transport. The third option was a completely different approach to be applied concomitantly with either of the first two alternatives and sought to centralize any external payments to government staff through a government programme as part of administrative reform. That alternative was based on the involvement of other donors in its financing. It tackled the problem at a country or programme level rather than at the project level and would apply only to the poorer countries and only in conjunction with longer-term measures to reform public administration, especially civil service reform, thus providing more immediate, stop-gap measures intended to strengthen the reform process. Payment of local costs, including salary supplements to local employees, would be removed from the project level. Funds provided by various donors would be pooled and the conditions for providing them would be negotiated centrally with the Government. The Administrator considered that the third alternative deserved attention and support.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/161, the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report and of views expressed during the debate on the subject. It decided that the existing UNDP policy of providing limited supplementary payments to project counterpart staff on an exceptional basis should be maintained. The Administrator was requested to support civil service reform programmes addressing, inter alia, the question of compensation for skilled personnel and, in exceptional circumstances, to assist countries undertaking reforms to establish centrally co-ordinated short-term incentive programmes, provided that such programmes were linked to plans and time-tables for implementing comprehensive government pay and benefit systems and were formulated and agreed upon within the framework of round-table conferences and Consultative Groups, or through equivalent country-level aid co-ordinating mechanisms.

Management Development Programme

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 320], the Administrator submitted an April 1990 report [DP/1990/23] on the implementation of MDP, covering the period from its establishment in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 349] up to 1 February 1990. During that time, MDP, which aimed to strengthen management capacity and improve efficiency and effectiveness in the public sector, had received requests for support from more than 60 Governments. Reconnaissance and/or programming missions had been undertaken to 44 countries. Three other countries received planning missions under the Special Action Programme for Administration and Management and 16 country projects had been approved with a value of $16.3 million. Including contributions from IPFs, the total value of the projects was $23.1 million.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/17], the Governing Council urged UNDP to continue to strengthen the management capacity of developing countries through enhanced co-ordination of the network of consultants and to publish a methodological guide for the use of consultants. It requested the Administrator to evaluate the programme to see whether optimum use was being made of the capacity of UN agencies and whether a more focused approach would be appropriate. He was asked to submit the findings together with his report on the Programme to the Council's 1991 session.

In a later report [DP/1991/12], the Administrator stated that, by the end of 1990, more than 90 Governments had requested MDP support and programming had begun in 77 countries. Activities fully or partially financed from MDP funds had been approved in 32 countries. MDP funds committed by 31 December 1990 for programme development and project activities totalled $29.6 million, with Latin America and Asia having the highest commitments against foreseen resources. The Programme also helped Governments to attract resources from other donors for their public sector management improvement programmes. Joint and parallel financing with MDP amounted to $14.8 million at the end of the year.

MDP was evaluated in November and December 1990. Among the recommendations submitted were that the Programme should continue in the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) and the guidelines established for it should be retained. The Programme's emphasis would be on countries whose leadership was committed to major reforms calling for substantial institutional capacity-building and it would specialize in themes such as the transition from centralized planning; decentralization; civil service reform, including issues of incentives; and government institutions for management improvement. That would give the programme greater focus and enhance its potential usefulness to developing countries.

Management services

In response to a 1988 Governing Council request [YUN 1988, p. 352], the Administrator submitted an April 1990 report [DP/1990/67], in which he reviewed experience gained in the provision of management services undertaken by UNDP. The report examined the status, growth and salient features of management services operations and presented guidelines for the provision of those services. The Administrator stated that use of management services continued to grow in 1988 and 1989. As at February 1990, 72 agreements were in effect funded by the development banks (excluding 57 IFAD-funded projects) and bilateral donors with a total budget of $396 million. In his view, management services continued to be a cost-effective mechanism for delivery of development assistance and supported co-ordination at the field level.

The Administrator recommended that he continue to provide management and other services for programmes and projects funded from the resources of recipient countries and external sources. Those services should be carried out by the UNDP Office for Project Services (OPS). UNDP should continue to provide the services on the basis of the guidelines recommended, reporting to the Council biennially on the status of management services agreements, with an analysis of trends over the longer term.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/46], the Governing Council approved guidelines for the provision of management services whereby projects and programmes were to be in conformity with the development priorities of recipient countries and with UNDP's mandate, with due attention paid to impact and sustainability, and their costs should be borne by funding sources. In considering bilateral donor eligibility, the Administrator should be guided by previous Council decisions covering concerns such as a decline in the growth of voluntary contributions as well as the relationship between such contributions and management services and should ensure that bilaterally sponsored management services complemented the core programme. The Administrator was authorized to continue to extend management and other support services to recipient countries for programmes funded from domestic resources. He was asked to include, in his annual report on management services contained in his annual review of the financial situation, information on voluntary contributions and contributions to the management services activities of such donors. The Council urged the Administrator to present, in his biennial report on the status of management services, a substantive overview of evaluations undertaken with regard to the developmental impact of bilaterally funded programmes and projects.

National execution

The Administrator, in response to a 1988 Governing Council decision [YUN 1988, p. 345], submitted a report on government execution of projects [DP/1990/33]. The report set out the policy framework within which national execution should take place, citing the legislative mandates contained in General Assembly resolution 44/211 [YUN 1989, p. 3021 and in a 1989 Council decision on UNDP's role in the 1990s [YUN 1989, p. 311], and made a number of recommendations regarding the future of national execution in relation to UNDP- assisted activities. The directions to be pursued included the pursuit of national execution as the "ultimate modality" for all UNDP-SUP-ported activities; strong reassertion of the Administrator's full accountability for funds entrusted to him; reaffirmation of the partnership principle, bearing in mind the need to redefine the participation of other parts of the UN system; the need to shift from a project to a programme approach; and increased decentralization and delegation of authority.

Defining national execution, the Administrator stated that Governments were responsible for the conduct of all UN-financed project and programme activities, including those implemented by UN specialized agencies or other organizations and institutions on their behalf, and were accountable to the Administrator for implementation and financial management. He underlined the distinction between "execution" and "implementation"; whereas the responsibility for execution was that of the Government, implementation utilized a broad range of national, international and multilateral institutions to achieve development goals. The Administrator proposed that all UNDP technical co-operation activities financed from country IPFs initiated on or after 1992 should be nationally executed.

In conclusion, the Administrator stated that the concept of national execution was a reaffirmation of the fundamental principle that development was a national process. It was not one among many modalities but provided the very framework in which UNDP- assisted activities were to be understood.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/21 1, the Governing Council took note of the proposed definition of national execution. It agreed that national execution entailed overall responsibility for the management of UNDP- assisted programmes and projects, and recognized that it did not necessarily imply having capacity for implementing all aspects of the project cycle. The Council also recognized the responsibility of the recipient Governments to determine the modality and manner of execution and implementation and that the fifth cycle commencement and introduction of successor arrangements for agency support costs-1 January 1992- provided an opportunity to pursue and accelerate the process of national execution. The Council requested the Administrator to submit in 1991 proposals for assisting recipient Governments to build up their programme management and administrative capacities, taking into account the need for: more programme-oriented mechanisms for the provision of technical co-operation; further decentralization of the technical and operational capacities of the UN system to the country level; closer co-operation among UN system field staff in supporting implementation of UNDP- assisted programmes and projects; simplification, harmonization and adaptation of rules, procedures and formats governing all aspects of the programming processes and project cycles; and maximum use of national institutions and firms, if available, within the recipient countries.

The Administrator was asked to take measures to maintain his accountability and continue to apply adequate accounting, reporting and auditing procedures to nationally executed projects. He was also asked to bring to the attention of Governments the importance of continued participation of the specialized agencies in programming, monitoring, evaluation and implementation of UNDP- supported projects and programmes. The Council approved, as a transitional measure for projects approved before 1 January 1992, the continued use of add-on funds and agreed to their being advanced to Governments against the anticipated delivery of nationally executed projects. The Administrator was asked to report in 1992 on progress made in implementing the decision.

Micro-capital grants

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 312], the Administrator submitted an April 1990 report [DP/1990/21] on his proposal for the establishment of a special facility for micro-capital grants to poor groups, or Micro-fund. The facility would enable UNDP to provide small capital grants and loans at the micro-level (below $200,000) to fill an important resource gap as a complement to its efforts to mobilize underutilized human potential-the poor. The report outlined the objectives, operating criteria and administrative and other arrangements of the proposed fund.

In a 22 June decision [dec. 90/15], the Governing Council endorsed the concept of micro-capital support in association with technical assistance programmes and authorized the Administrator to implement such support, as part of mainstream technical co-operation, by using existing mechanisms for supporting local grass-roots initiatives, such as UNV and UNCDF, provided that UNDP field offices were not involved in the direct management of those activities. He was authorized to seek co-financing at the local level and the involvement of the community and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The Council requested the Administrator to report on progress in 1992.

Evaluation

In a March report [DP/1990/34 & Corr.1] on arrangements for the evaluation of UNDP, the Administrator summarized the results of the programme analysis undertaken by the Central Evaluation Office in the areas of environment and development, institutional development, and technical assistance modalities and steps taken to assist Governments to strengthen their capacity to monitor and evaluate their own development. He also reported on action taken by him to improve the programme through improved assessment of its quality and feedback of the results into programme and project identification and management. The Administrator provided information on his efforts to rationalize the management of resources devoted to, and the use made of, evaluation work at all levels in the system and to present proposals with regard to the organization of evaluation activities. He presented the proposed work plan for the UNDP Central Evaluation Office for 1990-1991.

In a 22 June decision [dec. 90/52], the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report on evaluation.

Procurement

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 319], the Administrator submitted a March 1990 report [DP/1990/28] on actions taken by the UN system to increase procurement from developing and underutilized major donor countries; to grant preferential treatment to suppliers from developing countries; to improve dissemination of advance information on business opportunities; and to provide improved statistical information on procurement and further actions planned. Among matters reported was the holding, for the first time, of the annual meeting of the Inter-Agency Procurement Working Group in a developing country (Tunisia, 7-11

May), reflecting the eagerness of the UN system to address the geographical imbalance in procurement by actively pursuing sources in the developing countries themselves. The Administrator stated that there was no doubt that all agencies had been sensitized to the need for increased procurement from developing countries, but significant changes in overall procurement might take time to emerge. It was a continuing process that called for an active role by the recipient countries themselves, along with UN efforts.

The Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office (IAPSO) had started to publish a new bulletin, Procurement Update, which was distributed monthly to all permanent missions of Member States, focal points in developing countries and the Technological Information Pilot System. It covered, among other things, project approvals, contract awards and procurement notices and had generated great interest. With regard to procurement from major donor countries, the Administrator stated that Canada, Denmark, Finland, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden had been recognized as underutilized in the procurement of goods and services for UNDP-funded projects. With its move from Geneva to Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1989, IAPSO could play an increased role in finding supply sources on behalf of agencies in underutilized major donor countries, he said. The IAPSO catalogue on potential suppliers in the Netherlands was published in December 1989 and efforts were made to update catalogues for Canada, Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden. Seminars to create an awareness among the business community about the potential and nature of items procured by the UN system were organized by IAPSO in Denmark, Finland and Sweden.

The Administrator reported that several agencies had questioned the usefulness of the 15 per cent price preference to goods supplied from developing countries, since there was no real incentive for the recipient country to apply the measure. It was understandable that Governments might be reluctant to reduce their IPF allocations in that manner in situations of well-recognized resource constraints. However, the Administrator felt that there was mutual advantage to all recipient countries under the price preference arrangement and it should therefore be allowed to continue.

By a 20 June decision [dec. 90/27], the Governing Council urged all UN agencies to give preference to suppliers from developing countries and to continue to increase procurement from developing and underutilized major donor countries. UN agencies were urged to ensure that advance information on business opportunities was disseminated systematically. The Council requested agencies to provide regularly to IAPSO statistical information on procurement, including international experts, consultants, national experts, fellowships and volunteers for the preparation of a comprehensive annual statistical report. It urged that an in-depth analysis be made of the working of the price preferential system for developing countries and invited the Administrator to make proposals and recommendations to the Council in 1991 for making the system more effective.

In 1989, the Secretary-General had submitted to the General Assembly a Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report [A/44/646] on practices and procedures aimed at a more equitable geographical distribution of sources of procurement for technical co-operation projects, in which it was recommended that specific procurement targets be established for developing countries and underutilized major donor countries.

In October 1990, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the comments of ACC [A/45/648] on that report. ACC as a whole did not agree with the recommendation to establish specific procurement targets for both developing and underutilized major donor countries, since it would be difficult to set targets by agency, region or country. It would instead be preferable to set targets for the system as a whole. Better information on and greater availability of quality products that could compete on the open market might in due course enable the system to adopt country targets. However, ACC agreed with the JIU recommendation on the need for a joint strategy of UNDP and the executing agencies to alter attitudes of Governments and international project personnel.

NGO collaboration and grass-roots activities

In a January report [DP/1990/25], the Administrator described efforts to promote UNDP co-operation with NGOs and grass-roots organizations. The principal activities were: the Partners in Development Programme, which enabled UNDP field offices in 62 countries to provide direct support for NGO activities; the Regional Project to Strengthen Collaboration between NGOs, Governments and UNDP in Africa; programme support to the Asian and Pacific Development Centre; support for the establishment of national computerized data bases on NGOs by more than 40 field offices; and national Government/NGO consultations in Mauritania, the Philippines and Tunisia. New activities to strengthen NGOs included the Africa 2000 Network, a regional project to promote ecologically sustainable development; and the UNV Domestic Development Service, which extended its operations to 26 countries. Efforts were also made to promote and support the informal sector, increase participatory elements in IPF projects, and make greater use of NGO services in carrying out UNDP-sponsored projects.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/18], the Governing Council noted the implementation of the Africa 2000 Network and the Partners in Development Programme and the mechanisms for supporting micro-level initiatives by indigenous NGOs and through popular participation in local community activities. The Administrator was requested to expand NGO and grass-roots activities within UNDP programmes to other developing regions. Recognizing the particular contribution that such organizations could make, complementary to government efforts, in building national capacity in the areas of poverty alleviation, popular participation, sustainable human development and environment, the Council requested the Administrator to draw on their experiences to implement national strategies and to report to the Council in 1991.

Short-term advisory services

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 320], the Administrator submitted a March 1990 report [DP/1990/58 & Corr.1] on the evaluation of the focal point for short-term advisory services (STAS) conducted in 1988. The evaluation team had concluded that the STAS focal point had fulfilled its objectives. The programme impact on beneficiary enterprises and organizations had been positive and support for the programme by Governments and the private sector was enthusiastic. The STAS delivery system was found to be adequate to handle its level of assignments but it would need to be modified and strengthened to accommodate the anticipated increase in activity. The evaluators identified several problem areas and suggested actions to address them, in particular: activating demand; reducing response time; bringing about a sustained awareness of STAS among potential beneficiaries; and reducing the high rate of cancellation or withdrawal of requests. The evaluators recommended expanded promotional efforts, including missions by industry specialists, the use of audio-visual materials and the holding of seminars; the creation of a computerized data base to accelerate the matching of needs with available expertise; greater emphasis on screening requests at the field level and increased use of volunteer specialists; closer working relationships with the specialized agencies and improved networking with similar UN technical assistance programmes; the preparation of a detailed five-year plan and strategy for STAS; and the conversion of STAS to an operational programme of UNDP. The Administrator, in supporting the final recommendation, proposed that STAS become an operational part of UNDP from 1 July 1990, and that funding be provided at the current levels. To meet the expected increase in demand, UNDP proposed to cover the additional costs from programme resources.

In his report on revised estimates for the 1990-1991 biennium [DP/1990/65], the Administrator proposed STAS funding from programme resources for the period 1 July 1990 to 31 December 1991 in the amount of $350,000.

In its report on the revised estimates for 1990-1991 [DP/1990/87], SCABQ stated that it was premature to act on the Administrator's recommendation to make STAS an operational part of UNDP, effective 1 July 1990.

The Governing Council took note [dec. 90/52] of the Administrator's note on the focal point for STAS and approved [dec. 90/45] his proposed revised estimates for the biennium.

Financing

In his review of the financial situation in 1990 [DP/1991/47 & Add.1], the Administrator stated that UNDP income in 1990 amounted to $1,361.6 million with total expenditures of $1,388.5 million, resulting in a net deficit of $26.9 million. As a result of the deficit of main programme income over expenditure, there was a decrease in UNDP general resources from $523.2 million at 31 December 1989 to $472.2 million at 31 December 1990 (or $448.2 million if accumulated non-convertible currencies were excluded). Total income was $117.1 million more than projected, resulting primarily from increases in income for cost-sharing activities and miscellaneous income. The impact of exchange rates on the value of contributions was significant. The weakness of the value of the dollar resulted in the value of 1990 pledges increasing by 10.2 per cent, from $980.8 million at 31 December 1989 to $1,049.3 million at 31 December 1990.

Expenditures in 1990 ($1,338.5 million) were $6.6 million more than forecast and $182.3 million more than in 1989. IPF expenditures exceeded projections by 4 per cent and at $849.1 million, including IPF add-on expenditure, were 16.5 per cent higher than in 1989. Expenditures under SMF/LDCs amounted to $17.3 million, 44 per cent more than in 1989. Cost-sharing expenditures increased substantially, by $22.5 million over 1989 to $130.4 million.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/44], the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's annual review of the financial situation in 1989

[YUN 1989, p. 321]. It requested the Administrator to continue to review the expenditure targets, taking into account actual contributions received, and to establish expenditure projections to ensure a smooth transition to the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996). The Council recognized that the timing of the implementation of a common system might require funding before it had had an opportunity to review the budgetary implications. Accordingly, it requested the Administrator to report to its 1991 special session on the status of the systems review project and the feasibility of developing a common system with the United Nations.

The Council authorized the Administrator to overcommit the Reserve for Field Accommodation by $10 million, including existing commitments, while ensuring that funds disbursed did not exceed $25 million at any time; to increase the funds available for the rehabilitation of existing houses to $2.2 million; and to utilize, as a last resort, the Reserve for Field Accommodation to purchase office accommodation when such accommodation would be shared with other UN organizations in the field.

Revised budget estimates for UNDP core activities for the biennium 1990-1991 [DP/1990/65 & Corr. 2] amounted to $434.7 million gross and $404.7 million net, an increase of $8.2 million (1.9 per cent) over the original appropriation approved in 1989. That increase incorporated $6.2 million (1.4 per cent) from adjustments and $5.3 million (1.2 per cent) from inflation, partly offset by a reduction of $3.3 million (0.7 per cent) from currency release.

For UNDP as a whole, revised budget estimates for core and non-core activities totalled $542.5 million gross and $491.6 million net. With regard to non-core activities, the 6.5 per cent increase in estimates in gross terms ($6.6 million) over original appropriations was attributable to a $3.2 million (3.1 per cent) increase from volume, $1.9 million (1.9 per cent) from cost adjustments, $0.8 million (0.8 per cent) from inflation, and $0.7 million (0.7 per cent) from currency adjustments.

ACABQ submitted a May report [DP/1990/87] containing its comments on the revised estimates.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 1990/45], the Governing Council approved revised appropriations of $543.2 million gross to finance the 1990-1991 budget and resolved that income estimates of $50.9 million be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in net appropriations of $492.3 million.

In preparing the 1992-1993 budget estimates, the Administrator was requested to: take account of concerns regarding the high General Service to Professional ratio at headquarters, including UNV; address the question of savings through merging with UNDP the units of its trust funds and/or OPS, including technical, personnel, finance and evaluation services, and report to the Council in 1992; and address policies regarding the apportionment of administrative costs to the technical support budgets of the non-core units and the related budgetary estimates.

The Council approved the Administrator's proposals for revised appropriations of $1.15 million in 1990 and $1.25 million in 1991 to increase the staffing level of the National Execution Units of the Audit Division and of the Accounts Section. It also approved $350,000 for short-term advisory resources under project support activities.

Audit reports

The Governing Council had before it the financial report and the audited financial statements of UNDP for the year ended 31 December 1988 [A/44/5/Add.1]; a note by the UNDP Administrator [DP/1990/76] containing his comments on the report; the audited accounts and audit reports of the executing agencies on their 1988 accounts relating to funds allocated to them by UNDP [DP/1990/69/Add.1]; a summary of the observations of the external auditors on those accounts [DP/1990/69]; and the views of ACABQ [A/44/543].

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/481, the Governing Council noted with concern that the audit opinion on UNDP's 1988 accounts was qualified on several counts but recognized that it might remain qualified so long as audit confirmation of programme expenditure incurred by executing agencies had not been received by the Board of Auditors at the time the opinion on UNDP accounts was issued. The Administrator was requested to urge organizations executing projects or programmes to submit audit confirmation of programme expenditure on a timely basis. Concerned at the lack of adequate audit coverage of funds disbursed by Governments acting as executing agencies for UNDP, the Council urged the Administrator to continue efforts to rectify the situation.

The Council requested the Administrator to continue to review with executing agencies the procedures for recording unliquidated obligations and asked the Board of Auditors to provide information to enable the Council's Budgetary and Finance Committee to evaluate the materiality or significance of the underlying issues and to submit, through ACABQ, in their biennial report to the General Assembly and the Council, the findings and recommendations on the first year of each biennium. The Board of Auditors was invited to issue a special report for the first year of each biennium through ACABQ, if in its opinion there were matters that needed to be brought to the attention of the Council and the Assembly.

Financial regulations

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 326], the Administrator submitted proposed amendments [DP/1990/63] to UNDP Financial Regulations by which the audited financial statements would be submitted to the General Assembly and the Council biennially instead of annually. Also before the Council was a report of the Administrator [DP/1990/70] dealing with a proposed financial regulation defining readily usable currencies and with other matters on which consensus was not achieved at the Council's 1988 session [YUN 1988, p. 353].

ACABQ, in its comments [DP/1990/87] on the biennialization of the submission of audited financial statements, stated that while it had no objection to the proposal, it saw no reason, in intervening years, to report on substantive matters.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/49], the Governing Council approved amendments to the Financial Regulations as proposed by the Administrator by which he would submit audited financial statements biennially, beginning with the 1990-1991 biennium. Consideration of the other changes in the financial regulations would be considered by the Budgetary and Financial Committee at the Council's 1992 session.

In another decision of the same date [dec. 90/48], the Council requested the Administrator to determine whether UNDP's Financial Regulations needed to be amended and to report on the subject in 1991.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/235 of 21 December, requested UNDP to intensify efforts to correct or improve the conditions that gave rise to the qualification of audit opinions of the Board of Auditors and to issue and implement comprehensive and specific guidelines to delineate programme expenditure, programme support and administrative expenditures. It approved the changes in the financial procedures of UNDP as recommended by the Governing Council.

UNDP - administered funds

Having considered reports of the Administrator on trust funds established by him in 1989 and a summary of information on funds established since 1981 [YUN 1989, p. 324], the Governing Council adopted a 22 June decision [dec. 90/471, in which it urged the Administrator and the donor Governments concerned to ensure that funds were received in advance of trust fund activities in accordance with the provisions of the UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules.

Agency support costs

The Governing Council, at its February special session, had before it the report of the Expert Group on the study of successor arrangements for agency support costs and related issues [DP/1990/9 & Corr. 1]. The Expert Group was created in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 325], in response to General Assembly resolution 42/196 [YUN 1987, p. 401], inviting the Governing Council, given that existing arrangements for project support costs expired in 1991, to begin consideration of successor arrangements. The Expert Group examined the changing patterns of development and their implications for the future; technical co-operation needs and the role and capacity of the UN system in meeting them; arrangements for programming technical co-operation and alternative execution modalities; the future tripartite relationship, including the roles of Governments, UNDP and the agencies; accountability in the tripartite system; and options for future support-cost arrangements.

The report stated that the existing support-cost arrangement, dating back to the beginning of technical co-operation activities of the UN system, generally envisaged support cost at 13 per cent of total project value and was a contribution from UNDP to the agencies as only a partial reimbursement, essentially covering administrative support costs for their role in the delivery of technical co-operation inputs. Under the flexibility provision, some agencies were provided with additional reimbursement up to a maximum of 22 per cent. Later, some costs for technical backstopping of projects were allowed to be charged to projects and some compensation was provided to agencies for purchasing power loss incurred as a result of the depreciation of the United States dollar. The major elements of support costs were defined system-wide as: programme planning and identification of projects; project preparation and appraisal; project implementation, including administration and technical backstopping; and evaluation.

The Group, while acknowledging some of the advantages of the existing arrangement, including the ease of administration, the predictability of income for agencies and limited administrative work-load for UNDP, did not recommend continuation of the formula since it did not provide for reimbursement to agencies for involvement in phases of the project cycle other than project execution, and was not conducive to promoting national execution. In addition, agencies complained that they were not being compensated adequately and, although the system provided for the add-on mechanisms, it did not prove useful in strengthening government capability, nor was it sufficient to make an impact on IPF allocations. A major deficiency of the formula was its automaticity. Since it was a fixed ratio of project cost, the level of agency income depended on the level of delivery and prevented competition with organizations outside the UN system.

The Expert Group recommended three options for support-cost arrangements: sharing of support-cost in appropriate proportions by funding sources (UNDP or trust funds), agency regular budgets and project budgets; payment for support services at a standard cost, separated from programme implementation; and complete control of country programme by Governments.

In a report containing his suggestions for further action [DP/1990/11], the Administrator reiterated his proposal that the Council establish an intergovernmental working group to conduct a comprehensive review of the recommendations of the Expert Group, including their political and practical acceptability.

By a 12 February decision [dec. 90/51, the Governing Council requested its President to convene open-ended consultations to further analyse the Expert Group's report and to make recommendations to the Council at its June session. The Council's Bureau would enlist the services of 10 advisers from member countries to assist in the work of the consultations, which, the Council stressed, should be focused on the recommendations of the Expert Group, particularly the options recommended by it. The executive heads of all executing agencies were invited to submit written comments for the informal consultations.

In response to that decision, the President of the Governing Council, on 2 and 15 to 16 May, held open-ended consultations with UNDP members in New York on the recommendations contained in the report of the Expert Group.

Having considered the report of its President on those consultations [DP/1990/71 & Add.1], the Governing Council, by a 22 June decision [dec. 90/261, stated that the successor arrangement for UNDP should: continue to reflect the principles of tripartite partnership irrespective of execution modality; promote coherence and coordination in operational activities; facilitate the further assumption by Governments of the management of UN-financed programmes and remove impediments to and provide incentives for national execution; reinforce the accountability of the Administrator and of agencies providing support services; strengthen technical support capacities, while keeping to a minimum resources deployed for administrative and operational support; ensure cost-efficiency, enhanced quality, cost-transparency and effectiveness through greater openness and competitiveness in accessing and providing services; and continue the principle of cost-sharing between UNDP and agencies.

In the new arrangements, three main elements of programme and project support would be distinguished: technical support at the programme level, relating to non-project services; technical support at the project level; and administrative and operational support for projects.

The Governing Council decided that support cost arrangements for UNFPA should be tailored to its specific programme requirements and requested the Executive Director to make proposals in that regard for consideration by the Council in 1991. The new support-cost arrangement should be available to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCO). For the smaller technical agencies and those where UNDP-financed co-operation work was slight, it was recommended that the current 13 per cent formula would continue to apply. The Council decided not to make a general recommendation concerning the application of UNDP support cost reimbursement arrangements to other technical co-operation activities, such as agency trust funds. However, the Administrator was asked to submit proposals to the Council in 1991 on the application of the successor arrangements to services provided by OPS to core UNDP programmes. He was also asked to ascertain with each agency its capacity and readiness to provide the requisite services and to report to the Council on needs for the support of capacity that might emerge and make recommendations before the expiry of the existing arrangements.

The Council established, as of 1 January 1992, a facility to be known as Technical Services Support, to be managed by the Administrator, for support to technical services at the programme level, which would be used for supplementary financing of identified programme-level services from selected agencies of the UN system; 2 per cent of programmable resources would be set aside for such purposes in the fifth cycle. The Administrator was requested to submit proposals for the use of those resources in the fifth cycle for two-year periods based on three-year forecasts, taking into account needs emerging from country programmes; regional and subregional requirements; the capacity and relevance of agencies in meeting those needs; and the desire of the Council to strengthen programme support at the country level. He was also requested to make proposals in 1991 on the most appropriate way of financing technical support at the project level. As a working hypothesis, the Governing Council decided to appropriate 2 per cent of programmable resources to finance services deemed to be best financed centrally. The Governing Council decided that, starting 1 January 1992, the financing for administrative and operational support of projects should be drawn from a sub-line within country IPFs to be created by transferring resources previously housed in the support cost line. Those resources might be used to finance support services from external agents, and resources saved by not having to compensate external agents would be available for use within the country programme. The Council affirmed the responsibility of the Administrator to approve execution and implementation arrangements for all UNDP-assisted projects and requested him to report in 1991 on measures to that effect and on the possible role of the arrangements for technical support at the project level. As a working hypothesis, the Council decided to appropriate 10 per cent of country IPFs for that purpose.

The Administrator was asked to present proposals in 1991 for the charging of administrative and operational support costs on regional, inter-regional and global projects and SPR. He was requested to update estimates of the actual costs involved and propose standard differential rates, including possible lump-sum payments for clusters of services related to administrative and operational support. In that regard, he should commission an independent survey of the cost of particular services of a cross-section of executing agencies to help establish their relative cost. The Council considered that the rate of compensation for administrative and operational support paid to agencies to which the new elements of the successor arrangements applied should not, on average, exceed 10 per cent of their project value. The Administrator was asked to make proposals in 1991 on the operation of a system of flexibility, taking account of inflation since 1982, the undesirable effect of sudden steps in computing rates and the budgetary capacities of the agencies involved. He was also asked to make proposals, without net cost over time, to provide for mechanisms to afford a reasonable degree of protection from exchange rate movements, and for charging support costs on projects financed by UNDP trust funds or other funds. The Council recognized that the support cost arrangement should not be applied to NGOs and organizations outside the UN system. Also recognizing the need for transitional arrangements, the Council requested the Administrator to make proposals in that regard and to prepare a report on the feasibility benefits and costs of introducing a generally acceptable and uniform cost measurement system. It was decided that, as far as possible, the new arrangements should have a 10-year validity, but a review would take place at the time of the sixth cycle. The Administrator was asked to submit in 1991 a proposal for independent monitoring and evaluation of the new arrangements and to apprise Council members of progress made in implementing the successor arrangements.

ACC consideration. The question of successor support cost arrangements was discussed by ACC at both of its regular sessions in 1990. At its first regular session (Vienna, 2-4 May), ACC adopted a statement [ACC/1990/DEC/1-14 (dec. 1990/4)] indicating that the specialized agencies had serious reservations about the proposals being considered and stating that more time and analysis were needed before decisions were taken.

At its second regular session (New York, 22-23 October), ACC adopted a decision [ACC/1990/DEC/15-22 (dec. 1990/17)] in which it recognized that implementation of the UNDP Governing Council decision on successor arrangements would require full consultation within the UN system, taking into account the tripartite arrangement and the need to ensure maximum utilization of the technical capacities of all parts of the system, particularly at the country level. ACC noted that differences continued to exist between UNDP and concerned organizations with respect to the interpretation of some provisions of the decision and that consultations were taking place and would continue. It further noted that such consultations would include issues relating to technical services support, the transitional measures required and other issues and expressed the hope that results satisfactory to all concerned would emerge.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/81.

Agency support costs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the provisions related to successor arrangements for agency support costs contained in General

Assembly resolutions 42/196 of 11 December 1987, 43/199 of 20 December 1988 and 44/211 of 22 December 1989,

Taking note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on its organizational meeting for 1990, its special session and its thirty-seventh session,

Welcoming the constructive statements on agency support costs made by representatives of organizations of the United Nations system before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee at its 9th to 11th meetings, on 17 and 18 July 1990,

Endorses decision 90/26 concerning successor arrangements for agency support costs, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on 22 June 1990.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/81
27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote
Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/115), 24 July (meeting 17); draft by Chairman (E/1990/C.3/L.19); agenda item 9.

Ex post facto report

Pursuant to a 1988 Governing Council request [YUN 1988, p. 352], the Administrator submitted in May his fourth ex post facto report on agency support costs [DP/1990/72], which presented information received from agencies for the 1988-1989 biennium and provided an analysis of the trend in agency support cost earnings and expenditure and agency technical co-operation project expenditure since 1982.

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/50], the Governing Council asked the Administrator to discontinue submission of the ex post facto report on agency support costs. Taking into account the decision on successor support cost arrangements, he was to present in 1991 a draft of a report providing accurate information on actual support costs incurred, by source of funds.

Sectoral support

In response to a 1987 Governing Council request [YUN 1987, p. 421], the Administrator submitted a January 1990 report on sectoral support [DP/1990/73]. The Administrator reported that, although the Council had requested a review of the whole sectoral programme, he proposed that the detailed review be postponed until the 1991 session of the Council, citing, among other things, the changes in the management of the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFA) programme, which took effect in January 1990; the conduct of a feasibility study of a long-term financing scheme for the SIDFA programme in 1990; and the opportunity for the review to include the benefit of more than three years of experience with the new procedures for the management of the sectoral support programme to the smaller agencies.

With regard to financial resources for sectoral support, the Administrator stated that $25 million was available to cover the programme until the end of 1991. A tentative allocation of $30 million was proposed for the sectoral support programme in the fifth cycle (1992-1996).

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/24], the Governing Council postponed the review of the sectoral support programme to its 1991 session and requested the Administrator to address, in his 1991 report to the Council, the possible complementarity of the sectoral support facility with the new support costs arrangements, including an eventual merger with the provisions for technical support services in the new support costs arrangements.

Mid-term review of resources

In a report to the Governing Council's special session in February [DP/1990/7 & Corr.1], the Administrator, in response to 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 349] and 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 324] requests, submitted a review of resources for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) and, in response to another 1989 request [YUN 1989, p. 324], submitted fourth cycle earmarkings for SPR. In 1988, the Governing Council had authorized increased resource allocations for the fourth cycle of $676 million. In view of the uncertainties regarding the resource forecast on which those allocations were based, the Council had requested that the additional amounts be made available in staggered tranches of 50 per cent in 1988, 25 per cent in 1989 and 25 per cent in 1990. The release of the last 25 per cent was conditioned on the resource outlook for the balance of the cycle. The Administrator, based on a November 1989 forecast, proposed the deferment of any decision on the release of the final 25 per cent until after the 1991 pledging conference in November 1990, at which time fourth cycle IPFs would have been established. In addition, the Administrator, in order to avoid a significant reduction of the level of programming in 1992 and 1993, established IPF expenditure targets for the remainder of the fourth cycle at $815 million for 1990 and $825 million for 1991 to facilitate a smooth transition to the fifth programming cycle and avoid disruption in forward programming. The Administrator also requested approval of arrangements allowing the borrowing of IPF entitlements from the fifth cycle to allow certain countries to target for fourth cycle expenditure beyond their existing IPF entitlements.

With regard to the status of commitments against SPR, the Administrator made proposals for the most urgent additional funding needs and possible additional allocations and/or special programming arrangements to meet those needs. He also informed the Council of SPR allocations made with regard to disaster relief to Democratic Yemen in 1989.

By a 23 February decision [dec. 90/3], the Governing Council authorized the release of the remaining 25 per cent of additional IPFs and SPR allocated in 1988 and requested the Administrator to inform it, at its thirty-seventh (1990) session, of the planned programme expenditure for 1990 through 1992. It authorized the Administrator to make arrangements allowing the borrowing of IPF entitlements from the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996) and requested him to provide information on the impact of that decision on the fifth cycle resource situation, particularly regarding the carry-over of IPF entitlements and the resource basis.

The Council increased the allocation for disaster relief activities of SPR in the fourth cycle by $3 million and authorized the Administrator, without prejudice to the level of SPR for the fifth cycle, to overprogramme by 15 per cent the SPR earmarking for disaster relief and programme development. It took note of the Administrator's decision to allocate $1,016,500 from SPR for a project aimed at restoring some 25 flood-damaged schools in Democratic Yemen and reaffirmed its request to him to consider providing additional assistance to that country from SPR beyond the authorized amount.

The Council requested the Administrator to propose at the thirty-seventh session a coherent policy to guide SPR and arrangements for planning and programming SPR activities, relating them to country programmes and intercountry activities of UNDP.

In response to that request, the Administrator, in his report on preparations for the fifth programming cycle [DP/1990/43 & Add.I], stated that the SPR component had become an increasingly valuable part of UNDP's total resources, amounting to $189.5 million for the fourth cycle; he had proposed $300 million in resources for SPR in the fifth cycle. SPR would have a major role in the search for appropriate technical co-operation responses to the increasing number of problems that called for joint, co-ordinated action in support of world development and in providing guidance on how to address the growing urgency of some of those issues, including the disparities in human development, capital investments and trade opportunities. Through SPR, UNDP should reinforce the roles that management, the private sector, NGOs and women could and should play in development. SPR funds would be used, among other things, to focus on four main technical co-operation concerns: developing methodologies and procedures for systematically assessing technical co-operation needs; identifying new and better modalities for solving developmental problems of priority concern; facilitating the co-ordination of aid from different sources; and monitoring and evaluating the effectiveness and efficiency of assistance modalities and programming techniques.

SPR's second function was to meet unpredictable contingencies, including short-term and longer-term disaster relief and rehabilitation. Although needs were unpredictable, experience of many years provided a reasonable basis for estimating future requirements. In addition to disaster relief, many countries were turning increasingly to UNDP for assistance in implementing precautionary and disaster-management measures, including disaster-management training. Other areas, such as the Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian people, had also long been recognized as eligible for SPR assistance.

It was expected that many of the activities funded from SPR would eventually be incorporated in country and regional level programmes and activities.

The Administrator also submitted, in response to a 1989 Council request [YUN 1989, p. 324], an overview of the activities of the Project Development Facility (PDF) [DP/1990/35], which was funded from SPR. The first part of PDF operations, from the Facility's establishment in 1985 until modification of its operations in 1988, was known as PDF1. The modified Facility, from 1988 onwards, was known as PDF2. By December 1989, a total of 211 missions had been approved under PDF2, compared with 159 under PDF1. Of the PDF2 missions, 106 had been completed, 4 had been cancelled and the remaining 101 were either ongoing or awaiting clearances of documents or final payment. A total of 81 users took advantage of the Facility (76 countries, 4 regional programmes and the Central American Programme). The average duration of a mission was 19.2 days and 272 consultants were utilized.

The Administrator concluded that PDF had developed into an efficient mechanism for generating and improving pipeline projects. The bulk of its activities (81 per cent of the missions) had focused on the formulation or reformulation of projects. The decentralization of the administration to the bureau level had proved most effective and the allocation of funds at the regional level allowed enough flexibility to respond to specific country needs.

With regard to resources, the existing PDF allocation was expected to be exhausted by June 1990. Since the level of fifth cycle programming was likely to be above $4.5 billion, the level of pipeline projects needed to sustain such a programme would be substantial. The $15 million requested for PDF2 for the fifth cycle should assist in the formulation of $700-800 million worth of pipeline projects. Together with the preparatory assistance mechanism, that would assure a timely and effective build-up of the project pipeline for the fifth cycle.

Administrative questions

Senior management structure

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 323], the Administrator included in his revised budget estimates for the 1990-1991 biennium [DP/1990/65 & Corr. 21 a comprehensive review of UNDP's senior management structure. The Administrator proposed a revised structure, in which the Bureau for Special Activities would be redesignated the Bureau for Resources and Special Activities and be headed by an Assistant Administrator. It would continue to cover special funds and activities under the Administrator, but would also include UNCDF, UNSO, UNV, UNFSTD, and UNRPNRE. The Assistant Administrator would also be responsible for providing focused support to the Administrator in the areas of resource mobilization and information. In addition, the Administrator proposed unification of the management of UNRPNRE and UNFSTD, which would enable savings in administrative costs. Other proposals included maintaining the OPS under its existing arrangement, headed by an Assistant Administrator; returning the Division for Global and Intraregional Programmes to the status of a separate division reporting directly to the Administrator; and shifting the responsibility for IAPSO.

The Administrator stated that in making the proposals he had focused on, a management structure that was most responsive to functional requirements. He acknowledged that he was not proposing any reductions in the number of Assistant Secretary-General and D-2 posts at headquarters in the core programme. He had also reviewed the functions of each of the D-2 posts and believed that a clear rationale existed for the level of the posts in relation to the functions performed.

ACABQ [DP/1990/87] said it was not clear to what extent the Governing Council's 1989 guidelines had been followed and regretted that the Administrator's review did not indicate whether they had been taken into account. Although ACABQ saw merit in combining the administrative structures of funds that had failed to achieve sufficient financial support, it recommended that the staffing of the consolidated units be kept under review to ensure that the magnitude of the post reduction did not adversely affect the funds' ability to secure pledges of contributions and implement mandated activities. It urged the Administrator to pursue the possibility of integrating the management of smaller funds and said that it might be possible to consolidate some of the smaller core units having related functions.

The Advisory Committee questioned the Administrator's statement that it was not in the overall interests of the organization to propose reductions in the senior management of the UNDP core management at that time. It doubted that the Governing Council was in a position to act on the senior management question on the basis of the documentation provided and suggested that the Administrator should be requested to refine and further substantiate proposals in that regard and submit them for the Council's further consideration.

In a 22 June decision [dec. 90/45], the Governing Council expressed concern that the Administrators' proposed management structure did not constitute the comprehensive review requested in 1989. It welcomed the Administrator's intention to engage an independent external consulting firm to make substantive recommendations on UNDP's future senior management structure and to submit them with his comments to the thirty-eighth (1991) session of the Council. The Council set out the terms of reference for the external consulting firm and recommended that the Administrator hold informal consultations on the recommendations submitted. The Administrator was urged to reconsider the merits of transferring the responsibilities of the Division of Personnel to the Bureau of Finance and Administration and to inform the Council of his decision in the context of the 1992-1993 budget. It took note of the Administrator's decision to unfreeze the post of Assistant Secretary-General for the Bureau for Finance and Administration and decided to review the Assistant Secretary-General grade in 1991 in the light of the consultants' recommendations. The Council approved the unified management of UNRPNRE and UNFSTD.

Post classifications and other issues

The Administrator, in response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 323], resubmitted, in his report on the revised budget estimates for 1990-1991 [DP/1990/65 & Corr.1,2], his proposals for reclassifying eight P-5 posts to the D-1 level and two General Service posts to the P-2 and P-3 levels and for the downgrading of two posts, one from P-4 to P-3 and the other from P-3 to P-2.

The Administrator also submitted budget estimates for UNIFEM for 1990-1991 in the amount of $4.1 million and the results of a classification exercise for OPS.

In its 22 June decision on revised 1990-1991 budget estimates [dec. 90/45], the Governing Council approved the proposed reclassifications on the understanding that there would be no financial implications for the 1990-1991 budget for programme support and administrative services. The Administrator was asked to give consideration to the same principle for future reclassification proposals. The Council also approved the Administrator's proposals with respect to the 1990-1991 biennial budget of UNIFEM and the continuation of the Assistant Secretary-General grade for the Director of OPS and the classification of the post of Deputy Director of OPS at the D-2 level, both on a temporary basis on the understanding that they be reviewed in the context of the 1992-1993 budget. It also approved the other proposed reclassifications and the revised budget estimates for OPS and took note of the carry forward of $2.5 million of the 1988-1989 support cost earnings of OPS for use in 1990-1991. The Administrator was requested to note that posts established in OPS at the D-1 level and above were subject to final approval by the Council.

Other technical co-operation

UN programmes

The United Nations continued to provide technical co-operation assistance for economic and social development, mainly through the Department of Technical Co-operation and Development (DTCD). In his annual report to the UNDP Governing Council on UN technical co-operation activities [DP/1991/41 & Add.1-3], the Secretary-General described the work of DTCD and of other parts of the Organization that were engaged in technical co-operation: regional commissions, the Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Office at Vienna, the Office of Legal Affairs, the Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and UNEP.

In 1990, the United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme of $277 million, compared with $250 million in 1989, an increase of 11 per cent in project expenditures. Of the total, DTCD executed a programme of $108.7 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $119.3 million; those financed by UNFPA accounted for $24.6 million; $25.8 million was financed by trust funds; and $11 million was expended under the United Nations Regular Programme of Technical Co-operation.

DTCD activities

In his annual report on UN technical co-operation activities [DP/1991/41] the Secretary-General said that the 1990 total delivery by DTCD had amounted to $181 million in project expenditures against budgets of $226 million. Expenditures increased by $19 million over 1989 and accounted for 68 per cent of total expenditure, compared with 64 per cent in 1989. Earnings totalled $22 million.

By sector, the distribution of project expenditures was as follows: natural resources and energy, $70.7 million; development planning, $32 million; statistics, $28.7 million; public administration and finance, $26.1 million; population, $10.4 million; social development, $5.1 million; the United Nations Education and Training Programme for Southern Africa, $3.9 million; and others, $3.8 million.

On a geographical basis, the DTCD-executed programme included expenditures of $76.1 million for Africa; $55.3 million for Asia and the Pacific; $33.7 million for the Middle East, Mediterranean, Europe and interregional projects; and $15.6 million for the Americas. The largest growth was in Asia, where the programme increased by $9.1 million. Project delivery in Africa remained the largest, with 42 per cent of total delivery.

By component, DTCD delivery in 1990 included $93.8 million for project personnel; $40.2 million for equipment; $26.8 million for training; $10.3 million for subcontracted services; and $9.6 million for miscellaneous expenses. The component that showed the largest growth was personnel, which rose by $12.1 million.

During 1990, DTCD helped developing countries to cope with the challenges posed by difficult economic conditions, particularly in the areas of debt management, public sector investment programming, economic and financial management and the monitoring and management of structural adjustment programmes. Its main focus in development planning continued to be national capacity building. New methodological and operational approaches to planning and management were developed to help Governments programme the full range of financial and technical co-operation available. One such approach was the DTCD/Japan Initiative for Financing the Human, Institutional, Technical and Management Capacities of Developing Countries in Development Planning (with a Special Focus on Africa),

Expenditures for fellowships and training amounted to $27.9 million in 1990. A total of 4,453 training awards were implemented during the year, including fellowships, study tours, seminars and workshops, as compared with 4,045 in 1989. Fellows and participants from 148 countries were trained in 112 host countries. A large number of placements were made in the United States, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Tanzania. Over half of the placements (2,301) were arranged in developing countries. DTCD continued to encourage the participation of women; in 1990, 772 awards were granted to women, compared with 835 in 1989.

By a 20 June decision [dec. 90/37], the UNDP Governing Council, taking note of the Secretary-General's report on the 1989 technical co-operation activities of the United Nations [DP/1990/56 & Add.1-3], urged DTCD and UNCTAD to continue to support LDCs in preparing background papers for the Second United Nations Conference on LDCs (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and to remain involved in the follow-up to the Conference at the global and country levels. It encouraged DTCD to increase its involvement in programmatic exercises organized by UNDP, such as round-table conferences and national technical co-operation and assessment programmes, and urged UNDP to ensure that full advantage was taken of the institutional capacity of DTCD. The Council further recommended that UNDP should take full advantage of the technical services of DTCD in areas of growing international concern, such as conservation and the environment, thereby facilitating the involvement of the Department in pilot activities and interorganizational mechanisms such as the pilot global environment facility. DTCD was urged to intensify its support to national/government execution, in particular the use of its development advisory services to assist in sectoral programme/project identification, formulation; monitoring and evaluation. The Council encouraged DTCD to expand training at national, regional and interregional levels in the process aspects of technical co-operation in order to enhance government capacity for project execution and implementation, and to pursue its proposals to establish or strengthen central management and implementation units within government offices. It was emphasized that the Department should maintain its ability to respond effectively to the needs of developing countries. The Council asked the Administrator to report in 1991 on efforts to establish a more effective division of labour and a more effective complementary relationship between UNDP and DTCD, and to devise ways to eliminate duplicative administrative support activities and strengthen technical support activities.

United Nations Volunteers

By a 22 June decision [dec. 90/38], the Governing Council, having considered the Administrator's report on UNV for 1988-1989 [YUN 1989, p. 332], considered that the role of the volunteers as development agents should be explicitly recognized in the international development strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I). It requested the Administrator to make widely available the programme advisory note on the appropriate role of volunteers in development among organizations, agencies and institutions concerned with development co-operation and requested UNV to continue the annual consultative process with its full range of partners; the Administrator was asked to include a report on those meetings in his biennial report to the Governing Council on UNV. UNV was encouraged to undertake joint planning and programming of volunteer specialists assignments with UN agencies and bilateral volunteer-sending organizations. The Council decided that UNV should continue to support youth programmes, complementing the roles of UN specialized agencies in that area. The importance of the support provided by UNV specialists to the relief and rehabilitation activities undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other UN organizations for refugees, displaced persons and returnees was noted. In the light of the importance attached to UNV, the Council invited Governments to contribute generously to the Special Voluntary Fund and requested the Administrator to mobilize resources to place UNV Domestic Development Services activities on a more secure basis.

In a 22 June decision on the revised budget estimates for 1990-1991 [dec. 90/45], the Governing Council noted that the Administrator's revised estimates for UNV for the biennium [DP/1990/65 & Corr.2] amounted to $5.9 million. It approved a total field budget for UNV of $3.1 million, including an additional 20 UNV Programme Officers with an equal number of support staff and associated costs.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In his annual report for 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1], the Administrator stated that the UNDP programme for TCDC supported numerous training seminars, regional and interregional meetings and programming exercises during the year. UNDP also continued to develop the TCDC Information Referral System (INRES-South). Two training seminars (Baghdad, Iraq; Islamabad, Pakistan) promoted the advantages of applying TCDC concepts to development projects and to utilizing the INRES-South network.

TCDC programming exercises were supported in Ghana, India and Indonesia. The Indonesia exercise resulted in agreements for 216 bilateral TCDC projects while the India exercise, which focused solely on co-operatives, yielded 59 agreements. UNDP also supported four TCDC workshops on single sectors: two in India, one in Cuba and one in Yugoslavia.

In his report on UN technical co-operation activities [DP/1991/41], the Secretary-General stated that, in 1990, DTCD continued to include elements for TCDC in projects, to disseminate information on available capabilities and to stimulate institutional networking arrangements.

Promotion of TCDC was a strong element in seminars and workshops organized by DTCD and financed from the United Nations Regular Programme for Technical Co-operation. Among the projects with a TCDC approach was the on-the-job training of junior statisticians in other developing countries, which had trained over 130 participants from some 50 countries, with the assistance of over 30 developing country institutions.

The Department also strengthened its co-operation with regional centres of excellence, including the Latin American Energy Organization. A TCDC Multisectoral Programming Exercise and Bilateral Discussions Meeting (Jakarta, Indonesia, 30 July-3 August) was organized and hosted by Indonesia, in collaboration with the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC. DTCD assisted Governments in identifying capacity and needs and formulating requests in preparation for the meeting, and as a follow-up would assist with financial support.

As follow-up to the sixth meeting of the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC held in 1989 [DP/1991/41 & Add.1-3], the meeting of the Group of Government Experts on the rules, regulations and procedures of the organization of the UN development system concerning TCDC was held in New York from 9 to 20 April 1990. The Administrator, in a May note [DP/1990/77], submitted the report of the meeting, which identified the impediments to TCDC faced by Governments and organizations of the UN system. These were mainly in the areas of awareness and information, attitudes, focal points, financing, and policies and procedures in the UN system.

The Group of Experts made a number of recommendations for action by Governments and the UN system. Among the recommendations to Governments were that they should utilize TCDC in their national planning activities, particularly when programming their IPFs and other forms of support; undertake bilateral or multilateral TCDC planning exercises with one another to identify potential for TCDC projects; and increase technical missions for joint programming among potential partner countries to expand the scope of TCDC. A positive attitude to TCDC should be encouraged and Governments, in preparing their country programmes, should give due regard to TCDC modalities in programming implementation. A mechanism should be devised for the coverage of costs incurred by institutions from developing countries in implementing TCDC projects. Those developing countries that had not already done so should establish national focal points for TCDC and strengthen existing ones.

In addition, the Experts recommended that focal points should have a co-ordinating role of all sectors involved in TCDC. With regard to financing, the international community had a role in providing financial support to TCDC and, in the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996), there should be a substantial increase of the share of TCDC in UNDP expenditures for regional, interregional and global projects. Governments should enter into triangular arrangements involving two developing countries and a third financing partner with a view to increasing the flow and effectiveness of international co-operation available to developing countries. TCDC should constitute an important item on the agenda of the regular meetings of the governing bodies of organizations of the UN system and the definition and scope of TCDC should be reviewed and elucidated, taking into account the need to make a clear distinction between TCDC and the traditional mode of technical co-operation.

Organizations of the UN system were requested by the Group of Experts, among other things, to facilitate the fielding by developing countries of technical missions to other developing countries as a means of expanding the scope of TCDC and developing country experts should be included in preparatory missions to facilitate TCDC approaches for project implementation. UNDP should assist Governments of developing countries to establish or strengthen national focal points for TCDC and provide human and financial resources to those countries whose economic circumstances and institutional weaknesses made it difficult to give priority to TCDC. Organizations of the UN system should co-operate with Governments to increase substantially UNDP expenditures for TCDC modalities in regional, interregional and global projects of the fifth programming cycle and should simplify financial procedures governing TCDC projects. In the areas of policies and procedures, UNDP should bring TCDC into the mainstream of its programme by placing responsibility for applying the TCDC modality in country programming on resident coordinators.

Similar responsibility should be assigned to the field representatives of the specialized agencies for projects supported from non-UNDP sources. The Group of Experts also outlined the roles to be played by organizations of the UN system in formulating and implementing projects, in compliance with decisions of their respective governing bodies in support of TCDC.

In a 20 June decision [dec. 90/43], the Governing Council invited organizations of the UN development system to submit their views on the findings and recommendations of the report of the Group of Experts to the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC for consideration at its seventh session, which, it was recommended, should be held immediately before the thirty-eighth (1991) session of the Governing Council. The Council decided to review the report in 1991 in the light of the views of the organizations and of the High-level Committee.

UN Capital Development Fund

In his annual report for 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1], the Administrator said that UNCDF, which provided small-scale capital assistance to LDCs to stimulate income-generating activities and to help people meet basic needs, received contributions totalling $39.7 million in 1990, an 8 per cent increase over 1989. The Fund's annual commitments exceeded $70 million.

The Second United Nations Conference on LDCs (Paris, 3-14 September 1990) (see PART THREE, Chapter I) stated that UNCDF overall funding should be increased by 20 per cent during the 1990s. In his report on UNCDF for 1989-1990 [DP/1991/43], the Administrator proposed that the recommended 20 per cent rate of growth be adopted as a model for planning purposes.

Project approvals in 1990 totalled $78.1 million, with the average size of projects increasing to $2.5 million. Project expenditures were estimated at $44 million from all sources, compared to $49.1 million in 1989. The lower level of expenditure was due to natural disasters and political instability, which slowed field operations.

With its programme focused on poverty reduction, over 65 per cent of new commitments in 1990 were devoted to food production for low-income groups, as compared to 58 per cent in 1989. The 1990 sectoral breakdown of new project approvals was: productive activities (agriculture and industry), 58 per cent; economic infrastructure (transport and energy), 14.3 per cent; and basic needs (water supply and housing), 27.7 per cent.

Chapter III

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

The United Nations continued in 1990 to provide special assistance to countries facing severe economic hardship, as well as those seriously affected by natural and man-made disasters. In December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to determine means of facilitating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance to victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations. It expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing support for efforts to promote a new international humanitarian order and called on Governments, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to further develop international co-operation in the humanitarian field.

The critical economic situation in Africa remained a major concern during 1990. The Assembly established an ad hoc committee of the whole to prepare the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990. It invited the international community to strengthen its support of Africa's efforts to diversify its commodity sector and to bring about sustained and sustainable growth and development, taking into account the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation. The Assembly appealed for international assistance for Angola, Benin, the Central African Republic, Chad, Djibouti, Madagascar and of the front-line States and other neighbouring States that had suffered as a result of the apartheid policies of South Africa. Assistance for Ecuador, Lebanon, Vanuatu and Yemen was also requested.

The General Assembly in 1990 decided to extend the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America for an additional three years beginning in 1991.

The United Nations system, and the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in particular, continued to provide assistance to countries stricken by natural disasters. The Assembly launched the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction. The Council called for relief operations and rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance after a cyclone swept through Samoa, American Samoa, Niue, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Wallis and Futuna in the South Pacific. The Assembly called for similar assistance to Iran following an earthquake that struck that country in June.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to consult with Haiti for the launching of a special programme of emergency assistance to that country. As a consequence of the conflict in Liberia, the Assembly appealed to the international community to provide Liberia with all necessary assistance for its economic and social rehabilitation.

The Assembly considered for the first time the consequences of the 1986 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Ukrainian SSR and invited the Secretary-General to address and mitigate the consequences of the accident and to formulate a programme for co-ordinating the activities of the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations.

Economic assistance

In 1990, the United Nations continued its programmes of economic assistance to countries with severe economic problems, some of which were in support of national reconstruction and rehabilitation in the aftermath of natural or man-made disasters. A wide range of adverse economic conditions, often exacerbated by devastating climatic conditions, had adversely affected development efforts in those countries.

Africa Recovery Programme

With the collaboration of several UN organizations, preparations were under way during the year for the final review of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD).

The Niger, on behalf of the Group of African States and as its Chairman, requested the Secretary-General on 29 August [A/45/232] to have an item entitled "Critical economic situation in Africa" placed on the agenda of the General Assembly's forty-fifth (1990) session, with the following sub-items: United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (UNPAAERD); report of the Secretary-General's Expert Group on African Commodity Problems; and African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation.

The Niger explained that inclusion of the item would enable the Assembly to better prepare the practical modalities of the final review and assessment of UNPAAERD in 1991, which the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) had recommended should be carried out in the framework of an ad hoc plenary committee. Inclusion of the sub-item on the African Charter for Popular Participation-Africa's contribution for a better understanding of concerns relating to the constraints of the critical economic situation of the African continent would permit the necessary exchange of views on those constraints.

On the basis of the Secretary-General's addition of the item to the draft agenda of the Assembly's 1990 session [A/BUR/45/1/Add.I] the General Committee recommended it for inclusion as item 152, sub-items (a), (b) and (c), in the final agenda, which the Assembly adopted on 11 September by decision 45/402.

On 24 September [A/45/554], Botswana and the Netherlands transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the concluding statement of the Maastricht Conference on Africa (Maastricht, Netherlands, 2-4 July), which pointed to the highlights of the Conference and follow-up actions, and an issues paper that had guided its deliberations. The Conference provided an opportunity for African and industrialized countries, as well as multilateral organizations, to address Africa's economic problems and to consider action to accelerate economic and social progress.

UNDP consideration. In response to a 1989 decision of the UNDP Governing Council [YUN 1989, p. 336], the UNDP Administrator submitted a 10 April 1990 report [DP/1990/30] on UNDP's role in the implementation of UNPAAERD. The report, which covered 1989, indicated UNDP resources at the disposal of sub-Saharan Africa for the fourth (1987-1991) programming cycle, including additional resources arrived at and overall allocation by priority. It described UNDP contributions to the enhancement of policy reform, planning and management of structural adjustment, and of the quality, co-ordination and modalities of technical co-operation. It detailed UNDP's relationships with ECA, OAU, the African Development Bank (AfDB), the Bretton Woods institutions and African intergovernmental organizations in their implementation of UNPAAERD. In addition, the report noted that UNDP participated in all scheduled UNPAAERD meetings in 1989, including those of the UN Steering Committee and of its Inter-Agency Task Force on the final review of UNPAAERD, and that it had extended its financial support to the UNPAAERD secretariat to the end of 1990.

On 22 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 1990/29)] the UNDP Governing Council requested comparative analyses of the resources situation before and after UNPAAERD and of its statistical profile for the same period, as well as an analysis of the priority gaps in technical co-operation in Africa since UNPAAERD's inception. It invited the Administrator to organize a further series of subregional cluster meetings within the existing economic groupings, as well as regional meetings with the African Planning and Finance Ministers in 1991 to assist in the preparation of the final review and appraisal of UNPAAERD's implementation. It requested the Administrator to: contribute to those preparations, including UNDP's role in possible successor arrangements to UNPAAERD; assist African countries to identify specific needs, including training and programmes to build national capacities to enable them effectively to execute UN-funded programmes and projects in the fifth (1992-1996) programming cycle; and intensify efforts towards a greater use of African national expertise, technical co-operation facilities and subcontractors, and towards the purchase of equipment locally, subregionally and regionally.

The Governing Council further asked UNDP to intensify co-operation with African Governments and relevant organizations to improve regional economic co-operation and integration, and, in consultation with regional institutions and organizations and the United Nations Environment Programme, to assist African Governments to design national environmental plans in preparation for the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The Administrator was asked to ensure close co-ordination between the two regional bureaux concerned with the implementation of UNPAAERD and to report in 1991.

UNCTAD action. In a July report [TD/B/1265], the UNCTAD secretariat outlined its intergovernmental input in the 1991 final assessment of UNPAAERD by the General Assembly. The secretariat would submit two reports on the subject to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB). One would be a progress report on UNCTAD's contribution to UNPAAERD in policy research and analysis, focusing on those areas of UNCTAD's mandate of relevance to the implementation of UNPAAERD and covering technical assistance undertaken to underpin measures directed at helping African countries fulfil their commitments under UNPAAERD. A second report would assist the Board in preparing UNCTAD's input to the final review and appraisal and would take into account the issues of financial flows and external debt, commodities, trade, transport, technology, economic co-operation among developing countries, and the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries.

On 12 October [A/45/15], TDB took note of the UNCTAD secretariat report and of the comments made thereon.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/75.

Final review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/27 of 18 November 1988, in which the Assembly decided that the final review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action & African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 should be conducted at its forty-sixth session,

Noting with appreciation the reports of the Economic Commission for Africa on the progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action and on the preparations for the final review and evaluation of the Programme of Action,

Also noting with appreciation the work of the United Nations Steering Committee and the United Nations Inter-Agency Task Force on the monitoring of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Convinced that the final review and evaluation of the implementation of the Programme of Action by the General Assembly should be an occasion for an in-depth appraisal of the actions taken by all sides in the implementation of the Programme, as well as of the measures that are needed to sustain accelerated growth and development in Africa beyond 1991,

Convinced also of the need for States members of the Economic Commission for Africa to conduct a thorough assessment of the implementation of the Programme and that such an assessment should be as up-to-date as possible,

Concerned about the continuing deterioration in the economic and social conditions in Africa and the possibility of the continuation of such trends in the 1990s,

1. Recommends that mechanisms for the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 be similar to those of the mid-term review of the Programme of Action and that for that purpose an ad hoc committee of the whole of the General Assembly be established to appraise the Programme of Action and propose measures for sustained development in Africa beyond 1991;

2. Decides that a special memorandum addressed to the proposed ad hoc committee of the whole of the General Assembly on the review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 should be prepared by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa at its seventeenth meeting, in May 1991, and that the draft of the special memorandum should be considered at an intergovernmental expert group meeting to be convened immediately before the meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole and the Conference of Ministers;

3. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Commission to send special multisectoral missions to all States members of the Commission early in the fourth quarter of 1990 to collect up-to-date information on the implementation of the Programme of Action, on the basis of which the special memorandum would be prepared;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the secretariat of the Commission the financial resources required for such special missions on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

5. Urges member States and their development and planning machineries to participate actively in the preparation of the special memorandum.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/75

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/114) without vote, 23 July (meeting 10); draft by ECA Conference of Ministers submitted by Secretary-General (E/1990/84); agenda item 6.

Financial implications. S-G, E/1990/84/Add.4.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/13 of 7 November on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, called on the UN Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation with the OAU Secretary-General in the preparation of the final review of UNPAAERD in 1991 and to continue to invite OAU to participate in the meetings of the UN Steering Committee and its Inter-Agency Task Force and working groups on the final review of the implementation of UNPAAERD.

On 19 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/178 A.

Final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, 42/163 of 8 December 1987, in which, inter alia, it decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the mid-term review and appraisal of the Programme of Action, and 43/27 of 18 November 1988 on the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/75 of 27 July 1990 on the final review and appraisal of the Programme of Action,

Taking note of resolution CM/Res. 1287(LII) on the final review and appraisal of the Programme of Action, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 3 to 8 July 1990,

Recalling further its resolution 45/13 of 7 November 1990 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity, in which the Assembly, inter alia, decided that the final review and appraisal of the Programme of Action should be prepared by an ad hoc committee of the whole of the General Assembly,

Convinced that the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action by the General Assembly should be an occasion for an in-depth assessment of the actions taken in the implementation of the Programme, as well as the measures that are needed to sustain accelerated growth and development in Africa beyond 1991,

1. Decides to establish an ad hoc committee of the whole of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly for the purpose of preparing, for the forty-sixth session, the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990;

2. Decides also that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole should meet for ten working days in September 1991 before the forty-sixth session of the General Assembly and that its Bureau should be constituted at the highest possible level and be composed of a Chairman, three Vice-Chairmen and a Rapporteur;

3. Decides further that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole, in carrying out its mandate, should submit its findings to the General Assembly and propose concrete measures and recommendations for sustained and sustainable growth and development in Africa beyond 1991;

4. Urges Member States, organs and bodies of the United Nations system to be represented at the highest possible level and participate actively in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue ensuring close co-operation and co-ordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity concerning the contributions of various relevant organs, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Children's Fund, in the context of the report of the Secretary-General, for the preparation of the final review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

6. Decides to call an organizational session not exceeding two working days of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole in April 1991 to adopt the arrangements for its work;

7. Calls upon the relevant United Nations agencies and organizations, including the United Nations Development Programme, to continue to provide adequate resources and the assistance required for the full implementation of projects and programmes undertaken in the framework of the Programme of Action;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole his report on the implementation of the Programme of Action;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

African commodity problems

The Secretary-General, responding to Assembly resolution 43/27 [YUN 1988, p. 365] on the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of UNPAAERD, transmitted in October the report of the Expert Group on African Commodity Problems [A/45/581]. The Group had been established in March 1989 by the Secretary-General at the request of OAU, as endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 43/27. Composed of 15 experts acting in their personal capacities (a sixteenth member withdrew after one meeting), the Group was to assess the nature and causes of Africa's commodity problems-their commodity export dependence, competitiveness and related domestic and international policies-bearing in mind commodities of export interest to African countries; and to recommend national, regional and international measures that could contribute to overcoming the problems identified.

The Group held four meetings, in Geneva, Addis Ababa (Ethiopia), London and Oslo (Norway), for substantive discussions and to draft its report. It held a fifth meeting in Geneva to adopt the report, organized in two chapters: chapter I gave a general background and presented the problems; chapter II made proposals for action by national Governments, at a regional level and by the international community. Annexes to the report included statistical tables and a bibliography of expert studies commissioned by the Group, along with other studies on which it had drawn.

The report noted that Africa's dependence on export commodities was greater than that of any other region. The commodity sector was critical to the total income of national economies, as it provided close to half the national income for a few oil- and non-oil-producing countries and 90 to 100 per cent of export income for most African countries. Central to the economic crisis facing Africa was that sector's failure, as reflected in low productivity and uncompetitive production.

Among the reasons for that failure were ill-advised government policies, unenlightened administration and organization, the serious lack of agricultural scientists and extension officers, poor knowledge of international markets, the lack of investment in transport and other infrastructure essential to effective production, and an economic policy framework that offered overseas investors few incentives.

The report argued that, while many proposals for resolving that crisis had been advanced and acted upon, a clear focus on commodity strategy had often been absent. It thus proposed such a strategy, built around a change in attitude, organizational reform and resource mobilization. The report set forth recommendations aimed at a comprehensive, mutually reinforcing policy package, with emphasis on the following strategic objectives: increased reliance on African food crops and attainment of food security at the household, national and regional levels; diversification to enlarge the export base and capture more value added; increased export earnings from primary and processed commodities; development of intra-African co-operation and trade; more effective co-operation between commodity producers and consumers; and a halt to desertification and a reversal of environmental degradation.

To achieve those objectives, national policies had to address a number of critical commodity issues. They included improvement of transport and storage facilities; more effective agricultural research and extension services; better rural education and greater emphasis on agricultural education in colleges and universities; improvement of packaging and quality control, better knowledge of overseas markets and vigorous promotion; adequate banking and credit facilities; reliance on market-based pricing policies; development of environmentally sound farming practices; movement away from monoculture; greater private-sector involvement; encouragement of direct foreign investment and joint ventures; efficient exploitation of forestry, fisheries and mineral resources; establishment of reasonable rules for the operation of foreign corporations; diversification at all levels; and producer co-operation.

In support of the commodity strategy, policy changes by the international community would be required to allow for more significant additional financial resources, more open markets for African exports of primary and manufactured products, a closer correspondence of technical and other assistance to African needs, and increased support for producer/consumer co-operation. A follow-up mechanism must be created, involving the following key agencies: the World Bank, AfDB, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) would be responsible for co-ordination and monitoring.

On 3 October, Sierra Leone, on behalf of the African Group, submitted a document [A/45/591] setting out Africa's common position on the Expert Group's report. The document noted that the report failed adequately to cover the guidelines in the Group's terms of reference, particularly in its assessment of the nature and causes of the African commodity problems; recent trends in export commodity prices and earnings and their impact on recovery and development; interlinkages among export earnings, debt and resource flows; and trends in long-term supply and demand and prospects for commodities of export interest. An important aspect of the nature and causes of the African commodity problems overlooked by the Group related to the functioning of the commodity exchanges and its negative impact on commodity prices. Also noted was the report's failure to assess the impact of synthetics and other substitutes on commodities of export interest to Africa, as well as the consequences of technological revolution on the pattern of world industrial production and commodity markets, especially the negative trends in world demand and prices for commodities. The Group's report seemed to place the African commodity problem within the framework of ongoing structural adjustment programmes supported by IMF and the World Bank and to advocate increased production and export of traditional commodities at the expense of a strong package of diversification measures.

The document outlined specific proposals for action in the areas of diversification, export earnings, price instability and deteriorating terms of trade, access to markets, trade co-operation and economic integration-which the Group's report had not covered. In place of the Group's recommended follow-up mechanism-deemed inadequate in terms of the institutions to be involved and its emphasis on international-level action-the document proposed a detailed mechanism to operate at the national, regional and international levels, the last level to be carried out by a high-level inter-agency task force to be established by the Secretary-General and to include OAU, ECA and AfDB. It further proposed that the issue of African commodities be inscribed on the agenda of every General Assembly regular session.

In a note of 15 November [A/45/581/Add.1] on the Group's report, the Secretary-General stated that the Assembly would further consider the question of African commodity problems in 1991 in the context of the final review and appraisal of UNPAAERD. He would take into account the views of Governments, intergovernmental bodies and international agencies on the topic in preparing his final report to the Assembly.

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/178 B.

Report on Africa's commodity problems:
towards a solution

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution AHG/Res.177(XXIV) adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-fourth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 25 to 28 May 1988, which requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations to establish a high-level expert group to examine the problems of African commodities in the context of the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990,

Recalling also its resolutions S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, 43/27 of 18 November 1988 on the mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action, and 43/12 of 25 October 1988 and 44/17 of 1 November 1989 on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity,

Aware of the predominantly important role that commodities play in the African economies and the importance of horizontal and vertical diversification, market promotion activities and exports,

Taking note with appreciation of the establishment of the United Nations Secretary-General's Expert Group on African Commodity Problems,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General's Expert Group on African Commodity Problems and of Africa's common position on that report;

2. Takes note also of the note by the Secretary-General on the critical economic situation in Africa;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity and other interested Governments, multilateral financial institutions and regional development funds, to include in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the final review and appraisal of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, proposals on how to support Africa's efforts at diversification, including the means of mobilizing sufficient resources on favourable terms from the international community and measures to enhance domestic and foreign investment and enterprise;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report a study on how diversification in Africa can be implemented at national, subregional and regional levels with the support of the international community, taking into account the report of the Expert Group and Africa's common position on that report, and invites the international community, including regional development banks, to take the issue of diversification into account as an important element in Africa's economic development;

5. Invites the international community, including the African Development Bank, to strengthen its support of Africa's efforts to diversify its commodity sector, bearing in mind the relevant operational mechanisms;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to accord Africa's commodity programmes appropriate priority in the United Nations medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session a sub-item entitled "Africa's commodity problems" under the item entitled 'Critical economic situation in Africa';

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

African Charter for popular participation in development

At the request of the twenty-fifth session of ECA and the sixteenth meeting of the ECA Conference of Ministers responsible for Economic Planning and Development (Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 19 May), the United Republic of Tanzania, on 6 July, submitted to the Secretary-General the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation [A/45/427]. That document had been elaborated and adopted at the International Conference on Popular Participation in the Recovery and Development Process in Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 12-16 February).

On 19 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/178 C.

African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions S-13/2 of 1 June 1986 on the critical economic situation in Africa, the annex to which contains the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development

1986-1990, 43/12 of 25 October 1988, 43/27 of 18 November 1988 on the mid-term review and appraisal of the Programme of Action and 44/24 of 17 November 1989 on the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-Economic Recovery and Transformation, which, inter alia, called for popular participation in the activities for growth and development,

Noting with interest the concepts contained in the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation, the importance of which has been recognized in international conferences,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation;

2. Commends the collective commitment of African peoples and Governments to promote economic recovery and development in Africa through, inter alia, popular participation for development and transformation;

3. Calls upon the international community to increase support to Africa's efforts in bringing about sustained and sustainable growth and development, taking into account, inter alia, the objectives of the African Charter for Popular Participation in Development and Transformation.

Angola

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/168 [YUN 1989, p. 338], calling for consultation with the Angolan Government in order to determine the level of assistance required for Angola's economic rehabilitation, the Secretary-General reported on 9 October [A/45/551] that the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship had held consultations with the Angolan President in Windhoek, Namibia, on 21 March, and later in New York with the Permanent Representative of Angola to the United Nations; and that he had also visited Angola from 11 to 15 August.

The Secretary-General stated that UNDP had agreed to the Government's request of 4 April that it assist with the preparation of a donors' round table to be held in 1991, in place of a previously proposed donors' conference to seek support for a three-year transitional plan for Angola. As agreed by Angola's Vice-Minister of Planning, AfDB, Portugal and UNDP on 25 June, UNDP would assume the lead role in the preparation of the round table and would finance a project, to be executed by the Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, that would include preparation of a macro-economic planning framework, a public investment plan and a private-sector strategy; a complementary project would be formulated to cover the preparations and logistical requirements; and UNDP would transmit the project documents to the Government for circulation to AfDB, the World Bank and Portugal, from which additional inputs might be sought.

The Secretary-General noted that UNDP, following its mid-term review in February of its second (1987-1991) country programme for Angola, added $5,227,000 to the originally approved indicative planning figure of $22,825,000 for that programme, raising the total to $28,052,000. The World Bank indicated the possibility of loans and credits for a number of projects in priority areas identified in the UNDP/World Bank Economic Review, as well as other agreed or planned financing of rehabilitation projects in the social sector.

As to the Assembly's appeal to the international community, the Secretary-General stated that assistance commitments made since December 1989 for disbursement in 1990 amounted to approximately $175 million, plus $4 million from the UN system including the World Bank, making a total of some $179 million. He drew attention to the fact that the total commitment of around $419 million planned for disbursement in 1990 and 1991 contained a high proportion of ongoing assistance and commitments rescheduled from previous years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/233.

International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/168 of 15 December 1989 regarding international assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola,

Mindful of Security Council resolutions 387(1976) of 31 March 1976, 475(1980) of 27 June 1980, 628(1989) of 16 January 1989 and other resolutions of the Council, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to Angola,

Aware of the difficult economic situation of Angola, which is a result of the aggression and destabilization that prevailed in the country, as well as the current drought,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the international community for the support and assistance it has already rendered to Angola;
3. Appeals to the international community to render the financial, material and technical assistance necessary for the economic rehabilitation of Angola;
4. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the United Nations system and the international community, with a view to obtaining increased support for the economic rehabilitation of Angola;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

6. Welcomes the decision of the Government of Angola to organize, in 1991, a round-table conference of donors for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Angola, in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme, the African Development Bank, the Government of Portugal and other interested countries;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "International assistance for the economic rehabilitation of Angola".

Benin, Central African Republic, Madagascar

On 2 August, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/358] on special programmes of economic assistance to five African countries-Benin, the Central African Republic, Chad, Djibouti and Madagascar-as well as to Ecuador, Vanuatu and Yemen. Prepared in response to General Assembly resolutions 43/211 [YUN 1988, p. 378] and 44/176 [YUN 1989, p. 339], the economic data and other information regarding the difficulties confronting Ecuador and Vanuatu (see below, under "Disaster relief" and "Countries and areas in other regions", respectively).

The report noted that Benin continued to experience grave economic and financial difficulties. While the level of agricultural production maintained the country's self-sufficiency in foodstuffs, except for wheat and rice, and cotton as its main export crop, its economy was in the grip of a financial crisis that had pushed short-term management problems to the forefront against a background of concerns with medium- and long-term social and economic development. In keeping with the transitional Government's commitment to continue implementing the structural adjustment programme for 1989-1992, adopted in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 339], the budget for public service salaries was set at 37.5 billion CFA francs (CFAF), a reduction of CFAF 1.6 billion from 1989. Under a programme to reduce the role of the public sector, a minimum of 3,000 persons would voluntarily retire during 1990, at a cost of CFAF 7.9 billion, however, which required donor financial support.

External assistance requirements remained dominated by short-term assistance to meet salary payments and to eliminate arrears in external debt payments. Total funding needed for the financial stabilization programme was CFAF 73.9 billion. Donor commitment in respect of the 1990 budget amounted to CFAF 40.1 billion as of May, leaving a funding gap of CFAF 33.8 billion. A donors' meeting (Paris, June) was thus organized by the World Bank under its Special Programme for Africa. With UNDP support, the Government was preparing to hold a round-table conference before the year's end at which four documents were to be presented: a macro-economic policy framework, a public investment programme for 1990-1992, priority action programmes in the social sectors, and a technical co-operation policy framework.

With respect to the Central African Republic, the report stated that, as that country had exerted significant efforts to carry out economic, budgetary and institutional reforms, arrangements were under way to put in place the third stage of its structural adjustment programme. Under its project called Social Dimensions of Adjustment, UNDP, which remained focused on the social costs of structural adjustment, especially for the most vulnerable groups, dispatched an identification mission to the country several times between November 1989 and March 1990.

As a result of consultations on transport and road maintenance held in March in accordance with the recommendations of the 1987 round-table conference for the country [YUN 1987, p. 442], financing had been assured for the Government's transport sector project, as well as for a number of complementary projects; a mechanism for an annual follow-up to the transport consultations had also been set up. Preparations were under way for consultations on education, on training and employment and on small and medium-size enterprises to take place in the course of 1990. The conclusions of those consultations would be taken into account in the social and economic development plan for 1990-1995, currently being formulated by the Government with UNDP support.

Within the framework of its fourth (1987-1991) country programme for the Central African Republic and in co-ordination with the World Bank, AfDB, the United Nations Population Fund and France, UNDP was also providing support to national planning capacity and socio-economic management. At the sectoral level, UNDP was further co-operating with the World Bank in rural development; with the United States for the promotion of small and medium enterprises; and with other UN organs and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in such areas as health, education and protection of the environment.

As to Madagascar, the report stated that the Government was paying increased attention to the social and environmental dimensions of its structural adjustment programme. In line with its plans for a more equitable pattern of economic growth, it scheduled consultations with donors towards the end of 1990 in order to mobilize additional assistance for the social sectors, resource allocations for which had not kept pace with those of other sectors during the structural adjustment process. Consultations held with donors on the environment (Paris, February) had resulted in a 15-year environmental plan for the country. The next consultative group meeting of donors to Madagascar, held under World Bank auspices every two years for the purpose of coordinating assistance, was scheduled for the third quarter of 1990. Under consideration by Madagascar and UNDP was a master plan for a National Technical Co-operation Assessment and Programmes review of all technical co-operation received by the country, particularly the effectiveness of that assistance and the programming of priority needs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/230.

Assistance to Benin, the Central African Republic, Ecuador, Madagascar and Vanuatu

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/211 of 20 December 1988 on assistance to Benin, the Central African Republic, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Madagascar and Vanuatu and its previous resolutions on assistance to those countries,

Having considered the relevant report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned at the seriousness of the economic and financial crisis prevailing in these countries, which is heightened by the catastrophic effects of natural disasters,

Noting that, despite the structural adjustment programmes carried out by most of these countries, their economic and financial performance for the past two years has continued to be poor, and stressing the need for vigorous support of these programmes and for action to alleviate the impact of the adjustment policies being implemented, especially in the social sphere,

Noting that Benin is still facing a financial crisis, which reached its peak in 1989 as a result of the erosion of the tax base, the collapse of the banking system, the fall in productivity of the revenue services, the persistence of the consequences of the disastrous floods of 1988 and the economic crisis in the region,

Noting the grave difficulties that the Government of the Central African Republic has continued to face since 1982 in achieving the objectives of its development programme owing to the harmful effects of the international economic situation, and recognizing the need to provide it with more supplementary resources so as to enable it to achieve those objectives,

Bearing in mind the economic and financial consequences of the earthquakes of March 1987 in Ecuador and their negative impact on that country's balance of payments, and taking into account the fact that all the efforts made by the Government of Ecuador to improve that adverse situation have not produced the desired results, since the effects of the international economic crisis seriously impede the entire economic and social development process,

Noting that Madagascar's economic and social development efforts are being thwarted by the adverse effects of the cyclones and floods that afflict that country periodically, and that the implementation of reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes requires the mobilization of substantial resources that are beyond the country's real means,

Noting that Vanuatu, an island developing country, continues to experience severe constraints in its economic and social development as a consequence, inter alia, of the deterioration in the terms of trade for its export commodities and of a high population growth rate coupled with an absence of skilled manpower,

Noting the particularly difficult problems faced by island developing countries in responding to negative and special economic circumstances, as referred to in the report of the Secretary-General called for in General Assembly resolution 43/189 of 20 December 1988,

Taking note of the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, and mindful of the mutual commitments entered into on that occasion, as well as the importance to be attached to the follow-up to the Conference,

Having heard the statements of Member States at its forty-fifth session on the situations currently prevailing in those countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations for the assistance they have provided or pledged to those countries;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts undertaken by the Governments of those countries to overcome their economic and financial difficulties;

3. Reaffirms that all Governments and international organizations should fulfil the commitments undertaken within the framework of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, contained in the annex to its resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986, the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the Paris Declaration adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

4. Notes with concern that the assistance made available to those countries has not been adequate to meet their urgent requirements and that additional assistance is needed;

5. Appeals to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, humanitarian organizations and voluntary agencies to respond generously and urgently to the needs of those countries as identified in the report of the Secretary-General and to continue and increase their assistance in response to the reconstruction, economic recovery and development needs of those countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps and to mobilize the resources needed, in collaboration with the organs, agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, in accordance with resolution 43/211 on special programmes of economic assistance, to provide assistance for all disasters, natural or otherwise, striking those countries, both in order to meet any reconstruction needs resulting from disasters that have already occurred and in order to implement preventive programmes for reducing the effects of future disasters;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, containing:

(a) The identification of priorities for action by the international community;

(b) An assessment of the assistance actually received;

(c) An assessment of needs still unmet and specific proposals for responding to them effectively.

Chad

The Secretary-General, in his 2 August report [A/45/358], noted that a new development orientation plan was submitted by the Government of Chad to the third Round-table Conference of Donors to Chad (Geneva, 19-20 June). The plan identified three major objectives: increased agricultural production through modernization of productive structures, improved well-being of the population, and restoration of financial equilibrium. The strategy was for communities to assume more responsibility for executing the plan, with the State playing a correspondingly smaller role.

A number of sectoral consultations, to be convened by the Government in co-operation with UNDP in 1990 and 1991, were agreed upon at the Round-table Conference. They included consultations on education, training and employment; technical co-operation policy; the private sector; health and social affairs; environment and desertification; food security; rural development; and urban development. The 1989-1993 programme for the transport sector, aimed at rehabilitating communications infrastructure and strengthening the sector's institutions, continued to be carried out.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/223.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/176 of 19 December 1989 and its previous resolutions on assistance in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad and on special economic assistance to that country,

Recalling the round table on assistance to Chad, convened by the United Nations Development Programme at Geneva on 4 and 5 December 1985 in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad, held in November 1982,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General dealing with, inter alia, the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress made in organizing and executing the programme of assistance for that country,

Considering that the effects of war and recent natural calamities and disasters are compromising all the reconstruction and development efforts of the Government of Chad,

Noting with satisfaction that the third Round-table Conference of Donors to Chad, convened by the Government of Chad in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme, was held at Geneva on 19 and 20 June 1990 and that a development orientation plan was submitted to donors on that occasion by the Government of Chad,

Taking note of the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, and mindful of the mutual commitments entered into on that occasion,

Noting that the round tables on education, training and employment, technical co-operation, promotion of the private sector, health and social affairs, environment and the struggle against desertification, rural development, food security and water resources and urban development will be convened by the Government of Chad, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, in 1990 and 1991,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that responded and are continuing to respond generously to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties of Chad and to mobilize assistance for that country;

3. Renews the request made to all States, competent United Nations organizations and programmes and international economic and financial institutions to continue to contribute to the rehabilitation and development of Chad;

4. Expresses the wish that future round tables on Chad be held within the framework of the intensified follow-up decided on at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assess, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the areas of health and food, of the displaced populations;

6. Invites all States and competent United Nations organizations and programmes to participate actively in the different round tables scheduled to be held in 1990 and 1991 at N'Djamena;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Chad under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Djibouti

As recorded in the Secretary-General's August report [A/45/358], the several years of drought in Djibouti was followed in 1989 by torrential rains and severe floods that had left thousands homeless and damaged roads and public service infrastructure, thus further exacerbating an economy that had been deteriorating since 1985. Of an active population of 200,000, 10 per cent was employed in the public and parastatal sectors. The informal sector was limited to trade, given the lack of trained manpower and the virtual absence of manufacturing industries.

While the thousands of refugees who had poured into the country in the late 1970s had been largely repatriated in recent years under a programme of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), a new influx of some 50,000 refugees was reported, adding to the pressures on the country's already fragile health and educational facilities. To meet the needs of its suddenly enlarged population, Djibouti appealed for emergency assistance from UNHCR, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Food Programme (WFP) and a number of NGOs.

The Government had set up interministerial committees to study all aspects of projects in all sectors, thereby strengthening co-ordination of public investments. It had requested UNDP to implement a master plan for water resources utilization and to promote co-ordination of all activities in that sector. A donors' round table was under consideration with regard to the energy sector; in the meantime, UNDP continued to assist the Government in its exploration for geothermal energy in the central part of the Assal rift and in North Goubbet. With UNDP assistance, the Government decided to formulate a development plan that would serve as a framework for development operations and at the same time facilitate co-ordination of sectoral activities and strengthen the management capacity of various State authorities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/228.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/177 of 19 December 1989 and its previous relevant resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Taking note of the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, and mindful of the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion, as well as the importance to be attached to the follow-up to that Conference,

Deeply concerned about the extensive damage and devastation in Djibouti caused by the unprecedented torrential rains and floods in April 1989.

Noting with concern the destruction of thousands of dwellings, particularly in working-class areas, and the damage to major sectors of the national infrastructure, particularly the road network, the water supply, health centres and hospitals, educational establishments and other public services.

Considering the severe damage to the scarce agricultural resources of Djibouti, including the destruction of its livestock,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti, which is included in the list of least developed countries, are thwarted by the negative consequences of the torrential rains and floods that periodically devastate that vulnerable country, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of considerable resources, which exceed the real capacities of the country,

Noting also that the harsh climate and the chronic dryness preclude any agricultural activity of scale and that the persistent effects of a cyclical drought have devastating consequences for the already precarious economic and social development of Djibouti,

Noting with concern that the situation in Djibouti has been adversely affected by the recent events in the Horn of Africa, and noting the recent influx of over 50,000 persons displaced from their countries, which has placed serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of the country,

Noting the extremely critical economic situation of Djibouti, resulting from its geographical position and from the number of priority development projects that have been suspended in the light of the new critical international situation,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990 and to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to emergency relief operations during the floods in 1989 by various countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Declares its solidarity with the Government and people of Djibouti in the face of the devastating consequences of the torrential rains and floods and the new and difficult economic realities of Djibouti;

2. Endorses the evaluations and the recommendations of the various missions dispatched to Djibouti, which Secretary-General takes into account in his report;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system and in close collaboration with the Government authorities, to carry out a re-evaluation of the requirements of Djibouti, in the light of its new and pressing needs, with a view to drawing up not only an urgent programme of rehabilitation and reconstruction, but also a sustained and suitable long-term development programme;

4. Calls upon all States, all regional and inter-regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and other intergovernmental agencies, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Bank, to provide Djibouti with substantial and appropriate assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, to enable it to cope with its special economic difficulties;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to arrange for a study of the economic situation of Djibouti and of the progress made in the organization and implementation of the new special programme of economic assistance for the country, in time for the question to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Front-line and neighbouring States

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/181 [YUN 1989, p. 341], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/479 & Corr.1] containing information from 11 Member States and 14 UN organs and specialized agencies on special assistance provided to the front-line States of Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, as well as to other neighbouring States affected by economic measures taken either by South Africa or by the international community against South Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/224.

Special assistance to the front-line States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/199 of 8 December 1986, 42/201 of 11 December 1987, 43/209 of 20 December 1988 and 44/181 of 19 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on special assistance to front-line States and other neighbouring States,

Reaffirming the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, contained in the annex to its resolution S-16/1 of 4 December 1989, in particular paragraph 9 (e) thereof, in which the States Members of the United Nations decided to render all possible assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States to enable them to rebuild their economies, which have been adversely affected by South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization, and to withstand any further acts,

Aware that the continuing existence of the apartheid system in South Africa aggravates economic and social problems confronting the front-line States and other neighbouring States,

Noting the evolving situation in South Africa,

Conscious of the urgent need and responsibility of the international community to address the problems affecting the region,

Mindful of Security Council resolutions 568(1985) of 21 June 1985, 571(1985) of 20 September 1985 and 581(1986) of 13 February 1986, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the international community to render assistance to the front-line States,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to the front-line States;

2. Notes with appreciation the assistance being rendered to the front-line States by donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

3. Expresses its deep concern about the adverse effects of past acts of aggression and continued destabilization undertaken directly or indirectly through surrogates against front-line States and other neighbouring States;

4. Strongly urges the international community to continue to provide in a timely and effective manner the financial, material and technical assistance necessary to enhance the individual and collective capacity of the front-line States and other neighbouring States to withstand the effects of economic measures taken by South Africa, or by the international community against South Africa, in accordance with their national and regional plans and strategies;

5. Requests the Secretary-General and organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to respond to such requests for assistance as might be forthcoming from individual States or the appropriate subregional organizations, and further urges all States and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to respond favourably to such requests;

6. Appeals to all States and appropriate intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the national and collective emergency programmes prepared by the front-line States and other neighbouring States to overcome the critical problems arising from the situation in South Africa;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Central America

In response to General Assembly resolutions 42/231 and 43/210 [YUN 1988, pp. 307 & 3081, as well as 44/182 [YUN 1989, p. 342], the Secretary-General submitted a 10 October report [A/45/622] stating that the Presidents of the five Central American countries—Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua—at their summit meeting in April 1990 (Montelimar, Nicaragua) appealed to the international community to increase its financial and technical support for their countries' socio-economic recovery and expressed satisfaction at the progress made in the implementation of the 1988 Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America [YUN 1988, p. 306]. At a subsequent summit meeting (Antigua, Guatemala, 15-17 June), the Presidents, through the Antigua Declaration and the Central American Economic Plan of Action adopted at the meeting, outlined a joint strategy for achieving economic development with equity, based on the modernization of production structures to ensure the integration of the Central American economies in the world market. Through its implementation mechanism, the Special Plan would take due account of the goals and priorities set in the Antigua Declaration and Economic Plan of Action.

Within the framework of the agreed mechanism for the Special Plan's implementation, the second meeting of the Support Committee for the Special Plan was held in February 1990, as was the first meeting of the Policies and Projects Committee. Those meetings made it possible to define criteria for the identification of priority technical co-operation and pre-investment projects, to evaluate project proposals and approve 6 and 12-month plans. UNDP met periodically with the five Central American Governments and the Permanent Secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration, the technical secretariat for those meetings, and, on a number of occasions, with other subregional organizations, in order to streamline the implementation of the Special Plan and make it more effective. The UN system was also helping the five Governments to organize sectoral meetings or direct negotiations with the co-operating community on health, agriculture, the Central American Monetary Stabilization Fund, micro, small and medium-sized businesses, telecommunications, nutrition and the road network. At the request of those Governments, UNDP, as co-ordinating agency for the Special Plan, convened the first meeting (San Salvador, El Salvador, 3-4 April) for the electricity sector. Fourteen countries and seven intergovernmental organizations attended; 98 profiles of technical assistance and investment projects totalling $231 million were presented and analysed; and a total of $47 million was pledged.

Since the Special Plan's inception, 43 technical assistance projects amounting to $20,441,000 had been approved or were at the final stages of approval. Of that amount, $12,630,000 was to come from the UNDP Special Programme Resources, the balance to be funded by co-financing or parallel financing modalities. Alternative funding in the amount of $3,863,000 was under consideration for several new projects and for the expansion of existing ones. In June, the Central American Governments requested the UNDP Governing Council to allocate $20 million from the Special Programme Resources to finance activities that were under way or about to begin under the fifth (1992-1994) programming cycle.

As required by the Concerted Plan of Action in favour of Central American Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons, UNDP organized the first international meeting (New York, 27-28 June) of the Follow-up Committee of the 1989 International Conference on Central American Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 709], at which were presented 59 prioritized projects costing $186 million and intended to benefit 445,000 people. Of that amount, $161 million was requested from the international community, against which donors pledged $98.8 million. The Programme in favour of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Returnees in Central America, one of the main channels for implementing the Concerted Plan of Action and financed by Italy, received the first $16 million in July.

A UNDP technical assistance project executed by UNCTAD and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean provided support for the establishment of a computerized information system on the debt of each Central American country. In August, a project was approved for devising alternative solutions to the intraregional debt resulting from past trade imbalances. Through an UNCTAD-executed project under the Special Plan, support was also being provided to rationalize, simplify, harmonize and automate trade procedures. Also in August, a proposal by the five countries was approved whereby UNCTAD would provide them with technical assistance and training in their negotiations for admission to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The International Trade Centre (UNCTAD/GATT) prepared a technical co-operation programme for the promotion and development of Central American exports.

UNICEF financed major national projects in favour of the most vulnerable groups in Central America. UNDP, with other international organizations, supported proposals designed to offset the effects of adjustment programmes or to enhance the situation of the lowest income groups. Other programmes included a UNDP-financed project on nutrition, and assistance in the restructuring of the Central American Bank for Economic Integration to strengthen its financial structure and operational systems.

UNDP consideration. The UNDP Administrator, in a 19 April report [DP/1990/85], traced recent developments in the implementation of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, emphasizing its role in resource mobilization through sectoral and thematic meetings between the Central American Governments and the international donor community. Information was also provided on commitments in terms of technical assistance projects financed by UNDP and on the overall financial situation of its Special Programme Resources allocation.

The Governing Council, on 22 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/31)], encouraged the UNDP Division for Central America to continue to implement the goals and objectives of the Special Plan. It took note of the request of the Central American Governments that the Governing Council allocate funds for the Special Plan from the Special Programme Resources for the fifth programming cycle in support of the peace process in the region. It decided that UNDP should continue to fulfil its role as set out in the Special Plan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/231.

Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/1 of 7 October 1987, 42/204 of December 1987, 43/24 of 15 November 1988 and 44/10 of 23 October 1989, and decisions 88/31 A of 1 July 1988, 89/64 of 30 June 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, and taking note of Governing Council decision 90/31 of 20 June 1990,

Recalling in particular its resolutions 42/231 of 12 May 1988, 43/210 of 20 December 1988 and 44/182 of 19 December 1989, in which it urged the international community and international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with the Central American countries within the framework of the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America,

Reiterating the importance of the commitments made by the Central American Presidents in the agreement signed at Guatemala City at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, the declarations adopted at Alajuela, Costa Rica, and Costa del Sol, El Salvador, and the agreements reached at Tela, Honduras, Montelimar, Nicaragua, and at the most recent summit meeting held at Antigua, Guatemala, from 15 to 17 June 1990,

Recognizing the importance of the efforts made by the Secretary-General with respect to the situation in Central America and the ongoing involvement of the United Nations in economic co-operation in the region,

Especially concerned about the need to continue responding to the emergency situation in Central America, and alarmed at the seriousness of the economic and social crisis that the region faces,

Bearing in mind the importance of the Special Plan for setting economic and social development priorities and strengthening the capacity to design and implement regional projects in a large number of sectors and the unprecedented technical negotiating effort that has been required on the part of the five Central American countries,

Bearing in mind also the appeal made by the Central American Governments at the thirty-seventh session of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, held at Geneva from 28 May to 23 June 1990, for the allocation of financial resources so that implementation of the projects and programmes of the Special Plan may continue,

Considering that the implementation of the Special Plan has made it possible to work out new joint strategies for economic and social development and has deepened the regional peace and democratization process, as reflected in the Central American Economic Plan of Action, which emerged from the summit meeting held at Antigua, Guatemala, in June 1990,

Expressing its satisfaction at the performance of the United Nations Development Programme in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it for the co-ordination of the Special Plan,

Reaffirming its conviction that peace, development and democracy are inseparable,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America, which contains information on the status of implementation of the Special Plan;

2. Decides to extend the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America for an additional three-year period beginning in 1991;

3. Stresses the importance of the new directions in regional development that have emerged from the summit meetings of the Presidents of Central American countries and, in particular, from the meeting held at Antigua, Guatemala, at which the Central American Economic Plan of Action was approved;

4. Recommends that, through the existing machinery for the implementation of the Special Plan, due account be taken of the goals and priorities set in the Antigua Declaration and the Central American Economic Plan of Action;

5. Welcomes with satisfaction the Joint Political Declaration and Joint Economic Communique of the Dublin Ministerial Conference on Political Dialogue and Economic Co-operation between the member States of the European Community and the countries of Central America and the Contadora Group, held at Dublin on 9 and 10 April 1990, in which they reaffirmed their commitment to continue to participate in the reactivation and economic and social development of the region;

6. Also welcomes with satisfaction the renewal of the San Jose Agreement (Central American energy co-operation programme) in August 1990 by the Governments of the Central American countries and the Governments of Mexico and Venezuela;

7. Welcomes with satisfaction the Declaration of the first international meeting of the Follow-up Committee of the International Conference on Central American Refugees, held in New York on 27 and 28 June 1990;

8. Calls upon Member States and observers, intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions, the organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system and regional and subregional organs and institutions to participate actively in and adopt immediate measures for the implementation of activities in support of the goals and objectives of the Special Plan, taking into account the difficult social and economic situation faced by the Central American countries, and to support the projects submitted by those countries within the framework of the machinery set up under the Special Plan;

9. Emphasizes the urgent need for the international community to increase its technical assistance to the Central American countries and to provide them with adequate additional financial resources on favourable and concessional terms;

10. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to consider the request made by the Governments of the Central American countries for appropriate financial assistance for the Special Plan during the fifth programming cycle;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the progress made in implementing the Special Plan;

12. Decides to review and appraise the implementation of the Special Plan at its forty-sixth session.

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (AI45/856) without vote, 20 November (meeting 46); 47-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.34) orally revised; agenda item 86.

Ecuador

In resolution 45/230 of 21 December, the General Assembly referred to the economic and financial consequences of the March 1987 earthquakes in Ecuador and their negative impact on its balance of payments and to the fact that the Government's efforts to improve that adverse situation had not produced the desired results, since the effects of the international economic crisis seriously impeded the entire economic and social development process. The Assembly thus appealed to Member States, international financial institutions, the UN system, humanitarian organizations and voluntary agencies to respond generously and urgently to the reconstruction, economic recovery and development needs of Ecuador.

Lebanon

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/180 [YUN 1989, p. 344], the Secretary-General submitted a 9 October report [A/45/566] describing the assistance programmes of the UN system for Lebanon and the general situation in the country as it affected those programmes. The report noted some improvement at the political level, including the establishment late in 1989 of a new Government, but that continuing hostilities in various parts of the country were having negative economic and social repercussions. The country's infrastructure had suffered enormous destruction and damage, especially its water, electricity and telecommunications networks, as had its hospitals, schools, public administration buildings, industries and businesses, and private property, including damage to some 25,000 housing units. The value of the Lebanese pound (LL) had depreciated to a historic low of LL 664 to the United States dollar and foreign reserves had plummeted to $600 million at the end of June 1990, down 40 per cent from a year earlier. The environment for programme implementation remained difficult and conditions in conflict zones, where unpredictability governed every facet of life, made assistance operations even more difficult.

The report stated that, despite serious security set-backs, the UN system maintained a minimum presence in the country and continued to implement its core activities in emergency humanitarian-an and relief assistance and in the rehabilitation of public services. It described in detail the specific projects and activities undertaken by UNDP, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) UNHCR, UNICEF, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, FAO, the International Labour Organisation, UNESCO, WFP and the World Health Organization. Because of the lack of political stability and continuing violence, significant reconstruction and development projects were not possible. The United Nations was thus chiefly focused on providing assistance in planning and implementing relief and essential rehabilitation programmes.

Given the concern about reduced funding for Lebanon in 1990, a Donor Information Meeting was held at UNDRO (Geneva, 26 June) to brief the donor community on the socio-economic situation in the country and on the unmet priority needs of its war-affected population, for which resources were to be mobilized. It was the Secretary-General's hope that, while the situation did not permit expanding emergency relief efforts to reconstruction and development, the international community would in the meantime provide support for his Trust Fund for Lebanon and UNDRO in order to meet those needs.

As at 31 July, the total value of emergency assistance to Lebanon amounted to $8.73 million, of which $2.27 million was given to UNDRO. The most significant development during the period under review was the proposal by Algeria, Morocco and Saudi Arabia to create an international fund of up to $2 billion for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/66.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/180 of 19 December 1989 and previous Assembly resolutions concerning international assistance for the reconstruction of Lebanon, in which the Assembly called upon the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to expand and intensify their programmes of assistance in response to the needs of Lebanon,

Aware of the deteriorating socio-economic conditions of the Lebanese people and the magnitude of their unmet needs,

Noting with great concern the unprecedented inflation in Lebanon during the past five years and the catastrophic erosion in the value of the Lebanese pound,

Appeals to all Member States and all the organizations of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their efforts to mobilize all possible assistance to the Government of Lebanon in its efforts for reconstruction and development, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/112) without vote, 19 July (meeting 13); 22-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.4); agenda item 14.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/225.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/180 of 19 December 1989 and its previous resolutions on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/66 of 26 July 1990 and recalling the relevant resolutions and decisions previously adopted by the Council,

Noting with deep concern the grave deterioration of the economic situation in Lebanon, compounded recently by the severe drop in remittances, the loss of a major export market and the subsequent sharp decline in the value of the Lebanese pound on the exchange market, owing in particular to the situation between Iraq and Kuwait,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further international action to assist the Government of Lebanon in its continuing efforts for reconstruction and development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the statement made before the Second Committee of the General Assembly on 22 October 1990 on behalf of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Lebanon;

2. Commends the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs and Secretariat Services for his co-ordination of system-wide assistance to Lebanon;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts;

4. Calls upon the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their programmes of assistance and to expand them in response to the pressing needs of Lebanon, and to take the steps necessary to ensure that their offices in Beirut are operational and adequately staffed at the senior level;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/225

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/656) without vote, 20 November (meeting 46); 17-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.16). orally revised; agenda item 56.

Vanuatu

In resolution 45/230 of 21 December, the General Assembly noted that the island developing country of Vanuatu continued to experience severe constraints in its economic and social development as a consequence, inter alia, of the deterioration in the terms of trade for its export commodities and of a high population growth rate, coupled with an absence of skilled manpower. It appealed to Member States, international financial institutions, the UN system, humanitarian organizations and voluntary agencies to respond generously and urgently to the reconstruction, economic recovery and development needs of Vanuatu.

Yemen

In his August report [A/45/358] on special programmes of economic assistance, the Secretary-General noted that on 22 May 1990, the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen had merged to form a single sovereign State called the Republic of Yemen (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). He said that, although unification was expected to result progressively in stronger political and economic structures, the country's rehabilitation and reconstruction requirements resulting from the floods of 1982 [YUN 1982, P. 709] and 1989 [YUN 1989, P. 349] represented a major additional cost to the economic and social costs of Yemen's complex unification process. Those developments, he added, had brought to the fore the country's need to build a national capacity to manage both development and disaster recovery programmes.

In the period under review, Yemen had introduced measures to loosen the centralized control of its economy, one of which permitted agricultural and marine products to be marketed directly by their producers rather than through government marketing corporations. In development planning, emphasis had shifted to the minerals sector, with priority given to oil exploration and pipeline construction. According to the latest official figures, outlays on the oil sector had increased from 39 per cent of development expenditures in 1988 to 43 per cent in 1989. Total development expenditures had increased from 165.4 million Yemeni dinars (YD) in 1988 to YD

187 million in 1989. As the deficit on the balance of payments rose, both exports and imports fell from their 1988 levels, and the downward trend in net private remittances, largely from expatriate workers, continued.

As noted in the Secretary-General's further report of 25 October [A/45/669], hard currency earnings had decreased for three consecutive years to $104 million, representing less than two thirds of the interest due on the country's external debt in 1988, and the situation had worsened in recent months. As also noted, a September note from the Government had confirmed that the impact on the country of the situation between Iraq and Kuwait had resulted in an initial loss of $1,684 million, not taking into account the economic and social impact of some 35,000 Yemeni workers returning from Kuwait, compounded by the return of some 400,000 others from Saudi Arabia.

The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 developing countries, at their fourteenth annual meeting (New York, 3 October 1990) [A/45/584], requested the international community to assist the newly united country in the promotion of its socio-economic structures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/193.

The unification of Yemen: support of the international community for its economic and social infrastructure

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the merger on 22 May 1990 of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen to form a single sovereign State called the Republic of Yemen,

Taking into consideration the declaration adopted at the fourteenth annual meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the members of the Group of Seventy-seven, held in New York on 3 October 1990, in which the world community was requested to render support for the economic and social infrastructure of Yemen to assist it in achieving prosperity for its people,

Realizing the difficult economic situation facing Yemen as a result of the merger of the economic and social infrastructure of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen following their unification, in addition to the new economic and social burden resulting from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait,

1. Expresses its solidarity with Yemen in its efforts to overcome these conditions;
2. Calls upon States and governmental and international non-governmental organizations to extend their assistance in support of the national efforts to improve the economic and social infrastructure of Yemen;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to assist in mobilizing resources and to consider, in accordance with the resolution on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Yemen to be adopted by the General Assembly at the present session, developing a comprehensive programme to assess the needs of Yemen resulting from the unification, in order to enable the international community to extend assistance to meet those needs;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1992.

Disaster relief

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

On 16 October, the Secretary-General submitted a progress report [A/45/621] on the implementation of the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, which began on 1 January 1990. The Decade (1990-1999) had been proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1989 in its resolution 44/236 [YUN 1989, p. 355].

The report described the organizational arrangements made by the Secretary-General and the activities undertaken for the Decade by the international community and the UN system. The report stated that, in accordance with the International Framework of Action, 71 Governments had established national committees or focal points as at 20 September for the purpose of attaining the objectives of the Decade. The Framework of Action envisaged the establishment of such committees and called for policy measures at the national level, action by the UN system, organizational arrangements to include the establishment of a special high-level council, a scientific and technical committee and a secretariat, and financial arrangements.

The report noted the emergence of two groups of national activities. Several countries had taken steps to improve awareness of their vulnerability to natural disasters and were undertaking national mitigation policies and programmes designed to reduce that vulnerability. Other countries with strong scientific and technological capabilities to assist in disaster mitigation were concentrating on international co-operation in terms of organizing policy discussions, scientific symposia and other meetings to discuss disaster mitigation plans and improve the understanding of the potential of preventive policies. Some countries were reviewing the level of resources committed to disaster relief and were considering investing more in disaster prevention. A major priority identified was the need for central substantive guidance for disaster mitigation policies and for programmes focusing on the application of scientific and technological knowledge and on public awareness.

The report highlighted national initiatives and events undertaken by a number of countries, including those in the Caribbean, and gave an overview of follow-up action by various organs, programmes and specialized agencies of the UN system. Also highlighted were the activities of the following scientific and technical communities: the International Council of Scientific Unions, the International Association for Seismology and Physics of the Earth's Interior and the International Union of Geological Sciences.

At the time of reporting, consultations had taken place on the establishment of a Special High-Level Council and constitution of the Scientific and Technical Committee was in progress. Establishment in Geneva of the secretariat of the Decade had been completed, with a full-time staff composed of a Director, who assumed his duties on 6 June, a principal officer, a senior officer and two secretaries. Other experts and specialists were being provided by several Governments and by a number of relevant UN specialized agencies, in addition to staff support and services from the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). Focal points and liaison representatives of several UN organizations had been named. As called for by resolution 44/236, the Secretary-General had designated the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation as the focal point for oversight and co-ordination of the programmes and activities of the UN system, chairing the United Nations Steering Committee for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction in the exercise of that role; more formal co-ordination was being carried out by the Inter-Agency Working Group on the Decade, under the chairmanship of the Director of the Decade secretariat. The Secretary-General had also established the Trust Fund for the Decade on 1 January. He reiterated his request for voluntary contributions to the Fund made in March, when he brought the Decade to the attention of all Governments.

The report drew attention to the International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction, on 10 October, in observance of which national conferences and other events had been planned. Japan, on 29 October [A/C.2/45/13], transmitted the concluding statement of the international conference (Yokohama, 27 September-3 October) that it hosted in observance of the Decade's first year and to welcome the first annual International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction.

Annexed to the report were: a list of national committees and/or focal points for the Decade, a calendar of Decade-related events in 1990-1991, an activity matrix for the Decade, project-related contributions of UNDRR to the Decade, and information received from Austria, Belgium and Spain on their participation in existing international protocols and conventions for mutual assistance in cases of disaster.

CPC/ACC Joint meetings. At the twenty-fifth series of Joint Meetings held by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (New York, 25-26 October) [E/1990/123], ways of promoting international efforts to mitigate the impact of natural disasters and effectively to support the Decade's objectives were discussed. The Committees were in general agreement that greater efforts should be made to address disaster prevention and mitigation as part of the development process, and that, accordingly, the UN system should give priority to the integration of disaster prevention and/or mitigation in its development programmes. The collective capacity of the United Nations to provide early warning and/or identification of emerging trends or hazardous phenomena could be enhanced, as could the international community's capacity to prevent disasters by promoting technical assistance, technological capacities, training programmes and greater information flow. A reliable data base on natural disasters could be an important tool for decision-making. In emphasizing the need for intensified efforts to implement the goals and objectives of the Decade, the Committees stressed the roles of the High-Level Council, the Scientific and Technical Committee and the Decade secretariat, and urged the prompt establishment of all mechanisms envisaged by Assembly resolution 44/236. Countries, especially those prone to disasters, should, with UN assistance, devise national strategies to prevent and mitigate disasters. The Scientific and Technical Committee should develop, in co-ordination with related UN system programmes, a framework programme for the Decade, giving particular attention to priorities determined by Member States. The Secretary-General should take measures to ensure the necessary financial support for implementing the Decade's activities.

By decision 1990/290 of 9 November, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Chairmen of CPC and ACC on the Joint Meetings, endorsed their conclusions and recommendations and decided to transmit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/185.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/169 of 9 December 1987 and 43/202 of 20 December 1988 on natural disaster reduction and 44/236 of 22 December 1989, in which it proclaimed the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to demonstrate the strong political determination required to mobilize and use existing scientific and technical knowledge to mitigate natural disasters, bearing in mind in particular the needs of developing countries,

Noting with satisfaction that more than seventy Governments have informed the Secretary-General that they have established national committees or focal points for the purpose of attaining the objective and goals of the Decade,

Reconfirming the important responsibility of the United Nations system as a whole for promoting international co-operation in order to mitigate natural disasters, provide assistance and co-ordinate disaster relief, preparedness and prevention,

Noting the establishment of the Trust Fund for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, expressing appreciation to those countries that have so far contributed or pledged voluntary contributions to the Fund and, at the same time, expressing concern that the resources available to the United Nations for the activities of the Decade are insufficient in relation to the requirements,

Taking note of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the Decade,

Noting that the celebration in the United Nations of the International Day for Natural Disaster Reduction was not possible in 1990, and stressing the importance of observance by the United Nations of the Day in future years in a manner befitting the objectives and goals of the Decade,

Taking note of the relevant conclusions of the twenty-fifth series of Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, held on 25 and 26 October 1990,

1. Urges the international community to implement fully the International Framework of Action for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, contained in the annex to resolution 44/236 and, in particular:

(a) Invites Member States that have not yet done so to establish national committees or suitable focal points;

(b) Requests the Secretary-General to expedite his efforts to complete organizational and financial arrangements in accordance with sections D and E of the International Framework of Action;

(c) Appeals to the international community, in particular to donor countries, for financial contributions to the Trust Fund for the Decade;

(d) Urges all countries to adopt policies which give priority to disaster mitigation measures;

2. Notes with deep concern that organizational arrangements have not been fully established and implemented in accordance with section D of the International Framework of Action;

3. Reaffirms the important role played by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation as the focal point for overview and co-ordination of the programmes and activities of the United Nations system for the Decade, in accordance with section C of the International Framework of Action, and with his mandate, as set out in its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, and invites the Director-General to give momentum to those programmes and activities;

4. Reaffirms also the need for the secretariat of the Decade to work in close association and co-operation with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, bearing in mind the specific responsibilities and functions in the field of disaster prevention and preparedness entrusted to that Office by General Assembly resolution 2816(XXI) of 14 December 1971;

5. Stresses the need for the secretariat of the Decade to work closely with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, while providing substantive and secretariat support to the Special High-Level Council, the Scientific and Technical Committee and to related activities, and to report to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation through the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to assist, in co-operation with relevant organizations of the United Nations system, in the formulation and implementation, during the Decade, of public information programmes aimed at raising awareness of disaster prevention among the general public;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the progress in the implementation of the programmes and activities of the Decade, including the identification of constraints in that regard, with appropriate attention to the status of existing international protocols and conventions for mutual assistance in cases of disaster, in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 44/236.

Office of UN Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

The Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) continued in 1990 its international disaster relief and mitigation activities. In a report submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council covering UNDRO's activities for 1990-1991 [A/47/288-E/1992/94], the Secretary-General described relief co-ordination, response facilitation, including UN system and international preparedness, disaster mitigation and information management. Major disasters requiring UNDRO involvement in 1990 included those occasioned by the civil strife in Liberia, the ongoing conflict in Mozambique, the earthquake in Iran and the Iraq-Kuwait crisis. UNDRO also led inter-agency missions to assess needs caused by drought in Peru and floods in Malawi, and participated in other assessment missions, notably to Lebanon and Somalia. The designation of the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator as Special Representative of the Secretary-General in the inter-agency missions to Bangladesh, Iran and Jordan added weight to UNDRO's co-ordination efforts.

Under the UN regular budget, UNDRO had at its disposal a reserve of $360,000 a year for the biennium 1990-1991 for immediate cash grants in cases of disasters, channelled mostly through the UNDP/UNDRO resident representatives, to meet part of the most urgent needs or to facilitate development of concerted relief programmes through "seed money". In 1990, UNDRO gave cash grants amounting to $364,000 to 18 countries devastated by cyclones, typhoons, floods, drought and earthquakes or burdened by large movements of displaced persons, evacuees and returnees. UNDRO also issued a total of 132 new or updated situation reports on 22 disaster-affected countries and on the Middle East/Gulf region.

Measures to strengthen co-ordination efforts in the context of the Iraq-Kuwait crisis not only provided valuable experience for future operations, but also featured pioneering innovations, including the development of an action plan for system-wide preparedness with regard to migrant populations; the attribution of tasks to agencies according to their expertise; the establishment of a United Nations Inter-Agency Working Group and a central funding mechanism; and the appointment of Senior United Nations Emergency Managers for Iran, Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey, who supported resident co-ordinators in information, resource mobilization and co-ordination.

With Germany's support, UNDRO convened the International Conference on Telecommunications for Disaster Management (Geneva, 19-21 March), which brought together manufacturers/suppliers of communications hardware and services, and users from the international disaster management community. The Conference, whose object was to speed up the flow of vital information in disaster relief and mitigation activities, recommended measures to facilitate the entry, exit and operation of communications (notably satellite) equipment, including the establishment of internationally approved legal instruments for the purpose. Contacts were made with specialized experts to implement those recommendations.

On the basis of a study by two consultants in emergency management and training, the Disaster Management Training Programme was launched in July under joint UNDP/UNDRO management. The Programme provided a framework and a series of catalytic activities for the global development of disaster management training. UNDRO's working relationship with NGOs expanded further during the biennium. The Joint Consultative Meeting on UNDRO/NGO Co-operation (Geneva, 1-2 March) reviewed topics of common concern to disaster managers.

In addition to the foregoing report, the Secretary-General, on 1 June 1990, also submitted to the Assembly through the Council his report on UNDRO activities for the biennium 1988-1989 [A/45/271-E/1990/78 & corr.1].

Financing

UNDRO activities continued to be financed mainly from the UN regular budget and from voluntary contributions to a number of trust funds administered by the Disaster Relief Co-ordinator. General Assembly resolution 45/252 A on the UN programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 appropriated $7,315,800 for UNDRO. Contributions channelled directly through UNDRO in 1990 were estimated at between $103 million and $107 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/63.

Assistance in cases of natural disasters and other disaster situations: Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971, 3243(XXIX) of 29 November 1974, 36/225 of 17 December 1981, 38/202 of 20 December 1983 and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council related to the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 44/236 of 22 December 1989, by which the Assembly proclaimed, in paragraph 5 of the annex to the resolution, the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, and requested the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator with adequate means to enable it to discharge its specific responsibilities and functions in disaster prevention and preparedness, in accordance with Assembly resolution 2816(XXVI),

Deeply concerned about the additional economic burden placed on the developing countries by the increasing number of natural disasters and other disaster situations and in overcoming the long-term consequences of those disasters,

Recognizing the contribution made by the United Nations system to relieve the suffering of the victims and to provide humanitarian relief in natural disasters and other disaster situations,

Noting with appreciation the effective response of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to recent major disasters,

Expensing appreciation for the contribution made by the donor community, including Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, in supporting international relief operations,

Recognizing that the shortage of resources has been one of the major constraints on the response of the United Nations to disaster situations and that continued efforts will be required from the international community to provide both funds and assistance in kind to ensure such an effective response by the United Nations to disaster situations,

Reaffirming that the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator is, within the United Nations system, the focal point for disaster matters and therefore should be provided by the donor community, the United Nations and the other organizations of the United Nations system with the support necessary for it to discharge its responsibilities in the area of disaster relief and mitigation,

Reaffirming also that the primary responsibility for the administration of disaster relief operations and for disaster preparedness lies with the Governments of the affected countries and recognizing that available resources and efforts are being devoted by the Governments of those countries towards the alleviation of disaster-related problems,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and of the statement made by the Co-ordinator before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Economic and Social Council on 11 July 1990;

2. Reaffirms the mandate of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, established by the General Assembly in resolution 2816(XXVI) as the focal point in the United Nations system for matters related to disaster relief and disaster mitigation;

3. Welcomes the close co-operation between the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the United Nations Development Programme with regard to disaster management;

4. Affirms the need for the secretariat of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction to work in close association with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 44/236;

5. Encourages the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in its efforts to strengthen further its co-operation with non-governmental organizations, as well as with governmental emergency relief services;

6. Notes with satisfaction the efforts made by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in strengthening its information systems and the exploration into the use of new telecommunication technology for disaster mitigation and relief efforts;

7. Emphasizes the essential need for the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to be placed and kept on a sound financial basis and appeals to Governments for voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the strengthening of the Office to enable it to cover expenses in connection with increasing disaster relief operations and disaster mitigation assistance;

8. Appeals to Governments to make urgent voluntary contributions, directly or channelled through the Trust Funds of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to enable the Office to cover the contingency expenses in connection with disaster relief operations;

9. Appeals further to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the Trust Fund for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction in order to enhance the capacity of implementing planned programmes and activities;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator with the support necessary for it to discharge its mandate and to continue to respond to the increasing requests from developing countries for relief and technical assistance;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to include information on the implementation of the present resolution in his next biennial report on the Office, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1992.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/63
26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote
Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/111) without vote, 20 July (meeting 15); draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (E/1990/C.3/L.7), orally revised by Vice-Chairman following informal consultations; agenda item 13.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/221.

Strengthening of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the increasing vulnerability of countries, in particular developing countries, to natural and other sudden disasters,

Aware of the profound negative impact of such disasters on the economic and social growth of developing countries,

Recognizing the imperative need to ensure a reduction of damage caused by disasters, through the timely adoption of appropriate preventive measures and by means of rapid and effective response when disasters occur,

Reaffirming that the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator is the focal point within the United Nations system for matters related to disaster relief and disaster mitigation,

Having noted the constraints and difficulties currently facing the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in the discharge of its mandate, as set out in paragraph 1 of General Assembly resolution 2816(XXVI) of 14 December 1971,

1. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/63 of 26 July 1990 concerning the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator;

2. Requests the Secretary-General in this connection, taking into account, inter alia, the experience gained by the Office of the Co-ordinator in the situation between Iraq and Kuwait, to make proposals to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991 for the strengthening of the capacity of the Office of the Co-ordinator to fulfil its mandate, which are to be included in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 in the light of an overall analysis of the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to calls for disaster mitigation and emergency relief assistance and of the role played by the Office of the Co-ordinator in this field which should address, inter alia, the implementation of General Assembly decision 42/433 of 11 December 1987 and the strengthening of arrangements for the response to complex emergencies;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider, within the framework of the overall analysis described in paragraph 2 above, the need to adapt further, in the case of the Office of the Co-ordinator, existing United Nations procedures concerning the procurement, transport and storage of emergency supplies, including the establishment of special warehouses as needed, in order to permit the Office to respond in a timely manner to the special and immediate requirements of countries exposed to sudden disasters;

4. Recognizes the importance for the Office of the Co-ordinator to be in a position immediately to provide small emergency grants to countries stricken by disasters to meet their most immediate needs;

5. Notes, in that respect, the pressure on existing budgetary provisions for present and future needs during the biennium 1990-1991;

6. Requests the Economic and Social Council to review the situation at its second regular session of 1991 and authorizes the Office of the Co-ordinator, pending that review, to continue to make grants available to disaster-stricken countries, not to exceed 50,000 United States dollars per disaster, out of the existing reserve of 360,000 dollars allocated for that purpose in the programme budget of the Office for the biennium 1990-1991;

7. Calls upon Governments and private and voluntary organizations to make generous cash contributions to the existing contingency relief fund of the Office of the Co-ordinator so as to provide it with the flexibility necessary to address specific needs created by sudden disaster situations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to include information on the implementation of the present resolution tion in his next biennial report on the Office of the Coordinator, which will be submitted to the General Assembly on an exceptional basis at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991.

Sudano-Sahelian office

Under UNDP supervision, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) continued in 1990 to assist the 22 countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region covered by its mandate in drought preparedness, desertification control, and protection, rehabilitation and management of natural productive resources. The UNDP Administrator noted in a report of 3 April 1991 [DP/1991/45] that rainfall in the region in 1990 had been significantly below average, resulting in lower agricultural output and increased stress on production systems, thus further reducing national capacities for achieving self-sufficiency.

According to the report, UNSO's 1990 programme provided assistance for the establishment or strengthening of the institutional capacity of Governments to design, implement or monitor programmes in the sound management of natural resources, as well as training, education and sensitization programmes aimed at the broadest possible participation in development activities. Assistance also covered co-ordination at the national and international levels, and mobilization of resources. Overall financial support for those programmes, including the establishment of ecological monitoring facilities, amounted to over $3 million, funded mainly from UNSO's General Resources. In implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification [YUN 1977, p. 509] in the Sudano-Sahelian region of Africa on behalf of UNEP, UNSO drew up assistance projects to implement the national action plans of Cape Verde, Chad and Senegal. In Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, the Niger and the United Republic of Tanzania, it initiated and/or intensified support to national focal points charged with preparing or implementing conservation strategies or environmental action plans and helped to harmonize activities under those strategies and plans; it also contributed to assistance being provided by the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN) to Ethiopia in the preparation of a national conservation strategy.

In Uganda, it proposed a programme of assistance to strengthen the Ministry of Environmental Protection and the office of the Minister of State for Karamoja, which was responsible for developing that area of the country most seriously affected by desertification. Together with the World Bank, UNSO supported preparation of environmental action plans for Guinea and Benin, concentrating on land degradation and desertification problems; similar action plans had been initiated for the Gambia, Ghana and Togo. To facilitate co-ordination, UNSO organized a meeting on the harmonization of strategic planning frameworks, with FAO, the World Bank, UNEP and IUCN in attendance.

In preparation for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, scheduled for 1992, UNSO, together with the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development, constituted a joint steering committee which agreed to set up 22 national preparatory committees and corresponding small national projects with a budget of over $500,000 to support committee reporting costs, seminars and workshops; to set in motion a consultative process through regional meetings to identify substantive issues and develop recommendations; to support preparation of regional and subregional reports related to the Conference; and to organize information and sensitization activities in the Sudano-Sahelian region. At the regional level, a forum on environmental protection and development of a subregional strategy to combat desertification (Nairobi, Kenya, October) dealt with issues of high priority for the region.

During the year, new projects totalling $29 million were formulated and approved. Among them were projects in Burkina Faso, Senegal and the Sudan which emphasized the forestry/agriculture interface, popular participation, training and sensitization; and a programme to establish national tree-seed centres for collecting, screening, storing and distributing high-quality seed to alleviate current seed shortages in both western and eastern African countries. Other projects focused on integrated land management in Burkina Faso; on restoring existing irrigation schemes and extending rehabilitation to 300 hectares of hill slopes in Cape Verde; and on restoring vegetation cover, creating agro-pastoral farms and introducing irrigated fodder crops and wind-breaks in the plains of Djibouti.

Other activities included resource mobilization, in particular broadening UNSO's donor base; raising public awareness of the sustainable management of natural resources through workshops and special events; and a survey, conducted within the framework of the Observatory of the Sahara and the Sahel initiated by France, of programmes and projects to monitor the desertification process.

In 1990, resources mobilized through the UNO Trust Fund totalled $25.6 million, of which $17.2 million was earmarked for specific projects under trust fund arrangements and $8.4 million was allocated to UNO General Resources.

UNDP action. On 20 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/41)1, the UNDP Governing Council urged UNO to intensify initiatives for a greater international coherence and harmony of approaches in planning and implementing strategic policy frameworks for desertification-control activities in the Sudano-Sahelian region. It encouraged the Administrator to examine ways of further capitalizing on UNO's experiences, which could serve as the focal point within UNDP for the thematic handling of drought and desertification. It renewed its appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to continue or increase contributions to the General Resources of UNO, as well as to earmarked project activities, and to make use of its services.

Locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/98 and General Assembly decision 44/438 [YUN 1989, pp. 353 & 354], the Secretary-General, on 4 May, transmitted the report [E/1990/59] of the FAO Director-General on the implementation of the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa. The report stated that there was a small-scale invasion of brown locust in Lesotho which failed to breed; none the less, countries in the region were placed on alert in March. Reports were received in April, however, of successful breeding in Oman following a sequence of favourable rains; control measures were mounted and the situation was being monitored.

FAO, as the lead agency within the UN system for locust control, continued its co-ordinating role by providing regular bulletins on desert locust and grasshopper situations and maintaining its training programme, which ranged from training village brigades in some Sahelian countries to training in survey methods, campaign organization and pesticide application. In March, FAO published a revised edition of the Desert Locust Research and Development Register.

As later reported [E/1991/631 by the Director-General, environmental conditions in 1990 were generally not conducive to locust breeding and multiplication throughout most of the recession area where drought persisted. In the Near East, the moderate infestation in Oman was largely controlled. Small-scale control was also undertaken in India and Pakistan late in the year. In many of the Sahelian countries of West Africa, substantial grasshopper infestations were present but, because of reduced rainfall, the populations were not as extensive as predicted. Nevertheless, ground and aerial control campaigns were felt necessary and a total of approximately 1.5 million hectares were treated, notwithstanding which several countries suffered heavy damage to millet and sorghum. The joint FAO/UNDP Scientific Advisory Committee met in September and recommended funding for a number of proposals in forecasting, meteorology, genetics and semiochemicals. In December, FAO closed its Emergency Centre for Locust Operations due to the recession of desert locusts and the reduced scale of grasshopper infestations in Africa.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/62.

International strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 41/185 of 8 December 1986 and 43/203 of 20 December 1988 and Assembly decision 44/438 of 19 December 1989, in which the Assembly endorsed Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/98 of 26 July 1989,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 44/236 of 22 December 1989, by which the Assembly proclaimed the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, and aware that the Decade covers locust and grasshopper infestation,

Noting with satisfaction the general desert locust situation reported by the Emergency Centre for Locust Operations of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, which shows that only small populations of the desert locust were present in Africa and the Near East,

Conscious of the need for the continuation of short-term, medium-term and long-term efforts if desert locust and grasshopper infestations are to be contained both today and in the future,

1. Welcomes the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on the implementation of the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the international community for the assistance provided to affected countries and calls for continued support for the short-term, medium-term and long-term efforts required to combat locusts and grasshoppers;

3. Notes with satisfaction the considerable progress made in initiating research aimed at finding new and environmentally acceptable approaches to locust control, in particular the joint research project of the United Nations Development Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on the development of environmentally acceptable strategies for desert locust control, the Desert Locust Research and Development Register prepared by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the pesticide testing and vetting scheme developed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and a joint donor research programme on the development of bio-pesticides;

4. Calls upon the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to assist the countries concerned in strengthening their preventive control capabilities for desert locust control by ensuring that technically appropriate programmes are developed that are complementary to and integrated with those of regional bodies;

5. Requests the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, over the short and medium term, to reinforce existing structures and current technologies, including early warning systems such as ARTEMIS (Africa Real-Time Environmental Monitoring using Imaging Satellites), which contribute to preventive control;

6. Requests the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991 an up-to-date report on the implementation of the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa.

Screw-worm infestation

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/61.

Fight against the screw-worm infestation

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with alarm that the screw-worm fly has been introduced into North Africa and is now established, thereby posing a potential threat to people, livestock and wildlife in Africa, the Mediterranean parts of Europe and the Near East,

Recognizing the potentially devastating effects of the screw-worm infestation on people, livestock and wildlife and the adverse socio-economic consequences thereof,

Noting that the resources and technology needed for eradication are not currently available in the infested region and that concerted efforts at the national, sub-regional, regional and global levels will be required,

1. Expresses appreciation to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the support and technical assistance extended and for the surveillance, control and prevention efforts that have helped to contain the present infestation and prevent its introduction into surrounding areas;

2. Welcomes the establishment by the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of the Screw-worm Emergency Centre for North Africa, which will co-ordinate an eradication campaign among donors, affected countries and regional and other international organizations;

3. Urges the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to strengthen its co-ordination mechanisms and its technical and field operation support to countries for such a campaign aimed at eliminating the screw-worm from North Africa, the Mediterranean parts of Europe and the Near East, through use of the Sterile Insect Technique, which is the only technique available and proved for the purpose;

4. Encourages funding agencies, such as the United Nations Development Programme and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and the donor community to support an eradication programme;

5. Invites the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991 an up-to-date report on the screw-worm infestation and efforts undertaken to eradicate it.

Chernobyl aftermath

On 26 April [E/1990/64], the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR requested inclusion of an additional item in the agenda of the first 1990 regular session of the Economic and Social Council entitled "International co-operation in the elimination of the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant". In their explanatory memorandum, they stressed the need for continued comprehensive measures to protect the health of the population in the areas which suffered radioactive contamination from the 1986 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant [YUN 1986, p. 584]. Those included transferring people from areas too dangerous to live in and solving the social and humanitarian problems arising from such transfer, a programme of decontamination to prevent the transboundary movement of radioactive particles, broad radio-biological and medical research and radiological monitoring. Those activities required implementation within the framework of a special programme of international co-operation under UN auspices, in which the Council could play an important role. A draft resolution to that effect was annexed to the memorandum.

At its first regular 1990 session (Vienna, 2-4 May) [ACC/1990/DEC/1-14 (dec. 1990/5)], the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) noted that, at the invitation of the USSR and with the co-operation of the other two concerned States, a major international project to assess the radiological consequences of the Chernobyl accident and to evaluate measures taken so far was being organized by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), together with FAO, WHO, the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, UNEP and the Commission of the European Communities. Should the Council adopt the draft resolution, the inter-agency mission to evaluate the priority needs as envisaged in the draft should be composed of IAEA, FAO, WHO, the United Nations, UNDP, UNEP, UNICEF, the United Nations Population Fund and WFP, and co-ordinated by the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE). The mission members should assist the Secretary-General to prepare proposals for the programme of international co-operation, taking into account the findings of the assessment project.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (May)

At a meeting on 3 May, the Economic and Social Council accepted the request of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR for inclusion of the item on international co-operation in the elimination of the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant and adopted it as item 7 of the first regular session's agenda.

By decision 1990/211 of 18 May, the Council decided to include that item in the agenda of its second 1990 regular session, deferred consideration until then of the draft resolution relating to the item, requested the three States to provide it with additional information on the economic and social consequences of the Chernobyl accident, provide all relevant information on the UN system, and requested the Secretary-General to tem's activities in order to assist the Council in its consideration of the item.

Reports of Secretary-General and Governments concerned (July). In a report of 3 July [E/1990/97], the Secretary-General summarized the current and planned activities of the UN system relating to the Chernobyl accident, including their terms of reference and progress achieved. The report stated that, since its establishment following the accident in 1986, the Inter-Agency Committee for a Response to Nuclear Accidents (IAC/RNA), chaired by IAEA, had dealt with follow-up activities to accidents, including Chernobyl, and with the planning and preparation of joint co-ordinated action in case of future accidents. Participating in its work were a number of specialized agencies—ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)—and related organizations, as well as UN Secretariat departments.

Early in 1990, IAEA launched a project on the radiological consequences of the accident, for which a preparatory mission of international experts was sent to the region in March. The League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies had also undertaken a mission in January; in June, it launched an appeal for a programme of humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation for the affected population. ILO had taken steps to apply its Convention on Radiation Protection to the Chernobyl situation. Through agreements concluded with the USSR, WHO expanded its collaborative activities to include a long-term international programme to monitor and mitigate the health effects of the accident, while UNESCO would develop a programme of scientific research policy and assistance. In addition to its relief operations to the three Governments concerned, UNDRO had stressed the need for measures to prevent similar accidents at other nuclear power plants in the region. Other UN organs had suggested ways in which their current activities and experience might be of assistance in the elimination of the consequences of the accident.

As requested by Economic and Social Council decision 1990/211, the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, on 6 July [A/45/342-E/1990/102], provided detailed information on the economic and social consequences of the accident. The information covered the radiation situation, its medical aspects, an evaluation of the exposed inhabitants, the social welfare of those continuing to live in the contaminated areas, the agro-industrial and forestry situation, decontamination operations, scientific back-up for the work of dealing with the consequences of the disaster, and expenditure and losses resulting from it.

In addition to providing technical data on the substantial quantities of radioactive substances discharged into the environment and the contamination levels in the affected areas populated by some 4 million, the information indicated that, in the first year after the accident, 144,000 hectares of farm land had been taken out of use, forestry work in a 492,000-hectare area had been stopped and many industrial and agricultural enterprises had ceased operations. In the spring and summer of 1986, 116,000 people had been evacuated from the danger zone. Some 30 persons had been killed or had died from acute radiation sickness and many had received high doses of radiation. Direct losses of fixed assets and other material goods together with expenditure on action to deal with the disaster's consequences amounted to some 9.2 billion roubles in 1986-1989. Indirect losses, however, represented an incomparably larger amount.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 13 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/50.

International co-operation to address and mitigate the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant

Noting with profound concern the ongoing effects of the accident that occurred at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in April 1986 which had serious national and international consequences owing to its unprecedented scale,

Noting the appeal to the Secretary-General, contained in the letter dated 26 April 1990 from the Permanent Representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic to the United Nations, for the provision of all appropriate assistance in further addressing and mitigating the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant,

Taking account of the need for continuing comprehensive measures to address and mitigate the consequences of the accident especially measures to safeguard the health of the population, including as appropriate resettling the population in uncontaminated areas, improving the environment in the contaminated area and preventing further possible transboundary radioactive effects,

Especially concerned about the state of health of the children who suffered and continue to suffer from the effects of increased radiation as well as from possible long-term effects of radiation,

Conscious of the need for continued international co-operation in addressing and mitigating the consequences of the accident.

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/224 of 22 December 1989, in which the General Assembly, inter alia, recognized the need to strengthen international co-operation in rendering assistance in cases of environmental emergency,

1. Welcomes the efforts to address and mitigate the consequences of the accident undertaken so far by Governments, international and non-governmental organizations, business and scientific circles and individuals, and the activities being conducted by agencies and bodies of the United Nations system and co-ordinated by the Inter-Agency Committee for the Response to Nuclear Accidents, including the International Atomic Energy Agency, the World-Health Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Economic Commission for Europe and the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide appropriate support for the international assessment of the radiological consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, currently in progress, which has been organized by the International Atomic Energy Agency with the participation of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, the World Health Organization and the Commission of the European Communities;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to consider, facilitate and co-ordinate any further efforts that may be appropriate within the United Nations system, in the framework of the report on the international assessment to be published by the International Atomic Energy Agency, which will contain an evaluation of the measures taken in response to the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant and recommendations for possible future actions in the regions affected by the accident, the recommendations and decisions of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the matter and the existing co-ordination mechanism of the Inter-Agency Committee for the Response to Nuclear Accidents;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, on the activities currently under way or planned within the United Nations system relating to the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant and its consequences, particularly regarding the agreement between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the International Atomic Energy Agency to study the radiological consequences of the accident and the agreement between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the World Health Organization on the efforts to mitigate the health consequences of the accident, with recommendations for further action within the United Nations system;

5. Makes an urgent appeal to all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies and to organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to provide all appropriate assistance, in full co-ordination and co-operation with ongoing or planned efforts by elements of that system, to mitigate the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/50

63-nation draft (E/1990/L.21/Rev.1); agenda item 5.

Report of Secretary-General (October). Pursuant to the Economic and Social Council resolution above, the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly a comprehensive report of 29 October [A/45/643] on the activities under way or planned to deal with the consequences of the Chernobyl accident, based on information submitted by the various UN organs and specialized agencies involved in that effort. The report outlined the scope of the work programmes resulting from agreements between the USSR and individual agencies, notably the IAEA project executed by a team of international experts on the radiological consequences in the USSR; the UNESCO series of assistance programmes in scientific research and analysis of the catastrophe's social impacts, education, culture and communication; and the WHO international programme on the health effects of the accident, encompassing, among other projects, epidemiological studies, treatment and prevention of radiation-induced thyroid diseases, and studies in carcinogenic, teratogenic and genetic effects and on the contribution of radiation and non-radiation causes of mortality.

The report gave a detailed account of the nine-member fact-finding mission dispatched by the Secretary-General to the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR (22-29 September), representing the secretariats of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), UNDRO, UNEP, UNICEF, the United Nations Office at Vienna, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and ECE. The mission began its work in the affected areas with a visit to the Chernobyl nuclear power plant and heard explanations of measures taken to "liquidate" the accident, to evacuate the neighbouring township of Pripyat of 50,000 people and other settlements of the area, to construct the "sarcophagus" encapsulating Block 4 in which the accident occurred and to reduce radiation by decontamination processes. The mission further received information concerning the recently established State machinery in the USSR to co-ordinate activities at the national, regional and district levels and was provided with considerable documentation.

There was general agreement that the Chernobyl accident was of unprecedented dimensions: it had contaminated 104,200 square kilometres of the territories of the three Republics, with a population of 3.87 million; in the Byelorussian SSR, which had sustained proportionally higher radioactive contamination, 18 per cent of its land and 20 per cent of its people had been affected. It was in the interest of the international community to learn the lessons of Chernobyl and to take concerted action to overcome the resultant complex situation. While initial efforts had focused on scientific and technical problems, insufficient attention had been paid to informing the public about radiation contamination and its potential health effects. It was advocated that a scientifically justified concept of safe living in the contaminated areas, including the definition of an admissible dosage of radiation, be elaborated as a matter of urgency. It was deemed essential to provide life-long health care and protection to the afected population and to determine the long-term effects of exposure to low-level radiation. Statistical data indicated that 116,000 people had been evacuated from contaminated areas in 1986 and that a second phase of resettlement begun in 1990 would continue into 1991. Resettlement planning and policy were complicated by the lack of clear criteria for safety levels of radiation and risk analysis.

The mission received proposals from the three Republics for programmes of co-operation with the United Nations in four areas of activity: scientific and technological co-operation for the study, forecasting and elimination of radioactive contamination of the region; research into the effects of the consequences of radioactive contamination on the human organism and animals and the elaboration of effective methods for their reduction; technical assistance in building industrial plants, in the use of new technologies, materials and food products; and training programmes for experts in radio-ecology, and an educational programme on radioactive safety. Taking into account the many requests addressed to it, the mission explained the ways in which UN organizations functioned, the extent of their mandates and the restraints on their financial resources, including the fact that the three affected Member States were not in the list of countries eligible for UNDP financial assistance. The mission drew attention to four types of assistance that the UN system might provide: expertise as represented by intergovernmental bodies, the secretariat and consultants, including experience and facilities for international operations and appeals; material aid in the form of equipment and supplies; training, particularly of local trainers; and information to promote understanding of radiation and to increase public confidence in safety measures.

The report made a series of recommendations, including: the establishment of a UN programme of international co-operation to provide the framework for the further development of UN-system activities, taking account of the proposals submitted by the three Governments for short- and long-term programmes of co-operation, to which organs, programmes and agencies of the UN system would be asked to contribute actively and to which Member States should provide all appropriate assistance; setting up a special fund for voluntary contributions to finance the programme, as well as a call for contributions in kind; designation of a programme co-ordinator and a core secretariat; a request that IAC/RNA continue its work to co-ordinate activities and projects dealing with the scientific aspects of the effort; and the formation by ACC of a task force to consider, facilitate and co-ordinate UN measures to address problems, particularly those relating to the socio-economic aspects of the situation, and to review the assistance requests and the proposed programmes of co-operation submitted by the three Republics.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 45/426 of 12 December, took note of the report of the First Committee [A/45/793] regarding its decision to take no action on the item on international co-operation to address and mitigate the consequences of the Chernobyl accident as contained in chapter III, section D, of the Economic and Social Council report. The Assembly had allocated that section to the First Committee and to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee when, on 21 September, on the recommendation of the General Committee, it had included consideration of the Council report in its 1990 agenda.

On 21 December, the Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's October report, adopted resolution 45/190.

International co-operation to address and mitigate the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant

The General Assembly,

Expressing profound concern about the ongoing effects on people's lives and health of the disaster at Chernobyl, which had serious national and international consequences of unprecedented scale,

Especially concerned about the state of health of the children who suffered and continue to suffer from the effects of increased radiation and who may suffer from possible long-term effects of radiation.

Taking into account the provisions of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, which, inter alia, refer to the need for concrete measures to be taken at the national and international levels for children in especially difficult circumstances, including victims of man-made disasters who have been exposed to radiation,

Taking into account also the need to continue taking comprehensive measures to study, address and mitigate the consequences of the accident, especially measures to protect against radiation and to safeguard the health of the population, including, as appropriate, resettling the population in uncontaminated areas, improving the environment in the contaminated areas and preventing further possible transboundary radioactive effects,

Increasingly aware of the need to improve co-ordination of ongoing international efforts to study and minimize the radiological and other consequences of the disaster at Chernobyl,

Stressing the importance of public education and communication in addressing the concerns of the population of the contaminated areas regarding the effects of man-made radiation, including its long-term effects,

Recalling its resolution 44/224 of 22 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it recognized the need to strengthen international co-operation in rendering assistance in cases of environmental emergency,

Taking note with satisfaction of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/50 of 13 July 1990 on international co-operation to address and mitigate the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant,

Taking into account the efforts made by the United Nations and organizations of the United Nations system to study, mitigate and minimize the radiological, socio-economic and other consequences of the disaster at Chernobyl,

Welcoming the growing international solidarity with the victims of Chernobyl, especially the children, as well as the willingness on the part of Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the business community, scientific bodies and individuals to increase medical, food and other humanitarian assistance for the rehabilitation of the affected population,

Recognizing the particular importance of completing the international independent assessment of the radiological consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, co-ordinated by the International Atomic Energy Agency,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General and invites him, in the light of the findings contained in that report and other relevant reports and in consultation with the agencies concerned, to continue to take appropriate measures to address and mitigate the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, in particular to support efforts made within the United Nations system by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Inter-Agency Committee for the Response to Nuclear Accidents to harmonize, strengthen and co-ordinate international projects aimed at mitigating the consequences of the disaster at Chernobyl, and to consider, inter alia, opportunities to:

(a) Formulate a programme for co-ordinating the activities to be carried out by the organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system involved in efforts to address and mitigate the consequences of the disaster at Chernobyl;

(b) Entrust one of the Under-Secretaries-General with the task of co-ordination;

(c) Set up a task force responsible for stimulating and monitoring the activities of the United Nations system in this field;

(d) Appeal for voluntary contributions to complement the regular budgetary resources used by United Nations organs and agencies for the implementation of activities aimed at mitigating the consequences of the disaster at Chernobyl;

2. Requests the organs, specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system, in considering possible technical and other special assistance for the areas most affected, particularly in the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic, to bear in mind the unprecedented nature of the radiological and environmental disaster and of the emergency situation in those areas resulting from the long-term effects of man-made radiation on present and future generations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "International co-operation to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the disaster at Chernobyl";

5. Makes an urgent request to all States members of the international community, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the business community, scientific bodies and individuals to continue to provide all appropriate support and assistance to the areas most affected by the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant,⁷ in full co-ordination and co-operation with envisaged or planned efforts of the United Nations system.

Facilitation of humanitarian assistance

In response to General Assembly resolution 43/131[YUN1988, p. 382], the Secretary-General submitted a 24 October report [A/45/587] based on the replies of Governments and intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations to his request for their views on the possibility of enhancing the effectiveness of international mechanisms and increasing the speed of assistance for victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations. In examining the question, the report pointed out that the prime motive for international humanitarian assistance was the dignity and value of human beings as expressed in the Charter of the United Nations, that its timeliness and appropriateness were essential and that it should be governed by the principles of impartiality and neutrality. It noted the relatively recent emergence and increasing role of NGOs and intergovernmental organizations, principally the European Economic Community, in the delivery of assistance.

The report underscored the key elements making for speed and efficiency in relief assistance, namely, professional and realistic assessment of damage and needs; electronic dissemination of those assessments along with data on pledges, contributions and the logistics of delivery to multiple decision-making points; unhampered access to disaster victims, for which guidelines should be formulated. with General Assembly support; regulations and procedures permitting speedy procurement of relief goods; and orderly organization and co-ordination of relief activities.

Attention was drawn to four fields of activities having a direct bearing on the facilitation of humanitarian assistance and its efficiency. The first called for preparedness planning by disaster-prone developing countries, with technical assistance and financial support from donor Governments and intergovernmental organizations, the planning to include a sound legal basis, a disaster response office staffed with trained personnel, and communication equipment and transport. The second concerned improvement of co-ordination, through continuous training: among participating relief organizations based on flexible mechanisms and on the capacity of responsible officials to adapt to the situation at hand; in disaster-prone countries, where there should be co-ordination in information collection, agreed assessments and relief distribution arrangements; and within the UN system, where measures to strengthen co-ordination included formation of disaster management teams to operate under the guidance of the UN resident coordinator, a training project launched by UNDP and UNDRO, and the publication of a disaster management manual which they were finalizing. The third involved greater co-ordination at the international level, which could be achieved by a stronger rationalization of international co-operation and intervention methods. It was suggested that UNDRO should continue gathering information on the sectoral capacity of UN agencies with responsibility for emergencies so as to provide an overview of their available resources and modes of intervention, in addition to contributing to exchange of information on programmes, organizations and legal instruments in the area of international co-operation.

The fourth activity concerned new legal instruments designed to overcome obstacles to humanitarian assistance. A convention on the duty to respond to disaster victims with humanitarian assistance was advanced as an effective means for improving assistance delivery, as was the adoption of a series of bilateral agreements between the UN agency (e.g. UNDRO) and the State, under whose terms the UN agency would be the co-ordinating centre for initiating, negotiating and administering such agreements in co-operation with States.

In conclusion, the report stated the Secretary-General's belief that it might be useful to analyse existing legal instruments and resolutions on humanitarian assistance in conjunction with a colloquium, organized by UNDRO, on the overall harmonization of international co-operation. The result could be expected to provide guidance on practical and acceptable ways of improving humanitarian assistance.

Annexed to the report were the findings of a 1989 review of humanitarian assistance by an informal working group to determine to what extent the problems identified in 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 64] by UNDRO and the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies still existed, and a summary of proposed actions that could increase the speed of assistance delivery.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/100.

Humanitarian assistance to victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations

Recalling its resolution 43/131 of 8 December 1988.

Recalling that one of the principles of the United Nations is to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion,

Reaffirming the sovereignty, territorial integrity and national unity of States, and recognizing that it is up to each State first and foremost to take care of the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations occurring on its territory,

Deeply concerned about the suffering of the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations, the loss in human lives, the destruction of property and the mass displacement of populations that results from them,

Concerned about the fate of persons who, following such displacement, are in an extremely precarious situation, particularly in a country other than that of which they are nationals,

Considering that the abandonment of the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations without humanitarian assistance constitutes a threat to human life and an offence to human dignity,

Strongly desiring that the international community should respond speedily and effectively to the needs for emergency humanitarian assistance expressed in particular through the Secretary-General,

Concerned about the difficulties and obstacles that victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations may encounter in receiving humanitarian assistance,

Convinced that, in providing humanitarian assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicines or health care, for which access to victims is essential, rapid relief will avoid a tragic increase in the number of victims,

Recalling, in this regard, the Cairo Declaration adopted by the World Food Council at its fifteenth session, proposing, inter alia, an international agreement on the transport of emergency food aid,

Aware that alongside the action of Governments and intergovernmental organizations, the speed and efficiency of this assistance often depend on the help and aid of local and non-governmental organizations working in an impartial manner and with strictly humanitarian motives,

Reaffirming the need for the intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations dealing with humanitarian assistance to co-operate as closely as possible with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator or any ad hoc mechanism set up by the Secretary-General in the co-ordination of aid,

Concerned about the effectiveness of such assistance, which requires an accurate evaluation of needs, efficient preparation of actions and effective co-ordination in conducting them,

Recalling that, in the event of natural disasters and similar emergency situations, the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality must be given utmost consideration by all those involved in providing humanitarian assistance,

1. Reaffirms the cardinal importance of humanitarian assistance for the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations;

2. Reaffirms also the sovereignty of affected States and their primary role in the initiation, organization, co-ordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within their respective territories;

3. Stresses the important contribution made in providing humanitarian assistance by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations working impartially and with strictly humanitarian motives;

4. Invites all States whose populations are in need of such assistance to facilitate the work of these organizations in implementing humanitarian assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicines and health care, for which access to victims is essential;

5. Appeals, therefore, to all States to give their support to these organizations working to provide humanitarian assistance, where needed, to the victims of natural disasters and similar emergency situations;

6. Notes with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 43/131 and the suggestions which he makes concerning means of facilitating humanitarian assistance operations, in particular the possibility of establishing, on a temporary basis, where needed, and by means of concerted action by affected Governments and the Governments and intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, relief corridors for the distribution of emergency medical and food aid;

7. Urges States in proximity to areas of natural disasters and similar emergency situations, particularly in the case of regions that are difficult to reach, to participate closely with the affected countries in international efforts with a view to facilitating, to the extent possible, the transit of humanitarian assistance;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue, within existing resources, the necessary consultations with Governments and intergovernmental, governmental and non-governmental organizations with a view to determining means of facilitating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance to the victims of natural disasters or similar emergency situations, including the establishment of relief corridors, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General and on the terms set out in paragraph 6 of the present resolution, and report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to study, within existing resources, the possibility of preparing, on the basis of information furnished by Governments and the relevant governmental and non-governmental international organizations and taking into account the work already done in this area by the United Nations, in particular by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, an indicative list of persons and bodies with expert knowledge of the delivery and management of emergency humanitarian assistance whom the United Nations could call upon, with the consent of the States concerned, to make an accurate and speedy assessment of the needs and a realistic determination of the best means of delivering the aid;

10. Decides to consider this question at its forty-seventh session.

Also on 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/102.

Promotion of international co-operation in the humanitarian field

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/121 of 7 December 1987 and 43/130 of 8 December 1988,

Noting that one of the purposes of the United Nations, set forth in its Charter, is to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of a humanitarian character,

Recalling also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which proclaims, inter alia, that recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Recalling further that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms can be fully realized,

Mindful of the fact that unresolved humanitarian problems may impede the effective realization of human rights and even lead to violations of these rights,

Convinced that solving humanitarian problems requires co-operation and harmonization of actions taken by Governments, international bodies, non-governmental organizations and individuals,

Mindful also of the significance of the existing workable system to promote, facilitate and co-ordinate humanitarian activities carried out by Governments, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Calls upon Governments, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations further to develop international co-operation in the humanitarian field;

2. Reiterates that international co-operation in the humanitarian field will facilitate better understanding, mutual respect, confidence and tolerance among countries and peoples, thus contributing to a more just and non-violent world;

3. Notes the need to identify humanitarian problems of the highest priority and to develop a universal strategy of action in the humanitarian field;

4. Invites Governments to promote, within existing mechanisms, regular exchanges of information and of national experience in addressing humanitarian problems;

5. Calls for the broadening of the concept of international co-operation in the humanitarian field through effective bilateral dialogue and activities pertaining to specific humanitarian issues;

6. Encourages the international community to contribute substantially and regularly to international humanitarian activities;

7. Invites all non-governmental organizations concerned with the humanitarian issues examined by the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues and working with strictly humanitarian motives to bear in mind the recommendations and suggestions made in the report of the Independent Commission in the context of their policies and actions in the field;

8. Decides to consider this issue at its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "New international humanitarian order".

New international humanitarian order

In a 16 October report [A/45/524], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly replies he had received from six Member States and the Holy See, three UN bodies, three specialized agencies and five NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. The replies contained their comments on the new international humanitarian order and the report of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues, as well as on further development of international co-operation in the humanitarian field, as called for by Assembly resolutions 43/129 and 43/130 [YUN 1988, pp. 552 & 553].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/101.

New international humanitarian order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/136 of 14 December 1981, 37/201 of 18 December 1982, 38/125 of 16 December 1983, 40/126 of 13 December 1985, 42/120 and 42/121 of 7 December 1987 and 43/129 of 8 December 1988 relating to the promotion of a new international humanitarian order,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the comments made by various Governments regarding the humanitarian order and the work done in this regard by the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues,

Noting the actions being taken by the specialized agencies and programmes of the United Nations system with regard to the humanitarian issues, examined by the Independent Commission, that fall within their respective mandates,

Recognizing with concern the continuing need further to strengthen international responses to growing humanitarian challenges and to adjust actions of governmental and non-governmental organizations to new realities in a fast-changing world,

Bearing in mind the importance of creative humanitarian action at the international as well as the regional and national levels to alleviate human suffering and to promote durable solutions to humanitarian problems,

Convinced of the need for active follow-up to the recommendations and suggestions made by the Independent Commission, and noting the role being played in this regard by the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues set up for the purpose,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing active support to the efforts to promote a new international humanitarian order;

2. Encourages Governments as well as governmental and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to provide their comments and expertise to the Secretary-General regarding the humanitarian order and the report of the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues;

3. Invites the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues to continue and further strengthen its essential role in following up the work of the Independent Commission;

4. Invites Governments to make available to the Secretary-General, on a voluntary basis, information and expertise on humanitarian issues of concern to them in order to identify opportunities for future action;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to remain in contact with Governments as well as governmental and non-governmental organizations and the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues and to report on the progress made by them to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

6. Decides to review at its forty-seventh session the question of a new international humanitarian order.

munity for support and providing relief assistance to mitigate the suffering of the victims of both natural disasters and the negative consequences of a variety of political, economic and social situations.

Djibouti

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/271 of 26 July, took note of a Secretariat note [E/1990/L.13] transmitting a World Health Assembly resolution adopted on 17 May 1989 entitled "Damage caused by torrential rain and flooding in Democratic Yemen and Djibouti". That resolution requested the WHO Director-General to elaborate an emergency plan of health and medical assistance to rehabilitate hospitals and health units destroyed by the torrential rains and flooding in April 1989, as well as a programme of health emergency preparedness and response, and to mobilize extrabudgetary resources to enable both countries to cope with the destruction. The resolution also recommended that the Council request UN organizations and specialized agencies to initiate similar programmes of assistance. (See below for details of UN emergency relief assistance to Yemen.)

Responding to General Assembly resolution 44/177 [YUN 1989, p. 351], the Secretary-General reported on 28 September [A/45/505] on assistance provided by the United Nations to alleviate the long-term consequences of the 1989 flood in Djibouti. He stated that the third meeting of the Senior Officials Consultative Group on the Horn of Africa (Nairobi, Kenya, 9 April) had discussed ways of co-ordinating actions and resolving operational problems impeding the effective response of the UN system to the emergency situation in the subregion, which was adversely affecting Djibouti's social and economic infrastructure. A large influx of externally displaced persons had put great pressure on the country's limited resources. The Consultative Group had taken note of Djibouti's requests for UNHCR and WFP assistance in that regard.

UNDP had intensified efforts to assist the Government to design and implement its reconstruction and development programmes. It financed a feasibility study aimed at developing a replicable low-cost housing scheme and made available additional resources to support government efforts to enhance the policy environment in order to attract private investment and to elaborate a comprehensive water master plan. Consultations with the World Bank regarding the co-financing of a project aimed at building national capacity in macro-economic planning were in progress, as were discussions with the Islamic Development

Emergency relief

The United Nations in 1990 continued to be involved in emergency relief efforts in a number of countries, appealing to the international com-

Bank on the co-financing of an integrated rural development programme for the Goubad region.

The Economic Commission for Africa had been providing assistance in agriculture, transport and communications, industry, population intercensus surveys, programmes for women and statistics. It also assisted in the preparation of a country paper for the Second 1990 United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Haiti

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/2 of 10 October, urged the international community and relevant international organizations to increase their technical, economic and financial co-operation with Haiti, in order to support that country's economic and social development efforts.

On 21 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/257 A.

Special emergency assistance to Haiti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/2 of 10 December 1990 and welcoming its successful implementation and results,

Conscious of the severe economic and social problems facing Haiti,

Convinced of the need to grant technical and economic assistance to Haiti in overcoming its severe economic and social problems,

1. Appeals to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to respond generously and urgently to the needs of Haiti in overcoming its severe economic and social problems;

2. Expresses its determination to assist Haiti in overcoming its severe economic and social problems;

3. Decides to keep the question on assistance to Haiti under review and requests the Secretary-General to consult the Government of Haiti as soon as possible concerning appropriate initiatives for the launching of a special programme of emergency assistance to Haiti and to inform the Assembly on the outcome of such consultations.

Iran

On 21 June, at 0031 hours local time, a major earthquake struck the north-west. region of Iran, mainly in the mountain provinces of Gilan and Zanjan, whose population numbered 4 million. The worst devastation took place near the centre of the triangle between the cities of Rasht, Qiaz in and Zanjan, especially in the towns of Rudbar, Manjil and Loushan and in several hundred neighbouring mountain villages where 60 to 90 per cent of the houses collapsed. Losses as of 25 June were officially estimated at 50,000 dead, 60,000 injured and 500,000 homeless. In view of the gravity of the situation, the Secretary-General, on 22 June, appointed the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator as his Special Representative for the Emergency in Northern Iran.

On 25 June [A/44/957], Pakistan, as Chairman of the Asian Group, conveyed the Group's request to the General Assembly President that he convene a meeting of the Assembly's forty-fourth session in order to consider emergency assistance to Iran. Appended to the request was a draft resolution on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

To enable it to take action on the request conveyed by Pakistan, the General Assembly, on 28 June, reopened consideration of agenda sub-item 88 (a), entitled "Special economic and disaster relief assistance: Special programmes of economic assistance". Following the oral report of Iran and consideration of the sub-item, the Assembly adopted resolution 44/242.

Emergency assistance to the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/236 of 22 December 1989 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction,

Deeply distressed by the large number of casualties and homeless, and the extent of devastation caused by the earthquake which struck the north-west region of the Islamic Republic of Iran on 20 June 1990,

Aware of the efforts of the Government and people of the Islamic Republic of Iran to save lives and alleviate the suffering of the victims of the earthquake,

Noting that enormous efforts will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Recognizing the importance of international co-operation for the mitigation of the devastation caused by the earthquake,

Recognizing also that the magnitude of the disaster and its long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the people and Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, demonstration of international solidarity to ensure broad multilateral co-operation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and to undertake the process of rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Noting with appreciation the prompt response of Governments, international agencies, non-governmental organizations and individuals in providing emergency relief assistance to the victims of the earthquake,

1. Expresses its solidarity with and support for the Government and people of the Islamic Republic of Iran in this tragic situation;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the States, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief assistance;

3. Welcomes the appointment of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Emergency in Northern Iran, expresses appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General to strengthen co-ordination within the United Nations system for providing emergency assistance to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, and requests him to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session the report of the Special Representative;

4. Appeals to all Governments, the specialized agencies and organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as non-governmental organizations, to extend generous assistance to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction in the affected areas.

28 June 1990 Meeting 94 Adopted without vote
117-nation draft (A/44/L.66), orally revised: agenda item 88 (a).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/64.

Special disaster relief assistance to the Islamic Republic of Iran

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/242 of 28 June 1990 on emergency assistance to the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987 on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, in which the Assembly recognized the importance of reducing the impact of natural disasters for all people, and in particular for developing countries, and 44/236 of 22 December 1989, by which the Assembly proclaimed the beginning of the Decade in 1990,

Recalling further General Assembly resolutions concerning assistance in cases of natural disasters and other emergencies, in particular resolution 2816 (XXVI) of 14 December 1991, by which the Assembly established the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

Having heard the statement made by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Emergency in Northern Iran before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee on 11 July 1990 on his mission to the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Deeply touched by the large number of casualties and homeless and the extent of devastation caused by the earthquake in June 1990,

Aware of the remarkable efforts of the Government and people of the Islamic Republic of Iran to save lives and alleviate the suffering of the victims of the earthquake,

Aware also of the enormous efforts required for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas, as well as the importance of international co-operation in that regard,

Noting with appreciation the prompt response of Governments, the United Nations system, voluntary organizations and individuals in providing emergency relief assistance to the victims of the earthquake,

1. Expresses its solidarity with and support for the Government and people of the Islamic Republic of Iran in this tragic situation;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the States, international organizations and agencies that provided or are providing relief assistance;

3. Commends the prompt decision of the Secretary-General in appointing a Special Representative for the Emergency in Northern Iran and expresses appreciation for his efforts in mobilizing and co-ordinating international assistance;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to intensify his endeavours to mobilize every possible assistance to help the Government and people of the Islamic Republic of Iran in their efforts towards the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the stricken areas;

5. Appeals to all Governments, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as to voluntary organizations, to provide the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran with all possible assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the stricken areas;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session an assessment of the damage and the requirements for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/64

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/111) without vote, 18 July (meeting 11); draft by Chairman (E/1990/C.3/L.8), following informal consultations; agenda item 13.

Report of Secretary-General. In keeping with the Economic and Social Council and General Assembly resolutions above, the Secretary-General submitted an 11 October report [A/45/494] giving an assessment of the devastation caused by the earthquake and an overview of the national and international relief effort, including that of the UN system. It also described the requirements and plans for rehabilitation and reconstruction in the stricken area.

National response to the disaster was speedy, efficient and on a scale commensurate to the magnitude of the disaster. International response was immediate and massive, with no less than 46 countries offering assistance in cash or in a wide range of relief goods and services. Action by the UN system was equally immediate and organized. To ensure close co-operation and information-sharing among the UN bodies and agencies involved, an Inter-Agency Emergency Group was formed from UNDP, UNDRO, UNICEF, WHO, WFP, UNHCR, the Office of the United Nations Co-ordinator for Assistance Programmes in respect of Afghan refugees, and the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies. The Group first met on 23 June; thereafter it met each time new information required action.

At the time of reporting, a master plan for rehabilitation and reconstruction was under preparation by the Government. UNDP was to co-ordinate international co-operation for the plan's execution.

Iraq/Kuwait

Following the hostilities in the Persian Gulf, which began with Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on 2 August (see PART TWO, Chapter III), Italy, on behalf of the European Community (EC), submitted to the Secretary-General on 24 September a summary [A/C.2/45/2] of the official humanitarian assistance provided by EC, its member States and NGOs to refugees who had fled the Iraq/Kuwait crisis into Jordan and elsewhere.

The summary, which described the measures taken by EC itself and the supporting initiatives of EC members to facilitate those measures, did not include other types of assistance given to States affected by the crisis. The figures given for NGOs were only estimates; in the case of some member States, estimates were not available. The total estimated amount of assistance provided to date was $130 million.

Liberia

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/232.

Emergency assistance for Liberia

The General Assembly,

Extremely concerned about the untold loss of life and human suffering as a consequence of the conflict in Liberia and that over 750,000 people have become refugees and half the population within the country has been displaced,

Deeply concerned about the massive destruction of the nation's infrastructure,

Conscious of the urgent need for the international community to provide assistance for the economic and social rehabilitation of Liberia,

Conscious also of the peace and humanitarian efforts at the subregional level,

1. Appeals to the international community to render its support by providing all necessary assistance for the economic and social rehabilitation of Liberia;

2. Appeals to all Member States to make voluntary contributions for rehabilitation efforts;

3. Requests the Secretary-General; in close co-operation with the appropriate authority in Liberia, to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to assist that country in its emergency relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, to mobilize resources for the implementation of the necessary programmes and to keep the international community informed of the needs of the country;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1991, of his efforts and to report to the General

Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Emergency assistance for the economic and social rehabilitation of Liberia".

Mozambique

On 10 October, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/562] on emergency assistance to Mozambique. Prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/208 [YUN 1988, p. 399], the report noted that the emergency situation in Mozambique would continue for some time and massive rehabilitation support was expected to be required upon cessation of the ongoing hostilities. Also noted was the decline in donor response to urgent needs, from $330 million in 1987 to $104.4 million in 1990, limiting Mozambique's capacity to provide adequate relief assistance to the internally displaced or returning refugees.

At Mozambique's request, the Secretary-General had dispatched an inter-agency mission to Mozambique (February 1990) to assess the situation and define the country's priority emergency and rehabilitation requirements for 1990-1991. On the basis of that mission's findings, which indicated emergency requirements totalling $136,099,026, the Fourth International Donors' Conference (New York, April) launched the 1990-1991 emergency appeal for Mozambique. The appeal was confined to the emergency requirements of 1.4 million internally displaced Mozambicans and 154,000 externally displaced nationals who had recently returned or were expected to return during the remainder of 1990.

A sectoral assessment of the response to the appeal as at 31 July showed that relief food aid pledges during 1990 fell short of requirements; with the increase of 300,000 persons in urgent need of relief assistance, food aid requirements had risen by 20 per cent, with a corresponding rise in logistics support to guarantee delivery. The situation in the market sector appeared considerably worse: with the exception of market rice, pledge levels were at 59 per cent of the requirement for wheat, 46 per cent for maize, 27 per cent for oil, 23 per cent for sugar and 8 per cent for pulses.

Because of donor concern about the high food-aid losses, a number of measures had been instituted to tighten control and protection of relief commodities at the central and provincial levels. WFP international staff had been outposted to six of the most seriously affected provinces to facilitate and monitor aid deliveries, logistics and distribution, and to improve information flows. Logistics remained seriously underfunded, with an overall coverage of only 17.6 per cent of the $34 million required. Of the $9.6 million required for capital expenditures, only $2.8 million had been contributed. Only 13 per cent had been pledged against the $24 million needed for fuel, spare parts, coastal shipping and airlifts. Over half of the $8 million requested for the seeds-and-tools programme had been pledged, while only 37 per cent of the priority needs in the health sector was being met. An additional $400,000 was needed for school reconstruction. Very little support had been registered for relief and survival items and for the UNHCR-sponsored programme to assist returnees in their transition from refugee centres outside Mozambique to their districts of origin. Only 40 per cent of the $3.3 million required for institutional support had been pledged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/227.

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 43/208 of 20 December 1988, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously to the call for assistance to Mozambique,

Taking note of the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, and mindful of the mutual commitments undertaken for a strengthened partnership for development and the importance to be given to the follow-up to the recommendations of that Conference,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance to Mozambique,

Considering that Mozambique continues to face a complex emergency situation of extreme proportions, as illustrated in the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with deep concern that Mozambique has continued to suffer from the negative impact of the war of destabilization, resulting in, inter alia, enormous losses of human life, widespread destruction of infrastructure, massive poverty and large numbers of displaced persons, which, combined with an adverse international economic situation, have led to an overall retrogression of the country's development,

Stressing that a proper response to the emergency situation in Mozambique requires the reinforcement of relief aid with additional rehabilitation and development assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on emergency assistance to Mozambique;

2. Welcomes the efforts being undertaken by the Government of Mozambique for the restoration of peace and normalization of life in the country, as well as other measures as reflected in its emergency and economic and social recovery programmes, and, in this context, stresses the need for vigorous international assistance in support of these efforts;

3. Expresses its appreciation to, and commends, the Secretary-General and the relevant organizations of the United Nations system for the measures taken to organize international assistance programmes for Mozambique;

4. Expresses its gratitude to all States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have rendered assistance to Mozambique;

5. Recognizes that substantial international assistance is still required for the implementation of emergency, reconstruction and development programmes and projects;

6. Reiterates its appeal to the international community to continue to provide relief aid, particularly urgent food aid and logistics support, so as to improve distribution capacity and prevent further widespread starvation;

7. Draws the attention of the international community to the non-food sectors, as described in the report on the emergency situation in Mozambique setting out priority requirements for the period 1990-1991, the funding of which continues to lag, particularly in the areas of relief items, agriculture, health, assistance to returnees and institutional support;

8. Calls upon Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide and expand technical, financial and other material assistance to Mozambique wherever possible, especially in the form of grants, and urges them to give priority to the inclusion of Mozambique in their development assistance programmes;

9. Invites all appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the financial, technical and material assistance required by Mozambique;

(b) To continue to co-ordinate the work of the United Nations system, in close co-operation with the Government of Mozambique, in the implementation of the country's emergency and rehabilitation programmes;

(c) To prepare, on the basis of consultations with the Government of Mozambique, a report on the implementation of the emergency and rehabilitation programmes for that country and to submit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Somalia

In an oral report before the Economic and Social Council on 1 May, the Special Co-ordinator for Emergency Relief Operations in Somalia observed that the security situation in the areas affected by the conflict in Somalia had shown no improvement, saying the difficulties under which humanitarian relief operations were being carried out could be gauged by the decision of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and WFP temporarily to suspend those operations in October 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 360].

In February, in response to an appeal by the Government, the Secretary-General had launched an Extraordinary Interim Emergency Programme in north-western Somalia to provide 2,000 metric tons of food aid monthly over a six-month (March-August) period for war-affected persons, including 140,000 refugees. The Programme had been faced with operational and logistical difficulties, however, so that, as determined by a mid-term inter-agency assessment mission, just over half of the planned aid had been delivered each month. At the end of the Programme, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) envisaged expanding its humanitarian programmes for internally displaced persons to include refugees, which would continue until the United Nations could resume normal humanitarian relief operations in the region. ICRC's aim was to establish greater access to the north beyond the towns of Berbera and Boroma, to which access was currently limited. ICRC was continuing its dialogue with relevant parties to put in place the necessary mechanism for access to the needy in contested areas. In the south, where the conflict had been just as strongly felt as in the north and where urban centres had had to absorb large numbers of displaced persons, the Government and the United Nations would assess the problems in Mogadishu and look for ways to alleviate the worst of them.

By decision 1990/210 of 1 May, the Council took note of the Special Co-ordinator's oral report.

Report of Secretary-General. In a report of 18 September [A/45/483], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly information received from Australia, Finland, Italy and Sweden, and from four UN organs (UNDP, UNICEF, UNDRO, UNHCR) and four specialized agencies (FAO, UNIDO, UNESCO, WHO) on action they had taken to extend emergency assistance to Somalia, as called for by Assembly resolution 44/178 [YUN 1989, p. 361].

The Secretary-General drew attention to four distinct programmes that had been or were being implemented in north-western Somalia to meet the humanitarian needs of the population: the Extraordinary Interim Emergency Programme, which ended on 31 August; a refugee repatriation programme under tripartite (Ethiopia/Somalia/UNHCR) operational arrangements; an assistance programme, begun in February 1989, to assist people displaced by the civil strife and to help in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of destroyed towns and villages, which had drawn little donor support, however, due in part to the continuing unsettled conditions and concerns about human rights problems; and an ICRC programme for medical and emergency nutritional assistance to meet the needs of war-affected persons. ICRC had also assisted in implementing a repatriation programme for Ethiopian refugees under the aegis of the tripartite commission.

The Secretary-General stated that, as in other emergency situations calling for UN humanitarian operations, any new programme would require that relief be provided to all in need regardless of location; that safe access corridors for delivery of supplies be identified and agreed by all parties; and that the loading and unloading of neutral relief convoys, as well as distribution of relief supplies, be conducted under UN supervision. Somalia had been advised to continue discussions with appropriate international agencies with a view to developing a new programme to meet the special circumstances in the area.

Speaking before the Assembly's Second Committee on 22 October, Somalia said that the Extraordinary Interim Emergency Programme had been terminated despite requests from Somalia's President and ICRC for its extension. The Programme's termination, Somalia said, had caused great hardship and human suffering and had hampered implementation of its refugee repatriation programme within the expected timeframe. It said that the situation in the country's north-western districts had improved so that the international community and UN organizations could resume their assistance operations there. The Government had recently taken far-reaching steps towards political liberalization: it had adopted a new constitution, had released all political prisoners and had enacted legislation providing for elections, a multiparty system and a free press. It was Somalia's expectation that, as it entered a new era in its history, it would receive support and co-operation from the international community. It called on the Assembly to adopt interim measures for providing humanitarian assistance to displaced persons and refugees until the situation in the north-western districts was stabilized.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/229.

Emergency assistance to Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/206 of 20 December 1988 and 44/178 of 19 December 1989, as well as Economic and Social Council decision 1989/111 of 22 May 1989 concerning emergency assistance to Somalia,

Extremely concerned at the massive displacement of the population in the affected regions of northern Somalia, the extensive damage and destruction of infrastructure and the widespread disruption of public services,

Noting with satisfaction the measures taken by the Secretary-General to obtain an assessment of the emergency and rehabilitation needs of the displaced population,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to respond fully to requests for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Somalia,

Considering that Somalia, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to cope with the mounting burden of providing adequate food, medicine and shelter for the large number of displaced people,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the statement made by the representative of Somalia before the Second Committee on 22 October 1990,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded and are continuing to respond generously to the appeals of the Government of Somalia and the Secretary-General by extending assistance to Somalia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts he is making to mobilize international resources to assist the Government and people of Somalia in coping with the emergency situation in the affected regions of northern Somalia;

3. Recalls the interim report of the United Nations inter-agency mission that visited Somalia from 25 February to 12 March 1989;

4. Once again appeals to all States and the competent intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously and urgently to meet the needs identified by the United Nations inter-agency mission to Somalia;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to coordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help Somalia in its emergency and rehabilitation programme;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1991 of his efforts and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

South Pacific countries

On 9 February, at its organizational session for 1990, the Economic and Social Council had before it a draft resolution, introduced by New Zealand, on emergency assistance to Samoa, American Samoa, Niue, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Wallis and Futuna, in the South Pacific, which had been struck by cyclone "Ofa" from 2 to 6 February, resulting in loss of life, destruction of housing and extensive damage to their social and economic infrastructure. The Observer for Samoa orally reported that in that country alone preliminary figures put the homeless at 25,000 people and damage at some $200 million.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/1.

Emergency assistance to Samoa,
American Samoa, Niue, Tokelau, Tonga,
Tuvalu, and Wallis and Futuna

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned at the devastation caused to Samoa, American Samoa, Niue, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Wallis and Futuna by cyclone "Ofa" from 2 to 6 February 1990, which resulted in loss of life, destruction of housing and extensive damage to economic and social infrastructure, as well as to agricultural, transport and industrial sectors,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/236 of 22 December 1989, by which the Assembly proclaimed the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, beginning on 1 January 1990,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 43/189 of 20 December 1988 on specific measures in favour of island developing countries,

Recalling further that Samoa and Tuvalu have been designated by the General Assembly as least developed countries,

Conscious of the efforts of the Governments concerned and of the peoples of Samoa, American Samoa, Niue, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Wallis and Futuna to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of cyclone "Ofa",

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Conscious of the prompt response being made by Governments, the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals to provide relief to the affected countries and territories,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its medium-term and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the Governments concerned and the peoples of the affected countries and territories, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral co-operation in meeting the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and to initiate the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Governments concerned and the peoples of Samoa, American Samoa, Niue, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Wallis and Futuna;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all members of the international community, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to the affected countries and territories;

3. Urges all members of the international community to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected countries and territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the international financial institutions and the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, to assist the Governments of the affected countries and territories in identifying the medium-term and long-term needs and in mobilizing resources, and to help with the task of reconstruction of the affected countries and territories being undertaken by their respective Governments;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1990, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

9 February 1990 Meeting 4 Adopted without vote
52-nation draft (E/1990/L.17); agenda item 2.

By decision 1990/288 of 9 November, the Council took note of the oral report made before it on that date by the Chief of the East Asia and Pacific Division of the UNDP Regional Bureau for Asia and the Pacific, on emergency assistance to Samoa, American Samoa, Niue, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Wallis and Futuna.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the foregoing Economic and Social Council resolution, the Secretary-General reported on 12 December [A/45/842] to the General Assembly that the international community, including UN organs and specialized agencies, bilateral donors and NGOs, had contributed promptly and generously towards alleviating the devastating consequences of cyclone Ofa. The Governments concerned had requested assistance for emergency relief and long-term rehabilitation and reconstruction, advice on damage and needs assessment, and help in mobilizing resources. The emergency assistance that had been provided to Samoa—substantial cash, food, equipment and materials—was illustrative of the assistance to the other affected countries.

Immediate announcements of donor support had come from Australia, France, Japan, New Zealand, Singapore, the United Kingdom and the United States. Australia, New Zealand and the United States had airlifted food, miscellaneous supplies and specialized emergency personnel in response to the needs for humanitarian assistance. Multilateral organizations and the UN system had responded through UNDP, UNDRP, UNICEF, WFP and WHO. UNDP funded emergency relief and a $300,000 infrastructure project. UNDRP provided a cash grant and dispatched emergency assessment missions and WFP provided food aid. The Asian Development Bank gave a loan for electric power reconstruction.

A round table had been organized (Geneva, May) with UNDP assistance for the purpose of coordinating aid and mobilizing resources on the basis of the rehabilitation strategy and assistance needs presented by Samoa.

Sudan

On 11 July, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Emergency and Relief Operations in the Sudan made an oral progress report before the Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee on the second phase of "Operation Lifeline Sudan" (OLS), launched the year before [YUN 1989, p. 361].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/67.

Operation Lifeline Sudan

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 43/8 of 18 October 1988, 43/52 of 6 December 1988 and 44/12 of 24 October 1989 on assistance to the Sudan,

Noting with deep concern the continuing negative impact of persistent natural disasters and civil strife in the Sudan, which have resulted in the destruction of the socio-economic infrastructure of that country and large numbers of displaced persons, as well as the serious consequences of the most recent drought, namely crop failures and food shortages,

Recognizing that the Sudan continues to require, as a complement to its own efforts, strong and continued international solidarity and humanitarian support to meet the urgent requirements for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Noting that the food and non-food requirements of Operation Lifeline Sudan are spelt out in the emergency appeal of May 1990 of the United Nations Children's Fund, the Operation Lifeline Sudan Phase II Background Appeal Document of the Donor Consultation Meeting of 26 March 1990 and the World Food Programme appeal of 20 March 1990,

Noting with appreciation the report on progress in the second phase of Operation Lifeline Sudan, made before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee at its 1st meeting, on 11 July 1990, by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Emergency and Relief Operations in the Sudan,

1. Expresses its deep gratitude and appreciation to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that are providing assistance to the Government and the people of the Sudan in their relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the context of Operation Lifeline Sudan;

2. Expresses its full appreciation to the Secretary-General and the organizations of the United Nations system for the effective resource mobilization, successful co-ordination and support for Operation Lifeline Sudan;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Government of the Sudan, to continue to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help the Sudan in its emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, to mobilize resources for the implementation of those programmes and to keep the international community informed of the needs of that country;

4. Calls upon all States to continue to contribute generously to the relief and rehabilitation requirements of displaced persons;

5. Further calls upon all States to respond generously to the appeals for immediate food and non-food relief and rehabilitation support made by the United Nations Children's Fund in May 1990, the Government of the Sudan on 26 March 1990 and the World Food Programme on 20 March 1990;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of his report on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/12, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, to provide information with special reference to the activities mentioned in the report made before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee at its 1st meeting, on 11 July 1990, by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Emergency and Relief Operations in the Sudan.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/67

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/112) without vote, 20 July (meeting 15); draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 and Turkey (E/1990/C.3/L.5), orally revised; agenda item 14.

Report of Secretary-General. On 8 October, the Secretary-General submitted a report on emergency assistance to the Sudan [A/45/547] in response to the foregoing Economic and Social Council resolution as well as to General Assembly resolution 44/12 [SUN 1989, p. 362]. According to that report, conditions in the Sudan remained precarious. Renewed armed conflict in October 1989 had resulted in further civilian displacements. Besides the persistent drought that had seriously affected crops and livestock, returnees to the south from Khartoum and from camps in the transitional zone (Southern Darfur and Southern Kordofan provinces) had added to the strain on food supplies. As a result of increasing food shortages, significant numbers of people had begun migrating towards Ethiopia. To contain the situation, OLS had accelerated the movement of relief food, seeds and fishing equipment to the south and intensified cattle vaccination, immunization of children and pregnant women and basic health-care activities. Of the 1.8 million displaced persons in Khartoum, many continued to live in appalling conditions, with little or no access to adequate shelter, clean water or health services. The prospect of continued fighting and serious economic stress, together with an anticipated poor harvest in 1990, was expected to result in substantial relief and rehabilitation requirements through 1991.

The joint Sudan/UN background appeal document and action plan for the second phase of OLS (OLS II) were presented at a donor consultation meeting convened by the Sudan and the United Nations (Khartoum, 26 March). The appeal was for an estimated $121 million, representing the total cost of OLS II, including non-food activities, for some 4.5 million people requiring emergency relief and rehabilitation assistance in 1990. Food and logistics accounted for approximately half of the estimated figure. Priority would be given to food deliveries and urgent non-food supplies to areas rendered inaccessible during the rainy season. Despite the six-month delay in presenting the appeal, all of the 104,000 metric tons (MT) of relief food asked for had been secured by the end of March. The OLS programmes would cover the conflict zone: Bahr El-Ghazal, Equatoria and Upper Nile provinces, Southern Darfur and Kordofan provinces, most of the Central Region, and, for the first time under OLS, displaced persons living in planned and unplanned areas in Khartoum.

Despite logistical problems, 43,163 MT had been delivered to target locations by 6 September: 32,486 MT to areas under the Government and 10,677 MT to those under the Sudan Peoples Liberation Movement (SPLM). The WFP appeal for $11.8 million for the transport of relief food had largely been met. However, the late start of OLS II operations necessitated airlifts into areas originally planned to be serviced by road, thus increasing logistics costs.

In order to achieve uninterrupted delivery of OLS relief supplies into the conflict areas, several new co-ordination and problem-solving committees were established in March, involving the Government, the United Nations, donors, SPLM and the Sudan Relief and Rehabilitation Association. A disagreement between the Government and SPLM over the allocation of supplies to SPLM-held areas led to the formation of a joint review and allocations committee charged with allocating additional relief supplies from a reserve food-aid stock of 12,000 MT on the basis of population and needs surveys conducted by the United Nations. Three other committees were established in Khartoum to deal with major OLS problems, administrative matters and policy issues. In other administrative arrangements, the Government had agreed to make available to OLS a special exchange rate equivalent to 12.2 Sudanese pounds to one United States dollar, to exempt relief goods from customs duties and relief aircraft from airport charges, and to ensure that NGOs were able to continue their activities in the field.

The report concluded that, although food aid pledges and receipts and funding for logistics had been prompt and generous, that had not been the case with the non-food sector. It had become evident that part of donor reluctance to fund non-food activities had stemmed from a combination of the problems experienced by the relief operations during the past eight months, varying from the suspension of relief flights to bureaucratic problems and the resurgence of fighting. Unfortunately, the shortage of funds for such activities would only lead to further suffering among those least able to help themselves: the displaced women and children.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/226.

Operation Lifeline Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/8 of 18 October 1988, 43/52 of 6 December 1988 and 44/12 of 24 October 1989 on assistance to the Sudan,

Deeply concerned at the continuing negative impact of persistent natural disasters and armed conflict in the Sudan, which have resulted in the destruction of the socio-economic infrastructure of that country and large numbers of displaced persons, as well as the expected serious consequences of the most recent drought, namely, crop failures and food shortages,

Recognizing that the Sudan continues to require, as a complement to its own efforts, strong and continued international solidarity and humanitarian support to meet the urgent requirements for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction,

Noting that the food and non-food requirements of Operation Lifeline Sudan are spelt out in the emergency appeal of May 1990 of the United Nations Children's Fund, the Operation Lifeline Sudan Phase II Background Appeal Document of the Donor Consultation Meeting of 26 March 1990 and the World Food Programme appeal of 20 March 1990,

Noting with appreciation the report on progress in the second phase of Operation Lifeline Sudan made before the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Economic and Social Council on 11 July 1990 by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Emergency and Relief Operations in the Sudan,

Taking note of the recent decision of the Government of the Sudan during the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, to extend a new period of tranquillity in the southern part of the country,

1. Attaches importance to the established principles governing United Nations emergency programmes in conflict situations, including the principle of safe access for personnel providing relief to all in need, which should be implemented with the co-operation of all parties concerned;

2. Expresses its deep gratitude and appreciation to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that are providing assistance to the Government and the people of the Sudan in their relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the context of Operation Lifeline Sudan;

3. Expresses its full appreciation to the Secretary-General and the organizations of the United Nations system for the successful co-ordination of and the effective resource mobilization and support for Operation Lifeline Sudan;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Government of the Sudan, to continue to co-ordinate the efforts of the United Nations system to help the Sudan in its emergency, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, to mobilize resources for the implementation of those programmes and to keep the international community informed of the needs of that country;

5. Calls upon all States to continue to contribute generously to the relief and rehabilitation requirements of displaced persons;

6. Also calls upon all States to respond generously to the appeals for immediate food and non-food relief and rehabilitation support made by the United Nations Children's Fund in May 1990, the Government of the Sudan on 26 March 1990 and the World Food Programme on 20 March 1990;

7. Urges the Government of the Sudan and other parties involved to offer all feasible assistance, including facilitating the movement of relief supplies and personnel, to guarantee maximum success of the second phase of Operation Lifeline Sudan in all parts of the country;

8. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on Operation Lifeline Sudan, and requests him to monitor and assess the evolution of the emergency situation and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on all matters connected with the implementation of emergency and relief operations in the Sudan and to offer appropriate briefings during the intervening period.

United Republic of Tanzania

On 18 April, [A/45/224] the United Republic of Tanzania brought to the Secretary-General's attention the appeal it had made on 13 April for international assistance, owing to the disastrous consequences of the widespread flooding caused by four weeks of excessive rains in much of the country. The regions of Arusha, Kilimanjaro, Lindi, Morogoro, Mtwara, Singida and Tanga were affected, Lindi and Mtwara most seriously, where the floods had left 69 people dead, hundreds missing and over 150,000 displaced.

The assistance called for included medicines, tents and materials for temporary shelters, equipment and components for bridge and road reconstruction, restoration of water supply systems, helicopters with spare parts, and related financing.

Yemen

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/271, took note of a 1989 World Health Assembly resolution recommending that the Council request UN organizations and specialized agencies to initiate programmes to assist Yemen, as well as Djibouti (see above), to tackle the consequences of torrential rain and flooding in 1989.

On the same date, Council adopted resolution 1990/65.

Assistance to the Republic of Yemen

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the establishment of the Republic of Yemen and bearing in mind the considerable burden involved in the reconstruction of its economic and social institutions, including health, educational and vocational institutions in the two former States,

Taking into account that the Republic of Yemen, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to shoulder the burden of its reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes, in spite of the endeavours of the Government,

Taking into account the requirements to enable the Republic of Yemen to rebuild the country's infrastructure, particularly roads, health centres, schools, water and electricity supply lines, communication networks and other public services, and to reconstruct the villages and reclaim the thousands of hectares of cultivated land that were totally destroyed or swept away during the floods in April 1989.

Noting with appreciation the support provided by various States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for emergency relief operations,

Recalling General Assembly-resolutions 37/150 and 37/166 of 17 December 1982, Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/1 of 10 May 1989, resolution 176(XV) adopted on 18 May 1989, by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia at its fifteenth session, decision 89/37 adopted on 30 June 1989 by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its thirty-sixth session, and resolution WHA 42.15 adopted on 17 May 1989, by the Forty-second World Health Assembly.

Noting the study prepared by the World Bank concerning the requirements for the rehabilitation of the infrastructure that was destroyed by the floods in the country,

1. Calls upon all States to contribute generously and respond effectively to the country's reconstruction and rehabilitation needs;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to co-ordinate the efforts made by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to assist the Republic of Yemen to mobilize resources for the implementation of its special reconstruction and rehabilitation programmes and to apprise the Council of their efforts at its second regular session of 1991;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session his report on the implementation of Assembly resolution 44/179 of 19 December 1989.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/65

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/112) without vote, 19 July (meeting 13); 14-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.3), orally revised in Council; agenda item 14.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a 2 August report on special economic and disaster relief assistance [A/45/358], stated that, following the floods in Yemen in 1989, UNDRO and UNDP co-ordinated in providing immediate relief assistance amounting to $3.6 million. The Government and the World Bank were co-operating in a $15.4 million reconstruction programme, to which UNDP was contributing technical assistance valued at $1 million. A later addendum to that report [A/45/358/Add.1] transmitted detailed information on emergency relief assistance channelled through UNICEF, UNDRO and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia from multi-lateral and bilateral sources.

The Secretary-General further reported on 25 October [A/45/669] that the devastation caused by the 1982 and 1989 floods had compelled Yemen to redirect a substantial part of its limited financial resources from development objectives to reconstruction work, impairing the implementation of the second five-year plan and incurring delays in the implementation of the third five-year plan (1986-1990). He stated that in view of the heavy destruction incurred by the 1989 flood, further assistance was required. At Yemen's request, preparations for a round-table conference to take place in 1991 were under way.

As of the reporting date, the multisectoral rehabilitation and reconstruction effort to address the consequences of the 1989 floods consisted of: a UNDP technical assistance project valued at $1,016,500 to assist the Government in managing a flood reconstruction programme to restore vital physical infrastructure destroyed by the floods and to strengthen the national capacity to manage disaster recovery programmes through the establishment of an Emergency Reconstruction Unit in the Ministry of Planning and Development; a joint International Development Association (IDA) and World Bank emergency flood reconstruction project for a six-month flood mitigation and preparedness study funded through an IDA credit totalling 7.9 million special drawing rights, based on the findings of which in-service training programmes were planned for staff of the Emergency Reconstruction Unit; and a contribution by the Islamic Development Bank at the level of $2 million for four Yemeni governorates. International contributions to the relief and rehabilitation of flood victims totalled $3,687,264: $1,140,000 from the UN system (UNDP, UNICEF, UNDRO, WFP, WHO); $1,900,106 from bilateral sources (Australia, Bahrain, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Norway, Oman, Saudi Arabia, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom); and $647,158 from other intergovernmental and non-governmental sources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/222.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Yemen

The General Assembly,

Welcoming the declaration on 22 May 1990 of the merger of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen to form a single sovereign State called the Republic of Yemen,

Recalling its resolution 44/179 of 19 December 1989 and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/65 of 26 July 1990,

Taking into consideration the fact that Yemen, being one of the least developed countries, is unable to sustain reconstruction and development programmes in spite of the efforts made by its Government,

Taking note of the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, and the mutual commitments entered into on that occasion,

Noting that the response of the international community to General Assembly resolution 44/179 has not achieved the expected goal in meeting the rehabilitation and reconstruction needs arising from the damages inflicted by the floods of 1982 and 1989.

Noting with deep concern the economic situation in Yemen, which has been exacerbated recently by the serious and adverse effects of the situation between Iraq and Kuwait,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that responded and are continuing to respond generously to the request of the Government of Yemen for assistance to overcome the economic difficulties resulting from the floods;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts, reflected in his report, to make the international community aware of the difficulties faced by Yemen and to mobilize assistance for the country;

3. Renews the request made to all States, competent United Nations organizations and programmes and international economic and finance institutions to continue to contribute to the reconstruction and development of Yemen;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system and in close collaboration with the Government authorities, to carry out an evaluation of the requirements of Yemen with a view to drawing up a programme for the reconstruction and development of Yemen, following the damage to the infrastructure of the country;

5. Expresses the wish that its future round-table meetings be held within the framework of the intensified follow-up called for by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

Despite the slow-down in global output in 1990, world trade remained buoyant with the volume of world exports increasing by 5.5 per cent—not much less than the 7 per cent of 1989. However, there were clouds on the international trade horizon, including growing concerns about the proliferation of bilateral trade arrangements, as well as about the formation of trading blocs and their eventual impact on the global trading system. There was also apprehension about protectionism and the tendency for some countries to substitute “managed trade” for free trade, and tensions were mounting with regard to the difficulties in reaching agreement on key agenda items in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations.

The Trade and Development Board (TDB) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) held three sessions in 1990, including a special session on compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls. In December, the General Assembly, having considered the TDB report covering those sessions, urged all countries to fulfil their responsibilities in strengthening the rules and disciplines of the multilateral trading system for the benefit of all and affirmed the need for the outcome of the Uruguay Round to contribute positively to building up and strengthening the infrastructure and technological capacities of the developing countries.

The Assembly decided to convene the eighth session of UNCTAD (UNCTAD VIII) at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 21 September to 8 October 1991. UNCTAD VIII was invited by the Assembly to analyse and assess the outcome of the Uruguay Round, in particular in areas of interest or concern to developing countries. With regard to commodities, the Assembly emphasized the importance of maximizing the contribution of the commodity sector to economic growth and transformation in commodity-dependent developing countries and urged UNCTAD VIII to address all aspects of commodity problems in a comprehensive manner.

On the question of the international debt crisis, the Assembly, having considered reports by the Secretary-General and by his Personal Representative on Debt, invited the multilateral financial institutions to continue to provide support for debt and debt-service reduction packages and urged that serious attention be given to continuing to work towards a growth-oriented solution for developing countries with serious debt-servicing problems, including those whose debt was mainly to official creditors or to multilateral financial institutions.

International trade

The growth of world trade in terms of import volumes declined to an estimated 7.5 per cent in 1989, well below the record 9.5 per cent achieved in 1988. The decline reflected slower output expansion in developed market economies and the important decline in the growth of output in the relatively more industrialized South-East Asian economies, leading to a lower demand for internationally traded goods, said the Trade and Development Report, 1990 [E.90.II.D.6]. The trend towards faster import growth in Japan and the European Economic Community (EEC) in comparison to the United States continued in 1989, despite a sharp fall in Japan's import growth. However, imports into the United States continued to grow strongly relative to output. The total imports of developing countries rose by almost 6 per cent in volume terms in 1989, compared to 14.7 per cent in 1988. That decline affected all developing regions, and import volumes stagnated or even declined in most developing country groups except South and South-East Asia, where they rose by 8.3 per cent. Latin American imports rose very little in volume terms, reflecting major problems in some countries, while in sub-Saharan Africa imports stagnated.

The World Economic Survey, 1990 [E.90.II.C.I.] reported that the volume of world merchandise trade, which grew at 6.7 per cent in 1989, continued to lead the expansion of the world economy. Although that represented a slow-down from the 9 per cent recorded in 1988, it marked the fifth consecutive year in which the increase in world trade exceeded the increase in world output.

In terms of value, world trade expanded nominally by $532.6 billion, or 9.1 per cent in 1989, thus pushing the value of both exports and imports over the $3 trillion mark for the first time. On the export side, developing countries suffered only a modest decrease in their export revenues, as opposed to the developed countries as a group, which faced a decline from 14.2 per cent to 8.2 per cent. The Eastern European countries and the USSR registered a sharp drop in the growth of their exports in value terms from 5.2 per cent to 0.6 per cent.

Although rising incomes and cheaper and improved transport and communications accounted for a large part of the growth of trade, new growth poles that had given an impetus to trade included soaring consumer spending in the Asia and Pacific region, fall-out from Japan's initiative to open up its markets to increased imports, consumerism in the United States, together with its taste for foreign goods, and the recent emergence of a number of trading blocs.

In a note giving an overview of the world economy at the end of 1990 [E/1991/INF/1], the Secretary-General stated that world trade was remarkably buoyant, given the slow-down in output. The volume of world exports increased by 5.5 per cent during 1990, not much less than the 7 per cent of 1989. The Gulf crisis had only a minor impact on world trade because the loss of oil output due to the crisis was quickly made up and the trade of the two countries under the United Nations embargo constituted only 1 per cent of world imports.

Non-fuel commodities, which accounted for a large proportion of the export earnings of developing countries, declined in 1990 after a modest recovery in 1988-1989. However, since prices of manufactured exports rose in 1990, real prices of non-fuel commodities in terms of the manufactured exports they could buy fell by 13 per cent in the first nine months of 1990 over the same period in 1989.

Trade and Development Board

The Trade and Development Board—the Executive Body of UNCTAD—held three sessions in Geneva in 1990 [A/45/15]. The sixteenth special session, which discussed compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls, was held on 8, 9 and 16 March; the second part of the thirty-sixth session was held from 12 to 23 March; and the first part of the thirty-seventh session was held from 1 to 12 and 17 October.

TDB adopted three resolutions and seven decisions during the year. In March, it adopted a wide-ranging resolution on services, protectionism and structural adjustment (including developments and issues in the Uruguay Round of particular concern to developing countries), the impact of technological change on patterns of international trade, and the implications of bilateral arrangements and regional economic integration [A/45/15 (res. 380(XXXVI))]. It also adopted decisions on preparations for UNCTAD VIII [dec. 381(XXXVI)]; on future meetings on iron ore [dec. 382(XXXVI)]; and on its calendar of meetings [dec. 383(XXXVI)]. At its sixteenth special session, the Board adopted a decision on compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls [dec. 379 (s-XVI)]. In October, the Board adopted resolutions on the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system [res. 387(XXXVII)] and on debt and development problems of developing countries [res. 388(XXXVII)]. It also adopted decisions on UNCTAD's contribution, within its mandate, to sustainable development [dec. 384 (XXXVII)]; economic co-operation among developing countries [dec. 385(XXXVII)] and on a review of its calendar of meetings [dec. 386(XXXVII)].

In resolution 1990/57 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of the TDB report on the second part of its thirty-sixth session, requested UNCTAD to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth (1991) session, through the Council, on institutional developments relating to the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade.

The Assembly, in resolution 45/203 of 21 December, took note of the TDB report on the second part of its thirty-sixth session and the first part of its thirty-seventh session and urged member States to give full effect to its resolutions and decisions.

Programme policy

The TDB Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held its nineteenth session in Geneva from 12 to 16 February [TD/B/1250].

The Working Party reviewed the technical assistance activities of UNCTAD [TD/B/WP/68 & Add.1] and considered the work of the UNCTAD secretariat on programme evaluation [TD/B/1225].

In agreed conclusions, the Working Party recommended to TDB that future reports of the UNCTAD Secretary-General on programme evaluation be submitted solely to the Working Party on a biennial basis and subsequently be made available with the report of the Working Party to the Board. It decided that, in future, the review of UNCTAD's technical co-operation activities should be carried out biennially together with the review on programme evaluation.

Programme budget

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/252 of 21 December, established revised programme budget appropriations for the 1990-1991 biennium, allocating $84,381,200 for the UNCTAD programme, an increase of $11,273,600 over the previous year's allocation [YUN 1989. p. 385].

Technical co-operation

Expenditures for UNCTAD's technical co-operation reached a record level of $22 million in 1990, an increase of $3 million over the 1989 figure. Particular attention was paid to Africa and LDCs, with Africa accounting for more than 40 per cent of total expenditure.

In the area of trade, the joint United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/UNCTAD programme of four interrelated regional and inter-regional projects to facilitate full participation of developing countries in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations was very active in 1990. With the support of UNDP, assistance was provided to the least developed countries (LDCs) to facilitate their preparation for, and participation in, the Second UN Conference on LDCs (see PART THREE, Chapter I). UNCTAD also assisted developing countries in the areas of trade policies; the operation of the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP); the transfer of technology; control of restrictive business practices: trade with countries of Eastern Europe; and improving the management of food imports.

The trade facilitation programme, whose main feature was the installation of the Automated System of Customs Data (ASYCUDA) was expanded, and a new programme of training and human resource development in the field of foreign trade (TRAINFORTRADE) was launched. Co-operation continued in the field of management; since 1981 over 20 countries had benefited from the use of the Debt Management and Financial Analysis System (DMFAS). Technical co-operation continued in the areas of maritime and multimodal transport, including the management of ports and improvement of the transport chain (see below). Three large projects in Africa, focusing on the transit and transport problems of land-locked countries, were in operation in 1990.

Organizational questions

By a 23 March decision [A/45/15 (dec. 383 (XXXVI))], TDB approved the calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1990 and took note of the draft calendar for 1991.

On 1 October, the Board noted that since Democratic Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic had merged to form a single State, the membership of UNCTAD had changed from 168 to 167. With the accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October, UNCTAD's membership would become 166. On the same date, TDB elected Sao Tome and Principe to the Board and its Main Committees. Following the merger of Democratic Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic, the membership of the Board and its Main Committees was confirmed as follows: TDB-131; Committee on Commodities-107; Committee on Manufactures-101; Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade- 103; Committee on Shipping-103; Committee on Transfer of Technology-99; Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries-110. The Board noted that the forthcoming unification of Germany would reduce its membership by one.

By a 12 October decision [dec. 386 (xxxvii)], TDB approved the calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1990 and took note of the draft calendar for 1991 and the tentative schedules for 1992 and 1993, on the understanding that they would be finalized in the light of the timing of UNCTAD VIII.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Having considered the report of TDB on the second part of its thirty-sixth session, its sixteenth special session, and the first part of its thirty-seventh session [A/45/15], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 45/203 on 21 December.

Trade and Development Board

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the Final Act adopted by the Conference at its seventh session, held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987, and the Declaration on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, contained in Trade and Development Board Resolution 376(XXXVI) of 13 October 1989, as endorsed by the Assembly in its resolution 44/19 of 14 November 1989,

Recalling also its resolution 44/219 of 22 December 1989 on the report of the Trade and Development Board,

Considering Trade and Development Board resolution 388(XXXVII) of 17 October 1990 on debt and development problems of developing countries as part of the continuing contribution of the Board to the search for a durable solution to the problem of the external indebtedness of developing countries,

Noting that the Trade and Development Report, 1990 constitutes a further valuable effort to enhance understanding of the interdependence of the problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system and the consideration by the Board of the debt and development problems of the developing countries,

Stressing that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations launched during the Special Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986, presents a unique opportunity to contribute to a more open, viable and durable trading system, and recognizing that the Uruguay Round cannot be concluded in whole or in part without a substantial and balanced outcome in all areas involved, including areas of particular importance to developing countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its thirty-sixth session and the first part of its thirty-seventh session and urges member States to give full effect to the provisions of the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Board.

2. Welcomes the agreement reached on the substantive item of the provisional agenda for the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;

3. Notes the contribution made by the Trade and Development Board to the understanding of the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, taking into account the needs of developing countries, welcomes Board resolution 387(XXXVII) of 17 October 1990 on that subject, and urges all Governments to give full and prompt effect to the recommendations contained therein;

4. Affirms that the outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations should be conducive to a significant enhancement of the prospects for trade, economic growth and development of all countries, especially developing countries, in particular through the provision of substantially increased market access for exports;

5. Urges all countries to fulfil their responsibilities in strengthening the rules and disciplines of the multilateral trading system for the benefit of all countries and, to this end, urges all participants to continue the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations and to adopt a constructive and comprehensive approach thereto in order to achieve a successful and balanced outcome in accordance with the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round;

6. Affirms the need for the outcome of the Uruguay Round to contribute positively to the building up and strengthening of the infrastructure and technological capacities of the developing countries through the strengthening of the multilateral trading system;

7. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, at its eighth session, to analyse and assess the outcome of the Uruguay Round, in particular in areas of interest or concern to developing countries;

8. Urges developed countries to promote policies and adopt measures aimed at providing substantially larger export possibilities to developing countries, especially through improved access to markets, in order to support necessary trade policy reforms and structural adjustment processes in developing countries;

9. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Trade and Development

Board, as appropriate, to continue to follow closely and analyse developments that have a major impact on international trade relations, including economic integration and policy reform in the world economy, technological change and the growing linkage between flows of investment and trade;

10. Welcomes Trade and Development Board decision 384(XXXVII) of 12 October 1990 on the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate, to sustainable development, and requests the Conference secretariat to continue to co-operate with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in the preparations for that Conference;

11. Also welcomes Trade and Development Board resolution 380(XXXVI) of 23 March 1990, and invites the Board to follow closely developments and issues related to economic integration processes, especially those with a major impact on the trade and development of the developing countries;

12. Further Welcomes Trade and Development Board decision 385(.XXXVII) of 12 October 1990 on economic co-operation among developing countries and supports the efforts of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as the principal organization in the United Nations system dealing with economic co-operation among developing countries, to promote and expand such co-operation.

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.3) without vote. 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.92) based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.58); agenda item 79 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 19-21, 47, 54; plenary 71.

Preparations for UNCTAD VIII

At the second part of its thirty-sixth session (Geneva, 12-23 March), the Trade and Development Board (TDB) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), in accordance with its 1989 decision [YUN 1989, p. 386] to hold the eighth session of UNCTAD (UNCTAD VIII) in 1991, discussed arrangements and preparations for the Conference.

By a 23 March decision [A/45/15/ (dec. 381 (xxxvi))], the Board recommended to the General Assembly that UNCTAD VIII be convened in June 1991. It requested the President of TDB to continue his consultations on a venue in Latin America, so that a final decision might be taken not later than at the first part of the Board's thirty-seventh session in October. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to continue his consultations on the provisional agenda with a view to finalizing it for adoption by the Board in October.

On 12 October, TDB approved the substantive item of the provisional agenda for UNCTAD VIII: strengthening national and international action and multilateral co-operation for a healthy, secure and equitable world economy. TDB noted that in addition to the plenary, there would be one sessional committee and not be more than three simultaneous official meetings. The Board authorized its President to report directly to the Assembly on the outcome of consultations on the venue and dates of the Conference and authorized the UNCTAD Secretary-General to complete the provisional agenda.

In a 23 November letter [A/C.2/45/11], the Chairman of TDB informed the President of the General Assembly that consultations on the venue of the Conference had been successful and recommended for the approval of the Assembly that UNCTAD VIII be held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 21 September to 8 October 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/205.

Eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as an organ of the General Assembly,

Recalling also its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Recalling further its resolution 42/175 of 11 December 1987, in which it welcomed the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session, and its resolution 44/19 of 14 November 1989 on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Bearing in mind its resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985 on the pattern of conferences,

1. Welcomes with deep appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Uruguay to act as host to the eighth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at Punta del Este;

2. Decides to convene the eighth session of the Conference at Punta del Este from 21 September to 8 October 1991, to be preceded by a two-day meeting of senior officials at Punta del Este on 19 and 20 September 1991;

3. Notes the approval by the Trade and Development Board of the substantive item of the provisional agenda for the eighth session of the Conference;

4. Requests the Trade and Development Board to undertake the necessary intergovernmental preparations for the eighth session of the Conference and, at the second part of its thirty-seventh session, to agree on organizational arrangements for the eighth session of the Conference that will encourage ministerial participation, particularly in the conclusion of its work.

General Assembly resolution 45/205

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.3) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.76) based on informal consultations; agenda item 79 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 19-21. 54; plenary 71.

Trade policy

The Trade and Development Report, 1990 noted that the recent past had been rich in changes in economic structures and policy orientations in the developed market economies and in Eastern Europe. The decision to complete the single EEC market by 1992 had to be seen in the broader context of closer co-operation between EEC and the European Free Trade Association (EFTA) and the movement by some countries in Eastern Europe to establish preferential trade links with Western European trading groups. Those developments presented both opportunities and dangers for developing countries.

In the United States, the tendency towards unilateralism and bilateralism in trade policy had become increasingly evident. The recent strengthening of trade laws mandating negotiations under the threat of retaliation with trading partners perceived to be engaging in unfair trading practices was a cause of concern for developing countries. In its negotiations with trading partners, the United States had sought to expand the notion of what constituted trade policy, including attempts to draw into trade negotiations norms on intellectual property rights, trade in services, foreign direct investment and even domestic regulations and ways of doing business, as witnessed by the "Structural Impediments Initiative" with Japan.

The growth of intra-Asian trade centred around Japan had been particularly rapid. Eight developing economies of the Pacific Rim had been in the forefront as exporters to Japan and had also been important recipients of Japanese foreign direct investment. The possible emergence of an investment-led trading bloc centred around Japan would have important implications for different groups of developing countries.

In response to a 1989 TDB request [YUN 1989, p. 566], the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a 16 January 1990 report on the implications of bilateral arrangements and regional economic integration, especially those which had a major impact on global trade, in particular on the trade and development of developing countries [TD/B/1242]. The report reviewed recent trends in economic integration arrangements among the developed market economies and among the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, and considered some intra-developing countries groupings. It examined the implications for developing countries from the standpoint of market access of EEC's 1992 Programme, the objective of which was to remove obstacles to the movement of trade and improve the functioning of markets, and the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement. The report also discussed the systematic consequences of the major regional integration schemes.

The report stated that the experiences of the developed and developing countries in furthering regional economic integration had been markedly different. In the developing countries, most regional integration groupings had suffered a setback due to a contraction in their economic activity and external trade. In contrast, in the developed market economies, the integration process had advanced in recent years. The enlargement of EEC, the deepening of the process of integration envisaged in the Single Europe Act (1987) and the coming into force of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement had raised questions about the impact of those arrangements on access to the corresponding markets and about their implications for the international trading system. The concern about market access stemmed from possible trade diversion effects of those arrangements. The implications of such groupings arose not only from the economic and political importance of the countries involved but also from the concern that their proliferation might lead to a further erosion and possible fragmentation of the trading system. The effect of such developments would be greatest on small exporting countries, particularly developing countries.

In a 23 March resolution [A/45/15 (res. 380 (XXXVI))], TDB agreed on the need to ensure that bilateral arrangements and regional economic integration, especially those having a major impact on global trade, in particular on the trade and development of developing countries, imparted dynamism to global trade and enhanced trade and development possibilities for developing countries. It called on member States involved to continue to promote necessary policies and adopt appropriate measures in that regard.

The General Assembly, in its Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted in resolution S-18/3 at its eighteenth special session (New York, 23 April-1 May) (see PART THREE, Chapter I), stated that regional economic integration was important in expanding trade and investment in developing countries. Developing countries should strive to promote economic integration and strengthen economic and technical co-operation among themselves. Those efforts should be encouraged and supported by the developed countries, as well as by international organizations.

Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations

The Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which were launched in September 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 1210], at Punta del Este, Uruguay, and scheduled for completion in December 1990, ~~was suspended prior to the end of the year. However,~~ considerable progress had been made in many areas of the negotiations (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII).

By a March note to TDB [TD/B/1251], the UNCTAD secretariat transmitted a communication from Nigeria, on behalf of the Group of 77, setting out the Group's assessment of progress in the Uruguay Round negotiations. The Informal Group of Developing Countries, at its meeting on 22 and 23 February, had noted with concern the lack of balance in the negotiations, which, in the Group's view, stemmed from failure by many developed-country participants to engage meaningfully in traditional areas while at the same time pressing for cross-linkages to and far-reaching results in new areas. That attitude had the potential to undermine the interests of developing-country participants in the Round. Developing-country participants were convinced that after three years of negotiations the time for political decisions had arrived. The Trade Negotiations Committee, at its April and July meetings, would have to produce a balanced overall package, which, if acceptable, could be finalized at the ministerial meeting planned for December.

In a 23 March resolution [A/45/15 (res. 380 (XXXVI))], TDB urged participants in the Uruguay Round to strive for a balanced and successful outcome of the Round, which would result in the liberalization and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, especially developing countries, through adequate attention being given to all areas including those of special interest to the trade and development of developing countries. It noted that recipient countries recognized the usefulness and importance of the technical co-operation programme of UNCTAD and UNDP in assisting developing countries in their participation in the Uruguay Round.

Strengthening institutional trade arrangements

The General Assembly, in its Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of Developing Countries, in its resolution S-18/3 adopted at its eighteenth special session, stated that an open and credible multilateral trading system was essential for the promotion of growth and development. It was vitally important that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations resulted in a balanced outcome, preserving and strengthening the multilateral trading system, enabling trade liberalization and increased market access for the exports of developing countries. The principles underlying the multilateral trading system should be reaffirmed, and international organizations active in multilateral trade should be strengthened as part of the process of attaining those objectives.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/57.

Trade and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on the second part of its thirty-sixth session,

Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991, on institutional developments related to the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade, taking into account the provisions of paragraph 32 of the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/57

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote
Approved by First Committee (E/1990/106), 23 July (meeting 10); draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (E/1990/C.1/L.3), revised following informal consultations; agenda item 7(a).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/201.

Strengthening international organizations in the area of multilateral trade

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 12 May 1990,

Noting the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and its Protocol of Provisional Application of 30 October 1947 and General Assembly resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964 on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Noting also the institutional proposals made in connection with the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched during the Special Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986, related to the strengthening of multilateral organizations in the area of international trade,

Stressing the principle of free and fair global trade, which should be conducive to a significant enhancement of the trade and development prospects of all countries, in particular developing countries,

Stressing also the need for strengthening institutional arrangements in the area of international trade, with a view to reinforcing further the multilateral trading system,

1. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/57 of 26 July 1990, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on institutional developments, taking into account all relevant proposals, related to the strengthening of international organizations in the area of multilateral trade;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the report requested, to solicit the views of all Governments and the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system on this matter.

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.3) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.91) based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.55), and orally revised; agenda item 79 (b).
Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 19-21, 49, 54; plenary 71.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

In March, TDB conducted its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on structural adjustment issues in the world economy [UNCTAD/ITP/PS], which discussed recent trends in international trade and output, developments in structural and trade policies, and structural adjustment trends and policies in the industrial sectors of particular export interest to developing countries (iron and steel, automobiles and components, consumer electronics, and textiles and clothing). It also considered information provided by member States of UNCTAD {TD/B/12445 & Adds. 1,2}.

In a 23 March resolution [A/45/15 (res. 380 (XXXVI))]. TDB urged Governments to fulfil commitments to halt and reverse protectionism as agreed in the Final Act of UNCTAD VII, taking into account the export interests of developing countries. It reiterated the need to take structural adjustment actions favourable, in particular, to the widening of markets for products in which developing countries had or might develop comparative advantage.

In a December report [TD/B/1284] on costs and consequences of non-tariff measures which adversely affected exports of developing countries, the UNCTAD secretariat stated that, in total, non-tariff measures lowered exports from developing countries by an estimated $4.6 billion or by 18 per cent of their exports of products to the restraining countries. The major product sectors were seafood in Japan and steel products and consumer electronics in EEC.

Trade preferences

Generalized system of trade preferences

TDB's Special Committee on Preferences held its seventeenth session in Geneva from 14 to 22 May [TD/B/1263]. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on the comprehensive review of the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP), including its implementation, maintenance, improvement and utilization [TD/B/C.5/130]. The report argued that GSP had not yet achieved its objectives and had only minor but positive impact on growth and industrialization in developing countries. An improved GSP could provide an important stimulus in those countries where non-traditional export supply capabilities were emerging. GSP therefore needed to be extended during the 1990s and preference-giving countries might wish to improve their autonomous schemes to bring them more into line with GSP principles. Improvements that deserved attention included: action to deal with non-tariff measures that impeded access to GSP benefits; expansion of product coverage; adoption of a general safeguard provision with multilaterally agreed objectives and transparent criteria for injury determination; elimination of currently applied country exclusions; elimination of product-country exclusions or if not possible, elaboration of objective and transparent multilaterally agreed norms for such exclusions; improvement of preference margins; simplification and harmonization of rules of origin; and improvements in the provisions for LDCs.

Also before the Committee were reports by the UNCTAD secretariat on improvement in the rules of origin, including harmonization, identification and promotion of possible initiatives [TD/B/C.5/120 & Corr.1]; and on GSP-related technical co-operation activities in 1989 [TD/B/C.5/128]. The Committee also considered a feasibility study for providing exporters and importers consolidated computerized information on GSP [TD/B/C.5/129]. The study proposed the development of a data base to be accessed in a user-friendly manner through micro-computers as the most cost-effective means to provide data on trade, tariffs and special requirements on GSP rates.

By a 22 May resolution [TD/B/1263 (res. II(XVII))], the Committee recognized the need to ensure that GSP achieved its full potential; that preference-giving countries maintained, strengthened and improved their autonomous schemes; and that developing countries utilized as fully as possible the benefits from the potential trade advantages created by GSP. To improve the effectiveness of GSP, the Committee recommended that preference-giving countries expand and improve the product coverage of their schemes and ensure inclusion of additional products of current and potential export interest to developing countries to maximize the benefits to preference-receiving countries. It was also recommended that preference-giving countries grant deeper tariff cuts aimed at duty-free treatment. The Committee urged preference-giving countries to reduce a priori limitations and restrictions on preferential imports and impart stability and predictability to the schemes. It also recommended that safeguard measures should be based on objective criteria and transparent procedures and that preference-giving countries continue to simplify and improve their rules of origin. The Committee agreed that special consideration should be given to products of export interest to LDCs, in particular by providing duty-free access, while undertaking measures in the field of GSP.

Concerning technical co-operation, the Committee called upon countries to provide resources for their support, with special attention to the needs of LDCs, and invited UNDP to provide adequate financial resources for UNCTAD's GSP technical assistance programme. It called upon UNDP to provide funding support for the proposed project for providing exporters and importers with consolidated computerized information on GSP.

In agreed conclusions [12(XVII)] on the harmonization and improvement of the rules of origin, the Committee agreed that its Sessional Committee of the whole should examine item-by-item the initiatives proposed by the secretariat to improve the existing rules. It noted the adoption of the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System (HS) by all preference-giving countries. The Committee agreed that, in the next review, the definitions of "substantial transformation", namely the process criterion and the percentage criterion, should be examined. In the course of that review, preference-giving countries should examine both definitions in the light of their experience over two decades and exchange views thereon during a future session of the Committee.

On 12 October, TDB took note of the report of the Special Committee on Preferences and endorsed its resolution and agreed conclusions.

Technical co-operation

Delivery of technical co-operation activities in connection with GSP remained high in 1990, due mainly to increased demand for such assistance and to the resources provided by UNDP-financed regional projects and support from the UNCTAD GSP programme financed by trust funds [TD/B/C.5/135]. In 1990, total extrabudgetary funding for GSP activities amounted to slightly over $1 million, of which UNDP accounted for $500,000. Trust fund contributions amounted to $521,400, of which trust funds for specific purposes totalled $324,300, in-kind contributions $93,700, and central trust funds $103,400.

The UNCTAD technical co-operation programme on GSP and other trade laws consisted of two UNDP-financed regional projects, a UNDP-financed national project in Indonesia, and an interregional project financed by Japan. The UNCTAD programme provided logistical, administrative and technical support to all projects.

During the year, 50 activities were undertaken in all regions. They included 24 training seminars/workshops and 7 advisory missions. In all, 1,107 participants from 24 preference-receiving countries benefited from training activities.

Growing training activities in Africa and Eastern Europe were creating an increased awareness and interest in GSP, and were particularly important for developing countries with newly emerging export supply capabilities where GSP could assist them to increase foreign-exchange earnings to attain their development objectives.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

In response to a 1989 TDB request [YUN 1989, p. 368], the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to TDB's March session a report on trends and policies in trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems [TD/B/I243 & Add.1]. The report discussed economic developments in the socialist countries of Eastern Europe, inter-systems trade and economic co-operation, and principal factors and prospects in inter-systems trade. It also discussed UNCTAD follow-up to requests made in the Final Act of UNCTAD VII with regard to inter-systems trade.

The report stated that the prospects for inter-systems trade depended on the success of the restructuring process in the socialist countries, the overall developments in the world economy, and the measures that were being taken or might be taken in the future to support and promote inter-systems trade, in particular East-South trade, in the general framework of measures to promote world trade. It was proposed that TDB recommend, among other things, the formulation of further guidelines for the elaboration of a programme to further promote inter-systems trade on the basis of the outcome of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Further Promotion of Inter-Systems Trade held in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 368].

Following informal consultations on the issue, the TDB President read out a statement indicating the Board's understanding that the UNCTAD Secretary-General would use his discretion in orienting and adjusting the work programme as he considered appropriate in the light of developments and taking into account the views expressed during the session. The Board took note of the statement on 23 March.

On 12 October, TDB, during consideration of the agenda for the second part of its thirty-seventh (1991) session, endorsed the understanding read by its President concerning future treatment by the Board of trade issues pertaining to the countries of Eastern Europe. The President recalled that during the Board's March session and consultations at the current session, a general view had emerged that, in the light of policy changes in the countries of Eastern Europe, future consideration of relevant issues should be dealt with in the context of the overall Problématique of international trade and economic co-operation. It was therefore the view of Member States that a separate item on trade relations among countries with different economic systems was no longer required. It was noted that the UNCTAD Secretary-General was making the necessary adjustments to the work programme and organization of the UNCTAD secretariat and that would be reflected in the programme budget.

TDB authorized the Secretary-General, in consultation with its President, to adjust the provisional agenda of the second part of the thirty-seventh session of the Board in the light of developments.

Trade expansion among developing countries

At its October session, TDB had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on trade expansion among developing countries: constraints and measures to overcome them [TD/B/1260]. The report examined the main trends in South-South trade relations; structural obstacles to South-South trade, including weakness of the transportation network, marketing and distribution, direct foreign investment and trade financing; trade policy constraints; complementarities in South-South relations; and measures and prospects for South-South trade expansion.

The report stated that new and more vigorous measures would have to be adopted to give new momentum to South-South trade. That would be facilitated by the three decades of experience acquired by developing countries, and by a better understanding of achievements and past policy errors. Action would have to be taken to: overcome structural obstacles resulting from inadequate infrastructures (marketing, telecommunications and transportation); revise or reduce trade and fiscal policy barriers; establish new institutions to facilitate clearing and trade arrangements; and introduce improved legislation to attract capital and promote investments. Measures would also have to be adapted to the new economic environment resulting partly from structural adjustment programmes and the adoption of market-oriented policies. There was a general need to strengthen economic incentives to promote intra-developing-country trade and improve co-ordination between national policies and integration objectives, and for close co-ordination between trade concessions negotiated, productive capacity and transport facilities.

TDB, in a 12 October decision [A/45/15 (dec. 385(XXVII))], called upon the UNCTAD Secretary-General to assist developing countries and their groupings through technical assistance to promote the expansion of intra-developing-country trade, including advice on the preparation, conduct and evaluation of trade negotiations among developing countries. He should undertake, in co-operation with member States, an in-depth study on the main impediments and disincentives that adversely affected the expansion of trade among developing countries, exploring those measures and alternatives of relevance with specific recommendations for future consideration by TDB through the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries.

Trade promotion and facilitation

International Trade Centre

During 1990, UN bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce. The International Trade Centre (ITC), under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), played a leading role in the delivery of technical co-operation projects in that area.

ITC's expenditures on technical co-operation rose by 21 per cent ($6.1 million) in 1990 over the 1989 level to reach $35.7 million, stated the annual report covering ITC's activities in 1990 [ITC/AG(XXIV)/126]. The share of UNDP-funded activities was 51 per cent; the remaining 49 per cent was financed by trust fund donors.

ITC assistance with regard to institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level was geared towards encouraging the optimal reallocation of functions, the adoption of clearer and better strategies for export development, and improving the mechanism for co-ordination between governments and business organizations. Important changes in the trade promotion policies of developing countries were monitored. A major interregional project on trade development support for structural adjustment was completed and a report based on studies carried out under the project-Trade Development Support for Structural Adjustment-was issued. Reviews of trade promotion organizations and national trade promotion programmes were carried out in countries such as Bangladesh, Cape Verde, Morocco, Sri Lanka and Uganda. In view of the fundamental changes taking place in Eastern Europe, ITC carried out fact-finding and programming missions in several countries in order to formulate technical assistance projects emphasizing the creation of export-support institutions or the transformation of existing bodies into effective sources of assistance for exporters.

Under the export market development sub-programme, which encompassed trade information, product and market development and export development of commodities, ITC continued to monitor the export performance of developing countries and regions with a view to identifying products suitable for export promotion. Considerable effort was made to assess the factors likely to shape the environment for trade and trade promotion in developing countries in the 1990s. Research focused on new products and new markets. Under advisory and training services, ITC, at the request of the Group of 77, undertook preparatory work for a large-scale project to establish regional/subregional information networks between chambers of commerce and industry in developing countries. A UNDP-financed interregional project was initiated in co-operation with UNCTAD to collect and disseminate computerized trade statistics and information on trade control measures, GSP, importers, and other market aspects.

Within the specialized national trade promotion services subprogramme, ITC continued to provide assistance in export packaging. Its activities in that area were being influenced by environmental issues and the proliferation of packaging and labelling regulations, particularly in the industrialized target markets. Assistance was also provided in export financing, costing and pricing for export, trade promotion communications, export quality management, national commercial representation abroad, legal aspects of foreign trade, export co-operation schemes for small and medium-sized enterprises and export-oriented joint ventures, and international physical distribution.

Other technical assistance subprogrammes dealt with commodity promotion, which focused on jute products and sisal agricultural twine; human resource development for trade promotion, which continued to emphasize the strengthening of training institutions, development of training materials and direct training; import operations and techniques; the special programme of technical co-operation with least developed countries (LDCs); and technical co-operation with chambers of commerce and other business organizations.

The Centre also carried out work on the participation of women in trade promotion activities, and economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

During 1990, 19 ITC projects were evaluated—seven interregional, three regional (two in Africa and one in Asia), and nine were country projects related to seven recipient countries (three in Asia, two in Africa and two in the Middle East). Eleven were financed from trust funds, seven by UNDP and one jointly by UNDP and voluntary contributions.

The evaluations demonstrated that the vast majority of projects produced most of the specified outputs. Shortfalls were generally due to incorrect or over-optimistic assumptions at the design stage and to external factors. In about half of the national and regional projects, the sustainability of project results was affected by the less than full use of the outputs achieved because of limited absorptive capacity, lack of counterpart personnel, or the need for prior action at the institutional or policy level. It was decided to expand the evaluation function to place more emphasis on the follow-up of findings and recommendations of evaluation missions.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on ITC held its twenty-third session in Geneva from 23 to 27 April [ITC/AG(XXIII)/122]. It had before it the annual report on ITC activities during 1989

[ITC/AG(XXIII)/119 & Add.1]; an evaluation of the ITC programme elements export packaging and export quality control [ITC/AG(XXIII)/117]; a report of the technical meeting on the ITC 1989 programme evaluation and on its Medium-Term Plan 1992-1997 (22-24 January) [ITC/AG(XXIII)/120]; and the draft section on trade promotion and export development of the Medium-Term Plan for 1992-1997 [ITC/AG(XXIII)/118/Rev.1 & Add.1].

In general recommendations, JAG suggested that future annual reports should show increased problem-orientation; give greater attention to issues of priority interest, such as the environment and women in development; be more specific in reporting on follow-up actions by the secretariat on JAG recommendations and difficulties encountered in the process; and provide an introductory overall review and present a more thorough discussion at the country level of the Centre's relations with other international organizations. In addition, the report should provide a statement of human and financial resources allocated per subprogramme; quantitative figures on programme and project implementation; and information on administrative costs.

ITC should consider, when planning and executing projects in all subprogrammes, how they reflected JAG's concern for environmental protection, the strengthened role of women, human resource development and the special needs of LDCs. It should also develop a specific strategy regarding the environmental aspects of trade.

In reviewing ITC activities by subprogramme, JAG recommended that ITC should promote the sharing of trade information systems and capabilities, encourage their harmonization, and undertake fund-raising efforts to support sub-regional and regional trade information systems. It should expand its product and market development support to developing countries. Those efforts should be co-ordinated with activities of other international, regional and national bodies and consideration given to the role played by transnational corporations in research and development, marketing and trade financing. ITC should provide technical assistance in the area of trade in services, complementing the work of UNCTAD and GATT, and strengthen technical co-operation support on commodities, seeking close alignment with the Second Window of the Common Fund for Commodities. The Centre's training programme should be strengthened, with emphasis on enterprise-oriented training, the training of women entrepreneurs and implementation of a foundation course for LDCs and smaller developing countries. It should involve more specialists from developing countries in planning and implementing training activities and give increased attention to developing regional and subregional training programmes to accommodate urgent training needs of countries not being otherwise assisted. With regard to technical assistance in import operations and techniques, the Centre should aim to optimize the use of foreign exchange resources and contribute to an increase in export earnings through better management of imported inputs. Import assistance projects should reflect specific conditions of supply and the Centre should ensure that appropriate and up-to-date technology was part of development project packages. The Centre should continue to assist developing countries in assessing market opportunities for their products in Eastern and Central European countries and seek the equitable participation of developing country women in all ITC technical co-operation activities, including integrated approaches to that effect. The institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level should be evaluated in 1991 for discussion by JAG in 1992. The Centre should undertake follow-up actions recommended in evaluation reports on ITC's programme elements on export packaging and export quality control, taking into account the views and recommendations of the technical meeting in that connection and report to JAG.

On 9 October, TDB took note of the JAG report on ITC.

Restrictive business practices

At its ninth session (Geneva, 23-27 April) [TD/B/1261], the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices had before it the UNCTAD secretariat report on the comprehensive review of the implementation of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices (known as the Set) [TD/B/RBP/69], and proposals by regional groups and individual States for the improvement of the Set [TD/B/RBP/73 & Add.1]. Among other documents, the Group of Experts also considered the draft provisional rules of procedure of the Conference to review all aspects of the Set, to be held later in the year (see below) [TD/B/RBP/70].

In agreed conclusions, the Intergovernmental Group of Experts requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare for the review conference a report containing proposals for enhancing implementation of the provisions of the Set to ensure transparency in restrictive business practices matters, including a compilation of information concerning restrictive business practices already existing in member countries, and a list of restrictive business practices control authorities and channels through which such information was obtainable. It should also prepare a report containing proposals for the definition of consultation procedures, including the identification of elements that might assist member States, especially the developing countries, to address requests for information and co-operation concerning restrictive business practices control to other States, and to hold consultations on restrictive business practices control issues in accordance with the provisions of the Set. Another report should be prepared on technical assistance on restrictive business practices control issues to ensure the efficient use of resources, which should include: a descriptive review of technical assistance already carried out, its contribution to the control of restrictive business practices and its costs, specified on an individual programme basis; a list of the requests for technical assistance; and proposals for a framework for a technical assistance programme with regard to restrictive business practices control.

The Group annexed to its report a draft decision on preparations for the review conference submitted by the Group of 77 developing countries, and draft recommendations to the review conference, proposed by Group B (the developed market economies).

On 12 October, TDB took note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices on its ninth session and endorsed the agreed conclusions adopted at that session.

UN Conference to review principles and rules to control restrictive business practices

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 41/167 [YUN 1986, p. 500], the Second United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for Control of Restrictive Business Practices was held under UNCTAD auspices in Geneva from 26 November to 7 December [TD/RBP/CONF.3/9].

The Conference had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on proposals on transparency and consultation procedures in restrictive business practices [TD/RBP/CONF.3/3 & Add.1]; technical assistance, advisory and training programmes and restrictive business practices [TD/RBP/CONF.3/4 & Corr.1]; preparations for a handbook on restrictive business practices legislation [TD/RBP/CONF.3/5]; and the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices on its ninth session [TB/B/1261].

The Conference adopted a resolution on strengthening the implementation of the Set, by which it called on States to implement fully all provisions of the Set to ensure its effective application. States were called upon to adopt, improve and enforce appropriate legislation and to implement judicial and administrative procedures. To that end, it suggested that States without any legislation to control restrictive business practices should request information on such legislation and seek consultations with those developed and developing countries experienced in introducing such laws and technical assistance, which should include seminars for government officials and academics as well as business and consumer-related circles. Those States in the process of drafting legislation or that had recently done so should also request the necessary information and technical assistance, which might consist of advisory services and assistance, training workshops and seminars for national officials for implementing restrictive business practice control legislation and on-the-job training with restrictive business practice control authorities in countries with that experience. Those States that had adopted such legislation and sought to enforce those laws more effectively, as well as other States, should seek information on general matters of legislation, issues of importance to enforcement authorities and technical assistance. Any State so addressed should give full consideration to such requests.

The Conference requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to issue a directory of restrictive business practices authorities and to update it regularly. States were asked to supply the UNCTAD secretariat annually, or as it became available, information concerning restrictive business practice legislation or amendments to existing laws; a report on their activities, including details of the more important cases; and any relevant studies, guidelines or published reports on restrictive business practices matters. The UNCTAD secretariat should maintain its database and make it available to States upon request; disseminate that information through appropriate publications; and complete and update the handbook on restrictive business practices legislation.

The Conference requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare a checklist of possible steps to follow in preparing a case, and in requesting consultation, with explanations of reasons for the request and details of the behaviour or activity about which the consultation was requested. It also requested the Intergovernmental Group of Experts to serve as the forum for exchanges of information and consultation.

With regard to the UNCTAD secretariat's proposed framework for technical assistance, the Conference concluded that it contained useful elements. To facilitate a meaningful evaluation of the proposed framework, the secretariat should suggest priorities from among the different types of technical assistance, taking into account the three types of countries requesting assistance: States without any legislation to control restrictive business practices; those in the process of drafting legislation; and those having already adopted legislation. The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to take their costs into account and the most effective use of resources and undertake a regular evaluation of its technical assistance activities in order to determine their effectiveness. The Conference invited the secretariat to continue organizing national, regional and sub-regional seminars, workshops and symposia, including with respect to regional grouping of States willing to adopt restrictive business practices control systems. The Conference urged intergovernmental organizations and financing programmes, in particular UNDP, to provide the resources for those activities and appealed to States, in particular developed countries, to increase voluntary financial contributions and to provide expertise for the implementation of the activities.

The Conference recommended to the General Assembly that a Third Review Conference be convened in 1995.

Interregional co-operation in trade facilitation

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1990/74 of 27 July, decided to support the implementation by participating African States of the project proposal on interregional co-operation for the facilitation of interregional trade, prepared by the regional commissions and UNCTAD (see PART TWO, ChapterV).

Commodities

The World Economic Survey, 1990 stated that primary commodities continued to be the mainstay of a fair number of developing countries. The overall index of dollar prices of non-fuel commodities showed no increase in 1989 over the 1988 level and could register a 5 per cent decline in 1990. In contrast to 1988 when a large number of developing countries enjoyed an increase in their primary export prices, the combined dollar index of non-fuel commodity prices fell steadily during 1989, so that in the fourth quarter the index was some 6 per cent lower than in the first quarter. A variety of primary commodities did not behave in a similar fashion in 1989. The index of food commodity prices increased almost 6 per cent and the overall price index for agricultural raw materials held firm. At the other end of the spectrum, the prices of beverages, vegetable oil-seeds and oils, and minerals either declined (beverages and oils) or held steady (minerals). The prices of both categories of commodities were affected by supply factors and slack demand.

The Trade Trade Development Report, 1990 said that from the point of view of the developing countries, the overriding elements of the commodity market situation were the collapse of cocoa and coffee prices, high prices for basic foods and the short duration of the copper and aluminium price boom. For many developing countries in Africa, in particular those that relied on imports for much of their basic food requirements, foreign exchange difficulties were exacerbated.

Report of UNCTAD Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 44/218 [YUN 1989, p. 372], the UNCTAD Secretary-General submitted in October 1990 a report on world commodity trends and prospects, with particular reference to the situation of commodity-dependent developing countries [A/45/442 & Corr.1]. The report gave an overview of the world commodity situation and examined the short-term outlook for commodities. It also discussed world commodity trends, trends in international trade of commodities, developing countries' commodity dependence and price and income trends.

The report stated that since 1970 there had been an increase in world production of commodities, especially in agriculture in the developing countries. Commodity prices, except for petroleum, declined relative to manufactured goods prices. For the majority of developing countries whose dependence on exports continued, problems associated with price and export earnings instability were aggravated by the generally low levels of prices by historical standards. Although price instability had been somewhat less since 1982, significant shortfalls in export earnings still occurred, causing difficulties in implementing long-term development or adjustment programmes. The demand for natural raw materials also decelerated over the period. However, consumption would vary with the level of industrial activity, particularly in the capital goods industry for metals and minerals.

Agricultural production and trade policies of developed countries involving high levels of support for domestic producers had exacerbated surpluses in competing exports from developing countries. That had limited market opportunities for developing exporters in both developed countries and third country markets. Moreover, food production for domestic consumption had been discouraged by the availability of cheap imports in a number of developing countries. There were signs that policies in developed countries leading to high levels of production, in particular of foodstuffs, might be changing. A new concern was the impact on commodities trade of the changes taking place in Eastern Europe. However, that region accounted for only 7 per cent of world commodity imports.

In relation to the short-term outlook for commodities, demand for industrial raw materials was expected to be less buoyant, since the slow down in the economies of industrialized countries that had started in 1989 continued in 1990. Economic adjustment in Eastern Europe, other than the German Democratic Republic, could reduce demand for industrial raw materials by that region. The demand for basic foods and tropical beverages seemed likely to increase in response to unfilled consumer demand. German unification was likely to boost demand for raw materials in the short term.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/200.

Commodities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Conference resolutions 93(IV) of 30 May 1976 on the Integrated Programme for Commodities, 124(V) of 3 June 1979 and 155(VI), 156(VI) and 157(VI) of 2 July 1983, the Final Act adopted by the Conference at its seventh session held at Geneva from 9 July to 3 August 1987, and the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, which entered into force on 19 June 1989,

Recalling also its resolutions 41/168 of 5 December 1986, 43/27 of 18 November 1988 and 44/218 of 22 December 1989,

Recognizing that commodity exports continue to play a key role in the economies of developing countries as a whole, as a major source of export earnings, investment and livelihood,

Noting that the changes in Central and Eastern Europe may have important effects on commodity production and trade and that these developments, as well as the potential for expanding South-south trade in commodities, should be fully explored,

Concerned that the problems associated with instability and shortfalls in export earnings are aggravated by commodity prices that, by historical standards, are at generally low levels,

Noting with concern that significant shortfalls in export earnings of commodities have caused serious difficulties in implementing long-term development plans and objectives, as well as in pursuing adjustment efforts,

Concerned about the difficulties experienced by developing countries in financing and implementing diversification programmes,

Bearing in mind the fact that the upstream and downstream linkages between the commodity sector and the national economy need to be strengthened in many developing countries,

Considering that a particularly important role is played by the export of commodities in the economies of the least developed countries,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on world commodity trends and prospects, with particular reference to the situation of commodity-dependent developing countries;

2. Emphasizes the importance of maximizing the contribution of the commodity sector to economic growth and transformation in commodity-dependent developing countries by ensuring that developments in the commodity sector contribute effectively to the generation of growth and development in other sectors of the economy, as well as to the eradication of poverty and, in this context, also stresses the importance of the diversification efforts of commodity-exporting developing countries;

3. Urges the increased active participation in and better use of forums of consumers and producers as a means of exchanging information on, inter alia, investment plans, prospects and markets for individual commodities and as a means of facilitating direct contacts among the partners involved, and urges the establishment, where appropriate and feasible, of such forums for commodities for which they do not yet exist;

4. Expresses its conviction that supportive international policies to improve the functioning of commodity markets through greater transparency and to create more stable and predictable conditions in commodity trade contribute significantly to the efforts of commodity-dependent developing countries to revitalize their development;

5. Recognizes that, as a means of strengthening the national economies of commodity-dependent developing countries, national and international efforts should, inter alia, be based on the following:

(a) A clear assessment of both the agricultural and the minerals potential and the integration of the commodity sector in the overall development strategy;

(b) A better understanding and strengthened complementarity of industry and market structures and of marketing systems at both national and international levels, having regard to the advantages of regional trade;

(c) Increased access to finance, technologies and markets;

(d) The elaboration and implementation of diversification programmes, including programmes for greater self-sufficiency in food;

6. Also recognizes the urgent need to strengthen efforts to address the grave problem of shortfalls in the commodity-export earnings of developing countries and notes, in this regard, the outcome of the sixteenth special session of the Trade and Development Board, devoted to compensatory financing, and takes note of the decision of the Committee on Commodities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development that the issue of export-earning shortfalls and compensatory financing should figure as a specific issue for discussion at its next session;

7. Stresses that decisions on diversification are primarily the responsibility of developing countries, and emphasizes, in that context, the need for continued implementation of their diversification programmes, bearing in mind the long-term evolution of market conditions and the linkage between diversification efforts and market access, and invites developed countries, international financial institutions and other relevant organizations to extend financial support to such diversification programmes;

8. Reiterates its conviction that more stable market conditions for commodities would be conducive to the social and economic development of developing countries and could, inter alia, contribute to the international campaign against illicit production of, trafficking in and abuse of narcotic drugs, thus supporting the efforts undertaken by countries to combat such illicit activities;

9. Urges all the parties involved to meet their agreed commitments and to work for a balanced outcome to the multilateral trade negotiations within the Uruguay Round so as to ensure that the successful conclusion of the negotiations brings about further expansion and liberalization of trade in commodities, taking into account the special and differential treatment for developing countries, as well as all other principles contained in the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round;

10. Notes the establishment of the Common Fund for Commodities, the voluntary contributions pledged by countries that are members of the Common Fund and of the hope expressed by the member countries that further contributions will be forthcoming;

11. Notes also that it is the desire of the members of the Common Fund that countries, particularly major exporters and consumers of commodities, that have not yet ratified the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities should do so as soon as possible;

12. Stresses that international commodity agreements and arrangements can have an important role to play in resolving commodity problems, where they involve the participation of all major producers and consumers and where they are aimed at improving transparency and better functioning of commodity markets, and, in this context, calls for the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Act adopted by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at its seventh session;

13. Urges the Conference at its eighth session to address all aspects of commodity problems in a comprehensive manner and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on world commodity trends and prospects, with particular reference to the situation of commodity-dependent developing countries, in the light of the outcome of the eighth session of the Conference, bearing in mind the relevant conclusions of the Committee on Commodities at its fourteenth session;

14. Decides to include the question of commodities in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session.

General Assembly resolution 45/200

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.3), 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.84) based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.47); agenda item 79 (b).

In resolution 45/178 B, the Assembly invited the international community, including the African Development Bank, to strengthen its support of Africa's efforts to diversify its commodity sector, bearing in mind the relevant operational mechanisms.

Committee on Commodities

The UNCTAD Committee on Commodities held its fourteenth session in Geneva from 12 to 20 November [TD/B/1281]. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report [TD/B/C.1/309] on the commodity situation and outlook 1990, which examined the main recent developments in commodity trade, particularly of developing countries; commodity supply and demand; economic conditions affecting the supply of commodities; and factors affecting demand.

The Committee also considered the report of the third session of the Working Party on Diversification, Processing, Marketing and Distribution, including Transportation [TD/B/C.1/314], which met in Geneva from 5 to 9 November.

In agreed conclusions, the Working Party requested the UNCTAD secretariat to submit to the Committee on Commodities its suggestions for specific studies on the impact on diversification of various market access conditions, government policies, structural adjustment programmes, and the forms and methods of trading for primary and processed commodities. The UNCTAD secretariat was requested to submit to the Committee on Commodities suggestions for specific studies on experience with diversification across countries. The Working Party took note of two UNDP projects being executed by UNCTAD: a programme to promote commodity processing in developing countries; and policies for improving commercialization of commodities by developing countries. It agreed that there was a need for increased international co-operation to improve information flows and called on Governments and industry in developing and developed countries to increase participation in and make better use of producer-consumer forums to exchange information on investments, prospects and markets for individual commodities, and to exchange views. It encouraged international agencies and donor countries to support Governments of developing countries in updating, completing and improving the contents of the assessments of their natural resource bases. Bilateral donors, UNDP and other UN organizations were invited to provide financial support to improve information flows, co-ordinate information systems and assist developing countries through training and development of analytical tools for better use of existing information.

The Working Party requested the UNCTAD secretariat to provide technical assistance to developing countries to assist them in collecting, processing, disseminating and making full use of information to help them make decisions on investment in viable diversification activities; to analyse and disseminate publicly available information on industry and market structures for individual commodities of major export interest to commodity-exporting countries, especially low-income commodity-dependent developing countries; to draw up criteria for evaluating diversification projects to facilitate the work of the decision-making bodies in producing countries; and to continue to develop a micro-computer-based commodity information and analysis system.

It was agreed that financial resources for diversification should include financial assistance from existing resources for pre-investment assistance to elaborate diversification programmes and to identify projects attractive for foreign investors, and adequate resources for investment in the identified diversification activities, particularly in countries highly dependent on exports of a few commodities. It was also agreed that: multilateral financial institutions should be encouraged to emphasize diversification in their financial programmes; further voluntary contributions to the Second Account of the Common Fund for Commodities could assist in diversification efforts; every effort should be made to create and increase domestic resources in developing countries and to channel them into diversification activities; developed and developing countries should continue policies, measures and incentives to encourage private investment flows for diversification activities in developing countries and to create a more favourable external environment; and financial resources for diversification and their modalities should continue to be reviewed by the UNCTAD secretariat. The Working Party invited Governments and international organizations to continue to provide available information.

In agreed conclusions adopted on 20 November [TD/B/1281(26(XIV))], the Committee on Commodities stated that the possible effects of the changes in Central and Eastern Europe for commodity production and trade, and the potential for expanding South-South trade in commodities, should be explored. It called for a better understanding of the impact of the debt problem of developing countries on the supply and demand of commodities and for the link between economic growth and commodity demand to be further explored. In the light of the commodity situation and outlook, the Committee suggested that the following could be explored during the preparatory process for and at UNCTAD VIII: structural disequilibria in commodity markets and actions to bring about a better supply and demand balance, giving attention to efforts to improve demand; access to markets following the outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations; the relationship between sustainable development and relevant aspects in the commodities area; diversification in the context of the contribution of the commodity sector to overall development, including financial aspects; domestic and international investment flows and the creation of a competitive favourable enabling environment for development, including social and physical infrastructure; strengthened producer/consumer co-operation; complementarity between domestic and international commodity policies; and lasting solutions to deal effectively with short-, medium- and long-term problems in the commodity area. The Committee agreed that the causes and instruments for dealing with the problem of commodity export earnings shortfall, including the improvement of existing instruments, should be considered, that the issue should form part of its ongoing work and, together with compensatory financing, should figure as a specific issue for discussion at the next session.

Having considered the report of the Working Party on Diversification, Processing, Marketing and Distribution, including Transportation, the Committee agreed that the subject was a priority element in its future activities. It endorsed the Working Party's agreed conclusions, noting that particular attention should be paid to identifying practical measures and actions, especially for highly-commodity-dependent and low-income developing countries. It agreed that due attention should be paid to the specific problems of the least developed countries, in the light of the relevant parts of the Programme of Action adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities and to find commodity development activities, entered into force in 1989 and became operational later that year.

During 1990, EEC, Mauritania and Turkey ratified the Agreement, bringing the total number of parties to 106.

Individual commodities

Agricultural commodities

Cocoa. The International Cocoa Agreement, 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 502] was due to expire on 30 September 1990. On 30 March, the International Cocoa Council decided to extend the Agreement "in part" for two years from 1 October 1990 and to maintain the buffer stock during the period of extension. The economic provisions of the Agreement were not extended, except for certain provisions relating to the maintenance of the buffer stock. In adopting that decision, the members of the Agreement stated that they were convinced of the necessity of continuing international co-operation in all sectors of the world cocoa economy and appreciated the need to continue the search for adequate solutions to the problems of the world cocoa economy in the framework of a new international cocoa agreement.

Coffee. UNCTAD, in collaboration with the Ministry of External Economic Relations of the USSR and the All-Union Academy for Foreign Trade, convened in Moscow from 15 to 19 October a workshop to explore the possibilities for expanding trade in coffee between developing countries and Eastern European countries.

Rubber. The International Natural Rubber Council held its twenty-first session in July 1990. It revised the reference price downward by 5 per cent and agreed to a refund amount to members who so requested.

Sugar. The International Sugar Agreement, 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 482], which was due to expire by the end of 1990, was extended for one year by the International Sugar Council at its eighth session.

Tropical timber. On 23 May, at its eighth session, the International Tropical Timber Council adopted the International Tropical Timber Organization Guidelines for Sustainable Management of Natural Tropical Forests and commended them as an international reference standard to members and the international community in general and as a major contribution towards the sustainable utilization and conservation of tropical forests and their genetic resources.

Minerals and metals

Bauxite. In May 1990, bauxite producing countries, meeting in Kingston, Jamaica, at the invitation of the International Bauxite Association, agreed on the need for a permanent forum to promote discussion between producers and consumers on all questions related to the bauxite/alumina/aluminium industry. They adopted a resolution requesting the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene an ad hoc review meeting of government experts to discuss exchange of information, market transparency, promotion of consumption, exchange of information on new and available technologies, research and development, human resource development and the environment.

On 3 July, at a second consultation with consuming countries, it was agreed that an informal producer/consumer consultation should be held to discuss further the issues raised in the resolution adopted by the bauxite producing countries. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to convene the ad hoc review meeting of government experts early in 1991.

Copper. The Terms of Reference of the International Copper Study Group were due to enter into force by 30 June 1990. As of 31 July, Chile, China, Finland, Greece, Peru, Poland and the United States, accounting for 28.4 per cent of the world trade in copper, had accepted the Terms of Reference. The membership goal set by the United Nations Conference on Copper, 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 411] for entry into force was States accounting for 80 per cent of trade in copper for definitive application of the Terms of Reference and 60 per cent for provisional application.

Iron ore. TDB, on 23 March, decided [A/45/15 (dec. 382(XXXVI))] that UNCTAD's work on iron ore should be maintained and that regular intergovernmental meetings of experts should be convened, with the participation of industry advisers, to exchange views on the iron ore situation and to review and enhance iron ore statistics.

The International Group of Experts on Iron Ore held its fourth session in Geneva from 22 to 24 October [TD/B/C.1/313 & Corr.1]. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat review of the current situation and outlook for iron ore—1990 [TD/B/C.1/IRON ORE/2]; iron ore statistics from 1980 to 1989 [TD/B/C.1/IRON ORE/3/Rev.1]; and an annotated bibliography on iron ore—1990 [TD/B/C.1/IRON ORE/4].

With regard to statistics and estimates for 1990 and 1991, the Group of Experts agreed that a mini-questionnaire should be sent to national focal points with a view to gathering information for rapid and regular dissemination. It should contain information on production of iron ore, metallics and crude steel, as well as imports and exports of iron ore. The Group deferred consideration of a proposal by Canada that it organize working sessions to review and enhance the statistics prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat with a view to improving their quality, coverage and timeliness.

Nickel. At a meeting in Geneva on 23 May [TD/NICKEL/13], the International Nickel Group noted that 12 States accounting for 61 per cent of the world trade in nickel had notified the UN Secretary-General of their intention to become members of the Group. Accordingly, it decided to put its Terms of Reference into force among themselves in whole as of that date and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene the inaugural meeting of the Group. The inaugural meeting of the Study Group was held in The Hague, Netherlands, from 25 to 28 June. The Group established its headquarters in The Hague and entrusted its Standing Committee to appoint a Secretary-General and approve the budget.

Tin. As at 31 July the Terms of Reference of the International Tin Study Group, which were established by the United Nations Tin Conference in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 373], had been accepted by Greece, Indonesia, Malaysia, Nigeria and Thailand. On 3 October, TDB noted that the International Tin Council had ceased to exist as at 31 July 1990 [A/45/15].

Tungsten. The Committee on Tungsten held its twenty-second session in Geneva from 10 to 14 December [TD/B/C.1/317]. It had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on the short-term outlook in the tungsten market [TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/84]; review of existing research and development programmes to promote new applications for tungsten and a survey of industry and government views on the need for additional programmes [TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/86]; and a list of different definitions and methodologies used in major tungsten-producing countries [TD/B/C.1/TUNGSTEN/85].

The Committee adopted a proposal to formally seek designation of the Committee as an international commodity body for the purpose of the Second Account of the Common Fund on Commodities.

Services

At the second part of its thirty-sixth session (Geneva, 12-23 March), the Trade and Development Board (TDB) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) discussed services within the mandate of UNCTAD as defined in the Final Act of the seventh (1987) session of the Conference (UNCTAD VII) [YUN 1987, p. 465].

The Board had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report [TD/B/1241] on the problematics of trade in services and technological change. The report examined the problems confronting the liberalization of trade in services, including market and legal issues. It concluded that the liberalization of service imports could have a dynamic effect on the development process in developing countries through the stimulation of efficiency, access to technology and support to exports, if carried out within the appropriate regulatory framework. However, care should be taken to ensure that imports of services did not undermine the ability of developing-country governments to carry out strategic national objectives, nor result in stifling the development of higher skills, knowledge-based services and information resources. Access to services to ensure their ability to compete in foreign markets should not result in developing country producers or consumers becoming "captive" to foreign service suppliers, nor in exacerbating balance-of-payments disequilibria. For the liberalization of trade in services to benefit developing countries, their firms would have to acquire capacities of firms in the developed market-economy countries, which might only be possible in the context of solutions to more general problems of debt and infrastructure development. The growing concentration of ownership and market power in many service sectors could create barriers to entry for newcomers, particularly for firms of developing countries, and promote a geographical concentration of service production. Barriers to trade could also be created by government and corporate measures restricting access to information and technology.

There was a need for greater transparency by Governments with respect to laws, regulations and administrative practices and on the part of corporations trading in services to obtain a clearer idea of the market structure in the various service areas, to ensure that their activities were consistent with the objectives of greater efficiency and the development of developing countries and expansion of their service exports. Transparency could also contribute to improved statistics on trade in services. Liberalization would have to address the adverse effects of regulation and not aim at deregulation per se. The acceptance of commitments with respect to liberalization of the movement of factors of production within the definition of trade in services, as envisaged in the Uruguay Round, would call for a resolution of legal issues with respect to the treatment of foreign persons. In that context, the application of trade policy concepts to trade in services would require extreme care. Liberalization within the context of integration schemes among developing countries could, in addition to furthering the overall integration process, provide an opportunity for developing country firms to strengthen their competitive positions and reinforce the eventual ability of developing countries to accept broader commitments to liberalize trade in services within the multilateral framework.

In a 23 March resolution [A/45/15 (res. 380(XXXVI))], TDB recognized UNCTAD's contribution to a better understanding of the problematics of trade in services from the point of view of developing countries and in the context of overall development objectives. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue specific studies on sectors of priority interest to developing countries, particularly with a view to building and improving infrastructure and capabilities with the objective of developing efficient and competitive industries in those countries, thereby strengthening their export potential. It took note of the appreciation of recipient countries for UNCTAD technical co-operation activities in the area of services in support of developing countries. TDB urged Governments to assist technologically weak countries, especially developing countries, to participate fully in technology-led growth in international trade in terms of product innovation, export supply and market penetration capabilities, and affirmed the need for pursuing policies in the areas of technology which furthered the goal of trade expansion for the benefit of trading partners, particularly developing countries, and which promoted investment, innovation, absorption, utilization and development of technological and entrepreneurial capabilities.

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/61 [YUN 1988, p. 413], the Secretary-General submitted a May 1990 report [E/1990/76], in which he reviewed the implementation of the 1985 guidelines for consumer protection [YUN 1985, p. 571, GA res. 39/248 annex]. Having outlined the recommendations adopted at a 1987 regional seminar on consumer protection for the Latin American and Caribbean region and other activities undertaken for the implementation of the guidelines, the report concluded that international co-operation in consumer protection could be of great value by enabling countries to draw upon the experience of others and avoid duplication of effort. Co-operation could take pace through the development of product safety standards and testing procedures, or in the export of harmful products. At the global level, factors that needed to be taken into account included environmental issues, the global debt crisis and its impact on financial services, the effect of the growth of advertising and the mass media on information available to consumers, as well as the globalization of manufacturing, production and distribution systems. Areas identified for assistance to Governments included the elaboration of detailed and more targeted guidelines in financial services and children's product services. At the regional level, said the report, it could be useful to organize further seminars on consumer protection for government officials, with follow-up by regional commissions.

The United Nations system should give greater focus to the issue of consumer protection and structured consultations among various bodies might be needed to consider how best to assist Governments. The Secretary-General recognized the importance of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in disseminating and promoting the implementation of the guidelines and the growing awareness by the private sector of the benefits of consumer policies. Meaningful progress in implementing the guidelines could be achieved through regional seminars and follow-up to their recommendations; workshops on topical issues to elaborate guidelines in those areas; analytical work to identify areas of emerging concern; and the development of greater co-ordination in the UN system to best answer the needs of Governments in the protection of consumers, through an ad hoc co-ordinating mechanism, including subject-oriented inter-agency consultations.

In a later addendum [E/1990/76/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted the recommendation adopted at the United Nations Regional Seminar on Consumer Protection for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, 19-22 June) (see PART TWO, Chapter V).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on 27 July, adopted resolution 1990/85.

Consumer protection

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/248 of 9 April 1985, in which the Assembly adopted guidelines for consumer protection,

Recalling also its own resolution 1988/61 of 27 July 1983, in which Governments were urged to implement the guidelines for consumer protection and the Secretary-General was requested to provide assistance to Governments in that regard,

Noting with satisfaction the recommendations of the United Nations Regional Seminar on Consumer Protection for Asia and the Pacific, held at the headquarters of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, Bangkok, from 19 to 22 June 1990,

Aware that the need for assistance in the area of consumer protection, particularly in developing countries, still remains great,

Recognizing the role of non-governmental organizations in promoting the implementation of the guidelines and the growing awareness by the private sector of the benefits of consumer policies,

Noting the efforts currently being undertaken within the United Nations system in promoting the implementation of the guidelines on consumer protection,

1. Commends the Secretary-General for his report on consumer protection, prepared pursuant to Council resolution 1988/61;

2. Urges all Governments to continue their efforts to implement the guidelines for consumer protection and establish appropriate means to co-ordinate policies and programmes for consumer protection;

3. Encourages Governments to collaborate, as appropriate, in joint efforts for the protection of consumers, including the development of product safety standards and testing procedures, and in the exchange of information and advisory services;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the development funds and programmes of the United Nations, the regional commissions and other relevant bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, to continue to provide assistance to Governments, in particular those of developing countries and other interested countries, in implementing the guidelines on consumer protection, and to develop a programme of action for the next five years on the implementation of the guidelines; such a programme, to be reviewed on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the guidelines, should be implemented subject to the availability of extrabudgetary resources and should involve specific activities such as the convening of regional seminars and follow-up activities, a survey of consumer protection measures undertaken within the framework of the guidelines for consumer protection, the provision of advisory services to Governments, in particular those of developing countries, at their request, and the elaboration of specific guidelines in areas of emerging concern;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1992 on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/85

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/116), 24 July (meeting 171); 16. nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.10/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 10.

Environment and trade

The UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the first part of TDB's thirty-seventh session (Geneva, 1-12 and 17 October) an August report on sustainable development and UNCTAD activities [TD/B/1267]. The report analysed the interface between sustainable development and the four main areas of UNCTAD's work: commodities; trade policy; technology; and development finance. With respect to commodities, the report indicated the need for new research to support negotiations and policy decisions concerning renewable resources. It also stated that the roles of economic incentives and regulatory measures needed to be better recognized and that concern for sustainable development was raising new questions about the pricing and rate of exploitation of non-renewable resources. It further pointed out the implications for developing countries of subjects like biodiversity or climate.

Concerning trade policy, the report drew attention to the need for a better understanding of the role environmental considerations might be playing in the redeployment of industry or other economic activities. It also raised the issue of environmental considerations as a source of trade distortion or an argument for trade restriction. Questions in that area called for permanent monitoring, to which the UNCTAD Trade Control Measures Information System could make a useful contribution. The report also referred to the argument that protectionism might aggravate the sum total of unsustainability in the world economy. That deserved to be studied in support of the search for a strong and equitable international trading system.

As to the relationship between technology and sustainable development, the report noted that the concern in developed countries for sustainable development could make it even harder for developing countries to gain access to the technology they needed to be competitive in the world economy. On the other hand, some developed countries might be anxious to encourage developing countries to replace technologies that threatened the global environment by acquiring from them environment-friendly ones. Developing countries needed to ensure that they had a fair role to play in developing biotechnology, given that they were major suppliers of its raw material.

In terms of development finance, the debt burden was driving some developing countries to generate foreign exchange in ways that could damage their environment and that of the globe. There was need to be alert to creditors using the debt burden as a lever for environmental conditionality in aid or to facilitate their access to genetic resources. However, there were examples of positive linkages between debt reduction and environmental conservation. Concern for the global environment was prompting the study of new funds and mechanisms to transfer additional financial resources to developing countries in order to encourage a more sustainable global economy. It was important that those mechanisms respected the same principles of economic equity, efficiency and additionality.

In a 12 October decision [A/45/15 (dec. 384 (xxxvii))], TDB decided that the objective of sustainable development, particularly the reduction of poverty, should be incorporated into all areas of UNCTAD'S work at the intergovernmental level and that its respective committees should consider related activities in the context of their work programme. It invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to ensure that the concept of sustainable development was integrated in the ongoing work of the secretariat, in particular in the area of trade, commodities, technology and finance for development, which should contribute to innovative thinking and increased awareness of environmental development economics. TDB encouraged continued co-operation between the secretariats of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) and UNCTAD in preparations for UNCED, to be held in 1992 (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII), on issues within UNCTAD'S mandate. It requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare an analysis of sustainable development, in particular the reduction of poverty and its interface with policies and mechanisms in environmentally sensitive sectors, such as agriculture, energy, industry and transport, as well as with structural policies such as those relating to the enterprise sector. In promoting dialogue on the interlinkages between environmental and trade policies, the UNCTAD Secretary-General should adjust the Trade Control Measures Information System to monitor environmental regulations for possible protectionism and to monitor non-tariff measures that had a bearing on the environment. Specific attention should be paid to the needs of LDCs, including small island States. International development agencies and donor countries were invited to provide voluntary budgetary resources for technical assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/210 of 21 December, requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in co-operation with the UNCED Secretary-General and relevant United Nations bodies, to prepare and submit to the Preparatory Committee for UNCED at its third session a comprehensive analytical study on the present situation and future trends regarding the relationship between environmental issues and international trade. The study should consider trade and environment in the light of sustainable development, particularly poverty reduction, and adjustment of the UNCTAD Trade Control Measures Information System to monitor environmental regulations and non-tariff measures having a bearing on the environment.

Finance

Financial policy

The World Economic Survey, 1990 [Sales No. E.90.II.C.1] stated there were strains on public finances everywhere that were significant to an assessment of the international agenda. In a time of slow growth, even Governments in the richest countries were overcommitted domestically and found it difficult to mobilize resources for use in foreign policy.

In contrast to the impoverishment of Governments, there had been a large increase in the international capital market and the supply of private financial resources. The problems of indebted developing countries were greatly magnified by their reliance on that market in the 1970s and their loss of credit in the 1980s. That had left them with lingering debts on borrowed capital that did not produce the growth of output from which the debts were expected to be repaid. That situation had produced a sharp drop in net financial transfers (see below). The question was whether to make up for the loss by increasing official financial and domestic savings as an alternative to the reliance on private capital markets. The answer was that, in the short run, there was no alternative to the use of official sources to restore order and consolidate debts in a manner that made it possible to resume growth and regain creditworthiness. However, in the long run, developing countries should be keyed into the pool of the international financial market, if only because that was where the money was. Official funds should still accomplish a catalytic role. In particular, they would remain important for the weakest and poorest countries, which were so far inhibited by their production structures from participating fully in the world economy.

The Trade and Development Report, 1990 [Sales No. E.90.II.D.61] stated that one of the principal characteristics of the world economy in recent years had been the rapid pace at which financial activity had grown and become international in character. As restrictions on their movement had been relaxed, funds increasingly flowed back and forth across national boundaries. As capital learned to operate globally, restrictions on its behaviour had progressively lost their force. At the same time, trade in financial services and assets of varying maturities, both nationally and internationally, far exceeded the expansion of production and trade in goods. However, the process of internalization remained incomplete, particularly with regard to the developing countries and the actors involved. Most developing countries maintained restrictions on capital movements and the bulk of purely domestic transactions generally remained in the hands of domestically owned institutions. Restrictions on the right of establishment and differential treatment of foreign and domestic institutions had been important factors in preventing banks from increasing their presence and participation in financial markets abroad as they wished. For developing countries, the question of foreign access to domestic financial markets remained closely connected to the issue of financial openness generally, including the ability to control capital movements and conduct autonomous monetary and financial policies directed at their own development.

Net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries

In response to a 1989 Economic and Social Council request [YUN 1989, p. 376, ESC res. 1989/112], a chapter of the World Economic Survey, 1990 was devoted to international finance and the net transfer of resources. The Survey noted that the international pattern of financial transfers in 1989 was typical of that in recent years. By far the largest net absorption of resources was that of the United States. However, the $95 billion net transfer to the United States was more than a third below the 1987 peak of $154 billion. In addition, the United Kingdom absorbed about $30 billion in financial resources from the rest of the world in 1989 for the second year in a row. The Federal Republic of Germany and Japan were the largest suppliers of financial transfers, as in previous years, although the smaller developed market economies and Eastern Europe also transferred financial resources abroad. The USSR became a net recipient of resources from market economies in 1989 and the Eastern European countries seemed poised to see their net resource outflow turn into inflow owing to several major international policy initiatives.

As a whole, the developing countries were still transferring resources abroad, as they had since 1984. However, they fell into three separate categories. One was the energy-exporting countries, which had been net recipients of financial transfers from abroad since 1982, as weakening oil prices and a major military conflict in the Gulf area cut deeply into their ability to transfer resources abroad. However, with more peace in the region and a rebound of oil prices in 1989, that group again became exporters of capital. The second group comprised four small Asian economies (Hong Kong, the Republic of Korea, Singapore and Taiwan Province of China) which were very successful exporters of manufactures. Their aggregate net transfer of financial resources was some $16 billion in 1989, down from $23 billion the year before, owing mainly to the sharp cut-back in the trade surplus of the Republic of Korea. The third group, designated capital-importing developing countries, had made net resource transfers abroad since 1984, but in a totally different context. Although the drop in investment and growth in that group of countries had various causes, the role of the reduction in the net transfer of resources seemed firmly established. The steep drop in the transfers to them was brought about by a curtailment of imports and a redirection of output towards exports, in a context of depressed domestic economic conditions.

The Economic and Social Council, on 26 July, adopted resolution 1990/56.

Trends in the transfer of resources to and from developing countries and their impact on the economic growth and sustained development of those countries

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/232 of 22 December 1989,

Recalling also its own resolution 1989/112 of 28 July 1989 on the net transfer of resources from developing countries and its impact on their economic growth and development,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the World Economic Survey, 1990, in particular chapter IV entitled "International finance and net transfer of resources", containing statistics and analyses of causes and factors underlying the phenomenon of the transfer of resources to and from the developing countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to be submitted to the General Assembly in response to paragraph 4 of Assembly resolution 44/232, a review and analysis of the issues and problems, at both the national and international levels, raised by that phenomenon.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/56

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1990/L.52) based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (E/1990/L.39); agenda item 2.
Meeting numbers. ESC 32,36.

In decision 1990/265 of 26 July, the Council recommended that the General Assembly consider in 1991 a draft resolution on entrepreneurship as a means of attracting non-debt-creating flows of capital (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 44/232 [YUN 1989, p. 376] and in accordance with the above Economic and Social Council resolution, the Secretary-General submitted an October 1990 report on net transfer of resources from developing countries

[A/45/487]. The report examined trends in the net financial transfer of the developing countries and its composition; terms of trade and their relationship to net financial transfers; net transfer, adjustment and growth; and policy implications.

The report stated that the prolonged and large outward transfers of resources from developing countries and its association to low or negative growth had been a feature of the 1980s. Investment had suffered in indebted countries and the debt crisis and the pattern of financial flows it engendered continued to be a major obstacle to recovery and development in most indebted countries, particularly in Africa and Latin America. It also had adverse repercussions on the exports of many industrial countries. The internal resource mobilization that the outward transfer implied and the actual policy response for the need of such mobilization was a main factor in the budget crisis of several developing countries. Throughout the 1980s, the severity of the adjustment to the shift in financial flows had been compounded by adverse changes in the terms of trade. In assessing those trends, the international community had recognized that, during the 1980s, the large net transfer of resources to the developed countries had deprived developing countries of much needed resources for development.

Given the diversity of factors determining the sharp fall in net financial transfers to many developing countries and the difference in the ability of countries to cope with those changes, a mix of policy measures in various areas was required. It would have to include further fiscal adjustments and measures towards diversification, combined with efforts to create a climate of confidence to increase domestic savings and productive investments, such as foreign direct investment and return of flight capital. However, the main contribution to a reduction of the excessive outward transfer of resources from developing to developed countries would come from a concerted public solution to the debt problem. Official debt, including to international financial institutions, would have to be part of that solution. Debt relief for most least developed and other low-income developing countries, particularly in Africa, remained critical. Debt forgiveness from bilateral creditors was particularly important for those countries that faced serious debt-servicing difficulties.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/192.

Net transfer of resources between developing countries and developed countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries,

Recalling also its resolution 44/232 of 22 December 1989 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/112 of 28 July 1989, and taking note of Council resolution 1990/56 of 26 July 1990,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General on the net transfer of resources from developing countries;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the World Economic Survey 1991 an update of the section concerning causes of and factors related to the net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries and its impact on the economic growth and sustained development of developing countries, and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a comprehensive and analytical report with a view to halting and reversing this phenomenon.

General Assembly resolution 45/192

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.1), 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.94) based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.31); agenda item 79.

Debt problems of developing countries

TDB action. At its October session, TDB held an integrated discussion on the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, and debt and the problems of developing countries. It had before it the Trade and Development Report, 1990, which stated that the perceived low creditworthiness of most debtor countries had been strongly influenced by the continuing lack of evidence of sustained improvement in their external financial positions. For net debtor countries as a whole and for the group of 15 highly indebted countries, the ratios of external debt to exports continued to decline in 1989 but were still above the 1982 level, while for sub-Saharan Africa the ratio increased. The ratios of interest payments to exports rose slightly for the highly indebted countries, but changed little or not at all for net debtor countries as a whole and sub-Saharan Africa.

The rescheduling of developing countries' official debt continued in 1989 and early 1990 at a higher pace, with 22 meetings taking place in 1989 at the Paris Club (where bilateral official debts were rescheduled) in comparison with an average of 16 during 1983 to 1988. That was a symptom of the short-term approach of the Paris Club whereby the consolidation period (when debt service payments to be rescheduled fell due) was only 12 to 18 months. Moreover, debt service due on previously scheduled debt had become an increasingly important portion of the consolidated amount, reflecting the inadequacy of the terms of the original agreement. Implementation of the options of the 1988 Toronto Economic Summit (of the Group of Seven major industrialized countries) agreement on concessional relief to developing countries [YUN 1988, p. 417] had revealed a number of shortcomings. The scale of the relief was extremely limited. Only debts meeting certain criteria could be rescheduled, and until recently, only debt service payments falling due during a relatively short period benefited from the new terms, so that recourse was still necessary to time-consuming and costly repeated reschedulings. There was a return to multi-year reschedulings in 1989-1990 for Bolivia, Mali, Mexico, Mozambique and the Philippines. In each case the length of the consolidation period was covered by an International Monetary Fund programme. The preceding year had also witnessed the application of so-called "Venice terms" (longer maturities than the standard 10-year period) agreed to at the 1987 Group of Seven summit. Under that new policy, Guyana received a 21-year maturity, and a 15-year maturity was agreed for Cote d'Ivoire. However, the Venice terms did not provide the debt and debt service reduction required by countries that were not yet beneficiaries of concessional debt relief.

The issue of official bilateral debt reduction for middle-income countries received increasing attention from creditor countries. In June 1990, President François Mitterrand of France announced measures to lower interest rates on non-concessional loans by France to Cameroon, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire and Gabon. Also, President George Bush of the United States launched a programme aimed at reducing the official debt obligations of Latin American countries to the United States, within the framework of the "Enterprise for the Americas" initiative. The United States initiative envisaged substantial cancellation of concessional loans and the payment of interest in local currency to be used to support environmental projects. The financial problems of the lower middle-income countries with high levels of official debt were also considered by the Houston Summit of the Group of Seven in July 1990. Although no new global initiative was agreed upon, the Group encouraged the Paris Club to lengthen the repayment period for those countries and to continue reviewing additional options to address debt burdens.

There was a significant rise in arrears on debt service to commercial banks, which reached $18 billion in March 1990 compared to $6.5 billion at the end of 1988.

Also before TDB was an UNCTAD secretariat note [TD/B/1272] containing a preliminary assessment of the economic consequences of the crisis in the Persian Gulf area (see PART TWO, Chapter III). The report examined how the continuing crisis might affect the world economy, in particular the developing countries. It discussed the consequences of the cut in exports of crude oil and refined products and identified the main channels through which the cut in Iraqi and Kuwaiti imports and payments would affect developing countries. The note concluded with some policy suggestions, in which it noted that the correct policy response to a payments imbalance due to an abnormal situation was financing, not adjustment. It also emphasized the need to reduce oil price volatility, since it accentuated financial instability, and the need for industrialized countries to avoid further increases in interest rates.

TDB, in a 17 October resolution [A/45/15 (res. 388 (XXXVII))], agreed that further action through the international debt strategy was needed to achieve durable, equitable and mutually agreed solutions to the problems of indebtedness with a view to promoting the revival of growth and sustained development in developing countries. That would require intensified efforts by industrial countries to bring about a more favourable international economic environment conducive to non-inflationary growth and development by adopting an appropriate mix of fiscal and monetary policies conducive to a decline in interest rates; by promoting the stability of exchange markets; by facilitating adequate financing of adjustment programmes; by encouraging the flow of foreign direct investment and other non-debt-creating flows to developing countries; and by contributing to a timely and successful outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations that would result in the liberalization and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, especially developing ones. Further action to combat indebtedness would also require: strengthening by debtor countries of their growth-oriented adjustment policies, including sound macro-economic and structural policies; and measures to consolidate national savings, attract foreign direct investment and other non-debt-creating flows, and reverse capital flight. Intensified efforts were needed to review the terms of official debt reschedulings to bring debt-service obligations in line with what heavily indebted countries could be expected to pay without jeopardizing their adjustment efforts, economic growth and the satisfaction of basic social needs, through consideration of recent proposals by creditor Governments concerning the reduction of official bilateral debt and debt service owed by low-income countries, and consideration of options by creditor countries to lighten the debt burden of middle-income countries with significant official debt. Also required was implementation of the strategy to extend to additional eligible countries the reduction of debt and debt-service owed to commercial banks, with financial support from official sources. Multilateral financial institutions, development funds and donor countries needed to consider measures to alleviate the burden of multilateral debt owed by LDCs, as recommended by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I). Further action should also include adequate financial assistance by donors to developing countries making efforts to cope with overdue obligations to multilateral financial institutions to help clear arrears and finance structural adjustment programmes through a co-operative approach. Due consideration should be given by creditors to those developing countries with substantial debt burdens which had not yet restructured their debt and had remained current in servicing their external obligations, while carrying out sound macro-economic policies. TDB urged multilateral financial institutions and donor countries to assist developing countries adversely affected by the latest crisis, by responding promptly, flexibly and with expanded resources to the needs of the situation and by mobilizing additional assistance.

In another resolution [387(XXXVII)] of the same date on the interdependence of the problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, TDB recommended that countries pursue structural adjustment efforts, in accordance with their priorities, objectives, capacities, specific conditions and needs, making use of market signals. The opportunity to restore a long-term approach to development and move beyond short-term adjustments must be seized, said the Board. Governments and international institutions were invited to support the development efforts of developing countries by additional resources and to continue to address the debt problem. The international community should support adjustment policies in developing countries in the spirit of reinforced partnership. TDB invited industrialized countries to contribute to the necessary actions in accordance with their capacities and their economic power and the international financial institutions to further enhance their aid to developing countries and improve its quality. TDB appealed to Governments engaged in the Uruguay Round to reaffirm their determination to achieve balanced results, opening the way to increased liberalization and sustained growth in world trade for the benefit of all countries, especially the developing ones. It also invited countries to increase their level of savings so as to release extra financial resources commensurate with investment and development needs. The additional resources thus released should be used to achieve sustained growth and sustainable development. All countries should continue to establish conditions favourable to national and foreign investment, the reduction of flight capital and its repatriation. There was a crucial need for co-operation in a number of important areas, notably: the dialogue on commodities; the reduction of internal and external imbalances; and the stability of the international monetary system through co-ordination of economic and monetary policies.

Reports of Secretary-General. By an 8 October note [A/45/380 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report by his Personal Representative on Debt (Bettino Craxi, Italy). In a series of conclusions, the report stated that, for many developing countries, the debt burden represented a major obstacle to their economic and social growth. Hence, there was a need to continue on the path on which the Group of Seven had embarked to bring the debt burden of developing countries into line with their capacity to pay and thus create conditions permitting their renewed growth in the future. The report stated that the problem of extricating countries and regions with heavy debt burdens from the debt crisis required the participation of all creditors, including banks, Governments and multilateral institutions. The Brady Plan (proposed in 1989 by then United States Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady) should be strengthened and provided with more resources and co-ordinated management from an agency within the international financial institutions, working closely with regional banks. Following the Paris (1989) and Toronto (1988) summits of the Group of Seven major industrialized countries, it should be possible to obtain further debt relief, differentiated according to the level of development and indebtedness of the various types of debtors. That should be achieved through long-term debt rescheduling (30-40 years) and greater concessionality on debt service. Debt-service should be fully written off only in the case of the poorest countries (International Development Association-only group) and only for soft loans under official bilateral assistance programmes. It should be made possible for countries to pay interest on bilateral debt into trust funds in indexed local currencies, to be used for the financing of development projects for environmental protection and human resources development. An intermediate group of debtor countries, between the poorest and the middle-income countries, should be defined with a view to increasing the degree of concessionality of their debt, applying as a first measure the Toronto terms to their rescheduling at reduced interest rates. There should be a commitment to guarantee an adequate flow of public and private funds to developing countries. The case-by-case approach should be maintained but a distinction should be made between different categories of debt. Developing debtor countries and Eastern European countries should adopt cohesive policies of domestic adjustment in collaboration with the international financial institutions. Adjustment programmes should be selective and growth-oriented and take into account the needs of the less favoured groups of the population. Private banks should be encouraged to reduce the interest on private debts, with tax and accounting regulations revised to favour those banks that reduced interest and provided new financial flows to developing countries. The resources of international financial institutions should be increased and used to finance operations under the Brady Plan and for a special drawing right (SDR) allocation to enlarge the funds available for debt reduction, interest subsidy and bridging loans. Incentives should be provided for swap operations that would set up joint ventures and promote the participation of external capital in privatized public enterprises. Commodity bonds should be given public guarantees. Innovative approaches should be considered such as payment of part of debt service in bonds expressed in local currency and indexed on export commodities, with the option of using them to purchase shares and other marketable securities. A special effort should be made to provide financial backing to the countries of Eastern Europe during their transition to a market economy to avert serious social shocks. In debt relief, consideration should be given to innovative financing options and the conversion of debt into shares of privatized companies. Creditor countries should increase their aid budgets from 0.35 to 0.45 per cent of gross domestic product. Special attention should be given to the extension of the system of regional banks.

In response to Assembly resolution 44/205 [YUN 1989, p. 379], the Secretary-General submitted a 23 October update [A/45/656] to his 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 378] on the recent evolution of the international debt strategy. He stated that from mid-1989 to mid-1990 important steps forward were made in implementing the debt strategy called for by the Brady initiative and the Toronto agreement, with a number of individual debtor countries able to negotiate their debt on more favourable terms. Those developments occurred against the background of continued external financial difficulty and generally poor overall growth performance. The net transfer of resources associated with medium- and long-term borrowing by developing countries remained strongly negative, amounting to some $35 billion in 1989.

By the end of 1989, the debt owed to official creditors by capital-importing countries had grown to about $495 billion, accounting for almost half of the total medium- and long-term external debt. A notable event on the private debt front was the start made in implementing the Brady Plan. Agreements were reached with Costa Rica, Mexico, Morocco, the Philippines and Venezuela. Those agreements offered creditor banks various options of debt and debt service reduction and new money lending. Very few new restructuring agreements were signed outside the Brady framework and some concluded previously had become inoperative. Arrears on commercial bank debt continued to accumulate, almost trebling to $18 billion between the end of 1988 and March 1990.

The Secretary-General concluded that for many of the heavily indebted developing countries, debt and debt service reduction had to be given prominence in the debt strategy and such reduction had to be implemented by a wider range of creditors. Policies to put that broadly shared view into effect had gathered momentum in the preceding 12 months with the wider application of the Toronto terms to low-income countries, the conclusion of a number of debt and debt service reduction packages under the Brady Plan, several unilateral initiatives by official creditors and the proposals by some creditor Governments involving further measures to reduce the official debt burden, thus broadening the scope for policy action. Nevertheless, progress in the implementation of the debt strategy had been limited. The amount of debt reduction that had been negotiated had been modest and had not led to the restoration of normal creditor-debtor relations, external viability or robust growth in the most indebted countries. There had been some progress in alleviating the debt burden of low-income countries to official bilateral creditors, and the Toronto agreement provided for the rescheduling of debt on concessional terms. However, the degree of relief granted was inadequate, falling short of what was needed to match the debt servicing capacity of low-income countries. Several proposals were made by creditor Governments that pointed to the need for a much bigger reduction of debt service for those countries.

The issue of official debt of lower middle-income countries had also received attention by creditor countries. The new Paris Club policy for heavily indebted countries represented a major step in the right direction, but a timid one. That policy, adopted in September, included an extension of rescheduling maturities to 15 years for non-concessional loans and up to 20 years for official development assistance loans, with additional grace periods of up to 10 years. In addition, the new treatment allowed limited amounts of debt-equity swaps and other debt conversions. Many of the lower middle-income countries still needed reduction of their official bilateral debt. Expeditious consideration should be given to a French proposal calling for a more diversified menu incorporating options involving debt and debt service reduction.

Multilateral financial institutions and donor countries should give urgent consideration to implementing further measures to alleviate the burden of multilateral debt, while safeguarding their sound financial basis, as recommended by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and should include the strengthening and widening of mechanisms such as interest rate subsidies or refinancing schemes funded by reflows or special trust funds. With regard to debt owed to commercial banks, the emphasis in financial packages for highly indebted countries should be on debt reduction rather than new lending.

National laws and regulations could also be directed more effectively towards achieving adequate levels of debt and debt service reduction, including the suggestion that creditors should qualify for tax deductions on their loan-loss provisions only to the extent that they would participate in debt reduction packages, and that creditors who failed to participate in such packages sanctioned by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank should be required to make special provisions on their loans and should not be eligible for tax relief on loans. The scale of consensual and debt service reductions needed to be enlarged if unilateral steps were to be avoided. However, the combination of additional incentives and disincentives to enlarge the scale of debt reductions should be tilted in favour of increased financial support from the World Bank and the regional development banks. Unless additional funds were put at their disposal, such support could reduce lending for new investment, which was the key to successful adjustment.

Introducing his report before the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee on 23 October [A/C.2/45/SR.20], the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General said that as the debt crisis was systemic in nature, a solution had to involve all components of the system—banks, Governments and the international financial institutions. What was needed was an agency or a committee within the World Bank and IMF with the support, for each of the major indebted areas, of the regional development banks and other multilateral regional bodies, either already existing or to be created.

The Secretary-General, speaking before the Second Committee on 30 October [A/C.2/45/SR.26], stated that the continuing crisis of external indebtedness of developing countries reflected a deep-rooted malaise in international economic and financial relationships. It had become a major impediment to growth and development of most of the developing countries and to the revitalization of the global economy. The effects of the crisis were so serious and widespread that it was not possible to wait for conventional approaches to bring about a solution. Economic conditions in much of the third world demanded a dynamic and broad-based approach that would have a tangible impact. The scope and extent of the problem were further aggravated by the crisis in the Persian Gulf and the rise in oil prices to levels that were intolerable for most oil-importing developing countries, whose economies did not have the resilience to deal with the additional burden imposed by the higher cost of oil.

By a 20 September letter [A/45/531], Yugoslavia submitted to the Secretary-General the report on debt and development in the 1990s of the Round Table on Debt and Development, held at Sveti Stefan, Yugoslavia, on 28 and 29 June.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 21 December, adopted resolution 45/214.

International debt crisis and development:
enhanced international co-operation towards a durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/202 of 8 December 1986, 42/198 of 11 December 1987, 43/198 of 20 December 1988 and 44/205 of 22 December 1989,

Recalling also the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990, and taking note of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990.

Recalling further Trade and Development Board resolutions 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978, 222(XXI) of 27 September 1986, 358(XXXV) of 5 October 1988 and 375(XXXVI) of 13 October 1989, and taking note of Board resolution 388(XXXVII) of 17 October 1990,

Recognizing that for many indebted developing countries an early and durable solution of the external debt problems is not achievable without, inter alia, a significant reduction in the stock and service of debt, and, in that context, welcoming the willingness of several creditor countries to reduce and/or write off debt stock or service on the bilateral official debt of many developing countries,

Emphasizing that it is essential for debtor developing countries to continue to pursue and intensify their efforts to raise savings and investment, reduce inflation and improve efficiency, taking into account their own individual characteristics and the vulnerability of the poorer strata of their populations,

Stressing that measures for debt reduction also need to be accompanied by vigorous efforts to improve the international economic environment in order to facilitate the reactivation of the growth and development of developing countries,

Noting with appreciation the recent developments in the evolving debt strategy,

Noting also the proposals made by developing countries and regional organizations, including the Organization of African Unity and the Latin American Economic System,

Stressing the urgent need for rapid and broad implementation of recent initiatives and measures to reduce the stock and service of external debt and to provide debt relief,

Concerned at the decline in the flow of financial resources to developing countries for development and at the large net transfer of resources from many of those countries, which deprives them of the much-needed resources for their growth and development,

Convinced that a durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries continues to require the full participation and full co-operation of Governments of creditor and debtor countries, multilateral financial institutions and private banks.

Stressing the need for urgent and full implementation of the commitments and policies contained in the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, particularly those pertaining to the problem of external debt, as well as of the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade and of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s.

Recognizing the need for the continuation of efforts by all the parties concerned to resolve the severe debt crisis and to forestall its proliferation and prevent its further aggravation,

Recognizing also the role of the multilateral financial institutions in dealing with debt problems of developing countries and the need to safeguard the high standing of those institutions in financial markets,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to promote understanding among debtor and creditor countries and multilateral financial institutions, with a view to contributing to a solution to the external debt problems of developing countries and, in that regard, stresses the need for the continuation of his efforts;

2. Takes note with interest of the reports of the Secretary-General and of his Personal Representative on Debt, as well as the introductory statements made before the Second Committee by the Secretary-General on 30 October 1990 and by his Personal Representative on 23 October 1990;

3. Acknowledges the recent initiatives and measures taken in the context of the evolving debt strategy with a view to contributing to the solution of the debt problems;

4. Also acknowledges the various proposals made by developing and developed countries with a view to finding a durable solution to the external debt problems, and draws the attention of the international community to those proposals;

5. Welcomes the willingness of several creditor countries to reduce and/or write off the stock and debt servicing of many developing countries;

6. Stresses the urgent need for the broadest and most expeditious implementation of the recent initiatives and for building upon them;

7. Recognizes that for a large number of developing countries external indebtedness impedes their economic growth and development, which threatens their economic, social and political stability;

8. Stresses, therefore, the need to continue to strive to achieve, through dialogue and shared responsibility, during the initial years of the present decade, a durable, equitable and mutually agreed growth- and development-oriented solution to the debt problems of developing countries, taking into account their particular circumstances, including those of the countries whose debt is mainly to official creditors or to multilateral institutions;

9. Recognizes that the economic growth and development of developing countries is essential for generating the resources necessary to enable them to service their debt;

10. Also recognizes that there is a close interrelationship between the external debt problems of developing countries and the global economic environment, which needs to be markedly improved through the adoption of an appropriate mix of fiscal, monetary and trade policies by all countries in accordance with their respective capacities and impact on the world economy;

11. Further recognizes that debtor countries should continue their efforts to attain efficiency and return to a path of sustained growth by adopting appropriate national economic policies;

12. Takes note of the ongoing efforts to address the debt problems of the least developed countries, and stresses the need to intensify ongoing efforts to find an effective solution to the problem of external indebtedness of those countries;

13. Welcomes the steps taken to forgive or reduce the official development assistance debt of the low-income countries, and urges that further appropriate action be taken in that regard, particularly for the countries in Africa;

14. Emphasizes that measures for the reduction of official debt stock and service should be implemented, taking into account the need for debtor countries to benefit from increased new financial flows, particularly official development assistance;

15. Invites the multilateral financial institutions to continue to provide support for debt and debt-service reduction packages, with the necessary flexibility under their established guidelines, and urges that serious attention be given to continuing to work towards a growth-oriented solution of the problems of developing countries with serious debt-servicing problems, including those whose debt is mainly to official creditors or to multilateral financial institutions;

16. Recognizes that increased co-operation between the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and other multilateral financial institutions is welcomed but should not lead to cross-conditionality;

17. Emphasizes the need to provide substantial concessional resources to the developing countries, with a view to promoting the revival of economic growth and sustained development, and in that regard emphasizes that developed countries should implement their undertakings to attain the agreed international target of devoting 0.7 per cent of gross national product to official development assistance, as well as the agreed targets established at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;

18. Recognizes that a durable solution to the debt problems involves, inter alia, a substantial improvement in the access of the products of developing countries to the markets of developed countries and in their terms of trade, as well as diversification of their exports, and reaffirms, in this context, the urgent need for a balanced and successful outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations that would result in the liberalization and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, especially developing countries;

19. Urges the multilateral financial institutions and the donor countries to take appropriate steps to assist effectively those developing countries adversely affected by the situation between Iraq and Kuwait; in particular, the multilateral financial institutions are invited to respond promptly, flexibly and with expanded resources to the needs arising from the present situation and to play a catalytic role in mobilizing additional assistance;

20. Recognizes that the external indebtedness of some other countries with serious debt-servicing problems also gives rise to considerable concern, and invites all those involved to take into account, as appropriate, the provisions of the present resolution in addressing those problems and in working towards an early growth-oriented solution to the external debt problems;

21. Takes note with appreciation of the very useful efforts made by the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General on Debt in producing a wide-ranging analysis and in producing recommendations, and, in this context, encourages Governments to give them appropriate consideration, as a new impulse to better understanding of the different aspects of the debt problem;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/214

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/853) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.97), based on informal consultations on 59-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.44); agenda item 83. Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 20, 25-28, 30, 31, 44, 54; plenary 71.

By decision 45/447 of 21 December, the Assembly deferred to its 1991 session consideration of a draft decision on the establishment of an advisory commission on debt and development [A/C.2/45/L.5]. By that draft, which had also been deferred in 1988 [GA dec. 43/444] and 1989 [GA dec. 44/445], the Assembly would have established an advisory commission to develop innovative approaches and specific proposals related to all types of debt.

Development finance

The Secretariat, by a 12 September note [A/C.2/45/L.4], transmitted to the General Assembly the text of a draft resolution deferred from 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 382], by which the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to undertake consultations with a view to convening an intergovernmental committee to start the preparatory process for an international conference on money and finance for development. By decision 45/441 of 21 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the draft text until its 1991 session.

Trade-related finance

Invisibles and trade financing

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade held the first (Geneva, 5-9 February) and second parts (Geneva, 30 April-8 May) of its thirteenth session in 1990. By a 9 February resolution [TD/B/1249 (res. 33(XIII))], the Committee urged developing countries to intensify their efforts to promote and consolidate their domestic insurance sectors so that a strong and healthy insurance industry would continue to play its vital economic role. It invited them to consider measures, including multilateral co-operation, to increase the financial strength of the companies in their markets and the role and effectiveness of the supervisory system. The Committee called on the UNCTAD secretariat to: review developments in insurance markets and to analyse their impact in order to provide new insights that could prove useful to policy-makers in developing countries; study effective prudential insurance regulation and supervision in developing countries; prepare a detailed programme for education and training of qualified personnel of supervisory offices in developing countries; and study the possibilities for increasing insurance awareness in developing countries and in particular for extending insurance coverage to productive entities in the traditional sector, with particular reference to agricultural production, by devising insurance covers and taking into account work done in other organizations. The Committee stressed the need to establish closer co-operation between the insurance supervisory services of developing countries, as well as between their insurance training institutions, on a regional and/or subregional basis. It invited developing countries to envisage ways to co-operate among themselves with a view to increasing business exchange in insurance and reinsurance. All countries and NGOs in a position to do so were invited to continue to provide technical assistance to developing countries in insurance and reinsurance, and particularly for implementing training courses and seminars for staff of insurance supervisory offices; and to support and co-operate in organizing regional meetings for insurance supervisors and educators for the purpose of exchanging information and experience regarding market changes, insurance supervision and training programmes. The Committee called on UNDP to continue to support those activities on a national, subregional and regional basis and invited all members to co-operate with the UNCTAD secretariat in the collection and dissemination of information concerning their insurance and reinsurance markets, insurance legislation and education, so that the information could be made available to all interested countries, especially developing countries.

By an 8 May resolution [TD/B/1262(res.34(XIII))], the Committee underscored the importance of a concerted effort by all countries to enhance the financing of development, thereby contributing to the success of structural adjustment and the reactivation of economic growth and development. In that regard, special attention would be required to enhance the mobilization of official resources and to foster and attract private resource lending and non-debt-creating flows, especially in the implementation of structural development reforms for long-term development, including measures to alleviate the adverse social consequences for poor and vulnerable groups. Substantial additional aid would be required in view of the development requirements. The Committee also underscored: the importance of continued efforts by major industrialized countries to sustained non-inflationary growth and to narrow imbalances to the benefit of all countries; continued efforts by developing countries to bring about sustained growth by pursuing development-oriented macro-economic stabilization and structural adjustment reform; and achieving a durable and broad solution to the external debt of developing debtor countries by an improved and strengthened debt strategy.

The Committee decided to consider at each of its future sessions a general item and a specific and well-defined issue.

On 12 October, TDB took note of the reports of the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade on the first and second parts of its thirteenth session and endorsed the provisions of the resolutions annexed thereto.

Compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls

By a 9 March decision [A/45/15 (dec. 379 (S-XVI))], adopted at its sixteenth special session, TDB took note of the report of the 1989 meeting of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Compensatory Financing of Export Earnings Shortfalls [YUN 1989, p. 382]. It invited countries other than the European Community members and Switzerland to consider introducing commodity-related schemes and encouraged further co-operation among such schemes. The Board decided that the problem of commodity export earnings shortfalls of developing countries arising from market instability, as well as the question of compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls, should be kept under review by UNCTAD as part of ongoing work of the Committee on Commodities. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was asked to follow developments in various compensatory financing schemes and their implications for the development of developing countries. The Board decided that the first review of the compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls by the Committee on Commodities should take place prior to UNCTAD VIII in 1992.

Taxation

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/276 of 27 July, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters at its fifth meeting in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 382].

Transport

Maritime transport

In 1990, the total volume of international seaborne trade continued to expand for the fifth consecutive year, reaching a record-breaking 4 billion tons. That was a 3 per cent increase over the previous year, said the Review of Maritime Transport, 1990 [Sales No. E.91.II.D.16]. Developed market-economy countries continued to dominate world seaborne trade, generating 44.3 per cent of all goods loaded, a decrease of 0.1 per cent from 1989. They accounted for 67.3 per cent of all goods unloaded, an increase of 0.2 per cent from 1989. The share of countries of Eastern Europe decreased slightly for both goods loaded and unloaded and stood at 5.4 per cent and 4.1 per cent respectively, while the share of the socialist countries of Asia remained unchanged at 2 per cent for goods loaded and 2.1 per cent for goods unloaded. Developing countries expanded their seaborne trade exports in 1990. Their share of all goods loaded increased by 0.4 per cent to reach 48.3 per cent. With respect to goods unloaded, the share of developing countries remained at the 1989 level of 26.5 per cent.

Committee on Shipping

The UNCTAD Committee on Shipping, which held its fourteenth session in Geneva from 21 to 29 June 1990 [TD/B/1264], focused on developments in multimodal transport, and economic co-operation among developing countries in the field of shipping, ports and multimodal transport. It also considered a number of items relating to its work programme. The Committee adopted four resolutions.

In a 29 June resolution [TD/B/1264(res.65(XIV))], the Committee urged the international community, particularly developed countries, to promote increased participation by developing countries in world maritime and multimodal transport and to assist them in meeting the challenges posed by ongoing structural and technological changes and developments in the maritime sector. It requested the UNCTAD secretariat to analyse structural and technological developments in the maritime sector and to identify the scale and nature of the technology gap experienced by developing countries. The secretariat was also asked: to study prevailing ship-financing arrangements and assess their adequacy in meeting the requirements of developing countries; to monitor the problem of the imbalance between supply and demand and make recommendations to the Committee; and to continue monitoring developments in world shipping, giving special attention to world liner shipping developments, and report thereon in the annual Review of Maritime Transport.

With regard to the protection of shippers' interests, the Committee requested the secretariat to monitor institutional and market developments in liner shipping and their impact on shipper/shipowner relations and to report periodically to the Committee. In that connection, the secretariat should study the problems faced by shippers and shippers' organizations in consulting with conferences and shipping lines. The Committee also requested the secretariat to monitor the establishment and operation of consultation mechanisms for shippers' organizations; to assist developing countries with the establishment and operation of shippers' organizations that were capable of assisting shippers in their day-to-day commercial activities as well as consulting with all relevant providers of transport services; and to assist those organizations to improve consultation machinery in liner shipping.

The Committee on Shipping further requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare studies on maritime transportation of selected commodities that were of particular interest to developing countries as well as analyses of the impact of conditions of ocean transport services, particularly ocean freight rates, on exports of selected manufactured goods from developing countries, and on exports in trades between those countries.

The secretariat was asked to continue to monitor developments in trade in shipping services and to provide technical assistance to developing countries in the process of negotiations on trade in shipping services.

The Committee also requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue to carry out its mandates in ports development, international maritime legislation and technical co-operation and training.

On 12 October, TDB took note of the report of the Committee on Shipping on its fourteenth session and endorsed the resolutions annexed thereto.

Multimodal transport

The Committee on Shipping had before it a report of the UNCTAD secretariat on developments in multimodal transport [TD/B/C.4/328]; a report [TD/B/C.4/315 (Part II) & Corr.1] on the economic and commercial implications of the entry into force of the United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea (Hamburg Rules) [YUN 1978, p. 956] and the United Nations Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods [YUN 1980, p. 1020]; an inventory of existing mandates and a new draft programme of work in the fields of multimodal transport and technological development [TD/B/C.4/323]; a review of developments in standardization of containers and related activities [TD/B/C.4/329]; and information material for shippers to make the most efficient use of multimodal transport [TD/B/C.4/330].

By a 29 June resolution [TD/B/1264 (res. 67 (XIV))], the Committee requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene in 1991 a group of experts to discuss developments in the field of multimodal transport and containerization wherever there was a sea link; to take stock of the problems experienced by users and providers of multimodal and/or container transport, taking account of problems identified by UNCTAD as rendering the introduction of modern transport technology difficult in developing countries, including inadequate transport infrastructure, non-availability of investment, lack of qualified expertise and information of officials concerned, inadequate legislation, unbalanced flow of container traffic, and reducing the technology gap between developed and developing countries. It invited those member States that had not yet done so to become contracting parties to the United Nations Convention on International Multimodal Transport of Goods and to the Hamburg Rules.

Ports

In a 29 June resolution [TD/B/1264 (res. 65(XIV))], the Committee on Shipping requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue to implement its mandates in the field of ports, including training and technical co-operation, taking into account any recommendations that the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group of Port Experts might make, and to report thereon to the Committee.

As requested by the Committee on Shipping in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 420], the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group of Port Experts on the Development, Improvement and Operation of Ports met in Geneva from 24 to 28 September 1990 [TD/B/C.4/337]. The Group considered port development and management, including operations, administration, training and technical co-operation. It had before it UNCTAD secretariat reports on: co-operation among ports in developing countries [TD/B/C.4/AC.7/8]; the establishment of trans-shipment facilities in developing countries [TD/B/C.4/AC.7/10]; and the role of UNCTAD in port development [TD/B/C.4/AC.7/7].

The Group noted that ports were evolving into service centres that could become one of the driving forces in the trading activities of the country or region. Governments and ports were recommended to anticipate those changes, to prepare for them and to facilitate their implementation when it was in the interest of the country. Since new services at some ports included trans-shipment, the Group recommended that regional and international port associations and the UNCTAD secretariat continue to work towards establishing co-operation agreements on a regional basis to avoid excessive competition leading to investments too large for their purpose and under-utilized. Port authorities were invited to involve shipping lines in the construction of trans-shipment facilities since they were the principal users. The Group recommended that UNCTAD step up its efforts in the area of data processing and the use of computers. It also recommended that priority be given to the training of personnel and urged financing institutions to assist UNCTAD in carrying out in developing countries the training programme presented at the meeting. It was also recommended that port authorities promote the development of computerized systems for electronic data interchange (EDI). The Group made specific recommendations concerning technical assistance and training activities and the secretariat's future study programme. The secretariat was asked to prepare studies on modern port organization and management, development of service centres in ports, human resources development, port regulations and legislation, strategic planning, tariffs and port finance, relations between the city and the port, and trans-shipment.

International maritime legislation

The Working Group on International Shipping Legislation held its twelfth session in Geneva from 22 to 30 October 1990 [TD/B/C.4/338]. The Working Group had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report containing a comparative analysis of charter parties [TD/B/C.4/ ISL/55], which examined the use of certain standard charter party forms and problems and complications arising from their use. The analysis demonstrated that a number of clauses were ambiguous, uncertain in their operation, or variously interpreted by national courts. Recommendations were made for the modernization and harmonization of charter party core clauses and the drafting of rules covering certain aspects of chartering practices.

The Working Group was unable to arrive at a consensus as to the future work on the matter. The Chairman of the Group said he hoped that the Working Group's report and its annexes containing the two draft resolutions proposed by the Group of 77 and by the States members of Group B (developed economies) and his own compromise text would assist the Committee on Shipping to achieve a decision on follow-up work on charter parties.

Maritime fraud

In a 29 June resolution [TD/B/1264 (res. 65 (xiv))], the Committee on Shipping recommended that States members of UNCTAD urge the relevant commercial parties to utilize the services of the Maritime Advisory Exchange as a means of combating maritime fraud and invited member Governments and private enterprises to provide financial assistance to the Exchange to ensure its continued functioning. The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to promote the services provided by the Exchange, to monitor its progress and to report thereon to the Committee. The secretariat was also asked to continue to monitor the work on the subject of sea waybills, in liner and tramp shipping, being carried out by the relevant international organizations and to report on progress made.

Maritime liens and mortgages

The Committee on Shipping, at its June meeting, had before it the final report of the Joint UNCTAD/International Maritime Organization Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Maritime Liens and Mortgages and Related Subjects [TD/B/C.4/327&Corr.1].

The Committee [TD/B/1264 (res. 66(XIV))] endorsed the recommendations of the Group of Experts and proposed to TDB that it recommend to the General Assembly the convening of a conference of plenipotentiaries to consider adoption of the draft convention on maritime liens and mortgages as contained in the final report of the Group of Experts.

Conventions

The Committee on Shipping, in a 29 June resolution [TD/B/1264 (res. 65 (XIV))], requested the UNCTAD secretariat to continue to provide assistance to Governments concerning the implementation of conventions adopted under UNCTAD auspices and to monitor progress made towards the ratification and implementation of the conventions or their provisions and to report periodically to the Committee.

Technical assistance and training

During 1990, a total of 43 projects of technical co-operation in shipping, ports and multimodal transport were executed, involving expenditure of $3.67 million (as against $3.61 million in 1989).

The TRAINMAR training programme, which had as its objective the reinforcement of local training activities, entered a consolidation phase. UNDP agreed to finance a new inter-regional project to implement an action plan that stemmed from an evaluation of the previous year. The on-the-job training project, JOBMAR, continued and by the end of the year 23 candidates had been placed. Development and implementation of an Advance Cargo Information System (ACIS), particularly its Railtracker component, progressed. A module enabling shipping lines to transit manifest data electronically was successfully tested and harbour master and gate pass modules were developed and implemented on a pilot basis. A sub-regional multimodal transport project was initiated, in collaboration with the Commission of the Cartagena Agreement, for the Andean Pact countries to help institutionalize multimodal transport and harmonize shipping policy. The first phase of a multimodal transport project in Ethiopia to help facilitate cargo movements between Assab and Addis Ababa was completed.

The Committee on Shipping, having considered an UNCTAD secretariat evaluation of the technical co-operation programme in maritime and multimodal transport [TD/B/C.4/331 & Add.1], adopted a 29 June resolution [TD/B/1264 (res. 65 (XIV))] in which it requested the UNCTAD secretariat to maintain and expand its training programmes, including the TRAINMAR, JOBMAR and improving port performance (IPP) programmes and, in consultation with other international organizations, to promote international co-operative mechanisms for the preparation and dissemination of training materials in shipping, ports and multimodal transport and to implement the TRAINMAR Action Plan. The secretariat was also asked to update and make available information on technical assistance, training activities and advisory services in shipping, ports and multimodal transport and to evaluate the present and future need for training in those fields by developing countries. The Committee recommended that UNCTAD strengthen its collaboration with other agencies such as the International Labor Organization (ILO) and the International Maritime Organization (IMO), and to ensure that developing countries obtained the maximum benefits from those organizations' scarce resources.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

The Committee on Shipping, having considered economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) in the field of shipping, ports and multimodal transport, adopted a 29 June resolution [TD/B/1264 (res. 64(XIV))] in which it invited shipowners and their associations and shippers of developing countries to create and/or strengthen structures to establish and improve operational co-operation. Developing countries were invited to provide for an adequate framework promoting co-operative action among shipowners, shippers, ports and multimodal transport operators and national and international organizations concerned with economic and social development plans, and bilateral and multilateral funding organizations were invited to give priority to projects and assistance in shipping and multimodal transport. The Committee requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to assist in organizing regional and interregional meetings to improve co-operation among Governments and economic operators in maritime transport. In technical assistance activities, he was asked to place emphasis on activities fostering ECDC and promoting implementation of the recommendations of the 1989 meeting of the Group of Experts on ECDC in Shipping, Ports and Multimodal Transport [YUN 1989, p. 383].

The Committee requested the UNCTAD secretariat to prepare surveys on progress achieved by developing countries in co-operation among themselves and to report on the implementation of the recommendations agreed among the experts and make additional recommendations on improving co-operation. The secretariat was asked to collaborate with UN regional commissions and other subregional and regional organizations dealing with shipping, ports and multimodal transport in its work aimed at implementing ECDC. The Committee invited operators of shipping and multimodal enterprises, particularly from developed countries, to assist in solving operational problems of co-operation and to strengthen their co-operative programmes with operators of shipping and multimodal enterprises from developing countries.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (sixteenth session) met in Geneva from 3 to 12 December [ST/SG/AC.10/17 & Adds. 1-6]. The Committee of Experts considered the activities of international organizations concerned with regulations or recommendations on the transport of dangerous goods, including ILO, the International Organization for Standards, the European Community, IMO, the International Civil Aviation Organization, and the United Nations Environment Programme. It also considered the work and recommendations of its Sub-Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, together with subsequent proposals in the areas of explosives, gases, flammable solids, infectious substances, packaging provisions and other matters. Concerning infectious substances, in particular genetically modified organisms or micro-organisms, the Committee agreed on provisions to be included in the sixth revised edition of the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods. It also examined other outstanding or new proposals to amend the Recommendations. The Committee adopted its programme of work for 1991-1992. It agreed to request the Economic and Social Council to consider setting up a special fund to support the Committee's activities utilizing, inter alia, income from the sale of its publications. The Committee agreed to a draft resolution on its work and funding for submission to the Economic and Social Council in 1991.

Chapter V

Transnational corporations

In 1990, the activities of transnational corporations (TNCs), in view of their impact on international development and global investment flows and trade, continued to attract the attention of the international community. The United Nations continued to support efforts to formulate a code of conduct on TNCs, but no consensus was reached on its final form. In December, the General Assembly requested its President, with the support of the Secretary-General, to arrange for intensive consultations to achieve an early agreement on the code.

During its sixteenth session (New York, 2-11 April), the Commission on Transnational Corporations reviewed developments related to TNCs, recognizing the potential of positive contributions they could make to the world economy and its further integration.

The Commission also considered the report on the eighth session of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, which dealt with developments in accounting from a global perspective, discussing accounting implications arising from the continued instability in financial markets, European economic integration and glasnost, as well as accounting for environmental protection measures.

The report and recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the second public hearings on TNC activities in South Africa and Namibia, which contained an assessment of their role in the South African economy, as well as of the possible strengthening of sanctions to accelerate political change in that country, was also before the Commission. The Economic and Social Council condemned TNCs that continued to collaborate with the racist minority regime in South Africa and called for a prohibition of all collaboration by TNCs with that regime.

The Centre on TNCs, the secretariat for the Commission, provided a wide range of information and advisory services mainly to developing countries, as well as to the newly emerging democracies of Eastern Europe. The Economic and Social Council expressed its support of Centre activities, requesting it to continue developing programmes of support for co-operative activities of small and medium-sized enterprises in developing countries.

Commission on TNCs

The Commission on TNCs held its sixteenth session in New York from 2 to 11 April [E/1990/26] and reconvened a special session on 24 May on the draft code of conduct. Among the subjects discussed other than the draft code were other international arrangements and agreements; international standards of accounting and reporting; TNCs in South Africa and Namibia; TNCs and issues relating to the environment; the role of TNCs in services, including transborder data flows; strengthening the negotiating capacity of developing countries in their dealings with TNCs; the Centre on TNCs; and ongoing and future research. At its regular session, the Commission had before it reports of the Secretary-General on recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations [E/C.10/1990/2]; TNCs and development: policies to stimulate the transfer of investment capital, technology and skills to developing countries in the 1990s [E/C.10/1990/3]; home country incentives for investment in least developed countries [E/C.10/1990/4]; progress made in the code of conduct on TNCs [E/C.10/1990/5]; international arrangements and agreements related to TNCs [E/C.10/1990/6]; measures related to trade, finance, investment and technology transfer to South Africa [E/C.10/1990/8]; foreign direct investment in Africa and strategies to encourage TNCs to respond positively to the improved investment climate [E/C.10/1990/9]; TNCs and the environment [E/C.10/1990/10]; transnational banks and external indebtedness [E/C.10/1990/11]; transnational service corporations and the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations [E/C.10/1990/12]; trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights and trade-related investment measures [E/C.10/1990/13]; experience gained in technical co-operation activities with respect to the formulation and implementation of foreign investment policies [E/C.10/1990/14]; information services provided by the UN Centre on TNCs to developing countries [E/C.10/1990/15]; activities of the Centre on TNCs and the activities of the joint units established with the regional commissions [E/C.10/1990/16]; and non-conventional TNCs [E/C.10/1990/18].

The Commission reviewed developments related to TNCs, recognizing the potential of positive contributions that TNCs could make to world development and to a further integration of the world economy. During the session, the rapidly changing attitudes and policies of developing countries towards TNCs and foreign direct investment were noted. However, also noted were the falling share of world-wide foreign direct investment flows to developing countries and the failure of developing countries to have wide access to capital and technology.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council three draft resolutions on the activities of TNCs in South Africa, on the code of conduct on TNCs and on the activities of the UN Centre on TNCs—and a draft decision on the provisional agenda and documentation for its seventeenth (1991) session. Two decisions adopted by the Commission were brought to the Council's attention—on the report of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting and on follow-up to a survey of accounting needs in Africa.

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report (decision 1990/275) and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1991 session (decision 1990/273).

Draft code of conduct

Efforts to formulate a code of conduct on TNCs, as an essential instrument in strengthening international co-operation for the sustained growth of the world economy, continued in 1990. Informal consultations on the code intensified. In a January report [E/C.10/1990/5], the Secretary-General reviewed the progress made in the work on the code, analysed a changing investment environment and outlined prospects for an early conclusion of the code. The report of the Hague symposium on the UN code, under the sponsorship of the Centre on TNCs and the International Law Association's Committee on the Legal Aspects of the New International Economic Order, held in September 1989, was annexed to the report. At the symposium, a group of international lawyers suggested some prescriptions for the resolution of the outstanding issues in the code.

The results of the consultations conducted by the enlarged Bureau in January, April and May 1990 were considered by the Commission at its April session and at its special session on 24 May, reconvened in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1990/204 of 9 February, with a view to concluding the work on the formulation of the code of conduct. In its report [E/1990/91] to the Council, the Commission stated that the special session could not reach agreement on the code's formulation and concluded that the Council should decide on the future course of action. As requested by the Commission at its special session, the Secretariat in June identified the major outstanding issues regarding the code of conduct [E/1990/96].

Although no agreement was reached on a final draft code, a number of amendments were made to the draft prepared by the Secretary-General in 1988 [E/1988/39/Add.1]. In May, the Chairman of the special session transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the amended text of the draft code [E/1990/94].

On 27 July, the Council, by decision 1990/274, took note of the report of the Commission on the status of the negotiations on the code of conduct [E/1990/91] and decided to transmit the report to the General Assembly, together with the proposed draft text and the June Secretariat note on major outstanding issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/186.

Code of conduct on transnational corporations

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the desirability of reaching an early agreement on the formulation of a code of conduct on transnational corporations, and reaffirming the interest of Member States in resolving the remaining outstanding issues,

Confirming that there is substantial provisional understanding on the contents of the draft code of conduct as presented to the President of the Economic and Social Council by the Chairman of the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its reconvened special session to request the President of the General Assembly, with the support of the Secretary-General, to arrange for intensive consultations aimed at achieving an early agreement on a code of conduct on transnational corporations, for presentation to and adoption by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

General Assembly resolution 45/186

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/848) without vote, 10 December (meeting 53); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.71) based on informal consultations on draft by Mexico (A/C.2/45/L.24/Rev.1); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 13-16, 28, 44, 53; plenary 71.

International arrangements related to TNCs

In a February report to the Commission on TNCs [E/C.10/1990/6], the Secretary-General reviewed several methods, notions and standards which had been developed with respect to international investment and which, he felt, might be useful for discussing possible concepts and standards related to international trade in services. He examined instruments such as bilateral investment protection agreements, treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation, and treaties for the avoidance of double taxation. The principal legal standards for the treatment of persons, products and services of foreign origin, as well as such notions as exceptions, derogations and safeguards, which defined the limits of general standards, were also examined.

Concluding his survey, the Secretary-General said it showed that the experience accumulated in international framework agreements could be of immediate usefulness in other international negotiations, as the development of an instrument might be greatly helped by knowledge of how it compared to others in related or overlapping fields. One of the major such instruments was the draft code of conduct on TNCs, which, although not yet formally adopted and despite some disagreement as to some of its provisions, was remarkable for its structure, the number of its provisions that had found consensus in all groups of countries, its comprehensiveness and its practical concern with concrete problems of operations rather than abstract issues of law.

The draft code's approach usefully complemented any eventual instrument and provided guidance to enterprises as to appropriate policies and activities; it also acknowledged the central role of TNCs in the pursuit of international development and sought to enhance its positive effects, and covered a significant area of international economic relations, providing a balance to framework agreements moving solely at the level of intergovernmental relations and dealing exclusively with the rights and duties of Governments.

In April, the Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to update it for its 1991 session.

TNCs in South Africa

The Commission on TNCs, at its April session, had before it a 1989 report and recommendations [YUN 1989, p. 389] of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the second public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia, which contained an assessment of the role of TNCs in the South African economy; the impact of sanctions; the possible strengthening of such sanctions so as to accelerate political change; South Africa's partial success in reducing the sanctions' impact and the role of other Governments in that; and the shape of "post-apartheid" South Africa.

The Commission also considered a report [E/C.10/1990/8] of the Secretary-General reviewing measures relating to the activities of TNCs in three areas-international trade, disinvestment, and technology transfer and foreign finance-including proposed measures or bills awaiting legislative approval and not yet enacted into laws. According to the report, an increasing number of TNCs, most of them based in the United States, had disposed of their South African investments. While oil continued to reach South Africa in ample quantities, the oil as well as arms embargoes had forced it to build up an armaments and oil industry of its own, at high costs. The most effective corporate sanctions against South Africa had been the measures taken by transnational banks in 1985 to cease all new lending, which required the country to repay significant amounts of commercial debt each year. The Secretary-General concluded that the measures against South Africa had slowed down the economy, lowered living standards of the white population and affected the morale of the business community. According to the South African Reserve Bank, real average incomes were 15 per cent lower than they would have been without sanctions and disinvestment.

The Commission took note of both reports and requested the Centre on TNCs to prepare, for its 1991 session, a report on the activities of TNCs in South Africa, including a review of the responsibilities of home countries with respect to TNCs engaged in such activities, and also the results of the feasibility study for a comprehensive training programme for black South Africans.

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/70.

Activities of transnational corporations in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa, in particular resolution 1988/56 of 27 July 1988, in which it urged all transnational corporations to stop immediately all forms of collaboration with the racist minority regime in South Africa and called for specific actions by Member States and transnational corporations to end such collaboration,

Noting with grave concern the brutal perpetuation of the inhuman system of apartheid in South Africa and the continued denial of the civil and political rights of the majority of the population in that country,

Welcoming the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989, which contains guidelines on how to end apartheid in a peaceful manner,

Bearing in mind the fact that continued investments, trade, technological co-operation and other forms of covert or overt activity by transnational corporations inside and outside South Africa sustain apartheid,

Noting with deep regret the unfriendly decision of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to lift unilaterally the ban of the Commission of the European Communities on new investments in South Africa, contrary to the political consensus in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa that existing measures aimed at encouraging the South African régime to eradicate apartheid should not be relaxed until there was clear evidence of profound and irreversible change,

Also noting with deep regret the unprincipled decision of the Government of Hungary, a founding member of the Special Committee against Apartheid, to initiate commercial and economic contacts with the apartheid Régime of South Africa,

Recalling that some transnational banks and other international financial institutions have rescheduled South African loans in contemptuous disregard for the overwhelming interest of the international community in dismantling apartheid peacefully and speedily,

Also recalling that some transnational companies that have supposedly departed from South Africa have actually maintained non-equity links, such as franchises, licences and royalty agreements, with former subsidiaries,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General concerning the responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa in violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates its abhorrence of apartheid, which is a crime against humanity, and condemns the South African regime for its perpetuation of apartheid and its direct and indirect acts of military and economic destabilization of the neighbouring independent States;

2. Welcomes the emerging political climate in South Africa, which has the potential to create an atmosphere conducive to negotiations aimed at the eradication of apartheid and at the creation of a non-racial, democratic and united South Africa;

3. Urges the Government of South Africa to work speedily to create the conditions necessary for the establishment of genuine democracy in South Africa, based on the guidelines provided in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa;

4. Condemns those transnational corporations that continue to collaborate with the racist minority regime in South Africa, in defiance of resolutions of the United Nations and international public opinion and, in many cases, in violation of measures adopted by their home countries;

5. Welcomes as an initial step the measures taken by certain Governments to impose restrictions on investments, bank loans and other economic activities in South Africa, and the divestment by certain transnational corporations of their equity investments in South Africa;

6. Deeply regrets that the measures taken so far fall short of the comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the racist régime in South Africa called for in resolutions of the General Assembly;

7. Calls upon the Governments of the home countries of transnational corporations to implement fully the provisions of Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/56 and to consider adopting further measures to prohibit all forms of collaboration by transnational corporations with the racist minority régime in South Africa, including not only direct investments but also services, non-equity forms of business arrangements, technology, licensing, distribution and franchising agreements and other such activities;

8. Condemns the decision of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to lift &laterally the ban of the Commission of the European Communities on new investments in South Africa, which serves to embolden the apartheid régime to entrench apartheid at this critical moment in the struggle for democratic change in South Africa;

9. Calls upon the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to rescind its decision without delay;

10. Condemns the reprehensible decision of the Government of Hungary to initiate commercial, economic and political links with the apartheid régime, a move completely inconsistent with the principled stand that Government has been known to take in such matters;

11. Calls upon the Government of Hungary to return to its traditional position of opposing racism and to abandon any links with the apartheid régime that would serve to sustain that regime;

12. Urges all transnational corporations to stop immediately any operations in South Africa and all forms of trade and economic links with the racist minority régime;

13. Calls upon all multilateral financial and development institutions to cease immediately any kind of support or other form of collaboration with the racist régime in South Africa;

14. Takes note with appreciation of the report and recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the second public hearings on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa;

15. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue the useful work of collecting and disseminating information on the activities of transnational corporations in South Africa, including the list of transnational corporations still conducting operations there;

(b) To prepare studies on the level and form of operation by transnational corporations in South Africa, including their non-equity business arrangements and their involvement in particular sectors of the South African economy, and an updated study on the responsibilities of home countries with respect to the transnational corporations operating in South Africa in violation of relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations;

(c) To report annually to the Commission on Transnational Corporations, the Economic and Social Council, the General Assembly and the Security Council on the implementation of the present resolution.

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 34-14-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/108) by roll-call vote (29-12-1). 23 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1990/26); agenda item 7 (d).

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In Favour: Algeria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Brazil, Burkina Faso, China, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Against: Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia.

Foreign direct investment

For its consideration, the Commission on TNCs had before it reports of the Secretary-General on foreign direct investment in Africa and strategies to encourage TNCs to respond positively to the improved investment climate [E/C.10/1990/9]; on experience gained in technical co-operation activities with respect to the formulation and implementation of foreign investment policies [E/C.10/1990/14]; and on the 1989 activities of the Centre on TNCs and of the joint units established with the regional commissions [YUN 1989, p. 393].

The Director of the Advisory and Information Services Division of the Centre informed the Commission that the Centre's technical assistance had been avidly sought by an ever-increasing number of countries in a wide range of projects related to TNCs, including assistance in negotiating strategic transactions with TNCs, particularly in the natural resources sector; in providing critical information and advice in evaluating investment projects; and in restructuring and liberalizing government policies towards TNCs, particularly in newly open-door economies.

Referring to the Secretary-General's report on technical co-operation and foreign investment policies, he pointed out that the liberalization process was meaningful only if accompanied by a package of broad economic reforms, including liberalization of foreign exchange regimes and of the financial markets, price liberalization reforms, tax reforms and trade policy reforms. With regard to the Centre's technical assistance in that area, requests generally fell under the following categories: countries with restrictive investment regimes moving towards a new policy to attract investments; countries successful in attracting foreign investments but whose policies needed streamlining to achieve a greater degree of efficiency; countries that were adopting a more export-oriented strategy; and countries successful in attracting foreign investment but in which the transfer of technology was not commensurate with the transfer of capital.

With regard to the Secretary-General's report on foreign direct investment in Africa, the Director pointed out the familiar trend that Africa's share of investment flows was insignificant despite the determined changes African Governments had taken to improve their investment climate.

The Commission, in April, took note of the three reports and requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1991 on experience gained in technical co-operation activities.

Standards of accounting and reporting

During its eighth session, which took place in New York from 13 to 23 March 1990 [E/C.10/1990/7] according to Economic and Social Council decision 1990/202 of 9 February, the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting considered developments in accounting from a global perspective. In particular, it discussed accounting implications arising from the continued instability in financial markets, European economic integration and glasnost. The group also took up such technical subjects as accounting by and for joint ventures, accounting for pension commitments, accounting for intangibles and accounting for environmental protection measures. The Group had before it reports of the Secretary-General on current developments at the global [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/2] and national [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/3] levels in the field of accounting and reporting by TNCs; an international survey of financial statements published by TNCs and other enterprises [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/4]; information disclosure relating to environmental measures [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/5]; accounting for pension commitments [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/7]; accounting for and by joint ventures [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/8]; accounting for intangible assets [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/9]; further steps to be taken in relation to the development of a comprehensive information system [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/10]; ways and means of improving education, research and practical training in the field of accounting and reporting in member States: result of the survey on Africa [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/11]; and appropriate measures to give effect to the work of the Group [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/6]. The Group also had before it recommendations for better accounting and reporting for environmental measures [E/C.10/AC.3/1990/L.3].

The Group observed that while environmental protection measures were in the first instance the Government's task, accountants had a modest contribution to make. Most Group members, however, were of the view that further work was necessary in that area before the Group could arrive at conclusions concerning information disclosure and accounting methods. The Group called on the Commission on TNCs to request the Centre to undertake follow-up action. Lastly, the Group considered it appropriate to re-examine its objectives in the light of the changes in the global economy and requested the Centre to prepare a proposal on the subject.

On the Group's recommendation and following consideration of its report, the Commission on TNCs on 9 April adopted two decisions, approving [E/1990/26 (dec. 1990/1)] the Group's work and inviting [dec. 1990/2] the Centre on TNCs to take follow-up action on the survey of accounting needs in Africa, by holding regional meetings to identify long-term and comprehensive strategies to strengthen accounting development. Among participants of such meetings should be representatives of the World Bank, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), as well as regional and bilateral agencies and professional organizations.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1990/71, took note of the 1988 Conclusions on Accounting and Reporting by Transnational Corporations [Sales No. E.88.II.A.18], prepared and agreed to by the Working Group, noting that those conclusions might be useful for both preparers and users of financial statements. The Council commended the Group on its work on international accounting and reporting standards, and called on the Secretary-General to ensure that resources were made available so that the Group and the Centre could effectively carry out their work in that field.

TNCs and the environment

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/25, and a request of the Commission on TNCs, the Secretary-General submitted in March 1990 a report [E/C.10/1990/10] exploring the role of TNCs in sustainable development, with particular reference to climate change. The report also reviewed issues related to TNCs and environmental protection in developing countries, and considered selected transnational issues on the agenda for the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development. The report contained three annexes on criteria for sustainable development management; the status of current work being done in the UN system on dissemination of information on hazardous technologies and safer, cleaner alternatives to them; and a proposed directory on such technologies and their alternatives.

The Commission took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to prepare for its 1991 session a comprehensive and analytical report with a view to making a significant contribution to the preparatory work of the 1992 Conference.

Transnational services

Transnational banks

In February 1990, the Secretary-General presented to the Commission on TNCs a report [E/C.10/1990/11] exploring the close correlation between the transnationality of banks and the international debt problem, examining the past and new role of transnational banks and considering possible options for further action to solve the problem.

According to the report, the key players were 25 large transnational banks with far-flung networks of branches, subsidiaries and affiliates, as well as large holdings of foreign assets and deposits; those banks accounted for well over 80 per cent of bank loans to developing countries.

From the onset of the debt crisis in 1982 through 1988, transnational banks made some contribution to debt reduction and/or cash-flow relief, through negotiated interest reduction, re-scheduling of principal repayments, informal acceptance of interest arrears and debt conversions through cash buy-backs, debt/equity, debt-for-nature and other forms of swaps. Those efforts cumulated in some reduction of commercial bank claims on 17 major debtor countries, but the claims in 1988 were $56 billion more than in 1982. Debt service as a proportion of exports of goods and services continued to be high, the report stated, exceeding 40 per cent in some cases. Against that background, the Brady plan announced in March 1989 envisaged a number of measures aimed explicitly at a reduction of debt. The plan marked a major step forward in the management of the debt problem; however, there were legitimate concerns about the extent to which it would actually contribute to a solution. The Secretary-General concluded that the plan had set debt policy on a rational but slow track towards a solution and that additional steps would need to be taken by all parties, including debtor countries, to bring about any significant debt reduction in the near future.

The Commission, in April, took note of the report and requested the Centre on TNCs to continue further studies on the subject.

Role of TNCs in other services

In a March report [E/C.10/1990/12] to the Commission on TNCs, the Secretary-General examined the questions of international transactions in services and foreign direct investment and TNCs in selected service industries, as well as the relevance of the code of conduct on TNCs to negotiations on services. The report focused on foreign-direct-investment issues related to the negotiations on trade in services in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, outlining the principal modes of international delivery of services and reviewing them from the point of view of the definitions of cross-border transactions and foreign direct investment used by international organizations and major home and host countries. The report highlighted some aspects of the role of foreign direct investment and TNCs in those service industries which had been examined by the Group of Negotiations on Services, and the implications and applicability of key concepts and principles for trade in those industries.

In April, the Commission took note of the report and requested the Secretary-General to conduct further in-depth research and technical co-operation in the area of services and to report to the Commission in 1991.

Centre on TNCs

Acting as the main Secretariat unit for TNC-related matters, the UN Centre on Transnational Corporations continued to provide assistance to the Commission on TNCs and to carry out a wide range of activities, which were described in a February 1990 report [E.C.10/1990/16] of the Secretary-General.

In 1989, the Economic and Social Council had adopted eight substantive resolutions which invested the Centre with additional mandates relating to a number of key developmental, investment and international economic co-operation issues. Further expansion of the mandated activities required extensive efforts to maintain co-ordination with other UN entities and organizations that undertook work in the areas of relevance and subject-matters addressed by the Commission and the Centre. The Centre also co-operated with the International Monetary Fund and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. In the area of accounting and reporting, the Centre had fruitful collaboration with the International Accounting Standards Committee and the International Federation of Accountants. Jointly with the World Bank and the International Labour Organisation, the Centre undertook a survey of accounting needs in Africa (see above).

The Centre continued to strengthen its technical co-operation arrangements within and outside the UN system, in identifying technical co-operation needs, fielding experts and executing advisory, training and information services in developing countries, and continued its co-operation with the international academic community.

The Centre expanded its information dissemination efforts (see below) and continued to prepare documentation and provide substantive services to the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (see above). It examined, monitored and analysed multilateral, regional and bilateral agreements relating to TNCs, analysed general trends in the nature and extent of TNC operations, as well as laws, regulations and policies relating to TNCs, and studied TNCs in selected sectors.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/71.

Activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations
The Economic and Social Council

1. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report containing concrete proposals on ways of promoting foreign direct investment as a complement to domestic investment in the developing countries, giving due consideration to the special needs of the least developed countries;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to study, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other organizations, the interrelationship of investment, trade and development, with a view to identifying ways and means of encouraging and enhancing the contribution of transnational corporations to the development of developing countries through trade and investment.

II

1. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations to prepare, based on the provisions of General Assembly resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989 on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, in accordance with the requirements established by the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations and in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Conference, a comprehensive and analytical study for submission to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its seventeenth session, with a view to helping the Commission make a significant and action-oriented contribution to the preparatory work of the Conference;

2. Also requests the Executive Director of the Centre, in preparing the study requested, to focus on the role of transnational corporations and other commercial entities of a similar nature in promoting access to and transfer of environmentally sound technologies to developing countries, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/228, in particular section I, paragraph 15 (m) thereof, to include specific and innovative proposals to strengthen such transfer and, in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Intellectual Property Organization and other relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system, to investigate the issue as well as other measures that could further encourage and mobilize transnational corporations and other commercial entities of a similar nature to protect and enhance the environment in relation to development;

3. Takes notes with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on transnational corporations and issues relating to the environment, including the criteria for sustainable development management set out in annex I of the report, and requests the Executive Director of the Centre, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/25 of 24 May 1989 and General Assembly resolution 44/228, in co-operation with the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant organs and bodies of the United Nations and in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and taking full account of other ongoing work, to continue to examine those issues, including concrete ways and means of strengthening the participation of transnational corporations and other commercial entities of a similar nature in the efforts to increase environmental protection and provide business enterprises and governmental agencies in developing countries with access to information on cleaner technologies, to examine the feasibility of financial mechanisms that would encourage transnational corporations and other enterprises of a similar nature to contribute to the protection and enhancement of the environment of developing countries, and to report to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its seventeenth session, with a view to assisting the Commission in its contribution to the Preparatory Committee for the Conference.

III

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to explore ways and means of promoting regional economic integration and co-operation among developing countries through joint ventures and the potential impact of regional economic integration processes among developed countries, including the impact on regional economic integration processes in developing countries, as called for in Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/21, 1989/22 and 1989/23 of 24 May 1989;

2. Supports the technical co-operation activities of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, and requests the Centre to continue its efforts to develop its programmes of support for co-operative activities of small and medium-sized enterprises in developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare further studies on the role of transnational corporations in other services, including financial services, and on strengthening the negotiating capacity of developing countries in their dealings with transnational corporations, and to report on other ongoing and future research of the Centre to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its seventeenth session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the other work being carried out in the United Nations, to prepare an updated report on the role of transnational banks related to the external indebtedness of developing countries, giving particular attention to the obstacles and problems that transnational banks have faced with regard to debt reduction, for submission to the Commission on Transnational Corporations at its seventeenth session;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare an analytical report on debt-equity swaps, taking into account the work already carried out by the Centre, on the effect that swaps could have on foreign direct investment and the overall development of host countries, as well as the experience of countries that have developed such schemes;

6. Takes note of the suggestion to undertake country-specific studies on the contribution of foreign direct investment to development, with a view to analysing and stimulating the flow in investment capital, technology and skills to host countries and identifying proposals for technical assistance designed to support their development objectives, on the understanding that those studies should be undertaken only upon the request of Governments, with their participation and for their use only.

IV

1. Takes note of the Conclusion on Accounting and Reporting by Transnational Corporations, prepared and agreed to by the Intergovernmental Working Group, of Experts International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, and further notes that the conclusions may be useful for both preparers and users of financial statements;

2. Commends the Group on its work on international standards of accounting and reporting, and calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that, without affecting other activities, resources are made available so that the Group and the Centre may effectively carry out their work on international accounting and reporting.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/71

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/108) without vote, 23 July (meeting 10); draft by Commission on TNCs (E/1990/26); agenda item 7 (d). Financial implications. S-G, E/1990/26/Add.1.

Joint units with regional commissions

The joint units established by the Centre on TNCs with the five regional commissions continued to serve as focal points for the Centre's activities in the respective regions, promoting research, training, advisory services, data collection and liaison with Governments and international organizations, according to a report [E/C.10/1991/15 & Corr.1] of the Secretary-General on the 1990 activities of the Centre and the joint units. The joint units made important contributions to the Centre's programme implementation.

The Joint Unit established with the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) focused its research on a study on the petrochemical industry in the Persian Gulf countries and the role of TNCs; input to the Centre's study on TNCs and sustainable development, particularly to the discussion of options for facilitating access by and transfer to developing countries of environmentally sound technologies; and a project on Japanese direct investment in Europe. In the area of technical assistance, the Joint Unit contributed to the establishment of the Romanian Agency for the Promotion of Foreign Investments and Economic Assistance. It also represented the Centre at various international meetings and conferences held in Geneva and continued its liaison work for the Centre with international organizations, Governments and governmental agencies in Europe. It further continued work on setting up in Geneva the Regional Documentation Unit on TNCs.

The Joint Unit established with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) collected, analysed and disseminated information and data, particularly on laws, regulations and policies relating to the operations of TNCs; foreign direct investment flows and non-equity arrangements; data sources for research activities; and information services. It provided technical and information assistance to countries of the region and disseminated information to ESCAP member States and ESCAP's 13 focal points. The Joint Unit undertook the following research projects: impact of TNCs on the international trade of primary commodities (funded by the Netherlands); transnational technology towards the year 2000 (funded by the Republic of Korea); TNCs and selected services industries of developing countries in the Asia and Pacific region (funded by Japan); and evaluation of TNCs' contribution to technology transfer in the export processing zones and science parks in developing countries of Asia and the Pacific (funded by the Netherlands). The Joint Unit organized a symposium on transnational technology towards the year 2000 in the ESCAP region (Bangkok, Thailand, 23-26 April).

The Joint Unit established with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean undertook research on national experiences and policy alternatives with regard to foreign direct investment; industrial restructuring and international competitiveness; and activities of transnational banks and the financial sector. The Unit made an important input to the Centre's Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment by collecting and analysing data on Latin America and by arranging for co-operative links with a variety of national institutions in the region. A project was under development on setting up a regional system on exchange of national information and experiences on foreign direct investment, with a view to enhancing the contribution of foreign capital to national development and to strengthening national decision-making capacity in that area.

The Joint Unit established with the Economic Commission for Africa, in the context of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter III), focused its research efforts on the role of TNCs in African least developed countries; TNCs in the services sector; and development of an African information system on TNCs. The Unit collected data on TNCs in Africa for the Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment and initiated two case-studies on intra-African mechanisms for promoting foreign direct investment in selected subregions. During 1990, missions were undertaken to Ethiopia, Ghana, Nigeria and the United Republic of Tanzania to review issues relating to less developed countries, to assess the role of TNCs in the services sector, and to collect data on the operations of those corporations and foreign direct investment.

The Joint Unit established with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia, in co-operation with ECE, prepared a draft of the first part of a technical study on Arab petrochemicals and rising protectionism in the developed market economies: the case of the European Community. The operation of the Unit was suspended in August owing to the prevailing situation in Baghdad.

Research

During 1990, the Centre on TNCs finalized volume VIII of the series National Legislation and Regulations relating to Transnational Corporations [ST/CTC/105]. As part of the preparation of the Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment, the legal framework for TNCs in some 100 countries was documented. The Centre also began a study on intellectual property rights and foreign direct investment. It completed two studies entitled "National policies in foreign direct investment flows". Another study, on trade-related investment measures and their impact on trade and development, was being completed in co-operation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. In line with Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/71 of 27 July, which encouraged the Centre to undertake country-specific studies on the contribution of foreign direct investment to development, two assessment studies on Bangladesh were undertaken.

The Centre published in two volumes the full proceedings of the second (1989) public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia [Sales Nos. E.90.II.A.6 & E.90.II.A.12]. It also conducted a survey of the corporate environmental policies, programmes and procedures of about 1,000 TNCs. A study on regulations governing the disclosure of risk information by industry, including TNCs, and the lessons for industrial environmental protection in developing countries was finalized as a United Nations technical paper [ST/CTC/III]. The Centre contributed to the fifth edition of the consolidated list of products whose consumption and/or sale had been banned or restricted, in co-operation with the World Health Organization and the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs. Before the Commission in 1990 was a comprehensive analytical study [E/C.10/1990/3] identifying ways the Commission could make an action-oriented contribution to the preparations for the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development. With extrabudgetary support from Sweden, the Centre initiated a research project on accounting and reporting for sustainable development, which examined current practices on environmental information disclosure by TNCs; analysed the ways business enterprises could be more efficient in their natural resource use and waste disposal methods; and sought to develop internationally comparable standards that would assure consistency in the disclosure of TNCs' environmental practices. A study on global climate change and the role of TNCs was completed.

A guide for decision makers on debt equity conversions [Sales No. E.90.II.A.22] was completed. Issues relating to the impact of transnational service corporations on host developing countries were examined in studies entitled Transnational Corporations, Services and the Uruguay Round [Sales No. E.90.II.A.11] and New Issues in the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations [Sales No. E.90.II.A.15]. A study entitled Transborder Data Flows and Mexico [Sales No. E.90.II.A.17] examined the role played by TNCs in the growing telematics and data services markets in that country.

The Centre submitted a comprehensive report on TNC activities in least developed countries to the Second United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I). It published a paper entitled Foreign Direct Investment, Debt and Home-country Policies [Sales No.

E.90.II.A.16], which drew on reports submitted to the Commission on recent developments [E/C.10/1990/2], home-country incentives for investment in least developed countries [E/C.10/1990/4] and transnational banks [E/C.10/1990/11].

The Centre worked on a study [ST/CTC/79] which examined the determinants of foreign direct investment, particularly in developing countries. The impact of regional economic integration on foreign direct investment and implications for developing countries were analysed in Regional Economic Integration and Transnational Corporations in the 1990s: Europe 1992, North America and the Developing Countries. [Sales No. E.90.II.A.14]. The implications of free economic zones for foreign direct investment were examined in The Role of Free Economic Zones in the USSR and Eastern Europe [Sales No. E.90.II.A.5] and The Challenge of Free Economic Zones in Central and Eastern Europe: International Perspectives [ST/CTC/108].

A study on "Recent developments related to transnational corporations and international economic relations: the Triad of foreign direct investment" [E/C.10/1990/2], which examined the pattern of foreign direct investment stocks and flows in the "Triad" (the European Community, Japan and the United States) and the extent to which other countries, most of them developing, were linked to them through foreign investment flows, was before the Commission in 1990. Together with the UN Centre on Human Rights, the Centre on TNCs began a project aimed at identifying TNCs operating on indigenous peoples' land.

Ongoing and future activities

In the context of the Centre's ongoing and future research activities, the Commission on TNCs in April considered two reports of the Secretary-General, on trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights and trade-related investment measures [E/C.10/1990/13], and on non-conventional TNCs [E/C.10/1990/18]. Introducing the first report, the Centre's Executive Director said the Centre had sought to examine the impact of intellectual property protection on technology and investment flows and of trade-related investment measures on the behaviour of investors and on economic development in countries. The second report focused on the growing phenomenon of small and medium-sized TNCs, as well as TNCs from developing countries and enterprises based in Eastern Europe and the USSR with investments abroad, categorized as non-conventional TNCs.

The Commission took note of the reports and requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1991 on the Centre's ongoing and future research efforts.

Technical co-operation

The Centre on TNCs continued to provide technical assistance in matters relating to foreign investment and technology transfer to developing countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America, as well as to countries in Central and Eastern Europe. The efforts of those countries to increase substantially the flow of foreign investment, albeit under certain terms and conditions, led to a considerable increase in the demand for the Centre's advisory, information and training services.

Advisory and information services were rendered to 43 individual countries at an average of 2.4 projects for each country. A slightly higher average was achieved in Africa, where 17 countries benefited from 42 advisory projects. Of the advisory and information services projects, 69 per cent were related to the formulation of foreign investment regimes; design of investment promotion strategies; drafting of model contracts and agreements; and establishment and streamlining of institutional mechanisms and administrative frameworks. The remaining 31 per cent of the advisory projects related to specific contractual arrangements with TNCs. There were significant reductions in the number of projects on hard-rock mining and on petroleum, while projects related to manufacturing, finance and banking increased.

The Centre continued to provide advice in three areas of negotiation: investment agreements for new commercial projects; renegotiation of existing investment agreements; and privatization. Technical assistance continued to be provided to countries that had recently liberalized their policies towards foreign investment. The Centre initiated or implemented advisory assistance to Afghanistan, Angola, Cuba, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ethiopia, Mongolia, Mozambique, Myanmar and Nicaragua. Several countries were assisted in the drafting of legislation on investment. Namibia was assisted in its drafting of a basic investment code. The Centre in 1990 provided technical assistance to a number of countries in Africa and the Pacific region in the formulation of petroleum laws. It was requested by at least two West African countries, one East African country, one southern African country and two island countries of the Pacific region for assistance in reviewing and redrafting their mining legislation. The Centre's work in formulating a régime of Multinational Industrial Enterprises for the 18 countries of the Preferential Trade Area of Eastern and Southern African States (PTA) culminated in November 1990 when PTA unanimously adopted a Charter on such Enterprises.

During the year, the Centre organized 34 training activities—23 workshops, 5 seminars for institutions of higher learning, and 6 study tours and fellowships. Of the workshops, 9 were held in six African countries; 6 in four countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, including 2 subregional workshops; 4 in three Latin American and Caribbean countries, including 1 regional workshop; and 3 in two countries of Central and Eastern Europe. One interregional workshop was held on negotiations in the mining and construction sectors. Other workshops dealt with issues of finance, such as foreign exchange policies and debt management; technology transfer; joint ventures and management contracts; general foreign investment issues, divestiture and privatization; and transfer pricing. EMPRETEC, the Centre's comprehensive, multi-stage technical co-operation programme, designed to promote the creation and growth of innovative small and medium-sized enterprises using linkages with TNCs, was extended to two African countries. The programme in Latin America was at an advanced stage of implementation and had shown visible and immediate impact. Under the EMPRETEC programme, 200 business plans were prepared and analysed by voluntary private-sector selection committees and over 50 businesses had been started; in addition, nearly 100 existing enterprises had expanded their activities and some 30 joint ventures, sales agreements and technology transfer arrangements had been generated.

Four national seminars were held in Africa to assist institutions of higher learning; another seminar, also held in Africa, was organized for participating institutions from Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean in the disciplines of business, economics and law. The Centre continued to assist in the organization of fellowships and study tours; in 1990, it arranged study tours and fellowships for officials from Angola, Ethiopia, Malaysia, Thailand and Zimbabwe.

Information system

Responding to a growing need for efficiently collected and processed data on TNCs and foreign direct investment, the Centre had created a comprehensive information system, as a major component of its research and technical co-operation activities, which became increasingly important to developing countries. The system comprised textual, financial, macro- and micro-economic data. In 1990, the Centre continued its work on a six-volume Handbook on Foreign Direct Investment, a major collection of foreign direct investment statistics, corporate data, legal information and bibliographic references. The Centre co-published The Directory of the World's Largest Service Companies (Series One) and continued to update a collection of existing national and regional laws and regulations relating to the activities of TNCs. Contracts and agreements negotiated between developing countries and TNCs were collected by the Centre and made available on governmental request. Data-base software and data were made available to several requesting institutions, primarily in Latin America, doubling the external user base of the previous year.

The Centre assisted users at the national level in the building and management of information resources on TNCs. It continued to respond to requests from Governments for assistance in developing and refining national information systems and made its studies available to qualified users free of charge.

During the year, use of the Centre's information services registered a marked increase, with requests for information reaching 2,610, marking a 25 per cent increase over 1989.

In a February report [E/C.10/1990/15], the Secretary-General gave an overview of the information services provided by the Centre within the context of its overall technical co-operation programme, which included drafting or revising policies and legislation, information on and selection of potential foreign investors, and assistance in negotiations. In addition, the report reviewed specific cases of assistance to developing countries from various regions in their development and management of information systems on TNCs.

Concluding, the Secretary-General stated that, with the increased interest in TNCs world wide, there had been a virtual explosion in the information needs of host countries where information on specific industries, technologies, companies and transactions was not always easily available. The Centre's inputs therefore served a vital need.

The Commission on TNCs, in April, took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to report in 1991 on the experience gained in developing the Centre's comprehensive information system.

Financing

The resources for the implementation of the programme on TNCs were made available from the UN regular budget and from extrabudgetary funds provided by donor States. Regular budget allocations for the biennium 1990-1991 reflected post reductions effected in pursuance of the Secretary-General's decisions on staffing cuts.

Total extrabudgetary resources in 1990 amounted to $6,119,066. Contributions to the Centre's Trust Fund were $2,224,955 and interest income amounted to $50,000. The Fund's closing balance in 1990 was $2,979,908. Resources made available by UNDP totalled $2,633,164.

Total expenditures in 1990 amounted to $3,895,092, of which advisory projects accounted for $1,629,684 and workshops and other training activities $1,547,314.

Chapter VI

Natural resources, energy and cartography

Issues related to the use and conservation of natural resources and energy were considered by several UN bodies during 1990. The Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, which met in March/April, had among its substantive themes the contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to integrated rural development and direct solar-to-electrical energy conversion. In December, the General Assembly urged that greater attention be given to the development and efficient use of new and renewable sources of energy for the rural sector, bearing in mind the depletion of the fuelwood supply taking place in many regions of the world.

In other energy-related action, the Assembly, having considered the Secretary-General's report on energy exploration and development trends in developing countries, stressed the need for comprehensive, national, bilateral and multi-lateral measures, particularly with regard to financing, investment, technology and training of national technical personnel, to accelerate the exploration and development of energy resources in developing countries, including new and renewable sources of energy.

With regard to natural resources, a number of projects, exploration for which had been supported by the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources [UNRFNRE], reached the production stage. Although the Fund's work was strongly supported by the developing countries, it continued to suffer from inadequate contributions. In order to reduce staff and other running costs, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme decided that the supervisory functions of UNRFNRE and those of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development should be handled by a joint unit. With regard to increasing the numbers of people who had access to safe drinking water and suitable sanitation services, a report was submitted to the Assembly on the Global Consultation on Safe Water and Sanitation for the 1990s, held in New Delhi in September. The Assembly, which also had before it the Secretary-General's final assessment of progress made during the International Drinking Water and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), welcomed the New Delhi Statement adopted at the Global Consultation, endorsed its guiding principles and recommendations, and urged Governments to implement them.

The Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) informed the Assembly that IAEA members, both individually and collectively, were pursuing efforts to strengthen the safety of nuclear activities, including waste disposal. The Assembly affirmed its confidence in IAEA's role in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and urged all States to strive for effective and harmonious international co-operation in carrying out the Agency's work.

Natural resources

Exploration

UN Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration [UNRFNRE] continued in 1990 to assist developing countries to search for and develop new mineral and geothermal sources. Established by General Assembly resolution 3167(XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 408] and administered by the United Nations Development Programme [UNDP], the Fund was financed from voluntary contributions and donations in cash and kind, and replenishment contributions were required to be made from successful exploration projects, based on the proceeds of production. However, by the end of 1990 no replenishments had yet been received.

In a report to the UNDP Governing Council [DP/1991/44], the Administrator said that, in 1990, a significant development had taken place in pre-investment follow-up activities for the Fund's successful mineral discoveries in Ecuador, Honduras, Peru and the Philippines. During the year, the Fund had five ongoing mineral exploration projects and nine projects were in the active pipeline. The Fund was also involved in preparing Environmental Guidelines for the Mining Sector, to be used in the appraisal of UNRFNRE projects.

A number of UNRFNRE projects supported in previous years resulted in follow-up activities in 1990: the Fund's discovery of a high-grade silver deposit in Ecuador reached the production stage; the discovery of a gold-silver deposit in Honduras attracted investors and the Fund assisted the Government to determine the best way to develop the mine; following the discovery of a massive chromite deposit in the Philippines, the Government granted mining rights to a local company in 1990 and informed the Fund of its readiness to begin replenishment payments on a quarterly basis starting in 1991; and Peru arranged to purchase a dredge in order to exploit gold-bearing gravel discovered by UNRFNRE.

As to ongoing projects, field activities began in Bolivia in February to delineate an economic deposit of placer gold; the first phase of exploration of pyrophyllite deposits in China was completed, resulting in the identification of up to 10 million tonnes of good-grade pyrophyllite in two areas of Fujian Province; by the end of October, the minimum work phase of the exploration of a gold deposit in Guatemala had finished, with encouraging results; and in May a project agreement between the United Republic of Tanzania and the Fund to explore for gold was signed.

In response to requests from some developing countries for assistance in mineral exploration programmes, UNRFNRE had launched pipeline projects in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Ecuador, Guinea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Myanmar, Namibia, Sri Lanka, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe. An agreement for the exploration of gold in Zimbabwe was awaiting signature as was the agreement for a project to explore for heavy mineral beach sands rich in monazite, ilmenite, rutile and zircon in Sri Lanka. The pipeline also included geothermal projects in China, Costa Rica, Mexico and Nicaragua, the implementation of which were subject to the availability of funds. UNRFNRE also continued to assist Saint Lucia in attracting investment to produce electrical power from the Fund's discovery of a geothermal reservoir there.

By a 20 June decision [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/40)], the UNDP Governing Council noted the Administrator's approval of additional allocations for projects to explore for precious and base metals in Honduras and for base metals and gold in Peru. It also noted his approval of the minimum work for the project to explore for placer gold in the Suches area in Bolivia and of his intention to approve possible additional expenditure for that project.

Future of UNRFNRE

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 398], the UNDP Administrator submitted a March 1990 report [DP/1990/59] containing proposals for the future of the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) (see next chapter) and UNRFNRE. He noted that UNRFNRE had completed 22 projects relating to minerals at a cost of $60 million. Eight of the projects had resulted in successful discoveries, the value of which was $1.5 billion. In addition, the discovery of Saint Lucia's geothermal reservoir had the potential to produce 5 megawatts of electricity and reduce the country's dependence on imported oil.

Although UNRFNRE's work was appreciated and strongly supported by the developing countries, it had continued to suffer from an inadequate level of donor support, thus restricting the volume of its activities and its impact. It was expected that if the Fund reached an annual level of project expenditures of about $10 million for 20 to 25 years, it could begin to revolve, eliminating the need for further donor contributions. However, annual voluntary contributions had averaged only about $2.5 million and the Fund was able to expand its activities solely by means of project-related co-financing.

In the absence of an adequate level of contributions, the Administrator concluded that the staff and other costs of running UNRFNRE and UNFSTD should be significantly reduced so that they would be in keeping with the level of resources attracted. He therefore proposed that the programming and programme supervision functions of the two Funds should be handled by a joint unit.

In a 20 June decision [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/39)], the Governing Council approved the Administrator's proposals to entrust the management of the two Funds to a single office. It noted with concern the financial situation of both Funds and the current imbalance between core and non-core funding. Interested Governments and other parties were invited to respond positively to the need for both Funds to increase the core resources and to consolidate and diversify co-financing arrangements.

Mineral resources

In a report to the UNDP Governing Council on its 1990 activities [DP/1991/41/Add.I], the UN Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCO) stated that it had executed 96 projects in mineral resources during the year. Delivery totalled $17.3 million, up from $15.2 million in 1989. Advisory missions were undertaken in mineral-sector planning, programming, exploration, feasibility studies, mining, geophysical airborne surveys, institution strengthening, investment promotion, legislation and computer applications.

In Africa, greater interest in investment promotion prompted efforts to streamline mineral-sector management and update mining codes. A number of mineral exploration projects had legal assistance components: DTCD helped to formulate new mining codes in Guinea-Bissau and Togo; Gabon requested help to update its mining law; and a new project in Angola's minerals sector was reorganizing the country's technical departments and modernizing its legislative framework. Mauritania received help in assessing the sulphur potential of its coastal basin, while exploration projects in Burundi, Cameroon, Gabon and Togo yielded substantial results that were being followed up. Approximately $5 million was allocated in 1990 for DTCD-assisted projects in Burkina Faso, Chad, Mali and Niger. At least one deposit of gold and/or base metal was discovered in Burkina Faso and Mali, and a new project assisted mineral-sector institutions and exploration in Niger. In Ethiopia, some $1 million provided through four projects helped to train national geologists, geophysicists, geochemists and mining technicians, upgrade the graduate programme of the University of Addis Ababa, reinforce mineral development legislation and promote investments. In Mozambique, DTCD helped to train national experts, carry out field studies and evaluate the short-term economic potential of mineral occurrences. Efforts to develop mineral resources were made in Kenya, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe. In Ghana, the State Gold Mining Corporation was helped to enter into joint venture negotiations with a Canadian group for a mine in south-west Ghana. Another project strengthened the Mines Department in that country. A computerized mineral title management system was set up in Morocco, and an interregional seminar on computerized mineral title management and associated data bases was organized in Rabat in November and December 1990 by the Government, UNDP and DTCD, with support from France.

Assistance to Asia also covered a wide range of activities. In India, a new project in Nagpur helped to establish a National Drilling Training Centre in co-operation with the Mineral Exploration Corporation, which would provide training in the latest mineral, water and geothermal drilling techniques to institutions throughout the region. Testing of low-grade phosphate ore from western Iran identified a technically viable process for producing a marketable concentrate. In Malaysia, a new mining code, model agreement and mineral title system were developed and were expected to encourage mineral investments. In Malaysia's Sarawak state, technical monitoring, quality control and training were provided for an airborne geophysical survey. DTCD provided advice and equipment for the evaluation and mining of small-scale gold deposits in western Nepal, and a feasibility study of a zinc-lead deposit in the Himalayas was launched. In Pakistan, a technically viable process for extracting sulphur from volcanic deposits in Baluchistan was confirmed by testing at a national laboratory, and a major study of the zinc-lead deposit, discovered through a DTCD-executed project north of Karachi, was approved by UNDP in December.

In the Arab States, the regional Yemeni Joint Project for Natural Resources neared completion of airborne geophysical surveys, interpretation of geophysical anomalies and satellite imagery for mineral resources evaluation. A new regional project in Jordan and Yemen would help to evaluate, promote and manage mineral resources development in those countries. Also in Yemen, a new project would establish a mining policy, revise mining legislation and strengthen the mineral sector of the newly unified State.

In the Americas, a project in Bolivia completed an evaluation of precious metals prospecting in three geological environments, and an investment promotion brochure was being prepared. In the industrial minerals sector, Jamaica received help in setting up a mining task force to open marble quarries, and a project in Paraguay identified and assessed resources for potential development and was instrumental in creating the Sub-secretariat of Mining, the first government office to be concerned with mineral resources development. The Dominican Republic was advised on legal issues and negotiation strategies in connection with petroleum exploration and production agreements. DTCD helped the State coal-mining firm of Colombia to appraise its global competitive position; the project completed an analysis of investment agreement options, as well as a manual for negotiating joint ventures and agreements for large-scale coal operations.

Water resources

International Drinking Water and Sanitation Decade

In response to General Assembly resolution 40/171 [YUN 1985, p. 681], the Secretary-General, in consultation with the UN organizations concerned, submitted a report [A/45/327] on progress achieved during the International Drinking Water and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990). The report reviewed changes in perceptions, attitudes and policy directions that had already had, or were expected to have, a significant impact on the ability of Governments and the international community to accelerate their efforts towards providing adequate water supply and sanitation facilities for all. It also included a qualitative and quantitative comparative analysis of progress achieved during the Decade in terms of service coverage for drinking water supply and sanitation, and suggested proposals for action in the 1990s.

It was reported that some 1,348 million more people had been provided with safe drinking water supply in developing countries during the 1980s, 368 million in urban areas and 980 million in rural areas. Similarly, 748 million more people—314 million urban dwellers and 434 million people in rural areas—were provided with suitable sanitation services. Not surprisingly, there were significant variations in increases in service coverage achieved in the various regions. A factor common to all was the impact of high population growth resulting in an increasing number of people requiring services during the Decade, particularly in urban areas. The number of cities with a population size of 5 million or more increased from 24 in 1980 to 35 in 1990. Of those, 15 in 1980 and 24 in 1990 were in developing countries, particularly in Asia and Latin America. The population of 23 cities in Africa south of the Sahara grew from 21 million in 1980 to 36 million in 1990. In the region north of the Sahara, the population of 8 cities grew from 17 million in 1980 to 25 million at the end of the Decade.

An assessment of progress made towards the attainment of national targets established by Governments, as called for in the Mar del Plata Action Plan, adopted by the UN Water Conference in 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 555], indicated that, on average, the countries of Africa virtually achieved their Decade targets for urban water supply and sanitation. However, they fell short of the targets for rural water supply and sanitation by 15 and 27 percentage points, respectively. The Latin American and Caribbean region fell somewhat short of achieving its targets, although it attained its target for urban sanitation and the rural water supply target was surpassed. However, in the case of rural sanitation, with only 37 per cent of the population served, countries in the region fell short of their original objectives by 6 percentage points. In Asia and the Pacific, progress towards Decade goals in the urban areas was disappointing, while the targets for rural areas were surpassed. In Western Asia, the relatively slow progress reported in rural areas resulted in water supply coverage falling 17 percentage points short of its target of 73 per cent, and in the level of sanitation services remaining static.

For the Economic Commission for Europe [ECE] region (including Canada and the United States), which comprised countries that, for the most part, already had high levels of water supply and sanitation services, the Decade stimulated interest in the sector. Those countries focused attention on raising the levels of water supply and sanitation coverage in rural areas, mostly in remote and topographically difficult areas. The Decade also coincided with an increased awareness that many of the old sewer systems were suffering from the ravages of time and that major rehabilitation work was required. As to drinking water, attention was directed towards the threat to the domestic supply posed by intensive agriculture and from the disposal of industrial wastes, and towards the health problems associated with old water distribution systems.

With regard to the 1990s, the Secretary-General concluded that the recommendations contained in the Mar del Plata Action Plan continued to be valid, as did those contained in subsequent deliberations of the General Assembly and other international forums, and that their implementation had acquired a greater sense of urgency, particularly with regard to the provision of services to rapidly growing urban populations. He urged Governments to: assess the current status of institutional structures in order to strengthen their capacity to plan and manage water development and sanitation programmes; assign greater priority to the allocation of development financing to water supply and sanitation; continue to improve operation and maintenance systems; increase the impact of existing financial resources; evolve a particular policy for research work in the development, management and conservation of water resources; and accord priority to conducting surveys to determine national needs for administrative, scientific and technical manpower in the water resources area. Experience acquired during the Decade amply demonstrated the need to develop government programmes to promote community involvement on a large scale and to expand women's involvement at the technical and decision-making level.

In support of national programmes, the activities of the external support community would need to be strengthened and co-operative programmes made more effective. The Secretary-General considered that the UN system must continue to act as a catalyst for accelerating water and sanitation programmes at the country level and as a focal point for promoting global initiatives on public awareness and co-ordinated strategies for water supply and sanitation development. External support agencies needed to continue to seek ways and means to expand their financial and technical support to developing countries, said the Secretary-General. International and bilateral financing agencies should explore the possibility of increasing grants and low-interest-bearing loans, and accepting higher proportions of local costs, particularly for schemes directed at providing service to the urban and rural poor. As the availability of trained personnel and the inadequacy of institutions constituted two critical constraints, external support agencies might consider the case for developing a co-ordinated programme to assist developing countries to assess human resources needs and to formulate and implement human resources development programmes.

Global consultation. By a 10 October letter [A/C.2/45/3], India transmitted to the General Assembly the New Delhi Statement, which had been adopted by participants from 115 countries at the Global Consultation on Safe Water and Sanitation for the 1990s (10 to 14 September). The Statement contained four guiding principles recommended by the Consultation: the need to protect the environment and health; the need for institutional reforms (including the full participation of women); the need to promote community management of services; and the need to adopt sound financial practices and appropriate technologies. UNDP was invited to take a leading role in implementing the four guiding principles, in collaboration with other UN agencies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/181.

International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/158 of 19 December 1977, in which it adopted the Mar del Plata Action Plan, concerning drinking water supply and sanitation, and other agreements reached at the Conference, 35/18 of 10 November 1980, by which it proclaimed the period 1981-1990 as the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, and 40/171 of 17 December 1985 concerning the mid-term review of the Decade,

Bearing in mind that the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990, the World Summit for Children, held at United Nations Headquarters on 29 and 30 September 1990, and the Global strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, among others, reaffirmed the goals and objectives of providing safe water and sanitation for all,

Deeply concerned that, notwithstanding the achievements attained during the Decade, the current rate of progress remains slow and would leave a very significant number of poor people in urban and rural areas without suitable and sustainable services in water and sanitation by the year 2000,

Recognizing that in most developing countries a lowering of the rate of population growth will relieve the strains on social services and infrastructures, including services relating to drinking water supply and sanitation,

Recognizing also that the 1990s will require an intensification of national efforts and international co-operation to provide adequate and safe drinking water and sanitation, which are crucial for health for all by the end of the century,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the achievements of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade;

2. Welcomes the New Delhi Statement, adopted at the Global Consultation on Safe Water and Sanitation for the 1990s, which was held in New Delhi from 10 to 14 September 1990, hosted by the Government of India and organized by the United Nations Development Programme;

3. Endorses the four guiding principles, the actions recommended and the proposed follow-up, as enunciated in the New Delhi Statement, pertaining to the need to protect environment and health, the need for institutional reforms, including the full participation of women, the need to promote community management and the need to adopt sound financial practices and appropriate technologies;

4. Urges Governments, in their efforts to implement the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary-General and in the New Delhi Statement, to stress the following important objectives:

(a) To assign greater priority to the allocation of development financing to water supply and sanitation by seeking a better integration of the sector within the overall development planning process and to allocate a greater proportion of resources to low-income urban and rural areas, while addressing the deteriorating economic, social and environmental conditions in those areas;

(b) To implement programmes aimed at expanding service coverage within the framework of integrated water resources and environmental planning and management, in the context of sustainable national social and economic plans and urban and rural development policies, and to orient them towards services that reflect community needs and are used by beneficiaries;

(c) To ensure appropriate utilization of existing financial resources and mobilize additional funds from national Governments, donors and non-governmental organizations, and to draw on the resources of the local communities;

(d) To assess and undertake institutional reforms to promote an integrated approach, including changes in procedure, attitude and behaviour, and the full participation of women at all levels in sector institutions;

(e) To assess the current status of institutions with a view to strengthening national capacities to plan and manage water supply and environmental sanitation programmes and to enable them to improve operational and financial efficiency;

(f) To increase their efforts to improve the efficiency and use of available financial resources by, inter alia, continuing to expand the use of cost-effective appropriate technologies, and to intensify South-South co-operation in that regard;

5. Calls upon the United Nations system and other relevant organizations to increase their financial and technical support to the national endeavours of developing countries;

6. Urges donor Governments, multilateral financial and development institutions and non-governmental organizations to give favourable consideration to requests for grants and concessional financing arrangements to support water supply and sanitation programmes in developing countries;

7. Emphasizes the importance of intensifying the co-ordination of national activities undertaken with the assistance of all relevant agencies in the field of water supply and sanitation through, in particular, the inter-agency Steering Committee for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade and the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council;

8. Decides to review, at its fiftieth session, the progress made during the first half of the 1990s, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, through the Economic and Social Council, on further progress made in attaining the ultimate goal of providing a safe water supply and sanitation for all, including proposals for the action needed for the remainder of the Decade, with special emphasis on the efforts made at the national level and on international co-operation.

Technical assistance

In 1990, DTCD assistance in the water resources sector focused on planning and management, including the conjunctive use and multi-objective planning of both surface and groundwater resources, with an emphasis on social, economic, legal and technical aspects [DP/1991/41/Add.1]. Within a framework of 116 projects, DTCD assistance totalled $26.3 million, up from $24.2 million in 1989. Multi-sectoral projects were carried out in China, Senegal, the Sudan and Yemen, and water resource master plans were developed in Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mali and Mauritania.

Projects increasingly used computer technologies for storing, checking, processing, retrieving and mapping data on variables such as rainfall, run-off, river flows, lake levels and aquifer characteristics, as well as for mathematical modelling in hydrology, hydrogeology and planning. DTCD developed, published and disseminated computer software on groundwater, and made use of existing data banks for computer-assisted mapping. Such activities were undertaken in Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Mali and the Niger.

Responding to increased government emphasis on environmental issues and on sustainable development of water resources in particular, DTCD developed an overall strategy in the sector comprising effective management, protection and monitoring of water quality; water-related aspects of environmental protection; clean-up of polluted bodies of water; and protection of marine and coastal environments. Water-related aspects of environmental protection were included in projects carried out in Bangladesh, the Central African Republic, Chad, Jordan, India, Madagascar, Morocco, Pakistan, Qatar, Somalia, the Sudan, Viet Nam and Yemen.

DTCD advisory missions on water legislation helped Mozambique to formulate a new water law, Yemen to modify existing legislation and the Bahamas to draft laws protecting groundwater. In co-operation with the World Bank, DTCD assisted Brazil and Venezuela in assessing legal and economic constraints on the proper use of water.

In 1990, in an effort to upgrade the skills of water resources professionals, DTCD co-sponsored an international workshop on water resources planning and management (Beijing, China, 2-6 April) and an interregional seminar on the mobilization of resources for optimal water development, allocation and conservation (Merida, Venezuela, 3-7 December). DTCD also supported two drilling schools in West Africa.

DTCD worked with other UN entities in various inter-agency teams. It assisted UNDP in reviewing the water sectors of Morocco and Namibia, and helped the World Bank to assess water resources in sub-Saharan Africa. Under a DTCD-executed project, the World Bank provided urban water sanitation and community development inputs to the water master plan for Guinea-Bissau.

Several projects on water resources assessment, planning and development were completed in the Caribbean in 1990, generating a total of $46.5 million in follow-up investments.

Energy

Energy resources development

In response to General Assembly resolution 43/193 [YUN 1988, p. 439], the Secretary-General submitted a May 1990 report [A/45/274 & Corr.1-E/1990/73 & Corr.1] on energy exploration and development trends in developing countries. The report analysed trends in energy consumption and production in developing countries during the previous two decades and explored prospects to the year 2010, with particular reference to energy-deficient developing countries.

The report stated that consumption of commercial primary energy in the developing countries during the period 1974 to 1988 grew at 5.5 per cent per annum, compared to 3.1 per cent in Eastern Europe and the USSR and 0.5 per cent in the developed market economies. With a population of over 3.9 billion, developing countries consumed 25 per cent of the world total oil equivalent in 1988, while per capita consumption was only 443 kilograms of oil equivalent as compared to 4,330 kilograms in the developed market economies.

Coal remained the most important commercial energy source in the developing world as a whole. However, it was dominant only in China and India, which together accounted for half of the population in the developing countries and 80 per cent of coal consumption. Oil was by far the most important energy source in other developing countries, accounting for 100 per cent of commercial energy consumption in 45 developing countries and territories.

In 1988, natural gas accounted for 14 per cent of overall commercial energy demand in developing countries, as compared to 42 per cent in Eastern Europe and the USSR and 22 per cent in the developed market economies.

During the 1980s, overall oil consumption in the developed market economies declined and 1988 levels were 4 per cent lower than in 1980. During the same period, however, consumption in the developing countries increased by 23.2 per cent, owing to strong growth in the use of aviation fuels and motor gasoline and to a lack of alternative sources of energy such as nuclear power or coal. The annual rate of growth in electricity consumption in developing countries was consistently strong even though, in many of those countries, shortages had caused serious damage to economic output and more than half of the population had no access to electricity at all.

The report forecast that world energy consumption was expected to grow by about 80 per cent during the period 1988-2010. Since the developing countries would account for half of that increase, their share of world energy consumption was expected to reach 35 per cent by the year 2010, compared to 25 per cent in 1988.

The report suggested the outline of a programme of action to accelerate the exploration and development of indigenous energy resources, to encourage oil and gas exploration, the application and promotion of mature technologies in new and renewable sources of energy, as well as efficiency in energy end-uses.

On 26 July, by decision 1990/270, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/209.

Development of the energy resources of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling also its resolutions 40/208 of 17 December 1985 and 43/193 of 20 December 1988 on the development of the energy resources of developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of the development of the energy resources of developing countries and the need for urgent measures by the international community to assist and support the efforts of the developing countries, in particular the energy-deficient among them, to develop their energy resources, in order to meet their needs through co-operation, assistance and investment in the field of conventional and of new and renewable sources of energy, consistent with their national plans and priorities,

Reaffirming also that the developing countries have the primary responsibility for their strategies and policies for the exploration and development of their energy resources, including the mobilization of financial resources, internal and external, in order to develop their national technical skills and capabilities in the energy sector,

1. Reaffirm its resolutions 40/208 and 43/193 and calls for the effective implementation of all their provisions;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on energy exploration and development trends in developing countries and the outline of a programme of action for the acceleration of energy exploration and development in developing countries, contained therein;

3. Reaffirms that an adequate flow of external resources in support of the national efforts of energy-deficient developing countries is needed to finance their exploration and development of indigenous energy resources;

4. Welcomes the convening of symposia and other similar undertakings called for in resolution 40/208, and calls upon interested Member States, in co-operation with the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to explore ways and means to support the efforts of developing countries in the exploration and development of their energy resources;

5. Stresses the need for comprehensive national, bilateral and multilateral measures, particularly with regard to financing, investment and technology, as well as training of national technical personnel, to accelerate the exploration and development of energy resources in developing countries, including new and renewable sources of energy;

6. Also stresses the need to take into consideration environmental and developmental concerns as they apply to all countries in accordance with their respective capabilities and their responsibilities for global environmental degradation;

7. Further stresses the importance of integrated energy strategies and the need for comprehensive conservation and efficient management of energy resources in developed and developing countries, bearing in mind trends in the energy markets;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1992.

General Assembly resolution 45/209

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.7) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.90) based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.38), and orally revised: agenda item 79 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 19-21, 43, 54; plenary 71.

Technical co-operation

During 1990, DTCD executed 106 projects in the energy field, with a delivery of $18.8 million, compared with $11.7 million in 1989 [DP/1991/41/Add.1]. Advisory missions were undertaken in such areas as energy policy; resource evaluation and exploration; project design and feasibility studies in petroleum, coal, natural gas, electric power, energy planning and conservation; geothermal, solar, wind and multi-source renewable energy packages; information systems; and microcomputer-based energy analysis. A $6.8 million project was launched in China to assist in the drilling of two 6,000-metre demonstration wells and to help establish engineering capabilities in the completion of wells and in acidizing and fracturing techniques. In India, DTCD continued to provide assistance in strengthening capabilities in petroleum production technologies and seismic survey techniques.

Postgraduate programmes in petroleum engineering were initiated in Iran, where there was a serious shortage of petroleum specialists, and in Thailand, where they were practically non-existent.

In response to increasing attention in developing countries to the use of coal as an energy source, DTCD promoted clean-coal technologies and the alleviation of the negative environmental impact of coal combustion. Such projects were started in China and in Eastern Europe.

Conservation of energy was another focus of DTCD activities. Energy-saving measures in Peru saved 200,000 barrels of oil in that country in 1989-1990. Increased attention was paid to diminishing the negative environmental impact of energy production, conversion and use. Different types of projects in that regard were carried out in Bangladesh, Bolivia, China, Jordan, India, Kenya, Peru, Viet Nam and Zambia. Projects promoting solar and wind energy were under way in Afghanistan, Cape Verde, China, Cuba, Egypt, India, Iraq, Mongolia and the Sudan. Other projects using new and renewable sources of energy were also being carried out (see below).

In 1990, DTCD organized two interregional seminars: one on electrification and power generation for developing countries (Finland, 10-21 June), and the other on petroleum exploration in the Indian Ocean (Seychelles, 10-15 December). Three workshops on integrated energy planning were held at the United Nations Latin American Energy Organization (OLADE).

New and renewable energy sources

Committee on new and renewable sources of energy

The Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy held its fifth session in New York from 26 March to 4 April 1990 [A/45/36 & Add.1].

In addition to discussing the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action, which was adopted by the UN Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 689], the Committee considered reports of the Secretary-General on: progress achieved in implementing the recommendations of the 1987 Castel Gandolfo (Italy) Colloquium of High-level Experts on New and Renewable Sources of Energy [YUN 1987, p. 579] and on information systems concerning those sources of energy [A/AC.218/1990/2]; activities carried out within the UN system concerning the contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to integrated rural development, direct solar-to-electricity energy conversion and the utilization of agricultural residues and urban wastes for energy production [A/AC.218/1990/5]; direct solar-to-electrical energy conversion [A/AC.218/1990/6]; the utilization of urban wastes for energy production [A/AC.218/1990/7]; progress achieved in resource mobilization (including consultative meetings) and inter-agency co-ordination [A/AC.218/1990/8] (see below); and on the status of implementation of project proposals of entities within the UN system [A/AC.218/1990/9] (see below). The Committee also had before it two notes of the Secretary-General, one on new and renewable sources of energy and the environment [A/AC.218/1990/3] and the other on the contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to integrated rural development, including the utilization of agricultural residues for energy production [A/AC.218/1990/4] (see below).

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Committee stressed that the mobilization of additional and adequate financial resources was essential for the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action, and called for the strengthening of the United Nations Trust Fund for New and Renewable Sources of Energy. Emphasizing the paramount importance of promoting the financing of capital investment for new and renewable sources of energy in developing countries, the Committee called on the international community to assist the national efforts of those countries.

On 4 April, the Committee adopted two resolutions and one decision. In its resolution on enhancing the activities of the UN system to implement the Nairobi Programme of Action [A/45/36 res. I(v)], the Committee decided to include in the provisional agenda of its sixth (1992) session the themes: contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to decentralized energy systems and to specific multi-purpose medium- to large-scale applications; and promotion of rapid and effective transfer of technology in new and renewable sources of energy to developing countries in the fulfilment of the goals and objectives of the Nairobi Programme of Action, with a view to taking due account of the potential contribution of those sources to sustainable and environmentally sound development. Interested States were invited to inform the Committee's sixth session of ongoing practical and scientific activities and/or evaluations with regard to the selected substantive themes, and interested States and UN and other organizations were invited to convene technical and scientific meetings related to the substantive themes. The Committee requested the Secretary-General to prepare an analytical report for the sixth session based on an in-depth study of the current stage of achievements in States regarding the selected themes, to provide a report on the activities of the UN system in that regard and to prepare a comprehensive and analytical study with a view to providing a significant contribution to the UN Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992, including recommendations for action to promote rapid and effective transfer of technology in new and renewable sources of energy to developing countries.

By another resolution [A/45/36 (res. 2(V))], the Committee inscribed the item "Commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy" in the agenda of its sixth session and decided to convene an intergovernmental expert group in 1991 to assess and review the process of the implementation of the Programme of Action.

By its 4 April decision [A/45/36 (dec. 1(V))], the Committee approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its sixth session.

On 26 July, by decision 1990/269, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Committee's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/208.

Report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/193 of 17 December 1981, 37/250 of 21 December 1982, 38/169 of 19 December 1983, 39/173 of 17 December 1984, 41/170 of 5 December 1986 and 43/192 of 20 December 1988,

Recalling also its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989 on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Stressing the importance of the continued development of new and renewable sources of energy, taking into account, among other things, trends in energy sources supply and consumption, developments in energy technologies, the importance of environmental concerns and the developmental needs of the developing countries, despite short-term factors that could run counter to the need for the development of new and renewable sources of energy,

Emphasizing the need for the development of new and renewable sources of energy in accordance with the fundamental objectives of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy,

Taking into account the fact that new and renewable sources of energy could constitute a more significant share of world energy supplies, in particular in developing countries,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy on its fifth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy on its fifth session and endorses the resolutions and decisions contained therein;

2. Reaffirms the importance and validity of the principles and objectives of the Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy and the urgent need to promote a higher degree of independent and environmentally sustainable new and renewable sources of energy for all countries;

3. Urges that greater attention be given to the development and efficient use of new and renewable sources of energy for the rural sector and to their integration into the overall rural economy, bearing in mind the depletion of the fuelwood supply taking place in many regions of the world and, among other factors, the various trends in energy sources supply and consumption;

4. Recommends that the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system assist the developing countries, upon request and within the context of their national policies, in identifying specific and viable projects in the area of their most pressing needs and in strengthening their national frameworks for new and renewable sources of energy and, to that end, prepare a set of updated or new proposals, within the framework of the goals and objectives of the Nairobi Programme of Action, for the consideration of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy at its sixth session;

5. Reiterates the need to mobilize substantial adequate flows of financial resources commensurate with the needs of developing countries in the field of new and renewable sources of energy, emphasizes the need to utilize existing channels fully, including the United Nations Trust Fund for New and Renewable Sources of Energy, and urges donor countries to continue voluntary contributions to that Fund;

6. Reaffirms the importance of increasing inter-agency co-operation within the United Nations system, as well as co-ordination of development activities for new and renewable sources of energy at all levels;

7. Invites interested States to inform the Committee, at its sixth session, of their ongoing technical and scientific activities and/or evaluations with regard to selected substantive themes, and invites interested States, organizations of the United Nations system and other interested organizations to convene technical and scientific meetings, related to the substantive themes, that would contribute to the examination of such themes in depth, and to inform the Committee, also at its sixth session, of the results of those meetings;

8. Calls for the strengthening of the activities of the United Nations in the field of development and utilization of new and renewable sources of energy;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive and analytical study on new and renewable sources of energy with a view to providing a significant contribution to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, through the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, to enable it to consider appropriate action, including funding and technology transfer, within its area of competence and within existing financial resources, not excluding voluntary contributions; and also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Preparatory Committee at its fourth session and to the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy at its sixth session;

10. Requests the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, drawing upon necessary expertise, to assess and review the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action and the results achieved so far, bearing in mind the need to pursue actively the goals and objectives contained therein;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution, including the ways and means available to the secretariat of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy to fulfil its functions.

General Assembly resolution 45/208

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.6) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); Draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.37/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 79 (e).

New and renewable sources of energy in integrated rural development

In response to a 1988 decision [YUN 1988, p. 441], the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy included in its fifth session agenda the theme of the contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to integrated rural development, including the utilization of agricultural residues for energy production. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General [A/AC.218/1990/4], annexed to which was the report of the UN Group of Experts on the Role of New and Renewable Sources of Energy in Integrated Rural Development (Stockholm, Sweden, 22-26 January). The Group of Experts' meeting was sponsored by the Swedish Agency for Research Co-operation with Developing Countries and was held in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/192 [YUN 1988, p. 442] inviting interested organizations and States to convene technical and scientific meetings related to the Committee's substantive themes.

The Group of Experts discussed and made proposals for action on the following themes: energy supply and demand in rural areas; technological options; social, cultural and political aspects; environmental aspects; and energy investments and pricing. Overall suggestions included: that strategies, plans and policies in developing countries should incorporate new and renewable sources of energy as an integral part of overall energy in the context of rural development; action should be taken to establish or strengthen extension programmes for education, generation of awareness, popularization and dissemination of energy technologies in rural areas and to promote the exchange of information on energy technologies; national institutions for policy formulation, planning and implementation of energy development strategies, including those for rural areas, should be established or strengthened; intended users of energy technologies in rural areas should actively participate in the planning, design and implementation of programmes and projects; and bilateral, regional and international co-operation in new and renewable sources of energy should be promoted through exchange of information and transfer and adaptation of technologies.

In response to another 1988 Committee request [YUN 1988, p. 441], the Secretary-General submitted in February 1990 a report [A/AC.218/1990/5] on activities undertaken since 1988 by the UN system with regard to the contribution of new and renewable sources of energy to integrated rural development, direct solar-to-electricity energy conversion, and the utilization of agricultural residues and urban wastes for energy production.

DTCD had provided assistance to the energy co-operation programme of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) and OLADE, with a focus on energy planning, energy conservation, analysis of energy financing, studies of rural and marginal urban energy use and training in integrated energy planning.

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) provided assistance in identifying promising technologies for utilizing biomass (including biogas) and in strengthening the capability of national institutions in rural energy planning techniques. In Pakistan, ESCAP undertook training and established pilot projects in photovoltaic electrification for remote communities.

The Economic and Social Council for Western Asia (ESCWA) organized a seminar on biogas technology for application to rural areas in selected countries in the region and made a comprehensive assessment of the technical, economic and social aspects associated with the introduction of biogas technology in rural areas of the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) was involved in a watershed and fuelwood plantation project in Nepal and provided technical assistance to Malawi in the use of draught animal power. Also in Malawi, the World Bank assisted in the execution of a wood-energy conservation project. The Bank funded projects in India and Sri Lanka for the establishment of fuelwood plantations and assisted Mauritius in the use of bagasse for electricity generation. The International Development Association (IDA) was involved in the establishment and expansion of fuelwood plantations in Nepal and Uganda.

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) assisted China in the establishment of an industrial biogas technology demonstration plant and experimental stations, Paraguay in developing renewable sources of energy for use in rural areas, and Vanuatu in investigating small-scale charcoal production by rural women. UNDP provided funding for an integrated programme in Indonesia aimed at developing and disseminating rural technologies based on new and renewable sources of energy through technology transfer. In the Sudan, it assisted in the production of fuel briquettes and improved cooking stoves. Improved wood stove production was also the focus of UNDP projects in the Gambia and Malawi. The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) provided training services to Bolivia and Brazil in the rational use of community forests and co-operated with Senegal in establishing a rural energy centre.

Several organizations implemented projects related to direct solar-to-electricity energy conversion. DTCD provided assistance to China in the development of photovoltaic systems and organized a UN symposium there on solar energy applications, including photovoltaics. It also helped Mongolia to study the feasibility of producing solar cells and assisted in increasing the capability of the new-energy-sources laboratory in Romania.

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) undertook two advisory missions to the Regional Centre for Solar Energy to provide assistance with the technical, economic and managerial aspects of solar energy development in the African region. UNEP participated in the installation of photovoltaic generators in Senegal as part of the establishment of a rural energy centre and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) assisted southern European countries in improving the development and use of solar technology and other new and renewable sources of energy.

FAO helped China to integrate various technologies for producing alcohol from sweet sorghum stalks. UNIDO assisted Costa Rica and Haiti in investigating the possibilities of utilizing fuels from agricultural residues, Thailand in energy management and the promotion of alcohol production from cassava, the Philippines in promoting biogas technologies, and Ethiopia in the use of agricultural residues to produce energy for irrigation pumps in rural areas and gasifier engines powered by agricultural residues. It also facilitated technical co-operation between China and Madagascar in the use of agricultural wastes to produce biogas for domestic consumption in rural areas, and assisted the Sudan in testing the production of charcoal from cotton stalks.

Mobilization of financial resources

In a March report [A/AC.218/1990/8] to the Committee on the Development and Utilization of

New and Renewable Sources of Energy, the Secretary-General reviewed progress achieved in the mobilization of financial resources for the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action and described the co-ordination of activities in the UN system.

During the period from 1980 to 1989, the commitments channelled through the UN system for supporting actions and investment activities related to the development of new and renewable sources of energy amounted to approximately $7.6 billion, most of which (60 per cent) went into conventional large-scale hydropower development. Other new and renewable sources of energy, including small-scale hydropower, accounted for $3.0 billion, of which $0.8 billion was committed for energy conservation.

Of the amount funded through the UN system, the World Bank and IDA accounted for about 95 per cent. UNDP allocated some $186 million to activities for new and renewable sources of energy. Other UN organizations had received funds-in-trust for specific projects totalling about $47 million. The United Nations Trust Fund for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, established in 1982, received a total of approximately $2.5 million.

The Secretary-General concluded that in recent years, lower energy prices and a widespread perception of abundant supplies of conventional sources of energy, including nuclear power, had led to a significant decline of both public and private-sector involvement in new and renewable sources of energy, with consequent reductions in public spending for research, development and demonstration projects and private investment. That trend had also been reflected in a decrease in the resource commitments of UN organizations over the preceding two years.

Projects and programmes of the UN system

In a March report to the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy [A/AC.218/1990/9], the Secretary-General described projects and programmes proposed and carried out by the UN system during the period 1986-1989 on new and renewable sources of energy. Approximately 200 projects and programmes related to the subject, with a value of $6.4 billion, were executed in that period. The World Bank, IDA, DTCD, FAO and UNIDO had the largest share.

The UN Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA), ECE, ESCWA, the World Bank, UNIDO and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) had increased the value of executed projects and programmes from 1982-1985 to 1986-1989, while other entities registered a decrease. Of the energy sources involved in the projects and programmes, biomass, charcoal, large-scale hydropower and voltaic energy increased in value overall. Spending in such areas as conservation and planning also increased.

Large-scale hydropower projects represented 67 per cent of the value of all projects executed in 1986-1989; conservation, 9 per cent; fuelwood, 9 per cent; new and renewable sources of energy in general, 8 per cent; planning, 3.5 per cent; and the rest, less than 1 per cent. The Secretary-General stated that it was encouraging that activities related to fuelwood, including efficiency of use and supply, represented a relatively large proportion of the projects, since that was the major source of energy for a large part of the population in the developing world.

Inter-agency co-ordination

The Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, established in February 1983 and entrusted with the task of co-ordinating the contributions of UN organs and organizations in the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action, held its ninth session in New York (26-27 March, 2 April) [ACC/1990/PG/12]. The Group agreed to select the following themes as areas of potential joint activity: new and renewable sources of energy and the environment; energy policies for rural development; strategies for the dissemination/commercialization of technologies using new and renewable sources of energy; and the role of women in activities involving those energy sources.

Nuclear energy

IAEA report

By an August 1990 note [A/45/371], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 1989 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The Agency's Director General presented and updated the report in a statement to the General Assembly on 23 October [A/45/PV.32]. He informed the Assembly that about 17 per cent of the world's electricity was generated by nuclear power—a little less than that obtained through hydropower. Although significant opposition to nuclear power existed in many countries, nuclear-powered electricity generation was a substantial source of carbon-dioxide-free energy. Had the electricity generated by nuclear power been produced using coal, carbon dioxide emissions would have been some 9 per cent greater, said the Director General.

The main reasons for public objections to a continued and expanded use of nuclear power, he said, lay in the concern about accidents and about the disposal of radioactive waste. In that regard, the members of IAEA, both individually and collectively, were pursuing efforts to strengthen further the safety of all nuclear activities, including waste disposal. To promote a better understanding among the media and the public of the significance of unusual nuclear events, incidents and accidents, a seven-level scale had been worked out and was being used on a trial basis. The technical causes and phases of the 1986 Chernobyl accident had been analysed in detail under IAEA auspices, and the Agency had been continuously engaged in various studies concerning the accident. In 1990, renewed attention was drawn to the radiological consequences of the accident. IAEA and a number of international organizations organized an expert assessment of those consequences and of the protective measures taken. An interim report had been submitted to the United Nations and an assessment was expected to be concluded by the end of the year. Following the Chernobyl accident, an expanded nuclear safety programme had been launched by IAEA and there had been an increase in the services in that field.

In a set of IAEA documents called the Radioactive Waste Safety Standards Series, the Director General continued, a high degree of consensus among government experts as to the disposal of radioactive waste had been articulated. In September, the IAEA General Conference adopted a Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste, which affirmed the sovereign right of every State to prohibit the movement of such waste into, from or through its territory and required that transboundary movements take place in accordance with internationally accepted safety standards, and with prior notification and consent.

The Director General stated that despite pressing energy needs in developing countries, most of them were not in a position to use the large, complex and costly nuclear power reactors that were in operation in some countries. He considered that developing countries would be more interested in smaller, simpler-to-operate and less costly reactors, which were likely to become available in ten years. Because of the acute problem of shortages of drinking water, a number of developing countries had requested IAEA to undertake an inquiry into the technical and economic feasibility of using nuclear reactors for sea-water desalination.

In the area of transfer of technology, IAEA's assistance to developing countries focused on non-power projects. Through its Technical Assistance and Co-operation Fund, assistance expanded in the fields of agriculture, medicine, industry, environmental protection and hydrology. Specific projects dealt with improving crop yields, pest eradication, water management and radiation treatment of cancer. IAEA provided technical leadership and research support to an inter-agency programme, using insects sterilized by gamma rays, to eradicate the screwworm infestation in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, and supported a large-scale project in Brazil using radioisotope techniques to study the effects of land use on the ecology and climate of the Amazon.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/7.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1989,

Taking note of the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 23 October 1990, which provides additional information on the main developments in the Agency's activities during 1990,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency to promote further the application of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, as envisaged in its statute,

Also recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance by the Agency in order to benefit effectively from the application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Further recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear power, nuclear safety, radiological protection and radioactive waste management, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in planning for the introduction of nuclear power in accordance with their needs,

Again stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear plants so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment,

Bearing in mind resolutions GC(XXXIV) / RES/526 on Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat, GC(XXXIV)/RES/529 on measures to strengthen international co-operation in matters relating to nuclear safety and radiological protection, GC(XXXIV)/RES/530 on the Code of Practice on the International

Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste, GC(XXXIV)/RES/531 on the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, GC(XXXIV)/RES/532 on nuclear safety guidelines for nuclear-powered vessels, GC(XXXIV)/RES/533 on the prohibition of armed attacks against nuclear installations devoted to peaceful purposes whether under construction or in operation, GC(XXXIV)/RES/540 entitled "Plan for producing potable water economically" and GC(XXXIV)/RES/545 on South Africa's nuclear capabilities, adopted on 21 September 1990 by the General Conference of the Agency at its thirty-fourth regular session,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international co-operation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute; in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to life, health and the environment; in strengthening technical assistance and co-operation for developing countries; and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency's safeguards system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly relating to the Agency's activities.

Cartography

During 1990, 57 projects in cartography, remote sensing and public works were carried out by DTCD, with a total delivery of $8.4 million [DP/1991/41/Add.1]. Projects in cartography, surveying, mapping and hydrography included institution-building, the transfer of technical expertise to national cartographic and hydrographic institutions and the provision of training and equipment. Fellowships and grants were awarded to candidates for studies in data processing, photogrammetry, cartography and map compilation, cadastral and land information systems, geographical information systems, integral digital mapping, geodetic science, map reproduction and map printing. DTCD continued to provide assistance in remote sensing to countries covered by ESCAP, including advice on the feasibility of remote-sensing projects and helping resource managers to gather data for locating, managing and monitoring natural resources.

In accordance with a decision of the 1987 Eleventh United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1987, P. 576], a workshop on training and transfer of technology in digital cartographic systems for digital mapping was convened in Vienna (September-October).

Chapter VII

Science and technology

In 1990, the United Nations continued, within the framework of the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, to direct its efforts towards strengthening the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries by mobilizing financial resources, upgrading institutional arrangements, improving the balance of international flow of technology, and restructuring the existing pattern of international scientific and technological relations.

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development—a subsidiary body of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development—met to discuss sustainable development, endogenous capacity-building in science and technology, and environmentally sound technology assessment. The Intergovernmental Committee did not meet in 1990.

The United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) had nearly 50 ongoing projects in such areas as energy, technological innovation, science and technology policy and entrepreneurial development. In June, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme approved a proposal to entrust the management of UNFSTD and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration to a single office, while maintaining their identity and respective operating procedures.

Work continued on drafting an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology. The Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) continued his consultations with regional groups and interested Governments and reported to the General Assembly on progress made in the negotiations on the code. The Assembly invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the President of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology to continue consultations with regional groups and Governments, in conjunction with the appropriate intergovernmental bodies of UNCTAD.

In July, the Economic and Social Council considered the importance of the development of informatics as a key area of scientific and technological progress and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on all aspects of international co-operation in the field of informatics and its impact on the growth and development of the developing countries.

Science and technology
for development

Institutional arrangements

Advisory Committee

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, which was established to provide policy and planning advice to the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, held its tenth session in Zhuhai, China, from 2 to 10 April. The Intergovernmental Committee did not meet in 1990. The Advisory Committee focused on: sustainable development; endogenous capacity-building in science and technology through international co-operation; and technology missions, for which a panel of experts was organized in Serock, Poland, in September. In addition, the Committee discussed a preliminary outline paper, prepared by the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, on environmentally sound technology assessment (ESTA).

In November, the Bureau of the Committee held a meeting in New York to make preparations for the eleventh session of the Intergovernmental Committee, to be held in 1991; it considered possible topics for the Intergovernmental Committee's substantive theme.

Centre for Science and Technology

The Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued in 1990 to provide support for implementing the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development, adopted in 1979 by the United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development [YUN 1979, p. 636]. Following an end-of-decade review in 1989, the Programme of Action's basic goals were reaffirmed by the General Assembly in resolution 44/14 A [YUN 1989, p. 410]. The Centre also served as the secretariat for the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, its Advisory Committee (see above) and the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (see below).

During 1990, the Centre's activities focused on: endogenous capacity-building in science and technology; ESTA; inter-agency harmonization and co-ordination; science and technology information; national focal points; technology assessment; and development of the Advanced Technology Assessment System (ATAS). Through ATAS, established in 1984, the Centre responded to two important trends: the rapid development of new and emerging areas of science and technology; and the evolution of the concept of technology assessment. Throughout the year, the ATAS programme continued its three main themes: the provision of technology assessments to the General Assembly; the organization of activities designed to stimulate assessment of technologies for development through workshops, publication of ATAS bulletins and preparation of follow-up material to earlier ATAS bulletins; and the implementation of the Centre's function as focal point for technology assessment within the UN system, with Member States and with non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations. As a follow-up to an ATAS bulletin on tissue culture, a workshop was organized in co-operation with the African Biosciences Network on biotechnology for food production in dry areas (Dakar, Senegal, 8-10 October).

ACC Task Force

The ACC Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, which was established to promote closer co-operation among UN bodies, held its eleventh session in New York from 7 to 9 May [ACC/1990/PG/5]. Topics considered included the substantive theme of the 1991 session of the Intergovernmental Committee (environmentally sound technologies); endogenous capacity-building in developing countries; and the Task Force's future work in the light of the 1989 end-of-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

Operational activities

In his annual report covering 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1], the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) stated that the United Nations Fund for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSTD) had nearly 50 ongoing projects in such areas as energy, technological innovation, science and technology policy and entrepreneurial development. The Fund had an income of $4.5 million in 1990; expenditures totalled $3.5 million, including co-financing arrangements.

One of the Fund's most successful recent efforts was the promotion of private enterprise in technical fields through "business incubators". That programme concentrated on small- and medium-sized enterprises in the start-up phase by providing help such as seed capital, shared office space and management guidance. Four feasibility studies were completed for Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Nigeria and Zimbabwe. Improving scientific and technological capabilities in Cape Verde, Jamaica, Nigeria, Pakistan, Uganda and Viet Nam was the goal of a project that received $1.7 million in financing from Germany; the preparatory phase of the project was completed and full operation was due to begin in 1991.

In 1990, 29 countries participated in the Transfer of Knowledge through Expatriate Nationals (TOKTEN) programme, which brought skilled expatriates from the developing world back to their countries of origin on short-term assignments, thereby helping to replace the skills lost through the brain drain.

Future of UNFSTD

In response to a 1989 Governing Council request [YUN 1989, p. 398], the UNDP Administrator submitted a March 1990 report [DP/1990/59] containing proposals for the future of UNFSTD and the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFRNRE) (see PART THREE, Chapter VI). He noted that UNFSTD continued its work on national science and technology strategies, technological innovation and entrepreneurship development, technology information systems and new and emerging technologies, as well as projects in the energy field. As at March 1990, 61 projects were under implementation at a total cost of $36 million.

Although the Fund's work was appreciated and strongly supported by the developing countries, it continued to suffer from an inadequate level of donor support, thus restricting the volume of its activities and its impact. It had been expected that resources at the level of some $10 million ($5 million in core contributions and the balance from co-financing) would become available for UNFSTD; core contributions had, however, hovered at around $1 million and the Fund had to depend on significant project co-financing to be able to expand its activities.

In the absence of an adequate level of contributions, the Administrator concluded that the staff and other costs of running UNFSTD and UNRFNRE should be significantly reduced so that they would be in keeping with the level of resources attracted. He therefore proposed that the programming and programme supervision functions of the two funds should be handled by a joint unit.

In a 20 June decision [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/39)], the UNDP Governing Council approved the Administrator's proposal to entrust the management of the two funds to a single office. It noted with concern the financial situation of both funds and the current imbalance between core and non-core funding. Interested Governments and other parties were invited to respond positively to the need for both funds to increase the core resources and to consolidate and diversify co-financing arrangements.

Technology transfer

Draft code of conduct

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/216 [YUN 1989, [p. 415], the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) submitted an October report [A/45/588] on progress made in the negotiations on a draft international code of conduct on the transfer of technology. He observed that although formal initiatives with regard to formulating an international code of conduct had started in 1972 [YUN 1972, p. 278], the main impetus was provided by the Assembly's sixth special session in 1974 [GA res. 3202(S-VI)], when it called for the formulation of an international code of conduct corresponding to needs and conditions prevalent in developing countries. Since that time, negotiations, including six sessions of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology, had led to a structure of the draft code, consisting of a preamble and nine chapters.

Most of the provisions of the draft code had been agreed upon, except for a few issues in chapters 4 (restrictive practices) and 9 (applicable law and settlement of disputes). Other outstanding issues were: the definition and underlying concept of the term "international transfer of technology transactions"; the scope and duration of confidentiality obligations; the nature of the institutional machinery to be established within UNCTAD to deal with certain provisions relating to the code; and the nature and mandate of the review conference. The UNCTAD Secretary-General gave an account of consultations that he and the President of the Conference had carried out with regional groups and interested Governments to delineate the scope of the outstanding issues and to find appropriate solutions. He also described recent changes that had taken place in the area of technology and their relevance to the draft code of conduct. Major technological advances in such fields as informatics, telecommunications, biotechnology and new materials had had or were likely to have a strong influence on the production of goods and services. Such advances had occurred mainly in the developed market-economy countries, resulting in a further widening of the technological gap among countries, particularly between the developed and the developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/204.

International code of conduct on the transfer of technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/216 of 22 December 1989 on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the negotiations on a draft international code of conduct on the transfer of technology;
2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the President of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology to carry out further in-depth consultations with regional groups and Governments on the draft code of conduct, in conjunction with the appropriate intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in early 1991;
3. Also invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report based on the outcome of the consultations, so as to enable the Assembly to take appropriate action on the negotiations on the draft code of conduct.

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.3) without vote, 10 December (meeting 53); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.69) based on informal consultations; agenda-item 79 (b).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 44-47. 53; plenary 71.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 45/443, took note of the UNCTAD Secretary-General's report.

Evaluation

In preparation for the in-depth evaluation of the major programme on science and technology scheduled for 1992, the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) a progress report [E/AC.51/1990/4] on the evaluation, presenting a review of information and findings available in UN documents and external sources.

The report stated that the international community had long recognized the crucial role that rational utilization of science and technology could play in the development of all countries. The UN role in that endeavour was elaborated in the major programme on science and technology, which covered science and technology for development, the transfer of technology, and the work of the five regional commissions. Preliminary findings and methodological recommendations for the in-depth evaluation were presented.

At the first part of its thirtieth session (7 May-11 June) [A/45/16], CPC requested the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1992 a report containing a conclusive analysis, identifying options for the future that would include action-oriented proposals for solving problems related to financing, institutional framework and those associated with the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action.

Informatics

Following a decision taken at the Economic and Social Council's organizational session for 1990 to include the question of international co-operation in the field of informatics in the agenda of its second regular session, the Secretary-General in May transmitted a report on the subject [E/1990/86]. The report was prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in consultation with the International Telecommunication Union and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

The report stated that informatics was contributing to an upheaval comparable to technological changes like the agrarian or industrial revolutions. A planet-wide information and communication network was being established, based on the linking of computers with telecommunications, thus opening immense prospects for human relations. A principal challenge would be to harmonize the realities of independent countries on the one hand and interdependent efforts and programmes on the other, in such a manner that peaceful co-operative interaction dedicated to the principles of equity and social justice for all would become possible and effective.

While informatics had been assimilated and integrated into the development process in the industrialized countries, it seemed that most of the developing countries had been unable to exploit its capacity due to both paucity of resources and shortage of qualified personnel. In default of action, that situation could worsen in the near future, as might be seen from the growing lead taken by the industrialized countries in the fields of computer and telecommunication technologies.

Those prospects compounded the concern caused by the impact of technological development on economic imbalances, said the report. Action should be launched by the United Nations to interest and involve not only Governments but also governmental and non-governmental international organizations as well as producers of technology.

The report went on to address the challenges and consequences of the progress of informatics; inequalities in the dissemination and mastery of informatics; working towards a society of knowledge; the heterogeneous nature of the world; an outlook for the future; magnitude of the gaps; and the need for international co-operation, including a possible UN framework for such co-operation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/58.

International co-operation in the field of informatics

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1989/179 of 27 July 1989 and decision 7.1 adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its one hundred and thirty-first session,

Taking note of the report on international co-operation in the field of informatics prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in consultation with the International Telecommunication Union and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization,

Recognizing that the development of informatics is necessary and vital for the development of the individual and of society,

Considering the importance of the development of informatics as a key area of scientific and technological progress and cognizant of the importance of informatics in the development of all countries,

Considering also the existing disparities in the level of development of informatics between the developed and the developing countries,

Recognizing, therefore, the need for international co-operation in that field,

1. Recommends that international organizations, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization through the Intergovernmental Programme for Informatics, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the International Telecommunication Union, continue to increase their efforts and activities in the field of informatics;

2. Invites the above-mentioned organizations to consider including in their respective work programmes a priority subprogramme on international co-operation in the field of informatics, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure effective co-ordination through existing co-ordination mechanisms;

3. Calls upon Member States to encourage and promote activities to expand the endogenous skills of their population in the field of informatics;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on all aspects of international co-operation in the field of informatics and the impact of informatics on the economic growth and development of the developing countries, including concrete recommendations for intensifying and strengthening international co-operation in that field in the context of the revitalization of economic growth and development of the developing countries, for submission to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/58

26 July 1990 Meeting 36 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1990/110) without vote, 23 July (meeting 10); draft by Bolivia, for Group of 77 (E/1990/L.34), orally revised following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Chapter VIII

Environment

In 1990, the United Nations continued to address problems affecting the earth's environment, which were of increasing concern to the international community. The General Assembly stressed the fundamental interrelationship between environment and development, and reiterated the need to integrate and maintain a balance between those two elements in activities that affected them.

The year was marked by preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED), scheduled to be held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in July 1992. The Preparatory Committee for UNCED held an organizational session and its first substantive session. It created a voluntary fund to support the participation of developing countries, in particular least developed countries, in conference activities. The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme held its second special session (1-3 August), which adopted decisions on a wide range of issues related to the environment and conference preparations.

The Second World Climate Conference was held in Geneva from 29 October to 7 November. The Conference's Ministerial Declaration stated that climate change was a global problem of unique character for which a global response must be decided upon and implemented without further delay. During the year, efforts continued toward negotiations on a framework convention on climate change. In 1990, agreement was reached on establishing the Global Environment Facility to deal with greenhouse gas issues and other environmental protection matters. High priority was also urged for formulation of a legal instrument on the conservation and rational use of biological diversity.

In June, the Second Meeting of the Parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer decided that a multilateral fund be established to enable developing countries to meet the Protocol's requirements and to facilitate the transfer of the necessary technology from developed to developing countries.

Meanwhile, UN bodies and agencies continued to deal with a broad range of environmental issues, including those affecting terrestrial and marine ecosystems, environment and human rights, protection against harmful products and wastes, marine ecosystems and desertification and drought.

International conventions

In December [UNEP/GC.16/19 & Corr.1], the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) reported on the status of international conventions and protocols relating to the environment as at 30 August 1990. The report contained information on new multilateral legal instruments and changes in the status of existing conventions, as well as on accessions to the various conventions.

Climate change

Pursuant to its 1989 decision [YUN 1989, p. 439] that preparations begin for negotiations on a framework convention on climate change, the UNEP Governing Council, on 3 August [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/3 C)], authorized the Executive Director, with the Secretary-General of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), to convene an open-ended working group of government representatives to prepare for those negotiations in September 1990 after the adoption of the interim report on the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) at its fourth session. He was also requested to convene the first negotiating session of the working group not later than February 1991 and urged to seek financial contributions to enable the widest possible participation of developing countries in the negotiations.

The Governing Council requested [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/3 B)] that IPCC should undertake scientific and technical work in support of the negotiations. It also requested [dec. SS.II/7] the Executive Director, in cases where no host offer was available, to arrange that most of the meetings of the working group alternate between Geneva and Nairobi, with the exception of the first negotiating session.

In response to the Governing Council's request, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/696] that the Ad Hoc Working Group of Government Representatives was convened in Geneva from 24 to 26 September. The Group adopted a number of recommendations concerning the organization of its work. It also recommended the option that the negotiating body could be an "Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for a Framework Convention on Climate Change", under the auspices of WMO and UNEP, or a "Specialized Conference for the Negotiation of a Framework Convention on Climate Change", with the Secretary-General to be appointed by the UN Secretary-General.

The Second World Climate Conference (Geneva, 29 October-7 November) [A/45/696/Add.1], in its Ministerial Declaration, called for negotiations on a framework convention on climate change to begin without delay after a decision had been taken by the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on modalities for further pursuing those negotiations. It urged all countries and regional economic integration organizations to join in the negotiations and recognized that it was highly desirable that an effective framework convention be signed at UNCED in 1992. The Conference recommended that the negotiations take account of the possible elements compiled by IPCC and that the convention be framed in such a way as to gain support of the largest number of countries while allowing timely action to be taken. It reaffirmed that the convention should contain real commitments by the international community and stressed, given the complex and multi-faceted nature of the problem of climate change, the need for new and innovative solutions, including the need to meet the special needs of developing countries. The Conference urged countries to promote the active participation at the national and regional levels of all sectors of the population in addressing climate change issues and in developing responses. It also urged UN organizations and programmes to encourage as wide a participation as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/212.

Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/53 of 6 December 1988 and 44/207 of 22 December 1989, in which it recognized that climate change is a common concern of mankind, and urging Governments and, as appropriate, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and scientific institutions, to collaborate in a concerted effort with the aim of preparing, as a matter of urgency, a framework convention on climate change and other related instruments, containing appropriate commitments for action to combat climate change and its adverse effects, taking into account the most up-to-date, sound scientific knowledge and any existing uncertainties, as well as the particular needs and development priorities of developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 44/206 of 22 December 1989 on the possible adverse effects of sea-level rise on islands and coastal areas, particularly low-lying coastal areas,

Recalling further its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989 on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and of the Executive Council of the World Meteorological Organization,

Taking note also of the recommendations and decisions of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, adopted at its organizational session and at its first session,

Noting the important work accomplished by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, which has completed its first assessment report,

Noting also the relevant conclusions and recommendations on climate change adopted at various intergovernmental meetings during 1990,

Noting further the fact that the largest part of the current emission of pollutants into the environment originates in developed countries, and recognizing therefore that those countries have the main responsibility for combating such pollution,

Welcoming the fact that several countries and a regional economic integration organization have already taken measures or made specific commitments to address the problem of climate change and its effects through the stabilization and/or reduction of environmentally harmful emissions of greenhouse gases, and that other countries are contemplating doing so,

Noting that, pursuant to paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 44/207, resolution 4(EC-XII) of 22 June 1990 of the Executive Council of the World Meteorological Organization and decision SS.II/3 of 3 August 1990, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its second special session, an Ad Hoc Working Group of Government Representatives to prepare for negotiations on a framework convention on climate change met at Geneva from 24 to 26 September 1990 and adopted a number of recommendations,

Recognizing the continuing need for scientific research into the sources and effects of climate change and its possible adverse impact, including the socioeconomic consequences, and the effectiveness of possible response strategies, and recognizing also the importance of the active participation of developing countries and the need to assist and co-operate with them in climate-related research and action,

1. Decides to establish a single intergovernmental negotiating process under the auspices of the General Assembly, supported by the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Meteorological Organization, for the preparation by an Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee of an effective framework convention on climate change, containing appropriate commitments, and any related instruments as might be agreed upon, taking into account proposals that may be submitted by States participating in the negotiating process, the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the results achieved at international meetings on the subject, including the Second World Climate Conference;

2. Decides that the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee should be open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies, with the participation of observers in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

3. Welcomes the organization of a broad-based preparatory process at the national level involving, as appropriate, the scientific community, industry, trade unions, non-governmental organizations and other interested groups;

4. Decides that the first negotiating session should be held at Washington, D.C., in February 1991 and that, subject to review of the timetable at the end of each negotiating session and taking into account the schedule of other intergovernmental meetings on environment and development matters, in particular the sessions of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, further meetings should be held at Geneva and at Nairobi, in May/June 1991, September and November/December 1991 and, as appropriate, between January and June 1992;

5. Authorizes the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the assistance of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Secretary-General of the World Meteorological Organization, pending the establishment of an ad hoc secretariat for the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, to convene, exceptionally, the first session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, to be held at Washington, D.C., in February 1991; the subsequent sessions of the Committee shall be convened by the ad hoc secretariat;

6. Decides that the maximum duration of each of the negotiating sessions should be two weeks;

7. Considers that the negotiations for the preparation of an effective framework convention on climate change, containing appropriate commitments, and any related legal instruments as might be agreed upon, should be completed prior to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in June 1992 and opened for signature during the Conference;

8. Reaffirms the principles embodied in its resolutions 44/207 and 44/228, which take into account the concerns of all States and the specific needs of developing countries;

9. Takes account of the Ministerial Declaration adopted at the Second World Climate Conference, held at Geneva from 29 October to 7 November 1990;

10. Decides to establish a special voluntary fund, administered by the head of the ad hoc secretariat under the authority of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, to ensure that developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, as well as small island developing countries, are able to participate fully and effectively in the negotiating process, and invites Governments, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations to contribute generously to the fund;

11. Recommends that, at the first session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, to be held in Washington, D. C., a Bureau consisting of a Chairman, three Vice-Chairmen and a Rapporteur shall be elected, each of the five regional groups being represented by one member;

12. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Secretary-General of the World Meteorological Organization, as well as with the executive heads of other United Nations bodies with expertise in the field of development, to establish as soon as possible at Geneva an ad hoc secretariat of appropriate size and quality, consisting mainly of Professional staff of the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Meteorological Organization, taking into account the need to ensure that the work programmes of these two organizations are not negatively affected, to be co-ordinated by those two organizations in consultation and co-operation with the head of the ad hoc secretariat and supplemented by staff from other bodies of the United Nations system, as appropriate, in order to ensure that the ad hoc secretariat embodies the requisite technical expertise;

13. Decides that the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall appoint as head of the ad hoc secretariat a senior official of an appropriate level, who shall act under the guidance of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee;

14. Requests the head of the ad hoc secretariat to cooperate closely with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to ensure that the Panel can respond to the needs and requests for objective scientific and technical advice made during the negotiating process;

15. Also requests the head of the ad hoc secretariat to make available, at the first session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, the first assessment report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, including its paper on legal measures, as well as the background documentation prepared for the Panel as inputs for the negotiations, together with the Ministerial Declaration of the Second World Climate Conference and other relevant documents;

16. Requests the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, through the ad hoc secretariat and taking into account the relevance of the negotiations to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to keep the Preparatory Committee for the Conference and the Secretary-General of the Conference, as well as the Secretary-General of the United Nations, regularly informed in a timely manner, through regular progress reports, of the progress of the negotiations;

17. Also requests the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee to take into account, as appropriate, any relevant developments in the preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development that the Preparatory Committee may bring to its attention;

18. Requests the Chairman of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee, on behalf of the Committee, to submit a report to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 on the outcome of the negotiations, as well as on possible future steps in the field of climate change;

19. Invites relevant non-governmental organizations to make contributions to the negotiating process, as appropriate, on the understanding that these organizations shall not have any negotiating role during the process and taking into account decision I/1 concerning the participation of non-governmental organizations adopted by the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development at its first session;

20. Decides that the negotiating process shall be funded through existing United Nations budgetary resources, without negatively affecting its programmed activities, and through voluntary contributions to a trust fund established specifically for that purpose for the duration of the negotiations and administered by the head of the ad hoc secretariat under the authority of the Secretary-General of the United Nations;

21. Invites the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including those in the field of development, to make appropriate contributions to the negotiating process, including its funding;

22. Invites Governments, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations to contribute generously to the trust fund;

23. Requests the head of the ad hoc secretariat to prepare draft rules of procedure for consideration by the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee at its first session;

24. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the progress of the negotiations;

25. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind".

General Assembly resolution 45/212

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/851) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.93), based on informal consultations on 59-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.66), and orally revised; agenda item 81.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/45/874; S-G, A/C.2/45/L.88, A/C.5/45/70.

Depletion of ozone layer

At their second meeting (London, 27-29 June) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.2/3], the parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 700] adopted a number of decisions and an amendment to the Protocol which set out a non-compliance procedure. They also established a multilateral fund of $160 million, to increase to $240 million over the following three years as other developing countries became parties to the Protocol, to enable those countries to meet the Protocol's requirements and to facilitate the transfer of the necessary technology from developed to developing countries. The Parties established a 14-member executive committee to supervise the fund.

After the London meeting, the Executive Committee met in September and December to launch the operation of the fund. It accepted the invitation of Canada to have Montreal as the seat of the secretariat co-located with UNEP.

The Governing Council [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/2)] welcomed the results of the second meeting of the States parties to the Montreal Protocol, in particular the decisions taken to strengthen it, the establishment of the financial mechanism to enable developing countries to comply with the Protocol's control measures and progress in the transfer of technology. It urged States that had not yet done so to become party to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804] and the Montreal Protocol.

Transboundary movements of hazardous wastes

As at 31 December 1990, the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] had been signed by 52 States and the European Community and ratified or approved by five States-Hungary, Jordan, Norway, Saudi Arabia and Switzerland. (See also under "Harmful products and wastes", below.)

The Executive Director reported [UNEP/GCSS.II/2] that the secretariat functions of the Convention were being carried out, on an interim basis, by UNEP until completion of the first ordinary meeting of the Conference of the Contracting Parties. The interim secretariat concentrated on the development of a protocol on liability and the elaboration of technical guidelines for the environmentally sound management of wastes envisaged in the Convention. The Executive Director regretted that States parties to the Convention were not forthcoming with contributions to meet the costs of the interim secretariat, which threatened to endanger implementation of the Convention.

The UNEP Governing Council [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/4 A)] called on States that had signed the Convention to contribute to the continuing costs of the interim secretariat. It also called on States that had not already done so to sign and ratify the Convention, and to strengthen their co-operation in problem areas within the scope of the Convention.

Biological diversity

The Executive Director, in his report on priority evolving environmental issues [UNEP/GCSS. II/2], informed the UNEP Governing Council that the second session of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Biological Diversity (Geneva, 19-23 February), while not ready to begin negotiations on a legal instrument, concluded that such an instrument should aim to incorporate concrete and action-oriented measures for the conservation and sustainable utilization of biological diversity. However, as much technical, financial and administrative content as possible, with commitments for implementation, would be included in the draft framework instrument to be considered by an ad hoc working group of legal and technical experts in November. The Group requested the Executive Director to commence studies to respond to the specific issues in the process of developing the new legal instrument.

The UNEP Governing Council urged [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/5)] the Executive Director, in conjunction with the Ecosystems Conservation Group, to continue to accord high priority to the work on biological diversity and biotechnology with a view to arriving at an international legal instrument for the conservation and rational use of biological diversity within the broad socio-economic context, taking account of the need to share costs and benefits between developed and developing countries and ways to support innovations by local people. It called upon the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts to proceed expeditiously with its task on the basis of the final report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Biological Diversity.

In another decision [dec. SS.II/7], the Council requested the Executive Director, in cases where no host offer was available, to arrange that most of the meetings of the Working Group take place in Nairobi.

The Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts met in Nairobi from 19 to 21 November and requested the Executive Director to prepare a draft convention on biological diversity.

Environment and development

Preparations for 1992 conference

In 1989, the General Assembly decided in resolution 44/228 to convene a United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 and to establish a preparatory committee for the Conference, open to all UN Member States or members of the specialized agencies. The Preparatory Committee held two sessions in 1990: an organizational session (New York, 5-16 March) [A/44/48 & Corr.1] and its first substantive session (Nairobi, Kenya, 6-31 August) [A/45/46].

At its organizational session, the Committee recommended to the General Assembly a draft decision on the mandates and responsibilities of the secretariat for UNCED. In a resolution that it brought to the Assembly's attention, the Committee decided that it should review and assess the ongoing negotiating process in the field of the environment; establish guidelines for the provision of progress reports and other information on those negotiations; provide recommendations on the negotiating process; deal with cross-sectoral issues such as technology, finance, institutions and legal matters with a view to ensuring that environment and development issues were treated in a consistent manner; and consider the drafting of a final declaration of the Conference and other possible decisions and recommendations. It established two working groups to provide guidance to the whole preparatory process: Working Group I on the protection of the atmosphere and land resources, conservation of biological diversity, and environmentally sound management of biotechnology; and Working Group II on the protection of the oceans and all kinds of seas, including enclosed and semi-enclosed seas, and coastal areas and the protection, rational use and development of their living resources; the protection of freshwater resources; environmentally sound management of wastes, particularly hazardous wastes; environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals; and prevention of illegal international traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes. It also decided to deal with legal, institutional and related matters in an open-ended working group to be set up at an appropriate time.

Among other decisions brought to the Assembly's attention, the Preparatory Committee decided to: hold regional conferences on environment and development and integrate the results of those conferences in the preparatory process for UNCED; request the secretariat to prepare guidelines on the preparation of national reports; and suggest arrangements for the participation of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the preparatory process. It also adopted guidelines for the contribution of UNEP, other organizations of the UN system and intergovernmental organizations. The Committee decided to open a voluntary fund for contributions for enabling developing countries, in particular least developed countries (LDCs), to participate in the preparatory process. It requested the Secretary-General to bring the fund to the attention of Member States and to report on its operation to the first substantive session of the Preparatory Committee, which it decided to hold from 6 to 31 August. The Committee also adopted the provisional agenda for that session.

On 2 April, the General Assembly, by decision 44/465, took note of paragraphs 56 and 57 of the report of the Preparatory Committee for UNCED.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 March, the General Assembly, by decision 44/462, decided that agenda item 82 (f) entitled "Environment" would be retained on the agenda of its forty-fourth session and considered directly in plenary meeting.

On 2 April, the Assembly adopted decision 44/464.

Secretariat for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

At its 92nd plenary meeting, on 2 April 1990, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, decided that the secretariat for the Conference should have the following mandates and responsibilities:

(a) To provide the secretariat support for the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and its Bureau and each of the working groups. This would include responsibility for organizing meetings of the Preparatory Committee, its Bureau and working groups, co-ordination of documentation for them and provision of necessary administrative and substantive support for their work, including organizing and overseeing contributions of consultants and expert groups;

(b) To co-ordinate support from the United Nations system required by the Preparatory Committee for the Conference, including the provision of progress reports and information about the activities of the United Nations system in areas related to the preparatory process, as well as from the Preparatory Committee to the system on the progress of the preparatory process;

(c) To provide appropriate support to the regional commissions in holding regional conferences in accordance with section II, paragraph 13, of Assembly resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989, enabling them to contribute fully to the work of the Preparatory Committee in the Conference;

(d) To provide progress reports and information to the Preparatory Committee regarding relevant work carried out by other organizations and in other forums, and close co-ordination with such organizations and forums, including information to them on the progress of the preparatory process, keeping in mind in that respect the importance of regional activities;

(e) To co-ordinate a programme of public information for the Conference in co-operation with the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, and in relation thereto, to provide ongoing contact and relationships with the media;

(f) To take measures providing for the active contribution by non-governmental organizations to the preparatory process and the Conference, in accordance with the guidelines to be established by the Preparatory Committee.

General Assembly decision 44/464

Adopted without vote

Draft by Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (A/44/48 & Corr.1); agenda item 82 (f). Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/44/933.

Meeting numbers. GA 44th session: 5th Committee 62-65; plenary 92.

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 44/467, welcomed the offer of Switzerland to provide free office accommodation for the secretariat of UNCED and concurred with the request of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) that the details of the offer, including any conditions attached, would be made known to ACABQ for its concurrence before any agreement was reached with the Government of Switzerland.

The UNEP Governing Council, on 3 August [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/9)], requested the Executive Director to ensure that UNEP contributed fully to the preparations of UNCED on the basis of guidelines and requirements established by the Preparatory Committee for the Conference and to make the report of the Council's special session available to the Committee. The Council invited the Preparatory Committee to consider and provide guidance to the negotiation process and preparation of resolutions of the Conference regarding the issues of climate change; transboundary air pollution; protection of ocean and coastal areas; combating desertification; the role of regional and subregional environment programmes; availability of resources for developing countries and funding mechanisms; environment, economics and sectoral policies; transfer of environmentally sound technology; biological diversity and biotechnology; fresh water; hazardous substances; and public participation.

At its first substantive session, the Preparatory Committee for UNCED, which met in conjunction with its two working groups, discussed preparations for the Conference at the international, national and regional levels; arrangements for the effective contributions of relevant NGOs in the preparatory process; and operations of the voluntary fund for UNCED. The Committee recommended to the General Assembly that UNCED be held from 1 to 12 June 1992 and that States be represented at the Conference at the level of head of State or Government. It recommended that payment be made from the voluntary fund for travel expenses and, on an exceptional basis, daily subsistence allowance for representatives of LDCs only, and requested the Secretary-General to utilize extrabudgetary resources to enable representatives of NGOs from developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, to participate in the preparatory process and the Conference. The Preparatory Committee also adopted provisional agendas for the second sessions of Working Groups I and II and of the Preparatory Committee.

The Committee further adopted decisions on: regional preparation for UNCED; report of the Secretary-General of UNCED on the activities of the Conference secretariat; transfer of technology; financial resources; overview of the activities of the UN system relevant to General Assembly resolution 44/228; climate change; ozone depletion; transboundary air pollution; combating deforestation; soil loss and desertification and drought; conservation of biological diversity; environmentally sound management of biotechnology; environmental and development education; protection of the oceans and all kinds of seas, including enclosed and semi-enclosed seas, and coastal areas and the protection, rational use and development of their living resources; environmentally sound management of wastes, particularly hazardous wastes, environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals and prevention of illegal international traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes; guidelines for national reports; environment and development; new and renewable sources of energy; cross-sectoral issues; and co-operation on transfer of technology and financial resources to developing countries.

The Preparatory Committee requested the Secretary-General of UNCED to prepare a more detailed report on his proposal for an "action plan". It requested the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee to consult with delegations on the terms of reference and timing for the commencement of the work of Working Group III on legal, institutional and related matters.

The Preparatory Committee agreed that its second session should take place from 18 March to 5 April 1991, to be extended to 12 April if required. Its third session would be held from 12 to 30 August 1991, to be extended to 4 September if required.

Financing

The Secretary-General, in a March report [A/CONF.151/PC/2/Add.I] to the organizational session of the Preparatory Committee, stated that requirements for UNCED would amount to $13,482,800. For the 1990-1991 biennium, the total requirements would be $8,500,800. Of that amount, the $6,226,400 for the Conference secretariat and the $300,000 for public information would be subject to the contingency fund, while the $1,934,400 for conference-servicing requirements would be met from resources under section 29 (conference and library services) of the programme budget. Requirements for 1992 would be addressed in the proposed budget for 1992-1993.

In his statement on programme budget implications [A/C.5/44/54] of the draft decision contained in the report of the Preparatory Committee, the Secretary-General proposed an appropriation in the amount of $7,176,300 in the programme budget for the 1990-1991 biennium to be drawn from the contingency fund.

ACABQ recommended [A/44/7/Add.1-8] that the General Assembly authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments not exceeding $6,392,500 for the 1990-1991 biennium for non-conference-servicing costs. For conference-servicing costs, an amount of $3,304,800 would be financed from within section 29 of the budget for the 1990-1991 biennium, as well as $1,246,200 under section 31 (staff assessment) to be offset by income of the same amount under income section 1 (income from staff assessment).

The General Assembly, by decision 44/466 of 2 April, authorized the Secretary-General to enter into commitments not exceeding $6,392,500 for non-conference-servicing costs in the 1990-1991 biennium in respect of UNCED. He was requested to review the resources requirements and to report to the Assembly at its forty-fifth session on actual and projected requirements. The Assembly would approve appropriations on the basis of his report, which would outline the actual and projected resource requirements and indicate the actual and potential impact on other ongoing activities. It would also take account of offsetting savings in the 1990-1991 programme budget. The Assembly also decided that such appropriations should have first call on the contingency fund and that the adequacy of the level and appropriateness of the fund should be closely monitored during the forty-fifth session of the Assembly.

In December [A/C.5/45/65], the Secretary-General reported to the Fifth Committee that the resources required to support the preparatory process in 1990-1991 were estimated at $6,374,700 (net of staff assessment), with respect to the Conference secretariat and its related requirements, the public information programme and the regional preparatory meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/211.

United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development on its organizational session, held in New York from 5 to 16 March 1990.

Having considered the report of the Preparatory Committee on its first session, held at Nairobi from 6 to 31 August 1990,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989 on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development;

2. Stresses the fundamental interrelationship between environment and development, and reiterates the need to integrate and keep the balance between the environmental and developmental dimensions during the entire preparatory process and during the Conference, and the need for cross-sectoral issues to be fully integrated into that work;

3. Endorses the decisions contained in the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development on its organizational session;

4. Takes note of the report of the Preparatory Committee on its first session and endorses the decisions contained therein;

5. Decides that the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development shall take place at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 1 to 12 June 1992;

6. Urges that representation at the Conference be at the level of head of State or Government;

7. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations to issue invitations to all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies and observers, in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

8. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments that have contributed to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and invites Governments to contribute urgently and generously to the Fund in order that the operation of the Fund may enable developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, to participate fully and effectively in the Conference and in its preparatory process, in accordance with section II, paragraph 15, of resolution 44/228;

9. Calls upon the United Nations Environment Programme and other organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to give full support to the preparatory process for the Conference and assist the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in the implementation of the work programme, in conformity with resolution 44/228;

10. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to extend full co-operation to developing countries in order to ensure that appropriate preparations for the forthcoming sessions of the Preparatory Committee are made, in particular in all aspects relating to linkages between environment and development, including the identification of concrete measures and action to ensure that these issues are treated in a balanced and integrated way;

11. Endorses Preparatory Committee decision 1/7 of 29 August 1990 concerning the dates of the second and third sessions of the Preparatory Committee;

12. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to ensure the timely submission to the Preparatory Committee at its second and third sessions of the reports requested at its first session;

13. Takes note of the provisions of Preparatory Committee decision 1/1 of 14 August 1990 and authorizes the Preparatory Committee, without prejudice to the provisions of resolution 44/228, to continue to apply, for the purpose of the preparatory process, the provisional arrangements agreed upon in that decision concerning the participation of non-governmental organizations in the preparatory process;

14. Reiterates that the Preparatory Committee shall review and assess ongoing negotiating processes in the field of the environment, and invites the forums involved in such processes to report regularly on their activities to the Preparatory Committee at its forthcoming sessions, in accordance with the guidelines and requirements established by the Preparatory Committee.

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/850) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54): draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.82), based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.60), and orally revised; agenda item 80.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 39-43, 49, 54; plenary 71.

On the same date, the Assembly, in resolution 445/248 A, section XII, approved the recommendation that, on an exceptional basis, payment would be made for daily subsistence for LDC representatives from the Voluntary Fund for Supporting Developing Countries Participating in the United Nations Conference on the Environment and Development and its Preparatory Process.

Environment and sustainable development

UNDP action. In May, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) submitted a report [DP/1990/27] to the UNDP Governing Council on the environmental dimensions of development. The report reviewed actions undertaken in 1989 and early 1990 to implement UNDP's environmental strategy, with emphasis on a five-step plan to operationalize sustainable development in UNDP activities. Collaboration by UNDP with agencies of the UN system in general, and in support for UNCED in particular, was outlined. The report reviewed the tripartite partnership between UNEP, the World Bank, and UNDP in launching the Global Environmental Facility by the end of 1990 to provide additional concessional funding to middle- and lower-income countries. It also highlighted activities to be carried out in 1991.

On 22 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/20)], the UNDP Governing Council noted the integrated and multisectoral view of development, environment and poverty alleviation that provided a framework for all UNDP technical co-operation and the fact that the preparations for UNCED might offer unique opportunities for expanded technical co-operation in support of institution- and capacity-building for sustainable development. It endorsed action by UNDP for Resident Representatives to act as representatives of the Secretary-General of UNCED; support to countries, in consultation with UNEP and other organizations, in preparing their country reports and in facilitating active participation by development and environmental NGOs and independent-sector organizations; and collaboration with regional economic commissions and regional development banks in support of UNCED through the formulation of regional development and environment agendas. It requested the Administrator to continue to pursue, in consultation with Governments, the establishment of a sustainable development network at the country and regional levels and the application of environmental management guidelines at all programme and project cycle levels, including training and gender concerns, as a means to operationalize sustainable development in UNDP activities in support of the development priorities of Governments. He should utilize fully national expertise on environmental actions at the country level and earmark thematic special programme resources in support of those actions and related activities.

UNCTAD action. In August, the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) submitted a report [TD/B/1267] on sustainable development and UNCTAD activities. The report, which contained an analysis of the interface between sustainable development and the main lines of UNCTAD activities within its mandate, focused on those aspects of the sustainable development concept that were not already central to UNCTAD's objectives and works, leading to a predominance of the environmental dimension in the analysis. The analysis concentrated on the interface with four main areas of work: commodities, trade policy, technology, and development finance. With respect to trade policy in particular, the report pointed out the need for a better understanding of the role environmental considerations might play in the redeployment of industry or other economic activities. It also raised the issue of environmental considerations as a source of trade distortion or an argument for trade restriction.

With regard to general implications for UNCTAD, the report stated that many of the essential challenges that sustainable development presented called for international discussion and negotiation. In an UNCTAD perspective, the basic aim was to ensure an economic stake in sustainable development for developing countries. The UNCTAD secretariat was collaborating closely with the secretariat of UNCED in its preparations for the 1992 Conference. Opportunities for work on sustainable development might flow from this collaboration, just as they were likely to do from the Conference itself. Individual developing countries or groups of them would increasingly be called upon to reach agreement with other countries on matters of environmental concern but which would have implications for trade and development. In the light of the Board's decision on the agenda item, the secretariat would be better able to determine its focus on sustainable development. That would in turn enable it to determine the areas in which it would be best able to build up the capacity to offer technical assistance.

On 12 October, the Trade and Development Board (TDB)—the Executive Body of UNCTAD—decided [A/45/15 (dec.384(XXXVII))] that the objective of sustainable development, particularly the reduction of poverty, should be incorporated into all areas of UNCTAD's work at the inter-governmental level, and that the respective committees of UNCTAD, at their forthcoming sessions, should consider activities in relation to sustainable development in the context of their work programmes. TDB requested the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to prepare an analysis of the issue of sustainable development, in particular the reduction of poverty and its interface with policies and mechanisms in environmentally sensitive sectors, such as agriculture, energy, industry and transport, as well as with relevant structural policies such as those relating to the enterprise sector. It also requested him, in connection with the promotion of dialogue on the interlinkages between environmental and trade policies, to adjust the Trade Control Measures Information System of the Conference to monitor non-tariff measures that had a bearing on the environment.

TDB reiterated its request that the UNCTAD Secretary-General develop technical assistance proposals, in co-operation with UNDP, paying attention to LDCs, particularly island developing countries, and invited international development agencies and donor countries to provide extrabudgetary resources for that purpose.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/210.

Environment and international trade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989 on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Affirming decision 384(XXXVII) of 12 October 1990 of the Trade and Development Board, entitled "UNCTAD's contribution, within its mandate, to sustainable development",

Also affirming decision 1/25 of 31 August 1990 of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, entitled "Environment and development",

Reaffirming the statement on sustainable development contained in annex II to decision 15/2 of 26 May 1989 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

1. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and relevant United Nations bodies, taking into account the relevant parts of Trade and Development Board decision 384(XXXVII) and the work done by international organizations and in other relevant forums and in conformity with General Assembly resolution 44/228, in which it was stated that environmental concerns and considerations are crucial to achieving sustainable development for all countries but should not serve as a pretext for creating unjustified barriers to trade, to prepare a comprehensive analytical study, to be submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development at its third session, on the present situation and future trends regarding the relationship between environmental issues and international trade and co-operation, the following subjects:

(a) The consideration of trade and environment, in the light of the analysis requested of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in paragraph 5 of Trade and Development Board decision 384(XXXVII) concerning the issue of sustainable development, in particular the reduction of poverty and its interface with policies and mechanisms in environmentally sensitive sectors, such as agriculture, energy, industry and transport, as well as with relevant structural policies, such as those related to the enterprise sector;

(b) Adjustment of the Trade Control Measures Information System of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to monitor environmental regulations for possible protectionism and to monitor non-tariff measures that have a bearing on the environment, in accordance with paragraph 6 of Trade and Development Board decision 384(XXXVII);

2. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to consult the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and relevant United Nations organs, organizations and programmes in preparing the report on transfer of technology requested in decision 1/8 of 30 August 1990, adopted by the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development at its first substantive session, for submission to the third session of the Preparatory Committee, including an examination of the obstacles on both the importing and exporting sides that impede the transfer of environmentally sound technologies.

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/850) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.95), based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.59), and orally revised; agenda item 80.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 39-43, 49, 54; plenary 71.

Regional efforts

By a letter of 14 November [A/C.2/45/12], Trinidad and Tobago transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Action Plan for the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean, entitled "A Call to Action", approved by the Seventh Ministerial Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean (Port-of-Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, 22-23 October). The Meeting reaffirmed the Declaration of Brasilia, adopted by the Sixth Ministerial Meeting in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 421], in which the Ministers recognized the inextricable relationship between environmental concerns and socio-economic development.

In the Plan, the Governments of the region defined their environmental priorities and the modalities to tackle them.

By a letter of 27 June [A/45/361], Malaysia transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Kuala Lumpur Accord on Environment and Development, issued by the Fourth Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) Meeting of Ministers for the Environment (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 19 June). In the Accord, the Ministers agreed to initiate efforts leading towards concrete steps pertaining to environmental management and natural resource management, to initiate efforts enabling the inclusion of environmental factors into economic calculations, and to develop and formulate a common ASEAN position to be presented to the Ministerial Level Conference on the Environment for Asia and the Pacific and later to UNCED in 1992.

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), with the support of the Government of Thailand, the sponsorship of UNDP and in co-operation with UNEP, held a Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development (15-16 October). The Conference Declaration proclaimed the tenets of a strategy for environmentally sound and sustainable development in the region. During the Conference, ESCAP and UNEP agreed on a memorandum of understanding that would address issues of common concern now and in the future.

In Europe, the Bergen Conference on Environment and Development ("Our Common Future") was held from 7 to 16 May. It adopted the Bergen Ministerial Declaration on Sustainable Development in the ECE (Economic Commission for Europe) region, affirming the commitment of the Governments concerned to achieving sustainable development.

Environmental activities

Global climate

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), endorsed in General Assembly resolution 43/53 [YUN 1988, p. 463], continued its work in 1990 on the issue of climate change within the framework of its three main working groups. The Panel held two plenary sessions in 1990 (Washington, D. C., 5-7 February; Sundsvall, Sweden, 27-30 August). The Panel submitted its first assessment report, which consisted of the IPCC overview and the policy makers' summaries of the three IPCC working groups (concerned respectively with the assessment of the science, impacts and response strategies) and of the IPCC Committee on the Participation of Developing Countries, as well as the three full reports of its working groups.

The Governing Council requested [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/3.B)] the Executive Director of UNEP to arrange, jointly with the Secretary-General of WMO, for the continuation of IPCC as joint panel of UNEP and WMO, ensuring that its work was supportive of and responded to the needs and requests of the climate change convention negotiating group (see above) and that it facilitated and ensured more active participation of developing countries, particularly by rationalizing its meeting schedules. The Panel should, inter alia, undertake scientific and technical work in support of the negotiations of a framework convention on climate change; periodically update the assessments of the available scientific information on climate change and the resulting environmental and socio-economic impacts; undertake further environmental and socio-economic analyses of the various policy options from near- and Long-term perspectives; evaluate the special problems of the developing countries and small island States in addressing climate change and assess possible options to deal with those problems; further pursue studies on the incremental costs to those States of combating climate change, as well as on the sources for meeting those costs and the mechanisms for channelling them, and present those studies for consideration at the negotiating sessions as soon as possible; ensure the effective participation of developing countries and small island States; and ensure the broad dissemination of its work. It urged Governments to continue to make financial contributions for those purposes.

Second World Climate Conference

On 3 August [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/3 A)], the UNEP Governing Council authorized the Executive Director, jointly with the Secretary-General of WMO, and in consultation with the executive heads of the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and its Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission, to convene a preparatory meeting to prepare the draft of a ministerial declaration for the Second World Climate Conference. He should also request the UN Secretary-General to plan to take into account the outputs of the Conference in the discussions on climate during the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly.

The Second World Climate Conference was held in Geneva (29 October-7 November) [A/45/696/Add.1] under the sponsorship of WMO, UNEP, UNESCO and its Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and ICSU. It discussed the results of the first decade of work under the World Climate Programme (WCP), the first assessment report of IPCC and the development of the International Geosphere-Biosphere Programme and other relevant global programmes. In particular, the Conference considered the role, priorities, and programme structure for the future development of WCP. The Conference issued a Final Statement of its scientific/technical sessions, which included both a summary statement and its main conclusions and recommendations in the areas of greenhouse gases and climate change, use of climate information in assisting sustainable social and economic development, priorities for enhanced research and observational systems, and public information. It also included recommendations on specific issues such as water; agriculture and food; oceans, fisheries and coastal zones; energy; land use and urban planning; health and human dimensions; environment and development; and forests. Other recommendations related to the future structure of the World Climate Conference, the special needs of developing countries, co-operation in international research, and co-ordinated international activities and policy development.

The ministerial component of the Conference issued the Ministerial Declaration of the Second World Climate Conference, in which it proposed a global strategy, policy considerations for action and recommendations for the framework convention on climate change (see p. 519).

In the Conference's Summary Statement it was pointed out that climate issues reached far beyond atmospheric and oceanic sciences, affecting every aspect of life on this planet, and were increasingly pivotal in determining future environmental and economic well-being. Variations of climate had profound effects on natural and managed systems, the economies of nations and the well-being of people everywhere. A clear scientific consensus had emerged on estimates of the range of global warming that could be expected during the twenty-first century. If the increase of greenhouse gas concentrations was not limited, the predicted climate change would place stresses on natural and social systems unprecedented in the past 10,000 years. The Second World Climate Conference concluded that, notwithstanding scientific and economic uncertainties, nations should now take steps towards reducing sources of greenhouse gases through national and regional actions, and negotiating a global convention on climate change and related legal instruments. The long-term goal should be to halt the build-up of greenhouse gases at a level that minimized risks to society and natural ecosystems. The remaining uncertainties should not be the basis for deferring societal responses to those risks. Many of the actions that would reduce risk were also desirable on other grounds. A major international observational and research effort would be essential to strengthen the knowledge base on climate processes and human interactions, and to provide the basis for operational climate monitoring and prediction.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/445, took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress achieved in the implementation of resolution 44/207 on the protection of global climate for present and future generations of mankind.

Global Environment Facility

In 1990, the heads of the World Bank, UNDP, and UNEP reached agreement to co-operate in the establishment and operation of a global environment facility (GEF) of more than $1 billion (special drawing rights). The objectives of GEF would be to limit emissions of greenhouse gases and protect biodiversity, international waters and the ozone layer. UNEP had started specific activities as implementing agency for GEF and had established a scientific and technical advisory panel to give guidance on technical issues.

Marine ecosystems

The Governing Council appealed [A/45/25 (dec. SS.II/6)] to Governments and international agencies and forums to strengthen and expedite measures at the global, regional and national levels to protect the living resources of the sea from all sources of marine pollution and provide for the sustainable development of those resources. They should address the growing problem of land-based sources of marine pollution.

The Council urged the Preparatory Committee of UNCED to consider developing or strengthening institutional, legal and other measures at the regional level, including those that complemented and supported UNEP's regional seas programme, and at the global level that would facilitate improved protection and sustainable development of ocean and coastal resources, including more effective co-ordination and exchange of standards, recommended practices, procedures, information, technology and expertise, and would more effectively address the growing problem of land-based sources of marine pollution.

Driftnet fishing

In the Castries Declaration of 24 November 1989 [A/45/64], the Authority of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States had resolved to establish a regional regime that would outlaw the use of driftnets and other disruptive methods of commercial fishing in the Lesser Antilles.

By a 16 July 1990 letter [A/45/350], Japan informed the Secretary-General of its decision to suspend driftnet fishing in the South Pacific from the 1990/91 fishing season, one year in advance of the date of cessation (1 July 1991) stipulated by the General Assembly in resolution 44/225 [YUN 1989, p. 447]. The measure would be continued until appropriate conservation and management arrangements for South Pacific albacore tuna resources were entered into, and regulatory measures for driftnet fishing were established under such arrangements by the parties concerned. In making that decision, Japan had taken into account, in particular, the concerns of the South Pacific island countries with driftnet fishing in the region, as those countries, whose economic base depended to a large extent on marine resources, intended to develop the albacore fishery for their own economic development in the future.

By a letter dated 27 August [A/45/456], Vanuatu transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the final communique of the Twenty-first South Pacific Forum (Port Vila, Vanuatu, 31 July-1 August), by which the Heads of Government welcomed Japan's decision and directed that every effort be made to involve Taiwan, Province of China, in negotiations for a management régime for South Pacific albacore tuna. The Forum recorded its disappointment at Japan's continuing reluctance to enter into negotiations towards the conclusion of a multilateral fisheries access agreement to protect fisheries resources and the interests of all parties.

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/663 & Corr.1] on large-scale driftnet fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas. The report discussed the concerns of the international community, large-scale driftnets and their use, relevant international legal instruments, the nature and extent of the problem, and reviews by region. The report concluded that, despite action taken so far to implement the recommendations of General Assembly resolution 44/225, further measures were required in the form of national legislation governing activities of the flag State's vessels on the high seas, international agreements and the adoption of internationally agreed practices, which might be subregional, regional or global in character. The international community should continue to consider and, by 30 June 1991, review the best available scientific data on the impact of large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing and agree upon further co-operative regulation and monitoring measures. To promote the conservation and management of the living resources of the high seas, it was essential that States engaged in large-scale driftnet fishing on the high seas make available to other concerned States and international organizations all available data, including biological data, and specific data on incidental catches and population levels. With the prohibition or curtailment of driftnet fishing in certain areas, the tendency to increase or introduce such fishing in other areas of the high seas must be a cause for concern and would be contrary to resolution 44/225, which declared that such expansion on the high seas of the North Pacific and all the other high seas outside the Pacific Ocean should cease immediately.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/197.

Large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/225 concerning large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing and its impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas, including enclosed and semi-enclosed seas, which was adopted by consensus on 22 December 1989,

Also recalling, in particular, that the General Assembly recommended that all members of the international community agree to certain measures specified in the operative paragraphs of resolution 44/225,

Further recalling the relevant principles elaborated in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which are referred to in the seventh to tenth preambular paragraphs of resolution 44/225,

Commending the unilateral, regional and international efforts that have been undertaken by members of the international community and international organizations to implement and support the objectives of resolution 44/225,

Noting that at the Twenty-first South Pacific Forum, held at Port Vila on 31 July and 1 August 1990, the Heads of Government reaffirmed their opposition to large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing, and taking note of the resolution on large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing in the South Pacific region, adopted by the South Pacific Conference at Noumea, New Caledonia, on 31 October 1990,

Welcoming the decision of a Member State to suspend driftnet operations in the South Pacific one year in advance of the date of cessation stipulated by the General Assembly, and the decision of other Member States to cease or suspend driftnet fishing,

Taking note of the Castries Declaration issued on 24 November 1989 at the sixteenth meeting of the Authority of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, in which the Authority resolved to establish a regional régime for the regulation and management of the pelagic resources in the Lesser Antilles region that would outlaw the use of driftnets and called upon other States in the region to co-operate in this regard, and noting the more recent developments in the wider Caribbean Community region,

Noting that there have been recent meetings related, inter alia, to the protection of fish and other living marine resources and the environment in the Mediterranean, including the Meeting of the Nine Western Mediterranean Countries on Dialogue and Co-operation in the Western Mediterranean, held at Rome on 10 October 1990, and the meeting on the Mediterranean of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held at Palma de Mallorca, Spain, from 24 September to 19 October 1990,

Noting also that the International North Pacific Fisheries Commission has concerned itself with large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing in the North Pacific Ocean, including the need to accumulate scientific knowledge, and has supported the full implementation of resolution 44/225,

Noting further that the International Whaling Commission, at its forty-second annual meeting, in July 1990, referred to the use of large-scale pelagic driftnets in many areas of the high seas, including important habitats for cetaceans encompassing feeding and breeding grounds and migratory pathways, and endorsed resolution 44/225.

Noting that, at its first session, the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development requested the Secretary-General of the Conference to prepare, for submission to the Preparatory Committee at its second session, a comprehensive report on, inter alia, the impact of large-scale harvesting, and new fishing technologies and fishing technologies incompatible with the sustainable management of living marine resources, taking into account resolution 44/225,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the report of the Secretary-General made by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, by other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and by various regional and subregional fisheries organizations, in response to the request of the General Assembly in paragraph 6 of resolution 44/225,

Also noting with appreciation the contribution to the report of the Secretary-General made voluntarily by some members of the international community and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Noting that some members of the international community have initiated co-operative efforts to obtain statistically sound data on the impact of large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing,

Expressing deep concern about reports of attempts to expand large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing on the high seas of the Atlantic Ocean by one fishing entity, in disregard of paragraph 4 (c) of resolution 44/225,

Expressing concern about reports of reflagging of vessels by some private fishing interests, which is contrary to the spirit and content of resolution 44/225,

1. Takes note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General and expresses its appreciation for his efforts;

2. Reaffirms its resolution 44/225 and calls for its full implementation by all members of the international community, in accordance with the measures and time-frame elaborated in paragraph 4 of that resolution concerning large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing on the high seas of all the world's oceans and seas, including enclosed and semi-enclosed seas;

3. Also reaffirms that it is important that all members of the international community take such measures as may be necessary to ensure compliance with paragraph 4 (c) of resolution 44/225;

4. Requests the specialized agencies and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, as well as the various global, regional and subregional fishery organizations, to continue to study urgently large-scale pelagic driftnet fishing and its impact on living marine resources and to report their views to the Secretary-General, hearing in mind the dates set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of resolution 44/225;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and well-established scientific institutions with expertise in relation to living marine resources;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/197

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.1), 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.77) based on informal consultations on 54-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.50); agenda item 79.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 19-21, 48, 54; plenary 71.

Terrestrial ecosystems

Desertification and drought control

The UNDP Administrator reviewed [DP/1991/45] the activities of the UN Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) in support of desertification control and natural resources management activities in the 22 countries of the Sudano-Sahelian region of Africa covered by its mandate. The activities of UNSO in 1990 continued to address the major problems connected with the achievement of sustainable development at the human, institutional and technological levels. They covered the establishment or strengthening of the institutional capacities of the Governments of the region to design, implement or monitor programmes in the area of sound management of natural resources as well as training, education and sensitization aimed at the broadest possible participation in development activities. Efforts continued to be made to identify and take into account human development priorities in the context of projects and programmes supported by UNSO. The activities centred on the special features that made UNSO's role distinctive: specialization in the protection and sound management of natural resources in arid and semi-arid lands in Africa; the implementation, on behalf of UNEP, of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification [YUN 1977, p. 509] in the Sudano-Sahelian countries; and its close relationship to relevant subregional organizations, in particular the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development. UNSO's working modalities and financial arrangements assured close donor-recipient collaboration in identification, formulation and monitoring of projects. The experiences gained had strengthened the Office's capacity to respond to the requests of the General Assembly and the Governing Council that more attention be given to making UNSO's experiences available to other African countries with dry land ecosystems similar to those of the Sudano-Sahelian countries.

The UNDP Governing Council [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/41)] urged UNSO to intensify its initiatives for a greater international coherence and harmony of approaches in planning and co-ordination of interventions relating to drought and desertification at the national level.

Harmful products and wastes

The Governing Council recognized [A/45/25 (dec SS.II/4)] that additional measures were necessary to protect and enhance the environment, focusing in particular on alternatives to the disposal of wastes and the release of emissions into the environment, especially in relation to the use of alternative clean production methods so that hazardous waste production was minimized and prevented. It appealed to Governments and international forums, taking into account economic costs, to consider alternative clean production methods-including raw material selection, product substitution and clean production technologies and processes-as a means of implementing a precautionary approach to promote production systems that minimized or eliminated the generation of hazardous wastes and optimized use of raw materials, water and energy, for example through recycling. It agreed to consider, among other measures, the development of an integrated approach to pollution control, examining all aspects of environmental effects and the role and effectiveness of various kinds of economic incentives to promote and assist with the implementation of clean production methods, taking into account principles for preventing pollution at the source. The Council appealed to Governments to strengthen measures to ensure that those responsible for pollution should bear the cost of its clean-up. The Executive Director was requested to strengthen the activities of the Industry and Environment Office related to the development of clean technologies in the field of hazardous wastes. Governments and institutions should consider measures to expedite the prevention or minimization of hazardous wastes and substances.

International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals

In 1990, the computerized central files of the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC) continued to be updated and expanded to include a larger number of chemicals. Data profiles now existed for around 700 chemicals of international concern. As at May 1990, a total of 55 national authorities designated by 46 Governments plus the Commission of the European Communities had been registered by IRPTC. The first list of chemicals subject to prior informed consent, comprising those substances that had been banned or severely restricted in 10 or more countries, was being established and decision/guidance documents were being prepared. A study was being made of the feasibility of developing a legally binding treaty.

Priorities for further development of the Register were based on the needs in relation to the implementation of the amended London Guidelines for the Exchange of Information on Chemicals in International Trade [YUN 1989, p. 433]. The network now included 121 national correspondents from 112 countries. Queries on 765 chemicals from over 80 countries and organizations were answered by IRPTC in 1990.

INFOTERRA

In 1990, INFOTERRA, UNEP's environmental information system, continued to promote national information infrastructure through the establishment of national INFOTERRA focal points in participating countries. A major priority in the work of INFOTERRA during the year was increased provision of substantive information. One new regional centre was established, bringing the total number to 10. The number of special sectoral sources remained at 28. Three countries joined the INFOTERRA network, bringing the total to 138. During 1990, over 18,000 inquiries from some 90 countries made use of the information services provided by INFOTERRA.

State of the World Environment report

The 1990 State of the World Environment report [UNEP/GE.16/8] examined ways in which environmental degradation and mismanagement debased children's lives, as well as the dangers to children inherent in the natural environment. It stated that environmental degradation was causing the death and debility of millions of children around the world. The challenges of reducing the annual child death toll and providing children with their basic rights to food, clean water, shelter, good health, a safe environment, and the development of their full mental and physical potential would remain huge for the foreseeable future, both because of the sheer numbers involved and because the front line of the struggle ran through the poorest nations. If the many threats to the future were to be met effectively, they would have to be met by the present adult generation; many of the key decisions had to be made and key processes set in motion during the decade of the 1990s. Both children-those alive and those yet to be born-and the environment had to be given primary consideration in that process. All people, including children, needed to be involved in that process. There were many examples in the report of global initiatives driven by global vision. The technology was largely in place. Many societies were rapidly becoming more open, and many more people were taking part in the decision-making process in many parts of the world. That offered a social opportunity, as environmentally sound and sustainable development could not be achieved without public participation in decision-making and broad freedom of information. Improved health, welfare and education of children could provide a sign that humankind was capable of sustainable human progress in a sustaining environment. The state of children, and the state of the environment, said more than anything else about the state of civilization. Environmentally sound and sustainable development required that the present generation accept responsibility for future ones.

Other matters

Special session of UNEP Governing Council

The UNEP Governing Council held its second special session in Nairobi, Kenya, from 1 to 3 August 1990 [A/45/25], pursuant to a 1989 Council decision [YUN 1989, p. 449] to convene the session to consider priority evolving environmental issues. In his report to the Council on the subject [UNEP/GCSS.11/2], the Executive Director stated that mounting public concern had put the environment at the top of the political agenda. However, despite advances in certain specific sectors and local areas since the 1972 Stockholm Conference [YUN 1972, p. 318], the overall picture was bleak. The environment was in general worse off than 20 years ago: the air was more polluted, great tracts of arable land had been lost through erosion and soil degradation, the amount of forest cover had decreased, the depletion of the ozone layer continued, the seas were still threatened, and more species had become extinct or were on the way to extinction. The Governing Council had a significant role to play and should recommend and authorize specific actions on priority environmental needs. The report also described developments in the following list of issues of major environmental concern prepared in 1989 by the Governing Council during its fifteenth regular session [YUN 1989, p. 449] and accepted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/228 [YUN 1989, p. 422]: protection of the atmosphere, including protecting the ozone layer, limiting climate change and reversing transboundary air pollution; protection of the quality of freshwater resources; protection of ocean and coastal areas and resources; protection of land resources, including combating desertification and deforestation; conservation of biological diversity; environmentally sound management of biotechnology; environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes and toxic chemicals; protection of human health conditions and quality of life, especially the living and working environment of poor people, from degradation of the environment through, for example, the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (AMCEN) programme and preparation of the draft Action Plan for the Environment for Latin America and the Caribbean.

The report stated that given the mounting international interest in and activity on the environment, it was essential that UNEP, as the central UN organization dealing with the environment, be strengthened. The environment generally and UNEP in particular should have a much more prominent, visible place in the United Nations. The report dealt with across-the-board issues, including the availability of resources for developing countries and funding mechanisms; technology transfer; the environment and economics; developing the capacity to address environmental issues at the national and local levels; the 1992 State of the Environment report; the Secretary-General's report to the 1992 Conference; and joint messages on environmental development issues by heads of UN organizations. In an annex, the Executive Director requested policy guidance on issues that were to be referred to the Preparatory Committee for UNCED, including climate change, transboundary air pollution, protection of ocean and coastal areas, combating desertification, the AMCEN programme, the availability of resources for developing countries and funding mechanisms; the environment and economics, and technology transfer; strengthening the role of UNEP; and on evolving environmental issues.

The Governing Council adopted three decisions related to climate: one on the Second World Climate Conference (see above), the second on the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the third on a framework convention on climate change. It adopted two decisions related to hazardous waste: one on the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] (see above) and the other on a comprehensive approach to hazardous waste. It also adopted decisions on an international legal instrument on the biological diversity of the planet; strengthening the role of UNEP and the Governing Council; new developments in the protection of the ozone layer; the need for effective global protection of ocean and coastal ecosystems; the location of meetings of the open-ended negotiating working groups on biological diversity and climate change; the situation in the Middle East; and priority evolving environmental issues for consideration by the Preparatory Committee for UNCED.

On 9 November, by decision 1990/284, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Governing Council of UNEP on the work of its second special session.

UNEP programme and finances

The Executive Director, in his report of priority evolving environmental issues [UNEP/GCSS.II/2], stated that, given the mounting international interest in and activity on the environment, it was essential that UNEP, as the central UN organization dealing with the environment, be strengthened. He proposed expansion of the role of UNEP's policy-making organ, the Governing Council, by, among other things, expanding its membership to give it wider representation of all regions; establishing an executive committee; setting aside one day of each regular session to address issues of relevance to the five regions represented on the Council; and establishing modalities for verifying the implementation of international environmental legal instruments. Further measures included addressing ways in which conflicts that touched on specific environmental matters could be responded to quickly through agreed means of conflict resolution. In that regard, the Council might consider setting in place terms of reference or a mechanism for mediation and/or arbitration. The Executive Director also proposed the strengthening of the secretariat, especially its regional presence and its central role in assisting developing countries, and enhancement of the co-ordination with international bodies addressing economic and development issues. Other recommendations included strengthening of the Environment Fund; a heightened UNEP visibility through a UN centre for urgent environmental assistance; early warning of risks of environmental deterioration; a world environment academy; the assessment of environmental impacts of UN activities; and the creation of a "green brigade" of volunteers for the environment.

The Governing Council adopted a decision [A/45/25(dec.SS.II/1)] by which it requested the Executive Director to prepare for submission to the Council in 1991 a consolidated report on the future role of UNEP, presenting, inter alia, proposals on: strengthening UNEP, including the role of the Governing Council; a possible special session of the Council in 1992; and ways to further enhance the visibility of UNEP. It recognized that as a consequence of UNCED, to be held in 1992, further consideration might need to be given to UNEP's role.

UNEP Fund

In 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 451], the Governing Council decided that the Environment Fund should be increased from its current level of some $39 million to $100 million by 1992. The Executive Director, in his proposals for strengthening UNEP, reported that as at the end of May 1990 pledges received for the Fund totalled $33.3 million, indicating a shortfall for the current year. If UNEP were to be strengthened to undertake the reinforced role suggested by Governments, it was important that the $100 million be achieved in 1991, he said. A commitment to a yearly increase of 25 per cent after that date would be the minimum that Governments should consider. He recommended that the Council consider setting a target for annual contributions of $250 million to the Fund by 1995.

The Governing Council requested [A/45/25(dec.SS.II/1)] the Executive Director to submit in 1991 a detailed report explaining the basis of his recommendations.

Human rights and the environment

By a resolution of 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/41)], the Commission on Human Rights, convinced that the preservation of life-sustaining ecosystems under conditions of rapid scientific and technological development was of vital importance for the protection of the human species and the promotion of human rights, welcomed the decision of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to have a note prepared for its 1990 session on methods by which a study on the problems of the environment and its relation to human rights could be made. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to the Preparatory Committee of UNCED and to keep the Committee duly informed of the work in that area.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/94 of 21 December on the need to ensure a healthy environment for the well-being of individuals, called upon Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations dealing with environmental questions to enhance their efforts towards ensuring a better and healthier environment. It believed that appropriate organs of the United Nations, within their respective areas of competence, should pursue active efforts in seeking to promote a better and healthier environment.

Transfer of technology

The UNEP Executive Director, in his report on priority evolving environmental issues [UNEP/GCSS.II/12], said that the question of the availability of resources for environmental protection and enhancement was closely linked to technology transfer and access to the know-how related to using the technology. The limited successes in the transfer of technology were only indicative of future needs and the magnitude of the task should not be underestimated. The issue involved legal obligations with respect to patents, licences, designs, marks and proprietary rights and the receiving country's ability to absorb new technology and know-how and obtain training to apply it. The economic system and aid programmes would have to be stimulated to address the urgent situation. The Preparatory Committee for UNCED (see above) requested [A/45/46 (dec. 1/8)] the Secretary-General of UNCED to prepare a study on transfer of technology that would: elucidate the concept of environmentally sound technology and clarify the process by which such technology was transferred; examine the technological needs of developing countries; examine the needs of developing countries for training their personnel to enable those countries to adapt and accept the transfer of environmentally sound technology; examine the obstacles, on both the exporting and importing sides, that impeded the transfer of environmentally sound technology; examine the adequacy of existing modalities and programmes for the transfer of environmentally sound technology; examine what new mechanisms were needed and their financial implications; provide examples of case-studies of success and failure; examine the potential for regional and sub-regional co-operation; and review the implications for this issue of the outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART SEVEN, Chapter XVIII).

Military activities and the environment

The Executive Director, in his report on the environment in the 1990s [UNEP/GC.16/4], said that among the major developments that occurred during the year were the dramatic events unfolding in the Middle East arising from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait. World attention was focused on the crisis, which had heightened the concern over current and potential dangers to the environment. Although it was still too early for reliable predictions of the environmental outcome, it was clear that the events of the crisis were bound to have major effects on the national economies and the environment of all countries, particularly the weak and indebted ones.

On 3 August [A/45/25 (dec.SS.II/8)], the UNEP Governing Council reaffirmed that all Member States adhere to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and not resort to force as a means of settling regional disputes over shared natural resources. It expressed concern over the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq and the resulting destruction of the environment and disruption of social and economic structures (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/58 N of 4 December, recognizing the potential of using resources currently allocated to military activities for civilian endeavours to protect the environment, requested the Secretary-General to carry out a study of potential uses of resources such as know-how, technology, infrastructure and production currently allocated to military activities for promoting civilian endeavours to protect the environment. He should make relevant results of the study available to the Preparatory Committee for UNCED.

International law of the environment

By an October note verbale [A/45/666], Italy transmitted to the Secretary-General the conclusions of the Siena Forum on International Law of the Environment, which was held from 17 to 21 April, as a follow-up to the Economic Declaration of the summit of the seven most industrialized countries (Paris, July 1989). Scholars, diplomats and experts from 30 States and 8 international organizations participated in the forum, whose purpose was to examine the need for a digest of existing rules of international law for the environment and to give in-depth consideration to the legal aspects of environment at the international level.

The Forum concluded that, since the 1972 Stockholm Declaration on the Human Environment [YUN 1972, p. 319], international environmental law had seen many important developments. It was characterized by an abundance of conventions and other international legal instruments, covering many fields and constituting a network of rights and obligations. However, certain fields, in particular climate change, were not yet covered; in others, coverage did not extend to all States or regions and, in some instances, conventional rules were incomplete or lagged behind the development of scientific knowledge. Implementation of conventions, both domestic and international, was not always satisfactory. The Forum identified areas in which international environmental regulations might be introduced or strengthened, as well as treaty and other devices that could be used by Governments to address concerns raised by the international protection of the environment. It proposed treaty devices that could be used to address problems relating to non-compliance or lack of effectiveness and aspects of international co-operation that could be considered.

The Economic Declaration of the summit meeting of the seven most industrialized countries (Houston, United States, July 1990) noted the conclusions of the Forum and suggested that they be considered in 1992 by UNCED.

Chapter IX

Population and human settlements

In 1990, the United Nations continued its concerted efforts in the area of population and human settlements. United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) activities focused on maternal and child health care and family planning, communication and education programmes, basic data collection, population dynamics programmes and the formulation and evaluation of population policies. During the year, UNFPA assisted nearly 3,800 country, regional and intercountry projects; about 500 new projects were approved and some 250 projects completed. UNFPA efforts concentrated especially on the needs of 56 priority countries, the majority of which were in Africa. The 1990 United Nations Population Award was conferred on Alfred Sauvy and the Mauritius National Family Health and Population Council.

Activities in support of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted by the General Assembly in 1988, continued in 1990. As a private-sector contribution to the Global Strategy, the Third International Shelter Conference was convened in Washington, D.C., in April. In addition, the Strategy provided the focus for nine subregional seminars on national shelter strategies held during the year. Meanwhile, the 1990-1991 work programme of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), which was based on eight subprogrammes, continued.

Population

Follow-up to the 1984 Conference

As a follow-up to the 1984 International Conference on Population [YUN 1984. p. 714], the Secretary-General presented two reports on population questions. One report [E/CN.9/1991/3] recorded progress in the area of population, 1989-1990, and covered the activities of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA), which were divided into subprogrammes on: world demographic analysis, demographic projections, population policies, population and development, monitoring and review and appraisal, factors affecting patterns of reproduction, and dissemination of population information. The other report [E/CN.9/1991/3/Add.1] dealt with technical co-operation activities in population of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development.

1994 international meeting on population

By decision 1990/262 of 24 July, the Economic and Social Council noted the appointment by the Secretary-General of the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) as the Secretary-General of the international meeting on population in 1994 and of the Director of the Population Division of DIESA as its Deputy Secretary-General. It further noted that the Secretary-General had written to Member States about the need to obtain resources for the meeting, and that a report on the results of such efforts and on other aspects of the preparations for the meeting would be submitted to the Council by the Population Commission, which would hold an open-ended session in 1991 as the preparatory committee for the meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/216.

Population and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/210 of 22 December 1989, in which it requested the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund to examine, in particular, the implications for population programmes of the Amsterdam Declaration on a Better Life for Future Generations, adopted by the International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century, held at Amsterdam from 6 to 9 November 1989, to develop further the analysis of resource requirements for international population assistance and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, through the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of decision 90/35 of 20 June 1990 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme on the United Nations Population Fund,

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/82 of 27 July 1990,

Noting that in the report of the United Nations Population Fund entitled The State of World Population, 1990, it is stressed that population growth distribution are closely linked with environmental and development issues,

Reaffirming the principles and objectives of the World Population Plan of Action, which were affirmed and expanded at the International Conference on Population,

Recognizing that socio-economic development is conducive to the success of population policies,

Reaffirming that assistance to developing countries in the area of population should be substantially increased during the 1990s and that developing countries should also intensify their efforts to allocate adequate resources to population programmes,

1. Emphasizes the sovereign right of all countries to formulate, adopt and implement their population policies, mindful of their cultures, values and traditions, as well as of their social, economic and political conditions, and also consistent with human rights and with the responsibilities of individuals, couples and families;

2. Takes note of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund on the implications for population programmes of the Amsterdam Declaration on a Better Life for Future Generations and on efforts to develop further the analysis of resource requirements for international population assistance, in which the unmet and expanding resource needs for population activities are outlined;

3. Encourages Fund to sustain the momentum generated by the International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century through continued follow-up to the recommendations contained in the Amsterdam Declaration;

4. Stresses the need to take into account all economic and social factors in integrating demographic objectives in population strategies and in the formulation of development strategies in general;

5. Emphasizes the importance of mobilizing and increasing resources for population activities and, in this context:

- (a) Urges all Governments, each according to its capacity, concerned international and regional organizations, including the World Bank, and non-governmental organizations to make every effort to mobilize the resources required for population activities, which are estimated at 9 billion United States dollars per year by the year 2000, taking into account the potential for user contributions, where feasible and advisable;

- (b) Notes the crucial importance of resource investments in health and education, especially for women, for the success of population programmes, and urges Governments of developing countries to strengthen, according to their economic and social capacities and conditions, their political and financial commitments to investments in the social sector, and also urges Governments of developed countries, as well as concerned international, regional and non-governmental organizations, to strengthen their financial and technical support in the areas of health and education, to respond positively to requests for population assistance and to increase significantly the proportion of their development assistance destined for population activities;

- (c) Stresses the desirability of concentrating Fund resources, in accordance with the criteria established by the Fund, on countries most in need of assistance in the population field in view of their population problems, taking into account the special needs of the low-income countries, particularly the least developed countries;

6. Encourages the Fund, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 44/211 of 22 December 1989, to strengthen and utilize national capacities through national execution, to enhance accountability, to adopt a programme-oriented approach and decentralize capacity and authority to the field level and to support co-ordination of the United Nations system at the country level through the resident co-ordinators, and, in this context, encourages the Fund to increase the utilization of available national expertise in the formulation and implementation of population assistance activities;

7. Also encourages the Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization and other relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies to strengthen their co-operation in the field of maternal and child health care and family planning, each within its own mandate;

8. Emphasizes the importance of addressing the relationship between demographic pressures and unsustainable consumption patterns and environmental degradation during the preparatory process for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, taking into account the decisions to be taken by the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/228 of 22 December 1989;

9. Reaffirms the importance of the role of population policies in relation to development, as emphasized, inter alia, in the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990;

10. Welcomes the willingness of the nineteen members of the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, as expressed in the December 1989 policy statement by Committee aid ministers and heads of aid agencies for their aid policies for the 1990s and reiterated at Committee meetings on population and development matters held in April and June 1990, to assist developing countries to establish, fund and implement effective population strategies and programmes as a matter of priority;

11. Stresses the primary role of Governments in the formulation, implementation and co-ordination of population policies and programmes at the national level and the role of the United Nations Population Fund, upon request, in supporting the development of national capacities in that respect;

12. Also stresses the need for co-ordination at the regional and interregional levels to focus on issues related to the attainment of specific population goals and objectives;

13. Recommends that the Fund continue to focus attention on the importance of population issues in the context of overall development plans and programmes, in particular those oriented towards the reactivation of economic growth and development of developing countries, and on the need to find and mobilize adequate resources to address these issues, and, in this context, urges the Fund to continue to undertake activities aimed at building better awareness of population issues, including their relation to environment and development issues and World Population Day;

14. Invites the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund to give specific information, in the section on policy and programme co-ordination of the annual report, on the co-operation of the Fund with other relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies.

21 December 1990

Meeting 71

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/854) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.85), based on informal consultations on 20- nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.61) and orally revised; agenda item 84.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 33-36, 38, 50, 54; plenary 71.

UN Population Fund

UNFPA activities

The largest share of UNFPA activities in 1990 was directed to maternal and child health care and family planning (MCH/FP), followed by communication and education programmes, basic data collection, population dynamics programmes and the formulation and evaluation of population policies. Work also continued in special programmes and multisector activities.

Total UNFPA income in 1990 was $212.4 million. The number of donors was 106, with six first-time donors-Chad, the German Democratic Republic, Niue, Palau, Tokelau and Tuvalu. The Fund's ongoing efforts to seek additional resources for population projects and programmes through multi-bilateral and other arrangements generated an additional $10.5 million during the year for projects with allocations totalling $27.1 million at year's end. Project allocations in 1990 totalled $210.9 million, including $36.8 million of unspent allocations from 1989, while expenditures totalled $221.3 million. That figure included $119.2 million for country programmes, $49.7 million for intercountry (regional and interregional) programmes, and $37.8 million for administrative and programme support services expenditures for both headquarters and field offices. Agency support costs, amounting to $14.7 million, included support costs paid to non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and support costs paid to UNFPA for charges assessed to government-executed projects and for procurement services to government projects, in addition to overhead payments to UN executing agencies.

At the end of the year, UNFPA was assisting 3,790 projects: 2,773 country and 1,017 regional and intercountry projects. In 1990, 499 new projects were approved and 247 were completed, bringing the cumulative number of all projects completed through 1990 to 3,420.

Assistance to MCH/FP programmes amounted to $96.5 million, or 45.8 per cent of total programme allocations. UNFPA supported more than 500 country and intercountry projects. Nearly half (48.2 per cent) of the total sum went to MCH/FP activities in the Asia and Pacific region and 23.3 per cent to activities in sub-Saharan Africa. The remaining amount supported activities in the other two regions (Arab States and Europe, and Latin America and the Caribbean) as well as the Fund's interregional programme.

A highlight in the MCH/FP sector during 1990 was the conduct of a year-long study to estimate the contraceptive requirements of the developing world. The Fund worked closely with selected developing countries, especially the most populated ones, which accounted for the bulk of the contraceptive demand worldwide, as well as with partner agencies and UN organizations, bilateral donors and NGOs. The study included projections of the volume of contraceptives that could be provided through the commercial sector, as well as that which could be produced locally. UNFPA convened four expert group meetings to discuss the study's objectives, methodology, initial findings and preliminary conclusions. During the year, UNFPA continued to provide technical assistance to MCH/FP training programmes at all levels for all types of trainees. It supported the MCH/FP training centre in Tunisia for French-speaking countries, particularly those in Africa, established in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 458], by strengthening the quality of its teaching and by developing an effective management capability.

UNFPA assistance for information, education and communication totalled $37 million, or 17.6 per cent of total programme allocations. The UNFPA programme in 1990 concentrated on three main areas considered necessary for an effective communication programme: increased emphasis on strategic planning; increased emphasis on socio-cultural research to reach key target groups; and institutionalization and expansion of population education in school systems. The Fund assisted an increasing number of countries in carrying out research designed to develop specific strategies to address the needs of target audiences. The data collected on target audiences' preference for family size, their knowledge and use of contraceptives, their access to family planning services, and the channels of communication most effective in reaching them and eliciting their participation in programmes were to enable planners to incorporate appropriate information directly into the design and implementation of programmes, as well as into the evaluation of programme effectiveness.

Traditionally, population and family planning efforts had concentrated on high-parity women at the expense of low-parity and nulliparous women at risk of pregnancy. Consequently, in order to reach important, if somewhat neglected, groups, the Fund paid increased attention in 1990 to the special needs of adolescents, men and newly-weds. An important activity designed to lay the groundwork for future programming was the Fund's wide dissemination of the results of a cross-cultural study of selected approaches being used to educate engaged and newly-wed couples about family planning. The study, which confirmed a number of the findings of the Fund's review and assessment regarding the importance of that target group, offered guidance to countries interested in undertaking activities with engaged and newly-wed couples.

UNFPA continued to provide assistance during 1990 to activities aimed at institutionalizing population education in school systems. In sub-Saharan Africa, to satisfy the increasing demands for education experts, seven subregional workshops for 125 participants were organized by training centres in several countries. Plans were under way to select two of the centres to be regional training centres in population education. By the end of 1990, approximately 90 per cent of sub-Saharan African countries had initiated population/family life education programmes in their public school systems.

In the area of basic data collection, UNFPA assistance amounted to $22.2 million, or 10.5 per cent of total programme allocations. The Fund continued to help countries consolidate the gains they had made in improving the capabilities and capacities of their national statistical offices to produce and disseminate population and related data. At the same time, the Fund maintained efforts to address emerging issues at the intercountry level identified through a continuing process of review and assessment. UNFPA allocated $17.6 million in support of 117 projects under the 1990 round of population censuses; $2.1 million to conduct population sample surveys through 27 country projects; and $1.4 million in support of 33 projects to establish or strengthen civil registration and vital statistics systems in three regions: 17 projects in Africa, 7 projects in the Arab States and Europe, and 7 projects in Asia and the Pacific. UNFPA continued to provide support for demographic analysis and training, extending $14.1 million to 150 projects.

UNFPA allocated $21.2 million, or 10 per cent of its assistance, to programmes on the utilization of population data and population research for policy formulation and development planning. That aid aimed at developing the most suitable methodological approaches and techniques for policy formulation and development planning; strengthening national technical capacities; supporting research and studies; and setting up the institutional arrangements required for the formulation and implementation of population factors into socio-economic development planning. As part of that process, the Fund organized training courses and helped countries develop their own training capacity in order to focus better on various aspects of demography and on the interrelationship between population and development at the interregional, regional and country levels. Main substantive activities that UNFPA supported during 1990 included studies on the social and economic consequences of population trends; the interrelationship between population, environment, resources and development; appropriate population policies for different socio-cultural contexts; and factors most conducive to the integration of population variables into national development planning. An important feature of UNFPA support in that area was training at regional and subregional levels in order to provide the right environment for creating greater awareness and technical know-how at the country level.

Regarding women, population and development, UNFPA assistance totalled $8.2 million, or 3.9 per cent of total programme allocations. During 1990, UNFPA made considerable progress in implementing its 1987-1990 strategy to integrate women into all aspects of its work [YUN 1987, p. 635]. It also carried out a comprehensive assessment of the implementation of the strategy. The aim of the assessment was to identify those elements that facilitated or hindered the promotion and integration of gender concerns in UNFPA programming, and to revise the strategy as necessary in the light of the experience of the past four years and of new directions in the area of women and development activities. The Fund launched a number of significant intercountry projects. In conjunction with the Royal Tropical Institute (Amsterdam, Netherlands), it funded two training workshops for National Programme Officers and for project staff engaged in the execution of women's projects. Together with an Italy-based NGO, and in co-operation with the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Training Centre in Turin, the Fund approved a project for the production of information materials detailing the harmful effects of certain traditional practices on women's health. The project also provided for training selected national staff in using those materials when conducting local sensitization campaigns. Responding to needs in an increasingly important area, the Fund approved a major research project to be carried out by the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development. As part of a UNFPA-funded project, the United Nations Population Division sponsored an expert meeting on international migration policies and the status of female migrants. With support from UNFPA, the UN Division for the Advancement of Women held a five-day regional seminar in Lomé, Togo, dealing with the interrelationship between demographic factors and the situation of women in francophone African countries.

Special programme interests-youth, aging, AIDS and population and environment-received a total of $2.2 million, or 1 per cent of total programme allocations. During the year, UNFPA increased its activities relating to youth. In keeping with UNFPA's emphasis on women, it stressed the need to improve education and training for girls and young women that went beyond basic literacy and to advocate delay of marriage and childbirth. Promoting family life education and responsible parenthood and facilitating access of young people to family planning information and services remained the mainstay of UNFPA's strategies concerning youth.

The Fund provided $0.24 million in assistance to projects in 1990 aimed at enhancing the capability of developing countries to understand the causes and implications of population aging and how it interrelated with socio-economic development. The bulk of UNFPA's assistance in that area went again to the International Institute for Aging in Malta to support its efforts in implementing the 1982 Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging [YUN 1982, p. 1184]. That assistance focused on fulfilling the research and training needs of developing countries and strengthening the links between and among developed and developing countries in promoting technical co-operation, exchanging skills and knowledge, and providing advisory services.

During 1990, UNFPA stepped up its efforts to collaborate with national and inter-agency efforts in the area of HIV/AIDS prevention. At the country level, it adopted a three-pronged approach: undertaking preventive activities in all countries, including those where prevalence was low; integrating AIDS prevention into existing health activities, especially MCH/FP programmes; and using NGOs to inform and educate people at the grass-roots level. UNFPA country directors were particularly active in such endeavours, supporting the formulation of national AIDS plans and participating in such activities as multi-donor review missions of AIDS programmes, national pledging conferences and national AIDS resource-mobilization meetings.

Following the adoption of UNFPA's policy guidelines on population and environment in October 1989, several activities became fully operational in 1990. They focused on research and policy analysis, training, information and awareness creation, and advocacy. Activities involving research and policy analysis were in keeping with UNFPA's strategy of establishing a solid foundation of understanding of the links between population variables and the environment. Activities involving information, education and communication were primarily directed at national planners or leaders and aimed at enhancing awareness about population and environment problems. The need for advocacy was underscored by the relative lack of attention given to population issues at various forums on environmental issues, at both the global and regional levels. UNFPA's important advocacy role was highlighted in the preparations for the forthcoming 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) (see PARS THREE, Chapter VIII). To assure adequate representation of population issues at the Conference and in its proceedings, several activities were planned in late 1990, including, among other things, arranging for the secondment of a UNFPA staff member to the secretariat of UNCED and plans to host a UNFPA "preparatory meeting" to generate inputs on population and environment.

UNFPA's The State of World Population, 1990 report, entitled "Choices for the New Century", focused on population decisions that would be needed in the upcoming 10 years in order to avoid environmental catastrophe and secure sustainable development in the twenty-first century. The report stressed the need for a three-pronged approach: a shift to cleaner technologies, energy efficiency and resource conservation by all countries, but especially the wealthier quarter of the world's population; a direct and all-out attack on poverty itself; and reduction in overall rates of population growth. The Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by a decision of 20 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/35 A)], noted with appreciation The State of World Population, 1990. It agreed that population growth and distribution factors played a key role in safeguarding the environment and fostering development, that human resource development should receive a high degree of attention in the fourth United Nations development decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and that efforts in family planning, women's advancement, health and education were mutually reinforcing and should be pursued in parallel.

UNFPA's other publications, its monthly newsletter Population and the quarterly Populi, both featured articles on linkages between population and environment and continued to focus on important developments regarding women, population and development. Population's general coverage continued to emphasize aspects of the UNFPA programme, while Populi dealt more lengthily with issues of general concern, including major features on various aspects of family planning, on AIDS in Africa, on people and nature, and on human effects of climate change, among many others.

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1990, UNFPA concentrated on the needs of 56 priority countries, of which 31 were in Africa, 16 in Asia and the Pacific, 3 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 6 Arab States. Of the total amount of resources allocated to country programmes and projects in 1990, 74.1 per cent was allocated to those countries. Total allocations to them in 1990 amounted to $114.3 million.

Allocations for intercountry activities (regional and interregional) amounted to $36.6 million in 1990, or 26.9 per cent of total 1990 allocations.

Follow-up to 1989 International Forum

Following the 1989 Amsterdam International Forum on Population in the Twenty-first Century [YUN 1989, p. 459] and in response to General Assembly resolution 44/210 [YUN 1989, p. 460], the Executive Director of UNFPA submitted a report [DP/1990/44] on the implications for population programmes of the Amsterdam Declaration and on efforts to develop further the analysis of resource requirements for international population assistance. The report contained sections on the demographic situation, programme implications, the resource situation and increasing the effectiveness of population programmes. It proposed a pattern of increased contributions from national and international sources for the decade ahead, as well as measures for ensuring optimum levels of co-ordination towards the goal of strategic planning.

In conclusion, the Executive Director stated that it was clear that population factors played a crucial role in socio-economic development and that current support to the population sector was vastly insufficient. Increased and more efficient population programmes were vital not only because of their effects on overall national development, but because of their potential for improving the quality of life of all men, women and children. Meeting the targets for an immediate increase in the development assistance funds as proposed in the report, which were not in any way unrealistic, would mean a world with 250 million fewer people by the year 2000 than otherwise would be the case. If serious efforts were intended for a more effective, humane and sustainable development process in the 1990s than in the 1980s, immediate and concerted action had to be taken in the area of population. The international community, including the developing countries, urgently needed to commit and dedicate itself to bringing about higher levels of advocacy and attention to the crucial importance of population trends for the well-being and quality of life of future generations and to setting a firm course of action towards sustainable development and the protection of the environment, as stated in the Amsterdam Declaration.

Accordingly, the Executive Director recommended to the UNDP Governing Council that it call on the international assistance community to increase its contributions to population programmes, and call on developing countries and funding sources to double the level of resources for population activities. The Governing Council, on 20 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/35 A)], noted with satisfaction the results of the Amsterdam International Forum and considered that the population goals, objectives, priorities and approaches set forth in the Amsterdam Declaration were of considerable importance and relevance to national and international endeavours and should be taken into account in the formulation of population policies and programmes. It encouraged UNFPA to sustain the momentum generated by the Amsterdam Forum and took note of the unmet and expanding resource needs, urging Governments, international and regional organizations, including the World Bank, and NGOs to make every effort to increase significantly their allocations in order to reach the target of $9 billion per year by the year 2000.

Work programmes, planning and evaluation

In a March report [DP/1990/47] on the work plan for 1991-1994, submitted to the UNDP Governing Council for approval, the UNFPA Executive Director provided information on UNFPA's resource situation, overall resource utilization and the distribution of programmable resources between country and intercountry activities. IT also contained information on allocations and utilization of resources in 1989. Another report [DP/1990/48] described the status of financial implementation of Governing Council-approved UNFPA programmes and projects.

On 20 June, the Governing Council endorsed [E/1990/29 (dec.90/35B)] the Executive Director's programme resource planning proposals and emphasized the need for future allocations of resources to meet the target of an 80 per cent allocation of country programme resources to priority countries and, taking into account the specific needs and priorities of individual countries, to reflect sufficiently the priority given to family planning. It endorsed the use of the following estimates for new programmable resources: $184.5 million for 1992; $204 million for 1993; and $220.6 million for 1994. It also approved the request for new programme expenditure authority in the amount of $166.7 million for 1991.

In March, the UNFPA Executive Director submitted her periodic report [DP/1990/49] on evaluation, describing UNFPA evaluation activities in 1988-1989, including internal evaluations and independent, in-depth evaluations and the results of the latter; revision of guidelines; and feedback and use of evaluation results. The report stated that during 1988 and 1989, UNFPA continued to emphasize and expand internal evaluation activities; to focus its independent, in-depth evaluations on country and intercountry programmes and on technical areas and issues in comparative perspective; to refine the Fund's guidelines for monitoring and evaluation; and to strengthen the system for feedback and use of evaluation results.

Among the activities undertaken were evaluations in Indonesia, Nicaragua and Zimbabwe in 1988, and in Nigeria and Zaire in 1989. Also evaluated were the intercountry programmes of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and ILO and those of the World Health Organization Regional Offices for Africa and the Eastern Mediterranean.

The Governing Council, on 20 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/35 A)], took note with satisfaction of the Executive Director's periodic report and recognized the usefulness of evaluation activities as both a management and information tool. It welcomed the introduction and expanded use of the programme review and strategy development exercise, which combined country programme review and strategy development components. It further encouraged expanded development and use of the Lessons Learned Database and requested UNFPA to distribute copies of evaluation reports to interested parties and to continue reporting biennially to the Council on evaluation.

Financial and administrative questions

As requested by the UNDP Governing Council in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 461], the Executive Director, in April 1990, presented a report [DP/1990/86] on proposed revisions to the Financial Regulations of UNFPA. In addition, the report contained amendments to regulations as a result of General Assembly resolutions and Governing Council decisions adopted after the latest revision of the Financial Regulations in June 1984. Also included were the Executive Director's recommendations for revisions of regulations that were considered necessary following a comprehensive review of all UNFPA financial regulations.

Following consideration of the audit reports on the 1988 UNFPA financial statements [DP/1990/50], as well as reports of the Executive Director on progress of office automation activities during 1989 [DP/1990/51], on senior management structure at UNFPA headquarters and its implications for post classifications [DP/1990/52], and on the criteria and procedures for the establishment of temporary and regular posts in the field and at headquarters and proposal on the conversion of existing temporary local posts in the field [DP/1990/53], the annual financial review of activities financed by UNFPA and of its trust funds in 1989 [DP/1990/54 & Corr.1] the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ [DP/1990/55], and the report of the Executive Director on proposed revisions to the Financial Regulations of UNFPA (see above), the Governing Council on 22 June [E/1990/29 (dec.90/36)] approved revisions to the Financial Regulations as proposed by the Executive Director, allowing her to submit audited financial statements to the General Assembly and the Governing Council, through ACABQ, on a biennial basis, beginning with the 1990-1991 biennium. The Council invited the Board of Auditors to issue a special report for the first year of each biennium through ACABQ, if in the opinion of the Board there were matters that needed to be brought to the attention of the Council and, if appropriate, to the Assembly. Further, the Council requested the Executive Director to determine whether the Financial Regulations of UNFPA needed to be amended and to report the results of her findings in 1991.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 45/235, having considered UNFPA's financial report and audited financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1989 and the report of the Board of Auditors [A/45/5/Add.7], approved the changes in the financial procedures of UNFPA, as recommended by the UNDP Governing Council.

Other population activities

UN Population Award

In June, the Secretary-General presented the 1990 United Nations Population Award to Alfred Sauvy, a professor at the College de France and former Director of the Institut national d'études démographiques, and the Mauritius National Family Health and Population Council. The Award, presented annually by the Committee for the United Nations Population Award to individuals or institutions for the most outstanding contribution to the awareness of population questions or to their solutions, consisted of a diploma, a gold medal and a monetary prize.

According to a report of the UNFPA Executive Director transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in May [A/45/278 & Corr.1], Mr. Sauvy was chosen for his significant contributions to demography; his work in migration and population movements had been instrumental in providing alternative approaches to resettlement programmes that attempted to solve problems of inequitable population distribution. The Mauritius Council was chosen for the successful efforts of its family planning programmes. Since 1972, the work of the Council had led to a decline in the crude-birth rate from well over 35 per thousand in 1965 to the current 20 per thousand. The total fertility rate in Mauritius fell from more than five children per woman to less than two, with more than 75 per cent of eligible couples using some form of modern contraception. The Committee felt that it was especially remarkable that the Government was able to generate consensus and support for family planning, given the multi-ethnic population.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/438, took note of the Executive Director's report.

Demographic estimates and projections

The Ad Hoc Inter-agency Working Group on Demographic Estimates and Projections held its sixteenth session in New York (6-8 June) [ACC/1990/PG/4], reviewing the progress of work and co-ordination since its fifteenth (1988) session. The Group agreed to continue inter-agency co-ordination in order to strengthen the UN system data base for demographic estimates and projections, maintain consistency in the coverage and timing, continually update such estimates and projections, and ensure homogeneity in the presentation of the results. The Group noted with concern that the lack of financial resources prevented the participation of the Economic Commission for Africa, the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in its session. It discussed and recommended that a revised publication of world demographic and sectoral estimates and projections be prepared, following completion of the 1992 revisions of estimates and projections.

Human settlements

Human settlement activities

Evaluation of major programmes

In April 1990, the Secretary-General presented an in-depth evaluation of the major programme on human settlements [E/AC.51/1990/2 & Corr.1], discussing co-ordination in planning and implementation; programme planning; programme results with overall assessments of the global and three regional programmes on human settlements, based on the views of national focal points and NGOs and views expressed at intergovernmental meetings; and dissemination of information. In an annex, the report presented a cross-reference of UN programme activities. Two further annexes contained summaries of replies from national focal points and NGOs to questionnaires and interviews.

The report stated that there was interest and support for UN activities in the area of human settlements from both governments and NGOs. Information on human settlements produced by the United Nations had been used by both government experts and NGOs. With regard to co-ordination, the current arrangements had been useful in increasing co-ordination in some aspects of the human settlements programmes. However, most of the regional units concerned with human settlements considered that better co-ordination arrangements were necessary. Although thematic planning was currently not feasible, joint programming of activities was possible in certain sub-fields of common interest to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) and the regional units. As to dissemination of information, there was a need to develop better systems of identifying and reaching potential users; the news media could be an effective tool for promoting the understanding of human settlements issues and the efforts of the UN information centres appeared to increase the media coverage. In a later addendum [E/AC.51/1990/2/Add.1] the Secretary-General presented updated information on the surveys of national focal points and NGOs.

Activities for the promotion of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, adopted in 1988 by the General Assembly in resolution 43/181 [YUN 1988, p. 478], continued in 1990.

As a private-sector contribution in support of the Global Strategy, the Third International Shelter Conference was convened in Washington, D.C. (23-30 April), under the title "The Key to Housing for All: Public/Private Partnerships". It was hosted by the National Association of Realtors (United States) and supported by a variety of national and international sponsors, including UNCHS. It brought together participants from developed and developing countries, representing public and private interests in the shelter sector. The purpose of the Conference was to build on the recommendations of the Second International Shelter Conference, which had adopted the Vienna Declaration as a statement of principles that should govern the shelter sector. The Conference goal was to present innovative shelter-sector experience in selected countries and to discuss their relevance to global needs in general. Case-studies were presented from Bolivia, Chile, China, Colombia, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Indonesia, Portugal, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the USSR, the United States and Zimbabwe. Addressing the plenary session of the Conference, the UNCHS Executive Director said that the Global Strategy was a challenge not only to government but also to the private sector; it was up to the private sector to take the initiative, which required not only a new partnership with government but also the forging of new relationships among the various components of the private housing sector-between financial institutions and construction firms, between formal and informal sectors, and between institutionalized lenders and those on low incomes, as well as small-scale builders and community groups which, up to now, had found themselves excluded from formal financial markets.

The Global Strategy provided a focus for further activities under the policies and strategies programme of UNCHS. A seminar for East Asian countries on the Strategy was held in Denpasar, Bali, Indonesia (14-18 May). It focused on the formulation and implementation of national shelter strategies. Governments participating, apart from Indonesia, included Afghanistan, Brunei

Darussalam, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Myanmar, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Thailand and Viet Nam. The seminar's three workshops dealt with: partnerships between government, the private sector and non-governmental and community-based organizations; linkages between human settlements and the environment; and shelter indicators, with a review of a draft set of indicators to be used by Governments to gauge progress in the preparation of national shelter strategies and assess the performance of the shelter sector.

In addition, nine subregional seminars (for East Africa, southern Africa, East Asia, South Asia, Eastern Europe, English-speaking West Africa, the Caribbean, French-speaking Africa and Portuguese-speaking Africa) on national shelter strategies were held in co-operation with host Governments and with the participation of Governments, the private sector and NGOs. Sustainable development and human settlements provided the topic for an intergovernmental meeting which was held in November in The Hague, at the invitation of the Netherlands, with support from Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden. The meeting adopted a Statement by the Chairman and authorized him to forward it and the revised report on "People, Settlements, Environment and Sustainable Development" to the Secretary-General of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) for submission to the next meeting of the Preparatory Committee for UNCED.

Political, economic and social questions

Assistance to Africa

Since the adoption in 1986 of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 [GA res. S-13/2], the activities of UNCHS took into account the goals and objectives of the Programme, including transport and communication, health, and new and renewable sources of energy. In doing so, UNCHS co-operated closely with African countries, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Economic Commission for Africa and the Organization of African Unity with a view to ensuring that current and future human settlements projects were in line with those goals and objectives.

At the request of Namibia, the Centre undertook a mission to the country in April/May 1990 which provided preliminary technical assistance to the Ministry of Local Government and Housing and prepared a report entitled "Namibia: towards the formulation of policies and strategies for national shelter and human settlements". At the request of the African National Congress (ANC), the Centre formulated a project document entitled "Assistance to self-help community development", which was forwarded to ANC through UNDP's Dar es Salaam office and to UNDP headquarters in New York for consideration and approval.

Housing conditions in occupied territories

The Executive Director, in a note of 15 October, requested, in implementation of a 1989 Commission resolution [YUN 1989, p. 468], Israel's co-operation for a fact-finding mission to visit the occupied Palestinian territories in order to investigate the question of the denial of housing rights to, and the destruction of housing of, the Palestinians by the Israeli occupation authorities.

UN Centre for Human Settlements

Activities

The 1990-1991 UNCHS work programme was based on eight subprogrammes: policies and strategies; settlements planning; shelter and community services; the indigenous construction sector; low-cost infrastructure; land; mobilization of financial resources for human settlements development; and institutions and management.

The Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 provided a focus for activities under the policies and strategies subprogramme; nine sub-regional seminars on national shelter strategies were held (see above).

Activities of the Centre in the area of settlements planning included the preparation of case-studies on metropolitan management in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, and Quito, Ecuador, and a number of training activities. They included a training-of-trainers course in finance and management for English-speaking countries in sub-Saharan Africa and another for French-speaking East and Central African countries, a workshop on training of trainers in municipal management-the first pilot activity for North African Arab States-and a training course and workshop in Latin America. Those activities were held in collaboration with various agencies which supported specific activities, among them the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank, UNDP, the United States Agency for International Development and the Deutsche Gesellschaft für Technische Zusammenarbeit.

During 1990-1991, work was to be carried out under the shelter and community services subprogramme on three global research projects related to the Global Strategy: a review of experiences with initiating enabling shelter strategies at national levels based on information provided by detailed case-studies; preparation of a technical publication on evaluating problems associated with the project-by-project approach of carrying out national shelter programmes; and, as a continuation of the Centre's work on inner-city rehabilitation, an evaluation of relocation schemes with the help of case-studies from Mexico and Nigeria. Collaboration with the Danish International Development Agency on community development intensified in 1990, with the activities of the second phase of the training programme being decentralized to three regions and being implemented in Bolivia, Sri Lanka and Zambia. Training activities related to housing and development continued in co-operation with the Katholieke Universiteit Leuven (KUL); they included UNCHS/KUL workshops on housing in development in Indonesia and on housing strategies and urban coherence in Algeria. Two publications on housing-an updated bibliography on housing co-operatives and a technical publication-were published.

As for indigenous construction, collaboration with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization included joint organization of preparatory meetings and preparation of relevant documents for the Second Consultation on the Wood Products Industry and for the Second Consultation on the Building Material Industry. An international workshop on international co-operation on technology transfer in the production of indigenous building materials and components in developing countries was held by the Centre, India and the USSR. Building maintenance was the topic of a national workshop organized in Singapore.

With regard to low-cost infrastructure, activities continued in a number of areas: investment in, and operation and maintenance of, infrastructure under the Urban Management Programme (see below); transport, with an expert group meeting on policy options for public transport modes in large cities of developing countries; energy; water resources, with the Centre active in eliciting relevant environmental and developmental aspects of managing water resources for urban use; storm-water drainage, with missions to Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand; managing urban solid waste; and environmental health, with technical advisory services to countries of the eastern Mediterranean and Zimbabwe.

Land, the sixth subprogramme area, saw intensified efforts to devise land policies and land-management systems and instruments that would bring about an adequate and affordable supply of land to meet all settlements functions, with particular attention to the needs of disadvantaged groups, including women, and assisting countries in efficiently exploiting their land resources in settlements development. A workshop was held on land registration and land-information systems.

As for the mobilization of financial resources for human settlements development, a number of publications were issued in 1990, including: Financing Human Settlements Development and Management in Developing Countries: A Comparative Overview of Case Studies, Employment Generation in Low-income Settlements and a report of an expert group meeting on developing a 'strategy for incorporating activities for the generation of income and employment within human settlements programmes.

Under the subprogramme on human settlements institutions, work continued in the areas of secondary cities in sub-Saharan Africa, integrated development planning and the Municipal Development Programme, including a meeting in Togo in November and a major donor consultation meeting on the Programme for sub-Saharan Africa held in Rome in December.

Special advisory services in 1990 focused on three specialized areas of human settlements development: human settlements finance; building materials and construction technology; and the application of microcomputer technology to data management. The level of requests for those services increased in view of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000. During the year, 32 missions were undertaken, while the financial allocation for 1990-1991 remained at about the same level as in the previous biennium.

Among UNCHS information activities in 1990 were the production of issues of Habitat News and the Shelter Bulletin, as well as a number of project monographs, seminar proceedings and technical publications. A World Habitat Day information kit on the 1990 theme "Shelter and urbanization", was widely distributed, as was a 60-second video spot. In the course of the year, 22 photographic and graphic exhibitions were organized in Nairobi and elsewhere in support of several meetings and seminars.

Co-ordination

Co-operation with UN agencies in 1990 included expansion of collaboration with the World Bank, particularly in the areas of the Urban Management Programme (UMP), a joint UNCHS/World Bank/UNDP activity focused on building national capacity in urban management issues; urban environmental management, a component of UMP; the development of shelter sector performance indicators; Global Strategy seminars; and country-level collaboration. Increased collaboration with UNDP was reflected, among other things, in the doubling of the size of the technical co-operation programme since 1985, UMP and a number of other efforts. Among them was a special focus chapter on "Urbanization and human development" for the first edition of UNDP's Human Development Report (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) and participation in UNDP's Inter-Agency Consultative Meeting for 1990.

Co-operation with intergovernmental organizations and NGOs intensified during 1990, which included NGO participation in the Global Strategy seminars, co-operation on women's issues, information dissemination, support by the Centre of NGO activities, and the involvement of NGOs in the Centre's activities.

Financing

During 1990, the UNCHS work programme was financed from the UN regular budget and from extrabudgetary resources. Programme support income from the execution of projects financed by UNDP and trust funds amounted to $3 million; income for the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (UNHHSF) was $8.6 million. During the year, UNCHS project delivery amounted to $34.2 million, including projects financed by UNDP ($22.6 million), by UNHHSF ($6.3 million) and by other sources ($5.3 million). Close to 65 per cent of the financing for those technical co-operation projects in 1990 came from various UNDP sources; 18 per cent was government and third-party cost sharing; 11 per cent was funds-in-trust; and 6 per cent came from UNHHSF.

Chapter X

Human rights

In 1990, the United Nations continued to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms world wide, and dealt with matters related to racial and other forms of discrimination—including religious intolerance, HIV/AIDS-related intolerance and measures against nazism—self-determination of peoples, electoral processes, administration of justice, prisoners, torture, executions, hostage-taking, genocide and mass exoduses. Other important areas of concern were freedom of speech, extreme poverty, problems of minorities, including indigenous peoples, and the rights of children, youth and women.

The 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child was opened for signature in New York on 26 January 1990 and entered into force on 2 September, following receipt of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession. In December, the General Assembly adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the 93-article International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families.

In other action, the Assembly proclaimed 1993 as the International Year for the World's Indigenous People.

Implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights—one concerning civil and political rights, the other, economic, social and cultural rights—remained a major concern of the United Nations in 1990.

A number of working groups moved forward on specific human rights issues. Among them was the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, which, having considered as its main theme the eradication of the exploitation of child labour and debt bondage, drew up a draft programme of action to eliminate the problem. The Working Group on the Draft Body of Principles and Guarantees for the Protection of Mentally-ill Persons and for the Improvement of Mental Health Care held its first session to examine the draft body of principles and guarantees. Work also continued on draft declarations on the rights of national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, and of indigenous peoples, as well as on a draft declaration on the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.

Action on a wide spectrum of human rights issues was taken by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session (Geneva, 29 January -9 March), with the adoption of 81 resolutions and 16 decisions; the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its forty-second session (Geneva, 6-31 August), adopted 34 resolutions and 26 decisions.

Discrimination

Racial discrimination

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993)

In 1983, the General Assembly proclaimed [GA res. 38/14] the 10- year period beginning on 10 December 1983 as the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. In 1990, UN efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the Decade were carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989, put forward in 1984 [YUN 1984, p. 785], and the plan approved by the Assembly in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 730] covering the remainder of the Decade, 1990-1993. In 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 474], the Assembly affirmed again the need for the implementation of the plan of activities for the remainder of the Decade.

The Commission on Human Rights in 1990 considered a report [E/CN.4/1990/36] of the Secretary-General on action taken to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, submitted pursuant to a 1989 Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 473]. He described activities of UN bodies, national legislation and institutions to combat racism and racial discrimination, seminars and training courses, the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade and the plan of activities for the Decade.

In response to a 1985 Economic and Social Council request [YUN 1985, p. 836], the Secretary-General submitted in April his annual report [E/1990/20] on the implementation of the Programme of Action, summarizing activities carried out or planned within the UN system to achieve the Decade's objectives. He provided information received from Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) received in response to his request for information on action taken to implement the Programme. In addenda [E/1990/20/Add.1-3] he presented additional replies.

Pursuant to a 1989 General Assembly request [YUN 1989, p. 474], the Secretary-General submitted in September a further report [A/45/443] on action taken to implement the Programme of Action. It contained information on consideration of the Second Decade by the Economic and Social Council and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities; co-ordinating activities; seminars, training courses and workshops; the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights"); and the situation of migrant workers and their families.

Also in September [A/45/525], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 473] of Special Rapporteur Asbjørn Eide (Norway) on the achievements made and obstacles encountered during the first and Second Decades.

Commission action. On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res 1990/13)], the Commission appealed to those States that had not done so to take the necessary steps to ratify, accede to and implement the international instruments relevant to the Decade. It urged co-operation with the Secretary-General from States and international organizations in implementing activities for the Decade for the period 1985-1989 not yet undertaken and the plan for 1990-1993, and appealed for generous contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade. Within the plan of activities for 1990-1993, the Commission selected as its topic for thematic consideration in 1991 "Ways and means of denying support to racist regimes with a view to making them change their policies", and for 1992, "Treatment of political prisoners and detainees in South Africa, particularly women and children". The Commission asked the Secretary-General to inform it of the measures taken to ensure the inclusion of sufficient resources in the 1990-1991 and 1992-1993 bienniums to provide for implementation of the activities of the Second Decade. It invited him to ensure the effective implementation of those activities proposed for the first half of the Decade that had not yet been undertaken and to proceed with the activities for the period 1990-1993.

The Commission noted with satisfaction the report on the International Seminar on Cultural Dialogue between the Countries of Origin and the Host Countries of Migrant Workers (Athens, Greece, 18-26 September 1989) [E/CN.4/1990/50] and asked the Secretary-General to distribute it widely among Governments, competent UN bodies, specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. He was asked to organize in 1990 a meeting of representatives of national institutions and organizations promoting tolerance and harmony and combating racism and racial discrimination with a view to exchanging experience on the promotion of such objectives. On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/224, approved that request. No action was taken in 1990 to organize the meeting.

The Commission decided to transmit to the General Assembly the 1989 study by the Special Rapporteur on the results achieved and the obstacles encountered during the first Decade and the first half of the Second Decade [YUN 1989, p. 473], and recommended that it be published and distributed widely.

Also on 23 February, the Commission, by 39 votes to 1, with 2 abstentions, recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Special Rapporteur's report be published and widely distributed. On 25 May, the Council, by decision 1990/245, approved that recommendation.

Sub-Commission action. On 20 August, the Sub-Commission adopted two resolutions on measures to combat racism and racial discrimination and the role of the Sub-Commission.

By the first [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res 1990/1)], the Secretary-General was asked to organize, at the Sub-Commission's 1991 session, a joint one-day meeting with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD). He was also asked to consider ways to respond to urgent situations and new trends involving racism or racial discrimination, and to prepare an outline for submission in 1991 of possible activities to increase the effectiveness of UN action to combat the phenomenon.

In its second resolution [res. 1990/21], the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1991 an overview of current trends of racism, discrimination, intolerance and xenophobia affecting vulnerable groups.

Other action. At its August session [A/45/18], CERD, the human rights treaty body monitoring the implementation of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (see below), requested the Secretary-General to arrange a one-day joint meeting in August 1991 between members of CERD and members of the Sub-Commission. The purpose of the meeting would be to exchange views on the prevention of racial discrimination.

In addition, the Commission on Human Rights had before it the annual reports on racial discrimination submitted by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) [E/CN.4/1990/37] and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) [E/CN.4/1990/038]. In July, UNESCO submitted to the Sub-Commission a report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/6] on activities concerning prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities.

Seminar. In accordance with a 1987 Commission request [YUN 1987, p. 729], the UN Centre for Human Rights, on behalf of the Secretary-General, organized a seminar on the political, historical, economic, social and cultural factors contributing to racism, racial discrimination and apartheid (Geneva, 10-14 December) [E/CN.4/1991/63]. Following consideration of the causes and current manifestations of racism, the seminar recommended that Governments continue to strengthen legal and political action against racism and racial discrimination and that the international community intensify efforts to provide increased effective and practical assistance to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and to peoples, movements and individuals struggling against those evils. It considered that the struggle against apartheid should be accorded the highest priority, and underlined the importance of education, teaching and training in eradicating racism and racial discrimination. The seminar called on States to ensure that law enforcement agencies avoided excessive use of force in situations involving disadvantaged groups, and recommended increased support to CERD; greater decentralization of UN human rights procedures and activities; holding a seminar on the mass media; and according high priority to completing the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities.

An addendum to the report [E/CN.4/1991/63/Add.1] contained background papers and introductory statements prepared by speakers and the statement of the UN Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/49.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the purpose set forth in the Charter of the United Nations of achieving international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling the proclamation by the General Assembly, in its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling also the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/14 and contained in the annex thereto, to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade,

Reaffirming the plan of activities for the period 1990-1993, to be implemented by the Secretary-General in accordance with General Assembly resolution 42/47 of 30 November 1987, to which it is annexed, and recalling the activities which were proposed for the period 1985-1989,

Conscious of the responsibility conferred upon it by the General Assembly for co-ordinating and, in particular, evaluating the activities undertaken in the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Bearing in mind, in particular, its mandate under General Assembly resolution 41/94 of 4 December 1986 to submit to the Assembly, during the period of the Second Decade, annual reports on the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Noting that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the first years of the Second Decade have not been attained, and that millions of human beings continue to be victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Welcoming the recent Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, unanimously adopted by the General Assembly at its sixteenth special session, which offers guidelines on how to end apartheid through genuine negotiations,

Noting with satisfaction the convening of a United Nations seminar on cultural dialogue between the countries of origin and the host countries of migrant workers, at Athens from 18 to 26 September 1989,

Noting with deep concern that the official invitations being extended to the President of South Africa by some countries could be construed to mean that pressure against the apartheid regime has been relaxed,

Stressing the need to continue the co-ordination of activities undertaken by various United Nations bodies and specialized agencies for the purpose of implementing the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

1. Reaffirms the importance of achieving the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in particular the recommendations contained therein;

3. Welcomes the independence of Namibia, which brought to an end a regime and policies based on racism in that country and hence contributed significantly to the attainment of the objectives of the Second Decade;

4. Also welcomes the emerging political climate inside South Africa, which has the potential to create conditions that are conducive to the abolition of the system of apartheid in that country;

5. Calls upon Governments to encourage positive change in South Africa based on the guidelines set out in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, in particular by maintaining existing measures against South Africa until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible change;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to continue with the implementation of the activities for the period 1990-1993, and requests him, in that context, to continue to accord the highest priority to measures to combat apartheid;

7. Also invites all Governments to take or continue to take all necessary measures to combat all forms of racism and racial discrimination and to support the work of the Second Decade by making contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, in order to ensure further implementation of the activities for the Second Decade;

8. Reaffirms the need to continue giving particular attention to the specific activities of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade that are directed towards the elimination of apartheid, which is the most destructive and vicious form of institutionalized racism;

9. Also reaffirms the importance of public information activities in combating racism and racial discrimination and in mobilizing public support for the objectives of the Second Decade and, in that context, commends the efforts of the Co-ordinator for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the effective and immediate implementation of the activities proposed for the first half of the Decade that have not yet been undertaken;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General, in his reports, to continue to pay special attention to the situation of migrant workers and their families;

12. Reaffirms the need for continued co-ordination of the full range of programmes being implemented by the United Nations system as they relate to the objectives of the Second Decade;

13. Decides to continue to accord the highest priority each year to the agenda item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/49

25 May 1990 Meeting 14 42-0-10 (recorded vote)

Draft by Zambia, for African States (E/1990/L.22), orally revised; agenda item 2.

Meeting numbers. ESC 5, 7-10, 14.

In favour: Algeria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Finland, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: None.

Abstaining: France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom.

The eleventh preambular paragraph, as orally revised, was adopted by a recorded vote of 36 to 8, with 7 abstentions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/105.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective set forth in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, on the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, on the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling further the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983,

Bearing in mind the Report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced that the Second World Conference represented a positive contribution by the international community towards attaining the objectives of the Decade, through its adoption of a Declaration and an operational Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were not attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling its resolutions 39/16 of 23 November 1984, 42/47 of 30 November 1987, 43/91 of 8 December 1988 and 44/52 of 8 December 1989,

Emphasizing once again the necessity of attaining the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General and his report submitted within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Firmly convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained international measures for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination and the total eradication of apartheid in South Africa,

Regretting that certain activities of the Second Decade scheduled for the period 1985-1989 have not been implemented owing to a lack of financial resources,

Recognizing the importance of strengthening, where necessary, national legislation and institutions for the promotion of racial harmony,

Aware of the importance and the magnitude of the phenomenon of migrant workers, as well as the efforts undertaken by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and their families,

Welcoming the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, unanimously adopted by the General Assembly at its sixteenth special session, on 14 December 1989, which offers guidelines on how to end apartheid,

1. Declares once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, particularly in their institutionalized form, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Decides that the international community, in general, and the United Nations, in particular, should continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and intensify their efforts, during the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and in occupied territories and territories under alien domination;

3. Appeals to all Governments and to international and non-governmental organizations to increase and intensify their activities to combat racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and to provide relief and assistance to the victims of these evils;

4. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General containing information on the activities of Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as United Nations organs, to give effect to the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

5. Notes and commends the efforts made to co-ordinate all the programmes currently under implementation by the United Nations system that relate to the objectives of the Second Decade, and encourages the Co-ordinator for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to continue his efforts;

6. Welcomes the upcoming publication of the global compilation of national legislation against racism and racial discrimination and requests the Secretary-General to transmit it to Governments as soon as possible;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the study on the effects of racial discrimination on the children of minorities, in particular those of migrant workers, in the field of education, training and employment, and to submit, inter alia, specific recommendations for the implementation of measures to combat the effects of that discrimination;

8. Recalls the reports of the Secretary-General on the study on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination;

9. Welcomes the progress made in preparing model legislation for the guidance of Governments in the enactment of further legislation against racial discrimination, and requests the Secretary-General to finalize the text of the model legislation and the handbook of recourse procedures for victims of racial discrimination and to publish and distribute those texts as soon as possible;

10. Renews its invitation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and education activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education;

11. Takes note of the study by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on the results achieved and obstacles encountered during the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the first half of the Second Decade;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to publish the study of the Special Rapporteur and distribute it on as wide a scale as possible;

13. Considers that all the parts of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination should receive equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Second Decade;

14. Regrets that part of the programme for the period 1983-1989 has not yet been implemented because of lack of adequate resources, as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1990;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to implement immediately those activities scheduled for the period 1985-1989 not yet carried out and to proceed with the implementation of the activities scheduled for the biennium 1990-1991;

16. Affirms once again the need for the implementation of the plan of activities proposed for the period 1990-1993 contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 42/47;

17. Requests the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 42/47 and 44/52, to ensure that the necessary and additional resources are included in the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 and in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 to provide for the implementation of the activities of the Second Decade;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to inform the General Assembly of the steps taken in regard to the provisions of paragraph 17 above;

19. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to accord the highest priority, in executing the plan of activities, to measures for combating apartheid;

20. Calls upon Governments to encourage positive change in South Africa based on the guidelines set out in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, in particular by maintaining existing measures against South Africa until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible change;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to accord special attention to the situation of migrant workers and their families and to include regularly in his reports all information on such workers;

22. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate fully in the activities scheduled for the periods 1985-1989 and 1990-1993 and not yet carried out, by intensifying and broadening their efforts to bring about the speedy elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

23. Considers that voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination are indispensable for the implementation of the above-mentioned programmes;

24. Notes once again with regret that the present situation of the Trust Fund is not encouraging;

25. Strongly appeals, therefore, to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund, and to this end requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake appropriate contacts and initiatives to encourage contributions;

26. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Second Decade and reiterates its request to the Economic and Social Council, throughout the Decade, to submit annually to the General Assembly a report containing, inter alia:

(a) An enumeration of the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade, including the activities of Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations;

(b) A review and appraisal of those activities;

(c) Its suggestions and recommendations;

27. Decides to keep the item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination" on its agenda throughout the Second Decade and to consider it as a matter of the highest priority at its forty-sixth session.

General Assembly resolution 45/105

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/754) without vote, 2 November (meeting 29); draft by Sierra Leone, for African Group (A/C.3/45/L.5), orally revised: agenda item 98.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 3-10, 18, 28, 29; plenary 68.

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, there were 128 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965 [GA res. 2106 A (XX)] and in force since 1969 [YUN 1969, p. 488]. Bahrain and Saint Lucia became parties in 1990.

The Secretary-General presented his annual report [A/45/402] to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 August.

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/13)]¹, the Commission on Human Rights appealed to those States that had not done so to ratify, accede to and implement the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/89.

Status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination
The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted since 1973, the most recent of which is resolution 43/95 of 8 December 1988,

Expressing its satisfaction at the entry into force, on 3 December 1982, of the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to receive and consider communications from individuals or groups of individuals under article 14 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have ratified the Convention or acceded thereto;

3. Reaffirms once again its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions are necessary for the realization of the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

4. Requests those States which have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto;

5. Calls upon the States parties to the Convention to consider the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report concerning the status of the Convention, in accordance with Assembly resolution 2106 A (XX) of 21 December 1965.

General Assembly resolution 45/89

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/747) without vote, 2 November (meeting 29); 38-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.8); agenda item 91.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 3-10, 18, 28, 29; plenary 68.

Implementation of the Convention

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held its thirty-eighth session in 1990 (Geneva, 6-24 August) [A/45/18]. Normally, the Committee held two 3-week sessions per year, but due to the critical financial situation arising from non-payment of contributions by a number of States parties, it was unable to hold its spring session.

Most of CERD's work was devoted to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions. It considered reports submitted by 21 States parties under article 9 of the Convention. In its report, CERD summarized, on a country-by-country basis, the views expressed, observations made and questions asked by its members on the reports of the States parties concerned, as well as the substantive elements of the replies given by the representatives of the States parties present at the meetings.

CERD also continued to consider, in conformity with article 14 of the Convention, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violations of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. Fourteen States parties-Algeria, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden, Uruguay-had declared such recognition. The Committee considered the admissibility of one communication in 1990.

Under article 15 of the Convention, the Secretary-General transmitted to CERD documents relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Committee approved the appointment of the members of its three working groups-Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Territories, including Gibraltar; Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories; and African Territories-to examine the documentation. It decided, owing to lack of time resulting from the cancellation of the spring session, to take note of the relevant documentation and information submitted to it and to postpone their consideration until its next session.

The Committee also considered activities relating to the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

The Committee adopted two general recommendations. One recommended that the identification of an individual as being a member of a particular racial or ethnic group or groups be based on self-identification, and the other that representatives of States, organizations and groups respect the independence of experts.

Regarding CERD's critical financial situation, the Commission on Human Rights, on 27 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/23)], recommended that the Secretary-General seek to obtain the concurrence of States parties to the Convention to the establishment of a "contingency reserve fund". The fund would consist of that portion of State party over-assessments for the elapsed year which had been, in the past, automatically credited back to the States parties concerned. If the States parties agreed, the fund would be used to finance, on a contingency basis, up to two meetings of the Committee in the following year, for which State payments had not been received in that calendar year, with the contingency fund being reimbursed in full once payments by those States were received.

Pursuant to a 1989 Assembly request [YUN 1989, p. 477], the Secretary-General, in October, presented a report [A/45/579] on the question of financing the expenses of CERD members. He stated that, as at 30 September, outstanding assessments and arrears totalled $147,099.

Thirteenth meeting of States parties

At their thirteenth meeting (New York, 16 January), the States parties to the Convention elected nine members of CERD to replace those whose terms expired on 19 January [CERD/SP/37 & Add.1], and reviewed the responsibilities of States parties for the expenses of CERD members under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention [CEKD/SP/38].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/88.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and its resolutions on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as its other relevant resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Reiterating the importance of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which is the most widely accepted human rights instrument adopted under the auspices of the United Nations,

Aware of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Reiterating Once again the need to intensify the struggle for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination throughout the world, especially the elimination of the system of apartheid in South Africa,

Emphasizing the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures in order to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Recalling the urgent appeals made by the Secretary-General, the General Assembly, the meetings of States parties to the Convention and the Committee itself to the States parties to honour their financial obligations under the Convention,

Gravely concerned that, despite those appeals and other efforts, the meeting schedule of the Committee has been interrupted and the proper functioning of the Committee continues to be affected,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts made by the members of the Committee to explore ways and means to overcome the Committee's current financial crisis,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the question of financing the expenses of the members of the Committee,

1. Expresses its profound concern at the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have still not fulfilled their financial obligations, which led to the cancellation of the spring 1990 session of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

2. Expresses once again its concern that such a situation led to a further delay in the discharge of the substantive obligations of the Committee under the Convention;

3. Commends the Committee for its work with regard to the implementation of the Convention and the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-eighth session;

5. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligations under article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention and to submit in due time their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention;

6. Strongly appeals to all States parties, especially those in arrears, to fulfil their financial obligations under article 8, paragraph 6, of the Convention and to pay their outstanding contributions and, if possible, their contributions for 1991 before 1 February 1991, so as to enable the Committee to meet regularly;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to seek to obtain, at the earliest opportunity, the concurrence of the States parties to the convention to the establishment of a "contingency reserve fund", as envisaged in Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/25 of 27 February 1990;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to explore other possibilities of establishing a more secure basis for future financing of all the costs of the Committee;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties which are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

10. Decides to consider at its forty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of racial discrimination", the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee and the next report of the Committee.

General Assembly resolution 45/88

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/747) without vote, 1 November (meeting 28); 30-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.7); agenda item 91.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 3-10, 18, 28; plenary 68.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious intolerance

In January, Special Rapporteur Angelo Vidal d'Almeida Ribeiro (Portugal), appointed in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 689], submitted a report [E/CN.4/1990/46] to the Commission on Human Rights on the implementation of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief [GA res. 36/55]. His report contained allegations transmitted to the Governments concerned regarding situations which seemed to be inconsistent with the provisions of the Declaration and replies received from them. It also contained an analysis of the information gathered since his appointment regarding the factors hampering the implementation of the Declaration and the various situations in which religious intolerance and discrimination could lead to the violation of other human rights.

The Special Rapporteur pointed out that the most important factors hampering the implementation of the Declaration were: the existence of legal provisions that ran counter to the spirit and letter of the Declaration; practices by governmental authorities contradicting not only the principles embodied in international instruments but even provisions enshrined in domestic law which prohibited discrimination on religious grounds; and the persistence of political, economic and cultural factors which resulted from complex historical processes and which were at the basis of current expressions of religious intolerance. He said that the last few years had seen the emergence of sectarian and intransigent attitudes regarding religious matters. That phenomenon had not only affected the freedoms and rights of minority communities in the countries where they had occurred but had also become a destabilizing factor internationally and a source of tension and conflict between States. The Special Rapporteur noted the positive impact of the policy of openness and transparency in religious freedom and manifestations of worship in Eastern Europe.

The Special Rapporteur expressed concern over the alarming persistence of infringements of other human rights arising out of attacks on freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, notably the growing number of extrajudicial killings that had allegedly taken place in the context of clashes between religious groups or between such groups and security forces. The lack of a genuine distinction between religions, sects and religious associations posed serious problems.

Although there were a number of mandatory norms in the area of freedom of religion or belief, the Special Rapporteur suggested that the persistence of the problem of intolerance and discrimination called for the preparation of an international instrument which dealt specifically with the elimination of the phenomenon. For the purpose of elaborating such an international instrument, the international community might usefully draw on the principles laid down in the Declaration, as well as on the practical experience acquired in recent years by the Commission. Advantage should be taken of the advisory services made available by the United Nations in the area of human rights.

Commission action. As requested by the General Assembly in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 478], the Commission continued in 1990 to consider measures to implement the 1981 Declaration. On 2 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/27)], it urged States, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and internationally accepted instruments, to provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies where there was intolerance or discrimination based on religion or belief; to combat intolerance; to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief; and to examine the supervision and training of their civil servants, educators and other public officials to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, they respected different religions and beliefs and did not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs. It invited the United Nations University and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes and studies on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration in all official UN languages and in national languages and to make the text available for use by the UN information centres and other interested bodies. It welcomed the efforts of NGOs to promote the implementation of the Declaration and requested the Secretary-General to invite them to consider what further role they could envisage playing in the dissemination of the Declaration in national and local languages. It welcomed a 1989 working paper [YUN 1989, p. 478] prepared by Theo van Boven (Netherlands), containing a compilation of provisions relevant to the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, as well as the issues and factors to be considered before any drafting of a further binding international instrument.

The Commission decided to extend for a further two years the Special Rapporteur's mandate and called on Governments to co-operate with him. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council approved, by decision 1990/229, the Commission's decision and the request to the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/136.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling its resolution 44/131 of 15 December 1989, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration,

Encouraged by the efforts being made by the Commission on Human Rights and by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to study relevant developments affecting the implementation of the Declaration,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/27 of 2 March 1990 and Economic and Social Council decision 1990/229 of 25 May 1990, by which the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate was extended for two years,

Recognizing that it is desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and that both Governments and non-governmental organizations have an important role to play in this domain,

Emphasizing that non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups at every level have an important role to play in the promotion of tolerance and the protection of freedom of religion or belief by, inter alia, engaging in the examination of the most effective means to promote the implementation of the Declaration,

Conscious of the importance of education in ensuring tolerance of religion and belief,

Seriously concerned that intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief continue to occur in many parts of the world and that in some respects the incidence thereof has increased,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

Noting that the tenth anniversary of the proclamation by the General Assembly of the Declaration will occur in 1991 and that this will provide an opportunity to reinforce efforts aimed at the effective implementation of the Declaration,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a right guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States, therefore, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and with such internationally accepted instruments as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, to provide, where they have not already done so, adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies where there is intolerance or discrimination based on religion or belief;

3. Urges all States to take all appropriate measures to combat intolerance and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and, in this context, to examine where necessary the supervision and raining of their civil servants, educators and other public officials to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, they respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

4. Culls upon all States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief, and to establish and maintain places for these purposes;

5. Also calls upon all States in accordance with their national legislation to exert utmost efforts to ensure that religious places and shrines are fully respected and protected;

6. Urges all States to consider, in the context of the tenth anniversary in 1991 of the proclamation of the Declaration by the General Assembly, what further measures might be taken at the national and regional levels to promote the effective implementation of the Declaration;

7. Invites the United Nations University and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes and studies on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

8. Considers it desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and to ensure, especially in the context of the tenth anniversary of the proclamation of the Declaration, that appropriate measures are taken to this end in the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration, in all the official languages of the United Nations, and to take all appropriate measures to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres, as well as by other interested bodies;

10. Welcomes the efforts of non-governmental organizations to promote the implementation of the Declaration, including the Second International Conference on Ways to Promote the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, held at Warsaw from 14 to 18 May 1989;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to invite interested non-governmental organizations to consider what further role they could envisage playing in the implementation of the Declaration and in its dissemination in national and local languages;

12. Urges all States to consider disseminating the text of the Declaration in their respective national languages and to facilitate its dissemination in national and local languages;

13. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council, based on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session, to renew for two years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

14. Notes that the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the working paper prepared by Mr. Theo van Boven, member of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, which contained a compilation of provisions relevant to the elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief, as well as the issues and factors to be considered before any drafting of a further binding international instrument, and emphasizes, in this connection, the relevance of General Assembly resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986 entitled "Setting international standards in the field of human rights";

15. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration and to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance" and to consider the report of the Commission on Human Rights under that item.

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/65)], the Commission on Human Rights endorsed a 1989 Sub-Commission decision [YUN 1989, p. 482] to entrust Luis Varela Quirós (Costa Rica) with a study on problems and causes of discrimination against people infected with HIV or people with AIDS.

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/239, authorized the study.

In August, the Special Rapporteur presented a preliminary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/9] on discrimination against HIV-infected people or people with AIDS, in which he outlined some of the main issues which the study would address, among them HIV/AIDS-related discrimination, the imposition of limitations on human rights for individuals who had AIDS or were HIV-infected, and AIDS control measures affecting the exercise of human rights.

In an overview of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, the Special Rapporteur stated that, as of mid-1990, over 250,000 cases of AIDS had been reported to the World Health Organization (WHO). However, because of under-recognition, under-reporting and delays in reporting, WHO estimated that close to 700,000 AIDS cases might have occurred. Also as of mid-1990, WHO estimated that from 6 million to 8 million HIV infections had occurred world wide. (See also PART THREE, Chapter XI.)

On 30 August [dec. 1990/118], the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to give to the Special Rapporteur any assistance he might require. It asked the Special Rapporteur to take into account in his future work the views expressed during the debate on his preliminary report and decided to continue consideration of the progress report in 1991.

Measures against nazism

On 6 March (E/1990/22 (res. 1990/46)), the Commission condemned all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist or neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror, systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which had such consequences. It called on States to ensure the thorough investigation and the detection, arrest, prosecution or extradition and punishment of all war criminals and persons guilty of crimes against humanity who had not been brought before a court and appropriately punished. It also called on States to promote, especially among the young, respect for international law, as well as human rights and fundamental freedoms.

In response to a 1988 General Assembly request [YUN 1988, p. 491], the Secretary-General in March [A/45/170-E/1990/32] summarized the comments of nine Governments on measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror.

Civil and political rights

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

As at 31 December 1990, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966 [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] and in force since 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 609], had been ratified or acceded to by 92 and 51 States, respectively. In 1990, Burundi, Malta, the Republic of Korea and Somalia acceded to the Convention, and Malta, the Republic of Korea and Somalia acceded to the Optional Protocol (see also pp. 628-31).

The Second Optional Protocol, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty, was adopted by the General Assembly in 1989 [GA res. 44/128]. In accordance with the provisions of its article 8, the Protocol would enter into force three months after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession. As at 31 December, Australia, New Zealand, Portugal and Sweden had ratified or acceded to the Protocol; as at the same date, Belgium, Costa Rica, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Honduras, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Uruguay and Venezuela had signed it.

In his annual report to the General Assembly [A/45/403], the Secretary-General provided the status of the Covenant and its Protocols as at 1 August 1990 (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/20)1], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States that had not done so to become parties to the Covenant and to consider acceding to the first Optional Protocol. It invited States parties to the Covenant to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41. The Commission stressed to States parties the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlined the necessity for strict observance of the agreed condition and procedure for derogation under article 4. The Secretary-General was asked to report on the status of the Covenant and its Protocols in 1991.

Implementation

The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, met three times in 1990, at its thirty-eighth (New York, 19 March-6 April) and thirty-ninth (Geneva, 9-27 July) sessions [A/45/40, vols. I&II] and at its fortieth session (Geneva, 22 October-9 November) [A/46/40].

During its sessions, the Committee considered the reports of 15 States, submitted under article 40 of the Covenant—Argentina, Canada, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Finland, Federal Republic of Germany, Morocco, Nicaragua, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, San Marino, Spain, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, Viet Nam, Zaire. It reviewed communications by individuals claiming that their rights enumerated in the Covenant had been violated. The Committee adopted views on 11 cases and declared 22 cases inadmissible.

On 24 July, the Committee adopted a general comment on article 23 of the Covenant, on protection by society and the State of the family, which addressed, among other things, the right of men and women to marry and found a family, and the equality of rights and responsibilities of spouses as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.

In February [E/1990/44], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council the Committee's general comments on the Covenant's non-discrimination clauses, adopted in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 485].

Self-determination of peoples

The Commission on Human Rights, by six resolutions adopted in 1990, reaffirmed peoples' right to self-determination in Afghanistan [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/5)], southern Africa [res. 1990/8], Cambodia [res. 1990/91], occupied Palestine [res. 1990/6], Panama [res. 1990/10] and Western Sahara [res. 1990/4]. The Commission adopted a seventh resolution [ITS. 1990/7] on the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination.

In a September report [A/45/500], the Secretary-General summarized action taken by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council on the right of people to self-determination. He also summarized replies received from Governments, UN agencies and organs, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs in response to his request for information on the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1990, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on the right to self-determination, a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

On 14 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/130.

Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in the importance of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Reaffirming also the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, national sovereignty and territorial integrity and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples as imperatives for the full enjoyment of all human rights,

Reaffirming further the obligation of all Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial and foreign domination,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) and all relevant resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Welcoming Namibia's attainment of independence,

Bearing in mind the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption at Harare on 21 August 1989 of the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa and its subsequent endorsement by the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989, as well as the report of the Monitoring Group of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa, and the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1989,

Bearing in mind also the outcome of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel, held at Vienna from 11 to 13 July 1983,

Taking note of resolution CM/Res.1272(LII) on South Africa adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its fifty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 3 to 8 July 1990 [A/45/482],

Reaffirming that the system of apartheid imposed on the South African people constitutes a violation of the fundamental rights of that people, a crime against humanity and a constant threat to international peace and security,

Reaffirming also its resolution 39/2 of 28 September 1984 and recalling Security Council resolution 554(1984) of 17 August 1984, in which the Council rejected the so-called "new constitution" as null and void, and Council resolution 569(1985) of 26 July 1985,

Alarmed by the continuing acts of assassination and abductions of members and leaders of the national liberation movements in Africa and elsewhere by hit squads deployed and paid by the racist regime,

Welcoming its resolution 44/244, adopted by consensus on 17 September 1990, in which, inter alia, it called upon the South African regime to abide fully by the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Noting that, while some significant political measures in the right direction have been undertaken by the apartheid régime, such as the lifting of the ban on political organizations and the release of some political prisoners, apartheid is still firmly in place,

Welcoming also the ongoing talks between the African National Congress of South Africa and the South African regime aimed at establishing a political environment suitable for negotiations towards the dismantling of apartheid, and the results achieved thus far as contained in the Groote Schuur Minute and the Pretoria Minute,

Noting with concern that political trials and the detention of political activists continue unabated in South Africa and in total disregard of the agreements reached in talks between the régime and the African National Congress of South Africa,

Deeply concerned about the current wave of violence in South Africa resulting from the continued existence of apartheid policies, practices and structures as well as from actions of those forces opposed to the democratic transformation of the country,

Gravely concerned about the apartheid régime's continued use of the death penalty against South African patriots with contemptuous disregard for appeals for clemency from the international community, including the General Assembly,

Considering the concerted campaign by the President of the apartheid régime to project himself as a reformer in order to ward off the further imposition of sanctions by the international community,

Deeply concerned about the continued terrorist acts of aggression committed by the Pretoria régime against independent African States in the region, in particular the unprovoked attacks against Mozambique, Zambia and Zimbabwe,

Deeply indignant at the persistent policy of hostility by the racist regime of South Africa against Angola, which constitutes an act of aggression against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country,

Reaffirming the national unity and territorial integrity of the Comoros,

Recalling the Political Declaration adopted by the first Conference of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the League of Arab States, held at Cairo from 7 to 9 March 1977,

Recalling also the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine,

Considering that the denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, sovereignty, independence and return to Palestine and the brutal suppression by the Israeli forces of the heroic uprising, the intifadah, of the Palestinian population in the occupied territories, as well as repeated Israeli aggression against the population of the region, constitute a serious threat to international peace and security,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolutions 605(1987) of 22 December 1987, 607(1988) of 5 January

1988 and 608(1988) of 14 January 1988 and General Assembly resolutions 43/21 of 3 November 1988, 43/177 of 15 December 1988 and 44/2 of 6 October 1989, on the deterioration of the situation of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories,

Deeply concerned and alarmed at the deplorable consequences of Israel's acts of aggression against Lebanon and its practices in and its continuing occupation of parts of southern Lebanon, as well as its refusal to implement the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978,

1. Calls upon all States to implement fully and faithfully all the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by peoples under colonial and foreign domination;

2. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign occupation by all available means, including armed struggle;

3. Reaffirms also the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and all peoples under foreign occupation and colonial domination to self-determination, national independence, territorial integrity, national unity and sovereignty without foreign interference;

4. Strongly condemns those Governments that do not recognize the right to self-determination and independence of all peoples still under colonial domination, alien subjugation and foreign occupation, notably the peoples of Africa and the Palestinian people;

5. Calls upon Israel to refrain from deporting any Palestinian civilians from the occupied Palestinian territories and to release immediately all Palestinian detainees;

6. Strongly condemns also the constant and deliberate violations of the fundamental rights of the Palestinian people, as well as the expansionist activities of Israel in the Middle East, which constitute an obstacle to the achievement of self-determination and independence by the Palestinian people and a threat to peace and stability in the region;

7. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other international organizations, to extend their support to the Palestinian people through its sole and legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization, in its struggle to regain its right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

8. Urgently appeals to all States, the United Nations system and other international organizations to assist in the reconstruction and economic development of Namibia;

9. Condemns the policy of "bantustanization" and reiterates its support for the oppressed people of South Africa in its just and legitimate struggle against the racist minority régime of Pretoria;

10. Reaffirms its rejection of the so-called "new constitution" as null and void, and reiterates that peace in South Africa can be guaranteed only by the establishment of majority rule through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and undivided South Africa;

11. Commends the mass democratic movement in South Africa for the tremendous advances scored during the recent campaign of defiance of unjust apartheid laws in the ongoing struggle against apartheid;

12. Welcomes the unconditional release of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners, but condemns the continuing practice of detentions and imprisonment of political activists by the apartheid régime;

13. Strongly urges the apartheid régime to respond positively to the provisions of the Declaration of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Organization of African Unity on Southern Africa on the question of South Africa and the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa by releasing unconditionally all political prisoners and by halting all political trials as a means of creating an environment conducive to the peaceful resolution of the South African situation;

14. Determines that the South African racist régime must take additional steps to implement the profound and irreversible changes called for in the Declaration on Apartheid;

15. Calls for an immediate end to violence and calls upon the South African régime to take urgent action to end it, specifically by dismantling the apartheid structures and ensuring that effective and impartial action is taken by its security forces, and calls upon all parties concerned to contribute to the establishment of a climate free of violence;

16. Strongly condemns the establishment and use of armed terrorist groups by South Africa with a view to pitting them against the national liberation movements and destabilizing the legitimate Governments of southern Africa;

17. Calls once again for the full implementation of the provisions of the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Sanctions against Racist South Africa;

18. Again demands the immediate application of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa, imposed under Security Council resolution 418(1977) of 4 November 1977, by all countries and more particularly by those countries which maintain military and nuclear co-operation with the racist Pretoria régime and continue to supply it with related matériel;

19. Strongly condemns the policy of those Western States, Israel and other States whose political, economic, military, nuclear, strategic, cultural and sports relations with the racist minority régime of South Africa encourage that régime to persist in its suppression of the aspirations of the people to self-determination and independence;

20. Denounces the collusion between Israel and South Africa and expresses support for the Declaration of the International Conference on the Alliance between South Africa and Israel;

21. Strongly condemns the persistent policy of hostility and aggression pursued by racist South Africa against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola, which constitutes a violation of the New York accord of 22 December 1988;

22. Demands that the Pretoria régime respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola and the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of that State, and demands the immediate payment of compensation to Angola for damages caused, in accordance with the relevant decisions and resolutions of the Security Council;

23. Commends the Government of Angola for its political will, diplomatic flexibility and constructive spirit in the search for a negotiated solution to the problems of southern Africa;

24. Strongly reaffirms its solidarity with the independent African countries and national liberation movements that are victims of murderous acts of aggression and destabilization by the racist régime of Pretoria, and calls upon the international community to render increased assistance and support to these countries in order to enable them to strengthen their defence capacity, defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity and peacefully rebuild and develop;

25. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its past acts of destabilization against Lesotho, and strongly urges the international community to continue to extend maximum assistance to Lesotho to enable it to fulfil its international humanitarian obligations towards refugees and to use its influence on the racist régime of South Africa so that it desists from such acts against Lesotho;

26. Demands that the racist régime of South Africa pay full and adequate compensation to Botswana for the loss of life and damage to property resulting from the unprovoked and unwarranted military attacks of 14 June 1985, 19 May 1986 and 20 June 1988 on the capital of Botswana;

27. Strongly condemns the escalation of massacres of defenceless people and the continuing destruction of economic and social infrastructures perpetrated against Mozambique by armed terrorists, who are an extension of the South African army of aggression;

28. Reaffirms all relevant resolutions adopted by the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations on the question of Western Sahara, including General Assembly resolution 44/88 of 11 December 1989, and calls upon the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations to continue their efforts to find a just and lasting solution to the question;

29. Notes the contacts between the Government of the Comoros and the Government of France in the search for a just solution to the problem of the integration of the Comorian island of Mayotte into the Comoros, in accordance with the resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations on the question;

30. Strongly condemns the continued violation of the human rights of the peoples still under colonial domination and alien subjugation;

31. Calls for a substantial increase in all forms of assistance given by all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to the victims of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid through national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity;

32. Reaffirms that the practice of using mercenaries against sovereign States and national liberation movements constitutes a criminal act, and calls upon the Governments of all countries to enact legislation declaring the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territories and the transit of mercenaries through their territories to be punishable offences and prohibiting their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General;

33. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all persons detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence, full respect for their fundamental individual rights and compliance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, under which no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment;

34. Expresses its appreciation for the material and other forms of assistance that peoples under colonial rule continue to receive from Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations, and calls for a substantial increase in that assistance;

35. Urges all States, the specialized agencies and other competent organizations of the United Nations system to do their utmost to ensure the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to intensify their efforts to support peoples under colonial, foreign and racist domination in their just struggle for self-determination and independence;

36. Requests the Secretary-General to give maximum publicity to the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and to give the widest possible publicity to the struggle of oppressed peoples for the achievement of their self-determination and national independence and to report periodically to the General Assembly on his activities in this regard;

37. Decides to consider this item at its forty-sixth session on the basis of the reports on the strengthening of assistance to colonial territories and peoples that Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations have been requested to submit.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/131.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth and forty-sixth sessions,

Reiterating its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988 and 44/80 of 8 December 1989,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights".

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/759) without vote, 5 November (meeting 31); 27-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.9); agenda item 103.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 3-10, 18, 31; plenary 68.

Afghanistan

On 16 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/5)], the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the complete withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 490]. Emphasizing the importance of the 1988 Geneva Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan [YUN 1988, p. 185], it called for their implementation by all parties concerned. The Commission reaffirmed the right of the Afghan people to self-determination and called on all parties concerned to work for a comprehensive political solution and the creation of conditions to enable refugees to return voluntarily. It renewed its appeal to all States and national and international organizations to continue to extend humanitarian relief assistance with a view to alleviating the hardship of the Afghan refugees, and called on all States to provide adequate resources to the Co-ordinator for United Nations Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes relating to Afghanistan for the speedy repatriation and rehabilitation of the Afghan refugees in their country, as well as for its economic and social reconstruction. The Secretary-General was requested to encourage and facilitate the early realization of a comprehensive political settlement.

Cambodia

On 19 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/9)], by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 6 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reiterated its condemnation of the persistent occurrence of gross and flagrant violations of human rights in Cambodia and emphasized that the Cambodian people should be enabled to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination through free, fair and democratic elections under UN supervision.

It reiterated its conviction that, among other things, the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Cambodia, the cessation of outside military assistance, the creation of an interim administering authority, the promotion of national reconciliation and the non-return to the policies and practices of the recent past were the principal components of a lasting political settlement in the country. The Commission called on all parties concerned to resolve the problem in Cambodia and to ensure the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, neutral and non-aligned status of the country. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1990, continue to consider and take measures for the early implementation of relevant recommendations with a view to achieving the full enjoyment of the fundamental human rights and freedoms of the Cambodian people, particularly the right to self-determination.

In May 1990, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1990/256.

Right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 25 May 1990, the Economic and Social Council, deeply concerned about the protection of human rights in Cambodia, endorsed Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/9 of 19 February 1990 and reaffirmed Council decisions 1981/154 of 8 May 1981, 1982/143 of 7 May 1982, 1983/155 of 27 May 1983, 1984/148 of 24 May 1984, 1985/155 of 30 May 1985, 1986/146 of 23 May 1986, 1987/155 of 29 May 1987, 1988/143 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/156 of 24 May 1989, in which the Council reiterated its call for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Cambodia in order to allow the people of Cambodia to exercise their fundamental freedoms and human rights, including the right to self-determination as contained in the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 July 1981 and in General Assembly resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982, 38/3 of 27 October 1983, 39/5 of 30 October 1984, 40/7 of 5 November 1985, 41/6 of 21 October 1986, 42/3 of 14 October 1987, 43/19 of 3 November 1988 and 44/22 of 16 November 1989.

The Council noted the announced withdrawal of foreign forces from Cambodia and the subsequent reports that some foreign forces have returned to Cambodia. It affirmed that a complete withdrawal of foreign forces must be verified by the United Nations within the framework of a comprehensive political settlement. It called on all parties concerned to engage in negotiations aimed at bringing an immediate end to the conflict in Cambodia and achieving a comprehensive political settlement, providing, inter alia, for the restoration of the human rights of the Cambodian people, including their inalienable right to self-determination in free, fair and democratic elections under direct United Nations administration in which all Cambodian parties should be allowed to participate, and also ensuring a non-return to the universally condemned policies and practices of a recent past.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the unresolved problem of the Cambodian civilians still stranded in Thailand as a result of the continuing hostilities in Cambodia, caused by foreign armed intervention and occupation.

The Council also expressed its grave concern at the continued violations of fundamental human rights, the principles of international law and the Charter of the United Nations, perpetrated against the Cambodian people, particularly the shelling of Cambodian civilian camps along the border.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council any further violations of human rights and of humanitarian principles perpetrated against the Cambodian people, and also requested him to continue to monitor closely the developments in Cambodia and to intensify efforts, including the use of his good offices, to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodian problem and the restoration of fundamental human rights in Cambodia.

The Council stressed that any Government elected through free, fair and democratic elections in Cambodia should take effective measures to guarantee the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Cambodian people.

The Council recalled the communiqués issued by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 January 1985 and 15 February 1985. The Council noted the visits undertaken by the Chairman and members of the Committee to a number of countries in 1989 in an effort to find a comprehensive political solution to the Cambodian problem. The Council also noted with appreciation the ongoing efforts of the Committee and requested that the Committee continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference.

Economic and Social Council decision 1990/256
30-4-18 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70/Add.1) by recorded vote (31-4-15), 22 May (meeting 18); 33-nation draft (E/1990/C.2/L.14), orally corrected; agenda item 3.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bahamas, Bahrain, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Ecuador, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Indonesia, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Liberia, Mexico, Niger, Pakistan, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Against: Cuba, India, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Algeria, Bulgaria, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Lesotho, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Panama

On 20 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/10)], by a roll-call vote of 14 to 8, with 17 abstentions, the Commission strongly deplored the foreign military intervention in Panama, which constituted a flagrant violation of international law and of Panama's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. It demanded the immediate cessation of the intervention and called on States to uphold and respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Panama.

South Africa

On 19 February [res. 1990/8], by a roll-call vote of 32 to 2, with 9 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and its national liberation movements for the elimination of apartheid and urged all States to assist them. It strongly condemned the continued violations of the human rights of peoples still under colonial and foreign domination, the perpetuation of the racist minority regime in South Africa, the policy of "bantustanization" and the imposition of censorship and other restrictions on the media. The Commission demanded the immediate release of those detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for self-determination and independence and called on South Africa to refrain from imposing restrictions on them. It condemned the wanton acts of aggression and destabilization perpetrated by the apartheid régime against front-line and other neighbouring States and demanded that all States impose mandatory and comprehensive sanctions against South Africa. The Commission further demanded a democratic and non-racial solution in South Africa based on universal and equal suffrage and that apartheid be dismantled. Welcoming the release of African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, the Commission called for the full implementation of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989 [GA res. S-16/1].

Western Sahara

On 16 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/4)], the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was one of decolonization which remained to be completed by the exercise of the people's inalienable right to self-determination and independence, and emphasized the importance of the agreement in principle by Morocco and the Frente Popular Para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO) to hold a referendum. Welcoming the efforts of the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General, and the progress achieved through the joint good offices process, it urged them to intensify their efforts to create the conditions necessary to hold a referendum. Also welcoming the talks between Morocco and POLISARIO, the Commission expressed its conviction that continued direct dialogue between the two parties could contribute to the restoration of peace in Western Sahara and to the stability and security of the region as a whole. The Commission took note of a 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 767] of the Secretary-General on the result of meetings held between October 1988 and September 1989 with Morocco and POLISARIO. (See also PART FOUR, Chapter I.)

Palestinians

On 19 February [res. 1990/6], reaffirming that the Israeli occupation of Palestine constituted a gross violation of human rights and an offence against the peace and security of mankind, the Commission on Human Rights, by a vote of 30 to 1, with 10 abstentions, strongly condemned Israel for its continued occupation of the Palestinian territories and called on it to withdraw from the Palestinian and other Arab territories which it had occupied since 1967. The Commission urged all States, UN organs, specialized agencies and other international organizations to support and assist the Palestinians through the Palestine Liberation Organization, and requested the Secretary-General to transmit the resolution to the Government of Israel, with a view to its implementation, and to report thereon in 1991. The Secretary-General was also requested to inform the Commission on the implementation of its resolution.

As requested by a 1989 Commission resolution [YUN 1989, p. 491], the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.4/1990/10] that he had received no reply from the Government of Israel to his request for information on the measures taken to implement the resolution, reaffirming the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination.

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/12)], the Sub-Commission, by a secret ballot of 18 to 1, with 4 abstentions, reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to return to their homeland, to self-determination without foreign interference, and the establishment of their independent sovereign State on their national soil in accordance with General Assembly resolutions.

Mercenaries

By a 19 February resolution [res. 1990/7], adopted by 31 votes to 10, with 1 abstention, the Commission on Human Rights condemned the increased recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, and denounced any State that persisted in, permitted or tolerated their recruitment and provided facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States. It called on States to ensure that territories under their control, and their nationals, were not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit to the General Assembly a preliminary report later in the year, and that he report to the Commission in 1991. The Commission recommended that the Special Rapporteur accept the invitation of Maldives to carry out an investigation of mercenary activity in that country. In carrying out his mandate, which the Commission extended for two years, the Special Rapporteur was requested to include in future reports information on the state of ratifications and the mode of application of the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries [GA res. 44/34], to continue to study credible and reliable reports of mercenary activity in developing countries, and to seek the point of view of those Governments in whose territories mercenaries might have been recruited, trained or provided with facilities for launching armed aggression. The Commission also requested the Special Rapporteur to develop further the position that mercenary acts were means of violating human rights and thwarting the self-determination of peoples. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council ensure the necessary financial resources and sufficient staff for the implementation of its resolution and asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance.

On 7 March [res. 1990/75], expressing its deep concern at the adverse effects of the crimes and atrocities committed by irregular armed groups and by drug traffickers, the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 41 to none, with 2 abstentions, requested all special rapporteurs and working groups to pay particular attention to the activities of irregular armed groups and drug traffickers. The Secretary-General was asked to collect information on the subject and to make it available to the special rapporteurs and working groups concerned for their consideration.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In response to a 1989 request of the Commission [YUN 1989, p. 491], the Special Rapporteur, Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru), in January 1990, submitted his fifth report on the use of mercenaries [E/CN.4/1990/11]. He reviewed replies received from States, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs, following his earlier request for information on the existence of mercenary activities, both in their preliminary stages and in operational terms, such as their recruitment, financing and training. The Special Rapporteur observed that the notion of a mercenary had changed as far as the traditional characteristics were concerned and had become a kind of independent criminal occupation, causing serious prejudice to territorial sovereignty and human life, even when the context in which the acts occurred was not necessarily that of an international armed conflict. According to preliminary information, he stated that evidence and facts of public record highlighted a criminal association between drug traffickers and mercenaries recruited for them. Those mercenaries affected the sovereignty and constitutional stability of Governments and their people, creating a situation with serious risks for the international community.

Analysing the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, the Special Rapporteur stated that it broadened, deepened and refined the scope of the definition of a mercenary, mercenary activity and the qualification of mercenary acts as indictable offences. In that sense, he stated, the Convention filled a gap, constituting an important instrument to enable Member States to adapt their national legislation on the subject, and confirming the legal scope of the many UN declarations and resolutions condemning mercenary activities. Noting that the Convention contained no provision establishing machinery to monitor implementation, the Special Rapporteur suggested that international observation could be conducted in part by the Commission on Human Rights.

The Convention was open for signature until 31 December 1990 and was subject to ratification and open for accession by any State. It was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession. By December, the Special Rapporteur reported, only two countries had become parties, and a further eight had signed it.

Pursuant to a 1989 General Assembly resolution [GA res. 44/8] and in response to the Commission's February request (see above), the Special Rapporteur submitted in September a preliminary report [A/45/488] to the Assembly, followed by a December report [E/CN.4/1991/14] to the Commission, on the question of mercenaries. The Special Rapporteur reviewed the situation in Africa and Central America, as well as the relationship between mercenaries and irregular armed groups and drug traffickers. During the year, the Special Rapporteur visited Maldives (18-23 June) to obtain substantiated information on the mercenary phenomenon and ascertain the position of the Government on the 1988 invasion of the country.

While recognizing a trend towards the winding down or cessation of armed conflict in southern Africa and Central America, he warned that some countries were still beset by internal conflict involving armed resistance to their Governments and that the presence of mercenary elements among rebel forces could not be ruled out. Inasmuch as the use of mercenaries had been directly linked to the policy of apartheid, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the protection being given to them should cease, that they should be tried for their participation in criminal acts and that paramilitary mercenary units working for right-wing groups violently opposed to the political reforms in South Africa should be banned. Noting that small States had recently been attacked by groups of mercenaries, the Special Rapporteur underscored the obligation to respect the territorial integrity of all States and to aid small States, upon request, when there was a tangible threat to their sovereignty, territorial integrity and security as a result of acts contrary to international law. Among other recommendations, the Special Rapporteur called for a declaration that it was incompatible with the principles of the Charter to use programmes of humanitarian or other assistance in any way that would provide a cover for concrete activities involving the financing, training and use of mercenaries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1990/222.

Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 25 May 1990, the Economic and Social Council, having taken note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/7 of 19 February 1990, approved the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for two years to enable him to submit further conclusions and recommendations to the Commission and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary financial resources and sufficient staff to the Special Rapporteur.

Economic and Social Council decision 1990/222

38-3-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) by recorded vote (33-3-11).
18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia..

Against: Canada, Japan, United States.

Abstaining: Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/132.

Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States and self-determination of peoples, as well as a scrupulous respect for the principle of the non-use or threat of the use of force in international relations, as developed in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples and their liberation movements for their independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial domination, apartheid and foreign intervention and occupation, and that their legitimate struggle can in no way be considered as or equated to mercenary activity,

Recognizing that the use of mercenaries is a threat to international peace and security,

Deeply concerned about the menace that the activities of mercenaries represent for all States, particularly African and other developing States,

Alarmed at the emergence of new international criminal activities carried out by mercenaries in collusion with drug traffickers,

Recognizing that the activities of mercenaries are contrary to the fundamental principles of international law, such as non-interference in the internal affairs of States, territorial integrity and independence, and impede the process of the self-determination of peoples struggling against colonialism, racism and apartheid and all forms of foreign domination,

Recalling all of its relevant resolutions, as well as those of the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity, in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the short-term and long-term negative effects on the economy of southern African countries resulting from mercenary aggression,

Convinced that it is necessary to develop international co-operation among States for the prevention and prosecution of and punishment for such offences,

Welcoming the adoption of the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

2. Condemns the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries, as well as all other forms of support to mercenaries, for the purpose of destabilizing and overthrowing the Governments of African States and of other developing States and fighting against the national liberation movements of peoples struggling for the exercise of their right to self-determination;

3. Affirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are offences of grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Strongly condemns the racist régime of South Africa for its use of groups of armed mercenaries against national liberation movements and for the destabilization of the Governments of southern African States;

5. Denounces any State that persists in the recruitment, or permits or tolerates the recruitment, of mercenaries and provides facilities to them for launching armed aggression against other States;

6. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to ensure, by both administrative and legislative measures, that the territory of those States and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries, or for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government of any State and to fight the national liberation movements struggling against racism, apartheid, colonial domination and foreign intervention or occupation;

7. Calls upon all States to extend humanitarian assistance to victims of situations resulting from the use of mercenaries, as well as from colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation;

8. Considers that to use channels of humanitarian and other assistance to finance, train and arm mercenaries is inadmissible;

9. Urges all States to take early action to sign, accede to or ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, in order to expedite the coming into force of that Convention;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the use of mercenaries.

Electoral processes

In his 1990 report on the work of the Organization [A/45/1], the Secretary-General reviewed the role of the United Nations in managing peaceful transitions in societies world wide which had been the scenes of conflicts or had suffered upheavals. Pointing out that the election monitoring in Nicaragua was the first such operation authorized and conducted by the United Nations internally in a Member State, he said that the success of that endeavour led to a central role for the Organization in the peaceful transfer of power in a region where such transfers had been the exception rather than the rule (see PART TWO, Chapter II). The Secretary-General also described plans for monitoring elections in El Salvador (see PART TWO, Chapter II) and the referendum in Western Sahara (see PART FOUR, Chapter I).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/150.

Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections

The General Assembly,

Aware of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to take part in the government of his or her country, directly or through freely chosen representatives, that everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his or her country, that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government, and that this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures,

Noting that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides that every citizen shall have the right and the opportunity, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives, to vote and to be elected at genuine periodic elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret ballot, guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors, and to have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in his or her country,

Condemning the system of apartheid and any other denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Considering that the tricameral parliament established under the system of apartheid is a gross violation of the principle of universal and equal suffrage and has been overwhelmingly rejected by the international community,

Recalling that all States enjoy sovereign equality and that each State has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems,

Recognizing that there is no single political system or electoral method that is equally suited to all nations and their people,

Taking note of the Secretary-General's observations concerning United Nations support for elections in Member States, as presented in his report on the work of the Organization,

Recalling its resolutions 43/157 of 8 December 1988 and 44/146 of 15 December 1989, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/51 of 7 March 1989,

1. Underscores the significance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which establish that the authority to govern shall be based on the will of the people, as expressed in periodic and genuine elections;
2. Stresses its conviction that periodic and genuine elections are a necessary and indispensable element of sustained efforts to protect the rights and interests of the governed and that, as a matter of practical experience, the right of everyone to take part in the government of his or her country is a crucial factor in the effective enjoyment by all of a wide range of other human rights and fundamental freedoms, embracing political, economic, social and cultural rights;
3. Declares that determining the will of the people requires an electoral process that provides an equal opportunity for all citizens to become candidates and put forward their political views, individually and in co-operation with others, as provided in national constitutions and laws;
4. Recognizes that the efforts of the international community to enhance the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections should not call into question each State's sovereign right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems, whether or not they conform to the preferences of other States;
5. Underscores the duty of each member of the international community to respect the decisions taken by other States in freely choosing and developing their electoral institutions;
6. Reaffirms that apartheid must be abolished, that the systematic denial or abridgement of the right to vote on the grounds of race or colour is a gross violation of human rights and an affront to the conscience and dignity of mankind, and that the right to participate in a political system based on common and equal citizenship and universal franchise is essential for the exercise of the principle of periodic and genuine elections;

7. Rejects the tricameral parliament established under the system of apartheid as an abhorrent expression of a fundamentally oppressive and flagrantly inhuman political system;

8. Affirms the value of the electoral assistance that the United Nations has provided at the request of Member States, in the context of full respect for their sovereignty;

9. Believes that the international community should continue to give serious consideration to ways in which the United Nations can respond to the requests of Member States as they seek to promote and strengthen their electoral institutions and procedures;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States, specialized agencies, other competent bodies of the United Nations system and those with specific expertise in this area concerning suitable approaches that will permit the Organization to respond to the requests of Member States for electoral assistance;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report his findings to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, together with an account of United Nations experience in election monitoring, within existing resources;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections".

Against: Angola, China, Colombia, Cuba, Iran, Myanmar, Sudan, Viet Nam.

Abstaining: Burkina Faso, Burundi, Ecuador, Ghana, India, Mali, Mexico, Peru, Syrian Arab Republic.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

In the Third Committee, Cuba introduced a series of amendments to the draft text. The United States proposed further amendments thereon. The proposal by the United States was adopted by a recorded vote of 82 to 18, with 18 abstentions. The amendments introduced by Cuba, as amended, were adopted by a recorded vote of 120 to none, with 9 abstentions.

Following that action, the Committee, by separate recorded votes, retained the eighth preambular paragraph by 96 votes to 11, with 12 abstentions, paragraph 10 by 85 votes to 12, with 15 abstentions, and paragraph 11 by 88 votes to 12, with 14 abstentions.

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/151.

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Also recalling its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Further recalling the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the elimination of apartheid and for the establishment of a society in which all the people of South Africa as a whole, irrespective of race, colour or creed, will enjoy equal and full political and other rights and participate freely in the determination of their destiny,

Also Reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to decide freely on their own future,

Recognizing that the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of any State should be respected in the holding of elections,

Also recognizing that there is no single political system or single model for electoral processes equally suited to all nations and their peoples, and that political systems and electoral processes are subject to historical, political, cultural and religious factors,

Recalling its resolution 44/147 of 15 December 1989,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every

State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

2. Affirms that it is the concern solely of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding the electoral process, as well as to determine the ways for its implementation according to their constitutional and national legislation;

3. Also affirms that any extraneous activities that attempt, directly or indirectly, to interfere in the free development of national electoral processes, in particular in the developing countries, or that intend to sway the results of such processes, violate the spirit and letter of the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Urges all States to respect the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States and the sovereign right of peoples to determine their political, economic and social system;

5. Strongly appeals to all States to abstain from financing or providing, directly or indirectly, any other form of overt or covert support for political parties or groups and from taking actions to undermine the electoral processes in any country;

6. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

7. Solemnly declares that only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial, democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and non-fragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution to the explosive situation in South Africa;

8. Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of all peoples under colonial and foreign domination, particularly the Palestinian people, for the exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence, which will enable them to determine their political, economic and social system, without external interference;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-seventh session, to give priority to the review of the fundamental factors that negatively affect the observance of the principle of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections".

Administration of justice

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/81)], the Commission on Human Rights, emphasizing the importance of education and public information programmes geared particularly to those responsible for the administration of justice, requested the Secretary-General to provide for appropriate action under the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights (see below, under "Advancement of human rights").

Taking note of the Secretary-General's note on the feasibility of drafting model texts for national legislation or other measures for the effective implementation of standards relating to human rights in the administration of justice (see below), the Commission asked him to establish a consolidated list of provisions contained in the relevant UN standards for the drafting of the texts, and invited him to forward the list, together with comments solicited in accordance with a 1989 General Assembly resolution [YUN 1989, p. 493], to the Sub-Commission. It invited the Sub-Commission to recommend measures to implement UN norms and standards, to consider the elaboration of model texts for national legislation and to report in 1991. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to inform it of the relevant decisions taken by the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see PART THREE, Chapter XII).

In response to a 1989 Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 493], the Secretary-General had submitted a February note [E/CN.4/1990/12] on the feasibility of drafting model texts for national legislation or other measures for the effective implementation of standards relating to human rights in the administration of justice. The document contained views and information provided by States on the issue of model legislation and on national norms regulating human rights and administration of justice. On the basis of the replies received, the Secretary-General concluded that the preparation of model texts could play a positive role in strengthening the protection of human rights on the national level as part of an overall programme of advisory services. He noted that the first step in preparing the model texts would be to analyse the different national laws and machinery protecting human rights in the administration of justice.

In a July report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/23], the Secretary-General presented to the Sub-Commission information on developments in the human rights programme and on the activities within the UN programme on crime prevention and control. In view of the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), the report focused on crime prevention and control and preparations for the Congress as they related to the question of human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment. In particular, it covered the implementation of relevant standards, capital punishment, extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions, the prevention of victimization and protection of victims, AIDS in prison and the computerization of criminal justice administration.

By a November note [E/CN.4/1991/19], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the decisions taken by the Eighth Congress [A/CONF.144/28/Rev.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/166.

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly

Bearing in mind the principles embodied in articles 3, 5, 9, 10 and 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols thereto, in particular article 6 of the Covenant, which explicitly states that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life and prohibits the imposition of the death penalty for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years of age,

Bearing in mind also the relevant principles embodied in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Calling attention to the numerous international standards in the field of the administration of justice, such as the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, as well as the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners and recommendations on the treatment of foreign prisoners, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners,

Reaffirming in this context the importance of the principles contained in its resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986 on standard-setting in the field of human rights,

Recognizing the important contribution of the Commission on Human Rights in the field of human rights in the administration of justice, as reflected in its resolutions 1990/81 of 7 March 1990 on human rights in the administration of justice, 1990/33 of 2 March 1990 on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, 1990/35 of 2 March 1990 on compensation for victims of gross violations of human rights, 1990/37 of 6 March 1990 on the use of force by law enforcement officials and 1990/51 of 6 March 1990 on summary or arbitrary executions,

Welcoming resolution 1990/33 of 31 August 1990 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, by which the Sub-Commission adopted a draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearances, and invited the Commission on Human Rights to consider the draft declaration as a matter of high priority at its forty-seventh session.

Also welcoming the decision of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in its resolution 1990/23, to entrust Mr. Louis Joinet with the preparation of a report on strengthening the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers and encouraging the Sub-Commission, in giving further consideration to the question of the independence and impartiality of the judiciary and the independence of lawyers, to take into account the basic principles adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Welcoming further the progress achieved by the Sub-Commission on the subject of compensation for victims of gross violation of human rights,

Recognizing the significant work accomplished in this area under the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, especially by the Eighth Congress, in particular with respect to the formulation and application of United Nations standards and norms in the administration of justice under item 7 of its agenda,

Underlining the need for further co-ordinated and concerted action in promoting respect for human rights in the administration of justice,

Recalling its resolution 44/162 of 15 December 1989,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of United Nations norms and standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

2. once again calls upon all States to pay due attention to those norms and standards in developing national or regional strategies for their practical implementation and to spare no effort in providing for effective legislative and other mechanisms and procedures, as well as for adequate financial resources to ensure more effective implementation of these norms and standards;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the recommendations made by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders with a view to ensuring more effective application of existing standards, in particular the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary;

4. welcomes the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, the Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors, the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules) and the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty, unanimously adopted by the Eighth Congress, and invites Governments to respect them and to take them into account within the framework of their national legislation and practice;

5. Welcomes also the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released and the recommendations on the treatment of foreign prisoners adopted unanimously by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and invites Member States to take them into account, as well as the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners, in establishing treaty relations with other Member States or in revising existing treaty relations;

6. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/21 of 24 May 1990 on the implementation of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

7. Requests the commission on Human Rights, bearing in mind the work of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to invite the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities:

(a) To study the implementation of United Nations norms and standards in this field;

(b) To identify problems that may impinge on the effective implementation of those standards and norms;

(c) To recommend viable solutions with action-oriented proposals to the Commission;

8. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide the necessary compilatory and analytical documentation to the Sub-Commission for those tasks;

(b) To prepare, on the basis of comments by Member States and relevant international organizations and bodies, as well as non-governmental organizations, a draft model text for national legislation in the field of human rights in the administration of justice;

(c) To co-ordinate the activities of the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission, mentioned in paragraph 7 above, with the relevant activities of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

(d) To invite those Member States and international organizations and bodies which have not yet done so to comment on the aspects of human rights issues in the field of administration of justice they deem relevant to the work of the Sub-Commission;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to invite the Sub-Commission to consider the draft model text requested in paragraph 8 (b) above, with a view to the further elaboration of model texts, and to propose such texts to the Commission for adoption;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to assist Member States, at their request, in implementing existing international human rights standards in the administration of justice, in particular under the programme of advisory services;

(b) To continue to provide all necessary support to United Nations bodies working on standard-setting in this field;

(c) To continue to co-ordinate the various technical advisory services provided by the Centre for Human Rights and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat with a view to undertaking joint programmes and strengthening existing mechanisms for the protection of human rights in the administration of justice;

11. Emphasizes the 'Important role of the regional commissions, specialized agencies and the United Nations institutes in the area of human rights and crime prevention and criminal justice and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, "including national professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in this field;

12. Decides to consider at its forty-sixth session the question of human rights in the administration of justice on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/166

18 December 1990 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote
Approved by Third Committee (A/45/838) without vote, 29 November (meeting 57); 24-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.86), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 48-50, 56, 57; plenary 69.

Independence of the judiciary

Endorsing a 1989 Sub-Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 504], asking Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet to prepare a working paper on means of monitoring the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers, the Commission, on 2 March 1990 [res. 1990/33], requested the Sub-Commission to study the working paper with a view to recommending any initiative which could be taken to effectuate the implementation of the 1985 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary [YUN 1985, p. 757] and the protection of practising lawyers. It called on Governments to respect the independence of the judiciary and to ensure the protection of practising lawyers, prosecutors and judges against undue restrictions and pressures in the exercise of their functions. The Commission recommended that the Eighth (1990) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) consider as a matter of priority the draft basic principles on the role of lawyers elaborated by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, with a view to adopting them.

The Special Rapporteur submitted in July a working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/35] on means in the area of monitoring by which the Sub-Commission could ensure respect for the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers. He reviewed current UN standard-setting and reporting activities and enumerated common violations of the principles of the independence of judges and lawyers. He discussed the strengthening of measures currently in place, such as legislative protections, promotional activities and intra-professional solidarity.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that a Sub-Commission member prepare a report which would make a system-wide analysis of UN advisory service and technical assistance programmes regarding the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers; propose ways to enhance co-operation between the programmes; and present guidelines and criteria to be taken into account in providing the services. He proposed that the report bring to the Sub-Commission's attention cases in which legislative or practical measures had strengthened the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers or those which constituted extreme violations of those norms.

On 30 August [res. 1990/23], the Sub-Commission called on Governments to strengthen the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers and, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's working paper, endorsed his recommendations. It further decided to entrust him with preparing a report and asked him to bring to its attention information on legislative or judicial measures or other practices affecting the independence of the judiciary and the protection of practising lawyers in accordance with UN standards. The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to transmit its resolution to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, requesting specific information on measures taken to strengthen the independence of the judiciary and lawyers or on practices which had undermined it.

Right to a fair trial

On 7 March [dec. 1990/108], the Commission welcomed the Sub-Commission's 1989 decision [YUN 1989, p. 504] to appoint Stanislav Chernichenko (USSR) and William Treat (United States) as rapporteurs to prepare a report on existing international norms and standards pertaining to the right to a fair trial, and requested the Sub-Commission to consider the report in 1990.

In a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/34], the Special Rapporteurs provided an overview of the right to a fair trial and indicated the areas needing further study. They discussed principal treaties and other instruments containing provisions on the right to a fair trial, analysed the elements of a fair criminal trial and examined the right to a fair trial as a non-derogable right.

The Special Rapporteurs recommended that the Sub-Commission appoint two of its members to prepare a study entitled "The right to a fair trial: current recognition and measures necessary for its strengthening". They proposed that a questionnaire be prepared, to be sent to Governments to obtain their views on the considerations expressed in their report and on the possibility of making the standards more specific or protective of human rights.

On 30 August [res. 1990/18], the Sub-Commission took note of the report and its recommendations and decided to entrust the Special Rapporteurs with preparing the recommended study. The Secretary-General was asked to assist them.

Treatment of prisoners and detainees

In a July report with later addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/20 & Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted replies received from Governments pursuant to a 1974 Sub-Commission resolution [YUN 1974, p. 676], in which it had decided to review annually developments relating to the human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment. The Governments reviewed, among other things, instances of death during detention, extrajudicial executions, capital punishment, enforced and involuntary disappearance, torture and the use of force by law enforcement officials. Similar information from one UN body and one specialized agency, and a synopsis of material received from NGOs were presented in July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/21] and August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/22] reports, respectively.

Torture and cruel treatment

Special Rapporteur Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights his annual report [E/CN.4/1990/17] on the question of torture. He continued to receive requests for urgent action or information, principally concerning persons who were allegedly being subjected to torture, usually while being held incommunicado in police or army custody, or during interrogation. He brought 51 cases of such treatment to the immediate attention of the respective Governments and appealed to them to ensure the protection of the right to physical and mental integrity of those concerned and humane treatment while in detention. Details on the contents of the appeals and of government replies thereto were given in the report.

The Special Rapporteur was particularly alarmed by the fact that he received a number of allegations referring to torture of children and juveniles. Education in the field of human rights, he stated, seemed one of the most urgent tasks the international community had to tackle. He highlighted the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment [GA res. 43/173], stating that the principles contained therein could function as a check-list for Governments to see whether their administrative practices were in conformity with the principles and to take corrective measures if that was not the case.

The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations which the Commission emphasized in a resolution (see below). Other recommendations dealt with sanctions for those who carried out illegal detentions; inquiries into the death of a person during detention or shortly after release by a judicial or other impartial authority; and translation into national languages of the 1988 Body of Principles, the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials [CA res. 34/169] and the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and their use for training law enforcement and security forces personnel.

In a later addendum [E/CN.4/1990/17/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur described his visit to Zaïre (13-20 January 1990), made at the invitation of the Government. He noted that the human rights situation in Zaïre had improved considerably during recent years and the phenomenon of torture had decreased.

Commission action. Commending the Special Rapporteur on his report, the Commission, on 2 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/34)], stressed his conclusions and recommendations, concerning: instituting a system of periodic visits by independent experts to places of detention; limiting, and eventually declaring illegal, incommunicado detention; giving a person prompt access to legal counsel after arrest and the obligation promptly to inform the relatives of an arrested person of the arrest and place of detention; proper medical inspections; interrogating detainees only at official interrogation centres and recording the interrogations; and establishing, at the national level, an independent authority to receive complaints of torture by individuals. In addition, it endorsed the recommendation that, whenever found to be responsible for acts of torture or severe maltreatment, a person should be brought to trial and, if found guilty, severely punished. The Commission called on States to sign and accede to or ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (see below). Deciding to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a further two years, the Commission appealed to Governments to co-operate with and assist him and encouraged them to give serious consideration to inviting him to visit their country. It also asked the Secretary-General to assist him.

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/231, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1990, 55 States had ratified or acceded to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46], 7 of them (Germany, Guatemala, Liechtenstein, Malta, Paraguay, Romania, Somalia) in 1990. The Convention had entered into force in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 755]. The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognized the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; 26 parties had made the required declarations in 1990.

The Secretary-General reported to the Commission and to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 15 December 1989 [E/CN.4/1990/15] and 1 August 1990 [A/45/405], respectively.

Committee against Torture

The Committee against Torture, at its fourth session (Geneva, 23 April-4 May) [A/45/44 & Corr.I], considered reports submitted by China, the Netherlands, Senegal, Tunisia and the Ukrainian SSR under article 19 of the Convention. It approved its draft consolidated guidelines on the form and content of the initial part of the reports of States parties under international human rights instruments. In four closed meetings during the session, it commenced its work under article 20, reviewing information which appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was being systematically practised in the territory of a State party.

During its fifth session (Geneva, 12-23 November) [A/46/46], the Committee examined reports from Aruba, Ecuador, Finland, Greece, the Netherlands Antilles, Spain and Turkey and continued its work under article 20 of the Convention in four closed meetings. The Committee also considered three communications under article 22, whereby individuals who claimed that their rights enumerated in the Convention had been violated by a State party and who had exhausted all available domestic remedies could submit their cases to the Committee. It concluded consideration of one of them by declaring it inadmissible.

Commission action. On 2 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/28)], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to continue submitting annual reports on the status of the Convention. It stressed the need for the Committee against Torture to give early attention to the development of an effective reporting system on implementation of the Convention by States parties and reminded States parties of their obligations regarding the financing of the Committee. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the Committee. Reiterating its request to all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority, it also invited all States ratifying or acceding to the Convention and those States parties that had not done so to consider the possibility of making the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/142.

Report of the Committee against Torture and status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recalling further its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and called upon all Governments to consider signing and ratifying the Convention as a matter of priority, as well as its subsequent resolutions on the status of the Convention, most recently its resolution 44/144 of 15 December 1989, as well as the Commission on Human Rights resolutions on the subject, most recently resolution 1990/28 of 2 March 1990,

Mindful of the relevance, for the eradication of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and of the Principles of Medical Ethics relevant to the role of health personnel, particularly physicians, in the protection of prisoners and detainees against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling the adoption of the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,

Seriously concerned about the alarming number of reported cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment taking place in various parts of the world,

Determined to promote the full implementation of the prohibition, under international and national law, of the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Taking note of the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1990/34 of 2 March 1990, to extend for two years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to examine questions relevant to torture,

1. Welcomes the report of the Committee against Torture;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

3. Stresses the importance of strict adherence by States parties to the obligations under the Convention regarding the financing of the Committee against Torture, thus enabling it to carry out in an effective and efficient manner all the functions entrusted to it under the Convention, so as to ensure the long-term viability of the Committee as an essential mechanism for overseeing the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention;

4. Welcomes the attention that the Committee against Torture has given to the development of an effective system of reporting on the implementation of the Convention by States parties, and especially its revision of its general guidelines for the submission of initial reports by States parties;

5. Welcomes also the continuing close contacts and exchange of information, reports and documents between the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on questions relating to torture;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee against Torture;

7. Reiterates its request to all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority;

8. Once again invites all States, upon ratification of or accession to the Convention, or subsequently, to consider the possibility of making the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session and to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

10. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-sixth session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

General Assembly resolution 45/142

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/765) without vote, 28 November (meeting 55); 38-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.49); agenda item 109. Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 35-42, 49, 55; plenary 68.

Fund for victims of torture

The Commission on Human Rights, on 2 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/29)], appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute regularly to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, which was established in 1981 [GA res. 36/151]. The Commission renewed its request to the Secretary-General to transmit to all Governments its appeal for contributions and also to make use of all existing possibilities to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund.

In an October report [A/45/633], the Secretary-General stated that the Board of Trustees, at its ninth session (Geneva, 11-15 June 1990), considered 60 requests for assistance concerning continuing projects and 30 requests concerning new projects. The Board recommended to the Secretary-General the approval of 61 grants, representing a total of $1,766,300. As in the past, the focus of the Board's recommendations was on supporting programmes providing direct medical, psychological, social or other assistance to torture victims and their family members. The Board had also made recommendations for support for training programmes for health professionals of several countries on the techniques of treatment of victims of torture as well as for meetings of health professionals, at which they could learn from each other's experiences. Those projects were carried out in some 30 countries and benefited persons from many other countries.

Between 16 October 1989 and 16 October 1990, 15 States contributed $628,051. Contributions were also received from a number of individuals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/143.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling with satisfaction the entry into force on 26 June 1987 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture.

Alarmed at the widespread occurrence of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and members of their families.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to the Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for initial as well as further contributions to the Fund;

3. Invites Governments to make contributions to the Fund, preferably on a regular basis, in order to enable the Fund to provide continuous support to projects that depend on recurrent grants;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments that pledged a contribution to the Fund at the 1990 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to include the Fund on an annual basis among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

6. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

7. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees of the Fund by carrying out its decisions on an increasing number of projects;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to make use of all existing possibilities, including the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials, to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions..

General Assembly resolution 45/143

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/765) without vote, 28 November (meeting 55); 29-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.52); agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 35-42, 49, 55; plenary 68.

Torture and inhuman treatment of detained children in South Africa

The Secretary-General in January submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a report [E/CN.4/1990/6] on torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa and Namibia, as requested in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 497]. He stated that there had been no reply to his request to South Africa for information on the subject and drew the Commission's attention to an interim report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa [E/CN.4/1990/7], which contained information on the question of the treatment of children in South Africa and Namibia (see also below, under "Human rights violations").

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/11)], the Commission reiterated its vigorous condemnation of the detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa. It demanded their unconditional release, that the restrictions imposed on them be lifted, and that their basic and legitimate freedoms of movement, association and education be ensured. Demanding the termination of the state of emergency and the abrogation of all repressive and discriminatory legislation, it requested all relevant UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to launch a world-wide campaign aimed at drawing attention to, monitoring and exposing those practices. Further demanding the abolition of apartheid, the Commission appealed to the international community to adopt measures to bring pressure against the Government until it dismantled apartheid and abandoned all inhuman practices associated with that policy. The Commission requested the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa to pay special attention to the question of detention, torture and other inhuman treatment of children in South Africa and to report to it in 1991, and asked the Secretary-General to provide assistance to the Group. It further requested the Secretary-General to intervene with the Government to bring an end to the practice, to report to it on the outcome of his efforts and to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of relevant UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs.

In an October report [A/45/615], the Secretary-General stated that detailed replies from UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs to his request for information on torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa were still being awaited. He presented relevant excerpts from the latest report of the Ad Hoc Working Group [E/CN.4/1990/7], adding that the Group was no longer charged with the responsibility of conducting an inquiry into the situation of children in Namibia, following its independence in March (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). The Group expressed concern that ill-treatment of children in detention appeared to be as widespread as before.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/144.

Torture and inhuman treatment of children in detention in South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/143 of 15 December 1989 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/11 of 23 February 1990,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Declaration on the Rights of the Child,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the results of the World Summit for Children, in particular the adoption on 30 September 1990 of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and in particular of the condemnation expressed therein by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on Southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights with regard to the lack of government concern for the violation of the human rights of the children of South Africa in matters of freedom of movement and the right to education and health,

1. Expresses its profound outrage at evidence of detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa;

2. Vigorously condemns the apartheid racist régime for the continued detention, torture and inhuman treatment of children in South Africa;

3. Reiterates its demand for the immediate and unconditional release of all children held in detention by the apartheid regime in South Africa;

4. Reiterates its appeal to all relevant United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to intensify the world-wide campaign aimed at drawing attention to, monitoring and exposing these inhuman practices;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the question of detention, torture and other inhuman treatment of children in South Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to consider this question at its forty-sixth session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

General Assembly resolution 45/144

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/765) without vote, 28 November (meeting 55); 28-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.54); agenda item 109.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 35-42, 49, 55; plenary 68.

Detention of juveniles

In June, the Secretary-General submitted a report, with later addenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/25 & Add.1,2], containing information provided by UN bodies, specialized agencies, Governments, NGOs and intergovernmental organizations on the application of international standards concerning the human rights of detained juveniles. Annexed to the report was a questionnaire on the subject, prepared by the Centre for Human Rights, in consultation with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, which had been sent with the Secretary-General's request for information.

Recalling the 1989 resolution [YUN 1989, p. 498] by which it requested Maria Concepción Bautista (Philippines) to prepare a report on the application of international standards concerning the human rights of detained juveniles, the Sub-Commission, on 30 August 1990 [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/21)], noted that the information received by the Secretary-General from Governments and NGOs could not be incorporated into the preliminary report, for lack of sufficient time. It asked the Secretary-General to circulate the questionnaire on juvenile detention to the widest possible range of Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs, at the earliest possible time, so that the replies could be included in a 1991 report. The Sub-Commission extended the mandate of Mrs. Bautista until its 1991 session.

Detention without charge or trial

Noting that the Sub-Commission had been unable to consider the report on the practice of administrative detention prepared by Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 498], the Commission, on 7 March, again invited the Sub-Commission to make any proposals it deemed necessary.

In a July report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/29], Mr. Joinet presented information on the practice of administrative detention based on replies received to a questionnaire sent to Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, regional inter-governmental organization and NGOs.

The Rapporteur discussed the extent of resort to administrative detention, and noted that the inquiries undertaken suggested five cases in which it was found to be used significantly: situations threatening public order and State security, notably during crises; measures relating to the status of foreigners, including asylum-seekers and refugees; detention for the purposes of "political re-education"; disciplinary measures; and measures to combat social maladjustment. He examined all of those situations, as well as the legal framework of administrative detention and the circumvention of legal procedures and abuses.

In a series of recommendations to the Commission, the Rapporteur proposed: the annual submission of a report on the development of all forms of administrative detention throughout the world; paying particular attention to the subject by the Special Rapporteurs on summary executions, torture and states of emergency, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Working Group on the Question of Persons Detained on the Grounds of Mental Ill-health or Suffering from Mental Disorders, and any other relevant monitoring or investigative body of the UN system; gathering information on the conditions in which administrative detention was applied to new categories of persons, such as those suffering from communicable diseases (quarantine) and those allegedly detained in specialized health centres once their illness was diagnosed (AIDS, for example); and inviting the Special Rapporteur to carry out an in-depth study, with a view to submitting proposals to the Commission, of the conditions under which the right to habeas corpus or any other similar remedy could be declared intangible. He concluded that the appointment of a special rapporteur would give the UN system a monitoring machinery covering all the sectors at risk, in the form of reports on the protection of intangible rights (prohibition of enforced disappearances, torture and summary executions) and reports on tangible rights that were likely to be violated on account of the "limitations or restrictions accepted in a democratic society".

In an addendum to his report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/29/Add.1], Mr. Joinet expressed a strong need for suitable machinery to prevent and report violations of international standards on the legality of all forms of detention and recommended the appointment of a special rapporteur or of a five-person working group to address the issue.

On 30 August [res. 1990/22], the Sub-Commission endorsed the recommendations contained in the addendum to Mr. Joinet's report and transmitted them to the Commission. It invited the Commission to consider the proposals and asked the Secretary-General to keep the Sub-Commission informed of any action the Commission might take.

Working Group on Detention

The five-member Working Group on Detention met on 13, 15, 17, 22 and 24 August in Geneva [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/32]. It discussed and adopted a revised draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearance, which was annexed to its report. The Group reviewed developments concerning the human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment, focusing on the synopsis of information received from NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. It was decided that the Group would prepare and discuss a working paper on habeas corpus as a non-derogable right. The Group also discussed the death penalty, with special reference to its imposition on persons of less than 18 years of age, and further considered the issue of the right to a fair trial.

Pursuant to a 1989 Sub-Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 498], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/26 & Add.1,2] transmitting comments from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on legislation concerning the death penalty for persons under 18 years of age.

On 31 August [res. 1990/33], the Sub-Commission adopted the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearance, and transmitted it to the Commission on Human Rights for its consideration, with the recommendation that it be endorsed and transmitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly for final adoption.

On the same date [dec. 1990/124], the Sub-Commission took note of the Working Group's report.

Capital punishment

In a March report [E/1990/38 & Corr.1] to the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General submitted his fourth quinquennial report on capital punishment, based on replies received from Governments in response to his request for information on the use of and trends in the death penalty during the period from 1984 to 1988. He stated that the most significant development since 1984 was the adoption by the General Assembly in 1989 of the Second Optional Protocol [GA res. 44/128] to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of capital punishment. While many countries had cited public opinion as one of the major reasons for retaining the death penalty, the Secretary-General emphasized that efforts should be made to reverse popular support for capital punishment, which was often a spontaneous reaction to certain forms of crime.

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1990/29, requested the Secretary-General to submit a revised version of the fourth report at its second regular session, which he did in June [E/1990/38/Rev.1]. That report contained additional responses to the Secretary-General's request for information. The Secretary-General stated that, since 1984, 11 countries had abolished capital punishment, which he noted as a significant trend towards abolition. He added that 21 countries should be considered abolitionist, de facto, since no executions had taken place for 10 years or more. Annexed to the Secretary-General's March report and revised June report were a list of retentionist countries or areas; information on types of capital offences in retentionist countries; and supplementary information on the status of capital punishment in a variety of circumstances.

By resolution 1990/51 of 24 July, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the quinquennial reports of the Secretary-General on capital punishment should, beginning in 1995, also cover the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty.

By letters dated 18 July [E/1990/105] and 6 August [E/1990/119], the Governments of Cuba and Antigua and Barbuda, respectively, referred to the list of retentionist countries annexed to the revised report and requested that, as their countries did not contemplate capital punishment for ordinary crimes, they be removed from the list.

Summary or arbitrary executions

In a January report on summary or arbitrary executions [E/CN.4/1990/22], Special Rapporteur S. Amos Waco (Kenya) described urgent appeals and other communications sent to 48 Governments, their replies and his observations thereon. He stated that he had received more appeals than in previous years for urgent intervention in cases of death threats made against judges, lawyers, magistrates, prosecutors, human rights activists, public office holders, trade unionists, educators, journalists, eyewitnesses to crimes and members of opposition groups, including political parties. He took immediate action in cases where death threats posed prima facie imminent danger to the lives of those who had allegedly received such threats.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that summary or arbitrary executions were still prevalent in many parts of the world, in the form of armed conflicts causing the death of civilians, political assassinations, illegal and/or excessive use of force by law enforcement or security force personnel, deaths in custody and executions without trial, or with a trial but without safeguards to protect the rights of the defendant.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Governments review their national laws and regulations, with a view to implementing the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1989 [E/CN.4/1989/65]; ensure the protection of persons who played key roles in defending human rights and promoting social justice from death threats and assassination attempts; include a human rights curriculum in training all law enforcement and military personnel; and establish a government office to improve co-operation with the United Nations and other international organizations in human rights matters.

His recommendations to international organizations included organizing human rights seminars and training courses; promoting information activities to disseminate the latest human rights achievements; emphasizing the importance of international human rights norms and principles; and strengthening the UN Centre for Human Rights to meet the ever-growing requirements in the monitoring of human rights protection and advisory services.

In an addendum to his report [E/CN.4/1990/22/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur reported on his visit to Colombia (11-20 October 1989).

On 6 March [res. 1990/51], the Commission on Human Rights, strongly condemning the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, appealed urgently to Governments, UN bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to take effective action to combat and eliminate them. The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional two years; it asked him to continue to examine situations of summary or arbitrary executions and to respond effectively to information that came before him, particularly when a summary or arbitrary execution was imminent or threatened or when such an execution had occurred. The Commission encouraged Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to set up training programmes and to support projects with a view to training or educating law enforcement officers in human rights issues connected with their work. Governments were urged to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to consider ways of publicizing his work as well as his recommendations. It also asked him to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] appeared not to be respected.

By decision 1990/233 of 25 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Also on 6 March [res. 1990/37], the Commission called on Governments to take into account and respect UN standards on the use of force by law enforcement officials and to ensure their implementation. It also called on them to ensure that the standards and the relevant national rules and regulations be made known and available in the languages of the country to practising lawyers, judges, prosecutors and the general public. Governments were further called on to include information on such international standards and national rules and regulations in education and training programmes for law enforcement officials. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to help organize workshops and other meetings on issues relevant to the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials [GA res. 34/169].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/162.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in which it is stated that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling its resolution 36/22 of 9 November 1981, in which it condemned the practice of summary or arbitrary executions, and its resolutions 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983, 39/110 of 14 December 1984, 40/143 of 13 December 1985, 41/144 of 4 December 1986, 42/141 of 7 December 1987, 43/151 of 8 December 1988 and 44/159 of 15 December 1989,

Deeply alarmed at the continued occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty annexed thereto, which resolution was endorsed by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in its resolution 15,

Welcoming the close co-operation established between the Centre for Human Rights, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with regard to the elaboration of the principles on the effective prevention and investigation of arbitrary and summary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/65 of 24 May 1989, containing the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/64 of 24 May 1989, entitled "Implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty" and the recommendations contained therein,

Convinced of the need for appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions, which represents a flagrant violation of the most fundamental human right, the right to life,

1. Once again strongly condemns the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, that continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Demands that the practice of summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end,

3. Appeals urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take effective action to combat and eliminate summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions;

4. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/35 of 7 May 1982, in which the Council decided to appoint a special rapporteur to consider the questions related to summary or arbitrary executions;

5. Welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1990/233 of 25 May 1990, in which the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for another two years and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

6. Urges all Governments, in particular those which have consistently not responded to communications transmitted to them by the Special Rapporteur, and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur so that he may carry out his mandate effectively;

7. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has recently occurred, and, furthermore, to promote exchanges of views between Governments and those who provide reliable information to the Special Rapporteur, where the Special Rapporteur considers that such exchanges of information might be useful;

8. Welcomes the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur in his reports to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-fourth, forty-fifth and forty-sixth sessions with a view to eliminating summary or arbitrary executions;

9. Encourages Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to organize training programmes and support projects with a view to training or educating law enforcement officers in human rights issues connected with their work, and appeals to the international community to support endeavours to that end;

10. Considers that the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, should continue to seek and receive information from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council as well as medical and forensic experts;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur so that he may effectively carry out his mandate;

12. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to have been respected;

13. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur to be prepared in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/35, 1983/36, 1984/35, 1985/40, 1986/36, 1987/60 and 1988/38, to make recommendations concerning appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions.

18 December 1990 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (4/45/838) without vote, 29 November (meeting 57); 25-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.81); agenda item 12.

State of siege or emergency

In a July report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/33], the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), stated that he was unable to present a fourth annual report updating information on States or territories which, since January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency. Previous reports were issued in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 741], 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 499] and 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 486]. He presented observations and recommendations on the criteria of legality applicable to guarantee respect for human rights in states of emergency.

In an addendum to his report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/33/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur analysed a chapter of the new Constitution of Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), which dealt with states of emergency. In a further addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/33/Add.2], he updated the summary table contained in his 1989 revised and updated annual report [YUN 1989, p. 486], on the proclamation, extension or termination of states of emergency in South Africa. The summary table covered the lifting of some emergency regulations throughout the entire territory on 2 February and the proclamation of a state of emergency in the province of Natal on 8 June.

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/19)], the Sub-Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to update his report on States or territories which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency, so that the Commission, in 1991, would have before it the most recent and accurate information available. It also asked him to continue his work with the aim of submitting to the Sub-Commission draft standard provisions on emergency situations, including situations of internal unrest. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. Inviting Governments, competent organs of the United Nations, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to provide further information to the Special Rapporteur, the Sub-Commission asked Governments to limit states of emergency exclusively to situations which were sufficiently serious and exceptional to justify them.

Disappearance of persons

On 2 March [res. 1990/30], the Commission on Human Rights decided to extend the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for two years, and to ask the Group to report on its work in 1991. The Commission expressed appreciation to the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Detention for the progress made in preparing the first draft of a declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearance and invited the Sub-Commission to finalize the draft as soon as possible (see above, under "Detention without charge or trial").

Noting with concern that some Governments had never provided substantive replies concerning disappearances alleged to have occurred in their countries, the Commission urged the Governments concerned to co-operate with and assist the Working Group and to answer expeditiously requests for information addressed to them. It also urged Governments to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or ill-treatment to which they might be subjected and, when a state of emergency was introduced, to take steps to ensure that the protection of human rights was guaranteed, particularly as regards the prevention of enforced or involuntary disappearances. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Working Group, especially in carrying out missions or holding sessions in countries which would be prepared to receive it.

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/230, approved the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Working Group and its request to the Secretary-General to assist the Group.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions in 1990: its thirtieth session in New York from 4 to 8 June, and its thirty-first and thirty-second sessions in Geneva from 10 to 14 September and from 5 to 14 December, respectively [E/CN.4/1991/20]. During those sessions, the Group met with representatives of Governments, representatives of human rights organizations, associations of relatives of missing persons, and families or witnesses directly concerned with reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances, and examined information received from them. In an addendum to its report [E/CN.4/1991/20/Add.1], the Group described its visit to the Philippines (27 August -7 September 1990).

During the year, the Working Group received 3,864 reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances and transmitted 987 newly reported cases to the Governments concerned; 509 of the cases were reported to have occurred in 1990, 447 were transmitted under the urgent action procedure and 101 were clarified in the same year. Some of the remaining cases were referred back to the sources as they lacked one or more elements required for their transmission and others were considered inadmissible within the context of the Group's mandate. The Group also reviewed information concerning disappearances in 46 countries. It continued to receive petitions from private individuals and organizations expressing support for the adoption of an international instrument on enforced disappearances. In response to a 1990 Commission request [res. 1990/76] (see also below), the Group decided to transmit to Governments concerned any reports of intimidation, persecution or reprisals requiring prompt intervention, with the appeal that Governments take immediate steps to protect all fundamental rights of the person affected.

The Working Group indicated that impunity, compounded by reticence in the administration of justice, was perhaps the single most important factor contributing to the phenomenon of disappearance. Another contributing factor to impunity, the Group said, might be the administration of civilian justice, which was often seen to suffer from institutional paralysis. Prosecutors and judges might find themselves overburdened and over-threatened, making them slow to respond to the need for inquiries. The Group felt deeply frustrated that habeas corpus-the most powerful weapon against unlawful detention-remained virtually inoperative in situations of widespread disappearance.

Annexed to the report was a graph charting disappearances world wide from 1973 to 1990, and other graphs showing the development of disappearances in countries with more than 50 transmitted cases.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/165.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 44/160 of 15 December 1989 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence, in certain cases, of the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances, and about the fact that, in certain cases, the families of disappeared persons have been the target of intimidation and ill-treatment,

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who are unsure of the fate of their relatives,

Concerned by the growing number of reports concerning harassment of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of disappeared persons,

Convinced of the need to continue implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/30 of 2 March 1990,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and to those Governments that have co-operated with it;

2. Welcomes the decision made by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-sixth session to extend for two years the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as defined in Commission resolution 20(XXXVI) of 29 February 1980, while maintaining the principle of annual reporting by the Working Group;

3. Recalls the provisions made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1986/55 of 13 March 1986 to enable the Working Group to fulfil its mandate with greater efficiency;

4. Notes with satisfaction that the Working Group on Detention of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities has completed preparation of the draft declaration on the protection of all persons from enforced or involuntary disappearances and that the Sub-Commission has decided to transmit the draft to the Commission on Human Rights;

5. Appeals to the Governments concerned, particularly those which have not yet replied to the communications addressed to them by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, to co-operate fully with it so as to enable it, with respect for its working methods based on discretion, to perform its strictly humanitarian role, and in particular to reply more quickly to the requests for information addressed to them;

6. Encourages the Governments concerned to consider the wish of the Working Group, when such a wish is expressed, to visit their countries, thus enabling it to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

7. Extends its warm thanks to those Governments which have invited the Working Group and requests them to give all necessary attention to it; recommendations;

8. Appeals to the Governments concerned to take steps to protect the families of disappeared persons against any intimidation or ill-treatment of which they may be the target;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Working Group to the Commission at its forty-seventh session;

10. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary facilities.

Hostage-taking

On 6 March [res. 1990/36], the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned the taking of any person hostage and censured the actions of people responsible for hostage-taking. It called on States to take measures to prevent and punish the taking of hostages and to put an immediate end to cases of abduction and unlawful restraint on their territory. Whenever so requested by a State, the Secretary-General was asked to employ all means at his disposal to secure the immediate release of hostages. The Commission appealed for the humanitarian action of the International Committee of the Red Cross and its delegates to be respected in all circumstances.

Detained UN staff members

Pursuant to a 1989 Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 499], the Secretary-General in February [E/CN.4/1990/14] updated action taken by the General Assembly, the Commission and the Sub-Commission regarding the detention of international civil servants and their families.

On 2 March [res. 1990/31], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Member States to respect and to ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under the authority of the United Nations and their families. It urged them to provide adequate and prompt information concerning the arrest or detention of UN staff members, experts and their families, and to grant access to them without delay, in accordance with the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment [GA res. 43/173]. It further urged Member States to allow medical teams to investigate the health of such persons who were detained and to permit medical treatment, and called on them to allow the representative of the competent international organization to attend any hearing concerning UN staff members, experts and their families. It asked the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure that the human rights, privileges and immunities of UN staff members, experts and their families were fully respected and to submit an updated report in 1991.

In August, Special Rapporteur Maria Concepción Bautista submitted an updated report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/30] on the protection of the human rights of UN staff members, experts and their families, as requested by the Sub-Commission in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 499]. She reviewed UN concerns with respect to their human rights and privileges and immunities, and the legal rights of the United Nations in cases of arrest or detention of staff members. The Special Rapporteur also discussed international instruments dealing with the issue and efforts to ensure respect for the privileges and immunities of UN staff members, experts and their families. A list of some 150 staff members, victims of human rights violations, was annexed to the report.

The Special Rapporteur suggested that a more open information campaign was one means to combat the detention or imprisonment of UN staff members, experts and their families, and that UN Headquarters and other duty stations should publish lists of arrested, detained and missing staff members. She discussed recommendations received from UN bodies, agencies and staff groups, and reiterated her support for a proposal made by the United Nations Development Programme that Member States should agree to grant access by the designated official to detained staff within 24 hours of their arrest and that the Government formally explain the reasons for and the whereabouts of the arrest within 48 hours. Among other recommendations, the Special Rapporteur advised that each organization should be provided with regularly updated information on the status of the various regional and global human rights instruments, thus enabling organizations, when intervening, to invoke relevant international obligations of the Government concerned.

On 30 August [res. 1990/20], the Sub-Commission, expressing appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for her updated report, invited her to submit a final version in 1991. It again urged Governments and other entities holding de facto territorial power to respect and to ensure respect for the rights of staff members and others acting under UN authority and their families, and requested the Secretary-General to redouble his efforts to that end. The Sub-Commission also urged Governments to allow medical examinations of those detained, to provide information concerning arrests and detentions of staff members and their families, and to grant the representatives of the competent organizations access to them. It requested Member States, the Secretary-General and the heads of secretariat of the specialized agencies who had not done so to communicate all information concerning cases of arrest, detention or abduction of officials of the United Nations or the specialized agencies since 1980, for inclusion in the Special Rapporteur's report.

On the same date [dec. 1990/120], the Sub-Commission expressed the wish that, on the commemoration of the forty-second anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [GA res. 217 A (III)], scheduled to take place within the United Nations on 10 December, the situation of UN staff members, experts and their families detained, missing or held in a country against their will be described to the general public and the existing means of guaranteeing the independence and security of UN officials be examined.

Genocide

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/19)], the Commission on Human Rights, strongly condemning the crime of genocide, urged States that had not become parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [GA res. 260 A (III)] to ratify it or accede thereto.

Status of the 1948 Convention

As at 31 December 1990, 101 States had ratified, acceded to or succeeded to the Convention. During the year, Bahrain acceded to it. The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/45/404].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/152.

Status of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 40/142 of 13 December 1985, 41/147 of 4 December 1986, 42/133 of 7 December 1987, 43/138 of 8 December 1988 and 44/158 of 15 December 1989,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1986/18 of 10 March 1986, 1987/25 of 10 March 1987, 1988/28 of 7 March 1988 and 1989/16 of 2 March 1989 and taking note of Commission resolution 1990/19 of 23 February 1990,

Recalling further its resolution 260 A (III) of 9 December 1948, by which it approved and proposed for signature the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide annexed thereto,

Reaffirming once again its conviction that genocide is a crime that violates the norms of international law and runs counter to the spirit and aims of the United Nations,

Recognizing that crimes of genocide have caused great losses and privations to mankind throughout its history,

Expressing its conviction that strict observance of the provisions of the Convention by all countries is necessary for the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Once again strongly condemns the crime of genocide;

2. Reaffirms the necessity of international co-operation in order to liberate mankind from such an odious crime;

3. Notes with satisfaction that more than one hundred States have ratified the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide or have acceded thereto;

4. Urges those States which have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto without further delay;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the status of the Convention.

Slavery

On 7 March [res. 1990/63], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to invite States parties to the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery [YUN 1956, p. 228] and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others [GA res. 317(IV)] to submit to the Sub-Commission regular reports on the situation in their countries. It invited States which had not done so to ratify the relevant conventions or to explain in writing why they felt unable to do so, and to consider providing information regarding their national legislation and practices in that field. Intergovernmental organizations, relevant organizations of the UN system and NGOs were invited to continue to supply information to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery. Relevant NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council were called on to attend the sessions of the Working Group.

The Commission invited Member States to consider taking action to protect children and migrant women against exploitation by prostitution and other slavery-like practices, including establishing national bodies to achieve those objectives, and requested Governments to pursue a policy of information, prevention and rehabilitation of women victims and to take the necessary economic and social measures. Welcoming the Secretary-General's 1989 study on ways and means of establishing an effective mechanism for the implementation of the slavery conventions [YUN 1989, p. 502], the Commission encouraged the Sub-Commission to continue its debate on the study and to elaborate recommendations on the issue. It asked the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of its 1983 resolution [ESC res. 1983/30] on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others, and to make that report available to the Working Group.

Pursuant to a 1989 Economic and Social Council request [YUN 1989, p. 502], the Secretary-General, in April, submitted a report on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others [E/1990/33], containing information received from States, UN organs, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations on their implementation of the 1983 Council resolution.

Working Group activities. The Sub-Commission's five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its fifteenth session (Geneva, 30 July -3 August and 22 August) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/44], considered as its main theme the eradication of the exploitation of child labour and of debt bondage (see below, under "Rights of the child"). In addition, it reviewed developments in slavery and the slave trade, the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the prevention of traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism, and children in armed conflict. The Working Group had before it, among other documents, a May note and addenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1990/4 & Add. 1, 2] by the Secretary-General, summarizing information on the status and the implementation of conventions on slavery and slavery-like practices received from States in response to a 1989 request by the Economic and Social Council [YUN 1989, p. 502].

Despite the progress made in the protection of human rights and the preservation of human dignity, certain forms of slavery still existed all over the world, the Group noted. Calling for effective action to make the 1990s the decade of the elimination of the most odious forms of slavery, it expressed the hope that the end of the twentieth century would coincide with the eradication of all forms of slavery. On the issue of debt bondage, the Group urged that Member States enact laws to deal with the problem and take effective means to eradicate bonded labour. It asked UN organs, specialized agencies, development banks and intergovernmental bodies to ensure that their development projects did not perpetuate or involve bonded labour, that they contributed to its elimination and that transnational financial benefits be provided to liberated bonded labourers within the framework of rehabilitation measures. The Group also recommended that products, such as carpets, whose manufacture was liable to involve child labour should bear a special mark guaranteeing that they had not been produced by children. It decided to consider in greater depth the allegations concerning trafficking in organs and invited the World Health Organization to inform it of the results of its work on the question of organ transplantation. The Group recommended to the Sub-Commission the adoption of two draft resolutions, one containing a programme of action for the elimination of the exploitation of child labour and the other on the work of the Group.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission adopted a resolution [res. 1990/30] covering the report of the Working Group, notably its review of the exploitation of child labour and debt bondage, the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the issue of child soldiers.

In addition, the Sub-Commission asked the Working Group to study the possibility of preparing guiding principles to combat various contemporary forms of slavery. It recommended that: the Human Rights Committee give increased attention to the implementation of the provisions of articles 8 and 24 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], with a view to eliminating the contemporary forms of slavery affecting children; the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women give particular attention to the implementation of the provisions of article 6 of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180], with a view to suppressing all forms of traffic in women; and that the ILO supervisory bodies and the UNESCO Committee on Conventions and Recommendations give particular attention in their work to the implementation of provisions and standards designed to ensure protection of children and other persons exposed to contemporary forms of slavery, such as the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, the exploitation of child labour, bonded labour and the traffic in persons. The Sub-Commission further recommended that the Committee on the Rights of the Child devote full attention to the phenomena which most gravely impaired the rights of the child.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/46.

Suppression of the traffic in persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/20 of 10 March 1982 on the question of slavery and the slave trade in all their practices and manifestations, including the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism, and 1988/42 of 8 March 1988, 1989/35 of 6 March 1989 and 1990/63 of 7 March 1990 on the report of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Recalling also its Council resolutions 1982/20 of 4 May 1982 and 1983/30 of 26 May 1983 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others, and 1988/34 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/74 of 24 May 1989 on the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Considering that the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Economic and Social Council on the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others still constitutes a useful basis for further action,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others,

Noting that only a few Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations have submitted information on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in Council resolution 1983/30,

Gravely concerned that slavery, the slave trade and slavery-like practices still exist, that there are modern manifestations of those phenomena and that such practices represent some of the gravest violations of human rights,

Aware of the complexity of the issue of the suppression of the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, and the need for further co-ordination and co-operation to implement the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur and by various United Nations bodies,

1. Reminds States parties to the Slavery Convention of 1926, the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956, and the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949 of their obligation to submit to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities regular reports on the situation in their countries, as provided for under the relevant conventions and under Council decision 16(LVI) of 17 May 1974;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/30 on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the Council, at its first regular session of 1991, on the steps taken to implement the recommendations contained in its resolution 1983/30 by those Member States, United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental organizations that have not yet submitted such information and to make that report available to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

4. Endorses the request of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1990/63, that the staff member appointed to serve the Working Group and undertake other activities relating to contemporary forms of slavery in the post which has been included in the budget of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat for questions relating to slavery and slavery-like practices be assigned on a full-time basis;

5. Endorses the request of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1989/35, which was reiterated in its resolution 1990/63, that the Secretary-General designate the Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for the co-ordination of activities in the United Nations for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery;

6. Decides to consider the question of the suppression of traffic in persons at its first regular session of 1991 under the item entitled "Human rights".

25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70/Add.1) without vote, 22 May (meeting 18); 11-nation draft (E/1990/C.2/L.12); agenda item 3.

Trade union rights

On 23 February [res. 1990/16], the Commission on Human Rights, recognizing that trade unions played an important role in efforts to achieve social justice, appealed to States to ensure that all persons under their jurisdiction could exercise their trade union rights freely and in full. It requested Governments to put an end to existing violations of those rights immediately and invited Member States that had not done so to ratify and apply in full the 1948 ILO Convention concerning Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise (No. 87) [YUN 1947-48, p. 823] and the 1949 Convention concerning the Application of the Principles of the Right to Organise and Bargain Collectively (No. 98) [YUN 1948-49, p. 987].

Freedom of speech

Expressing concern at the extensive occurrence in many parts of the world of the detention of, or discrimination against, persons exercising the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the Commission, on 2 March [res. 1990/32], appealed to States to ensure respect and support for the rights of persons who exercised, promoted or defended the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, of peaceful assembly and freedom of association, and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs, and, where any persons had been detained solely for exercising those rights, to release them immediately. It also appealed to them to ensure that persons seeking to exercise those rights and freedoms were not discriminated against or harassed. Endorsing a 1989 Sub-Commission decision [YUN 1989, p. 503] to entrust Louis Joinet (France) and Danilo Türk (Yugoslavia) with preparing a study on the right to freedom of opinion and expression, the current problems of its realization and on measures necessary for its strengthening and promotion, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide them with all the assistance they needed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/35.

Right to freedom of opinion and expression

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1984/26 of 12 March 1984, 1985/17 of 11 March 1985, 1986/46 of 12 March 1986, 1987/32 of 10 March 1987, 1988/37 and 1988/39 of 8 March 1988, 1989/31 of 6 March 1989 and 1989/56 of 7 March 1989,

Recalling also decision 1988/110 of 1 September 1988 and resolution 1989/14 of 31 August 1989 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Taking into account the working paper on the right to freedom of opinion and expression prepared by Mr. Danilo Türk,

1. Endorses the decision of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Mr. Louis Joinet and Mr. Danilo Türk, members of the Sub-Commission, with the preparation of a study on the right to freedom of opinion and expression, current problems in the realization of that right and measures necessary for strengthening and promoting it;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteurs to carry out the above-mentioned study;

3. Requests the Special Rapporteurs to submit a preliminary report on the study to the Sub-Commission for Consideration at its forty-second session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session, for comments.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/35

25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) without vote, 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

Report of Special Rapporteurs. In July, the Special Rapporteurs submitted a preliminary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/11] on the right to freedom of opinion and expression, which focused on current problems of its realization and measures to strengthen and promote it. They analysed the interpretations given to the legal regime governing the right to freedom of opinion and expression at the international and domestic levels. They considered recent changes made in various countries which had started on a process of democratization and examined types of restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion and expression. They recommended a series of issues that should be studied in greater detail with a view to the preparation of the final report. They invited members of the Sub-Commission and observers to make suggestions and proposals.

On 30 August [dec. 1990/1171], the Sub-Commission, taking note of the preliminary report, decided to give priority consideration in 1991 to the updated report. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteurs.

Co-operation with UN human rights bodies

On 7 March [res. 1990/76], the Commission on Human Rights condemned all acts of intimidation or reprisal against persons who co-operated with the United Nations or who had sought to avail themselves of United Nations procedures for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Representatives of UN human rights bodies reporting to the Commission or Sub-Commission on human rights violations were requested to take steps to prevent intimidation or reprisal and to devote special attention to that question in their reports. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report to it in 1991 on reprisals against witnesses or victims of human rights violations.

Freedom of movement

In accordance with a 1989 Sub-Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 503], the Secretary-General in June submitted a report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/47] containing an analytical compilation of comments on the draft declaration on freedom and non-discrimination received from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and of the comments made by members of the Sub-Commission. The document summarized general observations and transmitted specific comments and alternative drafts or suggestions to the text prepared by the Special Rapporteur on the subject in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 524].

The Working Group on a draft declaration on freedom and non-discrimination in respect of the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country, established by the Sub-Commission in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 503], met on 7, 8 and 14 August 1990 [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/48] to discuss the draft articles. At the end of the third meeting, the Chairman/Rapporteur proposed that the Sub-Commission consider allocating more time for next year's deliberations of the Working Group. In addition, he suggested that informal consultations concerning the draft declaration be held prior to the next session of the Sub-Commission in order to accelerate the drafting of the declaration.

On 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec. 1990/123)], the Sub-Commission decided to establish, in 1991, a sessional open-ended working group with a view to continuing work on a revised version of the draft declaration. It also decided to ask Waleed Sadi (Jordan), a member of the Working Group, to prepare, without financial implications, the revised version of the draft declaration, on the basis of the Group's discussions in 1990 and the Secretary-General's June report. The revised version would be analysed and discussed by the working group for possible submission to the Sub-Commission in 1991.

Population transfer

Recognizing that mass population movements were often a significant factor in ethnic conflicts and unrest and that the practice was often achieved either without the free and informed consent of those people being moved or without the consent of those people into whose territory they were being moved, the Sub-Commission, on 30 August [res. 1990/17], decided to consider the matter at future sessions, especially the human rights dimensions of population transfer, including the policy and practice of the implantation of settlers and settlements.

Mass exoduses

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/52)], the Commission invited Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations concerned to intensify their co-operation and assistance to address the problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses. Taking note of the Secretary-General's 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 557] on the subject, the Commission encouraged him to continue discharging the function and responsibilities described in the 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees [YUN 1986, p. 851], including the continuous monitoring of all potential outflows. The Secretary-General was asked to continue developing the role of the Secretariat's Office for Research and the Collection of Information (ORCI) to strengthen the co-ordination of information-gathering and analysis with agencies and to make the necessary information available to the competent UN organs. The Commission urged the Secretary-General to use available resources to consolidate and strengthen the system for undertaking early-warning activities in the humanitarian area.

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/164 [YUN 1989, p. 557], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/45/607] on his strengthened role in undertaking early-warning activities, as well as on further developments relating to the recommendations contained in the 1986 report of the Group of Governmental Experts. The Secretary-General provided information and views relating to those recommendations received from Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and NGOs concerned.

The Secretary-General reported that ORCI continued to make concerted efforts to consolidate, enhance and strengthen the role of the United Nations in undertaking early-warning activities. He stated that the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), acting on a suggestion of ORCI, would undertake a study on the co-ordination of early-warning activities with regard to potential refugee outflows. The Secretary-General added that he had also sent letters to several heads of agencies and programmes and called for close co-operation with a view to furthering the development of an integrated early-warning capacity regarding new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons.

By an October note [A/45/649], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the JIU report on the co-ordination of activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows. JIU concluded that ORCI had overwhelming constraints from an administrative, financial and staffing point of view, in comparison with the magnitude and complexity of functions entrusted to it. It made a series of recommendations, including designating a central focal point of the UN system for co-ordinating and monitoring factors related to possible refugee flows and establishing a working group on early warning of refugee flows. JIU suggested that a regular inter-agency consultative mechanism should be created to consider concrete cases of early warning and to meet in case of emergencies. UN resident co-ordinators should serve as co-ordination points in the field. JIU asked the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to make administrative and technical arrangements to achieve the highest possible degree of sharing equipment and communication facilities within the UN system. ORCI was requested to take an initiative in promoting consultative discussions with entities which might contribute to early warning and to further develop links with existing data bases both within and outside the UN system. JIU also recommended that ORCI concentrate more on the development of appropriate methodology, as not sufficient emphasis had been placed on the monitoring of early warning of refugee flows, which was one of the functions of the Office.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/153.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are one of the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject and also in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Aware of the recommendations concerning mass exoduses made by the Commission on Human Rights to its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to special rapporteurs to be taken into account when studying violations of human rights in any part of the world,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own and upon the international community as a whole, by these 'sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need for international co-operation aimed at averting new massive flows of refugees while providing durable solutions to actual refugee situations,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, in which it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Bearing in mind its resolution 44/164 of 15 December 1989 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/52 of 6 March 1990, as well as all previous relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Welcoming the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes,

Noting that the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has specifically acknowledged the direct relationship between observance of human rights standards, refugee movements and problems of protection,

1. Reaffirms its support for the recommendation of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees that the principal organs of the United Nations should make fuller use of their respective competencies under the Charter of the United Nations for the prevention of new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

2. Again invites all Governments and intergovernmental and humanitarian organizations concerned to intensify their co-operation with and assistance to world-wide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and also the causes of such exoduses;

3. Requests all Governments to ensure the effective implementation of the relevant international instruments, in particular in the field of human rights, as this would contribute to averting new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

4. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with a view to supporting the early-warning arrangement instituted by the Secretary-General to avert new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

5. Takes note of the establishment by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of the Working Group on Solutions and Protection;

6. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses and invites him to inform the General Assembly in future reports of the modalities of early-warning activities to avert new and massive flows of refugees;

7. Welcomes the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "The co-ordination of activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows";

8. Specially encourages the Secretary-General to continue to discharge the task described in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, including the continuous monitoring of all potential outflows, keeping in mind the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to develop the role of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information of the Secretariat as a focal point for the operation of an effective early-warning system and the strengthening of co-ordination of information-gathering and analysis among United Nations agencies with a view to preventing new massive flows of refugees and displaced persons;

10. Urges the Secretary-General to allocate the necessary resources to consolidate and strengthen the system for undertaking early-warning activities in the humanitarian area by, inter alia, the computerization of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information and strengthened co-ordination among the relevant parts of the United Nations system, especially the Office for Research and the Collection of Information, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and the relevant specialized agencies;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary information available to the competent United Nations organs, bearing in mind the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

12. Invites bodies of the United Nations system to consider the most expedient ways and means of following up the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on co-ordination;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the strengthened role that he is playing with regard to early-warning activities, especially in the humanitarian area, as well as on any further developments relating to the recommendations contained in the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees;

14. Invites the Secretary-General to keep the General Assembly informed of the efforts to follow up recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

15. Decides to continue consideration of the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its forty-sixth session.

General Assembly resolution 45/153

18 December 1990 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/838) without vote, 29 November (meeting 57); 15-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.70); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 48-50,55,57; plenary 69.

Economic, social and cultural rights

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/17)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to intensify co-ordination between UN human rights activities and the programmes of development agencies, and to consult with the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights with a view to eliciting its recommendations as to how the human rights programme of advisory services could best be used to promote enhanced respect for economic, social and cultural rights.

Welcoming the preliminary report on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights prepared by the Sub-Commission's Special Rapporteur in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 504], it asked him, when preparing his progress report, to give priority to identifying practical strategies to promote for everyone the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [YUN 1966, p. 419, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], paying particular attention to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged.

On 27 February [(res. 1990/24)1], the Commission, by 36 votes to 2, with 5 abstentions, invited the Sub-Commission to submit the Special Rapporteur's second report in 1991 and asked Governments wishing to do so to provide him with their comments concerning the impact of economic adjustment policies arising from foreign debt on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to take into account, in his report, the comments and views of Governments on the subject.

In July, Special Rapporteur Danilo Türk (Yugoslavia) submitted a progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/19] on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. It was based on his 1989 preliminary report [YUN 1989, p. 504] and took account of comments made by members of the Sub-Commission, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Commission.

The Special Rapporteur provided information on social and economic indicators and their role in the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. He discussed standard-setting regarding the right to adequate housing and land rights, and the question of extreme poverty. Regarding those subjects, the Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations to the Sub-Commission, including inviting the Commission in 1991 to consider asking the Secretary-General to organize in 1992-1993 a seminar to discuss indicators to measure achievements in the realization of economic, social and cultural rights; suggesting to the Special Rapporteur areas in which further standard-setting might be considered necessary; and appointing one of its members as special rapporteur to study the question of extreme poverty.

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/16)], the Sub-Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to prepare a second progress report and the Secretary-General to assist him.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1990, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966 [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] and in force since 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 609], had been ratified, acceded to or succeeded to by 97 States. Burundi, Malta, the Republic of Korea and Somalia became parties in 1990 (see also p. 628-31).

The Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/403] on the status of the Covenant as at 1 August.

Implementation of the Covenant

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/20)], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States that had not become parties to the Covenant to do so. Governments were encouraged to publish the text of the Covenant in as many languages as possible and to disseminate it widely. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1991 on the status of the Covenant.

The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985 [ESC res. 1985/17], held its fourth (15 January-2 February) [E/1990/23 & Corr.1] and fifth (26 November-14 December) [E/1991/23] sessions, both in Geneva. By decision 1990/254 of 25 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Committee on its fourth session. The Committee's pre-session working group, a five-member group established in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 527] to meet for one week prior to each session, met in Geneva from 8 to 12 January. It also met prior to the Committee's fifth session, from 8 to 12 October, following the Council's approval of holding the meeting of the pre-sessional working group at a time one to three months prior to the Committee's session (see below).

Concerning the rights covered under articles 6 to 9 of the Covenant (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, trade union rights and the right to social security), the Committee examined reports from Jamaica [E/1984/7/Add.30] and Panama [E/1984/6/Add.19]. Rights covered by articles 10 to 12 (the protection of the family, mothers and children, and the right to an adequate living standard and to physical and mental health) were considered in reports submitted by Colombia [E/1986/4/Add.25], Cyprus [E/1986/4/Add.2 & Add.26], Ecuador [E/1986/3/Add.14], Jamaica [E/1986/3/Add.12] and Mexico [E/1986/3/Add.13]. As to rights covered under articles 13 to 15 (education, including compulsory education, and cultural participation), the Committee examined reports from Argentina [E/1988/5/Add.4], Ecuador [E/1988/5/Add.7], India [E/1988/5/Add.5], Iran [E/1982/3/Add.43], Jamaica [E/1988/5/Add.3], Jordan [E/1982/3/Add.38/Rev.1] and the Philippines [E/1988/5/Add.2]. Reports covering articles 1 to 15 of the Covenant, submitted by Costa Rica, [E/1990/5/Add.3] the Dominican Republic [E/1990/5/Add.4] and Luxembourg [E/1990/5/Add.1], were also considered.

The day of general discussion at the Committee's fourth session focused on the right to housing.

The Committee adopted its second general comment, which dealt with international technical assistance measures, and its third, which concerned the nature of States parties' obligations. The general comments, based on the articles and provisions of the Covenant, were aimed at assisting the States parties in fulfilling their reporting obligations.

At its fourth session, the Committee agreed that an amendment to rule 68 should be incorporated into the provisional rules of procedure before their adoption by the Economic and Social Council in order to reflect the actual practice adopted by the Committee at that session. Rule 68 dealt with the participation of the specialized agencies in the Committee's meetings. On 25 May, by decision 1990/251, the Council approved the Committee's amendment to rule 68.

Annexed to the Committee reports were the texts of the general comments, a chart of the States parties and status of submission of reports, and revised guidelines regarding the form and content of reports.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/209 of 1 May, decided to invite the Committee's Rapporteur to attend meetings of the Council's Second (Social) Committee during its review of the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Council the twelfth report [E/1990/9] of the International Labour Organisation on progress made in achieving observance of the Covenant. He also transmitted to the Council the third report [E/1990/8] of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization concerning rights covered by articles 13 to 15 of the Covenant.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1990/252.

Pre-sessional working group of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

At the 14th plenary meeting, on 25 May 1990, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its fourth session, noted the considerable advantages to be obtained from holding the meeting of the Committee's pre-sessional working group and the actual session of the Committee at separate times and approved the holding of the former one to three months prior to the latter.

Economic and Social Council decision 1990/252

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70/Add.1) without vote, 22 May (meeting 18); draft by Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (E/1990/23); agenda item 3.

Migrant workers convention

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/44)], the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and, in particular, the headway made in the second reading of the draft Convention. It requested the Secretary-General to inform the Commission in 1991 of progress made.

The Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (the words "Members of" were added at the meeting), at its ninth inter-sessional meeting (New York, 29 May-8 June) [A/C.3/45/1], continued to discuss provisions of the draft Convention, and, following the adoption of the pending provisions, considered a technical review of the draft. On 6 June, the Working Group adopted the draft text on second reading, as it had emerged from the consideration of the technical review. It asked its Chairman to request the Secretary-General to send the draft text as finally adopted to all Governments as soon as possible so that the General Assembly might take a decision during its forty-fifth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/158.

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of AU Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and standards set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the importance of the task carried out in connection with migrant workers and their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling its resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979, in which it decided to establish a working group open to all Member States to elaborate an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/198 of 15 December 1980, 36/160 of 16 December 1981, 37/170 of 17 December 1982, 38/86 of 16 December 1983, 39/102 of 14 December 1984, 40/130 of 13 December 1985, 41/151 of 4 December 1986, 42/140 of 7 December 1987, 43/146 of 8 December 1988 and 44/155 of 15 December 1989, by which it renewed the mandate of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and requested it to continue its work,

Having examined the report of the Working Group on its ninth inter-sessional meeting, held from 29 May to 8 June 1990, with a view to completing the remaining articles and considering the results of the technical revision of the draft Convention entrusted to the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in accordance with resolution 44/155,

Bearing in mind that the Working Group was able to achieve its goals in accordance with the mandate entrusted to it by the General Assembly,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group for having concluded the elaboration of the draft International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families;

2. Adopts and opens for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, contained in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, and expresses the hope that it will enter into force at an early date;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all facilities and assistance necessary for the dissemination of information on the Convention;

5. Invites United Nations agencies and organizations, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on the Convention and to promoting understanding thereof;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the status of the Convention;

7. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-sixth session under an item entitled "Implementation of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families".

ANNEX

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Taking into account the principles embodied in the basic instruments of the United Nations concerning human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Taking into account also the principles and standards set forth in the relevant instruments elaborated within the framework of the International Labour Organisation, especially the Convention concerning Migration for Employment (No. 97), the Convention concerning Migrations in Abusive Conditions and the Promotion of Equality of Opportunity and Treatment of Migrant Workers (No. 143), the Recommendation concerning Migration for Employment (No. 86), the Recommendation concerning Migrant Workers (No. 151), the Convention concerning Forced or Compulsory Labour (No. 29) and the Convention concerning Abolition of Forced Labour (No. 105),

Reaffirming the importance of the principles contained in the Convention against Discrimination in Education of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Recalling the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Declaration of the Fourth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and the Slavery Conventions,

Recalling that one of the objectives of the International Labour Organisation, as stated in its Constitution, is the protection of the interests of workers when employed in countries other than their own, and bearing in mind the expertise and experience of that organization in matters related to migrant workers and members of their families,

Recognizing the importance of the work done in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in various organs of the United Nations, in particular in the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission for Social Development, and in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nation Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, as well as in other international organizations,

Recognizing also the progress made by certain States on a regional or bilateral basis towards the protection of the rights of migrant workers and members of their families, as well as the importance and usefulness of bilateral and multilateral agreements in this field,

Realizing the importance and extent of the migration phenomenon, which involves millions of people and affects a large number of States in the international community,

Aware of the impact of the flows of migrant workers on States and people concerned, and desiring to establish norms which may contribute to the harmonization of the attitudes of States through the acceptance of basic principles concerning the treatment of migrant workers and members of their families,

Considering the situation of vulnerability in which migrant workers and members of their families frequently find themselves owing, among other things, to their absence from their State of origin and to the difficulties they may encounter arising from their presence in the State of employment,

Convinced that the rights of migrant workers and members of their families have not been sufficiently recognized everywhere and therefore require appropriate international protection,

Taking into account the fact that migration is often the cause of serious problems for the members of the families of migrant workers as well as for the workers themselves, in particular because of the scattering of the family,

Bearing in mind that the human problems involved in migration are even more serious in the case of irregular migration and convinced therefore that appropriate action should be encouraged in order to prevent and eliminate clandestine movements and trafficking in migrant workers, while at the same time assuring the protection of their fundamental human rights,

Considering that workers who are non-documented or in an irregular situation are frequently employed under less favourable conditions of work than other workers and that certain employers find this an inducement to seek such labour in order to reap the benefits of unfair competition,

Considering also that recourse to the employment of migrant workers who are in an irregular situation will be discouraged if the fundamental human rights of all migrant workers are more widely recognized and, moreover, that granting certain additional rights to migrant workers and members of their families in a regular situation will encourage all migrants and employers to respect and comply with the laws and procedures established by the States concerned,

Convinced, therefore, of the need to bring about the international protection of the rights of all migrant workers and members of their families, reaffirming and establishing basic norms in a comprehensive convention which could be applied universally,

Have agreed as follows:

PART I

Scope and definitions

Article 1

1. The present Convention is applicable, except as otherwise provided hereafter, to all migrant workers and members of their families without distinction of any kind such as sex, race, colour, language, religion or conviction, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, nationality, age, economic position, property, marital status, birth or other status.

2. The present Convention shall apply during the entire migration process of migrant workers and members of their families, which comprises preparation for migration, departure, transit and the entire period of stay and remunerated activity in the State of employment as well as return to the State of origin or the State of habitual residence.

Article 2

For the purposes of the present Convention:

1. The term "migrant worker" refers to a person who is to be engaged, is engaged or has been engaged in a remunerated activity in a State of which he or she is not a national.

2. (a) The term "frontier worker" refers to a migrant worker who retains his or her habitual residence in a neighbouring State to which he or she normally returns every day or at least once a week;

(b) The term "seasonal worker" refers to a migrant worker whose work by its character is dependent on seasonal conditions and is performed only during part of the year;

(c) The term "seafarer", which includes a fisherman, refers to a migrant worker employed on board a vessel registered in a State of which he or she is not a national;

(d) The term "worker on an offshore installation" refers to a migrant worker employed on an offshore installation that is under the jurisdiction of a State of which he or she is not a national;

(e) The term "itinerant worker" refers to a migrant worker who, having his or her habitual residence in one State, has to travel to another State or States for short periods, owing to the nature of his or her occupation;

(f) The term "project-tied worker" refers to a migrant worker admitted to a State of employment for a defined period to work solely on a specific project being carried out in that State by his or her employer;

(g) The term "specified-employment worker" refers to a migrant worker:

- (i) Who has been sent by his or her employer for a restricted and defined period of time to a State of employment to undertake a specific assignment or duty; or
- (ii) Who engages for a restricted and defined period of time in work that requires professional, commercial, technical or other highly specialized skill; or
- (iii) Who, upon the request of his or her employer in the State of employment, engages for a restricted and defined period of time in work whose nature is transitory or brief;

and who is required to depart from the State of employment either at the expiration of his or her authorized period of stay, or earlier if he or she no longer undertakes that specific assignment or duty or engages in that work;

(h) The term "self-employed worker" refers to a migrant worker who is engaged in a remunerated activity otherwise than under a contract of employment and who earns his or her living through this activity normally working alone or together with members of his or her family, and to any other migrant worker recognized as self-employed by applicable legislation of the State of employment or bilateral or multilateral agreements.

Article 3

The present Convention shall not apply to:

(a) Persons sent or employed by international organizations and agencies or persons sent or employed by a State outside its territory to perform official functions, whose admission and status are regulated by general international law or by specific international agreements or conventions;

(b) Persons sent or employed by a State or on its behalf outside its territory who participate in development programmes and other co-operation programmes, whose admission and status are regulated by agreement with the State of employment and who, in accordance with that agreement, are not considered migrant workers;

(c) Persons taking up residence in a State different from their State of origin as investors;

(d) Refugees and stateless persons, unless such application is provided for in the relevant national legislation of, or international instruments in force for the State Party concerned;

(e) Students and trainees;

(f) Seafarers and workers on an offshore installation who have not been admitted to take up residence and engage in a remunerated activity in the State of employment.

Article 4

For the purposes of the present Convention the term "members of the family" refers to persons married to migrant workers or having with them a relationship that, according to applicable law, produces effects equivalent to marriage, as well as their dependent children and other dependent persons who are recognized as members of the family by applicable legislation or applicable bilateral or multilateral agreements between the States concerned.

Article 5

For the purposes of the present Convention, migrant workers and members of their families:

(a) Are considered as documented or in a regular situation if they are authorized to enter, to stay and to engage in a remunerated activity in the State of employment pursuant to the law of that State and to international agreements to which that State is a party;

(b) Are considered as non-documented or in an irregular situation if they do not comply with the conditions provided for in subparagraph (a) of the present article.

Article 6

For the purposes of the present Convention:

(a) The term "State of origin" means the State of which the person concerned is a national:

(b) The term "State of employment" means a State where the migrant worker is to be engaged, is engaged or has been engaged in a remunerated activity, as the case may be;

(c) The term "State of transit" means any State through which the person concerned passes on any journey to the State of employment or from the State of employment to the State of origin or the State of habitual residence.

PART II

Non-discrimination with respect to rights

Article 7

States Parties undertake, in accordance with the international instruments concerning human rights, to respect and to ensure to all migrant workers and members of their families within their territory or subject to their jurisdiction the rights provided for in the present Convention without distinction of any kind such as sex, race, colour, language, religion or conviction, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, nationality, age, economic position, property, marital status, birth or other status.

PART III

Human rights of all migrant workers and members of their families

Article 8

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall be free to leave any State, including their State of origin. This right shall not be subject to any restrictions except those that are provided by law, are necessary to protect national security, public order (ordre public), public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others and are consistent with the other rights recognized in the present part of the Convention.

2. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right at any time to enter and remain in their State of origin.

Article 9

The right to life of migrant workers and members of their families shall be protected by law.

Article 10

No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 11

1. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be held in slavery or servitude.

2. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.

3. Paragraph 2 of the present article shall not be held to preclude, in States where imprisonment with hard labour may be imposed as a punishment for a crime, the performance of hard labour in pursuance of a sentence to such punishment by a competent court.

4. For the purpose of the present article the term "forced or compulsory labour" shall not include:

(a) Any work or service not referred to in paragraph 3 of the present article normally required of a person who is under detention in consequence of a lawful order of a court or of a person during conditional release from such detention;

(b) Any service exacted in cases of emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community;

(c) Any work or service that forms part of normal civil obligations so far as it is imposed also on citizens of the State concerned.

Article 12

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right shall include freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of their choice and freedom either individually or in community with others and in public or private to manifest their religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching.

2. Migrant workers and members of their families shall not be subject to coercion that would impair their freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of their choice.

3. Freedom to manifest one's religion or belief may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

4. States Parties to the present Convention undertake to have respect for the liberty of parents, at least one of whom is a migrant worker; and, when-applicable, legal guardians to ensure the religious and moral education of their children in conformity with their own convictions.

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to hold opinions without interference.

2. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to freedom of expression; this right shall include freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art or through any other media of their choice.

3. The exercise of the right provided for in paragraph 2 of the present article carries with it special duties and responsibilities. It may therefore be subject to certain restrictions, but these shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary:

(a) For respect of the rights or reputation of others;

(b) For the protection of the national security of the States concerned or of public order (ordre public) or of public health or morals;

(c) For the purpose of preventing any propaganda for war;

(d) For the purpose of preventing any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence.

Article 14

No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home, correspondence or other communications, or to unlawful attacks on his or her honour and reputation. Each migrant worker and member of his or her family shall have the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Article 15

No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be arbitrarily deprived of property, whether owned individually or in association with others. Where, under the legislation in force in the State of employment, the assets of a migrant worker or a member of his or her family are expropriated in whole or in part, the person concerned shall have the right to fair and adequate compensation.

Article 16

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to liberty and security of person.

2. Migrant workers and members of their families shall be entitled to effective protection by the State against violence, physical injury, threats and intimidation, whether by public officials or by private individuals, groups or institutions.

3. Any verification by law enforcement officials of the identity of migrant workers or members of their families shall be carried out in accordance with procedures established by law.

4. Migrant workers and members of their families shall not be subjected individually or collectively to arbitrary arrest or detention; they shall not be deprived of their liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedures as are established by law.

5. Migrant workers and members of their families who are arrested shall be informed at the time of arrest as far as possible in a language they understand of the reasons for their arrest and they shall be promptly informed in a language they understand of any charges against them.

6. Migrant workers and members of their families who are arrested or detained on a criminal charge shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorized by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release. It shall not be the general rule that while awaiting trial they shall be detained in custody, but release may be subject to guarantees to appear for trial, at any other stage of the judicial proceedings and, should the occasion arise, for the execution of the judgement.

7. When a migrant worker or a member of his or her family is arrested or committed to prison or custody pending trial or is detained in any other manner:

(a) The consular or diplomatic authorities of his or her State of origin or of a State representing the interests of that State shall, if he or she so requests, be informed without delay of his or her arrest or detention and of the reasons therefor;

(b) The person concerned shall have the right to communicate with the said authorities. Any communication by the person concerned to the said authorities shall be forwarded without delay, and he or she shall also have the right to receive communications sent by the said authorities without delay;

(c) The person concerned shall be informed without delay of this right and of rights deriving from relevant treaties, if any, applicable between the States concerned, to correspond and to meet with representatives of the said authorities and to make arrangements with them for his or her legal representation.

8. Migrant workers and members of their families who are deprived of their liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that that court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of their detention and order their release if the detention is not lawful. When they attend such proceedings, they shall have the assistance, if necessary without cost to them, of an interpreter, if they cannot understand or speak the language used.

9. Migrant workers and members of their families who have been victims of unlawful arrest or detention shall have an enforceable right to compensation.

Article 17

1. Migrant workers and members of their families who are deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person and for their cultural identity.

2. Accused migrant workers and members of their families shall, save in exceptional circumstances, be separated from convicted persons and shall be subject to separate treatment appropriate to their status as unconvicted persons. Accused juvenile persons shall be separated from adults and brought as speedily as possible for adjudication.

3. Any migrant worker or member of his or her family who is detained in a State of transit or in a State of employment for violation of provisions relating to migration shall be held, in so far as practicable, separately from convicted persons or persons detained pending trial.

4. During any period of imprisonment in pursuance of a sentence imposed by a court of law, the essential aim of the treatment of a migrant worker or a member of his or her family shall be his or her reformation and social rehabilitation. Juvenile offenders shall be separated from adults and be accorded treatment appropriate to their age and legal status.

5. During detention or imprisonment, migrant workers and members of their families shall enjoy the same rights as nationals to visits by members of their families.

6. Whenever a migrant worker is deprived of his or her liberty, the competent authorities of the State concerned shall pay attention to the problems that may be posed for members of his or her family, in particular for spouses and minor children.

7. Migrant workers and members of their families who are subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment in accordance with the law in force in the State of employment or in the State of transit shall enjoy the same rights as nationals of those States who are in the same situation.

8. If a migrant worker or a member of his or her family is detained for the purpose of verifying any infraction of provisions related to migration, he or she shall not bear any costs arising therefrom.

Article 18

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to equality with nationals of the State concerned before the courts and tribunals. In the determination of any criminal charge against them or of their rights and obligations in a suit of law, they shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law.

2. Migrant workers and members of their families who are charged with a criminal offence shall have the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law.

3. In the determination of any criminal charge against them, migrant workers and members of their families shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees:

(a) To be informed promptly and in detail in a language they understand of the nature and cause of the charge against them;

(b) To have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of their defence and to communicate with counsel of their own choosing;

(c) To be tried without undue delay;

(d) To be tried in their presence and to defend themselves in person or through legal assistance of their own choosing; to be informed, if they do not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to them, in any case where the interests of justice so require and without payment by them in any such case if they do not have sufficient means to pay;

(e) To examine or have examined the witnesses against them and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on their behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against them;

(f) To have the free assistance of an interpreter if they cannot understand or speak the language used in court;

(g) Not to be compelled to testify against themselves or to confess guilt.

4. In the case of juvenile persons, the procedure shall be such as will take account of their age and the desirability of promoting their rehabilitation.

5. Migrant workers and members of their families convicted of a crime shall have the right to their conviction and sentence being reviewed by a higher tribunal according to law.

6. When a migrant worker or a member of his or her family has, by a final decision, been convicted of a criminal offence and when subsequently his or her conviction has been reversed or he or she has been pardoned on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows conclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice, the person who has suffered punishment as a result of such conviction shall be compensated according to law, unless it is proved that the non-disclosure of the unknown fact in time is wholly or partly attributable to that person.

7. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be liable to be tried or punished again for an offence for which he or she has already been finally convicted or acquitted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State concerned.

Article 19

1. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission that did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when the criminal offence was committed, nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time when it was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of the offence, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, he or she shall benefit thereby.

2. Humanitarian considerations related to the status of a migrant worker, in particular with respect to his or her right of residence or work, should be taken into account in imposing a sentence for a criminal offence committed by a migrant worker or a member of his or her family.

Article 20

1. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be imprisoned merely on the ground of failure to fulfil a contractual obligation.

2. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be deprived of his or her authorization of residence or work permit or expelled merely on the ground of failure to fulfil an obligation arising out of a work contract unless fulfilment of that obligation constitutes a condition for such authorization or permit.

Article 21

It shall be unlawful for anyone, other than a public official duly authorized by law, to confiscate, destroy or attempt to destroy identity documents, documents authorizing entry to or stay, residence or establishment in the national territory or work permits. No authorized confiscation of such documents shall take place without delivery of a detailed receipt. In no case shall it be permitted to destroy the passport or equivalent document of a migrant worker or a member of his or her family.

Article 22

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall not be subject to measures of collective expulsion. Each case of expulsion shall be examined and decided individually.

2. Migrant workers and members of their families may be expelled from the territory of a State Party only in pursuance of a decision taken by the competent authority in accordance with law.

3. The decision shall be communicated to them in a language they understand. Upon their request where not otherwise mandatory, the decision shall be communicated to them in writing and, save in exceptional circumstances on account of national security, the reasons for the decision likewise stated. The persons concerned shall be informed of these rights before or at the latest at the time the decision is rendered.

4. Except where a final decision is pronounced by a judicial authority, the person concerned shall have the right to submit the reason he or she should not be expelled and to have his or her case reviewed by the competent authority, unless compelling reasons of national security require otherwise. Pending such review, the person concerned shall have the right to seek a stay of the decision of expulsion.

5. If a decision of expulsion that has already been executed is subsequently annulled, the person concerned shall have the right to seek compensation according to law and the earlier decision shall not be used to prevent him or her from re-entering the State concerned.

6. In case of expulsion, the person concerned shall have a reasonable opportunity before or after departure to settle any claims for wages and other entitlements due to him or her and any pending liabilities.

7. Without prejudice to the execution of a decision of expulsion, a migrant worker or a member of his or her family who is subject to such a decision may seek entry into a State other than his or her State of origin.

8. In case of expulsion of a migrant worker or a member of his or her family, the costs of expulsion shall not be borne by him or her. The person concerned may be required to pay his or her own travel costs.

9. Expulsion from the State of employment shall not in itself prejudice any rights of a migrant worker or a member of his or her family acquired in accordance with the law of that State, including the right to receive wages and other entitlements due to him or her.

Article 23

Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to have recourse to the protection and assistance of the consular or diplomatic authorities of their State of origin or of a State representing the interests of that State whenever the rights recognized in the present Convention are impaired. In particular, in case of expulsion, the person concerned shall be informed of this right without delay and the authorities of the expelling State shall facilitate the exercise of such right.

Article 24

Every migrant worker and every member of his or her family shall have the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 25

1. Migrant workers shall enjoy treatment not less favourable than that which applies to nationals of the State of employment in respect of remuneration and:

(a) Other conditions of work, that is to say, overtime, hours of work, weekly rest, holidays with pay, safety, health, termination of the employment relationship and any other conditions of work which, according to national law and practice, are covered by this term;

(b) Other terms of employment, that is to say, minimum age of employment, restriction on home work and any other matters which, according to national law and practice, are considered a term of employment.

2. It shall not be lawful to derogate in private contracts of employment from the principle of equality of treatment referred to in paragraph 1 of the present article.

3. States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that migrant workers are not deprived of any rights derived from this principle by reason of any irregularity in their stay or employment. In particular, employers shall not be relieved of any legal or contractual obligations, nor shall their obligations be limited in any manner by reason of any such irregularity.

Article 26

1. States Parties recognize the right of migrant workers and members of their families:

(a) To take part in meetings and activities of trade unions and of any other associations established in accordance with law, with a view to protecting their economic, social, cultural and other interests, subject only to the rules of the organization concerned;

(b) To join freely any trade union and any such association as aforesaid, subject only to the rules of the organization concerned;

(c) To seek the aid and assistance of any trade union and of any such association as aforesaid.

2. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of these rights other than those that are prescribed by law and which are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public order (ordre public) or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Article 27

1. With respect to social security, migrant workers and members of their families shall enjoy in the State of employment the same treatment granted to nationals in so far as they fulfil the requirements provided for by the applicable legislation of that State and the applicable bilateral and multilateral treaties. The competent authorities of the State of origin and the State of employment can at any time establish the necessary arrangements to determine the modalities of application of this norm.

2. Where the applicable legislation does not allow migrant workers and members of their families a benefit, the States concerned shall examine the possibility of reimbursing interested persons the amount of contributions made by them with respect to that benefit on the basis of the treatment granted to nationals who are in similar circumstances.

Article 28

Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to receive any medical care that is urgently required for the preservation of their life or the avoidance of irreparable harm to their health on the basis of equality of treatment with nationals of the State concerned. Such emergency medical care shall not be refused them by reason of any irregularity with regard to stay or employment.

Article 29

Each child of a migrant worker shall have the right to a name, to registration of birth and to a nationality.

Article 30

Each child of a migrant worker shall have the basic right of access to education on the basis of equality of treatment with nationals of the State concerned. Access to public pre-school educational institutions or schools shall not be refused or limited by reason of the irregular situation with respect to stay or employment of either parent or by reason of the irregularity of the child's stay in the State of employment.

Article 31

1. States Parties shall ensure respect for the cultural identity of migrant workers and members of their families and shall not prevent them from maintaining their cultural links with their State of origin.

2. States Parties may take appropriate measures to assist and encourage efforts in this respect.

Article 32

Upon the termination of their stay in the State of employment, migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to transfer their earnings and savings and, in accordance with the applicable legislation of the States concerned, their personal effects and belongings.

Article 33

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to be informed by the State of origin, the State of employment or the State of transit as the case may be concerning:

(a) Their rights arising out of the present Convention;

(b) The conditions of their admission, their rights and obligations under the law and practice of the State concerned and such other matters as will enable them to comply with administrative or other formalities in that State.

2. States Parties shall take all measures they deem appropriate to disseminate the said information or to ensure that it is provided by employers, trade unions or other appropriate bodies or institutions. As appropriate, they shall co-operate with other States concerned.

3. Such adequate information shall be provided upon request to migrant workers and members of their families, free of charge, and, as far as possible, in a language they are able to understand.

Article 34

Nothing in the present part of the Convention shall have the effect of relieving migrant workers and the members of their families from either the obligation to comply with the laws and regulations of any State of transit and the State of employment or the obligation to respect the cultural identity of the inhabitants of such States.

Article 35

Nothing in the present part of the Convention shall be interpreted as implying the regularization of the situation of migrant workers or members of their families who are non-documented or in an irregular situation or any right to such regularization of their situation, nor shall it prejudice the measures intended to ensure sound and equitable conditions for international migration as provided in part VI of the present Convention.

PART IV

Other rights of migrant workers and members of their families who are documented or in a regular situation

Article 36

Migrant workers and members of their families who are documented or in a regular situation in the State of employment shall enjoy the rights set forth in the present part of the Convention in addition to those set forth in part III.

Article 37

Before their departure, or at the latest at the time of their admission to the State of employment, migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to be fully informed by the State of origin or the State of employment, as appropriate, of all conditions applicable to their admission and particularly those concerning their stay and the remunerated activities in which they may engage as well as of the requirements they must satisfy in the State of employment and the authority to which they must address themselves for any modification of those conditions.

Article 38

1. States of employment shall make every effort to authorize migrant workers and members of their families to be temporarily absent without effect upon their authorization to stay or to work, as the case may be. In doing so, States of employment shall take into account the special needs and obligations of migrant workers and members of their families, in particular in their States of origin.

2. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to be fully informed of the terms on which such temporary absences are authorized.

Article 39

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to liberty of movement in the territory of the State of employment and freedom to choose their residence there.

2. The rights mentioned in paragraph 1 of the present article shall not be subject to any restrictions except those that are provided by law, are necessary to protect national security, public order (ordre public), public health or morals, or the rights and freedoms of others and are consistent with the other rights recognized in the present Convention.

Article 40

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to form associations and trade unions in the State of employment for the promotion and protection of their economic, social, cultural and other interests.

2. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of this right other than those that are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public order (ordre public) or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Article 41

1. Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to participate in public affairs of their State of origin and to vote and to be elected at elections of that State, in accordance with its legislation.

2. The States concerned shall, as appropriate and in accordance with their legislation, facilitate the exercise of these rights.

Article 42

1. States Parties shall consider the establishment of procedures or institutions through which account may be taken, both in States of origin and in States of employment, of special needs, aspirations and obligations of migrant workers and members of their families and shall envisage, as appropriate, the possibility for migrant workers and members of their families to have their freely chosen representatives in those institutions.

2. States of employment shall facilitate, in accordance with their national legislation, the consultation or participation of migrant workers and members of their families in decisions concerning the life and administration of local communities.

3. Migrant workers may enjoy political rights in the State of employment if that State, in the exercise of its sovereignty, grants them such rights.

Article 43

1. Migrant workers shall enjoy equality of treatment with nationals of the State of employment in relation to:

(a) Access to educational institutions and services subject to the admission requirements and other regulations of the institutions and services concerned;

(b) Access to vocational guidance and placement services;

(c) Access to vocational training and retraining facilities and institutions;

(d) Access to housing, including social housing schemes, and protection against exploitation in respect of rents;

(e) Access to social and health services, provided that the requirements for participation in the respective schemes are met;

(f) Access to co-operatives and self-managed enterprises, which shall not imply a change of their migration status and shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the bodies concerned;

(g) Access to and participation in cultural life.

2. States Parties shall promote conditions to ensure effective equality of treatment to enable migrant workers to enjoy the rights mentioned in paragraph 1 of the present article whenever the terms of their stay, as authorized by the State of employment, meet the appropriate requirements.

3. States of employment shall not prevent an employer of migrant workers from establishing housing or social or cultural facilities for them. Subject to article 70 of the present Convention, a State of employment may make the establishment of such facilities subject to the requirements generally applied in that State concerning their installation.

Article 44

1. States Parties, recognizing that the family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State, shall take appropriate measures to ensure the protection of the unity of the families of migrant workers.

2. States Parties shall take measures that they deem appropriate and that fall within their competence to facilitate the reunification of migrant workers with their spouses or persons who have with the migrant worker a relationship that, according to applicable law, produces effects equivalent to marriage, as well as with their minor dependent unmarried children.

3. States of employment, on humanitarian grounds, shall favourably consider granting equal treatment, as set forth in paragraph 2 of the present article, to other family members of migrant workers.

Article 45

1. Members of the families of migrant workers shall, in the State of employment, enjoy equality of treatment with nationals of that State in relation to:

(a) Access to educational institutions and services, subject to the admission requirements and other regulations of the institutions and services concerned;

(b) Access to vocational guidance and training institutions and services, provided that requirements for participation are met;

(c) Access to social and health services, provided that requirements for participation in the respective schemes are met;

(d) Access to and participation in cultural life.

2. States of employment shall pursue a policy, where appropriate in collaboration with the States of origin, aimed at facilitating the integration of children of migrant workers in the local school system, particularly in respect of teaching them the local language.

3. States of employment shall endeavour to facilitate for the children of migrant workers the teaching of their mother tongue and culture and, in this regard, States of origin shall collaborate whenever appropriate.

4. States of employment may provide special schemes of education in the mother tongue of children of migrant workers, if necessary in collaboration with the States of origin.

Article 46

Migrant workers and members of their families shall, subject to the applicable legislation of the States concerned, as well as relevant international agreements and the obligations of the States concerned arising out of their participation in customs unions, enjoy exemption from import and export duties and taxes in respect of their personal and household effects as well as the equipment necessary to engage in the remunerated activity for which they were admitted to the State of employment:

- (a) Upon departure from the State of origin or State of habitual residence;
- (b) Upon initial admission to the State of employment;
- (c) Upon final departure from the State of employment;
- (d) Upon final return to the State of origin or State of habitual residence.

Article 47

1. Migrant workers shall have the right to transfer their earnings and savings, in particular those funds necessary for the support of their families, from the State of employment to their State of origin or any other State. Such transfers shall be made in conformity with procedures established by applicable legislation of the State concerned and in conformity with applicable international agreements.

2. States concerned shall take appropriate measures to facilitate such transfers.

Article 48

1. Without prejudice to applicable double taxation agreements, migrant workers and members of their families shall, in the matter of earnings in the State of employment:

- (a) Not be liable to taxes, duties or charges of any description higher or more onerous than those imposed on nationals in similar circumstances;
- (b) Be entitled to deductions or exemptions from taxes of any description and to any tax allowances applicable to nationals in similar circumstances, including tax allowances for dependent members of their families.

2. States Parties shall endeavour to adopt appropriate measures to avoid double taxation of the earnings and savings of migrant workers and members of their families.

Article 49

1. Where separate authorizations to reside and to engage in employment are required by national legislation, the States of employment shall issue to migrant workers authorization of residence for at least the same period of time as their authorization to engage in remunerated activity.

2. Migrant workers who in the State of employment are allowed freely to choose their remunerated activity shall neither be regarded as in an irregular situation nor shall they lose their authorization of residence by the mere fact of the termination of their remunerated activity prior to the expiration of their work permits or similar authorizations.

3. In order to allow migrant workers referred to in paragraph 2 of the present article sufficient time to find alternative remunerated activities, the authorization of residence shall not be withdrawn at least for a period corresponding to that during which they may be entitled to unemployment benefits.

Article 50

1. In the case of death of a migrant worker or dissolution of marriage, the State of employment shall favourably consider granting family members of that migrant worker residing in that State on the basis of family reunion an authorization to stay; the State of employment shall take into account the length of time they have already resided in that State.

2. Members of the family to whom such authorization is not granted shall be allowed before departure a reasonable period of time in order to enable them to settle their affairs in the State of employment.

3. The provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of the present article may not be interpreted as adversely affecting any right to stay and work otherwise granted to such family members by the legislation of the State of employment or by bilateral and multilateral treaties applicable to that State.

Article 51

Migrant workers who in the State of employment are not permitted freely to choose their remunerated activity shall neither be regarded as in an irregular situation nor shall they lose their authorization of residence by the mere fact of the termination of their remunerated activity prior to the expiration of their work permit, except where the authorization of residence is expressly dependent upon the specific remunerated activity for which they were admitted. Such migrant workers shall have the right to seek alternative employment, participation in public work schemes and re-training during the remaining period of their authorization to work, subject to such conditions and limitations as are specified in the authorization to work.

Article 52

1. Migrant workers in the State of employment shall have the right freely to choose their remunerated activity, subject to the following restrictions or conditions.

2. For any migrant worker a State of employment may:

(a) Restrict access to limited categories of employment, functions, services or activities where this is necessary in the interests of this State and provided for by national legislation;

(b) Restrict free choice of remunerated activity in accordance with its legislation concerning recognition of occupational qualifications acquired outside its territory. However, States Parties concerned shall endeavour to provide for recognition of such qualifications.

3. For migrant workers whose permission to work is limited in time, a State of employment may also:

(a) Make the right freely to choose their remunerated activities subject to the condition that the migrant worker has resided lawfully in its territory for the purpose of remunerated activity for a period of time prescribed in its national legislation that should not exceed two years;

(b) Limit access by a migrant worker to remunerated activities in pursuance of a policy of granting priority to its nationals or to persons who are assimilated to them for these purposes by virtue of legislation or bilateral or multilateral agreements. Any such limitation shall cease to apply to a migrant worker who has resided lawfully in its territory for the purpose of remunerated activity for a period of time prescribed in its national legislation that should not exceed five years.

4. States of employment shall prescribe the conditions under which a migrant worker who has been admitted to take up employment may be authorized to engage in work on his or her own account. Account shall be taken of the period during which the worker has already been lawfully in the State of employment.

Article 53

1. Members of a migrant worker's family who have themselves an authorization of residence or admission that is without limit of time or is automatically renewable shall be permitted freely to choose their remunerated activity under the same conditions as are applicable to the said migrant worker in accordance with article 52 of the present Convention.

2. With respect to members of a migrant worker's family who are not permitted freely to choose their remunerated activity, States Parties shall consider favourably granting them priority in obtaining permission to engage in a remunerated activity over other workers who seek admission to the State of employment, subject to applicable bilateral and multilateral agreements.

Article 54

1. Without prejudice to the terms of their authorization of residence or their permission to work and the rights provided for in articles 25 and 27 of the present Convention, migrant workers shall enjoy equality of treatment with nationals of the State of employment in respect of:

- (a) Protection against dismissal;
- (b) Unemployment benefits;
- (c) Access to public work schemes intended to combat unemployment;
- (d) Access to alternative employment in the event of loss of work or termination of other remunerated activity, subject to article 52 of the present Convention.

2. If a migrant worker claims that the terms of his or her work contract have been violated by his or her employer, he or she shall have the right to address his or her case to the competent authorities of the State of employment, on terms provided for in article 18, paragraph 1, of the present Convention.

Article 55

Migrant workers who have been granted permission to engage in a remunerated activity, subject to the conditions attached to such permission, shall be entitled to equality of treatment with nationals of the State of employment in the exercise of that remunerated activity.

Article 56

1. Migrant workers and members of their families referred to in the present part of the Convention may not be expelled from a State of employment, except for reasons defined in the national legislation of that State, and subject to the safeguards established in part III.

2. Expulsion shall not be resorted to for the purpose of depriving a migrant worker or a member of his or her family of the rights arising out of the authorization of residence and the work permit.

3. In considering whether to expel a migrant worker or a member of his or her family, account should be taken of humanitarian considerations and of the length of time that the person concerned has already resided in the State of employment.

PART V

Provisions applicable to particular categories of migrant workers and members of their families

Article 57

The particular categories of migrant workers and members of their families specified in the present part of the Convention who are documented or in a regular situation shall enjoy the rights set forth in part III and, except as modified below, the rights set forth in part IV.

Article 58

1. Frontier workers, as defined in article 2, paragraph 2 (a), of the present Convention, shall be entitled to the rights provided for in part IV that can be applied to them by reason of their presence and work in the territory of the State of employment, taking into account that they do not have their habitual residence in that State.

2. States of employment shall consider favourably granting frontier workers the right freely to choose their remunerated activity after a specified period of time. The granting of that right shall not affect their status as frontier workers.

Article 59

1. Seasonal workers, as defined in article 2, paragraph 2 (b), of the present Convention, shall be entitled to the rights provided for in part IV that can be applied to them by reason of their presence and work in the territory of the State of employment and that are compatible with their status in that State as seasonal workers, taking into account the fact that they are present in that State for only part of the year.

2. The State of employment shall, subject to paragraph 1 of the present article, consider granting seasonal workers who have been employed in its territory for a significant period of time the possibility of taking up other remunerated activities and giving them priority over other workers who seek admission to that State, subject to applicable bilateral and multilateral agreements.

Article 60

Itinerant workers, as defined in article 2, paragraph 2 (e), of the present Convention, shall be entitled to the rights provided for in part IV that can be granted to them by reason of their presence and work in the territory of the State of employment and that are compatible with their status as itinerant workers in that State.

Article 61

1. Project-tied workers, as defined in article 2, paragraph 2 (f), of the present Convention, and members of their families shall be entitled to the rights provided for in part IV except the provisions of article 43, paragraphs 1 (b) and (c), article 43, paragraph 1 (d), as it pertains to social housing schemes, article 45, paragraph 1 (b), and articles 52 to 55.

2. If a project-tied worker claims that the terms of his or her work contract have been violated by his or her employer, he or she shall have the right to, address his or her case to the competent authorities of the State which has jurisdiction over that employer, on terms provided for in article 18, paragraph 1, of the present Convention.

3. Subject to bilateral or multilateral agreements in force for them, the States Parties concerned shall endeavour to enable project-tied workers to remain adequately protected by the social security systems of their States of origin or habitual residence during their engagement in the project. States Parties concerned shall take appropriate measures with the aim of avoiding any denial of rights or duplication of payments in this respect.

4. Without prejudice to the provisions of article 47 of the present Convention and to relevant bilateral or multilateral agreements, States Parties concerned shall permit payment of the earnings of project-tied workers in their State of origin or habitual residence.

Article 62

1. Specified-employment workers, as defined in article 2, paragraph 2 (g), of the present Convention, shall be entitled to the rights provided for in part IV, except the provisions of article 43, paragraphs 1 (b) and (c) article 43, paragraph 1 (d), as it pertains to social housing schemes, article 52, and article 54, paragraph 1 (d).

2. Members of the families of specified-employment workers shall be entitled to the rights relating to family members of migrant workers provided for in part IV of the present Convention, except the provisions of article 53.

Article 63

1. Self-employed workers, as defined in article 2, paragraph 2 (h), of the present Convention, shall be entitled to the rights provided for in part IV with the exception of those rights which are exclusively applicable to workers having a contract of employment.

2. Without prejudice to articles 52 and 79 of the present Convention, the termination of the economic activity of the self-employed workers shall not in itself imply the withdrawal of the authorization for them or for the members of their families to stay or to engage in a remunerated activity in the State of employment except where the authorization of residence is expressly dependent upon the specific remunerated activity for which they were admitted.

PART VI

Promotion of sound, equitable, humane and lawful conditions in connection with international migration of workers and members of their families

Article 64

1. Without prejudice to article 79 of the present Convention, the States Parties concerned shall as appropriate consult and co-operate with a view to promoting sound, equitable and humane conditions in connection with international migration of workers and members of their families.

2. In this respect, due regard shall be paid not only to labour needs and resources, but also to the social, economic, cultural and other needs of migrant workers and members of their families involved, as well as to the consequences of such migration for the communities concerned.

Article 65

1. States Parties shall maintain appropriate services to deal with questions concerning international migration of workers and members of their families. Their functions shall include, inter alia:

(a) The formulation and implementation of policies regarding such migration;

(b) An exchange of information, consultation and co-operation with the competent authorities of other States Parties involved in such migration;

(c) The provision of appropriate information, particularly to employers, workers and their organizations on policies, laws and regulations relating to migration and employment, on agreements concluded with other States concerning migration and on other relevant matters;

(d) The provision of information and appropriate assistance to migrant workers and members of their families regarding requisite authorizations and formalities and arrangements for departure, travel, arrival, stay, remunerated activities, exit and return, as well as on conditions of work and life in the State of employment and on customs, currency, tax and other relevant laws and regulations.

2. States Parties shall facilitate as appropriate the provision of adequate consular and other services that are necessary to meet the social, cultural and other needs of migrant workers and members of their families.

Article 66

1. Subject to paragraph 2 of the present article, the right to undertake operations with a view to the recruitment of workers for employment in another State shall be restricted to:

(a) Public services or bodies of the State in which such operations take place;

(b) Public services or bodies of the State of employment on the basis of agreement between the States concerned;

(c) A body established by virtue of a bilateral or multilateral agreement.

2. Subject to any authorization, approval and supervision by the public authorities of the States Parties concerned as may be established pursuant to the legislation and practice of those States, agencies, prospective employers or persons acting on their behalf may also be permitted to undertake the said operations.

Article 67

1. States Parties concerned shall co-operate as appropriate in the adoption of measures regarding the orderly return of migrant workers and members of their families to the State of origin when they decide to return or their authorization of residence or employment expires or when they are in the State of employment in an irregular situation.

2. Concerning migrant workers and members of their families in a regular situation, States Parties concerned shall co-operate as appropriate, on terms agreed upon by those States, with a view to promoting adequate economic conditions for their resettlement and to facilitating their durable social and cultural re-integration in the State of origin.

Article 68

1. States Parties, including States of transit, shall collaborate with a view to preventing and eliminating illegal or clandestine movements and employment of migrant workers in an irregular situation. The measures to be taken to this end within the jurisdiction of each State concerned shall include:

(a) Appropriate measures against the dissemination of misleading information relating to emigration and immigration;

(b) Measures to detect and eradicate illegal or clandestine movements of migrant workers and members of their families and to impose effective sanctions on persons, groups or entities which organize, operate or assist in organizing or operating such movements;

(c) Measures to impose effective sanctions on persons, groups or entities which use violence, threats or intimidation against migrant workers or members of their families in an irregular situation.

2. States of employment shall take all adequate and effective measures to eliminate employment in their territory of migrant workers in an irregular situation, including, whenever appropriate, sanctions on employers of such workers. The rights of migrant workers vis-à-vis their employer arising from employment shall not be impaired by these measures.

Article 69

1. States Parties shall, when there are migrant workers and members of their families within their territory in an irregular situation, take appropriate measures to ensure that such a situation does not persist.

2. Whenever States Parties concerned consider the possibility of regularizing the situation of such persons in accordance with applicable national legislation and bilateral or multilateral agreements, appropriate account shall be taken of the circumstances of their entry, the duration of their stay in the States of employment and other relevant considerations, in particular those relating to their family situation.

Article 70

States Parties shall take measures not less favourable than those applied to nationals to ensure that working and living conditions of migrant workers and members of their families in a regular situation are in keeping with the standards of fitness, safety, health and principles of human dignity.

Article 71

1. States Parties shall facilitate, whenever necessary, the repatriation to the State of origin of the bodies of deceased migrant workers or members of their families.

2. As regards compensation matters relating to the death of a migrant worker or a member of his or her family, States Parties shall, as appropriate, provide assistance to the persons concerned with a view to the prompt settlement of such matters. Settlement of these matters shall be carried out on the basis of applicable national law in accordance with the provisions of the present Convention and any relevant bilateral or multilateral agreements.

PART VII Application of the Convention

Article 72

1. (a) For the purpose of reviewing the application of the present Convention, there shall be established a Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (hereinafter referred to as "the Committee");

(b) The Committee shall consist, at the time of entry into force of the present Convention, of ten and, after the entry into force of the Convention for the forty-first State Party, of fourteen experts of high moral standing, impartiality and recognized competence in the field covered by the Convention.

2. (a) Members of the Committee shall be elected by secret ballot by the States Parties from a list of persons nominated by the States Parties, due consideration being given to equitable geographical distribution, including both States of origin and States of employment, and to the representation of the principal legal systems. Each State Party may nominate one person from among its own nationals;

(b) Members shall be elected and shall serve in their personal capacity.

3. The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of the present Convention and subsequent elections every second year. At least four months before the date of each election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to all States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within two months. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties that have nominated them, and shall submit it to the States Parties not later than one month before the date of the corresponding election, together with the curricula vitae of the persons thus nominated.

4. Elections of members of the Committee shall be held at a meeting of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters. At that meeting, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Committee shall be those nominees who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the States Parties present and voting.

5. (a) The members of the Committee shall serve for a term of four years. However, the terms of five of the members elected in the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election, the names of these five members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting of States Parties:

(b) The election of the four additional members of the Committee shall be held in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the present article, following the entry into force of the Convention for the forty-first State Party. The term of two of the additional members elected on this occasion shall expire at the end of two years; the names of these members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting of States Parties;

(c) The members of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election if renominated.

6. If a member of the Committee dies or resigns or declares that for any other cause he or she can no longer perform the duties of the Committee, the State Party that nominated the expert shall appoint another expert from among its own nationals for the remaining part of the term. The new appointment is subject to the approval of the Committee.

7. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee.

8. The members of the Committee shall receive emoluments from United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as the General Assembly may decide.

9. The members of the Committee shall be entitled to the facilities, privileges and immunities of experts on mission for the United Nations as laid down in the relevant sections of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.

Article 73

1. States Parties undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for consideration by the Committee a report on the legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they have taken to give effect to the provisions of the present Convention:

(a) Within one year after the entry into force of the Convention for the State Party concerned;

(b) Thereafter every five years and whenever the Committee so requests.

2. Reports prepared under the present article shall also indicate factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the implementation of the Convention and shall include information on the characteristics of migration flows in which the State Party concerned is involved.

3. The Committee shall decide any further guidelines applicable to the content of the reports.

4. States Parties shall make their reports widely available to the public in their own countries.

Article 74

1. The Committee shall examine the reports submitted by each State Party and shall transmit such comments as it may consider appropriate to the State Party concerned. This State Party may submit to the Committee observations on any comment made by the Committee in accordance with the present article. The Committee may request supplementary information from States Parties when considering these reports.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall, in due time before the opening of each regular session of the Committee, transmit to the Director-General of the International Labour Office copies of the reports submitted by States Parties concerned and information relevant to the consideration of these reports, in order to enable the Office to assist the Committee with the expertise the Office may provide regarding those matters dealt with by the present convention that fall within the sphere of competence of the International Labour Organisation. The Committee shall consider in its deliberations such comments and materials as the Office may provide.

3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations may also, after consultation with the Committee, transmit to other specialized agencies, as well as to intergovernmental organizations, copies of such parts of these reports as may fall within their competence.

4. The Committee may invite the specialized agencies and organs of the United Nations, as well as intergovernmental organizations and other concerned bodies, to submit, for consideration by the Committee, written information on such matters dealt with in the present Convention as fall within the scope of their activities.

5. The International Labour Office shall be invited by the Committee to appoint representatives to participate, in a consultative capacity, in the meetings of the Committee.

6. The Committee may invite representatives of other specialized agencies and organs of the United Nations, as well as of intergovernmental organizations, to be present and to be heard in its meetings whenever matters falling within their field of competence are considered.

7. The Committee shall present an annual report to the General Assembly of the United Nations on the implementation of the present Convention, containing its own considerations and recommendations, based, in particular, on the examination of the reports and any observations presented by States Parties.

8. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit the annual reports of the Committee to the States Parties to the present Convention, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights of the United Nations, the Director-General of the International Labour Office and other relevant organizations.

Article 75

1. The Committee shall adopt its own rules of procedure.

2. The Committee shall elect its officers for a term of two years.

3. The Committee shall normally meet annually.

4. The meetings of the Committee shall normally be held at United Nations Headquarters.

Article 76

1. A State Party to the present Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the present Convention. Communications under this article may be received and considered only if submitted by a State Party that has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration. Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) If a State Party to the present Convention considers that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the present Convention, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. The State Party may also inform the Committee of the matter. Within three months after the receipt of the communication, the receiving State shall afford the State that sent the communication an explanation, or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending or available in the matter;

(b) If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State;

(c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it only after it has ascertained that all available domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law. This shall not be the rule where, in the view of the Committee, the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged;

(d) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (c) of the present paragraph, the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of the respect for the obligations set forth in the present Convention;

(e) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under the present article;

(f) In any matter referred to it in accordance with subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), to supply any relevant information;

(g) The States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing;

(h) The Committee shall, within twelve months after the date of receipt of notice under subparagraph (b) of the present paragraph, submit a report, as follows:

- (i) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (d) of the present paragraph is reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached;
- (ii) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (d) is not reached, the Committee shall, in its report, set forth the relevant facts concerning the issue between the States Parties concerned. The written submissions and record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned shall be attached to the report. The Committee may also communicate only to the States Parties concerned any views that it may consider relevant to the issue between them.

In every matter, the report shall be communicated to the States Parties concerned.

2. The provisions of the present article shall come into force when ten States Parties to the present Convention have made a declaration under paragraph 1 of the present article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter that is the subject of a communication already transmitted under the present article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received under the present article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

Article 77

1. A State Party to the present Convention may at any time declare under the present article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim that their individual rights as established by the present Convention have been violated by that State Party. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party that has not made such a declaration.

2. The Committee shall consider inadmissible any communication under the present article which is anonymous or which it considers to be an abuse of the right of submission of such communications or to be incompatible with the provisions of the present Convention.

3. The Committee shall not consider any communications from an individual under the present article unless it has ascertained that:

(a) The same matter has not been, and is not being, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;

(b) The individual has exhausted all available domestic remedies; this shall not be the rule where, in the view of the Committee, the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to that individual.

4. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 2 of the present article, the Committee shall bring any communications submitted to it under this article to the attention of the State Party to the present Convention that has made a declaration under paragraph 1 and is alleged to be violating any provisions of the Convention. Within six months, the receiving State shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been taken by that State.

5. The Committee shall consider communications received under the present article in the light of all information made available to it by or on behalf of the individual and by the State Party concerned.

6. The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under the present article.

7. The Committee shall forward its views to the State Party concerned and to the individual.

8. The provisions of the present article shall come into force when ten States Parties to the present Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of the present article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter that is the subject of a communication already transmitted under the present article; no further communication by or on behalf of an individual shall be received under the present article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party has made a new declaration.

Article 78

The provisions of article 76 of the present Convention shall be applied without prejudice to any procedures for settling disputes or complaints in the field covered by the present Convention laid down in the constituent instruments of, or in conventions adopted by, the United Nations and the specialized agencies and shall not prevent the States Parties from having recourse to any procedures for settling a dispute in accordance with international agreements in force between them.

PART VIII
General provisions

Article 79

Nothing in the present Convention shall affect the right of each State Party to establish the criteria governing admission of migrant workers and members of their families. Concerning other matters related to their legal situation and treatment as migrant workers and members of their families, States Parties shall be subject to the limitations set forth in the present Convention.

Article 80

Nothing in the present Convention shall be interpreted as impairing the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and of the constitutions of the specialized agencies which define the respective responsibilities of the various organs of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies in regard to the matters dealt with in the present Convention.

Article 81

1. Nothing in the present Convention shall affect more favourable rights or freedoms granted to migrant workers and members of their families by virtue of:

- (a) The law or practice of a State Party; or
- (b) Any bilateral or multilateral treaty in force for the State Party concerned.

2. Nothing in the present Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act that would impair any of the rights and freedoms as set forth in the present Convention.

Article 82

The rights of migrant workers and members of their families provided for in the present Convention may not be renounced. It shall not be permissible to exert any form of pressure upon migrant workers and members of their families with a view to their relinquishing or forgoing any of the said rights. It shall not be possible to derogate by contract from rights recognized in the present Convention. States Parties shall take appropriate measures to ensure that these principles are respected.

Article 83

Each State Party to the present Convention undertakes:

- (a) To ensure that any person whose rights or freedoms as herein recognized are violated shall have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity;
- (b) To ensure that any persons seeking such a remedy shall have his or her claim reviewed and decided by competent judicial, administrative or legislative authorities, or by any other competent authority provided for by the legal system of the State, and to develop the possibilities of judicial remedy;

(c) To ensure that the competent authorities shall enforce such remedies when granted.

Article 84

Each State Party undertakes to adopt the legislative and other measures that are necessary to implement the provisions of the present Convention.

PART IX
Final provisions

Article 85

The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated as the depositary of the present Convention.

Article 86

1. The present Convention shall be open for signature by all States. It is subject to ratification.

2. The present Convention shall be open to accession by any State.

3. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 87

1. The present Convention shall enter into force on the first day of the month following a period of three months after the date of the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.

2. For each State ratifying or acceding to the present Convention after its entry into force, the Convention shall enter into force on the first day of the month following a period of three months after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 88

A State ratifying or acceding to the present Convention may not exclude the application of any Part of it, or, without prejudice to article 3, exclude any particular category of migrant workers from its application.

Article 89

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Convention, not earlier than five years after the Convention has entered into force for the State concerned, by means of a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. Such denunciation shall become effective on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of twelve months after the date of the receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Convention in regard to any act or omission which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Committee prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective.

4. Following the date at which the denunciation of a State Party becomes effective, the Committee shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

Article 90

1. After five years from the entry into force of the Convention a request for the revision of the Convention may be made at any time by any State Party by means of a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate any proposed amendments to the States Parties with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposals. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favours such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting shall be submitted to the General Assembly for approval.

2. Amendments shall come into force when they have been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accented by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Convention and any earlier amendment that they have accepted.

Article 91

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall receive and circulate to all States the text of reservations made by States at the time of signature, ratification or accession.

2. A reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the present Convention shall not be permitted.

3. Reservations may be withdrawn at any time by notification to this effect addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall then inform all States thereof. Such notification shall take effect on the date on which it is received.

Article 92

1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the present Convention that is not settled by negotiation shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If within six months from the date of the request for arbitration the Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in conformity with the Statute of the Court.

2. Each State Party may at the time of signature or ratification of the present Convention or accession thereto declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of the present article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by that paragraph with respect to any State Party that has made such a declaration.

3. Any State Party that has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article may at any time withdraw that declaration by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 93

1. The present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Convention to all States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Convention.

Protection of minorities

Draft declaration

Activities related to the protection of minorities continued to focus in 1990 on the elaboration of a declaration of the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. As in previous years, the Commission on Human Rights set up an open-ended Working Group, which met from 12 to 22 February and on 5 March. In its report [E/CN.4/1990/41], the Working Group described the discussion of draft articles. Annexed to the report was the text of the draft declaration as adopted by the Group in first reading.

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/45)1], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to entrust the Centre for Human Rights with preparing a technical review of the text of the articles of the draft declaration that had been approved by the Working Group at its first reading, and to invite comments thereon, for consideration by the Working Group, from Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/39.

Rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/45 of 6 March 1990.

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to hold no fewer than ten fully serviced meetings during the first two weeks of the forty-seventh session of the Commission to continue work on the draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, through a second reading of the text, with a view to submitting it to the Commission at its forty-seventh session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the working group with all the assistance it may require for the continuation of its work.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/39
25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) without vote, 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

The General Assembly, by decision 45/434 of 18 December, decided to encourage the Commission to complete the final text of the draft declaration as soon as possible and to transmit it to the Assembly through the Council.

Minority problems

On 6 March [dec. 1990/105], the Commission on Human Rights endorsed a 1989 Sub-Commission decision [YUN 1989, p. 482] to entrust Asbjorn Eide (Norway) with preparing a report on national experience regarding peaceful and constructive resolution of problems involving minorities, and requested the Secretary-General to assist him.

On 25 May, by decision 1990/246, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's endorsement and request.

Special Rapporteur Eide submitted a July progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/46] on peaceful and constructive solutions, or management, of situations involving minorities. He stated that the mandate required an examination of national experiences in order to construct models for such solutions. The models would have to be composed not only of rights granted to minorities, but also of institutions established and procedures used to deal with minority problems, in order to explore their usefulness and possibilities of improvement. The Special Rapporteur discussed non-discrimination and minority rights and examined the diversity of situations, including newly arrived immigrants, migrant workers, refugees, other non-nationals and stateless persons, and ethnic conflicts. He stated that in the search for models for a peaceful and constructive solution of situations involving minorities, two concerns were involved. On the one hand, to clarify the scope of minority rights as applicable to the situation; and on the other, to ensure the existence and effective operation of national institutions and procedures to deal with ethnic relations, minority rights and non-discrimination. Annexed to the report were a questionnaire for Governments and NGOs; the text of the draft declaration as adopted in first reading; and a set of principles on national minorities drawn up by the European Commission for Democracy through Law.

On 23 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/5)], the Sub-Commission, expressing appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his progress report, asked the Secretary-General to transmit the questionnaire annexed thereto to Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments. It also asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and the latter to submit in 1991 a preliminary report on progress made.

Indigenous populations

Draft declaration

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/62)1], the Commission on Human Rights, welcoming the Sub-Commission's 1989 decision [YUN 1989, p. 480] to continue to entrust to the Chairman/Rapporteur of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), the further development of a draft declaration on indigenous rights within the framework contained in her working paper, asked the Secretary-General to give her the resources and assistance needed to carry out her task.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the Working Group be authorized to hold 10 serviced meetings in the 10 working days prior to the Sub-Commission's 1990 session, to intensify its efforts to complete a draft declaration in consultation with interested Governments and organizations of indigenous people. It urged the Working Group to complete as soon as possible the elaboration of international standards based on a review of developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights of indigenous populations and of their situation and aspirations. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Working Group in discharging its tasks and to organize, in 1991, within existing resources and under the UN regular programme of technical co-operation, a technical conference on practical experience in the realization of sustainable and environmentally sound self-development by indigenous peoples, with the participation of experts from Governments, appropriate specialized agencies and indigenous peoples' organizations.

The Commission appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals to consider favourably requests for initial as well as further contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations (see below). The Working Group and the Sub-Commission were asked to consider ways of broadening the scope and activities of the Fund, in order to provide enhanced orientation for representatives of indigenous populations attending annual sessions of the Group, and to transmit their recommendations to the Commission in 1991.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/238, approved the Commission's request to give the Chairman/Rapporteur of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations the resources and assistance needed to carry out her task, and authorized the Working Group to hold 10 serviced meetings in the 10 working days prior to the 1990 session of the Sub-Commission. It also approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General to assist the Working Group and to organize in 1991 a technical conference on practical experience in the realization of sustainable and environmentally sound self-development by indigenous peoples.

Working Group activities. At its eighth session (Geneva, 23 July-3 August) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/42], the Working Group on Indigenous Populations continued to review developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples. Government observers provided the Group with detailed information about the legal status and factual circumstances of their indigenous peoples, including the protection of their human rights. Regarding the evolution of standards concerning the rights of indigenous peoples, the Working Group established three informal drafting groups to continue developing the draft universal declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, based on the first revised text [YUN 1989, p. 480] submitted in 1989 and the Chairman/Rapporteur's analytical commentary on the draft [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/39]. The Working Group considered comments of Governments [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1990/1], UN organs, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1990/2] and NGOs [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1990/3] on the first revised text, as well as their proposals to be taken into account in a second revised text. The Chairmen of the drafting groups introduced the reports on the work carried out in their respective groups [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1990/7]. The Working Group requested that its report, together with the first revised text of the draft and the reports of the three informal drafting groups, be circulated for written comments and suggestions to Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. It recommended that its Chairman/Rapporteur prepare an extensive analytical commentary on the articles of the draft declaration.

The Group recommended that its ninth (1991) session be held for two weeks and welcomed an Economic and Social Council decision recommending that the General Assembly proclaim an international year for the world's indigenous peoples in 1993 (see below). It requested the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) to submit a report to its ninth session concerning its activities affecting the interests of indigenous peoples, including the protection of folklore and traditional arts. It recommended that the Chairman/Rapporteur prepare, prior to its 1991 session, a working paper on the cultural property of indigenous peoples, including questions relating to burial remains and sacred sites, and requested UNESCO to provide the author and the Working Group with information about its standards and activities in that regard. It requested the Secretariat to provide the author with all the necessary assistance, including the compilation of all available information.

Sub-Commission action. On 31 August, the Sub-Commission adopted a resolution [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/25)]¹ on ownership and control of the cultural property of indigenous peoples, in which it entrusted the Working Group's Chairman/Rapporteur with preparing a working paper on the question for submission in 1991. On the same date [res. 1990/26], it asked the Secretary-General: to transmit the Working Group's report to Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for suggestions aimed at clarifying, simplifying and generalizing the texts contained in the annexes to its report; to ensure that all meetings of the Working Group in 1991 and beyond were provided with interpretation and documentation in Spanish and English; to prepare a brief note on the financial implications of convening one or more of the future sessions of the Working Group in Latin America or Asia, for consideration by the Working Group; to organize a regional training course in Latin America on the United Nations, human rights and indigenous peoples; and to assist the Working Group.

Also on 31 August [res. 1990/27], the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of experts on indigenous self-government and a technical conference on achieving environmentally sound and sustainable self-development for indigenous peoples, and to include indigenous experts among the invitees; to bring its resolution to the attention of the Secretary-General of the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development and the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee for the Conference; to arrange for the Centre for Human Rights to enter into discussions with UN operational programmes in development and environment regarding possible mechanisms and guidelines for promoting the rights of indigenous peoples through their direct participation in the planning and implementation of projects; to invite WIPO to prepare recommendations concerning the protection of the intellectual property of indigenous peoples, for discussion at the Working Group's 1991 session; and to report in 1991 on the measures taken to implement the current resolution and on the results achieved.

Other action. In 1989, the Sub-Commission had invited [YUN 1989, p. 480] the UN Centre on Transnational Corporations to assist the Working Group in compiling information on investments and operations on the lands of indigenous peoples, including lands which were currently in dispute. Pursuant to that request, the Centre proposed [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1990/6] a research methodology for a data base and for future annual reports to the Working Group.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

In a working paper annexed to the Working Group's report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/42], Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martínez (Cuba), appointed in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 480], presented progress made and identified information needed for his continuing work on the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations. He stated that the scope of the study was particularly broad and that additional research and collection of texts and other reports and materials were essential. The working paper contained two versions of a questionnaire addressed respectively to Governments and indigenous peoples. The questionnaires reflected closely the issues and questions which had come up in the Special Rapporteur's research. He expressed the wish to receive their responses, preferably by the end of April 1991, in order to take their views into account in his preliminary report.

On 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/28)], the Sub-Commission, taking note of the working paper and questionnaires submitted by the Special Rapporteur, asked the Secretary-General to submit the questionnaires to Governments, inter-governmental organizations and NGOs, as well as to indigenous organizations and/or representatives of indigenous peoples who had attended Working Group sessions, requesting them to submit to the Special Rapporteur any information they would consider useful for the report not later, if possible, than 30 April 1991. It requested the Special Rapporteur to submit a preliminary report on his study in 1991 to the Working Group and to the Sub-Commission. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur, in particular to provide the consultancy originally foreseen and a study trip to Washington, D.C., and Seville, Spain.

UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations, established by the General Assembly in 1985 [GA res. 40/131], provided financial assistance to representatives of indigenous communities and organizations who wished to participate in the deliberations of the Working Group. It was administered by the Secretary-General who was advised by a five-member Board of Trustees.

In October, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/698 & Corr.1] that the Fund's Board of Trustees had held its second session in April 1989 and its third in April 1990, at which the Board examined requests for financial assistance for 93 and 74 indigenous representatives, respectively. In the light of the funds available, it recommended at its second session the awarding of 37 travel and subsistence grants. The 37 beneficiaries came from 21 countries. At its third session, it recommended the awarding of 21 travel and subsistence grants, with beneficiaries coming from 21 countries. The recommendations were endorsed by the Secretary-General. Of the selected beneficiaries, 35 representatives attended the seventh session of the Working Group in 1989 and 19 attended the eighth session in 1990. As at 1 October, contributions to the Fund received in 1989 and 1990 totalled $209,383.

The fourth session of the Board of Trustees was scheduled to be held in April 1991 in advance of the Working Group's ninth session in August 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/433, called on Governments, NGOs and representatives of indigenous groups to consider contributions to the Fund and to disseminate widely information about the Fund's activities, and requested the Secretary-General to report in 1992 on the status of the Fund.

Hopi-Navajo relocation

On 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/34)], the Sub-Commission welcomed initiatives taken by the Navajo Nation and Hopi Tribe to work together on issues of mutual concern and encouraged them to pursue further the initiatives they had taken to resolve a relocation situation by agreement, with the effective participation of the families and communities affected in the negotiation and implementation of any settlement.

International Year for the World's Indigenous People (1993)

Consideration of an international year for the promotion of indigenous rights began in 1988 when the Economic and Social Council recommended that the General Assembly proclaim such a year at an appropriate time [YUN 1988, p. 495]. The Sub-Commission had recommended that the year be proclaimed in 1993 to coincide with the end of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination.

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (dec. 1990/113)], the Commission on Human Rights decided, in the light of the views expressed by delegations in the course of its 1990 session, to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that the General Assembly proclaim an International Year for the World's Indigenous People, in 1993 or another appropriate year, in accordance with established procedures governing the proclamation of international years.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, by decision 1990/248, the Economic and Social Council recommended that the General Assembly proclaim an international year for the world's indigenous people in 1993, in accordance with established procedures governing the proclamation of international years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/164.

International Year for the World's Indigenous People

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations set forth in the Charter is the achievement of international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Taking note of the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, in its decision 1990/248 of 25 May 1990, that the General Assembly proclaim 1993 as an international year for the world's indigenous people,

Taking into account the guidelines for international years and anniversaries adopted in its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980,

1. Proclaims 1993 as International Year for the World's Indigenous People, with a view to strengthening international co-operation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous communities in areas such as human rights, the environment, development, education and health;

2. Invites States to ensure that preparations are made for the Year;

3. Recommends that the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system consider in their respective forums the contributions that they can make to the success of the Year;

4. Invites organizations of indigenous people and other interested non-governmental organizations to consider the contributions they can make to the success of the Year, with a view to presenting them to the Commission on Human Rights;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider at its forty-seventh session possible United Nations activities in connection with the Year;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General to accept and administer voluntary contributions from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for the purposes of funding programme activities for the Year;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a draft programme of activities based on the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session an item entitled "Preparation and organization of the International Year for the World's Indigenous People".

General Assembly resolution 45/164

18 December 1990 Meeting 69 150-0-4 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/838) without vote, 29 November (meeting 57); 18-nation draft I/C.3/45/L.84; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 48-50,56,57; plenary 69.

Activities for the Year

In May, Asbjørn Eide (Norway) and Christy Mbonu (Nigeria) submitted a working paper on possible UN activities for an international year for indigenous rights [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/41]. The paper was prepared in response to a 1989 Sub-Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 480] and contained chapters on general guidelines; purposes of international years; programmes and activities; planning and co-ordination; and evaluation and follow-up. It also contained a draft programme of activities for an international year for indigenous rights and stated that the Working Group on Indigenous Populations should be encouraged to complete the text of a draft universal declaration of indigenous rights by its eleventh session in 1991, so that the draft could be considered by the General Assembly in 1992 and be proclaimed at the beginning of the international year. The declaration would serve as an overall theme for the year and as a guide for all UN system activities.

On 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/29)], the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working paper, through the Commission, to the Economic and Social Council, to bring the working paper to the attention of the General Assembly and to report to the Sub-Commission in 1991. It requested Mr. Eide and Ms. Mbonu to submit a second working paper in 1991 and to evaluate the achievements made when the programme of activities had been carried out, at the end of the international year.

Rights of the child

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December, the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25], which opened for signature in New York on 26 January and entered into force on 2 September 1990, following receipt of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, had been ratified or acceded to by 62 States.

The Secretary-General reported [A/45/473] on the status of the Convention as at 31 August.

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/74)], the Commission on Human Rights called on all States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention. It asked the Secretary-General to assume an active role in diffusing information on the Convention and in promoting it; to prepare a report on its status; and to transmit to the Commission the report of the 1990 World Summit for Children (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV), which he did by a note of 12 December [E/CN.4/1991/59].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/104.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council related to the question of a convention on the rights of the child,

Recalling in particular its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention on the Rights of the Child and called upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority,

Reaffirming that children's rights require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as for their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of inadequate social conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, illiteracy, hunger and disability, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and of the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced that the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as a standard-setting accomplishment of the United Nations in the field of human rights, makes a positive contribution to protecting children's rights and ensuring their well-being,

Welcoming with satisfaction the successful conclusion of the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, in particular the adoption of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, and stressing the necessity to ensure follow-up to the Summit at the national and international levels,

Encouraged by the fact that an unprecedented number of States have to date become signatories and parties to the Convention, thereby demonstrating the widespread commitment that exists to strive for the promotion and protection of the rights of the child,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

2. Welcomes with deep satisfaction the entry into force of the Convention on 2 September 1990 as a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention since it was opened for signature, ratification and accession on 26 January 1990;

4. Calls upon all States that have not done so to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all facilities and assistance necessary for the dissemination of information on the Convention and its implementation, with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

7. Recognizes the importance of the establishment of the Committee on the Rights of the Child as an essential mechanism for overseeing the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention;

8. Abo requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities so that the functions of the Committee on the Rights of the Child may be carried out effectively;

9. Invites United Nations agencies and organizations, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on the Convention and promoting its understanding;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the status of the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

11. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its forty-sixth session under the item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child".

General Assembly resolution 45/104

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/753) without vote, 28 November (meeting 55); 93-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.51); agenda item 97.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 35-42, 49, 55; plenary 68.

Sale of children and child prostitution and pornography

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/67)], the Commission on Human Rights decided to transmit to Governments, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations and NGOs the draft programme of action to counteract occurrences of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, contained in the 1989 report of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery [YUN 1989, p. 569]. It asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1991 an analytical summary of the responses received. The Commission decided to examine in 1991 the draft programme of action and the Secretary-General's report.

On the same date [res. 1990/68], the Commission decided to appoint for a one-year period a Special Rapporteur to consider matters relating to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, including the problem of the adoption of children for commercial purposes. It asked its Chairman to appoint as Special Rapporteur a person of international reputation. It invited the Special Rapporteur to take account of the need to be in a position to use any credible and reliable information made available to him, to request the Governments concerned to state their views and comment on any information he intended to include in his report and to carry out his task with discretion and independence. The Secretary-General was asked to urge Governments to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur and to offer their co-operation and assistance so that he might fulfil his mandate effectively. The Special Rapporteur was asked to report in 1991 and the Secretary-General was requested to assist him.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/240 of 25 May, asked the Commission Chairman to appoint a Special Rapporteur for a two-year period. It approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur.

On 1 August, the Chairman appointed Vitit Muntarbhorn (Thailand) as Special Rapporteur.

Child labour

In 1990, the five-member Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (see also above, under "Civil and political rights"), at its fifteenth session (Geneva, 30 July-3 August and 22 August) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/44], considered as its main theme the eradication of the exploitation of child labour and debt bondage. In a joint statement, 11 NGOs emphasized that the most serious and inhuman forms of exploitation must be attacked first. They were described as forced labour camps, debt bondage, brothels, sweatshops, domestic service and plantation work, the sale of children into employment and other hazardous work and debilitating working conditions. The Group shared the opinion of the NGOs that the phenomena of child exploitation and debt bondage were very much linked to the problems of social and economic development, but that concerted action could improve the implementation of minimum age requirements for employment and eradicate employment in hazardous and exploitative types of work. The Group decided to develop a programme of action for the eradication of the exploitation of child labour and debt bondage after having listened to the various statements and studied all the information available. A draft programme of action was annexed to the Working Group's report.

The Working Group had before it a May report of the Secretary-General with later addenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.S/1990/5 & Add.1-4] containing the views of Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations on the discussion by the Group of the exploitation of child labour and of debt bondage. In another May report with later addenda

[E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1990/6 & Add.1,2], the Secretary-General presented the views of NGOs.

In a June report with later addenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/43 & Add.1,2], the Secretary-General addressed the issues of the adoption of children for commercial purposes and the recruitment of children into government and non-governmental armed forces, and presented information provided by Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on those subjects.

In August, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) submitted to the Sub-Commission a written statement regarding the exploitation of child labour [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/52]. It stated that many UNICEF country offices had started to work with government agencies and NGOs to combat child labour, and to promote protected and creative work alternatives combined with education for those children who were obliged to work to help sustain themselves and their families. UNICEF was working with the International Labour Organisation in policy research, development of training materials and raising public awareness through seminars on child labour. However, despite the combined efforts of UN agencies, Governments and NGOs, one of the most abusive, exploitative and hazardous forms of child labour—child prostitution—was becoming more widespread.

UNICEF stated that it was prepared to work with others on the suppression of internationally organized sexual exploitation of children in prostitution, and to improve systems for detection and treatment of sexually exploited children.

On 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/31)], the Sub-Commission endorsed the programme of action for the elimination of the exploitation of child labour and debt bondage drawn up by its Working Group and recommended to the Commission a draft text for adoption.

Youth

The Special Rapporteur on human rights and youth, Dumitru Mazilu (Romania), in an August report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/45 & Corr.1], updated information submitted in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 570]. He stated that child abuse, the sale of children for adoption, the utilization of youth on behalf of adult offenders and the use of youth for pornographic films seemed to be increasing progressively. Of particular concern was the increasing number of summary executions, as well as the continued incidence of arbitrary executions of young people. Enforced or involuntary disappearances were other flagrant violations of the right to life of young people. In addition, at least 190 million young people had no possibility of enjoying their right to freedom of opinion and expression; at least 150 million were facing serious difficulties in the exercise of their right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; and at least 300 million had no possibility of enjoying their right to freedom of association. Also, 180 million young people were confronted with difficulties in the exercise of their right to leave and to return to their country. Among measures to be taken to ensure and promote the rights and freedoms of the younger generation were the provision of adequate medical care for children and adolescents; changing the educational system and ensuring the right to universal education; youth training and apprenticeships to develop marketable skills; creating sound employment policy to ensure full enjoyment by youth of the right to work; and reducing disparities between developed and developing countries.

On 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/32)], the Sub-Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to present a progress report in 1991. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to gather and furnish information to the Special Rapporteur relating to his study and to provide him with any assistance he might need.

Traditional practices affecting women and children

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (dec. 1990/109)], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a 1989 Sub-Commission resolution [YUN 1989, p. 571], approved the Sub-Commission's recommendations: to extend for a two-year period the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco); that field missions be undertaken by the Special Rapporteur; that seminars be held on the harmful traditional practices affecting the health of women and children in Africa and Asia; and that the Centre for Human Rights provide support. Those decisions were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1990/247 of 25 May.

The Commission also asked the Special Rapporteur to conduct her work in close consultation with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. (For further information on the human rights of women, see PART THREE, Chapter XIII.)

Right to development

Pursuant to a 1989 request of the Commission on Human Rights [YUN 1989, p. 507], the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right took place in Geneva from 8 to 12 January 1990 [E/CN.4/1990/9/Rev.I].

The Consultation included a round-table exchange of views on development and human rights: global perspectives and new policy directions, and reviewed specific examples of the respect for human rights as an integral factor in promoting development and the problems faced in that regard. The examples drew on development problems experienced by women, indigenous peoples and the extremely poor. In addition, the Consultation considered the realization of the right to development as a human right at the national and international levels.

Among the Consultation's conclusions were the notion that the right to development was the right of individuals, groups and peoples to participate in, contribute to and enjoy continuous economic, social, cultural and political development, in which all human rights and fundamental freedoms could be fully realized. It also concluded that the struggle for human rights and development was a global one and must involve all peoples, including indigenous peoples and national, ethnic, linguistic and religious minorities, as well as all individuals and groups; serious barriers preventing the realization of the right to development as a human right included failure to respect the right of peoples to self-determination, human rights violations, and phenomena such as racial discrimination, apartheid and foreign occupation; and criteria for measuring progress in the realization of the right included conditions of life, conditions of work, equality of access to resources and participation.

States were urged to implement the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development [GA res. 41/128]; strengthen their juridical systems; ensure that corporations and other entities did not violate the right to development; ratify the principal human rights instruments; and co-operate in creating an international economic and political environment conducive to the realization of the right. The need was stressed for greater transparency in negotiations and agreements between States and international financial and aid institutions. The international community was called on to renew its efforts to combat human rights violations, racism and apartheid, and all remaining forms of colonization and foreign occupation. UN activities related to the development process should have explicit guidelines, appraisal criteria and priorities based on the realization of human rights. The Consultation proposed that the Secretary-General appoint a high-level committee of independent experts to report annually to the General Assembly on progress made in implementing the 1986 Declaration. Human rights NGOs were urged to exchange information and to disseminate information about human rights, including the right to development.

By a note of 17 October [A/45/640], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report on the Global Consultation.

In an October report [A/45/673], the Secretary-General presented comments received from UN bodies and specialized agencies in response to his request for information on activities they had taken to implement the 1986 Declaration.

Commission action. On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/18)], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of the report on the Global Consultation, asked the Secretary-General to transmit it to Governments, UN organs, the General Assembly's special session on international economic co-operation (see PART THREE, Chapter I), the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole on the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000) (see PART THREE, Chapter I), the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental, governmental and concerned non-governmental organizations with a view to obtaining comments and proposals for further action. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1991 a report containing those comments and proposals and information on measures taken and suggestions made for implementing the 1986 Declaration within the UN system. It also asked him to publish the report on the Global Consultation and to circulate it widely; that request was approved on 25 May by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1990/225. The Commission asked the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Centre for Human Rights to continue to co-ordinate activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/97.

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the proclamation by the General Assembly at its forty-first session of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling also its resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development, and taking note of Commission resolution 1990/18 of 23 February 1990, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by its decision 1990/225 of 25 May 1990,

Reiterating the importance of the right to development for all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Mindful that the Commission on Human Rights has entered a new phase in its consideration of this matter, which is directed towards the implementation and further enhancement of the right to development,

Having considered the report on the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right,

Reaffirming the need for an evaluation mechanism so as to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Aware of the interest in participation in the Global Consultation expressed by several Member States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations,

1. Takes note with interest of the report on the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right, which was organized by the Secretary-General in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 44/62 of 8 December 1989;

2. Expresses the hope that Governments, United Nations bodies and organs and specialized agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations, including those active in development and human rights, will submit, at the request of the Secretary-General based on Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/18, additional, updated and more specific views and concrete comments and proposals for further international and national action aimed at strengthening existing, or creating possible new, mechanisms for the promotion and protection of human rights, taking into account the ideas contained in chapter VII of the report on the Global Consultation and the views expressed on the issue during the debate at the forty-sixth session of the Commission, including the creation of a group of experts;

3. Reiterates the need for a continuing evaluation mechanism so as to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development;

4. Requests the Office of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation and the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat to continue co-ordination of the various activities with regard to the implementation of the Declaration;

5. Urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, particularly the specialized agencies, when planning their programmes of activities, to take due account of the Declaration and to make efforts to contribute to its application;

6. Urges the regional commissions and regional intergovernmental organizations to convene meetings of governmental experts and representative non-governmental and grass-roots organizations for the purpose of seeking agreement on arrangements for the implementation of the Declaration through international co-operation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session and the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session of the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system on the implementation of the Declaration;

8. Calls upon the Commission to continue to make proposals to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Global Consultation and replies received;

9. Decides to consider this question at its forty-sixth session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 45/97

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/750) without vote, 23 November (meeting 51); 37-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L28), orally revised; agenda item 94.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 24-27, 36, 51; plenary 68.

Extreme poverty

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/15)], the Commission on Human Rights, reaffirming that extreme poverty and exclusion from society constituted a violation of human dignity and that urgent action was required to eliminate them, requested States, UN bodies, the specialized agencies and other international organizations to give the necessary attention to the problem when they made known their views on human rights based on solidarity, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/148 [YUN 1989, p. 529]. The Commission urged the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to give attention to the question of extreme poverty and exclusion from society, and asked the Sub-Commission to examine the question and to carry out a study.

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec. 1990/119)], the Sub-Commission decided to request Eduardo Suescún Monroy (Colombia) to prepare the method and plan of work for the study requested by the Commission and to consider the preliminary version of the study in 1991.

Right to own property

In an October report [A/45/523], the Secretary-General provided the views of Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies on the means whereby and the degree to which the right to own property alone as well as in association with others contributed to the development of individual liberty and initiative.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/427, asked the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on Assembly resolution 43/124 [YUN 1988, p. 532] and to report thereon in 1992.

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/98.

Respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and its contribution to the economic and social development of Member States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/132 of 4 December 1986 and 43/123 of 8 December 1988,

Reaffirming the right of States and their peoples freely to choose and develop their political, social, economic and cultural systems and to determine their laws and regulations,

Recognizing the value of constructive dialogue in the national context on the ways and means by which States can promote the full enjoyment of the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others,

Recognizing also in this context the importance of enabling everyone to acquire property, alone or in association with others, by taking practical actions that assist the economic development of developing countries,

Convinced that the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and as reaffirmed in paragraph 4 of the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons and in article 16, paragraph 1 (h), of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, is of particular significance in fostering widespread enjoyment of other basic human rights and contributes to securing the goals of economic and social development enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming, in accordance with article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that, in the exercise of his or her rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition of and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and its contribution to the economic and social development of Member States,

1. Recognizes that there exist in Member States many forms of legal property ownership, including private, communal, social and state forms, each of which should contribute to ensuring effective development and utilization of human resources by establishing sound bases for political, economic and social justice;

2. Affirms, in accordance with article 30 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that nothing in the Declaration, including the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others, may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms proclaimed therein;

3. Considers that further measures may be appropriate at the national level, consistent with national policies, to ensure respect for the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's property, as set forth in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, so as to protect and preserve these rights in relation to the following types of property:

(a) Personal property, including the residence of one's self and family;

(b) Economically productive property, including property associated with agriculture, commerce and industry;

4. Urges States, therefore, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to provide, where they have not done so, adequate constitutional and legal provisions to protect the right of everyone to own property alone as well as in association with others and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's property;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, while addressing the question of the realization in all countries of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, to consider the means whereby and the degree to which respect for the right to own property alone as well as in association with others contributes to the development of individual liberty and initiative, which serve to foster, strengthen and enhance the exercise of other human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Decides to consider this question at its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Popular participation and human rights

The Commission on Human Rights had before it in 1990 a report [E/CN.4/1990/8] of the Secretary-General, in which he stated that he had received two substantive replies containing comments on the 1985 study [YUN 1985, p. 881] on popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of human rights.

On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/14)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General, in preparing a study for submission in 1991 regarding the extent to which the right to participation had been established and had evolved at the national level, to use all channels to collect information and substantive views and comments on the study on popular participation.

Other issues

Science and technology

In a January note [E/CN.4/1990/29], the Secretary-General stated that, pursuant to a 1988 Commission resolution [YUN 1988, p. 583], the Commission had invited the United Nations University (UNU), in co-operation with other interested academic and research institutions, to continue to study the positive and negative impact of scientific and technological developments on human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Secretary-General reported that, in response to the Commission's invitation, UNU stated that the research phase of the project relating to human rights and scientific and technological progress had been delayed. A workshop was convened in July 1989 to agree on a research plan. UNU expected the final report to be ready in February 1991.

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/39)], the Commission asked UNU, in co-operation with other interested research institutions, to submit in 1991 a final report on its study.

On the same date [res. 1990/40], the Commission called on States to use the achievements of science and technology to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress, and to do their utmost to assist in implementing the right to life through the adoption of appropriate measures. The Commission called on States, UN bodies, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress and the material and intellectual potential of humankind were used to benefit humankind and to promote and encourage universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/93.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the decisive factors in the development of human society,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, Conscious that it is only the creative genius of humankind that makes progress and the development of civilization possible in a peaceful environment and that human life must be recognized as supreme,

Recalling the fundamental importance of the right to life,

Bearing in mind also that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

1. Calls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress;

2. Recalls the historic responsibility of the Governments of all countries of the world to preserve civilization and to ensure that everyone enjoys his or her inherent right to life, and calls upon them to do their utmost to assist in implementing the right to life through the adoption of appropriate measures at both the national and the international levels;

3. Also calls upon all States, appropriate United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress and the material and intellectual potential of mankind are used for the benefit of mankind and for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Computerized personal files

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/132 [YUN 1989, p. 572], Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) submitted, in February, a revised version of the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files [E/CN.4/1990/722].

The principles concerning the minimum guarantees that should be provided in national legislation dealt with the principles of lawfulness and fairness, accuracy, purpose-specification, interested-person access, non-discrimination and security. The power to make exceptions to the principles, supervision and sanctions, trans-border data flows and the applicability of the principles were also included in the guidelines. Guidelines were provided for personal data files kept by governmental international organizations.

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/42)], the Commission on Human Rights recommended a draft text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/38.

Guidelines on the use of computerized personal files

The Economic and Social Council,
Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 44/132 of 15 December 1989,

Taking account of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/42 of 6 March 1990,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Louis Joinet, for the revised version of the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files;
2. Decides to transmit the revised draft guidelines to the General Assembly for appropriate action;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of all Governments to the revised draft guidelines;
4. Recommends that the General Assembly consider, as a matter of priority, the adoption and publication of the guidelines on the use of computerized personal files.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/38

25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) without vote, 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

By an October note [A/45/580], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of action taken regarding the revised version of the guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/95.

Guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/132 of 15 December 1989,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/42 of 6 March 1990 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/38 of 25 May 1990, entitled "Guidelines on the use of computerized personal files",

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Louis Joinet, for his report containing a revised version of the draft guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files;
2. Conveys its thanks to the Governments that have communicated to the Secretary-General their comments and suggestions concerning the previous version of the draft guidelines;

3. Adopts the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files in their revised version;

4. Requests Governments to take into account those guidelines in their legislation and administrative regulations;

5. Requests governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to respect those guidelines in carrying out the activities within their field of competence.

Mental illness

The Working Group on the draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care, established by the Commission in 1989 [YUN 1989, p.574], met in Geneva (8-19 January and 21 February) [E/CN.4/1990/31]. The Working Group carried out an examination and revision of the draft body of principles and guarantees submitted by the Sub-Commission in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 517] and supplemented by comments and suggestions received from Governments, specialized agencies and NGOs [E/CN.4/1990/53 & Add.1-3]. The text of the articles adopted were annexed to the Group's report.

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/38)], the Commission on Human Rights decided to make available, prior to its 1991 session, appropriate meeting time for the Working Group and asked the Group to pursue its work at that meeting. The Commission recommended a draft text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/37.

Question of a draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/38 of 6 March 1990,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the forty-seventh session of the Commission to continue the examination, revision and simplification of a draft body of principles and guarantees for the protection of mentally ill persons and for the improvement of mental health care, for submission to the Commission at its forty-seventh session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting to be held prior to the forty-seventh session of the Commission and to prepare and transmit to the working group a working paper covering the articles that remain to be discussed and taking account of the comments and suggestions made by Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/92.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other relevant instruments, such as the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons and the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,

Recalling its resolution 33/53 of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to urge the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study of the question of the protection of those detained on the grounds of mental ill-health, with a view to formulating guidelines,

Recalling also its resolution 44/134 of 15 December 1989, in which it welcomed the establishment of the open-ended Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights to examine, revise and simplify as necessary the draft body of principles and guarantees submitted by the Sub-Commission,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/38 of 6 March 1990 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/37 of 25 May 1990, by which the Council authorized the Working Group to continue its work with a view to submitting the draft body of principles and guarantees to the Commission at its forty-seventh session,

1. Welcomes the significant progress made by the Working Group in the elaboration of a body of principles for the protection of persons with mental illness and for the improvement of mental health care, and urges the Group to complete its work expeditiously for submission to the Commission on Human Rights;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider the subject at its forty-seventh session, in the light of the report and recommendations of the Working Group, with a view to submitting the draft principles to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council.

The environment

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/41)], the Commission on Human Rights, by a vote of 40 to none, with 2 abstentions, welcomed the Sub-Commission's 1989 decision [YUN 1989, p. 573] to have a note prepared for its 1990 session on methods by which a study could be made on the problems of the environment and its relation to human rights. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to the Preparatory Committee for the UN Conference on Environment and Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) and to keep the Committee informed of the work in that area.

In an August note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/12], Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria) presented proposals for a study of the problems of the environment and its relation to human rights.

The Special Rapporteur stated that in view of the scale, diversity and complexity of environmental problems, a descriptive study of them would be beyond the scope of the Sub-Commission's activities and might overlap with the work of other UN bodies. However, a general examination of the major features of environmental problems would make it possible to identify the risks they entailed for human rights. She stated that emphasis could be placed on pollution of the natural environment, problems linked to natural resources, development problems, aspects linked to human habitats and settlements and the rights of the individual. As human rights might be affected by environmental problems, those rights that were likely to conflict with the requirements of environmental protection could be analysed.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Sub-Commission define the subject and determine the principal or priority issues it considered most worth developing; initiate an in-depth debate on environmental problems within the Sub-Commission; and consider ways of collecting information of use for the study.

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/7)], the Sub-Commission entrusted the Special Rapporteur with preparing a study on human rights and the environment and asked her to present a preliminary report in 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/94.

Need to ensure a healthy environment for the well-being of individuals

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, in accordance with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, everyone has the right to an adequate standard of living for his or her own health and well-being and that of his or her family and to the continuous improvement of living conditions,

Recognizing the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms in all their aspects,

Considering that a better and healthier environment can help contribute to the full enjoyment of human rights by all,

Reaffirming that, in accordance with the Declaration of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, men and women have the fundamental right to freedom, equality and adequate conditions of life in an environment of a quality that permits a life of dignity and well-being, and that they bear a solemn responsibility to protect and improve the environment for present and future generations,

Bearing in mind the fact that increasing environmental degradation could endanger the very basis of life,

Bearing in mind also that the economic growth and development of the developing countries are essential in order to address the problems of the degradation and protection of the environment,

Emphasizing the increasing role of the United Nations in addressing global environmental problems,

Recalling that the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in Brazil in 1992, will elaborate strategies and measures to halt and reverse the effects of environmental degradation in the context of strengthened national and international efforts to promote sustainable and environmentally sound development in all countries,

Stressing the importance for all countries to take effective actions for the protection and enhancement of the environment in accordance with their respective capacities and responsibilities and taking into account the specific needs of developing countries and that, as the major sources of pollution, the developed countries have the main responsibility for taking appropriate measures urgently,

Welcoming Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/41 of 6 March 1990 and Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities resolution 1990/7 of 30 August 1990, in which they decided to study the problems of the environment and its relation to human rights,

1. Recognizes that all individuals are entitled to live in an environment adequate for their health and well-being;
2. Calls upon Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations dealing with environmental questions to enhance their efforts towards ensuring a better and healthier environment;
3. Encourages the Commission on Human Rights, with the assistance of its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, to continue studying the problems of the environment and its relation to human rights, with a view to submitting to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made on the matter;

4. Believes that appropriate organs of the United Nations, within their respective competences, should pursue active efforts in seeking to promote a better and healthier environment.

General Assembly resolution 45/94

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/749) without vote, 30 November (meeting 59); 22-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.57/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 93.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 35-42, 51, 57, 59; plenary 68.

Dumping of toxic wastes

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/43)], the Commission on Human Rights, by a vote of 31 to none, with 11 abstentions, asked the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) to enter into negotiations with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to find global solutions to the problem of the transboundary movement of hazardous wastes and their disposal. It asked the Secretary-General to report to it on the negotiations between UNEP and OAU in 1991 and to the Sub-Commission in 1990.

In a June report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/7] to the Sub-Commission, the Secretary-General stated that UNEP was preparing a global convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and had sought the involvement of all Governments. In that regard, it had invited the African countries to participate in the Group of Technical and Legal Experts entrusted with the preparation of the draft convention. In addition, UNEP was assisting the African countries in developing their own convention dealing with the problem of hazardous wastes.

Advancement of human rights

On 14 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/96.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling further its resolutions relating to the right to development and its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Noting with concern that many of the principles enunciated therein have not yet been taken under consideration by the international community with all the necessary dynamism and objectivity,

Emphasizing also the special importance of the purposes and principles proclaimed in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1990/17 and 1990/18 of 23 February 1990,

Taking into account the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Belgrade from 4 to 7 September 1989,

Reiterating that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of development opportunities is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals within nations,

Expressing its particular concern about the progressive worsening of living conditions in the developing world and the negative impact thereof on the full enjoyment of human rights, and especially about the very serious economic situation of the African continent and the disastrous effects of the heavy burden of the external debt for the peoples of Africa, Asia and Latin America,

Reiterating its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights,

Deeply convinced that today more than ever, economic and social development and human rights are complementary elements leading to the same goal, that is, the maintenance of peace and justice among nations as the foundation for the ideals of freedom and well-being to which mankind aspires,

Reiterating that co-operation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, is essential for the promotion of peace and development,

Convinced that the primary aim of such international co-operation must be the achievement by all human beings of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Considering that the efforts of the developing countries for their own development should be supported by an increased flow of resources and by the adoption of appropriate and substantive measures for creating an external environment conducive to such development,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights should continue its current work on overall analysis with a view to further promoting and strengthening human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the programme and working methods of the Commission, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international co-operation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for every human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from promoting and protecting the others;

3. Reaffirms that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil and political rights and of economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

5. Reaffirms also that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

6. Reaffirms further that international peace and security are essential elements for achieving full realization of the right to development;

7. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

8. Considers it necessary for all Member States to promote international co-operation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of every people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system, with a view to solving international economic, social and humanitarian problems;

9. Urges all States to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all human rights without diminishing personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for the right of workers to participate in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

11. Decides that the approach to future work within the United Nations system on human rights matters should also take into account the content of the Declaration on the Right to Development and the need for the implementation thereof;

12. Decides also to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

International human rights instruments

In a June note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/38], the Secretary-General submitted a list of ratifications of and accessions to human rights instruments that had taken place between 2 September 1988 and 1 June 1990. Having provided the note pursuant to a 1988 Sub-Commission request [YUN 1988, p. 543], the Secretary-General added that no additional information had been received from States, following his invitation to them to explain the circumstances which prevented them from ratifying or acceding to international human rights instruments and to explain any difficulties they might face.

The Sub-Commission, on 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/24)], requested its Chairman to appoint one of its members to report in 1992 on information received on the universal acceptance of human rights instruments, to analyse difficulties impeding the ratification of, or accession to, those instruments and to assess the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights with a view to further encouraging universal acceptance. It decided to include the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25] in the list of human rights instruments whose universal acceptance was to be encouraged. The Secretary-General was requested to: promote the programme of advisory services; renew the invitation to Member States to submit information on their acceptance of human rights instruments; continue holding informal discussions concerning prospects for ratification of those instruments with government delegations; and keep the Sub-Commission informed on his endeavours and update the table containing a country-by-country record of developments which had taken place in connection with the ratification of, or accession to, the human rights instruments included in the terms of reference of the Sub-Commission.

Human rights treaty bodies

With the entry into force of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child on 2 February (see above, under "Rights of the child"), there were seven human rights treaty instruments in force in 1990, the implementation of which was monitored by expert bodies established under each treaty. Those instruments and their respective treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [GA res. 2106 A (XX)] (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD)); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (Human Rights Committee) and International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [GA res. 3068 (XXVIII)] (Group of Three); the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180] (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46] (Committee against Torture); and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child (Committee on the Rights of the Child).

In a February report [E/CN.4/1990/67] to the Commission, the Secretary-General reviewed the need for adequate staffing resources with regard to the various treaty bodies, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/135 [YUN 1989, p. 522]. He stated that while the eventual computerization of the work of those bodies was expected to increase productivity, the anticipated requirements for support services to them could not be fully met without some staff increases. Addressing the problem of financing for CERD, the Secretary-General suggested establishing a "contingency reserve fund" of up to $200,000, based on voluntary contributions from States parties. In a later report [A/45/707], the Secretary-General stated that his proposals for long-term solutions for financing and staffing needs for the operations of the treaty bodies would be reflected in his proposed programme budget for the 1992-1993 biennium.

Commission action. On 27 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/25)], the Commission urged all States parties to meet their financial obligations pursuant to UN human rights instruments and invited meetings of States parties to consider ways of strengthening the collection of contributions and of making procedures more effective. Welcoming the conclusions and recommendations of a 1989 study [YUN 1989, p. 521] on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under UN human rights instruments, the Commission invited the treaty bodies to review the study and to send their comments to the Secretary-General, who was asked to report on those comments in 1991. The Commission invited the meeting of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies to discuss problems affecting the implementation of human rights treaties and requested the Secretary-General to convene the forthcoming meeting sufficiently in advance of the 1990 General Assembly session to enable consideration of the meeting's conclusions and recommendations at that session. That request was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1990/227 of 25 May.

By an October note [A/45/636], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the third meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 1-5 October).

Reporting obligations of States parties

Taking note of the 1989 study [YUN 1989, p. 521] on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under UN human rights instruments, the Commission, on 27 February [res. 1990/25], urged States parties to meet their reporting obligations and to contribute to identifying and implementing ways of further streamlining and improving reporting procedures. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare an inventory of all international human rights standard-setting activities in order to facilitate better informed decision-making.

Task Force on Computerization

A January report [E/CN.4/1990/39] of the Secretary-General contained a study by the Task Force on Computerization of the work of the treaty-monitoring bodies. Identifying specific data-base needs and potential users, the Task Force described the requirements of the computer system that it considered to be the most appropriate. An estimate of the initial and annual recurrent costs for the system was also provided. Noting three major categories of the benefits of computerization—reduced costs, increased resources and new and better services—the Task Force concluded that computerization would greatly enhance the productivity of the existing staff and significantly expand the range of services available to States and to experts. While the short-term cost would be significant, it reiterated that in the longer term there would be no other alternative, unless the entire treaty régime was to be permitted to collapse under the weight of the ever-increasing demands being placed on it.

Taking note of the Secretary-General's report and the Task Force study, the Commission on Human Rights, on 23 February [res. 1990/21], suggested that the proposed system take advantage of and complement the existing equipment in the United Nations Office at Geneva. It approved the Task Force's recommendations and suggested that Member States contribute to cover the estimated initial, one-time only cost of the proposed system. Drawing the attention of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to the study, the Commission strongly recommended that they approve the annual recurrent cost of the system and authorize the inclusion of that cost in the programme budget for the 1992-1993 biennium. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1991 on the progress made in implementing the Commission resolution.

By decision 1990/226 of 25 May, the Council approved the annual recurrent cost of the system and requested the Secretary-General to include that cost in the programme budget for 1992-1993 when the proposed system was expected to become operational.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/85.

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/135 of 15 December 1989, as well as its other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1990/21 of 23 February 1990 and 1990/25 of 27 February 1990, and Economic and Social Council decision 1990/226 of 25 May 1990, by which the Council approved the recommendations of the Task Force on Computerization for computerizing the human rights treaty system,

Reaffirming that the effective implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights is of major importance to the efforts made by the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established pursuant to United Nations instruments on human rights is indispensable for the effective implementation of such instruments,

Reaffirming its responsibility to ensure the proper functioning of treaty bodies established pursuant to instruments adopted by the General Assembly and, in this connection, further reaffirming the importance of:

(a) Ensuring the effective functioning of systems of periodic reporting by States parties to these instruments;

(b) Securing sufficient financial resources to overcome existing difficulties with the effective functioning of treaty bodies;

(c) Addressing the question of reporting obligations and that of financial implications whenever elaborating any further instruments on human rights,

Recognizing that the effective implementation of instruments on human rights not only enhances international accountability in relation to the promotion and protection of human rights, but also provides States parties with a valuable opportunity to review policies and programmes affecting the promotion and protection of human rights and to make any appropriate adjustments,

Expressing concern about the continuing and increasing backlog of reports on implementation by States parties of United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on progress achieved in enhancing the effective functioning of the treaty bodies, pursuant, inter alia, to the conclusions and recommendations of the second meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 10 to 14 October 1988,

Taking note of the conclusions and recommendations of the third meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 1 to 5 October 1990,

Bearing in mind the study by the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations instruments on human rights,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies aimed at streamlining, rationalizing and otherwise improving reporting procedures, and supports the continuing efforts in this connection by the treaty bodies and the Secretary-General within their respective spheres of competence;

2. Once again expresses its satisfaction with the study by the independent expert on possible long-term approaches to enhancing the effective operation of existing and prospective bodies established under United Nations instruments on human rights, which contains several recommendations on reporting and monitoring procedures, servicing and financing of supervisory bodies and long-term approaches to human rights standard-setting and implementation mechanisms, and which was presented to the Commission on

Human Rights for detailed consideration at its forty-sixth session;

3. Endorses the recommendations of the Task Force on Computerization appointed by the Secretary-General to prepare a study on computerizing the work of the treaty-monitoring bodies, with a view to increasing efficiency and facilitating compliance by States parties with their reporting obligations and the examination of reports by the treaty bodies;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to give high priority to establishing a computerized data base to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the functioning of the treaty bodies;

5. Recalls the report of the Secretary-General to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights showing the extent of overlapping issues dealt with in international instruments on human rights, which will assist efforts to reduce, as appropriate, duplication in the supervisory bodies of issues raised with respect to any given State party, and asks the Secretary-General to draw the report to the attention of the other treaty bodies;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General to proceed as soon as possible with the circulation of the detailed reporting manual to the various States parties to the United Nations human rights instruments, to assist them in the fulfilment of their reporting obligations;

7. Again urges States parties to make every effort to meet their reporting obligations and to assist, individually and through meetings of States parties, in identifying and implementing ways of further streamlining and improving reporting procedures as well as enhancing co-ordination and information flow between the treaty bodies and with relevant United Nations bodies, including specialized agencies;

8. Welcomes the emphasis placed by the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies and by the Commission on Human Rights on the importance of technical assistance and advisory services and, therefore:

(a) Endorses the request of the Commission that the Secretary-General report regularly to it on possible technical assistance projects identified by the treaty bodies;

(b) Invites the treaty bodies to give priority attention to identifying such possibilities in the regular course of their work of reviewing the periodic reports of States parties;

9. Endorses the recommendations of the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on the need to ensure financing and adequate staffing resources for the operations of the treaty bodies and, with this in mind:

(a) Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General review the need for adequate staffing resources in regard to the various treaty bodies;

(b) Requests that the Secretary-General report on this question to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session and to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

10. Calls upon all States parties to meet fully and without delay their financial obligations under the relevant instruments on human rights, and requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of strengthening collection procedures and making them more effective;

11. Welcomes the fact that at its forty-sixth session the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1990/25, noted that the General Assembly could consider alleviating the financial difficulties of treaty bodies, inter alia, by the temporary allocation of necessary funds by way of advances out of the regular budget of the United Nations, which would be reimbursed from the contributions received within the same budget year, this procedure being repeated until such time as a permanent solution to such difficulties can be implemented;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to consider administrative and budgetary measures to alleviate the current financial difficulties of the treaty bodies and thus guarantee their regular functioning and to report on these measures to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session;

13. Emphasizes that the adoption of any administrative and budgetary measures shall not prejudice the duty of States parties under United Nations human rights instruments to meet all their financial obligations pursuant to such instruments;

14. Notes with interest that the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies recommended in October 1990 that the General Assembly take appropriate measures to ensure the financing of each of the committees from the regular budget of the United Nations;

15. Invites the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies to maintain communication and dialogue with each other on common issues and problems and, to this end, requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to convene a further meeting of the persons chairing the treaty bodies at a time to be established;

16. Decides to give priority consideration at its forty-sixth session to the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing treaty bodies, in the light of the deliberations of the Commission on Human Rights, under the item entitled "Effective implementation of United Nations instruments on human rights and effective functioning of bodies established pursuant to such instruments".

International Covenants on Human Rights

On 23 February, the Commission adopted a resolution [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/20)] on the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], which corresponded largely to resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly later in the year. The Secretary-General was requested to consider ways and means of assisting States parties to the Covenants in preparing their reports and to report on the status of the Covenants and the work of the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/45.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its important responsibilities in relation to the co-ordination of activities to promote the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in promoting and implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Noting with appreciation the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as reflected in its report on its fourth session, and taking note with appreciation of the general comments of the Human Rights Committee on the non-discrimination clauses of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Committee at its thirty-seventh session,

Noting, in this regard, that a number of States Members of the United Nations have yet to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of the international effort to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

3. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

4. Appeals to States parties to the Covenants that have exercised their sovereign right to make reservations in accordance with relevant rules of international law to consider whether any such reservations should be reviewed;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to intensify the systematic efforts to encourage States to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to provide technical assistance to the States that are not parties to the Covenants, with a view to assisting them in ratifying or acceding to the Covenants;

6. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties to the Covenants with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

7. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation and the need for strict observance of all the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

8. Welcomes the fact that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its general comment on article 22 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted at its fourth session, focused on the means by which the various United Nations agencies working in the field of development could seek to integrate measures designed to promote full respect for economic, social and cultural rights in their activities;

9. Welcomes also the continuing efforts of the Human Rights Committee to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar questions of human rights to respect those standards as expressed in the general comments of the Human Rights Committee;

10. Welcomes further the adoption by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of a general comment at both its third and fourth sessions, and encourages the Committee to continue using that mechanism to develop a fuller appreciation of the obligations of States parties under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

11. Invites States parties, in conformity with article 2, paragraph 1, of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, to consider identifying bench-marks to measure achievements in the progressive realization of the rights recognized in the Covenant and, in this context, to pay particular attention to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged;

12. Invites the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-seventh session, to consider requesting the Secretary-General to devote a seminar, under the United Nations programme of human rights activities for the biennium 1992-1993, for the discussion of appropriate bench-marks to measure achievements in the progressive realization of the rights recognized in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights informed of the relevant activities of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee against Torture and, where appropriate, other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, and of the activities of the relevant bodies of the specialized agencies, and to transmit the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to all those bodies;

14. Encourages all Governments to publicize the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in as many languages as possible, and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda for its first regular session of 1991 an item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights" and to consider under that item the general comments adopted by the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

16. Also decides to transmit the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its fourth session to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session for consideration under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights".

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/45

25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70/Add.1) without vote, 22 May (meeting 18); 19-nation draft (E/1990/C.2/L.11), orally revised; agenda item 3.

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/129 [YUN 1989, p. 524], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/403] on the status of the International Covenants as at 1 August 1990 (see also above, under "Civil and political rights" and "Economic, social and cultural rights").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/135.

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/129 of 15 December 1989 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/20 of 23 February 1990,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Considering that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Covenants on 16 December 1991 provides an appropriate occasion to focus on the fundamental importance and special status of these basic human rights instruments of the United Nations,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Noting, in this regard, that a number of States Members of the United Nations have yet to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee in the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto,

Also recognizing the important role of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Welcoming the submission to the General Assembly of the annual report of the Human Rights Committee and the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its fourth session,

Considering that the effective functioning of treaty bodies established in accordance with the relevant provisions of international instruments on human rights plays a fundamental role and hence represents an important continuing concern of the United Nations,

Noting with concern the critical situation with regard to overdue reports from States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Taking note with appreciation of the recommendations and conclusions of the third meeting of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies, held at Geneva from 1 to 5 October 1990,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Human Rights Committee on its thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth sessions, including the suggestions and recommendations of a general nature approved by the Committee;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its fourth session, including its suggestions and recommendations;

3. Expresses its satisfaction with the serious and constructive manner in which both Committees are carrying out their function;

4. Urges States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights to pay active attention to the protection and promotion of civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights, taking into consideration their indivisible and interrelated character and the fact that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights;

5. Urges those States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that have been requested by the Human Rights Committee to provide additional information to comply with that request;

6. Also urges States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights;

7. Notes with satisfaction that the majority of States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and an increasing number of States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have been represented by experts in the presentation of their reports, thereby assisting the respective monitoring bodies in their work, and hopes that all States parties to both Covenants will arrange such representation in the future;

8. Again urges all States which have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

9. Invites the States parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to consider making the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

10. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

11. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency, so that the justification for and appropriateness of measures taken in these circumstances can be assessed;

12. Appeals to States parties to the Covenants that have exercised their sovereign right to make reservations in accordance with relevant rules of international law to consider whether any such reservations should be reviewed;

13. Urges States parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the specialized agencies and other relevant United Nations bodies to extend their full support and co-operation to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

14. Welcomes the adoption by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of general comment No. 2 (1990), regarding international technical assistance measures in relation to article 22 of the Covenant;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights informed of the relevant activities of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the

Committee against Torture and, where appropriate, other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies, and also to transmit the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to those bodies;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates;

17. Again urges the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights Committee, to take determined steps to give more publicity to the work of that Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

18. Encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

19. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights", a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

20. Decides to hold a commemorative meeting in honour of the Covenants on 16 December 1991, the twenty-fifth anniversary of their adoption.

International co-operation

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/169.

International co-operation in solving international problems of a social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/155 of 4 December 1986 and 43/155 of 8 December 1988, as well as Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1987/42 of 10 March 1987 and 1989/49 of 7 March 1989,

Conscious that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Desirous of achieving further progress in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that special emphasis should be put on the effective implementation of the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other relevant international instruments,

Convinced that the effectiveness of United Nations human rights instruments would be enhanced by universal adherence to them as well as by strict compliance of States parties with their obligations,

Considering that existing regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights make a major contribution to the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that the exchange of information and experience in this field, as well as the teaching of human rights, could be further improved,

Emphasizing the necessity for the international community to continue its efforts to take practical measures to prevent mass and flagrant violations and all other violations of human rights, including all forms of discrimination based on distinctions of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, which continue to take place in many parts of the world, contrary to the provisions of international instruments in the field of human rights,

Noting the importance that the promotion and protection of human rights have secured on the international agenda and in relations between States,

1. Calls upon Member States to implement fully the universally recognized international standards for the promotion and protection of human rights enshrined, in particular, in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other relevant international instruments;

2. Urges all States to co-operate fully with the relevant bodies of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental forums dealing with the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world;

3. Considers that such co-operation will make an effective and practical contribution to the implementation of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all;

4. Expresses its conviction that the promotion of and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as the implementation of universally recognized human rights standards, are particularly important for all countries;

5. Urges Member States that have not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the various international instruments in the field of human rights;

6. Recognizes the value of common efforts by Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations at international, regional, bilateral and national levels in the field of human rights;

7. Considers that the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights would contribute to the promotion and improvement of understanding of human rights;

8. Emphasizes that the wide dissemination of information on human rights and the teaching of human rights are important tasks and would contribute to the implementation of universally recognized international human rights standards;

9. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its forty-seventh session under the item entitled "Report of the Economic and Social Council".

World Conference on Human Rights

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/156 [YUN 1989, p. 529] on the possibility of convening a world conference on human rights, the Commission on Human Rights, on 7 March [E/1990/22 (dec. 1990/110)], decided that such a conference would be desirable to deal with crucial questions facing the United Nations in connection with the promotion and protection of human rights.

In response to Assembly resolution 44/156, requesting views on the desirability of convening a world conference on human rights, the Sub-Commission, on 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec. 1990/114)], submitted to the Secretary-General a report by the Four Directions Council, an NGO in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. The views of the Four Directions Council were included in the Secretary-General's report (see below).

As requested by Assembly resolution 44/156, the Secretary-General submitted in October a report with later addendum [A/45/564 & Add.1] on the desirability of convening a world conference on human rights. The Secretary-General presented the views of Governments, specialized agencies, UN bodies concerned with human rights and NGOs in consultative status. He stated that all but one of the Governments supported the convening of a world conference. Similarly, the specialized agencies, UN bodies and organs and NGOs were largely in favour of holding such a conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/155.

World Conference on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the goal of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, as set out in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Recognizing that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of another,

Bearing in mind that all Member States have pledged themselves to achieve the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in conformity with relevant articles of the Charter,

Noting the progress made by the United Nations towards this goal and the fact that there are areas in which further progress should be made,

Noting also that violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms continue to occur,

Considering that, in view of the progress made, the problems that remain and the new challenges that lie ahead, it would be appropriate to conduct a review of what has been accomplished through the human rights programme and what remains to be done,

Recalling its resolution 44/156 of 15 December 1989, in which it requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of Governments, specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and United Nations bodies concerned with human rights on the desirability of convening a world conference on human rights for the purpose of dealing at the highest level with the crucial questions facing the United Nations in connection with the promotion and protection of human rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General containing those views,

Noting the expressions of support for the convening of a world conference on human rights from many Governments, specialized agencies and United Nations bodies concerned with human rights and from non-governmental organizations,

Noting also the many views concerning the importance of thorough advance preparation for the success of the conference,

Convinced that the holding of a world conference on human rights could make a significant contribution to the effectiveness of the actions of the United Nations and its Member States in the promotion and protection of human rights,

1. Decides to convene at a high level a World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 with the following objectives:

(a) To review and assess the progress that has been made in the field of human rights since the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to identify obstacles to further progress in this area, and ways in which they can be overcome;

(b) To examine the relation between development and the enjoyment by everyone of economic, social and cultural rights as well as civil and political rights, recognizing the importance of creating the conditions whereby everyone may enjoy these rights as set out in the International Covenants on Human Rights;

(c) To examine ways and means to improve the implementation of existing human rights standards and instruments;

(d) To evaluate the effectiveness of the methods and mechanisms used by the United Nations in the field of human rights;

(c) To formulate concrete recommendations for improving the effectiveness of United Nations activities and mechanisms in the field of human rights through programmes aimed at promoting, encouraging and monitoring respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(f). To make recommendations for ensuring the necessary financial and other resources for United Nations activities in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Decides to establish a Preparatory Committee for the World Conference on Human Rights, which shall be open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies, with the participation of observers, in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

3. Also decides that the Preparatory Committee should have the mandate to make proposals for the consideration of the General Assembly regarding the agenda, date, duration, venue of and participation in the Conference, preparatory meetings and activities at the international, regional and national levels, which should take place in 1992, and on desirable studies and other documentation;

4. Further decides that the Preparatory Committee, at its first session, shall elect a five-member bureau composed of a chairman, three vice-chairmen and a rapporteur, with due regard to equitable geographic representation;

5. Instructs the Preparatory Committee to deal with the substantive preparations for the Conference in accordance with the goals and objectives set out in paragraph 1 above and bearing in mind the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session;

6. Decides that the Preparatory Committee shall hold a five-day session at Geneva in September 1991;

7. Also decides, in accordance with its resolution 42/211 of 21 December 1987 and without prejudice to the overall level of resources adopted by the General Assembly for the biennium 1990-1991 and the proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1992-1993, that the preparatory process and the Conference itself should be funded through the regular budget of the United Nations, without any implications for the programmes provided for under section 23 of the programme budget, and invites contributions of extrabudgetary resources to meet, inter alia, the cost of participation of representatives of least developed countries in the preparatory meetings and the Conference itself;

8. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to make recommendations to the Preparatory Committee on the above issues during those sessions that will take place prior to the Conference;

9. Encourages the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, the chairmen or other designated members of human rights expert bodies as well as special rapporteurs and chairmen or designated members of working groups to take part in the work of the Preparatory Committee;

10. Requests Governments, the specialized agencies, other international organizations, concerned United Nations bodies, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned with human rights to assist the Preparatory Committee and to undertake reviews and submit recommendations concerning the Conference and the preparations there for to the Preparatory Committee through the Secretary-General and to participate actively in the Conference;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Preparatory Committee a report on the contributions made pursuant to paragraphs 9 and 10 above;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to appoint a Secretary-General for the Conference from within the Secretariat and to provide the Preparatory Committee with all necessary assistance;

13. Requests the Preparatory Committee to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth and forty-seventh sessions on the progress of its work.

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its forty-sixth session in Geneva from 29 January to 9 March 1990 and adopted 82 resolutions and 16 decisions. In addition, it recommended 9 draft resolutions and 29 draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 25 May, by decision 1990/253, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-sixth session [E/1990/22].

The Commission, on 7 March [dec. 1990/111], postponed consideration of a draft resolution recommended to it by the Sub-Commission in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 514], which requested the Secretary-General to convene, by 1991, an international meeting of experts on issues related to international monitoring in the field of human rights. On the same date [dec. 1990/112], it took note of the Secretary-General's report on the in-depth evaluation of the human rights programme [E/AC.51/1989/2]. With regard to the organization of its work, the Commission decided on 29 January to amend its provisional agenda [dec. 1990/101] and on 30 January to invite a number of special rapporteurs and other experts appointed by the Secretary-General to participate in its meetings, in connection with certain agenda items [dec. 1990/102]. In other action, the Commission, on 7 March, adopted a resolution [res. 1990/70] aimed at streamlining the system of preparation of reports and studies by the Secretary-General.

Organization of work of 1991 session

On 9 March [dec. 1990/116], the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize 30 fully serviced additional meetings for its 1991 session and requested the Chairman of the Commission to organize the work of the session within the normal allotted time, so that the additional meetings would be used only if absolutely necessary. By decision 1990/250 of 25 May, the Council approved the Commission's request.

Enlargement of Commission

By a March note [E/CN.4/1990/91], the Chairman of the working group set up to improve the effectiveness of the Commission on Human Rights stated that the drafting group on the subject, which met between 28 February and 8 March, had not reached the point of making any recommendations. The Commission, on 9 March [dec. 1990/115], asked the working group to continue its work as a sessional working group in 1991, and encouraged delegations to hold informal consultations among themselves on the matter.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1990/249 of 25 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the working group.

Also on 25 May, the Council adopted resolution 1990/48.

Enlargement of the Commission on Human Rights and the further promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/167 of 15 December 1989,

Bearing in mind the responsibilities of the Commission on Human Rights under the Charter of the United Nations,

Appreciating the contribution made by the Commission to the cause of human rights and recognizing the need to reinforce it,

Reaffirming that the Commission shall be guided by the standards in the field of human rights laid down in the various international instruments concerned with the protection and promotion of human rights,

Aware of the fact that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as legitimate concerns of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends,

Emphasizing the importance of further improving the effective functioning of the Commission in the field of human rights,

Convinced that in order to achieve universally recognized objectives, improvements in the functioning of the Commission and measures of rationalization should be a matter for continuous consideration,

Taking note of the relevant section of the final documents of the Ninth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries adopted at Belgrade on 7 September 1989 stating the need to strengthen the role and efficiency of the United Nations and to reinforce its mechanisms,

Stressing that the special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights are some of the key elements for analysing, reporting on and monitoring human rights, which are essential for the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all countries,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1990/115 of 9 March 1990,

1. Decides to increase the membership of the Commission on Human Rights to fifty-three and to allocate the ten additional seats to the regional groups of Africa, Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean on the basis of the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

2. Also decides that the enlarged membership of the Commission on Human Rights shall be elected in 1991 and that the provisions contained in paragraphs 3 to 5 below shall take effect at the forty-eighth session of the Commission;

3. Authorizes the Commission on Human Rights to meet exceptionally between its regular sessions, provided that a majority of States members of the Commission so agree;

4. Recommends that the mandates of thematic rapporteurs and working groups established or to be established by the Commission shall, unless otherwise decided, be of three years' duration, requests the Secretary-General to provide the rapporteurs and working groups with all the assistance necessary to carry out their mandates in the best possible conditions, and calls on all Governments to co-operate fully with them and to support and promote their activities by ensuring unhampered access to all relevant sources of information;

5. Decides that, in the week following the session of the Commission on Human Rights, the Bureau shall meet to make suggestions about the organization of work of the Commission, including the effective use of conference time and facilities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the organizational implications of the present resolution for consideration by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session, and requests the Commission to submit its observations to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1991.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities held its forty-second session in Geneva from 6 to 31 August 1990 [E/CN.4/1991/2] and adopted 34 resolutions and 26 decisions.

The Sub-Commission established [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec.1990/101)] sessional working groups on the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, detention and the draft declaration on the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country. It approved [dec. 1990/126] the composition of its working groups on communications, indigenous populations and slavery; decided [dec. 1990/102] to invite two special rapporteurs and the Commission Chairman to participate in its meetings on certain agenda items; and modified [dec. 1990/112] its 1989 decision [YUN 1989 p. 514] regarding the consideration of communications by its Working Group on Communications, so that the Group, acting under Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) [YUN 1970, p. 529], should consider only those communications that had been transmitted to the Governments concerned not later than 12 weeks prior to the meeting of the Group.

The Sub-Commission adopted three decisions [dec. 1990/104 1990/105, 1990/111] and one resolution [res. 1990/4] on its rule of procedure regarding the method of voting, specifically on its use of secret ballots to vote on action concerning allegations of human rights violations. It also considered an August note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/51] by Claire Palley (United Kingdom) on the subject.

On 24 August, the Sub-Commission decided [dec. 1990/107] to reorganize the conduct of speeches for the remainder of its 1990 session. Regarding the conduct of voting, it decided [dec. 1990/122] that draft decisions and resolutions should not be introduced by one of the sponsors, and urged members not to make general comments on the drafts, but to offer only concrete proposals. The Sub-Commission postponed until 1991 the consideration of three draft resolutions: on a new set of rules of procedure to govern its proceedings [dec. 1990/106]; on improving the efficiency and productivity of the Commission and the Sub-Commission [dec. 1990/115]; and on the protection of journalists [dec. 1990/116]. It decided [dec. 1990/103] that a telegram should be sent by the UN Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights to the Secretary of State of the United States, expressing his sadness at the death of Pearl Bailey, who had served as the United States Goodwill Ambassador to the United Nations.

Submission of guidelines

On 2 February, the Chairman of the Sub-Commission reported [E/CN.4/1990/40] on the implementation of guidelines for its work, as outlined by the Commission in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 513]. He provided information in six areas, which reflected the issues addressed by those guidelines: terms of reference and role of the Sub-Commission; methods of work; studies and reports and activities of special rapporteurs; standard-setting activities; consideration of new developments in the field of human rights; and the drafting and adoption of resolutions and decisions.

Expressing appreciation for the report of the Sub-Commission Chairman, the Commission, on 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/64)], reiterated guidelines for the activities of the Sub-Commission. It further requested the Sub-Commission to consider its practice of forwarding draft resolutions and decisions to the Commission for attention, action or consideration. The working group that was established by the Sub-Commission in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 514] to review proposals for improving the Sub-Commission's functioning in dealing with human rights violations was asked to examine ways of avoiding duplication of studies, resolutions and decisions on issues already being dealt with by the Commission. The Chairman of the Sub-Commission was asked to report to the Commission on the implementation of those guidelines.

Status of special rapporteurs

On 26 January [E/1990/15], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council his letter of 22 December 1989 to the Council President, regarding the applicability of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations [GA res. 22 A (I) to ensuring the completion of a report on human rights and youth by Special Rapporteur Dumitru Mazilu (Romania). The Romanian authorities had not permitted the Special Rapporteur to travel to Geneva to present his report to the Sub-Commission in 1988 and, by Council resolution 1989/73 [YUN 1989, p. 570], the International Court of Justice was requested to provide an advisory opinion on the legal question of the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention in the case of Mr. Mazilu. The Secretary-General reported that on 15 December 1989 the Court had unanimously determined that the Convention was applicable. The advisory opinion was issued as an addendum

[E/1990/15/Add.1] to the report. (For the Special Rapporteur's report, see above, under "Economic, social and cultural rights".)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/43.

Advisory opinion on the applicability of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations in the case of rapporteurs and special rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

The Economic and Social Council,

Having requested, on a priority basis, in its resolution 1989/75 of 24 May 1989, an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legal question of the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations in the case of Mr. Dumitru Mazilu as Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the International Court of justice for having given the unanimous opinion, on 15 December 1989, that article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations is applicable in the case of the special rapporteur in question;

2. Welcomes the opinion of the Court to the effect that rapporteurs and special rapporteurs of the Sub-Commission must be regarded as experts on mission within the meaning of article VI, section 22, of the Convention.

Centre for Human Rights

On 27 February [E/9190/22 (res. 1990/25)], the Commission requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the situation and developments regarding the logistical and human resources support for the increasing activities of the Centre for Human Rights, in particular on the servicing needs of the human rights treaty bodies, the provisions for servicing included in the UN budget and the implementation of those provisions, to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1990.

In response to the Commission's request, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Council in April [E/1990/50]. He discussed the activities of the Centre in each of its six main areas (international instruments; communications; special procedures; research, studies and prevention of discrimination; advisory services and technical assistance; external relations, documentation and publications), described in detail how the Centre's work-load had increased in recent years and documented how resources had failed to keep pace with the increase in responsibilities.

In response to a Council request (see below), the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in November a report [A/45/807] on actions taken in 1990 and those planned for 1991, as interim solutions to the problem of insufficient resources. He pointed out that the responsibilities of the Centre were rapidly increasing, with a growing demand in the areas of research, standard-setting, implementation, technical assistance and information and education. The additional obligations led to a situation in which the programme budget for 1990-1991 had insufficient resources for the full realization of the UN human rights programme. In response to the concern expressed by a number of Member States over the current situation, the Secretary-General suggested that they begin consultations with a view to providing voluntary donations to assist the Centre during the remainder of the biennium.

As to developments relating to the Centre's activities, the Secretary-General submitted a December report [A/C.5/45/66] to the Assembly which included further proposals for alleviating the work-load of staff. Taking into account the expansion of the Centre's activities, the Secretary-General concluded that it would not be possible to redeploy resources from low-priority areas or modify existing activities, and warned that the requirements of the Centre might have to be deferred to the 1992-1993 biennium. He proposed that three additional posts be established for the Centre in 1991, to implement supervisory procedures for the Convention on the Rights of the Child (see above, under "Rights of the child"), which entered into force on 2 September, and that four additional posts be approved to assist in coping with the processing of ever-increasing communications.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/47.

Developments relevant to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/135 of 15 December 1989 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/46 of 6 March 1989 and taking note of Commission resolution 1990/25 of 27 February 1990,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic aims of the United Nations according to the Charter and an issue of the utmost importance for the Organization,

Recognizing that the work-load of the Centre for Human Rights has increased rapidly in recent years,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation and developments regarding the logistical and human resources support for the activities of the Centre for Human Rights, in particular the conclusion that the work-load of the Centre has increased, while resources have failed to keep pace with the increase in its responsibilities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 programme and resource proposals for long-term solutions of the problems posed by this situation, taking also into account the proposals contained in the report of the Task Force on Computerization, as well as in the study carried out by an independent expert, concerning the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session a brief report on actions taken in 1990 and those planned for 1991, as interim solutions of these problems;

4. Decides to refer the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session and the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies at their next meeting, for consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/180.

Developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/135 of 15 December 1989, Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/46 of 6 March 1989 and 1990/25 of 27 February 1990, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/47 of 25 May 1990,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms is one of the basic aims of the United Nations according to the Charter of the United Nations and an issue of the utmost importance for the Organization,

Recognizing that the work-load of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat has increased rapidly in recent years, while resources have failed to keep pace with the increase in its responsibilities,

Noting that the difficult financial situation during the biennium 1990-1991 created considerable obstacles to the implementation of the various procedures and mechanisms, negatively influenced the servicing by the Secretariat of human rights bodies concerned and impaired the quality and precision of reporting,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and noting that in spite of the recognition that the responsibilities of the Centre for Human Rights have increased rapidly in recent years, the only specific proposal made in the report as an interim solution for 1991 to the problems posed by the resource situation of the Centre, pursuant to the request made by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1990/47, is the reference to voluntary donations,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to act promptly to respond to the needs of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat and to make additional specific proposals as interim solutions to these problems for the current biennium, in particular indicating the human resources required for the Centre to carry out its functions adequately, together with the related administrative and budgetary implications thereof, to the General Assembly not later than 10 December 1990, so that the budgetary process can be completed by the end of the current session;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General, in conformity with his commitment, to include in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 programme and resource proposals for long-term solutions to the problems posed by the situation in the Centre for Human Rights which respond to the needs of the Centre, are commensurate with its work-load and also take into account the need to respond to the requests for advisory services and technical assistance, primarily from developing countries, and the proposals contained in the report of the Task Force on Computerization, and in the study carried out by an independent expert concerning the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit an interim report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session and a final report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, under the item entitled "Report of the Economic and Social Council".

On the same date, the Assembly adopted resolution 45/248 B, section V.

Developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights

[The General Assembly . . .]

1. Decides to accept the proposal for additional posts made by the Secretary-General in paragraph 8 of his report on developments relating to the activities of the Centre for Human Rights;

2. Also decides that the Secretary-General shall enter into commitments for further resources equivalent to 1 P-4, 1 P-3 and 2 General Service posts subject to review and concurrence by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the basis of the results of his management and work-load analysis which will be completed no later than January 1991;

Strengthening UN action

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/163.

Strengthening of United Nations action in the human rights field through the promotion of international co-operation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and its determination to promote social progress and better standards of living in greater freedom,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Bearing in mind equally that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling that, in accordance with Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Organization shall promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms For all, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being that are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and that, in accordance with Article 56, all Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55,

Reiterating that Member States should continue to act in the human rights field in conformity with the provisions of the Charter,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that" such international co-operation should be based on the principles embodied in international law, especially the Charter, as well as the Universal Declaration of 'Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other relevant instruments,

Deeply convinced that such co-operation should be based on a profound understanding of the economic, social and cultural realities and the variety of problems existing in different societies,

Recalling its resolutions 32/130 of 16 December 1977, 37/200 of 18 December 1982, 41/155 of 4 December 1986 and 43/155 of 8 December 1988,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 2131 (XX) of 21 December 1965, 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 and 36/103 of 9 December 1981,

Aware of the fact that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as legitimate concerns of the world community should be guided by the principles of non-

selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States in co-operation with the Organization to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. Calls upon all Member States to base their activities for the protection and promotion of human rights, including the development of further international co-operation in this field, on the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other relevant international instruments and to refrain from activities that are inconsistent with this international legal framework;

4. Considers that international co-operation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights, to the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Affirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as legitimate concerns of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends;

6. Expresses its conviction that an unbiased and fair approach to human rights issues contributes to the promotion of international co-operation as well as to the effective promotion, protection and realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Underlines, in this context, the continuing need for impartial and objective information on the political, economic and social situations and events of all countries;

8. Invites Member States to consider adopting, as appropriate, within the framework of their respective legal systems and in accordance with their obligations under international law, especially the Charter, as well as international human rights instruments, the measures that they may deem appropriate to achieve further progress in international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-seventh session, to examine the content of the present resolution, including ways and means to strengthen United Nations action in this regard.

General Assembly resolution 45/163

18 December 1990 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/838) without vote, 5 December (meeting 63); draft by Cuba (A/C.3/45/L.82/Rev.2), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 48-50, 55, 58, 63; plenary 69.

Public information activities

In February, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a report [E/CN.4/1990/19] on public information activities, which emphasized the current and proposed aims and programmes of the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, launched in 1988 by the General Assembly [YUN 1988, p. 539]. The report included details of the Campaign's costs in 1989, the budget envisaged for future activities and a first assessment of the impact of Campaign activities undertaken by the United Nations.

The Secretary-General stated that programmes within the Campaign had been grouped into five major areas: preparation and dissemination of printed information and reference materials; workshops, seminars and training courses; fellowships and internships; special human rights observances; and coverage and promotion activities. He described activities taken in those areas by the Centre for Human Rights, UN information centres and services, and the UN Department of Public Information (DPI).

The Secretary-General pointed out that some 100 language versions of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [GA res. 217 A (III)] were available, and that the interest shown in information materials indicated the real potential of the World Campaign to attain its long-term objective of a universal culture of human rights.

Commission action. Taking note of the Secretary-General's report, the Commission, on 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/72)], requested him to deploy the skills and resources of all the Secretariat units concerned and to make adequate funding available for developing human rights information activities. Emphasizing the need to harmonize UN public information activities in the field of human rights with organizations such as the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the Commission requested the Centre for Human Rights to co-ordinate the relevant activities of the World Campaign within the UN system, and to maintain liaison with Governments, regional and national institutions and individuals concerned in the development and implementation of those activities. It requested DPI to make full use of the available resources in the field of human rights in order to expand and update audio-visual material on human rights and to increase the print-run of UN-produced information and reference material for world-wide distribution. The Commission stressed the need for close co-operation between the Centre and DPI, particularly in the implementation of the aims of the Campaign, and asked the Secretary-General to translate the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights into additional non-official languages and to ensure the availability of the text at UN information centres world wide. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to take advantage of the collaboration of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to increase universal awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and to submit to the Commission in 1991 a report on public information activities with special emphasis on the activities of the World Campaign.

The Commission encouraged all Member States to make special efforts to provide, facilitate and promote publicity for UN human rights activities, to disseminate copies of international human rights instruments in national and local languages and to provide information and education on the practical ways to exercise the enjoyment of rights and freedoms under those instruments. Noting the special value of regional and national training courses and workshops in promoting practical education and awareness of human rights, the Commission urged all Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to understanding human rights issues, and encouraged those responsible for training in law and its enforcement, the armed forces, medicine, diplomacy and other relevant fields to include appropriate human rights components in their programmes.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/61 [YUN 1989, p. 516], the Secretary-General submitted in October a report [A/45/590] describing human rights public information activities conducted by the Centre for Human Rights and DPI, and summarizing areas of co-ordination and co-operation within and outside the UN system. He reviewed commemorations held during the year, such as Child Rights Day (22 March) and Human Rights Day (10 December), and listed the designated national focal points, as at 31 August 1990, for the development and implementation of the World Public Information Campaign.

Throughout the year, the Centre organized workshops, seminars and training courses, mostly within its programme of advisory services (see below) and technical assistance. Among other activities, it conducted a global consultation on the right to development (Geneva, 8-12 January) (see above, under "Economic, social and cultural rights") and the first Asia-Pacific human rights workshop (Manila, Philippines, 7-11 May). The Centre co-ordinated the relevant activities of the World Campaign within the UN system and continued to increase contact and co-operation with other bodies concerned with human rights, such as national and regional institutions, academic and research communities, NGOs and the media. Many DPI activities in 1990 aimed to promote the rights of the child, on the occasion of the 1989 adoption [GA res. 44/25] and the 1990 entry into force (see above, under "Economic, social and cultural rights") of the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The theme "A World Safe for Children: Meeting the Challenge in the 1990s" was chosen for the 1990 DPI annual conference for NGOs (New York, 12-14 September). Information on UN activities pertaining to human rights continued to be produced and disseminated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/99.

Development of public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that activities to improve public knowledge in the field of human rights are essential to the fulfilment of the purposes of the United Nations set out in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations and that carefully designed programmes of teaching, education and information are essential to the achievement of lasting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the resolutions adopted on this subject, in particular its resolutions 43/128 of 8 December 1988 and 44/61 of 8 December 1989, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/73 of 7 March 1990,

Recognizing the catalytic effect of initiatives of the United Nations on national and regional public information activities in the field of human rights,

Recognizing also the valuable role that non-governmental organizations can play in those endeavours,

Recognizing further that the eradication of illiteracy will further the promotion and protection of human rights,

Believing that the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights is a valuable complement to the activities of the United Nations further to promote and to protect human rights world-wide,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of the public information activities in the field of human rights;

2. Reaffirms the need for information materials on human rights to be carefully designed in clear and accessible form, to be tailored to regional and national requirements and circumstances with specific target audiences in mind and to be effectively disseminated in national and local languages and in sufficient volume to have the desired impact, and for effective use also to be made of the mass media, in particular radio and television and audio-visual technologies, in order to reach wider audiences, with priority being given to children, other young people and the disadvantaged, including those in isolated areas;

3. Urges the Secretariat to take measures to ensure the further production and effective dissemination of human rights information materials, especially those on the basic United Nations human rights instruments and institutions, in national and local languages, in co-operation with regional, national and local organizations as well as with Governments, making full and effective use of the United Nations information centres;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to produce audio-visual materials on human rights issues which could be used as effective tools of information within the framework of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights and which would be made available at United Nations information centres and United Nations offices world-wide and to report on the progress made to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session;

5. Encourages the efforts of the Secretariat to establish, within available resources, the collection of basic United Nations information and reference material on human rights and fundamental freedoms at each United Nations information centre;

6. Encourages all Member States to make special efforts to provide, facilitate and encourage publicity for the activities of the United Nations in the field of human rights and to accord priority to the dissemination, in their respective national and local languages, of the texts of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international conventions, as well as to information and education on the practical ways in which the rights and freedoms enjoyed under those instruments can be exercised;

7. Urges all Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues, and encourages all those responsible for training in law and its enforcement, the armed forces, medicine, diplomacy and other relevant fields to include appropriate human rights components in their programmes;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to draw the attention of Member States to the teaching booklet on human rights, which could serve as a broad and flexible framework adaptable to national circumstances for the structuring and development of the teaching of human rights;

9. Notes the special value, under the advisory services and technical assistance programme, of regional and national training courses and workshops, in co-operation with Governments, regional and national organizations and non-governmental organizations, in promoting practical education and awareness in the field of human rights;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the fullest effective deployment of the skills and resources of all concerned units of the Secretariat and to make available, within existing resources, and in particular from the budget of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, adequate funding for developing practical and effective human rights information activities, including those within the programme of the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

11. Calls upon the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, which has primary responsibility within the United Nations system in the field of human rights, to co-ordinate the substantive activities of the World Campaign pursuant to the direction of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, and to serve as liaison with Governments, regional and national institutions, non-governmental organizations and concerned individuals in the development and implementation of the activities of the World Campaign;

12. Calls upon the Department of Public Information, which has primary responsibility for public information activities, to co-ordinate the public information activities of the World Campaign and, in its responsibility as secretariat to the Joint United Nations Information Committee, to promote co-ordinated system-wide information activities in the field of human rights;

13. Stresses the need for close co-operation between the Centre for Human Rights and the Department of Public Information, inter alia, in the implementation of the aims established for the World Campaign and the need for the United Nations to harmonize its activities in the field of human rights with those of other organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, with regard to the dissemination of information on international humanitarian law, and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with regard to education for human rights;

14. Requests the Secretariat, in the implementation of the World Campaign, to take advantage, as much as possible, of the collaboration of non-governmental organizations for, inter alia, the dissemination of human rights materials, with a view to increasing universal awareness of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

15. Requests the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-seventh session, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General, to give priority consideration to this question with a view to providing appropriate guidance on the aims and activities of the World Campaign;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration under the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

General Assembly resolution 45/99

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/750) without vote, 23 November (meeting 51); 26-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.35); agenda item 94.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 24-27, 36, 51; plenary 68.

Advisory services

Following a 1989 Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 518], the Secretary-General submitted a January report [E/CN.4/1990/43] on progress made in 1989 in implementing the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, including advisory missions; technical assistance and co-operation; training courses, workshops and seminars; and fellowships and internships. He also reviewed the policy guidelines for the use and allocation of resources in providing assistance and outlined future activities. Financial summaries of projects funded and contributions to the UN Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance were annexed to the report.

Commission action. On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/58)], the Commission welcomed the increasing number of requests from Governments for support and technical assistance in the field of human rights and reaffirmed that the programme of advisory services should, upon request, continue to assist States in implementing international conventions on human rights. Competent UN bodies, such as the committees set up under the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee against Torture, were invited to make suggestions and proposals to implement advisory services. The Commission appealed to all Governments to make use of the information and training courses on the application of international human rights standards and encouraged Governments in need of technical assistance to avail themselves of the advisory services of experts.

The Commission recommended that the Secretary-General continue to increase expert assistance and activities to assist Governments in meeting international human rights standards. It asked him to: provide more human and financial resources to enlarge the advisory services programme; pursue a medium-term plan for human rights advisory services and technical assistance; assist the Centre for Human Rights in providing advisory services and technical assistance; explore the possibilities of co-operation between the Centre and UN bodies, such as the United Nations Development Programme and UNHCR, as well as ICRC; ensure close co-ordination between the activities of the regular programme of advisory services and those of the Voluntary Fund; bring to the attention of relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies the need for further technical assistance in the legal field, with a view to promoting human rights in UN development strategies and policies; co-ordinate and facilitate the flow of bilateral technical assistance; and report to the Commission in 1991 on the progress made in the implementation of the advisory services programme. The Commission's special rapporteurs and representatives, as well as the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, were requested to inform Governments of the services provided for under the programme of advisory services and to include in their recommendations proposals for specific projects under that programme. The Secretary-General was asked to give special attention to such proposals.

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/237, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to increase human and financial resources for the enlargement of advisory services in the field of human rights.

Report of Secretary-General. Following the Commission's request, the Secretary-General submitted a December report [E/CN.4/1991/55] on advisory services in the field of human rights. In 1990, under the UN regular budget for the programme of advisory services, the Centre for Human Rights conducted a European Workshop on International Standards in the Field of Human Rights (Kiev, Ukrainian SSR, 24-28 September), an International Seminar on Political, Historical, Social and Cultural Factors Contributing to Racism, Racial Discrimination and Apartheid (Geneva, 10-14 December), a National Workshop on the Rights of the Child (New Delhi, India, 11-14 December) and a World Congress on Human Rights (New Delhi, 10-15 December). The Centre also participated in a seminar on human rights instruments, their ratification and implementation, for public officials of the countries of the South Pacific (Rarotonga, Cook Islands, 21 November).

The Centre awarded training fellowships to 29 applicants who were or would be directly involved in functions affecting human rights. In addition, some 95 internships were offered to outstanding graduate students to gain first-hand knowledge of UN action and procedures at the Centre.

Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services

In 1990, the UN Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, established in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 790], continued to finance the Centre for Human Rights programme of technical co-operation with the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights of the Organization of African Unity, as well as country programmes in Colombia, the Gambia, Guatemala, Guinea, Hungary, Paraguay and Romania [E/CN.4/1991/55]. Through the Fund, the Centre assisted the Arab Institute of Human Rights in Tunis, Tunisia, in establishing a documentation centre to promote human rights in the region through training courses and the dissemination of information.

During the year, the first Asian-Pacific regional workshop on international human rights standards (Manila, 7-9 May), a national training course on international human rights instruments and the administration of justice (Montevideo, Uruguay, 9-13 July), and a national seminar on the application of international human rights instruments and the administration of justice (Asunción, Paraguay, 18-20 July) were financed by the Fund. As at 31 October 1990, contributions received for the Fund totalled $2,114,682.

Commission action. On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/59)], the Commission expressed appreciation to the Secretary-General for the projects realized since the establishment of the Voluntary Fund and to the Governments and NGOs that had contributed to it. Emphasizing the Fund's objective of supporting the implementation of international conventions and other international instruments on human rights, it called on Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the Fund. The Commission recommended that activities under the Fund be directed towards expert and technical assistance to Governments to create and develop infrastructures to meet international human rights standards, and encouraged Governments needing technical assistance to avail themselves of the services offered. It also encouraged them to contact and co-operate with human rights NGOs in implementing Fund programmes, and the Secretary-General to pay attention to the particular needs of developing countries and to explore the possibilities offered by the co-operation of relevant specialized agencies with the Centre.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring regularly to the attention of Governments and of the competent human rights organs the advisory services and technical assistance existing under the Fund. He was also asked to continue to elaborate guidelines on the use and allocation of the Fund's resources, with special emphasis on defining priorities and developing criteria for project appraisal and follow-up, and to guarantee the transparency of criteria applied and of the rules of procedure to be followed in the implementation of advisory services. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report annually on the operation and administration of the Fund, as part of his annual report on advisory services.

Equatorial Guinea

Commending the Expert on Equatorial Guinea, Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica), on his report [E/CN.4/1990/42 & Add.1], describing his 1989 activities [YUN 1989, p. 519], the Commission, on 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/57)], welcomed the news that the Government of Equatorial Guinea was to ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [GA res. 39/46] and the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [GA res. 2106 A (XX)]. It urged the Government to establish a Special Review Commission, as recommended in the 1981 plan of action [YUN 1982, p. 1104], to establish mechanisms for the protection of fundamental rights, to monitor the implementation of the plan and to adopt other measures suggested for promoting and protecting human rights. Recommending that the Government avail itself of advisory services to prepare the initial reports on the human rights situation in the country in order to fulfil its obligations as a party to the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights [GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], the Commission urged the Government to draw up a General Associations Act to facilitate the implementation of the human rights recognized in the Covenants. The Government was encouraged to facilitate the repatriation of all refugees and exiles. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide such advisory services as might be requested by the Government of Equatorial Guinea, and to extend the Expert's mandate. The Expert was asked to report in 1991.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/236 of 25 May, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide assistance in the field of human rights, as might be requested by the Government of Equatorial Guinea, and to extend the mandate of the Expert.

Report of Expert. Pursuant to the Commission's request, the Expert submitted a December report [E/CN.4/1991/54] on advisory services in 1990 to Equatorial Guinea. He noted that the Secretary-General had visited the country on 18 and 19 March and had assured the President that the Centre for Human Rights would provide assistance in the field of human rights, as requested by the Government. During the year, with the assistance of Spain, two Spanish experts were sent to Equatorial Guinea to assist in codifying basic civil and criminal laws, as well as the procedural laws necessary for the operation of the courts.

The Expert pointed out that he had received no information from Equatorial Guinea on the implementation of other recommendations made by the Commission to: establish a Special Review Commission to monitor the 1981 plan of action; draw up a General Associations Act to legislate the establishment and registration of political parties other than the official party; and facilitate the repatriation of all refugees and exiles, inter alia by adopting measures permitting the full participation of all citizens in the country's political, economic, social and cultural affairs. He also pointed out that, as of 15 November 1990, Equatorial Guinea had not ratified either the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment or the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, despite having announced its intention to do so.

Expressing his concern that representative democracy had still not been established in Equatorial Guinea and that there was no adequate institutional framework for the protection of human rights, the Expert recommended that the Government be urged to implement, without delay, the measures recommended by the Commission. He suggested that the international community co-operate more fully with the Government of Equatorial Guinea, within the plan of action.

In an addendum to his report [E/CN.4/1991/54/Add.1], the Expert reproduced a message sent to the President of Equatorial Guinea drawing to his attention a report on the human rights situation in the country which was published by Amnesty International.

Guatemala

In his report on advisory services to Guatemala [E/CN.4/1990/45], submitted pursuant to a 1989 Commission request [YUN 1989, p. 519], Expert Hector Gros Espiell (Uruguay) reviewed the legal framework of the human rights situation there, his two visits to Guatemala in 1989, and the situation of human rights during the period March to December 1989. In an addendum [E/CN.4/1990/45/Add.1] to that report, the Expert described the activities carried out in 1988-1989 resulting from assistance provided by the Secretary-General to the Government of Guatemala, aimed at organizing the infrastructure necessary to protect and promote human rights.

The Expert concluded that the development and progress in the legal framework for recognizing, guaranteeing and protecting human rights in Guatemala were undeniable. However, while the Government's will to ensure respect for those rights was definite, he noted that the Government lacked the constitutional and political authority needed to achieve the desired goals. He stated that nothing had been done to investigate and punish earlier human rights violations, a climate of social violence still existed, violations of civil and political rights were still taking place and serious deficiencies remained in respect for social, economic and cultural rights. The Expert recommended that it was essential to continue the broad programme of assistance to the Government to help the democratic process. He proposed that the programme of assistance should consist of assistance for courses and seminars at all levels of education, for judges and the judiciary, for police officials and for officers in the armed forces.

Commission action. The Commission, on 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/80)], supported the Expert's recommendation that the programme of assistance and advisory services to Guatemala should be continued and strengthened. It expressed its appreciation to the Government for collaborating with the Commission and recognized that, while the Government had upheld its commitment to guaranteeing the protection of fundamental rights and freedoms, it had been unable to implement the decision with sufficient authority, so that the social violence and human rights violations had continued. The Commission appealed to the Government to participate more actively in the national reconciliation dialogue. Deploring the murders of a member of the National Revolutionary Movement Party of El Salvador, of the Secretary for Latin America of the Socialist International and of a Guatemalan lawyer, on 12 January 1990 in Guatemala, it asked the Government to continue and strengthen the investigation already under way. The Government was requested to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the Guatemalan people and to strengthen policies and programmes relating to indigenous populations. It was urged to identify and bring to justice those responsible for acts of torture, disappearances, murders and extra-legal executions, as well as members of death squads. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to assist the Government in consolidating the democratic process and promoting a human rights culture. The Secretary-General was asked to appoint an independent expert who would examine the human rights situation in Guatemala and report to the Commission in 1991.

By decision 1990/244, the Economic and Social Council, on 25 May, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General for continued assistance to the Government of Guatemala, and to appoint an independent expert. Subsequently, the Commission appointed Christian Tomuschat (Germany) as the Independent Expert.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/11)], the Sub-Commission exhorted the Government of Guatemala to intensify its efforts to ensure respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of its citizens, to adopt and implement measures to prevent violations of those rights and freedoms, to protect and promote the organizations which safeguarded human rights, and to investigate human rights violations. It urged the Government to adopt measures to improve the conditions of the indigenous peoples, taking into account their petitions and proposals, and encouraged it to continue supporting national reconciliation. The Sub-Commission emphasized the importance of the independence of the judicial system and stressed the need to provide assistance in the field of human rights, both to the Government and to Guatemalan NGOs.

Haiti

In a January report [E/CN.4/1990/44], Expert Philippe Texier (France) stated that the Government and the judicial authorities of Haiti had still not taken effective measures to investigate past and current human rights violations and to bring those responsible to justice. In addition, they had not succeeded in preventing further frequent violations in the towns, and more so in rural areas. He attributed the obstacles hindering the process of improving the human rights situation to an ineffective judicial system, the militarization of rural areas, the failure to separate the army and the police forces, and the fact that those responsible for the principal massacres in the country had not been put on trial. The situation regarding respect for economic, social and cultural rights was becoming more alarming day by day, with no serious effort having been made to remedy it.

The Expert stressed that it was essential for the Commission to continue to monitor the human rights situation in Haiti. He pointed out that no advisory service had been requested by the Haitian Government, despite the specific proposals made to it, and therefore suggested that the Commission appoint a special rapporteur. If the Commission were to consider extending the Expert's mission, it would have to establish a scheme to provide technical assistance in connection with the electoral process by sending observers before and during the elections, if they were to be held. Other recommendations related to: strengthening and improving the judiciary to enable it to fulfil its mission with complete independence; support for planning a general policy regarding development and assistance for the poorest communities; and specific technical assistance in matters pertaining to the police, in order to foster the organization of civilian police services trained in human rights and in the minimum standards for maintaining order.

In an addendum [E/CN.4/1990/44/Add.1], the Expert reported that, on 20 January, a 30-day state of siege was introduced and Haitians who wished to leave or enter the country were required to obtain a visa. In addition, he received information concerning a series of extremely brutal arrests and the imposition of censorship of the radio and press. While he stated that the state of siege would likely be lifted within a few days, the Expert pointed out that the arrests, torture, ill-treatment and expulsions that had occurred were particularly serious since they were directed at the non-violent democratic sector as a whole in an attempt to assimilate them with terrorist groups and discredit them should elections be organized. The Expert again recommended that a special rapporteur be appointed or an effective system of electoral control be established if elections were held.

Commission action. On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1996/56)], the Commission on Human Rights asked its Chairman to appoint an independent expert to examine developments in the human rights situation in Haiti and to help to devise measures to make improvements, and the Secretary-General to provide the expert with all the assistance he needed. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1990/235 of 25 May. The Commission asked the expert to report in 1991.

Pursuant to the Commission's request, the Chairman appointed Mr. Texier as Independent Expert.

Paraguay

Taking note of a 1989 Sub-Commission resolution on assistance to Paraguay in the field of human rights [YUN 1989, p. 521], the Commission, on 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/61)], appealed to the international community to assist that country in realizing economic, social and cultural rights, as well as civil and political rights. Welcoming the process of democratization in Paraguay, the Commission requested the Secretary-General to provide such advisory services and assistance as were requested by the Government to foster democratic advances and to strengthen the institutions responsible for ensuring respect for human rights.

Regional arrangements

In a July report [A/45/348], the Secretary-General reviewed the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights. He stated that the United Nations, through the Centre for Human Rights, had pursued and strengthened its contacts and co-operation with regional bodies and commissions in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe and Latin America. In addition to training courses held in all the regions, he noted that the Centre provided staff members to give lectures to the International Institute of Human Rights (Strasbourg, France) and the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights (San Jose, Costa Rica). In addition, the Centre assisted the Arab Institute for Human Rights (Tunis, Tunisia), through the provision of documents, books and equipment. The Secretary-General also described the Commission's activities in assisting countries of the regions under the programme of advisory services and technical assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/167.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/127 of 16 December 1977 and all its subsequent resolutions concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, in particular resolutions 43/140 and 43/152 of 8 December 1988,

Recalling that, in its resolution 43/152, the General Assembly invited the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly at its forty-fifth session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of that resolution,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/72 of 8 March 1989 and taking note of Commission resolution 1990/58 of 7 March 1990 concerning advisory services in the field of human rights,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/50 of 7 March 1989 and taking note of Commission resolution 1990/71 of 7 March 1990 concerning regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian-Pacific region,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with satisfaction the progress achieved so far in the promotion and protection of human rights at the regional level under the auspices of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the regional inter-governmental organizations,

Reaffirming that regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights may make a major contribution to the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that the exchange of information and experience in this field among the regions, within the United Nations system, may be improved,

Bearing in mind that regional instruments should complement the universally accepted human rights standards and that the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies of the United Nations noted during their third meeting, held at Geneva from 1 to 5 October 1990, that certain inconsistencies between provisions of international instruments and those of regional instruments might raise difficulties with regard to their implementation,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with interest that various contacts between regional bodies and commissions and the United Nations have continued to be pursued and strengthened through advisory services and technical assistance activities, particularly those relating to the organization of regional and subregional training courses in the field of human rights;

3. Welcomes in that respect the close co-operation given by the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat in the organization of the training courses or workshops that, as mentioned by the Secretary-General, took place at Banjul, Brasilia, Buenos Aires, Castel Gandolfo, Kiev, Manila, Moscow, Quito and San Remo;

4. Welcomes also the assistance provided by the Centre for Human Rights in the establishment of the African Centre for Democracy and Human Rights Studies at Banjul, as well as the co-operation of the Centre with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the International Institute of Human Rights at Strasbourg and the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights at San Jose, and the technical assistance provided by the Centre to the Arab Institute for Human Rights at Tunis;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue encouraging these developments;

6. Notes with interest in this regard the announcement by the Secretary-General in the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 that efforts would be made to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental bodies dealing with human rights issues, that it might be expected that during the medium-term plan period more national, regional and subregional workshops and training courses would be organized for administrators of justice and government officials engaged in the implementation of international conventions on human rights, and that more countries in all regions of the world would develop forms of co-operation and assistance with the Centre for Human Rights, in keeping with their specific needs;

7. Invites States in areas where regional arrangements in the field of human rights do not yet exist to consider agreements with a view to the 'establishment within their respective regions of suitable regional machinery for the promotion and protection of human rights;

8. Endorses the appeal made to all Governments in Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1989/72 and 1990/58, to consider making use of the possibility offered by the United Nations of organizing, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, information and/or training courses at the national level for appropriate government personnel on the application of international human rights standards and the experience of relevant international organs;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to pay special attention to the most appropriate ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the different regions under the programme of advisory services and to make, where necessary, the relevant recommendations;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-eighth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights and to include therein the results of action taken in pursuance of the present resolution;

11. Decides to consider this question further at its forty-seventh session.

General Assembly resolution 45/167

18 December 1990 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/838) without vote, 29 November (meeting 571; 20-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.87), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Asia-Pacific region

Taking note of a 1989 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1989, p. 528] on the establishment of a depository centre for UN human rights materials in Bangkok, Thailand, the Commission on Human Rights, on 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/71)], asked the Secretary-General to ensure a continuing flow of human rights materials to the library of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) for dissemination in the region. Encouraging UN development agencies in the Asian-Pacific region to co-ordinate with ESCAP efforts to promote the human rights dimension in their activities, the Commission noted that an Asian-Pacific workshop on human rights issues would be held in Manila in early 1990 (see above, under "Public information activities"). The Secretary-General was asked to consult the countries of the region in implementing the Commission's resolution and to report in 1991 on progress made.

The Secretary-General, in an April report [A/45/210-E/1990/21], drew the attention of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to his 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 528] containing information that had been requested by the Assembly in 1988 [GA res. 43/140], regarding regional arrangements in Asia and the Pacific.

The Secretary-General, in a December report [E/CN.4/1991/21], updated information on the implementation of the Commission's March resolution on regional arrangements (see above). The report included suggestions received, as at 20 November, on activities in the area of human rights made by UN development agencies in the Asia and Pacific region, following a 13 July request from the Centre for Human Rights. The first Asia-Pacific workshop for administrators of justice on international human rights standards (Manila, 7-11 May) addressed issues such as the advantages of establishing a regional institution for the promotion and protection of human rights; its functioning; its complementary role vis-à-vis the UN system; its investigative role; individual complaints; the exhaustion of domestic remedies; and the question of remedies to the victims of human rights violations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/168.

Regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolution 43/140 of 8 December 1988, on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region.

Recognizing that regional arrangements make a major contribution to the promotion and protection of human rights and that non-governmental organizations may have a valuable role to play in this process,

Bearing in mind that intergovernmental arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights have been established in other regions,

Reiterating its appreciation for the report of the Seminar on National, Local and Regional Arrangements for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian Region, held at Colombo from 21 June to 2 July 1982, the comments on the report of the Seminar received from the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific and from States members of the Commission, and the report of the Secretary-General on the training course on human rights teaching held at Bangkok from 12 to 23 October 1987 under the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights,

Noting the designation of the Social Development Division of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific as a regional focal point on human rights,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1989/50 of 7 March 1989 and taking note of Commission resolution 1990/71 of 7 March 1990,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the designation of the library of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific as a depository centre for United Nations human rights materials within the Commission at Bangkok, the functions of which would include the collection, processing and dissemination of such materials in the Asian and Pacific region;

3. Renews its invitation to States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific that have not yet done so to communicate to the Secretary-General as soon as possible their comments on the report of the Seminar on National, Local and Regional Arrangements for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian Region and, in particular, to address themselves to the conclusions and recommendations in the report concerning the development of regional arrangements in Asia and the Pacific;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure a continuing flow of human rights material to the library of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at Bangkok for appropriate dissemination in the region;

5. Notes the efforts of United Nations development agencies in the Asian and Pacific region to promote the human rights dimension more actively and systematically in their development activities;

6. Encourages United Nations development agencies in the Asian and Pacific region to co-ordinate with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific their efforts to promote the human rights dimension in their activities;

7. Notes that an Asia-Pacific workshop on international human rights issues, including regional and national institutions and arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, was held at Manila from 7 to 11 May 1990, within the framework of the advisory services and technical assistance programme and the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session, through the Economic and Social Council, incorporating information on progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to continue its consideration of the question at its forty-seventh session.

General Assembly resolution 45/168

18 December 1990 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/838) without vote, 29 November (meeting 57); 8-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.88); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Australia, China, Indonesia, Philippines, Samoa, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Vanuatu.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 48-50, 56, 57; plenary 69.

National institutions

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/73)], the Commission on Human Rights noted the progress made in national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and their increased number, and the efforts of the Centre for Human Rights to increase co-operation with regional and national institutions. It asked the Centre to continue to enhance co-operation between the United Nations and regional and national institutions. The Secretary-General was asked to convene a workshop to review the co-operation between those institutions and international institutions such as the United Nations and its bodies, to publicize the proceedings of that meeting and to use the results when finalizing the manual on national institutions. The manual was under preparation by the Centre pursuant to General Assembly resolution 42/116 [YUN 1987, p. 781].

By decision 1990/241 of 25 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to convene a workshop.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

The working group to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms met from 17 to 26 January and on 1 March 1990 [E/CN.4/1990/47]. It established an open-ended informal drafting group, mandated to offer prepared texts to be discussed by the working group. During the course of its meetings, the working group discussed and provisionally adopted at first reading elements of chapters I, III and IV of the draft declaration, which was annexed to its report. The group recommended that it be authorized to meet for eight working days prior to the 1991 Commission session.

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/47)], the Commission decided to continue work at its 1991 session on the elaboration of the draft declaration and to make available appropriate meeting time for the working group prior to and during that session. The Commission recommended a draft resolution to the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/40.

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/47 of 6 March 1990,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of eight working days prior to the forty-seventh session of the Commission in order to continue the elaboration of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meetings prior to and during the forty-seventh session of the Commission and, in order to enable it to continue its work on the elaboration of the draft declaration, to transmit the report of the working group that met prior to and during the forty-sixth session, together with the annexes thereto, to all Member States in advance of the next meeting of the working group.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/40

25 May 1990

Meeting 14

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) without vote, 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights in 1990 were examined by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine the allegations. In addition, alleged violations involving self-determination of peoples were considered with regard to Afghanistan, Cambodia, Palestine, Panama, South Africa and Western Sahara (see above, under "Civil and political rights").

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970 [ESC res. 1503(XLVIII)] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Commission held closed meetings in 1990 to study confidential documents and a confidential report by the working group on situations set up annually to assist the Commission. Those documents dealt with human rights situations in Brunei Darussalam, Haiti, Myanmar, Paraguay and Somalia. The Commission decided to discontinue consideration of the human rights situations in Brunei Darussalam, Haiti and Paraguay.

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/55)], the Commission, wishing to formalize the setting up of the working group on situations, recommended a draft text to the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/41.

Working Group on Situations of the Commission on Human Rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting the wish of the Commission on Human Rights to establish a working group to assist it, on a regular basis, in the implementation of Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) of 27 May 1970,

Noting that, with the approval of the Council, such a working group has been set up annually since 1974 on an ad hoc basis,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of the working group, through the years, in the implementation of the procedure set out in Council resolution 1503(XLVIII),

1. Authorizes the Commission on Human Rights to establish a working group consisting of not more than five of its members, with due regard to geographical distribution, to meet for a period not exceeding five working days prior to the sessions of the Commission to examine such particular situations as might be referred to the Commission by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities under the procedure set out in Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) and those situations of which the Commission is seized under that procedure, and to make recommendations to the Commission on the course of action to take in respect of each particular situation;

2. Decides that the working group, to be referred to as the Working Group on Situations, shall be constituted as follows:

(a) Before the end of each session, the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, in accordance with rule 21 of the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, and after consultations with the members of each geographical area, shall nominate the members to serve in their personal capacity on the Working Group at its next session;

(b) If necessary, the Chairman or the outgoing Chairman may at any time, in order to fill a vacancy, designate a member from among all Commission members of the same geographical area;

3. Also decides that the Working Group on Situations shall hold closed meetings and communicate its recommendations confidentially to the Commission on Human Rights, pursuant to paragraph 8 of Council resolution 1503(XLVIII).

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/41
25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (1990/70) without vote, 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

On 31 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec. 1990/125)], the Sub-Commission, taking note of an August report of a working group established in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 514] to prepare an overview of proposals made to enable the Sub-Commission better to discharge its responsibilities in dealing with human rights violations [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/14], decided that the group should continue its work in 1991.

Restitution for human rights violations

On 2 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/35)], the Commission on Human Rights recommended a draft text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May the Council adopted resolution 1990/36.

Compensation for victims of gross violations of human rights

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolutions 1988/11 of 1 September 1988 and 1989/13 of 31 August 1989 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/35 of 2 March 1990.

7. Authorizes the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Mr. Theo van Boven with the task of undertaking a study concerning the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, taking into account, inter alia, relevant existing international human rights norms on compensation and judgements by courts and decisions and views of international human rights organs and bodies, with a view to exploring the possibility of developing basic principles and guidelines in this respect;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide Mr. van Boven with all the assistance that he may require for the completion of his task.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/36
25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) without vote, 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3

In July, Special Rapporteur Theo van Boven (Netherlands) submitted a preliminary report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/10] concerning the study on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in which he presented an outline for the study.

On 30 August, the Sub-Commission, taking note of the Special Rapporteur's report, asked him to submit in 1991 a progress report. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

Africa

South Africa

In 1990, the Commission on Human Rights had before it an interim report [E/CN.4/1990/7] of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established by the Commission in 1967 [YUN 1967, p. 509], describing the 1989 activities of the six-member Group.

In March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/60)], the Commission terminated the mandate of the Group relating to Namibia since Namibia achieved independence during that month (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

In another report [E/CN.4/1991/10], the Group described its 1990 activities, which included fact-finding missions to London (20-24 August), Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania (27-31 August), Lusaka, Zambia (3-5 September), and Harare, Zimbabwe (7-12 September). The Group met from 3 to 13 December in Geneva to consider and adopt its report.

The information gathered by the Group established that the human rights situation in South Africa was characterized by the partial extension of the state of emergency (see PART TWO, Chapter I), which had continued to cause new outbreaks of violence; the persistence of massive repression against students and trade union members; the reinstitution of the policy of forced population removals, which had given rise to clashes between the inhabitants of the places to be evacuated and the police and security forces; continued restrictions imposed on freedom of expression; and a growing number of arrests and detentions without trial of political prisoners and of cases of torture and ill-treatment, particularly against children.

The Group examined alleged violations of the right to life, physical integrity and protection from arbitrary arrest and detention, the right to education, freedom of expression, freedom of movement and the right to health, and the right to work and freedom of association. It also investigated the treatment of children and adolescents and apartheid, including bantustanization and forced population removals.

The Group noted that in spite of statements of intent from the Government to bring about superficial changes, the situation in South Africa remained unchanged or became worse than before, and there were contradictions in the Government's attitude.

The Group pointed out that acts of violence had been committed either with the complicity of the police or involving other whites or members of the security forces, in order to place the blame on clashes between members of the black populations themselves. Witnesses informed the Group that the police not only lacked impartiality when intervening in violent incidents, but also opened fire arbitrarily during peaceful demonstrations. The use of torture and other forms of ill-treatment remained in force, as did the policy of forced population removals. Trade unionists were still subjected to harassment and to arrest or detention under the Internal Security Act. Teenagers alleged that they had been subjected to arrest, torture and other ill-treatment and harassment and that they were victimized if they dared to organize boycotts protesting discrimination and the quality of education. Witnesses informed the Group that children were used as farmworkers.

The Group made recommendations for action by the Commission.

Commission action. On 27 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/26)], the Commission on Human Rights demanded that South Africa abolish apartheid; remove the state of emergency; end human rights violations; eliminate the apartheid judicial and penal system; remove troops from townships; dismantle bantustans; unconditionally permit the return of political refugees and members of the liberation movements based outside South Africa and allow their unimpeded participation in political activities; and rescind restrictions on educational organizations and ensure all South Africans the opportunity of access to a unified educational system.

The Commission called on South Africa to permit a free and fair political climate and to desist from harassment and intimidation of those engaged in the struggle against apartheid policies, and to respect international standards on trade union rights in respect of black trade unions.

Concerning the Ad Hoc Working Group, the Commission decided that it should continue its work; authorized the Chairman of the Group to participate in conferences, symposia, seminars and other events connected with action against apartheid organized under the auspices of the Special Committee against Apartheid; and asked the Secretary-General to assist the Group. The Economic and Social Council approved those actions by decision 1990/228 of 25 May. The Commission asked the Group to report in 1991.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/10)], the Sub-Commission, reaffirming that apartheid was a crime against humanity, condemned the continued arrest, torture and killings of peaceful demonstrators and workers on strike as well as the arbitrary arrest of leaders and activists of mass organizations, and all collaboration, particularly in the nuclear, military and economic fields, with the Government of South Africa. It called on the international community to continue its efforts aimed at the total economic, cultural and political isolation of the South African apartheid regime until the country abandoned its policy of apartheid.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1990, the number of parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973 [GA res. 3068(XXVIII)] and entered into force in 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 575], remained at 88.

The Secretary-General submitted a report on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/45/406].

Activities of Group of Three. The Group of Three (Nigeria, Panama, Ukrainian SSR)—established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention's provisions—held it thirteenth session (Geneva, 22-26 January) [E/CN.4/1990/35].

The Group examined, in the presence of representatives of the reporting States, the initial and second reports of the Bahamas, the second periodic report of Burundi, the second periodic report of China, the fourth report of Czechoslovakia, the third periodic report of India, the initial report of Pakistan, and the second periodic report of the Philippines.

The Group continued to consider whether actions of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa and Namibia came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and whether legal action could be taken against them under the Convention. It also examined the extent and the nature of the responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of the system of apartheid in South Africa. The Group stated that further examination of the matter was needed.

The Group called on States parties to the Convention to incorporate in their legislation provisions relating to apartheid, including practices of racial segregation and discrimination, and to provide appropriate penalties in respect of persons guilty of apartheid.

Commission action. On 23 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/12)], by a roll-call vote of 32 to 2, with 9 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights urged States that had not done so to ratify or accede to the 1973 Convention and to ratify the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [GA res. 260 A (III)]. It asked the Group of Three to continue examining the issue of TNCs and apartheid and decided that the Group should meet for a period of not more than five days before the Commission's 1991 session to consider reports submitted by States parties. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group. He was also asked to invite States parties to express their views on the extent and the nature of the responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of the system of apartheid; to invite States parties, the specialized agencies and NGOs to provide the Commission with information concerning the types of crimes of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by TNCs operating in South Africa; and to intensify his efforts to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation, and to consider drawing up model legislation to serve as a guide for States parties to implement the Convention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1990/223.

Implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid

At its 14th plenary meeting, on 25 May 1990, the Economic and Social Council, having taken note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/12 of 23 February 1990, approved the Commission's decision that the Group of Three should meet for a period of not more than five days before the forty-seventh session of the Commission to consider the reports submitted by States parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, in accordance with article VII of the Convention, and also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Group of Three.

Economic and Social Council decision 1990/223

39-1-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) by recorded vote (34-1-13). 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia.

Abstaining: Canada, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Sweden. United Kingdom.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/90.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/103 of 4 December 1986, 42/56 of 30 November 1987, 43/97 of 8 December 1988 and 44/69 of 8 December 1989,

Mindful that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid constitutes an important international treaty in the field of human rights and serves to implement the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid is a crime against humanity and constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and a gross violation of human rights, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Strongly condemning the abhorrent policy and system of apartheid and the brutal repression it engenders, which continue to aggravate the situation in South Africa,

Emphasizing that the root cause of the conflict in southern Africa is apartheid and the racist regime's policy of aggression, State terrorism and destabilization against the front-line and other neighbouring States,

Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist regime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid,

Underlining that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without any delay are necessary for its effectiveness and therefore will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to those States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay, in particular those States that have jurisdiction over transnational corporations operating in South Africa and without whose co-operation such operations could not be halted;

4. Underlines the importance of the universal ratification of the Convention, which would be an effective contribution to the fulfilment of the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other human rights instruments;

5. Calls upon all States whose transnational corporations continue to do business with South Africa to take appropriate steps to terminate their dealings with South Africa;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate that list among all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide the Commission on Human Rights with relevant information concerning the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

9. Notes the importance of measures to be taken by States parties in the field of teaching and education for fuller implementation of the Convention;

10. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities to enhance public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist regime with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

General Assembly resolution 45/90

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 120-1-30 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/747) by recorded vote (109-1-30). 2 November (meeting 29); 15-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.11); agenda item 91.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 4-10, 18, 29; plenary 68.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraphs 5 and 8 by recorded votes of 114 to 10, with 22 abstentions, and 116 to 14, with 17 abstentions, respectively. It retained the words "State terrorism" in the fifth preambular paragraph by a recorded vote of 99 to 18, with 27 abstentions. The sixth preambular paragraph was retained by a recorded vote of 114 to 12, with 19 abstentions.

Similarly, the Third Committee adopted paragraphs 5 and 8 by separate recorded votes of 105 to 10, with 22 abstentions, and 106 to 14, with 18 abstentions, respectively. The words "State terrorism" in the fifth preambular paragraph were retained by a recorded vote of 96 to 17, with 24 abstentions, and the sixth preambular paragraph was adopted by a recorded vote of 105 to 12, with 22 abstentions.

Foreign support to South Africa

On 27 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/22)], by a roll-call vote of 31 to 8, with 4 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights condemned the assistance given by the major Western States and Israel to South Africa in the political, economic and financial areas and particularly the military field, and the continuing nuclear collaboration of those parties with the racist regime of South Africa. It urged them to cease and desist from supplying South Africa with nuclear equipment and technology. The Commission noted important measures taken by the Nordic and some Western States, parliamentarians, institutions, trade unions and NGOs to exert pressure on the racist regime and called on them to intensify their efforts to force the racist régime to comply with UN resolutions and decisions on South Africa. The Commission demanded that South Africa cease its acts of aggression aimed at undermining the economies and destabilizing the political institutions of neighbouring States.

The Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission was asked to continue to update, subject to annual review, the list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting the racist and colonialist regime of South Africa and to submit the updated report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly in 1990. The Secretary-General was asked to disseminate widely the updated report, to issue it as a UN publication and to make it available to learned societies, research centres, universities, political and humanitarian organizations and other interested groups.

On the same date [res. 1990/23], by a roll-call vote of 32 to 8, with 3 abstentions, the Commission, noting a 1989 Sub-Commission resolution [YUN 1989. p. 537], recommended a draft text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/34.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 39/15 of 23 November 1984, 41/95 of 4 December 1986 and 43/92 of 8 December 1988,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, Mr. Ahmed Khalifa, for his updated report;

2. Expresses its thanks to all Governments and organizations that provided information to the Special Rapporteur;

3. Takes notes with satisfaction of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/22 of 27 February 1990, in which the Commission invited the Special Rapporteur:

(a) To continue to update, subject to annual review, the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist regime of South Africa, giving such details regarding enterprises listed as the Special Rapporteur may consider necessary and appropriate, including explanations of responses, if any, and to submit the updated report to the Commission on Human Rights through the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

(b) To use all available material from other United Nations organs, Member States, specialized agencies and other relevant sources in order to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of the assistance given to the racist regime of South Africa;

(c) To intensify direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat and the United Nations Council for Namibia,^a with a view to consolidating mutual co-operation in updating his report;

4. Calls upon all Governments:

(a) To co-operate with the Special Rapporteur in making the report even more accurate and informative;

(b) To disseminate the updated report and give its contents the widest possible publicity;

5. Invites the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the Commission on Human Rights to consider the revised report at their forty-second and forty-seventh sessions, respectively;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/92, to make available to the Special Rapporteur two economists who would help him analyse and document specific cases of special importance;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, so that he may intensify direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid and consolidate mutual co-operation in updating his report;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to bring the updated report of the Special Rapporteur to the attention of Governments whose national financial institutions continue to deal with the regime of South Africa and to call upon them to provide the Special Rapporteur with any information or comments they may wish to present on the matter;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give the updated report of the Special Rapporteur the widest distribution and publicity as a United Nations publication.

^aOn 11 September 1990, by its resolution 44/243 A, paragraph 2, the General Assembly decided to dissolve the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa,

Ahmad M. Khalifa (Egypt), in an August report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/13 & Add.1] updated information contained in his 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 537], regarding disinvestment trends in South Africa and the South African economy. The Special Rapporteur also provided an updated comprehensive list of TNCs, banks, insurance companies, firms and other enterprises giving, directly or indirectly, military, economic, financial and other assistance to South Africa.

In October [A/45/552], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report to the General Assembly.

Sub-Commission action. On 20 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/3)], the Sub-Commission, expressing its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur for his updated report and its thanks to Governments and organizations which supplied him with information, recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/84.

Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/15 of 23 November 1984, 41/95 of 4 December 1986 and 43/92 of 8 December 1988,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities for his updated report;

2. Expresses its thanks to all Governments and organizations that supplied the Special Rapporteur with information;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/22 of 27 February 1990, in which the Commission invited the Special Rapporteur:

(a) To continue to update, subject to annual review, the list of banks, transnational corporations and other organizations assisting the racist regime of South Africa, giving such details regarding enterprises listed as he may consider necessary and appropriate, including explanations of responses, if any, and to submit the updated report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session:

(b) To use all available material from other United Nations organs, Member States, specialized agencies and other relevant sources in order to indicate the volume, nature and adverse human consequences of the assistance given to the racist regime of South Africa;

(c) To intensify direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid of the Secretariat, with a view to consolidating mutual co-operation in updating the report;

4. Calls upon all Governments:

(a) To co-operate with the Special Rapporteur in making the report even more accurate and informative;

(b) To disseminate the updated report and to give its contents the widest possible publicity;

5. Calls upon all Governments and organizations to maintain sanctions against the racist regime of South Africa until the total dismantlement of the apartheid system has been achieved, in conformity with the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989 and contained in the annex thereto;

6. Invites the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its forty-third session and the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session to consider the updated report;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/92, to make available to the Special Rapporteur two economists to help him to develop his analysis and documentation on specific cases of special importance;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all the assistance that he may require in the exercise of his mandate, with a view to intensifying direct contacts with the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and the Centre against Apartheid, and to consolidating mutual co-operation in updating his report;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to bring the updated report of the Special Rapporteur to the attention of Governments whose national financial institutions continue to deal with the regime of South Africa, and to call upon them to provide the Special Rapporteur with any information or comments they may wish to present on the matter;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to contact the Government of South Africa with a view to enabling the Special Rapporteur to undertake a visit to South Africa on special mission within the perspective of the next update of the present report;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to give the updated report of the Special Rapporteur the widest distribution and publicity as a United Nations publication;

12. Decides to examine at its forty-seventh session, as a matter of high priority, the item entitled "Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist regime of South Africa", in the light of any recommendations which the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee against Apartheid may wish to submit to it;

13. Requests that the Special Rapporteur submit his updated report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session.

Trade union rights in South Africa

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/82 [YUN 1989, p. 537], the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa (see above) continued to study alleged infringements of trade union rights in South Africa. In March [E/1990/37], the Secretariat transmitted to the Council the section of the Group's report relating to the right to work, the situation of black workers, trade union activities and action against trade unions.

In May [E/1990/87], the Secretary-General circulated a reply dated 1 May received from the Government of South Africa in response to the same Council resolution, requesting him to persist in his efforts to ensure that the Government referred a complaint made by the Congress of South African Trade Unions (COSATU) to the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation (ILO). The Secretary-General brought to the Council's attention a note verbale dated 14 May [E/1990/87/Add.1] which contained a joint news release issued by the South African Minister of Manpower and COSATU/National Congress of Trade Unions in respect of discussions on future proposed labour legislation. The Secretary-General also brought to the Council's attention a letter of 21 May [E/1990/87/Add.2] to the Secretary-General from South Africa, stating that, in view of proposed labour legislation, it would be premature to consider referring the original complaint to the ILO Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/257, took note of the letter of 21

May. Also on 25 May, the Council adopted resolution 1990/44.

Infringements of trade union rights in South Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/82 of 24 May 1989, in which it requested the Secretary-General to persist in his efforts to ensure referral of the complaint made by the Congress of South African Trade Unions to the Fact-finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation,

Noting that the note verbale dated 1 May 1990 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of South Africa to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General does not comply with the relevant provisions of Council resolution 1989/82,

Noting also the latest consultations between the Government of South Africa, the Congress of South African Trade Unions and the National Congress of Trade Unions on future proposed labour legislation,

Having examined the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights,

Gravely concerned about the deteriorating and dehumanizing conditions of black workers brought about by the drastic restrictions on their exercise of trade union rights imposed by the Government of South Africa as a result of the Labour Relations Amendment Act, about the abuse of farm workers and the exploitation of child labour in rural areas, as well as about intervention in industrial disputes, including arrests, banning and harassment of trade unionists,

Aware of the ever-growing importance of the independent black trade union movement in the struggle against apartheid,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to Council resolution 1989/82, circulating the note verbale dated 1 May 1990 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of South Africa to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General;

2. Also takes note of the relevant section of the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights;

3. Expresses its concern about the failure of the Government of South Africa to comply with the provisions of Council resolution 1989/82, notwithstanding the limited steps taken so far, as reflected in the note verbale dated 14 May 1990 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of South Africa to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General;

4. Demands the implementation of the provisions of Council resolution 1989/82 by the Government of South Africa;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to persist in his efforts to ensure the implementation of paragraph 9 of Council resolution 1989/82;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa of the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study the situation and to report thereon to the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council;

7. Also requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in discharging its mandate, to consult with the International Labour Organisation and the Special Committee against Apartheid, as well as with international and African trade union confederations;

8. Demands once again the abolition of legislation which impedes the exercise of trade union rights in contravention of international labour standards, the immediate unconditional release of all trade unionists imprisoned for exercising their legitimate trade union rights and the cessation of the persecution of trade unionists and repression of the independent black trade union movement;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, at its first regular session of 1991, for consideration and action, as appropriate, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/44
25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70/Add.1) without vote, 22 May (meeting 18); draft by Mauritania, for African States (E/1990/C.2/L.10/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 3.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

In January, Special Rapporteur Felix Ermacora (Austria) submitted a report [E/CN.4/1990/25] on the human rights situation in Afghanistan, based on his visits to Pakistan (7-11 January) and Afghanistan (12-14 January), where he held talks with high-level government officials.

The Special Rapporteur pointed out that, following the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, the human rights situation there did not improve.

The armed conflict had intensified, particularly around large towns and villages and strategic points. There appeared to be an increase in civilian targets, and hospitals in Pakistan and Afghanistan were still filled with war wounded. Despite the alleged release of 17,000 prisoners from Afghan prisons since 1987, under various amnesty decrees, there was a constant of about 3,000 political prisoners, detained for crimes against State security. The Special Rapporteur noted improvements in psychological conditions for those under prison sentence. Opposition movements were also holding prisoners, but it was impossible to find out about their fate. An orderly educational system existed only in government-controlled areas, while in others the attempts at education were sporadic. Economic rights were adversely affected by the war.

As to refugees, the figure remained stable at 5 million. According to the Special Rapporteur, the obstacles to their return resided not only in the physical or economic instability of the country, or in the lack of an effective administration in provinces not under government control, but also in a growing pressure not to return. He stated that the refugees were placed in a desperate position of collective hostages. The existence of minefields in many regions of the country was a further obstacle to their return.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated the recommendations he had made in his 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 539], and proposed that all efforts be made by the opposition movements and the Afghan authorities detaining prisoners to upgrade conditions of detention as well as treatment of prisoners to the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, and to respect the right to life. He stated that the opposition movements should unconditionally open their prisons and detention centres for visits of prisoners by international humanitarian organizations such as the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). Adequate conditions for the return of refugees should be created through international aid, and conditions conducive to their return should be created. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights appeal for the acceptance of unconditional dialogue between all parties to the conflict with a view to finding a peaceful solution, and that UN bodies concerned continue to provide assistance to both belligerents in the conflict in a spirit of impartiality.

Commission action. On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/53)], the Commission urged all parties concerned to work for the achievement of a comprehensive political solution, to respect the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims and their Additional Protocols of 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 706], to halt the use of weapons against civilians, to protect all prisoners from acts of reprisal and violence, and to transmit to ICRC the names of all prisoners, as well as to grant ICRC unrestricted access to all parts of the country and the right to visit all prisoners. It called on the Afghan authorities to investigate the fate of disappeared persons, to apply amnesty decrees equally to foreign detainees, to reduce the period during which prisoners awaited trial, and to treat prisoners in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners. The Commission noted with concern the allegations of atrocities committed against Afghan soldiers, civil servants and captured civilians and expressed concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees were becoming increasingly difficult because of the decline in international humanitarian assistance.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1990 and to the Commission in 1991. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

On 25 May, by decision 1990/234, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. In October [A/45/664], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report of the Special Rapporteur based on his visits to Pakistan (13-22 September) and Afghanistan (22-27 September).

The Special Rapporteur reported that the same human rights problems still prevailed, namely, the existence of millions of refugees; the continuation of the armed conflict which caused destruction, loss of life and permanent anxiety among the population; continued acts of terrorism; the painful economic, social and cultural situation affecting a large segment of the population; and the fact that the right to self-determination could still not be achieved as a result of the deep division of the people of Afghanistan.

The refugee situation had not changed significantly. There were still about 5 million Afghans living abroad. A pilot project for repatriation was launched by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in co-operation with the Government of Pakistan in July 1990 (see also PART THREE, Chapter XV), which showed that a systematic return of refugees had begun.

In other areas, the mine clearance process was off to a slow start. The newly adopted Constitution had introduced a multi-party system, which resulted in a much broader-based Government than before. With regard to the right of personal liberty, there was improvement as far as the length of police custody and its control by the judiciary were concerned. The condition of convicted prisoners had generally improved, while the condition of unsentenced prisoners—those under interrogation or awaiting trial—was somewhat unclear. The death penalty was still being applied. The level of enjoyment of other civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights depended on the military and political situation prevailing in different parts of the country. The human rights situation in areas not under government control was uncertain; the economic situation was deplorable and there was an absence of effective administration.

The Special Rapporteur recommended halting the use of weapons against civilians; pursuing projects to return refugees; continuing efforts to bring the system of detention on remand into conformity with international standards; ICRC access to prisoners in detention on remand; treating combatants in accordance with humanitarian law; and government investigation into the whereabouts of prisoners and disappeared persons. He also recommended that the opposition movements unconditionally open their prisons and detention centres so that they might be visited by organizations such as ICRC. As to the United Nations, the Special Rapporteur proposed that it make every effort to contribute to a political solution of the conflict and that it be called on to study all the elements of general elections in the light of the country's political history and the traditions of its society, in order to develop models for a system of general elections in Afghanistan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/174.

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, with a view to formulating proposals that could contribute to ensuring full protection of the human rights of the inhabitants of the country before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions as well as resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights and decisions of the Economic and Social Council,

Taking note in particular of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/53 of 6 March 1990, in which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Rapporteur for one year and requested him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan,

Emphasizing the relevance and validity for all parties concerned of the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan, concluded at Geneva on 14 April 1988, which constitute an important step towards a comprehensive political solution,

Noting with deep concern that a situation of armed conflict persists in Afghanistan, that acts of terrorism against civilians have significantly increased, that the treatment of prisoners detained in connection with the conflict does not conform to the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, that more than five million refugees are living outside Afghanistan and that many Afghans are displaced within the country,

Aware that the reasons given by the refugees for not returning to Afghanistan pending the achievement of a comprehensive political solution and the establishment of a broad-based government include the continued fighting in some provinces, the use of very destructive arms in the conflict, the minefields that have been laid in many parts of the country, the lack of an effective authority in many areas and other obstacles that would be encountered by refugees in returning to the country.

Taking note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein,

1. Welcomes the co-operation of the Afghan authorities with the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan;

2. Welcomes the co-operation that the Afghan authorities have extended in particular to the Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan, and to international organizations such as the specialised agencies, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross;

3. Welcomes the fact that the Special Rapporteur was able to visit areas in Afghanistan not under government control;

4. Urges all parties concerned to work for the achievement of a comprehensive political solution based on the free exercise of the right to self-determination by the people of Afghanistan through democratic procedures acceptable to the people, including free and fair elections, and the creation of conditions conducive to the return of refugees to their homeland in safety and honour and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by all Afghans;

5. Also urges all parties to the conflict to respect the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to protect all prisoners from acts of reprisals and violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary execution, to transmit to the International Committee of the Red Cross the names of all prisoners, and to grant to that Committee unrestricted access to all parts of the country and the right to visit all prisoners in accordance with its established criteria;

6. Calls upon the Afghan authorities to investigate thoroughly the fate of persons who have disappeared, to apply amnesty decrees equally to foreign detainees; to reduce the period during which prisoners await trial, to treat all prisoners, especially those awaiting trial or in custody in juvenile rehabilitation centres, in accordance with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, and to apply to all convicted persons article 14, paragraphs 3 (d) and 5, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

7. Notes with concern the allegations of atrocities committed against Afghan soldiers, civil servants and captured civilians;

8. Expresses its concern at reports that the living conditions of refugees, especially those of women and children, are becoming increasingly difficult because of the decline in international humanitarian assistance;

9. Urgently appeals to all Member States, humanitarian organizations and all parties concerned to co-operate fully, especially on the subject of mine detection, in order to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and honour, in conformity with the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan;

10. Urgently appeals to all Member States and humanitarian organizations to promote the implementation of the projects envisaged by the Co-ordinator for Humanitarian and Economic Assistance Programmes Relating to Afghanistan and the programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, especially the pilot projects for the repatriation of refugees;

11. Urges all parties concerned to extend their full co-operation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

13. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-sixth session, the situation of human rights in Afghanistan in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

China

In a letter dated 12 January 1990 [E/CN.4/1990/55] addressed to the Secretary-General, the Government of China rejected a 1989 Sub-Commission resolution [YUN 1989, p. 556] and any possible action taken pursuant to it. China stated that demonstrations in April and May 1989 in Beijing's Tiananmen Square were illegal and that the Government's actions to end the turmoil were justified and legitimate.

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (dec. 1990/106)], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 17 to 15, with 11 abstentions, decided to take no action on a draft text which would have had the Commission endorse the Sub-Commission's 1989 appeal for clemency towards persons deprived of their liberty as a result of the events in June 1989 and welcome the decisions of the Government of China in January 1990 to lift martial law in Beijing and to release 573 persons who had been detained.

East Timor

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/15)1], the Sub-Commission, by a secret ballot vote of 14 to 9, with 1 abstention, considering that according to reliable allegations the people of East Timor continued to be subjected to gross violations of human rights and regretting the restrictions imposed by local military authorities on the activities of specialized NGOs, appealed to all sides to exercise restraint and to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the exercise of his good offices with a view to finding a durable settlement of the conflict. It asked the Indonesian authorities to facilitate the access to the territory of international humanitarian and development organizations. The Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission in 1991 consider the situation pertaining to human rights and fundamental freedoms in East Timor.

Iran

In a February report [E/CN.4/1990/24], Special Representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl (El Salvador) described the human rights situation in Iran, based on his visit to the country (21-28 January) and information he received from witnesses, the press, foreign and Iranian organizations and the Government of Iran.

The Special Representative stated that there was a considerable increase in assertions, testimony and documents about terrorism. During his visit, terrorism also featured a great deal in statements made by Iranian officials and many witnesses. He observed that there was a deep split in the society as a result of the hectic revolutionary period and that one element of that split had been the armed struggle, in which terrorism had had a part.

The testimony gathered reiterated complaints received in Geneva about unlawful executions, torture, substitute prisoners, imprisonment beyond the period specified in the sentence, spontaneous decisions by low-ranking officials and the absence of counsel for the defence. Testimony was also gathered on restrictions on the right of association.

The Special Representative noted that the Government had been receptive to some criticisms made in earlier reports, such as public and mass executions of drug traffickers and incorporating in the penalty the time that had been served before the sentence was handed down. He had received information on frequent clemency measures. The Special Representative's impression was that the situation of the Baha'is was moving towards quite broad de facto tolerance.

At a round table held at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to sum up the visit, the Special Representative expressed the opinion that the Government's next step could consist of providing detailed replies to the allegations transmitted to it.

The Special Representative stated that the Commission should continue to monitor the human rights situation in Iran.

Commission action. On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/79)], the Commission on Human Rights took note of the Special Representative's view that it should continue to monitor the human rights situation in Iran, and endorsed his opinion that Iran should continue to provide replies to all allegations of human rights violations that had been transmitted to it.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for an additional year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1990 and a final report to the Commission in 1991. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/243, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Representative's mandate and its request to the Secretary-General to assist him.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/9)], by a secret ballot vote of 14 to 5, with 5 abstentions, expressing deep concern about the grave human rights violations in Iran, the Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to inform it in 1991 of relevant reports by other special rapporteurs or human rights bodies, as well as of steps which had been or were being taken by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission to prevent human rights violations in Iran.

On the same date [(res. 1990/8)1], the Sub-Commission, profoundly disturbed by the assassination in Switzerland in April of Kazem Rajavi, a former Iranian diplomat, and mindful that he was a dedicated human rights defender and activist, paid tribute to his memory. It condemned strongly the assassination, as well as every assassination or threat of assassination of political dissidents or other persons wherever they lived, including in their own country.

Interim report of Special Representative. In November [A/45/697], the Secretary-General transmitted the interim report of the Special Representative, based on his second visit to the country (9-15 October), on oral and written communications with government officials and on allegations of human rights violations from NGOs and individuals.

The report contained allegations of human rights violations received by the Special Representative and transmitted to the Government in August and October, as well as replies received from the Government. Those allegations dealt with violations of the right to life and the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; torture, ill-treatment and prison conditions; the administration of justice; freedom of opinion, expression, press and association and the right to peaceful assembly; freedom of movement and the right to leave one's country and to return; allegations of intimidation or reprisal; the situation of women; children's rights; acts of violence against civilians; freedom of religion; and the situation of the Baha'i community.

The Special Representative described his visit to the country where he met with high-level government officials and visited Evin prison, where all political prisoners of Tehran province were detained, and where he attended trial proceedings. During his stay in Tehran, the Special Representative also gathered information from a number of Iranian NGOs and from private persons. In addition, he met with members of the Baha'i and Armenian communities.

The Special Representative noted that as a result of recommendations made in earlier reports and matters discussed during his first visit, senior officials said that the Government had taken steps to implement some of the recommendations. In particular, they mentioned the decision to allow ICRC to visit prisons. The Special Representative urged officials to conclude an agreement with ICRC, which was a prerequisite to the Committee making prison visits. The Government had granted a number of amnesties which had benefited many prisoners. Another noteworthy development was that the Government had begun to reply to the allegations transmitted to it.

Concerning the right to life, the Special Representative noted that according to estimates from non-governmental sources the number of executions between January and May 1990 was relatively high. He continued to receive many reports about the absence of a lawyer at trials heard by the revolutionary courts. According to information received, the Government had ruled that trials must be public. However, when the Special Representative attended a trial at Evin prison, it was obvious that prison trials could not really be public because access to them was subject to the restrictions inherent in prison security. The Special Representative found that in many cases the constitutional obligation to inform an arrested person of the charges against him immediately after arrest had not been fulfilled. He stated that televised confessions undermined and obscured the administration of justice. As to restrictions on the press, on the publication of books and on artistic creation, for the press, problems began with the distribution of paper which was in government hands. In addition, pressure on journalists brought them somewhat into line. Books required prior authorization from the competent authority.

Concerning the situation of the Baha'is, nine of them were still in prison, but in recent months none had been executed. Many documents signed by administrative authorities had been received, providing evidence of discrimination, confiscation, rejection by universities, suspensions of pensions, demands for the return of pensions earned and paid, denial of passports and other irregularities. Those measures were not taken everywhere, nor in all administrative offices, and it seemed that attitude towards the Baha'is and their situation depended on the temperament and personal convictions of individual officials.

The Special Representative concluded that international monitoring by the competent UN organs with a view to ensuring compliance with human rights instruments in Iran should continue, that efforts should be made to ensure the uniform and proper application of the appropriate norms, and that a climate of confidence and legal and political security in which people could exercise their individual rights without adverse consequences should be promoted.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/173.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling its resolution 44/163 of 15 December 1989 and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/79 of 7 March 1990,

Mindful of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/76 of 7 March 1990, entitled "Co-operation with representatives of United Nations human rights bodies", and Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/48 of 25 May 1990.

Welcoming the two visits paid by the Special Representative of the Commission to the Islamic Republic of Iran during the course of 1990 and the two reports presented following those visits, which have provided useful information and clarified a number of allegations about the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Noting the findings of the Special Representative on the situation of the Baha'is in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports submitted by the Special Representative in 1990, including the observations contained therein, and notes with concern the allegations of violations of human rights contained in those reports;

2. Calls upon the Islamic Republic of Iran to intensify its efforts to investigate and rectify the human rights issues raised by the Special Representative, in particular as regards the administration of justice and due process of law in order to comply with international instruments on human rights, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party, and to ensure that all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including religious groups, enjoy the rights recognized in these instruments;

3. Welcomes the decision of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to invite the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit prisons in the country and urges the competent officials to implement this decision as soon as possible by concluding an agreement in accordance with standard procedures of the Committee;

4. Notes that the co-operation of the Islamic Republic of Iran with the Special Representative has improved and has included replies by the Government to allegations that have been transmitted to it, and urges the Government to reply in detail to all allegations referred to by the Special Representative in his reports;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to respond favourably, in accordance with the normal practices of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, to requests for technical assistance from the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to give the Special Representative all the necessary assistance to carry out his mandate;

7. Notes that the Commission on Human Rights will consider the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran at its forty-seventh session and will refer the question, as appropriate, to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Iraq

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (dec. 1990/114)], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 18 to 14, with 9 abstentions, decided to take no action on a draft decision by which, among other things, the Commission would have accepted and welcomed an invitation extended to Sub-Commission members by the Iraqi Human Rights Society to visit Iraq and report to the Commission thereon.

Iraq-Kuwait

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/13)], the Sub-Commission, by a secret ballot vote of 19 to 4, with 1 abstention, concerned by reliable reports that hundreds of Iraqis living in Kuwait and suspected of being opponents of the Iraqi Government were arrested following the invasion of Kuwait by Iraqi troops, and that thousands of foreign citizens in Iraq and Kuwait had been prevented from leaving those countries since the invasion, expressed concern at the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Iraq. It urged the Government of Iraq to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and urgently called on it to allow all foreign nationals to leave Iraq and Kuwait immediately. The Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission study in 1991 the evolution of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Iraq, and consider the appointment of a special rapporteur to examine the human rights situation there.

In earlier action dated 24 August [dec. 1990/108], the Sub-Commission strongly appealed to the Government of Iraq to facilitate the immediate departure from Kuwait and Iraq of the nationals of third countries. On the same date [dec. 1990/109], it strongly appealed to all those participating in sanctions against Iraq not to prevent the delivery of necessary food and medicine. That appeal was made in the spirit of Security Council resolution 661(1990). (For details of Iraq/Kuwait situation, see PART TWO, Chapter III.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/170.

The situation of human rights in occupied Kuwait

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Condemning the invasion of Kuwait on 2 August 1990 by the military forces of Iraq,

Noting with grave concern that the Iraqi forces in occupied Kuwait continue to commit acts of violence, leaving large numbers of victims and causing enormous human suffering to the civilian population,

Noting also with grave concern that the treatment of prisoners of war and detained civilians in occupied Kuwait does not conform to the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law,

Expressing grave concern at the continued refusal of Iraq to receive representatives of humanitarian organizations, especially representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross and a representative of the Secretary-General, to help in extending humanitarian assistance to the Kuwaiti people under occupation,

1. Condemns the Iraqi authorities and occupying forces for their serious violations of human rights against the Kuwaiti people and third-State nationals and, in particular, the continued and increasing acts of torture, arrests, summary executions, disappearances and abduction in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the International Covenants on Human Rights, other relevant human rights instruments and the relevant instruments of humanitarian law;

2. Affirms that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, applies to Kuwait and that as a high contracting party to the Convention Iraq is bound to comply fully with all its terms and in particular is liable under the Convention in respect of the grave breaches committed by it, as are individuals who commit or order the commission of such breaches;

3. Expresses its serious concern about the systematic dismantling and pillaging of and attacks on the economic infrastructure of Kuwait, which seriously undermine the present and future enjoyment by the Kuwaiti people of their economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Expresses its grave concern at the living conditions in occupied Kuwait, especially those of women, children, elderly and third-State nationals, which are becoming increasingly difficult;

5. Expects Iraq to guarantee respect for international standards applicable under international law, in particular with reference to the protection of the civilian population, and demands that Iraq co-operate fully with and give access to Kuwait to representatives of humanitarian organizations, especially the International Committee of the Red Cross, working to alleviate the suffering of the civilian population in occupied Kuwait;

6. Also expects Iraq to comply with its obligations under the Charter and international law in respect of third-State nationals, and demands that Iraq release all nationals of third States;

7. Urges Iraq to treat all prisoners of war and detained civilians in accordance with the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law and to protect them from all acts of violence, including ill-treatment, torture and summary execution;

8. Condemns the rejection by Iraq of the offer of the Government of Kuwait to send humanitarian assistance, especially medicine, to the Kuwaiti people under occupation;

9. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session to consider the situation of human rights in occupied Kuwait;

10. Decides to keep under consideration the situation of human rights in occupied Kuwait.

General Assembly resolution 45/170

Albania

By 27 votes to 3, with 12 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/49)], concerned about reports on the human rights situation in Albania which, in spite of reflecting some positive developments, continued to reveal human rights violations, called on the Government to provide information on the manner in which constitutional and legal measures complied with the provisions of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [GA res. 217 A (III)] and to respond to allegations transmitted to it by the Commission's Special Rapporteur on the implementation of the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief [GA res. 36/55].

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring the resolution to the Government's attention and to ask it to provide the information requested above; to take the resolution into account when availing himself of the Government's invitation to visit the country; and to report in 1991 on the results of his efforts.

Cyprus

In a January report [E/CN.4/1990/21], the Secretary-General described action taken at the end of 1989 by the Security Council, the Committee on Missing Persons and the United Nations Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP).

On 28 February [E/1990/22 (dec. 1990/104)], the Commission on Human Rights decided to postpone until 1991 debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus, on the understanding that action required by previous Commission resolutions would continue to remain operative, including the request to the Secretary-General to provide a report regarding their implementation.

Romania

The Commission on Human Rights considered a report [E/CN.4/1990/28] of Special Rapporteur Joseph Voyame (Switzerland on the human rights situation in Romania. He discussed his activities and briefly described the historical and political background and socio-economic factors, in so far as they might affect, and promote better understanding of, the situation. He reviewed the principal human rights instruments to which Romania was a party and the basic principles of Romanian law relating to human rights.

On the basis of information received, the Special Rapporteur examined allegations of human rights violations dealing with the right to life and to physical and moral integrity; respect for privacy; the administration of justice; freedom of movement; freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; freedom of opinion and expression; right of assembly and association; participation in the conduct of public affairs; right to work and trade union rights; right to an adequate standard of living; right to education; cultural rights; and the rights of persons belonging to minorities.

In a February addendum to the report [E/CN.4/1990/28/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur presented information on the situation of human rights in Romania based on his visit to the country (12-16 February), where he met with high-level government officials, leaders of the main political parties, representatives of human rights NGOs, former dissidents, representatives of the Hungarian minority and other persons. The Special Rapporteur outlined the main events which influenced the human rights situation in Romania since the revolution in December 1989 and examined allegations of human rights violations.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that respect for human rights had improved since the revolution. However, human rights had not actually been established; their exercise encountered de facto obstacles. He stressed that a number of persons who were prominent in political life were still being subjected to threats, including death threats. Many were still wary of the Securitate, real freedom to establish and disseminate newspapers and magazines was not fully guaranteed and the problem of ethnic minorities required consideration and appropriate measures.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission take note of the improved respect for human rights, and recommended that the Romanian authorities continue to ensure that human rights were respected; pay attention to the points raised in his report; and consider the possibility of using the UN Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services (see above, under "Advancement of human rights") to establish national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights and to strengthen existing institutions.

Commission action. On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/50)], the Commission on Human Rights, noting the improvement in respect for human rights that had taken place in Romania, recommended that the Romanian authorities continue their action to ensure that human rights were respected, pay attention to the points raised by the Special Rapporteur and consider the possibility of using the Voluntary Fund for Advisory Services. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to report in 1991. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him.

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/232, approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate and its request for the Secretary-General to assist him.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Chile

In January, Special Rapporteur Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica) reported on the human rights situation in Chile. He examined allegations of violations of the right to life; the right to physical and moral integrity; the right to liberty; the right to security; and the right to a proper trial and to procedural guarantees.

The Special Rapporteur stated that human rights in Chile had changed from when he was appointed in February 1985. In addition to elections held in December 1989, developments which had contributed to improving the human rights situation included the adoption by the Government Junta-the current Legislative Power-of the National Congress Act, regulating the composition and powers of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate; the ending of the administrative internal banishment of two important trade union leaders; adoption by the Government Junta of amendments to the Penal Code and to the Code of Penal Procedure, to ensure better protection for the rights of persons facing trial in the civil courts; the sentencing of four members of the National Information Agency (CNI) (secret police) who had attacked demonstrators in 1983; and the dissolution on 11 January 1990 of CNI. Agreements between the Government and ICRC remained in operation to prevent the practice of torture, which ceased to be practised systematically, although it had not been eliminated totally. A case of five detainees who disappeared at the end of 1987 had still not been clarified. In addition, the Special Rapporteur noted that much remained to be done to ensure that the society enjoyed a reliable system of legal protection for freedom.

Among the Special Rapporteur's recommendations were reforming the military justice system; preserving the archives of CNI to assist the courts in investigating human rights issues; preventing further cases of torture; and improving the circumstances of indigenous peoples.

Commission action. On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/78)], the Commission on Human Rights, noting with satisfaction the improvement in the human rights situation in Chile, deeply regretted that, despite the recommendations by the international community to the military Government, still pending were: judicial and administrative identification and punishment of persons responsible for crimes, disappearances, torture, persecution, intimidation and other forms of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, as well as the situation of persons in custody on political grounds; a return to normal of the administration of justice, especially in regard to a reform of the military justice system and a review of the decision by the military courts; and a review of the rules whereby persons committing serious human rights violations were granted impunity. The Commission decided not to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate since the current Chilean democratic process and management by the Government-elect would restore the rule of law based on full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It asked the Government-elect to report, at a special meeting of the Commission in 1991, on the follow-up to the recommendations adopted by the United Nations up to 11 March 1990 in connection with the restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Cuba

By a roll-call vote of 19 to 12, with 12 abstentions, the Commission, on 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/48)], called on the Government of Cuba to provide the Commission in 1991 with a response to unanswered questions put to the Cuban authorities by representatives of the Commission in 1988 and to questions related to documents listed in the report of the mission [YUN 1989, p. 556].

The Commission welcomed the Secretary-General's willingness to put himself at the Commission's disposal regarding his ongoing contacts with the Government and asked that he provide the results of those contacts in 1991.

El Salvador

In January 1990, Special Representative Jose Antonio Pastor Ridruejo (Spain) presented a report [E/CN.4/1990/26] on the human rights situation in El Salvador based on his visit to the country (8-15 October 1989).

The Special Representative stated that the armed conflict between the armed forces and the Frente Farabundo Marti para la Liberacion Nacional (FMLN) continued in El Salvador. The situation regarding economic, social and cultural rights was still adversely affected by a combination of factors, more particularly the persistent and intensified conflict and the consequent climate of widespread violence. Members of the State apparatus, particularly the armed forces, had committed politically motivated summary executions, including mass executions, and FMLN continued to perpetrate summary executions of alleged collaborators with the armed forces, military personnel and senior civil servants, as well as people ideologically opposed to it. Disturbing cases of politically motivated disappearances were still taking place. In addition, the guerrilla organizations had carried out disturbing kidnappings. Treatment of civilians by the armed forces in areas of conflict had been harsh and distressing, and their military activities had caused civilian fatalities and injuries. FMLN had caused fatalities among civilians who had set off mines, although in some months in 1989 there were no reports of incidents of that type; guerrilla gunfire had caused other casualties.

Commission action. On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/77)], the Commission on Human Rights, expressing serious concern at the increase in the number of grave, politically motivated human rights violations, also expressed its deepest concern at the worsening of the armed conflict, which led to a fresh outbreak of violence, bombings and the indiscriminate use of heavy weapons in densely populated areas. It strongly appealed to the Government of El Salvador and FMLN to use the good offices of the Secretary-General to achieve a negotiated political solution to the armed conflict that would encourage the existence and strengthening of a democratic, pluralistic and participatory process involving the promotion and respect of human rights of the Salvadorian people.

The Commission decided to consider in 1991 the human rights situation in El-Salvador and the Special Representative's mandate, taking into account developments in the situation. It also decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for an additional year-a decision that was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1990/242 of 25 May-and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1990 and to the Commission in 1991.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (res. 1990/14)], the Sub-Commission, expressing deep concern over the persistent increase in the number of human rights violations being committed for political reasons in El Salvador and over the continued failure to observe the humanitarian rules of war, urged the immediate adoption of measures to avoid any type of act or practice prejudicial to the life, integrity, security and freedom of persons and to eliminate any form of disappearances and abductions.

Report of Special Representative (October). In October [A/45/630], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Special Representative describing the human rights situation in El Salvador based on his visit to the country (30 September-7 October), where he met with high-level government officials and with chiefs and officers of the armed forces and security forces, interviewed witnesses and received extensive oral and written information. He also visited the Santa Ana prison where he was able to talk confidentially to political prisoners of various ideologies.

The Special Representative reported that the armed conflict continued but that situation did not hinder the resumption and intensification of the dialogue and negotiation process taking place under the auspices of the Secretary-General.

The Special Representative concluded that the situation of the economic, social and cultural rights of Salvadorians continued to be affected adversely by a combination of factors, principally the persistence of the armed conflict and the resultant climate of violence. Government action against humanitarian, trade union, peasant and other organizations continued. Summary executions continued, as did cases of politically motivated disappearances and the abduction of civilians by guerrilla organizations. There were cases of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment during extrajudicial interrogations of political detainees, although the Special Representative believed that those practices were not widespread and did not represent a government policy. The Salvadorian criminal justice system was still not operating satisfactorily, although the main defects were in the area of investigation and fact-finding rather than in the trial and sentencing activities per se of judicial organs. The situation of civilians in the areas of heaviest fighting was distressing, and the military operations of the armed forces had caused local civilian casualties, although only through negligence, not on a widespread, indiscriminate or intentional basis. FMLN had caused civilian deaths or injuries as a result of the explosion of contact mines, although it was sometimes difficult to determine whether FMLN organizations or the armed forces planted the devices. The Special Representative observed that the Government and FMLN had resumed and intensified the negotiating process under the Secretary-General's auspices, with a view to ending the conflict.

The Special Representative recommended that the constitutional authorities of El Salvador adopt measures to prevent threats and psychological intimidation; persevere with the judicial reform effort and the establishment of an efficient criminal investigation body under the judiciary; accelerate judicial proceedings instituted for massacres committed in the last quarter of 1989; and persevere in carrying out the agrarian reform programme and other structural reforms needed. He recommended that FMLN and guerrilla organizations continue their policy of not planting contact mines and immediately refrain from all urban operations which might cause civilian casualties. The Special Representative recommended to all States that they increase the assistance necessary to alleviate and improve the situation of Salvadorians who had been displaced, made refugees or resettled as a result of the armed conflict.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/172.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as the humanitarian rules laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol II thereto, of 1977, instruments through which States have undertaken to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations entered into under those international instruments,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/77 of 7 March 1990 which extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session,

Taking into account the commitments made by the Central American Presidents in various joint statements with a view to the promotion of, respect for and exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Noting that, in accordance with Security Council resolution 637(1989) of 27 July 1989, the Secretary-General has continued to provide his good offices for the holding of talks between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the armed conflict in El Salvador throughout 1990 and by the recent escalation of violence initiated by the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, a situation which continues to beleague the civilian population, as a result of air raids, the use of explosive devices in urban areas and attacks on the economic infrastructure,

Taking note of the results achieved in the rounds of negotiations conducted so far, in particular the agreement signed by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional at Geneva on 4 April 1990 and the agreement signed at Caracas on 21 May 1990, which establishes an agenda and a schedule for negotiations designed to achieve the initial objective of political agreements for arranging a halt to the armed confrontation and any acts that infringe the rights of the civilian population,

Welcoming the Agreement on Human Rights, signed by the two parties at San José on 26 July 1990, containing commitments concerning the respect for and guarantee of human rights to be effective immediately, and containing the terms of reference for the United Nations human rights verification mission,

Concerned that, despite the reduction in the number of violations of human rights and despite the efforts made by the two parties to improve the situation of human rights, numerous and serious politically motivated violations of human rights and of the humanitarian rules of warfare persist in El Salvador,

Concerned also that many sources continue to attribute summary executions and other serious violations of human rights to the so-called "death squads",

1. Commends the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights for his report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, endorses the recommendations contained therein and requests him to update the report in the light of the situation in that country;

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the signing of the agreement at Geneva on 4 April 1990 between The Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, which sets in motion a negotiating process under the auspices and with the active participation of the Secretary-General, with a view to ending the armed conflict through political means as speedily as possible, promoting the democratization of the country, guaranteeing unrestricted respect for human rights, and reunifying the Salvadorian society;

3. Notes that the two parties, when adopting the general agenda for the negotiating process at Caracas on 21 May 1990, agreed that the initial objective would be, first, to secure political agreements on the armed forces, human rights, the judicial system, the electoral system, constitutional reform, the economic and social problems, and verification by the United Nations and, secondly, to achieve agreements for arranging a halt to the armed confrontation and any acts that infringe the rights of the civilian population, all of which will have to be verified by the United Nations subject to the approval of the Security Council;

4. Expresses its profound satisfaction with the Agreement on Human Rights, adopted at San José on 26 July 1990, during the third round of talks between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, which constitutes the first substantive agreement between the parties, and urges them to take the action and measures necessary for its implementation;

5. Supports fully the work of intermediation being done by the Secretary-General and his Personal Representative in the search for a negotiated political solution to the Salvadorian conflict;

6. Urges the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to make the greatest possible effort to implement all the political agreements announced at Geneva and Caracas, particularly taking into account the proposals of the Secretary-General for facilitating the negotiating process and achieving a just and lasting peace in El Salvador in the shortest possible time;

7. Expresses its deep concern about the persistence of politically motivated violations of human rights in El Salvador, such as summary executions, torture, abductions and enforced disappearances, and about the atmosphere of intimidation in which certain sectors of the population live;

8. Also expresses its deep concern that the capacity of the judicial system continues to be unsatisfactory, as a result of which the competent authorities must accelerate the adoption of the reforms and measures necessary for ensuring the effectiveness of the system;

9. Deplores, therefore, the irregularities in the judicial proceedings in connection with the assassination of the Rector and other members of the Central American University in 1989 and the lack of co-operation on the part of certain sectors of the armed forces which has impeded full clarification of such an abominable crime and the punishment of the guilty persons, as described in the report of the Special Representative;

10. Renews its appeal to the competent organs and organizations of the United Nations system that, on the basis of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/77 of 7 March 1990 and General Assembly resolution 44/165 of 15 December 1989, they provide the advice and assistance that the Government of El Salvador may request in order to enhance the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

11. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-seventh session to consider the situation of human rights in El Salvador, taking into account the evolution of the situation of human rights in that country and developments linked to the implementation of all the agreements adopted by the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, as well as the agreements signed by the Central American Presidents in the context of the regional peace-making process;

12. Requests the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional to continue their dialogue and foster agreements with a view to a firm and lasting peace, and to continue co-operating with the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights;

13. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-sixth session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador in order to re-examine this situation in the light of the information provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Middle East

Lebanon

On 6 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/54)], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 41 to 1, with 1 abstention, condemned the continued Israeli human rights violations in southern Lebanon and called on Israel to end such practices. It also called on Israel to comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention) and to facilitate the humanitarian mission of ICRC and other humanitarian organizations, particularly to allow them to visit the detention centres of Khiam and Marjeyoun and to ascertain the conditions of detainees.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Israel's attention and invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1990 and to the Commission in 1991 on the results of his efforts. Those requests were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1990/255 of 25 May.

In accordance with the Commission's request, the Secretary-General, in October [A/45/578], stated that he had asked Israel in June for information on the implementation of the Commission's resolution but had received no reply.

On 30 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec. 1990/121)], the Sub-Commission decided to discuss the situation in Lebanon in 1991.

Occupied territories

In 1990, human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART TWO, Chapter IV).

As requested by the Commission in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 554], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought the Commission's three 1989 resolutions on human rights violations in the Israeli-occupied territories to the attention of Governments, the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Committee on Israeli Practices and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People [E/CN.4/1990/3]; they were also communicated to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, international humanitarian organizations and NGOs and through UN press releases, publications and journalists' encounters on Palestine.

In a January note [E/CN.4/1990/4], the Secretary-General submitted a list of all UN reports issued since 10 March 1989 on the situation of the population of the occupied Arab territories.

Commission action. On 16 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/2A)], the Commission on Human Rights, by 38 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, condemned Israel's policies and practices which violated the human rights of the Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem. Affirming the right of the Palestinians to resist the Israeli occupation by all means, the Commission called on Israel to desist from all forms of violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, to respect the principles of international law and to withdraw from the occupied territories.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to the attention of Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it widely, and to report on its implementation in 1991. He was also asked to provide the Commission with all UN reports issued between sessions of the Commission that dealt with the conditions in which the population of the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories were living.

On the same date [res. 1990/2B], by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission, reaffirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories, including Jerusalem, strongly condemned Israel for refusing to apply that Convention and for ill-treating and torturing Palestinian detainees and prisoners in Israeli prisons and concentration camps. The Commission also strongly condemned Israel for deporting and expelling Palestinians and called on it to comply with Security Council, General Assembly and Commission resolutions. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations, international humanitarian organizations and NGOs and to report in 1991 on progress made in its implementation.

By another resolution dated 16 February [res. 1990/31, adopted by a vote of 42 to 1, the Commission strongly condemned Israel for refusing to comply with UN resolutions on the Syrian Arab Golan and demanded that Israel rescind its 1981 decision [YUN 1981, p. 308] to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory, which, the Commission stated, was null and void and without international legal effect. Condemning Israel's persistence in changing the Golan Heights' physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status, the Commission determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions by Israel that purported to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Arab Golan were null and void, constituted a flagrant violation of international law and of the fourth Geneva Convention, and had no legal effect. It strongly condemned Israel's attempt to impose Israeli citizenship and identity cards on Syrians and to impose a boycott on their agricultural products, and called on it to desist from repressive measures. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the Commission's resolution to the attention of Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations and to publicize it widely. He was also asked to report in 1991.

In a fourth resolution [res. 1990/1], the Commission, on 16 February by a roll-call vote of 42 to none, with 1 abstention, affirming that the settling of Israeli civilians in the occupied territories was illegal and contravened the fourth Geneva Convention, called on the Government of Israel to refrain from settling immigrants in the occupied territories.

Sub-Commission action. On 24 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec. 1990/110)], the Sub-Commission decided to express grave concern at the reported refusal of Israeli authorities to allow Faisal Husseini, Ghassan El-Khatib and Fervel Agha to leave the country to attend the Seventh UN International NGO Meeting on the Question of Palestine (Geneva, 29-31 August) and the preceding Fourth European Regional NGO Symposium on the Question of Palestine (Geneva, 27-28 August), and to appeal strongly to the Israeli authorities not to hamper the participation of the above-mentioned Palestinian panelists at the meetings.

By a secret ballot vote of 18 to 1, with 4 abstentions, the Sub-Commission, on 30 August [res. 1990/121, condemned Israel for its gross violations of international conventions, rules of international law and the fourth Geneva Convention; establishing Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories; its continued occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan and its defiance of relevant UN resolutions; and the inhuman treatment and terrorist practices in violation of human rights which the Israeli occupation authorities continued to exercise against Syrian Arab citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan for their refusal to carry Israeli identity cards and in order to force them to carry them.

The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to provide it in 1991 with an updated list of reports, studies, statistics and other documents relating to the question of Palestine and other occupied Arab territories.

Other human rights questions

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In a September 1990 report [A/45/454], the Secretary-General provided a list of States which had ratified or acceded to the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims [YUN 1977, p. 706]. As at 15 August, 97 States had ratified or acceded to Protocol I (on protection of victims of international armed conflicts). Five States—Barbados, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Ukrainian SSR, Yemen—did so in 1990. All of the parties—except 12—also adhered to Protocol II (on protection of victims of non-international conflicts). Two States, France and the Philippines, adhered only to Protocol II. The Secretary-General's report also contained the views of Member States on the Convention and its Protocols.

On 7 March [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/66)], the Commission on Human Rights, noting that the States parties to the Conventions and the two additional Protocols had undertaken to disseminate those instruments widely and, in particular, to include the study thereof in their programmes of military instruction and to encourage the study thereof by the civilian population, called on Governments to pay attention to the education of all members of security and other armed forces, and of all law enforcement agencies, in the international law of human rights and international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the Commission's resolution to all Governments, requesting information on the scope of education provided to members of the police and the armed forces, and to submit to the Sub-Commission in 1990 an analytical review of the replies received. The Sub-Commission was called on to study the matter further.

The Sub-Commission took no action on the matter in 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/38.

Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/44 of 8 December 1977, 34/51 of 23 November 1979, 37/116 of 16 December 1982, 39/77 of 13 December 1984, 41/72 of 3 December 1986 and 43/161 of 9 December 1988.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the need to respect and ensure respect for these rules in all circumstances within the scope of the relevant international instruments, pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Stressing the need for consolidating and implementing the existing body of international humanitarian law and for the universal acceptance of such law,

Mindful of the role of the International Committee of the Red Cross in offering protection to the victims of armed conflicts,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to promote and to disseminate knowledge of the two additional Protocols,

1. Appreciates the virtually universal acceptance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the increasingly wide acceptance of the two additional Protocols of 1977;

2. Notes, however, the fact that, in comparison with the Geneva Conventions, the number of States parties to the two additional Protocols is still limited;

3. Appeals to all States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties also to the additional Protocols at the earliest possible date;

4. Calls upon all States becoming parties to Protocol I to consider making the declaration provided for under article 90 of that Protocol;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on the status of the additional Protocols based on information received from Member States;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts".

Chemical weapons and the right to life

In a May report with later addenda [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/37 & Add.1-3], the Secretary-General provided replies received from Governments, UN bodies and NGOs in response to his request for information on the use of chemical weapons and on the danger they represented to life, physical security and other human rights.

Human rights of the individual and international law

Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) had submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1989 her updated study on the status of the individual and contemporary international law [YUN 1989, p. 575].

On 7 March 1990 [E/1990/22 [res. 1990/69]], the Commission on Human Rights recommended a draft text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/42.

Status of the individual and contemporary international law

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account resolution 1989/46 of 1 September 1989 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1990/69 of 7 March 1990,

1. Expresses its gratitude and deep appreciation to the Special Rapporteur, Ms. Erica-Irene A. Daes, for her valuable and important study on the status of the individual and contemporary international law;

2. Decides that the study should be published and widely disseminated.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/42

25 May 1990 Meeting 14 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/70) without vote, 18 May (meeting 17); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1990/22); agenda item 3.

Human rights and disability

On 29 August [E/CN.4/1991/2 (dec. 1990/113)], the Sub-Commission decided to suspend debate on the item dealing with human rights and disability and to include it on its 1991 agenda as a matter of the highest priority.

Chapter XI

Health, food and nutrition

The United Nations in 1990 continued to respond to the international dimensions of issues related to health, food and nutrition, especially those concerning disabled persons, acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), poverty and famine.

Activities continued in support of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992). In May, the Economic and Social Council authorized the Commission for Social Development to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled children, youth and adults. In October, the Secretary-General submitted recommendations on alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade, including the convening of a ministerial conference.

The World Health Organization estimated that the number of AIDS cases world-wide had risen to more than 600,000 and, by the year 2000, the number of adult cases was expected to reach 5 to 6 million. The United Nations Development Programme decided to initiate a study on the social and economic impact of the AIDS pandemic. The General Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in view of the implications of AIDS for development, to mobilize the cumulative experience of the UN system in the planning of multi-sectoral projects and in raising funds for countries requesting assistance.

The World Food Council (WFC) in 1990 expressed concern about the deterioration of the food situation in large parts of Africa and in other developing regions. It also noted the negative trend in environmental degradation, which, if left unchecked, could jeopardize the food security of future generations. It emphasized the importance of integrating food-security and poverty-alleviation objectives into economic adjustment programmes. The Assembly recognized the need for improved governance arrangements for WFC, and welcomed the decision of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes to establish a sub-committee on the governance and relationship between the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and WFC.

Inter-agency preparations continued, under the auspices of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, for the International Conference on Nutrition, to be held in 1992.

United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons

Programme of Action

In response to General Assembly resolution 43/98 [YUN 1988, p. 591], the Secretary-General submitted in October a feasibility study [A/45/470] on alternative ways to mark the end of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992). The study was based on recommendations of an expert group meeting (Järvenpää, Finland, 7-11 May) [A/C.3/45/7]—which the Secretary-General, with the support of Finland, had convened to advise him and on the views of Member States and bodies of the UN system. It contained a detailed agenda for action (1990-1993) at the national, regional and international levels and presented a preliminary outline of a long-term strategy to the year 2000 and beyond.

The study stated that the Decade had resulted in many significant initiatives to raise global awareness and improve the quality of life for people with disabilities. However, increased efforts were needed to turn awareness into action to arrive at positive changes enabling equal opportunities and full integration of disabled persons in society. Since equalization of opportunities was a major objective of social welfare policies, it was recommended that priority should be given to disability issues, which had to be reconsidered within the broader overall context of the social dimension of development. To achieve the objectives of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons [YUN 1982, p. 980], additional and adequate resources should be made available at all levels to initiate concrete action of direct benefit to people with disabilities. Each Member State should undertake a national evaluation to review the effectiveness of plans, policies, programmes and legislation for disabled persons and to suggest innovative measures for future action. A major role should be played by national co-ordinating mechanisms, which needed urgent revitalization. Member States were encouraged to support the international awareness and fund-raising campaign known as the "Global Project" to promote the Decade, and to prepare national agendas for action during 1990-1993. Regional and international agendas should be prepared by regional commissions and specialized agencies respectively. A number of continuing concerns were identified for consideration in a comprehensive social development approach. They included: full integration of the needs, rights and concerns of disabled persons into planning and decision-making at all levels; comprehensive national legislation supported by efforts to prepare an international legal instrument on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons; promotion of the world-wide concept of independent living of people with disabilities; full accessibility of disabled persons to buildings, meetings and information; and implementation of measures to improve the situation of disabled persons in multilateral and bilateral development co-operation programmes. As a major activity to mark the end of the Decade, it was suggested that the Assembly consider convening a ministerial-level world conference in 1993 to adopt a long-term strategy with the theme "A society for all by the year 2010".

The Philippines transmitted [A/C.3/46/4] to the Secretary-General two sets of guidelines: one concerned the establishment and development of national co-ordinating committees on disability and was developed at the International Meeting on the Roles and Functions of National Co-ordinating Committees on Disability in Developing Countries (Beijing, 5-11 November); and the other dealt with the development of organizations of disabled persons and was drafted by a consultant based on information received for organizations around the world in response to a questionnaire.

Inter-agency action. The eighth inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (Vienna, 5-7 December) [ACC/1990/PG/14] recommended, inter alia, that: the United Nations Office at Vienna/Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) should prepare practical guidelines to enable participating agencies to contribute to a long-term strategy to the year 2000 and beyond: a society for all; other UN agencies should link their activities with the major global and regional events planned for 1991 and 1992 to mark the end of the Decade; CSDHA should be designated to follow up on co-ordination and promotion of rehabilitation technology, and UNDP and other donor agencies should support and facilitate the production of appropriate technology; CSDHA should establish a clearing-house and data base for information on disability and convene a working group to formulate concrete proposals on the subject; the UN system should develop an affirmative action employment programme of benefit to persons with disabilities; the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) should develop a manual for families on ways to deal with children experiencing psychological trauma as a result of war and civil unrest; and agencies such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund should be requested to integrate disability concerns into their development policies and plans.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/26.

Equalization of opportunities for disabled persons

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the United Nations instruments and declarations, as well as other international instruments, that protect the rights of all persons,

Recalling, in particular, the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons, adopted by the General Assembly at its thirtieth session,

Noting that in the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons was defined as the process through which the general system of society, such as the physical and cultural environment, housing and transportation, social and health services, educational and work opportunities, cultural and social life, including sports and recreational facilities, is made accessible to all,

Mindful that the objective of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, proclaimed by the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session, was conceived as the beginning of the effective implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

Recalling that the Global Meeting of Experts, convened by the United Nations and the Government of Sweden at Stockholm in 1987, the mid-point of the Decade, reviewed progress made towards the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons,

Aware that the Global Meeting of Experts identified a number of serious shortcomings with regard to the implementation of the World Programme of Action.

Concerned that, with the approach of the end of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, in 1992, important social, economic, political, cultural and other barriers still exist, which prevent disabled children, youth and adults from participating fully in all aspects of life,

Taking into consideration the fact that the Tallinn Guidelines for Action on Human Resources Development in the Field of Disability, annexed to General Assembly resolution 44/70 of 8 December 1989, further elaborated the goals of the World Programme of Action,

Noting that questions concerning the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons were considered at the Meeting of Experts on Alternative Ways to Mark the End of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, held at Järvenpää, Finland, from 7 to 11 May 1990, which was organized jointly by the United Nations and the Government of Finland,

Recalling Commission for Social Development resolution 31/3 on the improvement of the work of the Commission,

Convinced that further measures are necessary to ensure the full integration of disabled persons in society,

1. Authorizes the Commission for Social Development to consider, at its thirty-second session, the establishment of an ad hoc open-ended working group of government experts, funded by voluntary contributions, to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled children, youth and adults, in close collaboration with the specialized agencies, other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, especially organizations of disabled persons;

2. Requests the Commission for Social Development, should it establish such a working group, to finalize the text of those rules for consideration by the Council at its first regular session of 1993 and for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-eighth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/69) without vote, 16 May (meeting 131; 49-nation draft (E/1990/C.2/L.5), orally revised; agenda item 5.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 45/91.

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons
The General Assembly.

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and resolution 37/53 of 3 December 1982, in which, inter alia, it proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons as a long-term plan of action,

Recalling also its resolution 43/98 of 8 December 1988, in which it urged Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to translate into action at all levels, as appropriate, the priorities for global activities and programmes during the second half of the Decade, such as those set forth in the annex to the resolution,

Recalling further the request to the Secretary-General made in its resolution 43/98 to conduct a feasibility study on the substantive, financial and administrative implications of alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade in 1992, which would include a review of the global progress achieved and obstacles encountered during the Decade and which would provide a mechanism for preparing the actions needed until the year 2000 and beyond,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/52 of 24 May 1989, in particular paragraph 9, in which the Council invited the Secretary-General, in connection with the preparation of the feasibility study, to convene an expert meeting in 1990 to advise on the best possible ways of marking the end of the Decade,

Having considered with interest and appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the feasibility study on alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade, which was based on the outcome of a meeting of experts held at Järvenpää, Finland, from 7 to 11 May 1990, at the generous invitation and with the financial support of the Government of Finland,

Taking note of the suggestion contained in the report of the Secretary-General to consider the proposal for a ministerial-level world conference to mark the end of the Decade,

Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/26 of 24 May 1990 on the equalization of opportunities for disabled persons, in which the Council authorized the Commission for Social Development to consider, at its thirty-second session, the establishment of an ad hoc open-ended working group of government experts, funded by voluntary contributions, to elaborate standard rules on the equalization of opportunities for disabled children, youth and adults.

Noting with satisfaction that the 1980s, during which the International Year of Disabled Persons and the Decade were observed, were a period of world-wide sensitization and awareness-raising efforts with respect to the rights and needs of disabled persons,

Convinced of the need to transform this awareness into action,

Noting with concern the deteriorating economic and social situation of some developing countries, which adversely affects vulnerable groups, including disabled persons,

Aware of the need for new and concerted efforts, more vigorous and broader action, and measures at all levels to fulfil the objectives of the Decade,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts of a number of Member States during the Decade to improve the conditions and well-being of disabled persons and the willingness of those States to involve disabled persons and their organizations in all matters of concern to them,

Aware of the problem arising in some countries in relation to the translation of the terms "impairment", "disability", "handicap" and "disabled person" used in the World Programme of Action,

Noting with gratitude the generous support to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons provided by some Governments through voluntary contributions,

Aware of the important role national committees are playing in furthering the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Encouraged by the emergence of organizations of disabled persons in some parts of the world and their positive influence on the image and condition of persons with disabilities,

Recognizing the World Congress of Rehabilitation International, the World Congress of Disabled Peoples' International, the General Assembly of the World Blind Union, Independence '92 and other such important events to be held in 1992 as important activities helping to mark the end of the Decade,

Noting the important contribution being made by other non-governmental organizations in improving the status of persons with disabilities,

Desirous of encouraging the continued and practical implementation of the World Programme of Action beyond the Decade,

1. Stresses the need to achieve the objectives set out in the agenda for action until the end of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and beyond and the preliminary outline of a long-term strategy to the year 2000 and beyond: a society for all, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the feasibility study on alternative ways to mark the end of the Decade;

2. Invites Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the agenda for action and the preliminary outline and to use them as guidelines and stimuli in preparing:

(a) National, regional and international agendas for action aimed at mounting well-focused activities at all levels to benefit people with disabilities in ways that are in conformity with the culture, customs, traditions, level of socio-economic development and resource constraints of each country;

(b) Long-term strategic plans with precise targets to be reached in the field of prevention, rehabilitation and equality of opportunities by the year 2000;

3. Affirms that, in implementing the agenda for action, special attention should be given to the disabled in developing countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to shift the focus of the United Nations programme on disability from awareness-raising to action, with the aim of achieving a society for all by the year 2010 and of responding more appropriately to the many requests for assistance and advisory services;

5. Stresses the need for priority to be given, within existing resources, to action-oriented programmes that will renew international consensus on and elicit a sustained political commitment by Member States to the implementation of the World Programme of Action beyond the Decade and will ensure the continued improvement of the situation of disabled persons;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to assist Member States in establishing and strengthening national committees on disability issues and similar co-ordinating bodies and to promote and support the establishment of effective national organizations of disabled persons, including umbrella organizations;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to review the translation into the official languages of the United Nations of the terms "impairment", "disability", "handicap" and "disabled person" used in the World Programme of Action;

8. Emphasizes the need to identify specific measures to strengthen the Disabled Persons Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, within existing resources, in order to enable it to implement the objectives of the Decade;

9. Welcomes the support already provided by some Governments to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and appeals for further voluntary contributions in order to strengthen the Disabled Persons Unit and to enable it to perform its focal-point functions;

10. Reaffirms that the resources of the Voluntary Fund should be used to support catalytic and innovative activities in order to implement further the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the Decade, with priority given, as appropriate, to programmes and projects of the least developed countries;

11. Invites Governments and non-governmental organizations to continue their contributions to the Voluntary Fund, and calls upon Governments and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Voluntary Fund so as to enable it to respond effectively to the growing demand for assistance;

12. Also invites Member States to submit updated national reports to the Secretary-General on the implementation of the agenda for action;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons".

UN trust fund

At the 1990 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 1-2 November), a total of $112,595 was pledged or paid for 1991 to the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons [A/CONF.154/2].

Prevention and control of AIDS

UNDP consideration. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) submitted a report [DP/1990/31] to the special session of the Governing Council in February on UNDP's role in combating the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and AIDS. He stated that in response to the global epidemic, UNDP had provided assistance at the country and inter-country levels, as well as direct support to the World Health Organization (WHO) global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS (see below). Under the WHO/UNDP Alliance to Combat AIDS, established in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 588], multisectoral national AIDS committees had been set up in almost all countries, sometimes with UNDP assistance. UNDP field offices had participated in monitoring and evaluating short- and medium-term plans and in round-table meetings at the country level to mobilize resources and ensure donor co-ordination. In an increasing number of countries, country programmes included HIV/AIDS components either as self-standing UNDP projects or as part of ongoing UNDP health or education programmes, while in other countries there were ongoing or planned country indicative planning figure (IPF) inputs to short- and medium-term plans for national HIV/AIDS control. Even in those countries where UNDP national IPF resources had not been committed, UNDP offices had, in several instances, worked closely with WHO in providing logistical and other support in the preparation of short- and medium-term plans. During the period 1987-1989, UNDP had committed more than $10.8 million, either through the WHO Trust Fund or directly to 28 countries in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean. For those and another 10 countries, UNDP had already earmarked or committed some $5.3 million in national IPFs for projects or project components dealing with HIV/AIDS.

Among UNDP's planned activities were: to further sensitize Governments and Resident Representatives to the developmental implications of HIV/AIDS; to undertake a training programme in collaboration with WHO to ensure that UNDP staff were fully aware of those implications, including economic, sociological, cultural and humanitarian factors, as well as areas where UNDP could most effectively assist Governments; to encourage projects under the United Nations Capital Development Fund and make use of United Nations Volunteers; to collaborate in preparing a booklet on HIV/AIDS for distribution to UN employees and their families; and to commission an anthology of contributions of individuals from developing countries about the epidemic, so as to bring about a greater understanding of the economic, social and cultural implications of HIV/AIDS.

In a 23 February decision [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/9)], the UNDP Governing Council called on UNDP, within the framework of national AIDS plans, to exercise fully its role at the country level, including assisting Governments to respond effectively to the problems of HIV and AIDS. The Council decided to consider at its thirty-seventh (1990) session the undertaking by UNDP of a study on the socio-economic impact of the AIDS pandemic to enable countries to address and deal with the problem. It called on UNDP, in the context of the WHO/UNDP Alliance, to strengthen its capacity to ensure that Governments could effectively implement their national AIDS plans. The Administrator was requested to promote and support the full utilization of community-based organizations in programme development and delivery.

Updating his report in June [DP/1990/91], the Administrator stated that some $20 million in national IPFs had so far been committed or planned for HIV/AIDS prevention and control. UNDP field offices were responding to requests from Governments for assistance. For example, assistance was being provided through the fourth country programme for Thailand to minimize transmission through sexual behaviour and drug use, to secure the blood and the blood product supply and to involve non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in prevention and support activities. In the Gambia, UNDP assisted district-level HIV/AIDS groups, and in Sierra Leone, it was working with NGOs operating HIV-testing centres.

The Administrator said that the initial stage of the implementation of the WHO/UNDP Alliance had been completed. UNDP's priorities for the next stage would be to increase understanding of the development implications of the epidemic and to strengthen its capacity to assist Governments effectively. Concerning the projected study of the socio-economic impact of the AIDS pandemic, the Administrator proposed that a preparatory phase be undertaken immediately to review existing research studies and methodologies, determine the approach to be adopted for programming implementation, identify potential collaborating institutions and explore funding modalities. The estimated cost of that phase was $150,000. It was anticipated that a longer-term programme of assistance would be initiated requiring increased funding. UNDP, WHO, the World Bank and other donors would be invited to share the cost of the programme.

In a June decision [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/25)], the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's proposal to initiate a preparatory phase to determine the best means of conducting social and economic impact studies, and urged close collaboration with bilateral and UN agencies. It requested him, in strengthening the capacity of UNDP to respond to the development dimensions of the HIV pandemic, to pay particular attention to prevention, care and support programmes for women, and to report, in the framework of the 1992-1993 budget, on the budgetary proposals for strengthening UNDP's institutional capacity in the area and on the HIV-related programme proposals for the fifth programming cycle (1992-1996).

In a later report [DP/1991/15], the Administrator said that UNDP was consulting with a wide range of partners, including WHO, UNICEF, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations

Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, other UN organs and agencies, Governments, financial institutions, NGOs and experts to determine how best to support countries in policy formulation and programme development and delivery linked to the socio-economic impact of HIV/AIDS. The UNDP's Regional Bureau for Africa had set in motion an action programme which included consultation with African Ministers of Planning on the magnitude of the problem. An inter-country programme of the Regional Bureau for Asia and the Pacific had been approved, which would facilitate the organization of country and inter-country workshops leading to a region-wide seminar addressing the socio-economic aspects of the pandemic. An interregional programme to strengthen the capacity of UNDP and Governments to respond to the development implications of the pandemic, co-financed by the Netherlands and Norway, was approved in August. Work had started on the preparation of an HIV/AIDS policies and programming handbook, and UNDP had also initiated studies on issues affecting prevention, care and treatment programmes for women. Preparatory work had begun to establish a data base at UNDP headquarters on studies related to the socio-economic impact of the pandemic.

Global strategy for AIDS

The Secretary-General, in response to resolutions adopted in 1989 by the General Assembly [YUN 1989, p. 579] and the Economic and Social Council [YUN 1989, p. 579], transmitted the report of the WHO Director-General on a global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS [A/45/256-E/1990/58].

As at 1 April 1990, said the Director-General, the number of officially reported AIDS cases world-wide was 237, 110. However, WHO estimated the actual number of cases to be over 600,000. In four years, the cases reported to WHO had grown 1&fold, with the number of countries reporting cases increasing by more than 100. WHO estimated that, since the beginning of the epidemic, more than 300,000 cases had occurred in Africa. More than 124,282 cases had been reported by the United States, or 80 per cent of all cases in the Americas region. In Europe the greatest numbers of cases were reported by France (8,883), followed by Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany, Spain and the United Kingdom, and in Asia and the Pacific, 51 countries reported 2,565 cases, or the remaining 1 per cent of the world cumulative total.

WHO projections suggested that by the year 2000 the estimated number of adult AIDS cases might reach 5 to 6 million. Many of those projected cases were considered to be preventable by global and regional HIV/AIDS prevention and control efforts carried out in conjunction with national programmes.

By the end of January 1990, progress accomplished in establishing national AIDS programmes was notable: every country in the world had created a national response to HIV/AIDS; of the 159 countries collaborating with WHO; 123 had short-term plans and 95 had formulated a medium-term plan; and the quality of planning had improved substantially.

Technical support had been provided in designing, implementing and monitoring the national plans and support was also provided in such areas as health promotion, epidemiological surveillance, clinical management of HIV infection and AIDS, counselling, and laboratory and blood transfusion services. Operational support to national AIDS programmes included personnel, training, equipment and supplies, and financial resources. However, implementation of national AIDS programmes had been constrained by limitations on human and institutional resources and by the complexities involved in AIDS prevention and control. A major effort in manpower planning and development had been made to support national programmes in evaluating staff needs, defining training needs and helping to undertake such training. More than 400 health educators had participated in training workshops, more than 300 laboratory technicians were trained in HIV diagnosis and almost 1,000 in counselling HIV-infected persons and families. WHO also played a critical role in generating resources internationally and in co-ordinating their allocation to countries. Resource mobilization meetings organized by the Global Programme on AIDS for 65 countries during the period May 1987 to January 1990 yielded over $160 million.

Information on AIDS developed by the Global Programme included guidelines, published in the WHO AIDS series, dealing with sterilization and disinfection methods, monitoring of national AIDS prevention and control programmes, planning health promotion for AIDS prevention and control, prevention of sexual transmission of HIV, and AIDS and first aid in the workplace.

In a later report [A/46/171-E/1991/61], the WHO Director-General stated that the Global Commission on AIDS-a group of eminent experts established to give guidance to the WHO Director-General-held its third meeting in 1990 (Geneva, March). The Commission adopted recommendations on a variety of topics, including drug use and HIV transmission and blood safety, and identified 10 issues, including research, complacency, women and AIDS, and the economic and social implications of HIV/AIDS, for priority attention in the early 1990s and defined the context in which they should be viewed. Since heterosexual transmission of HIV was becoming the predominant mode of transmission in most countries of the world, HIV infections among women of child-bearing age were rising steeply with a corresponding increase in the number of HIV-infected infants. In response to a May 1990 resolution of the World Health Assembly calling for the strengthening of AIDS prevention and control in respect of women and children, WHO was aiming activities at preventing HIV transmission to and from women (including perinatal transmission); lessening the impact of the pandemic on women and educators, counsellors and care givers; and ensuring the full participation of women in control programmes. In order to give special impetus to those activities, the WHO Director-General decided to devote World AIDS Day 1990 (1 December) to the theme of women and AIDS.

Concerning the avoidance of discrimination in relation to HIV-infected people and those with AIDS, four regional consultations on ethical, legal and human rights aspects of HIV/AIDS were held in the Congo (March), in the Republic of Korea (July) and in Chile and India (October).

UNICEF action. At its 1990 session (New York, 16-27 April), the UNICEF Executive Board adopted a decision [E/1990/28 (dec. 1990/18)] in which it urged the Executive Director to mobilize further the UNICEF field offices to make their full contribution to the efforts of the UN system, notably the UNDP/WHO alliance, to combat the spread of AIDS within the framework of national AIDS control programmes, and report in 1991 on UNICEF's efforts to combat and alleviate the effects of AIDS.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/86.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/108 of 27 July 1989, General Assembly resolution 44/223 of 22 December 1989, relevant resolutions of the World Health Assembly, as well as relevant resolutions of other organizations of the United Nations system, the London Declaration on AIDS Prevention and the deliberations of the Sixth International Conference on AIDS, held at San Francisco, United States of America, in June 1990,

Recalling also the Paris Declaration on Women, Children and the Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS), World Health Assembly resolution WHA 43.10 of 16 May 1990 on women, children and AIDS,

Acknowledging the established leadership of the World Health Organization in directing and co-ordinating AIDS prevention, control, education and research,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors, in combating the spread of AIDS,

Stressing the need to take full advantage of the World Health Organization/United Nations Development Programme Alliance to Combat AIDS and to strengthen its role in facilitating the implementation at the country level of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,

Aware that AIDS can have serious social and economic consequences, particularly in countries with a high incidence of infection from the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and limited public health services and other development resources,

Reaffirming that the struggle against AIDS should be consistent with and divert neither attention nor resources from other national public health priorities and development goals and should not divert international efforts and resources needed for overall health priorities,

Aware that about one of every four hundred adults in the world today is infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, of which three million are females, and that as heterosexual transmission of HIV infection increases, the percentage of women infected will rise to equal that of men,

Considering the extensive health, economic and psychological implications of HIV infection and AIDS for women, children and families,

Emphasizing that the prevention and control of HIV infection and AIDS for women and children call for the strengthening and improvement of the primary health care system and for educational and other psychological, social and economic support programmes for women, children and families,

Recalling the resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the World Health Assembly concerning the need to respect the human rights and dignity of all people, including those affected by the human immunodeficiency virus, their families and those with whom they live,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the adverse impact of HIV infection and AIDS on the health and economic and social well-being of women, children and families, to intensify his efforts, in close collaboration with the Director-General of the World Health Organization and all other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Population Fund, to mobilize technical and other relevant resources to deal with this aspect of the problem;

3. Calls upon organizations of the United Nations system, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to co-ordinate their efforts with the World Health Organization in implementing the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

4. Invites the General Assembly to consider the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization and the response of the United Nations system to the AIDS pandemic and to take an appropriate decision on further action, taking the present resolution into account.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/86
27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote
Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/116) without vote, 20 July (meeting 15); 32-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.11); agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 21 December, adopted resolution 45/187.

Prevention and control of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/233 of 22 December 1989, and taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/86 of 27 July 1990, World Health Assembly resolution WHA 43.10 of 16 May 1990 on women, children and AIDS, as well as other relevant resolutions adopted by the organizations of the United Nations system,

Taking note of the Paris Declaration on Women, Children and the Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS), adopted on 30 November 1989, the discussions of the Sixth⁷ International Conference on AIDS, held at San Francisco, United States of America, from 20 to 24 June 1990, the Fifth International Conference on AIDS and Associated Cancer, held at Kinshasa from 10 to 12 October 1990, and the Declaration on the Survival, Protection and World Development of Children, adopted by the World Summit for Children on 30 September 1990,

Noting with appreciation the established leadership and co-ordinating role of the World Health Organization, and the efforts of other organizations of the United Nations system, Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors, in combating the spread of AIDS,

Stressing the need to take full advantage of the World Health Organization/United Nations Development Programme Alliance to Combat AIDS and to strengthen its role in facilitating implementation at the country level of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS,

Acknowledging that AIDS can have severe social and economic consequences, particularly in countries with a high incidence of infection from the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), overburdened public health services and limited financial, developmental and skilled labour resources,

Concerned that AIDS has become a major cause of death for women aged 20 to 40 in major cities in the Americas, Western Europe and sub-Saharan Africa, that over 3 million women of child-bearing age have been infected with HIV, that the World Health Organization estimates that during the 1990s a cumulative figure of over 25 to 30 million people are expected to be infected with AIDS, that over 10 million infants and children will become infected with HIV, the vast majority of whom will have died by the year 2000, and that 10 million uninfected children under the age of 10 years will be orphaned during the 1990s as a consequence of AIDS,

Emphasizing the crucial role that other sexually transmitted diseases can play in facilitating the transmission of HIV infection,

Considering that the behaviour and life-style practices that place individuals at risk of HIV infection are likely to be established in adolescence or young adulthood and that the relatively slow progression from HIV infection to AIDS suggests that many HIV-infected individuals over 25 years of age acquired the infection in adolescence or young adulthood,

Stressing, therefore, the importance of information, education and other support targeted to young people to encourage behavioural change and to enable them to remain uninfected,

Emphasizing the crucial importance of a supportive socio-economic environment to ensure the effective implementation of national AIDS prevention programmes and the humane care of affected persons,

Reiterating the need to respect the human rights and dignity of all people, including those affected by HIV, their families and those with whom they live,

Noting that scientific research is making progress in the development of improved diagnostic, therapeutic and preventive technologies and pharmaceuticals, and stressing the importance of making these technologies and pharmaceuticals available as soon as possible and at an affordable cost,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Director-General of the World Health Organization on the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the serious implications of the AIDS pandemic for development in general in many developing countries, to intensify his efforts, in collaboration with the Director-General of the World Health Organization, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, the heads of the World Bank, the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Children's Fund and all other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to mobilize the cumulative experience of the United Nations system in the strategic planning of multi-sectoral projects and the raising of funds in support of those countries requesting assistance;

3. Urges Member States to increase their efforts to combat AIDS and to encourage national and international efforts to prevent the further spread of AIDS;

4. Culls upon governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors to continue to pay particular attention to the needs of women, young people and children and to co-ordinate their efforts with those of the World Health Organization for the implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization, in close collaboration with the other organizations of the United Nations system and without prejudice to ongoing priorities and programmes, to continue to advance the global strategy, for the prevention and control of AIDS and, specifically:

(a) To emphasize the need to strengthen the primary health care system together with educational, psychological, social and economic support programmes for women, youth and children;

(b) To promote the vital role that women and young people can play in national AIDS programmes for the further prevention and control of the disease;

(c) To encourage the development of services that can meet the particular needs of young people and women for counselling on relationships and on means to reduce the risk of AIDS, sexually transmitted diseases and risks associated with intravenous drug use;

(d) To support the efforts of countries to create or enhance programmes that promote the prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases;

(e) To encourage countries to develop plans to meet the economic and social needs of uninfected children with HIV-infected parents or orphaned by AIDS and of elderly people left without providers and often responsible for orphaned grandchildren;

(f) To mobilize the necessary resources, both human and financial, in the health sector and other sectors, to develop and implement activities and technologies for the prevention of HIV infection/AIDS and for the care of those suffering from the disease;

(g) To ensure that the particular experience of women and children is used in the search for preventive, curative and palliative therapies so that their special needs can be better met;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to intensify, through the information capacity of the United Nations system, public information activities with respect to HIV and AIDS;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to invite the Director-General of the World Health Organization to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 45/187

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/848) without vote, 28 November (meeting 49); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.51), based on informal consultations on 43-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.25); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 13-16, 22, 49; plenary 71.

Food

World food situation

World food production rose by 1.8 per cent in 1990, following a strong recovery in 1989 from the setback of the previous two years, said the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in a report to the World Food Council (WFC) on the world food situation in 1990 [WFC/1991/8]. Food production in developing countries rose by 2.3 per cent during the year, but that was below the average growth rate of the 1980s. Of 112 developing countries, 67 failed to increase per capita food production. A large number of African countries were experiencing acute food shortages, with particularly critical situations being faced by Ethiopia and the Sudan.

Production of staple foods recovered further in 1990 but, in per capita terms, output levels remained below the average of 1980-1985. Per capita staple food produced in Africa declined in both 1989 and 1990 and in Latin America and the Caribbean it fell in 1990 for the third consecutive year. World cereal production was estimated to have increased by 8 million tons over 1989 and world cereal stocks were forecast to increase to 325 million tons by the end of the 1992 crop year. That would be close to the level that FAO considered necessary to safeguard world food security.

WFC action

The 36-member WFC, the highest international body dealing with food problems, held its sixteenth ministerial session in Bangkok, Thailand, from 21 to 24 May [A/45/19].

The Council expressed particular concern about the sharp deterioration of the food situation in large parts of Africa and in other developing countries. It noted that the number of hungry people had increased to some 550 million during the 1980s; although the largest increases occurred in sub-Saharan Africa, the majority of undernourished people were still to be found in Asia.

With regard to co-operative action that could be taken by all countries in the 1990s, the Council stated that trends of environmental deterioration, if allowed to continue unchecked, would jeopardize the food security of future generations. The global-warming problem, desertification and deforestation could only be solved by the determined, joint efforts of all the countries of the world. The Council urged individual countries to take effective measures to prevent soil and environmental degradation, deforestation and desertification. Council members underlined the importance of incorporating agriculture effectively into international trade rules and disciplines in the context of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART THREE, Chapter IV). The WFC secretariat was asked to report to the Council in 1991 on the outcome of the Uruguay Round in relation to its food security implications.

In reference to action to be taken by developing countries, the Council recalled that in its 1989 Cairo Declaration [YUN 1989, p. 588], WFC members had agreed to four broad hunger-alleviation goals for the 1990s: the elimination of starvation and death caused by famine; a substantial reduction of malnutrition and mortality among children; a reduction in chronic hunger; and the elimination of major nutritional-deficiency diseases. Noting that most countries had yet to set specific targets in those areas, the Council called on them to do so urgently. The Council emphasized the importance of integrating food-security and poverty-alleviation objectives into economic adjustment programmes to ensure that food-security levels of low-income groups were protected and that adjustment led to long-term, sustainable reductions of hunger and malnutrition.

As to action to be taken by developed countries, the Council called on those countries to implement the undertakings made to attain the international target of devoting 0.7 per cent of their gross national product to official development assistance. It urged that co-operation be extended to the peoples of Eastern Europe, where radical economic reforms were being carried out, but not at the expense of developing countries.

In other follow-up to the Cairo Declaration, the Council requested the WFC Executive Director to consult with concerned institutions on the development of guidelines for more effective measures to ensure the safe passage of emergency food aid and recommended that the Secretary-General seek the support of the General Assembly in 1990 for drawing up an international draft agreement.

During the year, WFC organized regional consultations for Africa and Western Asia (Cairo, Egypt, 22-23 January) [WFC/1990/3/Add.2] and for Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, 1-2 February) [WFC/1990/3/Add.3] to consider the implementation of the commitments contained in the Cairo Declaration. The meetings reviewed and updated the hunger and poverty situations in the regions as well as national food strategies and anti-hunger efforts/priorities for future action. They also examined regional and South-South co-operation and the need for international assistance.

By decision 1990/268 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the WFC report on the work of its sixteenth session.

In other food-related action, the Council adopted resolution 1990/77 on co-operation in fisheries in Africa, resolution 1990/61 on the fight against the screw-worm infestation and resolution 1990/62 on the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/88 [YUN 1989, p. 589], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a comprehensive report on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and the liberalization of international agricultural trade [A/45/583]. Prepared in consultation with WFC, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and FAO, the report updated information provided in a 1989 report on the same subject [YUN 1989, p. 588], highlighted developments in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations concerning agricultural and tropical products and provided estimates of the likely impact of trade liberalization on the prospects for developing countries to increase their share of world trade in those products.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 21 December, adopted resolution 45/207.

Food and agricultural problems

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling also its resolutions on food and agricultural problems, in particular resolutions 41/191 of 8 December 1986 and 43/191 of 20 December 1988, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/88 of 26

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition adopted by the World Food Conference,

Stressing the imperative need to keep food and agricultural issues at the centre of global attention, and their role in the reactivation of development, as was pointed out in the section on agriculture of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Reaffirming that food and agricultural problems in developing countries should be considered in a comprehensive manner in their different dimensions and in their immediate, short-term and long-term perspectives, taking into account the interaction of agricultural development with, inter alia, the external economic environment, policies for agricultural growth, human resources development, rural development policies, and the links between natural resources, environment, population growth trends and sustainable agriculture,

Emphasizing that the continuing gravity of the economic situation in many developing countries, including the persistence of negative trends in the food production and agricultural sectors, requires, in many cases, urgent and decisive action at the national and international levels to support and ensure their full economic recovery and development,

Stressing the need for continued and additional support from the international donor community for agricultural development in developing countries, as well as the need for increased efforts and investment on the part of the developing countries in the development of their own food and agricultural sectors,

Noting with concern that the tensions concerning international trade in agricultural markets remain serious, notably owing to the persistence of all types of trade-distorting agricultural support, covering internal régimes, market access, export subsidies and sanitary and phyto-sanitary regulations in many developed countries,

Stressing that the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, launched during the Special Session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986, presents a unique opportunity to develop a more open, viable and durable trading system, and stressing also the importance of overcoming obstacles in the negotiations and arriving at a successful, balanced and comprehensive conclusion of the Round,

Emphasizing that the long-term objective of the negotiations on agriculture is to establish a fair, market-oriented agricultural trading system and that a reform process should be initiated through the negotiation of commitments on support and protection and through the establishment of strengthened and more operationally effective rules and disciplines of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade,

Concerned that the economies of most developing countries continue to suffer because, inter alia, of the long-term adverse trends in international commodity prices, protectionism and worsening terms of trade, a growing debt-service burden and the trends in the transfer of resources to and from developing countries, which have had a negative effect on international trade and agriculture, particularly for developing countries,

Reaffirming that the right to food is a universal human right that should be guaranteed to all people and, in that context, believing in the general principle that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure, either at the national or at the international level,

Welcoming the ongoing work of the Global Information and Early Warning System on Food and Agriculture in monitoring the world food situation and in alerting the international community to impending problems,

Noting with alarm that the screw-worm fly has been introduced into North Africa and is now established, thereby posing a potential threat to people, livestock and wildlife in Africa, the Mediterranean parts of Europe and the Near East,

Welcoming the efforts made by the countries affected and the international community to contain locust and grasshopper infestations through the implementation of General Assembly resolution 43/203 of 20 December 1988 on the international strategy for the fight against locust and grasshopper infestation, particularly in Africa.

Welcoming the decision of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its twenty-fifth session to reinforce the International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides, with a view to enhancing the protection of health and the environment, and noting the co-operation between the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Environment Programme in that regard,

Noting with particular concern that hunger and malnutrition have been increasing since the World Food Conference was held in 1974, that the number of people suffering from hunger and malnutrition increased in the 1980s and that only limited progress has been made towards the central objective of the Conference,

1. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations of the World Food Council at its sixteenth ministerial session, held at Bangkok from 21 to 24 May 1990, in particular the pragmatic action taken to meet the growing challenges to fight hunger and malnutrition in the 1990s, and calls upon Governments and international and non-governmental organizations fully to assist the World Food Council in implementing the recommendations;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products and the liberalization of international agricultural trade;

3. Stresses the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production and productivity in developing countries and the importance of increasing domestic food production, thereby stimulating national economic growth and social progress in those countries, in particular in Africa and the least developed countries, and helping to resolve the problems of hunger and malnutrition effectively;

4. Affirms that increasing food production and improving access to food by low-income people in developing countries will significantly contribute to the eradication of poverty and the elimination of malnutrition, and recommends that a higher priority be given to supporting food production and to developing a marketing infrastructure and income/employment generation in the national development efforts of those countries in order to ensure adequate food supplies and equitable distribution of food;

5. Stresses that it is important for developing countries to create a basis for more rapid industrialization and diversification of their economic structure with a view to increasing their food and agricultural production and, in that context, stresses the importance of finance for investment in the agriculture sector, which should form part of national policies and programmes for international co-operation, both bilateral and multilateral;

6. Also stresses the importance of science and technology in the development of agriculture, in the increase of food production and in the modernization of agriculture, and, in that context, calls upon the international community to support scientific and technological training and research in developing countries in order to promote sustainable agricultural development in those countries, and emphasizes the urgency of strengthening international co-operation in the field of transfer of environmentally sound agricultural technologies and of facilitating the free exchange of information on experience and technology relating to food production, processing and storage, taking into account the need for developing countries to have assured non-discriminatory access to advances in such fields as biotechnology and genetic engineering, at appropriate cost;

7. Urges the members of the international community to take further determined action in support of the efforts of developing countries by increasing even more the flow of resources, including concessional flows designated for agricultural development, and by increasing food aid commitments in support of the strengthened efforts of developing countries to increase mobilization and allocation of domestic resources to address food and agricultural problems, in addition to the flow of resources from developed countries, bearing in mind the need to channel this assistance through appropriate existing organizations and programmes;

8. Stresses that the provision of food aid in the context of emergency and natural disaster situations should be reinforced through additional rehabilitation and development assistance in order to help restore food production capacity and self-reliance and that it should be provided with a view to restoring such capacity;

9. Calls for a joint effort by all States and appropriate international and intergovernmental organizations to improve the food situation and enhance the nutritional levels of affected groups, in particular low-income groups, especially during the implementation of structural adjustment programmes;

10. Stresses that the outcome of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations should present a unique opportunity to develop a more open, viable and durable trading system, to reverse the disquieting rise in protectionism through a progressive and substantial reduction of support and protection measures in order to avoid inflicting large losses on the more efficient producers, especially in developing countries, and to bring agriculture under the strengthened and operationally effective rules and disciplines of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, fully in accordance with the Ministerial Declaration on the Uruguay Round and the Mid-Term Review Agreements, and stresses that efforts to that end should take into account the need to provide special and differential treatment for developing countries, bearing in mind their food security objectives and the need for agricultural and rural development, and should also take into account the need to give effect to the Mid-Term Review Agreements, in which it was stated that ways should be developed to take into account the possible negative effects of the reform process on net food-importing developing countries;

11. Also stresses the need to implement promptly and fully the relevant provisions of the Ministerial Declaration and the Mid-Term Review Agreements concerning tropical products, including processed and semi-processed tropical products;

12. Further stresses the need to improve global economic conditions in order to establish food security in developing countries at the national, subregional, regional and global levels;

13. Calls upon the international community to support and complement, through specific and effective measures, the efforts made by Governments of African States to stimulate agriculture and food production and to implement fully the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution S-13/2 of 1 June 1986;

14. Urges all States members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to assist the organization to fulfil its leading role in the United Nations system in assisting countries in their agricultural and rural development;

15. Appeals to the international community to contribute generously to the World Food Programme so that the pledging target for the period 1991-1992, as set out in General Assembly resolution 44/230 of 22 December 1989, can be attained and the Programme can continue its activity in support of development and in meeting emergency food needs;

16. Welcomes the conclusion of the arrangements for the third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, calls upon the international community to continue supporting the activities of the Fund in favour of agricultural development in developing countries, takes note with satisfaction of the positive contribution made by the Fund to the economic recovery programmes of its member developing countries and its increased assistance to the African region in conformity with the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, particularly through its Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification, and invites donors to endorse resolution 60/XIII of 25 January 1990 of the Governing Council of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, concerning the possibility of additional voluntary contributions to the Special Resources for Sub-Saharan Africa for a further three years, starting in January 1991, without prejudicing deliberations on the mobilization of core funding for the Fund;

17. Stresses the need for continued and co-ordinated international action to tackle the long-term problems of migratory pest control and food-related diseases in developing countries, and calls upon donors to continue to give high priority to the implementation and continued co-ordination by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and by other relevant programmes, of emergency control programmes, as well as medium-term and longer-term measures, against grasshoppers and locusts, including regional preventive programmes on the desert locust and research on sustainable control strategies formulated and financed in collaboration with the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and to remain prepared to provide financial and technical assistance to affected countries at short notice;

18. Urges the international community to give full support to action to eradicate the screw-worm fly, particularly in Africa, and welcomes the support already provided by donors to the collaboration between the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development on the eradication programme and calls upon them to give high priority to the implementation of the international emergency eradication programme in Africa, co-ordinated by the Screw-worm Emergency Centre for North Africa of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in co-operation with the International Fund for Agricultural Development;

19. Notes the decision of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization jointly to convene an International Conference on Nutrition in 1992, stresses the need for the Conference to focus on specific rules and practical action and calls upon the international community to support that effort fully as a basis for concerted national and international action to tackle the problems of malnutrition, undernutrition and specific nutrition-related diseases and conditions in the 1990s;

20. Calls upon the international community to implement the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, held in Paris from 3 to 14 September 1990, and, in particular, to support the efforts of those countries in the areas of food production and rural development, food security, development and management of fishery and forestry resources, environmental protection and sustainable development;

21. Emphasizes the need for further efforts to be made to achieve the four broad hunger-alleviation goals contained in the Cairo Declaration, adopted by the World Food Council at its fifteenth session, namely:

(a) The elimination of starvation and death caused by famine;

(b) A substantial reduction in malnutrition and mortality among young children;

(c) A tangible reduction in chronic hunger;

(d) The elimination of major nutritional-deficiency diseases;

22. Urges the World Food Council, as decided at its sixteenth ministerial session, within its mandate, to improve co-ordination of national and international action towards a more concerted attack on hunger and to examine the food production challenges facing different regions of the developing world in the 1990s, and also urges it to continue sensitizing the international community to the nature, causes and consequences of hunger and malnutrition and to continue recommending appropriate practical policies for remedial action;

23. Calls upon the developing countries, in addressing food problems, to promote international co-operation within the context of their primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves in food and agriculture, to place greater emphasis on their technical co-operation in that sector, requests developed countries and the United Nations system to assist and support such activities and, in addition, requests the United Nations to play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of international co-operation and technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture;

24. Decides to change the title of the sub-item "Food problems" to "Food and agricultural development" in the agenda of future sessions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council;

25. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the World Food Council, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1991, an updated comprehensive report on trends in the international market for agricultural and tropical products, on developments in the liberalization of international trade in agricultural and tropical products, taking into account the share of developing countries in such trade and the possible adverse short-term effects on net-food-importing developing countries, and on the follow-up to the section on agriculture of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade.

General Assembly resolution 45/207

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/849/Add.5) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/45/L.79), based on informal consultations on draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/45/L.40) and orally revised; agenda item 79 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 19-21, 43, 54; plenary 71.

Also on 21 December, the Assembly, by decision 45/444, reiterated its request to the developed countries and the agencies and organizations of the UN system, including UNDP, FAO, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and other international development and financial institutions, to extend assistance to developing countries to enable them to strengthen their technical co-operation with each other in food and agriculture.

World Food Programme

In 1990, the World Food Programme (WFP) continued to work towards the alleviation of poverty and hunger, to provide basic food requirements to long-term refugees and displaced persons and to deliver food aid to people in emergency situations.

By the end of 1990, total multilateral resources made available to WFP for the 1989-1990 biennium had reached nearly $1.75 billion, including 4.5 million tons of food. That included contributions or pledges to WFP's regular resources, the Food Aid Convention, the International Emergency Food Reserve, special contributions for the Afghanistan operation and additional pledges to regular resources for the feeding of long-term refugees and displaced people.

Development assistance

At the end of 1990, WFP was assisting 278 ongoing development projects valued at $3.24 billion, including $480 million for 48 new development projects or expansions of existing ones and budget increases for ongoing projects. The portfolio for development projects provided food to an estimated 75 million people.

While the number of development projects approved in 1990 remained high, the $480 million committed for them was the lowest amount since 1980. Commitments for WFP's larger projects tended to be cyclical, resulting in years with relatively high commitment levels and years, like 1990, with lower levels. Moreover, reduced availability of food aid commodities due to increased prices in 1989 and early 1990 meant that deliveries of earlier commitments extended over longer periods, with the result that approval of commitments for new phases of projects was delayed. In addition, fewer commitments were made in 1990 for high-value goods, particularly dried skim milk, for which demand had declined, and vegetable oil, for which commitments were constrained by its limited availability.

Low-income food-deficit countries received 86 per cent of WFP's development assistance commitments, 85 per cent of emergency aid and 90 per cent of assistance for long-term refugees and displaced persons.

WFP allocated $364 million to the least developed countries (LDCs) (see PART THREE, Chapter I) in 1990, nearly half of its total expenditure.

Emergencies and refugees

Through 23 active operations worth $324 million, WFP supported 6.6 million long-term refugees and displaced persons (people who had received assistance for more than one year) in 1990, providing them with most of their basic food requirements. Food aid worth $132 million was provided to some 5.8 million people in 20 countries through 32 emergency operations. During the year, disaster relief, including the feeding of long-term refugees, amounted to nearly half of all WFP food aid commitments—$336 million for long-term refugees and displaced people and $132 million for emergency operations.

WFP resources

WFP's annual turnover in 1990—the sum of the resources managed by the Programme—was more than $1 billion. Programme support and administrative costs as a proportion of turnover came to 7 per cent. Total staff costs were $49.6 million in 1990, or 4.6 per cent of turnover.

By the end of 1990, 80 countries had pledged a total of more than $1.2 billion, representing 86 per cent of the target for the 1989-1990 biennium of $1.4 billion for WFP's regular budget, which was mainly used to fund development projects. Of that amount, three quarters was in food commodities (or cash for the purchase of commodities) and one quarter in cash. Thus, the cash portion remained well below the one-third level specified in WFP's regulations. A pledging target of $1.5 billion was agreed upon for the 1991-1992 biennium.

Committee on Food

Aid Policies and Programmes

The Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA)—the governing body of WFP—held two sessions in 1990.

At its twenty-ninth session (Rome, Italy, 4-8 June) [WFP/CFA: 29/13], CFA discussed the Executive Director's annual report covering 1989 [WFP/CFA: 29/P/4 & Corr.1 & Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1], reviewed the Federal Republic of Germany's experience with food aid policies and programmes [WFP/CFA: 29/P/5], considered the status of the WFP Headquarters Agreement and addressed issues concerning the relationship between WFP and FAO.

The Committee approved 15 projects with a total value of $186.2 million, representing a food commitment of 565,900 tons. It also approved nine projects for refugees and displaced persons.

CFA approved the continued high level of support given to low-income food-deficit countries and especially LDCs and requested the Executive Director to intensify efforts to increase assistance to sub-Saharan Africa. It urged that international efforts continue to establish more effective arrangements for the safe passage of emergency food assistance in areas of conflict. CFA decided to establish a sub-committee on the governance of WFP and the relationships between the United Nations, FAO and WFP to study and make recommendations regarding proposals put forward by Member States, the WFP Executive Director, the FAO Director-General and the UN Secretary-General.

At its thirtieth session (Rome, 3-7 and 14 December) [CFA:30/7], CFA approved 24 projects with a total value of $263.9 million, representing a food commitment of 784,400 tons. It also approved six projects for refugees and displaced persons and two projects for activities related to Afghan refugees in Iran and Pakistan.

The Committee, having constituted a working group to present proposals on the governance of WFP and the relationships between the United Nations, FAO and WFP, adopted the Group's recommendations on: the status of WFP and its relationship with FAO and the United Nations; the size and composition of CFA; the WFP Trust Fund; procedure for emergency operations; the authority of CFA; the legal capacity of WFP; and the authority, responsibility and accountability of the Executive Director. Another working group, to be established by the Chairman of CFA, would meet in January 1991 to work on the implementation of the recommendations.

The Committee reiterated its earlier appeals to see the WFP Headquarters Agreement signed and ratified without further delay.

CFA's fifteenth annual report [E/1990/99], which covered the activities of WFP in 1989, was submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July, as was a secretariat note E/1990/101] conveying the decision of the Committee at its twenty-ninth session on the governance of WFP.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/79.

Governance of the World Food Programme

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the fifteenth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes and the note by the Secretariat transmitting a decision on governance of the World Food Programme, adopted by the Committee at its twenty-ninth session, in June 1990, and transmitted to the Council by the Executive Director of the World Food Programme at the request of the Committee,

Recognizing the need for improved governance arrangements for the World Food Programme consistent with its programme requirements, its accountability to member States, and its characteristics as an entity of the United Nations system,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes to establish a sub-committee of the whole of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes to review the governance of the World Food Programme and the relationships between the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme;

2. Requests the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes to report to the Economic and Social Council in 1991 on its consideration of the important review carried out by the sub-committee, as well as to the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/79

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/115) without vote, 24 July (meeting 17); 10-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.17/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 9.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/218.

Governance of the World Food Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 44/414 of 22 November 1989,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/79 of 27 July 1990 on the governance of the World Food Programme, which is a joint programme of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Considering that a careful review of the present arrangements governing the World Food Programme is needed,

Considering also that intergovernmental oversight of the World Food Programme, through the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, which reports to the General Assembly and the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations through the Economic and Social Council and the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations respectively, together with clear lines of responsibility and accountability, are required for effective governance of the Programme and should contribute to the enhancement of the effectiveness and efficiency of the secretariat in carrying out the mandate of the Programme,

1. Recognizes the need for improved governance arrangements for the World Food Programme consistent with its programme requirements, its accountability to member States and its characteristics as an entity of the United Nations system;

2. Welcomes the decision taken by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes at its twenty-ninth session to establish a sub-committee on governance of the World Food Programme and the relationships between the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Food Programme, and urges the Committee to complete expeditiously its review of governance arrangements for the Programme;

3. Urges the Committee in conducting its review, to take into account the need for enhanced governance arrangements and improved efficiency and effectiveness of the World Food Programme and enhanced accountability to member States;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the foregoing, to continue to participate fully in the review of governance arrangements of the World Food Programme and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the participation of the United Nations in the review of the governance arrangements for the World Food Programme.

General Assembly resolution 45/218

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/854) without vote, 5 December (meeting 51); 22-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.63); agenda item 84.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 33-36, 38, 50, 51; plenary 71.

Nutrition

UNU activities. During 1990, the United Nations University (UNU) continued its programme on food and nutrition for human and social development, focusing on research, policy-making, training and dissemination to alleviate hunger and malnutrition [E/1991/15]. In November, it convened in Washington, D.C., with the co-operation of UNICEF, WHO, and the International Development Research Centre and voluntary agencies, a global conference on rapid assessment methodologies for planning and evaluation of health-related programmes. A training workshop was held in Brazil in August and in Kenya in September, focusing on its application in studying AIDS-related behaviour. A workshop entitled "Improved Protein-Energy Intakes in Early Childhood and Human Capital Formation: The Guatemalan Oriente Study" took place in August in Italy. The publication of that workshop's findings would promote programmes for the prevention of malnutrition in the pre-school child.

Under a new activity, the country health and nutrition transition project, a series of monographs would be developed to document the progress made by developing countries in improving the nutrition and health of their populations to levels approaching or equal to those of the industrialized countries. A planning meeting was held in Costa Rica in October.

ACC activities. The Sub-Committee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) held two sessions in 1990. At its sixteenth session (Paris, 19-23 February) [ACC/1990/PG/8], the Sub-Committee drew to ACC's attention a statement that it had approved on nutrition, health and school performance. It requested ACC to endorse another statement on malnutrition and infection. The Sub-Committee also examined work in progress in the following areas: women and household food security; coping with economic deterioration; preparations for the International Conference on Nutrition to be held in 1992; the iodine and vitamin A programmes; iron deficiency; nutritional surveillance; preparations for an ad hoc group meeting on nutrition policy; assessment of flows of external resources relevant to nutrition; uses of anthropometry; nutrition in times of disaster; dried skim milk feeding in refugee camps; managing successful nutrition programmes; institution building; the activities of the International Dietary Energy Consultative Group; progress made with the UNU International Network Food Data Bases (INFOODS) and International Food Intake Directory (INFID) projects; rapid assessment procedures for nutrition and primary health care; the work of the Inter-Agency Group for Action on Breast-feeding; and nutrition and structural adjustment.

At its seventeenth session (Geneva, 24-26 July) [ACC/1990/PG/10], the Sub-Committee discussed preparations by FAO and WHO for the 1992 International Conference on Nutrition, which would provide an opportunity for an integrated and convergent approach to solving nutritional problems. The Sub-Committee endorsed a proposal for an international decade on food and nutrition in Africa and adopted a statement regarding a pellagra (deficiency of nicotinic acid) outbreak in refugee camps in Malawi, in which it urged donor agencies to allot resources for foods or procedures to minimize the risk of serious micronutrient deficiencies among refugees receiving food rations.

At its first regular session (Vienna, Austria, 2-4 May) [ACC/1990/DEC/1-14], ACC adopted the Sub-Committee's statements on nutrition, health and school performance [dec. 1990/10] and on malnutrition and infection: technical and programmatic implications [dec. 1990/11].

UNICEF action. The UNICEF Executive Board (New York, 16-27 April) [E/1990/28 (dec. 1990/19)] endorsed the nutritional goals of controlling protein-energy malnutrition and micronutrient deficiency disorders for the year 2000. It further endorsed a proposed strategy to achieve the objective of empowering families, communities and Governments to improve the nutrition of women and children (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV).

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/207 of 21 December, noted the decision of FAO and WHO jointly to convene an International Conference on Nutrition in 1992 and stressed the need for the Conference to focus on specific rules and practical action. It called upon the international community to support that effort as a basis for concerted national and international action to tackle the problems of malnutrition, undernutrition and specific nutrition-related diseases and conditions in the 1990s.

Chapter XII

Social and cultural development, crime prevention and human resources

The United Nations continued in 1990 to disseminate data on the world social situation, particularly in regard to the developing countries, in order to promote policy measures based on accurate knowledge of the specific interrelationships among economic growth, human development and social progress in the achievement of overall development. It moreover continued to examine the question of social justice and ways in which it could be achieved for all.

A major event of the year was the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in Havana, Cuba, in August/September. It adopted 28 substantive resolutions and recommended to the General Assembly 13 draft instruments and resolutions that emerged from its deliberations on international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice; criminal justice policies in relation to problems of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures; effective national and international action against organized crime and terrorist criminal activities; and policy approaches to delinquency prevention, juvenile justice and protection of the young.

The Assembly welcomed the Congress resolutions and instruments and invited Governments to be guided by them when formulating legislation and policy directives. In adopting the Congress recommendations on international co-operation for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development, the Assembly called for the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, as the only professional and specialized entity within the UN system with overall responsibility for its crime prevention and criminal justice programme, to be strengthened in terms of both human and financial resources. On the basis of a report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the Assembly established an intergovernmental working group to elaborate proposals for an effective crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to suggest how it could be implemented.

In taking note of the Secretary-General's report on developing human resources for development and of the human-centred approach to the development process set out in the Human Development Report 1990, sponsored by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Assembly called on the international community to support the efforts of developing countries in human resources development, in accordance with their national priorities and plans, through, among other means, operational activities of the UN system. It encouraged the Secretary-General to continue to explore new modalities for greater interfacing among autonomous UN research bodies in order to enhance co-operation among them. It also appealed for financial contributions to the Endowment Fund of the United Nations University and to the University for Peace to ensure their smooth operation.

In observance of 1990 as International Literacy Year, the World Conference on Education for All was held in Jomtien, Thailand, in March. Sponsored by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Bank, the Conference adopted the World Declaration on Education for All and a Framework for Action to Meet Basic Learning Needs.

Social and cultural development

Social aspects of development

World social situation

In March, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a supplement [A/45/137-E/1990/35] to the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation [Sales No. E.89.IV.1]. Prepared in response to Council resolution 1989/72 [YUN 1989, p. 602], the supplementary report provided an overview of general trends in the main indicators of the social situation and living standards world wide in the 1980s—output, consumption and investment per capita, government expenditure on social services, literacy and education levels, nutrition levels, infant mortality and life expectancy at birth-particularly in developing countries. It analysed the relationship between trends in the world economy and in the social situation, including projections in economic conditions, population, health and education to the year 2000, traced the impact of structural adjustment and of the developing countries' external indebtedness on the social situation and examined the likely impact on the 1990s of developments in the 1980s, especially the substantially changed perceptions as to the nature of policies to address economic and social problems and public demand for government accountability.

The report found that although sustained high growth in Asia's larger countries ensured that one third of the total population in developing countries benefited from a growth rate in gross domestic product (GDP) per capita exceeding 3 per cent a year in the 1980s, in the remaining two thirds it grew by no more than 1 per cent a year. At the end of the decade, some 20 per cent of the world's population, or about 1 billion people, lived in conditions of absolute poverty, of whom 55 per cent were concentrated in Asia and 38 per cent in Africa. There was ample evidence of a deterioration in living conditions and an aggravation of problems of poverty in virtually all major regions of developing countries; on the other hand, progress was possible in some areas in spite of economic difficulties, notably in health.

The report noted the strong correlation between economic and social conditions; thus, in countries where the GDP per capita was high, so were the social indicators. Several developing countries with low GDP per capita, however, had been able to secure some social conditions not far distant from those in high-income developed countries, due especially to public intervention to secure more egalitarian patterns of growth and access to social services, including provision of nutrition, health and education. New priorities arising from growth in population and changes in its composition, as well as a rapidly growing labour force and the increasing complexity and technical sophistication of all economies, would require involvement principally of Governments but also of private institutions in economic and social development.

Slow growth, stagnation and declines in per capita income adversely affected the social situation in developing countries, especially in Africa and Latin America, in many of which living conditions were lower in 1989 than they were in 1970. Apart from natural disasters, military conflicts and other calamities, structural adjustment and external indebtedness also had distinct effects on the social situation. Transfers abroad to service debt directly reduced resources for domestic use. All these contributed to reducing current and future levels of investment and living standards.

Prospects for improvements in social conditions at the beginning of the 1990s, however, seemed far more propitious than at the beginning of the previous decade. Regional conflicts that caused enormous social misery had concluded or were proceeding to conclusion. Dramatic new opportunities had been opened for reducing armaments and expenditures on them. There was a fresh wind bringing countries together in co-operative endeavour seeking solutions to such global problems as acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), illicit drug production and trafficking and drug abuse, and environmental degradation. The evolution of the European Economic Community into one market presaged opportunities for faster growth in the Community's economies. Rapid changes in political and economic institutions in the USSR and Eastern Europe were likely to release new energies spurred by new incentives. The widespread application of new technologies that came into their own in the 1980s were expected to raise productivity, especially in developed countries.

The principal challenge of development in the 1990s, the report stated, was to reverse the negative trends that characterized the 1980s—problems of poverty on a mass scale, persistent malnutrition, recurrent starvation of large masses in sub-Saharan Africa—the necessary condition for which lay in the lightening of international debt burdens, as well as in a more open trading system. While the case for State provision of certain essential functions to improve social conditions remained unquestioned, a more dynamic private initiative had increasingly been seen as an important source of impulses to social and economic development. Barrier-breaking communications technologies and economic changes that accelerated the movement of ideas, capital and people in the 1980s had resulted in the emergence of a strengthened perception of a shared destiny of all mankind.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/28.

World social situation

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/72 of 24 May 1989 and taking note of General Assembly resolution 44/56 of 8 December 1989,

Bearing in mind that in paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 44/56 the Secretary-General was requested to submit an interim report on the world social situation to the Assembly in 1991, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind also paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1989/72,

Having considered the supplement to the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation,

Noting with satisfaction that the supplement takes into account the concerns and guidelines specified in Council resolution 1989/72.

Bearing in mind the importance of the report on the world social situation for increasing awareness of the advances made towards the goals of social progress and better standards of living, established in the Charter of the United Nations, and of the obstacles to further progress,

Concerned about the worsening economic situation in many developing countries, particularly that of the least developed countries, including the significant decline in living conditions, the persistence and increase of widespread poverty in a large number of countries and the decrease of the main social and economic indicators of those countries,

Believing that there is a need for greater efforts by the United Nations system to study and disseminate data on the existing world social situation, particularly in regard to the developing countries,

1. Decides to include in the agenda of its first regular session of 1991, bearing in mind paragraph 13 of General Assembly resolution 44/56, an item entitled "World social situation", for the purpose of considering, inter alia, the interim report on the world social situation and the report requested in paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1989/72;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the interim report, to take into account paragraph 4 of Council resolution 1989/72, in which the Secretary-General was requested, in preparing the 1993 report, to give high priority to an analysis of the main indicators of social progress and standards of living, and to make a comprehensive analysis of the main causes and circumstances that explain negative trends in those indicators; chapters devoted to the study of specific social problems were to be related to global economic and social situations, taking into account both national and international conditions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/87.

World social situation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1392(XIV) of 20 November 1959, 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 40/98 and 40/100 of 13 December 1985, 42/49 of 30 November 1987, 43/113 of 8 December 1988 and 44/56 of 8 December 1989 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/39, 1987/40, 1987/46 and 1987/52 of 28 May 1987, 1989/72 of 24 May 1989 and Council decision

1989/113 of 28 July 1989, and taking note of Council resolution 1990/28 of 24 May 1990.

Bearing in mind the objective of improving the well-being of the world's population on the basis of the full and equal participation of all members of society in the process of development and the fair distribution to them of the benefits therefrom,

Conscious that each country has the sovereign right freely to adopt the economic and social system that it deems the most appropriate and that each Government has the primary responsibility of ensuring the social progress and well-being of the people,

Convinced of the urgent need to eradicate policies and practices that hinder social progress, including racism and racial discrimination, in particular apartheid,

Convinced also that the pace of development in the developing countries should be accelerated substantially in order to enable them to achieve that objective, especially to meet the basic needs for food, housing, education, employment and health care and to struggle against scourges which endanger the health and well-being of their population,

Deeply concerned about the worsening economic situation in many developing countries, particularly in the least developed countries, as evidenced by the significant decline in living conditions, the persistence and increase of widespread poverty in a large number of countries and the decline of the main social and economic indicators of those countries,

Bearing in mind the importance of the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation for increasing awareness of the advances made towards the goals of social progress and better standards of living, established in the Charter of the United Nations, and of the obstacles to further progress,

Believing that there is a need for greater efforts by the United Nations system to study and disseminate data on the existing world social situation, particularly in regard to the developing countries,

Taking note of the deliberations on the question of the world social situation by the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1990,

Having considered the supplement to the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation.

1. Notes with satisfaction that the supplement to the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation takes into account the concerns and guidelines specified in General Assembly resolution 44/56 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/72;

2. Recalls the 1989 Report on the World Social Situation, in particular the information on the critical situation in Africa contained in the annex to the report;

3. Notes with satisfaction the increasing awareness of the importance of formulating policy measures at all levels based on the interrelationships between economic growth, human development and social progress in the achievement of overall development;

4. Notes with deep concern the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation in many developing countries, in particular in the least developed countries, whose numbers have increased over the years;

5. Notes also with deep concern the substantial weakening of the overall position of the developing countries in international trade and finance, which has been made worse by a long-term downward trend in commodity prices, a serious deterioration in the terms of trade, the net transfer of resources from developing countries, protectionism and the serious debt burden, combined with high real interest rates;

6. Reaffirms the commitments and policies for international development co-operation as set out in the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, adopted by the General Assembly at its eighteenth special session;

7. Reaffirms also the principles and objectives of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and calls for their effective realization as a means of attaining a more equitable world social situation;

8. Calls upon all Member States to promote economic development and social progress by the formulation and implementation of an interrelated set of policy measures to achieve the goals and objectives established within the framework of national plans and priorities for employment, education, health, nutrition, housing facilities, crime prevention, the well-being of children, equal opportunities for the disabled and the aging, full participation of youth in the development process and full integration and participation of women in development;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue monitoring the world social situation in depth on a regular basis and, in accordance with paragraph 10 of resolution 44/56, to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, and a full report in 1993;

10. Endorses the request of the Economic and Social Council, in paragraph 2 of its resolution 1990/28, that the Secretary-General take into account, in preparing the interim report, paragraph 4 of Council resolution 1989/72;

11. Also endorses the request made in paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1989/72 regarding the submission of a report by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the work being done within the United Nations system to improve and further develop quantitative and qualitative indicators that measure accurately the social condition and the standard of living of the world's population, particularly in developing countries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements to ensure the wider dissemination of reports on the world social situation;

13. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the preparation of future reports by making available all relevant information pertaining to their respective areas of competence and, in this connection, requests the Secretary-General to convene an inter-agency meeting before the preparation of the report;

14. Decides to include the item entitled "World social situation" in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session for the purpose of considering, inter alia, the interim report and the report mentioned in paragraph 11 above, and in the provisional agenda of its forty-eighth session for the purpose of considering the next full report in 1993.

Achievement of social justice

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/25.

Achievement of social justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 42/49 of 30 November 1987 and 44/55 of 8 December 1989 and Council resolutions 1988/46 of May 1988 and 1989/71 of 24 May 1989,

Recalling also the pledge made by States Members of the United Nations in the Charter to take joint and separate action to promote higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Recognizing that more extensive international and regional co-operation is important for promoting social justice,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, social progress and development must be founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person and must ensure the promotion of human rights and social justice,

Mindful of the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the International Plan of Action on Aging, Persuaded of the importance of taking measures to ensure co-ordination within the United Nations system in order to develop a comprehensive approach to developmental social welfare, including better integrated and mutually supportive economic and social development policies, aimed at the achievement of social justice,

1. Confirms that social justice is one of the most important goals of social progress;
2. Reaffirm that the common purpose of the international community must be to forge from varied economic, social and political conditions a global environment of sustained development, full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms and social justice and peace;
3. Reaffirms the importance of co-operation among countries in the promotion of a climate conducive to the achievement by individual countries of the goals of development and social justice and progress;
4. Considers that such co-operation and the promotion thereof should continue to be a major focus of activities of the United Nations in accordance with the principles of the Charter;
5. Calls upon Member States, in elaborating policies in the field of social development and the social situation of all population groups, to take into consideration the importance of achieving social justice for all;
6. Recommends that the Secretary-General, in preparing studies and reports on social problems, examine the question of social justice and the ways in which it can be achieved;
7. Requests the Commission for Social Development to consider the question of social justice and possible avenues of international co-operation for promoting social progress.

Guiding Principles for Social Welfare Policies and Programmes

Negative social consequences of alcohol use

On 18 September, Norway transmitted to the Secretary-General a report on the Expert Meeting on the Negative Social Consequences of Alcohol Use (Oslo, 27-31 August) [A/C.3/45/3]. The Meeting was organized in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/49 [YUN 1989, p. 609], which had requested the Secretary-General to consider following up the recommendations of the 1987 Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes [YUN 1987, p. 616] by, inter alia, carrying out a study on the negative social consequences of alcohol use, based on the report of an expert meeting. Convened by Norway's Ministry of Health and Social Affairs with substantive support by the UN Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in Vienna, the Meeting sought to identify those social measures that might appropriately be taken in different national circumstances, as well as at the international level, to meet the challenges posed by the negative social consequences of alcohol use. It discussed trends in alcohol consumption and the economic importance of production and trade in alcohol; the economic and social costs of alcohol consumption; the socio-cultural differences in alcohol-related behaviour; and prevention and limitation of alcohol-related damage.

The Meeting recommended that the Secretary-General assign high priority to questions concerning the negative social consequences of alcohol use in the work programmes related to social development, advancement of women, crime prevention, youth, children and human settlements; include the topic in the follow-up to the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future [YUN 1987, p. 616]; initiate studies and organize technical meetings aimed at developing improved indicators of social problems related to alcohol use and at increasing understanding of the prevalence and causes of such problems in order to facilitate prevention; incorporate alcohol-related themes in the preparatory work for the International Year of the Family in 1994; initiate preparations to convene by 1994 a global conference on the social, economic and environmental impact of alcohol production and consumption on development; and undertake studies, provide technical advisory services and organize policy-oriented meetings targeted to wards developing countries' needs in alcohol control. Other recommendations called for seeking donor assistance for the foregoing activities and for bringing the Meeting's report and recommendations to the attention of the Commission for Social Development and other relevant commissions, committees and specialized agencies for appropriate follow-up action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/134.

Follow-up to the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, and the negative social consequences of alcohol use

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987, in which, inter alia it endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, adopted by the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/49 of 24 May 1989 concerning the follow-up to the Guiding Principles, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to carry out a study on the negative social consequences of alcohol use, based on the report of an expert meeting to be convened on the question,

Convinced that the dangerous dimension of alcohol use requires sustained action for the implementation of a comprehensive international response, based on a common-effort by all States,

1. Notes with appreciation the holding of the Expert Meeting on the Negative Social Consequences of Alcohol Use at Oslo from 27 to 31 August 1990, which was convened by the Government of Norway with the substantive support of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

2. Takes note of the report of the Expert Meeting and requests the Secretary-General to make the report available to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session;

3. Invites Member States to submit their comments on the report of the Expert Meeting to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-second session;

4. Requests the Commission for Social Development to report on its discussions of the report and the comments from Member States to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1991 with proposals for future action.

The family

international Year of the Family (1994)

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/82 [YUN 1989, p. 612], which had proclaimed 1994 as the International Year of the Family, the Secretary-General reported in August [A/45/365] regarding preparations for the Year's observance. He explained that, as at 1 July, the responses received from Governments, the UN system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to his invitation for suggestions on a draft programme for the Year were insufficient to serve as the basis for formulating a representative programme. Follow-up action was undertaken, however, and consultations had begun with a selected number of NGOs, as well as with the NGO Standing Committee of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). Contacts had been established with organizations and agencies of the UN system for the development of a system-wide co-ordinated approach and action. A number of research institutes were being identified to co-operate with the United Nations in disseminating information on their work relating to the family.

In addition, the Secretary-General had designated the Director of the Social Development Division of the United Nations Office at Vienna as Co-ordinator for the Year and had established an organizational secretariat within the Social Development Division of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat. Negotiations with Governments had begun for the temporary loan of experts and consultants to work closely with the Secretariat on specific family-related issues.

In December 1990, the Secretary-General submitted the requested draft programme [E/CN.5/1991/2] to the Commission for Social Development for its consideration in February 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/133.

International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Guided by the resolve of the peoples of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, with a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being, which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations between nations,

Guided also by the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, according to which the widest possible protection and assistance should be accorded to the family,

Bearing in mind the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and recalling that by its resolution 42/125 of 7 December 1987 it endorsed the Guiding Principles for Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes in the Near Future, which called for social welfare policies to give greater attention to the family,

Welcoming the entry into force on 2 September 1990 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the successful conclusion of the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, in particular the adoption of the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s,

Recalling its resolutions 42/134 of 7 December 1987 and 43/135 of 8 December 1988 on the need to enhance international co-operation in the field of the protection of and assistance to the family, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1983/23 of 26 May 1983, 1985/29 of 29 May 1985 and 1989/54 of 24 May 1989,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 44/82 of 8 December 1989, in which it proclaimed 1994 as the International Year of the Family and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a draft programme for the preparation for and observance of the Year,

Confident that the Year will offer a unique opportunity for mobilizing efforts, particularly at the local and national levels, to highlight the importance of the family, promote a better understanding of its functions and problems and strengthen national institutions to formulate, implement and monitor policies in respect of the family,

Aware that for the Year to be successful and for its impact and practical efficiency to be maximized, adequate preparation and the widespread support of all Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the public are required.

Recognizing the efforts made by Governments at the local and national levels in carrying out specific programmes concerning the family, in which the United Nations may have an important role to play, and in raising awareness, increasing understanding and promoting policies that improve the position and well-being of the family,

Stressing the significant role that non-governmental organizations may play in the preparation and implementation of the programme for the Year,

Taking into account its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 concerning guidelines for international years and anniversaries,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General, prepared in pursuance of its resolution 44/82;

2. Welcomes the designation by the Secretary-General of a Co-ordinator for the International Year of the Family and the establishment of an organizational secretariat for the Year within the Social Development Division of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat;

3. Invites Governments to contribute resources, including staff, to the organizational secretariat;

4. Affirms that the major activities for the observance of the Year should be concentrated at the local and national levels and assisted by the United Nations and its system of organizations, with a view to creating among Governments, policy-makers and the public a greater awareness of the family as the natural and fundamental unit of society;

5. Invites all Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, as well as interested national organizations, to exert all possible efforts in the preparation for and observance of the Year and to co-operate with the Secretary-General in achieving the objectives of the Year;

6. Appeals to the Governments that have not yet done so to make known to the Secretary-General their views on the preparation for and observance of the Year in order to ensure an adequate basis for formulating the programme for the Year;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to finalize a draft programme for the preparation for and observance of the Year and to submit it for consideration by the Commission for Social Development at its session in 1991 and by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

8. Requests the Commission for Social Development to give priority consideration at its session in 1991 to the draft programme for the Year;

9. Invites the Commission for Social Development to ensure that all plans, programmes and activities related to the family accord with the concept of equality between women and men as expressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and with the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and to ensure the incorporation of the principles relating to policies aimed at fostering equality between women and men, as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General, into the programme for the Year;

10. Requests the Commission for Social Development to inform the Commission on the Status of Women on the preparations for the Year;

11. Invites all States to take prompt action to establish national mechanisms, such as co-ordinating committees, to prepare for, observe and follow up the Year, in particular for the purpose of planning, stimulating and harmonizing the activities of the governmental and non-governmental agencies and organizations concerned with the preparation for and observance of the Year;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a voluntary fund for the preparation for and observance of the Year and invites all States and interested organizations to contribute to that fund,

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue taking specific measures, through all the communication media at his disposal, to give widespread publicity to the activities of the United Nations system in the area of family issues and to increase the dissemination of information on the family;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the progress made in the preparations for the Year, and to include therein recommendations and comments made by the preparatory and co-ordinating bodies for the Year;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "International Year of the Family".

Institutional machinery

UN Research Institute for Social Development

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued in 1990 to implement the research programme approved by its Board of Directors in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 609], to expand and diversify financial support for the Institute's activities and to widen technical cooperation with international agencies and other research institutes.

According to its November report [E/CN.5/1991/6] to the Commission for Social Development, UNRISD completed its country case-studies for projects dealing with food policy in the world recession and with patterns of consumption and related qualitative indicators of development. Studies were under way on projects dealing with crisis, adjustment and social change; ethnic conflict and development; sustainable development through people's participation in resource management; and the two continuing projects on refugees. The ground was laid for launching studies under projects concerning social participation and the social impact of changes in ownership relations in production; political violence and social movements; women, environment and population; and the social dynamics of deforestation in developing countries. The initial phase of a new project dealing with the socio-economic and political consequences of the international trade in illicit drugs was completed, and preparations for case-studies on that project were under way.

UNRISD continued to carry out its research programme in collaboration with national research teams and scholars drawn from local universities and other research institutes from all parts of the world, with strong representation from developing countries.

During the year, UNRISD published a number of reports, three monographs and eight discussion papers. It also published the second and third issues of UNRISD News, providing information on UNRISD research and other activities.

The 1990 budget and cash flow of UNRISD reflected a sound financial position resulting from increased core contributions and project funding, a continuing effort to control expenses and growing co-operation with other organizations in programme implementation. Funds available for expenditure were expected to total $2,709,526. Expenditure was expected to total $2,650,000, including the transfer of an additional $50,000 into the operating reserve, bringing that reserve to $250,000.

Commission for Social Development

The Commission for Social Development, which met biennially, was not convened in 1990.

By decision 1990/286 of 9 November, the Economic and Social Council decided that the Commission's thirty-second session, which was to have been held in Vienna from 13 to 22 February 1991, would be held from 11 to 20 February,

Cultural development

World Decade for Cultural Development

In May, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/277-E/1990/77] to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council relating to the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), proclaimed by Assembly resolution 41/187 [YUN 1986, p. 624]. The report summarized replies received from nine Governments and seven UN organs and specialized agencies to the Secretary-General's request for views on the objectives and scope of the global mid-Decade review in 1993. The Secretary-General said that, due to the small number of replies received, it was difficult to arrive at definitive conclusions that would be representative of the world community's view on the subject. Nevertheless, the information received supported in principle the idea of conducting a mid-term review and evaluation of the implementation of the goals of the Decade. Some replies proposed the convening of an international conference in 1993 for that purpose, with the Intergovernmental Committee for the Decade, established within UNESCO, to serve as the preparatory body. Other replies proposed carrying out the evaluation in the form of seminars, expert meetings, consultations and other forums at the regional level under UN and UNESCO auspices. Some Governments, referring to the very broad spectrum of objectives in the Decade's action plan, as well as to the lack of financial resources, suggested that a mid-Decade review should concentrate on reconsidering some of the objectives and setting out concrete tasks for the second half of the Decade. Suggested for discussion during the review were objectives such as the cultural aspects of the socio-economic development of developing countries, especially the least developed among them, questions of cultural identity, cultural property and heritage, and problems of a great number of ethnic groups within a single State.

In an October addendum [A/45/277/Add.1-E/1990/77/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted a summary of the views received from an additional six Governments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/88.

World Decade for Cultural Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/238 of 22 December 1989, in which the Assembly expressed its support for the conduct of an evaluation at the mid-point of the World Decade for Cultural Development, in 1993, under the auspices of the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Taking into account its own resolution 1989/107 of 27 July 1989,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the mid-term review of the World Decade for Cultural Development;

2. Invites the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue their inquiry into the appropriate means for undertaking a mid-term review of the World Decade for Cultural Development.

Meeting 37

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/116) without vote, 24 July (meeting 17); draft by Bolivia for Group of 77 (E/1990/C.3/L.15), revised following informal consultations; agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/189.

World Decade for Cultural Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/187 of 8 December 1986, in which it proclaimed the period of 1988-1997 the World Decade for Cultural Development,

Taking into account its resolution 44/238 of 22 December 1989, in which it expressed its support for the conduct of an evaluation at the mid-point of the World Decade for Cultural Development, in 1993, under the auspices of the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in order to evaluate the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Decade,

Taking into account paragraph 87 of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, in which it was stated, inter alia, that each country has to choose its approach to human resource and institutional development in accordance with its national priorities, values, traditions and culture and stage of development,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/88 of 27 July 1990,

Welcoming the progress made by Member States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and international non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the Plan of Action for the World Decade for Cultural Development,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the mid-term review of the World Decade for Cultural Development;

2. Reaffirms its support for a mid-term review to assess the progress made in implementing the Plan of Action for the Decade and to make proposals to further strengthen activities in this area, taking into account the changing circumstances and the new realities in the international community;

3. Invites the regional commissions, in consultation with Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to carry out, within existing resources, an evaluation of the cultural factors influencing the development of the cultural sector as a potential creator of jobs and generator of income, for consideration at the mid-term review of the Decade, in 1993;

4. Recommends that the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system consider including activities relating to the Decade in the programme for the biennium 1992-1993, and requests them to co-ordinate those activities;

5. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to include specific proposals on the modalities of a mid-term review, taking into account the views of Governments, in the second biennial report on progress in the implementation of the World Decade for Cultural Development, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

6. Decides to include, on a biennial basis in its provisional agenda for subsequent sessions, a sub-item entitled "World Decade for Cultural Development" under the item entitled "Development and international economic co-operation".

Revival of the Library of Alexandria

On 12 March [A/45/169-E/1990/45], Egypt transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the Aswan Declaration on the revival of the Library of Alexandria, issued by the inaugural session of the International Commission for the Revival of the Ancient Library of Alexandria (Aswan, 13 February). By the Declaration, the Commission stated that, under the patronage of the President of Egypt, Hosni Mubarak, the Government was seeking, in co-operation with UNESCO and financial support from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other public and private sources, to revive the ancient library in Alexandria by restating its legacy in modern terms. The ancient Library of Alexandria and its associated museum, the Commission continued, gave birth to a new intellectual dynamic. By gathering together all the known sources of knowledge and organizing them for the purposes of scholarly study and investigation, they marked the foundation of the modern notion of the research foundation.

The new Alexandria Library, to be constructed on the site of the palace of the Ptolemies, would give modern expression to an ancient endeavour. A contemporary design had been adopted through an international architecture competition and plans had been drawn up for a facility with the latest computer technology to serve as a research library, open to researchers from all over the world. Its specialized collections would relate to Egyptian, Middle-Eastern and Greek civilizations, the birth of Coptic Christianity, and the theo-Islamic heritage, with special emphasis on the history of science and on works that likely would have been contained in the original library. Bibliotheca Alexandrina would be a link with the past and an opening into the future. It would be unique in being the first library on such a scale to be designed and constructed with the assistance of the international community, acting through the UN system.

The International Commission reiterated the 1987 appeal made by the UNESCO Director-General to all Governments, international organizations and NGOs, public and private institutions, funding agencies, librarians, archivists and the people of all countries to participate by means of voluntary contributions of all kinds in the effort to revive the Library of Alexandria.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 11 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/2.

Revival of the ancient Library of Alexandria

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind Articles 13, 55 and 57 of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the promotion of international co-operation in cultural and educational fields,

Affirming the vital importance of preserving the cultural heritage of societies,

Aware of the four main objectives of the World Decade for Cultural Development set out in General Assembly resolution 41/187 of 8 December 1986,

Welcoming the progress made by Member States and by international, regional, governmental and non-governmental organizations towards the development of activities within the framework of the Decade,

Taking note of the Aswan Declaration, regarding the project undertaken by the Government of Egypt aimed at the revival of the ancient Library of Alexandria,

1. Welcomes the goals of the project, which are outlined in the Aswan Declaration;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation for the valuable support provided by the organs and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Development Programme, as well as by donor countries, for the efforts of the Government of Egypt aimed at the revival of the historical heritage of the Library of Alexandria, which, owing to its multidisciplinary and international character, will serve Egypt as well as the world at large;

3. Invites the international community to continue to lend support for the efforts of the Government of Egypt to fulfil the various goals set out in the Aswan Declaration.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Implementation of Seventh (1985) Crime Congress recommendations

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/72 [YUN 1989, p. 615], the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/45/324] on the implementation of the resolutions and recommendations of the Seventh (1985) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders [YUN 1985, p. 738]. It was prepared on the basis of new information received from 23 Governments on the subject and on information previously received from six other Governments which, because of timing, could not be included in the Secretary-General's 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 615]. The report updated information on: the Milan Plan of Action and the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order [YUN 1985, p. 738 & 742]; crime prevention in connection with law reform and socio-economic development; improvements in national criminal justice systems; measures against national discrimination and apartheid and against the most serious forms of crime; and international collaboration against organized crime, illicit drug trafficking and terrorism. Also updated were measures taken towards the effective organization of criminal justice systems and administration of justice, as well as towards the implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice [YUN 1985, pp. 743 & 747].

The Secretary-General stated that criminal code and procedure reforms had been undertaken in a large number of countries and widely disseminated. The police and the judicial and corrections systems were being restructured to strengthen their efficacy in upholding the rule of law. There was also an evident trend towards decriminalization of minor offences so as to allow greater attention to the control of more serious crime. Member States had intensified their struggle against the most serious forms of crime, including organized crime, terrorism, illicit drug trafficking and environmental and economic offences. The promulgation and application of laws and regulations to control and combat such crimes had often resulted from international treaties and instruments. Developing countries, however, had voiced concern about serious handicaps in their implementation efforts, such as the lack of skilled personnel and the absence of training opportunities and of technological and material means, compounded by the economic, social and human costs of crime. The information received underlined interest in UN advisory services and other types of aid and pointed out that national programmes had not always received appropriate international assistance. The report noted that the UN recommendations constituted policy guidelines by which Governments could assess and direct their efforts and provided a basis for harmonizing national legislations and for viable cooperation among States.

Eighth UN Crime Congress

Congress preparations

The Secretary-General's 1989 report [E/AC.57/1990/51] on preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was submitted to the Economic and Social Council through the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its eleventh session in February 1990. That report described the substantive preparations, including regional preparatory meetings, as well as the organizational preparations, setting out, among other arrangements, the proposed organization of work of the Congress and details of proposed workshops and ancillary meetings to be held during the Congress.

As the preparatory body for the Eighth Congress, the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control recommended for transmission to the Congress, through the Council, draft resolutions on: international co-operation for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development; the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice; a draft model treaty for the prevention of crimes that infringed on the cultural heritage of peoples in the form of movable property; the role of criminal law in the protection of nature and the environment; UN standard minimum rules for non-custodial measures (the Tokyo rules); prevention of urban crime; management of criminal justice and the development of sentencing policies; basic principles for the treatment of prisoners; computerization of criminal justice; prevention and control of organized crime; terrorist criminal activities; other draft model treaties on extradition, on the transfer of proceedings and mutual assistance in criminal matters, and on the transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released; UN guidelines for the prevention of juvenile delinquency; UN rules for the protection of juveniles deprived of their liberty; basic principles on the use of force and firearms by law enforcement officials; basic principles on the role of lawyers; and guidelines on the role of prosecutors. In addition, the Committee adopted a resolution recommending that the Eighth Congress consider the establishment, under UN auspices, of a world foundation on crime control and assistance to victims.

An April report [E/1990/36] of the Secretary-General noted that the new draft instruments annexed to some of those draft resolutions should make a significant contribution to the development of international law and standards in crime prevention and criminal justice.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/23.

Continuation of preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 415(V) of 1 December 1950, 32/60 of 8 December 1977, 41/107 of 4 December 1986, 42/59 of 30 November 1987, 43/99 of 8 December 1988 and 44/72 of 8 December 1989,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/49 of 28 May 1987 and 1989/69 of 24 May 1989,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council have reaffirmed in numerous resolutions the importance of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders as global events providing a forum for the exchange of expertise and experience in priority areas and for the development of policy options and international co-operation in the field of crime,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the continuation of preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

1. Takes note of the reports of the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in 1989;

2. Approves the organization of work for the Eighth Congress, as proposed by the Secretary-General in his report;

3. Commends the Secretary-General of the Eighth Congress for the important work done in preparing for the Congress, in spite of the limited resources available;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, which, as the preparatory body for the Congress, has provided overall guidance;

5. Endorses the recommendations contained in the reports of the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress, as reviewed by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, and recommends that the Congress approve them;

6. Approves the documentation for the Eighth Congress, which was reviewed by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth and eleventh sessions;

7. Notes with satisfaction the preparations for the two workshops to be held during the Eighth Congress, one on alternatives to imprisonment and the other on computerization of the administration of criminal justice;

8. Invites all Governments to attend the Eighth Congress at the highest appropriate level;

9. Invites Governments to finalize their national preparations for the Eighth Congress, including the submission of national papers, and to consider including members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and national correspondents in their delegations to the Congress;

10. Welcomes the organization of ancillary meetings of professional groups during the Congress;

11. Urges the regional commissions, the regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and the treatment of offenders, the specialized agencies and other entities within the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations concerned, non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, professional organizations and experts to attend the Eighth Congress;

12. Decides to transmit to the Eighth Congress the draft resolutions recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its eleventh session.

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/69) without vote, 11 May (meeting 11); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1990/31), orally amended by Italy; agenda item 5.

Convening of Congress

The Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was held in Havana, Cuba, from 27 August to 7 September 1990, in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/69 [YUN 1989, p. 620]. At its opening meeting on 27 August, the Congress elected Juan Escalona Reguera, President of the National Assembly of the People's Power of the Republic of Cuba, as President of the Congress. The Director-General of the United Nations Office at Vienna served as Secretary-General of the Congress and the Chief of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs served as Executive Secretary.

In attendance were delegations from 127 States, observers from Palestine and the African National Congress, officials of 19 UN offices and organs and of two UN specialized agencies, and representatives of six intergovernmental organizations and 46 NGOs. The participants numbered over 1,200, among whom were 350 experts.

In his message to the Congress, the Secretary-General highlighted the importance of UN congresses such as the current one in that they influenced national policies on crime prevention and treatment of offenders. He called for devising new and more effective means of international co-operation to prevent crime, reduce victimization and improve the quality of justice. He emphasized that the Congress provided a unique opportunity to examine such key problems as terrorism, organized crime and corruption, as well as the penal protection of the environment, to assess the measures taken and to devise a global strategy.

Under the overall theme of "International co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice for the twenty-first century", the agenda included five topics: crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development: realities and perspectives of international co-operation; criminal justice policies in relation to problems of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures; effective national and international action against organized crime and terrorist criminal activities; prevention of delinquency, juvenile justice and the protection of the young; policy approaches and directions; and UN norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard-setting.

During the Congress, two workshops were held: one, on alternatives to imprisonment, focusing on research; the other, on computerization of criminal justice information, with practical demonstrations. A special meeting on technical co-operation for participants from developing and potential donor countries was held, as was a meeting of national correspondents. A series of ancillary meetings was organized by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, which dealt with community participation in corrections; local crime prevention policies; children deprived of their liberty; conditions of prisoners awaiting trial in Latin America and Western Europe; priorities for penal reform; prevention and prosecution of computer crime; domestic violence; strategies for increasing the use of alternatives to imprisonment; abolition of the death penalty; recidivism; implementation of the basic principles embodied in the UN declaration on victims; independence of the judiciary; drugs and drug-related crime; implementation of UN standards and rules; and restoration as an alternative approach to justice. Meetings of regional groups and of special professional interest groups were also held.

The Congress recommended 13 draft instruments and resolutions for adoption by the General Assembly and adopted 3 other instruments and 30 resolutions and a decision. One resolution concerned the approval of the Credentials Committee report and another expressed thanks to the people and Government of Cuba for their hospitality. (See below for other resolutions.)

The Congress, on 7 September, adopted its report as a whole [A/CONF.144/28/Rev.1].

Congress instruments and resolutions

Following its deliberations on the agenda item on crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development: realities and perspectives of international co-operation, the Eighth Congress recommended two draft resolutions for General Assembly action and adopted 15 resolutions, one of which annexed an international instrument.

One of the two draft resolutions subsequently adopted by the Assembly was on international co-operation for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development, which embodied 29 recommendations for a wide range of measures addressed to Governments, as well as for concerted action to strengthen international scientific and technical co-operation in combating crime and to improve mechanisms for crime prevention and criminal justice (resolution 45/107). The other was on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice (resolution 45/108).

The Congress, by its resolution on prevention of urban crime, recommended that Member States develop appropriate policies and strategies relating to the family, children, youth, urban housing and community development, police and community co-operation, the justice system, the prevention of violence and recidivism as well as of alcohol, drugs and other substance abuse, crime victims, and publicizing existing social programmes in those areas. It invited the Secretary-General to develop the role of the UN Secretariat in initiating and co-ordinating crime prevention by various means, including establishing an international data bank and a foundation for crime prevention.

The resolution annexing the instrument on a model treaty for the prevention of crimes that infringed on the cultural heritage of peoples in the form of movable property recommended that Member States consider the model treaty as a framework for negotiating and drawing up bilateral agreements designed to improve co-operation in the prevention of such crimes and periodically to inform the Secretary-General of efforts to conclude such agreements. The related resolution on the use of an automated information exchange to combat crimes against movable cultural property requested the Secretary-General to arrange, in co-operation with Member States, intergovernmental, non-governmental and other organizations, for the creation of national and international computer data bases to be used in preventing and combating crime against cultural heritage and to contain information on stolen or illegally exported movable cultural property around the world, national legislation and international instruments on the protection of cultural heritage and measures to combat international traffic in movable cultural property; it further requested the Secretary-General to facilitate access to those data bases and to examine the feasibility of establishing a fund to be supported by revenues generated from their use.

The resolution on the role of criminal law in the protection of nature and the environment called on Member States to recognize the need to modify or enact and to enforce national criminal laws designed to protect nature and the environment, as well as people threatened by their deterioration; it asked the Secretary-General to encourage the incorporation, in future international conventions for the protection of the environment, of provisions under which States would be expected to enact sanctions under national criminal law, and to prepare a report every five years on developments in environmental criminal law.

In its resolution on computer-related crimes, the Congress, concerned by the increase of the abuse of computers as a modality of economic crime, recommended that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control promote international efforts and dissemination of comprehensive guidelines and standards to assist Member States to deal with such crimes nationally and internationally; it requested the Secretary-General to convene an ad hoc expert meeting to submit proposals for national and international action to the Committee and to consider producing a technical publication on the prevention and prosecution of computer-related crimes. The resolution on corruption in government recommended that Member States devise administrative and regulatory mechanisms for the prevention of corrupt practices on the abuse of power; endorsed the manual on practical measures against corruption and called for its wide dissemination; and requested the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch to develop a draft international code of conduct for public officials for submission to the Ninth (1995) United Nations Congress and to keep the issue of government corruption under constant review.

The resolution on organized crime invited the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to study the possible establishment of a universal and/or regional register of judicial sentences imposed for offences of trafficking in arms, drugs and persons, of terrorism, and against ecosystems and cultural property involving transnational modalities, or to explore the possibility of setting up an improved system of data and information exchange. In two related resolutions, one on racketeering and illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances called for intensified international response against such organized crimes, with due regard for human rights and States' sovereignty and territorial and political integrity; the other resolution, on measures against drug addiction, called on States to strengthen their national policies to combat drug addiction and called also on UN Members to develop and strengthen international co-operation to that end.

The resolution on international co-operation and mutual assistance through training programmes and exchange of expertise invited Member States to map out training programmes on crime prevention and criminal justice within their sphere of expertise and to make them available to Member States seeking training, irrespective of regional affiliation; it recommended that the United Nations act as the co-ordinating body, matching Members requiring specific training with those able to provide it. In its resolution on consolidation of the role of national correspondents, the Congress, recognizing that the current system of activating national correspondents with a view to gathering and exchanging information on criminal justice systems and crime patterns needed to be more effective, recommended defining the specific tasks expected of those correspondents and urged that, in fulfilling their functions, they pay particular attention to updating regularly the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network. The resolution on development of UN criminal justice statistical surveys called for the active involvement of Member States in the design and development of such surveys and requested the Secretary-General to appoint an ad hoc expert group to advise him on survey design, development, implementation and analysis and to make recommendations to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on how to involve Member States in survey development.

The resolution on the social aspects of crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development appealed to Member States to develop their economic policies with, inter alia, the aim of reducing crime by combating corruption, drug trafficking and any form of exploitation; considered that the social aspects of development, being an important factor in the achievement of the objectives of the strategy for crime prevention and criminal justice, should be given higher priority within the UN system; supported international action to protect the environment from further deterioration to ensure better living conditions and to harmonize existing international instruments entailing penal sanctions under national criminal law; and requested the Secretary-General to consider the preparation of a manual on enhancing the role of education in criminal justice policies at all educational levels in the training of criminal justice staff, taking into account the relevant recommendations by the Economic and Social Council.

The resolution on support for the UN African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders urged those African Member States that had acceded to the statute of the Institute to meet their financial obligations, thereby providing a sound basis for its functioning, and urged those that had not acceded to do so in order to broaden its support base. The resolution on the support for the UN Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders requested the UN Secretariat to support and promote technical and financial co-operation between developed and developing countries with regard to crime prevention, criminal justice and human rights; appealed to the Latin American and Caribbean Governments to make technical and financial contributions towards sustaining and expanding the Institute's programmes; and urged developed countries outside the Latin American region, UNDP, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and other international agencies and funds to offer greater technical and financial support to the region through the Institute.

Under the agenda item on criminal justice policies in relation to problem of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures, the Congress recommended three draft resolutions for Assembly action and adopted eight resolutions, all aimed at the more effective and humane treatment of offenders in institutions and in the community, with emphasis on the wider use of alternatives to incarceration.

The draft resolutions later adopted by the Assembly were on the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures

(The Tokyo Rules) (resolution 45/110), basic principles for the treatment of prisoners (resolution 45/111) and a computerization of criminal justice (resolution 45/109).

The Congress, by its resolution on management of criminal justice and development of sentencing policies, adopted recommendations for further action at the national, regional and inter-regional levels on the application of criminal law, on ensuring fair treatment and coherent sentencing policies, on management of imprisonment, especially in crisis situations, and on management and staff training in the criminal justice system. By its resolution on principles and directions for research on non-custodial sanctions, the Congress endorsed a set of principles and directions for policy-oriented research on the subject, encouraged the use of the resultant findings as resource material for conferences and training courses for criminal justice personnel, and also encouraged UN interregional and regional institutes for crime prevention and treatment of offenders to provide technical assistance to Member States in implementing the principles and directions. The resolution on pre-trial detention recommended that, in criminal proceedings, Member States use pre-trial detention only if strictly necessary and as a last resort and called on the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to examine the question in all its aspects. The resolution on assessment for the release of life-sentence prisoners requested the Committee to examine the legal position as to the rights and duties of prisoners serving life sentences and the various systems for reviewing their suitability for conditional release, to give special consideration to assessment procedures and decision-making in cases of life sentences, and to examine the need for such sentences.

The resolution on infection with HIV and AIDS in prison requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the World Health Organization, to assist prison administrations, at the request of the Member States concerned, in the development of national AIDS prevention and control programmes for the prison population, to encourage international co-operation in the elaboration and exchange of educational materials designed to prevent the further spread of HIV infection in prison, and to elaborate guidelines for the institutional and clinical management of HIV-infected prisoners and those with AIDS.

The resolution on international and inter-regional co-operation in prison management and community-based sanctions and other matters contained recommendations relating to the custodial and non-custodial treatment of offenders; prison labour, education, leisure and family visits; the treatment of drug-dependent offenders; health care for those physically disabled and mentally disturbed; the treatment of juveniles; and international co-operation in penal administration and related matters. The resolution on the activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) with regard to detention invited the Secretary-General to maintain regular contacts with ICRC in order to share its experiences in the treatment of detainees within the framework of its specific mandates. A further resolution proposed that the Assembly proclaim an international year for the protection of victims of crime and the rehabilitation of offenders.

Under the agenda item on effective national and international action against organized crime and terrorist criminal activities, the Congress, in addition to adopting two resolutions, recommended for Assembly action three major international instruments, each annexed to a draft resolution-model treaties on extradition, on the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters, and on mutual assistance in criminal matters-all subsequently adopted by the Assembly (resolutions 45/116, 45/118, 45/117, respectively).

The Congress resolution on prevention and control of organized crime annexed guidelines for national measures for preventive strategies, criminal legislation and investigation, and law enforcement and criminal justice administration, as well as for the development of international co-operative arrangements to tackle the transnational dimensions of organized crime. The resolution on terrorist criminal activities agreed that the series of measures annexed to the resolution represented valuable guidance for concerted action against international terrorism and urged Member States to give favourable consideration to implementing them nationally and internationally. Those measures covered various aspects of the problem, including the definition of terrorist behaviour; identification of problems hindering the prevention and control of all forms of terrorist violence; the questions of jurisdiction, extradition and non-applicability of defence; the conduct of States; the protection of vulnerable targets, as well as of victims and witnesses; the control of weapons, ammunition and explosives; the treatment of offenders; and the role of the mass media.

In connection with the agenda item on prevention of delinquency, juvenile justice and the protection of the young: policy approaches and directions, the Congress recommended to the Assembly four draft resolutions, which the Assembly later adopted: one annexing draft United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (resolution 45/112), another annexing draft United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty (resolution 45/113), and two others, on the instrumental use of children in criminal activities (resolution 45/115) and on domestic violence (resolution 45/114).

Under the agenda item on UN norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard-setting, the Congress, in addition to adopting six resolutions, recommended for Assembly consideration a draft resolution annexing a model treaty on the transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released, later adopted by the Assembly (resolution 45/119).

The Congress adopted a resolution to which were annexed Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, containing general and special provisions governing the lawful use of force and firearms by law enforcement officials, the policing of unlawful non-violent or violent assemblies, as well as of persons in custody or detention, the qualifications and professional training in the use of force or firearms by law enforcement officials, as well as stress-counselling for such officials, and an effective system of reporting and review of all incidents involving the use of force and firearms. Another resolution annexed Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers governing access by all to legal services, safeguards for the accused, arrested or detained in criminal justice matters; the education of lawyers, including awareness of their ethical duties and of the human rights and fundamental freedoms recognized by national and international law; the duties and responsibilities of lawyers towards their clients; guarantees for the functioning of lawyers, including freedom of expression and association; and disciplinary proceedings against lawyers. By the resolutions annexing the two sets of Basic Principles, the Congress recommended them for national, regional and interregional implementation, taking into account the political, economic, social and cultural circumstances and traditions of each country; invited Member States to inform the Secretary-General every five years, beginning in 1992, of the progress achieved in the implementation of those principles, including their incorporation into domestic legislation, practice and policies; and requested the Secretary-General to give the Basic Principles the widest possible dissemination.

A set of guidelines on the role of prosecutors, formulated to assist Member States in securing and promoting the effectiveness, impartiality and fairness of prosecutors in criminal proceedings, was annexed to the Congress resolution of the same title, which urged Governments to take the guidelines into account within the framework of their national legislation and practice, and to bring them to the attention of prosecutors, judges, lawyers, members of the executive and legislative branches of Government and the public at large; it also requested the Secretary-General to prepare every five years, beginning in 1993, a report on the guidelines' implementation. The guidelines addressed prosecutors' qualifications, selection and training, status and conditions of service, entitlement to freedom of expression and association, role in criminal proceedings, discretionary functions including with regard to alternatives to prosecution, and relations with other government agencies or institutions. Also addressed were disciplinary proceedings against prosecutors and their responsibilities as to the observance of the guidelines.

By its resolution on the protection of human rights of victims of crime and abuse of power, the Congress recommended that Governments consider making available public and social support services for such victims and foster programmes for victim assistance, information and compensation; it requested the Secretary-General to study the feasibility of setting up an international fund, within the framework of the UN crime prevention and criminal justice programme, for the compensation of and assistance to victims of transnational crimes and for the promotion of international research, data collection and dissemination, as well as to formulate relevant policy guidelines. In its resolution on the transfer of enforcement of penal sanctions, the Congress invited Member States to consider concluding agreements on the subject, called on the Secretary-General to facilitate the provision of professional advice and technical support for Member States interested in concluding such agreements, and requested the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider formulating a model agreement for submission to the Ninth Congress. In its resolution on the development of future procedures for evaluating the extent to which Member States implemented UN norms and guidelines in criminal justice and crime prevention, the Congress requested the Secretary-General to convene an ad hoc group of experts to submit proposals to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its 1991 session for promoting the implementation of existing standards, consolidating and rationalizing arrangements for such evaluation, and improving techniques for the effective evaluation and monitoring of the implementation of those norms and guidelines.

Follow-up to Congress

On 6 September, the Congress adopted a decision by which it requested the Secretary-General, in carrying forward its conclusions, to give priority attention to practical measures to combat international crime and to promote the implementation of norms, standards and instruments adopted by the international community, as well as to the provision, where practicable, of technical co-operation to Member States at their request.

In an October report [A/45/629], prepared in response to Assembly resolution 44/72 [YUN 1989, p. 615], the Secretary-General summarized the recommendations and conclusions of the Eighth Congress. He further made proposals for fulfilling the new Congress mandates, especially with respect to transnational criminality, crime prevention planning and criminal justice management, the application of UN norms and guidelines, and strengthening international co-operation and the UN crime and justice programme. The report stated that additional new activities had to be undertaken as soon as possible in order to respond to the requests of the Eighth Congress, which had identified a wide spectrum of requirements unmet because of the limitations of national and international capacity to deal with the worsening crime situation. It called for progress reports on several matters to be submitted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control in early 1992, necessitating intensive work during 1991. The new tasks mandated by the Congress included the preparation of a dozen manuals, guidelines, compendia or technical publications, a series of periodic reports to the Committee and 16 reports on new subjects for the Ninth (1995) Congress. In addition to the establishment of nine data banks, the convening and servicing of eight working groups and the provision of technical assistance to Member States in the implementation of almost all resolutions were requested. The report outlined the activities related to the accomplishment of those tasks.

The Secretary-General stated that the Eighth Congress had not only pointed the way but outlined the directions for concrete action. How to give tangible effect to its recommendations and expectations was a matter before the Assembly. The consensus by which the Governments at the Congress had adopted all the resolutions reflected agreement that incisive steps had to be taken and that the United Nations had to respond more vigorously to the dangers and the challenge of crime. The nefarious links between organized criminality, especially illicit drug trafficking, corruption, violence and a vast array of other crimes, having revealed the futility of piece-meal measures, called for a global strategy to confront those critical issues in a coherent and far-sighted manner.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/121.

Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the steady rise in crime in many parts of the world, particularly its dangerous new forms and transnational dimensions,

Conscious of the negative effects of crime on the quest for sustained development, a secure environment and a better quality of life,

Recognizing the importance to all countries of more effective crime prevention and criminal justice in furthering socio-economic development, political stability and a propitious climate for national growth and world peace,

Recalling its resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985, in which it approved the Milan Plan of Action as a useful and effective means of strengthening international co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and invited Governments to be guided by it in the formulation of appropriate legislation and policy directives and to make continuous efforts to implement the principles contained in the Caracas Declaration and other relevant resolutions and recommendations, in accordance with the economic, social, cultural and political circumstances of each country,

Recalling also its resolution 44/72 of 8 December 1989, in which it stressed the importance of the programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice and the necessity of strengthening it in order to make it more responsive to the needs and expectations of Member States, whose stability and social peace, as well as law enforcement and judicial structures, might be undermined by the growing level and impact of criminality, and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the level of human and financial resources of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat is sufficient for it to carry out its multiple tasks mandated by United Nations policy-making bodies, including the promotion of collaborative action by Governments on problems of mutual concern, evaluation research, the collection and dissemination of information, the preparation of reports and studies and technical co-operation activities, and to ensure that the specialized nature of the programme of work of the Branch is fully reflected in its management and staffing.

Recalling further its resolution 42/59 of 30 November 1987, in which it invited the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to accord priority to preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to ensure adequate follow-up to the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice undertaken by the Economic and Social Council and its resolution 43/99 of 8 December 1988, in which it stressed the necessity for Member States to continue to make concerted and systematic efforts to strengthen international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Emphasizing the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in crime prevention under General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, which was affirmed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 731 F (XXVIII) of 30 July 1959 and 830 D (XXXII) of 2 August 1961, and in the promotion and strengthening of international co-operation in this field in accordance with Assembly resolutions 3021(XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 32/59 and 32/60 of 8 December 1977, 35/171 of 15 December 1980, 36/21 of 9 November 1981 and 40/32,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolutions 1986/10 and 1986/11 of 21 May 1986, 1987/49 and 1987/53 of 28 May 1987, 1988/44 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/68 and 1989/69 of 24 May 1989,

Taking note, in particular, of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/27 of 24 May 1990, in which the Council invited the General Assembly, at its forty-fifth session, to take appropriate measures to ensure the timely implementation and proper follow-up of the recommendations of the Eighth Congress,

Acknowledging that the United Nations congresses, as major intergovernmental forums, have influenced national policies and practices by facilitating the exchange of views and experiences, mobilizing public opinion and recommending policy options at the national, regional and international levels, thus making a significant contribution to progress and the promotion of international co-operation in this field,

Mindful of the main objectives of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, which include the promotion of a more effective administration of justice, the strengthening of international co-operation in the fight against international crime, the observance of human rights and the pursuance of the highest standards of fairness, efficiency, humanity and professional conduct,

Reaffirming the validity of the guidelines for setting international standards in the field of human rights: contained in its resolution 41/120 of 4 December 1986, and the need to give due consideration in this work to the established international legal framework,

Emphasizing the importance of continuing to provide Governments with the maximum opportunity to submit written comments and to participate in the formulation of international instruments and model treaties,

Bearing in mind the theme of the Eighth Congress. "International co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice for the twenty-first century", and the importance of preserving peace, freedom and justice as essential conditions for development and international co-operation,

Noting the fact that the Eighth Congress, in pursuance of that theme, paid particular attention to the question of crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development and the realities and perspectives of international co-operation in this field: underlined the need for granting this question higher priority at the United Nations system level: recommended major instruments to facilitate inter-State co-operation against crime, giving particular attention to the linkage between illicit drug trafficking, organized crime and terrorist criminal activities, the efficiency and effectiveness of national systems of criminal justice, the computerization of criminal justice and the non-institutional treatment of offenders, domestic violence and the prevention of juvenile delinquency; and identified other priority areas for practical action, such as environmental protection, in accordance with the requests of the General Assembly,

Noting also that the programme of work of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat has expanded in recent years,

Aware that crime prevention and criminal justice must be considered not only in the context of public systems, social and cultural values and social evolution, but also in the context of consistent economic development, and alarmed by the growing threat of organized crime, whose destabilizing and corrupting influence on basic economic and political institutions poses a challenge that demands more effective international co-operation,

Considering that the formulation and implementation of rules and guidelines in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice provide a basis for the introduction of improvements in criminal justice at the national and regional levels,

Reaffirming its determination to improve regional and international co-operation to foster further progress in this area, including implementation of the recommendations of the Eighth Congress, according to an orderly timetable reflecting priorities, taking into account the results of the meeting of the inter-governmental working group and the ministerial meeting to be held in 1991,

Having considered the report of the Eighth Congress, the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the resolutions and recommendations of the Seventh Congress and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the conclusions of the Eighth Congress, submitted in pursuance of resolution 44/72,

1. Expresses its satisfaction with the successful results achieved by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the thorough preparations for the Congress, overseen by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control as the preparatory body, which contributed to its productive outcome, and by the regional and inter-regional preparatory meetings convened in co-operation with the regional commissions, the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and interested Governments;

2. Takes note of the report of the Eighth Congress, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Seventh Congress and his report on the conclusions of the Eighth Congress;

3. Welcomes the instruments and resolutions adopted by the Eighth Congress, and invites Governments to be guided by them in the formulation of appropriate legislation and policy directives and to make efforts to implement the principles contained in them and in the relevant instruments and resolutions approved by previous congresses and other relevant resolutions, in accordance with the economic, social, legal, cultural and political circumstances of each count;;

4. Endorses the decision of the Eighth Congress that priority attention should be given to specific practical measures to combat international crime over the forthcoming five-year period, bearing in mind the criteria set out in the relevant regulations and rules governing programme planning;

5. Invites Member States to monitor systematically the steps being taken to ensure co-ordination of efforts in the planning and execution of effective and humane measures to reduce the social costs of crime and its negative effects on the development process, as well as to continue to explore new avenues for international co-operation in this field;

6. Invites the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its twelfth session to examine the implications of the resolutions and recommendations of the Eighth Congress for the programmes of the United Nations system and to make specific recommendations on the implementation of the resolutions and recommendations in its report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1992, in accordance with the priorities to be set by the ministerial meeting to be held in 1991;

7. Requests the Economic and Social Council to examine, at its first regular session of 1992, the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control referred to in paragraph 6 above, in order to provide, within the United Nations system, overall policy guidance in crime prevention and criminal justice, and to undertake periodically the review, monitoring and appraisal of the resolutions and recommendations of the Eighth Congress, and the priority accorded to them;

8. Emphasizes the urgent need to be responsive to the calls of the Eighth congress for strengthening the operational aspects of the United Nations programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice, with a view to assisting interested countries in developing self-reliant and adequate law enforcement and judicial structures;

9. Urges all entities of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the institutes for crime prevention and the treatment of offenders and the relevant non-governmental organizations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to become actively involved in the implementation of the resolutions and recommendations of the Eighth Congress;

10. Also urges the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme and other pertinent bodies to give full support to projects of technical assistance, in particular to developing countries, in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and to encourage technical co-operation among developing countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to use his best endeavours to translate into action, as appropriate, the resolutions recommended by the Eighth Congress for adoption by the General Assembly and to provide adequate follow-up of the other resolutions unanimously adopted by the Congress, and to do so in accordance with the priorities indicated by the Congress;

12. Invites the Secretary-General to use his best endeavours to review the resources required to enable the

Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to discharge its responsibilities in accordance with the mandates and tasks recommended by the Eighth Congress;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to consider including in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 programme and resources proposals to assist with the long-term solution of the problems posed by the implementation of existing mandates;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the Eighth Congress to Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in order to ensure that it is disseminated as widely as possible and to conduct appropriate public information activities in this field;

15. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its forty-sixth session, a report on the measures taken to implement the present resolution;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice".

Model treaties

In December, the General Assembly considered the four model treaties recommended for its adoption by the Eighth Congress. Intended to serve as the bases for bilateral negotiations between States, the model treaties were on extradition, on transfer of proceedings in criminal matters, on mutual assistance in criminal matters, and on transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released. The first three model treaties were complementary and, together, would reduce the chances of criminals avoiding prosecution and punishment.

Model Treaty on Extradition

The Model Treaty on Extradition, together with the following Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters, were intended to ensure, in so far as possible, that an offender was brought to trial. On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/116.

Model Treaty on Extradition

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985,

Bearing in mind also the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, principle 37 of which stipulates that the United Nations should prepare model instruments suitable for use as international and regional conventions and as guides for national implementing legislation,

Recalling resolution 1 of the Seventh Congress, on organized crime, in which Member States were urged, inter alia, to increase their activity at the international level in order to combat organized crime, including, as appropriate, entering into bilateral treaties on extradition and mutual legal assistance,

Recalling also resolution 23 of the Seventh Congress, on criminal acts of a terrorist character, in which all States were called upon to take steps to strengthen co-operation, inter alia, in the area of extradition,

Culling attention to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances,

Acknowledging the valuable contributions of Governments, non-governmental organizations and individual experts, in particular the Government of Australia and the International Association of Penal Law,

Gravely concerned by the escalation of crime, both national and transnational,

Convinced that the establishment of bilateral and multilateral arrangements for extradition will greatly contribute to the development of more effective international co-operation for the control of crime,

Conscious of the need to respect human dignity and recalling the rights conferred upon every person involved in criminal proceedings, as embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Conscious that in many cases existing bilateral extradition arrangements are outdated and should be replaced by modern arrangements which take into account recent developments in international criminal law,

Recognizing the importance of a model treaty on extradition as an effective way of dealing with the complex aspects and serious consequences of crime, especially in its new forms and dimensions,

1. Adopts the Model Treaty on Extradition contained in the annex to the present resolution as a useful framework that could be of assistance to States interested in negotiating and concluding bilateral agreements aimed at improving co-operation in matters of crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Invites Member States, if they have not yet established treaty relations with other States in the area of extradition, or if they wish to revise existing treaty relations, to take into account, whenever doing so, the Model Treaty on Extradition;

3. Urges all States to strengthen further international co-operation in criminal justice;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution, with the Model Treaty, to the attention of Member States;

5. Urges Member States to inform the Secretary-General periodically of efforts undertaken to establish extradition arrangements;

6. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to review periodically the progress attained in this field;

7. Also requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, where requested, to provide guidance and assistance to Member States in the development of legislation that would enable giving effect to the obligations in such treaties as are to be negotiated on the basis of the Model Treaty on Extradition;

8. Invites Member States, on request, to make available to the Secretary-General the provisions of their extradition legislation so that these may be made available to those Member States desiring to enact or further develop legislation in this field.

ANNEX Model Treaty on Extradition and the

The
Desirous of making more effective the co-operation of the two countries in the control of crime by concluding a treaty on extradition,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1 Obligation to extradite

Each Party agrees to extradite to the other, upon request and subject to the provisions of the present Treaty, any person who is wanted in the requesting State for prosecution for an extraditable offence or for the imposition or enforcement of a sentence in respect of such an offence.

Article 2 Extraditable offences

1. For the purposes of the present Treaty, extraditable offences are offences that are punishable under the laws of both Parties by imprisonment or other deprivation of liberty for a maximum period of at least [one/two] year(s), or by a more severe penalty. Where the request for extradition relates to a person who is wanted for the enforcement of a sentence of imprisonment or other deprivation of liberty imposed for such an offence, extradition shall be granted only if a period of at least [four/six] months of such sentence remains to be served.

2. In determining whether an offence is an offence punishable under the laws of both Parties, it shall not matter whether:

(a) The laws of the Parties place the acts or omissions constituting the offence within the same category of offence or denominate the offence by the same terminology;

(b) Under the laws of the Parties the constituent elements of the offence differ, it being understood that the totality of the acts or omissions as presented by the requesting State shall be taken into account.

3. Where extradition of a person is sought for an offence against a law relating to taxation, customs duties, exchange control or other revenue matters, extradition may not be refused on the ground that the law of the requested State does not impose the same kind of tax or duty or does not contain a tax, customs duty or exchange regulation of the same kind as the law of the requesting State.

4. If the request for extradition includes several separate offences each of which is punishable under the laws of both Parties, but some of which do not fulfil the other conditions set out in paragraph 1 of the present article, the requested Party may grant extradition for the latter offences provided that the person is to be extradited for at least one extraditable offence.

Article 3

Mandatory grounds for refusal

Extradition shall not be granted in any of the following circumstances:

(a) If the offence for which extradition is requested is regarded by the requested State as an offence of a political nature;

(b) If the requested State has substantial grounds for believing that the request for extradition has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin, political opinions, sex or status, or that that person's position may be prejudiced for any of those reasons;

(c) If the offence for which extradition is requested is an offence under military law, which is not also an offence under ordinary criminal law;

(d) If there has been a final judgement rendered against the person in the requested State in respect of the offence for which the person's extradition is requested;

(e) If the person whose extradition is requested has, under the law of either Party, become immune from prosecution or punishment for any reason, including lapse of time or amnesty;

(f) If the person whose extradition is requested has been or would be subjected in the requesting State to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment or if that person has not received or would not receive the minimum guarantees in criminal proceedings, as contained in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 14;

(g) If the judgement of the requesting State has been rendered in absentia, the convicted person has not had sufficient notice of the trial or the opportunity to arrange for his or her defence and he has not had or will not have the opportunity to have the case retried in his or her presence.

Article 4

Optional grounds for refusal

Extradition may be refused in any of the following circumstances:

(a) If the person whose extradition is requested is a national of the requested State. Where extradition is refused on this ground, the requested State shall, if the other State so requests, submit the case to its competent authorities with a view to taking appropriate action against the person in respect of the offence for which extradition had been requested;

(b) If the competent authorities of the requested State have decided either not to institute or to terminate proceedings against the person for the offence in respect of which extradition is requested;

(c) If a prosecution in respect of the offence for which extradition is requested is pending in the requested State against the person whose extradition is requested;

(d) If the offence for which extradition is requested carries the death penalty under the law of the requesting State, unless that State gives such assurance as the requested State considers sufficient that the death penalty will not be imposed or, if imposed, will not be carried out;

(e) If the offence for which extradition is requested has been committed outside the territory of either Party and the law of the requested State does not provide for jurisdiction over such an offence committed outside its territory in comparable circumstances;

(f) If the offence for which extradition is requested is regarded under the law of the requested State as having been committed in whole or in part within that State. Where extradition is refused on this ground, the requested State shall, if the other State so requests, submit the case to its competent authorities with a view to taking appropriate action against the person for the offence for which extradition had been requested;

(g) If the person whose extradition is requested has been sentenced or would be liable to be tried or sentenced in the requesting State by an extraordinary or ad hoc court or tribunal;

(h) If the requested State, while also taking into account the nature of the offence and the interests of the requesting State, considers that, in the circumstances of the case, the extradition of that person would be incompatible with humanitarian considerations in view of age, health or other personal circumstances of that person.

Article 5

Channels of communication and required documents

1. A request for extradition shall be made in writing. The request, supporting documents and subsequent communications shall be transmitted through the diplomatic channel, directly between the ministries of justice or any other authorities designated by the Parties.

2. A request for extradition shall be accompanied by the following:

(a) In all cases,

(i) As accurate a description as possible of the person sought, together with any other information that may help to establish that person's identity, nationality and location;

(ii) The text of the relevant provision of the law creating the offence or, where necessary, a statement of the law relevant to the offence and a statement of the penalty that can be imposed for the offence;

(b) If the person is accused of an offence, by a warrant issued by a court or other competent judicial authority for the arrest of the person or a certified copy of that warrant, a statement of the offence for which extradition is requested and a description of the acts or omissions constituting the alleged offence, including an indication of the time and place of its commission;

(c) If the person has been convicted of an offence, by a statement of the offence for which extradition is requested and a description of the acts or omissions constituting the offence and by the original or certified copy of the judgement or any other document setting out the conviction and the sentence imposed, the fact that the sentence is enforceable, and the extent to which the sentence remains to be served;

(d) If the person has been convicted of an offence in his or her absence, in addition to the documents set out in paragraph 2 (c) of the present article, by a statement as to the legal means available to the person to prepare his or her defence or to have the case retried in his or her presence;

(e) If the person has been convicted of an offence but no sentence has been imposed, by a statement of the offence for which extradition is requested and a description of the acts or omissions constituting the offence and by a document setting out the conviction and a statement affirming that there is an intention to impose a sentence.

3. The documents submitted in support of a request for extradition shall be accompanied by a translation into the language of the requested State or in another language acceptable to that State.

Article 6

Simplified extradition procedure

The requested State, if not precluded by its law, may grant extradition after receipt of a request for provisional arrest, provided that the person sought explicitly consents before a competent authority.

Article 7

Certification and authentication

Except as provided by the present Treaty, a request for extradition and the documents in support thereof, as well as documents or other material supplied in response to such a request, shall not require certification or authentication.

Article 8

Additional information

If the requested State considers that the information provided in support of a request for extradition is not sufficient, it may request that additional information be furnished within such reasonable time as it specifies.

Article 9

Provisional arrest

1. In case of urgency the requesting State may apply for the provisional arrest of the person sought pending the presentation of the request for extradition. The application shall be transmitted by means of the facilities of the International Criminal Police Organization, by post or telegraph or by any other means affording a record in writing.

2. The application shall contain a description of the person sought, a statement that extradition is to be requested, a statement of the existence of one of the documents mentioned in paragraph 2 of article 5 of the present Treaty, authorizing the apprehension of the person, a statement of the punishment that can be or has been imposed for the offence, including the time left to be served and a concise statement of the facts of the case, and a statement of the location, where known, of the person.

3. The requested State shall decide on the application in accordance with its law and communicate its decision to the requesting State without delay.

4. The person arrested upon such an application shall be set at liberty upon the expiration of [40] days from the date of arrest if a request for extradition, supported by the relevant documents specified in paragraph 2 of article 5 of the present Treaty, has not been received. The present paragraph does not preclude the possibility of conditional release of the person prior to the expiration of the [40] days.

5. The release of the person pursuant to paragraph 4 of the present article shall not prevent rearrest and institution of proceedings with a view to extraditing the person sought if the request and supporting documents are subsequently received.

Article 10

Decision on the request

1. The requested State shall deal with the request for extradition pursuant to procedures provided by its own law, and shall promptly communicate its decision to the requesting State.

2. Reasons shall be given for any complete or partial refusal of the request.

Article 11

Surrender of the person

1. Upon being informed that extradition has been granted, the Parties shall, without undue delay, arrange for the surrender of the person sought and the requested State shall inform the requesting State of the length of time for which the person sought was detained with a view to surrender.

2. The person shall be removed from the territory of the requested State within such reasonable period as the requested State specifies and, if the person is not removed within that period, the requested State may release the person and may refuse to extradite that person for the same offence.

3. If circumstances beyond its control prevent a Party from surrendering or removing the person to be extradited, it shall notify the other Party. The two Parties shall mutually decide upon a new date of surrender, and the provisions of paragraph 2 of the present article shall apply.

Article 12

Postponed or conditional surrender

1. The requested State may, after making its decision on the request for extradition, postpone the surrender of a person sought, in order to proceed against that person, or, if that person has already been convicted, in order to enforce a sentence imposed for an offence other than that for which extradition is sought. In such a case the requested State shall advise the requesting State accordingly.

2. The requested State may, instead of postponing surrender, temporarily surrender the person sought to the requesting State in accordance with conditions to be determined between the Parties.

Article 13

Surrender of property

1. To the extent permitted under the law of the requested State and subject to the rights of third parties, which shall be duly respected, all property found in the requested State that has been acquired as a result of the offence or that may be required as evidence shall, if the requesting State so requests, be surrendered if extradition is granted.

2. The said property may, if the requesting State so requests, be surrendered to the requesting State even if the extradition agreed to cannot be carried out.

3. When the said property is liable to seizure or confiscation in the requested State, it may retain it or temporarily hand it over.

4. Where the law of the requested State or the protection of the rights of third parties so require, any property so surrendered shall be returned to the requested State free of charge after the completion of the proceedings, if that State so requests.

Article 14

Rule of speciality

1. A person extradited under the present Treaty shall not be proceeded against, sentenced, detained, re-extradited to a third State, or subjected to any other restriction of personal liberty in the territory of the requesting State for any offence committed before surrender other than:

(a) An offence for which extradition was granted;

(b) Any other offence in respect of which the requested State consents. Consent shall be given if the offence for which it is requested is itself subject to extradition in accordance with the present Treaty.

2. A request for the consent of the requested State under the present article shall be accompanied by the documents mentioned in paragraph 2 of article 5 of the present Treaty and a legal record of any statement made by the extradited person with respect to the offence.

3. Paragraph 1 of the present article shall not apply if the person has had an opportunity to leave the requesting State and has not done so within [30/45] days of final discharge in respect of the offence for which that person was extradited or if the person has voluntarily returned to the territory of the requesting State after leaving it.

Article 15

Transit

1. Where a person is to be extradited to a Party from a third State through the territory of the other party, the Party to which the person is to be extradited shall request the other Party to permit the transit of that person through its territory. This does not apply where air transport is used and no landing in the territory of the other Party is scheduled.

2. Upon receipt of such a request, which shall contain relevant information, the requested State shall deal with this request pursuant to procedures provided by its own law. The requested State shall grant the request expeditiously unless its essential interests would be prejudiced thereby.

3. The State of transit shall ensure that legal provisions exist that would enable detaining the person in custody during transit.

4. In the event of an unscheduled landing, the Party to be requested to permit transit may, at the request of the escorting officer, hold the person in custody for [48] hours, pending receipt of the transit request to be made in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article.

Article 16

Concurrent requests

If a Party receives requests for extradition for the same person from both the other Party and a third State it shall, at its discretion, determine to which of those States the person is to be extradited.

Article 17

costs

1. The requested State shall meet the cost of any proceedings in its jurisdiction arising out of a request for extradition.

2. The requested State shall also bear the costs incurred in its territory in connection with the seizure and handing over of property, or the arrest and detention of the person whose extradition is sought.

3. The requesting State shall bear the costs incurred in conveying the person from the territory of the requested State, including transit costs.

Article 18

Final provisions

1. The present Treaty is subject to [ratification, acceptance or approval]. The instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] shall be exchanged as soon as possible.

2. The present Treaty shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the day on which the instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] are exchanged.

3. The present Treaty shall apply to requests made after its entry into force, even if the relevant acts or omissions occurred prior to that date.

4. Either Contracting Party may denounce the present Treaty by giving notice in writing to the other Party. Such denunciation shall take effect six months following the date on which such notice is received by the other Party.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Treaty.

Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/118.

Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985,

Recalling also the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, principle 37 of which stipulates that the United Nations should prepare model instruments suitable for use as international and regional conventions and as guides for national implementing legislation,

Recalling further resolution 12 of the Seventh Congress, on the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters, in which the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control was requested to study the question and to consider the possibility of formulating a model agreement in this area,

Acknowledging the valuable contributions made by Governments, non-governmental organizations and individual experts to the drafting of a model treaty on the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters, in particular the International Expert Meeting on the United Nations and Law Enforcement, held under the auspices of the United Nations at Baden, Austria, from 16 to 19 November 1987, the Interregional Preparatory Meeting for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on topic V, "United Nations norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard setting" and the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress,

Convinced that the establishment of bilateral and multilateral arrangements for the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters will greatly contribute to the development of more effective international co-operation aimed at controlling crime,

Conscious of the need to respect human dignity and recalling the rights conferred upon every person involved in criminal proceedings, as embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recognizing the importance of a model treaty on the transfer of proceeding in criminal matters as an effective way of dealing with the complex aspects, consequences and modern evolution of transnational crime,

1. Adopts the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters, contained in the annex to the present resolution, as a useful framework that could be of assistance to States interested in negotiating and concluding bilateral or multilateral treaties aimed at improving co-operation in matters of crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Invites Member States, if they have not yet established treaty relations with other States in regard to transfer of proceedings in criminal matters, or if they wish to revise existing treaty relations, to take the Model Treaty into account whenever doing so;

3. Urges Member States to strengthen international co-operation in criminal justice;

4. Also urges Member States to inform the Secretary-General periodically of efforts undertaken to establish arrangements for the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters;

5. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to conduct periodic reviews of the progress attained in this field;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to assist Member States, at their request, in the development of treaties on the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters and to report regularly thereon to the Committee.

ANNEX

Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters

The and the

Desirous of further strengthening international co-operation and mutual assistance in criminal justice, on the basis of the principles of respect for national sovereignty and jurisdiction and of non-interference in the internal affairs of States,

Believing that such co-operation should further the ends of justice, the social resettlement of offenders and the interests of the victims of crime,

Bearing in mind that the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters contributes to effective administration of justice and to reducing conflicts of competence,

Aware that the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters can help to avoid pre-trial detention and thus reduce the prison population,

Convinced, therefore, that the transfer of proceedings in criminal matters should be promoted,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

Scope of application

1. When a person is suspected of having committed an offence under the law of a State which is a Contracting Party, that State may, if the interests of the proper administration of justice so require, request another State which is a Contracting Party to take proceedings in respect of this offence.

2. For the purpose of applying the present Treaty, the Contracting Parties shall take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that a request of the requesting State to take proceedings shall allow the requested State to exercise the necessary jurisdiction.

Article 2

Channels of communications

A request to take proceedings shall be made in writing. The request, supporting documents and subsequent communication shall be transmitted through diplomatic channels, directly between the Ministries of Justice or any other authorities designated by the Parties.

Article 3

Required documents

1. The request to take proceedings shall contain or be accompanied by the following information:

(a) The authority presenting the request;

(b) A description of the act for which transfer of proceedings is being requested, including the specific time and place of the offence;

(c) A statement on the results of investigations which substantiate the suspicion of an offence;

(d) The legal provisions of the requesting State on the basis of which the act is considered to be an offence;

(e) A reasonably exact statement on the identity, nationality and residence of the suspected person.

2. The documents submitted in support of a request to take proceedings shall be accompanied by a translation into the language of the requested State or into another language acceptable to that State.

Article 4

Certification and authentication

Subject to national law and unless the Parties decide otherwise, a request to take proceedings and the documents in support thereof, as well as the documents and other material supplied in response to such a request, shall not require certification or authentication.

Article 5

Decision on the request

The competent authorities of the requested State shall examine what action to take on the request to take proceedings in order to comply, as fully as possible, with the request under their own law, and shall promptly communicate their decision to the requesting State.

Article 6

Dual criminality

A request to take proceedings can be complied with only if the act on which the request is based would be an offence if committed in the territory of the requested State.

Article 7

Grounds for refusal

If the requested State refuses acceptance of a request for transfer of proceedings, it shall communicate the reasons for refusal to the requesting State. Acceptance may be refused if:

(a) The suspected person is not a national of or ordinary resident in the requested State;

(b) The act is an offence under military law, which is not also an offence under ordinary criminal law;

(c) The offence is in connection with taxes, duties, customs or exchange;

(d) The offence is regarded by the requested State as being of a political nature.

Article 8

The position of the suspected person

1. The suspected person may express to either State his or her interest in the transfer of the proceedings. Similarly, such interest may be expressed by the legal representative or close relatives of the suspected person.

2. Before a request for transfer of proceedings is made, the requesting State shall, if practicable, allow the suspected person to present his or her views on the alleged offence and the intended transfer, unless that person has absconded or otherwise obstructed the course of justice.

Article 9

The rights of the victim

The requesting and requested States shall ensure in the transfer of proceedings that the rights of the victim of the offence, in particular his or her right to restitution or compensation, shall not be affected as a result of the transfer. If a settlement of the claim of the victim has not been reached before the transfer, the requested State shall permit the representation of the claim in the transferred proceedings, if its law provides for such a possibility. In the event of the death of the victim, these provisions shall apply to his or her dependants accordingly.

Article 10

Effects of the transfer of proceedings on the requesting State

(ne bis in idem)

Upon acceptance by the requested State of the request to take proceedings against the suspected person, the requesting State shall provisionally discontinue prosecution, except necessary investigation, including judicial assistance to the requested State, until the requested State informs the requesting State that the case has been finally disposed of. From that date on, the requesting State shall definitely refrain from further prosecution of the same offence.

Article 11

Effects of the transfer of proceedings on the requested State

1. The proceedings transferred upon agreement shall be governed by the law of the requested State. When charging the suspected person under its law, the requested State shall make the necessary adjustment with respect to particular elements in the legal description of the offence. Where the competence of the requested State is based on the provision set forth in paragraph 2 of article 1 of the present Treaty, the sanction pronounced in that State shall not be more severe than that provided by the law of the requesting State.

2. As far as compatible with the law of the requested State, any act with a view to proceedings or procedural requirements performed in the requesting State in accordance with its law shall have the same validity in the requested State as if the act had been performed in or by the authorities of that State.

3. The requested State shall inform the requesting State of the decision taken as a result of the proceedings. To this end a copy of any final decision shall be transmitted to the requesting State upon request.

Article 12

Provisional measures

When the requesting State announces its intention to transmit a request for transfer of proceedings, the requested State may, upon a specific request made for this purpose by the requesting State, apply all such provisional measures, including provisional detention and seizure, as could be applied under its own law if the offence in respect of which transfer of proceedings is requested had been committed in its territory.

Article 13

The plurality of criminal proceedings

When criminal proceedings are pending in two or more States against the same suspected person in respect of the same offence, the States concerned shall conduct consultations to decide which of them alone should continue the proceedings. An agreement reached thereupon shall have the consequences of a request for transfer of proceedings.

Article 14

Costs

Any costs incurred by a Contracting Party because of a transfer of proceedings shall not be refunded, unless otherwise agreed by both the requesting and requested States.

Article 15

Final provisions

1. The present Treaty is subject to [ratification, acceptance or approval]. The instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] shall be exchanged as soon as possible.

2. The present Treaty shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the day on which the instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] are exchanged.

3. The present Treaty shall apply to requests made after its entry into force, even if the relevant acts or omissions occurred prior to that date.

4. Either Contracting Party may denounce the present Treaty by giving notice in writing to the other Party. Such denunciation shall take effect six months following the date on which it is received by the other Party.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Treaty.

Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters

The Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters was intended to facilitate the acquisition of all relevant evidence for the prosecution of offences, regardless of where they were committed. It also contained an Optional Protocol aimed at the freezing and forfeiture of assets generated by criminal activities.

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/117.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind also the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, principle 37 of which stipulates that the United Nations should prepare model instruments suitable for use as international and regional conventions and as guides for national implementing legislation,

Recalling also resolution 23 of the Seventh Congress, on criminal acts of a terrorist character, in which all States were called upon to take steps to strengthen co-operation particularly, inter alia, in the area of mutual legal assistance,

Acknowledging the valuable contributions to the development of a model treaty on mutual assistance in criminal matters that Governments, non-governmental organizations and individual experts have made, in particular the Government of Australia and the International Association of Penal Law.

Convinced that the establishment of bilateral and multilateral arrangements for mutual assistance in criminal matters will greatly contribute to the development of more effective international co-operation for the control of criminality,

Recognizing the importance of a model treaty on mutual assistance in criminal matters as an effective way of dealing with the complex aspects and serious consequences of crime, especially in its new forms and dimensions,

2. Invites Member States, if they have not yet established treaty relations with other States in the matter of mutual assistance in criminal matters, or if they wish to revise existing treaty relations, to take into account, whenever doing so, the Model Treaty;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution, with the Model Treaty and the Optional Protocol thereto, to the attention of Governments;

6. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to review periodically the progress attained in this field;

8. Invites Member States, on request, to make available to the Secretary-General the provisions of their legislation on mutual assistance in criminal matters so that these may be made available to those Member States desiring to enact or further develop legislation in this field.

Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters
The _____ and the _____

Have agreed as follows:

Scope of application

2. Mutual assistance to be afforded in accordance with the present Treaty may include:

- (c) Effecting service of judicial documents;
- (d) Executing searches and seizures;
- (e) Examining objects and sites;
- (f) Providing information and evidentiary items;
- (g) Providing originals or certified copies of relevant documents and records, including bank, financial, corporate or business records.

(a) The arrest or detention of any person with a view to the extradition of that person;

(c) The transfer of persons in custody to serve sentences;

(d) The transfer of proceedings in criminal matters.

Article 2

Other arrangements

Unless the Parties decide otherwise, the present Treaty shall not affect obligations subsisting between them whether pursuant to other treaties or arrangements or otherwise.

Article 3

Designation of competent authorities

Each Party shall designate and indicate to the other Party an authority or authorities by or through which requests for the purpose of the present Treaty should be made or received.

Article 4

Refusal of assistance

1. Assistance may be refused if:

(a) The requested State is of the opinion that the request, if granted, would prejudice its sovereignty, security, public order (ordre public) or other essential public interests;

(b) The offence is regarded by the requested State as being of a political nature;

(c) There are substantial grounds for believing that the request for assistance has been made for the purpose of prosecuting a person on account of that person's race, sex, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinions or that that person's position may be prejudiced for any of those reasons;

(d) The request relates to an offence that is subject to investigation or prosecution in the requested State or the prosecution of which in the requesting State would be incompatible with the requested State's law on double jeopardy (ne bis in idem);

(e) The assistance requested requires the requested State to carry out compulsory measures that would be inconsistent with its law and practice had the offence been the subject of investigation or prosecution under its own jurisdiction;

(f) The act is an offence under military law, which is not also an offence under ordinary criminal law.

2. Assistance shall not be refused solely on the ground of secrecy of banks and similar financial institutions.

3. The requested State may postpone the execution of the request if its immediate execution would interfere with an ongoing investigation or prosecution in the requested State.

4. Before refusing a request or postponing its execution, the requested State shall consider whether assistance may be granted subject to certain conditions. If the requesting State accepts assistance subject to these conditions, it shall comply with them.

5. Reasons shall be given for any refusal or postponement of mutual assistance.

Article 5

Contents of requests

1. Requests for assistance shall include:

(a) The name of the requesting office and the competent authority conducting the investigation or court proceedings to which the request relates;

(b) The purpose of the request and a brief description of the assistance sought;

(c) A description of the facts alleged to constitute the offence and a statement or text of the relevant laws, except in cases of a request for service of documents;

(d) The name and address of the person to be served, where necessary;

(e) The reasons for and details of any particular procedure or requirement that the requesting State wishes to be followed, including a statement as to whether sworn or affirmed evidence or statements are required;

(f) Specification of any time-limit within which compliance with the request is desired;

(g) Such other information as is necessary for the proper execution of the request.

2. Requests, supporting documents and other communications made pursuant to the present Treaty shall be accompanied by a translation into the language of the requested State or another language acceptable to that State.

3. If the requested State considers that the information contained in the request is not sufficient to enable the request to be dealt with, it may request additional information.

Article 6

Execution of requests

Subject to article 19 of the present Treaty, requests for assistance shall be carried out promptly, in the manner provided for by the law and practice of the requested State. To the extent consistent with its law and practice, the requested State shall carry out the request in the manner specified by the requesting State.

Article 7

Return of material to the requested State

Any property, as well as original records or documents, handed over to the requesting State under the present Treaty shall be returned to the requested State as soon as possible unless the latter waives its right of return thereof.

Article 8

Limitation on use

The requesting State shall not, without the consent of the requested State, use or transfer information or evidence provided by the requested State for investigations or proceedings other than those stated in the request. However, in cases where the charge is altered, the material provided may be used in so far as the offence, as charged, is an offence in respect of which mutual assistance could be provided under the present Treaty.

Article 9

Protection of confidentiality

Upon request:

(a) The requested State shall use its best endeavours to keep confidential the request for assistance, its contents and its supporting documents as well as the fact of granting of such assistance. If the request cannot be executed without breaching confidentiality, the requested State shall so inform the requesting State, which shall then determine whether the request should nevertheless be executed;

(b) The requesting State shall keep confidential evidence and information provided by the requested State, except to the extent that the evidence and information is needed for the investigation and proceedings described in the request.

Article 10

Service of documents

1. The requested State shall effect service of documents that are transmitted to it for this purpose by the requesting State.

2. A request to effect service of summonses shall be made to a requested State not less than [...] days before the date on which the appearance of a person is required. In urgent cases, the requested State may waive the time requirement.

Article II

Obtaining of evidence

1. The requested State shall, in conformity with its law and upon request, take the sworn or affirmed testimony, or otherwise obtain statements of persons or require them to produce items of evidence for transmission to the requesting State.

2. Upon the request of the requesting State, the parties to the relevant proceedings in the requesting State, their legal representatives and representatives of the requesting State may, subject to the laws and procedures of the requested State, be present at the proceedings.

Article 12

Right or obligation to decline to give evidence

1. A person who is required to give evidence in the requested or requesting State may decline to give evidence where either:

(a) The law of the requested State permits or requires that person to decline to give evidence in similar circumstances in proceedings originating in the requested State; or

(b) The law of the requesting State permits or requires that person to decline to give evidence in similar circumstances in proceedings originating in the requesting State.

2. If a person claims that there is a right or obligation to decline to give evidence under the law of the other State, the State where that person is present shall, with respect thereto, rely on a certificate of the competent authority of the other State as evidence of the existence or non-existence of that right or obligation.

Article 13

Availability of persons in custody to give evidence or to assist in investigations

1. Upon the request of the requesting State, and if the requested State agrees and its law so permits, a person in custody in the latter State may, subject to his or her consent, be temporarily transferred to the requesting State to give evidence or to assist in the investigations.

2. While the person transferred is required to be held in custody under the law of the requested State, the requesting State shall hold that person in custody and shall return that person in custody to the requested State at the conclusion of the matter in relation to which transfer was sought or at such earlier time as the person's presence is no longer required.

3. Where the requested State advises the requesting State that the transferred person is no longer required to be held in custody, that person shall be set at liberty and be treated as a person referred to in article 14 of the present Treaty.

Article 14

Availability of other persons to give evidence or assist in investigations

1. The requesting State may request the assistance of the requested State in inviting a person:

(a) To appear in proceedings in relation to a criminal matter in the requesting State unless that person is the person charged; or

(b) To assist in the investigations in relation to a criminal matter in the requesting State.

2. The requested State shall invite the person to appear as a witness or expert in proceedings or to assist in the investigations. Where appropriate, the requested State shall satisfy itself that satisfactory arrangements have been made for the person's safety.

3. The request or the summons shall indicate the approximate allowances and the travel and subsistence expenses payable by the requesting State.

4. Upon request, the requested State may grant the person an advance, which shall be refunded by the requesting State.

Article 15

Safe conduct

1. Subject to paragraph 2 of the present article, where a person is in the requesting State pursuant to a request made under article 13 or 14 of the present Treaty:

(a) That person shall not be detained, prosecuted, punished or subjected to any other restrictions of personal liberty in the requesting State in respect of any acts or omissions or convictions that preceded the person's departure from the requested State;

(b) That person shall not, without that person's consent, be required to give evidence in any proceeding or to assist in any investigation other than the proceeding or investigation to which the request relates.

2. Paragraph 1 of the present article shall cease to apply if that person, being free to leave, has not left the requesting State within a period of [15] consecutive days, or any longer period other-wise agreed on by the Parties, after that person has been officially told or notified that his or her presence is no longer required or, having left, has voluntarily returned.

3. A person who does not consent to a request pursuant to article 13 or accept an invitation pursuant to article 14 shall not, by reason thereof, be liable to any penalty or be subjected to any coercive measure, notwithstanding any contrary statement in the request or summons.

Article 16

Provision of publicly available documents and other records

1. The requested State shall provide copies of documents and records in so far as they are open to public access as part of a public register or otherwise, or in so far as they are available for purchase or inspection by the public.

2. The requested State may provide copies of any other document or record under the same conditions as such document or record may be provided to its own law enforcement and judicial authorities.

Article 17

Search and seizure

The requested State shall, in so far as its law permits, carry out requests for search and seizure and delivery of any material to the requesting State for evidentiary purposes, provided that the rights of bona fide third parties are protected.

Article 18

Certification and authentication

A request for assistance and the documents in support thereof, as well as documents or other material supplied in response to such a request, shall not require certification or authentication.

Article 19

costs

The ordinary costs of executing a request shall be borne by the requested State, unless otherwise determined by the Parties. If expenses of a substantial or extraordinary nature are or will be required to execute the request, the Parties shall consult in advance to determine the terms and conditions under which the request shall be executed as well as the manner in which the costs shall be borne.

Article 20

Consultation

The Parties shall consult promptly, at the request of either, concerning the interpretation, the application or the carrying out of the present Treaty either generally or in relation to a particular case.

Article 21

Final provisions

1. The present Treaty is subject to (ratification, acceptance or approval). The instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] shall be exchanged as soon as possible.

2. The present Treaty shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the day on which the instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] are exchanged.

3. The present Treaty shall apply to requests made after its entry into force, even if the relevant acts or omissions occurred prior to that date.

4. Either Contracting Party may denounce the present Treaty by giving notice in writing to the other Party. Such denunciation shall take effect six months following the date on which it is received by the other Party.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Treaty.

Optional Protocol to the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters concerning the proceeds of crime

1. In the present Protocol "proceeds of crime" means any property suspected, or found by a court, to be property directly or indirectly derived or realized as a result of the commission of an offence or to represent the value of property and other benefits derived from the commission of an offence.

2. The requested State shall, upon request, endeavour to ascertain whether any proceeds of the alleged crime are located within its jurisdiction and shall notify the requesting State of the results of its inquiries. In making the request, the requesting State shall notify the requested State of the basis of its belief that such proceeds may be located within its jurisdiction.

3. In pursuance of a request made under paragraph 2 of the present Protocol, the requested State shall endeavour to trace assets, investigate financial dealings, and obtain other information or evidence that may help to secure the recovery of proceeds of crime.

4. Where, pursuant to paragraph 2 of the present Protocol, suspected proceeds of crime are found, the requested State shall upon request take such measures as are permitted by its law to prevent any dealing in, transfer or disposal of, those suspected proceeds of crime, pending a final determination in respect of those proceeds by a court of the requesting State.

5. The requested State shall, to the extent permitted by its law, give effect to or permit enforcement of a final order forfeiting or confiscating the proceeds of crime made by a court of the requesting State or take other appropriate action to secure the proceeds following a request by the requesting State.

6. The Parties shall ensure that the rights of bona fide third parties shall be respected in the application of the present Protocol.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Protocol.

DONE at _ on _ in the _ and _ languages, [both/all] texts being equally authentic.

Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Released

The Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released drew on experience gained under existing conventions, treaties and agreements. It took account of the scope of application, the types of transfer, and the underlying basic principles relating to national sovereignty, dual criminality, rights of the victim, double jeopardy, adaptation and non-aggravation.

The General Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 45/119.

Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985,

Bearing in mind also the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, principle 37 of which stipulates that the United Nations should prepare model instruments suitable for use as international and regional conventions and as guides for national implementing legislation,

Recalling resolution 13 of the Seventh Congress, on the transfer of supervision of foreign offenders who have been conditionally sentenced or conditionally released, in which the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control was requested to study this subject and to consider the possibility of formulating a model treaty in this area,

Acknowledging the valuable contributions made by Governments, non-governmental organizations and individual experts to the drafting of a model treaty on the transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released, in particular the International Expert Meeting on the United Nations and Law Enforcement, held under the auspices of the United Nations at Baden, Austria, from 16 to 19 November 1987, the Interregional Preparatory Meeting for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of offenders on topic V. "United Nations norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard setting" and the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress,

Convinced that the establishment of bilateral and multilateral arrangements for transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released will greatly contribute to the development of more effective international co-operation in penal matters,

Conscious of the need to respect human dignity and recalling the rights conferred upon every person involved in criminal proceedings, as embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

1. Adopts the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released, contained in the annex to the present resolution, as a useful framework that could be of assistance to States interested in negotiating and concluding bilateral or multilateral treaties aimed at improving co-operation in matters of crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Invites Member States, if they have not yet established treaty relations with other States in the area of the transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released, or if they wish to revise existing treaty relations, to take into account the Model Treaty whenever doing so;

3. Urges all Member States to strengthen international co-operation in criminal justice;

4. Also urges Member States to inform the Secretary-General periodically of efforts undertaken to establish arrangements on the transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released;

5. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to conduct periodic reviews of the progress attained in this field;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to assist Member States, at their request, in the development of treaties on the transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released and to report regularly thereon to the Committee.

Desirous of further strengthening international co-operation and mutual assistance in criminal justice, on the basis of the principles of respect for national sovereignty and jurisdiction and of non-interference in the internal affairs of States,

Believing that such co-operation should further the ends of justice, the social resettlement of sentenced persons and the interests of the victims of crime,

Bearing in mind that the transfer of supervision of offenders conditionally sentenced or conditionally released can contribute to an increase in the use of alternatives to imprisonment,

Aware that supervision in the home country of the offender rather than enforcement of the sentence in a country where the offender has no roots also contributes to an earlier and more effective reintegration into society,

Convinced, therefore, that the social rehabilitation of offenders and the increased application of alternatives to imprisonment would be promoted by facilitating the supervision of conditionally sentenced or conditionally released offenders in their State of ordinary residence,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

Scope of application

1. The present Treaty shall be applicable, if, according to a final court decision, a person has been found guilty of an offence and has been:

(a) Placed on probation without sentence having been pronounced;

(b) Given a suspended sentence involving deprivation of liberty;

(c) Given a sentence, the enforcement of which has been modified (parole) or conditionally suspended, in whole or in part, either at the time of the sentence or subsequently.

2. The State where the decision was taken (sentencing State) may request another State (administering State) to take responsibility for applying the terms of the decision (transfer of supervision)

Article 2

Channels of communications

A request for the transfer of supervision shall be made in writing. The request, supporting documents and subsequent communication shall be transmitted through diplomatic channels, directly between the Ministries of Justice or any other authorities designated by the Parties.

Article 3

Required documents

1. A request for the transfer of supervision shall contain all necessary information on the identity, nationality and residence of the sentenced person. The request shall be accompanied by the original or a copy of any court decision referred to in article 1 of the present Treaty and a certificate that this decision is final.

2. The documents submitted in support of a request for transfer of supervision shall be accompanied by a translation into the language of the requested State or into another language acceptable to that State.

Article 4

Certification and authentication

Subject to national law and unless the Parties decide otherwise, a request for transfer of supervision and the documents in support thereof, as well as the documents and other material supplied in response to such a request, shall not require certification or authentication.

Article 5

Decision on the request

The competent authorities of the administering State shall examine what action to take on the request for supervision in order to comply, as fully as possible, with the request under their own law, and shall promptly communicate their decision to the sentencing State.

Article 6

Dual criminality

A request for transfer of supervision can be complied with only if the act on which the request is based would constitute an offence if committed in the territory of the administering State.

Article 7

Grounds for refusal

If the administering State refuses acceptance of a request for transfer of supervision, it shall communicate the reasons for refusal to the sentencing State. Acceptance may be refused where:

- (a) The sentenced person is not an ordinary resident in the administering State;
- (b) The act is an offence under military law, which is not also an offence under ordinary criminal law;
- (c) The offence is in connection with taxes, duties, customs or exchange;
- (d) The offence is regarded by the administering State as being of a political nature;
- (e) The administering State, under its own law, can no longer carry out the supervision or enforce the sanction in the event of revocation because of lapse of time.

Article 8

The position of the sentenced person

Whether sentenced or standing trial, a person may express to the sentencing State his or her interest in a transfer of supervision and his or her willingness to fulfil any conditions to be imposed. Similarly, such interest may be expressed by his or her legal representative or close relatives. Where appropriate, the Contracting States shall inform the offender or his or her close relatives of the possibilities under the present Treaty.

Article 9

The rights of the victim

The sentencing State and the administering State shall ensure in the transfer of supervision that the rights of the victims of the offence, in particular his or her rights to restitution or compensation, shall not be affected as a result of the transfer. In the event of the death of the victim, this provision shall apply to his or her dependants accordingly.

Article 10

The effects of the transfer of supervision on the sentencing State

The acceptance by the administering State of the responsibility for applying the terms of the decision rendered in the sentencing State shall extinguish the competence of the latter State to enforce the sentence.

Article 11

The effects of the transfer of supervision on the administering State

1. The supervision transferred upon agreement and the subsequent procedure shall be carried out in accordance with the law of the administering State. That State alone shall have the right of revocation. That State may, to the extent necessary, adapt to its own law the conditions or measures prescribed, provided that such conditions or measures are, in terms of their nature or duration, not more severe than those pronounced in the sentencing State.

2. If the administering State revokes the conditional sentence or conditional release, it shall enforce the sentence in accordance with its own law without, however, going beyond the limits imposed by the sentencing State.

Article 12

Review, pardon and amnesty

1. The sentencing State alone shall have the right to decide on any application to reopen the case.
2. Each Party may grant pardon, amnesty or commutation of the sentence in accordance with the provisions of its Constitution or other laws.

Article 13

Information

1. The Contracting Parties shall keep each other informed, in so far as it is necessary, of all circumstances likely to affect measures of supervision or enforcement in the administering State. To this end they shall transmit to each other copies of any relevant decisions in this respect.
2. After expiration of the period of supervision, the administering State shall provide to the sentencing State, at its request, a final report concerning the supervised person's conduct and compliance with the measures imposed.

Article 14

costs

Supervision and enforcement costs incurred in the administering State shall not be refunded, unless otherwise agreed by both the sentencing State and the administering State.

Article 15

Final provisions

1. The present Treaty is subject to [ratification, acceptance or approval]. The instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] shall be exchanged as soon as possible.
2. The present Treaty shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the day on which the instruments of [ratification, acceptance or approval] are exchanged.

3. The present Treaty shall apply to requests made after its entry into force, even if the relevant acts or omissions occurred prior to that date.

4. Either Contracting Party may denounce the present Treaty by giving notice in writing to the other Party. Such denunciation shall take effect, six months following the date on which it is received by the other Party.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned., being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Treaty.

General Assembly resolution 45/119

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/451756) without vote, 23 November (meeting 51); draft by Eighth Congress (A/CONF.144/28); agenda item 100.

Financial implications: 5th Committee, G/45/845; S-G, A/C.3/45/L.36, A/C.5/45/59.

Meeting numbers, GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 24-27, 36, 51; 5th Committee 42; plenary 68.

Committee on Crime Prevention and Control

The Committee on Crime Prevention and Control held its eleventh session in Vienna from 5 to 16 February 1990. In its report [E/1990/31], the Committee recommended seven draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council dealing with: the continuation of preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders; the implementation of UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice; victims of crime and abuse of power; education, training and public awareness in the field of crime prevention; prison education; UN surveys of criminal justice; and technical co-operation.

As the preparatory body for the Eighth Congress, the Committee recommended for transmission to the Congress through the Council 21 draft resolutions on specific aspects of crime prevention and treatment of offenders. Five of those annexed new draft international instruments (for details, see above, under "Congress preparations").

The Committee took note of the Secretary-General's report on UN activities in crime prevention and control, which had focused on the improvement of international co-operation by model instruments, information exchange, especially on crime victims and crime prevention, the promotion of technical co-operation, and the maintenance of standards of human rights and integrity. It welcomed the establishment of the UN African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, took note of the excerpts from the draft medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and selected, for endorsement by the Council, the candidates for membership in the Board of Trustees of the UN Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute.

Besides examining a number of preparatory documents for the Eighth Congress, the Committee considered several reports on the implementation of the conclusions and recommendations of the Seventh (1985) Congress. It further considered a note by the Secretary-General on the results of the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice, undertaken by a sub-committee, whose Chairman pointed out that the programme suffered from severe financial constraints compared with other UN programmes and operated at a continuing disadvantage in spite of calls for improving the situation. On 16 February, the Committee considered the draft provisional agenda for its twelfth session and documentation to be submitted under each item, adopted the report on its eleventh session, and recommended a draft decision on those two items for adoption by the Council.

An addendum [E/1990/31/Add.1] to the Committee's report provided an overview of the magnitude of the problem of contemporary crime, assessed the most efficient means of stimulating practical international action and made recommendations in that regard. It examined the problem of contemporary crime at the national and international levels in terms of its nature, extent and costs. It described the inadequacy of current international co-operation and assistance in dealing with the problem, and called for the development of an effective international crime and criminal justice programme, setting out its functions, essential elements, organizational structure and a mechanism for restructuring to make the programme more responsive to the needs of Member States.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the basis of a draft decision recommended by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/216 of 24 May, took note of the report of the Committee on its eleventh session, endorsed its request that the Secretary-General transmit to the Eighth Congress the Committee's report on the need for the creation of an effective international crime and justice programme and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its twelfth session.

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 1990/27.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the responsibilities of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice and its leading role in co-ordinating and strengthening regional and multilateral co-operation in this field,

Convinced that, to enhance its effectiveness and responsiveness and meet its increased responsibilities, the United Nations programme in crime prevention and criminal justice requires adequate resources,

Recalling its resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986, 1987/53 of 28 May 1987, 1988/44 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/68 of 24 May 1989, on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 44/72 of 8 December 1989, in which the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1990, was invited to give priority consideration to the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the work of its eleventh session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Welcomes the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the work of its eleventh session;

3. Invites intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, which have consistently contributed in a constructive and practical way to progress in the United Nations programme in crime prevention and criminal justice, to continue lending their support, particularly on the occasion of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

4. Invites the General Assembly, at its forty-fifth session, in considering the report of the Eighth Congress, to take appropriate measures to ensure the timely implementation and proper follow-up of the recommendations contained therein;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1991, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution, paying particular attention to action taken by the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/27

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/69) without vote, 16 May (meeting 13); draft by Italy (E/1990/C.2/L.6); agenda item 5.

UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme

As requested by Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/68 [YUN 1989, p. 618], the Secretary-General prepared an April report [E/1990/36] on crime prevention and criminal justice, with particular emphasis on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice. The Secretary-General, referring to the report [E/1990/31/Add.1] of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the need for creating an effective international crime and justice programme, pointed to that report's emphasis on the seriousness of the world crime situation, the enormous human and material costs of crime, and the alarming new forms of crime that increasingly assumed transnational dimensions and whose use of advanced technological means and sophisticated organizational forms was outpacing official capacity for control. He noted that organized crime, violence, environmental offences, juvenile delinquency, victim protection, criminal justice system management, community-based sanctions, upgrading of law enforcement activities and training were highlighted as meriting special or continuing attention; that the pivotal role of criminal justice was in protecting the interests of society, safeguarding human rights and securing peaceful and democratic development; and that, therefore, effective implementation of the UN instruments and standards, as well as practical initiatives, such as the development of model agreements and effective strategies for international co-operation, were necessary.

The Secretary-General stated that an international convention had been suggested to provide an appropriate institutional framework and permit consolidation of the instruments for international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice. A summit or ministerial meeting was also proposed for the purpose of mobilizing the necessary political will and identifying a strategy to be pursued in dealing more effectively with the burgeoning problems of national and transnational crime.

The Secretary-General's report also described technical co-operation activities, such as interregional advisory services, provided to an increasing number of Governments in response to the growing need for viable crime prevention policies in the face of the widening reach of transnational crime. It outlined the series of preventive measures recommended by an interregional seminar on corruption in government (The Hague, Netherlands, 11-15 December 1989), which had also urged the following: periodic reviews of the adequacy of legislation and sanctions against corruption; swift, fair and equitable judicial processes; strategic planning for investigative bodies; interdisciplinary investigative task forces; enhancement of witness co-operation through financial rewards and witness protection; forfeiture and confiscation of corruptly gained assets; and provisions against money-laundering. Co-operation with the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and with the Human Rights Advisory Programme was also described, as was co-ordination among UN institutes and relevant entities of the UN system.

In accordance with Council resolution 1989/68, a separate programme on crime prevention and criminal justice had been included in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997. As approved by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the programme contained three sub-programmes concerned with collaborative action against transnational crime, crime prevention planning and criminal justice management, and crime prevention and criminal justice norms and standards. The strategies and activities under those sub-programmes stressed achievement of concrete targets and help to Governments in translating UN guidelines into practical reality. The main focus was on intensified international co-operation in dealing with crime problems, transcending national frontiers and requiring concerted action.

The Secretary-General noted that the Committee had drawn attention to the severe financial and other constraints under which the programme operated and had suggested the creation of a new, separately funded UN agency or a new Secretariat unit. It had also called for a procedure for selecting priority issues, for designing a programme for each issue, for assembling and deploying the resources needed, and for monitoring and evaluating the results. In addition, it had underlined the importance of an energetic fund-raising campaign for the pledging day scheduled for the Eighth Congress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/108.

Review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice

The General Assembly,

Aware of the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 155 C (VII) of 13 August 1948 and General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950,

Recalling its resolutions 40/32 of 29 November 1985, 41/107 of 4 December 1986, 42/59 of 30 November 1987, 43/99 of 8 December 1988 and 44/72 of 8 December 1989 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1986/11 of 21 May 1986, 1987/53 of 28 May 1987, 1988/44 of 27 May 1988 and 1989/68 of 24 May 1989, and taking note of Council resolution 1990/27 of 24 May 1990.

Recognizing the increasingly transnational character and dimensions of crime and also recognizing that the new, organized and sophisticated forms of crime call for concerted international action,

Alarmed by the high human and material costs of crime and aware that its consequences involve a substantial drain on the economies of Member States, and loss and damage to the victims of crime,

Convinced of the urgent need for more effective and responsive international mechanisms to assist countries and facilitate joint strategies in areas of mutual concern,

Noting that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, in its resolution 10/1 of 31 August 1988, requested its Chairman to appoint a sub-committee to provide an overview of the magnitude of the problem of crime in its economic, criminological, social and juridical aspects, to assess the most efficient means of stimulating practical international action in support of Member States and, in particular, the role of the United Nations in that regard, and to make recommendations to the Committee, at its eleventh session, concerning the most effective mechanisms for the implementation of the conclusions of the overview, and noting that a report on these matters was prepared by the sub-committee appointed by the Chairman, which was considered, reviewed, revised and approved by the Committee by its resolution 11/3 of 16 February 1990, at its eleventh session,

Noting also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 44/72, invited the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its eleventh session, to give priority attention to the conclusions and recommendations of its sub-committee and to consider appropriate follow-up thereto by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control entitled "The need for the creation of an effective international crime and justice programme" and noting the endorsement of the report by the Eighth Congress, as well as the deliberations of the Congress thereon,

1. Decides to establish an intergovernmental working group, which, on the basis of the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control entitled "The need for the creation of an effective international crime and justice programme", would produce a report elaborating proposals for an effective crime prevention and criminal justice programme and suggesting how that programme could most appropriately be implemented, and, accordingly, requests the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with the chairmen of the regional groups, to appoint no more than thirty Member States on the basis of the principle of equitable geographical distribution to constitute the membership of the working group;

2. Invites Member States, in consultation with the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to convene an early ministerial meeting:

(a) To consider the report of the intergovernmental working group in order to decide what the future crime prevention and criminal justice programme should be;

(b) To consider, in this context, the possible need for a convention or other international instrument to develop the content, structure and dynamics of that programme, including mechanisms for setting priorities, securing the implementation of the programme and monitoring the results achieved;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparation for the ministerial meeting, to assess the possible implications of the programme proposed by the intergovernmental working group for the resources and organization of the Secretariat and to report thereon to the ministerial meeting and to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all practical measures to ensure rapid implementation of General Assembly resolutions 32/59 and 44/72 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1986/11, 1987/53, 1989/68 and 1990/27, in so far as they relate to the strengthening and upgrading of the status of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, taking into account the demands on the Branch that will be created by the preparations for the meeting of the intergovernmental working group and the ministerial meeting and by the current and expected programme, including the conclusions and recommendations of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

5. Invites Member States to provide active support and assistance for the development of an effective international crime prevention and criminal justice programme and of viable mechanisms for implementing it;

6. Decides that the conclusions and recommendations of the ministerial meeting should be brought to the attention of the General Assembly, under the item entitled "Crime prevention and criminal justice", for appropriate action.

General Assembly resolution 45/108

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/756) without vote, 23 November (meeting 51); draft by Eighth Congress (A/CONF.144/28); agenda item 100.

Financial implications: 5th Committee, A/45/845; S-G, A/C.3/45/L.36, A/C.5/45/59.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 24-27, 36, 51; 5th Committee 42; plenary 68.

International co-operation in the context of development

On 14 December, following its consideration of the draft resolution recommended by the Eighth Congress annexing 29 recommendations for strengthening international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/107.

International co-operation for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development
The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the United Nations and the commitment of all States to respect the obligations assumed by them, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Convinced that crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development should be oriented towards the observance of the principles contained in the Caracas Declaration, the Milan Plan of Action, the

Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order and other relevant resolutions and recommendations of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling its resolution 43/99 of 8 December 1988, in which it stressed the need for Member States to continue to make concerted and systematic efforts to strengthen international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, as identified in the Milan Plan of Action, and to facilitate the adoption by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders of viable and constructive action-oriented strategies against crime,

Recalling also its resolution 44/72 of 8 December 1989,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/68 of 24 May 1989, in which the Council reaffirmed its conviction of the importance of the programme of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and the necessity of strengthening it in order to make it fully responsive to the needs and expectations of Member States,

Adopts the recommendations on international co-operation for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development, as contained in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Recommendations on international co-operation for crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development

A. Crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development

1. Governments should reaffirm their commitment to respect the existing international treaties and their adherence to principles expressed in the Charter of the United Nations and in other relevant international instruments. Crime can also be prevented by ensuring that those principles are not sacrificed.

2. Member States should intensify the struggle against international crime by respecting and promoting the rule of law and legality in international relations and, for that purpose, they should complete and further develop international criminal law, fully implement the obligations following from international treaties and instruments in this field (pacta sunt servanda), and examine their national legislation in order to ensure that it meets the needs of international criminal law.

3. Governments should accord priority attention to the promulgation and implementation of appropriate laws and regulations to control and combat transnational crime and illegal international transactions, especially by the provision of proper collaborative schemes and trained personnel. Also, national laws should be reviewed in order to ensure a more effective and adequate response to the new forms of criminal activity, not only through the application of criminal penalties, but also through civil or administrative measures.

4. The national, regional and international aspects of growing pollution and the exploitation and destruction of the environment should be recognized and controlled as a matter of urgency, in view of the increasing and alarming devastation, deriving from various sources. Besides measures of administrative law and liability under civil law, the role of criminal law as an instrument that can help to achieve such control should be kept under review. The desirability of elaborating guiding principles for the prevention of crimes against the environment should be considered.

5. In view of the fact that advanced technology and specialized technical knowledge are employed in criminal activities pursued in international trade and commerce, including computer fraud, by the misuse of banking facilities and the manipulation of tax laws and customs regulations, law enforcement and criminal justice officials should be properly trained and provided with adequate legal and technical means to be able to detect and investigate such offences. The co-ordination and co-operation of other relevant agencies at the national level should be ensured and their capacities further improved. The development and strengthening of direct arrangements of international co-operation between the various agencies of national criminal justice systems should also be pursued.

6. Since even legitimate enterprises, organizations and associations may sometimes be involved in transnational criminal activities affecting national economies, Governments should adopt measures for the control of such activities. They should also collect information from various sources so as to have a solid base for the detection and punishment of enterprises, organizations and associations, their officials, or both, if they are involved in such criminal activities, with a view also to preventing similar conduct in the future.

7. Note should be taken of the fact that many countries lack adequate laws to deal with the emerging manifestations of transnational crime and that the adoption and implementation of appropriate instruments and measures to prevent this type of criminality are urgently needed. In this regard, the exchange of information on existing laws and regulations should be encouraged in order to facilitate the dissemination and adoption of appropriate measures.

8. Because the corrupt activities of public officials can destroy the potential effectiveness of all types of governmental programmes, hinder development, and victimize individuals and groups, it is of crucial importance that all nations should (a) review the adequacy of their criminal laws, including procedural legislation, in order to respond to all forms of corruption and related actions designed to assist or to facilitate corrupt activities, and should have recourse to sanctions that will ensure adequate deterrence; (b) devise administrative and regulatory mechanisms for the prevention of corrupt practices or the abuse of power; (c) adopt procedures for the detection, investigation and conviction of corrupt officials; (d) create legal provisions for the forfeiture of funds and property from corrupt practices; and (e) take appropriate measures against enterprises involved in corruption. The Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat should co-ordinate the elaboration of materials to assist countries in these efforts, including the development of a manual to combat corruption, and should provide specialized training to judges and prosecutors that would qualify them to deal with the technical aspects of corruption, as well as with the experiences derived from specialized courts handling such matters.

9. Noting the alarming threat posed by illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, which is among the worst crimes that humanity is facing, and the action taken by United Nations drug control units and bodies in this field, and concerned that, despite all the efforts made at the national, regional and international levels, this phenomenon persists unabated, it is important that efforts to combat this type of criminality be given a central place in all crime prevention and criminal justice plans and programmes. The work of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in this area should be strengthened. Special assistance should be extended to developing countries for the implementation of drug abuse control programmes and the elaboration of collaborative prevention and control strategies.

10. The process of developing comprehensive model codes, especially at the regional and subregional levels, to combat crimes of transnational and international dimensions, should be encouraged. Also, efforts should be made to harmonize national criminal laws, so as to make them fully responsive to the realities and ramifications of such crimes. Practical arrangements, such as extradition, mutual assistance in criminal justice and the sharing and exchange of expertise and information, should be pursued. Adequate attention should be given to effective enforcement mechanisms in order to minimize the consequences of transborder crimes, including their effect on countries not directly involved.

11. Appropriate educational policies should be developed for making the populations of Member States more sensitive to the problem through formal educational systems and general public information programmes, with a view to promoting awareness of the ways and means by which criminal victimization can be avoided, as well as acquainting the public at large with the objectives and processes of the criminal justice system.

12. In recognition of the need for specific preventive measures related to such types of criminality as burglary, violent theft and street crime, an inventory of preventive measures should be prepared by the United Nations on the basis of an in-depth assessment and evaluation of their effectiveness in various cultural, social, economic and political contexts.

13. With respect to the victims of crime and abuse of power, a guide containing an inventory of comprehensive measures for education on the prevention of victimization, and on the protection of, and assistance and compensation to, victims should be prepared. This guide should be applied in accordance with the legal, socio-cultural and economic circumstances of each nation, taking into account the important role of non-governmental organizations in this sphere.

14. In view of its crucial function in crime prevention, the criminal justice system should be developed on the basis of the progressive rationalization and humanization of criminal laws and procedures, sentencing policies and dispositional alternatives, within the overall framework of social justice and societal aspirations.

15. A systematic approach to crime prevention planning should be pursued to provide for the incorporation of crime prevention policies into national development planning, starting from an overall reassessment of substantive criminal and procedural laws whenever appropriate. This approach would include the introduction of the processes of decriminalization, depenalization and diversion, as well as reforms of procedures that would ensure the support of members of the public and review of existing policies with a view to assessing their impact. It would also include appropriate links to be established between the criminal justice system and other development sectors, including education, employment, health, social policy and other related fields.

16. The trial process should be consonant with the cultural realities and social values of society, in order to make it understood and to permit it to operate effectively within the community it serves. Observance of human rights, equality, fairness and consistency should be ensured at all stages of the process.

B. International scientific and technical co-operation

17. In order to increase the effectiveness of international co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, concerted efforts should be made towards (a) the ratification and implementation of existing international instruments; (b) the development of bilateral and multilateral instruments; and (c) the preparation and elaboration of model instruments and standards for use at the national, bilateral, multilateral, sub-regional, regional and interregional levels.

18. The formulation of international instruments, standards and norms should include the following specific areas of concern: (a) judicial assistance treaties, in particular between common law and civil law countries, dealing with the means for obtaining evidence conforming to the requirements of the requesting State; (b) development of standardized requests for extradition and mutual assistance; (c) development of the means of providing assistance to victims of crime and abuse of power, with emphasis on the implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, and of providing adequate protection for witnesses; (d) further consideration of issues of transnational jurisdiction in order to assist in the process of responding to requests for extradition and mutual assistance and in the implementation of international instruments; and (e) elaboration of standards for international assistance in respect of bank secrecy, facilitating the seizure and confiscation of proceeds in bank accounts derived from criminal acts. In particular, banks and other financial institutions should be urged to standardize their reporting requirements and documents so that these can be used more rapidly and effectively as evidence. More effective international standards to inhibit the laundering of money and investment connected with criminal activities, such as narcotics trafficking and terrorism, should also be developed.

19. Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and international, national and private funding agencies should assist the United Nations in the establishment and operation of a global crime prevention and criminal justice information network. Member States are urged to contribute to this endeavour by financing equipment and expertise. Consideration should also be given to determining the categories of criminal justice data that can be provided and exchanged on a regular basis.

20. In accordance with the numerous decisions and resolutions of relevant organs of the United Nations, including the quinquennial United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, measures should be taken to strengthen programmes of international technical and scientific co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice on a bilateral and multilateral basis, as substantive components of broader development programmes, taking into account the special needs of developing countries and, in particular, the worsening socio-economic situation in many of them, which contributes to the increase of structural inequality and criminality.

21. In order to formulate and develop proper regional and interregional strategies of international technical and scientific co-operation in combating crime and improving the effectiveness of preventive and criminal justice activities, the programmes of technical and scientific co-operation should be directed especially towards (a) reinforcement of the technical capacities of the criminal justice agencies; (b) an upgrading of the human and technical resources in all sectors of the criminal justice system in order to stimulate technical assistance, model and demonstration projects, research activities and training programmes, in close co-operation with the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and competent non-governmental organizations; (c) the further development and improvement, at the national, regional, interregional and international levels, of information bases for the collection, analysis and dissemination of data on crime trends, innovative ways and methods of crime prevention and control, and the operation of criminal justice agencies, in order to provide an appropriate basis for policy-formulation and programme implementation; (d) the promotion, through educational programmes and training activities, of the implementation of United Nations norms, guidelines and standards in crime prevention and criminal justice; and (e) the elaboration and implementation of joint strategies and collaborative arrangements to deal with crime problems of mutual concern.

22. The Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, as the focal point of United Nations activities in this field, the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, the co-operating entities like the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre, the interregional advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice, and other relevant United Nations bodies, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations enjoying consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, should be strengthened so as to increase the scope of their operations: improve their co-ordination and diversify forms and methods of technical and scientific co-operation.

23. The role of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control as the principal body dealing with crime prevention and criminal justice matters, which is entrusted, inter alia, with the preparations for the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, should be further enhanced so as to enable it to fulfil its important functions.

24. The capacity of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, as the only professional and specialized entity within the United Nations system with overall responsibility for its crime prevention and criminal justice programme, should be strengthened in terms of both human and financial resources. Prompt implementation of the General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions related thereto is urgently needed. In particular, priority attention should be given to the implementation of paragraphs 4 and 5 of General Assembly resolution 42/59 of 30 November 1987, in which the Assembly approved the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolutions 11986/11 and 11987/53, concerning the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, and requested the Secretary-General, inter alia, to take measures to ensure that the programme of work is supported by adequate resources; and paragraph 3 (a) of Economic and Social Council resolution 1987/53, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to develop the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs as a specialized body and facilitating agent in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice. Attention should also be given to other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as to the recommendations of the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control.

25. The United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders should further develop their research, training and technical assistance capacities, and widen their collaborative networks through more extensive reliance on non-governmental organizations and national research and educational institutions, in order to meet the growing requests from developing countries for technical and scientific assistance. The Governments concerned, relevant regional bodies and organizations and United Nations entities should actively assist the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, and, in particular, should assist the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in consolidating its status and further promoting its activities.

26. Governments should be invited to fund regional advisory services in their regions, directly or through the United Nations Development Programme, so as to develop further and complement existing structures and possibilities in this field. The regional commissions should be encouraged to do likewise and should be supported in their efforts to that end.

27. Special attention should be paid to strengthening the collaborative ties in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice between the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other relevant entities, with a view to ensuring adequate resources for technical co-operation activities in crime prevention and criminal justice. Interested Governments should give priority to the inclusion of crime prevention and criminal justice projects in the national and regional programmes proposed for the support of the United Nations Development Programme.

28. In order to fully implement the mandates emerging from the crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to provide additional technical and scientific expertise and resources for matters of international co-operation in this field, broader involvement of, and assistance by, non-governmental organizations are required.

29. Governments and other funding agencies should contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence in order to enable the United Nations to implement, in an adequate and effective manner, programmes of technical and scientific co-operation in this field.

UN standards and norms

In an April report [E/1990/36], the Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/63 [YUN 1989, p. 634], a working group met (1-2 February) prior to the 1990 session of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to examine ways of effectively implementing the internationally adopted UN standards and norms in criminal justice and to offer guidelines and prototypes for national and international application. The group noted certain obstacles to implementation as revealed by UN surveys, among them the low priority attached to implementation, shortage of funds, inadequate human and professional resources, lack of co-ordinated action and political will, and public apathy.

The working group made proposals to assist Governments in their implementation efforts and recommended that Governments provide adequate support to UN crime prevention and criminal justice institutes for national follow-up action. It suggested that the Committee prepare a comprehensive plan assessing the various standards and mutual assistance treaties according to priorities, taking available resources into account. It considered the possibility of merging or clustering certain surveys according to their objectives. In that connection, the group distinguished four main types of standards: those dealing with human rights issues, those promoting the integrity of criminal justice administration, those which were essentially 'administrative, and the more general documents. The group accorded the highest priority to those dealing with human rights issues and to the general documents, and proposed a "programmatic implementation plan". It also felt that an implementation body of Committee members or other acknowledged experts might be formed to make first-hand inquiries within countries. Regarding standards concerned with promoting the integrity of criminal justice systems, the group suggested that the UN institutes could play a leading role in personnel training, in providing information and in encouraging greater accountability, reporting periodically on those activities. A model training syllabus and in-service training were also suggested.

The working group stressed the role of NGOs in propagating and helping to apply UN standards and norms, as well as the role of the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network. The group urged the prompt publication of the proposed compendium of all UN standards relating to crime prevention and criminal justice and envisaged a voluntary fund for the implementation of UN standards and norms.

The working group made specific recommendations, which were endorsed by the Committee in a draft resolution submitted for adoption by the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/21.

Implementation of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind the Milan Plan of Action and the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Bearing in mind also the Declaration of Basic Principles of justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of 'Power, the Safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), the Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, and the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners,

Bearing in mind further the Procedures for the effective implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Procedures for the effective implementation of the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary and the Guidelines for the effective implementation of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials,

Noting the difficulties that countries have found in supplying complete and accurate replies to the questionnaires designed to measure the extent of compliance with those standards and procedures,

Acknowledging the important role the United Nations has played, and continues to play, in the development of those standards and procedures through its quinquennial congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Recognizing the valuable contribution of the United Nations to those endeavours through its human rights activities, based on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, and the Second Optional Protocol thereto, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment and other relevant instruments,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 40/146 of 13 December 1985, 41/149 of 4 December 1986, 42/143 of 7 December 1987 and 44/162 of 15 December 1989 on human rights in the administration of justice,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1987/53 of 28 May 1987 and 1989/68 of 24 May 1989 on the review of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/63 of 24 May 1989 on the implementation of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Welcoming the steps taken by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and by the Centre for Human Rights, of the Secretariat, to ensure even closer co-operation, particularly in the preparations for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Commending, in particular, the fact that focal points have been further developed within the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Centre for Human Rights to monitor the human rights aspects of the administration of justice in various programmes and to provide, as appropriate, advice on co-ordination and other relevant issues,

Convinced of the need for further co-operation and concerted action, as reaffirmed by the Commission on Human Rights in resolutions 1989/24 of 6 March 1989, on human rights in the administration of justice, 1989/32 of 6 March 1989, on the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, and 1989/64 of 8 March 1989 on summary or arbitrary executions,

1. calls upon all Member States:

(a) To adopt and implement at the national level the United Nations standards in crime prevention and criminal justice, in accordance with their constitutional processes and domestic practices;

(b) To ensure that the standards are widely publicized in at least the main or official language or languages of the country;

(c) To guarantee that justice personnel, members of the executive branch and the legislature and the public in general are informed in the most appropriate manner of the content and importance of the standards and that the standards are made available to them;

(d) To design ways and means of enhancing the observance of the standards, including the elaboration of realistic and effective implementation procedures, the use of the standards in the curricula of universities and other institutions, the organization of seminars and training courses, as well as of other meetings at the professional and non-professional levels, the more active involvement of the community and the increased support of the mass media;

(e) To promote studies on measures for the effective implementation of the standards, with emphasis on new developments in that area;

(f) To provide the needed support to the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice and the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre, as well as to other entities of the United Nations system concerned with the implementation of the standards;

(g) To increase, as far as possible, the level of support for technical co-operation and advisory services, either directly or through international funding agencies, so as to promote the provision of technical co-operation to Governments requesting it;

2. Urges the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to continue reviewing the standards and following up their implementation, to make recommendations on their future application and to identify existing obstacles to, or shortcomings in, their implementation, inter alia, through contacts with the Governments of the countries concerned, with a view to suggesting appropriate remedies;

3. Authorizes the Chairman of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to designate members of the Committee, with due regard to appropriate regional representation, to assist the Committee in the periods between its sessions in the implementation of specific standards, in close co-operation with the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice, the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre and the other entities and organizations concerned, without financial implications for the United Nations, and to inform the Committee and its pre-sessional working groups of the results of those endeavours;

4. Invites Member States to allocate extrabudgetary funds to enable the designated members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to draw on their best available professional and academic sources of information, to consult with non-governmental organizations and to hold ad hoc meetings as required;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the designated members of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control with all the assistance necessary for the successful completion of their tasks;

6. Calls upon the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its twelfth session, to make specific recommendations to the Economic and Social Council on further action required for the effective implementation of existing standards, on the basis of the proposals made by the pre-sessional working group established in accordance with Council resolution 1989/63, paragraph 6, taking into account, in particular, the following issues:

(a) Measures to increase the level of support for programmes of technical co-operation and advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice to permit more effective implementation, including special projects designed and carried out at the country level and more active involvement of potential funding agencies;

(b) The role of the United Nations, in particular of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, in promoting the implementation of existing standards, including modalities for strengthening existing review procedures, and more active inter-sessional involvement of Committee members and other experts;

(c) The relationship between the effectiveness of implementation and the work-load of the Committee and the Secretariat;

(d) The growing burden imposed on many States by the expansion of reporting obligations, and the need for technical assistance;

(e) The problem of inadequate reporting or excessive delays;

(f) The question of additional or alternative sources of information;

(g) The capacity of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to provide the Committee with the administrative and technical support required, in view of inadequate staffing and other financial constraints;

7. Authorizes the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to continue the practice of convening a pre-sessional working group for two days before each session;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and its pre-sessional working group with all the assistance necessary for the successful completion of their tasks;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, the widest possible dissemination of United Nations standards in crime prevention and criminal justice and the periodic reports on their implementation, in as many languages as possible, and to make them available to all States and to the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned,

10. Emphasizes the significant role of the United Nations regional and interregional institutes and regional commissions, the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre, the regional and interregional advisers in crime prevention and criminal justice, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, including professional associations concerned with promoting United Nations standards in crime prevention and criminal justice, and invites them to continue and intensify their active involvement;

11. Reaffirms the importance of developing diversified funding strategies, including recourse to voluntary and mixed multilateral and bilateral contributions for specific projects, and of strengthening the involvement of United Nations development agencies, including the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank;

12. Invites the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to consider the following issues:

(a) The means by which to accord adequate priority to the implementation of existing standards;

(b) The possibility of consolidating reporting arrangements.

UN surveys of criminal justice

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/18.

United Nations surveys of criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Convinced of the important role of criminal justice statistics in the informed management of all criminal justice operations and of the need for comprehensive, accurate and up-to-date criminal justice data bases at the national and international levels,

Recognizing the need to continue the work on United Nations criminal justice statistics by means of periodic surveys of crime trends, the operations of criminal justice systems and crime prevention strategies and to make those surveys as uncomplicated as possible, and recognizing the major contribution that the analysis of such surveys can make to the formulation and development of criminal justice programmes,

Recognizing also that the ongoing work on computerization of matters concerning crime and justice by Member States and the United Nations will enhance the potential of Member States to respond to such surveys,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1984/48 of 25 May 1984, and resolution 9 adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Secretary-General was requested to allocate existing resources to allow for the enhancement of efforts to establish and develop national statistical data bases on crime and the operations of the criminal justice systems and to strengthen the work of the United Nations regional institutes in that field,

Believing that future surveys have to be simplified and undertaken more frequently and that the replies to them can be made more accurate,

1. Recommends that the Fourth United Nations Survey of Crime Trends, Operations of Criminal Justice Systems and Crime Prevention Strategies should be simplified, that it should cover the period 1987-1990 and that subsequent surveys should be carried out at two-year and ultimately one-year intervals;

2. Calls upon Member States to endeavour to provide more complete responses to the Fourth United Nations Survey;

3. Invites the United Nations regional and inter-regional institutes, in co-operation with the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Statistical Office of the Secretariat, to review the preparation of the survey questionnaire and the analysis and publication of the results;

4. Invites Member States, through the United Nations Trust Fund for Social Defence or in other ways, to provide financial assistance to countries for the creation and maintenance of criminal justice data bases, at the national and international levels, and to provide the necessary expertise or appropriate international analysis and policy recommendations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in his progress report on United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice, to be submitted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its twelfth session, to make proposals for improving the number and quality of responses to the Fourth United Nations Survey and for publishing the results of such surveys in the regular reports on the state of crime and justice in the world;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to convene a meeting, during the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to consider the revision of the survey questionnaire, and invites Governments to include in their national delegations persons suited to that task;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General, in particular through the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs and the Statistical Office, and in co-operation with the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, to provide assistance to the regional institutes so that training programmes may be organized for criminal justice statisticians and others involved in the preparation of the replies to the surveys with a view to increasing the rate of response;

8. Decides that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control should review the results of the periodic surveys with a view to including them in regular United Nations technical publications on the state of crime and justice in the world.

Crime prevention education, training and public awareness

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/24.

Education, training and public awareness in the field of crime prevention

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that in the Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Secretary-General was requested to review, in consultation with the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice, in order to establish priorities and to ensure the continuing relevance and responsiveness of the United Nations to emerging needs,

Convinced that the continuous review and establishment of priorities should be, first of all, related to the ongoing training of criminal justice staff, sensitizing them to contemporary priorities and providing relevant in-service instruction,

Convinced also that, in order to be fully effective, standard-setting activities should include measures for their practical application for professionals in the field,

Recognizing the need for priority to be accorded to more effective crime prevention,

Reaffirming the leadership role of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Recommends the establishment of a comprehensive programme of work so that the United Nations may deal in a practical and operational way, in the context of its policy, standard-setting and clearing-house functions and its central co-ordination role, with the contemporary problems of the international community in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice; the programme should include:

(a) Design of programmes for curriculum development and preparation of training material and manuals;

(b) Promotion of collaborative academic work and publications;

(c) Provision of technical advisory services to Member States and organizations, at their request;

(d) Development of data bases on different aspects of education, training and public awareness;

(e) Production of audio-visual material and other training aids;

(f) Promotion of international co-operation in respect of training and educational programmes, including the provision of scholarships, fellowships and study tours;

(g) Close collaboration with research centres and academic institutions, as well as with the private sector;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to put those recommendations into effect.

Criminal justice and prison education

Criminal justice education

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/122.

Criminal justice education

The General Assembly,

Aware that one of the main objectives of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice is the continued promotion of a more effective administration of justice, the strengthening of international co-operation in the fight against transnational crime, the observance of human rights and the pursuance of the highest standards of fairness, efficiency, humanity and professional conduct,

Recalling in this context its resolution 44/72 of 8 December 1989 in which it expressed the hope that the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of offenders would make a major contribution to the solution of problems related to crime prevention and criminal justice,

Noting the views expressed at previous congresses concerning the need for collaboration between criminal justice agencies and educational authorities in the development of crime prevention programmes,

Recognizing that existing approaches to crime prevention and control have not always proved effective,

Calling attention to its resolution 42/104 of 7 December 1987, by which it proclaimed the year 1990 as International Literacy Year, the aim of which is the eradication of illiteracy in the world, and its resolution 44/127 of 15 December 1989,

Bearing in mind its resolution 44/61 of 8 December 1989 on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights,

Convinced that the development of public information activities in the field of criminal justice should include the creation and implementation of mechanisms to enable Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and professional criminal justice associations to be familiar with ongoing criminal justice and crime prevention activities in the work of the United Nations,

Mindful that the Eighth Congress, in its resolution 5 of 5 September 1990 on the consolidation of the role of national correspondents in the crime prevention and criminal justice field, resolution 14 of 6 September 1990 on social aspects of crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development, resolution 19 of 7 September 1990 on management of criminal justice and development of sentencing policies, and resolution 4 of 5 September 1990 on international co-operation and mutual assistance through training programmes and exchange of expertise, as well as in its resolution on the computerization of criminal justice, recommended to the General Assembly for adoption, made several recommendations for strengthening education activities in the criminal justice field, which included better dissemination of information on those activities among interested Member States and other parties, mindful also that education has a potential role to play in ameliorating the conditions that give rise to crime and to the consequences of criminality,

Determined that education should play an important role in crime prevention and criminal justice through such means as education for the general awareness of the public, education of the young for crime prevention, education aimed at the total personal development of prisoners and other offenders and continuing education of the criminal justice personnel,

Aware that comprehensive approaches are required for a lasting and systemic impact on criminal justice education with a view to attaining higher standards of fairness, efficiency and professional conduct of criminal justice personnel,

1. Endorses the initiatives made by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in the above-mentioned resolutions, which aim at strengthening national and international efforts in criminal justice education, including the enhancement of the role of criminal justice education in the activities of Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and control;

2. Invites Member States to review existing education practices in respect of both offenders and personnel in crime prevention and criminal justice;

3. Also invites Member States to involve educational experts, as appropriate, in crime prevention and criminal justice and to encourage related educational research and publications;

4. Further invites Member States to advise criminal justice staff periodically through their professional associations, journals or other publications and records, on United Nations developments relevant to their area of work;

5. invites all Member States to include in their educational curricula materials relevant to a comprehensive understanding of criminal justice and crime prevention issues, and encourages all those responsible for criminal law and criminal justice reforms, training in law and its enforcement, the armed forces, medicine, diplomacy and other relevant fields to include appropriate criminal justice and crime prevention components in their programmes;

6. Also invites Member States to encourage collaboration between criminal justice agencies and educational authorities in the development of crime prevention programmes and to encourage educational authorities to give increased attention to ethical and socialization programmes in their curricula and to other relevant measures referred to in the inventory of comprehensive crime prevention measures submitted to the Eighth Congress;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of increased use of education in crime prevention and criminal justice with a view to preparing a study on the relationship between crime, education and development and of presenting the first results in a progress report to be submitted to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its twelfth session;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat in co-operation with other offices and national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and control, to continue to develop and maintain a list of criminal justice journals and relevant public media programmes, with a view to the dissemination of information on United Nations activities in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice for educational purposes;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of relevant national criminal justice and educational authorities the United Nations standards, norms and other selected recommendations with a view to ensuring their more widespread and systematic dissemination in relevant training and educational programmes;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to develop technical co-operation programmes, including interregional advisory services, with a view to enhancing the role of education in the operation of crime prevention and criminal justice, taking into account the interdisciplinary nature of such co-operation programmes;

11. Recommends that the Secretary-General should establish, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds, electronic data bases within the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network, which should include information on the network of national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and information on educational and training programmes in the criminal justice field, with a view to disseminating information to the international criminal justice community more effectively;

12. Invites the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute substantially, logistically and financially to the development of educational programmes within the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme and to the establishing of the above-mentioned data bases;

13. Urges the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to include educational issues in their research and training programmes;

14. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, as the preparatory body for the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to keep the matter under review;

15. Recommends that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and preparatory meetings to the Ninth Congress further consider the role of education with a view to facilitating educational approaches in crime prevention and criminal justice.

Prison education

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/20.

Prison education

The Economic and Social Council,

Affirming the right of everyone to education, as enshrined in article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in articles 13 to 15 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling rule 77 of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, which states, inter alia, that provision shall be made for the further education of all prisoners capable of profiting thereby, that the education of illiterates and young prisoners shall be compulsory and that the education of prisoners shall be integrated with the educational system of the country so far as practicable,

Recalling also rule 22.1 of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), which states that professional education, in-service training, refresher courses and other appropriate modes of instruction shall be utilized to establish and maintain the necessary professional competence of all personnel dealing with juvenile cases, and rule 26, which stresses the role of education and vocational training for all juveniles in custody,

Bearing in mind the long-standing concern of the United Nations about the humanization of criminal justice and the protection of human rights and about the importance of education in the development of the individual and the community,

Bearing in mind also that human dignity is an inherent, inviolable quality of every human being and a pre-condition for education aiming at the development of the whole person,

Bearing in mind further that 1990, the year in which the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders is to be held, is also International Literacy Year, the objectives of which are directly relevant to the individual needs of prisoners,

Noting with appreciation the significant efforts made by the United Nations, in preparing for the Eighth Congress, to give more recognition to prison education,

1. Recommends that Member States, appropriate institutions, educational counselling services and other organizations should promote prison education, inter alia by:

(a) Providing penal institutions with educators and accompanying services and raising the educational level of prison personnel;

(b) Developing professional selection procedures and staff training and supplying the necessary resources and equipment;

(c) Encouraging the provision and expansion of educational programmes for offenders in and outside prisons;

(d) Developing education suitable to the needs and abilities of prisoners and in conformity with the demands of society;

2. Also recommends that Member States should:

(a) Provide various types of education that would contribute significantly to crime prevention, resocialization of prisoners and reduction of recidivism, such as literacy education, vocational training, continuing education for updating knowledge, higher education and other programmes that promote the human development of prisoners;

(b) Consider the increased use of alternatives to imprisonment and measures for the social resettlement of prisoners with a view to facilitating their education and reintegration into society;

3. Further recommends that Member States, in developing educational policies, should take into account the following principles:

(a) Education in prison should aim at developing the whole person, bearing in mind the prisoner's social, economic and cultural background;

(b) All prisoners should have access to education, including literacy programmes, basic education, vocational training, creative, religious and cultural activities, physical education and sports, social education, higher education and library facilities;

(c) Every effort should be made to encourage prisoners to participate actively in all aspects of education;

(d) All those involved in prison administration and management should facilitate and support education as much as possible;

(e) Education should be an essential element in the prison regime; disincentives to prisoners who participate in approved formal educational programmes should be avoided;

(f) Vocational education should aim at the greater development of the individual and be sensitive to trends in the labour market;

(g) Creative and cultural activities should be given a significant role since they have a special potential for enabling prisoners to develop and express themselves;

(h) Wherever possible, prisoners should be allowed to participate in education outside the prison;

(i) Where education has to take place within the prison, the outside community should be involved as fully as possible;

(j) The necessary funds, equipment and teaching staff should be made available to enable prisoners to receive appropriate education;

4. Urges the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its International Bureau of Education, in co-operation with the regional commissions, the regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice, other specialized agencies and other entities within the United Nations system, other intergovernmental organizations concerned and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to become actively involved in this process;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds:

(a) To develop a set of guidelines and a manual on prison education that would provide the basis necessary for the further development of prison education and would facilitate the exchange of expertise and experience on this aspect of penitentiary practice among Member States;

(b) To convene an international expert meeting on prison education, with a view to formulating action-oriented strategies in this area, with the co-operation of the regional and interregional institutes for crime prevention and criminal justice, the specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations concerned and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to inform the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its twelfth session, on the results of his endeavours in this area;

7. Invites the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its twelfth session, to consider the question of prison education.

Crime prevention institutes

African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Secretary-General indicated in an April report [E/1990/36] that the statute of the UN African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, adopted in 1988, had been signed by 26 countries, including Uganda, the host country. The Institute was to be financed through contributions from African States, based on a scale of assessments determined by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), with initial support of $2 million from UNDP for 1990-1993. In February 1990, the OAU Council of Ministers urged those of its members which had not done so to sign the statute and to make contributions in cash and in kind.

The Institute's Governing Board had been constituted in 1989 by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa and its Director and Deputy Director had been appointed. The Institute was scheduled to launch its programme of activities from its permanent location in Kampala in July 1990. A comprehensive programme of training, research, information, advisory services and collaborative action had been envisaged to help the States of the region to deal effectively with crime and justice problems in the context of development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/19.

Technical co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as proclaimed in the Charter, is to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Convinced that, within the framework of development, crime prevention and criminal justice should be guided by respect for the principles proclaimed in the Caracas Declaration and the Milan Plan of Action, the Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, and other pertinent instruments adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Convinced also that concerted efforts in all areas will lead to the practical application of these principles, with full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the deteriorating socio-economic situation in some countries demands the aid of the international community, in all areas, within the framework of freely concluded bilateral or multilateral conventions,

Emphasizing the usefulness of regional and interregional co-operation in crime prevention and criminal justice, as fostered by the United Nations regional and interregional institutes and other such organizations that work closely with the United Nations,

Noting with satisfaction the statutory establishment of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and reaffirming the vital role the Institute is called upon to play in assisting the African region in the formulation and implementation of appropriate crime prevention and criminal justice policies and programmes,

Acknowledging the economic constraints on the States members of the African region to meet their financial obligations to the Institute to enable it to start operations and to implement its mandate,

Aware of the conditions attached to funding by the United Nations Development Programme, which would limit the staffing, administrative and operational capabilities of the Institute,

Convinced that the viability of the Institute requires adequate funding on a predictable, assured and continuous basis,

1. Recommends that the international community, working through bilateral or multilateral arrangements, provide Member States, at their request, with necessary assistance, in order to contribute to the establishment of the infrastructure required for crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Invites Member States to increase their co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice by expanding their operational activities in this area;

3. Urges the United Nations Development Programme to provide adequate funding for the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on a predictable, assured and continuous basis, for a minimum of six years, subject to biennial evaluation of performance of the Institute by its Board and the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

4. Urges Governments to provide supplementary financial and technical support so as to enable the United Nations to help developing countries in their efforts to identify, analyse, follow up and evaluate crime trends, to formulate crime prevention and control strategies that are effective and in harmony with their national development plans, priorities and objectives, and to implement criminal justice policies with a view to ensuring respect for United Nations principles and standards in this area;

5. Invites Member States to include crime prevention and criminal justice policies in their planning process, particularly when formulating national development plans, so as to reduce the human, social and economic costs associated with criminality and delinquency, and to allocate sufficient funds to the activities of the criminal justice system, paying appropriate attention to research and training;

6. Urges the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the United Nations Secretariat and other financial organizations to continue to provide financial support and assistance within their programme of technical co-operation activities;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its twelfth session of the measures taken by the Member States to achieve the objectives of the present resolution.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/69) without vote, 11 May (meeting 11); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1990/31); agenda item 5.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 45/428 of 14 December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General and UNDP to explore, as a matter of urgency, the possibilities for full funding of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders through voluntary contributions. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report to the Assembly at its forty-sixth (1991) session on the situation of the Institute and all other autonomous UN institutes, and to include, if appropriate, proposals for a balance between voluntary contributions and financing through the regular budget.

UN Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/217, endorsed for membership in the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute the following candidates who had been selected by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its eleventh session: Tolani Asuni (Nigeria), Pierre-Henri Bolle (Switzerland), Dusan Cotic (Yugoslavia), Regis de Gouttes (France), Moustafa El-Augi (Lebanon), Jose A. Rios Alves da Cruz (Brazil) and Shusil Swarup Varma (India).

Capital punishment

Fourth quinquennial report

Report of Secretary-General (March). In March, the Secretary-General submitted the fourth quinquennial report [E/1990/38 & ^{Corr.1}] on capital punishment, prepared mainly on the basis of information received from 43 Member States for the period 1984-1988, in response to a UN survey on the subject. The report stated that, during the period covered, nine countries had abolished the death penalty for all offences. Retentionist States in North Africa and the Middle East had made policy changes to restrict the use of capital punishment and/or reduce the number of capital offences. The United States had reported the highest number of judicial and statutory changes, causing the mandatory death penalty statute to be struck down in some States and reinstated in others, the method of execution to be changed and capital offences to be redefined.

The report noted that the number of replies received did not provide sufficient data for a general analysis of the global use of capital punishment. Since the vast majority of retentionist States did not reply, that was particularly true for the actual number of death sentences and executions.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/29.

Capital punishment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1745(LIV) of 16 May 1973, 1930(LVIII) of 6 May 1975, 1984/50 of 25 May 1984 and 1985/33 of 29 May 1985,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2857(XXVI) of 20 December 1971, 32/61 of 8 December 1977 and 39/118 of 14 December 1984,

Having examined the fourth quinquennial report of the Secretary-General on capital punishment, and having found certain imprecisions and errors in it, as recognized by the representative of the Secretary-General,

Aware that only forty-three Governments responded to the questionnaire sent by the Secretary-General requesting information for the preparation of the fourth quinquennial report,

1. Invites Member States to provide the Secretary-General with the information required for the preparation of the fifth quinquennial report on capital punishment, in 1995;

2. Takes note of the fact that during the period covered by the report of the Secretary-General some countries have abolished capital punishment, others have adopted a policy of reducing the number of capital offences or have reported not imposing death sentences on offenders, while others have retained capital punishment;

3. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to keep the question of capital punishment under review;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Council, for consideration at its second regular session of 1990, a revised version of the fourth quinquennial report;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the fifth quinquennial report, to draw on all available data, including current criminological research, and to invite the comments of specialized agencies and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations on this question.

Report of Secretary-General (June). In keeping with the Council's request above, the Secretary-General in June, submitted a revised version of the fourth report [E/1990/38/Rev.1] & Rev.1/Corr.1], based on information received from 55 Governments: 5 from North Africa and the Middle East; 2 from Africa south of the Sahara; 9 from Asia and the Pacific; 11 from Latin America and the Caribbean; 6 from Eastern Europe; and 22 from Western European and other States. Of those States, 26 were totally abolitionist; 6 were abolitionist for ordinary crimes only; and 23 retained capital punishment. Within the retentionist group, 5 might be considered abolitionist de facto, since no executions had taken place for a considerable time.

An analysis of the responding States by region showed that the 5 countries from North Africa and the Middle East retained capital punishment. In Asia and the Pacific, 8 retained capital punishment (although Brunei Darussalam and Maldives could be considered abolitionist de facto), while the Philippines and Tuvalu had abolished the death penalty. All the responding States from Latin America and the Caribbean had abolished the death penalty (Mexico and Peru for ordinary crimes only, however). Of the Western European and other States, 5 retained capital punishment (although 3 could be considered abolitionist de facto), 4 were abolitionist for ordinary crimes only and the remaining 13 had abolished the death penalty without exception. In Eastern Europe, 5 countries retained capital punishment, while the German Democratic Republic abolished the death penalty for all crimes in 1987.

Of the 23 retentionist States, 3 did not disclose any statistical data and 1 provided data only on sentences. Of 20 States for which data on sentences were available, no death sentence had been imposed in Maldives, and no execution had been carried out in Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, Greece, Ireland, Maldives, the Philippines and Qatar. The countries altogether reported 2,429 capital sentences and 314 executions. Of those, 1,513 death sentences were imposed and 93 executions were carried out in the United States. Turkey reported 222 death sentences and Thailand 190. Executions also took place in Poland, Thailand and Tunisia (38 each).

The report stated that, as it was based mainly on replies received from less than one third of the UN membership, its findings could not be regarded as reflecting world-wide trends in capital punishment. Moreover, information was not available from the majority of the retentionist States, especially those resorting most frequently to the death penalty. That 11 countries had abolished capital punishment since 1984, however, constituted a significant trend towards abolition, especially as that number was spread out among all regions. The report concluded that, while all respondents had indicated that the 1984 safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty [YUN 1984, p. 710] had been communicated to judges, lawyers, police, prison officers and the accused, international experience demonstrated that more needed to be done to ensure that the formalities of the law and procedure were translated into the realities of enforced rights. It also concluded that countries with discretionary capital punishment employed various mechanisms designed to limit executions to the few most serious cases, raising the issue of whether the law and procedures resulted in equitable or in arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement. The findings of many criminological studies of judicial decisions had supported the conclusion that no legal formula could be devised that would eliminate unacceptable arbitrariness and discrimination in the use of the death penalty, thus pointing to the necessity of monitoring the use of death penalty statutes.

In an addendum [E/1990/38/Rev.1/Add.1] to the revised report, also issued in June, the Secretary-General stated that five additional replies had been received, bringing the total number of responding countries to 60.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's March and revised June reports were lists of abolitionist and retentionist countries; information on types of capital offences in retentionist countries; and supplementary information on the status of capital punishment in a variety of circumstances.

Communications. By letters dated 18 July [E/1990/105] and 6 August [E/1990/119], Cuba and Antigua and Barbuda, respectively, referred to the list of retentionist countries where the death penalty was used for ordinary crimes, as annexed to the revised report, and requested that they be removed from that list since their penal codes did not contemplate the death penalty for ordinary crimes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/51.

Capital punishment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2857(XXVI) of 20 December 1971, 32/61 of 8 December 1977, 39/118 of 14 December 1984 and 44/128 of 15 December 1989,

Recalling its own resolutions 1745(LIV) of 16 May 1973, 1930(LVIII) of 6 May 1975 and 1984/50 of 25 May 1989;

Recalling also its resolutions 1989/64 of 24 May 1989, on the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, and 1989/69 of 24 May 1989,

Having examined the revised version of the fourth quinquennial report of the Secretary-General on capital punishment, which was submitted to it pursuant to its resolution 1990/29 of 24 May 1990,

Aware that only sixty Governments responded to the questionnaire sent by the Secretary-General requesting information for the preparation of the fourth quinquennial report,

1. Invites Member States to respond to the questionnaire to be sent by the Secretary-General in preparation of the fifth quinquennial report on capital punishment, in 1995, providing the information requested;

2. Notes that, in the period under review in the report of the Secretary-General, an increasing number of countries have abolished capital punishment and other countries have adopted a policy of reducing the number of capital offences or have reported not imposing death sentences on offenders, while others have retained capital punishment;

3. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to keep the question of capital punishment under review;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the fifth quinquennial report, to draw on all available data, including current criminological research, and to invite the comments of specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council on this question;

5. Requests the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to examine thoroughly the question of capital punishment under item 7 of its provisional agenda entitled "United Nations norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice: implementation and priorities for further standard-setting";

6. Recommends that the quinquennial reports of the Secretary-General on capital punishment, starting with the report to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1995, should henceforth also cover the implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty.

Victims of crime and abuse of power

As requested by Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/10 [YUN 1986, p. 615], the Secretary-General submitted for consideration by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its February 1990 session, a December 1989 report [E/AC.57/1990/3] on progress in implementing the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and by General Assembly resolution 40/34 [YUN 1985, p. 742]. The report gave an account of national and international action undertaken since his last two-yearly report [YUN 1988, p. 610], in co-operation with UN crime prevention and criminal justice institutes and other entities, to give effect to the Declaration's provisions on: access to justice and means of recourse through international and regional mechanisms and NGOs; restitution and compensation to crime victims, and services and assistance for them; research to assist in policy-making and training in victim assistance; and strategies for the prevention or curtailment of victimization.

The report stated that the new collaborative initiatives and recent developments in improving the position of crime victims were encouraging but reflected the need for more concerted national and international action to prevent and reduce victimization. It suggested an agenda for action, including UN preventive monitoring and emergency response systems, which had yet to be instituted in cases of human crises and abuses. By transferring knowledge gained in crisis intervention, mediation and other forms of conflict resolution, progress could be made in defusing tensions and stopping incipient victimization. The practice of some UN institutes of employing informal means of social control and conflict resolution as an adjunct or alternative to criminal justice could be expanded for application in relevant situations. Action-oriented research was needed to identify practices involving abuses of power that remained to be proscribed and the groups most vulnerable to those practices. Guidelines formulated from a comparative law perspective would facilitate national legislative reviews to bring existing provisions in line with changing socio-economic reality and with the degree of harm inflicted by certain kinds of conduct. The needs of certain groups should be more fully explored, such as the victims of terrorism, organized crime and communities victimized by ecological and industrial crime endangering lives, the environment and national economies. An international convention should be elaborated to help countries to assist victims, with international aid provided for the identification and handling of cases. The United Nations had a special responsibility with regard to people's right to international protection and could provide the framework for concerted action, using the UN system, other international and regional entities, professional associations, scientific institutions and broad-based support.

Following its review of the report, the Committee approved a draft resolution on the subject for Council adoption. The Committee also considered a draft guide for criminal justice practitioners and others engaged in similar activities, prepared with the assistance of the UN-affiliated Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control. The completed Guide for Practitioners on the Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power [A/CONF.144/20] was subsequently submitted to the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/22.

Victims of crime and abuse of power

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985, by which the Assembly adopted the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, which is contained in the annex to the resolution and which had been approved by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling that in the same resolution the General Assembly called upon Member States and other entities to take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions contained in the Declaration and to curtail victimization,

Taking into account Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/57 of 24 May 1989 on the implementation of the Declaration,

Bearing in mind the recommendations of the preparatory meetings for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Having considered the Guide for Practitioners on the Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power,

Recognizing the need for continuing efforts to give effect to the Declaration, and to adapt it to meet the full range of needs and the circumstances of different countries,

Recognizing, in particular, the need to look beyond national measures in some instances, especially where victims of transnational crimes and abuse of power are concerned,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, together with all the entities of the United Nations system and other appropriate organizations, to undertake and co-ordinate the necessary action, with a humanitarian objective, to prevent and curtail severe victimization where national means of recourse are insufficient, and:

(a) To monitor the situation;

(b) To develop and institute means of conflict resolution and mediation;

(c) To promote access to justice and redress for victims;

(d) To assist in providing material, medical and psycho-social assistance to victims and their families;

3. Invites the United Nations regional and interregional institutes to provide mechanisms for the development and international co-ordination of services for victims, and to promote the collection, collation and exchange of information and ideas in order to improve standards for the treatment of victims;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to devote attention to policy and research on the situation of victims of crime and abuse of power and to the effective implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/34;

5. Recommends that Member States and the United Nations regional and interregional institutes take the necessary steps to provide professional and other persons dealing with victims with suitable training in issues concerning victims, taking into account the model training curriculum developed for this purpose;

6. Invites the United Nations funding agencies, especially the United Nations Development Programme and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, to support technical co-operation programmes for the establishment of services for victims;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to further develop international means of recourse and redress for victims where national channels may be insufficient and to report to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, at its twelfth session, on the development of such means;

8. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to take into account, in his study of compensation to victims of gross violations of human rights, the relevant work and recommendations of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

9. Invites the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to recommend wide distribution of the Guide for Practitioners on the Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the measures for implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, submitted by a committee of experts that met at the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences, Syracuse, Italy, in May 1986.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/22

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/69) without vote, 11 May (meeting 11); draft by Committee on Crime Prevention and Control (E/1990/31); agenda item 5.

Organized crime

Following its consideration of two resolutions adopted by the Eighth Congress, one on organized crime, and another on its prevention and control annexing guidelines to that end (see above, under "Congress instruments and resolutions"), the General Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 45/123.

International co-operation in combating organized crime

The General Assembly,

Recalling the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice,

Concerned that organized crime has increased in many parts of the world and has become more transnational in character, leading, in particular, to the spread of such negative phenomena as violence, terrorism, corruption and illegal trade in narcotic drugs and, in general, undermining the development process, impairing the quality of life and threatening human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/70 of 24 May 1989 and General Assembly resolution 44/71 of 8 December 1989,

Taking note of resolution 15 entitled "Organized crime" and resolution 24 entitled "Prevention and control of organized crime", adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Havana from 27 August to 7 September 1990, Recalling its resolution S-17/2 of 23 February 1990.

Convinced of the need to strengthen international co-operation in combating organized crime,

Noting with appreciation that the Eighth Congress explored the possibilities and ways of strengthening further international co-operation in combating organized crime and adopted the Guidelines for the prevention and control of organized crime, as contained in the annex to its resolution 24, as well as model treaties relating to it,

1. Urges Member States to give favourable consideration to the implementation of the Guidelines for the prevention and control of organized crime at both national and international levels;

2. Invites Member States to make available to the Secretary-General, on request, the provisions of their legislation relating to money laundering, the tracing, monitoring and forfeiture of the proceeds of crime and the monitoring of large-scale cash transactions and other measures so that they may be made available to Member States desiring to enact or further develop legislation in these fields;

3. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider ways of strengthening international co-operation in combating organized crime, taking due account of the opinions of Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as opinions expressed at and decisions taken by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and to submit its views, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include activities of the United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, related to organized crime, in the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control;

5. Calls upon Member States, international organizations and interested non-governmental organizations to co-operate with the United Nations in organizing the International Seminar on Organized Crime Control, to be held in Moscow in October 1991.

Domestic violence

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/67 [YUN 1989, p., 624], the Secretary-General submitted for the consideration of the Eighth Congress a July report [A/CONF.144/17], giving an overview of the problem of domestic violence and the responses to it, based on the findings of research undertaken by scholars, law reform bodies and commissions of inquiry, and on official and other survey statistics. The report highlighted the nature, extent and dynamics of domestic violence, including within the larger societal context, and its effects, not only on the parties, but also on the entire family constellation and on future families. Response measures and other interventions designed to mitigate and help prevent or control the problem included those executed through the criminal justice system, specific services instituted to protect and assist the victims and to treat the offenders, such as emergency facilities (emergency telephone lines, hot-lines for child abuse cases, shelters for battered women), respite care, medical and mental health care, counselling and therapeutic programmes.

The report outlined a series of national and local measures pertaining to the criminal justice system and other legal means; treatment interventions and service delivery; training, education and attitude change; and information and research on all aspects of family violence. International measures were also outlined, including cross-cultural research studies on the various facets of domestic violence; comparative victimization surveys; seminars for criminal policy makers, as well as for educators, media representatives, social psychologists, the clergy and victim advocates; training for criminal justice personnel and other relevant staff; technical co-operation and assistance in applying the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power [YUN 1985, p. 742]; development of model legislation to promote redress for and assistance to crime victims; information collection and dissemination and scientific exchanges in that field; mobilization of governmental and non-governmental support and of seed money; and promotion of collaborative initiatives by the UN system to ensure integrated action and effective follow-up of the decisions of the UN policy-making bodies and other international recommendations, especially those of the Eighth Congress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 45/114.

Domestic violence

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 40/36 of 29 November 1985 on domestic violence and resolution 6 of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, concerning the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system,

Taking into account the recommendations made at the Expert Group Meeting on Violence in the Family with Special Emphasis on its Effects on Women, held at Vienna from 8 to 12 December 1986.

Also taking into account the recommendations made on the subject of domestic violence by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, the resolution on domestic violence against women submitted to the Second Committee of the Conference and the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to the Year 2000,

Commending the efforts of the United Nations, inter alia, through the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to guarantee the human rights of women and children,

Recognizing the need for further work to be undertaken with respect to violence against all members of the family unit,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on domestic violence,

Recalling that, in its resolution 44/82 of 8 December 1989, it proclaimed 1994 the International Year of the Family,

Bearing in mind the serious lack of information and research on domestic violence globally and the need for exchange of information on ways of dealing with this problem,

Recognizing the concern of Member States about domestic violence as an urgent problem deserving focused attention and concerted action,

Aware that domestic violence is a critical problem that has serious physical and psychological effects on individual family members and jeopardizes the health and survival of the family unit,

Recognizing that domestic violence may take many forms, both physical and psychological,

Convinced of the necessity of improving the situation of the victims of domestic violence,

Recognizing the need to focus on all victims of domestic violence and to consider common policies and specialized approaches regarding women, children, the elderly and those especially vulnerable because of disability,

Noting that exposure to domestic violence, especially during childhood, may produce long-term effects on attitudes and behaviour, such as increased tolerance to violence in society as a whole,

Aware of the fact that many offenders, including those convicted of offences relating to domestic violence, and many victims were themselves abused as children,

Recognizing the fact that domestic violence is often a recurring phenomenon and that an effective early response, as part of a crime prevention policy, may prevent the occurrence of future incidents,

Convinced that the problem of domestic violence is prevalent and affects all segments of society regardless of class, income, culture, gender, age or religion,

Conscious that the complex problem of domestic violence is viewed differently in various cultures of different countries and that at the international level it must be addressed with sensitivity to the cultural context in each country,

1. Urges Member States to begin or continue to explore, develop and implement multidisciplinary policies, measures and strategies, within and outside of the criminal justice system, with respect to domestic violence in all its facets, including legal, law enforcement, judicial, societal, educational, psychological, economic, health-related and correctional aspects and, in particular:

(a) To take all possible steps to prevent domestic violence;

(b) To ensure fair treatment of and effective assistance to the victims of domestic violence;

(c) To increase awareness and sensitivity concerning domestic violence, in particular by fostering the education of criminal justice and other professionals in regard to this issue;

(d) To provide appropriate treatment for the offenders;

2. Recommends that Member States ensure that their systems of criminal justice and the competent bodies for juveniles and their families provide an effective and equitable response to domestic violence and that they take appropriate steps towards achieving this goal;

3. Urges Member States to exchange information, experience and research findings between governmental and non-governmental organizations regarding domestic violence, and, in this regard, recommends the use of the United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network and other available means to facilitate the exchange of information concerning domestic violence and the means of curtailing it;

4. Invites Member States, the Secretary-General and concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to include the problem of domestic violence in the preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family within the crime prevention and criminal justice area;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a working group of experts, within existing or with extrabudgetary resources, to formulate guidelines or a manual for 'practitioners concerning the problem of domestic violence for consideration at the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and its regional preparatory meetings, taking into account the conclusions of the report of the Secretary-General on domestic violence;

6. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider placing the topic of domestic violence on the agenda of the Ninth Congress, as a matter of priority.

Juvenile crime

In December, the General Assembly had for its consideration three draft resolutions relating to juvenile crime which had been recommended by the Eighth Congress. The first annexed draft UN guidelines for the prevention of juvenile delinquency, to be designated the Riyadh Guidelines, the second annexed draft UN rules for the protection of juveniles deprived of their liberty, and the third concerned the instrumental use of children in criminal activities.

UN Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines)

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/112.

United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines)

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as other international instruments pertaining to the rights and well-being of young persons, including relevant standards established by the International Labour Organisation,

Bearing in mind also the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules),

Recalling General Assembly resolution 40/33 of 29 November 1985, by which the Assembly adopted the Beijing Rules recommended by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,
